Presentation Title:

The role of tribal businesses taking on the global plastic the crisis

David's presentation explores the expanding global plastic crisis and the development of sustainable alternatives to plastic. Chippewa Harvest serves as a model for industrial hemp development in Indian Country, demonstrating how tribal enterprises can utilize every part of the hemp plant to create sustainable products, from food to fiber, with the potential to replace plastic-based materials. We will explore how tribal enterprises can take a leadership role in reducing carbon footprints, advancing environmental sustainability, and creating economic opportunities within their communities.

Finally, discuss building the infrastructure, partnerships, and business models necessary to make sustainable products more accessible and affordable for consumers, while supporting Indigenous-led innovation and long-term economic self-sufficiency.
