PET'S IMMUNE SYSTEM CAN BE COMPROMISED EVERY DAY

IN THE BACKYARD.

While pets play outside, pesticides, fertilizers, harmful bacteria, and viruses attack their immune system — and dangerous chemicals may stick to their fur and paw pads. Pets could ingest these chemicals by licking their paws.

ON THE CARPET.

When pets bury their noses in carpet, they're likely inhaling toxic chemicals like formaldehyde, toluene, benzene, xylene, and styrene. Carpeting may also conceal harmful substances tracked in on shoes from the outdoors.

IN THE AIR.

Inside: Household toxins, such as floor cleaners, bug killers, air fresheners, and mold, may be considered unsafe for your pet. Outside: As the seasons change, the quality of the air may cause skin sensitivities in pets.

IN FOODS.

Many pet foods are made with hormones, preservatives, and meat by-products, and could contain residue from pesticides. Several brands contain corn and grain, which may cause food sensitivities, and some pet treats pack on the sugar.
