Please note, this was a BJCP certified event. In BJCP competitions, organizers can combine or rename categories for judging purposes, even though the guidelines provide specific style categories. While the BJCP guidelines group beers into categories and subcategories (styles) for consistency, competition organizers can create their own award categories, grouping styles in ways that suit the competition's needs. For example, a competition might combine several similar subcategories (like different pale ale subcategories) into a single award category for judging.
