DOG RESCUE TIME WARP

A CURIOUS CAT SPY CLUB Mini-Mystery

“According to my calculations, we’ll find a new mystery today,” Leo says, staring at the Skunk Shack door like he expects it to burst open.

I arch my brow. “How do you figure that?”

“Isn’t it obvious, Kelsey?” He pushes back his blond hair as he continues to watch the door. “I’ve analyzed the statistics and on average we encounter a mystery every 2.4 weeks.”

Becca rolls her eyes and I try not to giggle. We’re sitting at the lopsided table we found when we cleaned the Skunk Shack and formed the Curious Cat Spy Club. Leo is our Covert Technology Strategist; Becca is our Social Contact Operative and I’m the Spy Tactics Specialist. We’re 7th graders at Helen Corning Middle School but we didn’t become friends until we rescued three kittens from a dumpster and tracked down the person who dumped them. Now we meet after school and sometimes on weekends to solve animal mysteries.

“Mysteries don’t follow a schedule like school holidays,” Becca tells Leo with a flip of her pink-streaked ponytail.

I nod. “You can’t just expect one to show up at our clubhouse.”

At that moment there’s a scratching sound on the door.

Leo jumps up and opens the door—and finds a reddish-brown dog with a bloody front paw.
