
INSPIRATION-INTENTION- INNOVATION

M⁴ Marilyn's Monday Morning Message

Meaningful progress often begins with INSPIRATION—whether drawn from ordinary individuals or extraordinary figures like Eleanor Roosevelt, who famously stated, “The future belongs to those who believe in the beauty of their dreams.” Inspiration serves to quiet the disruptions that drain our energy, obscure our vision, and cause uncertainty about the future.

Following inspiration, the next critical step is cultivating INTENTION. This transforms scattered thoughts into clear direction and anchors us in what is most important, even amid changing circumstances. Whether leading a team or oneself, intention is essential for guiding subsequent actions.

Progressing beyond intention, INNOVATION plays a pivotal role in advancing initiatives beyond the initial stage. As Maya Angelou insightfully observed, “You can’t use up creativity. The more you use, the more you have.” Innovation demands openness and the courage to transcend boundaries, whether self-imposed or external. Even a small shift can generate significant momentum, accelerating the path toward success.

MAJOR POINT

Embracing a mindset grounded in inspiration, intention, and innovation fosters forward momentum—a necessity in today’s dynamic environment to achieve thoughtful growth and purposeful leadership.
