Are You Eating Enough to Lose Weight?

Most Americans need to eat 3-4 times more natural, fiber-rich foods than they now eat if they want to enjoy a full plate and still lose weight.

So where do you find foods rich in fiber? And can all fiber-rich foods help you lose weight?

The Full Plate Fiber Guide features over 500 foods and beverages and shows you the fiber grams and even calories per serving. It also highlights “Full Plate Superfoods” in blue. These are the foods you can fill your plate with and still lose weight.

How to Use the Full Plate Fiber Guide

More than 500 Foods and Beverages

Your Full Plate Fiber Guide lists the grams of fiber and calories in a serving of more than 500 different foods and beverages. It's not a comprehensive list, but it's certainly enough to get you started.

Where Did We Get The Numbers?

The numbers are taken from the USDA National Nutrient Database for Standard Reference, Release # 2.
(www.ars.usda.gov/ba/bhnrc/ndl)

No Decimals

We felt it would be easier for you to work with the fiber grams and calories if they didn't have decimals, so we rounded to the nearest whole number.

Remember the Serving Sizes

The fiber and calories are for a specific serving size of each food, so if you eat more or less than that specified amount, the values will change. For example, one medium apple has 4 grams of fiber and 95 calories; if you eat two, you've eaten 8 grams of fiber and 180 calories.

Foods Highlighted in Blue

You'll notice that some foods are highlighted in blue. These are natural fiber foods.

Fiber foods help you lose weight because:

1. They naturally contain fiber, which means the fiber has not been artificially added or taken away
2. They contain 60% or more water in their edible form
3. They don't have added fat or sugar

These foods are fruits, vegetables, cooked beans, and cooked whole grains, such as brown rice, oatmeal, and whole wheat pasta.

Why Fiber Foods for Weight Loss?

These are weight loss foods because of the fiber and all the water, both of which do not have calories. That makes them lower calorie foods, which means you can fill your plate with them and still lose weight. This is the essence of the Full Plate Method.

And by the way, these foods happen to be great sources of vitamins, minerals, antioxidants, and phytochemicals.

Are You Eating Enough to Lose Weight?

The typical American eats about 10 grams of fiber a day. The Full Plate Method recommends working your way up to about 40 grams a day, primarily from natural fiber rich foods. That's four times more.

CAUTION: When you add natural fiber foods to what you eat, go slowly. If you go too fast, you'll h;

You Need a Drink

The more fiber foods you eat, the more water you'll need to drink. Six cups of water a day is a good start, but if you drink more than that—great.

Beware of Sabotaging Your Fiber Foods

Fiber foods can be sabotaged as your weight-loss friends by adding sugars and fats, such as syrups, butter, cheese, sour cream, and salad dressings, etc. And we're not even going to mention deep-fried foods. 😊
