

Tattoo removal explained

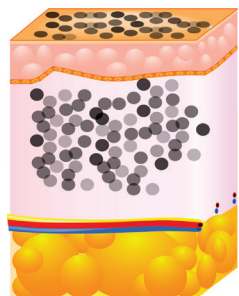

1

Tattoo ink is covered by a layer of melanin.

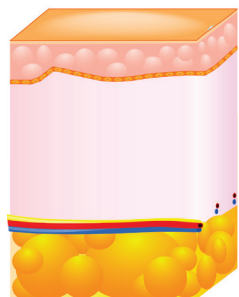

2

A highly focused laser rapidly delivers a beam of light to the darker, tattooed area.

3

When the laser strikes the tattoo ink, it shatters into fine particles.

4

The shattered particles are dispersed through the body's natural filtration (lymphatic) system.

Tattoo Removal FAQs

Am I suitable for LUX Series tattoo removal treatment?

LUX Series tattoo removal devices are advanced technologies suitable for treating most tattoo and skin types. During your consultation, your clinician will assess your unwanted tattoo and discuss with you the results you are likely to expect.

Does treatment remove all tattoo colours?

The results you can expect from your tattoo removal treatments will depend on the type of ink used in your tattoo, as well as the shade of ink. Darker colours generally respond better to tattoo removal treatment. Your clinician will assess your suitability for treatment, along with the results you can expect, during your consultation.

How many sessions will I need?

This all depends on the size, age, quality and colour of your unwanted tattoo. Some may need as little as six sessions to achieve a satisfying result, while others may require 12 or more to remove the tattoo completely.

How long do I need to wait between sessions?

Sessions are generally spaced at six week intervals, or more. This is because the tattoo removal process keeps working long after your session has finished. It takes time for your body to fully complete the natural process of clearing the treated tattoo inks, which is why after each session the skin is allowed time to heal and renew before moving onto the next stage of treatment.

Does it hurt?

The sensation felt during tattoo removal treatment will vary from person to person. Factors to consider include the pain threshold of the individual being treated, as well as the size, quality, colour and location of the tattoo (for example, removing a foot or neck tattoo will generally be more uncomfortable than a back tattoo).

Your clinician may engage various pain reduction methods such as topical anaesthetic, ice packs or a skin cooling system to help minimise the discomfort experienced when undergoing treatment.
