Summer at the Farm

Pat Bush

Lenny could hardly believe his ears when his Uncle Ed called. He asked, “How would you like to spend the summer on the farm with Aunt Susan and me?” Lenny jumped at the chance. He had read many books about animals and life on a farm.

His family lived in the city. They rented an apartment on the third floor of a large building. When Lenny looked out his bedroom window, all he could see was the building across the street. He often daydreamed about visiting his uncle’s farm.

Early Saturday morning, Lenny and his family got in the car. It was a long day’s drive to the farm, but Lenny didn’t mind. From the back seat he watched the tall buildings slowly disappear. Telephone poles and fences began to line the highway. Then it narrowed and became a two-lane road. White farmhouses with red barns dotted the countryside. It was all very exciting to him.

Lenny’s mother turned around in the front seat and said, “We’re almost there. It’s just around the next curve.” A minute later his father said, “That’s Uncle Ed’s farm over there. It’s the one surrounded by those tall oak trees.”

As they drove up the long gravel driveway, they saw Uncle Ed and Aunt Susan. They were standing on the front porch steps waving excitedly. As soon as the car stopped, Lenny jumped out. He gave his aunt and uncle a quick hug and ran to the barnyard. There were ducks, geese, and chickens pecking in the grass. Milk cows were heading toward the barn for their evening milking. A horse with her baby foal stood in the shade under a tree. It was just as he imagined it would be; what a great summer vacation he would have.

The next morning, Lenny could smell a delicious aroma coming from the kitchen. Aunt Susan had fixed homemade biscuits and gravy, sausage, scrambled eggs, and fried potatoes. They all sat down together. What a feast!

After breakfast, Lenny said good-bye to his parents. He would miss his mom and dad, but he knew his summer vacation would be an adventure. Lenny watched as his parents drove out of sight. Just as he was imagining the fun he was about to have, his thoughts were interrupted. “OK, son, it’s time to get to work,” his uncle said. Lenny’s dad had explained to him that there would be lots of farm chores, and he would need to help. His mom told him there would still be time for fun.

Uncle Ed said, “I’ll feed the cows while you feed the chickens.”
“Come along, Lenny,” said Aunt Susan. “I’ll show you where the cracked corn is and how to put it in the chicken feeders.” After showing Lenny how to feed the chickens, Aunt Susan went back to the farmhouse.

Lenny cleaned the feeders and filled them with corn. He then opened the coop to let the chickens out. As he walked to the house, he heard the chickens clucking. Looking back, he saw he’d left the gate to the pen open and chickens were running all over the barnyard. Lenny discovered chasing chickens was easier said than done. The minute some were back inside, others had gotten out. Finally, after dashing and diving for chickens, Lenny collapsed on the ground. Breathlessly, he began to laugh and thought how funny he must have looked. But at least all the chickens were safe in the pen.

Just as Lenny was standing up and brushing off his jeans, Uncle Ed walked out of the barn. He laughingly called out, “Those chickens can be a handful!” Then Uncle Ed asked, “How would you like to ride on the tractor with me? I have to drive down to the lower field to mend fences, and I could use your help.” Uncle Ed quickly gathered the tools needed to repair the fences. He handed a thermos of cold water to Lenny as they both climbed onto the tractor. Uncle Ed let Lenny steer the tractor as they drove out of the barn and down the hill.

After several hours of fixing fences, they had worked up an appetite. Uncle Ed said, “Aunt Susan will have a hearty lunch waiting for us by the time we get back to the house.” That sounded good to Lenny. He was starving!

When they were done clearing the table after lunch, Aunt Susan asked Lenny if he had ever ridden a horse. Lenny responded that he never had but would love to learn. The two of them walked to the barn where there was a chestnut-colored horse named Red. Aunt Susan explained how to feed and safely work around horses. Lenny petted Red and gave him some apple slices. Then Lenny brushed Red’s coat and got him ready to be saddled.

A brown, leather saddle hung on a stall. Lenny helped put the saddle on Red. Aunt Susan pulled the cinch tightly around the horse’s stomach. Then the reins were placed over Red’s head and the bit was gently put in his mouth. Lenny climbed onto the saddle. He felt like a real cowboy. Aunt Susan said, “Lenny, you need to wear this.” Then she handed him his very own, brand-new, cowboy hat. Lenny grinned from ear to ear as Aunt Susan led them out of the barn and into the corral. He looked forward to being able to ride Red all summer long.

That evening as the sun began to set, Lenny and his uncle went out to milk the cows. While they were milking, two little kittens came up and started meowing. When they opened their mouths, Uncle Ed squirted a stream of milk at them. Lenny tried to mimic what his uncle had done, but he missed the cats and squirted his uncle instead. They both laughed out loud.

After dinner when all the chores of the day were done, they sat in the swing on the front porch. Lenny was very quiet. Finally he said, “I really like the farm. This is going to be the best summer of my life.”

His uncle agreed, “It will be for us, too.”

Lou was the oldest of three children. He thought he was ready to learn how to budget money. He asked his parents for a weekly allowance. The boy’s parents were not very excited about the idea. Lou explained the subject was important. After all, he was ten years old. He wanted to learn how to be responsible.

Lou’s parents decided to have a meeting. Family talks usually took place after dinner. The boy helped clear the table. He put away the leftover food. Finally, they were seated. Everyone was ready to discuss the boy’s request. To Lou’s surprise, the first issue was not about his allowance. Instead, they talked about sharing chores. This had not been part of his plan. He just wanted them to say he could have some spending money, but his parents offered to pay him for doing chores.

His parents listed several jobs. They asked him to choose at least three. He could help carry out the garbage. He might choose to wash the dishes on weekends. Perhaps he’d watch his baby brother when his mother needed help. The other choices were dusting the furniture or sweeping the sidewalks. Lou began to realize that money did not grow on trees. He was going to have to earn his allowance.

Ginny laid a handful of coins on the table. There were quarters, nickels, and pennies. She studied them for a while. Ginny planned to write about the history of money for a school project. She had been doing research at the library. She pulled out her notebook and reread the information.

Long ago, many different items were used for money. This idea amazed Ginny. People in some cultures paid for goods with beads and shells. For instance, brightly colored shells were used in India. Some nations traded with whales’ teeth or large stone disks.

She had learned the first metal coins were a mixture of gold and silver. They were made in little, round nuggets. These ancient coins were invented nearly three thousand years ago. Later, money was made from various metals. Their value depended on the size and weight of the object. These coins had to be weighed each time they changed hands. This process was not practical. Finally, coins were weighed and stamped with their value. That was the beginning of money as we know it today.

Her planning phase was finished. She had learned a lot about the history of money. Now Ginny was ready to start drafting her report.
