Review: Park City Independent Film Festival, 2018

"Water is an incredible work of art, this short film will captivate the hearts of millions who love to be in the water. This four-minute short film will take you to paradise and to the wonders of the world that are yet to be seen, it also gave out a wonderful experience of water's beauty and nature's incredible artistry that is beyond marvelous. Watching this short film makes time stand still, it is like you'll get lost in the beauty of the spectacular rivers, beaches, waterfalls, lakes, and other waterways from all over the world. The spectacular serenity of the beauty of these bodies of water was accompanied by the magnificent music of Wieland Reissman and Peter Simmer, the classical tune gave an out of body experience and will bring you along to the wonderful journey of these different remarkable places. Water is absolutely crafted with purity of heart to showcase these marvelous wonders and mesmerizing beauty of the bodies of water around us, that these beauties ought to stay even though none of us are no longer here, it is just up to us help mother nature preserve these incredible bodies of Water.

This short film began with a very dramatic and captivating scenery of what seems to be the glacial Lake Jökulsárlón in Iceland. This absolute breathtaking lagoon is Iceland's most famous and deepest lake, it also has numerous large icebergs that have broken into glaciers. The film then transitioned to different water forms, from Lake Jökulsárlón in Iceland to the tranquil Atchafalaya Basin Louisiana, majestic Iguazu Falls Brazil, the rocky rivers of Black Canyon of the Gunnison Colorado, clear water of Punta Cana, Dominican Republic, and the stunning Lake Tahoe in California, to name a few. This enthralling short film started with a very strong scene and ended with the perfection of very solemn and magical scenery. This short film seems to tell us that these bodies of water are nature's prized possession and we humans need exert extra effort to help keep these bodies of water clean and preserved. There are lots of beaches, seas, lagoons, rivers, and lakes all over the world that are getting polluted. Pollution caused by human wastes, like non-biodegradable garbage that unfortunately ended up in the seas, modernization that causes destruction, and too much tourism that overcrowds these places. It is a gentle reminder of how beautiful these places are and there are some bodies of water that used to be this gorgeous but are now abused and polluted.

Water is an award-winning film. Every aspect of this film delivered a high-quality presentation from the choice of locations, cinematography, editing, directing, choice of music, and the story that it is trying to tell us. This film will certainly mesmerize its audience and give them an incredible and memorable experience that will surely be engraved in their hearts and mind. I hope that this short film gets its deserving chance to be shown around the world, to raise awareness to preserve the beauty that surrounds our lands, our wonderful bodies of Water."
