

A community food and farming project

Good afternoon.

We are writing to introduce a newly registered project that aims to reconnect our community with food production, farming and the natural environment.

As local farmers, we are passionate about helping children, young people, families and adults better understand where food comes from, while creating opportunities to learn new skills, improve wellbeing and build stronger connections with the countryside.

We believe this is important not only for those who take part, but for the future of farming itself. The more people who understand and value food production, the more likely they are to support local farmers, home-grown produce and the wider network of suppliers, contractors and businesses that keep our industry going.

We are actively pursuing grants and funding opportunities to support the project long-term, but these things take a while. In the meantime, we are reaching out to businesses we know, work with and value because agriculture relies on strong relationships across the whole sector – farmers and the allied trades.

We would be grateful for any support you may be able to offer and no contribution is too small. Every donation will help us create something valuable for our community and for the future of food production.

To get the project up and running, we really only need to source a toilet, veg beds and tools along with somewhere to shelter. This will give us the facilities to get started while grants and funding applications are processed.

I have attached a brief project overview which outlines how we aim to engage people of all ages and abilities. We hope you'll consider supporting us as we get this project off the ground and help us take those first important steps. If you would like to find out more, we'd love to hear from you.

Thank you for your time and consideration.
