

Family Fun Challenge

Hosted by your Family Workers at Busy Little Bees!

Our family fun challenge this month is to have each child create their own short story book! With Read Across America Week approaching, we want to celebrate books and encourage the importance of reading, or even listening to stories. Active learning is at the center of the High Scope Curriculum. It is the foundation where young children gain knowledge through their natural play and interactions with the environment, events, and other people.

This month, Busy Little Bees P.A.M is pleased to announce a collaboration with The Little BOHO Bookshop located at 164a Broadway, Bayonne, NJ. Owner Sandra Dear opened the shop to bring her vision to life- make reading fun again! We have partnered with them to support a local business.

In support of the High Scope Curriculum, we are providing you with some skills to bring the High Scope curriculum home. The High Scope Curriculum's fundamental approach is an active learning model with five active ingredients: Materials, Manipulation, Choice, Child language & Thought, and Adult scaffolding.

While creating their short story book, students are encouraged to incorporate their own ideas. We have provided materials and encourage you to use any you choose! While you are making the project with your child, we encourage you to talk about the project and engage in a conversation that supports their understanding of creativity and creation.

Any crafts handed in after the 16th will be hung in school, but will not be eligible to win the Prize of the Month.
