Gold Mine Threatens to Poison Northern California County and Devastate the Environment

GRASS VALLEY, CA - The people of Northern California have been warned. Rise Gold Corp, a newly-minted entity headed by CEO Ben Mossman, has secured the rights to an abandoned gold mine worth hundreds of billions of dollars. But at what cost to the community?

In 2015, Banks Island Gold LTD, a Canadian mining company owned by the same group behind Rise Gold, was accused of a toxic environmental spill on traditional tribal lands in British Columbia. Rather than face costly cleanup and prosecution, the company declared bankruptcy, leaving the Canadian and Gitxaala First Nations governments to deal with the devastation.

Fast forward to 2023. Rise Gold Corp plans to use the same playbook as was used in British Columbia - take advantage of small-town folks, strip the valuable resources, ignore the environmental impact, and inflate the value of their stock.

The results will likely be the same as in Canada, with devastated land & waterways, with the local economy left in shambles. When the dust settles, the company and its CEO will have walked away unscathed. The people of Grass Valley must stand together and say “No” to Rise Gold. The alarm has sounded. Now it's up to all of us to act—and Fast.
