If your passport expiration date is sooner than six months from your date of arrival, you may not be admitted.

This rule isn't universal. Some countries require a three-month validity, and others may have different requirements. It is always advisable to check the specific requirements of your destination country.

The U.S. Department of State's international travel data page is an excellent resource for travelers. You can look up the exact requirements of every foreign country on your dream destination list.
