

Pool House

by Negroni

You find this random piece of paper in the shed behind the swimming pool. Fourteen pieces must be removed for testing and then replaced, creating new valid entries. The replacements, in column order (once the ambiguities are resolved), spell out something that might be needed to perform these tests. Two of the replacements, an R and an L, can be replaced a second time to create descriptors for the sections in which they appear. Now that you understand what you are looking at, you can fill in the six unclued entries, including the one across the center, with examples of items that belong approximately in their row.
