

Cellular Repair

On February 7, 2014, Valerie Paris, a writer for PBS Newshour, reported that “Americans use more medications than people in other developed countries. They rank first for their use of anti-psychotics, drugs for dementia, respiratory problems, and rheumatoid arthritis. This is partly explained by medical needs: The burden of disease in the US - as measured in ‘years of life lost’ - is higher than in many other developed countries for the most common forms of heart disease, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, diabetes, and Alzheimer’s.”

As I read this statement, the words “years of life lost” leapt off the page at me. I felt angry and saddened. How many people lose their life long before they actually die? I see so many people whose lives revolve around doctor appointments. People who are tired and sick. I witness the struggle every day among people and I, as are many of you, am frustrated.

In my 22 years of working and studying in the holistic field, I have been a direct witness to this problem of increasing disease issues. I have watched the vast increase of pharmaceutical usage as well as the overwhelming side effects that often leave people with more problems than when they began treatment. I have seen the desperate looks and heard the cries from people as they struggle to find answers and relief. For many, the costs of their medications have created a financial hardship and yet they are still sick!

Also, on the market today are many supplemental products. Many yield great results while many frustratingly, do not. As I began my quest to understand why there is such inconsistency, I found that many of the raw ingredients were not of good quality. Additionally, I discovered that the active components in the raw materials were altered, weakened, or destroyed by being over-processed. These factors result in products that do not work well.

My passion has always been to help people regain their health and natural wellbeing. In my desire to make a difference, I set out to formulate a product that would have high quality rich ingredients with minimal processing. I wanted a nutraceutical product that would induce the body to correct and heal itself.

After many months of researching and interviewing manufactures, I chose one who met my requirements of minimally processed quality raw materials and who also shared my vision for those materials. I can now present to you a pure, highly energetic formula that has the ability to restore health and balance within your body. Your body was designed to heal itself and this formula acts as a catalyst to do just that.

My heart, in developing this formula, is to give you the greatest possibility of regained health. You were designed to live in a state of health and I cannot wait to hear your stories!

Be blessed and be healed
