ABOUT POINT PLEASANT

A storied Jersey Shore suburb anchored between Barnegat Bay and Manasquan River, Point Pleasant is a breezy swatch of beach and greenery, a retreat from the neighboring resorts, populated by comfortable homes and quaint local businesses. Known to the Lenape as the “Land of Tall Timber,” the area originally served as a meeting place for indigenous religious and cultural ceremonies. It was here that Henry Hudson got his first glimpse of New Jersey on his voyage to the Hudson Valley in 1609, writing: “This is a very good land to fall with and a pleasant land to see.”

It would be half a century before another European would lay eyes on Point Pleasant, the first settlers arriving in 1665 after the British takeover of Dutch colonies in New Jersey and New York. They quickly established farms and fisheries, creating a picturesque rural hamlet on the ocean that attracted tourists as early as 1800.

With its refreshing sea breeze, the sweet scent of salt, bustling, game-filled woods and shimmering waters ripe with fish, visitors enjoyed peace and seclusion, lodging in the expansive family farms which offered food, board and daily wagon rides through forests and corn fields to the shore. These earliest vacationers likely enjoyed idyllic, wholesome family holidays alongside the relaxed but prudent Quaker landowners. By 1870, with the rise of resort towns along the Jersey Shore, tourism had become a fixture of the local economy, Point Pleasant’s balding farmland being divvied up and sold to developers. This trend continued until WWII, when the town began focusing on residential development, eventually becoming the seaside neighborhood it is today.

Today, there’s no finer place to live on the Jersey Shore than here, home to wide beaches, crisp blue water, and local cafes and shops, featuring premiere antique shops and diverse restaurants and eateries. Sunbath and splash at Maxson Avenue Beach or trek through scenic Beaver Dam Creek Country Park. Fish, swim and boat in crystal Atlantic waters or spend the day at Jenkinson’s Boardwalk, a New Jersey landmark. Neighboring Manasquan, Brick, Bay Head and Point Pleasant Beach and with its own bustling main street along Ocean Road, enjoy endless shopping, dining and entertainment opportunities all within arm’s length. With highly rated schools and a gentle, salty sea breeze, come to Point Pleasant and live on the beach.
