

Julian A. Campbell was born in Pa. in 1889. He became interested in photography as a teenager. About 1908 his family moved to Binghamton, New York. Intending to get into the picture postcard business, he purchased an expensive German camera, which used 5 x 7 inch glass plate negatives. Julian soon began traveling throughout southern New York and northern Pennsylvania taking photographs to be transported onto postcards. From July 1911 to early 1915, Julian took about 1,500 photographs. The inscription on each plate had to be hand-etched backwards so that it could be read properly when printed.

Julian A. Campbell was born in Pa. in 1889. He became interested in photography as a teenager. About 1908 his family moved to Binghamton, New York. Intending to get into the picture postcard business, he purchased an expensive German camera, which used 5 x 7 inch glass plate negatives. Julian soon began traveling throughout southern New York and northern Pennsylvania taking photographs to be transported onto postcards. From July 1911 to early 1915, Julian took about 1,500 photographs. The inscription on each plate had to be hand-etched backwards so that it could be read properly when printed.

In 2012, volunteer Teresea Sickler undertook the task to label each negative to create this index

Julian A. Campbell was born in Pa. in 1889. He became interested in photography as a teenager. About 1908 his family moved to Binghamton, New York. Intending to get into the picture postcard business, he purchased an expensive German camera, which used 5 x 7 inch glass plate negatives. Julian soon began traveling throughout southern New York and northern Pennsylvania taking photographs to be transported onto postcards. From July 1911 to early 1915, Julian took about 1,500 photographs. The inscription on each plate had to be hand-etched backwards so that it could be read properly when printed.

In 2012, volunteer Teresea Sickler undertook the task to label each negative to create this index

Julian A. Campbell was born in Pa. in 1889. He became interested in photography as a teenager. About 1908 his family moved to Binghamton, New York. Intending to get into the picture postcard business, he purchased an expensive German camera, which used 5 x 7 inch glass plate negatives. Julian soon began traveling throughout southern New York and northern Pennsylvania taking photographs to be transported onto postcards. From July 1911 to early 1915, Julian took about 1,500 photographs. The inscription on each plate had to be hand-etched backwards so that it could be read properly when printed.

In 2012, volunteer Teresea Sickler undertook the task to label each negative to create this index

Julian A. Campbell was born in Pa. in 1889. He became interested in photography as a teenager. About 1908 his family moved to Binghamton, New York. Intending to get into the picture postcard business, he purchased an expensive German camera, which used 5 x 7 inch glass plate negatives. Julian soon began traveling throughout southern New York and northern Pennsylvania taking photographs to be transported onto postcards. From July 1911 to early 1915, Julian took about 1,500 photographs. The inscription on each plate had to be hand-etched backwards so that it could be read properly when printed.
