The Lonely Dragon

Nancy Antle

The average dragon’s idea of a good time is to kidnap a princess, burn down a village, and scare the wits out of everyone. But Charles was a sweet, good-natured fellow who wanted nothing to do with those kinds of things, so he had no dragon friends. Unfortunately, he looked exactly like all the other mean and nasty dragons, and no human ever stayed around long enough to find out how nice he really was. He was often lonely.

One day Charles decided that he’d had enough of being lonely and was going to do something about it. He headed off across the countryside in search of a friend.

The first person he met was a woodcutter in the forest. Charles managed to sneak up on him, so the man didn’t have time to run away.

“Will you be my friend?” he asked rather timidly.

The man realized from the tone of Charles’s voice that he was not the usual fearsome sort of dragon. He took a minute to think. Then he said, “Friends are supposed to do things for each other. If I’m your friend, what will you do for me?”

Charles thought a moment, then he turned and knocked over five trees with a single blow of his tail.

“Perfect!” shouted the woodcutter, and he took Charles home to supper.

As Charles entered the woodcutter’s yard, he turned to ask a question and knocked over the fence with his tail. He became flustered and turned around quickly to apologize. He knocked a hole in the front wall of the man’s house.

“This will never do,” the woodcutter said. “You are much too big to be my friend!” And he sent Charles back from where he had come.

Charles was very depressed, but he kept traveling. Soon he saw an old woman plowing her field. Luckily, the old woman was nearsighted and didn’t realize Charles was a dragon until he was right beside her.

Now answer the questions about this part of the story.
1. Why was Charles lonely at the beginning of the story?

   - A. He had no friends.
   - B. He was lost in the forest.
   - C. He had no family.
   - D. The man ran away.

2. Charles didn’t want to make friends with other dragons because they were

   - A. big and lazy.
   - B. mean and nasty.
   - C. huge and had scales.
   - D. timid and shy.

3. Charles had trouble making friends because most people

   - A. didn’t like the way he talked.
   - B. didn’t like the way he laughed.
   - C. were shy with dragons.
   - D. were afraid of dragons.
“Will you be my friend?” he asked, even more timidly.

The old farmer peered in the direction of his voice. “Friends are supposed to do things for each other,” she said. “If I’m your friend, what will you do for me?”

Charles thought a moment and said, “I could go home ahead of you and start a fire and warm your supper. I’m very good with fires.”

“My friends,” the woman said. “I’m always too tired in the evening to fix myself a hot meal. A fire-starter is just what I need.”

That evening Charles went to the old woman’s house, started the fire with one breath, and began warming her supper. The old woman’s house was even smaller than the woodcutter’s, but somehow Charles managed to control his tail and not knock anything over. His new friend seemed pleased with the supper he prepared, and she even gave him a kiss on the cheek before she went to bed.

Charles finally found a big enough space under one of the windows and lay down. He was so happy that he let out a long sigh of contentment. Unfortunately, his sigh set the curtains on fire.

“This will never do,” the old woman cried as she jumped up to douse the curtains with water. “You are much too hot to be my friend!” She sent Charles out the door and back from where he had come.

Now Charles was even more depressed. He walked slowly back through the woods. He hadn’t gone very far, though, when he came upon a little man sitting in a clearing. The man was huddled in the morning sun with a blanket around his shoulders and a crown on his head. He didn’t look any happier than Charles.

Charles thought the man would run away. But he didn’t. So Charles sat down and sighed. So did the man. Charles sighed again. So did the man.

“I’ve had a rotten day,” Charles finally said.

“Me, too,” the man replied.

“Why was your day so rotten?” Charles asked politely.

“You first,” the man said.

“Well, it isn’t just this day especially,” Charles said. “My whole life is rotten.”

Now answer the questions about this part of the story.

The man nodded, and Charles began telling him how lonely he was and how he had gone in search of a friend. He told him about the woodcutter and how his tail got in the way. He told him about the farmer and how his breath had ruined everything.

“Why didn’t you run away when you saw me coming?” he asked. “I thought you were the answer to my problems,” the man said. “I figured if you ate me, at least I wouldn’t be lonely any more.”

“You are lonely, too?” Charles asked.

The man nodded and pointed to his crown. “See this?” he asked. “Do you know what this means? It means I’m a king. Wonderful. I collect taxes and rent from my subjects, have a party once a year, and that is the only time I ever have any fun.

“No one ever comes to my door and says, ‘Oh, I was just passing by and thought I would pop in for tea.’ Nobody asks me over for dinner, or wants me to come have a peek at their new baby. Nobody thinks a king would want to do any of those ordinary things. But I’m really just an ordinary guy.”

“To make matters worse I live alone in a drafty 300-room castle. I can never keep a fire going, so I’m always cold. Lonely and cold—that’s the story of my life.”

The king sniffed and wrapped the blanket tighter around himself, and then he looked at Charles.

“I don’t suppose you’d be interested in being my friend?” he asked.

Charles felt his heart leap, but he hardly dared to agree. “They say that friends are supposed to do things for each other,” he said. “If I’m your friend, what can you do for me?”

“Why, I’ll be your friend,” the king replied. “Perfect!” said Charles.

Marta felt lonely as she sat on the front porch steps. Her family had moved to a new city, and she was missing her old friends. She stared at the kids playing in the yard across the street. Marta was timid and shy, so making new friends was difficult.

Marta’s mother came outside and sat on the edge of the steps beside her daughter. “Why are you so gloomy?” she gently asked.

“I miss my old friends, and the kids across the street are having so much fun,” replied the girl.

“They look friendly, and they’re about your age. Since you know how to play hopscotch, you might ask to join them,” encouraged her mother.

Marta whispered, “I’m afraid they won’t let me play.”

“You’ll never know if you don’t try. I’ll wait here while you walk over to them. Please be careful while crossing the street. Remember to look both ways,” Marta’s mother said lovingly.

Marta checked for oncoming cars in each direction before crossing the road. She quietly went over to where the children were playing hopscotch. They welcomed her and asked if she would like to join them. Marta smiled and waved to her mother.

It was a sunny day, and Jerome was sick with the flu. Feeling sorry for himself, he sat on the couch. He looked out the window at his backyard swing set. It wasn’t exactly the swings that were on his mind. Today was circus day, and he couldn’t go. He was terribly disappointed. He would miss watching the trapeze act. While playing on his swing, Jerome often imagined he was a famous trapeze artist swinging high above the crowd.

He decided to rest by taking a short nap. When he woke up, the room had become very dark. The outside windowpane had been magically covered by a piece of cloth! “What in the world happened?” he wondered.

Slowly, two friends pulled the cloth open like curtains on a stage. Out of his window, Jerome saw more friends. They were swinging, running, and jumping around his yard. They had decided if Jerome couldn’t go to the circus, the show would come to him.

They played catch with large hoops and walked along the top edge of a brick wall pretending it was a high wire act. His friends looked so ridiculous! Jerome curled over and roared with laughter. He felt better now. Jerome thought it was wonderful to have such good friends.
