[232] Chief among those advantages are the institutional expertise and specialization inherent to administering a particular mandate on a daily basis. Those appointed to administrative tribunals are often chosen precisely because their backgrounds and experience align with their mandate (Van Harten et al., at p. 15; Régimbald, at p. 463). Some administrative schemes explicitly require a degree of expertise from new members as a condition of appointment (Edmonton East, at para. 33; Dr. Q v. College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia, 2003 SCC 19 (CanLII), [2003] 1 S.C.R. 226, at para. 29; Régimbald, at p. 462). As institutions, administrative bodies also benefit from specialization as they develop "habitual familiarity with the legislative scheme they administer" (Edmonton East, at para. 33) and "grappl[e] with issues on a repeated basis" (Parry Sound (District) Social Services Administration Board v. O.P.S.E.U., Local 324, 2003 SCC 42 (CanLII), [2003] 2 S.C.R. 157, at para. 53). Specialization and expertise are further enhanced by continuing education and through meetings of the membership of an administrative body to discuss policies and best practices (Finn Makela, "Acquired Expertise of Administrative Tribunals and the Standard of Judicial Review: The Case of Grievance Arbitrators and Human Rights Law" (2013), 17 C.L.E.L.J. 345, at p. 349). In addition, the blended membership of some tribunals fosters special institutional competence in resolving "polycentric" disputes (Pushpanathan, at para. 36; Dr. Q, at paras. 29-30; Pezim, at pp. 591-92 and 596).

[233] All this equips administrative decision-makers to tackle questions of law arising from their mandates. In interpreting their enabling statutes, for example, administrative actors may have a particularly astute appreciation for the on-the-ground consequences of particular legal interpretations; of statutory context; of the purposes that a provision or legislative scheme are meant to serve; and of specialized terminology used in their administrative setting. Coupled with this Court's acknowledgment that legislative provisions often admit of multiple reasonable interpretations, the advantages stemming from specialization and expertise provide a robust foundation for deference to administrative decision-makers on legal questions within their mandate (C.U.P.E., at p. 236; McLean, at para. 37). As Professor H. W. Arthurs said:

> There is no reason to believe that a judge who reads a particular regulatory statute once in his life, perhaps in worst-case circumstances, can read it with greater fidelity to legislative purpose than an administrator who is sworn to uphold that purpose, who strives to do so daily, and is well-aware of the effect upon the purpose of the various alternate interpretations. There is no reason to believe that a legally-trained judge is better qualified to determine the existence or sufficiency or appropriateness of evidence on a given point than a trained economist or engineer, an arbitrator selected by the parties, or simply an experienced tribunal member who decides such cases day in and day out. There is no reason to believe that a judge whose entire professional life has been spent dealing with disputes one by one should possess an aptitude for issues which arise often because an administrative system dealing with cases in volume has been designed to strike an appropriate balance between efficiency and effective rights of participation.

[234] Judges of this Court have endorsed both this passage and the broader proposition that specialization and expertise justify the deference owed to administrative decision-makers (National Corn Growers, at p. 1343, per Wilson J., concurring). As early as C.U.P.E., Dickson J. fused expertise and legislative intent by explaining that an administrative body's specialized expertise can be essential to achieving the purposes of a statutory scheme:

> The Act calls for a delicate balance between the need to maintain public services, and the need to maintain collective bargaining. Considerable sensitivity and unique expertise on the part of Board members is all the more required if the twin purposes of the legislation are to be met. [p. 236]

[235] Over time, specialized expertise would become the core rationale for deferring to administrative decision-makers (Bradco Construction, at p. 335; Southam, at para. 50; Audrey Macklin, "Standard of Review: Back to the Future?", in Colleen M. Flood and Lorne Sossin, eds., Administrative Law in Context (3rd ed. 2018), 381, at pp. 397-98). Post-Dunsmuir, the Court has been steadfast in confirming the central role of specialization and expertise, affirming their connection to legislative intent, and recognizing that they give administrative decision-makers the "interpretative upper hand" on questions of law (McLean, at para. 40; see also Conway, at para. 53; Mowat, at para. 30; Newfoundland and Labrador Nurses' Union v. Newfoundland and Labrador (Treasury Board), 2011 SCC 62 (CanLII), [2011] 3 S.C.R. 708, at para. 13; Doré v. Barreau du Québec, 2012 SCC 12 (CanLII), [2012] 1 S.C.R. 395, at para. 35; Mouvement laïque, at para. 46; Khosa, at para. 25; Edmonton East, at para. 33).

[236] Although the majority's approach extolls respect for the legislature's "institutional design choices", it accords no weight to the institutional advantages of specialization and expertise that administrative decision-makers possess in resolving questions of law. In so doing, the majority disregards the historically accepted reason why the legislature intended to delegate authority to an administrative actor.

[237] Nor are we persuaded by the majority's claim that "if administrative decision makers are understood to possess specialized expertise on all questions that come before them, the concept of expertise ceases to assist a reviewing court in attempting to distinguish questions for which applying the reasonableness standard is appropriate from those for which it is not". Here, the majority sets up a false choice: expertise must either be assessed on a case-by-case basis or play no role at all in a theory of judicial review.

[238] We disagree. While not every decision-maker necessarily has expertise on every issue raised in an administrative proceeding, reviewing courts do not engage in an individualized, case-by-case assessment of specialization and expertise. The theory of deference is based not only on the legislative choice to delegate decisions, but also on institutional expertise and on "the reality that . . . those working day to day in the implementation of frequently complex administrative schemes have or will develop a considerable degree of expertise or field sensitivity to the imperatives and nuances of the legislative regime" (Khosa, at para. 25; see also Nor-Man Regional Health Authority Inc. v. Manitoba Association of Health Care Professionals, 2011 SCC 59 (CanLII), [2011] 3 S.C.R. 616, at para. 53; Edmonton East, at para. 33).

[239] The exclusion of expertise, specialization and other institutional advantages from the majority's standard of review framework is not merely a theoretical concern. The removal of the current "conceptual basis" for deference opens the gates to expanded correctness review. The majority's "presumption" of deference will yield all too easily to justifications for a correctness-oriented framework.

[240] In the majority's framework, deference gives way whenever the "rule of law" demands it. The majority's approach to the rule of law, however, flows from a court-centric conception of the rule of law rooted in Dicey's 19th century philosophy.

[241] The rule of law is not the rule of courts. A pluralist conception of the rule of law recognizes that courts are not the exclusive guardians of law, and that others in the justice arena have shared responsibility for its development, including administrative decision-makers. Dunsmuir embraced this more inclusive view of the rule of law by acknowledging that the "court-centric conception of the rule of law" had to be "reined in by acknowledging that the courts do not have a monopoly on deciding all questions of law" (para. 30). As discussed in Dunsmuir, the rule of law is understood as meaning that administrative decision-makers make legal determinations within their mandate, and not that only judges decide questions of law with an unrestricted license to substitute their opinions for those of administrative actors through correctness review (see McLachlin, Administrative Tribunals and the Courts: An Evolutionary Relationship; The Hon. Thomas A. Cromwell, "What I Think I've Learned About Administrative Law" (2017), 30 C.J.A.L.P. 307, at p. 308; Wilson v. Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., 2016 SCC 29 (CanLII), [2016] 1 S.C.R. 770, at para. 31, per Abella J.).

[242] Moreover, central to any definition of the rule of law is access to a fair and efficient dispute resolution process, capable of dispensing timely justice (Hryniak v. Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7 (CanLII), [2014] 1 S.C.R. 87, at para. 1). This is an important objective for all litigants, from the sophisticated consumers of administrative justice, to, most significantly, the particularly vulnerable ones (Angus Grant and Lorne Sossin, "Fairness in Context: Achieving Fairness Through Access to Administrative Justice", in Colleen M. Flood and Lorne Sossin, eds., Administrative Law in Context (3rd ed. 2018), 341, at p. 342). For this reason, access to justice is at the heart of the legislative choice to establish a robust system of administrative law (Grant and Sossin, at pp. 342 and 369-70; Van Harten, et al., at p. 17; Régimbald, at pp. 2-3; McLachlin, Administrative Tribunals and the Courts: An Evolutionary Relationship). As Morissette J.A. has observed:

> . . . the aims of administrative law . . . generally gravitate towards promoting access to justice. The means contemplated are costless or inexpensive, simple and expeditious procedures, expertise of the decision-makers, coherence of reasons, consistency of results and finality of decisions.

[243] These goals are compromised when a narrow conception of the "rule of law" is invoked to impose judicial hegemony over administrative decision-makers. Doing so perverts the purpose of establishing a parallel system of administrative justice, and adds unnecessary expense and complexity for the public.

[244] The majority even calls for a reformulation of the "questions of central importance" category from Dunsmuir and permits courts to substitute their opinions for administrative decision-makers on "questions of central importance to the legal system as a whole", even if those questions fall squarely within the mandate and expertise of the administrative decision-maker. As noted in Canadian Human Rights Commission, correctness review was permitted only for questions "of central importance to the legal system and outside the specialized expertise of the adjudicator" (para. 28 (emphasis in original)). Broadening this category from its original characterization unduly expands the issues available for judicial substitution. Issues of discrimination, labour rights, and economic regulation of the securities markets (among many others) theoretically raise questions of vital importance for Canada and its legal system. But by ignoring administrative decision-makers' expertise on these matters, this category will inevitably provide more "room . . . for both mistakes and manipulation" (Andrew Green, "Can There Be Too Much Context in Administrative Law? Setting the Standard of Review in Canadian Administrative Law" (2014), 47 U.B.C. L. Rev. 443, at p. 483). We would leave Dunsmuir's description of this category undisturbed.[1]

[245] We also disagree with the majority's reformulation of "legislative intent" to include, for the first time, an invitation for courts to apply correctness review to legal questions whenever an administrative scheme includes a right of appeal. We do not see how appeal rights represent a "different institutional structure" that requires a more searching form of review. The mere fact that a statute contemplates a reviewing role for a court says nothing about the degree of deference required in the review process. Rights of appeal reflect different choices by different legislatures to permit review for different reasons, on issues of fact, law, mixed fact and law, and discretion, among others. Providing parties with a right of appeal can serve several purposes entirely unrelated to the standard of review, including outlining: where the appeal will take place (sometimes, at a different reviewing court than in the routes provided for judicial review); who is eligible to take part; when materials must be filed; how materials must be presented; the reviewing court's powers on appeal; any leave requirements; and the grounds on which the parties may appeal (among other things). By providing this type of structure and guidance, statutory appeal provisions may allow legislatures to promote efficiency and access to justice, in a way that exclusive reliance on the judicial review procedure would not have.

[246] In reality, the majority's position on statutory appeal rights, although couched in language about "giv[ing] effect to the legislature's institutional design choices", hinges almost entirely on a textualist argument: the presence of the word "appeal" indicates a legislative intent that courts apply the same standards of review found in civil appellate jurisprudence.

[247] The majority's reliance on the "presumption of consistent expression" in relation to the single word "appeal" is misplaced and disregards long-accepted institutional distinctions between how courts and administrative decision-makers function. The language in each setting is different; the mandates are different; the policy bases are different. The idea that Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33 (CanLII), [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235, must be inflexibly applied to every right of "appeal" within a statute — with no regard for the broader purposes of the statutory scheme or the practical implications of greater judicial involvement within it — is entirely unsupported by our jurisprudence.

[248] In addition, the majority's claim that legislatures "d[o] not speak in vain" is irreconcilable with its treatment of privative clauses, which play no role in its standard of review framework. If, as the majority claims, Parliament's decision to provide appeal routes must influence the standard of review analysis, there is no principled reason why Parliament's decision via privative clauses to prohibit appeals should not be given comparable effect.[2]

[249] In any event, legislatures in this country have known for at least 25 years since Pezim that this Court has not treated statutory rights of appeal as a determinative reflection of legislative intent regarding the standard of review (Pezim, at p. 590). Against this reality, the continued use by legislatures of the term "appeal" cannot be imbued with the intent that the majority retroactively ascribes to it; doing so is inconsistent with the principle that legislatures are presumed to enact legislation in compliance with existing common law rules (Ruth Sullivan, Statutory Interpretation (3rd ed. 2016), at p. 315).

[250] Those legislatures, moreover, understood from our jurisprudence that this Court was committed to respecting standards of review that were statutorily prescribed, as British Columbia alone has done.[3] We agree with the Attorney General of Canada's position in the companion appeals of Bell Canada v. Canada (Attorney General), 2019 SCC 66 (CanLII), [2019] 4 S.C.R. 845, that, absent exceptional circumstances, the existence of a statutory right of appeal does not displace the presumption that the standard of reasonableness applies.[4] The majority, however, has inexplicably chosen the template proposed by the amici,[5] recommending a sweeping overhaul of our approach to legislative intent and to the determination of the standard of review.

[251] The result reached by the majority means that hundreds of administrative decision-makers subject to different kinds of statutory rights of appeal — some in highly specialized fields, such as broadcasting, securities regulation and international trade — will now be subject to an irrebuttable presumption of correctness review. This has the potential to cause a stampede of litigation. Reviewing courts will have license to freely revisit legal questions on matters squarely within the expertise of administrative decision-makers, even if they are of no broader consequence outside of their administrative regimes. Even if specialized decision-makers provide reasonable interpretations of highly technical statutes with which they work daily, even if they provide internally consistent interpretations responsive to the parties' submissions and consistent with the text, context and purpose of the governing scheme, the administrative body's past practices and decisions, the common law, prior judicial rulings and international law, those interpretations can still be set aside by a reviewing court that simply takes a different view of the relevant statute. This risks undermining the integrity of administrative proceedings whenever there is a statutory right of appeal, rendering them little more than rehearsals for a judicial appeal — the inverse of the legislative intent to establish a specialized regime and entrust certain legal and policy questions to non-judicial actors.

[252] Ironically, the majority's approach will be a roadblock to its promise of simplicity. Elevating appeal clauses to indicators of correctness review creates a two-tier system of administrative law: one tier that defers to the expertise of administrative decision-makers where there is no appeal clause; and another tier where such clauses permit judges to substitute their own views of the legal issues at the core of those decision-makers' mandates. Within the second tier, the application of appellate law principles will inevitably create confusion by encouraging segmentation in judicial review (Mouvement laïque, at para. 173, per Abella J., concurring in part; see also Paul Daly, "Struggling Towards Coherence in Canadian Administrative Law? Recent Cases on Standard of Review and Reasonableness" (2016), 62 McGill L.J. 527, at pp. 542-43; the Hon. Joseph T. Robertson, "Identifying the Review Standard: Administrative Deference in a Nutshell" (2017), 68 U.N.B.L.J. 145, at p. 162). Courts will be left with the task of identifying palpable and overriding errors for factual questions, extricating legal issues from questions of mixed fact and law, reviewing questions of law de novo, and potentially having to apply judicial review and appellate standards interchangeably if an applicant challenges in one proceeding multiple aspects of an administrative decision, some falling within an appeal clause and others not. It is an invitation to complexity and a barrier to access to justice.

[253] The majority's reasons "roll back the Dunsmuir clock to an era where some courts asserted a level of skill and knowledge in administrative matters which further experience showed they did not possess" (Khosa, at para. 26). The reasons elevate statutory rights of appeal to a determinative factor based on a formalistic approach that ignores the legislature's intention to leave certain legal and policy questions to specialized administrative decision-makers. This unravelling of Canada's carefully developed, deferential approach to administrative law returns us to the "black letter law" approach found in Anisminic and cases like Metropolitan Life whereby specialized decision-makers were subject to the pre-eminent determinations of a judge. Rather than building on Dunsmuir, which recognized that specialization is fundamentally intertwined with the legislative choice to delegate particular subject matters to administrative decision-makers, the majority's reasons banish expertise from the standard of review analysis entirely, opening the door to a host of new correctness categories which remain open to further expansion. The majority's approach not only erodes the presumption of deference; it erodes confidence in the existence — and desirability — of the "shared enterprises in the administrative state" of "[l]aw-making and legal interpretation" between courts and administrative decision-makers (Stack, at p. 310).

[254] But the aspect of the majority's decision with the greatest potential to undermine both the integrity of this Court's decisions, and public confidence in the stability of the law, is its disregard for precedent and stare decisis.

[255] Stare decisis places significant limits on this Court's ability to overturn its precedents. Justice Rothstein described some of these limits in Canada v. Craig, 2012 SCC 43 (CanLII), [2012] 2 S.C.R. 489, the case about horizontal stare decisis on which the majority relies:

> The question of whether this Court should overrule one of its own prior decisions was addressed recently in Ontario (Attorney General) v. Fraser, 2011 SCC 20, [2011] 2 S.C.R. 3. At paragraph 56, Chief Justice McLachlin and LeBel J., in joint majority reasons, noted that overturning a precedent of this Court is a step not to be lightly undertaken. This is especially so when the precedent represents the considered views of firm majorities (para. 57).
> Nonetheless, this Court has overruled its own decisions on a number of occasions. (See R. v. Chaulk, 1990 CanLII 34 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 1303, at p. 1353, per Lamer C.J., for the majority; R. v. B. (K.G.), 1993 CanLII 116 (SCC), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 740; R. v. Robinson, 1996 CanLII 233 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 683.) However, the Court must be satisfied based on compelling reasons that the precedent was wrongly decided and should be overruled . . . .
> Courts must proceed with caution when deciding to overrule a prior decision. In Queensland v. Commonwealth (1977), 139 C.L.R. 585 (H.C.A.), at p. 599, Justice Gibbs articulated the required approach succinctly:
> > No Justice is entitled to ignore the decisions and reasoning of his predecessors, and to arrive at his own judgment as though the pages of the law reports were blank, or as though the authority of a decision did not survive beyond the rising of the Court. A Justice, unlike a legislator, cannot introduce a programme of reform which sets at nought decisions formerly made and principles formerly established. It is only after the most careful and respectful consideration of the earlier decision, and after giving due weight to all the circumstances, that a Justice may give effect to his own opinions in preference to an earlier decision of the Court. [Emphasis added; paras. 24-26.]

[256] Apex courts in several jurisdictions outside Canada have similarly stressed the need for caution and compelling justification before departing from precedent. The United States Supreme Court refrains from overruling its past decisions absent a "special justification", which must be over and above the belief that a prior case was wrongly decided (Kimble v. Marvel Entertainment, LLC, 135 S. Ct. 2401 (2015), at p. 2409; see also Halliburton Co. v. Erica P. John Fund, Inc., 573 U.S. 258 (2014), at p. 266; Kisor v. Wilkie, 139 S. Ct. 2400 (2019), at pp. 2418 and 2422; Bryan A. Garner et al., The Law of Judicial Precedent (2016), at pp. 35-36).

[257] Similarly, the House of Lords "require[d] much more than doubts as to the correctness of [a past decision] to justify departing from it" (Fitzleet Estates Ltd. v. Cherry (1977), 51 T.C. 708, at p. 718), an approach that the United Kingdom Supreme Court continues to endorse (R. v. Taylor, [2016] UKSC 5, [2016] 4 All E.R. 617, at para. 19; Willers v. Joyce (No. 2), [2016] UKSC 44, [2017] 2 All E.R. 383, at para. 7; Knauer v. Ministry of Justice, [2016] UKSC 9, [2016] 4 All E.R. 897, at paras. 22-23).

[258] New Zealand's Supreme Court views "caution, often considerable caution" as the "touchstone" of its approach to horizontal stare decisis, and has emphasized that it will not depart from precedent "merely because, if the matter were being decided afresh, the Court might take a different view" (Couch v. Attorney-General (No. 2), [2010] NZSC 27, [2010] 3 N.Z.L.R. 149, at paras. 105, per Tipping J., and 209, per McGrath J.).

[260] The virtues of horizontal stare decisis are widely recognized. The doctrine "promotes the evenhanded, predictable, and consistent development of legal principles, fosters reliance on judicial decisions, and contributes to the actual and perceived integrity of the judicial process" (Kimble, at p. 2409, citing Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991), at p. 827). This Court has stressed the importance of stare decisis for "[c]ertainty in the law" (Canada (Attorney General) v. Bedford, 2013 SCC 72 (CanLII), [2013] 3 S.C.R. 1101, at para. 38; R. v. Bernard, 1988 CanLII 22 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 833, at p. 849; Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development v. Ranville, 1982 CanLII 202 (SCC), [1982] 2 S.C.R. 518, at p. 527). Other courts have described stare decisis as a "foundation stone of the rule of law" (Michigan v. Bay Mills Indian Community, 572 U.S. 782 (2014), at p. 798; Kimble, at p. 2409; Kisor, at p. 2422; see also Camps Bay, at pp. 55-56; Jeremy Waldron, "Stare Decisis and the Rule of Law: A Layered Approach" (2012), 111 Mich. L. Rev. 1, at p. 28; Lewis F. Powell, Jr., "Stare Decisis and Judicial Restraint" (1990), 47 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 281, at p. 288).

[261] Respect for precedent also safeguards this Court's institutional legitimacy. The precedential value of a judgment of this Court does not "expire with the tenure of the particular panel of judges that decided it" (Plourde v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp., 2009 SCC 54 (CanLII), [2009] 3 S.C.R. 465, at para. 13). American cases have stressed similar themes:

> There is . . . a point beyond which frequent overruling would overtax the country's belief in the Court's good faith. Despite the variety of reasons that may inform and justify a decision to overrule, we cannot forget that such a decision is usually perceived (and perceived correctly) as, at the least, a statement that a prior decision was wrong. There is a limit to the amount of error that can plausibly be imputed to prior Courts. If that limit should be exceeded, disturbance of prior rulings would be taken as evidence that justifiable reexamination of principle had given way to drives for particular results in the short term. The legitimacy of the Court would fade with the frequency of its vacillation.

[262] Several scholars have made this point as well (see e.g., Michael J. Gerhardt, The Power of Precedent (2008), at p. 18; Garner et al., at p. 391). Aharon Barak has warned that > overruling precedent damages the public's conception of the judicial role, and undermines the respect in which the public holds the courts and its faith in them. Precedent should not resemble a ticket valid only for the day of purchase.

[263] The majority's reasons, in our view, disregard the high threshold required to overturn one of this Court's decisions. The justification for the majority abandoning this Court's long-standing view of how statutory appeal clauses impact the standard of review analysis is that this Court's approach was "unsound in principle" and criticized by judges and academics. The majority also suggests that the Court's decisions set up an "unworkable and unnecessarily complex" system of judicial review. Abandoning them, the majority argues, would promote the values underlying stare decisis, namely "clarity and certainty in the law". In doing so, the majority discards several of this Court's bedrock administrative law principles.

[264] The majority leaves unaddressed the most significant rejection of this Court's jurisprudence in its reasons — its decision to change the entire "conceptual basis" for judicial review by excluding specialization, expertise and other institutional advantages from the analysis. The lack of any justification for this foundational shift — repeatedly invoked by the majority to sanitize further overturning of precedent — undercuts the majority's stated respect for stare decisis principles.

[265] The majority explains its decision to overrule the Court's prior decisions about appeal clauses by asserting that these precedents had "no satisfactory justification". It does not point, however, to any arguments different from those heard and rejected by other panels of this Court over the decades whose decisions are being discarded. Instead, the majority substitutes its own preferred approach to interpreting statutory rights of appeal — an approach rejected by several prior panels of this Court in a line of decisions stretching back three decades. The rejection of such an approach was explicitly reaffirmed no fewer than four times in the past ten years (Khosa, at para. 26; Mowat, at paras. 30-31; Mouvement laïque, at para. 38; Edmonton East, at paras. 27-31; see also McLean, at para. 21).

> . . . an argument that we got something wrong — even a good argument to that effect — cannot by itself justify scrapping settled precedent. Or otherwise said, it is not alone sufficient that we would decide a case differently now than we did then. To reverse course, we require as well what we have termed a "special justification" — over and above the belief "that the precedent was wrongly decided." [Citation omitted; p. 2409.]

[267] But it is the unprecedented wholesale rejection of an entire body of jurisprudence that is particularly unsettling. The affected cases are too numerous to list in full here. It includes many decisions conducting deferential review even in the face of a statutory right of appeal (Pezim; Southam; Committee for Equal Treatment of Asbestos Minority Shareholders v. Ontario (Securities Commission), 2001 SCC 37 (CanLII), [2001] 2 S.C.R. 132; Dr. Q; Ryan; Cartaway; VIA Rail; Association des courtiers et agents immobiliers du Québec v. Proprio Direct inc., 2008 SCC 32 (CanLII), [2008] 2 S.C.R. 195; Nolan v. Kerry (Canada) Inc., 2009 SCC 39 (CanLII), [2009] 2 S.C.R. 678; McLean; Bell Canada (2009); ATCO Gas; Mouvement laïque; Igloo Vikski; Edmonton East) and bedrock judgments affirming the relevance of administrative expertise to the standard of review analysis and to "home statute" deference (C.U.P.E.; National Corn Growers; Domtar Inc.; Bradco Construction; Southam; Pushpanathan; Alberta Teachers' Association; Canadian Human Rights Commission, among many others).

[268] Most of those decisions were decided unanimously or by strong majorities. At no point, however, does the majority acknowledge this Court's strong reluctance to overturn precedents that "represen[t] the considered views of firm majorities" (Craig, at para. 24; Ontario (Attorney General) v. Fraser, 2011 SCC 20 (CanLII), [2011] 2 S.C.R. 3, at para. 57; see also Nishi v. Rascal Trucking Ltd., 2013 SCC 33 (CanLII), [2013] 2 S.C.R. 438, at paras. 23-24), or to overrule decisions of a "recent vintage" (Fraser, at para. 57; see also Nishi, at para. 23). The decisions the majority does rely on, by contrast, involved overturning usually only one precedent and almost always an older one: Craig overruled a 34-year-old precedent; R. v. Henry, 2005 SCC 76 (CanLII), [2005] 3 S.C.R. 609, overruled a 19-year-old precedent (and another 15-year-old precedent, in part); and the dissenting judges in Bernard would have overruled a 10-year-old precedent.

[269] The majority's decision to overturn precedent also has the potential to disturb settled interpretations of many statutes that contain a right of appeal. Under the majority's approach, every existing interpretation of such statutes by an administrative body that has been affirmed under a reasonableness standard of review will be open to fresh challenge. In McLean, for example, this Court acknowledged that a limitations period in British Columbia's Securities Act[6] had two reasonable interpretations, but deferred to the one the Commission preferred based on deferential review. We see no reason why an individual in the same situation as Ms. McLean could not now revisit our Court's decision through the statutory right of appeal in the Securities Act, and insist that a new reviewing court offer its definitive view of the relevant limitations period now that appeal clauses are interpreted to permit judicial substitution rather than deference.

[271] Moreover, if this Court had for over 30 years significantly misconstrued the purpose of statutory appeal routes by failing to recognize what this majority has ultimately discerned — that in enacting such routes, legislatures were unequivocally directing courts to review de novo every question of law that an administrative body addresses, regardless of that body's expertise — legislatures across Canada were free to clarify this interpretation and endorse the majority's favoured approach through legislative amendment. Given the possibility — and continued absence — of legislative correction, the case for overturning our past decisions is even less compelling (Binus v. The Queen, 1967 CanLII 15 (SCC), [1967] S.C.R. 594, at p. 601; see also Kimble, at p. 2409; Kisor, at pp. 2422-23; Bilski v. Kappos, Under Secretary of Commerce for Intellectual Property and Director, Patent and Trademark Office, 561 U.S. 593 (2010), at pp. 601-2).

[272] Each of these rationales for adhering to precedent — consistent affirmation, reliance interests and the possibility of legislative correction — was recently endorsed by the United States Supreme Court in Kisor. There, the Court invoked stare decisis to uphold two administrative law precedents which urged deference to administrative agencies when they interpreted ambiguous provisions in their regulations (Bowles, Price Administrator v. Seminole Rock & Sand Co., 325 U.S. 410 (1945); Auer v. Robbins, 519 U.S. 452 (1997)). Writing for the majority on the issue of stare decisis, Justice Kagan explained at length why the doctrine barred the Court from overturning Auer or Seminole Rock. To begin, Justice Kagan reiterated the importance of stare decisis and the need for special justification to overcome its demands. She then explained that stare decisis carried even greater force than usual when applied to two decisions that had been affirmed by a "long line of precedents" going back 75 years or more and cited by lower courts thousands of times (p. 2422). She noted that overturning the challenged precedents would cast doubt on many settled statutory interpretations and invite relitigation of cases (p. 2422). Finally, Justice Kagan reasoned that Congress remained free to overturn the cases if the Court had misconstrued legislative intent:

> . . . even if we are wrong about Auer, "Congress remains free to alter what we have done." In a constitutional case, only we can correct our error. But that is not so here. Our deference decisions are "balls tossed into Congress's court, for acceptance or not as that branch elects." And so far, at least, Congress has chosen acceptance. It could amend the APA or any specific statute to require the sort of de novo review of regulatory interpretations that Kisor favors. Instead, for approaching a century, it has let our deference regime work side-by-side with both the APA and the many statutes delegating rulemaking power to agencies. It has done so even after we made clear that our deference decisions reflect a presumption about congressional intent. And it has done so even after Members of this Court began to raise questions about the doctrine. Given that history — and Congress's continuing ability to take up Kisor's arguments — we would need a particularly "special justification" to now reverse Auer. [Citations omitted; pp. 2422-23.]

[273] In the face of these compelling reasons for adhering to precedent, many of which have found resonance in this Court's jurisprudence, the majority's reliance on "judicial and academic criticism" falls far short of overcoming the demands of stare decisis. It is hard to see why the obiter views of the handful of Canadian judges referred to by the majority should be determinative or even persuasive. The majority omits the views of any academics or judges who have voiced support for a strong presumption of deference without identifying our approach to statutory rights of appeal as cause for concern (Dyzenhaus, "Dignity in Administrative Law: Judicial Deference in a Culture of Justification", at p. 109; Green, at pp. 489-90; Matthew Lewans, Administrative Law and Judicial Deference (2016); Jonathan M. Coady, "The Time Has Come: Standard of Review in Canadian Administrative Law" (2017), 68 U.N.B.L.J. 87; the Hon. John M. Evans, "Standards of Review in Administrative Law" (2013), 26 C.J.A.L.P. 67, at p. 79; the Hon. John M. Evans, "Triumph of Reasonableness: But How Much Does It Really Matter?" [274] A selective assortment of criticism is not evidence of generalized criticism or unworkability. This Court frequently tackles contentious, high-profile cases that engender strong and persisting divisions of opinion. The public looks to us to definitively resolve those cases, regardless of the composition of the Court. As Hayne J. noted in Lee:

> To regard the judgments of this Court as open to reconsideration whenever a new argument is found more attractive than the principle expressed in a standing decision is to overlook the function which a final court of appeal must perform in defining the law. In difficult areas of the law, differences of legal opinion are inevitable; before a final court of appeal, the choice between competing legal solutions oftentimes turns on the emphasis or weight given by each of the judges to one factor against a countervailing factor. . . . In such cases, the decision itself determines which solution is, for the purposes of the current law, correct. It is not to the point to argue in the next case that, leaving the particular decision out of account, > another solution is better supported by legal theory. Such an approach would diminish the authority and finality of the judgments of this Court. As the function of defining the law is vested in the Court rather than in the justices who compose it, a decision of the Court will be followed in subsequent cases by the Court, however composed, subject to the exceptional power which resides in the Court to permit reconsideration.

> Accordingly, as one commentator has put the point: "the previous decision is to be treated as the primary premise from which other arguments follow, and not just as one potential premise among an aggregate of competing premises". [Emphasis in original; footnote omitted.]

[275] This Court, in fact, has been clear that "criticism of a judgment is not sufficient to justify overruling it" (Fraser, at para. 86). Differences of legal and public opinion are a natural by-product of contentious cases like R. v. Jordan, 2016 SCC 27 (CanLII), [2016] 1 S.C.R. 631, or even Housen, which, as this Court acknowledged, was initially applied by appeal courts with "varying degrees of enthusiasm" (H.L. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 25 (CanLII), [2005] 1 S.C.R. 401, at para. 76; see also Paul M. Perell, "The Standard of Appellate Review and The Ironies of Housen v. Nikolaisen" (2004), 28 Adv. Q. 40, at p. 53; Mike Madden, "Conquering the Common Law Hydra: A Probably Correct and Reasonable Overview of Current Standards of Appellate and Judicial Review" (2010), 36 Adv. Q. 269, at pp. 278-79 and 293; Paul J. Pape and John J. Adair, "Unreasonable review: The losing party and the palpable and overriding error standard" (2008), 27 Adv. J. 6, at p. 8; Geoff R. Hall, "Two Unsettled Questions in the Law of Contractual Interpretation: A Call to the Supreme Court of Canada" (2011), 50 Can. Bus. L.J. 434, at p. 436).

[276] To justify circumventing this Court's jurisprudence, the majority claims that the precedents being overturned themselves departed from the approach to statutory rights of appeal under the pragmatic and functional test. That, with respect, is wrong. Ever since Bell Canada (1989) and in several subsequent decisions outlined earlier in these reasons, statutory rights of appeal have played little or no role in the standard of review analysis. Moreover, in pre-Dunsmuir cases, statutory rights of appeal were still seen as only one factor among others — and not as unequivocal indicators of correctness review (see, for example, Canada (Deputy Minister of National Revenue) v. Mattel Canada Inc., 2001 SCC 36 (CanLII), [2001] 2 S.C.R. 100, at paras. 27-33; Chieu v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2002 SCC 3 (CanLII), [2002] 1 S.C.R. 84, at paras. 23-24; Harvard College v. Canada (Commissioner of Patents), 2002 SCC 76 (CanLII), [2002] 4 S.C.R. 45, at paras. 149-51). Our pre- and post-Dunsmuir cases on statutory rights of appeal shared in common an unwavering commitment to determining the standard of review in administrative proceedings using administrative law principles, even when appeal rights were involved.

[277] For the majority, the elimination of the contextual factors appears to have justified the reconstruction of the whole judicial review framework. Yet the elimination of the contextual analysis was all but complete in our post-Dunsmuir jurisprudence, and does not support the foundational changes to judicial review in the majority's decision. Neither that development, nor the majority's assertion that our precedents have proven "unclear and unduly complex", justifies the conclusion that all of our administrative law precedents — even those unconnected to the practical difficulties in applying Dunsmuir — are suddenly fair game.

[278] This Court is overturning a long line of well-established and recently-affirmed precedents in a whole area of law, including several unanimous or strong majority judgments. There is no principled justification for such a dramatic departure from this Court's existing jurisprudence.

Going Forward

[279] In our view, a more modest approach to modifying our past decisions, one that goes no further than necessary to clarify the law and its application, is justified. "[W]hen a court does choose to overrule its own precedents, it should do so carefully, with moderation, and with due regard for all the important considerations that undergird the doctrine" (Garner et al., at pp. 41-42). Such an approach to changing precedent preserves the integrity of the judicial process and, at a more conceptual level, of the law itself as a social construct. Michael J. Gerhardt summarized this approach eloquently:

> Judicial modesty is . . . a disposition to respect precedents (as embodying the opinions of others), to learn from their and others' experiences, and to decide cases incrementally to minimize conflicts with either earlier opinions of the Court or other constitutional actors. [p. 7]

[280] Judicial modesty promotes the responsible development of the common law. Lord Tom Bingham described that process in his seminal work, The Rule of Law (2010):

> . . . it is one thing to move the law a little further along a line on which it is already moving, or to adapt it to accord with modern views and practices; it is quite another to seek to recast the law in a radically innovative or adventurous way, because that is to make it uncertain and unpredictable, features which are the antithesis of the rule of law. [pp. 45-46]

[281] Lord Bingham's comments highlight that a nuanced balance must be struck between maintaining the stability of the common law and ensuring that the law is flexible and responsive enough to adapt to new circumstances and shifts in societal norms. Stare decisis plays a critical role in maintaining that balance and upholding the rule of law. When stare decisis is respected, precedent acts as a stabilizing force: providing certainty as to what the law is, consistency that allows those subject to the law to order their affairs accordingly, and continuity that protects reliance on those legal consequences. Stare decisis is at the heart of the iterative development of the common law, fostering progressive, incremental and responsible change.

[282] So what do we suggest? We support a standard of review framework with a meaningful rule of deference, based on both the legislative choice to delegate decision-making authority to an administrative actor and on the specialized expertise that these decision-makers possess and develop in applying their mandates. Outside of the three remaining correctness categories from Dunsmuir — and absent clear and explicit legislative direction on the standard of review — administrative decisions should be reviewed for reasonableness. Like the majority, we support eliminating the category of "true questions of jurisdiction" and foreclosing the use of the contextual factors identified in Dunsmuir. These developments introduce incremental changes to our judicial review framework, while respecting its underlying principles and placing the ball in the legislatures' court to modify the standards of review if they wish.

[283] To the extent that concerns were expressed about the quality of administrative decision making by some interveners who represented particularly vulnerable groups, we agree that they must be taken seriously. But the solution does not lie in authorizing more incursions into the administrative system by generalist judges who lack the expertise necessary to implement these sensitive mandates. Any perceived shortcomings in administrative decision making are not solved by permitting de novo review of every legal decision by a court and, as a result, adding to the delay and cost of obtaining a final decision. The solution lies instead in ensuring the proper qualifications and training of administrative decision-makers. Like courts, administrative actors are fully capable of, and responsible for, improving the quality of their own decision-making processes, thereby strengthening access to justice in the administrative justice system.

[284] We also acknowledge that this Court should offer additional direction on conducting reasonableness review.[7] We fear, however, that the majority's multi-factored, open-ended list of "constraints" on administrative decision making will encourage reviewing courts to dissect administrative reasons in a "line-by-line treasure hunt for error" (Communications, Energy and Paperworkers Union of Canada, Local 30 v. Irving Pulp & Paper, Ltd., 2013 SCC 34 (CanLII), [2013] 2 S.C.R. 458, at para. 54). These "constraints" may function in practice as a wide-ranging catalogue of hypothetical errors to justify quashing an administrative decision — a checklist with unsettling similarities to the series of "jurisdictional errors" spelled out in Anisminic itself.

[285] Structuring reasonableness review in this fashion effectively imposes on administrative decision-makers a higher standard of justification than that applied to trial judges. Such an approach undercuts deference and revives a long-abandoned posture of suspicion towards administrative decision making. We are also concerned by the majority's warning that administrative decision-makers cannot "arrogate powers to themselves that they were never intended to have", an unhelpful truism that risks reintroducing the tortured concept of "jurisdictional error" by another name.

[286] We would advocate a continued approach to reasonableness review which focuses on the concept of deference and what it requires of reviewing courts. Curial deference, after all, is the hallmark of reasonableness review, setting it apart from the substitution of opinion permitted under the correctness standard. The choice of a particular standard of review — whether described as "correctness", "reasonableness" or in other terms — is fundamentally about "whether or not a reviewing court should defer"[8] to an administrative decision (see Dunsmuir, at para. 141, per Binnie J., concurring; Régimbald, at pp. 539-40). If courts, therefore, are to properly conduct "reasonableness" review, they must properly understand what deference means.

[287] In our view, deference imposes three requirements on courts conducting reasonableness review. It informs the attitude a reviewing court must adopt towards an administrative decision-maker; it affects how a court frames the question it must answer on judicial review; and it affects how a reviewing court evaluates challenges to an administrative decision.

[288] First and foremost, deference is an "attitude of the court" conducting reasonableness review (Dunsmuir, at para. 48). Deference mandates respect for the legislative choice to entrust a decision to administrative actors rather than to the courts, and for the important role that administrative decision-makers play in upholding and applying the rule of law (Toronto (City) v. C.U.P.E., Local 79, 2003 SCC 63 (CanLII), [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77, at para. 131, per LeBel J., concurring). Deference also requires respect for administrative decision-makers, their specialized expertise and the institutional setting in which they operate (Dunsmuir, at paras. 48-49). Reviewing courts must pay "respectful attention" to the reasons offered for an administrative decision, make a genuine effort to understand why the decision was made, and give the decision a fair and generous construction in light of the entire record (Newfoundland Nurses, at paras. 11-14 and 17).

[289] Second, deference affects how a court frames the question it must answer when conducting judicial review. A reviewing court does not ask how it would have resolved an issue, but rather, whether the answer provided by the administrative decision-maker has been shown to be unreasonable (Khosa, at paras. 59 and 61-62; Dunsmuir, at para. 47). Framing the inquiry in this way ensures that the administrative decision under review is the focus of the analysis.

[290] This Court has often endorsed this approach to conducting reasonableness review. In Ryan, for example, Iacobucci J. explained:

> . . . when deciding whether an administrative action was unreasonable, a court should not at any point ask itself what the correct decision would have been. . . . The standard of reasonableness does not imply that a decision-maker is merely afforded a "margin of error" around what the court believes is the correct result.
> . . . Unlike a review for correctness, there will often be no single right answer to the questions that are under review against the standard of reasonableness. . . . Even if there could be, notionally, a single best answer, it is not the court's role to seek this out when deciding if the decision was unreasonable. [paras. 50-51]

(See also Volvo Canada Ltd. v. U.A.W., Local 720, 1979 CanLII 4 (SCC), [1980] 1 S.C.R. 178, at p. 214; Toronto (City), at paras. 94-95, per LeBel J., concurring; VIA Rail, at para. 101; Mason v. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, 2019 FC 1251, at para. 22 (CanLII), per Grammond J.; Régimbald, at p. 539; Sharpe, at pp. 204 and 208; Paul Daly, "The Signal and the Noise in Administrative Law" (2017), 68 U.N.B.L.J. 67, at p. 85; Evans, "Triumph of Reasonableness: But How Much Does It Really Matter?", at p. 107.)

[291] Third, deferential review impacts how a reviewing court evaluates challenges to an administrative decision. Deference requires the applicant seeking judicial review to bear the onus of showing that the decision was unreasonable (Williams Lake Indian Band v. Canada (Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development), 2018 SCC 4 (CanLII), [2018] 1 S.C.R. 83, at para. 108; Mission Institution v. Khela, 2014 SCC 24 (CanLII), [2014] 1 S.C.R. 502, at para. 64; May v. Ferndale Institution, 2005 SCC 82 (CanLII), [2005] 3 S.C.R. 809, at para. 71; Ryan, at para. 48; Southam, at para. 61; Northern Telecom Ltd. v. Communications Workers of Canada, 1979 CanLII 3 (SCC), [1980] 1 S.C.R. 115, at p. 130). Focusing on whether the applicant has demonstrated that the decision is unreasonable reinforces the central role that administrative decisions play in a properly deferential review process, and confirms that the decision-maker does not have to persuade the court that its decision is reasonable.

[292] Assessing whether a decision is reasonable also requires a qualitative assessment. Reasonableness is a concept that pervades the law but is difficult to define with precision (Dunsmuir, at para. 46). It requires, by its very nature, a fact-specific inquiry that involves a certain understanding of common experience. Reasonableness cannot be reduced to a formula or a checklist of factors, many of which will not be relevant to a particular decision. Ultimately, whether an administrative decision is reasonable will depend on the context (Catalyst Paper Corp. v. North Cowichan (District), 2012 SCC 2 (CanLII), [2012] 1 S.C.R. 5, at para. 18). Administrative law covers an infinite variety of decisions and decision-making contexts, as LeBel J. colourfully explained in Blencoe v. British Columbia (Human Rights Commission), 2000 SCC 44 (CanLII), [2000] 2 S.C.R. 307, at para. 158 (dissenting in part, but not on this point):

> . . . not all administrative bodies are the same. Indeed, this is an understatement. At first glance, labour boards, police commissions, and milk control boards may seem to have about as much in common as assembly lines, cops, and cows! Administrative bodies do, of course, have some common features, but the diversity of their powers, mandate and structure is such that to apply particular standards from one context to another might well be entirely inappropriate.

[293] Deference, in our view, requires approaching each administrative decision on its own terms and in its own context. But we emphasize that the inherently contextual nature of reasonableness review does not mean that the degree of scrutiny applied by a reviewing court varies (Alberta Teachers' Association, at para. 47; Wilson, at para. 18). It merely means that when assessing a challenge to an administrative decision, a reviewing court must be attentive to all relevant circumstances, including the reasons offered to support the decision, the record, the statutory scheme and the particular issues raised by the applicant, among other factors (see, for example, Suresh v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2002 SCC 1 (CanLII), [2002] 1 S.C.R. 3, at para. 40; Newfoundland Nurses, at para. 18; Van Harten et al., at p. 794). Without this context, it is impossible to determine what constitutes a sufficiently compelling justification to quash a decision under reasonableness review. Context may make a challenge to an administrative decision more or less persuasive — but it does not alter the deferential posture of the reviewing court (Suresh, at para. 40).

[294] Deference, however, does not require reviewing courts to shirk their obligation to review the decision. So long as they maintain a respectful attitude, frame the judicial review inquiry properly and demand compelling justification for quashing a decision, reviewing courts are entitled to meaningfully probe an administrative decision. A thorough evaluation by a reviewing court is not "disguised correctness review", as some have used the phrase. Deference, after all, stems from respect, not inattention to detail.

[295] Bearing this in mind, we offer the following suggestions for conducting reasonableness review. We begin with situations where reasons are required.[9]

[296] The administrative decision is the focal point of the review exercise. Where reasons are provided, they serve as the natural starting point to determine whether the decision-maker acted reasonably (Williams Lake, at para. 36). By beginning with the reasons offered for the decision, read in light of the surrounding context and the grounds raised to challenge the decision, reviewing courts provide meaningful oversight while respecting the legitimacy of specialized administrative decision making.

[297] Reviewing courts should approach the reasons with respect for the specialized decision-makers, the significant role they have been assigned and the institutional context chosen by the legislator. Reasons should be approached generously, on their own terms. Reviewing courts should be hesitant to second-guess operational implications, practical challenges and on-the-ground knowledge used to justify an administrative decision. Reviewing courts must also remain alert to specialized concepts or language used in an administrative decision that may be unfamiliar to a generalist judge (Newfoundland Nurses, at para. 13; Igloo Vikski, at paras. 17 and 30). When confronted with unfamiliar language or modes of reasoning, judges should acknowledge that such differences are an inevitable, intentional and invaluable by-product of the legislative choice to assign a matter to the administrative system. They may lend considerable force to an administrative decision and, by the same token, render an applicant's challenge to that decision less compelling. Reviewing courts scrutinizing an administrative body's decision under the reasonableness framework should therefore keep in mind that the administrative body holds the "interpretative upper hand" (McLean, at para. 40).

[298] Throughout the review process, a court conducting deferential review must view claims of administrative error in context and with caution, cognizant of the need to avoid substituting its opinion for that of those empowered and better equipped to answer the questions at issue. Because judicial substitution is incompatible with deference, reviewing courts must carefully evaluate the challenges raised by an applicant to ensure they go to the reasonableness of the administrative decision.

[299] Unsurprisingly, applicants rarely present challenges to an administrative decision as explicit invitations for courts to substitute their opinions for those of administrative actors. Courts, therefore, must carefully probe challenges to administrative decisions to assess whether they amount, in substance, to a mere difference of opinion with how the administrative decision-maker weighed or prioritized the various factors relevant to the decision-making process. Allegations of error may, on deeper examination, simply reflect a legitimate difference in approach by an administrative decision-maker. By rooting out and rejecting such challenges, courts respect the valuable and distinct perspective that administrative bodies bring to answering legal questions, flowing from the considerable expertise and field sensitivity they develop by administering their mandate and working within the intricacies of their statutory context on a daily basis. The understanding and insights of administrative actors enhance the decision-making process and may be more conducive to reaching a result "that promotes effective public policy and administration . . . than the limited knowledge, detachment, and modes of reasoning typically associated with courts of law" (National Corn Growers, at pp. 1336-37 (emphasis deleted), per Wilson J., concurring, citing J. M. Evans et al., Administrative Law: Cases, Text, and Materials (3rd ed. 1989), at p. 414).

[300] When resolving challenges to an administrative decision, courts must also consider the materiality of any alleged errors in the decision-maker's reasoning. Under reasonableness review, an error is not necessarily sufficient to justify quashing a decision. Inevitably, the weight of an error will depend on the extent to which it affects the decision. An error that is peripheral to the administrative decision-maker's reasoning process, or overcome by more compelling points advanced in support of the result, does not provide fertile ground for judicial review. Ultimately, the role of the reviewing court is to examine the decision as a whole to determine whether it is reasonable (Dunsmuir, at para. 47; Khosa, at para. 59). Considering the materiality of any impugned errors is a natural part of this exercise, and of reading administrative reasons "together with the outcome" (Newfoundland Nurses, at para. 14).

[301] Review of the decision as a whole is especially vital when an applicant alleges that an administrative decision contains material omissions. Significantly, and as this Court has frequently emphasized, administrative decision-makers are not required to consider and comment upon every issue raised by the parties in their reasons (Construction Labour Relations v. Driver Iron Inc., 2012 SCC 65 (CanLII), [2012] 3 S.C.R. 405, at para. 3; Newfoundland Nurses, at para. 16, citing Service Employees' International Union, Local No. 333 v. Nipawin District Staff Nurses Association, 1973 CanLII 191 (SCC), [1975] 1 S.C.R. 382, at p. 391). Further, a reviewing court is not restricted to the four corners of the written reasons delivered by the decision-maker and should, if faced with a gap in the reasons, look to the record to see if it sheds light on the decision (Williams Lake, at para. 37; Delta Air Lines Inc. v. Lukács, 2018 SCC 2 (CanLII), [2018] 1 S.C.R. 6, at para. 23; Newfoundland Nurses, at para. 15; Alberta Teachers' Association, at paras. 53 and 56).

[302] The use of the record and other context to supplement a decision-maker's reasons has been the subject of some academic discussion (see, for example, Mullan, at pp. 69-74). We support a flexible approach to supplementing reasons, which is consistent with the flexible approach used to determine whether administrative reasons must be provided to begin with and sensitive to the "day-to-day realities of administrative agencies" (Baker, at para. 44), which may not be conducive to the production of "archival"

[303] Some materials that may help bridge gaps in a reviewing court's understanding of an administrative decision include: the record of any formal proceedings as well as the materials before the decision-maker, past decisions of the administrative body, and policies or guidelines developed to guide the type of decision under review (see Matthew Lewans, "Renovating Judicial Review" (2017), 68 U.N.B.L.J. 109, at pp. 137-38). Reviewing these materials may assist a court in understanding, "by inference", why an administrative decision-maker reached a particular outcome (Baker, at para. 44; see also Williams Lake, at para. 37; Mills v. Workplace Safety and Insurance Appeals Tribunal (Ont.), 2008 ONCA 436, 237 O.A.C. 71, at paras. 38-39). It may reveal further confirmatory context for a line of reasoning employed by the decision-maker — by showing, for example, that the decision-maker's understanding of the purpose of its statutory mandate finds support in the provision's legislative history (Celgene Corp. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2011 SCC 1 (CanLII), [2011] 1 S.C.R. 3, at paras. 25-29). Reviewing the record can also yield responses to the specific challenges raised by an applicant on judicial review, responses that are "consistent with the process of reasoning" applied by the administrative decision-maker (Igloo Vikski, at para. 45). In these ways, reviewing courts may legitimately supplement written reasons without "supplant[ing] the analysis of the administrative body" (Lukács, at para. 24).

[304] The "adequacy" of reasons, in other words, is not "a stand-alone basis for quashing a decision" (Newfoundland Nurses, at para. 14). As this Court has repeatedly confirmed, reasons must instead "be read together with the outcome and serve the purpose of showing whether the result falls within a range of possible outcomes" (Newfoundland Nurses, at para. 14; Halifax (Regional Municipality) v. Canada (Public Works and Government Services), 2012 SCC 29 (CanLII), [2012] 2 S.C.R. 108, at para. 44; Agraira v. Canada (Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness), 2013 SCC 36 (CanLII), [2013] 2 S.C.R. 559, at para. 52; Williams Lake, at para. 141, per Rowe J., dissenting, but not on this point). This approach puts substance over form in situations where the basis for a decision by a specialized administrative actor is evident on the record, but not clearly expressed in written reasons. Quashing decisions in such circumstances defeats the purpose of deference and thwarts access to justice by wasting administrative and judicial resources.

[305] In our view, therefore, if an applicant claims that an administrative decision-maker failed to address a relevant factor in reaching a decision, the reviewing court must consider the submissions and record before the decision-maker, and the materiality of any such omission to the decision rendered. An administrative decision-maker's failure, for example, to refer to a particular statutory provision or the full factual record before it does not automatically entitle a reviewing court to conduct a de novo assessment of the decision under review. The inquiry must remain focussed on whether the applicant has satisfied the burden of showing that the omission renders the decision reached unreasonable.

[306] We acknowledge that respecting the line between reasonableness and correctness review has posed a particular challenge for judges when reviewing interpretation by administrative decision-makers of their statutory mandates. Judges routinely interpret statutes and have developed a template for how to scrutinize words in that context. But the same deferential approach we have outlined above must apply with equal force to statutory interpretation cases. When reviewing an administrative decision involving statutory interpretation, a court should not assess the decision by determining what, in its own view, would be a reasonable interpretation. Such an approach "imperils deference" (Paul Daly, "Unreasonable Interpretations of Law" (2014), 66 S.C.L.R. (2d) 233, at p. 250).

[307] We agree with Justice Evans that "once [a] court embarks on its own interpretation of the statute to determine the reasonableness of the tribunal's decision, there seems often to be little room for deference" (Evans, "Triumph of Reasonableness: But How Much Does It Really Matter?", at p. 109; see also Mason, at para. 34; Dyzenhaus, "Dignity in Administrative Law: Judicial Deference in a Culture of Justification", at p. 108; Daly, "Unreasonable Interpretations of Law", at pp. 254-55). We add that a de novo interpretation of a statute, conducted as a prelude to "deferential" review, necessarily omits a vital piece of the interpretive puzzle: the perspective of the front-line, specialized administrative body that routinely applies the statutory scheme in question (Dyzenhaus, "The Politics of Deference: Judicial Review and Democracy", at p. 304; Paul Daly, "Deference on Questions of Law" (2011), 74 Mod. L. Rev. 694). By placing that perspective at the heart of the judicial review inquiry, courts display respect for administrative specialization and expertise, and for the legislative choice to delegate certain questions to non-judicial bodies.

[308] Conversely, by imposing their own interpretation of a statutory provision, courts undermine legislative intent to confide a mandate to the decision-maker. Applying a statute will almost always require some interpretation, making the interpretive mandate of administrative decision-makers inherent to their legislative mandate. The decision-maker who applies the statute has primary responsibility for interpreting the provisions in order to carry out their mandate effectively.

[309] Administrative decision-makers performing statutory interpretation should therefore be permitted to be guided by their expertise and knowledge of the practical realities of their administrative regime. In many cases, the "ordinary meaning" of a word or term makes no sense in a specialized context. And in some settings, law and policy are so inextricably at play that they give the words of a statute a meaning unique to a particular specialized context (National Corn Growers, at p. 1336, per Wilson J., concurring; Domtar Inc., at p. 800). Further, not only are statutory provisions sometimes capable of bearing more than one reasonable interpretation, they are sometimes drafted in general terms or with "purposeful ambiguity" in order to permit adaptation to future, unknown circumstances (see Felix Frankfurter, "Some Reflections on the Reading of Statutes" (1947), 47 Colum. L. Rev. 527, at p. 528). These considerations make it all the more compelling that reviewing courts avoid imposing judicial norms on administrative decision-makers or maintaining a dogmatic insistence on formalism. Where a decision-maker can explain its decision adequately, that decision should be upheld (Daly, "Unreasonable Interpretations of Law", at pp. 233-34, 250 and 254-55).

[310] Justice Brown's reasons in Igloo Vikski provide a useful illustration of a properly deferential approach to statutory interpretation. That case involved an interpretation of the Customs Tariff, S.C. 1997, c. 36, as it applies to hockey goaltender gloves. The Canada Border Services Agency had classified the gloves as "[g]loves, mittens [or] mitts". Igloo Vikski argued they should have been classified as sporting equipment. The Canadian International Trade Tribunal ("CITT") confirmed the initial classification. The Federal Court of Appeal reversed the decision.

[311] Acknowledging that the "specific expertise" of the CITT gave it the upper hand over a reviewing court with respect to certain questions of law, Justice Brown determined that the standard of review was reasonableness. Writing for seven other members of the Court, he carefully reviewed the reasons of the CITT and how it had engaged with Igloo Vikski's arguments before turning to the errors alleged by Igloo Vikski and the Federal Court of Appeal. Conceding that the CITT reasons lacked "perfect clarity", Justice Brown nevertheless concluded that the Tribunal's interpretation was reasonable. While he agreed with Igloo Vikski that an alternate interpretation to that given by the CITT was available, the inclusive language of the applicable statute was broad enough to accommodate the CITT's reasonable interpretation. By beginning with the reasons offered for the interpretation and turning to the challenges mounted against it in light of the surrounding context, Igloo Vikski provides an excellent example of respectful and properly deferential judicial review.

[312] We conclude our discussion of reasonableness review by addressing cases where reasons are neither required nor available for judicial review. In these circumstances, a reviewing court should remain focussed on whether the decision has been shown to be unreasonable. The reasonableness of the decision may be justified by past decisions of the administrative body (see Edmonton East, at paras. 38 and 44-46; Alberta Teachers' Association, at paras. 56-64). In other circumstances, reviewing courts may have to assess the reasonableness of the outcome in light of the procedural context surrounding the decision (see Law Society of British Columbia v. Trinity Western University, 2018 SCC 32 (CanLII), [2018] 2 S.C.R. 293, at paras. 51-56; Edmonton East, at paras. 48-60; Catalyst Paper Corp., at paras. 32-36). In all cases, the question remains whether the challenging party has demonstrated that a decision is unreasonable.

[313] In sum, reasonableness review is based on deference to administrative decision-makers and to the legislative intention to confide in them a mandate. Deference must inform the attitude of a reviewing court and the nature of its analysis: the court does not ask how it would have resolved the issue before the administrative decision-maker but instead evaluates whether the decision-maker acted reasonably. The reviewing court starts with the reasons offered for the administrative decision, read in light of the surrounding context and based on the grounds advanced to challenge the reasonableness of the decision. The reviewing court must remain focussed on the reasonableness of the decision viewed as a whole, in light of the record, and with attention to the materiality of any alleged errors to the decision-maker's reasoning process. By properly conducting reasonableness review, judges provide careful and meaningful oversight of the administrative justice system while respecting its legitimacy and the perspectives of its front-line, specialized decision-makers.

Application to Mr. Vavilov

[314] Alexander Vavilov challenges the Registrar of Citizenship's decision to cancel his citizenship certificate. The Registrar concluded that Mr. Vavilov was not a Canadian citizen, and therefore not entitled to a certificate of Canadian citizenship because, although he was born in Canada, his parents were "other representative[s] or employee[s] in Canada of a foreign government" within the meaning of s. 3(2)(a) of the Citizenship Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-29.

[315] The first issue is the applicable standard of review. We agree with the majority that reasonableness applies.

[316] The second issue is whether the Registrar was reasonable in concluding that the exception to Canadian citizenship in s. 3(2)(a) applies not only to parents who enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities, but also to intelligence agents of a foreign government. The onus is therefore on Mr. Vavilov to satisfy the reviewing court that the decision was unreasonable. In our view, he has met that onus.

[317] Mr. Vavilov was born in Canada in 1994. His Russian parents, Elena Vavilova and Andrey Bezrukov, entered Canada at some point prior to his birth, assumed the identities of two deceased Canadians and fraudulently obtained Canadian passports. After leaving Canada to live in France, Mr. Vavilov and his family moved to the United States. While in the United States, Mr. Vavilov's parents became American citizens under their assumed Canadian identities. Mr. Vavilov and his older brother also obtained American citizenship.

[318] In June 2010, agents of the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation arrested Mr. Vavilov's parents and charged them with conspiracy to act as unregistered agents of a foreign government and to commit money laundering. Mr. Vavilov's parents pleaded guilty to the conspiracy charges in July 2010 and were returned to Russia in a spy swap. Around the same time, Mr. Vavilov and his brother travelled to Russia. The American government subsequently revoked Mr. Vavilov's passport and citizenship. In December 2010, he was issued a Russian passport and birth certificate.

[319] From 2010 to 2013, Mr. Vavilov repeatedly sought a Canadian passport. In December 2011, he obtained an amended Ontario birth certificate, showing his parents' true names and places of birth. Using this birth certificate, Mr. Vavilov applied for and received a certificate of Canadian citizenship in January 2013. Relying on these certificates, Mr. Vavilov applied for an extension of his Canadian passport in early 2013. On July 18, 2013, the Registrar wrote to Mr. Vavilov, informing him that there was reason to believe the citizenship certificate had been erroneously issued and asking him for additional information.

[320] On April 22, 2014, Mr. Vavilov provided extensive written submissions to the Registrar. He argued that the narrow exception set out in s. 3(2) of the Act does not apply to him. Because he was born in Canada, he is entitled to Canadian citizenship. Mr. Vavilov also argued that the Registrar had failed to respect the requirements of procedural fairness.

[321] The Registrar wrote to Mr. Vavilov on August 15, 2014, cancelling his certificate of Canadian citizenship. In her view, because Mr. Vavilov met the two statutory restrictions in s. 3(2) of the Act, he was not a Canadian citizen. First, when Mr. Vavilov was born in Canada, neither of his parents were Canadian citizens or lawfully admitted to Canada for permanent residence. Second, as unofficial agents working for Russia's Foreign Intelligence Service, Mr. Vavilov's parents were "other representative[s] or employee[s] in Canada of a foreign government" within the meaning of s. 3(2)(a).

[322] The Federal Court (2015 FC 960 (CanLII), [2016] 2 F.C.R. 39) dismissed Mr. Vavilov's application for judicial review. It found that the Registrar had satisfied the requirements of procedural fairness and, applying a correctness standard, determined that the Registrar's interpretation of s. 3(2)(a) was correct. The Federal Court then reviewed the application of s. 3(2)(a) on a reasonableness standard and concluded that the Registrar had reasonably determined that Mr. Vavilov's parents were working in Canada as undercover agents of the Russian government at the time of his birth.

[323] The Federal Court of Appeal (2017 FCA 132 (CanLII), [2018] 3 F.C.R. 75) allowed the appeal and quashed the Registrar's decision to cancel Mr. Vavilov's citizenship certificate. Writing for the majority, Stratas J.A. agreed that the requirements of procedural fairness were met but held that the Registrar's interpretation of s. 3(2)(a) was unreasonable. In his view, only those who enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities fall within the exception to citizenship found in s. 3(2)(a). Justice Stratas reached this conclusion after considering the context and purpose of the provision, its legislative history and international law principles related to citizenship and diplomatic privileges and immunities.

[324] As a general rule, administrative decisions are to be judicially reviewed for reasonableness. None of the correctness exceptions apply to the Registrar's interpretation of the Act in this case. As such, the standard of review is reasonableness.

> Persons who are citizens
> 3 (1) Subject to this Act, a person is a citizen if
> > (a) the person was born in Canada after February 14, 1977;
> >
> > . . .
>
> Not applicable to children of foreign diplomats, etc.
> (2) Paragraph (1)(a) does not apply to a person if, at the time of his birth, neither of his parents was a citizen or lawfully admitted to Canada for permanent residence and either of his parents was
> > (a) a diplomatic or consular officer or other representative or employee in Canada of a foreign government;
> > (b) an employee in the service of a person referred to in paragraph (a); or
> > (c) an officer or employee in Canada of a specialized agency of the United Nations or an officer or employee in Canada of any other international organization to whom there are granted, by or under any Act of Parliament, diplomatic privileges and immunities certified by the Minister of Foreign Affairs to be equivalent to those granted to a person or persons referred to in paragraph (a).

The general rule embodied in s. 3(1)(a) of the Act is that persons born in Canada are Canadian citizens. Section 3(2) sets out an exception to this rule. As such, if s. 3(2) applies to Mr. Vavilov, he was never a Canadian citizen.

[326] The specific issue in this case is whether the Registrar's interpretation of the statutory exception to citizenship was reasonable. Reasonableness review entails deference to the decision-maker, and we begin our analysis by examining the reasons offered by the Registrar in light of the context and the grounds argued.

[327] In this case, the Registrar's letter to Mr. Vavilov summarized the key points underlying her decision. In concluding that Mr. Vavilov was not entitled to Canadian citizenship, the Registrar adopted the recommendations of an analyst employed by Citizenship and Immigration Canada. As such, the analyst's report properly forms part of the reasons supporting the Registrar's decision.

[328] The analyst's report sought to answer the question of whether Mr. Vavilov was erroneously issued a certificate of Canadian citizenship. The report identifies the key question in this case as being whether either of Mr. Vavilov's parents was a "representative" or "employee" of a foreign government within the meaning of s. 3(2)(a). Much of the report relates to matters not disputed in this appeal, including the legal status of Mr. Vavilov's parents in Canada and their employment as Russian intelligence agents.

[329] The analyst began her analysis with the text of s. 3(2)(a). In concluding that the provision operates to deny Mr. Vavilov Canadian citizenship, she set out two textual arguments. First, she compared the current version of s. 3(2)(a) to an earlier iteration of the exception found in s. 5(3) of the Canadian Citizenship Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-19:

> Not applicable to children of foreign diplomats, etc.
> (3) Subsection (1) does not apply to a person if, at the time of that person's birth, his responsible parent
>
> (a) is an alien who has not been lawfully admitted to Canada for permanent residence; and
> (b) is
> (i) a foreign diplomatic or consular officer or a representative of a foreign government accredited to Her Majesty,
> (ii) an employee of a foreign government attached to or in the service of a foreign diplomatic mission or consulate in Canada, or
> (iii) an employee in the service of a person referred to in subparagraph (i).

[330] The analyst stated that the removal of references to official accreditation or a diplomatic mission indicate that the previous exception was narrower than s. 3(2)(a). She then pointed out that the definition of "diplomatic or consular officer" in s. 35(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, clearly associates these individuals with diplomatic positions. Because the current version of s. 3(2)(a) does not link "other representative or employee in Canada of a foreign government" to a diplomatic mission, the analyst determined "it is reasonable to maintain that this provision intends to encompass individuals not included in the definition of 'diplomatic and consular staff.'" Finally, the analyst stated that the phrase "other representative or employee in Canada of a foreign government" has not been previously interpreted by a court.

[331] Beyond the analyst's report, there is little in the record to supplement the Registrar's reasons. There is no evidence about whether the Registrar has previously applied this provision to individuals like Mr. Vavilov, whose parents did not enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities. Neither does there appear to be any internal policy, guideline or legal opinion to guide the Registrar in making these types of decisions.

[332] In challenging the Registrar's decision, Mr. Vavilov bears the onus of demonstrating why it is not reasonable. Before this Court, Mr. Vavilov submitted that the analyst focussed solely on the text of the exception to citizenship. In his view, had the broader objectives of s. 3(2)(a) been considered, the analyst would have concluded that "other representative" or "employee" only applies to individuals who benefit from diplomatic privileges and immunities.

[333] In his submissions before the Registrar, Mr. Vavilov offered three reasons why the text of s. 3(2) must be read against the backdrop of Canadian and international law relating to the roles and functions of diplomats.

[334] First, Mr. Vavilov explained that s. 3(2)(a) should be read in conjunction with the Foreign Missions and International Organizations Act, S.C. 1991, c. 41 ("FMIOA"). This statute incorporates into Canadian law aspects of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, Can. T.S. 1966 No. 29, Sched. I to the FMIOA, and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, Can. T.S. 1974 No. 25, Sched. II to the FMIOA, which deal with diplomatic privileges and immunities. He submitted that s. 3(2) denies citizenship to children of diplomats because diplomatic privileges and immunities, including immunity from criminal prosecution and civil liability, are inconsistent with the duties and responsibilities of a citizen. Because Mr. Vavilov's parents did not enjoy such privileges and immunities, there would be no purpose in excluding their children born in Canada from becoming Canadian citizens.

[335] Second, Mr. Vavilov provided the Registrar with Hansard committee meeting minutes such as the comments of the Hon. J. Hugh Faulkner, Secretary of State, when introducing the amendments to s. 3(2), who explained that the provision had been redrafted to narrow the exception to citizenship.

[336] Third, Mr. Vavilov cited case law, arguing that: (i) the exception to citizenship should be narrowly construed because it takes away substantive rights (Brossard (Town) v. Quebec Commission des droits de la personne, 1988 CanLII 7 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 279, at p. 307); (ii) s. 3(2)(a) must be interpreted functionally and purposively (Medovarski v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2005 SCC 51 (CanLII), [2005] 2 S.C.R. 539, at para. 8); and (iii) because Mr. Vavilov's parents were not immune from criminal or civil proceedings, they fall outside the scope of s. 3(2) (Greco v. Holy See (State of the Vatican City), [1999] O.J. No. 2467 (QL) (S.C.J.); R. v. Bonadie (1996), 1996 CanLII 17924 (ON CJ), 109 C.C.C. (3d) 356 (Ont. C.J.); Al-Ghamdi v. Canada (Minister of Foreign Affairs and International Trade) (2007), 2007 FC 559 (CanLII), 64 Imm. L.R. (3d) 67 (F.C.)).

[337] The Federal Court's decision in Al-Ghamdi, a case which challenged the constitutionality of s. 3(2)(a), was particularly relevant. In that case, Shore J. wrote that s. 3(2)(a) only applies to the "children of individuals with diplomatic status" (paras. 5 and 65). Justice Shore also stated that "[i]t is precisely because of the vast array of privileges accorded to diplomats and their families, which are by their very nature inconsistent with the obligations of citizenship, that a person who enjoys diplomatic status cannot acquire citizenship" (para. 63).

[338] The Registrar's reasons failed to respond to Mr. Vavilov's extensive and compelling submissions about the objectives of s. 3(2)(a). It appears that the analyst misunderstood Mr. Vavilov's arguments on this point. In discussing the scope of s. 3(2), she wrote, "[c]ounsel argues that CIC [Citizenship and Immigration Canada] cannot invoke subsection 3(2) because CIC has not requested or obtained verification with the Foreign Affairs Protocol to prove that [Mr. Vavilov's parents] held diplomatic or consular status with the Russian Federation while they resided in Canada." It thus appears that the analyst did not recognize that Mr. Vavilov's argument was more fundamental in nature — namely, that the objectives of s. 3(2) require the terms "other representative" and "employee" to be read narrowly. During discovery, in fact, the analyst acknowledged that her research did not reveal a policy purpose behind s. 3(2)(a) or why the phrase "other representative or employee" was included in the Act. It also appears that the analyst did not understand the potential relevance of the Al-Ghamdi decision, since her report stated that "[t]he jurisprudence that does exist only relates to individuals whose parents maintained diplomatic status in Canada at the time of their birth."

[339] The Registrar, in the end, interpreted s. 3(2)(a) broadly, based on the analyst's purely textual assessment of the provision, including a comparison with the text of the previous version. This reading of "other representative or employee" was only reasonable if the text is read in isolation from its objective. Nothing in the history of this provision indicates that Parliament intended to widen its scope. Rather, as

Mr. Vavilov points out, the modifications made to s. 3(2) in 1976 appear to mirror those embodied in the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, which were incorporated into Canadian law in 1977. The judicial treatment of this provision, in particular the statements in Al-Ghamdi about the narrow scope of s. 3(2)(a) and the inconsistency between diplomatic privileges and immunities and citizenship, also points to the need for a narrow interpretation of the exception to citizenship.

[340] In addition, as noted by the majority of the Federal Court of Appeal, the text of s. 3(2)(c) can be seen as undermining the Registrar's interpretation. That provision denies citizenship to children born to individuals who enjoy "diplomatic privileges and immunities certified by the Minister of Foreign Affairs to be equivalent to those granted to a person or persons referred to in paragraph (a)". As Stratas J.A. noted, this language suggests that s. 3(2)(a) covers only those "employee[s] in Canada of a foreign government" who have diplomatic privileges and immunities.

[341] By ignoring the objectives of the provision, the Registrar rendered an unreasonable decision. In particular, the arguments supporting a reading of s. 3(2) that is restricted to those who have diplomatic privileges and immunities, likely would have changed the outcome in this case.

[342] Mr. Vavilov has satisfied us that the Registrar's decision is unreasonable. As a result, the Court of Appeal properly quashed the Registrar's decision to cancel Mr. Vavilov's citizenship certificate, and he is thus entitled to a certificate of Canadian citizenship.

[2] The "constitutional concerns" cited by the majority are no answer to this dilemma — nothing in Crevier v. Attorney General of Quebec, 1981 CanLII 30 (SCC), [1981] 2 S.C.R. 220, prevents privative clauses from influencing the standard of review, as they did for years under the pragmatic and functional approach and in C.U.P.E. (David Dyzenhaus, "Dignity in Administrative Law: Judicial Deference in a Culture of Justification" (2012), 17 Rev. Const. Stud. 87, at p. 103; David Mullan, "Unresolved Issues on Standard of Review in Canadian Judicial Review of Administrative Action – The Top Fifteen!" (2013), 42 Adv. Q. 1, at p. 21).

[3] See Administrative Tribunals Act, S.B.C. 2004, c. 45. Quebec's recent attempt to introduce such legislation is another example of a legislature which understood that it was free to set standards of review, and that the mere articulation of a right of appeal did not dictate what those standards would be: see Bill 32, An Act mainly to promote the efficiency of penal justice and to establish the terms governing the intervention of the Court of Québec with respect to applications for appeal, 1st Sess., 42nd Leg., 2019.

[4] The notion that legislative intent finds determinative expression in statutory rights of appeal found no support in the submissions of four of the five attorneys general who appeared before us.

[5] Even the amici did not go so far as to say that all appeal clauses were indicative of a legislative intent for courts to substitute their views on questions of law.

Administrative law -- Apprehension of bias -- Policy-making board -- Board member expressing strong views as to issue board considering -- Decision made after Board declined to remove member from panel -- Extent to which an administrative board member may comment on matters before the board -- Whether or not reasonable apprehension of bias -- If so, whether or not decision void or merely voidable.

Respondent Board, whose members are appointed by cabinet subject only to the qualification that they not be employed by or have an interest in a public utility, regulates appellant. One commissioner, a former consumers' advocate playing the self-appointed role of champion of consumers' rights on the Board, made several strong statements which were reported in the press against appellant's executive pay policies before a public hearing was held by the Board into appellant's costs. When the hearing commenced, appellant objected to this commissioner's participation on the panel because of an apprehension of bias. The Board found that it had no jurisdiction to rule on its own members and decided that the panel would continue as constituted. A number of public statements relating to the issue before the Board were made by this commissioner during the hearing and before the Board released its decision which (by a majority which included the commissioner at issue) disallowed some of appellant's costs. A minority would have allowed these costs. Appellant appealed both the order of the Board and the Board's decision to proceed with the panel as constituted to the Court of Appeal.

The Court of Appeal found that the Board had complete jurisdiction to determine its own procedures and all questions of fact and law and that it declined to exercise its jurisdiction when it refused to remove the commissioner from the panel. Although the court concluded that there was a reasonable apprehension of bias, it held that the Board's decision was merely voidable and that, given that the commissioner's mind was not closed to argument, the Board's order was valid.

The issues under consideration here were: (1) the extent to which an administrative board member may comment on matters before the board and, (2) the result which should obtain if a decision of a board is made in circumstances where a reasonable apprehension of bias is found.

Held: The appeal should be allowed.

The duty of fairness applies to all administrative bodies. The extent of that duty, however, depends on the particular tribunal's nature and function. The duty to act fairly includes the duty to provide procedural fairness to the parties. That simply cannot exist if an adjudicator is biased. Because it is impossible to determine the precise state of mind of an adjudicator who has made an administrative board decision, an unbiased appearance is an essential component of procedural fairness. The test to ensure fairness is whether a reasonably informed bystander would perceive bias on the part of an adjudicator.

There is a great diversity of administrative boards. Those that are primarily adjudicative in their functions will be expected to comply with the standard applicable to courts: there must be no reasonable apprehension of bias with regard to their decision. At the other end of the scale are boards with popularly elected members where the standard will be much more lenient. In such circumstances, a reasonable apprehension of bias occurs if a board member pre-judges the matter to such an extent that any representations to the contrary would be futile. Administrative boards that deal with matters of policy will be closely comparable to the boards composed of elected members.

For those boards, a strict application of a reasonable apprehension of bias as a test might undermine the very role which has been entrusted to them by the legislature.

A member of a board which performs a policy-formation function should not be susceptible to a charge of bias simply because of the expression of strong opinions prior to the hearing. As long as those statements do not indicate a mind so closed that any submissions would be futile, they should not be subject to attack on the basis of bias. Statements manifesting a mind so closed as to make submissions futile would, however, even at the investigatory stage, constitute a basis for raising an issue of apprehended bias. Once the matter reaches the hearing stage a greater degree of discretion is required of a member.

The statements at issue here, when taken together, indicated not only a reasonable apprehension of bias but also a closed mind on the commissioner's part on the subject. Once the order directing the holding of the hearing was given, the Utility was entitled to procedural fairness. At the investigative stage, the "closed mind" test was applicable but once matters proceeded to a hearing, a higher standard had to be applied. Procedural fairness at that stage required the commission members to conduct themselves so that there could be no reasonable apprehension of bias.

A denial of a right to a fair hearing cannot be cured by the tribunal's subsequent decision. A decision of a tribunal which denied the parties a fair hearing cannot be simply voidable and rendered valid as a result of the subsequent decision of the tribunal. The damage created by apprehension of bias cannot be remedied. The hearing, and any subsequent order resulting from it, must be void. The order of the Board of Commissioners of Public Utilities was accordingly void.

ON APPEAL FROM THE APPELLATE DIVISION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO.

Vendor and purchaser—Agreement for sale—Agent to procure purchaser—Agent joining in purchase—Non-disclosure to co-purchaser—Payment of commission—Rescission of contract.

H. was owner of mining land and offered S. a commission of ten per cent. for finding a purchaser thereof. H. afterwards wrote to S. stating that the mine was very rich and urging him to induce some of his friends to join in a syndicate or company to purchase and work it. S., without disclosing his agency, induced W. to take up the matter and they agreed to join in the purchase and divide the profits. A contract was entered into with H. and W. paid $20,000 on account of the purchase price on which S. was paid his commission. Default having been made in the further payments H. brought action claiming possession of the property and the right to retain the amount paid. W. counter-claimed for rescission of the contract and return of the money paid with interest and on the trial swore that he knew nothing of S.'s agency for several months after the contract was signed.

Held, affirming the judgment of the Appellate Division (1913 CanLII 21 (ON CA), 29 Ont. L.R. 6), Fitzpatrick C.J. dissenting, that it was the duty of H., on becoming aware that S. was a co-purchaser with W. to satisfy himself that the latter was aware of the agency of S.; and that W. was entitled to the relief asked by his counterclaim.

Held, per Davies and Anglin JJ. (Duff J. contra), that S. by concealing from W. the fact that he was to receive a commission from the vendor was guilty of a fraud for which

H. was responsible as agent.

APPEAL from a decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario[1], reversing the judgment of a Divisional Court which affirmed the verdict at the trial in favour of the plaintiffs.

The material facts are stated in the above head-note.

Cline, for the appellants, referred to Coy v. Pommerenke[2]; Lewin on Charges (11 ed.), 1159-60, Murray v. Craig[3].

Kilmer, for the respondents, cited Beck v. Kantorowicz[4]; McGuire v. Graham[5]; Grant v. Gold Exploration and Development Syndicate[6].

THE CHIEF JUSTICE (dissenting).—I would allow this appeal with costs.

DAVIES J.—I concur in the opinion stated by Mr. Justice Anglin.

DUFF J.—I have come to the conclusion that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs. The only point requiring discussion, in my judgment, is whether because of the dealings between the Hitchcocks and Sykes the respondent Webster became entitled on discovering those dealings to rescind the agreement for sale. The facts and the law have been very fully discussed in the various judgments delivered in the courts below. I do not think that among the cases cited there is one decision which exactly fits this case. But when the facts are fully seized, it appears to be well within the principle of the decisions upon the authority of which the Court of Appeal rested its judgment in Grant v. Gold Exploration, etc., Syndi-

Cate[6]. The essential feature of the case, in my view of it is one which has perhaps not been emphasized as much as its importance would justify. It lies, I think, in the letter of March 29th, 1910, written by W.R. Hitchcock to Sykes. That letter is as follows:—

Cornwall, Ont., March 29, 1910.

Hiram Sykes, Montreal.

Dear Sir,—Enclosed herewith please find map as surveyed and drawn up by Robert B. McKay, M.E., of Cobalt, Ontario. It will give you an idea of the surface work done on the Hitchcock Bros.' silver property, and I may add that since Mr. McKay visited the property in the early part of January last, a large amount of work has been done, principally in stripping veins and trenching on them to a depth from two to eight feet, until native silver, smalltite or nickelite would appear.

Permitted Activities

3 A bank may carry on any aspect of the business of insurance, other than the underwriting of insurance, outside Canada.

SOR/2011-183, s. 3.

4 (1) A bank may administer an authorized type of insurance and personal accident insurance.

(2) A bank may administer a group insurance policy for

(a) its employees or the employees of an entity that the bank holds control of, or a substantial investment in, under section 468 of the Act;

(b) the employees of

(i) another bank or a bank holding company, that controls the bank, or

(ii) an entity that the other bank or the bank holding company, referred to in subparagraph (i), holds control of, or a substantial investment in, under section 468 or 930 of the Act;

(c) the employees of an entity that an affiliate of the bank holds control of, or a substantial investment in, in accordance with section 522.07 or 522.08 or subsection 522.32(1) or (3) of the Act;

(d) the employees in Canada of an authorized foreign bank that is an affiliate of the bank; and

(e) if the bank is controlled by a foreign bank, the employees in Canada of an affiliate of the foreign bank that is an entity referred to in section 522.17 or 522.18 of the Act and that carries on a business described in one of those sections.

SOR/2002-269, s. 4.

5 (1) A bank may provide advice regarding an authorized type of insurance or a service in respect of an authorized type of insurance.

(2) A bank may provide advice in respect of an insurance policy that is not of an authorized type of insurance, or services in respect thereof, if

(a) the advice is general in nature;

(b) the advice is not in respect of

(i) a specific risk, proposal in respect of life insurance, insurance policy or service, or

(ii) a particular insurance company, agent or broker; and

(c) the bank does not thereby refer any person to a particular insurance company, agent or broker.

Promotion

6 A bank shall not, in relation to its business in Canada, promote an insurance company, agent or broker unless

(a) the company, agent or broker deals only in authorized types of insurance; or

(b) the promotion takes place outside a branch of the bank and is directed to

(i) all the holders of credit or charge cards issued by the bank who regularly receive statements of account or notices of those statements,

(ii) all the bank's customers who are natural persons and who regularly receive statements of account or notices of those statements, or

(iii) the general public.

SOR/2011-183, s. 4.

7 (1) A bank shall not, in relation to its business in Canada, promote an insurance policy of an insurance company, agent or broker, or a service in respect of such a policy, unless

(a) the policy is of an authorized type of insurance or the service is in respect of such a policy;

(b) the policy is to be provided by a corporation without share capital, other than a mutual insurance company or a fraternal benefit society, that carries on business without pecuniary gain to its members and the policy provides insurance to a natural person in respect of the risks covered by travel insurance;

(c) the policy is a personal accident insurance policy and the promotion takes place outside a branch of the bank;

(d) the service is in respect of a policy referred to in paragraph (b) or of a policy referred to in paragraph (c) that is promoted as described in that paragraph; or

(e) the promotion takes place outside a branch of the bank and is directed to

(i) all the holders of credit or charge cards issued by the bank who regularly receive statements of account or notices of those statements,

(ii) all the bank's customers who are natural persons and who regularly receive statements of account or notices of those statements, or

(iii) the general public.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1) and section 6, a bank may exclude from a promotion referred to in paragraph (1)(e) or 6(b) persons

(a) in respect of whom the promotion would contravene an Act of Parliament or of the legislature of a province;

(b) who have notified the bank in writing that they do not wish to receive promotional material from the bank; or

(c) who are holders of a credit or charge card that was issued by the bank and in respect of which the account is not in good standing.

SOR/95-171, s. 3(E); SOR/2011-183, s. 5.

Web Promotion

7.1 (1) The promotion referred to in paragraph 6(b) may take place on a bank web page if it relates to an insurance company, agent or broker that deals only in authorized types of insurance and the promotion referred to in paragraph 7(1)(c) or (e) may take place on a bank web page if it relates to only an authorized type of insurance.

(2) However, a bank shall not, on a bank web page, provide access to a web page — directly or through another web page — through which there is promotion of

(a) an insurance company, agent or broker that does not deal only in authorized types of insurance; or

(b) an insurance policy of an insurance company, agent or broker, or a service in respect of such a policy, that is not of only an authorized type of insurance.

SOR/2011-183, s. 6.

Prohibited Activities

8 (1) No bank shall

(a) provide, directly or indirectly, an insurance company, agent or broker with any information respecting

(i) a customer of the bank in Canada,

(ii) an employee of a customer of the bank in Canada,

(iii) where a customer of the bank is an entity with members in Canada, any such member, or

(iv) where a customer of the bank is a partnership with partners in Canada, any such partner;

(b) permit any of its subsidiaries to provide, directly or indirectly, an insurance company, agent or broker with any information that it receives from the bank respecting

(i) a customer of the bank in Canada,

(ii) an employee of a customer of the bank in Canada,

(iii) where a customer of the bank is an entity with members in Canada, any such member, or

(iv) where a customer of the bank is a partnership with partners in Canada, any such partner;

(b.1) provide an affiliate of the bank that is not a subsidiary of the bank with information unless the bank ensures that the affiliate does not directly or indirectly provide the information to an insurance company, agent or broker if the information is in respect of

(i) a customer of the bank in Canada,

(ii) an employee of a customer of the bank in Canada,

(iii) where a customer of the bank is an entity with members in Canada, any such member,

(iv) where a customer of the bank is a partnership with partners in Canada, any such partner; or

(c) permit a subsidiary of the bank that is a trust or loan corporation incorporated by or under an Act of the legislature of a province to provide, directly or indirectly, an insurance company, agent or broker with any information respecting

(i) a customer of the subsidiary in Canada,

(ii) an employee of a customer of the subsidiary in Canada,

(iii) where a customer of the subsidiary is an entity with members in Canada, any such member, or

(iv) where a customer of the subsidiary is a partnership with partners in Canada, any such partner.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of a bank or a subsidiary of a bank that is a trust or loan corporation incorporated by or under an Act of the legislature of a province where

(a) the bank or the subsidiary has established procedures to ensure that the information referred to in that subsection will not be used by an insurance company, agent or broker to promote in Canada the insurance company, agent or broker or to promote in Canada an insurance policy, or a service in respect thereof; and

(b) the insurance company, agent or broker, as the case may be, has given an undertaking to the bank or to the subsidiary, in a form acceptable to the Superintendent, that that information will not be used to promote in Canada the insurance company, agent or broker or to promote in Canada an insurance policy, or a service in respect thereof.

SOR/2002-269, s. 5.

8.1 (1) No bank holding company shall control a trust or loan corporation incorporated by or under an Act of the legislature of a province if the trust or loan corporation directly or indirectly provides an insurance company, agent or broker with any information in respect of

(a) a customer of the trust or loan corporation in Canada;

(b) an employee in Canada of a customer of the trust or loan corporation;

1. Steelcase Construction Inc. ("Steelcase") asks the court to reconsider its December 22, 2008 decision and order JV Mechanical Limited ("JV") to post security for costs. The reason is that JV failed to disclose relevant information to the court when the motion was first argued on November 25, 2008 (the "2008 Motion") notwithstanding the sworn evidence of JV's principal, John Vrbanic, that he made full financial disclosure. Steelcase argues that if the information had been disclosed the court's order would have been different. Steelcase asks for costs of the 2008 Motion and this motion.

2. JV's position is that (i) its failure to disclose was inadvertent, (ii) had the information been disclosed it would not have changed the court's finding that JV was impecunious in November 2008, and (iii) in any event JV is presently impecunious.

3. Leave to bring this motion is not contested. I find that the motion is necessary for justice to be done and grant leave pursuant to subsection 67(2) of the Construction Lien Act.

The 2008 Motion

4. In the 2008 Motion Steelcase, the general contractor, sought security for costs from JV, the mechanical subcontractor, in the amounts of $46,138.77 in action 06-CV-304773 (the Toronto Daycare Project) and $41,293.04 in Whitby action 08-CV-348118 (the Whitby Train Station Project). Both actions are to be tried together or consecutively in this reference.

5. In the 2008 Motion I found that on the facts before the court JV was impecunious and that because its claim was not certain to fail the litigation could proceed without requiring JV to post security for costs.

6. I gave the following reasons, in part, beginning at paragraph 15[1]:

> [15] Mr. Vrbanic gave evidence of the financial position of JV, himself, his wife and his new company, 2104476 Ontario Inc. ("New JV"). The evidence shows that JV stopped operating its business in June 2006. Mr. Vrbanic formed New JV in or about that time. Mr. Vrbanic's evidence is that he is unable to borrow money personally or through New JV; that his wife, from whom he has recently separated, refuses to lend JV more money; and that his sister refuses to provide a guarantee or otherwise assist financially. Mr. Vrbanic volunteers to step out from behind the liability shield of his company and undertake to have any costs award made against JV in this litigation bind him personally and also bind New JV.
> [17] I am satisfied on the evidence that JV is insolvent and that New JV is in a loss position. I am also satisfied that Mr. Vrbanic has taken no income from JV or from New JV in 2006, 2007 or 2008 and that while his wife received income of $81,308.03 in 2007 and $80,000 in 2006 there is no basis for the court to require Mr. Vrbanic to look to his estranged wife for funds to continue this litigation.
> [18] Mr. Vrbanic had an equity interest of $50,000 in his home, but he recently sold it, closing the sale on October 31, 2008, one week before this motion was argued. The entire proceeds of sale went to an outstanding writ of seizure and sale of creditor Noble Trade Inc., for a recovery of 15% of the value of Noble's judgment.
> [19] A corporation without assets is not impecunious if it has the ability to raise funds from its principals, its shareholders and from those who stand to benefit from the litigation. The evidence shows that JV cannot raise funds from its principal or shareholders…

7. In the 2008 decision I found that on the facts of the case as presented JV could not have raised funds from its principals and shareholders and further found that JV was not obliged to go to its creditor CRA to raise funds to prosecute the action. However, on the 2008 Motion JV failed to disclose the existence and financial position of two related corporations.

Background leading to the present motion

8. Steelcase learned of the existence of the two undisclosed companies from the decision of Master Graham released November 27, 2009 in a motion for security for costs in J.V. Mechanical Ltd. v Pegah Construction Ltd.[2]. In that case Mr. Vrbanic had failed to disclose the existence of 210 and another company named 2110608 Ontario Inc. ("211"), using the same business name and address as the former JV, with a former JV employee, William Burdass, as 211's officer. Master Graham drew the inference that JV was conducting business through these two related companies and ordered JV to post security for costs.

9. In the 2008 Motion JV failed to disclose 211, which was incorporated on August 14, 2006, only two months after Mr. Verbanic stopped operating JV and had incorporated 210. 211 registered the business name Air Moving Systems ("AMS") on August 15, 2006 and the business name JV Mechanical on October 23, 2006. Neither 211 nor the registration of the names JV Mechanical and AMS to 211 had been disclosed by Mr. Vrbanic on the 2008 Motion in what he had claimed to be full and complete financial disclosure.

10. Following release of Master Graham's decision Steelcase embarked on further investigations. Steelcase discovered that:

    a. The name JV Mechanical was registered to Air Moving Systems Inc. ("AMS Inc.") on September 22, 2006, three months after JV had ceased operations;

    b. AMS Inc. was incorporated on May 25, 2005;

    c. AMS Inc. shared the same address as JV, 210 and 211;

    d. John Vrbanic is an officer and director of AMS Inc.; and

    e. The name "V Mechanical" was registered to 210 on June 6, 2006, the date it was incorporated.

Evidence on the 2010 Motion

11. The material filed by JV on the motion to vary the December 2008 order (the "2010 Motion") includes an affidavit of John Vrbanic and transcript of his cross-examination. He testified that:

    About 210:

    a. He had forgotten that Mr. Burdass was officer and director of 210;

    b. He could forget things and yet have nothing to hide;

    c. He said registering "V Mechanical" to 210 was "an innocent mistake";

    About AMS Inc.:

    d. He is the operator and shareholder of AMS Inc., and had been at the time of the 2008 Motion. He had not located the minute book;

    e. AMS Inc. has "no assets of any kind";

    f. AMS Inc. had rendered about 24 invoices to JV for ventilation work;

    g. CRA[3] assessed AMS Inc. for unremitted source deductions of approximately $254,000 for 2005 and 2006, provingA MS Inc. carried on business with employees;

    h. AMS Inc. was in arrears of GST payments of $20,164.18 for business conducted in 2005 and 2006;

    i. AMS Inc. ceased operating in June 2006, even though the name JV Mechanical was not registered to AMS Inc. until September 22, 2006. Mr. Vrbanic denied registering

"JV Mechanical" to AMS Inc. two months after the date he claims that AMS Inc. discontinued operations, suggesting that his accountant had registered it. He did not lead evidence of the accountant;

j. AMS Inc. worked on a dozen projects in 2005 and 2006. Mr. Vrbanik could not explain why he forgot about AMS Inc. when the 2008 Motion was brought;

k. Mr. Vrbanic arranged for financial statements for JV for the 2008 Motion but could not explain why he did not have financial statements prepared for AMS Inc.;

About 211:

l. Based on the corporate records the structure of 211 is the same as 210, which Mr. Vrbanic admitted to owning and operating;

m. Mr. Vrbanic denied incorporating or operating 211. He guessed that Jacob Abecassis, an accountant with whom he had consulted about bankruptcy proceedings, had incorporated 211 and named JV's employee Mr. Burdass as its officer and director. Mr. Vrabnic did not lead any evidence from Mr. Abecassis or Mr. Burdass ;

n. Mr. Vrabnic said he knew nothing about 211 but would not be surprised if he had personally authorized its incorporation in August 2006;

o. Mr. Vrabnic could not explain why the names JV Mechanical and AMS had been registered to 211 in August 2006 and October 2006, two months and four months after JV ceased operating; and

p. Mr. Vrbanic admitted on cross examination that 211 was a "shelf company" created for him to carry on JV's business in the future.

Matrimonial home:

q. When the matrimonial home was acquired on June 1, 2005 Mr. Vrabnic and his wife took out a second mortgage for $75,000, the proceeds of which he had put into JV. His undertaking to produce the documents showing that the second mortgage proceeds were applied to JV was unanswered. I draw the inference that there are no documents to corroborate Mr. Vrbanic's evidence;

r. On September 11, 2006, one month after the "shelf" company 211 was incorporated and three months after JV had ceased operations (according to Mr. Vrbanic's evidence) the second mortgage was replaced with a new second mortgage for $135,000 with the additional funds of $60,000 put into JV. Mr. Vrbanic explained this as funds used to pay off JV's debts and undertook to produce documents to trace the mortgage advance to JV, but again he failed to comply with the undertaking. I draw the inference that there are no documents to corroborate Mr. Vrbanic's evidence;

s. On February 26, 2007 the accountant's firm registered a demand third mortgage for $112,679.69 on title and two days later the matrimonial home was transferred to Mr. Vrbanic's ex-wife for $2.00. Mr. Vrbanic denied knowledge of these transactions and blamed the accountant; and

t. Mr. Vrbanic has taken no legal action against the accountant.

Conflicting evidence on the 2008 and 2010 motions

u. In 2008 on cross-examination Mr. Vrbanic denied under oath that he had registered the name JV Mechanical to 210. However under cross-examination on the 2010 Motion Mr. Vrbanic testified that although the business name "V" Mechanical was registered to 210 he had intended to register the name JV Mechanical to 210 in June 2006 when 210 was incorporated. He explained the conflicting evidence as misunderstanding the question in 2008.

12. No financial records, tax returns or other documents were filed as evidence of the financial position of either 210 or AMS Inc.

13. Mr. Vrbanic's evidence that AMS Inc. ceased business operations in June 2006 contradicts Mr. Bowles' evidence, filed on behalf of the moving party, that the business name JV Mechanical was registered to AMS Inc. on September 22, 2006. Considering the many inaccuracies in Mr. Vrbanic's evidence and also considering that Mr. Bowles is an officer of the court I find that where the evidence of Mr. Vrbanic and Mr. Bowles conflicts I prefer the evidence of Mr. Bowles. If AMS Inc. ceased operations in June 2006 as Mr. Vrbanic testified there would have been no reason to register the business name JV Mechanical in September 2006. I draw the inference that disclosing the financial position of AMS Inc. would be detrimental to JV's pleas of impecuniosity

Burden of Proof

14. A party pleading impecuniosity must disclose with "robust particularity" their financial circumstances.[4] Complete disclosure is imperative.

15. As stated by Justice Roberts in Technorag, supra, at paragraph 17:

> "The onus remains on the plaintiff to adduce sufficient evidence of impecuniosity through supporting financial documents or details. The plaintiff must satisfy the court that funds are not available from corporate owners, officers and even family members. The plaintiff is not entitled to avoid an investigation of the financial condition of its principal owner, directors or officers by the simple stratagem of admitting impecuniosity. It must leave no material question unanswered." Emphasis added

16. Likewise, JV cannot avoid an investigation of the financial condition of its principal owner, directors or officers by the simple stratagem of failing to disclose relevant companies, then argue that the moving party loses because it failed to discover the undisclosed companies.

17. JV Mechanical left material questions unanswered. On key issues Mr. Vrbanic's evidence is vague, deliberately evasive and uncorroborated. Critical undertakings remain unanswered. For example:

a. JV gave no reasonable explanation for the absence of financial statements for AMS Inc.and 211;

b. According to Mr. Vrbanic's evidence AMS Inc. went out of business in June 2006 and the style name "JV Mechanical" was registered to it in September 2006. JV gave no reasonable explanation for registering the business name three months after AMS Inc. allegedly went out of business;

c. Mr. Vrbanic gave evidence that 211 was incorporated by the accountant of his own volition but gave no reasonable explanation for the accountant doing this on his own and filed no evidence from the accountant;

d. JV gave no reasonable explanation for incorporating 211 as a "shelf" company;

e. JV filed no evidence from Mr. Burdass, a former employee, who was shown in the corporate filings for 211 as the officer and director, and provided no reasonable explanation for naming Mr. Burdass to these positions; and

f. Mr. Vrbanic failed to comply with his undertakings to provide the bank records to corroborate his answers on cross-examination that the proceeds of the two second mortgages were put into JV to pay down debts, a glaring omission in light of the advance of the replacement second mortgage for an amount that was higher by $60,000, three months after JV allegedly discontinued operations and one month after 211 was incorporated.

18. Applying the test enunciated by Justice Roberts in Technorag, supra, JV and Mr. Vrbanic have left many questions unanswered and have failed to meet the heavy onus to adduce sufficient evidence of impecuniosity through supporting financial documents or details.

19. I draw the inference that JV's and Mr. Vrbanic's failure to provide full and robust disclosure is because the undisclosed evidence would undermine the plea of impecuniosity. I find that JV Mechanical has left material questions unanswered and has not satisfied the court that it was impecunious at the time of the 2008 Motion.

When should the court vary its order?

20. Rule 59.06(2)(a) provides:

> A party who seeks to,
> (a) Have an order set aside or varied on the ground of fraud or of facts arising or discovered after it was made;…may make a motion in the proceeding for the relief claimed.

21. Steelcase asserts that Mr. Vrbanic materially and intentionally or recklessly misled the court on the 2008 Motion by failing to disclose the existence of two companies carrying on the business of JV as different but related entities, from which he could have borrowed funds, thereby defeating JV's claim of impecuniosity. Steelcase asks the court to set aside its 2008 finding of impecuniosity and replace it with an order that JV post security for costs.

22. Justice Osborne describes the test in rule 59.06(2)(a) in International Corona Resources Ltd. v LAC Minerals Ltd.[5]:

a. the fraud alleged must be proved on a reasonable balance of probability;

b. the proved fraud must be material;

c. the evidence of fraud must not have been known to the moving party at the time of the original proceeding;

d. the moving party applied reasonable or due diligence at the original hearing. Applying an objective test: what did the moving party know, and what ought the moving party reasonably have known? and

e. the motion to set aside must be brought without delay.

f. Relief under rule 59.06 is discretionary. The conduct of the moving party is relevant. The central question is whether the moving party has shown that material facts have been newly discovered, which either by themselves or in combination with previously known facts, would provide reason to set aside the earlier decision.

23. Counsel for JV argues that Justice Osborne's test does not apply because in International Corona the court was faced with a motion to set aside findings made at trial whereas in this case I am asked to vary an order I made on a motion. In my view the test is even more appropriate when a judicial officer is asked to vary an order that he or she made. Who is in a better position to assess than the original decision maker?

a. Fraud

24. In Vale v Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada[6] Justice Cullity considered the meaning of fraud as that term is used in rule 59.06. He adopted the approach of Lord Herschell as outlined in Derry v Peek[7] that fraud is a false representation made either knowingly, or without belief in its truth or else recklessly, careless as to whether it is true or false.

25. On the 2008 Motion Mr. Vrbanic failed to disclose that he was a shareholder of Air Moving Systems Inc. ("AMS"), a corporation established in 2005 that employed at least five people and billed JV Mechanical over $600,000.00 of which at least $200,000 was paid. His explanation in his affidavit on the 2010 Motion for not disclosing the company is that he thought it was worthless. On cross-examination he had a different explanation: he said he forgot about it. These are two very different explanations: the earlier explanation means he put his mind to it and decided unilaterally that the company was worthless. The later explanation means that he failed to make the effort to obtain all relevant information.

26. On the 2010 Motion, upon disclosing AMS Inc., Mr. Vrbanic provided no financial or audit records to corroborate his personal valuation as to its worthlessness. I find Mr. Vrbanic's explanation suspect and his failure to disclose in 2008 either a deliberate attempt to withhold material information to avoid a security for costs order, or else a reckless statement made without any evidence to prove the assertion that the company was worthless. I find his answers evasive and draw the inference that AMS Inc. is a corporation with sufficient assets that, if fully disclosed, would defeat Mr. Vrbanic's claim of impecuniosity.

27. Regarding 211, Mr. Vrbanic's evidence on the 2010 Motion is that he knows nothing about this company. But he also gave evidence that he would not be surprised if he was the one who had incorporated it. He refered to 211 in his affidavit and on cross-examination as a "shelf" company, incorporated perhaps to carry on business for him. Mr. Vrbanic ought to have examined this company more thoroughly on the 2008 Motion to find out who had incorporated it, what information was in the minute book and the status of bank accounts and financial statements. Failure to do so was reckless at best.

28. Mr. Vrbanic says his accountant incorporated this company, but has provided no affidavit from the accountant. 211 carried on business in the fall of 2006 as JV Mechanical, but Mr. Vrbanic either chose not to disclose this fact or recklessly disregarded his duty to provide full disclosure of JV Mechanical's affairs on the 2008 Motion.

29. Having considered Mr. Vrbanic's evidence as a whole on the 2008 Motion and on this motion I find that his inaccurate and incomplete statements were made either knowingly or else recklessly, without regard to whether they were true or false. Either way they were fraudulent for the purposes of rule 59.06.

b. Materiality

30. Evidence is material if it goes to the foundation of the decision. Such evidence may reasonably have affected the result but need not necessarily have affected it: 100 Main Street East v Sakas[8]. Because JV Mechanical provided fraudulent evidence to the court on the 2008 Motion by asserting by asserting that it had made full and complete disclosure, any ambiguity or issue of credibility ought to be decided in favour of Steelcase.

31. I find that the evidence that was not disclosed on the 2008 Motion is material to the issue of impecuniosity.

c. Knowledge of moving party

32. I am satisfied that Steelcase did not have knowledge that JV had withheld material information at the time of the 2008 Motion.

d. Due diligence

33. The question is whether Steelcase would have discovered 211 and AMS Inc. had it applied reasonable diligence in 2008.

34. In the 2008 Motion John Vrbanic gave evidence by affidavit deposing that he and JV were both "legally impecunious", that JV discontinued business operations in June 2006 and that it had been operating at a loss for three years prior to closing. He also gave evidence of his personal financial circumstances. He disclosed that he had incorporated 2104476 Ontario Ltd. ("210"), a company in the construction business, on June 6, 2006 (the same time as JV discontinued operations) with himself as sole shareholder and director. He produced financial statements showing that 210 was in a loss position for the years 2007 and 2008.

35. Mr. Vrbanic concluded his sworn testimony in 2008 with the statement "aside from that described above and below, I have no other assets of any significance." He represented in his affidavit that he could not raise funds from any source.

36. Steelcase cross-examined Mr. Vrbanic on his affidavit and again Mr. Vrbanic swotre that he had disclosed all of his assets. It is now clear that Mr. Vrbanic's sworn evidence was incorrect: that he failed to disclose two companies under his control: 211 and AMS Inc.

37. Also on cross-examination on the 2008 Motion, when asked whether he had registered the business name "JV Mechanical" to 210, Mr. Vrbanic replied unequivocally that he had not. He withheld that he had registered the name "V Mechanical" to 210, a fact he disclosed on the 2010 Motion. The business names "V Mechanical" and "JV Mechanical" are so similar that I find JV intended to convey to its customers that JV Mechanical was still in business. Mr. Vrbanic was obliged to provide full and complete disclosure in 2008. His evidence was misleading and incomplete. Mr. Vrbanic's explanation that it was an innocent mistake is not credible.

38. JV argues that had Steelcase applied reasonable diligence it would have discovered the other two companies registered under the business names "JV Mechanical" and "V Mechanical". In essence JV says to Steelcase: "notwithstanding that we withheld material information from you and the court on the 2008 Motion, had you conducted a search that was available at the time you would have found out about the two companies".

39. The flaw in JV's argument is that the onus remains with JV to provide full and complete disclosure of its financial circumstances, and to satisfy the court that it is impecunious. (See:

Tallarico-Robertson v Communique Group Inc.[9], applied in applied Bruno Appliance and Furniture Inc. v Cassels Brock & Blackwell LLP[10]).

40. JV cannot now blame Steelcase for not catching Mr. Vrbanic in his lies, omissions and/ or partial truths. There was no reason for Steelcase to presume that Mr. Vrbanic had lied under oath causing Steelcase to conduct further investigations.

41. It would be unjust to permit a party pleading impecuniosity to withhold relevant evidence and then blame the party seeking security for costs for not discovering it. Mr. Vrbanic ought to have disclosed all of the companies in which he had an interest and provided evidence of the financial position of each company. He painted a misleading picture of his financial circumstances.

42. I find that Steelcase applied due diligence in its efforts to test the financial position of JV Mechanical presented in the 2008 Motion.

e. Timeliness

43. Steelcase booked the 2010 motion as soon as it discovered that JV had withheld relevant evidence on the 2008 Motion. I am satisfied that this motion was brought without delay.

f. Discretion

44. In exercising discretion I have taken into account the newly discovered facts as well as the evidence previously disclosed and find that there is sufficient reason to set aside the findings of impecuniosity made on the 2008 Motion.

Conclusion

45. The JV materials filed on the 2008 Motion made repeated reference to JV's and Mr. Vrbanic's full and complete disclosure of all potential sources of funds, of all of Mr. Vrbanic's assets and property and of Mr. Vrbanic's openness and good faith. In light of the new information discovered those statements of Mr. Vrbanic in his affidavit and the facts asserted by his counsel in JV's factum were false.

46. I find that JV's failure to provide full disclosure of relevant financial information on the 2008 Motion and the vague and incomplete evidence in the 2010 Motion about the subsequently discovered two companies are fatal to a finding that JV was impecunious at the time of the 2008 Motion or today.

47. For these reasons it is appropriate to vary my order of December 22, 2008. I am not persuaded that the plaintiff, JV Mechanical Limited, has met the burden of proving that it is impecunious. I find that JV must post security for costs of the actions. In calculating the amount to be posted I have taken into account that some of the costs claimed pertain to the Steelcase claim for set-off and counterclaim. I also find that it is appropriate to stage posting security for costs.

48. I further find that costs of the 2008 Motion should properly go to the moving party Steelcase.

49. Having reviewed the Bills of Costs filed on the 2008 Motion I make the following findings on the quantum of security for costs to be posted by JV Mechanical[11]:

    a. Toronto action 06-CV-304773: $18,000.00

    b. Whitby action 08-CV-348118: $12,000.00.

30. Accordingly, THIS COURT ORDERS that:

a. The order dated December 22, 2008 dismissing the motion for security for costs and the costs order of February 17, 2009 are hereby set aside and replaced with this order.

b. In the Toronto action the sum of $9,000.00 shall be posted by JV Mechanical Limited within 30 days from the date this decision is released;

c. In the Toronto action the additional sum of $9,000.00 shall be posted by JV Mechanical Limited within 30 days of the date the court fixes the date for trial;

d. In the Whitby action the sum of $6,000.00 shall be posted by JV Mechanical Limited within 30 days from the date this decision is released; and

e. In the Whitby action the additional sum of $6,000.00 shall be posted by JV Mechanical Limited within 30 days of the date the court fixes the date for trial.

f. JV Mechanical Limited shall pay costs of the 2008 Motions in actions 06-CV-304773 and 08-CV-348118 to Steelcase Construction Inc. fixed at $7,500.00 inclusive of GST and disbursements within 30 days of the date this decision is released.

g. If counsel cannot agree on costs of this motion brief written submissions of up to three (3) pages per party may be filed by March 31, 2010 in addition to the costs outlines already filed[12].

APPEAL ORDER

Under section 283 of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, c.I.8, as amended, it is ordered that:

1. The Arbitrator's June 10, 2015 decision is rescinded. The matter is remitted to arbitration for a new hearing by a different arbitrator.

2. The Respondent, State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company, shall pay the Appellant, Fatemea Rezaiezadeh, her legal expenses of this appeal fixed in the amount of $6,423.19, inclusive of all fees, disbursements and taxes.

REASONS FOR DECISION

I. BACKGROUND AND NATURE OF THE APPEAL

As a result of her injuries sustained as a pedestrian in a March 8, 2011 motor vehicle accident, the Appellant, Ms. Fatemea Rezaiezadeh, applied to her first part automobile insurer, the Respondent, State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company, for statutory accident benefits under the 2010 Schedule.[1]

An April 4, 2011 Form 1 (Assessment of Attendant Care Needs) prepared by Ms. J. Wong, O.T., stated the Appellant required $9,985.97 in monthly attendant care benefits for 24-hour basic supervisory care. Ms. Wong's April 4, 2011 Occupational Therapy Report, at page 15, stated:

> … [the Appellant] currently requires assistance with several aspects of her personal care activities and is dependent upon assistance for all instrumental activities of daily life due to her mobility restrictions and pain. Unfortunately [she] also copes with her daughter's ongoing medical issues and has no other social network for > support. There is an urgent need for [a] personal support worker and assistive aids equipment to maximize her safety.

In January 2015, the parties came before Arbitrator Anschell (the "Arbitrator") of ADR Chambers for determination of a narrowed issue of whether, under subsection 3(8) of the 2010 Schedule, the Appellant should be deemed to have incurred a $36,000 expense for attendant care, making the benefit payable.

The Respondent concedes, at page eight of the January 13, 2015 arbitration transcript, that the Appellant required the attendant care. The Appellant concedes, at page one of the transcript, that she did not incur the attendant care expense within the meaning of paragraph 3(7)(e) of the 2010 Schedule.

Subsection 3(8) of the 2010 Schedule states:

> If in a dispute to which sections 279 to 283 of the Act apply, a Court or arbitrator finds that an expense was not incurred because the insurer unreasonably withheld or delayed payment of a benefit in respect of the expense, the Court or arbitrator may, for the purpose of determining an insured person's entitlement to the benefit, deem the expense to have been incurred.
> [Emphasis added]

The Appellant also sought a special award subsection under subsection 282(10) of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1999, c. I.8. That provision states:

> If the arbitrator finds that an insurer has unreasonably withheld or delayed payments, the arbitrator, in addition to awarding the benefits and interest to which an insured person is entitled under the Statutory Accident Benefits Schedule, shall award a lump sum of up to 50 per cent of the amount to which the person was entitled at the time of the award together with interest on all amounts then owing to the insured (including unpaid interest) at the rate of 2 per cent per month, compounded monthly, from the time the benefits first became payable under the Schedule. [Emphasis added]

The Arbitrator's June 10, 2015 decision dismissed the Appellant's claim for attendant care benefits and a special award, and awarded the Respondent its expenses. The Arbitrator rejected the Appellant's subsection 3(8) argument of deemed incurring for the following reasons:

1. The Arbitrator stated she was guided by Arbitrator Ahlfeld's decision in Veley and Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Fund, (FSCO A13-002630, May 5, 2014), that subsection 3(8) of the 2010 Schedule was not meant to waive for disadvantaged individuals the incurred requirement of subsection 3(7) unless it was demonstrated that the insurer, knowing a person is impecunious and cannot afford the attendant care services in a Form 1 unreasonably denies or withholds the benefit. [2]

2. The Arbitrator found that the Appellant had not worked at any time since the accident (the top of page nine of her decision). The Appellant's "sole source of income has been the government payments" (also page nine). At the Respondent's July 5, 2011 Examination under Oath (held under the authority of subsection 33(2) of the 2010 Schedule), the Appellant "testified that she had not paid for any Attendant Care Benefits, because she could not afford it" (page nine of the decision).

   The Arbitrator found that the Respondent had demonstrated, on a balance of probabilities, that the Appellant's "one brief comment" at her examination under oath was not a clear communication of her financial situation and her lack of funds for attendant care. The Arbitrator was not prepared to find that the Respondent was aware that the Appellant required attendant care benefits but could not afford to obtain them.

3. The Arbitrator found that the Respondent received an April 4, 2011 Occupational Therapy Report and Form 1. On April 15, 2011, it denied attendant care benefits on the basis the Appellant's injuries fell within the Minor Injury Guideline (the "MIG") and that, under subsection 14(2) of the 2010 Schedule, an insurer was only required to pay attendant care benefits if an injury or impairment was not a minor injury.

   The Arbitrator accepted that the Respondent changed its position that the Appellant did not fall under the MIG based on non-medical information it received at the arbitration pre-hearing. The Arbitrator found the Respondent's failure for two years to remove the Appellant from the MIG "unfortunate," but not unreasonable.

The Arbitrator found, based on the medical information available to it in 2011, that the Respondent's adjudication, as she put it, was not unreasonable as required to invoke subsection 3(8). Having found that the Respondent did not unreasonably withhold or delay payment of attendant care benefits, the Arbitrator held that a special award was not payable.

III. ANALYSIS

Under subsection 283(5) of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. I. 8, the Arbitrator's June 10, 2015 decision is rescinded for the following reasons:

1. Subsection 283(1) of the Insurance Act restricts appeals from the order of an arbitrator to questions of law. Subsection 19(1) of the 2010 Schedule requires an insurer to pay for reasonable and necessary attendant care benefits incurred by or on behalf of the insured person as a result of the accident. Paragraph 3(7)(e) defines the term incurred.

   The parties agree the Appellant has not incurred attendant care expenses, as defined.

Subsection 3(8) provides an exception where an expense was not incurred because the insurer unreasonably withheld or delayed payment of a benefit in respect of the expense.

There is no statutory requirement to access the relief under subsection 3(8) that the insured person communicate to the first-party insurer his or her financial inability to pay.

At oral appeal submissions, the Respondent agreed the 2010 Schedule "certainly does not" have a requirement of communication; there "is nothing in the legislation that makes it obligatory for the insured to clearly state that." The Appellant opined that while an insured's impecuniosity may be evidence of whether an insurer unreasonably withheld or delayed payment of benefits, it is not a pre-requisite.

2. Subsection 3(8) of the 2010 Schedule speaks of the insurer unreasonably withholding or delaying payment. Subsection 282(10) of the Insurance Act uses the same words.

Sullivan and Driedger on the Construction of Statutes, Fourth Edition (Markham Ontario, Butterworths Canada Ltd. 2002) states, at page 162, that there is a presumption of consistent expression. The legislature uses language carefully and consistently so that within a statute or other legislative instrument the same words have the same meaning. It is presumed the provisions of legislation are meant to work together, both logically and teleologically (the explanation of phenomena by the purpose they serve) as parts of a functioning whole (page 168).

Director Draper, at page 31 of Liberty Mutual Insurance Company and Persofsky et al., (FSCO P00-00041, January 31, 2003) (repeating similar comments at page 23), held the "purpose of s. 282(10) is to punish insurers that unreasonably fail to pay accident benefits promptly, as required by the SABS, and to deter that company and others from acting similarly in the future. The size of the special award should be aimed at that purpose." Subsection 3(8) of the 2010 Schedule does not require as a pre-requisite to waiving the paragraph 3(7)(e) incurred requirement that an insurer know that its insured is impecunious and cannot afford the attendant care services in the Form 1. In oral submissions, the Respondent agreed "there is nothing in the legislation that requires knowledge of impecuniosity."

This is consistent with Recommendation 25 of the Report on the Five Year Review of Automobile Insurance, March 31, 2009, cited by Arbitrator Ahlfeld in Veley at page 8:

> The attendant care benefit should continue to compensate claimants for incurred expenses. However, to enhance consumer protection and transparency, the SABS could clarify that where an arbitrator has found that the insurer has been unreasonable in denying the attendant care benefit, payments should be made even if no expenses have been incurred.

The Arbitrator's own earlier words, at the bottom of page nine of her decision, stated that in order for her to invoke subsection 3(8), "I need to find that State Farm unreasonably withheld or delayed payment of the Attendant Care Benefits."

As stated, the purpose of subsection 3(8) of the 2010 Schedule, consistent with subsection 282(10) of the Insurance Act, is to "punish insurers that unreasonably fail to pay accident benefits promptly" and "deter that company and others from acting similarly in the future." The prohibition against an insurer unreasonably withholding or delaying benefits, as with its positive duty of utmost good faith, applies to all of its insureds.

Consistent with the legislative intent of punishing unreasonable insurer conduct, the exercise of adjudicative discretion under subsection 3(8) of the 2010 Schedule is not restricted to the deserving poor, properly approaching their first-party insurer, cap in hand, like some waif from a nineteenth century Charles Dickens' serialized novel.

The pre-requisite for the application of subsection 3(8) is simply that "an expense was not incurred because the insurer unreasonably withheld or delayed payment of a benefit in respect of the expense." That includes, but is not necessarily restricted to, impecuniosity. An insurer's plea of ignorance of the exact ramifications of its unreasonable withholding or delay of benefits does not provide absolution from the application of subsection 3(8).

Ms. T. Stewart, the Respondent's representative, testified at page 63 of the January 14, 2015 transcript, that the Respondent required proof of incurred or economic loss prior to issuing payment. However, there were other options. She testified that the Appellant could have retained a third party service provider and the Respondent could have paid them directly. Ms. Stewart testified there was nothing in the file that this was ever communicated or made known to the Appellant.

Rather than advancing the legislative purpose of the 2010 Schedule, Veley diluted the legislative purpose by adding a pre-condition the Legislature chose not to include and a pre-condition contrary to its intent, of the insurer's actual knowledge of the insured person's impecuniosity. This was an error of law.

The Arbitrator in this present case further diluted the legislative purpose by adding an additional pre-requisite that the insured person was responsible for clearly communicating his or her impecuniosity to the insurer, a pre-condition the Legislature chose not to include and that was contrary to its intent. This was a further error of law.

This was not the judicial exercise of discretion. It was not the exercise of discretion in accordance with principles of fairness and natural justice. It was the exercise of discretion based on a wrong principle. It was a restriction of the exercise of discretion contrary to the legislative intent. It was an exercise of discretion resulting in an injustice. [3]

3. In Young and Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, (FSCO P03-00043, June 20, 2005), application for judicial review dismissed, 2006 CanLII 7286 (ON S.C.D.C.), Delegate Evans cited Delegate McMahon in Lombardi and State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company, (FSCO P01-00022, February 26, 2003):

> … errors of law include findings of fact made in the complete absence of supporting evidence, made on the basis of conjecture, or made on the basis of a misapprehension of the evidence caused by a misdirection on a legal principle. The vital distinction is between a conclusion that there was "no evidence" to support a finding and a mere "insufficiency of evidence."

The Appellant's July 5, 2011 Examination under Oath, at lines 16-20 of page 38 (of 43 pages), has the following question asked by the Respondent's counsel, Mr. D. Raposo, and answer given by the Appellant:

> Q. Has anybody come in to the house to help you with your self-care activities, since the accident on March 8th?
> A. No, I don't have anybody, because I don't have the money.

The transcript of the Examination under Oath shows two other individuals attending in person for the Respondent, Mr. W. Wong and Ms. K. Esposito. At arbitration, Ms. Stewart testified (January 14, 2015, page 40) that Ms. Esposito and Mr. Wong are "special investigation unit claim representatives at State Farm."

The Appellant submits there was further evidence before the Arbitrator regarding her impecuniosity: page five of her OCF-1 (Application for Benefits) showing her status as unemployed, Ms. J. Wong's March 29, 2011 assessment stating the Appellant could not undergo an MRI or purchase medication due to financial difficulties, and the adjuster's April 1, 2011 log note that the Appellant was unemployed and prevented from working.

Subsection 33(6) of the 2010 Schedule provides that an insurer is not liable to pay a benefit in respect of any period during which the insured person fails to submit to an examination under oath. This is a serious consequence. It is an especially serious consequence to an impecunious first-party insured relying on a paid policy of insurance.

One is then at a loss to understand how an insurer, having exercised its rights under the 2010 Schedule to hold an examination under oath to gather information, can subsequently imply (there being no evidence from either attending claims representative) poor hearing, dull wits or bored indifference regarding information so obtained. This is so even if the insurer has less than three representatives attending the examination under oath. If I am in error in finding, in the application of subsection 3(8), that there is no pre-requisite that (1) the insurer know that its insured was impecunious and could not afford the attendant care services in the Form 1; or that (2) the insured clearly communicate his or her impecuniosity to the insurer, I find that the Arbitrator, in the absence of supporting evidence and on the basis of conjecture, erred in law in finding the Appellant, at a time and in a manner the Respondent chose, did not clearly communicate her impecuniosity.

4. At page 55 of the January 14, 2015 arbitration hearing, Ms. Stewart testified:

> Q. Why did you take [the Appellant] out of the MIG in 2013, in October 2013? Why was that done? What new information did you have to take her out of the minor injury guideline that you didn't have before you in 2011? I'm not going to lead you. What's the answer?
> A. I don't know the answer to that. Based on my review of the file there was a file review conducted and it was determined that your client's injuries were outside of the MIG.
>
> Q. Okay. Based on the information you already had?
>
> A. Yes.
>
> Q. And based on the information which we've agreed has not changed at all since 2011?
> A. Correct.

Under subsection 3(6) of the 2010 Schedule, a minor injury "means one or more of a sprain, strain, whiplash associated disorder, contusion, abrasion, laceration or subluxation and includes any clinically associated sequelae to such an injury." The MIG Guideline has a similar definition.

The Arbitrator states, at page nine of her decision, the parties agreed the Respondent's removal of the Appellant from the MIG "was not made on the basis of any new medical information." She stated that based upon the medical information available in 2011, the Respondent's adjudication was not unreasonable as required to invoke subsection 3(8) of the Schedule.

Adjusters do not adjudicate. Adjudicators adjudicate. I take it the Arbitrator meant to say adjusting. However, subsection 3(8) of the 2010 Schedule does not speak to unreasonable adjudication or unreasonable general adjusting. It is specific to the unreasonable withholding or delay of payment of a benefit in respect of the expense.

At the oral appeal hearing, there being no objection, as requested, I included in the appeal record under Rule 56.4 of the Dispute Resolution Practice Code (Fourth Edition – Updated January 2014) (the "Code") the parties' written arbitration submissions. The Respondent's arbitration submissions, at paragraph 43, state:

> It is agreed that the Applicant's injuries were subsequently removed from the MIG following the pre-hearing held on October 21, 2013. This decision was communicated to the Applicant by way of OCF-9 dated October 23, 2013. Although no additional documentation had been received by State Farm since 2011, giving the timing of the pre-hearing, it is State Farm's position that new information was disclosed at the pre-hearing prompting State Farm to reconsider its MIG determination.

I agree with the Appellant's submission, citing Marar v. Mueller, 2011 ONSC 3744, at paragraphs 45 to 49, that evidence cannot be introduced through a factum.

The Respondent denied the Appellant's attendant care claim based on its contention she fell within the MIG. The Arbitrator's decision does not discuss what the MIG entails. She does not say what medical information was before or was not before the Respondent at any point in time that would make the Respondent's refusal to pay attendant care benefits based on the MIG reasonable or unreasonable.

The Respondent argues, at paragraphs 53 and 54 of its written appeal submissions:

> … State Farm has not alleged at any point that additional medical documentation had been received since 2011. However, its position is that information at the pre-hearing did in fact prompt it to reconsider its MIG determination.
> Given the timing and close proximity of the pre-hearing date and State Farm's decision to remove the Applicant from the MIG, the Arbitrator agreed that, on a balance of probabilities, State Farm reconsidered its MIG determination based on information received at the Pre-Hearing.

The Arbitrator does not say what this new information is. She does not say why it was reasonable for the Respondent to await this new, unidentified information. She does not say how or why it changed the Respondent's position on the MIG.

In oral appeal submissions, the Respondent conceded there was no evidence adduced at arbitration as to what information it received at the pre-hearing. It argues that since, temporally, the change in its decision followed the arbitration pre-hearing, deference should be given to the Arbitrator's conclusion.

The applicable Latin phrase is Post Hoc, Ergo Propter Hoc, the logical fallacy that "after this, therefore because of this." This concept was discussed at oral appeal submissions. In this case, the fallacy is not simply relying on one thing following another to find that the former caused the latter. In this case, there is no evidence as to what the information was that was produced at the pre-hearing, if anything. Nor was there any actual evidence, written or oral, that the "something" (if anything) that was provided in fact caused the Respondent to take the Appellant out of the MIG.

That this "new information," if any, is unknown, may be due to the following:

(1) The Arbitrator, at page six of the January 14, 2015 transcript, noted she believed the Appellant's December 12, 2014 letter was in the file. The Appellant states she had asked the Respondent to produce for cross-examination six adjusters who had carriage and knowledge of this file. The Respondent produced only Ms. Stewart, who testified she took over carriage of the file in late 2014 and had no involvement or personal knowledge of anything being dealt with in the log notes.

The Respondent submits that if the Appellant wanted to have all of its adjusters attend, it should have served summons to witness. The Appellant states she had asked for the adjusters' last known contact information so she could subpoena them, but this information was not provided.[4]

(2) The Respondent claimed privilege over its log notes from early 2012 on, while relying on events at the September 2013 pre-hearing for changing it position in 2013 on the MIG. The Respondent argued in oral appeal submissions that if the Appellant had wanted these notes, she should have brought a motion.

R. v. Anglin, 2005 CanLII 8189 (ON CA), in setting a conviction aside and ordering a new trial, stated that the "conclusion of the trial judge is simply conclusory and generic … The failure to give adequate reasons is an error of law which warrants a new trial."

The Arbitrator's decision that it was not unreasonable for the Respondent to take the Appellant out of the MIG for two years "based upon information received at the Pre Hearing" is simply conclusory, made in the absence of supporting oral or written evidence and on the basis of conjecture.

5. The Arbitrator erred in law in awarding legal expenses to the Respondent:

(1) It is not disputed the Arbitrator failed to receive submissions on the question of entitlement to legal expenses. This was a breach of a fundamental precept of natural justice.

(2) The Arbitrator failed to give reasons for her legal expense entitlement award. As stated in Scarlett v Belair Insurance, 2015 ONSC 3635 (CanLII), the "duty of procedural > fairness would include providing interested parties a reasonable opportunity to address case law, statutory provisions, and lines of argument which the arbitrator wishes to consider but which were not raised at the arbitration.”

> As stated in my September 18, 2015 Preliminary Appeal Order:
> > Neither the Code nor the Expense Regulation automatically award legal expenses to the successful party. Rather, other criteria for consideration include whether any novel issues were raised in the proceeding, the conduct of the parties and whether any aspect of the proceeding was improper, vexatious or unnecessary.

Rather than the matter being sent back to a new arbitration hearing, the Appellant asks for an appellate order that she is entitled to Attendant Care Benefits from April 13, 2011 in accordance with the April 4, 2011 Form 1 prepared by Ms. Wong, subject to any applicable policy limits, interest on those benefits and the maximum special award “or the matter to be referred to a different arbitrator for determination of the quantum of special award.”

In Personal Insurance Company v. Hoang, 2014 ONSC 81 (CanLII), the Divisional Court, having upheld an adjudicative decision of entitlement to a special award, agreed to determine the quantum of the award, stating:

> The court has been provided with the complete appeal record that was before the Delegate as well as the transcripts of the hearing before the arbitrator. Given the unusual circumstances of this case and the fact that both counsel wish this court to determine the amount of the special award, I agree that we should do so.

This present case involves more than the quantum of a special award. Even regarding the quantum of a special award, the Divisional Court in Hoang had before it both the interest calculation under both the Schedule and subsection 282(10) of the Insurance Act against which to determine an appropriate special award. I do not have such evidence.

Further, in the present case, the Respondent does not agree that, if I set aside the Arbitrator’s decision, I should decide whether to apply subsection 3(8) of the 2010 Schedule to award the Appellant $36,000 in attendant care benefits, plus interest and legal costs, as well as determine her entitlement to and the quantum of any special award.

The Appellant, herself, argued in oral submissions that “the heart of my case is a lack of fairness of how the case went.” She notes her lack of opportunity to cross-examine the Respondent’s adjusters who had carriage and personal knowledge of the pertinent aspects of this case.

In the circumstances of this case, I find it appropriate to remit this matter back to arbitration for a new hearing, to be heard by another arbitrator.

IV. CHANGE OF THE TITLE OF PROCEEDING

The Appellant brought a motion for an order that both the appeal and arbitration title of proceeding be amended to substitute "Certas Home and Auto Insurance Company" for the Respondent. The Appellant submits that the Desjardins Group acquired State Farm January 1, 2015 and that the Respondent's correspondence and website suggest that Certas Home and Auto Insurance Company are now liable for any amounts payable to the Appellant.

The Appellant concedes there is no explicit procedure in the Code or the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.22, as amended, to permit a party to continue a proceeding against a non-party. She notes, however, that CGU Insurance Company of Canada and Bittan, (FSCO P01-00058, May 30, 2002), and Abbas and Security National Insurance Co./Monnex Insurance Mgmt. Inc. (P08-00034, February 18, 2009), held that the Rules of Civil Procedure, although not binding, may be helpful. Rule 1.1 of the Code states that the Rules will be broadly interpreted to produce the most just, quickest and least expensive resolution of the dispute.

The Appellant cites Rules 11.01 and 11.02 of the Rules of Civil Procedure that where at any stage in a proceeding the liability of a party is transferred or transmitted to another person by assignment or other means the proceeding is not nullified but is stayed until an order to continue against the person is obtained from the Court. She submits that the liability to pay her benefits has been "transferred or transmitted" to Certas and that Abbas supports an adjudicator having the authority to fashion an analogous procedural remedy to ensure a just and efficient outcome.

However, as the Respondent noted, the Appellant failed to provide any case law either regarding the Commission applying Rules 11.01 and 11.02 of the Rules of Civil Procedure or the Court application of these rules in similar circumstances.

The Respondent's January 19, 2016 Response to the Appellant's motion states "the issue is neither here nor there;" whether "State Farm no longer exists is not an issue. State Farm has and will continue to respond to this appeal as a named party and it is our position," (emphasis in the original). That State Farm continues to exist, it submits, is evidenced by the letterhead on recent correspondence to the Appellant. The Respondent does, however, concede:

> … as noted in the Appellant's motion materials, there is no dispute that the State Farm branded policies are now underwritten by Certas Home and Auto Insurance Company or Desjardin Financial Security Life Assurance Company.

The Appellant's apparent concern is that if she is successful on appeal and obtains a monetary award, if the Respondent does not pay, whose property does the sheriff seize? The Respondent submits that Certas would respond to any "valid" judgment by cutting a cheque because of its contractual obligation with State Farm. This did not seem to reassure the Appellant.

Rule 66 of the Code provides that, on written request, the Director will provide a party with a certified copy of an order that may be filed with the Ontario Superior Court of Justice. The Order may be enforced by the Court as an order of that Court. Rule 65.5 provides, in part, that an adjudicator, "at any time" may correct a technical error in his or her decision. Rule 65.7 allows an adjudicator to make such orders or give such directions as he or she considers proper to prevent an abuse of process.

A change in the title of proceeding in this case potentially affects every Commission case involving the present insurer. At present there is no suggestion that this appeal is a nullity or that it should be stayed pending an order to continue as would happen under Rule 11.01 of the Rules of Civil Procedure. In the absence of any case law regarding a presently hypothetical concern, I defer to any further or other appellate officer the question of amending the title of proceeding in this appeal proceeding in the event there is any difficulty in the enforcement of this appeal order. I leave to arbitration any amendment of the title of proceeding at that level.

IV. LEGAL APPEAL EXPENSES

Both parties seek their legal expenses both of this appeal and arbitration. I refer the parties to arbitration for a determination of legal expenses at that level.

My December 7, 2015 letter stated that the parties should be prepared at the oral appeal hearing to speak to both entitlement to and the quantum of appeal legal expenses. Both parties brought a Bill of Costs. The Appellant seeks $6,423.19 in legal expenses. This consists of 27.5 hours at $150 an hour (equaling $4,661.25, including HST), and $1,761.94 in disbursements (including $1,263 for the arbitration transcripts). The Respondent seeks $7,459.60 in legal fees, consisting of 55.4 hours claimed at either $116.93 or $129.93 an hour. No legal disbursements are claimed.

Subsection 12(2) of R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 664 (the "Expense Regulation") sets out the criteria to be considered in awarding legal expenses. I find the Appellant entitled to her reasonable expenses of appeal, first because she was successful in setting aside the Arbitrator's order.

The Respondent argued that, at the end of the day, no legal expenses should be awarded as the issue was novel on appeal and there was only one prior arbitration decision on point, Veley. As I have found that Veley also erred in law regarding a point not dealt with in the appeal in that case, I find this to be a further reason to award the Appellant her reasonable legal expenses of this appeal.

I find the Appellant's claimed hours entirely reasonable, especially given that the Respondent claims twice as many hours. This is of significance when it is often argued on appeal that it is to be expected that the appellant, having the onus, should incur greater hours.

Insurers' counsel are subject to the increasing rates of the Legal Aid, Civil Tier 3 rate. The maximum $150 hourly rate for applicants' counsel under Rule 78.1 of the Code has been in effect for the nearly two decades since 1997. Successful applicants see their awards, and access to justice, eroded by inertia in the face of increasing cost of representation. It is difficult to disagree with the Respondent that this system undercompensates counsel.

I am persuaded that the relatively modest $150 an hour the Appellant seeks is more than justified in this case that addressed issues of law novel at the appellate level. I am persuaded that the Appellant's disbursements are reasonable. I specifically find the transcript in this case not merely reasonable, but necessary. I award the Appellant her requested legal appeal expenses of $6,423.19, inclusive of all fees, disbursements and taxes.

MARGIE BATEMAN

Respondent

BEFORE:	Delegate Lawrence Blackman
REPRESENTATIVES:	Ms. Deborah G. Neilson for the Appellant, Intact Insurance Company Mr. Gordon Good for the Respondent, Ms. Margie Bateman
HEARING DATE:	January 20, 2014. The decision with reasons was provided orally the same da y, with full written reasons to follow.

APPEAL ORDER

Under section 283 of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, c.I.8, as amended, it is ordered that:

1. Pursuant to Rules 50.2 and 51.2(c) of the Dispute Resolution Practice Code (Fourth Edition – Updated August 2011), this appeal from the Arbitrator's November 26, 2013 motion decision is rejected. Accordingly, I decline to exercise my discretion pursuant to subsection 283(6) of the Insurance Act to stay the Arbitrator's decision.

2. If the parties are unable to agree on the legal expenses of this appeal, an expense hearing shall be requested within thirty days of the date of my oral decision, as set out within.

REASONS FOR DECISION

I. NATURE OF THE APPEAL

The Respondent, Ms. Margie Bateman, was injured in a February 14, 1996 motor vehicle accident. As a result, she applied for statutory accident benefits pursuant to the Schedule[1] from her first-party automobile insurer which, at the time, was Zurich Insurance Company but is now the Appellant, Intact Insurance Company.

The parties dispute the Respondent's benefit entitlement, including loss of earning capacity benefits ("LECBs"), medical/rehabilitation, attendant care and housekeeping benefits, as well as a special award claimed pursuant to subsection 282(10) of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. I.8, as amended.

On August 17, 2010, the Appellant received the Respondent's Application for Mediation. Mediation, held November 2, 2011, was unsuccessful in resolving the issues in dispute.

The Commission received the Respondent's Application for Arbitration in January 2012. Rule 32 of the Dispute Resolution Practice Code (Fourth Edition – Updated August 2011), (the "Code"), mandates that at least ten days before the pre-hearing discussion the parties have, in part, exchanged the documents identified in the Application for Arbitration and the Response, established a reasonable time frame for the exchange of any remaining documents, filed a list of outstanding document requests and identified any disputed items.

The parties' compliance with Rule 32 allows the pre-hearing arbitrator to more expeditiously and cost-effectively, under Rule 33.1(c) of the Code, decide any disputes relating to the identification and exchange of documents, make orders and set time lines for the exchange of outstanding documents. The Commission's time lines in the Code state that dates for the arbitration pre-hearing will be available within six to eight weeks from the registration of a completed Application and that dates for an oral arbitration hearing will be available within four to six months of the conclusion of the pre-hearing discussion.

The pre-hearing was held before Arbitrator Alves (the "Arbitrator") on August 9, 2012. The Arbitrator confirmed the substantive issues in dispute and set an eight-day hearing for March 2013. The pre-hearing was to resume on September 28, 2012, allowing the parties to sort out their production disputes in the interim.

At the resumption, procedural issues remained outstanding, including whether the Appellant's accident benefits file was to be produced. Oral submissions were received at the resumption, and on two further occasions. Written submissions were received by February 20, 2013. The Arbitrator's March 6, 2013 letter decision determined non-production preliminary procedural issues.

Additional submissions were then received by March 14, 2013. In the interim, the Arbitrator adjourned the March 2013 arbitration hearing to January 28, 2014. The Arbitrator released her production decision on November 26, 2013. The Arbitrator held:

1. The Appellant was to produce, by December 18, 2013, its complete file from February 14, 1996 to August 17, 2010, with the exceptions noted. August 17, 2010 was the date the Appellant received the Respondent's second Application for Mediation and the date on which the Arbitrator, citing arbitration case law,[2] held that litigation privilege could reasonably be said to attach. The Arbitrator noted that the Appellant retained its present counsel on September 2, 2010, shortly after the August 2010 Application for Mediation.

   Exempted from production were items #20 (reserve information) and #21 (legal opinion). Modified production was ordered regarding manuals, surveillance and contact information for file handlers. The Arbitrator set out a page, single-spaced, of items identified either generically or individually that were to be specifically produced.

2. Citing Dyczok and Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company, (FSCO A02-000766, August 26, 2003), the Arbitrator found that extraordinary circumstances warranted the Appellant producing an affidavit of documents. These circumstances, where the Respondent had been seeking production of the Appellant's file since 1998, included:

   - Evidence that the Appellant was missing documentation, there being a notation in the Appellant's file that four fifths of its file was missing;
   - The Appellant having two file numbers and the Appellant having neglected or having refused to confirm that both files had been produced;
   - The absence of key documents in what the Appellant had produced, the Respondent having listed 45 documents she received in February 2013 for the first time;
   - The absence of meaningful responses by the Appellant to the Respondent's requests for information and documentation; and,
   - the manner in which the Appellant had claimed privilege

3. The Appellant was to deliver, by December 18, 2013, an Affidavit of Documents, as particularized by the Arbitrator, restricted to documents that came into existence on or before August 17, 2010. The Arbitrator stated that the Appellant had set out 39 groups of documents over which it claimed solicitor-client, litigation and/or settlement privilege. Rather than producing the documents and redacting the material for which privilege was claimed, the Appellant had withheld entire documents, making it difficult for the Respondent and the Arbitrator to determine whether privilege was legitimately claimed.

   The Respondent had two days, until December 20, 2013, to challenge any claim of privilege made by the Appellant. The Appellant subsequently had until December 23, 2013 to file with the Commission a copy of each challenged document. The Arbitrator would then, based on the arguments articulated by the Appellant in its Affidavit of Documents and the Respondent's submissions, determine what further, if any, documents the Appellant should produce. The documents not ordered produced would be sealed.

4. The Appellant had refused to make those persons who had carriage of its file available to give evidence, or to provide their contact information. Holding that there was no property in witnesses, the Arbitrator ordered that by December 5, 2013 the Appellant provide contact information, as specified, for 12 individuals, exempting two individuals the Arbitrator found had not adjusted the file.

5. The Appellant was to provide the 48-page medical summary it prepared for a psychologist who was to do a psycho-vocational assessment of the Respondent.

6. The Appellant was to produce those directives or memoranda it used to adjust the Respondent's benefits claim, as they were relevant. The Arbitrator was not persuaded of the relevance of the manuals sought to be produced.

7. Citing Uka and Aviva Canada Inc., (FSCO P08-00036, July 16, 2009) and Mamaca (Litigation Guardian of) v. Coseco Insurance Co., 2007 CanLII 54963 (ON SC), [2007] O.J. No. 4899, the Arbitrator was not persuaded she had authority to order production of reserve information.

8. The Respondent had sought production of all surveillance particulars from the February 14, 1996 accident to present. The Respondent had a July 31, 2003 surveillance report. It had not yet determined if it would be relying on the report. Applying Rule 40.1 of the Code, the Arbitrator ordered that by December 5, 2013 the Appellant was to determine whether it intended to rely on any of its surveillance or investigative evidence and advise the Respondent of its position. If the Appellant intended to rely on any portion of the evidence, it was to provide copies of all of the surveillance and investigative evidence in its possession by December 18, 2013.

The Appellant's December 3, 2013 letter sought clarification from the Arbitrator regarding her order. The Respondent responded December 9, 2013. In part, the Appellant asked for clarification of her order regarding privilege. On the one hand, the Arbitrator had issued a production order to August 17, 2010. On the other hand, the Arbitrator had ruled that reserve information and legal opinions were not to be produced and an Affidavit of Documents was to be provided upon which privilege would be determined. It was not clear whether the items over which the Appellant had claimed privilege were to be presently produced.
The Arbitrator's December 20, 2013 letter clarified that the cost of obtaining all productions ordered produced would be at the Appellant's expense, unless waived by the Respondent. The order for production of log notes included those in the possession of third parties. Production of cheques included those benefits not in dispute in this arbitration. Otherwise, the Arbitrator stated "I refer you to the decision."

II. SHOULD THIS APPEAL FROM A PRELIMINARY OR INTERIM ARBITRATION ORDER BE ACCEPTED?

The Appellant's December 18, 2013 Notice of Appeal sought leave that this appeal from a preliminary or interim arbitration order be accepted. The Appellant also sought a stay of the Arbitrator's November 26, 2013 order.

Rule 50.2 of the Code provides that a party may not appeal a preliminary or interim order of an arbitrator until all of the issues in dispute have been finally decided, unless ordered otherwise. Rule 51.2(c) states that an appeal may be rejected if it is from a preliminary or interim order that does not finally decide the issues in dispute.

Delegate Makepeace, in Allstate Insurance Company of Canada and Torok, (FSCO P01-00021, May 29, 2001), held that the purpose of Rule 50.2 of the Code is to:

> … facilitate the most cost-effective resolution of disputes by minimizing the time and money spent on procedural or collateral matters. The decision whether to hear an appeal of a preliminary order is discretionary … the over-arching principle guiding the exercise of the discretion is that the rule "should be broadly interpreted to produce the quickest, most just and least expensive resolution of the dispute." The criteria to be considered include the apparent strength of the appeal, the importance or novelty of the issue raised, and whether rejecting the appeal or hearing it will prejudice either party.

Subsection 283(6) of the Insurance Act provides that an appeal does not stay the order of an arbitrator, unless decided otherwise. In Guardian Insurance Company of Canada and Armstrong, (FSCO P00-00037, July 20, 2000), Delegate McMahon adopted the following criteria in determining whether a stay should be granted:

1. The bona fides of the appeal;
2. The substance of the grounds for appeal; and,
3. The hardship to the respective parties if the stay is granted or refused.

Endeavours were made to have an appeal preliminary issue teleconference with both parties the beginning of January 2014, given that the arbitration hearing was scheduled to begin the end of the month. Due to the unavailability of the Respondent's counsel to participate in a telephone conference call until January 20, 2014, oral submissions were received on the that date.

The Appellant submits that the Arbitrator erred in her November 26, 2013 decision in:

1. Failing to accept the Appellant's evidence regarding the privilege claimed and ordering production of documents for which privilege was claimed or that pertained to reserves.
2. Ordering production of the entire accident benefits file rather than those documents relevant to the issues in arbitration.
3. Ordering an Affidavit of Documents as well as an adjuster's and log note record.
4. Ordering production of copies of cheques of benefits that are not in issue.

The Appellant asks that the Arbitrator's order be replaced by an order:

1. It produce its complete accident benefits file from February 14, 1996 to August 17, 2010 except for those documents over which privilege is claimed or that pertain to reserves.

2. It not prepare an adjuster's and log note record indicating what notes were received and have not been provided.
3. It produce copies only of cheques for the medical, rehabilitation, attendant care and housekeeping benefits claimed in the arbitration.
4. Its Affidavit of Documents lists only those documents relevant to the arbitration rather than all Accident Benefits documents.

The Appellant cites Primmum Insurance Co. and Rajasekaram, (FSCO P12-00034, December 4, 2012), as to the following applicable criteria for whether to accept an appeal from a preliminary or interim order. It submits that it need not meet all of the criteria for its appeal to be accepted.

1. The Apparent Strength of the Appeal

The Appellant states that the Arbitrator failed to clarify whether her order requires production of all privileged and/or reserve documentation up to August 17, 2010. Therefore, the Appellant submits that it must now produce all such documentation, other than that expressly excepted in the Arbitrator's order. The Appellant argues that production of privileged documents is contrary to subsection 5(2) of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.22 (the "SPPA") and Rule 39.3(a) of the Code, as overwhelmingly supported by case law.

At page 8 of her submissions, the Respondent submits that the Appellant has misinterpreted the Arbitrator's order, believing it must disclose documents over which it claims privilege. The Respondent states, at page 7, that the "Arbitrator did not order disclosure of privileged documents, but rather ordered production of an affidavit of documents." Documents for which privilege is claimed are to be included in the Affidavit of Documents with sufficient description to identify the document and whether privilege should attach. That, the Respondent argues, is within the Tribunal's power, as set out in Dyczok. The Respondent further submits that the Arbitrator held that reserve information was to be redacted from the disclosures.

The Appellant, in its companion Application for Variation/Revocation, stated, by letter dated January 15, 2014, that "in light of the clarification of the Arbitrator dated December 20, 2013," it was withdrawing its Application for Variation/Revocation. In oral submissions, the Appellant stated that if my decision specifically noted the Respondent's concession and that I am relying on her concession that the Arbitrator has not presently ordered production of documentation where privilege or reserve information is claimed, then the Appellant's concerns regarding that part of the appeal have been met. Accordingly, the Arbitrator will decide privilege and reserve issues pertaining to specific documents upon delivery of an Affidavit of Documents and the Respondent's further submissions.

Given the Respondent's concession, upon which I rely, I am not persuaded as to the strength of the primary focus of this appeal − the alleged error of law regarding privilege. Nor am I persuaded as to the strength of the remaining grounds of appeal, as discussed below.

2. The Importance or Novelty of the Issues Raised

The Appellant cites the Court of Appeal in Pritchard v. Ontario Human Rights Commission et al., 2003 CanLII 8701 (ON CA), 63 O.R. (3d) 97, that solicitor-client privilege is a "fundamental civil and legal right." The Appellant further cites Delisser v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company 2004 CanLII 13931 (ON SC), [2004] O.J. No. 1399, that statements made in the course of mediation should be entitled to absolute privilege. The Appellant submits that, therefore, questions of legal privilege are of extreme importance. That issue, however, has been rendered moot by the Respondent's concession.

The Appellant cites Allstate Insurance Company of Canada and Rama, (FSCO P07-00033, July 16, 2009), where Delegate Evans allowed an appeal regarding reserve information. In Security National Insurance Co./Monnex Insurance Mgmt. Inc. and Morgan, (FSCO P07-00002, October 29, 2007), Delegate Evans varied the arbitration surveillance evidence production order. In addition, the Appellant submits that the Arbitrator's decision conflicts with Pantelidis and Certas Direct Insurance Company, (FSCO A01-001126, January 25, 2002), where, in the circumstances of that case, I saw no need for the insurer to provide an affidavit of documents.

The Appellant argues that if leave is not granted to accept this appeal, the reputation of justice will be brought into disrepute. It notes that leave to appeal has been granted where there was a dispute over an order for production of privileged documents.

The Respondent submits that the Appellant has failed to raise any novel or important issue. As the Arbitrator noted, requests for an affidavit of documents have been considered before and the Commission has determined that it is vested with authority to order such production.

The Respondent further argues that the Arbitrator noted the extraordinary circumstances in this case, circumstances attributable to the Appellant itself. The Respondent submits that the Appellant has provided no basis to counter the Arbitrator's findings or any argument that the circumstances are not extraordinary such as to warrant an Affidavit of Documents.

I agree that the Arbitrator acknowledged that ordering an Affidavit of Documents was restricted to "extraordinary circumstances." The Arbitrator set out those extraordinary circumstances. The Appellant does not dispute those extraordinary circumstances in its Notice of Appeal, reply or oral submissions. While I was providing my oral decision, the Appellant broke in to say that it intended to provide those submissions once the appeal was accepted. The time to make submissions on the strength of the appeal, however, brief, as a ground upon which the appeal should be accepted is before, not during or after that preliminary appeal decision.

Privilege is important. That does not mean, however, that every preliminary or interim arbitration decision entailing a claim of privilege is entitled to be appealed. While there may have been prior appeal decisions on a specific preliminary issue, that does not mean that an appeal from every arbitration decision on the same issue must be received. Rather, the intent of Rules 50.2 and 51.2(c) of the Code and the case law as in Torok is that accepting appeals from preliminary or interim arbitration orders is to be the exception in this dispute system that was established as a meaningfully expeditious, cost-efficient and simplified alternative to the courts.

I am not persuaded that the Arbitrator's fact based exercise of discretion raises issues of such importance or novelty warranting setting aside the general rule that a party may not appeal a preliminary or interim order of an arbitrator until all of the issues in dispute have been finally decided. Given the Respondent's concession that the Appellant's claims of privilege and reserves are still to be determined, now seventeen months or more after the issue was raised, I am not persuaded that the administration of justice will be brought into disrepute by rejecting an appeal that will add even further delay, expense and complication.

I am persuaded that accepting this appeal will not advance the administration of justice.

3. Whether Rejecting the Appeal will Prejudice Either Party

The Appellant argues that the Respondent's alleged hardship is contrary to the eleven years it took her to apply for arbitration.

The Appellant further submits that the $10,973.77 in attendant care benefits claimed covers the period 1996 to 2006 and that there is no issue for present attendant care. It argues that these claimed expenses are covered by the caregiver expenses it has already paid.
The Appellant argues that only the preliminary LECB issues (including whether the Respondent elected to receive LECBs and whether she received an LECB offer in 2001) should proceed on January 28, 2014. Once those issues are determined, the issue of LECB quantum should easily settle. The Appellant states that, in the interim, it is paying the Respondent other disability benefits weekly and, hence, there is no concern over any hardship the Respondent may have resulting from the arbitration hearing being delayed.

The Respondent submits that the Arbitrator's March 2013 order determined that the issue of whether the Respondent was entitled to an LECB should be determined as a substantive issue at the main hearing along with the other disputed benefit claims. The Respondent argues:

- Accepting this appeal would result in a long adjournment of the arbitration hearing, to the Respondent's prejudice and great hardship;

- The Respondent is presently receiving weekly benefits of $185. The Respondent is entitled to increased benefits based on the Appellant's own calculations; and,

- The Appellant has indicated its intention to cease payment of benefits immediately for reasons related to an insurer's medical examination ("IME"). The Appellant responds that its requested IME and/or Form 1, Assessment of Attendant Care Needs Form, pertain to present day attendant care needs and not those in dispute in this arbitration.

I find the argument that the disputed attendant care benefits are seven years old does not support the arbitration hearing being further delayed. Whether the Respondent unduly waited to bring these disputes to resolution, it is now more than two years since she applied for arbitration, far longer to reach a hearing than provided for under the Commission's time lines. The suggestion that the January 28, 2014 hearing be limited to preliminary LECB issues would, through the back door, overturn the Arbitrator's March 2013 decision, that has not been appealed.

I am persuaded that the prejudice to the Respondent should this appeal be accepted, adding unwarranted delay, complication and expense, is greater than any prejudice to the Appellant in rejecting the appeal, especially given the Respondent's concession that privilege and reserve issue regarding specific documents are still to be determined by the Arbitrator.

4. The Preference of the Parties

As cited by the Respondent, Allstate Insurance Company of Canada and Al-Obaidi, (FSCO P99-00009, May 2, 2000), states that the preference of the parties is an important factor. In this case, the parties disagree on whether this appeal should be accepted.

5. Whether the Arbitration Decision Departs from Prior Cases

I agree with the Respondent that the Arbitrator's decision is consistent with Dyczok that an arbitrator is vested with the authority to order production of an affidavit of documents. The Arbitrator's decision is also consistent with Campeau and Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, (FSCO A00-000522, March 12, 2001).

Rule 1.1 of the Code provides that the Rules are to be broadly interpreted to produce the quickest, most just and least expensive resolution of the dispute. Campeau noted the broad strokes approach taken by the Commission regarding production of an insured person's clinical notes and records, setting as a general rule production of an insured's clinical notes and records from one year pre-accident, subject to submissions that the scope of production should be broadened or narrowed:

> … medical entries may note abortions, extra-marital affairs and a myriad of other extremely private matters. The relevance of these matters to a claim such as a soft-tissue disability, especially without any alleged emotional component, may be questioned. Nevertheless, without even a bald allegation of a causation issue, insurers are routinely provided with the entire clinical notes and records of an applicant's medical practitioners from the standard period of one year prior to the motor vehicle accident, without any restriction to those entries which the applicant finds relevant.

Campeau, noting the similar prima facie relevance of an insurer's accident benefits file, took a similar broad brush approach to production of the file up to the date of mediation, subject to submissions as to why the scope of production should be expanded or narrowed.

Rule 5.4(1)(c) of the SPPA provides that a Tribunal may, at any stage before the hearing is completed, make orders for the exchange of documents. Rule 5.4(c) excepts orders requiring the disclosure of privileged information. Rule 15(2) of the SPPA provides that nothing is admissible in a hearing that is inadmissible in a court by reason of privilege under the law of evidence. The Ontario Court of Appeal, in General Accident Assurance Co. v. Chrusz et al., 1999 CanLII 7320 (ON CA), [1999] 45 O.R. (3d) 321, held that the onus is on the party asserting the privilege to establish the evidentiary basis for the privilege. The Appellant seemingly objects to the Arbitrator allowing it yet another opportunity to establish an evidentiary basis for the privilege it claims for individual documents.

6. Whether Rejecting or Hearing the Appeal would provide the Quickest, Most Just and Least Expensive Way of Disposing of the Issues between the Parties.

The Appellant states that subsection 15(1) of the SPPA limits documentary evidence at a hearing to that which is relevant to the subject-matter of the proceeding. Rule 32.2 of the Code requires the exchange of documents that are "reasonably necessary to determine the issues being arbitrated." Rule 32.3 provides, in part, that an arbitrator may at any time order the production of documents considered "relevant to the determination of the issues in the arbitration."

The Appellant argues that the Arbitrator has incorporated into arbitration a discovery process, including an Affidavit of Documents listing every document in its possession regardless of relevance. Such an order, the Appellant submits, undermines the Commission as an expeditious, less complicated and less expensive alternative to the court system. This appeal, it submits, will discourage parties seeking production of documents not relevant to the issues in a matter with a view to streamlining the arbitration process.

The Appellant submits that the Respondent requested, on March 1, 2013, that the arbitration hearing be adjourned to January 28, 2014. The Arbitrator's order came eight months after the close of submissions that took months to complete. Nonetheless, the Arbitrator only allowed the Appellant days to comply with her extensive order. The Appellant states that it has incurred 98 hours of staff time, including overtime on weekends, and at least 46 hours of counsel and staff time, to comply with the Arbitrator's order.

The Respondent argues that dismissing the appeal and the stay request would be the most just, expeditious and least expensive way of disposing of the dispute, rather than suspending its determination for months, at unnecessary further expenditure and time.

The Arbitrator had the advantage of hearing the parties on numerous occasions. Al-Obaidi held:

> Arbitrators have considerable options as to the form disclosure should take. In appropriate circumstances, this may involve a selective order, as in Candido, limited to entries related to specified benefits, and giving that party's lawyer the opportunity to decide which entries meet the criteria. However, this should always be subject to the ultimate discretion of the arbitrator to rule on aspects in relation to which there may be uncertainty, disagreement or concern."

The Arbitrator made findings of fact. She found that the Appellant had not provided meaningful responses to the Respondent's requests for information and documentation, it was missing documentation, it had two file numbers, it refused to confirm that both files had been produced and it had not provided key documents it said had been delivered.

The Arbitrator set out the basis for finding that there were extraordinary circumstances supporting her order. The Appellant has not challenged the extraordinary circumstances found by the Arbitrator. In any event, appeals from the order of an arbitrator are limited to questions of law under subsection 283(1) of the Insurance Act.

Deference is owed to first level adjudicators, specifically regarding credibility. It is not the role of an appellate officer to second guess such findings. As stated in Calogero and The Co-operators General Insurance Company, (OIC P-000251, February 13, 1992), the "principle, as generally understood, is one should only interfere in the discretion exercised by the trier of fact if it is so clearly wrong as to amount to an injustice (Elsom v. Elsom, 1989 CanLII 100 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1367) … it is not the Director's function to substitute her assessment for that of the arbitrator."

As noted in Torok, the key criterion whether to accept an appeal is whether it would result in the quickest, most just and least expensive way of disposing of the issues between the parties. The onus is on an appellant to establish that an appeal from a preliminary or interim order should be accepted. Further, appeals from the order of an arbitrator are limited to errors of law. That another arbitrator would have exercised his or her discretion differently is not sufficient.

As stated, the Respondent concedes that issues regarding privilege and reserve documentation are still to be determined by the Arbitrator. Ordering an Affidavit of Documents in the extraordinary circumstances noted by the Arbitrator was consistent with Dyczok. Ordering production of the Appellant's accident benefits file to the date of mediation, subject to determination of privilege and reserve issues, was consistent with Campeau.

Accepting this appeal will not bring back the seventeen months these issues have percolated in arbitration submissions and deliberations. Accepting this appeal will not bring back the 144 hours the Appellant says it has spent complying with the Arbitrator's order. The parties endeavoured to advise me as to the extent of the Appellant's compliance or lack of compliance with the Arbitrator's order. That, however, is not the issue before me.

I am not persuaded as to the apparent strength of the appeal, the importance or novelty of the issues raised, that the prejudice in rejecting the appeal is greater to the Appellant than the prejudice to the Respondent in accepting the appeal or that the arbitration decision departs from prior case law.

Accordingly, exercising my discretion pursuant to Rules 50.2 and 51.2(c) of the Code, I reject this appeal. As the appeal has been rejected, the issue of the requested stay of the Arbitrator's November 26, 2013 decision is moot. However, for completeness, I will briefly address that issue.

III. SHOULD THE REQUESTED STAY BE GRANTED?

The Appellant argued, in support of its stay request, that the likelihood of it being successful on appeal was great given that subsection 5(2) of the SPPA prevents an arbitrator ordering production of privileged documents. The Appellant submits that its privileged documents include e-mails between Zurich's in-house counsel and its adjuster, internal e-mails and adjuster's notes setting out settlement strategy and documents.

If the stay were not granted, the Appellant argues that it would suffer irreparable prejudice as the privilege attached to the documents ordered produced would be lost upon production, rendering the appeal moot. To allow these documents to be produced would have "a chilling effect on the communications between insurers and their counsel and on preparation for settlement discussions or mediation."

As noted, the Respondent concedes that the Arbitrator's production order excludes documents for which privilege or reserve information is claimed. Disputes in this regard are to be resolved according to the procedure set by the Arbitrator. I am not persuaded that the hardship claimed by the Appellant warrants the exceptional order of a stay of the Arbitrator's order.

IV. EXPENSES

If the parties are unable to agree on the legal expenses of this appeal, applying the procedure in Rule 79.2 of the Code, an expense hearing shall be requested, within thirty days of the date of my oral decision. The request shall be accompanied by a Bill of Costs describing the expenses claimed, the services received and the costs. Although not stated in my oral decision, it would move matters along if the request was accompanied by written submissions regarding entitlement to and/or the quantum of legal expenses, as are in dispute.

Case Summary

application" means an application for accident benefits (OCF-1) approved by the Superintendent for the purposes of the Schedule[.]

. . . . .

1. All disputes as to which insurer is required to pay benefits under section 268 of the Act shall be settled in accordance with this Regulation.
2(1) The first insurer that receives a completed application for benefits is responsible for paying benefits to an insured person pending the resolution of any dispute as to which insurer is required to pay benefits under section 268 of the Act.

(Emphasis added)

Analysis

[17] This court has dealt with these priority disputes in SABs context a number of times.

[18] In Kingsway General Insurance Co. v. Ontario (Minister of Finance) (2007), 84 O.R. (3d) 507, [2007] O.J. No. 290, 2007 ONCA 62, this court stated, at para. 19:

> Section 2 of Regulation 283 is critically important in the timely delivery of benefits to victims of car accidents. The principle that underlies section 2 is that the first insurer to receive an application for benefits must pay now and dispute later. The rationale for this principle is obvious: persons injured in car accidents should receive statutorily mandated benefits promptly; they should not be prejudiced by being caught in the middle of a dispute between insurers over who should pay, or as in this case, by an insurer's claim that no policy of insurance existed at the time.

[19] Further, this court noted in Kingsway General Insurance Co. v. West Wawanosh Insurance Co. (2002), 2002 CanLII 14202 (ON CA), 58 O.R. (3d) 251, [2002] O.J. No. 528 (C.A.), at para. 10:

> The Regulation sets out in precise and specific terms a scheme for resolving disputes between insurers. Insurers are entitled to assume and rely upon the requirement for compliance with those provisions. Insurers subject to this Regulation are sophisticated litigants who deal with these disputes on a daily basis. The scheme applies to a specific type of dispute involving a limited number of parties who find themselves regularly involved in disputes with each other. In this context, it seems to me that clarity and certainty of application are of primary concern. Insurers need to make appropriate decisions with respect to conducting investigations, establishing reserves and maintaining records. Given this regulatory setting, there is little room for creative interpretations or carving out judicial exceptions designed to deal with the equities of particular cases.

[20] In my view, the application judge erred in concluding that the Chubb policy was a "motor vehicle liability policy". There was no element of that accidental death and dismemberment policy that insured against liability to others arising out of property damage or injury caused by an automobile or the use or operation thereof.

[21] The content of "motor vehicle liability policies" is highly regulated. These policies must provide for payment of SABs, and a statutory minimum amount of liability coverage. The Chubb policy has none of these characteristics.

[22] The rationale expressed in Kingsway General Insurance Co. v. West Wawanosh Insurance Co. would not be furthered by requiring insurers other than "motor vehicle liability insurer[s]" to respond to a claim for SABs. An insurer providing fire or life insurance or some group or accident or disability insurance not having the features of a "motor vehicle liability policy" may have no expertise in adjusting these claims, and should not be expected to respond to them where it has not issued a motor vehicle liability policy even if there is a nexus or relationship between the claimant and such insurer.

[23] The priority and dispute resolution regime established under O. Reg. 283/95 applies to "disputes as to which insurer is required to pay benefits under s. 268 of the Insurance Act" (emphasis added).

[24] Section 268 says every contract "evidenced by a motor vehicle liability policy" shall be deemed to provide for SABs. These benefits are not incorporated into insurance policies which are not motor vehicle liability policies and those insurers may have no expertise in adjusting these claims.

[25] All of the cases cited in which an analysis is made to ascertain whether there was a sufficient nexus between the claimant and the first insurer to review an application for SABs are premised on there having been an actual or purported motor vehicle liability policy in place at some time.

[26] For example, in Ontario (Minister of Finance) v. Royal & Sun Alliance Insurance Co. (January 2003, Arbitrator M. Guy Jones), the investigating officer was given a certificate of insurance issued by Royal which had expired four years earlier and covered a different vehicle. This was found to be a sufficient nexus to a motor vehicle liability insurer to justify an obligation to pay. In Ontario (Minister of Finance) v. Progressive Casualty Insurance Co. of Canada (2009), 95 O.R. (3d) 219, [2009] O.J. No. 1216, 2009 ONCA 258 and Lombard Canada Ltd. v. Royal & SunAlliance Insurance Co. (2008), 2007 CanLII 82792 (ON SC), 94 O.R. (3d) 62, [2008] O.J. No. 5239 (S.C.J.), motor vehicle liability policies expired two [page169] months before the accident. In these cases, the claimants' choice of recipient of the claim for SABs was not random or arbitrary and was connected to a "motor vehicle liability policy". Similarly, in Danilov v. Unifund Assurance Co., [2009] O.F.S.C.D. No. 69 (Bujold), there was a fraudulent pink motor vehicle liability policy slip purporting to evidence a "motor vehicle liability insurance policy".

[27] Ms. Singh's choice to send her application to Chubb was not random or arbitrary, but was based on the optional coverage provided to Wheels 4 Rent customers. Nonetheless, Chubb was not required to respond as it was not a "motor vehicle liability insurer", nor had it held out or represented to have ever provided such coverage at any relevant time.

[28] Both the plain meaning of s. 268 of the Insurance Act and O. Reg. 283/95, and the underlying policy behind the legislation, favour excluding non-motor vehicle liability insurers from the obligation to pay first and dispute later.

Disposition

[29] Accordingly, I would allow the appeal. I would set aside the order of the application judge of April 3, 2013, setting aside the decision of Arbitrator Stanley Tessis and awarding costs to Zurich, and substitute an order dismissing the application and awarding costs in favour of Chubb in the sum of $7,149.

[30] I would award Chubb the costs of this appeal fixed in the agreed upon sum of $12,000, inclusive of all disbursements and HST.

[31] JURIANSZ J.A. (dissenting): -- I have read the decision of Pardu J.A. and, with respect, I am unable to agree with either the reasons or the result. I would simply apply the established "nexus" test to determine whether Chubb, as the first insurance company to receive a completed application for benefits, was obliged by O. Reg. 283/95 (the "Regulation") to pay those benefits while disputing coverage.

[32] There is a mature and stable jurisprudence relating to the "nexus" test and the application of the Regulation. Both the courts and arbitrators of the Financial Services Commission of Ontario have applied the nexus test on numerous occasions to determine whether an insurance company

AKAZAKI J.

REASONS FOR DECISION

[1] The anomalous situation giving rise to this arbitration appeal arose from Zurich Insurance Company and Chubb Insurance Company of Canada both being the primary motor vehicle liability insurer of Sukhvinder Singh's Statutory Accident Benefits (SABS), even though one issued a policy and the other did not.

[2] Zurich insured the rental Ford Windstar minivan in the typical way, by selling a policy of fleet insurance to the rental company. After the rental company refused to provide insurance particulars to Ms. Singh's lawyer, she instructed her lawyer to submit the SABS application to Chubb, whom she mistakenly assumed was the automobile insurer. The Supreme Court of Canada ultimately held, after appeals from one arbitration decision, that this misdirected application made Chubb an insurer for the purpose of Ms. Singh's SABS claim.

[3] A second arbitrator then concluded that Chubb was solely liable to pay Ms. Singh's SABS benefits and that it must reimburse Zurich $998,368.99. Chubb appeals from that decision and contends that Zurich should have been found solely responsible.

[4] I have determined that the second arbitrator's decision was in error by omitting analysis of the interplay between the automobile insurance legislation and the insurance priority dispute regulation. However, the error does not lead to the reversal of fortunes sought by Chubb. Instead, correction of the error leads to the conclusion that the two insurers were equal in priority and must share liability 50/50. The exception to that equitable remedy is that each insurer must be responsible for the 2% compound interest sanction provided in the SABS regulation, in respected of delay intervals attributable to each insurer.

THE ISSUES

[5] The priority regime under s. 268 of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. I.8, is designed to pick one insurer among several that may have issued a motor vehicle liability policy to various parties injured in a traffic accident. It makes sure that no one is left without recourse to a minimum level of insurance. If there is no automobile insurance, the state-funded Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Fund appears at the bottom of the list as the insurer of last resort. Were it not for the rental company's misdirection, Zurich would have been the priority insurer and Chubb would never have been involved.

[6] The regulation for resolving priority, O. Reg. 283/95, allows the injured party to apply for benefits from any of the available insurers and to expect adjustment and payment of benefits immediately. The regulation then imposes the burden on the chosen insurer to notify another insurer within 90 days that the other insurer is higher in priority and therefore obligated to assume coverage. In the absence of grounds to extend that period, the chosen insurer cannot deny its liability to the claimant after it expires. By litigating instead of putting Zurich on notice, Chubb, too became a priority insurer on a permanent basis. Apart from these features, O. Reg. 283/95 is really intended to provide for private arbitration and to keep priority disputes out of the courts.

[7] The second arbitrator sanctioned Chubb for its initial refusal to accept the claim by treating it as the priority insurer instead of Zurich. The fact that Chubb ended up shouldering an insurance claim for which Zurich received the premium may seem intuitively wrong. However, the path to the result on appeal requires following several analytical steps:

1. Origin of Claim and Outcome of the First Arbitration and Appeals

2. Second Arbitral Award

3. Grounds of Appeal and Standard of Review

4. Interaction of O. Reg. 283/95 and s. 268 of the Insurance Act

5. Sanction for Breach of O. Reg. 283/95

ORIGIN OF CLAIM AND OUTCOME OF THE FIRST ARBITRATION AND APPEALS

[8] The first arbitration, after all three appeals, resulted in a determination that there was a sufficient nexus between the claim for accident benefits and Chubb to make it an 'insurer' for the responsibility to pay accident benefits under s. 2 of Reg. 283/95 and s. 268 of the Insurance Act, even though it did not insure the vehicle rented by the driver. The rationale for inserting of Chubb into a regime for requiring an automobile insurer to pay benefits pending a priority dispute will have a bearing on the outcome of the appeal, because the provisional first-insurer rule under the regulation and the priority regime under the statute operate differently.

[9] The driver, Ms. Singh, was involved in a single-vehicle accident on September 23, 2006. She returned the damaged rental car on September 25 to Wheels 4 Rent. The rental company tried several times to contact her, without success. The branch manager submitted a "records only" claim for reporting purposes, because the company's automobile policy with Zurich did not provide collision coverage. He submitted that report to McLarens, the insurance adjusting company administering the fleet coverage on behalf of Zurich. Wheels 4 Rent considered the matter closed and wrote off the damage.

[10] Several weeks later, Ms. Singh started experiencing upper body pain and decided to pursue a SABS claim. To do this, her lawyer needed to know the name of the insurance carrier and policy number. The client's recollection was that the rental agency offered coverage with Chubb. She did not know that this was only a policy of optional accidental death and dismemberment insurance which she had not purchased. Her lawyer, Murray Tkatch, telephoned Wheels 4 Rent to obtain the insurance particulars. After receiving no response, he sent a letter on November 6, 2006, to Gerry Weintraub at Wheels 4 Rent's corporate headquarters. On November 7, Ernest Weintraub, the president of the company, wrote back that it was not required to release the requested information because it was unaware of any accident. On November 9, 2006, Mr. Tkatch submitted an already-prepared OCF-1 Application for Accident Benefits to Chubb. The covering letter specifically stated that he was submitting the claim to Chubb because the rental company refused to provide information about the insurer. Chubb refused to accept the claim because it did not insure the automobile. It also failed to assist the claimant by contacting the insurance broker who also placed the Zurich fleet automobile insurance. This turned out to be a costly mistake.

[11] Chubb later argued that the November 7 letter amounted to a wrongful deflection of the accident benefits claim away from Zurich, because Mr. Weintraub was a sophisticated insured. As the second arbitrator found, the refusal to provide the insurance particulars amounted to the rental agency's violation of s. 269 of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. I.8. However, the arbitrator also declined to find that this amounted to a deflection of the SABS claim by Zurich, since Zurich did not find out about the claim until June 3, 2008. This came about after Chubb refused to accept Ms. Singh's claim and after further inquiries by Mr. Tkatch. Had Mr. Weintraub provided the insurance information instead of refusing to provide it, there is no doubt that Ms. Singh's lawyer would have submitted the OCF-1 to Zurich instead of Chubb.

[12] The other side of the deflection argument was that, as the second arbitrator found, Chubb could easily have ascertained that Zurich was the automobile insurer. Had Chubb done so, it could have set up an undisputable redirection of the claim to the proper insurer within the 90-day period under s. 3 of O. Reg. 283/95. Counsel for Chubb argued that, in 2006, the legal landscape was different than in 2015, after the Supreme Court of Canada held that Chubb ought to have responded to the SABS claim immediately on a 'pay first and dispute later' basis. I agree that this court should be cautious about superimposing current conduct expectations on decade-old circumstances. Nor does this court possess the jurisdiction to revisit the Supreme Court decision that determined the legal relations of the parties in 2006.

[13] The lengthy trajectory to that 2015 decision and its outcome can be summarized very briefly. After being notified of the claim, Zurich began to adjust and pay the claim on a without-prejudice basis in 2009. This halted the mediation-arbitration proceedings pending before the Financial Services Commission of Ontario (FSCO), the adjudicative body at the time. Zurich started an arbitration with Chubb under s. 7 of O. Reg. 283/95 under the Insurance Act. The issues on the arbitration were threefold:

1. Whether Chubb was an 'insurer' for the purposes of s. 268 of the Insurance Act and O. Reg. 283/95;

2. if Chubb was an 'insurer' for such purposes, whether it complied with O. Reg. 283/95; and

3. the amounts, if any, was Chubb responsible for indemnifying Zurich.

[14] The first arbitrator held that Chubb was not an 'insurer' because there was no nexus between it and the SABS claim. On appeal to this court, Goldstein J. set aside the arbitral award to Chubb on the basis that the claim submission to Chubb, albeit remote, was not arbitrary: 2012 ONSC 6363. Chubb appealed successfully to the Court of Appeal, subject to the dissenting opinion of Juriansz J.A.: 2014 ONCA 400. The Supreme Court then restored Goldstein J.'s decision, by adopting that dissent: 2015 SCC 19.

[15] In a nutshell, Ms. Singh's vague recollection about seeing Chubb's name at the rental office was sufficiently non-arbitrary to require Chubb to step into the shoes of the "first insurer" for the purposes of s. 2(1) of the regulation:

> 2.(1) The first insurer that receives a completed application for benefits is responsible for paying benefits to an insured person pending the resolution of any dispute as to which insurer is required to pay benefits under section 268 of the Act. O. Reg. 283/95, s. 2.

[16] As described in the prevailing appellate decisions, the purpose of this regulation was to prevent SABS claims, including vital treatments and income benefits, from being delayed while insurers fought over priority under s. 268(2) of the Insurance Act. In adopting para. 34 of Juriansz J.A.'s dissent, the Supreme Court also accepted that there would have been no nexus if Chubb did not provide automobile insurance in Ontario. Because it did write such policies, it qualified as an 'insurer' who first received the OCF-1, albeit mistakenly.

[17] After six years, the above process answered question #1 of the arbitration agreement by restoring para. 35 of Goldstein J.'s decision:

> The Application is allowed and the Arbitrator's decision is set aside. The matter is remitted back to the Arbitrator to determine the remaining issues on the priority dispute arbitration.

[18] Chubb then took over the adjustment of the claim from Zurich. The two insurers proceeded to the arbitration of the remaining two issues.

SECOND ARBITRAL AWARD

[19] The arbitration could not continue with the original arbitrator, due to his passing. The insurers could not agree on an arbitrator. On May 16, 2018, Dow J. appointed the Hon. Douglas Cunningham as the arbitrator for the remaining issues in dispute: 2018 ONSC 1907. Since the first arbitrator's decision is no longer a factor on this appeal, I will refer to the second one, Mr. Cunningham, henceforth as "the arbitrator."

[20] On August 5, 2022, the arbitrator awarded Zurich $998,368.99, plus prejudgment interest and costs, to be paid by Chubb. In answering the third question in the arbitration, he appears to have concluded that Chubb bore sole liability for the SABS claim by also finding against Chubb on the second question, viz. that it breached O. Reg. 283/95.

[21] The first nineteen paragraphs of the award set out the chronology of events and steps up to the 2015 Supreme Court ruling. At para. 20, he stated:

> The Supreme Court having determined a nexus existed between Chubb and Ms. Singh, the issue squarely before me is to determine which insurer is liable to pay statutory accident benefits to Ms. Singh as the priority insurer.

[22] I pause to observe that this question was not before the arbitrator. Neither of the second and third questions in the arbitration agreement required him to assign priority in this way.

[23] In paras. 21-22, he went on to describe the obligation of the first insurer recipient of an OCF-1 form to assume responsibility to adjust and pay appropriate accident benefits, as well as the 90-day period, subject to extension in certain circumstances, to dispute its obligation by providing notice to every insurer who it claims is required to pay under s. 268 of the Insurance Act. (The arbitrator incorrectly cited the provisions applicable to accidents after 2010, but nothing turns on this because the operative wording is similar.)

[24] In paras. 23 to 43 of the award, the arbitrator considered whether Zurich could have been deemed to have received a completed OCF-1 application in November 2006. This analysis included inferences that could have been drawn from various communications and reports among Ms. Singh's lawyer, the rental company's representatives, and the insurance adjuster for Zurich. He considered the company's breach of s. 269 in failing to provide insurance particulars to the lawyer, as well as the question whether the company and the adjuster had reason to believe that Ms. Singh intended to file a SABS claim with Zurich. Thus, at para. 43, the arbitrator found that "nothing that could be considered an accident benefits claim ever made its way to Zurich until sometime after June 3, 2008," after the lawyer discovered that Zurich was the actual automobile insurer. He found, in paras. 44-49, that Chubb could easily have identified Zurich at the outset and avoided the whole problem, instead of waiting for 18 months.

[25] The arbitrator then concluded, in paras. 50-62, that Chubb was the first recipient of the OCF-1 and should have begun investigating, adjusting, and paying benefits. It was then incumbent on Chubb to try to discover who the real automobile insurer was and to put that insurer on notice. He found, at para. 57, that Ms. Singh, who had pre-existing mental health issues, deteriorated dramatically during the period of delay.

[26] Counsel for Chubb urged at the appeal hearing that the implication that Chubb was responsible for the delay was contrary to his earlier finding, at para. 42, that the claimant's condition only began to deteriorate in 2009. Chubb further argued that if such deterioration could be due to delay in treatment or payments, it occurred after Zurich's without-prejudice undertaking to take over the claim in 2009.

[27] While I appreciate the apparent contradiction between paras. 42 and 57 on this point, the arbitrator's reasons could well have meant to explain that the 2006-09 period without treatment could have led to the deterioration after 2009. The evidence behind the curtain consisted of information from the claim and not any forensic etiology of the course of Ms. Singh's impairments. I take the arbitrator's commentary in these paragraphs to mean only that if Chubb had responded properly to the claim in 2006 and handed over responsibility to Zurich within 90 days, Ms. Singh would have had the full benefit of the Ontario SABS benefit scheme for whatever chance she had to avoid deterioration of her pre-existing condition. I did not read them as attributing cause and effect in the manner of a tort claim. In this light, there was no real contradiction between the paragraphs.

[28] Starting at para. 63, the arbitrator explored "the impact of Chubb failing to give notice within 90 days, let alone its failure to investigate at all … given Zurich's argument that Chubb ought to be entirely responsible for the payment of Ms. Singh's accident benefits." Chubb's argument was that it could not be the priority insurer because Zurich was the actual motor vehicle insurer.

[29] The arbitrator considered the Court of Appeal's decisions in Kingsway General Insurance Company v. Ontario, 2007 ONCA 62, as well as Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company v. Lombard Canada, 2010 ONCA 383, as requiring the court to sanction an insurer for having failed to accept a claim at least provisionally under s. 2 of O. Reg. 283/95. He also explored the consequences of such an insurer's failure to give notice to other insurer(s) within 90 days under s. 3. The arbitrator also observed that the Court of Appeal considered the breach of s. 2 to be serious but not automatically leading to permanent liability for the claim.

[30] He then considered Kingsway General Insurance Co. v. West Wawanosh Insurance Co., 2002 CanLII 14202, 58 O.R. (3d) 251, in which the Court of Appeal considered whether the first-recipient insurer gave notice under s. 3 under O. Reg. 283/95 or whether the 90-day period should be extended.

[31] Finally, the arbitrator cited para. 62 from the decision of Strathy J. (as he then was) in Lombard Canada Ltd. v. Royal & SunAlliance Insurance Co. (2008), 2007 CanLII 82792 (ON SC), 94 O.R. (3d) 62 (Ont. S.C.J.). For the sake of completeness, I add and italicize the final two sentences omitted from para. 82 of the award:

> 62 In my view, there is much to be said for an inflexible rule that an insurer who fails to pay benefits and fails to put other insurers on notice on receipt of an application, with which there is some nexus, should be found permanently responsible for the claimant's benefits. This promotes compliance with the statutory scheme. It is no more inequitable than fixing permanent responsibility on the first insurer, who initially pays the claim but fails to give timely notice to the other insurer under subsection 3(2). It is not necessary, in this case, to decide whether the rule should be inflexible. It is sufficient to say that I agree with the Arbitrator's decision on the facts of this particular case.

[32] The arbitrator distilled these decisions as follows, before concluding that Chubb, not Zurich, was liable to pay Ms. Singh's benefits as the priority insurer:

> 83. One sees a steady trajectory in the reasoning from Sharpe JA in West Wawanosh to Laskin JA in Kingsway to Sharpe J [sic] in Lombard. For there not to be consequences would be to defeat the legislation's public policy: pay now and dispute later. A policy that ensures the provision of accident benefits in a timely manner such that claimants do not end up in the middle of disputes between insurers. As Sharpe JA noted in West Wawanosh: "Insurers subject to this regulation are sophisticated litigants who deal with these disputes on a daily basis." And those comments were made over 20 years ago.

GROUNDS OF APPEAL AND STANDARD OF REVIEW

[33] There was no dispute over the appellate standard of review in a general sense.

[34] Pursuant to s. 7 of O. Reg 283/95, the arbitration was to be conducted pursuant to the Arbitration Act, 1991, S.O. 1991, c. 17 (Arbitration Act). The jurisdiction to hear the appeal from an arbitration lies to this court under s. 45 of the Arbitration Act. The standard of review under the arbitration agreement in this case was already determined by Goldstein J. in the appeal from the first arbitration: Zurich Insurance v. Chubb Insurance, 2012 ONSC 6363, at para. 8:

> The arbitration agreement between the parties provides for an appeal to a judge of the Superior Court of Justice on a question of law or a question of mixed fact and law. The arbitration agreement itself sets out that the standard of review on a question of law is correctness. On a question of mixed fact and law, the standard of review is reasonableness.

[36] The notice of appeal cited numerous grounds, including various grounds embedded in the prayer for relief. These included assertions that the arbitrator inflexibly sanctioned Chubb by deeming it the sole insurer when a flexible approach was required, insufficiency of reasons, disregard for the reality that it was Zurich's dispute and not Chubb's, incorrect interpretation of the applicable legal standards, and failing to provide procedural fairness. I will not consider various grounds characterized as failures to consider evidence, because the arbitral agreement provided no appeal on questions of fact alone.

[37] The notice of appeal did not expressly state the arbitrator's recasting of the two remaining questions in the arbitration, although this has to be an integral element of considering grounds such as the employment of an inflexible legal test or the lapse in procedural fairness. The two questions deal with the legal consequences of the determination in the first arbitration that Chubb was an insurer for the purposes of the statute and the regulation.

[38] Appellate review of the second arbitral award therefore needs to start with the arbitrator's appreciation of the interaction of the statute and the regulation before concluding that Chubb was in breach and imposing the sanction for that breach. This statutory interpretation exercise, obviously an issue to be settled on a correctness standard of appellate review, requires the appellate court to begin with the conclusion it would have made in the lower tribunal's place: Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Vavilov, 2019 SCC 65 (CanLII), [2019] 4 S.C.R. 653, at para. 15.

[39] The appellate review of the decision to impose on Chubb sole responsibility as if it were the priority insurer under s. 268 is a question of mixed fact and law because it requires application of the appropriate legal framework on the facts. The sanction, framed as an indemnity claimed by Zurich in the third question in the arbitration, can therefore save the arbitral award even if this court finds an error of statutory interpretation on the correctness standard, if the decision comes within a range of reasonable outcomes when the correct law is applied to the facts. The reasonableness standard for questions of mixed fact and law requires the appellate court to focus on the actual decision under review and a tracing of the decision maker's reasoning without fatal flaws in the overarching logic, including "analysis, inference and judgment" (Vavilov, para. 102).

(a) Positions of the Parties

[40] Chubb's principal position on the appeal was that Zurich improperly deflected the whole claim to Chubb. Had the rental company, as a sophisticated insured, responded to Ms. Singh's lawyer properly, Zurich would have had to respond as the s. 268 priority insurer. Insofar as Chubb became liable to Ms. Singh under s. 2 of the regulation, Chubb's position was that s. 2 did not impose permanent liability on Chubb and the arbitrator failed to follow the court precedents requiring a flexible approach.

[41] The arbitrator rightly analyzed Chubb's point on deflection to have been a counterfactual argument and not as grounds for finding that the rental company's misconduct should attract liability on Zurich's part. Zurich agreed with that finding and contended that the arbitrator was correct in concluding that Chubb became the sole insurer on the claim. Zurich maintained that Chubb's failure to dispute priority within the 90 days disentitled Chubb from taking the position that Zurich should be liable for the claim.

[42] In staking out their respective positions, the parties forcefully pointed the finger at the other based on Zurich's liability under the statute and Chubb's under the regulation. I could see how they may have driven the arbitrator into error by requiring him to choose between such opposed views when, in plain sight, the solution was that they were both equally on the hook for the claim by operation of the separate legislative provisions.

(b) Interpreting O. Reg. 283/95 in the Context of s. 268 of the Insurance Act [43] The overarching logic of the arbitrator's award started with the Supreme Court's ruling that there was a sufficient nexus between Ms. Singh and Chubb that it was an insurer for the purposes of s. 268 of the Insurance Act and O. Reg. 283/95 and concluded by imposing as a sanction that Chubb be the priority insurer solely liable for the payment of the SABS benefits. He explained how Chubb's breach of ss. 2 and 3 of O. Reg. 283/95 made it sanctionable and incapable of disputing its obligation to pay benefits. However, his award did not reveal consideration of the effect of deeming Chubb an automobile insurer for the purposes of s. 268. The award referred to s. 268 several times without examining how it settled the insurers' competing positions. In the absence of this statutory analysis, the appellate court is required to start afresh.

[44] O. Reg. 283/95 is a regulation made under the Insurance Act. The modern approach to interpretation requires the application of two principles. First, the regulation has to be read in the context of the enabling act as a whole. Second, because regulations are submitted to industry consultations and amendments before proclamation, they tend to reflect important policy choices "to ensure order and stability in regulated industries." See: Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 26 (CanLII), [2005] 1 SCR 533, at paras. 99-100. With these two interpretive principles in mind, I turn first to s. 1 of the regulation:

> 1. All disputes as to which insurer is required to pay benefits under section 268 of the Act shall be settled in accordance with this Regulation. O. Reg. 283/95, s. 1.

[45] In particular, s. 268(2) of the Insurance Act provides a hierarchy of insurers whose policies could be available for a claim. The insurers are ranked based on contractual proximity to the insured person. Thus, the priority insurer for no-fault benefits is one's own insurance carrier, followed by the insurer of the automobile without regard to insured status, followed by the insurer of any other automobile involved, followed by the provincial fund as the insurer of last recourse. The clear intent is to make sure no one is left without coverage and to distribute underwriting risk based on closeness to the claimant, notably the claimant's occupancy of the vehicle in which she suffered the injury:

> Liability to pay
> (2) The following rules apply for determining who is liable to pay statutory accident benefits:
>
> 1. In respect of an occupant of an automobile,
>
> i. the occupant has recourse against the insurer of an automobile in respect of which the occupant is an insured,
> ii. if recovery is unavailable under subparagraph i, the occupant has recourse against the insurer of the automobile in which he or she was an occupant,
>
> iii. if recovery is unavailable under subparagraph i or ii, the occupant has recourse against the insurer of any other automobile involved in the incident from which the entitlement to statutory accident benefits arose,
>
> iv. if recovery is unavailable under subparagraph i, ii or iii, the occupant has recourse against the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Fund.
>
> Liability
> (3) An insurer against whom a person has recourse for the payment of statutory accident benefits is liable to pay the benefits. R.S.O. 1990, c. I.8, s. 268 (3); 1993, c. 10, s. 1.

[46] These subsections first limit the claimant's recourse to the insurer with the highest ranking on the priority list and then affix liability on that insurer.

[47] There are situations where an injured party might have recourse against more than one insurer of equal priority. For example, a driver of a company car could be insured by the employer's insurance and also by one's personal automobile insurer. In such instances, the claimant is entitled to choose the insurer:

> (4) If, under subparagraph i or iii of paragraph 1 or subparagraph i or iii of paragraph 2 of subsection (2), a person has recourse against more than one insurer for the payment of statutory accident benefits, the person, in his or her absolute discretion, may decide the insurer from which he or she will claim the benefits. R.S.O. 1990, c. I.8, s. 268 (4); 1993, c. 10, s. 1.

[48] Priority most frequently becomes an issue when the injured party is not an operator of the involved vehicle and does not own a vehicle. For example, a pedestrian struck by another's vehicle after parking his or her car will have recourse to the insurer of the parked car and not that of the driver of the vehicle causing the collision. But another pedestrian who does not own a vehicle would have recourse against the insurer of the vehicle that struck him or her. In these typical scenarios, the list in s. 268(2) imposes priority only because it does not allow the claimant to apply for benefits from an insurer lower in the list. In this case, it was not disputed that Zurich was the priority insurer because Ms. Singh did not have her own car insurance and she was injured while driving the rental agency's vehicle. If it had been a two-vehicle collision, she did not have recourse against the insurer of the other vehicle.

[49] The priority rules under the Insurance Act have supplanted the doctrine of equitable contribution otherwise applicable to duplicate insurance. In instances of multiple insurers of equal priority, the claimant's election determines priority under s. 268(2), provided the election is informed one, in the sense that the claimant is aware of multiple policies and the right to choose: Jevco Insurance Co. v. Pilot Insurance Co., 2003 CanLII 5265 (ON SC), at para. 7, and Intact Insurance v. Economical Mutual, 2021 ONSC 7750, at para. 70-75.

[50] In this case, however, there was no informed election. At paras. 38-40 of his award, the arbitrator found that the claimant's lawyer submitted her OCF-1 to Chubb because of the rental company's breach of s. 269 in refusing to provide insurance particulars. Indeed, the rental company's response failed to disabuse Mr. Tkatch of the stated belief that Chubb was the insurer. There was no decision, in the sense of the claimant's discretion under s. 268(4).

[51] The first arbitration, after appeals, concluded with the determination that Chubb was an insurer for the purposes of s. 268 and the regulation. The entry point for that "nexus" determination was s. 2 of O. Reg. 283/95:

> 2. (1) The first insurer that receives a completed application for benefits is responsible for paying benefits to an insured person pending the resolution of any dispute as to which insurer is required to pay benefits under section 268 of the Act. O. Reg. 283/95, s. 2.
> (2) Subsection (1) applies in respect of benefits that may be payable as a result of an accident that occurs before September 1, 2010. O. Reg. 38/10, s. 2.

[52] The Supreme Court adopted Juriansz J.A.'s "nexus" analysis to answer the first question in the arbitration in the affirmative. In the second arbitration, the arbitrator made a factual finding that Chubb was the "first insurer" to receive a completed application. The unassailable reasoning was that Chubb did receive such an application in November 2006, and Zurich did not. He did not accept Chubb's assertion that Zurich "deflected" the claim to Chubb, because Zurich itself had no knowledge of it until months later. I need not consider that deflection argument, repeated on appeal, except that the rental company's violation of s. 269, although having no bearing on Zurich, was part of the factual matrix of the case.

[53] As a matter of legislative and regulatory purpose, the arbitrator correctly cited the public policy decision to require an automobile insurer to start a claim under s. 2 even if the priority insurer were another insurer. This relieved the claimant from having to wait, sometimes for months, while insurers fought over priority. The provisional liability of the "first insurer" under s. 2 of the regulation is subject to the priority dispute under s. 268. That means the "first insurer" wording does not mean that it is a priority insurer. To consider the wording as importing any form of priority under s. 268 defies the logic of the interaction between the regulation and the statute. It is s. 268, and s. 268 alone, that determines priority.

[54] I observe, in passing, that the sanctions described in the case law cited by the arbitrator, including those at the Court of Appeal, are judge-made sanctions. As a matter of principle, there is no difference between an insurer's failure to pay under s. 2 and a failure under any provision of the SABS, which was in this case O. Reg. 403/96. Under that pre-2010 regime, the main disincentive for an insurer to delay adjustment and payment of benefits was compound interest of 2% per month under s. 46. Given that the regulation defined the penalty for an insurer's breach of the obligation to pay, the "sanction" described in the case law seems very close to the "nominate tort of statutory breach" rejected by the Supreme Court in The Queen (Can.) v. Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, 1983 CanLII 21 (SCC), [1983] 1 SCR 205, at 225. Since the Court of Appeal decisions are more directly on point, I am obliged to follow them and leave it to these or other parties to test the theory at a higher level of court than mine. That said, in the circumstances of this case, the 2% provision should be a factor in imposing on the appropriate insurer the sanction that was, in fact, codified by regulation.

[55] Section 2 of the regulation therefore imposes a clear obligation on the first insurer to receive a completed application for SABS benefits to start adjusting and paying the claim, "pending the resolution of any dispute as to which insurer is required to pay benefits under section 268 of the Act." Before returning to s. 268, I refer to s. 3(1), which reads:

> 3. (1) No insurer may dispute its obligation to pay benefits under section 268 of the Act unless it gives written notice within 90 days of receipt of a completed application for benefits to every insurer who it claims is required to pay under that section. O. Reg. 283/95, s. 3 (1).

[56] I heard Chubb's extensive argument that Zurich deflected the claim and deprived Chubb of the opportunity to give notice within the 90-day period. The arbitrator correctly held, and I have no appellate jurisdiction to overturn, that Chubb made no investigation to determine the actual automobile insurer, as required under clause 3(2)(b), to justify an extension of the 90-day period. Both Chubb's death and dismemberment policy and Zurich's automobile policy were brokered by the same insurance broker. Instead of denying the claim, it ought to have started the claim and inquired with the broker about the automobile insurance carrier. There is no basis to disturb the arbitrator's findings that Chubb was the first recipient of the OCF-1 application and that it allowed the 90-day period to lapse.

[57] The statutory estoppel in s. 3 of the regulation precludes an insurer from starting a dispute of the obligation to pay benefits under s. 268 of the Insurance Act. The issue of whether the insurer can have the 90 days extended can be part of an arbitration under s. 7. Since the purpose of the regulation is to govern disputes between insurers under s. 268 of the statute, the plain reading of s. 3 is to preclude an insurer whose obligation a claimant has triggered by submitting a claim, perhaps to the wrong insurer in priority, under s. 2, from starting a priority dispute. Priority is the only issue among insurers under s. 268. In most instances, s. 268 operates mechanically and there should be no dispute as such.

[58] To complete the dispute-resolution framework, s. 10 of the regulation provides for insurers notified under s. 3 to notify other insurers, as contemplated in multi-vehicle or multi-policy situations (including insurers of equal priority, per italics added):

> 10. (1) If an insurer who receives notice under section 3 disputes its obligation to pay benefits on the basis that other insurers, excluding the insurer giving notice, have equal or higher priority under section 268 of the Act, it shall give notice to the other insurers. O. Reg. 283/95, s. 10 (1).

[59] The above provisions in O. Reg. 283/95 therefore provide a logical framework for orderly resolution of priority disputes, including the preclusion of disputes, contesting the first insurer's obligation to pay benefits under s. 268. Section 268, however, provides for liability based on the priority of insurers and, among insurers of the same priority, a choice by the claimant to choose. Beyond that claimant's choice, there is no statutory provision picking the responsible insurer for the purpose of adjusting and paying the claim. The estoppel under s. 3 of the regulation precludes a dispute by the "first insurer" of "its obligation." Usually, that means that it is the priority insurer and that no other insurer is ahead of it.

[60] The use of the word "equal" in s. 10 is also significant because it creates an estoppel by insurers further down the notice chain. However, s. 3 does not contemplate a notice by the s. 2 "first insurer" to an insurer of equal priority, and the only dispute precluded by a failure to give notice under s. 3 is the first insurer's obligation.

(c) The Law of Duplicate or Overlapping Insurance

[61] It is a fundamental principle of insurance law that, in cases of overlapping or duplicate coverage for the same risk, the insured may recover only the value of the actual loss but has the absolute right to select the insurer from whom to seek recovery. The selected insurer has a right to obtain equitable contribution pro rata from the other insurer(s): Family Insurance Corp. v. Lombard Canada Ltd., 2002 SCC 48 (CanLII), [2002] 2 S.C.R. 695, at para. 14. I need not consider whether the "choice of insurer" provisions in s. 268, such as s. 268(4), preclude a claim for equitable contribution based on that principle, as the Jevco and Intact decisions appear to have held by settling priority based on the informed choice made by the claimant.

[62] Nevertheless, in observing that the "choice of insurer" provisions only codify, for the purpose of clarity, the equitable doctrine that the insured always has the choice between insurers of the same risk, the legislation is silent as to what is to happen where there are two or more insurers at the same level of priority, where there has been no informed choice. Indeed, the issue here must be determined against the backdrop, not of deflection by Zurich, but of the mistaken belief of the claimant that Chubb was the automobile insurer.

[63] Reading the regulation in the context of s. 268 of the statute, it is evident that it was intended to provide a framework for allowing claimants to submit applications for SABS benefits while leaving automobile insurers to dispute priority. By inserting into this regime an insurer who did not provide automobile insurance to any of the involved parties or vehicles, the effect of the Supreme Court's decision was to insert Chubb into priority position with Zurich. That was the effect of the answer to the first question in the arbitration.

(d) Equal Priority in this Case

[64] The consequences of Chubb's breaches of ss. 2 and 3 of the regulation must follow the regulation and the statute. The immediate consequence was that Chubb had an obligation to pay benefits as the first insurer to receive the OCF-1. The second consequence, 90 days later after it performed no investigation of the proper recipient, was that it precluded itself from disputing its obligation to pay the benefits. I agree with Chubb's submission that, according to the case law, breach of s. 2 does not result in an insurer being required to pay benefits to the claimant permanently. The failure to avail itself of s. 3 does. Chubb's permanent liability to pay benefits was a self-inflicted consequence of its failure to adhere to the requirements of both s. 2 and s. 3. This combination of provisions in the regulation transformed Chubb's provisional liability to Ms. Singh into a permanent one.

[65] This does not end the interpretation of the regulation and the statute. If Chubb's failure to follow the regulation made it Ms. Singh's insurer, the statute did not relieve Zurich of its responsibility under s. 268(3) and provided no mechanism for it to be relieved itself of that obligation. Because of the physical impossibility of an injured claimant to have been the occupant of more than one vehicle in a traffic accident, ordinarily an insurer in Zurich's position would stand alone as priority insurer. Chubb, however, inserted itself into that priority ranking alongside Zurich, by operation of ss. 2 and 3 of the regulation.

[66] In Allstate Insurance Company of Canada v. Progressive Casualty Insurance Company of Canada, 2002 ONFSCDRS 109, the FSCO appellate tribunal applied the equitable contribution doctrine between SABS insurers of equal priority where there were overlapping injury claims against separate insurers arising from two accidents. The case on appeal here is one of insurers of equal priority, Zurich as the actual insurer in priority and Chubb as the insurer placed in that position out of happenstance. In the absence of a statutory provision allowing Zurich to be lowered in priority, the principles applicable to duplicate or overlapping insurance apply.

(e) Conclusion re Statutory Interpretation and Equal Priority

[67] Insofar as the arbitral award did not perform the exercise in statutory interpretation leading to this conclusion, or to any extent approximating it, the arbitrator erred by failing to provide adequate reasons demonstrating that he fully considered the interaction of O. Reg. 283/95 and s. 268 of the Insurance Act. When one performs that analysis, it is clear that the unusual facts of this case created two permanent insurers on the claim of equal priority. There was no provision in the legislation to put Chubb ahead of Zurich, or vice versa.

(a) Positions of the Parties

[68] Chubb's position was that the sanction the arbitrator imposed was inflexible and wholly out of proportion with its failure to administer the claim in the opening period. Moreover, the claimant's condition deteriorated starting from the time Zurich assumed handling of the claim and failed to provide benefits for a considerable period.

[69] Zurich argued that Chubb's initial position lasted until the Supreme court ultimately ruled against Chubb on the threshold issue of its status as 'insurer' for the claim. It was Chubb whose intransigence caused the claimant's deterioration and prejudiced Zurich's ability to mitigate the harm by providing benefits earlier.

(b) Applicable Law

[70] Neither of the parties' positions directly addressed the legal basis for the sanction within an area of law whose statutory and regulatory provisions are a complete code and are frequently updated to meet public policy objectives balancing the rights of injured parties and insurers.

[71] As I stated earlier, I am bound to follow the Court of Appeal guidance regarding the imposition of a sanction on an insurer failing to accept a claim under s. 2 of the regulation. In this appeal from the arbitrator, one must question the logic of punishing Chubb by requiring it to replace Zurich. That sanction benefits Zurich but offers no succour to the injured party, whose benefits claim was delayed in the process. If she availed herself of the 2% monthly compound interest, Chubb should be responsible for any portion of her SABS settlement attributable to that regulatory sanction for the period up to Zurich's commencement of payments. That not only seems to be the most just allocation of sanction in the case, but it also aligns with the legislative sanction for insurer non-payment in all cases.

[72] In the absence of a codified sanction for Chubb's breaches of the regulation, the case law providing sanctions for an insurer's breach of s. 2 provides no definitive guidance in an instance where the insurer in breach is only a deemed insurer and where the obvious primary insurer under s. 268 is standing in the wings. In light of this, can the arbitrator's sanction be considered unreasonable?

(c) Does this Case call for a Sanction or Legal Conclusion?

[73] Considering Strathy J.'s decision in Lombard Canada Ltd. v. Royal & SunAlliance Insurance Co., quoted by the arbitrator and reproduced above, the sanction against Chubb is the imposition of permanent liability is equivalent to the legal consequence of its having failed to give notice to Zurich under s. 3 of the regulation. It is not a sanction but, rather, a logical conclusion for failing to give notice.

[74] Chubb's failure to avail itself of s. 3 was a self-inflicted prejudice and had nothing to do with the harm and inconvenience to the claimant caused by its refusal to accept the claim under s. 2, apart from a matter of temporal sequence. Given that the purpose of s. 2 was to prevent priority disputes among insurers from holding up claims, the drafters of the regulation clearly intended a logical separation.

[75] By imposing sole liability on Chubb, contrary to the imposition of liability on Zurich by s. 268(3) of the Insurance Act, the arbitrator relieved Zurich of its obligation without grounds to do so. In this regard, the sanction he imposed on Chubb fell beyond the range of reasonable legal outcome. The jurisprudence cited by the arbitrator should be distinguished because they dealt with the sanctions or loss of rights of an insurer to assert a priority dispute. As between Chubb and Zurich in this case, their dispute was mischaracterized by the arbitrator as an insurance priority dispute. The proof of this is that there is no means of determining priority between them qua issuers of motor vehicle liability policies under s. 268. Chubb's equal priority status should not be considered a sanction for breach of s. 2. Rather, that status is a legal conclusion resulting from its failure under s. 3 to dispute responsibility to the claimant.

(d) Conclusion regarding the Sanction

[76] The arbitrator's sanction must therefore be set aside and replaced with one dividing the SABS obligation equally between the insurers, except for any 2% interest payments attributable to insurer delay. Those interest payments must be paid by the insurer in respect of the delay occasioned during their respective responsibilities for handling the claim. Up until Zurich assumed handling of the claim, the delay is to be pinned on Chubb.

CONCLUSION

[77] I set aside the arbitrator's award and impose on the insurers an equal obligation to pay for Ms. Singh's SABS claim, apart from any 2% interest incorporated into the settlement with Ms. Singh. The compound interest is the only sanction applicable to this case that has a basis in the SABS legal framework. Since I was not provided the particulars of the payments made to date, including the settlement of the claim, I will leave it to counsel for the parties to calculate and adjust the financial consequences of my decision. They may contact me through my judicial assistant, at Melissa.Issa@ontario.ca, if they are unable to agree on the accounting.

[78] The amount of costs has been set by agreement in the amount of $15,000. I find that the overall result was divided because Chubb sought a complete reversal of the arbitral award including reimbursement of the amounts it paid to Ms. Singh after 2015. For that reason, I also hold that there be no costs of the appeal or of the arbitration below.

Bankruptcy and insolvency -- Proof of claim -- Creditor not having unqualified right on application pursuant to s. 135(5) of Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act to challenge validity of judgment debt based on decision of court of competent jurisdiction if court considered merits of claim in granting judgment -- Creditors of bankrupt moving for order under s. 135(5) challenging proof of claim filed by judgment debtor based on Singapore judgment -- Issues of mitigation and set-off raised by creditors having been finally determined in Singapore proceedings -- Creditors being privies of bankrupt -- Doctrine of res judicata applying -- Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, s. 135(5).

EnerNorth and Oakwell were parties to a joint venture agreement concerning the construction and operation of two power plants in India. They incorporated the Project Company to finance, construct and operate the Project. Disputes arose between EnerNorth and Oakwell which were ultimately resolved by way of a Settlement Agreement in which EnerNorth agreed to buy out Oakwell's interest in the Project Company. They agreed that any disputes would be governed by Singapore law and subject to the non-exclusive jurisdiction of the Singapore courts. EnerNorth did not make the required payments under the Settlement Agreement. It sold its interest in the Project Company to VBC. Oakwell entered into negotiations with VBC directly, resulting in a Licence Agreement pursuant to which the Project Company was to pay Oakwell certain "technical fees".

Oakwell sued EnerNorth in Singapore to recover the outstanding amounts under the Settlement Agreement. EnerNorth counterclaimed. The action was successful and the counterclaim was dismissed. The Singapore Court of Appeal dismissed EnerNorth's appeal. EnerNorth did not pay the Singapore judgment. Oakwell commenced enforcement proceedings in Ontario. Those proceedings were successful, and EnerNorth filed an assignment in bankruptcy. Oakwell made a claim in that bankruptcy which was based entirely upon the Singapore judgment. Other creditors of EnerNorth (the "appellants") moved before the Bankruptcy Court for an order pursuant to s. 135(5) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA") challenging the proof of claim filed by Oakwell. Oakwell brought a cross-motion to dismiss that motion on the ground that the issue raised by the appellants, i.e., whether the Licence Agreement payments had to be set-off against any payments made to Oakwell under the Settlement Agreement, had been finally determined in the Singapore proceedings. The cross-motion was granted. The appellants appealed.

Held, the appeal should be dismissed. [page2]

While the court's power to expunge or reduce a proof of claim on an application under s. 135(5) of the BIA is wide, there is no basis for holding that an applicant pursuant to s. 135 should have an unqualified right to challenge the validity of a judgment debt that is based on a decision of a court of competent jurisdiction on the merits of the claim or that res judicata should not apply, where appropriate, in such circumstances. In the absence of fraud, collusion or some legitimate concern that there has been a genuine miscarriage of justice, a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction should almost invariably satisfy a trustee or a court regarding the legitimacy of a claim under s. 135 if, in awarding the judgment, the court has considered the merits of the claim.

The doctrine of res judicata applies in bankruptcy proceedings. The appellants were precluded by res judicata from advancing their contention that Oakwell's proof of claim had to be expunged or reduced by reason of the mitigation/set-off issue. Two of the appellants were the president and chairman of EnerNorth, respectively, at the time of the Singapore proceedings. For the purposes of the bankruptcy proceedings, the trustee stood in the shoes of EnerNorth, and for the purposes of the proposed s. 135(5) hearing, the creditors in effect stood in the shoes of the trustee because they sought to have the court do what the trustee had declined to do. They were identified with EnerNorth for purposes of comparison between the Singapore proceedings and the proposed s. 135(5) hearing, and there was a community or privity of interest between them in that regard. The appellants were privies of EnerNorth for the purpose of the res judicata analysis in the s. 135(5) context. The mitigation/set-off argument was considered and rejected by the trial judge in the Singapore proceedings. The appellants were barred from re-litigating that issue in their efforts under s. 135(5) of the BIA to accomplish what EnerNorth failed to do in the Singapore courts and the Ontario courts.

BLAIR J.A.:-- I. Overview

[1] EnerNorth Industries Inc. is bankrupt. Its various creditors are squabbling amongst themselves over the amount owing to one of them, Oakwell Engineering Limited. To sort this out, the appellant creditors sought to obtain an order under s. 135(5) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B- 3 (the "BIA"), entitling them to challenge and determine the validity of the proof of claim filed by Oakwell. That proof of claim is [page4]founded upon a judgment rendered in Singapore prior to EnerNorth's assignment in bankruptcy.

[2] Justice Colin Campbell dismissed the creditors' motion on res judicata and issue estoppel grounds, holding that the very issue they wished to have determined had already been decided in

REASONS FOR DECISION

D.L. Corbett J.:

[1] The appellant insurer appeals the Reconsideration Decision of Vice-Chair Trojek of the Safety, Licensing Appeals and Standards Tribunals Ontario ("SLASTO") overturning the motion decision of Adjudicator Msosa of the Licensing Appeals Tribunal ("LAT"). At the conclusion of oral argument, the court dismissed the appeal with these reasons to follow.

Discussion

[2] On June 2, 2015, Xiu Zhe Xu was involved in a fatal collision. Her husband, Pei Yu Jia and her daughter, Lan Jia, (collectively the respondents) sought death and funeral benefits from the appellant insurer. These benefits were denied. The respondents disputed this decision before the LAT (the "benefits dispute").

[3] In a separate proceeding under O. Reg. 283/95, the appellant insurer initiated a dispute with CAA Insurance over which insurer is responsible for the respondents' accident benefits claims (the "priority dispute").

[4] The appellant compelled the respondents to examinations under oath (referred to in the decisions below as "EUOs") in connection with the priority dispute.

[5] The appellant used the same lawyer as its counsel in the priority dispute and the benefits dispute. That counsel filed transcripts of the respondents' evidence compelled in the priority dispute on behalf of the appellant in the benefits dispute.

[6] It is established law that insurers may not use the same counsel in statutory benefits cases and in tort cases brought against them by the same insured. This is because the duties of an insurer (and therefore of its counsel) are different in these contexts, and as an accident benefits insurer, the insurer is entitled to receive, and is required to keep confidential, a great deal of sensitive personal information from claimants.

[7] In the case at bar, the respondents took the position that the requirement for separate counsel applies where an insurer is involved in a priority dispute with another insurer and a benefits dispute with the insured. The respondents took the position that the insurer was not permitted to use evidence compelled from them in the priority dispute in the benefits dispute and the appellant's counsel's filing of that evidence in the benefits dispute was in breach of the applicable statutory scheme.

[8] At first instance, the LAT dismissed the respondents' motion, finding that there was no conflict in counsel acting in both proceedings, and that the filing of a transcript of evidence in non-compliance with the statutory scheme should not lead to exclusion of that evidence because the evidence is relevant and there is no prejudice to the respondents.

[9] SLASTO reversed on both decisions. It found that there is a conflict in counsel for the insurer acting in both the priority dispute and the benefits dispute. It found that breach of the statutory scheme was improper and prejudicial to the respondents, defeating the carefully balanced process prescribed by law.

Jurisdiction and Standard of Review

[10] Section 11(6) of the License Appeal Tribunal Act provides for an appeal to this court from LAT on a question of law.[1] This applies to a reconsideration decision of SLASTO from a LAT decision and, as at the time that this appeal was heard and decided, the standard of review of the reconsideration decision was considered to be "reasonableness" in this court.[2]

[11] The appellant argued that the appropriate standard of review in this case was correctness, because the issue of a lawyer's conflict of interest "implicates professional responsibility and the legal profession in Ontario". The court did not accept this submission: the conflict issue that arises in this case is contextually driven: the nature of conflicts that arise in accident benefits insurance cases, a context specifically within LAT's mandate and expertise.

Analysis

[12] We agree with the appellant that the conflict alleged in this case is not so clear as the conflict that arises if counsel defends an insurer in both a statutory accident benefits case and a tort case arising from the same loss.[3] However, we also agree with Vice-Chair Trojek that the situations are sufficiently analogous that the principle in the latter circumstance should apply in the former.

[13] Even if it was thought that the conflict identified by the Vice-Chair is not inevitable and should not, as a matter of general practice, preclude an insurer using the same counsel in a priority proceeding and a subsequent liability proceeding, in this case the potential conflict came to pass when the insurer misused transcripts gathered in the priority dispute in the subsequent benefits dispute.

[14] In this regard, Vice-Chair Trojek found that requirements set out in s.33 of the SABS Schedule[4] cannot be circumvented by reliance on a transcript obtained during a priority dispute. Otherwise the procedural protections afforded to an insured in the SABS Schedule would be frustrated. Although not relied upon by the Vice-Chair, we note that principles underlying the implied undertaking that applies to compelled disclosure in civil proceedings also militate against an insurer being able to file a transcript compelled in the priority dispute in a subsequent liability proceeding without first obtaining leave to so do. The Vice-Chair found that the specific protections provided in the SABS Schedule cannot be avoided by the general discretion granted to an Adjudicator under s.15 of the SPPA.[5] Otherwise the protections enacted in s.33 of the SABS would be largely illusory. This decision is reasonable.

[15] Finally, both aspects of the Vice Chair's decision are interlocutory. This court will not ordinarily hear an appeal from interlocutory decisions of LAT, unless the consequences of the decision cannot be rectified on appeal from a final decision. We would exercise our discretion to hear an appeal from the conflict decision, because it is evasive of appeal and it is potentially a matter of general practice important in proceedings before LAT. We would not, however, exercise our discretion to hear the appeal in respect to whether the EUOs ought to be received in evidence.

a. The Vice-Chair's finding that the appellant's lawyer was in conflict of interest acting in both the priority dispute and the liability dispute was reasonable;

b. The Vice-Chair's finding that the EUOs obtained by the insurer in the priority dispute should not be permitted to be used in the liability dispute because they were not obtained in compliance with s.33 of the SABS Regulation was reasonable.

c. This appeal was in any event premature as it relates to the use of the impugned transcripts.

[17] This appeal was heard and decided prior to release of the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Vavilov. Our reasons are framed on the basis on which this decision was reached on November 20, 2019, when it was rendered. We considered and decided against conducting a re-hearing on the basis of Vavilov because our decision would be the same in any event. Even if we had concluded that SLASTO erred as a matter of law on whether there is an inherent conflict in the same lawyer acting for an insurer in a priority dispute and a benefits dispute arising from the same events, on the facts there was a conflict in this case. This misuse of evidence obtained in the priority dispute in the benefits dispute, contrary to the checks and balances prescribed in the statutory scheme, placed the appellant's lawyer in a position where he could not continue to represent the insurer in the benefits dispute.

[18] I would also find that it is not necessary to re-hear this appeal or to receive supplementary submissions on the effect of Vavilov because of the improper filing of the EUO transcripts. The improper use of the transcripts arose because of the dual role played by counsel for the insurer in the two proceedings. These facts raise a conflict of interest in this case, as a matter of fact. No purpose would be served by reconsidering the parties' arguments in this case through the correctness lens brought to bear on questions of law as a result of the Vavilov decision.

RE: Harold The Mortgage Closer Inc. and Harold Gerstel, Applicants

Chief Executive Officer of the Financial Services Regulatory Authority of Ontario, Financial Services Regulatory Authority of Ontario, and Attorney General of Ontario, Respondents

BEFORE: FL Myers J

COUNSEL: Melvyn L Solmon and Joanne Iskander Salmoon, for the Applicants

HEARD: April 16, 2024

ENDORSEMENT

[1] The respondents move to quash this application for judicial review.

[2] In their application, the applicants ask the court to quash a notice of proposal delivered by the Financial Services Regulatory Authority on June 22, 2023. In the notice of proposal, the regulator proposes to revoke the mortgage broker license of the corporate applicant, to refuse to renew Ms. Gerstel's license, and to impose administrative penalties on Mr. Gerstel.

[3] The applicants also seek judicial review of the publication by the regulator on January 11, 2022 of a document entitled "Transparent Communication of FSRA Enforcement Action". This document provides guidance for when the regulator will publish o its website and elsewhere its enforcement steps against license holders.

[4] The applicants seek judicial review as well of the decision by the regulator to publish its notice of proposal to the public while refusing to publish the applicants' request for a hearing that takes issue with facts alleged by the regulator in the notice of proposal.

[5] Finally, the applicants seek orders compelling the regulator to amend its publication policy, to remove the notice of proposal from its website, to publish their response to the notice of proposal, and to enforce the statutory scheme to prevent the applicants' competitors from misusing the notice of proposal to injure the applicants' reputation and business.

[6] The regulator submits that it is plain and obvious that the relief claimed by the applicants in this proceeding is not available to them.

[7] In response to the notice of proposal, the applicants exercised their right to require a hearing before the Financial Services Tribunal. That is a specialized tribunal charged with hearing proceedings in the financial services sector.

[8] Under the applicable statutory scheme, the applicants will be entitled to a full hearing process before the tribunal in respect of the allegations contained in the regulator's notice of proposal. A very high degree of procedural protection is available to the applicants in light of the serious nature of the relief sought against them. The hearing is a full trial de novo. It is not just an appeal from the notice of proposal. The hearing outcome will be based on the evidence to be admitted, after pre-hearing disclosure, cross-examination of witnesses, and submissions.

[10] First, it is plain and obvious and without any serious doubt that the applicants' complaints about the conduct of the regulator in issuing the notice of proposal and its contents are premature.

[11] Mr. Solmon asserts that it is clear that the regulator issued a notice of proposal that was deliberately false and that the court needs to be available to police such egregious misconduct.

[12] That is neither the scheme of the relevant statutes nor of the Judicial Review Procedure Act on which the applicants rely. This case is on all fours with Volochay v. College of Massage Therapists of Ontario, 2012 ONCA 541 (CanLII). In that precedent decision, a judge quashed a tribunal's decision to appoint an investigator. The decision was made in direct violation of the statutory procedural right of the target of the investigation to be heard prior to the decision being made. In Volochay, even with the breach of a statute, the Court of Appeal held that proceedings must be left to run their course if there is an adequate alternative to the court becoming involved and absent exceptional circumstances.

[13] In this case, the applicants' reliance on very general duties of a regulator in ss. 3 and 6 of the Financial Services Regulatory Authority of Ontario Act, 2016, SO 2016, c 37, Sch 8, do not really add any more strength to the case than is available from the general legal notion that government bodies should obey the law, behave fairly, and should not lie.

[14] Even assuming for the sake of argument that the applicants can establish that the regulator deliberately issued and publicized falsehoods about the applicants in the notice of proposal, this application still runs right into the hearing before the Financial Services Tribunal provided by the Mortgage Brokerages, Lenders and Administrators Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 29.

[15] In that hearing, the regulator will bear the burden of proving the allegations in its notice of proposal. The applicants will be entitled to defend themselves fully and fairly. At the end of the day, the tribunal will make findings of fact and apply the appropriate law. If it finds that the regulator has been untruthful or violated its duties, it will consider the appropriate outcome. If the applicants are then not content with the outcome, they have further appeal rights to the court and possibly also the ability to seek judicial review for matters that do not fall within appeal rights.

[16] I do not agree with Mr. Solmon that the facts are uncontested or clear. I understand why the applicants allege the regulator said things to which they object. But I would not be able to make findings of fact on the written record before me and I do not believe that a panel of this court will be any better off on an early judicial review. The panel is a review body. It is not a fact-finding body generally.

[18] Moreover, any procedural unfairness caused to the applicants by the delivery of the notice of proposal containing incorrect facts can and will be cured by a full trial process before the tribunal with a high standard of procedural fairness and natural justice enforced.

[19] I note that I do not necessarily agree with the tribunal's decision in this case that it has no authority to review the conduct of the regulator or to cause it to take steps deemed necessary for fairness of the proceeding before the tribunal. The notice of proposal is not necessarily spent or rendered a dead letter by the delivery of the request for a hearing. The notice of proposal remains the regulator's statement of allegations that guides the issues before the tribunal.

[20] But even if the applicants ask the tribunal to give some remedy against the regulator and the tribunal declines after a full hearing, the applicants will still have their appeal and review rights before the court. In those hearings, the court will be armed with a full evidentiary record, findings of fact on the contested evidence, and the specialist tribunal's views and reasoning on the issues that were argued before it by the parties.

[21] Under Volochay, the tribunal proceeding must be left to run its course as it is a very adequate alternative to the relief sought contesting the notice of proposal and the regulator's conduct in issuing it. There are no exceptional circumstances at play in my view. Mr., Solmon submits that this case is exceptional because the claim is that the regulator included untruthful allegations in the notice of proposal deliberately. That does not take the case outside the principle in Volochay. Moreover, the strategy that, "the best defence is a good offence" is not as unusual or exceptional before the court as Mr. Solmon surmises.

[23] The other aspect of the case involves the regulator's publication decisions. The regulator submits that it did not exercise a statutory power of decision when it adopted its publication guidelines. They are not binding on anyone and do not have the force of law. They just tell the marketplace when to expect enforcement steps to be publicized by the regulator.

[24] Similarly, the regulator submits that it has no statutory duty to publish the applicants' request for a hearing although the applicants dispute the facts in the notice of proposal and ask the regulator to be fair and balanced.

[25] The applicants can also show that competitors have used the notice of proposal as published by the regulator to slag them in the marketplace. They submit that the regulator's decisions to publish the notice of proposal and the decision to refuse to publish their request for hearing impair its reputation and impact its legal rights.

[26] As I am not quashing these requests for judicial review, I will say little about them. The SCC has recognized peoples' legal interest in their reputation.

While I am dubious that the applicant has standing to challenge the publication guidelines or that the publication of the guidelines was an exercise of a statutory power, to the extent that the guidelines become an excuse or justification for the regulator's publication decisions, I would not put challenging them beyond the applicants' reach.

[27] But the real focus of the applicant is on the regulator's decision to publish the notice of proposal and the decision to refuse to publish the request for a hearing. It is not impossibly far-fetched that ss. 3 and 6 of the Financial Services Regulatory Authority of Ontario Act impose constraints (if not a duty) on the activity of the regulator especially where reputational harm of a registrant is at risk (or is intended rightly or wrongly). Moreover, since the notice of proposal is not a dead letter in the tribunal hearing, issues of procedural fairness may arise concerning the regulator's conduct if it affects the fairness of the hearing.

[28] I cannot say that it is plain and obvious that the applicants have no rights vis-à-vis the regulator's decisions about what to publish or not publish concerning the applicants. I expressly leave open to the panel of the Divisional Court the possibility that it may find this issue too best dealt with first before the Financial Services Tribunal. But while the validity of the notice of proposal and its contents is squarely before the tribunal, I am less sure that this issue will necessarily be before the tribunal.

[29] I am in no way endorsing the strength of the claims to challenge either the guidelines themselves or the publication decisions surrounding the notice of proposal, I do not accept the regulator's submissions that it is plain and obvious that they are either unreviewable private decisions or decisions that do not impair the legal rights or interests of the applicants.

[30] Mr. Solmon asks me to defer to the panel the question of whether the applicants need or ought to be granted more time to bring their applications under s. 5 (2) of the JRPA. Having quashed the claims against the notice of proposal, perhaps this is no longer an issue. Regardless, in my view, the panel that hears matters on their merits is generally better armed to assess the equities involved in the balancing of interests under s 5 (2). I therefore defer that issue to the panel.

[31] Finally, it is plain and obvious that the applicants have no claim for an order in the nature of mandamus against the regulator concerning competitors. There is no duty owing to the applicants for the regulator to take any steps against competitors. Moreover, prosecution and enforcement are always discretionary. Relief rooted in the availability of a writ of mandamus cannot be available for such decisions.

[32] Therefore, I quash the claims for orders set out in the the Amended Notice of Application dated November 8, 2023 (found beginning at Caselines page B1092) other than the following claims that survive and will be heard by the panel: Caselines page B1095, paragraphs 1, only the declaration sought in 3 (a), only the declaration sought in 3 (b), 3 (e), 3 (h), 3 (j), and 3 (l) to (n) inclusive.

[33] I am told that the Financial Services Tribunal may have been waiting for this decision before scheduling its hearing into the notice of proposal and request for hearing. In my respectful view, nothing left open for the court in this proceeding need have any bearing on the tribunal's scheduling decisions. The court generally respects and appreciates every effort by tribunals to complete proceedings as efficiently and affordably as possible.

[34] Success was divided. My inclination is to order no costs or to defer costs to the panel hearing the application. If counsel can agree on costs, they are requested to advise me accordingly. If counsel cannot agree, the applicants may deliver costs submissions by April 26, 2024. The regulator can then deliver submissions by May 3, 2024.

[35] Submissions shall be no longer than three double-spaced pages in minimum 12-point font with normal margins. Each submission shall be accompanied by the party's Costs Outline. Parties may also submit copies of any offers to settle on which they rely for costs purposes, if any.

VELLA J.

REASONS FOR DECISION

[1] This Application is brought by Sanscon Construction Ltd. ("Sanscon") seeking various orders relating to its failed bid to obtain a construction contract from the City of Toronto (the "City").

[2] At the hearing of this matter, consistent with its factum, Sanscon argued this matter by way of a judicial review application. In its first paragraph of its factum, Sanscon states that it "has commenced this Application for the judicial review of an administrative decision made by the Respondent, the City of Toronto".

[3] By way of brief background, this matter arises out of the City's decision to award a construction contract arising out of Ariba Doc. No. 2877856257, Tender 71-2021 ("RFT") for the Bridge Rehabilitation, Road Reconstruction, Water Service Replacement, Cycle Tract Construction and Intersection Improvements on Cummer Avenue from Bayview Avenue to Leslie Street, Contract No. 21ECS-TI-02BE ((the "Project", "Bid" and/or "Contract").

[5] The City awarded the Contract to the second lowest bidder, Grascan Construction Ltd. and Torbridge Construction Ltd. ("Grascan").

[6] Sanscon states that Grascan's bid was non-compliant with the mandatory Bid requirements and was also mathematically and/or materially unbalanced. Furthermore, the City failed in its duty of procedural fairness and good faith when it assessed Sanscon's Bid as compared with Grascan's competing bid.

[7] The City submits that the RFT expressly permits the City to reject the lowest bidder. Furthermore, the City submits that it had an express contractual right to reject Sanscon's Bid on the basis that it had mathematically and/or materially unbalanced terms.

[8] The City submits that this court lacks jurisdiction to hear this matter by way of judicial review, as I am not sitting as a judge of the Divisional Court, but urges that the Application be dismissed on its merits based on purely contractual principles.

Jurisdiction

[9] Sanscon's factum does not seek leave of the court to hear this Application for judicial review under s. 6(2) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c.J.1 ("JRPA"), nor does it address the test for leave. In its factum, Sanscon relies on the standard of review of a decision of an administrative body that is set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Vavilov, 2019 SCC 65 reinforcing its premise that this Application is brought as a judicial review.

[10] This court declines to hear this matter by way of an application for judicial review, consistent with the Practice Direction for Divisional Court Proceedings for the Toronto Region. More specifically, and as noted in the endorsement of by Myers J. who presided over the scheduling of this Application at Civil Practice Court:

> A proceeding to quash a governmental decision based on an unfair process or as unreasonable in fact or law is properly an application for judicial review. That would proceed on [sic] the Divisional Court. In Toronto, urgent applications for judicial review under s. 6(2) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act are heard by a single judge sitting on the Divisional Court as well. See s. 4 of the Consolidated Practice Direction for Divisional Court Proceedings, effective May 17, 2019.

[11] Myers J. scheduled the Application for June 28, 2021 on the basis that a damages claim for breach of contract lies with this court. In so doing, Myers J. declined to make an interim order to preserve the status quo. Myers J. was not satisfied that Sanscon would suffer irreparable harm if the subject project went ahead.

[12] However, inexplicably, Sanscon formulated its argument at the hearing before me entirely based in judicial review principles, and not breach of contract principles. The relief sought under its factum consists of an order in the nature of certiorari (declaring the City's decision to be of no force and effect) or in the alternative an order of mandamus (quashing the City's decision) or in the further alternative an order for prohibition (preventing the City from awarding the Contract to Sanscon's competitor).

[13] Under s. 7 of the JRPA, an application for an order in the nature of mandamus, prohibition or certiorari "shall be deemed to be an Application for judicial review and shall be made, treated and disposed of as if it were an Application for judicial review".

[14] Under s. 6(1) of the JRPA, an application for judicial review shall be made to the Divisional Court, subject to s. 6(2).

[15] Section 6(2) of the JRPA, in turn, provides that an application for judicial review may be made to the Superior Court of Justice with leave of a judge thereof, and may be granted at the hearing of the application, where it is made to appear to the judge that the case is one of urgency and that the delay required for an application to the Divisional Court is likely to involve a failure of justice. However, s. 4 of the Consolidated Practice Direction for Divisional Court Proceedings, effective May 17, 2019 (the "Consolidated Practice Direction") directs that, in the Toronto Region, applications for urgent judicial review are to be brought in the Divisional Court for a hearing before a single judge of the Divisional Court, sitting as a judge of the Superior Court of Justice. Furthermore, the Notice of Application is to be filed with the Divisional Court.

[17] Sanscon's factum does not seek leave under s. 6(2) of the JRPA to have this matter heard, nor is it in the Notice of Application. It does not reference this court's jurisdiction, or address why the Application was not brought before a single judge of the Divisional Court, sitting as a judge of the Superior Court of Justice.

[18] In any event, this matter is not urgent. The Contract has already been awarded and the City has authorized Grascan to take certain steps under the Contract by the date of the hearing of this application. There was nothing preventing Sanscon from commencing an Application for judicial review in the proper forum and seeking an urgent hearing.

[19] This is not a matter of mere formality. Judges of the Divisional Court have experience in dealing with Applications under s. 6(1) and 6(2) of the JRPA. This matter should have been started as an application for judicial review and brought before the Divisional Court.

[20] The City submits that while the court does not have jurisdiction to hear this matter by way of judicial review, the court should nonetheless make a finding on the merits of the Application. The City advances as one reason supporting its submission that the subject matter of the Application does not fall within the scope of a judicial review in any event, and relies, in part, on Wauzhushk First Nation v. Minister of Finance, 2019 ONSC 3491 and 2169205 Ontario Inc. o/a Lefroy Freshmart v. Liquor Control Board of Ontario, 2011 ONSC 1878 (CanLII).

[21] In Wauzhushk First Nation, the court held that the matter before it was not appropriate for judicial review because it involved the review of a policy decision of the Cabinet. This is not the situation here.

[22] In Lefroy Freshmart, the Divisional Court dismissed an application for judicial review of a decision of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario ("LCBO") to award authorization to operate an agency store following a competitive procurement process based on the alleged unfairness of the procurement process and the unreasonableness of the decision. The Divisional Court found that in making the decision to award an agency store authorization, the LCBO had not exercised a statutory power of decision. Rather, it was a purely private commercial arrangement and accordingly to be dealt with in accordance with the principles of contract.

[23] However, in this case, the power to award the contract in question by the City's Bid Award Panel appears to arise by operation of subsection 195-8.2 of the Toronto Municipal Code, Chapter 195 (the "Municipal Code"). The Municipal Code appears to set out mandatory substantive requirements governing any recommendation made by the Chief Procurement Officer's recommendation. Accordingly, it is arguable that what is being challenged by Sanscon is the Bid Award Panel's exercise of a statutory power of decision.

[24] There was limited argument on the characterization of the nature of the Bid Award Panel's decision. This issue should have the benefit of full argument before the Divisional Court, should this matter proceed before it. Therefore, I am not ruling on it.

[25] The City also urges that as the evidence is before the court, and this court has jurisdiction under r. 14.05(3)(d) to hear this matter since it involves the determination of rights that depends upon contractual interpretation, it ought to rule on the merits of this matter, notwithstanding how the argument was framed at the hearing by Sanscon. The Notice of Application was originally brought under r. 14.05(3).

[26] The City submits that it is clear on the face of the RFT that it had the contractual right to reject the lowest bidder, and to consider the mathematical and/or material imbalance that was clearly present in the Bid in its decision to reject it. The City also states that the Bid was non-compliant with the mandatory Bid requirements. Sanscon admits that the Bid reflected material imbalances.

[27] In the circumstances, I decline to make a ruling on the merits of the Application based in contractual principles. The Application is fundamentally flawed as it was argued as a judicial review but not before the appropriate court and brought without leave. In my view, it would not be appropriate to render a ruling on the merits of the breach of contract matter in these circumstances.

[28] In my view it would not be in the interests of justice to dismiss the Application on the merits

Request for an interim or interlocutory injunction

[29] In light of my finding that this court declines jurisdiction to hear this matter by way of judicial review, this issue is moot.

Conclusion and Disposition

[30] Accordingly, this court declines to hear this matter by way of an urgent judicial review application under s. 6(2) of the JRPA and it should be brought before the Divisional Court in accordance with the Consolidated Practice Direction.

[31] The Application is dismissed on the basis that this Application has been brought in the wrong forum, without prejudice to the Applicant, Sanscon, to commence appropriate proceedings, and without prejudice to the City's right to plead any defences, including any limitation period defences, subject only to the following paragraph.

[32] Neither party asked me to exercise my discretion under s. 6(3) of the JRPA to transfer this matter to the Divisional Court. Should the parties, or either of them, wish me to consider this, I invite brief written submissions on this discreet issue which must be received within 10 days from the release of these reasons. In the event I do not receive submissions on this issue within that time frame, then this disposition will be final, subject only to costs.

[33] In the event that Sanscon determines to bring this matter by way of a judicial review application in the proper forum, or by any other proceeding, it may be advisable that the parties rely on the same affidavits, and transcripts from cross examination (which can, on consent, be used as examinations for discovery). This would lead to a more efficient, expeditious and less expensive proceeding by minimizing duplication of time caused by the within Application.

[34] The parties should attempt to settle the issue of costs. However, if they cannot, then the City is to provide its Cost Outline within 20 days from the release of this decision, together with a brief written submissions, and Sanscon shall deliver its Costs Outline and brief written submissions within 10 days thereafter. The written submissions shall not exceed 3 pages double spaced in length. The cost outlines and submissions will be provided to my judicial assistant.

ENDORSEMENT

D.L. Corbett J. (Orally)

[1] This is an appeal from the decisions of Adjudicator Kaur, dated August 1, 2023, of the License Appeal Tribunal ("LAT"), dismissing the Appellant's claims for income replacement benefits and related claims (2023 CanLII 122911 (ON LAT)) and denying the Appellant's request for reconsideration (2023 CanLII 122911 (ON LAT). The Adjudicator dismissed the claims on the basis that they were precluded by principles of res judicata, given the prior LAT decision of Adjudicator Lake dated October 15, 2021 (2020 CanLII 122073).

[2] This court has jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to s. 11(1) and (6) of the Licence Appeal Tribunal Act, 1999, SO 1999, c. 12, Sched. G, on a question of law. The standard of review for questions of law is correctness: Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, para. 8.

[3] Before this court, the Appellant argues that res judicata does not apply to preclude his current claims, and that the process followed below was procedurally unfair. The Appellant's arguments on the merits misconceive the doctrine of res judicata. The test for res judicata was applied by the Adjudicator as follows (Decision, para. 12):

> In my view, the four preconditions for res judicata are satisfied. The parties are the same in both proceedings. The prior claim was within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. The decision in the first application was based on the merits. The Tribunal reviewed the submissions and evidence and found that the applicant was not entitled to the IRB or found that the applicant was not entitled to IRBs for the period of January 14, 2020 to date and ongoing. Moreover, he was not entitled to payment for the November 9, 2019 accounting report. The first decision was a final decision because he did not file a reconsideration request and nor did he appeal the decision."

See Danyluk v. Ainsworth Technologies Inc., 2001 SCC 44.

[4] The Appellant argues that the issue before the LAT in the first proceeding was the quantum of benefits to which the Appellant was entitled, and not the question of whether the Appellant was entitled to any benefits at all. Put another way, the Appellant argues that the issue was quantum and not liability. The Appellant argues that the decision was made without jurisdiction because there was no "dispute" between the parties on the issue of liability, within the meaning of s. 218 of the Insurance Act.

[5] A LAT decision is final and authoritative, subject to a party's rights of reconsideration or appeal from that decision. A party that disagrees with a LAT decision may not ignore that decision and recommence the same claims all over again. That is what the Appellant has done in this case. Even if the LAT erred in the first decision and decided the case on the basis of an issue that was not before it, that error would not have deprived the LAT of jurisdiction. The LAT's second decision is correct in law; this appeal fails on the merits.

[6] We see no procedural unfairness in the process followed below to adjudicate the preliminary issue of res judicata. This was an appropriate case in which to decide such an issue, which turns on a reading of the first decision and of the claims asserted in the second proceeding. Further, as just explained, the LAT's decision on the res judicata issue was correct, and thus the process followed by the LAT worked no prejudice to the Appellant.

[7] The appeal is dismissed, with costs to the respondent insurer fixed at $2,500.00, inclusive, payable within thirty days. There shall be no costs for or against the LAT.

Heard and released orally: May 25, 2020 by Videoconference

On appeal from the order of Justice Paul B. Schabas of the Superior Court of Justice, dated November 15, 2019.

REASONS FOR DECISION

[1] The appellant is a lawyer. He sued the respondents, a law firm and individuals connected to it (the "Action"). The cause of action is an alleged breach of solicitor-client privilege arising from the respondent law firm having provided the appellant with legal advice several years earlier. The alleged breach is said to have occurred on a motion in an unrelated lawsuit (the "earlier proceeding").

[2] The respondents moved to have the Action struck. By order dated November 15, 2019, the motion judge struck the Action on the basis of issue estoppel. The appellant appeals against the order.

[3] For the reasons that follow, the appeal is dismissed.

[4] In the Action, the appellant raised substantially the same alleged breach of solicitor-client privilege as had been dealt with in the earlier proceeding. In a motion on the earlier proceeding, the Master ruled against the appellant on the matter of solicitor-client privilege. The Master found, among other things, that if any privilege had existed, it had been expressly waived.

[5] As the motion judge set out, relying on Angle v. Minister of National Revenue, 1974 CanLII 168 (SCC), [1975] 2 S.C.R. 248, the test for issue estoppel consists of three parts:

i. the same question has been decided;

ii. the judicial decision which is said to create the estoppel was final; and

iii. the parties to the judicial decision or their privies were the same persons as the parties to the proceedings in which the estoppel is raised [or] their privies.

[6] We begin by noting that there is no real question that the second and third parts of the test are met. The appellant appealed the Master's decision but later withdrew the appeal. Accordingly, the Master's decision on solicitor-client privilege was a final decision. And, on the Motion before the Master relating to the issue of solicitor-client privilege, the parties or their privies were the appellant and the respondents.

[7] The appellant's primary contention on this appeal focusses on the first part of the test for issue estoppel. He argues that the Master did not decide the question of solicitor-client privilege. In making this argument, he relies on a narrow reading of one sentence in para. 23 of the Master's decision, where the Master refers to a legal consultation. We do not accept this argument. A fair and full reading of the Master's reasons as a whole show that the issue of solicitor-client privilege was squarely before the Master and that she found that the appellant had "expressly waived" that privilege. Thus, the same question was decided by the Master as that which the appellant raised in the Action.

[8] Accordingly, the motion judge did not err in finding that the Action was barred by issue estoppel or in striking the statement of claim without leave to amend.

[9] The appeal is dismissed with costs to the respondents fixed in the amount of $8,000, inclusive of disbursements and applicable taxes.

potential freehold condominium project in the valuation. As a result, their decision was unreasonable.

(2) Issue Estoppel

[95] Under the heading of issue estoppel, I will first describe the applicable legal principles. Then I will address Revenue Properties #1 analysis of the freehold/leasehold distinction and the treatment accorded that issue by the Appeal Judge and the Majority. Next, I will consider whether the Appeal Judge was correct in concluding that the Majority erred in departing from Revenue Properties #1 by considering a potential freehold condominium project in the FMV. Lastly, I will address the treatment accorded to special circumstances.

(a) Legal Principles

> (1) that the same question is being decided;
> (2) that the judicial decision which is said to create the estoppel was final; and
> (3) that the parties to the judicial decision are the same persons as the parties to the proceedings in which the estoppel is raised or their privies.

[97] One of the key objectives of issue estoppel is judicial finality: "[t]he doctrine prevents an encore, and reflects the law's refusal to tolerate needless litigation" (per Laskin J.A. in Minott, quoting from Holmstead and Watson, Ontario Civil Procedure, loose-leaf, vol. II, at s. 21. § 17[3]). More recently, the Supreme Court discussed issue estoppel in Penner v. Niagara (Regional Police Services Board), 2013 SCC 19, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 125, stating as follows, at para. 29:

> The one relevant [doctrine] on this appeal is the doctrine of issue estoppel. It balances judicial finality and > economy and other considerations such as fairness to the parties. It holds that a party may not relitigate an issue that was finally decided in prior judicial proceedings between the same parties or those who stand in their place. However, even if these elements are present, the court retains discretion to not apply issue estoppel when its application would work an injustice.

[98] However, as noted by Laskin J.A. in Minott, at p. 340, courts have not mechanically applied the doctrine every time the preconditions for its application have been satisfied:

> That the courts have always exercised this discretion is apparent from the authorities. For example, courts have refused to apply issue estoppel in "special circumstances", which include a change in the law or the availability of further relevant material. If the decision of a court on a point of law in an earlier proceeding is shown to be wrong by a later judicial decision, issue estoppel will not prevent relitigating that issue in subsequent proceedings.

[99] There is no question that the elements of issue estoppel are met; indeed, the College conceded as much. The parties are in essence the same, and the same language in the same leases is being interpreted. The question then is what did Revenue Properties #1 decide and whether there is any basis (which may be characterized as special circumstances) for departing from Revenue Properties #1?

(b) Freehold or Leasehold Interest

[100] GE argues that both the Majority and the Appeal Judge erred by concluding that the Leases require a valuation of the freehold interest in the demised lands. In Revenue Properties #1, the Divisional Court concluded that the Leases required the valuation of lands subject to a lease and, according to GE, this means that the arbitrators should have valued the leasehold interest. It asks that the reasons of the minority arbitrator be adopted. Revenue Properties does not actively advance

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE – ONTARIO
DIVISIONAL COURT

RE: TARICK AWADA V. ALLSTATE INSURANCE COMPANY

BEFORE: D.L. Corbett J.

HEARD: In Chambers, In Writing

ENDORSEMENT

[1] Allstate appeals a production order of the License Appeal Tribunal made in the course of ongoing proceedings brought by the respondent at the Tribunal.

[2] During initial triage of the appeal in this court, the court directed that the following inquiry be made of the appellant:

> Justice Corbett directs me to advise you as follows:
> This court will generally refuse to hear an appeal of an interlocutory ruling of the LAT on the basis of prematurity. While exceptions can be made to this principle, it does not appear that there are any bases for making an exception in this case. The appellant is asked to explain why this appeal should be permitted to proceed in light of the principle of prematurity.

[3] The court was not satisfied with the appellant's initial response to this inquiry and directed a notice be issued pursuant to R.2.1.01. The parties then exchanged written submissions pursuant to R.2.1.01.

[5] An appeal will be dismissed as frivolous, vexatious and/or an abuse of process pursuant to R.2.1.01 only in the "clearest of cases".

[6] An appeal is considered frivolous, vexatious and/or an abuse of process if (among other things) it cannot possibly succeed or if it cannot possibly be of any benefit to the appellant.

Prematurity

[7] "[A]bsent exceptional circumstances, courts should not interfere with ongoing administrative processes until after they are completed, or until effective remedies are exhausted" Canada (Border Services Agency) v. C.B. Powell Limited, 2010 FCA 61, per Stratas J.A.

[8] The classic statement of the courts' reluctance to intervene in the course of administrative proceedings is found in Ontario College of Art v. Ontario (Human Rights Commission) (1993), 1993 CanLII 3430 (ON SCDC), 11 OR (3d) 798 at 800:

> For some time now, the Divisional Court has … taken the position that it should not fragment proceedings before administrative tribunals. Fragmentation causes both delay and distracting interruptions in administrative proceedings. It is preferable, therefore, to allow such matters to run their full course before the tribunal and then consider all legal issues arising from the proceedings at their conclusion….

[9] The principle was stated by this court in 1993, and it had been followed "[f]or some time now" then, nearly thirty years ago. It is followed just as scrupulously today and, with active case management being instituted by more and more administrative tribunals, the practical importance of the principle has in no way diminished.

[10] The appellant argues that the order under appeal fits within the "exceptional circumstances" category because it is "fatally flawed" and is procedurally unfair. In the result, a full hearing could unfold before the Tribunal that could be avoided if the appeal is successful: Higashi v. Western Assurance Co., [2020] OJ No. 5395; Certas Direct Insurance Co, v. Gonsalves, 2011 ONSC 3986.

[11] I do not accept these submissions. This is an ordinary interlocutory production order. The appellant notes that scheduling orders, as currently structured, could lead to a situation where the appellant is unable to respond to issues raised by the respondent arising from the documents ordered disclosed. I do not agree that this is an "exceptional circumstance". If such a situation should arise, the current orders provide that the appellant can seek leave from the Hearing Adjudicator to provide additional materials. It remains the Hearing Adjudicator's task to ensure fairness for both sides as the case moves forward, and an appeal will be available to this court if, at the end of the process, a party argues it was not treated fairly. This case is not like Gonsalves, where the impugned order would necessarily lead to unfairness at the hearing. In the case at bar, the argument is premised on the possibility of procedural unfairness, not the inevitability of substantive unfairness found in Gonsalves. See also Ontario (Liquor Control Board) v. Lifford Wine Agencies Ltd. (2005), 2005 CanLII 25179 (ON CA), 76 OR (3d) 401 (CA); Aon Inc. v. Towerhill Developments Inc., [2010] O.J. No. 2698 (Div. Ct.).

[12] Finally, the appellant argues that the appeal could result in the underlying claim being dismissed without a full hearing. This, it argues, would contribute to efficiency. That argument does not establish "exceptional circumstances" – it is available every time the Tribunal makes a decision that could lead to a full hearing rather than summary disposition of the claim. The impact of the ruling is an aspect of the prematurity analysis (there is little point interrupting proceedings below to entertain an interlocutory appeal that will have no impact on the course of the proceedings below), but is not, by itself, sufficient to establish "exceptional circumstances."

[13] I note that this appeal, if it should proceed, will either be moot by the time it is decided or will lead to unacceptable delay in the proceedings below. If the impugned order is not stayed pending disposition of the appeal, then the appellant will be required to comply with the impugned order pending before the appeal is decided. The administrative process below will continue and may well reach a final disposition before the appeal is decided in this court. No purpose would be served by the appeal in this circumstance. If the impugned order is stayed pending disposition of the appeal, this will have the inevitable effect of delaying proceedings below. This delay would be substantial and would be an "interference" with the "administrative process" below within the meaning of the principle stated by Stratas J.A., quoted above: the prematurity principle would be defeated if premature appeals of interlocutory orders are permitted to proceed in this court at the will of the appellant, even where there are no "exceptional circumstances", only to have the appeal panel dismiss the appeals many months later on the basis of prematurity, but still visiting substantial delay on the administrative process.

[14] Finally, I note that the prematurity issue can be addressed as (i) a defence to the proceeding before a panel; (ii) on a motion to quash the proceeding, before a single Divisional Court judge whose decision is reviewable as of right before a panel of three judges of this court; and (iii) pursuant to R.2.1.01, where the decision is final, subject only to an appeal to the Court of Appeal with leave from that court. Where it is arguable whether there are "exceptional circumstances" within the meaning of the jurisprudence, recourse to R.2.1.01 is not appropriate. It is then for the responding party to decide whether to move to quash, and if it does so, it is then for the motion judge to determine whether to dismiss for prematurity or to dismiss the motion and leave the prematurity issue for the panel.

[16] The respondent is entitled to costs of the R.2.1.01 process, which, in view of the written submissions exchanged between the parties, I fix at $2,500, inclusive, payable by the appellant to the respondent within thirty days.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

R. A. LOCOCO J.

I. Introduction

[1] The applicants Murtaza Mansuri, Javid Mansuri and Mohammad Mansuri bring an application for judicial review, challenging the interlocutory decision of the respondent Licence Appeal Tribunal dated September 28, 2022, reported at 2022 CanLII 138547 (the "Initial Decision").

[2] The Initial Decision was made in the context of the applicants' five applications for dispute resolution currently before the Tribunal arising from two separate motor vehicle accidents that occurred in 2018. In those applications, the applicants are challenging the denial by the respondent The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company ("Dominion") of certain of the applicants' claims for accident benefits arising from the motor vehicle accidents.

[3] In the Initial Decision, the Tribunal dismissed the applicants' interlocutory motion to disqualify Dominion's counsel and its adjuster from handling the applicants' accident benefits claims on the basis of conflict of interest and breach of duties of privacy and confidentiality. In the reconsideration decision dated November 2, 2022 (the "Reconsideration Decision"), the Tribunal refused the applicants' Request for Reconsideration on the basis that the Initial Decision did not finally dispose of the applications before the Tribunal.

[4] The applicants argue that the court should exercise its jurisdiction upon judicial review and determine on the merits that the Tribunal erred in law in finding that there was no breach of privacy or confidentiality and no conflict of interest.

[5] Dominion disputes the merits of the application but, together with the Tribunal, raises the issue of prematurity. The respondents argue that unless there are exceptional circumstances, the Divisional Court should decline to consider an application for judicial review of the Tribunal's interlocutory decision until the underlying Tribunal applications are completed. The respondents submit that there are no exceptional circumstances nor is it a "rare case" that would warrant the court's intervention.

[6] Following oral submissions on the issue of prematurity, the parties were advised at the application hearing that the application was being dismissed, with written reasons to follow. These Reasons for Judgment explain the court's decision to dismiss the judicial review application as premature, without deciding the merits of the applicants' challenge to the Initial Decision.

II. Background

A. Applicants' accident benefits claims and Tribunal applications

[7] The applicants are brothers who at all relevant times resided in a three-bedroom apartment with a common kitchen, living room, bathroom and den.

[8] In 2018, the applicant Murtaza Mansuri was involved in a motor vehicle accident. Later that year, the applicants Javid Mansuri and Mohammad Mansuri were involved in a separate motor vehicle accident.

[9] Following those accidents, the applicants made separate applications to Dominion for accident benefits under Statutory Accident Benefits Schedule – Effective September 1, 2010 ("SABS"), O. Reg. 34/10, s. 3(1), made pursuant to the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. I.8. Dominion denied certain claims by two of the applicants for attendant care and housekeeping/home maintenance services. Those services were provided by personal support workers from the same care provider.

[10] After the denial of benefits, the applicants made five applications to the Tribunal for dispute resolution under s. 280(2) of the Insurance Act. Those applications have not yet been heard on their merits and remain outstanding.

B. Applicants' motion before the Tribunal

[11] On March 1, 2022, the applicants filed a Notice of Motion before the Tribunal relating to all five applications, alleging that (i) Dominion and its counsel had breached their duties of privacy and confidentiality owed to the applicants, and (ii) Dominion's counsel and its adjustor had a conflict of interest with respect to the claim of all three applicants. Among other things, the applicants sought an order to (i) disqualify Dominion's counsel and its adjuster from handling the applicants' claims, and (ii) require Dominion to retain separate counsel and adjusters to handle the claims of each applicant.

[12] The "essential facts" upon which the applicants relied in support of their motion were "undisputed": Initial Decision, at para. 29. Based on those facts, the applicants alleged the improper sharing and commingling of information with respect to their claims, as set out in the Initial Decision at paras. 29-24 (relating to the adjuster) and paras. 38-41 (relating to Dominion's counsel).

[13] In the Initial Decision, at para. 63-64, the Tribunal adjudicator (Vice-Chair Theresa McGee) dismissed the applicants' motion, finding that the applicants had not established a factual and legal basis for a breach of duties of privacy and confidentiality that warranted disqualification of Dominion's adjuster and counsel. Among other things, the Tribunal found that under the terms of the Application for Accident Benefits (OCF-1) that the applicants signed when they made their claims, the applicants consented to the pooling of information relating to their claims: Initial Decision, at para. 45-47.

[14] In the Reconsideration Decision, the Tribunal adjudicator (Vice-Chair E. Louise Logan) dismissed the applicants' Request for Reconsideration of the Initial Decision. The Tribunal relied on r. 18.1 of the Licence Appeal Tribunal, Animal Care Review Board, and Fire Safety Commission Common Rules of Practice and Procedure, Version 1 (October 2, 2017)[1] ("Common Rules"), which provides that the Tribunal may, upon a party's request, "reconsider any decision of the Tribunal that finally disposes of an appeal" (emphasis added). An "appeal" is defined as including an application or a claim: Common Rules, r. 2.1. Since the underlying proceeding remained ongoing, the Tribunal would not entertain the Request for Reconsideration: Reconsideration Decision, at paras. 3-5.

C. Application for judicial review

[15] The applicants bring an application for judicial review of the Initial Decision. In their application, the applicants submit that the Tribunal erred in law, including by finding that there was no breach of privacy or confidentiality and no conflict of interest. They seek a declaration that (i) Dominion and its counsel have breached each applicant's privacy and confidentiality, and (ii) Dominion's counsel is in an actual or potential conflict of interest and should be removed as Dominion's counsel.

[16] The applicants also submit that the court should exercise its jurisdiction to hear and determine the application on its merits, rather than leaving the matter to be determined by way of challenge to the final orders of the Tribunal disposing of their accident benefit applications.

III. Legal principles

A. Jurisdiction

[17] In support of their submissions on jurisdiction, the applicants rely on the Court of Appeal decision in Yatar v. TD Insurance Meloche Monnex, 2022 ONCA 446 ["Yatar CA"], leave to appeal allowed, [2022] S.C.C.A. No. 310. In that case, the appellant brought an unsuccessful application before the Tribunal to determine whether she was statute-barred from challenging a denial of her claims for accident benefits under SABS. The appellant brought both an appeal and a judicial review application before the Divisional Court, challenging the Tribunal's decision.

[18] In its decision (reported at 2021 ONSC 2507;157 O.R. (3d) 337 (Div. Ct.)) ["Yatar DC"], the Divisional Court dismissed both the appeal and the judicial review application. At para. 24, the court noted that it had jurisdiction to hear the appeal on a question of law only: Licence Appeal Tribunal Act, 1999, S.O. 1999, c. 112, Sched. G ("LAT Act"), s. 11(6). The court found that there was no error of law and dismissed the appeal on that basis: Yatar DC, at para. 32.

[19] With respect to the judicial review application, the Divisional Court recognized that a statutory appeal on questions of law "does not deprive this court of jurisdiction to consider other aspects of a decision in judicial review proceedings": Yatar DC, at para. 36. However, the court decided to exercise its discretion to dismiss the judicial review application. In reaching that conclusion, the court considered the following factors:

a. The SABS statutory scheme, which included the Tribunal's exclusive jurisdiction at first instance over disputes under SABS and a statutory appeal right restricted to questions of law: at para. 41;

b. The availability of an adequate alternative remedy, the Tribunal's reconsideration power, that applied in that case (since the decision under review was a final decision) and provided an "internal standard of review that is akin to correctness": at paras. 38-39, 42-43;

c. The nature of the alleged errors in that case, being alleged errors on questions of fact or mixed fact and law involving assessment of the evidence: at para. 44; and

d. Systemic difficulties associated with duplicative judicial reviews and appeals: at para. 45.

[20] Weighing those factors, the Divisional Court concluded that "judicial review of a LAT SABS decision is only available, if at all, in exceptional circumstances." The court found that there were no exceptional circumstances and dismissed the judicial review application: at para. 46

[21] In Yatar CA, the Court of Appeal upheld the Divisional Court's decision and dismissed the appeal. In doing so, the court considered whether the Divisional Court erred in limiting judicial review to "exceptional circumstances" in cases where there has been a statutory appeal from a Tribunal decision about SABS: Yatar CA, at para. 27. The court expressed the view that the use of the language "exceptional circumstances" was unfortunate in that context but went on to indicate that "it would only be in rare cases that the remedy of judicial review would be exercised": Yatar CA, at para. 35. Put another way, "there would have to be something unusual about the case to warrant resort to the discretionary remedy of judicial review, given the [SABS] statutory scheme", which includes "the right to reconsideration of the Tribunal's preliminary decision and the statutory right of appeal from decisions of the Tribunal on questions of law": Yatar CA, at para. 42.

[22] At para. 44, the court rejected the submission that the Divisional Court erred by exercising its discretion to refuse relief without first considering the merits of the judicial review application. The Court of Appeal found that the "court's discretion with respect to judicial review applies both to its decision to undertake review and to grant relief", relying on previous case law that included Strickland v. Canada (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 37, [2015] 2 S.C.R. 713, at para. 42.

[23] At para. 45, the Court of Appeal went on to state as follows:

> I agree with the Divisional Court's approach, which essentially concluded that judicial review should be restricted to those rare cases where the adequate alternative remedies of reconsideration, together with a limited right of appeal, are insufficient to address the particular factual circumstances of a given case. What constitutes such a rare case is for the Divisional Court to determine on a case-by-case basis.

> It remains true that it will only be a rare case where the remedy of judicial review will be properly resorted to, given the alternative remedies that are available to an unsuccessful party. Those alternative remedies will be, in the vast majority of cases, "adequate in all the circumstances to address the applicant's grievance": Strickland, at para. 42.

[25] At para. 48, the court also found that the Divisional Court's use of the words "if at all" in exceptional circumstances was unfortunate and unnecessary, noting that in that context "judicial review is always available. The pertinent question is whether it is appropriate, in any given case, to exercise the discretion to hear and determine that judicial review."

[26] The applicants submit that the Divisional Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the judicial review of the Initial Decision, given that the alternative remedies of reconsideration and appeal are not available with respect to an interlocutory decision of the Tribunal: see Common Rules, r. 18.1; Penney v. The Co-operators General Insurance Company, 2022 ONSC 3874, 25 C.C.L.I. (6th) 305 (Div. Ct.), at para. 26[2]. There is no dispute that the Initial Decision is an interlocutory order, since it does not finally dispose of the underlying proceedings before the Tribunal or a substantive issue or claim in that proceeding: see Penney, at para. 6.

[27] There is also no dispute that the Divisional Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine this judicial review application, in its discretion: see Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1, ss. 2(1), 2(5), 6(1). The pertinent question is whether it is appropriate to exercise the discretion to hear and determine the judicial review in this case: Yatar CA, at para. 48.

B. Prematurity

[28] In support of their submission that this judicial review application should be dismissed as premature, the respondents rely on previous case law that provides that unless there are exceptional circumstances, the court will generally decline to consider an application for judicial review until the underlying tribunal proceeding has been completed. The rationale for this principle was summarized in Canada (Border Services Agency) v. C.B. Powell Limited, 2010 FCA 61, [2011] 2 F.C.R. 332, at paras. 31-32 (quoted with approval by the Court of Appeal for Ontario in Volochay v. College of Massage Therapists of Ontario, 2012 ONCA 541, 111 O.R. (3d) 561, at para. 69), as follows:

> Put another way, absent exceptional circumstances, courts should not interfere with ongoing administrative processes until after they are completed, or until the available, effective remedies are exhausted.
> This prevents fragmentation of the administrative process and piecemeal court proceedings, eliminates the large costs and delays associated with premature forays to court and avoids the waste associated with hearing an interlocutory judicial review when the applicant for judicial review may succeed at the end of the > administrative process anyway. Further, only at the end of the administrative process will a reviewing court have all of the administrative decision-maker's findings; these findings may be suffused with expertise, legitimate policy judgments and valuable regulatory experience. Finally, this approach is consistent with and supports the concept of judicial respect for administrative decision-makers who, like judges, have decision-making responsibilities to discharge. [Citations omitted.]

[29] The prematurity principle has been consistently applied by the Divisional Court on judicial review from interlocutory tribunal decisions and was recently summarized in Gill v. College of Physicians and Surgeons, 2021 ONSC 7549, at para. 31 (Div. Ct.), as follows:

> This court has repeatedly held that absent exceptional circumstances, applications for judicial review of decisions of administrative bodies should not be brought until the end of the tribunal's proceedings and after the party seeking review has exhausted all available effective remedies within the administrative scheme: Ontario College of Art v. Ontario (Human Rights Commission) (1993), 1993 CanLII 3430 (ON SCDC), 11 O.R. (3d) 798, 99 D.L.R. (4th) 738 (Div. Ct.). The rationale for this principle is to avoid a piecemeal approach to judicial review, to allow administrative matters to run their full course before the tribunal, and to have all legal issues arising from the proceeding considered together at their conclusion.

[30] Previous cases have also indicated that while courts may exercise their discretion to entertain a premature judicial review in "exceptional circumstances", that is a high bar to establish. As stated in C.B. Powell, at para. 33:

> Courts across Canada have enforced the general principle of non-interference with ongoing administrative processes vigorously. This is shown by the narrowness of the "exceptional circumstances" exception.... Suffice to say, the authorities show that very few circumstances qualify as "exceptional" and the threshold for exceptionality is high.... Concerns about procedural fairness or bias, the presence of an important legal or constitutional issue, or the fact that all parties have consented to early recourse to the courts are not exceptional circumstances allowing parties to bypass an administrative process, as long as that process allows the issues to be raised and an effective remedy to be granted.... [Citations omitted.]

> Thus, the general rule is that resort to the courts by way of judicial review of interlocutory, procedural or evidentiary rulings will only be permitted in rare cases where "exceptional circumstances" exist. The bar is very high. Assertions of bias, procedural unfairness, breach of natural justice and lack of jurisdiction do not give rise to an automatic right to judicial review. [Emphasis added.]

[32] As well, in Lourenco v. Hegedus, 2017 ONSC 3872 (Div. Ct.), at para. 6, the court stated that early judicial review "is the rare exception, not the rule, and will only be permitted in rare cases where the potential prejudice of the risk of repeating proceedings after review outweighs the prejudice to the general orderly processing of administrative proceedings without interruption until their conclusion" (emphasis added).

[33] Previous case law also indicated that it is not an exceptional circumstance that the tribunal hearing will need to be conducted again if the court ultimately overturns the tribunal's final decision. That possibility always exists in a premature judicial review and is generally outweighed by the benefits of allowing the tribunal proceeding to run its course. In Pafco Insurance Company v. Sahadeo, 2022 ONSC 328 (Div. Ct.), at paras. 13-14, the court emphasized that the potential for a successful appeal from the tribunal's final decision is insufficient to establish exceptional circumstances:

> Administrative tribunals make evidentiary rulings in the ordinary course of their work. The impact of those rulings is often potentially material. If this case does not offend the principle of prematurity, then appeals would be permitted in the ordinary course from interlocutory rulings – all a party would have to establish to interrupt the proceedings below is that the effect of the impugned ruling could matter to it in the final result, and that there is an arguable basis for the appeal. Permitting interlocutory appeals in this manner could render the underlying proceedings interminable.
> The appellant's submissions focus on the merits of its appeal. They do not address the jurisprudence as to what constitutes "exceptional circumstances" to overcome the prematurity principle. Having an arguable, even a strong, appeal is not sufficient to establish exceptional circumstances.
>

IV. Analysis and conclusion

[34] The applicants submit that the facts and circumstances of this matter make it one of the rare cases in which judicial review of an interlocutory decision should be permitted to proceed. They say that the absence of alternative remedies of reconsideration and appeal leave no alternative to a judicial review application that would be sufficient to address the unique circumstances of this case. They also submit that deferring review of the Initial Decision until the underlying Tribunal applications are determined may result in the need to rehear and redetermine five applications for three applicants, resulting in needless delay and inefficiency. The applicants also argue that the continuing improper commingling and sharing of information by Dominion and its counsel and the continued involvement of conflicted persons would result in irreparable prejudice to the applicants that may be averted by hearing and determining the early judicial review of the Initial Decision.

[36] When an applicant seeks early judicial review of an interlocutory administrative decision, the burden is on the applicant to justify departure from the usual approach of waiting until the underlying proceedings are complete. The bar to be met is a high one, whether expressed as a "rare case" or "exceptional circumstances". I have concluded that in either case, the applicant have not met that burden.

[37] Contrary to applicants' submission, this is not a case where the applicants have no effective alternative to early judicial review. It is true that at this stage the applicants have no access to reconsideration (Common Rules, s. 18.1) or appeal (LAT Act, s. 11(6); Penney, at para. 26), but that is part of the SABS statutory scheme, which is entitled to deference: Yatar CA, at paras. 42-45; Vavilov v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2019 SCC 65, [2019] 4 S.C.R. 653, at paras. 24, 36. Once the underlying Tribunal applications are complete, the applicants will have access to reconsideration and to an appeal (on a question of law), consistent with the statutory scheme. The applicants would also have access to judicial review, subject to the court's discretion in a "rare case" as outlined in Yatar CA, at paras. 45, 47.

[38] I am also not persuaded that early judicial review is justified in the interest of avoiding delay and inefficiency. As noted in Pafco, at para. 13, even if the impact of an interlocutory ruling is potentially material, that fact (if established) does not necessarily outweigh the benefits of allowing the underlying proceedings to run their course. While it is possible that a successful appeal may result in three Tribunal re-hearings in this case, I am not satisfied that result would outweigh the benefits of waiting until the underlying proceedings are complete before addressing the applicants' challenge to the Initial Decision. In fact, there may not be any need for subsequent court proceedings at all, depending on the outcome of the Tribunal applications.

[39] As well, I do not agree that the applicants would suffer irreparable prejudice if the issues of improper information sharing and conflict of interest are not determined in an early judicial review.

[40] In Penney, at para. 31, the court found that dismissal of a motion to remove insurer's counsel in SABS proceedings did not constitute "exceptional circumstances" in that case. The court went on to note as follows: "The Tribunal found that the factual basis to show a conflict of interest had not been made out. This is not a situation where there is a fatally flawed proceeding and where the alleged deficiencies cannot be cured on an ultimate appeal."

[41] The Divisional Court made a contrary finding in The Personal Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Jia, 2020 ONSC 6361 (Div. Ct.), where the court stated it was exercising its discretion to hear and decide an appeal from the Tribunal's interlocutory decision that found that insurer's counsel had a conflict of interest in acting in both a priority dispute and benefits dispute for the same accident. The court stated that it exercised its discretion to do so on the basis that the conflict decision "is evasive of appeal and it is potentially a matter of general practice important in proceedings before LAT": Jia, at para. 15.

[42] On the issue of whether a motion to remove counsel constitutes exceptional circumstances, the foregoing cases may be reconciled on the basis that in each case, the court exercised its discretion to determine whether, in the particular circumstances of the case, early judicial intervention outweighed the benefits of following the usual practice of allowing the Tribunal proceeding to run its course.

[43] In all the circumstances, I am not persuaded that the applicants have met the high bar required to justify early judicial review. Analogous to the decision in Penney, the Tribunal found in the Initial Decision that there was no conflict of interest and no improper sharing of information. To the extent that there are "alleged deficiencies" arising from the Initial Decision, the applicants have not established that they "cannot be cured on an ultimate appeal." Put another way, the applicants have not established that the alleged prejudice to the applicants outweighs the benefits of a single court proceeding once the underling Tribunal proceedings are complete.

V. Disposition

[44] Accordingly, I would dismiss the application for judicial review as premature.

[45] The parties have advised that they have resolved the issue of costs. Therefore, there will be no costs order.

MOTION DECISION

ADJUDICATOR: Theresa McGee, Vice-Chair

APPEARANCES:

For the Applicant: Ryan Naimark, Counsel

For the Respondent: Kadey B. Schultz, Counsel

Motion heard in writing and via videoconference on: August 24, 2022

BACKGROUND

[1] Murtaza Mansuri, Javid Mansuri, and Mohammad Mansuri ("the applicants") are brothers. Murtaza Mansuri was involved in two separate accidents, one on April 28, 2016, and the other on January 6, 2018. Javid Mansuri and Mohammad Mansuri were involved in an accident on May 4, 2018. Each of the applicants sought benefits pursuant to the applicable version of the Statutory Accident Benefits Schedule, *Effective September 1, 2010.[1]

[2] The applicants were denied certain benefits by the respondent, and they applied individually to the Licence Appeal Tribunal - Automobile Accident Benefits Service ("Tribunal"). The applicants currently have five applications before the Tribunal arising from the 2016 and 2018 accidents.

MOTION

[3] On March 1, 2022, the applicants filed a Notice of Motion concerning all five files. The Notice of Motion requested the following relief:

A. a declaration that the respondent and Schultz Frost LLP breached its duties of privacy and confidentiality owed to Murtaza Mansuri, Javid Mansuri and Mohammad Mansuri, respectively;

B. a declaration of a conflict of interest, or alternatively potential conflict of interest on the part of Schultz Frost LLP and Ms. Policelli in all three of the herein claimants' matters; and

C. an order that Schultz Frost LLP and Ms. Policelli are disqualified from handling the herein claimants' matters and that separate counsel and adjusters are required to handle each separate matter.

RESULT

[4] The applicants' motion is denied.

ANALYSIS AND REASONS

Request to amend Notice of Motion

[5] At the commencement of the oral motion hearing on August 24, 2022, the Tribunal invited supplementary submissions from the parties on the issue of whether the Tribunal has authority to grant declaratory relief. Oral argument was held down to give the parties time to address this issue.

[6] During the applicants' supplementary submissions, their counsel requested leave to amend their Notice of Motion, adding the following forms of relief to the existing request:

> D. an order removing Schultz Frost LLP as counsel for Travelers / The Dominion General Insurance Company of Canada, as a result of a conflict of interest and or a breach of privacy and confidentiality; and
> E. an order that Ms. Policelli be disqualified from adjusting and handling the accident benefits claims pertaining to Murtaza Mansuri, Javid Mansuri and Mohammad Mansuri as a result of a conflict of interest and/or a breach of privacy and confidentiality.

[9] First, the Tribunal has a duty to adjudicate matters justly, cost-effectively, and on their merits. The underlying applications range in case age from approximately 350 to 900 days. All adjudicative events pertaining to these matters have been stayed pending the result of this motion. Two oral hearings have been adjourned, and a third is scheduled to proceed within a month. Permitting the applicants to redefine the relief requested at this late stage in the motion proceedings would have necessitated further procedural accommodations to facilitate the respondent's full participation. This would have resulted in further and unacceptable delay to the underlying disputes.

[10] Second, the substance of the proposed amendments to the Notice of Motion would have changed little in the Tribunal's analysis. In his own submissions on the request to amend, counsel for the applicants characterized the changes to the requested relief as "semantic." I agree. Paragraphs D. and E. in the proposed Amended Notice of Motion essentially re-state paragraph C. in the original Notice of Motion. The applicants' requests for disqualification and/or removal of counsel and the adjuster are, in essence, the same relief expressed in different terms.

[11] Third, if the Tribunal were to find that it lacked jurisdiction to issue the declaratory relief sought, the proposed amendments would do little to preserve the applicants' request for a remedy. Merely omitting the word "declaration" does not change the substance of the remedy. However, as I explain below, I am satisfied that the Tribunal has the authority to disqualify counsel where a conflict of interest can be established. And although I am not satisfied that the Tribunal has the jurisdiction to disqualify the adjuster, it is not because the Tribunal cannot, in principle, make declarations related to an insurer's handling of an accident benefits claim. I explain my reasons for these findings below.

Jurisdiction to issue relief sought

[12] Relying on the Ontario Court of Appeal's decision in Stegenga v. Economical Mutual Insurance Company ("Stegenga")[2], the applicants submit that the Tribunal has broad jurisdiction under s. 280 of the Insurance Act, RSO 1990, c I.8. to adjudicate disputes in respect of entitlement to, or quantum of, statutory accident benefits.

[13] The applicants submit that the Tribunal's authority to grant the requested relief is implied in the Divisional Court case of The Personal Insurance Company v. Jia ("Jia").[3] In Jia, the court upheld a reconsideration decision in which the Tribunal disqualified the insurer's counsel whom it found to be in a conflict of interest.

[14] The applicants submit the relief they seek relates to a dispute under the Insurance Act and, therefore, falls within the Tribunal's jurisdiction. The applicants also refer me to the Tribunal's authority under the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, RSO 1990, c S.22 ("SPPA") to make orders with respect to the procedures and practices that apply in a proceeding, and to the Tribunal's authority under the Licence Appeal Tribunal Act, 1999, SO 1999, c 12, Sched G ("LAT Act") to determine all questions of fact or law that arise in matters before it.

[15] The respondent submits that there is no statutory or common law authority for the relief the applicants seek. The respondent submits that the Schedule is silent on any declaratory power or ability to make findings on conflicts of interest. Relying on Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company v. Ridi ("Ridi"),[4] the respondent submits that one cannot impute information into legislative provisions that is not expressed therein and cannot read findings into case law. The respondent submits that it is improper to infer from Jia that the Tribunal possesses disqualification powers.

[16] The respondent submits that the case of Raffaella de Rosa v. Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company ("de Rosa"),[5] demonstrates that no implied power to remove counsel for a conflict of interest exists. In de Rosa, the arbitrator found that the insurer's counsel had misused information, but no conflict of interest existed, and no disqualification order was made. The respondent submits that de Rosa supports its position that the appropriate remedy for improper information sharing is not removal of counsel, but an order that the parties comply with the prescribed process for the exchange of documents.

[17] The respondent also relies on the Tribunal's reconsideration decision in M.I. v. Coseco Insurance Company,[6] in which the Tribunal held that it lacks the jurisdiction to award declaratory relief when entitlement and quantum of benefits are not in issue. The respondent submits that there are no benefits in dispute that are tied to this motion, and that the applicants' request for relief cannot be characterized as falling within the scope of the Tribunal's jurisdiction. The respondent submits that the applicants are asking the Tribunal to make declarations akin to the "hypothetical" and "academic" issues which the Tribunal determined in *B.E. v The Personal Insurance Company and Ministry of the Ontario General (Ontario)[7] that it lacked the jurisdiction to decide.

Findings on the jurisdictional issue

[18] The Tribunal is a statutory body. It is well settled that a statutory tribunal has no powers other than those it derives from legislation. The Supreme Court of Canada has long held that the exclusive jurisdiction of a statutory tribunal is subject to the residual discretionary power held by courts.[8] Because the Tribunal lacks inherent equitable jurisdiction, any authority to grant equitable remedies (such as declaratory relief) must be provided for in legislation.

[19] I am persuaded by the applicants' submission that an order disqualifying counsel for a conflict of interest falls within the Tribunal's broad authority to decide disputes under s. 280 of the Insurance Act. In Stegenga, by which I am bound, the Court of Appeal held that the Tribunal has exclusive jurisdiction over a dispute if its "essential character" relates to entitlement to statutory accident benefits and their amount.[9] The Court also held that disputes involving an insurer's conduct in handling a claim satisfy this requirement.[10]

[20] This motion calls into question the respondent's handling of the applicants' claim, and I find that its essential character relates to a claim for accident benefits. I am unpersuaded by the respondent's submission that the Tribunal lacks the power to grant declaratory relief in this case because the motion itself does not involve determination of entitlement to or quantum of benefits. The underlying and ongoing disputes between the applicants and the respondent squarely engage questions of entitlement and quantum, and the outcome of this motion will impact the course of these underlying proceedings. The questions before me are neither hypothetical nor academic; they have direct bearing on the conduct of the litigation before this Tribunal.

[21] I find that no excess of jurisdiction would flow if I were to order the relief sought in this motion. The Divisional Court in Jia took no issue with the Tribunal's decision to remove counsel based on a conflict of interest. I am not persuaded by the respondent's submission that it is impermissible to "read in" findings to case law that are not explicitly expressed, or that the Court of Appeal's decision in Ridi stands for such a proposition. Ridi was a case about the principles of statutory interpretation and how ambiguity in legislative provisions should be resolved. The court's analysis in that case does not intersect with the jurisdictional issue before me. The inference the applicants ask me to draw from Jia is sound: If the Tribunal had exceeded its jurisdiction by declaring a conflict of interest and disqualifying counsel, the Divisional Court would have corrected that error when it directly addressed the matter on appeal.

[22] It is not enough to satisfy the basic common law requirement that a dispute has an essential character falling within the Tribunal's jurisdiction. The Tribunal's powers are subject to limits. Its orders must comport with its enabling legislation. The way an insurer staffs its claims is not a matter of Tribunal procedure or practice. As such, the Tribunal's power under s. 23 of the SPPA to make orders to control the conduct of its proceedings is not engaged. Compelling an insurer to remove a specific adjuster from handling a claim is not necessary or expedient for the Tribunal to carry out its duties, so the Tribunal's order-making authority under s. 3(2) of the LAT Act likewise does not apply. In the absence of statutory authority to make such an order, I find that the Tribunal lacks the power to disqualify an adjuster from handling a claim. If I am wrong about the scope of the Tribunal's authority, and the Tribunal does have the power to disqualify an adjuster under the SPPA and the LAT Act, I would decline to exercise that authority on substantive grounds, for reasons I explain below.

[23] The Schedule is not a complete code governing the relationship between insurers and insured persons. That relationship his also governed by private law obligations and legislative schemes outside this Tribunal's jurisdiction. The applicants submit that the alleged misconduct of the adjuster in this case could amount to civil liability for intrusion upon seclusion, a common law tort established by the Ontario Court of Appeal in the 2012 case, Jones v. Tsige.[11] They also submit that the respondent disclosed confidential information several weeks before obtaining authorization to do so under the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act, S.C. 2000, c. 5 ("PIPEDA").

[24] If the applicants believe that the adjuster's conduct constitutes a civil wrong, the appropriate forum to pursue a remedy is the civil courts, not this Tribunal. If the applicants maintain that the respondent has breached its obligations under PIPEDA, the federal Office of the Privacy Commissioner has jurisdiction to hear such a complaint.

[25] The Tribunal routinely adjudicates questions of insurer conduct under s. 10 of Regulation 664. If the applicants wish to pursue a remedy from the Tribunal, it is open to them to claim an award for unreasonable withholding or delay of benefits in the underlying proceedings.

[26] To conclude, the applicants have satisfied me that the Tribunal can disqualify counsel if it determines that a conflict of interest exists. Whether characterized as a "finding" or a "declaration," I find that an order disqualifying counsel is a permissible exercise of the Tribunal's authority to decide accident benefits disputes and make procedural orders in accordance with the Insurance Act, the LAT Act, and the SPPA. I further conclude that the Tribunal lacks the authority to bar an adjuster from handling a disputed accident benefits claim, or, in the alternative, that the facts before me do not warrant such an order.

The basis of the applicants' request for a remedy

[27] The applicants submit that the respondent has engaged in "deep, entrenched, pervasive and intentional" sharing, commingling, and reconciling of evidence between their claims files to defend itself and assess exposure for payment of benefits. In so doing, the applicants submit the respondent has breached its duty to keep their information private and confidential, and that their counsel's involvement in this information sharing constitutes disqualifying conduct.

[28] The applicants concede that it is not necessarily a conflict for the same counsel to act for an insurer in related accident benefits claims. Rather, they submit that the unique facts of this case give rise to a finding of impropriety.

Investigator and adjuster conduct

[29] The essential facts are undisputed. The applicants reside in a shared three-bedroom apartment. They share common areas including a kitchen, living room, bathroom, and den. Each brother has claimed accident benefits from the respondent separately. Both Murtaza Mansuri and Javid Mansuri have received attendant care and housekeeping/home maintenance services from personal support workers sourced by Pro Choice Medical Ltd. ("Pro Choice"). They have claimed reimbursement for those services. In the underlying proceedings, the parties dispute whether those expenses are payable.

[30] On October 8, 2021, the respondent's adjuster, Ms. Nikki Policelli, entered a log note in Javid Mansuri's file, which she was adjusting. The log note stated that she had spoken with the respondent's investigator, Ms. Sandra McSweeney, and advised her that the details submitted by Murtaza and Javid Mansuri in support of their attendant care and housekeeping claims appeared to show a "potential overlap in HH [housekeeping/home maintenance] and ATC [attendant care]" that the documentation on file had not clarified.

[31] On October 11, 2021, Ms. McSweeney sent two separate emails to the personal support workers at Pro Choice who had provided attendant care and housekeeping/home maintenance services to Murtaza and Javid Mansuri, respectively. The emails requested "additional information/clarification" on services provided to the brothers "at the same times on the same dates of service" including dusting, window cleaning, vacuuming, and disinfecting common areas.

[32] Ms. Policelli began adjusting Murtaza's claim (in addition to Javid's) on October 27, 2021. On November 3, 2021, Ms. Policelli entered a log note requesting that Ms. McSweeney send the results of her recent investigation into the expenses Murtaza and Javid Mansuri had claimed for attendant care and housekeeping/home maintenance "so that I can review and consider if payment is reasonable at this time." She asked that the results be sent "separately, of course."

[33] On December 8, 2021, the respondent submitted three Information Disclosure Request Forms seeking authorization to disclose claims information, investigation information, and personal information about the applicants in accordance with the PIPEDA. The forms set out the following rationale for the requests: "There is suspected duplication of proposed/submitted goods, services and benefits contrary to the applicable Statutory Accident Benefits Schedule (SABS)".

[34] On December 23, 2021, Cyprian Kebbianyor, Director, Compliance and Chief Privacy Officer with Travelers Canada emailed Ms. Sandra McSweeney stating, "The requests are approved. Based on my conversations with you and Nikki, I have deduced that you and Nikki perceive an attempt at contravening a law."

[35] The applicants submit that the respondent knew its inquiry into the "potential overlap" between Murtaza's and Javid Mansuri's attendant care and housekeeping/home maintenance claims was improper. They submit that Ms. McSweeney emailed Pro Choice separately on October 11, 2021 to "demonstrate to the claimants and ultimately paper its file in such a manner that the investigations were separate." They submit that Ms. Policelli's remark in the November 3, 2021 log note that the results of the investigation should be sent "separately, of course" demonstrates that she knew it was a breach of privacy and confidentiality to be reconciling the brothers' claim information, and did so surreptitiously. "She was tempted [to look at the contents of both files]," they submit, "and she actually did it." The applicants underscore that at the time Ms. Policelli began referring to both files in her log notes, she was only adjusting Javid Mansuri's claim, and not Murtaza's. They submit that when Ms. Policelli began jointly adjusting these two separate matters, she shared information between the files "without discretion."

[36] The respondent submits that there is nothing improper about its handling of the applicants' claims. It submits that the applicants gave express consent for it to collect, share, and disclose their information when they signed OCF-1s to apply for accident benefits.

[37] The respondent submits that its email correspondence with the personal support workers in October 2021 was an attempt to properly determine the amount of attendant care payable to Murtaza and Javid Mansuri. The respondent submits that there is nothing wrong with an adjuster entering log notes in a file they are not actively adjusting. It submits it is only obligated to notify a claimant when a new handling adjuster is assigned so the claimant knows who to correspond with.

The conduct of respondent's counsel

[38] The applicants submit that the improper sharing of information by the respondent has "infiltrated" not only its investigation and adjusting of their claims, but its defence of the claims in this litigation. On December 9, 2021, the applicants' then-counsel, Mr. Jordan Dahan, had a telephone conversation with Ms. Kadey Schultz, who had been recently retained to defend the respondent in all three brothers' Tribunal matters. Mr. Dahan gave evidence that during their conversation, Ms. Schultz explained to him that "establishing liability for payment for attendant care and housekeeping services was more complex and thus delayed in these claims […] because there were two personal support workers in the same residence, from the same attendant care company, providing similar attendant care and housekeeping services to Murtaza Mansuri and Javid Mansuri separately, but during the same times."

[39] Then, in a December 22, 2021 email to applicants' counsel about the scheduling of an examination under oath, Ms. Schultz's legal assistant referred to Javid and Murtaza's matters as the "companion matter[s]".

[40] On January 21, 2022, the respondent served productions on the applicants' counsel via email. The subject line of the letter was "Re: Dominion and Mansuri (Murtaza)(LAT)". Among the productions listed was the "Complete Surveillance file of Larrek Investigations". The surveillance file is not before me. However, the uncontested evidence of Mr. Dahan is that "[w]ithin the surveillance produced for Murtaza Mansuri, Schultz Frost LLP had served surveillance that was specifically attributable to Javid Mansuri, only. It was not that Javid Mansuri was merely captured in the surveillance. The surveillance was specifically for Javid Mansuri's separate matter."

[41] On January 21, 2022, the respondent's counsel sent email correspondence with the subject line "Dominion and Mansuri (Murtaza)(LAT)" requesting production of an Assessment of Attendant Care Needs ("Form 1") dated April 29, 2019. However, the Form-1 of that date was conducted in relation to Mohammad Mansuri, not Murtaza.

[42] The applicants submit that the disclosure of Javid Mansuri's surveillance within Murtaza Mansuri's matter and the request for Mohammad Mansuri's Form 1 in an email about Murtaza's matter demonstrate that Schultz Frost LLP had confused the evidence between the three separate matters due to their commingled handling.

[43] The respondent submits that it disclosed the complete surveillance file of Larrek Investigations in Murtaza Mansuri's matter to comply with a production order of the Tribunal. It submits that if surveillance of Javid Mansuri had been obtained in error, the respondent still had an obligation to produce the entire contents of the file. If surveillance was captured of the wrong claimant, then it simply has no bearing on the matter.

[44] The respondent submits that pooling information between claims is permissible to determine the proper amount of payment and to prevent, detect, and suppress fraud, through the consent obtained in the OCF-1. The applicants submit that there has been no allegation of fraud in this case and the respondent cannot now allege fraud with no evidence to support such an allegation. The respondent submits that its investigation is ongoing and the proper place to raise the issue of fraud is at a hearing on the merits.

Findings on the merits

[45] I agree with the respondent that the applicants gave consent for the respondent to use their file information as it has done when they signed OCF-1s to apply for accident benefits.

[46] The signature page of the respective OCF-1s signed by each of the three brothers as a condition of applying for accident benefits states:

> "I UNDERSTAND that you, and persons acting for you, will collect personal information and personal health information about me that is related to my claims for accident benefits […] and that all such information will be collected directly from me or from any other person with my consent.

>
> - Investigating my claims and processing my claims as required by law, including the Ontario Automobile Policy;
>
> - Obtaining or verifying information relating to my claims in order to determine entitlement and the proper amount of payment;
>
> - Preventing, detecting and suppressing fraud;
>
>
> I ALSO UNDERSTAND that you, and persons acting for you, may disclose this information to the following persons or organizations, who may collect and use this information only as reasonably necessary to enable you or them to carry out the purposes described above:
>
> […] insurance adjusters; […] health care professionals; […] solicitors; […] databases or registers used by the insurance industry to analyze and check information provided against existing information; […].
>
> I ALSO UNDERSTAND that you, and persons acting for you, may pool this information with information from other sources and may analyze this information for the limited purpose of preventing, detecting or suppressing fraud.
>
> I CONSENT […] to you collecting, using and disclosing this information in the manner described above, but no more of such information than is reasonably necessary to meet the legitimate purposes of such collection, use or disclosure.

I AM ALSO AWARE that you, and persons acting for you, may be required or permitted by law to disclose information to others without my knowledge or consent."

[47] I find that the emails of October 11, 2021 disclosed information to the applicants' personal support workers, who are health care professionals, for the purposes of investigating the applicants' claims and obtaining or verifying information to determine the proper amount of payment. The emails disclosed only as much information as was necessary for that purpose, including specific line items from the expense claims that appeared to overlap. The applicants expressly consented to this kind of disclosure in the OCF-1.

[48] I see no impropriety in Schultz Frost LLP's disclosure of surveillance capturing Javid Mansuri in relation to Murtaza Mansuri's matter. First, the disclosure was to a solicitor, a person authorized to receive disclosure under the OCF-1. Second, surveillance is not confidential personal health information. A claimant does not have a privacy interest in surveillance images or footage obtained in public areas.

[49] I accept the applicants' submission that Schultz Frost LLP's request for a Form-1 pertaining to one of the applicants in an email about another suggests that counsel may have confused the litigation files. However, no confidential information was disclosed in the January 21, 2022 email. In addition, I fail to see how references to the applicants' Tribunal matters as "related" or "companion matters" rises to the level of disqualifying conduct; even the applicants' submissions in support of this motion refer at paragraph 15 to the claims as "related."

[50] I find that the respondent's pooling of claim information between the applicants' files falls within the authorized scope of information sharing set out in the OCF-1. I am not persuaded that an insurer must formally allege or establish fraud to pool information with information from other sources and analyze it as described in the OCF-1. An insurer can legitimately engage in fraud prevention and detection without fraud ever having occurred. The use of the phrase "limited purpose" in the OCF-1 implies that an insurer cannot pool information from separate claims files gratuitously or for some improper purpose. However, if there is a reasonable basis to infer that fraud may be occurring or about to occur, then in my assessment the consent in the OCF-1 permits an insurer to collect, use, and disclose information as may be reasonably necessary to prevent, detect, and suppress it. Indeed, such pooling of information may assist an insurer in concluding that no fraud has taken place, permitting it to properly adjust the claim.

[51] In this case, Murtaza and Javid Mansuri submitted claims for expenses that, on their face, appeared to be potentially duplicative. Their invoices detailed similar services provided in common areas of their residence at the same times on the same days. In these circumstances, it was proper for the respondent to compare the documentation prepared by the service providers and to seek additional information from the applicants and their service providers to verify whether the amounts were payable. To be clear, I make no finding as to whether fraud has occurred in this matter. That is not a question I have been asked to decide, nor is it within my authority to make such a determination. However, the evidence before me is enough to satisfy me that the respondent has complied with its confidentiality obligations, and that the applicants consented to the information sharing that has taken place in this case.

[52] The applicants submit that the consent they provided in the OCF-1s does not bar them from advancing a claim for disqualification due to a conflict of interest. They submit that the use of information in a manner that would constitute a conflict of interest cannot be considered authorized under the OCF-1's broad language. On this point, they rely on Riley et al. v. Director of MVAC, et al. ("Riley")[12] and Dervisholli et al. and Cervenak and State Farm ("Dervisholli").[13]

[53] This case does not engage the same principles as Dervisholli and Riley. In both of those cases, the accident benefits claimant's consent to information sharing did not bar the disqualification of counsel because information and documentation was being shared for an unauthorized purpose: to defend the tortfeasor against the accident benefits claimant in the tort action.

[54] This is a critical distinction. In both Riley and Dervisholli, the insurer (or the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Fund acting as the "effective insurer" in the case of Riley) was in a conflict of interest because it was openly using documents and information obtained from the accident benefits claimant to defend a third-party tortfeasor in a separate tort action. The accident benefits claimants were under a duty of mandatory disclosure with respect to their personal health information, and the insurer's duty of good faith toward them conflicted with its duty to defend the tortfeasor. No such adverse position exists when counsel acts for an insurer defending related accident benefits claims.

[55] The applicants submit that the Divisional Court extended the principles from Dervisholli in Jia.[14] In Jia, the court upheld a Tribunal decision to disqualify the insurer's counsel who tendered transcript evidence that had been compelled in a priority dispute on behalf of the insurer in an accident benefits dispute. The respondent submits that the conflict in Jia arose in a setting where counsel had a "dual role" (acting in the priority dispute and in the accident benefits matter). The respondent submits that the concern about an insurer having dual or conflicting roles is absent in this case.

[56] Insofar as Jia extended the holding in Dervisholl, that extension was incremental and fact specific. The court declined to find, as a matter of law, that counsel acting for an insurer is necessarily in a conflict when acting for the same insurer in a priority dispute and an accident benefits matter arising from the same accident.

[57] The applicants submit that de Rosa dispenses with the notion that the OCF-1 authorizes information sharing between accident benefits files. However, the de Rosa case is distinguishable from the present one because the insurer was seeking to tender a medical report detailing confidential health information about one accident benefits claimant in an arbitration about the claimant's spouse, who had been in the same accident and had claimed accident benefits from the same insurer. The arbitrator found that the insurer's use of confidential information did not fall under the legitimate purposes set out in the consent in the OCF-1.

[58] In this case, the only disclosure of information was Ms. McSweeney's emails to the personal support workers in October 2021 itemizing the housekeeping services that appeared to be duplicative and naming one brother in correspondence regarding the other. Health practitioners are authorized recipients of disclosure in the OCF-1. I find that the disclosure was for the purpose of investigating and verifying the applicants' claims to determine the proper amount of payment and was therefore done with the consent of the applicants.

[59] The applicants submit that the respondent's own Access to Personal Information Policy prohibits the use of information except with consent or as required by law. The policy does little to assist the applicants, as the respondent's use of their information occurred with their express consent and in accordance with the law.

[60] The applicants submit that even if they gave consent in the OCF-1, consent is revocable. Mr. Dahan's affidavit evidence is that if the Tribunal finds that the applicants consented to the information sharing, they revoke that consent. While I accept that it is open to an accident benefits claimant to revoke his consent to information sharing, to do so would effectively constitute a withdrawal of a claim for accident benefits, as a completed and signed OCF-1 is a precondition for entitlement to statutory accident benefits under s. 32 of the Schedule.

[61] The applicants submit that the respondent's Information Disclosure Request Forms were approved in December 2021, and that the information sharing began as early as October 2021. I note that the Chief Privacy Officer was aware that the request was for the "ongoing" release of information, as this language is present in the rationale for all three requests. The applicant has not directed me to any legislative provision that requires authorization in advance for the use of information consented to in the OCF-1. In my view, the signed OCF-1 provides sufficient authorization for the respondent's handling of the applicants' information, and I am not satisfied that the disclosure justifies an order disqualifying an employee or agent of the respondent.

[62] The test for disqualifying conflict of interest is set out in MacDonald Estate v. Martin ("MacDonald Estate").[15] The legal principles animating that test do not apply to the present case. MacDonald Estate addresses the conflict that may arise when a lawyer, acting against a former client, uses confidential information obtained in the context of the solicitor-client relationship to the detriment of the former client. Here, there is no solicitor-client relationship between the applicants and the respondent's counsel. Unlike in Dervisholli, where counsel for the insurer failed to separate the insurer's interests in the tort and accident benefits matters, the principles that the Supreme Court attempted balanced when it articulated the two-part test for a conflict of interest in MacDonald Estate are not engaged here.

[63] The issue before me is whether the conduct of the respondent constitutes a breach of its duties of privacy and confidentiality warranting the disqualification of its adjuster and counsel. The applicants have not established, on a balance of probabilities, a factual and legal basis for the relief they seek.

ORDER

[64] The applicants' motion is denied. The respondent's counsel may continue to act in the five underlying Tribunal matters. All adjudicative events that had been stayed pending the outcome of this motion may proceed as scheduled.

OTHER PROCEDURAL MATTERS

[65] If the parties resolve the issue(s) in dispute prior to the hearings in these matters, the applicants shall immediately advise the Tribunal in writing.

APPEARANCES:

For the Applicant: Michael Bishop, Counsel

For the Respondent: Oliver Gorman-Asal, Counsel

Genevieve Madill, Articling Student

November 17, 2021 and January 5, 2022

Motion heard via Teleconference on:

BACKGROUND

[1] The applicant was injured in an automobile accident on December 4, 2020 and sought benefits pursuant to the Statutory Accident Benefits Schedule Effective September 1, 2010.

[2] The applicant was denied certain benefits and submitted an application to the Licence Appeal Tribunal - Automobile Accident Benefits Service ("Tribunal").

[3] A case conference has been scheduled for August 25, 2022.

MOTION

[4] On October 6, 2021, the applicant filed a Notice of Motion requesting that the Tribunal;

i. Compelling the respondent to provide particulars clarifying the statement made by Rebecca McPhee, Claims Representative, made in the email correspondence dated September 22, 2021.

[5] On November 15, 2021, the applicant filed a reply to the respondent's motion materials and requested the Tribunal grant the following relief:

ii. Exclude Heather Morrow from the motion and disregarding the motion material purportedly served by the respondent on applicant and the Tribunal dated November 8 ,2021.

Applicant's Position

[6] The applicant submits further particulars are required regarding Ms. McPhee's comments and the Job Site Analysis Report dated August 30, 2021. The particulars are required because the rationale for denying the applicant's ongoing claim for income replacement benefits is unclear. These particulars are necessary not only to permit the applicant to know the case to meet, but for the Tribunal to have a full and satisfactory understanding of the issues in dispute.

[7] The applicant further submits that Ms. Morrow should be excluded from making submissions at this motion hearing pursuant to s. 23(3) of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act ("SPPA")[1]. The applicant submits Ms. Morrow is providing legal services, but is not licensed by the law society and not subject to sanction as a licensee. Similarly, Ms. Morrow is an employee of the insurance company, not a party pursuant to Rule 2.16 of the Tribunal's Common Rules of Practice & Procedure ("Rules").

Respondent's Position

[8] The respondent submits it will consent to provide further particulars regarding Ms. McPhee's comments in the email correspondence dated August 30, 2021. However, the respondent will only provide this information if the particulars do not constitute an additional or subsequent denial. Regardless, this relief is improperly plead and should otherwise by a request for reasons pursuant to s. 38(8) of the Schedule, relating to medical and other reasons. This issue goes to the heart of the denial at issue and is part of the factual inquiry undertaken by the hearing adjudicator, not on a preliminary procedural motion. In the alternative, the request for particulars should be argued at the case conference.

[9] Ms. Morrow is the claims representative assigned to this file. Her appearance is akin to a self-represented litigant pursuant to Rule 6.7. She is not a witness and her exclusion from this motion hearing has no basis in law. To deny her ability to appear would result in an absurdity and would result in a negative precedent to set regarding self-represented litigants.

RESULT

Particulars

[10] The applicant's motion for further particulars is denied at this stage.

[11] As per Rule 2.15 particulars are specific facts that clarify an allegation or assertion or provide additional information about a person's statement.

[12] The statement made by Ms. McPhee regarding the Job Site Analysis Report goes to the very heart of the denial of income replacement benefits at issue. Whether or not there is a contradiction in this statement versus the medical and other reasons provided in the denial of this benefit is a factual issue that shall be determined at the hearing.

[13] Any evidence regarding this alleged contradictory statement shall be addressed during the potential hearing of this matter. The respondent has made a tactical decision at this stage to rely solely on the previous denial. For me to otherwise compel the respondent to provide this information at this stage may fetter the discretion of the hearing adjudicator. Only the hearing adjudicator may make a ruling regarding this issue, as only they will have the benefit of the full panoply of evidence tendered by both parties.

Exclusion of Ms. Morrow

[14] This issue is largely moot, as respondent counsel has now been retained and Ms. Morrow did not appear at continuation of this motion hearing on January 5, 2021. However, the applicant was unwilling to withdraw this form of relief in order to obtain direction from the Tribunal.

[15] I do not find that Ms. Morrow is a self-represented individual as the respondent submits. She appeared without counsel and as the ADR Alternative Dispute Resolution ("ADR") Representative for her employer BelairDirect Insurance Company.

[16] In response to the Applicant's Notice of Motion, Ms. Morrow filed a Notice of Motion in response, or a Cross-Motion dated November 8, 2021. While this Notice of Motion did not contain legal argument, she did appear on this motion and would have been required to respond to the legal arguments posed by the applicant.

[17] Ms. Morrow is not legal counsel, nor is she bound by membership in the Law Society of Ontario. My concern regarding her attendance at the previous Motion Hearing was that she would be expected to provide a response to the legal arguments and case law provided by the applicant. In my opinion, this strays into the realm of providing legal services on behalf of her employer. That is precisely why this matter was adjourned for her to provide further submissions on this very issue.

[18] ADR representatives regularly appear without counsel at case conferences pursuant to Rule 14 of the Tribunal Rules. Case conferences often involve settlement discussions and case management. They are not procedural motions where points of law are argued. Ms. Morrow is not a 'representative' as defined in Rule 2.20, as she is not licensed under the *Law Society Act[2], thus, pursuant to s. 23(3) of the SPPA, she could be excluded as not being competent to represent or advise the BelairDirect at this motion hearing.

[19] Rule 26.1 of the Law Society Act states that no person other than a licensee shall practice law or provide legal services in Ontario. In my view, stretching the liberal interpretation of the Rules and the SPPA to permit Ms. Morrow and other ADR representatives to provide legal services is contrary to Rule 26.1. Permitting unlicensed parties to provide legal services could also result in procedural unfairness parties pursuant to Rule 3.1(a) of the Tribunal Rules.

[20] Overall, it is my view that sophisticated parties like BelairDirect shall ensure that any person providing legal services before the Tribunal is licensed to do so. Otherwise, it runs the risk of exclusion of representatives from Tribunal proceedings pursuant to Rule 2.20 of the Rules and s. 23(3) of the SPPA.

[22] This matter remains scheduled for a case conference on August 25, 2022 at 9:00 am via teleconference.

[23] If the parties resolve the issue(s) in dispute prior to the hearing, the applicant shall immediately advise the Tribunal in writing.

REASONS FOR DECISION ON PREMATURITY OF APPLICATION

Overview

[1] The Applicant, Sudbury and District Health Unit, operating as Public Health Sudbury & District, applies for judicial review of the grievance arbitration decision of Arbitrator Robert J. Herman (the "Arbitrator") dated June 7, 2022 ("the Decision").[1] The Arbitrator determined that the Applicant engaged in prima facie discrimination when it denied the grievor's request for an exemption for failing to comply with the Applicant's COVID-19 Vaccination Policy which required the grievor to get vaccinated. The Arbitrator made this determination on the basis that the grievor was entitled to an exemption from the Policy based on the protected ground of creed, pursuant to the Human Rights Code, R.S.O. 1990, c. H.19 (the "Code").

[2] In addition to the individual grievance, the Respondent also filed a policy grievance challenging the Policy. The parties agreed that the initial question for determination by the Arbitrator was whether or not the grievor was prima facie discriminated against on the basis of creed. The parties agreed to bifurcate this issue from the other issues raised by the grievances before the Arbitrator. The Arbitrator accepted the parties' agreement and after a hearing, rendered the Decision determining the prima facie discrimination issue.

[3] In its application, the Applicant requests an order quashing and setting aside the Decision and an order that the Applicant did not prima facie discriminate against the grievor. The Applicant submits that the grievor's refusal to get vaccinated did not have a nexus to or was not rooted in her religion. It submits that the Arbitrator failed to apply the correct legal test for establishing a prima facie case of discrimination on the basis of creed under the *Human Rights Code ("*the Code"). The Applicant further submits that the Decision was not justified in relation to the law and facts that constrained the Arbitrator and was not based on an internally coherent and rational chain of analysis.

[4] The decision being reviewed does not finally resolve all issues before the Arbitrator. The next phase of the arbitration will address whether the Applicant is able to accommodate the grievor without undue hardship. Depending on the response to that question the Arbitrator will then be asked to determine the appropriate remedy or will be asked to consider the broader challenge to the overall reasonableness of the vaccination policy.

[5] Neither party raised the issue of prematurity at the hearing, and both parties evidently wished to proceed with the application. After hearing the argument and upon considering this matter, the Court requested that the parties make submissions in writing on whether the application for judicial review was premature.

[6] In its written submissions, the Applicant argues that the application should not be dismissed as premature. The Respondent submits that the application is premature.

[7] For the reasons set out below, I have concluded that there are no extraordinary or exceptional circumstances to justify departing from the Divisional Court's usual approach restricting judicial review to final decisions. The application should be dismissed for prematurity.

Submissions on Prematurity

[8] The Applicant submits that the following factors weigh in favour of determining that the instant application should not be dismissed as premature:

> a. Although it may be characterized as interim or interlocutory insofar as it was rendered prior to the completion of the proceedings before the Arbitrator, the Decision nevertheless determined a particular (and central) issue raised by the Individual Grievance, namely, whether or not the grievor was prima facie discriminated against on the basis of creed. The determination of this issue is finally dispositive of a substantive right arising under the Code. Accordingly, the Decision fully and finally disposes of a substantive defence that the Applicant may raise to the Individual Grievance.
> b. Given the nature of the issues raised by the grievances and the impact of the determination of the discrimination issue on any subsequent litigation between the parties, the proceedings before the Arbitrator were bifurcated at a natural and practical break between separate phases of the proceedings. This bifurcation was the product of an agreement between the parties, which the Arbitrator accepted and applied. This kind of bifurcation does not raise the same concerns with respect to the undue fragmentation of proceedings that the doctrine of prematurity is intended to curtail.
> c. The proceedings before the Arbitrator have not been substantially delayed by this application, which proceedings the parties have held in abeyance pending the resolution of the application.
>
> d. The application has already been scheduled and heard relatively expeditiously.
>
> e. It makes good labour relations and economic sense to deal with the application for judicial review at this point in the proceedings. The prompt resolution of the application will guide the parties in determining the course of any subsequent related litigation between them, and may avert complex and costly litigation that would otherwise prove unnecessary. Further, given the nature of the issue that it addresses and its general applicability to cases involving exemptions or refusals to comply with COVID-19 vaccination policies on the Code-protected ground of creed, the Arbitrator's ruling has broad implications not only for the immediate parties, but for other employers and unions throughout the province who are or may be faced with similar issues.
> f. Neither party raised the issue of prematurity, and both parties evidently wished to proceed with the application, which has now already been heard. It would be wasteful not to determine the application in the circumstances.
>
> g. The Applicant submits that it has made out a strong case that the Decision was incorrect or unreasonably decided.

Analysis

[9] A finding of prima facie discrimination means that the claimant has satisfied its initial evidentiary burden. It is not a final determination that discrimination has actually occurred-such a determination is made only after the Employer has called evidence about whether it could accommodate the claimant without undue hardship: As the Arbitrator properly recognized, to demonstrate prima facie discrimination, complainants are required to show that they have a characteristic protected from discrimination under the Code; that they experienced an adverse impact with respect to the service; and that the protected characteristic was a factor in the adverse impact. Once a prima facie case has been established, the burden shifts to the Employer to justify the conduct or practice, within the framework of the exemptions available under human rights statutes. If it cannot be justified, discrimination will be found to occur. (Moore v British Columbia (Education), 2012 SCC 61, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 360 at para 33.)

> a. Whether the Employer could have accommodated the grievor without undue hardship;
>
> b. If the Arbitrator finds that the Employer could have accommodated the grievor, there then is the issue of remedy to be determined;
> c. If the Arbitrator finds that the Employer could not have accommodated the grievor, the Respondent will be proceeding with the grievance challenging the reasonableness of the vaccine policy itself.

Judicial Review is a Discretionary Remedy Reserved for Final Decisions absent Exceptional or Extraordinary Circumstances

[11] The courts have long been reluctant to entertain judicial review applications unless the decision being reviewed is final and the underlying administrative proceeding is completed. Only in exceptional or extraordinary circumstances will the court interfere with a proceeding midstream. Federal and provincial appellate courts have affirmed this approach, confirming that parties generally only have recourse to the court system once a final decision has been rendered and after all adequate remedial recourses in the administrative process have been exhausted. (C.B. Powell Limited v. Canada (Border Services Agency), 2010 FCA 61 (CanLII); Wilson v. Construction and Allied Workers (Labourers' International Union of North America, Local 607), 2008 CanLII 6522 (ON LRB), reviewed on other grounds 2016 SCC 29; Volochay v. College of Massage Therapists of Ontario, 2012 ONCA 12.)

[12] The Ontario Court of Appeal has explained in Volochay that the rationale for limiting judicial review to final decisions is to avoid fragmentation of the administrative process and a piecemeal approach to litigation. Fragmentation causes both disruption and delay to administrative proceedings. At para. 69, the Court quoted Stratas J.A. who summarized the rationales for the principle in C.B.Powell at paras.31-32:

> [69] …Put another way, absent exceptional circumstances, courts should not interfere with ongoing administrative processes until after they are completed, or until the available, effective remedies are exhausted. This prevents fragmentation of the administrative process and piecemeal court proceedings, eliminates the large costs and delays associated with premature forays to court and avoids the waste associated with hearing an interlocutory judicial review when the applicant for judicial review may succeed at the end of the administrative process anyway. Further, only at the end of the administrative process will a reviewing court have all of the administrative decision-maker's findings; these findings may be suffused with expertise, legitimate policy judgments and valuable regulatory experience. Finally, this approach is consistent with and supports the concept of judicial respect for administrative decision-makers who, like judges, have decision-making responsibilities to discharge. [Citations omitted.] (Volochay v. College of Massage Therapists of Ontario, 2012 ONCA 541 at paras. 68-69).

Extraordinary or Exceptional Circumstances

[13] A significant body of case law has developed on what constitutes "exceptional or extraordinary" circumstances such that the court will exercise its discretion to hear a judicial review application on an interlocutory decision. Those decisions confirm that such discretion is exercised sparingly and that exceptions are "most rare." (Wilson v. Construction and Allied Workers (Labourers' International Union of North America, Local 607), 2008 CanLII 6522 (ON LRB) at para 33, reviewed on other grounds 2016 SCC 29.)

[15] The court has exercised its discretion to judicially review an interlocutory decision in situations where there is real unfairness through a denial of natural justice and/or where a remedy later would not cure the unfairness. For example, in Gage v Ontario (Attorney General), the Court exercised its discretion to hear a judicial review, finding that the underlying decision was so unfair that it represented an exceptional circumstance. In that case, Gage, a police constable, was not notified for ten months about the decision to forward allegations against him to a Board of Inquiry, despite a requirement that he be advised "forthwith." The court noted that "if there is a prospect of real unfairness through denial of natural justice or otherwise, a superior court may always exercise its inherent supervisory jurisdiction to put an end to the injustice before all the alternative remedies are exhausted…the unfairness in this case is so obvious that it would be inappropriate to put the officer through a trial before a tribunal that lost jurisdiction through a denial of natural justice.(Gage v. Ontario (Attorney General), 1992 CanLII 8517 (ON SCDC) at para. 61).

[16] Similarly, where the College of Physicians and Surgeons failed to give notice of a complaint to the respondent physician and then did not deal with the complaint for more than four and a half years, the court exercised its discretion to hear the judicial review even though the substance of the complaint had not yet been adjudicated. (McIntosh v College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, 998 CanLII 19444 (ON SCDC)).

> In rare cases this court will intervene on an application for judicial review in the midst of an administrative process where there are strong reasons to believe that the ongoing process is so deeply flawed that there is a strong likelihood that it will have to be run over again, usually on the basis of bias, reasonable apprehension of bias or want of jurisdiction. This does not mean that judicial review is available before the conclusion of administrative proceedings in any case where an allegation of this kind is made. It must be emphasized that early judicial review is the rare exception, not the rule, and will only be permitted in rare cases where the potential prejudice of the risk of repeating proceedings after review outweighs the prejudice to the general orderly processing of administrative proceedings without interruption until their conclusion. Analogies can be drawn to criminal prosecutions where it is very rare indeed for a proceeding to be interrupted for judicial review or appeal prior to

[18] There is no suggestion in this case that the process is deeply flawed, or that a breach of natural justice or real unfairness would occur if the judicial review was not heard. Instead, the Applicant sets out a number of submissions the court should consider, none of which amount to exceptional or extraordinary circumstances.

Final Disposition

[19] The Applicant argues that where a decision finally disposes of a substantive right, even if the decision is interlocutory, the judicial review is not premature and the court ought to hear the application. In this case, the Arbitrator's decision is not dispositive of a substantive right—it determined that the grievor met the initial onus of proving that the Applicant prima facie discriminated against her. It does not find in fact that the grievor was discriminated against since it remains to be determined that the Applicant could not have accommodated the grievor short of undue hardship.

[20] The Applicant relies upon the Court's decision in Ackerman v Ontario Provincial Police, 2010 ONSC 910 ("Ackerman") in arguing that the final disposition of a substantive right may be subjected to judicial review. Ackerman relies upon Canada (Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness) v. Kahlon (2005), 2005 FC 1000 (CanLII) ("Kahlon".) Those decisions clarify that in circumstances where a decision finally disposes of a substantive right and there is no way to remedy the loss of that right in the future, the court may exercise its discretion to hear the judicial review application before the end of the whole proceeding. Kahlon challenged the issuance of a summons for a witness' immigration file. The court in that case found that the application was not premature because the decision finally disposed of the witness' rights once her privacy was lost, it could not be regained— and there was no way to cure the breach of her rights in the future.

[21] The court in Ackerman referred to Kahlon as an example of when judicial intervention may be warranted, explaining that "where the decision, although interlocutory in most respects, determines a particular issue (as in Canada (Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness) v. Kahlon (2005), 2005 FC 1000 (CanLII), 35 Admin L.R. (4th) 213 (FC) in which the summons issued would be dispositive of the witnesses' privacy rights."(Ackerman v. Ontario Provincial Police, 2010 ONSC 910 at para 19).

[22] This is distinguishable from the facts in this case. The Arbitrator does not finally dispose of any substantive rights. Additionally, there is no need for the court to intervene early because the rights at issue can be remedied in the event a future judicial review application finds that the Decision was unreasonable or incorrect.

Bifurcation

[23] The Applicant suggests that because the hearing was bifurcated at a natural break between separate phases of the hearing, it does not raise the same concerns with respect to fragmentation and delay. The case law does not support this argument. While the Federal Court of Appeal has recognized that decisions bifurcated between the merit and remedy phases of a hearing may not raise the same concerns about fragmentation, it explicitly contrasts that with the situation where the hearing is bifurcated on the merits. (Wilson v. Construction and Allied Workers (Labourers'

International Union of North America, Local 607), 2008 CanLII 6522 (ON LRB) at para. 36, reviewed on other grounds 2016 SCC 29.)

[24] Even where the only remaining issue is remedy, the court is often loathe to intervene, finding that the question of remedy should be determined before recourse is made to the Divisional Court. (Air Canada v. Canadian Union of Public Employees, Air Canada Component, 2020 ONSC 847 (CanLII); Jones Lang Lasalle Real Estate Services Inc. v Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario and Brian Graff, 2015 ONSC 4005 (CanLII)).

[25] In this case, the decision in question is clearly "in the middle of the hearing on the merits". There are multiple issues remaining to be determined and there is a real risk of fragmentation and piecemeal litigation if the court proceeds with the application at this time.

Delay

[26] The courts have expressed concern that proceeding with judicial review applications filed on interlocutory decisions will create delays in both the administrative and judicial legal systems. While the Applicant argues that proceedings before the Arbitrator have not been substantially delayed, it has already been almost a year since his first decision was released. If the Applicant is successful, the parties will need to return to the Arbitrator, make new submissions on the issue of prima facie discrimination, and wait for his decision before proceeding to the next phase of the hearing, leading to further delay. In addition, concerns about delay are not restricted to delay in a particular proceeding, but are broader in their impact to administrative proceedings in general. (Air Canada v. Lorenz (T.D.), 1999 CanLII 9373 (FC) at para. 25).

> [14] The third consideration is delay. As in the Lorenz decision, (see paras. 24- 25), the delay consideration extends beyond the parameters of this case. If the matter does not proceed, we are inviting other parties in other cases to seek delay by alleging bias or other breaches of natural justice. In such circumstances, we would thus run the risk of reducing fundamental concerns running to the heart of the administration of justice such as bias to an "off ramp" from a statutorily mandated process when the proceeding is not going well for one of those parties.

[28 The court has been clear about its concern that premature judicial review applications may lead to delay in both the individual case and the system as a whole. The Applicant's suggestion that there has not been substantial delay is not persuasive.

Need to Avert Costly and Complex Litigation

[29] The Applicant submits that resolution of this application will avert costly and complex litigation that would otherwise prove unnecessary. Resolution of this application does not resolve the outstanding issues before the Arbitrator. In addition, the court has been clear that this is not an exceptional circumstance that would lead it to hear a judicial review application on an interlocutory decision. For example, in Allstate Insurance Company v Billard 2019 ONSC 6265, the applicant argued that costs and time would be saved by hearing the judicial review because the expense and inconvenience of a full-blown hearing could be avoided. In denying the application, the court noted that "the possibility of cost savings by a fragmented hearing or a bifurcated trial is routinely the basis asserted for the strategic decision to ask for a review or appeal of a preliminary decision. That does not qualify as exceptional. Moreover, the potential costs-savings rationale has been routinely rejected by courts on both policy and factual bases." (Allstate Insurance Company v Billard), 2019 ONSC 6265 at paras. 13 and 14).

[30] Similarly, in Bannis v Ontario College of Pharmacists, 2020 ONSC 6115, the applicant argued that if she was successful on judicial review, the need for the balance of the hearing would be avoided. This argument was rejected as not being an exceptional circumstance and the Court dismissed the application for judicial review on the grounds of prematurity. (Bannis v Ontario College of Pharmacists 2020 ONSC 6115 at para. 7).

Broad Implications of Arbitrator's Decision

[31] I am not persuaded by the Applicant's submission that the application should be heard because of its broad implications to cases involving exemptions or refusals to comply with COVID-19 vaccination policies on the *Cod*e-protected ground of creed. As Stratas JA was quoted in Volochay at paras. 68-69 as set out above, one of the rationales for limiting judicial review to final decisions is that it is only at the end of the administrative process that a reviewing court will have all of the administrative decision-maker's findings; these findings may be suffused with expertise, legitimate policy judgments and valuable regulatory experience.

[32] These are important considerations for an application which may have broad implications and support that this application for judicial review is premature.

Not to Determine the Application Is Wasteful, Given That It Has Already Been Heard

[33] The issue of the prematurity of the application should have been brought to the court's attention at the outset of the hearing. The fact that the application was argued without the issue being raised does not make this an exceptional or extraordinary circumstance.

The Strength of the Case

[34] The court has not typically considered the strength of the case in determining whether to quash an application for prematurity. This is a factor that is considered rarely and only in cases where there are allegations of a breach of natural justice—particularly when allegations of bias are raised. Where the court is being asked to determine whether a particular breach of natural justice rises to an "exceptional" circumstance, the court may consider whether it is "clear and obvious" that the application will be successful. (Unimac-United Management Corp. v St. Clare's-Monaco Place, 2015 ONSC 4760 (CanLII) at paras. 16 and 17.)

[35] In the present case, there is no question of a breach of natural justice. The Applicant is seeking review of a singular issue raised during a hearing on the merits of the grievance.

Conclusion

[36] There are no extraordinary or exceptional circumstances to justify departing from the Divisional Court's usual approach restricting judicial review to final decisions. The application is dismissed for prematurity without prejudice.

Costs

[37] Given that the issue of prematurity was raised by the court, the parties shall each bear their own costs.

DECISION

D.L. Corbett J.:

[1] The respondent Chief of Police moves to quash this application for judicial review on the grounds that it is premature. For the reasons that follow, the motion is granted and the application for judicial review is quashed.

[2] The applicant is a police officer. He faces allegations of misconduct under the Police Services Act.[1] Those allegations will be heard in the Toronto Police Service Tribunal. The hearing was scheduled for 13 days starting in October 2016.

[3] The applicant moved to have the Hearing Officer, Inspector Richard Hegedus, recuse himself on the grounds of reasonable apprehension of bias and lack of jurisdiction because of defects in Inspector Hegedus' designation to hear the matter. The hearing dates were vacated and the recusal motion was heard. Inspector Hegedus released his decision on March 3, 2017, dismissing the recusal motion and finding that he was lawfully designated to hear the allegations against the applicant.

[4] The applicant commenced an application for judicial review to challenge the decision of Inspector Hegedus on the recusal and jurisdiction motion. The Chief of Police moves to quash that application on the basis of prematurity.

General Principles

[5] Generally, judicial review is not available until an administrative process has run its course, including any administrative appeals and reviews. This general approach conserves judicial resources and leads to more timely resolution of administrative proceedings.

[6] In rare cases this court will intervene on an application for judicial review in the midst of an administrative process where there are strong reasons to believe that the ongoing process is so deeply flawed that there is a strong likelihood that it will have to be run over again, usually on the basis of bias, reasonable apprehension of bias or want of jurisdiction. This does not mean that judicial review is available before the conclusion of administrative proceedings in any case where an allegation of this kind is made. It must be emphasized that early judicial review is the rare exception, not the rule, and will only be permitted in rare cases where the potential prejudice of the risk of repeating proceedings after review outweighs the prejudice to the general orderly processing of administrative proceedings without interruption until their conclusion. Analogies can be drawn to criminal prosecutions where it is very rare indeed for a proceeding to be interrupted for judicial review or appeal prior to the conclusion of the proceeding.

Bias Allegations

[7] It is a very rare case in which this court will interrupt proceedings on this basis. This allegation is easily made, can be made multiple times during a proceeding, and seldom succeeds. If interlocutory appeals or judicial reviews on this ground were permitted generally, proceedings would be at risk of interruption at the instance of one party with inevitable delays of months or years before resumption of proceedings, with consequent risk to the integrity of the trial process itself.

[8] In this case the record does not establish a strong likelihood that the allegations of reasonable apprehension of bias will succeed. I consider that the prejudice to the general orderly processing of administrative proceedings far outweighs the prejudice from the risk that the 13 day disciplinary proceeding might have to be held again.

Designation of Inspector Hegedus

[9] Inspector Hegedus has been designated a police complaints officer, authorized by the Chief of Police to hear police complaints such as the allegations against the applicant. Inspector Hegedus works full-time in this capacity and generally hears complaints that are not expressly assigned to another person by the Chief of Police, subject to his scheduling constraints. When Inspector Hegedus is not available to hear a complaint that has not been assigned to a specific person, then that matter is assigned to a part-time complaints officer.

[10] The applicant argues that the Police Services Act, s.94(1), requires that the Chief of Police expressly assign each hearing to a particular person. Thus, the applicant argues, the administrative practice that is currently in place does not comply with the requirements of the Act. In the result, the applicant argues, Inspector Hegedus has not been designated lawfully to hear the complaint against the applicant, and, without that designation, has no jurisdiction to proceed.

[11] This challenge could be overcome, of course, if the Chief of Police specifically designated Inspector Hegedus to hear this case. He has not, to this point, done so. I infer from this circumstance that the Chief of Police stands by the current administrative framework.

[12] This situation is analogous to MRS Sciences Inc. v. Ontario (Securities Commission), 2015 ONSC 6317, aff'd 2017 ONCA 279. In that case the Ontario Securities Commission scheduled a sanctions hearing before a differently constituted panel than the tribunal that had decided liability issues. Jurisdiction was challenged and the Commission ruled that the sanctions hearing panel was constituted properly. Challenge was brought to this court but was quashed as premature: MRS Sciences Inc. v. Ontario (Securities Commission), 2012 ONSC 7198. The sanctions hearing then proceeded to a conclusion and the issue of the constitution of the sanctions hearing panel was raised again and decided on the merits by the Divisional Court. The Divisional Court concluded that the Commission's interpretation of its home statute was entitled to deference and that the constitution of the sanctions panel was reasonable. The Court of Appeal agreed.

[13] I appreciate that there is a legislative distinction between MRS and the instant case. The Securities Act, RSO 1990, c. S.5, s.9(1) provides only for appeals from "final orders". Swinton J., for the court in MRS, noted, however, that notwithstanding this provision, judicial review could be available in exceptional cases:

> The application for judicial review is premature. This Court has repeatedly refused to hear an application for judicial review of an interlocutory decision of an administrative tribunal. It has exercised its discretion to do so in exceptional cases but none exist here.

[14] In my view the same principle applies in the case before me. This is not an exceptional case, and review in this court should not take place until the administrative process has run its course. The issue of the propriety of the system generally used to assign police complaint cases can be addressed on judicial review at the end of the administrative process if any party wishes to challenge the final result of that process. Further, like in MRS, the interpretation of the Act by the Chief of Police in this context is entitled to deference, and on its face seems reasonable: I do not consider there to be a strong likelihood that the process under which Inspector Hegedus has been designated will be found to result in the Inspector lacking jurisdiction to conduct the hearing in this case.

[15] The motion is granted; the application for judicial review is quashed. As agreed by counsel, there shall be no costs of this motion or this application.

[16] Parties are entitled to challenge a decision of a single judge of the Divisional Court to a full panel of the Divisional Court.

[19] A motion seeking to review this decision will not serve as a stay of this decision pending a challenge motion before a full panel, and thus the hearing may proceed before Inspector Hegedus if a motion has been brought to review this decision but not yet heard by the court. Therefore, if any party wishes to challenge this decision before the full panel, that party should make arrangements immediately through the managing judge of the Divisional Court, Nordheimer J. for scheduling directions.

BACKHOUSE J.

REASONS FOR DECISION

Overview

[1] The London District Catholic School Board (the "Applicant") has brought an application for judicial review of an interim decision by the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario (the "HRTO"), dated October 4, 2022, reported at 2922 HRTO 1194 (the "Decision"). In the Decision, the HRTO held that it has concurrent jurisdiction to adjudicate an application commenced by Karen Weilgosh ("Weilgosh" or "the Respondent"). The Applicant seeks an order quashing the Decision on the grounds that the HRTO lacks jurisdiction. The Applicant asks for a declaration that labour arbitrators appointed under the Labour Relations Act, 1995, S.O. 1995, c. 1, Sched. A (the "LRA") have exclusive jurisdiction to decide human rights complaints arising from disputes under a collective agreement. The Respondents asks the court to dismiss the application.

Background

[3] Karen Weilgosh filed an application with the HRTO against her employer, the Applicant, alleging discrimination and a failure to accommodate. Subsequently, the Supreme Court of Canada issued Northern Regional Health Authority v. Horrocks, 2021 SCC 42, 462 D.L.R. (4th) 585 [Horrocks]. There, the court held that labour arbitrators appointed under labour legislation in Manitoba have exclusive jurisdiction over human rights claims arising from disputes under a collective agreement. Following Horrocks, the Applicant raised a preliminary objection before the HRTO. It argued that the HRTO lacked jurisdiction to hear the application given that Ms. Weilgosh's union had filed grievances on her behalf relating to the same or similar allegations. The HRTO proceeded to a hearing on the interim issue, joining together another proceeding raising the same preliminary objection, McNulty v. Regional Municipality of Peel Police Service Board (the "McNulty application").

[4] The Supreme Court established a two-part test in Horrocks to resolve jurisdictional issues between labour arbitrators and competing statutory tribunals. Under Step 1, the relevant labour legislation should be examined to determine whether it grants a labour arbitrator exclusive jurisdiction, and if so, over what matters arising from a collective agreement. Legislation with a mandatory dispute resolution clause establishes exclusive jurisdiction, subject to clearly expressed legislative intent to the contrary. Under Step 2, the question is whether the dispute falls within the scope of the labour arbitrator's jurisdiction.[1]

Decision under Review

[5] In the Decision, the HRTO resolved the preliminary issue under Step 1 of the test. It determined that labour arbitrators appointed under both the LRA and the Police Services Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.15 (the "PSA") have exclusive jurisdiction to decide claims of discrimination and harassment falling within the scope of a collective agreement. It reached this conclusion based on the mandatory dispute resolution clause under s. 48 of the LRA and, in the absence of an analogous provision under the PSA, appellate case law.[2]

[6] The HRTO went on to find, as the Supreme Court indicated in Horrocks, that this exclusive jurisdiction under both statutes was displaced by a positive expression of legislative intent to establish a regime of concurrent jurisdiction over human rights claims.[3] Applying the Supreme Court's guidance at para. 33 of Horrocks, it pointed first to the broad provisions in s. 45 and 45.1 of the Human Rights Code, R.S.O. 1990, c. H.19 (the "Ontario Code" or "Code") empowering the HRTO to defer or dismiss complaints if another proceeding has appropriately dealt with it. The HRTO did note that these provisions were more ambiguous than federal human rights legislation and B.C.'s Human Rights Code, which the Supreme Court cited in Horrocks as examples of statutory schemes disclosing an intent to establish concurrent jurisdiction. Those statutes specifically provide for deferrals where complaints are capable of being dealt with by the grievance process.[4]

[7] The analysis did not end there. Horrocks then instructs that where the provisions of a statute may be more ambiguous, but the legislative history plainly shows that the legislature contemplated concurrency, applying an exclusive arbitral jurisdiction model would defeat, not achieve, the legislative intent.[5] The HRTO determined that the "unique legislative history" of the LRA and the Ontario Code more clearly indicated a legislative intent to establish concurrent jurisdiction.

[8] In 2001, the Court of Appeal determined in Ontario (Human Rights Commission) v. Naraine, 2001 CanLII 21234 (Ont. C.A.) [Naraine] that, following amendments to the LRA empowering labour arbitrators to apply the Ontario Code, the OHRC's deferral power under the Ontario Code signaled an intention to shift from exclusive to concurrent jurisdiction.[6]

[9] The legislature passed major amending legislation to the Ontario Code ("Bill 107") that came into effect in 2008. Among other things, Bill 107 removed the gatekeeper role of the OHRC and instead permitted individuals to apply directly to the HRTO. The direct access model remains in place today. Applying the interpretive presumption that the legislature is aware of existing law when it enacts new laws, the HRTO reasoned in the Decision that the legislature knew of Naraine when it passed Bill 107. Therefore, it found that the lack of constraints on the HRTO's broad powers under ss. 45 and 45.1 to defer or dismiss complaints appropriately dealt with in other proceedings demonstrates an intent to maintain concurrent jurisdiction.[7]

[10] In the Decision, the HRTO dismissed the requests of the Applicant and the Regional Municipality of Peel Police Services Board to dismiss the applications for lack of jurisdiction.

[11] The Regional Municipality of Peel Police Services Board did not seek judicial review of the Decision in respect of the McNulty application. It is participating as an intervenor.

Issues

[12] The application raises the following issues:

1. Is the application premature, and if so, should the court hear it?
2. What is the standard of review?
3. Was the HRTO's finding that it has concurrent jurisdiction correct or reasonable, as the case may be?

Court's Jurisdiction

[13] The Court has jurisdiction to hear this application pursuant to ss. 2(1) and 6(1) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1.

Analysis

Issue #1: Is the application premature, and if so, should the court hear it?

[14] The Applicant concedes the Decision is interlocutory in nature and that courts generally do not exercise their discretion to hear an application until the administrative proceeding is complete, absent exceptional circumstances.[8] The parties submit that there are exceptional circumstances in this case.

Appropriate for court to exercise its discretion to hear this judicial review application

[15] In Ontario (Community Safety and Correctional Services) v. De Lottinville,[9] this court exercised its discretion to judicially review an interim decision of the HRTO, finding that the HRTO treated the matter as a "test case" dealing with a significant legal issue, constituted a three-person tribunal and joined applications that raised the same issue.

(a) joining Weilgosh's Application with the McNulty Application for the purposes only of the preliminary issue;

(b) assigning case management of the preliminary issue to the HRTO's Chair; and,

(c) granting intervenor status to four organizations, in addition to the OHRC being added as a party.

[17] The Decision has broad implications for human rights disputes arising between unionized employers and employees throughout the province. Delaying this application until the conclusion of the hearing on the merits, which does not depend on any evidence or law relevant to the jurisdictional issue, will result in uncertainty for employers, employees and unions. This is an appropriate case for this court to exercise its discretion to hear this judicial review.

Issue #2: What is the standard of review?

[18] The Applicant submits the presumptive standard of reasonableness is rebutted for two reasons. First, the application concerns a question of the jurisdictional boundaries between two administrative bodies. The Supreme Court applied a correctness standard in Horrocks for a virtually identical question. Second, the question raised is of central importance to a legal system as a whole, given its broad implications for any future applications to the HRTO brought by unionized employees.

[19] The Respondents Weilgosh and OHRC agree with the Applicant on the first point and submit that the presumption of reasonableness is rebutted. However, they disagree that the question raised is one of central importance to the legal system as a whole. They submit that while involving a dispute that is of "wider public concern, it does not rise to the level of having an impact on the administration of justice as a whole that requires safeguarding consistency in the fundamental legal order of Canada.[10]

[20] The HRTO submits that the standard of review is reasonableness. It argues that the presumption of reasonableness is not always rebutted for questions of jurisdiction between two or more administrative bodies unless there is an operational conflict. The HRTO argues that there is no conflict or incompatibility in this case since we are dealing with concurrent jurisdiction. It points out that in Horrocks, there was no legislated standard of review and therefore the Supreme Court's finding on standard of review is not dispositive on the issue for this application. The HRTO agrees with Weilgosh and OHRC that the question raised is not one of central importance to the legal system as a whole either since it is statute- and province-specific. Finally, the HRTO argues that something more is required than just the three rule of law questions in order to rebut a legislated (as opposed to a presumptive) standard of review, like the one under s. 45.8 of the Ontario Code ("patently unreasonable*"* which has been interpreted by the courts post-Vavilov as "reasonable"). It argues that to rule otherwise conflicts with Vavilov's strong endorsement of respect for legislative intent.

Correctness is the appropriate standard of review

> Decisions concerning the jurisdictional lines between two or more administrative bodies must be correct (Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Vavilov, 2019 SCC 65, at para. 53). This standard safeguards the rule of law, which "requires courts to intervene where one administrative body has interpreted the scope of its authority in a manner that is incompatible with the jurisdiction of another" (para. 64). It also fosters predictability, finality and certainty in the law (ibid.).

HEARD:	By Telephone Conference on September 13, 2019 and written submissions completed December 5, 2019

[1] The applicant ("R.M.") was catastrophically impaired in an automobile accident on March 22, 2016. She received insurance benefits from CAA Insurance under the Statutory Accident Benefits Schedule – Effective after September 1, 2010, O. Reg. 34/10 (the "Schedule"), including a non-earner benefit ("NEB"). By letter dated October 4, 2016, CAA denied further payment of the NEB after October 12, 2016.

[2] After two years, on November 19, 2018, R.M. appealed to this Tribunal to dispute the NEB and other denials. The parties resolved all issues except the NEB. This matter is now before me on CAA's motion requesting that the Tribunal decide if R.M.'s appeal of the NEB is untimely and thus time-barred. CAA's adjuster provided an affidavit and testified by telephone, followed by the parties' written submissions. After consideration, I find that the NEB is, in fact, time-barred.

PRELIMINARY ISSUE

[3] The sole issue for me to decide is: "Is the applicant barred from proceeding with her application due to her non-compliance with the limitation period from section 56 of the Schedule?"

RESULT

[4] R.M.'s claim for the NEB is time-barred under section 56 of the Schedule.

a. Section 56 of the Schedule

[5] Section 56 of the Schedule provides that an application to dispute a denial of a benefit must be commenced within two years of the insurer's refusal to pay. Section 64 allows the denial notice to be sent by regular mail or faxed to an insured's lawyer. Once a proper denial has been properly sent, if an insured does not appeal within that period, the Tribunal can not hear it as it is "time-barred".

[6] CAA submits that on October 4, 2016, Adi Gurovich, a senior claims adjuster for CAA, (1) personally drafted the denial letter that stated the benefit would be stopped effective October 12, 2016, (2) mailed it to R.M., and (3) faxed a copy to the R.M.'s lawyer. Thus, R.M. had until the two-year anniversary on October 4, 2018 (or possibly October 12, 2018) to appeal. Yet R.M. did not appeal until November 19, 2018 – 5 weeks later – and thus the appeal is late and time-barred.

[7] R.M. does not dispute the form of the denial, but questions whether CAA ever sent out the denial letter. I find CAA did so and accept CAA's timeline, as follows.

[8] First and foremost, in the case of the fax, there is virtually no doubt it was sent, because Mr. Gurovich produced a fax confirmation report.

[9] R.M. submits that the fax confirmation is not reliable because it refers to 60 pages being sent, while the affidavit only refers to the denial letter and a dispute addendum being sent, which are each only a few pages. I disagree. Mr. Gurovich provided a logical explanation that a coversheet and the underlying examination reports, referenced in the letter, were also sent and those add up to 60 pages.

[10] In fact, the 60-page length and transmission itself are corroborated by a copy of the denial letter in Alpha Med Wellness Centre's clinical notes and records[1]. The fax transmission stamp on that letter's lower margin shows the transmission was exactly 60 pages and dated October 4, 2016. The fax cover page also lists that it was to be faxed to both Jennifer at Reybroek Barristers and Dr. Charalambous, who is with Alpha. Thus, the fax confirmation report provided by Mr. Gurovich exactly matches this information – i.e. Mr. Gurovich's confirmation report shows two fax transmissions of 60 pages transmitted to each individual as listed on the fax cover page.[2]

[11] R.M. also submits that Mr. Gurovich's affidavit states he requested the denial be faxed to the lawyer – implying someone else did it, yet he testified he faxed it. Although a moot point due to the fax report and a copy does appear in Alpha's records, I accept his explanation that he meant he requested the system fax it.

[12] Second, in the case of the letter mailed to R.M., as the only probative evidence before me directly addressing the letter is Mr. Gurovich's affidavit and testimony that he mailed the letter, I accept that the letter was mailed on preponderance of the evidence. R.M. does not provide evidence that many, or even any, notices have not be received, and as noted below, she does not actually deny receiving this denial. As for R.M.'s argument that Mr. Gurovich admitted that he did not place the letter in the mail and that he only requested others to do so, I agree that weakens the strength of the evidence but do does not defeat it. For instance, CAA's claim on this point would be stronger with log notes from the mailing center or further evidence about processes, but I understood the thrust of Mr. Gurovich testimony is that he mailed the letter in accordance with regular procedure, at an insurance company that regularly mails out such letters. Neither party showed any problems with that mailing procedure used by CAA.

[13] While I accept Mr. Gurovich's testimony on both the mailing and faxing of the letter, I note that when I tried to clarify whether he has independent recollection of the events or is just piecing it together from log notes and his regular course, he did not give a clear answer, insisting that that he knows that "he did it". My impression is that he was piecing it together, although at one point he implied that he did have independent recollection. As well, the discrepancies appeared to be a function of the hearing process, rather than pointing to a lack of credibility. For instance, while the affidavit was not precise about what was sent, the letter did reference enclosures and it is logical that the fax coversheet would have been sent even if not specifically mentioned.

[14] Third, I note that while R.M. tried to show the above weaknesses in CAA's evidence, R.M. does not directly deny that the fax was received. Likewise, her denial on receiving the letter was a single conclusory sentence in submissions by counsel, unsupported by R.M.'s testimony or affidavit[3] - and thus not proper evidence. Even if I accept counsel's submission as evidence, it is of little value being hearsay by counsel, on the central disputed point, with no context such as showing a wrong address, and other context given (discussed below) appears factually incorrect. I take R.M.'s submission as a virtual admission on the receipt issue and that her real issue is relief under section 7 of the Licence Appeal Tribunal Act, 1999 ("LAT Act") addressed below.

[15] Fourth, two other events were raised which weaken R.M.'s version of events:

- First, counsel submits his office first learned of the denial by email on November 15, 2018, and then immediately appealed by November 19, 2018[4]. However, (1) that time frame does not make sense as it would mean the benefit was stopped for more than two years without R.M. or counsel inquiring as why the payment stopped, and (2) Mr. Gurovich testified that he spoke with "Nicole" of R.M.'s lawyer's office on July 28, 2017 about the October 12, 2016 stoppage.

- Second, in her November 28, 2019 submissions for this motion, R.M. denied receiving CAA's submissions filed November 11, 2019 and due November 14, 2019, and thus she filed her own submissions blind, with the right to reply to CAA's submissions. However, CAA responded with a courier delivery receipt even identifying the recipient – whom counsel submits are listed on R.M.'s lawyer's website.[5] CAA also submits it "is at a loss to understand why [R.M.] would draft responding motion materials in the absence of the moving party's [i.e. CAA's] Submissions." I agree and find R.M's assertion dubious even without the courier receipt, as it would seem obvious to contact opposing counsel or perhaps even the Tribunal if it truly had not received CAA's submissions.

[16] When all the above points are taken together, there is little doubt the letters were sent/emailed as CAA claims. The evidence comes down to R.M. and her lawyer, denying receiving four contacts between them (i.e. the letter, fax, phone call, and recent submission), despite there are fairly indisputable records that three of those occurred, and Alpha (R.M.'s chiropractors) even received a faxed copy of the 60 page denial fax exactly as CAA claims to have sent it. As well, R.M. has not pointed to any wrong street or email address or similar error.

[17] I find that the fax and letter were both forwarded on or about October 4, 2016 as alleged by CAA, and that R.M. has not appealed the NEB denial within the two-year time frame and thus is time-barred.

b. S. 7 of the LAT Act

[18] R.M. submits that even if her claim for the NEB is technically barred under s. 56 of the Schedule, s. 7 of the Licence Appeal Tribunal Act provides the Tribunal discretion to extend the time for commencing the appeal if there are reasonable grounds for the extension and granting relief.

[19] I note there is conflicting authority of whether s. 7 applies to matters under the Schedule.[6] Thus, for the sake of argument, I will assume that s. 7 applies.

[20] Case law has established a four-part test to determine if the justice of the case requires the extension. The factors are: (1) the existence of a bona fide intention to appeal within the appeal period; (2) the length of the delay; (3) prejudice to the other party; and (4) the merits of the appeal. Also, the fact that applications under the Schedule are governed by the two-year limitation compared to the 15-day Notice period in many of the Tribunal's other proceedings, will "undoubtably influence" of how the factors are applied. [7]

[21] An applicant has the onus to establish the extension but need not satisfy all four factors. Rather, the analysis requires a balancing of the conclusions reached when applying the facts of the case to the factors.[8] The general rule is that an extension not be granted unless the appealing party shows the factors apply to support an extension.

[22] For the first factor, R.M. submits that she had a bona fide intention to appeal within the appeal period regarding the denial of the NEB and would have appealed in a timely manner had she been aware of the denial date. While she did appeal other benefits, I do not accept this submission as R.M. was aware of the denial date as shown above, and the record is absent of any intention to appeal, other than the fact that R.M. did ultimately appeal after the period was over. As the Divisional Court held, while an intention to appeal does not need to be shown at the outset, it does need to be shown during the appeal period.[9]

[23] For the second factor (delay), the delay is 46 days – 6 to 7 weeks. While not extraordinary in length, it is also not a matter of a few days, nor is there a valid reason provided for the delay (as discussed above, the benefit was stopped more than two years earlier and I reject R.M.'s claim of a lack of notice), or why such a delay is minimal in context. I see this factor in CAA's favor.

[24] R.M. submits that two decisions of the Tribunal applied s. 7 with similar length delays but I find them distinguishable. First, in 16-001381 v. Aviva[10], the Tribunal found 5 weeks is not too long. However, as CAA points out the Tribunal actually found the claim was timely, and only addressed s. 7 on alternate grounds. Even there, the case is distinguishable because the delay flows out of the transitional period when there was a jurisdictional change of Schedule disputes from FSCO to this Tribunal. The applicant did file within two years for then-mandatory mediation process but was then blocked by the respondent from adding the issue to the existing FSCO case. Still, the applicant was timely within the then existing 90-day extension under the old system, but untimely against the two-year requirement for a new LAT claim. Thus, the adjudicator found that claim was actually timely, but if not, then on alternative grounds, s. 7 would be properly applied due to the unique circumstances of the jurisdictional and process changes, the delay being due to factors beyond her control and the insurer refusing to add the issue to the pending case under the FSCO scheme.

[25] R.M. also submits that in 18-001196 v. Certas[11], the Tribunal applied s. 7 for appeal delays ranging from 2 to 39 days. However, as CAA submits, this case was reversed on reconsideration and is also distinguishable as the delay in part flows from the transition of the dispute resolution process from FSCO to LAT. Again, the applicant started the dispute resolution process with FSCO prior to the two-year deadline, but due to the transition, the mediation never occurred, and called into question if the subsequent appeal to LAT was untimely or not.

[26] Regarding the third factor (prejudice), R.M. submits CAA would not be prejudiced because CAA has been actively engaged in this claim including deeming R.M. catastrophic on December 28, 2018, while she, rather than CAA, would be prejudiced by being barred on her NEB claim. Conversely, CAA submits R.M. would not be prejudiced as she was represented by counsel at all relevant times and "As such, [R.M.] has a potential claim against her lawyers…for their failure to submit [R.M.'s] Application…]" in a timely manner. CAA submits if the claim is allowed to proceed, it may be prejudiced as its reports "are more than two years old and it would be forced to locate, produce, and rely on experts and evidence which may not be available anymore."

[27] I find this factor weighs somewhat in R.M.'s favor. Certainly, R.M. would lose out on the NEB. While she might have a claim against her counsel to cover her losses, its is beyond the evidence in and scope of this case to confirm if she has a viable claim or its value. CAA might have some difficulty on its evidence for the NEB, and may need updated assessments, but its submission appears overstated, as this file was being actively adjusted when the late claim was filed.

[28] Finally, regarding the fourth factor (the merits), R.M. submits her impairments are substantial as she was deemed catastrophic by her own assessor on criteria 7 and 8 and CAA accepted her as catastrophic on criteria 8, and thus she would also be entitled to a NEB. Disability Certificates (OCF-3s) completed in April and June of 2016 opine she suffers a complete inability to carry on a normal life, and her family doctor notes she complained of difficulties in various tasks including housekeeping, and that he recommend physio and massage therapy, with a referral to an orthopedic surgeon. R.M. also points to several assessments, including psychological assessments, finding diagnoses such as an "adjustment disorder with mixed anxiety and depressed mood and specific phobia", and an assessments of attendant care needs recommending $1,160.17 and 1,223.02 monthly needs. A January 9, 2019 assessment – two days after her January 7, 2019 shoulder surgery – found she requires $6,716.00 a month in help as she has virtually no use of her right shoulder immediately following the surgery.

[29] CAA argues its denials were supported by IEs, and that a catastrophic designation does not establish entitlement to a NEB – they are different tests.

[30] I find this factor weighs somewhat in R.M.'s favor. Entitlement to a NEB and a catastrophic designation are different tests. R.M. has pointed to evidence that she was impaired from the accident but has not established that evidence likely translates to an NEB. R.M. has not shown what her regular activities that constitute her "normal life" are, or that she has a "complete inability" to carry on her normal life. However, while R.M. does not point to the specifics of the NEB test, the CAT reports and other medical evidence do discuss changes in her life, and all appear to agree – at least from a psychological point of view – that there were changes.

[31] Taking the factors together, I find that R.M. has not met her burden. At the core, it appears to me that R.M. missed the deadline, for a significant amount of time, with no reason for the late filing. Thus, while I acknowledge that the result may be harsh on R.M., R.M. is really asking that the two-year limitation period not apply simply because she feels she has a good case on the merits. While s. 7 may provide discretion to extend the two-year limitation, there must be more meaningful circumstances to exercise that discretion such as how or why the deadline was missed, or the two-year limitation period is rendered meaningless.

CONCLUSION/ORDER

[32] The application for the NEB is time-barred in accordance with section 56 of the Schedule and is hereby dismissed. As the parties have advised all other issues in dispute has been resolved, the Application is dismissed.

[2]While Alpha's copy of the fax corroborates Mr. Gurovich's fax confirmation, testimony and that the denial was transmitted to Reybroek Barristers, I note from the fact that Reybroek submitted Alpha's records, including Alpha's "CC copy" of the denial fax, as a Tab to R.M.'s submissions, that Reybroek also received a copy of the denial from Alpha. However, the evidence does not establish when Alpha provided the records, or the denial, to Reybroek. It might have been at a relevant time such as when Alpha first received the denial on October 4, 2016 or around March 6, 2018 (Tab 18, p. 528) when Alpha's invoice for the records is dated, but it could also be some other time such as just before these submissions.

[5] I note that while this evidence was also, at least in part, by counsel's submission, it is different from R.M. counsel's denial of receipt on R.M.'s behalf as CAA supports its submission by evidence such as the courier receipt, and the topic of service of documents is within counsel's purview.

[6] For example, in a reconsideration decision, Certas Home and Auto Ins. Co., 2016 CanLII 153125 (ON LAT) (Reconsideration) Adjudicator D. Neilson found that s. 7 does not apply to the Schedule. R.M. cited the hearing decision in that matter. Currently, the reconsideration decision is on appeal before the Divisional Court.

Heard: November 30, 2015

On appeal from the judgment of Justice Graeme Mew of the Superior Court of Justice, dated February 6, 2015, with reasons reported at 2015 ONSC 661.

By the Court:

[1] The appellants, individuals and corporations engaged in various capacities in the practice of traditional Chinese medicine, appeal the decision of the Superior Court granting the respondent College of Traditional Chinese Medicine Practitioners and Acupuncturists of Ontario (the "College") declaratory and injunctive relief. The application judge found that the corporate appellants falsely held themselves out as regulatory colleges, that the individual appellants had wrongly held themselves out as representatives of the regulator, that certain of the appellants had engaged in unauthorized practice, and that the individual appellants had engaged in the unauthorized use of the protected titles "Doctor" or "traditional Chinese medicine practitioner", all contrary to the Regulated Health Professions

Act, 1991, S.O. 1991, c. 18 and the Traditional Chinese Medicine Act, 2006, S.O. 2006, c. 27.

[2] In their defense to the claims of the College, the appellants submitted that the Traditional Chinese Medicine Act, 2006 and, in particular the Registration Regulation made under that Act, were discriminatory and violated their s. 15 Charter rights. The application judge rejected that defense on the ground that both individual appellants and one of the corporate appellants had previously unsuccessfully advanced essentially the same argument in an application before the Divisional Court: see Yuan, Li v. Transitional Council of the College of Traditional Chinese Medicine Practitioners and Acupuncturists of Ontario, 2014 ONSC 351, 316 O.A.C. 272 (Div. Ct.). In that same application, the Divisional Court also dismissed the claim that the College had acted unlawfully in not enacting a regulation to permit the use of the title "Doctor" in relation to the practice of traditional Chinese medicine. The appellants did not seek leave to appeal the Divisional Court's decision. The application judge held that the Divisional Court judgment barred the appellants from advancing the same arguments on grounds of res judicata, issue estoppel or abuse of process.

A. ISSUE ESTOPPEL AND ABUSE OF PROCESS

[3] In our view, the application judge did not err by refusing to entertain the appellants' constitutional argument on the ground that it had been conclusively and finally determined against them in the prior proceeding. We agree with his conclusion that the required elements of issue estoppel were made out.

[4] The three preconditions for issue estoppel are:

1) the issue must be the same as the one decided in the prior decision;

2) the prior judicial decision must have been final; and

3) the parties to both proceedings must be the same or their privies.

See Danyluk v. Ainsworth Technologies Inc., 2001 SCC 44, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 460, at para. 25.

(1) Same issue

[5] The central argument presented to the application judge was that the language proficiency requirement set out in the Registration Regulation is discriminatory. That same argument was unsuccessfully advanced before the Divisional Court. The appellants contend that before the Divisional Court, their s. 15 argument was that the language requirement discriminated against all people of Chinese origin, whereas before the application judge they argued that the language proficiency requirement was discriminatory against ethnic mainland Chinese practitioners.

[6] We agree with the application judge, at para. 52 of his reasons, that by reframing their argument in this manner, the appellants cannot "mask the reality that their complaints still emanate from the linguistic requirements of the Registration Regulation." As pointed out in Danyluk, at para. 18, litigants are "only entitled to one bite at the cherry" and are required "to put their best foot forward to establish the truth of their allegations when first called upon to do so." The applicable principle is that "litigation is conclusive upon issues actually brought before the court and upon any issues which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, should have brought forward on that occasion": Las Vegas Strip Ltd. v. Toronto (City) (1996), 1996 CanLII 8037 (ON SC), 30 O.R. (3d) 286 (Gen. Div.), aff'd (1997), 1997 CanLII 3841 (ON CA), 32 O.R. (3d) 651 (C.A.). The appellants have always complained that the language proficiency requirement is discriminatory and they have failed to provide an adequate explanation for why they could not, with reasonable diligence, have advanced the same argument that they sought to make before the application judge in the application before the Divisional Court.

[7] The appellants argue that the Divisional Court did not deal with the question whether the language proficiency requirement was discriminatory contrary to the Ontario Human Rights Code, R.S.O 1990, c. H.19. We agree with the respondent that the determination by the Divisional Court that the language proficiency requirement was not discriminatory under the Charter also answered the threshold issue of discrimination under the Code. It was not open to the appellants to re-litigate what in substance was the same argument by giving it a different legal label.

(2) Final decision

[8] The order of the Divisional Court dismissing the previous application was a final order. The appellants did not seek leave to appeal that order.

(3) Same parties

[9] The two individual appellants were parties to the Divisional Court proceeding as was the Federation of Ontario Traditional Chinese Medicine Association. All corporate appellants, except Committee of Certified Acupuncturists of Ontario, share the same registered address and they all share many of the same directors and officers, including the two individual appellants. In the context of these proceedings, this constitutes a sufficient degree of identification among the parties "to make it just to hold that the decision to which one was a party should be binding in the proceedings to which the other is a party": Re EnerNorth Industries Inc., 2009 ONCA 536, 96 O.R. (3d) 1, at para. 62. In any event, even if the same parties requirement for issue estoppel is not strictly met, permitting the appellants to re-litigate the issue that was determined by the Divisional Court would amount to an abuse of process: see Toronto (City) v. C.U.P.E., Local 79, 2003 SCC 63, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77, at para. 37.

(4) Discretion

[10] Finally, we are not persuaded that the application judge erred by failing to exercise his discretion to permit the appellants to avoid the doctrines of issue estoppel and abuse of process. The application judge thoroughly reviewed the evidence and submissions of the appellants and concluded that they were simply re-litigating the same case before him that they had advanced before the Divisional Court. We agree with that conclusion and while we understand the appellants' frustration over the effect of the Registration Regulation, we see no basis for permitting them to re-litigate the issue whether that Regulation is discriminatory.

B. INJUNCTION AND DECLARATORY RELIEF

[11] The evidence before the application judge amply supported his findings that the College was entitled to declaratory and injunctive relief on the grounds that the corporate appellants falsely held themselves out as regulatory colleges, that the individual appellants had wrongly held themselves out as representatives of the regulator, that certain of the appellants had engaged in unauthorized practice, and that the individual appellants had engaged in the unauthorized use of the protected titles "Doctor" or "traditional Chinese medicine practitioner," all contrary to the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991 and the Traditional Chinese Medicine Act, 2006.

C. DISPOSITION

[12] Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed with costs to the respondent fixed at $12,500, inclusive of disbursements and taxes.

* An appeal from the following judgment of Sharpe J. to the Ontario Court of Appeal (Osborne, Abella and Charron JJ.A.) was dismissed on March 14, 1997. This information is noted at 1997 CanLII 3841 (ON CA), 32 O.R. (3d) 651 in this database.

Judgments and orders -- Res judicata -- Operator of adult entertainment parlour unsuccessful in application for declaration that its use of premises for live nude strip bar a legal non-conforming use -- Operator also unsuccessful in resisting injunction proceedings based on its use being contrary to zoning -- Operator commencing new proceedings for declaration that zoning by-law invalid and contrary to Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms -- New proceedings barred by doctrine of res judicata.

Municipal law -- By-laws -- Validity -- Limitation period -- Section 138 of Municipal Act requiring application to quash by- law to be made within one year of passing of by-law -- Limitation period not applying to proceedings by action or by application for declaration that by-law invalid -- Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.45, s. 138.

In 1993, L Ltd., whose principals were AH and MK, sought permission from licensing authorities to operate a live nude strip bar in premises on Yonge Street in the City of Toronto. This use was contrary to the City's Zoning By-law 438-86, which prohibited "adult entertainment parlours" in the downtown core; however, permission was granted based on L Ltd.'s representations that its operation constituted a legal non- conforming use. L Ltd.'s business began in December 1993, but in March 1994, Z Inc., which operated a similar establishment, asserted that L Ltd.'s premises had not previously been used as an adult entertainment parlour and that the operation was contrary to zoning. Two actions were then commenced.

In the first action, L Ltd. sued the City for a declaration that its business constituted a legal non-conforming use, and, in the second action, Z Inc. sued L Ltd. seeking injunctive relief on the basis that L Ltd.'s use was contrary to zoning. L Ltd.'s defence to the second action was that its use enjoyed the status of a legal non-conforming use. The actions were tried together. In June 1995, L Ltd.'s action was dismissed, and Z Inc.'s action for an injunction was successful. L Ltd. appealed, and, on its appeal, L Ltd. attempted to raise the argument that the zoning by-law was invalid. This argument was not permitted by the Court of Appeal since it had not been raised before. L Ltd.'s appeal was dismissed on April 23, 1996, and it subsequently filed an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

While its application for leave to appeal was pending, L Ltd. commenced a new proceeding in which it sued the City for a declaration that the by-law was invalid as contrary to municipal law principles and also the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Z Inc. was granted intervenor status in this proceeding. L Ltd. also moved in the earlier action by Z Inc. for an order setting aside the injunction in the event the by-law was found to be invalid. These matters were joined by an action by AS, who was associated with MZ. She sought identical declaratory relief to that sought by L Ltd. in its new proceeding, and she asserted that she wished to establish an adult entertainment parlour. The three matters were heard together.

Held, the applications should be dismissed.

Contrary to the argument of the respondent City, the applications of L Ltd. and AS were not barred by s. 138 of the Municipal Act, which provides that an application to quash a by-law shall not be entertained unless made within one year after the passing of the by-law. Section 138 does not apply to proceedings for declaratory relief, whether by action or by application. The applications, however, were barred by the doctrines of res judicata or abuse of process.

The purposes behind the res judicata principle are that it is in the public interest that there should be an end to litigation and no individual should be subjected to proceedings more than once for the same cause. The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the court has ruled but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward. To analyze the operation of the doctrine, it was necessary to focus on the causes of action that were asserted in the prior proceedings. In those proceedings Z Inc. put squarely in issue the legal right of L Ltd. to carry on its operation. There was no doubt that L Ltd. could have raised as a defence to Z Inc.'s action, the argument it now sought to assert about the alleged invalidity of the by-law. Although inconsistent with L Ltd.'s position that it had a legal non-conforming use, the argument could have been pleaded in the alternative. It would be contrary to the policies underlying the principle of res judicata to permit L Ltd. now to raise the issue of the invalidity of the by-law. The principles of res judicata also applied with respect to the prior action in which L Ltd. sought a declaration; its present action could not be said to be based upon a different set of facts and the same relief was being sought, namely, a declaration that the by-law did not prevent L Ltd. from carrying on its operation. For the purposes of the doctrine of res judicata, L Ltd. could not claim to be advancing a separate and distinct cause of action. The fact that a different legal theory was being advanced did not remove the action from the reach of res judicata. A litigant cannot establish a new and fresh cause of action by advancing a new legal theory in support of a claim based upon essentially the same facts.

The doctrine of res judicata also applied with respect to the principals of L Ltd., who are in privity with L Ltd. The claim of AS to declaratory relief was also barred. The evidence established that MK was in fact the moving force behind her application and it was brought with a view to avoiding the effect of res judicata. Alternatively, her application may also be dismissed as an abuse of process.

The applications being barred, it was not appropriate to rule on the questions of the validity of the adult entertainment zoning by-law.

APPLICATIONS for declarations as to the validity of an adult entertainment zoning by-law.

Ontario Court of Appeal

Stephnie Payne

Applicant / Appellant

and

Ontario Human Rights Commission

Respondent

Date of Decision:

May 9, 2000

Before:

Ontario Court of Appeal, Abella, O'Conner and Sharpe JJ.A.

Decision No.:

C31619

Appeal from:

(1999), CHRR Doc. 99-238 (Ont. Ct. (Gen.Div.))

Appearances by:

Geri Sanson and Mark Hart, Counsel for the Appellant

Anthony D. Griffin, Counsel for the Respondent

HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSIONS — appointment of board/tribunal reconsidered — discretion to dismiss complaint — authority to discontinue proceedings — authority to reconsider decision to appoint board/tribunal — deliberative secrecy — fairness in investigation of complaint — human rights commission's refusal to supply information from investigator's report — role of human rights commission — sufficient reasons for decision — APPEALS AND JUDICIAL REVIEW — human rights commission's decision to dismiss complaint

EVIDENCE — affidavit evidence — examination for discovery in judicial review proceedings — examination of witness in judicial review proceeding — PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS — production of documents in judicial review proceedings — examination for discovery — investigation file — PROCEDURE — examination for discovery of human rights commission member — procedural fairness — CONFIDENTIAL RECORDS — human rights commission's deliberation record

Summary: In a split decision the Ontario Court of Appeal ruled that Stephnie Payne was entitled to examine a senior Commission official to obtain further disclosure of the facts, arguments, and considerations that were presented to the Ontario Human Rights Commission when it decided not to refer her complaint to a Board of Inquiry for hearing.

Stephnie Payne, who is a black woman, was an employee of Youth Clinical Services Inc. ("YCS"), a counselling organization serving young people in Toronto. In early 1993, Ms. Payne was active in leading opposition to the musical Showboat, scheduled for the opening of the North York Centre for the Performing Arts later that year. Many people in the local black community opposed the staging of this musical on the grounds that it portrayed black people in a negative way. In a television interview, Ms. Payne said: "Most of the plays that portray Blacks... in a negative way is always done by a white man, and always usually a Jewish person is doing plays to denigrate us." Ms. Payne subsequently apologized publicly for her anti-Semitic remark. However, she refused to apologize to her Jewish co-workers at YCS or to deny the veracity of her comment.

Because Ms. Payne's remarks received considerable publicity, and Ms. Payne had conducted the interview at YCS, some colleagues at YCS were concerned about her comment's effect on the organization and its relations with the people it served. Tension ran high among Ms. Payne's co-workers. The Board and senior staff attempted to address concerns by conferring with staff members and by holding a day-long anti-racism workshop. Eleven months after the incident, when efforts to improve the divisive atmosphere had failed, the Board terminated Ms. Payne's employment.

Ms. Payne filed a human rights complaint alleging that there was an environment of systemic racism at YCS, that she was fired because she was a black woman, and that her termination constituted a reprisal against her for claiming her human rights.

In September 1996, the Commission considered a case analysis of Ms. Payne's complaint prepared by the staff. This report concluded that the evidence did not support a finding of systemic racism, but recommended that the allegations of termination based on race and reprisal be referred to a board of inquiry for hearing. At this meeting, however, Ms. Payne's complaint was "pulled" and staff were directed to undertake further investigation. At a subsequent meeting in March 1997, the Commission considered a second case analysis prepared by staff, which recommended that the case be referred to a board of inquiry, but only on the issue of whether Ms. Payne's termination was a reprisal for making a human rights complaint. The Commission decided not to refer the complaint for hearing. In March 1998, at Ms. Payne's request, the Commission reconsidered this decision. The Commission confirmed its 1997 decision not to refer.

Ms. Payne then sought judicial review of the Commission's decisions not to refer her complaint for hearing. In a related action, Ms. Payne sent a notice of examination under r. 39.03 of the Rules of Civil Procedure to the Registrar of the Ontario Human Rights Commission directing her to attend for examination and to bring with her all documents, notes, letters, records, etc. that pertained in any way to Ms. Payne's complaint and the Commission's consideration of it, including any documents relating to the temporary loss of Ms. Payne's file.

With her motion for an order that the examination take place, Ms. Payne filed an affidavit from St. Clair Wharton, who was a Human Rights Commissioner at the time that Ms. Payne's complaint was considered in 1996, though not at the times when decisions were made in 1997 and 1998. In his affidavit, Mr. Wharton stated that his recollection was that at the 1996 meeting the Commission decided to refer Ms. Payne's complaint for hearing. He also stated that staff put pressure on the Commission to decide on cases in certain ways, and that considerations other than the merit of a complaint were taken into account, including the costs of a hearing and "strategic concerns".

Since Ms. Payne was already in possession of all the documents that were before the commissioners in 1997 and 1998, the motions judge in the Divisional Court ruled that the scope of the examination of the Registrar should be limited to any documents and answers relating to the temporary loss of Ms. Payne's file, and to documents and answers relating to the September 1996 consideration of her file. Ms. Payne's motion to have this matter reconsidered by a full panel of the Divisional Court was dismissed. This is an appeal from that decision.

The issue before the Court of Appeal is the scope of r. 39.03 on an application for judicial review of a Commission decision.

The majority of the Court of Appeal found that the only legitimate factor to be considered by the Commission when deciding whether to refer a complaint for hearing is the merit of the complaint. If the Commission were to base its decision on some extraneous factor, such as cost or "strategic concerns", the court would intervene on judicial review. Further, if the Commission were to decide based on factors or considerations not disclosed to the parties, there would be no opportunity to respond and the right to fairness would be placed in its hands. With this background in mind, I proceed to consider the precise issues presented on this appeal.

(c) Position of the Parties

[159] The appellant's position is that she has a prima facie right to conduct an examination of the Registrar under r. 39.03. The appellant also submits that even if, as the Commission submits, it is necessary to establish "a reasonable evidentiary foundation" for the examination, the evidence adduced, in particular, the Wharton affidavit satisfies that test. The Commission submits that it is necessary to establish an evidentiary foundation to justify an examination under r. 39.03 in an application for judicial review, and that the appellant has failed to do so in this case. The Commission does not, however, dispute before this Court the correctness of the motions judge's order permitting the appellant to have full disclosure of what was said or put before the commissioners by Commission staff in relation to the appellant's complaint at the September 10 and 11, 1996, meeting.

(d) The "Record" on Judicial Review

[160] The content of the court record for an application for judicial review is defined by the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J-1 and by the Rules of Civil Procedure. The process begins with the notice of application: r. 68.01(1). Upon being served with the notice of application for judicial review, the decision-maker is required by s. 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, to file with the Divisional Court "the record of the proceedings in which the decision was made". The "record" is not defined by the Act.

[161] An applicant for judicial review has the right to have a full and accurate record of what went on before the tribunal put before the court. This is an aspect of the superior court's inherent powers of judicial review. A superior court may insist upon the production of an adequate record of the proceedings before the tribunal being reviewed. As stated by Denning L.J. in R. v. Medical Appeal Tribunal ex p. Gilmore, [1957] 1 Q.B. 574 at 583 (C.A.): "The court has always had power to order an inferior tribunal to complete the record ... [A] tribunal could defeat a writ of certiorari unless the courts could order them to complete or correct an imperfect record. So the courts have the power to give such an order". See also R. v. Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, ex p. Shaw, [1952] K.B. 338 at 352–54 (C.A.); Canadian Workers Union v. Frankel Structural Steel Ltd. (1976), 1976 CanLII 829 (ON SC), 12 O.R. (2d) 560 at 577 (Div. Ct.) per Reid J.; F.G. Spencer Ltd. v. Prince Edward Island (Labour Relations Board) (1970), 1970 CanLII 960 (PE SCAD), 16 D.L.R. (3d) 670 (P.E.I.S.C.); Battaglia v. British Columbia (Workmen's Compensation Board) (1960), 1960 CanLII 334 (BC SC), 22 D.L.R. (2d) 446 (B.C.S.C.). A statutory body subject to judicial review cannot immunize itself or its process by arriving at decisions on considerations that are not revealed by the record it files with the court.

[162] Rule 39.03 provides that a person may be examined as a witness before the hearing of a pending motion or application. Rule 39.03 applies to applications for judicial review. The leading Canadian text on administrative law, Brown and Evans, Judicial Review of Administrative Action in Canada (updated June 30, 1999) at § 6:5530, states: "A witness may be summoned to give evidence under oath in support of an application for judicial review and any transcript of that evidence is to be included in the Application Record". This proposition is borne out by the authorities that have considered the Rule in relation to applications for judicial review. As I explain below, these authorities hold that a party to an application for judicial review is entitled to adduce evidence by way of examination, provided the evidence sought to be adduced is relevant to an issue properly

BETWEEN:

VICTOR LACHANCE AND KIRK ALBERT Applicants – and – SOLICITOR GENERAL OF ONTARIO and ATTORNEY GENERAL OF ONTARIO	)	Stéphane Émard-Chabot, for the Applicants

[37] I agree with the finding of Ryan Bell J. that by bringing this application for judicial review the applicants became entitled to receive all documents concerning their claims. Ryan Bell J. adopted the words of Sharpe JA in Payne v. Ontario Human Rights Commission, 2000 CanLII 5731 (ON CA) at para. 161:

> An applicant for judicial review has the right to have a full and accurate record of what went on before the tribunal put before the court. This is an aspect of the superior court's inherent powers of judicial review. A superior court may insist upon the production of an adequate record of the proceedings before the tribunal being reviewed.

[38] When met by a reluctant decision-maker, the applicants always had the ability to obtain the documents that they needed to advance their claim. They just had to initiate this application.

[39] A desire for documentary production in advance, by itself, is not a basis to extend the limitation period under s. 5 (2) of the JRPA.

[40] But the applicants submit that without the documents, they could not assess whether they had grounds to bring this application for judicial review. I do not agree.

[41] The applicants knew that the Municipality of North Grenville told them it was not consulted prior to the decision being announced by October, 2020. They made repeated requests for information that were not answered. Had the Solicitor General fulfilled her obligations to consider the provincial and municipal policy statements under the Planning Act, she readily could have provided proof to the applicants if she had been so minded.

[42] The absence of information from the Solicitor General, coupled with her officials' promises of transparency, would have provided an ample basis for the applicants to make a prima facie assertion that the Solicitor General did not fulfill her statutory obligations. This remains the principal basis for the applicants' assertions in this application even now two years later. Only the Solicitor General knows what she considered in advance of making the decision. The applicants had a basis to seek judicial review as soon as the Solicitor General declined to provide them with evidence or an explanation of how she complied with her statutory obligations.

[43] The applicants submit that they did not want to be met with an argument that their application was premature. But there was no ongoing proceeding to challenge the Solicitor General decision or some other appeal process that required completion before this proceeding could be brought.

Jacko v. McLellan, Chief Coroner for Ontario

93 O.R. (3d) 468

Ontario Superior Court of Justice,
Divisional Court,
Ferrier J.
 This judgment was recently brought to the attention of the editors.

Administrative law -- Judicial review -- Procedure -- Applicant bringing application for judicial review of decision of Chief Coroner not to order inquest -- Respondent refusing to file record of proceedings on grounds that decision by Chief Coroner was not reviewable and that no "proceedings" took place -- Respondent ordered to file record of proceedings -- Questions of whether decision was reviewable and whether "proceedings" took place being for reviewing panel to determine.

The applicant brought an application for judicial review of the Chief Coroner's decision not to order an inquest into the death of a child. The respondent took the position that it was not required to file a record of the proceedings as a decision by the Chief Coroner not to order an inquest is not the exercise of a statutory power of decision and as no "proceedings" took place. The applicant brought a motion for an order compelling the respondent to file a record of proceedings.

Held, the motion should be granted.

As long as there was a pending application for judicial review, a record of the proceedings must be filed. It would be for the panel to determine whether the decision of the Chief Coroner was reviewable and whether there was a "proceeding" below.

MOTION for an order compelling the respondent to file a record of proceedings.

[1] FERRIER J.: -- This is a motion in a pending application for judicial review.

> [2] In the application, the applicant seeks: [page469] i) An Order quashing the decision of the Chief Coroner, Dr. Barry McLellan, dated April 2, 2007, denying the applicant's request that an Inquest be called to examine the death of the applicant's nine-year-old son, Jordan Jacko; ii) An Order requiring the Chief Coroner to call an Inquest into the death of Jordan Jacko; iii) Alternatively, an Order requiring the Office of the Chief Coroner to provide the applicant with a complete copy of the Coroner's Investigation Brief into the Death of Jordan Jacko and thereafter requiring the Chief Coroner to accept and consider further written submissions from the applicant in relation to whether an Inquest should be called to examine the death of Jordan Jacko; iv) In the further alternative, an Order requiring the Office of the Chief Coroner to provide adequate written reasons for its decision to not call an Inquest into the Death of Jordan Jacko;

[3] On April 25, 2005, Jordan Jacko ("Jordan"), a nine-year- old aboriginal child, choked to death after a portion of a hot dog lodged deep in his throat while he was eating lunch at his public school in Kenora in the company of his teacher and fellow students.

[5] On June 1, 2005, the applicant wrote to the Regional Coroner to request an inquest into Jordan Jacko's death.

[6] The Regional Coroner conducted an investigation and determined that an inquest was not appropriate in the circumstances, based on the relevant provisions in ss. 20 and 26 of the Coroners Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.37. By letter dated September 16, 2005, the Regional Coroner, Dr. Legge, informed the applicant's counsel that he had investigated the matter and was denying the applicant's request for an inquest and provided detailed written reasons. The coroner advised in the said letter that Jordan's airway obstruction was so serious that his death was not only accidental but tragically "inevitable". The coroner further advised that Jordan's teacher, school principal and the Kenora police had all tried the "Heimlich manoeuvre" on Jordan without success.

[7] In the September 16, 2005 letter, the Regional Coroner explained that he had determined that the circumstances surrounding the death were rare and unusual, the response to the situation had been appropriate and that a Coroner's jury would not be able to make substantial recommendations on how to avoid death in this type of situation in the future. The Regional Coroner also informed the applicant that the answers to the five questions in s. 31(1) of the Coroners Act had already been established and that compellable reasons did not exist for the public to be further informed of the circumstances of Jordan Jacko's death. [page470]

[8] On October 13, 2005, the applicant's counsel then wrote to the respondent Chief Coroner for Ontario, requesting a review of the Regional Coroner's decision (pursuant to s. 26).

[9] On April 2, 2007, following his own investigation, the Chief Coroner wrote to the applicant explaining that because he had determined that the circumstances of Jordan Jacko's death did not meet the criteria set out in s. 20 of the Coroners Act, he had decided not to order an inquest. He reminded the applicant that the Jacko family had requested that no autopsy be conducted and that the coroner had respected this request. The Chief Coroner stated:

> Having reviewed all of the information available, I have decided that the circumstances of Jordan's death do not meet the criteria as set out in Section 20 of the Coroners Act of Ontario. I will therefore not order an inquest into his death.

[10] Six months later, on October 9, 2007, the applicant issued, through his counsel Ms. Murray of the Aboriginal Legal Services Legal Clinic of Toronto ("A.L.S."), a Notice of Application for a judicial review of the Chief Coroner's decision not to hold an inquest.

[11] The applicant has requested that the respondent deliver a "record of proceedings" including the complete unredacted version of the Ontario Provincial Police Investigation Report and the complete "Coroner's file".

[12] By letter dated November 27, 2007, counsel for the respondent advised opposing counsel that it was not required to file a "record of proceedings" in this case.

[13] I note that the application for judicial review remains pending.

[14] The respondent notes in its material that a decision by the Chief Coroner not to order an inquest has never been determined by a court to be a decision within s. 1 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1.

[15] The respondent argues that a decision by the Chief Coroner pursuant to s. 26(2) of the Coroners Act to not hold an inquest is not the exercise of a statutory power of decision -- i.e., a "decision deciding or prescribing . . . the eligibility of any person . . . to receive a benefit or licence . . ." within s. 1 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act.

[16] Furthermore, the respondent argues that no "proceedings" took place. The respondent argues that the requirement to file a record pursuant to s. 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act applies only to those decisions in which the decision-maker exercised a statutory power of decision that generated a record of proceedings (Barrington v. Institute of Chartered Accountants, 2004 CanLII 34623 (ON SCDC), [2004] O.J. No. 4351, 191 O.A.C. 230 (Div. Ct.)). [page471]

[17] A "proceeding" or "proceedings" refers to a process or step in a process that determines a legal right:

> Although the word "proceeding" is often used in the context of an action in court, its definition is more expansive . . . [T]he "word 'proceeding' has a very wide meaning, and includes steps or measures which are not in any way connected with actions or suits". In Black's Law Dictionary > (6th ed. 1990), at p. 1204, the definition of "proceeding" includes, inter alia, "an act necessary to be done in order to obtain a given end; a prescribed mode of action for carrying into effect

[18] The purpose of requiring a tribunal or adjudicator to file a "record of proceedings" is to ensure that when the court reviews the tribunal's decision, it has the information and evidence as it appeared before the tribunal in the first instance. A court reviewing an adjudicative decision may look at decisions to admit evidence, submissions of witnesses, and other evidence and may substitute its judgment for that of the court of first instance (Payne v. Ontario Human Rights Commission, 2000 CanLII 5731 (ON CA), [2000] O.J. No. 2987, 136 O.A.C. 357 (C.A.), at para. 23).

[19] The respondent submits that the term "proceedings" in s. 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act means a judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding, such as an action, application, an appearance before an adjudicative board, tribunal or individual arbitrator to determine rights. In deciding whether or not to order an inquest, the Chief Coroner is not performing an adjudicative function. The Chief Coroner decides, based on the factors in s. 20 of the Coroners Act, whether or not to order an inquest by examining factual information to determine, based on his or her expertise, whether ordering an inquest is in the public interest.

[20] In my view, so long as there is a pending application for judicial review, which is the case here, a record of proceedings, such as it may be, must be filed.

[21] It will be for the panel to determine whether the decision of the Chief Coroner is a reviewable decision.

[22] It will be for the panel to decide whether there was a "proceeding" below.

[23] I note that although the respondent suggests in its material that what the applicant actually seeks in this motion is an unredacted copy of the Ontario Provincial Police investigation report, that relief was not sought on the motion and I make no order in reference to that question. That may be for the panel to consider because it is the subject of alternative relief in the application.

[25] For clarity, in making the order sought, I make no determination that the "proceedings" below are "proceedings" within the Judicial Review Procedure Act, and I make no determination of the question whether the Chief Coroner, in this context, exercises a statutory power of decision.

[26] On consent, no order as to costs.

Motion granted.

DAMBROT, J. (ORALLY)

BACKGROUND

[1] Paul Rew and Rubicon Environmental (2008) Inc. (the "Applicants") brought a motion before the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario (Discipline Committee) (the "Committee") for a permanent stay of certain discipline proceedings against them. On September 15, 2015, the Committee dismissed the motion. The Applicants seek judicial review of that dismissal. They bring two motions today in relation to their application for judicial review.

[2] On the motion before the Committee for a stay, the Committee heard the oral evidence of two witnesses, Mr. Slack, the Association's investigator and Mr. Rew. The oral evidence was recorded as required by s.30(5) of the Professional Engineers Act R.S.O. 1990 c. P.28 ("PEA") but has not been transcribed.

[3] The Committee has filed in this Court a record of proceedings for use on the judicial review application as required by s.10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1. In it, the Committee included transcripts of portions of the proceedings that were obtained and filed by the parties. The Committee did not order a transcript of the remainder of the hearing and of course did not include any such transcript in the record.

[4] The Applicants bring their first motion today to compel the Committee to "complete" the record by including a transcript of the oral evidence of the two witnesses who testified at the hearing.

[5] The Applicants also brought a motion for a stay of the discipline proceedings brought against them pending their application for judicial review. This motion was refused by the Committee on May 25, 2016 with reasons to follow. As a result, the Applicants bring their second motion today for an interim stay of the continuation of the discipline proceedings against them pending the final disposition of the application for judicial review.

THE TRANSCRIPT MOTION

[6] Pursuant to s.30(5) of the PEA, the oral evidence taken in proceedings before the Discipline Committee must be recorded and, if required, copies of a transcript of the evidence must be furnished to the parties upon the same terms as in the Superior Court of Justice. The statute does not require the Committee to order a transcript of the proceedings, far less does it require the Committee to base its determination on a transcription of the evidence.

[7] In this case, a court reporter was present at the hearing and made a recording of the oral testimony. Neither the Committee nor any of parties to the proceedings has ordered complete transcripts of the proceedings to date.

[8] When notice of an application for judicial review of a decision made in the purported exercise of a statutory power of decision which includes a decision of the committee is served on the person making the decision, that person is required by s.10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, to "forthwith" file the record of proceedings in which the decision was made. The content of such a record is prescribed by s.20 of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.22 which provides that a record of proceedings must include, among other things, "the transcript, if any, of the oral evidence given at the hearing [emphasis added]."

[9] In this case, there is no suggestion that the Committee otherwise failed to comply with s.20 of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act. The only question is whether s.10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act requires a tribunal such as the committee to order, pay for and file the complete transcript of a proceeding before it that is the subject matter of judicial review.

[10] In my view, neither the simple and unambiguous words of s.20 nor the nature and scope of judicial review support the Applicants' argument. If the words "if any" in s. 20 are to have any meaning, they must mean that a transcript must be included in the record if one exists. Where no transcript has been prepared, the words do not oblige the tribunal in question to order and pay for a transcript and include it in the record. Such an obligation would also be inconsistent with the obligation in s.10 to file the record "forthwith" after receiving notice of the application for judicial review.

[11] As for the nature of the judicial review, it must be remembered that an application for judicial review is not an appeal or trial de novo or a rehearing. On judicial review, courts must avoid undue interference with the discharge of duties delegated to administrative bodies by legislatures: see Dunsmuir v. New Brunswick, 2008 SCC 9 (CanLII), [2008] S.C.J. No. 9 para. 27. A routine requirement for tribunals to prepare and file transcripts as a part of their record of proceedings is inconsistent with the nature and scope of judicial review.

[12] Curiously, if the position taken by the applicants were correct, the requirements relating to transcripts would be broader on judicial review than on appeal. In ordinary appeal, the appellant, and not the Court is responsible for ordering, paying for and filing a transcript. Moreover, the Rules of Civil Procedure which apply to an appeal from the committee by virtue of s.31(1) of the PEA discourage the filing of a complete transcript: see Rule 61.05(8).

[13] This is not to say that the Applicants cannot avail themselves of any benefit they might obtain from the filing of a transcript on judicial review. They are free to obtain a transcript if they choose and, I have no doubt, the Court would receive it if satisfied that its admission is necessary to allow effective judicial review of findings of fact. Such an eventuality is contemplated by Rule 68.04(9), which obliges a party who intends to refer to a transcript of evidence at a judicial review application to file copies of the transcript with its application record and factum.

[14] As a result, I will not compel the Committee to "complete" the record by including a transcript of the oral evidence of the two witnesses who testified at the hearing.

THE STAY MOTION

[15] As I have noted, the Applicants bring a second motion for an interim stay for the continuation of the discipline proceedings against them pending the final disposition of the application for judicial review.

[16] The test for a stay is well known. The Applicants must show:

- that there is a serious question to be determined;
- that the Applicants will suffer irreparable harm if the stay is denied; and
- the balance of convenience favours making the stay order.

[17] In this case the motion for a stay founders on the first leg of the test. Leaving aside the ultimate merits of the abuse of process ruling, judicial review has been brought prematurely. The Applicants will have a right to raise issues of fact and law including, issues relating to the abuse of process motion, on an appeal provided for by the PEA if they are found guilty. It is the strong policy of this court to discourage fragmentation of the administrative process and prevent the piecemeal litigation of tribunal proceedings by the bringing of applications for judicial review before the completion of hearings. Such piecemeal litigation undermines the deference we pay to administrative bodies and is both costly and inefficient. I addressed this issue in considerable detail in Minty v. Lucas, 2014 ONSC 3169 (Div. Ct.) at paras. 17-38. Specifically, I said, at para. 18:

> 18 This Court has consistently held that save in extraordinary circumstances, applications for judicial review of decisions of administrative tribunals should not be brought until the completion of the tribunals' proceedings. The Court has consistently followed a well-established line of authority against a piecemeal approach to the judicial review of administrative action. In the absence of exceptional circumstances, it is preferable to allow administrative proceedings to run their full course before a tribunal and to consider the legal issues arising from the proceeding, including procedural matters, against the backdrop of a full record and a reasoned decision of the tribunal (see Ontario College of Arts v. Ontario (Human Rights Commission), 1993 CanLII 3430 (ON SCDC), [1993] 11 O.R. (3d) 798 (Div. Ct.) at 799-800; Lala v. College of Physiotherapists of Ontario, [2003] O.J. No.5062 (Div. Ct.) at paragraphs 1-3).

[18] For an example of the application of the prematurity principle to the refusal of a stay of proceedings by a tribunal at the outset of a hearing see Hamalengwa v. The Law Society of Upper Canada, 2014 ONSC 1759 (Div. Ct).

[19] The serious argument to be determined leg of the test for a stay is not limited to the substantive argument that is proposed to be advanced on the judicial review. It relates to the availability to the judicial review as well.

[20] In this case, as in Talarico v. The Law Society of Upper Canada, 2012 ONSC 2493 (Div. Ct.) the applicants have failed to show that there is an arguable basis for the availability of judicial review at this juncture of the proceedings, and accordingly they do not satisfy the first leg of the test for a stay.

[21] When an applicant fails the first leg of the test for a stay, there is no need to consider the other legs. The applicants conceded this point. There is no doubt that the applicants will suffer financial and reputational harm as a result of this proceeding, as do all professionals who undergo disciplinary proceedings. But this cannot outweigh a failure to satisfy the requirement to show that there is a serious question to be determined. In such circumstances, the balance of convenience inevitably favours a refusal of stay.

[22] Accordingly, I will not order a stay pending the application for judicial review.

DISPOSITION

[23] Both motions are dismissed.

COSTS

[24] I have endorsed the motion record as follows: "This motion and the second motion in the supplementary motion record were both dismissed for oral reasons delivered in court today. Costs to the Discipline Committee fixed at $6,000 all inclusive and to the Association fixed at $4,000 all inclusive. Costs of both motions are payable forthwith."

Applicant (Respondent)

and

The Office of the Independent Police Review Director

Respondent (Appellant)

[42] For his part, the Director only addressed what should be included in a record filed in response to an application for judicial review. He submitted that such a record should include:

> (a) The complaint form and any attachments provided by the complainant;
> (b) The reasons for decision;
>
> (c) Information from the Director's files that is directly relevant to or was part of the screening decision and is not subject to solicitor/client privilege, deliberative secrecy or statutory confidentiality; and
> (d) Any evidence relied on in making the screening decision which is directly relevant to the issues raised in the application.

[43] I view the extent of the material ordered by the Divisional Court and the list proposed by the respondent to be overly broad and unnecessarily detailed. It is well settled that the starting point for defining what a record of proceeding is to contain when no statutory definition is provided is the decision of Denning L.J. in R. v. Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal ex parte Shaw (1951), [1952] 1 K.B. 338 (Eng. C.A.), at pp. 351-52. There Denning L.J. stated that:

> …throughout all the cases there is one governing rule: Certiorari is only available to quash a decision for error of law if the error appears on the face of the record. What, then, is the record? It has been said to consist of all those documents which are kept by the tribunal for a permanent memorial and testimony of their proceedings … I think the record must contain at least the document which initiates the proceedings, the pleadings, if any, and the adjudication; but not the evidence, nor the reasons, unless the tribunal chooses to incorporate them. If the tribunal does state its reasons, and those reasons are wrong in law, certiorari lies to quash the decision.

192 D.L.R. (4th) 315, wherein he stated, at para. 161:

> An applicant for judicial review has the right to have a full and accurate record of what went on before the tribunal put before the court. This is an aspect of the superior court's inherent powers of judicial review. A superior court may insist upon the production of an adequate record of the proceedings before the tribunal being reviewed. As stated by Denning L.J. in R. v. Medical Appeal Tribunal, Ex parte Gilmore, [1957] 1 Q.B. 574 (Eng. C.A.) at 583:
> > The court has always had power to order an inferior tribunal to complete the record … [A] tribunal could defeat a writ of certiorari unless the courts could order them to complete or correct an imperfect record. So the courts have the power to give such an order.

[45] The Director has indicated a willingness to file the materials listed in paragraph 42 above in response to an application for judicial review. With the exception of the materials referred to in item (d) of that list, I have assumed that he would file similar materials as part of a record of proceedings if we were to confirm the divisional court's decision. The materials referred to in item (d) only become relevant once the respondent has set out the issues she wishes to raise on judicial review. In my view, the materials listed in paragraph 42, items (a), (b) and (c), satisfy what is required in a record of proceedings in this context. Arguably, the breadth of the materials that could be encompassed within item (c) may, in some cases, exceed what is required or be subject to interpretation. In light of the Director's apparent willingness to include the materials listed in items (a), (b) and (c), in my view nothing more is needed in this case than to require that the Director file a record of proceedings so constituted. If further direction is required, it can be addressed in the judicial review proceedings.

[46] Defining the record in the way proposed by the respondent or as ordered by the Divisional Court is in my view unwarranted and can be confusing. The statutory Administrative law — Judicial review — Statutory power of decision — Independent Police Review Director ("IPRD") exercising statutory power of decision within meaning of s. 10 of Judicial Review Procedures Act when it made decision under s. 60 of Police Services Act not [page329] to deal with complaint — IPRD required to file record of proceedings when complainant applied for judicial review of that decision — Judicial Review Procedures Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1, s. 10 — Police Services Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.15, s. 60.

The applicant filed complaints against the Toronto Police Service and the Ontario Provincial Police. The Independent Police Review Director ("IPRD") exercised its discretion under s. 60 of the Police

10. When notice of an application for judicial review of a decision made in the exercise or purported exercise of a statutory power of decision has been served on the person making the decision, such person shall forthwith file in [page336] the court for use on the application the record of the proceedings in which the decision was made.

"statutory power" means a power or right conferred by or under a statute,

(a) to make any regulation, rule, by-law or order, or to give any other direction having force as subordinate legislation,

(b) to exercise a statutory power of decision,

(c) to require any person or party to do or to refrain from doing any act or thing that, but for such requirement, such person or party would not be required by law to do or to refrain from doing,

(d) to do any act or thing that would, but for such power or right, be a breach of the legal rights of any person or party;

"statutory power of decision" means a power or right conferred by or under a statute to make a decision deciding or prescribing,

(a) the legal rights, powers, privileges, immunities, duties or liabilities of any person or party, or

(b) the eligibility of any person or party to receive, or to the continuation of, a benefit or licence, whether the person or party is legally entitled thereto or not,

and includes the powers of an inferior court.

[22] In this case, subpara. (b) [of the definition of "statutory power of decision"] dealing with eligibility for a benefit or licence is not at issue. Thus, to qualify as a "statutory power of decision", the power to make the decision in this case must be conferred by statute and the decision must "decide" or "prescribe" the legal rights or privileges of any party or person.

[23] Counsel for the IPRD conceded that the power exercised under s. 60 is subject to judicial review, but takes the position that it is not a "statutory power of decision" because it does not determine the rights of any person, but rather merely makes a direction or order.

[24] Until the decision of the motion judge in this case, there had been no judicial determination of this issue within the context of s. 60 of the PSA.

The decision of the motion judge

[25] The motion judge held that the IPRD exercised a statutory power of decision when it decided not to deal with Ms. Endicott's complaint. The motion judge found that a member of the public has a statutory right to file a complaint and to have that complaint dealt with according to ss. 59 and 60 of the PSA. She [page337] rejected the argument of counsel for the IPRD that the IPRD has a broad discretion as to whether to screen complaints in or screen them out, and characterized the function of the IPRD under s. 60 as "screening out" complaints, as opposed to "screening in". The motion judge concluded that both on a literal and purposive interpretation of the legislation, the intent is that a complaint will be dealt with unless the IPRD screens it out under the defined and limited criteria set out in s. 60.

[26] The motion judge distinguished case law relied upon by the respondent on the basis that they dealt with a different statutory scheme or the person seeking a remedy was not affected by the decision.

The Statutory Powers Procedure Act and Rule 68 are not relevant

[27] Counsel for the IPRD does not contend that decisions of the IPRD under s. 60 of the PSA are immune from judicial review. However, she points to the fact that Rule 68 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194 contemplates there will be some applications for judicial review which, by their nature, do not have a record of proceedings. She further submits that because the Statutory Powers Procedure Act ("SPPA")[13] does not apply to a decision under s. 60 of the PSA, such a decision is by definition not a "statutory power of decision".

[28] Clearly, there are many types of judicial review applications for which there would be no record of proceeding, sometimes because there wasn't even a proceeding, but rather a ministerial or administrative action or inaction. Rule 68.04 simply recognizes that there will sometimes be a record of proceedings and sometimes not. It does no more than that. It does not assist in the interpretation of either s. 10 of the JRPA or the nature of the powers of the IPRD under the PSA.

[29] Likewise, the Statutory Powers Procedure Act provides no such assistance. It was generally accepted by all counsel, and I agree, that a decision of the IPRD under s. 60 is not one to which the SPPA applies. Section 83(1) of the PSA stipulates that where a hearing is ordered with respect to a complaint of alleged misconduct by a police officer, the SPPA applies to that hearing. There is no such direction with respect to the initial decision by the IPRD under ss. 59 and 60, nor would I expect there to be. Clearly, a hearing is not contemplated for such a decision. However, just because an actual hearing is not required does not [page338] mean that the decision is not a statutory power of decision. Or to put it another way, not every statutory power of decision necessarily requires a hearing.

[30] The SPPA adopts the same definition for a "statutory power of decision" as is set out in s. 10 of the JRPA. Counsel for the IPRD points to s. 20 of the SPPA, which sets out what a tribunal is required to include in a record of proceedings. She argues that the SPPA record of proceedings clearly contemplates it applies to a proceeding in which a hearing is held, and that s. 10 of the JRPA should be interpreted in the same manner. Therefore, she submits, since there was no hearing or requirement of a hearing by the IPRD, there cannot be a requirement to file a record of proceedings.

> 20. A tribunal shall compile a record of any proceeding in which a hearing has been held which shall include,
> (a) any application, complaint, reference or other document, if any, by which the proceeding was commenced;
> (b) the notice of any hearing;
>
> (c) any interlocutory orders made by the tribunal;
>
> (d) all documentary evidence filed with the tribunal, subject to any limitation expressly imposed by any other Act on the extent to or the purposes for which any such documents may be used in evidence in any proceeding;
> (e) the transcript, if any, of the oral evidence given at the hearing; and
> (f) the decision of the tribunal and the reasons therefor, where reasons have been given.

[32] The difficulty with the argument made by counsel for IPRD is that it is circular. Of course, the contents of the record of proceedings described by s. 20 of the SPPA seems to reflect a proceeding that involves a hearing. The section itself begins by stating that it relates to a proceeding "in which a hearing has been held". Further, the SPPA itself only applies to those

ENDORSEMENT

Relief Requested

[1] The Moving Party/Applicant, Audrey Janette Batacharya, requests an order requiring the Respondent College of Midwives of Ontario (the "College") to file the complete record of proceedings relating to the January 18, 2011 decision of the College's Inquiries, Complaints and Reports Committee (the "ICRC") 'In the Matter of the Consideration of a Deputy Registrar's Report Made under Section 79 of the Health Professions Procedural Code About Kim Cloutier-Holtz, RM'.

Background

[2] The ICRC is a statutory committee of the College. It considers complaints, inquiries and reports brought to the attention of the College. On receipt of a complaint or report, the registrar may appoint an investigator to determine whether a member has committed an act of professional misconduct or is incompetent. The results of the investigation are reported to the ICRC for consideration. The ICRC is a screening committee. Its role is to determine whether the allegations are serious enough to refer to discipline or to require some other action. It does not make findings of professional misconduct.

[3] Ms. Batacharya is a mid-wife. Pursuant to section 85.5 of the Health Professions Procedural Code[1], she made a mandatory report to the College on December 29, 2009 outlining the circumstances in which an associate mid-wife and fellow college member, Kim Cloutier-Holtz, had left Ms. Batacharya's midwifery practice.

[4] Following an investigation relating to Ms. Cloutier-Holtz, the ICRC Panel issued reasons for decision on January 18, 2011. It noted that the issue for the Panel to decide was whether the nature of the allegations, if true, warranted a discipline hearing among other things. The Panel decided to take no action. In its reasons for decision, it noted that it did not have any concerns with the clinical care provided by Ms. Cloutier-Holtz to her clients or any concern for public safety.

[5] The Panel did have concerns with the mandatory report itself and was of the view that the report was not made with regard to the highest principles of integrity and professionalism. It noted its concern that the clinical issues Ms. Batacharya had described in her report had occurred three years ago without any mention of action taken to address these issues until she filed her mandatory report with the College. The Panel also noted that Ms. Batacharya had continued to assign clients to Ms. Cloutier-Holtz and allowed Ms. Cloutier-Holtz to teach students and to cover on-call duties. The Panel was of the view that it was unreasonable to believe a practice would allow a member to continue to see clients, teach students and cover on-call duties if the concerns of the member's clinical care, competency and professionalism were legitimate.

[6] The Panel also noted that the mandatory report was dated December 29, 2009 which was two months after Ms. Cloutier-Holtz had filed a Human Rights Complaint against her former practice and Ms. Batacharya. The Panel reiterated its view that the investigation results demonstrated that the report had no merit and therefore no further action would be taken. Accordingly, there was no referral to the discipline committee for a hearing.

[7] The ICRC provided a copy of its decision to Ms. Cloutier-Holtz but not to Ms. Batacharya. Ms. Batacharya learnt of the decision when it was circulated in the Sudbury community.

[8] Concerns about Ms. Batacharya's practice have been raised with the College. By correspondence dated March 24, 2011, the College identified these as including "the fact that at least seven midwives have left [her] practice in the last few years, as well, various colleagues have raised issues relating to the unmanageable workloads, being asked to cover for Ms. Batacharya without compensation, lack of continuity of care for clients, poor organization of the practice and a lack of respect on the part of Ms. Batacharya for her colleagues."

[9] On April 1, 2011, the College advised Ms. Batacharya that an investigator had been appointed to ascertain whether Ms. Batacharya has engaged in professional misconduct including with respect to failing to maintain the standards of practice of the profession and/or engaging in conduct that would reasonably be regarded as disgraceful, dishonourable or unprofessional.

[10] Ms. Batacharya has brought an application for judicial review of the decision in the matter of Ms. Cloutier-Holtz.

Position of the Parties

[11] Ms. Batacharya takes the position that the College is required to produce its record of proceedings pursuant to Section 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act[2] ("JRPA"). She states that the record is required in order for the judicial review application to be properly argued and decided and that the Court has residual discretion to order production of the record of proceedings.

[12] The College takes the position that the ICRC did not exercise or purport to exercise a statutory power of decision with respect to Ms. Batacharya. She was not the subject of the report nor did the College have the ability to take any action against her. The comments made in the ICRC report have no legal force and effect as against Ms. Batacharya. Furthermore, based on section 36(3) of the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991[3], the record cannot be produced to Ms. Batacharya.

Discussion

[13] Section 10 of the JRPA states:

> When notice of an application for judicial review of a decision made in the exercise or purported exercise of a statutory power of decision has been served on the person making the decision, such person shall forthwith file in the court for use on the application the record of the proceedings in which the decision was made.

[14] Therefore, a decision-maker is required to file a record of the proceedings where the application for judicial review concerns a decision by a decision maker who has exercised or purported to exercise a statutory power of decision as defined in Section 1 of the JRPA.

[15] Section 1 of the JRPA defines a statutory power of decision as:

> a power or right conferred by or under a statute to make a decision deciding or prescribing,
>
> (a) the legal rights, powers, privileges, immunities, duties or liabilities of any person or party, or
> (b) the eligibility of any person or party to receive, or to the continuation of, a benefit or licence, whether the person or party is legally entitled thereto or not,
> and includes the powers of an inferior court.

[16] Here the ICRC did not exercise or purport to exercise any statutory power of decision with respect to Ms. Batacharya within the meaning of Section 1 of the JRPA. Ms. Cloutier-Holtz was the subject of the ICRC's investigation and decision. The ICRC's decision did not decide or prescribe Ms. Batacharya's legal rights, powers, privileges, immunities, duties or liabilities. The ICRC made no findings that Ms. Batacharya had engaged in unprofessional conduct and did not issue a disciplinary reprimand or make any disciplinary decision against her.

[17] As stated in Re: Medhurst v. Medhurst[4], the purpose of the JRPA is not to afford rights to one person because a decision decided or prescribed the rights of another person.

[18] The ICRC decision does not form any part of Ms. Batacharya's file or record with the College. It is not a prior decision relating to her within the meaning of Clause 26(2) of the Code. Rather, it is a prior decision relating to Ms. Cloutier-Holtz. It is also not a disciplinary caution or reprimand of Ms. Batacharya as she asserts.

[19] In addition, under section 27(2) of the Health Professions Procedural Code, the member shall be given a copy of the ICRC decision. The member is Ms. Cloutier-Holtz. Someone who makes a mandatory report, that is Ms. Batacharya, is not entitled as of right to a copy of the ICRC decision.

[20] Not only is Ms. Batacharya not entitled to a copy of the ICRC decision, the College is prohibited from giving her a copy by virtue of section 36(3) of the RHPA as the ICRC decision relates to another member and is confidential to her. By logical extension, Ms. Batacharya would not be entitled to a copy of the investigatory records which contain personal information relating to Ms. Cloutier-Holtz. Furthermore, section 36(3) precludes the use of the record of the ICRC proceedings in a civil proceeding other than a proceeding under the RHPA. An application for judicial review is a civil proceeding: Ellis-Don Limited[5]. The record of proceedings relating to

Ms. Cloutier-Holtz is inadmissible in Ms. Batacharya's application for judicial review which is not a proceeding under the RHPA. The order for production requested by Ms. Batacharya would destroy the objective of confidentiality which is reflected in section 36(3) of the RHPA.

[21] For all of these reasons, I am of the view that there is no merit in Ms. Batacharya's position and I do not propose to exercise my discretion as she requests. The motion is dismissed. An order is granted extending the time for Ms. Batacharya to serve and file her application for judicial review and her factum to February 29, 2012.

Costs

[22] Both parties provided cost outlines. The College sought $12,435.99 in fees and $260.83 in disbursements for a total of $12,696.82 on a partial indemnity scale.

[23] Ms. Batacharya sought fees of $12,625 and disbursements of $761.92 for total fees and disbursements of $13,386.92. Even though the request of the College approximates that of Ms. Batacharya, I view the costs of both parties to be rather excessive given the issues in dispute and the nature of the record. Accordingly, I am ordering that Ms. Batacharya pay to the College the sum of $7,500 plus disbursements of $260.83 plus applicable H.S.T. within 30 days. In my view, this is a fair and reasonable sum.

REASONS FOR DECISION

D.L. Corbett J.

[1] This case concerns investigations by the Privacy Commissioners of Ontario and British Columbia into alleged unauthorized disclosure of personal information stored on computer systems of the applicant, LifeLabs LP, as a result of an alleged criminal cyber-attack. Most affected LifeLabs customers reside in either Ontario or British Columbia.

[2] In the wake of the cyber-attack, LifeLabs had to respond to inquiries from federal, provincial and territorial privacy commissioners across Canada and to respond to eleven proposed class proceedings in Ontario and British Columbia.

[3] LifeLabs reported the disclosure of personal information to the privacy commissioners of Ontario and British Columbia, as it was required to do. Both of these commissioners launched investigations. In the course of these investigations, both commissioners required LifeLabs to produce various documents. LifeLabs produced some of these documents but declined to produce other documents on the basis that the documents are privileged. Two bases of privilege were asserted: litigation privilege and solicitor-client privilege.

[4] By decision dated March 30, 2020, Ontario IPC ordered LifeLabs to produce documents over which LifeLabs asserts claims of privilege (ReLifeLabs LP, 2020 CanLII 24923 (PHIPA Decision 114)). LifeLabs produced documents in accordance with the production order, while asserting claims of both confidentiality and privilege in respect to the documents.

[5] On May 19, 2020, the Commissioners issued a joint "request for representations" to LifeLabs about information the Commissioners proposed to include in their final investigation report. On June 9, 2020, LifeLabs provided written submissions including argument that certain documents over which claims of confidentiality and privilege were asserted should not be included in the public version of the final investigation report. These submissions were supported by a sworn declaration from a lawyer, LifeLabs interim General Counsel, explaining the basis of LifeLabs' claims of privilege and confidentiality.

[6] On June 25, 2020, the Commissioners released a "Joint Privilege Decision" and a "Joint Investigation Report". In the Joint Privilege Decision, the Commissioners rejected all of LifeLabs' claims of privilege and confidentiality.

[7] LifeLabs commenced applications for judicial review of the Joint Privilege Decision in both Ontario and British Columbia.

Issues on the Application in this Court

[8] In its factum on this motion, LifeLabs describes the issues on the application as follows:

> The Joint Privilege Decision was the product of an unfair process, including;
>
> (i) unprecedented and improper collaboration between the Ontario IPC and the BC IPC;
>
> (ii) unreasonable order requiring LifeLabs to produce confidential and privileged documents without a hearing or an opportunity to respond to the order;
> (iii) unreasonable and unnecessarily expedited timelines for responses from LifeLabs;

(iv) a decision based on irrelevant considerations including the impending retirement of the Ontario IPC; and

(v) rejection of LifeLabs' evidence about privilege and confidentiality "without affording… a fair opportunity to respond."

There are other issues raised in the Notice of Application – such as a challenge to the jurisdiction of the Commissioner to decide questions of privilege – but I proceed on the basis that the relief claimed on this motion is based on the grounds for the application that are referenced in the factum and were raised during oral argument. In other words, I decide this motion on the basis on which it was argued.

[9] LifeLabs takes the position that, in addition to the Record of Decision produced by the Commissioner, it requires additional disclosure from the Commissioner for the purposes of this application, including:

(a) any documents, including background policies and internal memoranda, that governed the decision-making process of the Ontario IPC resulting in the Joint Privilege Decision;

(b) the documents that the Ontario IPC considered and generated during the decision-making process of the Ontario IPC resulting in the Joint Privilege Decision;

(c) all correspondence, including with the BC OIPC, about the decision-making process for the Joint Privilege Decision and/or about the drafting and content of the Joint Privilege Decision; and

(d) all correspondence, including with the BC OIPC, relating to the timing of the Joint Privilege Decision, and the timing of the release of the Joint Investigation Report.

[10] The Ontario Commissioner takes the position that none of the requested documents ought to be ordered produced as part of the record of Decision in this case because all of the requested documents are protected from compelled disclosure by (a) solicitor-client privilege; (b) common interest privilege; and/or (c) adjudicative privilege (sometimes called "deliberative secrecy").

[11] For the reasons that follow, the motion is dismissed. The requested documents are not properly part of the Record before this court. All are protected by deliberative privilege.

Analysis

The Record of Proceedings

[12] Section 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act (the "JRPA") provides:

> When a notice of application for judicial review of a decision made in the exercise or purported exercise of a statutory power of decision has been served on the person making the decision, such person shall forthwith file in the court for use on the application the record of the proceedings in which the decision was made.[1]

The JRPA is silent on what is included in the "record of proceedings."

[13] "An applicant for judicial review has the right to have a full and accurate record of what went on before the tribunal put before the court."[2] For some tribunals, the required content of the record is specified in the Statutory Powers Procedure Act (the "SPPA").[3] However, these requirements do not apply in this case: proceedings before the Commissioner are not ones "where the tribunal is required… to afford the parties to the proceeding an opportunity for a hearing before making a decision."[4]

[14] The "record" then, in this case, is a matter of common law. About seventy years ago, Lord Denning stated that the record "has been said to consist of all those documents which are kept by the tribunal for a permanent memorial and testimony of their proceedings…. [It] must contain at least the document which initiates the proceedings."[5] By way of analogy to a trial in a court of record, the record should contain the pleadings or analogous documents, the evidence that was before the decision-maker, and transcripts (if oral evidence was taken and recorded for purposes of transcription). This court may insist upon production of an adequate record for purposes of review, and this court has the power to order the decisionmaker below to complete the record.[6]

Deliberative Privilege

[15] Sitting as a single judge of this court, Perrell J. reviewed principles of deliberative secrecy (or adjudicative privilege) as follows:

> [76] Under the doctrine or principle of deliberative secrecy, which promotes adjudicative independence, collegial debate, and the finality of decisions, a judge or an administrative tribunal adjudicator cannot be compelled to testify about the deliberations or the substance of the decision-making process or how or why a particular decision was reached by the court or administrative tribunal: Re Clendenning and Board of Police Com'rs for City of Belleville (1976), 1976 CanLII 696 (ON SC), 15 O.R. (2d) 97 (Div. Ct.); Agnew v. Ontario Association of Architects (1987), 1987 CanLII 4030 (ON SC), 64 O.R. (2d) 8 (H.C.J.); 156621 Canada Ltd. v. The City of Ottawa (2004), 70 O.R. (3d) 291 (S.C.J.).
> [77] The substance of the decision-making process includes what material was considered or not considered by the adjudicator, whether the adjudicator pre-judged the matter, and the extent to which the adjudicator was influenced by the views of others: Agnew v. Ontario Association of Architects, supra, at p. 17.
> [80] Under the rule of deliberative secrecy, members of administrative tribunals generally cannot be required to testify about how or why they reach their decisions: Cherubini Metal Works Ltd. v. Nova Scotia (Attorney General), supra. In Cherubini Metal Works Ltd. v. Nova Scotia (Attorney General) supra at para. 16, Cromwell, J.A., as he then was, noted that, although the principle of deliberative secrecy does not apply as strongly to administrative tribunals as to courts, the Supreme Court of Canada has confirmed that deliberative secrecy is the general rule for administrative tribunals.
> [81] The testimonial immunity of deliberative secrecy for the administrative aspects of the decision-making process is not absolute and will yield where it is

> [82] The testimonial immunity of deliberative secrecy can be lifted if a litigant can show clearly articulated and objectively sound reasons for believing that the process did not comply with the rules of natural justice or procedural fairness: Cherubini Metal Works Ltd. v. Nova Scotia (Attorney General) supra; Payne v. Ontario (Human Rights Commission), supra; Agnew v. Ontario Association of Architects), supra, at p. 15.[7]

I accept and adopt this summary.

[16] In this case, LifeLabs argues that it has alleged breaches of natural justice and procedural fairness that ground its request for additional documents to complete the record. I do not accept this argument.

[17] The onus rests on the litigant seeking to displace adjudicative privilege and this onus is not discharged on the basis of speculation, conjecture or simple allegation alone: there must be a foundation before the court for the allegation that not only raises an issue of procedural fairness, but also justifies displacing the privilege in order to adjudicate the procedural fairness issue.[8]

[18] I now consider the four categories of documents sought by LifeLabs in light of the principles set out above.

> (a) any documents, including background policies and internal memoranda, that governed the decision-making process of the Ontario IPC resulting in the Joint Privilege Decision

[19] Narrowly construed, one document in this category has been produced by the Ontario IPC. That document is the PHIPA Code of Procedure, and in particular section 18 of this Code, which addresses claims of confidentiality for documents provided to the IPC during an investigation. This material was disclosed to LifeLabs during the investigation and may be properly included in the Record.[9]

[20] LifeLabs has not identified any other documents or category of documents that "governed the decision-making process". During oral argument, reference was made to internal policy documents, precedents, memos to the IPC from staff, and other similar documents that were argued to be producible as part of the record. I reject this argument. By analogy, parties to an appeal are not entitled to a bench brief or memo written by a judicial law clerk, a standard benchbook, a list of textbooks available to the judge, or any other aspect of the internal processes at the court supporting the judge in doing her work. These are all covered by adjudicative privilege. Such documents do not "govern" the decision-making process, and they are well within the cone of adjudicative privilege. The PHIPA Code of Procedure, by contrast, is a code that contains principles that guide the decision and can be said to "govern" it, much in the same way the the Rules of Civil Procedure constrain and govern proceedings in court.

[21] No basis is stated to defeat adjudicative privilege in respect to this category of documents (other than the Code of Procedure). They would be irrelevant to the bases alleged for procedural unfairness (listed in para. 8, above).

> (b) the documents that the Ontario IPC considered and generated during the decision-making process of the Ontario IPC resulting in the Joint Privilege Decision

[22] The record should include the evidence considered by the IPC. This would include submissions received by the IPC (which have been included in the record) and any other documents relied upon by the IPC to establish the facts upon which it based its decision. This would not include internal documents "generated" by IPC staff in reviewing documents relied upon to establish facts. Thus, if the IPC reviewed documents available on the internet and relied on those documents, or reviewed policies and reports from other Canadian privacy commissioners to establish the facts, those must be disclosed as part of the record. Staff analysis or reports on this research are not producible. The evidence on this motion is that all of the information gathered by the IPC's staff that was relied on to establish the facts has been disclosed by citation in the Privilege Decision.

(c) all correspondence, including with the BC OIPC, about the decision-making process for the Joint Privilege Decision and/or about the drafting and content of the Joint Privilege Decision

[23] LifeLabs takes the position that it was improper for the Ontario and BC Commissioners to engage in a joint process in this case. The Commissioners take a contrary position, and also argue that LifeLabs may not raise this issue on judicial review because they did not raise it during the proceedings below. Those are issues for decision by a panel of this court on the main application.

[24] LifeLabs' request for production of communications between the two Commissioners is premised on its argument that the joint decision-making process was unlawful or unfair. Assuming, without finding, that the joint decision-making process was lawful and fair, then this request, on its face, strikes at the heart of adjudicative privilege. It is akin to seeking communications between panel members of this court on an appeal of a decision of this court to the Court of Appeal.

[25] Until a court finds that the Commissioners should not have conducted a joint investigation, the impugned decisions are taken to be correct.

[26] If a panel of this court concludes that the impugned decision should not have been made by way of a process of joint investigation and decision-making, then that panel can consider what the appropriate remedy should be. Unless and until that happens, adjudicative privilege applies to this category of documents, and it is not defeated by an allegation that the process ought not to have been joint. Further, this decision should not be taken to imply that adjudicative privilege is lost if the two Commissioners should not have proceeded jointly: that issue, to the extent that it may need to be addressed, is a matter for the panel to decide.

(d) all correspondence, including with the BC OIPC, relating to the timing of the Joint Privilege Decision, and the timing of the release of the Joint Investigation Report.

[27] This request is a subset of the request in issue (c). It is denied for the same reasons request (c) was denied. It raises one additional point – allegations of procedural unfairness as a result of procedural decisions taken in this case allegedly because of the retirement date of the Ontario IPC.

[28] First, deadlines imposed, and the schedule followed, were either fair or unfair to LifeLabs. The Commissioner's retirement date would not justify imposing a schedule that was procedurally unfair.

[29] LifeLabs' argument seems to be that there was an oblique motive that coloured the process in this case. Real scheduling constraints faced by a decisionmaker are not oblique motives. Neither are they justifications for following a process that is unfair. The focus of the procedural unfairness argument, in this court, is on the process followed and its impact on the parties. This does not justify inquiring into internal constraints under which the decision-maker was operating.

[30] The Ontario IPC argues that LifeLabs' argument on this point is mere speculation. The retirement of the IPC is not speculation. Wondering whether it impacted scheduling decisions is speculative because LifeLabs cannot do more than speculate about this point without disclosure. I would not order the disclosure because, even if a pending retirement was a factor taken into account in setting a schedule, that would neither justify a process that was unfair to LifeLabs, nor would it render unfair a process that was, in substance, fair to LifeLabs. In other words, the pending retirement of the IPC is not, on its face, relevant to whether the process was fair to LifeLabs.

[31] Finally, I note LifeLabs' argument that the decision itself was "rushed". Alacrity of decision-making is not a reviewable ground in this court. Whether a process is fast or slow, the analysis in this court is on procedural fairness and substantive reasonableness.

Disposition

[32] For these reasons the motion is dismissed. As agreed by the parties, there shall be no order respecting costs.

Evidentiary Issues

Motion to adduce new evidence

[34] At the hearing of the applications before this panel, Rol-Land Farms and Mr. Vanderpol brought a motion seeking to adduce new evidence and allowing them to rely on an amended factum. The new evidence was an affidavit that purported to show an intention of the applicant Union to breach a settlement agreement between the Union and Rol-Land Farms.

[35] That motion was dismissed on the grounds that the evidence was not relevant to the matter before us. It relates to a claim of abuse of process, which should properly be brought before the Tribunal.

The admissibility of volume 3 of the Record of Proceedings

[36] The Tribunal filed a three volume Record of Proceedings. The first two volumes deal with matters relating to the three decisions under review. The third volume deals with matters from June to October, 2007, after these proceedings were commenced. It includes correspondence between counsel and, most importantly, a "Statement of the Tribunal re: Allegations of Bias", dated October 5, 2007, which purports to respond to the bias allegations. It also attaches biographies of Tribunal panel members that are much more detailed than the information provided to Ms. Harold's counsel in the May 10, 2007 letter.

[37] As indicated in an oral ruling during the hearing, volume 3 of the Record of Proceedings is not admissible. Section 10 of the JRPA requires a tribunal to file its record of proceedings when served with an application for judicial review of a decision. It is the record of proceedings relating to the particular decision that is to be filed, as is clear from the words of s. 10:

> When notice of an application for judicial review of a decision made in the exercise or purported exercise of a statutory power of decision has been served on the person making the decision, such person shall forthwith file in the court for use on the application, the record of proceedings in which the decision is made. (emphasis added)

[38] Thus, the content of volume 3 is not properly part of the record required to be filed pursuant to s. 10 of the JRPA, as it post-dates the decisions under review. Moreover, it is not relevant to the issue of reasonable apprehension of bias before this Court, as it responds to an issue of actual bias.

[39] Counsel for the Tribunal submitted that the Statement was properly before this Court, as a similar approach had been followed in Committee for Justice and Liberty v. Canada (National Energy Board), 1976 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1978] 1 S.C.R. 369 and Wewaykum Indian Band v. Canada, 2003 SCC 45 (CanLII), [2003] 2 S.C.R. 259. In each of those cases, an allegation of reasonable apprehension of bias was made - against a member of the Supreme Court of Canada in Wewaykum and against the chair of a tribunal in Committee for Justice and Liberty. At the outset of the hearing, the challenged adjudicator filed a statement in response. In Wewaykum, Binnie J. then withdrew from participation in the proceedings. The parties then made submissions based on the material filed (at para. 4).

[40] The Statement here was generated long after the applications for judicial review commenced. After Jennings J. refused to hear these applications on an urgent basis, the Tribunal invited the applicants to make submissions on bias. However, the applicants refused to do so, on the basis that the Tribunal had pre-judged the issue by taking a position on the merits in its factum filed for the proceedings before Jennings J. Subsequently, the Tribunal made its Statement dated

b. The OMDC allegedly withheld relevant production from the applicant that may have evidenced that bias.

Bias

[66] During oral submissions, the applicant took the position that it was not alleging that the OMDC was biased as against the applicant as a result of anti-evangelical Christian motives. Rather, the applicant submitted that the OMDC's reasoning was merely fettered by same. Simply put, this is a pyrrhic distinction in that an allegation that a decision-maker's reasoning is fettered by bias is in fact an allegation of bias. Accordingly, the legal principles governing allegations of bias apply to this case.

[67] Allegations of bias must be made at first instance to the decision-maker in question: Alberta (Information and Privacy Commissioner) v. Alberta Teachers' Association, 2011 SCC 61, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 654, at para. 23; Speck v. OLRB, 2021 ONSC 3176 at para 44 (Div. Ct.). In this case, the applicant conceded in oral argument that it did not raise any concerns regarding bias to the OMDC.

[68] The applicant's concerns about anti-evangelical Christian bias are founded upon Mr. Harilaid's interpretation of statements allegedly made by OMDC representatives. It bears repeating that a decision-maker is presumed to be impartial and that party's interpretation of a decision-maker's tone of voice, facial expressions and body language are insufficient to overcome the presumption of impartiality: Beard Winter LLP v. Shekhdar, 2016 ONCA 493 at para 12; Ramirez v. Canada, 2012 FC 809 at paras. 22 and 23; SMR v. Children's Aid Society of Oxford County, 2003 CanLII 2421 (ON SC), [2003] OJ No. 2568 (Ont. S.C.) at paras 23 – 25. The nature of the concerns raised by the applicant are thus not capable of overcoming the high hurdle required to show bias.

[69] Finally, the statements made by people other than a decision-maker are not proof of the decision-maker's state of mind: Elson v. Canada, 2017 FC 459 at paras. 146 – 149. Any statements made during the October 7, 2019 conversation between the applicant and representatives of the OMDC, even were the court to accept that the statements were made and that they evidence some form of bias as against evangelical Christians, are not evidence of potential bias held by the director, who was not present for that call.

[70] The applicant's effective submission that the OMDC was biased as against the applicant due to an anti-evangelical Christian motivation therefore fails.

Production

[71] The Applicant served a Notice of Examination under Rule 39.03 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, which is a mechanism to compel oral testimony. The Notice of Examination was quashed. The decision to quash was not appealed. The Notice of Application seeking judicial review does not raise the decision to quash the Notice of Examination as an error.

[72] A subpoena duces tecum is a mechanism to have a witness present oral testimony. It is not an order to produce documents to a party outside of court, as set out in Law Society of Saskatchewan v Abrametz, 2016 SKQB 134 at para 46:

> The document in issue, a subpoena duces tecum, is understood to have a particular function - to compel the subpoenaed person to court, or other independent tribunal, to testify and to bring with him/her certain, specified documents. Watt J. (as he then was) described a subpoena in these terms in R. v. Finkle, [2007] O.J. No. 3506 (Ont. S.C.J.) (QL): "literally translated 'under penalty', [a subpoena] is a command to the person named to appear at a time and place specified to give testimony about a matter in issue between the parties to a proceeding" (para. 88). Watt J. then explained the function of a subpoena duces tecum and the limits that ought to attach to its use:

> ... A subpoena duces tecum requires the witness to bring with him or her things like books, papers and other things connected with his or her testimony. In the usual course, a subpoena duces tecum is not used to obtain these other things, which are often used as aides memoires for production at trial.
> It is uncontroversial that, where alternative methods of obtaining evidence are available, the party who seeks the evidence may generally choose the means to achieve that end. At the same time, however, courts should be chary of manifest circumventions of traditional methods of acquiring evidence, especially those that avoid adherence to established constitutional principle. A subpoena duces tecum ought not to be used to avoid the scrutiny associated with other methods of acquisition. See, by comparison, R. v. French (1977), 1977 CanLII 2117 (ON CA), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 201, 213-4 (Ont. C.A.) per MacKinnon J.A., affirmed on other grounds (1979), 1979 CanLII 49 (SCC), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 411 (S.C.C.). [Emphasis in original.]

[73] Although not raised in the Notice of Application, the applicant now argues that the record filed by the decision-maker was underinclusive.

[74] Section 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1 provides:

> Record to be filed in court
> When notice of an application for judicial review of a decision made in the exercise or purported exercise of a statutory power of decision has been served on the person making the decision, such person shall forthwith file in the court for use on the application the record of the proceedings in which the decision was made.

[75] Ergo, pursuant to s. 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, it was available to the applicant to bring a motion seeking production of documents it alleges were relied on by the decision-maker but are not contained in the record: see, for example K.D. v. Peel Children's Aid Society, 2017 ONSC 7392 (Div. Ct.) at paras. 16-17). The applicant failed to do so. As a result, it is precluded from raising this issue for the first time on judicial review.

Conclusion

[77] There is no evidence to suggest that the OMDC failed to afford appropriate levels of procedural fairness to the applicant when it arrived at the Decision.

CONCLUSION

[78] The Decision was reasonable and the OMDC's conduct was also reasonable. The instant application for judicial review is dismissed.

COSTS

[79] The parties could not agree on costs. Reflections' counsel filed a Bill of Costs seeking $25,665.05 (all inclusive) at a partial indemnity rate. The OMDC's counsel seeks costs in the amount of $12,705.00 for the hearing of the application and $5,000.00 (as agreed upon by the parties) for the motion to quash the subpoena. Given the mandates of Rule 57.01 and given the Bill of Costs filed by Reflections, the quantum of costs sought by the OMDC is entirely appropriate.

[80] Therefore, the applicant shall pay $17,705.00 in costs (all inclusive) to the respondent (for both the instant application and the motion to quash) within 90 days of today's date.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR YUKON

Courts — Judges — Impartiality — Reasonable apprehension of bias — Allegation that judge's comments and interventions at trial as well as his community involvement before and after appointment as a judge gave rise to reasonable apprehension of bias — Whether judge's conduct and community involvement raised reasonable apprehension of bias.

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Whether school board can unilaterally decide to admit students who are not covered by s. 23 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Yukon Francophone School Board is the first and only school board in the Yukon. It has responsibility for one school, École Émilie-Tremblay, a French-language school founded in 1984. In 2009, the Board sued the Yukon government for what it claimed were deficiencies in the provision of minority language education. The trial judge ruled in the Board's favour on most issues.

The Court of Appeal concluded that there was a reasonable apprehension of bias on the part of the trial judge based on a number of incidents during the trial as well as the trial judge's involvement as a governor of a philanthropic francophone community organization in Alberta. Accordingly, it ordered a new trial except on three issues, only two of which were appealed to this Court: the trial judge's conclusion that, under s. 23 of the Charter, the Board had the unilateral right to set admission criteria so as to include students who are not covered by s. 23; and the trial judge's decision that the Yukon is required to communicate with the Board in French.

Held: The appeal from the Court of Appeal's conclusion that there was a reasonable apprehension of bias requiring a new trial is dismissed, but the Board's claims pursuant to the Languages Act should be joined with the other issues remitted by the Court of Appeal for determination at a new trial.

The test for a reasonable apprehension of bias is what would a reasonable, informed person think. The objective is to protect public confidence in the legal system by ensuring not only the reality, but the appearance of a fair adjudicative process. Impartiality and the absence of bias have developed as both legal and ethical requirements. Judges are required — and expected — to approach every case with impartiality and an open mind. Because there is a presumption of judicial impartiality, the test for a reasonable apprehension of bias requires a real likelihood or probability of bias. Judicial impartiality and neutrality do not mean that a judge must have no prior conceptions, opinions or sensibilities. Rather, they require that the judge's identity and experiences not close his or her mind to the evidence and issues. The reasonable apprehension of bias test recognizes that while judges must strive for impartiality, they are not required to abandon who they are or what they know. A judge's identity and experiences are an important part of who he or she is, and neither neutrality nor impartiality is inherently compromised by them. Judges should be encouraged to experience, learn and understand "life" — their own and those whose lives reflect different realities. The ability to be open-minded is enhanced by such knowledge and understanding. Impartiality thus demands not that a judge discount or disregard his or her life experiences or identity, but that he or she approach each case with an open mind, free from inappropriate and undue assumptions.

In the present case, the threshold for a finding of a reasonable apprehension of bias has been met. In addition to several disparaging and disrespectful remarks made by the trial judge and directed at counsel for the Yukon, several incidents occurred which, when viewed in the circumstances of the entire trial, lead inexorably to this conclusion.

The first was the trial judge's conduct during an incident where counsel for the Yukon attempted to cross-examine a witness based on confidential information contained in student files. After hearing some argument on the confidentiality issue, the trial judge told counsel he would entertain additional arguments on the matter the following day. However, he started the next day's proceedings with a ruling unfavourable to the Yukon and without giving the parties an opportunity to present further argument. While this by itself is unwise, the trial judge's refusal to hear the Yukon's arguments after his ruling, and his reaction to counsel, are more disturbing. He both characterized the Yukon's behaviour as reprehensible and accused counsel for the Yukon of playing games. Viewed in the context of the entire record, the trial judge's conduct was troubling and problematic.

The trial judge's treatment of the Yukon's request to submit affidavit evidence from a witness who had suffered a stroke was also improper. The judge accused counsel for the Yukon of trying to delay the trial, criticized him for waiting half-way through the trial to make the application, suggested that the incident amounted to bad faith on the part of the government, and warned counsel for the Yukon that he could be ordered to pay costs personally if he brought the application. There was no basis for the accusations and criticism levelled at counsel and, viewed in the context of the rest of the trial, this incident provides further support for a finding of a reasonable apprehension of bias.

Moreover, the trial judge's refusal to allow the Yukon to file a reply on costs is highly problematic in the overall context of the trial. After the release of his reasons on the merits, the trial judge required each party to file their costs submissions on the same day. To the Yukon's surprise, the Board sought not only solicitor-client costs, but also punitive damages and solicitor-client costs retroactive to 2002. The trial judge's refusal to allow the Yukon to file a reply factum is questionable, particularly in light of the fact that the Yukon could not have known the quantum of costs sought by the Board at the time it filed its factum. The judge's refusal is made all the more worrisome by his decision to award a lump-sum payment to the Board, in addition to retroactive costs.

All of these incidents, taken together and viewed in their context, would lead a reasonable and informed person to see the trial judge's conduct as giving rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias.

However, the Court of Appeal erred when it concluded that the trial judge's current service as a governor of the Fondation franco-albertaine substantially contributed to a reasonable apprehension of bias. Membership in an association affiliated with the interests of a particular race, nationality, religion, or language is not, without more, a basis for concluding that a perception of bias can reasonably be said to arise. Canada has devoted a great deal of effort to creating a more diverse bench. That very diversity should not operate as a presumption that a judge's identity closes the judicial mind.

In the present case, it is difficult to see how, based on the evidence, one could conclude that the Fondation franco-albertaine's vision could be said to "clearly align" with certain positions taken by Board in this case or that the trial judge's involvement in the organization foreclosed his ability to approach this case with an open mind. Standing alone, vague statements about the organization's mission and vision do not displace the presumption of impartiality. Although consideration of the trial judge's current role as governor of the Fondation franco-albertaine was a valid part of the contextual bias inquiry in this case, his involvement with an organization whose functions are largely undefined on the evidence cannot be said to give rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias.

The Court of Appeal's conclusion that the Board could not unilaterally decide whom to admit to its school should not be disturbed. There is no doubt that a province or territory can delegate the function of setting admission criteria for children of non-rights holders to a school board. This delegation can include granting a minority language school board wide discretion to admit the children of non-rights holders. In this case, however, the Yukon has not delegated the function of setting admission criteria for the children of non-rights holders to the Board. In the absence of any such delegation, there is no authority for the Board to unilaterally set admission criteria which are different from what is set out in the territorial regulation applicable to French-language instruction.

This, however, does not preclude the Board from claiming that the Yukon has insufficiently ensured compliance with s. 23, and nothing stops the Board from arguing that the Yukon's approach to admissions prevents the realization of s. 23's purpose.

Finally, it is unclear why the Court of Appeal decided that this case was not a suitable vehicle for determination of rights under the Yukon's Languages Act. The Board's claims raise significant factual issues that may well lead to a finding that parts of the claims were justified and should be determined at the new trial with the benefit of a full evidentiary record.

Courts -- Judges -- Bias -- Reasonable apprehension of bias -- Motion to disqualify judge on grounds of reasonable apprehension of bias -- Judge being party in ongoing litigation over claim similar to employment-related claim being advanced in case before her -- Judge having interest in outcome of motion that disqualified her from hearing motion -- Disqualifying interest broader than pecuniary or proprietary interest -- Sufficient for disqualification that judge have some relevant interest in matter -- Motion for disqualification granted.

The provincial Crown was the respondent in an application brought by JB for severance or pay in lieu of reasonable notice and for a declaration of his rights under the Public Service Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.47 and the Public Service Pension Plan Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.48. The Crown moved for an order staying JB's application on the ground that he ought to file a grievance before the Public Service Grievance Board. Molloy J. dismissed the Crown's motion. The Crown then submitted that Molloy J. should withdraw her decision on the ground that she was disqualified from hearing the motion because prior to her appointment to the bench she was a plaintiff in an outstanding action against the Crown arising from her employment as a lawyer for the Ontario Human Rights Commission. Molloy J. refused to withdraw the decision, reasoning that the issues on the Crown's motion did not overlap with any issues in her own litigation and that the real defendant in her own concurring opinions.

> The fundamental principle is that a man may not be a judge in his own cause. This principle, as developed by the courts, has two very similar but not identical implications. First it may be applied literally: if a judge is in fact a party to the litigation or has a financial or proprietary interest in its outcome then he is indeed sitting as a judge in his own cause. In that case, the mere fact that he is a party to the action or has a financial or proprietary interest in its outcome is sufficient to cause his automatic disqualification. The second application of the principle is where a judge is not a party to the suit and does not have a financial interest in its outcome, but in some other way his conduct or behaviour may give rise to a suspicion that he is not impartial, for example because of his friendship with a party. This second type of case is not strictly speaking an application of the principle that a man must not be judge in his own cause, since the judge will not normally be himself benefiting, but providing a benefit for another by failing to be impartial.
> In my judgment, this case falls within the first category of case, viz where the judge is disqualified because he is a judge in his own cause. In such a case, once it is shown that the judge is himself a party to the cause, or has a relevant interest in its subject matter, he is disqualified without any investigation into whether there was a likelihood or suspicion of bias. The mere fact of his interest is sufficient to disqualify him unless he has made sufficient disclosure: see Shetreet Judges on Trial (1976) p. 303 and De Smith, Woolf and Jowell Judicial Review of Administrative Action (5th edn, 1995) p. 525. I will call this "automatic disqualification".

[16] He referred to Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Proprietors (1852), 3 H.L. Cas. 759, 10 E.R. 301, in which authorities were cited that show how the principle was developed. Lord Cottenham, who owned a substantial shareholding in the defendant company which succeeded at trial, sat on appeal from the trial judgment, which he affirmed. Lord Browne-Wilkinson described what followed the hearing of the appeal at pp. 586-87:

> . . . There was an appeal to your Lordships' House on the grounds that Lord Cottenham LC was disqualified. Their Lordships consulted the judges, who advised that Lord Cottenham LC was disqualified from sitting as a judge in the cause because he had an interest in the suit (see 3 HL Cas 759 at 786, 10 ER 301 at 312.) This advice was unanimously accepted by their Lordships. There was no inquiry by the court as to whether a reasonable man would consider Lord Cottenham LC to be biased and no inquiry as to the circumstances which led to Lord Cottenham LC sitting. Lord Campbell said (3 HL Cas 759 at 793, 10 ER 301 at 315):
> > No one can suppose that Lord Cottenham could be, in the remotest degree, influenced by the interest he had in this concern: but, my Lords, it is of the last importance that the maxim that no man is to be a judge in his own cause should be held sacred. And that is not to be confined to a cause in which he is a party, but applies to a cause in which he has an interest.

He went on to explain at p. 587 that although in the beginning disqualification was required only in cases where the judge was an actual party, this "absolute prohibition was then extended to cases where, although not nominally a party, the judge had an interest in the outcome".

[17] Lord Browne-Wilkinson discussed the nature of the "interest" which a judge has in a proceeding that will lead to his or her automatic disqualification. He stated at p. 587: "Hitherto only pecuniary and proprietary interests have led to automatic disqualification." He continued at p. 588:

> . . . My Lords, in my judgment, although the cases have all dealt with automatic disqualification on the grounds of pecuniary interest, there is no good reason in principle for so limiting automatic disqualification. The rationale of the whole rule is that a man cannot be a judge in his own cause. In civil litigation the matters in issue will normally have an economic impact; therefore a judge is automatically disqualified if he stands to make a financial gain as a consequence of his own decision of the case. But if, as in the present case, the matter at issue does not relate to money or economic advantage but is concerned with the promotion of the cause, the rationale disqualifying a judge applies just as much if the judge's decision will lead to the promotion of a cause in which the judge is involved together with one of the parties. Thus in my opinion if Lord Hoffmann had been a member of AI he would have been automatically disqualified because of his non-pecuniary interest in establishing that Senator Pinochet was not entitled to immunity.
> If the absolute impartiality of the judiciary is to be maintained, there must be a rule which automatically disqualifies a judge who is involved, whether personally or as a director of a company, in promoting the same causes in the same organisation as is a party to the suit. There is no room for fine distinctions if Lord Hewart CJ's famous dictum is to be observed: it is "of fundamental importance that justice should not only be done, but should manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done" (see R. v. Sussex Justices, ex p. McCarthy [1924] 1 KB 256 at 259, [1923] All ER Rep 233 at 234).

Earlier, at p. 587, Lord Browne-Wilkinson observed that the area of apparent bias is one "in which legal technicality is particularly to be avoided".

[18] In the result, Lord Browne-Wilkinson was of the opinion that Lord Hoffmann's association with AI was such that he had a sufficient interest in the appeal to require his automatic disqualification. He found the critical facts to be that AI was a party to the appeal, that AI was joined as an intervener to the appeal in order to argue for a particular result, that the result was achieved and that Lord Hoffmann was the director of a charity closely allied to AI and sharing, in this respect, AI's objects.

[19] It is important, in our view, to emphasize, as Lord Nolan stated at p. 592, "that in any case where the impartiality of a judge is in question the appearance of the matter is just as important as the reality". Lord Hope also addressed this concern at p. 593:

> As my noble and learned friend Lord Goff of Chieveley said in R. v. Gough [1993] 2 All ER 724 at 730, [1993] AC 646 at 661, the nature of the interest is such that public confidence in the administration of justice requires that the judge must withdraw from the case or, if he fails to disclose his interest and sits in judgment upon it, the decision cannot stand. It is no answer for the judge to say that he is in fact impartial and that he will abide by his judicial oath. The purpose of the disqualification is to preserve the administration of justice from any suspicion of impartiality. The disqualification does not follow automatically in the strict sense of that word, because the parties to the suit may waive the objection. But no further investigation is necessary and, if the interest is not disclosed, the consequence is inevitable. In practice the application of this rule is so well understood and so consistently observed that no case has arisen in the course of this century where a decisi on of any of the courts exercising a civil jurisdiction in any part of the United Kingdom has had to be set aside on the ground that there was a breach of it.

[20] The importance of the appearance of impartiality was also emphasized by Lord Denning M.R. in Metropolitan Properties Co. (FGC) Ltd. v. Lannon, [1968] 3 All E.R. 304 at p. 310, [1969] 1 Q.B. 577 (C.A.):

> . . . It brings home this point; in considering whether there was a real likelihood of bias, the court does not look at the mind of the justice himself or at the mind of the chairman of the tribunal, or whoever it may be, who sits in a judicial capacity. It does not look to see if there was a real likelihood that he would, or did, in fact favour one side at the expense of the other. The court looks at the impression which would be given to other people. Even if he was as impartial as could be, nevertheless, if right-minded persons would think that, in the circumstances, there was a real likelihood of bias on his part, then he should not sit. And if he does sit, his decision cannot stand: see R. v. Huggins; R. v. Sunderland Justices, per Vaughan Williams, L.J. Nevertheless, there must appear to be a real likelihood of bias. Surmise or conjecture is not enough: see R. v. Camborne Justices, Ex p. Pearce; R. v. Nailsworth Justices, Ex p. Bird. There must be circumstances from which a reasonable man would think it likely or probable that the justice, or chairman, as the case may be, would, or did, favour one side unfairly at the expense of the other. The court will not enquire whether he did, in fact, favour one side unfairly. Suffice it that reasonable people might think he did. The reason is plain enough. Justice must be rooted in confidence; and confidence is destroyed when right-minded people go away thinking: "The judge was biased."

We note that while Lord Denning M.R. spoke in terms of a "real likelihood" rather than a "reasonable apprehension", in National Energy Board, de Grandpré J. took care to state that such variations in the expression used should not generally be treated as involving any substantive difference in the approach to be taken. "Reasonable apprehension", "real likelihood", "reasonable likelihood" and "reasonable suspicion" amount to the same standard.

> It is right and proper that judges be held to the highest standards of impartiality since they will have to determine the most fundamentally important rights of the parties appearing before them. This is true whether the legal dispute arises between citizen and citizen or between the citizen and the state. Every comment that a judge makes from the bench is weighed and evaluated by the community as well as the parties. Judges must be conscious of this constant weighing and make every effort to achieve neutrality and fairness in carrying out their duties. This must be a cardinal rule of judicial conduct.

"Judges must be and should appear to be impartial with respect to their decisions and decision making." In the commentary on this statement, the following is found at p. 42:

> As elsewhere in this area, the concern is with reasonable perception, as well as actual conflict of interest. In general, a judge should not preside over a case in which he or she has a financial or property interest that could be affected by its outcome or in which the judge's interest would give rise in a reasonable, fair minded and informed person, to reasoned suspicion that the judge would not act impartially. This general rule applies whether the interest is itself the subject matter of the controversy or where the outcome of the case could substantially affect the value of any interest or property owned by the judge, the judge's

B E T W E E N :

DIRECTOR OF THE FAMILY RESPONSIBILITY OFFICE, for the benefit of Sheila McGraw, Applicant,

— AND —

JASPAL SAMRA,
Respondent.

Before Justice Heather L. Katarynych
Heard on 21 August 2008
Reasons for Judgment released on 25 August 2008

COURTS AND JUDGES — Judges — Disqualification — General — Father had been committed to prison about 3½ years ago for default in child support order but committal was suspended on certain conditions — When provincial agency resumption, that evidence needed to represent a full and frank disclosure of Mr. Samra's financial situation over the course of the accumulation of those arrears as well as his financial situation at the time of the hearing. The reasonable pers on, properly informed, would not be surprised that the default order issued esse ntially because Mr. Samra had provided no credible evidence to rebut the presu mption in subsection 41(9) of the Act; and that the default order issued on the st rength of the Director's evidence and on the terms, including the committal ter m allowed by subsection 41(10) of the Act, to which the Director was entitled o n that evidence.

[43] The reasonable person, properly informed by the history of this case and the law governing enforcement of support orders would also find the following points relevant context to Mr. Samra's recusal motion:

- Over the course of the year preceding the default hearing, a number of adjourn ments had been granted to give Mr. Samra opportunity to pursue his appeal, to d eal with entitlement issues that he repeatedly raised, notwithstanding decisions of the appellate courts contrary to his stance, and to prepare himself for the defa ult hearing.
- On 14 February 2005, the court received submissions from both counsel in the c ase, in the presence of Mr. Samra, and ultimately found merit in the Director's s tance that Mr. Samra had been given sufficient and fair opportunity to properly r espond to the Director's case.

[44] The reasonable person, properly informed of the orders made subsequent to that default order of 14 February 2005, would also note, in considering the merits of Mr. Samra's recusal motion, that this court's credibility finding has not been dislodged by any appellate court.

[45] In terms of the relationship between adverse credibility findings and the reasonableness of a litigant's apprehension of real or perceived bias, the reasonable person, acting reasonably and properly informed of the law, would take into account the settled principle of law that a judge's adverse finding regarding a litigant's credibility in a previous hearing does not in itself create a reasonable apprehension of bias. That reasonable person would know that the fact that a trial judge had ruled adversely in a previous case on the credibility of either a defence witness or the accused does not necessarily result in a reasonable apprehension of bias. Something more is required showing a predisposition by the adjudicator with respect to the accused's credibility, such as to amount to pre-judgment of the result of the second hearing.

[46] That reasonable man would know that judges are routinely called upon to disabuse their minds of evidence that they have heard but that, as a matter of law, is not admissible in the trial before them, and that it is fundamental to their role to decide the case only on the evidence properly admissible in that case. See, for example, Suresh v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) (1998), 160 F.T.R. 107, 1998 CanLII 8732, [1998] F.C.J. No. 1764, 1998 CarswellNat 2453 (Fed. Tr. Div.), affirmed at Suresh v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) (2000), 184 F.T.R. 318, 258 N.R. 119, 188 D.L.R. (4th) 599, 6 Imm. L.R. (3d) 155, 2000 CanLII 15604, [2000] F.C.J. No. 1026, 2000 CarswellNat 1345 (Fed. App. Div.). See also R. v. Novak (1995), 1995 CanLII 2024 (BC CA), 59 B.C.A.C. 152, 98 W.A.C. 152, [1995] B.C.J. No. 1127, 1995 CarswellBC 494

[48] The reasonable person, properly informed and acting reasonably, would also know that, without more, Mr. Samra's concern about appearing before the same judge who made the default order against him cannot be the basis of a recusal order — that both old and recent case law suggest that the courts are very reluctant to accept an apprehension of bias in such cases. See, for example, R. v. Bolt (1995), 1995 ABCA 22 (CanLII), 162 A.R. 204, 83 W.A.C. 204, [1995] A.J. No. 22, 1995 CarswellAlta 521 (Alta. C.A.); R. v. Novak, supra; and Re Chisholm and City of Berlin (1912), 1912 CanLII 530 (ON SC), 23 O.W.R. 571, 4 O.W.N. 431, 9 D.L.R. 264, [1912] O.J. No. 415, 1912 CarswellOnt 664 (Ont. H.C.).

[49] The fact that a trial judge has expressed words and actions in previous cases or interpreted the law as it related to similar issues does not in itself establish a reasonable apprehension of bias. See Samson Indian Band v. Canada, [1998] 3 F.C. 3, 141 F.T.R. 109, 1997 CanLII 6390, [1997] F.C.J. No. 1652, 1997 CarswellNat 2244 (Fed. Tr. Div.), affirmed at Samson Indian Band v. Canada (1998), 227 N.R. 386, 1998 CanLII 7815, [1998] F.C.J. No. 688, 1998 CarswellNat 946 (Fed. App. Div.).

[50] The reasonable person, properly informed about this enforcement proceeding and the law governing it and acting reasonably, could not accept Mr. Guiste's submission that the only jurisprudential guidance needed by the court to recuse itself lies in the "substantially similar" factual circumstances set out in the Ontario Court of Appeal's decision in R. v. Hossu and Stoicescu, supra.

[51] Mr. Guiste pointed out that the judge in that case had refused to hear submissions, expressed opinion about the credibility of a witness, introduced his negative impressions. He then stated that Mr. Samra's case "is not all that different". When invited to be more specific about the nexus between the facts found by the Court of Appeal in that case and Mr. Samra's circumstances, he had nothing further to add.

[52] A careful read indicates that, in R. v. Hossu and Stoicescu, supra, a panel composed of Appeal Justices James C. MacPherson, James J. Carthy and Rosalie S. Abella, sitting in appeal from both conviction and sentence imposed by a judge of the Ontario Court, ordered a new trial because the judge's comments and conduct in the trial did give rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias. The judge in that case made open and improper favourable comments about both Crown witnesses and he made open and improper negative comments about all three defence witnesses.

T.D.RAY, J

[1] This is an application for leave to have this application heard in the Superior Court, rather than the Divisional Court on the ground that this case is one of urgency and that the delay required for an application to the Divisional Court is likely to involve a failure of justice.[1] If I grant leave, I may continue to hear the application. If I refuse leave I may nonetheless transfer this application to the Divisional Court[2]. If this application had been brought in front of the Divisional Court, leave would not have been required.

[2] The applicant seeks leave for judicial review of that part of a decision of a Law Society Hearing Panel dated July 27, 2012 which dismissed with reasons the applicant's motion for a change of venue. The Law Society has scheduled the hearing to commence in Toronto, March 4, 2013.

[3] The applicant is a solicitor, licensed to practice law in the Province of Ontario. The Law Society's application of September 22, 2011 notes that a conduct proceeding has been commenced for determination of whether the applicant engaged in professional misconduct. Specifically he is alleged to have breached Rule 2.012(5) of the Rules of Professional Conduct as follows:

> i. He participated in or knowingly assisted in fraudulent or dishonest conduct by his vendor and purchaser clients, or associated persons, to obtain mortgage proceeds under false pretences in connection with transactions involving the properties listed in schedule A annexed hereto;
> ii. Alternatively, he failed to be on guard against being duped by unscrupulous clients or associated persons in connection with the transactions.

[4] In its reasons, the panel noted the relevant Law Society Rule 17.01 with respect to the place of a hearing, accepted that as a matter of principle the convenience of witnesses is a relevant consideration, and concluded that it is implicit (but not explicit) that changing the venue from Toronto will only be granted in exceptional circumstances. After reviewing the affidavit of the applicant's counsel's assistant concerning possible witnesses from the Ottawa area and their relevance to the proceeding, which was disputed by the Law Society Counsel, concluded:

> [40] We cannot predict at this juncture who among the 20 proposed witnesses will be excluded or who counsel may elect not to call. However, as noted above, the affidavit material filed in support of this motion is less than persuasive. Finally, in disposing of the motion tor change of venue, we note that:
> a. No claim of financial or other prejudice to Mr. Savone was asserted anywhere in the affidavit evidence, nor is it claimed that any witnesses would be unavailable to testify in Toronto;
> b. The Society conceded in its material that a penalty hearing could be held in Ottawa, in the event of a finding of professional misconduct.

[5] Were I to grant leave and hear this matter, the standard of review is correctness concerning matters of law, and otherwise the standard of review is reasonableness[3]. Great deference is owed to tribunals with experience in specific areas referred to as their home statute, and deference may also be owed in matters interpreting their own statute and rules[4]

[6] However before that consideration and analysis, I must first address the threshold for leave to proceed with the application[5]. A two prong test must be considered. Firstly I must consider whether this case is one of urgency. If I conclude that it is, then I must consider whether the delay required for an application to the Divisional Court is likely to involve a failure of justice.

[7] Since the hearing is scheduled for March 4, 2013, I am satisfied it appears to be urgent. However, there is nothing in the material to indicate why this application could not have been heard earlier in Toronto by the Divisional Court where there are almost continuous sittings, and where the panel rendered its decision. Here in Ottawa, Divisional Court sits twice per year. If this application had been brought in the Divisional Court, the applicant would not have had to deal with these threshold issues. Under these circumstances, I have reservations as to whether the applicant has made out the requirement of urgency.

[8] I am not satisfied however that a delay for this application to be heard by the Divisional Court would involve a failure of justice. This was a procedural ruling in the nature of an interlocutory order, rather than a final order. While venue may affect the rights of the parties, a full record in that respect will not be available until the hearing has been concluded and a decision rendered[6]. Judicial review at this stage would be premature in the extreme. There are no demonstrable exceptional circumstances.[7] Furthermore, the panel that made the decision on the venue motion is not the panel that will hear the conduct matter. It will be open to the applicant (and the respondents will not oppose the bringing of the motion) to bring a motion for a change of venue on proper material before the panel.

[9] Leaving aside the issues of urgency and delay, I have serious reservations about the merits of the applicant's case. The merits of the application are an essential component of failure to justice. Without a finding that the motion before the panel had merit, then it would be impossible to establish failure to justice.

[10] I have concerns about the panel's application of an exceptional circumstances test for a change of venue. According to the respondents, this was the first time the matter had come up for adjudication since in all other cases agreement has been reached. They contend that deference is owed because it is procedural in nature and they are interpreting their own rules. My concerns are that there is nothing in the regulation to suggest an exceptional circumstances test is to be applied. To the contrary, we know that it is common for panels to conduct hearings outside Toronto. Once a party contends that the venue ought to be somewhere other than Toronto, and in the absence of agreement, it seems to me that the factors ought to be considered without applying such a restrictive test.

[11] The applicant's contention that if he is not granted relief in this application, that he will be denied a remedy is simply false. He can bring this motion again before the hearing panel on March 4, 2013. At the conclusion of the proceeding he has rights of appeal set out in the Law Society Act. He also has the right to bring a judicial review application if so advised.

[12] The panel correctly noted that the affidavit material was less than persuasive. The applicant submitted unsatisfactory evidence in support of his motion to the Law Society Panel to the point of it being unsettling. Both the nature of the evidence and the contents of the affidavit are worrisome. Affidavit evidence is designed to place facts before a tribunal. The best evidence rule applies. To rely on an affidavit from an affiant who describes herself as counsel's assistant, with no ground for asserting the evidence other than she is counsel's assistant, and without asserting her source and ground of belief is very troubling. It smacks of trivializing an evidentiary record. The contents are vague and poorly considered with only vague assertions and reasons for intending to call various witnesses without regard for the issues on which the witnesses are intended to be called. I can well understand why the panel found the affidavit material to be less than persuasive. It is no answer to say that the contents of the affidavit were uncontradicted. As in all such cases, the burden is on the party seeking the relief. As a consequence the merits of the motion before the panel were seriously wanting.

[13] I find that the applicant has not met the burden of establishing either prong of the two prong test for leave, and I do not consider it appropriate in this case to transfer it to the Divisional Court which only sits in Ottawa twice a year, thereby guaranteeing further delay. It is open to the applicant bring his motion for a change of venue before the panel on March 4, 2013 or later during the proceeding. The application is dismissed.

[14] Both parties filed costs outlines at the conclusion of argument. If the parties cannot agree on costs, they make submissions of two pages or less within 14 days, and with a further five days for reply.

ENDORSEMENT

[1] The Defendant brings this motion in writing for the following:

(a) An order transferring this action from Oshawa to Toronto to be tried together or one after the other, as the trial judge may direct, with Toronto action number CV-16-545939;

(b) In the alternative, an order transferring this action to Toronto.

[2] The Plaintiff opposes the motion.

[3] On this motion the moving party seeks additional relief other than the transfer of this action from Oshawa to Toronto; namely that the Oshawa and Toronto action be tried together or one after the other, as the trial judge may direct.

[4] Motions brought by a party to transfer a proceeding are to be heard in writing in accordance with the Consolidated Provincial Practice Direction ("Practice Direction") effective July 1, 2014.The Practice Direction deals with the transfer of a civil proceeding in the Central East, Central West, Central South and Toronto Regions under Rule 13.1.02. Pursuant to the Practice Direction, motions to transfer should be brought in writing at the court location to which the moving party seeks to have the proceeding transferred.

[5] Rule 37.12.1(4) of the Rules of Civil Procedure. R.R.O 1990.Reg194 (the "Rules") sets forth the procedure to be followed where a party seeks to have a contested motion heard in writing which would include a motion for an order for trial together or one after the other. As part of that procedure pursuant to Rule 37.12.1(5)(d) the responding party, once served with the moving party's motion material, may deliver notice that they intend to make oral argument.

[6] The Plaintiff has delivered such notice in accordance with Rule 37.12.1(5)(d).

[7] I therefore order that the Defendant's motion be set down for an oral hearing before a judge in the Toronto Region. The moving party Defendant is directed to take all appropriate steps in accordance with the rules and applicable Practice Directions to secure the hearing date.

ENDORSEMENT

[1] This matter arises from an appeal by Nodebe Agbapu (the "Appellant") of the decision of the Consent and Capacity Board ("CCB") dated September 29, 2022, confirming a finding of incapacity with respect to treatment with anti-psychotic medication. The Appellant has appealed that decision. Pursuant to section 18(3) of the Health Care Consent Act, 1996, S.O. 1996, c.2 Schedule A, the Respondent is not permitted to treat the Appellant with the proposed treatment pending the disposition of the Appeal.

[2] On March 29, 2023, counsel for the Respondent directed correspondence, which was copied to the Appellant, to my attention.

[3] In that correspondence counsel advised that on March 7, 2023, they attended Civil Practice Court ("CPC"). At that time counsel requested that amicus curiae be appointed. The appellant, who is self-represented, opposed that request. The CPC Court Judge directed that such request be brought by way of motion.

[4] Given the time it will take to have such motion scheduled and heard, the importance of ensuring that the Appellant's interests are fairly represented, as well as the importance of moving this matter forward expeditiously, Respondent's counsel requests that the Court consider the appropriateness of appointing amicus curiae now.

[5] In accordance with the Motions Judge's direction, the request to have amicus curiae appointed is to be brought by way of motion. I direct that this motion be brought in writing before me in accordance with the provisions of Rule 37.12.1(4) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O.1990, Reg.194.

On appeal from the order of Justice James A. Ramsay of the Superior Court of Justice, dated September 13, 2024.

Fairburn A.C.J.O.:

A. OVERVIEW

[1] This is an appeal from a decision denying the Ontario Human Rights Commission ("OHRC") leave to intervene in an application before the Superior Court of Justice. The application is set to commence on December 16, 2024. It involves 19 individuals (the "applicants") who erected tents or shelters ("encampments") in various public parks in Hamilton, Ontario. The applicants were evicted from those encampments by the respondent City of Hamilton pursuant to several municipal by-laws. The applicants now challenge the constitutionality of various sections of those by-laws under ss. 7 and 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

[2] Along with the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association and the Women's Legal Action Fund, the OHRC sought leave to intervene as friends of the court in the underlying application. The motion for intervention was brought pursuant to r. 13.02 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194.

[3] The applicants in the underlying application consented to the motion to intervene and the respondent City of Hamilton did not oppose.

[4] The motion was heard in writing. On September 13, 2024, the application judge issued an endorsement denying all motions for leave to intervene. His reasons for dismissing the motion are as follows:

> The [Canadian Civil Liberties Association], [Women's Legal Action Fund], the [British Columbia Civil Liberties Association] and the Ontario Human Rights Commission seek leave to intervene. The Applicants, who are very well-represented, propose to file expert evidence on the impact of the by-law in question and to make argument with respect to constitutional implications, the effect of international law and the particular impact of the by-law on vulnerable communities, including women. I do not think that the proposed interveners have much to add.
> The applications to intervene are dismissed.

[5] The OHRC appeals from the order dismissing their motion to intervene. They claim multiple errors on the part of the motion judge (who is also the application judge), including that he misapprehended and misapplied the law on intervention and failed to provide adequate reasons.

[6] I would quash this appeal for want of jurisdiction. For the reasons that follow, I conclude that this court does not have jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the dismissal of a motion for leave to intervene as a friend of the court.

B. THE HEARING

[7] In their written submissions, the OHRC submitted that the "decision denying leave to intervene is a final order as it disposes of the OHRC's ability to participate in the Application." In support of this proposition, the OHRC cited to Maybank

Foods Inc. Pension Plan v. Gainers Inc. (1990), 1990 CanLII 8117 (ON CA), 77 D.L.R. (4th) 236 (Ont. C.A.). In Maybank, at para. 12, this court said that "[a]n order refusing intervener status is a final order". In that case, the appeal was ultimately dismissed because this court found that the weekly court judge had properly exercised his discretion in refusing the request for party intervener status pursuant to r. 13.01(1)(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

[8] During oral submissions, the OHRC was asked for further input regarding this court's jurisdiction to hear this appeal. The OHRC then also pointed to this court's decision in Bedford v. Canada (Attorney General), 2009 ONCA 669, 98 O.R. (3d) 792. In Bedford, this court granted an appeal from a decision denying intervener status in circumstances similar to this case, where the motion for intervener status as a friend of the court was made pursuant to r. 13.01(2) of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

C. INTERLOCUTORY VS FINAL ORDERS

[9] This court has jurisdiction to hear final, not interlocutory, orders of the Superior Court. Section 6(1)(b) of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C. 43, provides that an appeal to this court lies from "a final order of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice". By contrast, s. 19(1)(b) of the Courts of Justice Act provides for an appeal to the Divisional Court from "an interlocutory order of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice, with leave as provided in the rules of court."

[10] Determining the dividing line between a final and interlocutory order has attracted much attention in the jurisprudence. In my view, when the principles are properly applied, this matter falls on the side of an interlocutory order.

[11] While there has been some suggestion in the past that Smerchanski v. Lewis (1980), 1980 CanLII 1699 (ON CA), 30 O.R. (2d) 370 (C.A.), at pp. 377-78, stood for the proposition that an order finally disposing of an issue between a party and non-party or a "stranger to the action" is a final order for purposes of appeal to this court, this suggestion has since been rejected. In Royal Trust Corporation v. Fisherman (2001), 2001 CanLII 4080 (ON CA), 55 O.R. (3d) 794 (C.A.), at para. 16, this court explained: "Smerchanski was not intended to mean that all orders directed to a non-party must be final, and the principle expressed therein should not be further expanded in that way."

[12] Since the time of Smerchanski and Royal Trust Corporation, there has been significant discussion around how to identify the dividing line between interlocutory and final orders. At its core, an interlocutory order is one that does not determine the "real matter in dispute between the parties—the very subject matter of the litigation—or any substantive right": Drywall Acoustic Lathing Insulation Local 675 Pension Fund v. SNC-Lavalin Group Inc., 2020 ONCA 375, at para. 16; Paulpillai Estate v. Yusuf, 2020 ONCA 655, at para. 16. Although an order will undoubtedly answer the question raised by the relevant motion, it remains interlocutory in nature if the substantive matters lying at the heart of the subject matter of the litigation remain undecided: Drywall Acoustic, at para. 16, citing Hendrickson v. Kallio, 1932 CanLII 123 (ON CA), [1932] O.R. 675 (C.A.), at p. 678 and Ball v. Donais (1993), 1993 CanLII 8613 (ON CA), 13 O.R. (3d) 322 (C.A.).

[13] In determining whether this test is met, one must look to the order, the reasons for the order, the nature of the proceedings from which the order has emerged, and any "contextual factors that may inform the nature of the order": Prescott & Russell (United Counties) v. David S. Laflamme Construction Inc., 2018 ONCA 495, 142 O.R. (3d) 317, at para. 7; Paulpillai Estate, at para. 16; and P1 v. XYZ School, 2021 ONCA 901, 160 O.R. (3d) 445, at para. 12.

D. PARTY VS FRIEND INTERVENTIONS

[14] In my view, a decision to deny intervention in a matter as a friend of the court will not have the effect of impacting the non-party's substantive rights as they are not in play. To the contrary, the proposed intervention as a friend of the court is predicated, not on the non-party's substantive interests, but on their expertise and how that expertise may be of assistance to the court. This stands in contrast to the denial of an intervention in a matter where the non-party seeks leave to intervene as a party. The denial of intervention status to a proposed party intervener precludes them from participating in litigation that they say will directly or indirectly impact them at some level, in accordance with the criteria set out in r. 13.01 of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

[15] Rules 13.01 and 13.02 of the Rules of Civil Procedure address leave to intervene as a party and as friend of the court:

> Leave to Intervene as Added Party
>
> 13.01 (1) A person who is not a party to a proceeding may move for leave to intervene as an added party if the person claims,
>
> (a) an interest in the subject matter of the proceeding;
>
> (b) that the person may be adversely affected by a judgment in the proceeding; or
>
> (c) that there exists between the person and one or more of the parties to the proceeding a question of law or fact in common with one or more of the questions in issue in the proceeding.
>
> (2) On the motion, the court shall consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the determination of the rights of the parties to the proceeding and the court may add the person as a party to the proceeding and may make such order as is just.
>
> Leave to Intervene as Friend of the Court
> 13.02 Any person may, with leave of a judge or at the invitation of the presiding judge or associate judge, and without becoming a party to the proceeding, intervene as a friend of the court for the purpose of rendering assistance to the court by way of argument.

[16] As can be seen, there exists a fundamental difference between motions to intervene as a party (r. 13.01(1) and (2)) and motions to intervene as a friend of the court (r. 13.01(2)). In broad strokes, and in accordance with r. 13.01(1), resolving a motion for intervention as a party to the proceedings requires the court to consider how the proceedings may impact the proposed intervener. By denying a motion for leave to intervene to a proposed party intervener, the moving party is denied the opportunity to contribute to the underlying litigation that they say will have a direct impact on their interests. This consideration is entirely absent from a r. 13.02 motion which focusses, not on how the proposed intervener might be impacted by the proceedings, but how the proposed intervener might assist the court in the proceedings.

[17] While both types of interventions – party and friend – are discretionary in nature, they serve different purposes which I conclude informs the jurisdictional question in this matter. Party interventions focus on ensuring that non-parties who may be impacted by the litigation are given an opportunity to participate in appropriate circumstances. Friends of the court intervention motions are focussed upon whether the court will be assisted by the proposed intervention, not on whether their substantive rights might be impacted by the underlying proceeding.

[18] This brings us to the question of when this court has jurisdiction to hear an appeal from a decision denying intervention.

[19] In Maybank, a decision relied upon by the OHRC to suggest that this court has jurisdiction in this appeal, the court concluded that it had such jurisdiction. But that conclusion must be read in its full context, most specifically that the proposed intervener was seeking party intervener status pursuant to r. 13.01(1)(b), claiming that they could be adversely impacted by a judgment resulting from the underlying proceedings.

[20] Similarly, in Hollinger Inc. v. The Ravelston Corp., 2008 ONCA 207, 89 O.R. (3d) 721, where this court unanimously concluded that the denial of intervention status was final in nature, the matter was decided in the context of an application for party intervener status: see the decision appealed from, Hollinger Inc. v. Ravelston Corporation Ltd., 2006 CanLII 38862 (ON SC), 83 O.R. (3d) 258 (S.C.).

[21] The only decision that remains an outlier, which I must address, is Bedford, where this court allowed an appeal from the dismissal of a motion for leave to intervene as a friend of the court. As noted at the outset, in addition to Maynard, the OHRC relies upon the Bedford decision to suggest that this court has jurisdiction to hear this appeal. It is understandable why the OHRC points to Bedford in support of its position on jurisdiction as the case involved an appeal from the dismissal of a motion for leave to intervene as a friend of the court.

[22] While the OHRC is correct that this court exercised jurisdiction in that appeal, ultimately allowing the appeal and granting the intervener status requested, the issue of jurisdiction was neither raised nor decided on appeal. This is the only decision of this court that has been drawn to our attention that involves an appeal from this type of order.

[23] In my view, Bedford is not determinative of the jurisdictional question before this court. The fact that the court in Bedford exercised jurisdiction is only discernable in hindsight by necessary implication. The Bedford court did not pronounce any principle of law relating to jurisdiction and it should not be taken as such. It would create great uncertainty if the parties could impute principles of law to past decisions without any foothold in the actual reasoning of those decisions. To the contrary, where the issue of jurisdiction is neither raised nor decided on appeal, a decision of this court exercising jurisdiction does not establish that jurisdiction in a subsequent appeal: Singh v. Heft, 2022 ONCA 135, at para. 15; CIBC Mortgages Inc. (FirstLine Mortgages) v. Computershare, 2015 ONCA 846, 342 O.A.C. 49, at para. 12. Accordingly, Bedford is not determinative of this court's jurisdiction.

[24] In my view, this court has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the dismissal of a motion for leave to intervene as a friend of the court. Quite simply, the proposed intervener's substantive rights are not engaged during the motion or impacted as a result of the motion. To the contrary, the dismissal of a motion for leave to intervene as a friend of the court means only one thing, that the court does not need the offered assistance of the non-party in resolving the underlying proceedings. This is not a final order and not appealable to this court.

E. CONCLUSION

[25] In conclusion, there is no jurisdiction to hear this appeal.

[26] To be clear, nothing in these reasons should be taken as suggesting, had there been jurisdiction, that we would have found that the application judge erred.

[27] Appeal quashed for want of jurisdiction.

ENDORSEMENT

The Honourable Mr. Justice Hawkins gave judgment against the CIBC Trust Corporation ("CIBCT") on the hearing of a motion by the applicant, CMLQ Investors Company ("CMLQ"). There was an appeal of part of the judgment by CMLQ, which was abandoned, and a cross-appeal by CIBCT, which is the subject of this endorsement.

The parties both held an interest in a mortgage against restaurant premises in downtown Toronto. CIBCT managed the mortgage for both parties, holding the interest of CMLQ in trust, and was the registered owner of the mortgage.

The mortgage was close to maturity when the parties had discussions and correspondence with respect to possible extension or renewal. The principal amount of the mortgage was not paid on maturity and, without the consent of CMLQ, CIBCT entered into a new mortgage arrangement with the mortgagor, purportedly on behalf of both parties. That mortgage subsequently went into default and the property was sold under power of sale.

CMLQ commenced an application for a number of items of relief, the overall purport of which was to obtain a declaration of its rights under the original agreement between the parties with respect to the mortgage, and for payment to it of amounts owing by CIBCT as a result of what CMLQ says was CIBCTs failure to pay to CMLQ the amount of principal and interest owing to it at the date of default under the original mortgage. Although it is not relevant to this cross-appeal, it is of interest to note that the motions judge did not consider full payment of principal and interest necessarily to represent actual damages suffered by CMLQ.

On April ll, 1995, an adjourned date set for hearing of the application, Hawkins J. heard a motion brought by CIBCT for an order directing a trial of the whole of the application or, in the alternative, for an order directing "the trial of an issue, or a number of issues". Hawkins J. directed a trial on the issue of damages, but otherwise dealt with the application on that hearing, making a declaration that CMLQ had elected not to participate in the new mortgage, and that CIBCT had entered into the new mortgage on its own account.

It is the position of CIBCT that Hawkins J., on such a motion, could only refer some or all of the issues for a trial, and that any remaining issues could only be dealt with at a later date on a hearing of the balance of the application. It also argues that it was inappropriate to decide the question of interpretation of the clause in issue in the agreement between CIBCT and CMLQ without expert evidence as to the business efficacy of not renewing the mortgage, and as to normal mortgage practice and the duty of CIBCT in managing the mortgage on behalf of itself and CMLQ.

In our view, expert evidence was unnecessary for the purpose of construing the relevant clause in the agreement between the parties. Whether it made good business sense to renew the mortgage was not the question but, rather, it was whether or not CMLQ had dealt properly with the matter of renewal according to the words of the relevant clause in the agreement. We agree with Hawkins J. on that point.

It is the position of CMLQ that all necessary evidence was before the motions judge, and that he was correct in dealing with the matter as if it were a motion for judgment pursuant to Rule 37.13(2)(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure. CIBCT, on the other hand, argues that if a judge on a motion intends to convert it into a motion for judgment, he must state his intention of so doing. We are of the view that, although that might be a preferable route, where all of the necessary evidence is before the judge on the motion, and where the parties have had full opportunity of arguing their positions, as was the case here, there is nothing to be gained by either party by adding further proceedings to those already taken.

We see no error in the way the motions judge proceeded in this case, nor in the decision he arrived at.

The cross-appeal is dismissed, with costs to the respondent on the cross-appeal.

On appeal from the order of Justice Edward P. Belobaba of the Superior Court of Justice dated July 16, 2010, with reasons reported at (2010), 2010 ONSC 3981 (CanLII), 83 C. C.E.L. (3d) 98.

Doherty J.A.:

I

[1] The appellant, the Royal Bank of Canada (RBC), claims that it is entitled to unilaterally and without court sanction effectively freeze accounts belonging to the respondent, Ankur Rastogi (Rastogi), pending the results of its action against Rastogi. Three of those accounts are RBC accounts, two are accounts with the other appellant, RBC Direct Investing Inc. (RBC Direct), an affiliate of RBC, and one account, an account that Rastogi holds jointly with his wife, is with the Toronto Dominion Bank (TD). Belobaba J. (the motion judge) agreed that RBC was entitled to freeze its own accounts but ordered that the accounts at RBC Direct and TD should be released immediately to Rastogi. RBC and RBC Direct appeal from that order. Rastogi has not appealed from the order made with respect to the RBC accounts and the status of these accounts is not in issue on this appeal.

[2] Counsel for the appellants submits that although Rastogi purported to bring the motion under Rule 44, the motion was in reality a motion for summary judgment. Counsel argues that the motion judge effectively gave judgment on some of the claims advanced by RBC and by Rastogi in his counterclaim and that he erred in doing so in the face of several triable issues.

[3] I agree with counsel for RBC that Rule 44 had no application. This was in reality a motion for summary judgment on Rastogi's entitlement to the funds in his accounts. However, I agree with the motion judge that RBC had no basis in law to prevent Rastogi from accessing his funds in RBC Direct and TD. This was an appropriate case for summary judgment in the terms of the order made by the motion judge. I would vary the parts of the order referable to the accounts at RBC Direct and TD to a judgment in the same terms, and would otherwise dismiss the appeal.

II

[4] In its claim, RBC alleges that between December 2007 and September 2008 Rastogi misused his position as an employee of RBC to establish an arbitrage scheme trading Canadian and US dollars in his RBC accounts. RBC alleges that as a result of this illicit scheme, Rastogi made about $700,000 in net profit and RBC suffered the equivalent loss.

[5] According to RBC's allegations, Rastogi took advantage of a "loophole" in the RBC online banking system and his access to an employee preferred exchange rate to complete hundreds of currency exchange transactions on his own behalf at the opening of the market each day. He was able to make the trades at prices that ensured him a profit and an equivalent loss to RBC. RBC alleges that in operating the scheme to his personal advantage and the detriment of RBC, Rastogi breached the terms of his contract of employment with RBC and his duty of loyalty to RBC.

[6] Rastogi's trading was funded with borrowing on his RBC line of credit. The proceeds from the scheme were paid into his RBC accounts. Some of the proceeds were transferred from those accounts to Rastogi's accounts at RBC Direct. Some of the proceeds were also transferred to Rastogi's joint account at the TD.

[7] In its lawsuit commenced in the fall of 2008, RBC seeks:

- Damages for unjust enrichment and breach of Rastogi's employment contract in the amount of $700,000;
- An order tracing the proceeds of the arbitrage scheme including an order tracing those proceeds into the hands of third parties;
- A declaration that the proceeds are held in trust for RBC;
- An interim and permanent injunction restraining Rastogi from dissipating the proceeds of the scheme.

[8] RBC took no steps to obtain any interim relief. Instead, it froze Rastogi's three accounts with RBC. It also, presumably by virtue of its relationship with RBC Direct, froze both of Rastogi's accounts with RBC Direct. RBC then commenced this action and, by naming the TD as a defendant, effectively froze Rastogi's account at TD. Pursuant to s. 437(2) of the Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c. 46, TD declined to pay the funds in the account to Rastogi, pending either a court order or RBC's consent.[1] TD is holding the funds pending court order. It takes no position in respect of the competing claims of RBC and Rastogi.

[9] In his defence, Rastogi claims that he never worked for RBC although he acknowledges being employed by its affiliate RBC Dominion Securities Inc. (RBC Dominion). Rastogi admits that he engaged in currency trading on his own behalf. He alleges, however, that he used publicly available information and traded at the rates set by RBC. Rastogi maintains that his trading was well known to the RBC representatives at the branch where he kept his accounts. He contends that he did nothing that breached his contract of employment or made improper use of information available to him as an employee. Rastogi goes on to assert that RBC did not suffer any loss as a result of his currency trading.

[10] Rastogi also counterclaims against RBC, RBC Direct and RBC Dominion. He seeks the return of all funds in his accounts at those institutions, damages for improperly freezing those accounts and damages for wrongful dismissal. Rastogi asserts that the funds in the accounts at RBC Direct and TD do not come exclusively from the profits earned in his currency exchange trading and that, by freezing those accounts without any authority to do so, RBC has made it impossible for him to pay his outstanding debts, such as his mortgage and his daily living expenses.

[11] Rastogi also cross-claims against TD. He seeks an order requiring TD to release the funds in the account jointly held by him and his wife. As indicated above, TD takes no position on this claim.

III

The Motion Judge's Ruling

[12] RBC claimed that Rastogi owed it some $700,000. There was about $100,000 in Rastogi's three RBC bank accounts. The credit in those accounts represented a debt owed by RBC to Rastogi. The motion judge held, at paras. 8-12, that RBC could claim a set off of the credits in Rastogi's account against any debt owed by Rastogi to RBC. The set off claim justified RBC's refusal to release the funds in Rastogi's RBC accounts unless ordered to do so following a trial of the merits of the respective claims.

[13] The motion judge determined that RBC Direct had no claim against Rastogi and therefore no debt that it could purport to set off against the credit in Rastogi's accounts at RBC Direct. The motion judge also rejected the argument that because of the corporate affiliation between RBC and RBC Direct, RBC was entitled to treat Rastogi's accounts in RBC Direct as if they were accounts in RBC. The motion judge said at para. 13:

> More importantly, Direct Investing ("DI") makes no claim against Rastogi. It has no legal basis, in set off or otherwise, > for freezing his accounts and holding on to his funds, absent a court-granted injunction, which in all likelihood would not be granted on these facts. In any event, no such injunction has been sought by DI.

[14] The motion judge found no basis to withhold Rastogi's funds held by TD (paras. 16-21). He held that RBC's mere assertion that it was entitled to a tracing order could not provide the basis for withholding Rastogi's funds. The motion judge also rejected RBC's contention that s. 437(2) of the Bank Act gave RBC a right to freeze Rastogi's accounts at TD. The motion judge interpreted s. 437(2) as merely giving TD the option of interpleading the funds into court or holding the funds pending court order once TD was sued. TD had chosen the latter course. The motion judge concluded at para. 21:

> RBC's claim for a tracing order is not enough, absent an injunction or some other court order or at least some proof of legal entitlement, to justify any further retention by the TD Bank of depositor Rastogi's funds. In my view, these funds should be released immediately.

IV

The Nature of the Motion

[15] Rastogi's motion was brought under Rule 44. That rule applies to a motion for an "interim order" made under s. 104(1) of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43. That section provides:

> In an action in which the recovery of possession of personal property is claimed and it is alleged that the property,
> (a) was unlawfully taken from the possession of the plaintiff; or
>
> (b) is unlawfully detained by the defendant,
> the court, on motion, may make an interim order for recovery of possession of the property. [Emphasis added.]

[16] Section 104 and Rule 44 speak of recovery of possession of "personal property". That phrase is not defined in the Act or in Rule 44.

[18] The language of s. 104 of the Courts of Justice Act and, even more so, the language of Rule 44, suggest that "personal property" means property that is tangible and capable of physical description. The security requirements addressed in rule 44.03 suggest the same interpretation.[2] On this interpretation a debt would not constitute "personal property" for the purpose of Rule 44.

[19] It is unnecessary for me to come to any firm conclusion as to whether a debt is included within the phrase "personal property" in s. 104 and Rule 44. Even if the section and the rule could have application to a debt, Rastogi was not seeking an interim order for possession of property, and was not offering to post any security. Rastogi wanted the release of his funds plain and simple. The order made by the motion judge reflects the nature of the relief sought. There is nothing interim about the relief ordered by the motion judge.[3] The relief granted was not available under Rule 44.

V

Should the Motion be Treated as a Motion for Summary Judgment Under Rule 20?

[20] Rule 37.13(2)(a) states:

> A judge who hears a motion may,
> (a) in a proper case, order that the motion be converted into a motion for judgment;

[21] The motion judge was not asked to, and did not exercise the power under rule 37.13(2)(a). This court can, however, make the same order: s. 134(1)(a) of the Courts of Justice Act.

[22] An order in the terms contemplated by rule 37.13(2)(a) is discretionary and is clearly not one that will be easily or routinely granted. In CMLQ Investors Company v. CIBC Trust Corporation (1996), 3 C.P.C. (4th) 62 (Ont. C.A.), this court affirmed a motion judge's exercise of the rule 37.13(2)(a) discretion to grant judgment on a motion for a trial of an issue. The motion judge granted a declaratory judgment and directed a trial on the question of damages. In upholding that decision, this court said at para. 8:

> [W]here all of the necessary evidence is before the judge on the motion, and where the parties have had full opportunity of arguing their positions, as was the case here, there is nothing to be gained by either party by adding further proceedings to those already taken.

[23] Counsel for the appellants does not suggest that the record before the motion judge did not contain all of the evidence necessary to determine whether Rastogi was entitled to summary judgment on the issue of his entitlement to the release of the funds held by RBC Direct and TD. The record was extensive. Detailed facta were also filed. [4]

[24] Counsel for the appellants also does not suggest that RBC did not have a full opportunity to put forward its case on the issue of Rastogi's entitlement to the funds in the accounts. As I read counsel's factum, he invites the court to treat this as if it were a motion for summary judgment. Counsel forcefully argues that on the motion record, Rastogi failed to establish that there were no genuine issues requiring a trial in respect of his entitlement to those funds. While counsel for RBC has no difficulty treating this as a motion for summary judgment, counsel for Rastogi contends that it would be unfair to do so as that would put the onus on Rastogi to show that there is no triable issue with respect to his entitlement to the funds.

[25] I agree with counsel for the appellants that Rastogi's claim to an entitlement to the funds in his RBC Direct and TD accounts can be properly and fairly resolved on this motion. There is no need for further proceedings to make a proper determination on that issue. Nor, given my assessment of the merits, is there any prejudice to Rastogi.

VI

Should Summary Judgment be Granted on Rastogi's Claim to the Funds held by RBC Direct and TD?

[26] Rastogi's claim to the funds in RBC Direct and TD is straightforward. The credit in those accounts represents debts owed to him by RBC Direct and TD. He has demanded payment. Neither RBC Direct nor TD advanced any claim against Rastogi, much less a claim that would give rise to any right of set off. Counsel for Rastogi submits that RBC does not, merely by commencing a lawsuit in which it claims a right to the funds, acquire any right to unilaterally prevent Rastogi from obtaining those funds. Counsel contends that, absent a court order, RBC was not entitled to preemptively interfere with Rastogi's rights in respect of his accounts at RBC Direct and TD.

[27] RBC's claim that the funds should not be released to Rastogi rests on the assertion that the material filed on the motion demonstrates that RBC has an arguable claim to a restitution order with respect to the funds. RBC asserts that its remedy goes beyond damages and that the funds in those accounts in fact belong to RBC. The restitutionary claim is based on either a constructive trust flowing from Rastogi's breach of his duties to RBC, or on RBC's mistaken payment of the funds into Rastogi's accounts at RBC. RBC maintains that its arguable restitutionary claim, combined with the uncontroverted evidence that some of the proceeds of the currency trading are in the accounts in issue, is enough to give RBC a valid interest in those funds and create what counsel called a "interpleader situation" as between RBC and Rastogi.

[28] RBC's position confuses its undenied right to pursue its restitutionary claims and any right it has to unilaterally deprive Rastogi of his property while RBC pursues its restitutionary claim. The fact that RBC has an arguable case would certainly preclude Rastogi from obtaining summary judgment on RBC's restitutionary claim. The mere fact that RBC has an arguable restitutionary claim, however, does not give it any right to interfere with Rastogi's property pending a determination of the merits of that claim.

[29] RBC's restitutionary claim comes down to the assertion that the funds in Rastogi's accounts at RBC Direct and TD belong to RBC and not to Rastogi. If RBC had concerns about the disputed property disappearing before trial, it could have sought an interlocutory injunction. Had RBC chosen to do so, however, it would have been required to show more than an arguable case before it could obtain an order freezing those accounts. Under the well-known tripartite test in RJR MacDonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 1994 CanLII 117 (SCC), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 311, RBC would have been required to show:

- An arguable case (serious issue to be tried);
- Irreparable harm if injunctive relief was not granted;
- The balance of convenience favoured injunctive relief.

[30] RBC cannot escape the tripartite test for injunctive relief because the nature of the property in issue has permitted RBC to unilaterally achieve a de facto injunction without a court order. Surely RBC would not argue that it was entitled to go into Rastogi's garage and unilaterally seize his vehicles and hold them until trial if it had an arguable case that the vehicles were purchased with the proceeds of the currency trading. I do not see how RBC's legal position is improved because the assets in issue are debts owed to Rastogi by another bank and an affiliate of RBC.

[31] For whatever reason, RBC has not sought an interlocutory injunction in the two years since it started this action. RBC is not entitled to what would effectively be an interlocutory injunction merely by showing that its allegations, including those related to his restitutionary claims raise arguable issues. On the motion record, Rastogi's entitlement to the funds vis-à-vis RBC Direct and TD is undeniable. He is their creditor. RBC's entitlement to the funds is contingent upon RBC establishing the merits of its claim.

[32] Any entitlement RBC has to freeze Rastogi's accounts pending trial is not improved merely because RBC Direct is a subsidiary of RBC. RBC accepts that the credit in Rastogi's RBC Direct accounts constituted a debt owed by RBC Direct. While the relationship between RBC Direct and RBC permitted the latter to freeze Rastogi's accounts by what counsel for RBC referred to as an "internal demand", the subsidiary status does not make the debts of RBC Direct debts of RBC. The two are separate corporate entities. RBC cannot claim any right to set off of a debt owed by RBC Direct to Rastogi against a debt owed by Rastogi to RBC.

[33] I also agree with the motion judge's interpretation of s. 437(2) of the Bank Act. That section gives TD the right to hold the funds in Rastogi's account that it would otherwise be obligated to pay on demand to Rastogi. That right is triggered by RBC's claim in which it names TD as a defendant. Section 437(2) does not give RBC any rights in respect of the funds in Rastogi's TD account or inhibit the court's power to make orders directing payment of funds out of those accounts.

Conclusion

[34] For the reasons set out above, RBC has offered no legal basis upon which either RBC Direct or TD can withhold the funds held by them to the credit of Rastogi. There are no issues requiring a trial in respect of Rastogi's entitlement to those funds. Rastogi is entitled to summary judgment on his counterclaim to the extent that the claim seeks judgment directing the return to him of all funds held in Rastogi's accounts at RBC Direct. He is similarly entitled to judgment on the crossclaim to the extent that he seeks judgment directing that TD release all funds in Rastogi's joint account to him.

[35] All other claims raised in RBC's statement of claim and Rastogi's defence and counterclaim remain outstanding. Specifically, and contrary to counsel for the appellants' contention, this judgment does not decide RBC's restitutionary claims. Those claims may proceed. If they ultimately succeed, RBC may have practical difficulties obtaining an effective remedy in respect of the funds that are presently held in the RBC Direct and TD accounts. Those difficulties are, however, no different that the difficulties faced by any plaintiff in RBC's position who advances a restitutionary claim and does not seek, or does not receive, the necessary interlocutory relief.

[36] The order of the motion judge dated August 20, 2010 should be varied to grant judgment in the terms of paragraphs 2 and 3 of that order. The appeal is otherwise dismissed. Rastogi should have his costs of the appeal in the amount of $9,700, inclusive of disbursements and applicable taxes.

[1] There is an indication in the material that TD actually froze the account before notice of the action was given; however, after the notice of the claim was given, TD relied on s. 437(2).

[2] Rule 43.01, the interpleader rule, which is often engaged in disputes over bank accounts, defines property as meaning "personal property and includes a debt." Arguably the phrase "includes a debt" would be unnecessary if a debt was otherwise regarded as personal property for the purpose of the rule.

[3] My interpretation about the nature of the relief sought and the order granted on the motion also disposes of counsel for Rastogi's argument that as Belobaba J.'s order was interlocutory this court has no jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

[4] The motion was commenced by Rastogi before RBC filed its defence to the counterclaim. A summary judgment motion by the plaintiff cannot be served until after a defence is delivered: rule 20.01(1). However, the defence was delivered well before the hearing of the motion and I do not understand RBC to claim that it is prejudiced by treating the motion as a summary judgment motion even though it was served with the motion before the defence to the counterclaim was delivered.

(application for leave to appeal)

1 McEACHERN, C.J.B.C.: I have had overnight to consider this matter and I have given it some further thought this morning both before we resumed the argument and during the course of the argument. I am not persuaded by Mr. Rice's able submission that I should accede to his application.

2 The application is for leave to appeal putative interlocutory orders in a major alleged asbestos contamination case. These reasons for judgment which I shall endeavour to deliver now will be edited and changed somewhat but the result will be the same.

3 The action is a complicated one estimated by counsel to require upwards of six months or more at trial. It is set for trial in May of 1993. In February, 1992, the appellant/defendant, which I shall refer to as "Grace" requested the appointment of a pre-trial management judge. A pre-trial management judge is an indulgence offered by the court to the parties to assist them to manage complex litigation and to hear as many of the interlocutory applications as may be possible without counsel having to wait their turn in chambers. This obviously is a great advantage to all parties.

4 In this case the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court appointed a pre-trial management judge and he has heard and decided a number of applications and he has made other decisions including, as I understand it, an order for a short adjournment to accommodate counsel for Grace, but he has made another order refusing a longer adjournment. As I have said, the trial is now set for May of 1993 and counsel for Grace assures me that this application is not intended in any way to assist Grace to obtain a further adjournment. I must, therefore, assume that the trial will proceed in May as scheduled.

5 It has been understood from the outset that the pre-trial management judge would not be the trial judge although that could be changed if all parties requested the pre-trial management judge to try the case. That, of course, is a matter that rests entirely with counsel.

6 On December 3, 1992, counsel for Grace informed me that he or his colleagues learned for the first time what I thought was common knowledge within the profession, that the pre-trial management judge has a brother who is associated with the plaintiff's solicitors Messrs. Lander Downs, which is a law firm having in the range of 100 or so lawyers. Counsel for Grace accordingly asked to see the pre-trial management judge in his chambers and invited him to withdraw from the pre-trial management of this case. The pre-trial management judge quite properly asked counsel to speak to the matter in open court which was done. I have read a transcript of those proceedings. The pre-trial management judge considered the matter and spoke to Chief Justice Esson as he had been invited to do by counsel for Grace.

> After the matter was raised on Friday morning last, the pre-trial management judge discussed the matter with me. It was for other reasons a hectic day. Without giving the matter adequate thought, I expressed the view that we should apply an approach (it is not a rule or a principle) which we often apply where questions of possible grounds for disqualification arise, as they often do, in circumstances of urgency. That approach is to avoid the "hassle" of having a judge face suggestions of bias, however spurious, by simply shifting the case to another judge. That problematic approach is entirely reasonable if it can be applied without injustice to the parties or the public interest.

8 As a result the pre-trial management judge informed counsel that he would withdraw from the management of the case. This led counsel for the other parties to bring to the attention of the Chief Justice the prejudice that might be caused by the withdrawal of the pre-trial management judge whereupon, after giving the matter careful consideration, the Chief Justice then directed the pre-trial management judge to continue to manage the case. This is what Chief Justice Esson said about that in the memo he sent to counsel:

> What I overlooked in my haste was that this is not such a case. If the pre-trial management judge does not continue as management judge, the value of his unique knowledge of the case resulting from the investment of time and effort which he has put into it will be entirely lost. That will prejudice the parties. Furthermore, it will damage the system and thus prejudice the public interest. Much judicial time, a scarce commodity at present, will be squandered. It must never be forgotten that the cost of providing judges, courthouses, and all the ancillary services falls upon the public. Those are some of the reflections, obvious enough to me now, which I overlooked on Friday last.

I pause to mention that pre-trial management is a part of the administration of the courts which has received some appellate consideration and I refer to the judgment of this Court in the Delgamuukw case where Chief Justice Nemetz said this:

> Another category of cases deals with case management, i.e., decisions made by the trial judge or, prior to assignment of a trial judge, the assigned pre-hearing judge, dealing with the mechanics of the trial. In these days, where trials may carry on for extended periods of time with consequential expense to the litigants, decisions must be made to control such expenses. Those decisions will be made ultimately by the judge in charge of the case assigned to him. The judge who has the management of the case is best able to decide how it will proceed.
> This Court ordinarily would decline jurisdiction to interfere with the administrative powers vested in the Chief Justice unless some error in applying a principle of law has been shown to exist, or where manifest injustice would occur if we did not interfere.

9 Based on all of the foregoing counsel for Grace has brought this application for leave to appeal. I have discussed with counsel the difficulties caused by all of this informality. There never was an application that the pre-trial management judge disqualify himself on legal grounds.

There was only a suggestion, or a request, that he withdraw. No material was filed in the court below and no order has been presented to the trial court which would be required if leave were to be granted. Mr. Rice now says that his appeal is against the order of the Chief Justice but I rather doubt if that is correct for Chief Justice Esson merely made an administrative decision which could not preclude the pre-trial management judge from disqualifying himself upon proper grounds. In an attempt to bolster a doubtful practice, Grace has filed an affidavit with this Court on the leave application which touches upon matters not before the pre-trial management judge. This affidavit is intended to suggest that the judge's brother had a general interest in this asbestos litigation. That affidavit is unfortunately vague and uncertain and leaves out more than it says.

10 Rather than requiring the matter to be adjourned Mr. Church chose not to object to the informality of the applicant's proceedings or to the court receiving the said affidavit, but he made a statement as counsel which I accept which is that the judge's brother is a solicitor with Ladner Downs who has taken no part whatsoever in any of the multitudinous asbestos litigation in which Ladner Downs is engaged. I, too, am anxious to deal with this matter on the merits and I shall not dwell further upon the procedural difficulties faced by the applicants.

11 I shall treat the application as one for leave to appeal against the decision of the pre-trial management judge not to withdraw in these circumstances and also against the direction of Chief Justice Esson, if such it was, to the pre-trial management judge to continue to manage this litigation.

12 Mr. Rice of course has no difficulty locating authorities which discuss the test to be employed in determining whether a judge should be disqualified, namely, a reasonable apprehension on the part of fully informed right thinking members of society. He says that a hypothetical reasonable person would think the pre-trial management judge should disqualify himself. While it is not my function to decide such a question, I do not agree that any panel of this Court would agree with Mr. Rice on this question.

13 A reasonable apprehension of bias will not usually arise unless there are legal grounds upon which a judge should be disqualified. It is not quite as simple as that because care must always be taken to insure that there is no appearance of unfairness. That, however, does not permit the court to yield to every angry objection that is voiced about the conduct of litigation. We hear so much angry objection these days that we must be careful to insure that important rights are not sacrificed merely to satisfy the anxiety of those who seek to have their own way at any cost or at any price. I have taken comfort from the judgment of this Court in Adams v. Workers' Compensation Board (1989) 42 B.C.L.R. (2d) 228, where Mr. Justice Gibbs speaking for the Court said this:

> Mr. Justice Cowan dismissed the reasonable apprehension of bias argument in these words:
> I do not agree with the petitioner's counsel that a reasonable apprehension of > bias exists in relation to the proposed hearing by three commissioners. There is nothing to suggest, in my view, that the commissioners will not in the terms of s.96(2) "rehear and redetermine" the matter in a fair and unbiased manner based on the evidence that will be before them on the rehearing.

> The presumption of the regularity of the acts of public officers expressed in the maxim omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta applies in the circumstances of this case.
>
> With respect, in my opinion that was entirely appropriate and proper disposition of the bias allegation. There is no evidence to support the allegation, nothing upon which a reasonable person could reach that conclusion other than a suspicion that a commissioner or commissioners would not bring an impartial mind to bear. I think that it should be understood that in the "prior determination" cases such as Ctee. for Justice & Liberty v. Nat. Energy Bd., 1976 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1978] 1 S.C.R. 369, 68 D.L.R. (3d) 716, 9 N.R. 115 [Fed.], relied upon by the appellant, there was more than suspicion, there was evidence which could lead a reasonable person to apprehend bias.

14 There is no evidence that the pre-trial management judge would not bring an impartial mind to bear upon the limited duties he has to discharge in that capacity.

15 It is not the law or the practice in my view that a judge must always disqualify himself just because he has a brother who is a member of a large firm which is appearing in litigation assigned to the judge. This view was expressed by Chief Justice Esson in his memo in the following terms:

> I should not be understood as saying that a filial or fraternal relationship, if combined with other circumstances, could not be a ground for disqualification. Such circumstances might exist if, for instance, a judge's brother was a sole practitioner acting for a plaintiff in a large case. On the other hand, it would not necessarily be objectionable > for a judge to sit on a case in which his brother is counsel. Generally, in this jurisdiction, we have drawn the line at children appearing before parents on matters of importance although in England, where a more robust approach prevails, that is commonplace. But the facts of this matter appear to me to put it beyond reasonable discussion. If the rule was as counsel for Grace suggests, a judge whose brother or sister (or parent, child, nephew or niece?) is a partner in a large firm could never sit on a case in which that firm is involved. That cannot be right.

16 The reference of Chief Justice Esson to the English practice is found in the Code of Conduct of the Bar of England and Wales, Appendix 8, paragraph 10. The heading is "Appearance before Relatives" and the text says this:

> No barrister should habitually practice in any court of which his father or near relative is the judge but there is no objection to a barrister practising in a court where his father or near relative is one of several judges. In such a case it is impossible to know before hand which judge will in fact try a case. It is not considered improper for a barrister to appear before his father or near relative in the High Court, Court of Appeal, or in the House of Lords.

17 While it has not been the practice in this province where the offspring of judges to appear before their parents, that salutary rule has never been extended to include relatives such as we are concerned with here. As Chief Justice Esson has pointed out many judges would be disqualified from hearing many cases to the detriment of the bar and the public if the rule contended for were to be applied with the strictness that the application contemplates.

18 I have no way of knowing what level of discomfort Grace suffers under in the circumstances of this case. But, if it is apprehension of bias I do not believe any panel of the Court would regard it as a reasonable apprehension of bias. Reasonable apprehension of bias does not exist just in the subjective views of a litigant. Other factors must be taken into account including in this case such as: the size of the law firm in question; the assurance given by Mr. Church; the great waste and inconvenience which will arise by reason of the knowledge and familiarity of the pre-trial management judge being wasted; the relatively short period remaining until the commencement of the trial; the existing practice and continuing inconvenience that would accrue by the imposition of the regime suggested; and, importantly in this particular application, the fact that the judge is only dealing with management and interlocutory applications rather than the trial itself.

19 In addition, it is apparent from the memo of Chief Justice Esson that all relevant factors were given careful consideration and reconsideration. What was decided was clearly a matter of discretion keeping in mind the fact that this is not a case of pecuniary interest but rather a challenge of favour as described by Mr. Sedgewick in his comment upon The Queen v. Rand (1866), 1 L.R. 230 (C.A.) which commentary is published in the 1945 Canadian Bar Review at p.457. I am satisfied on this ground as well that no panel of this Court would interfere with the discretionary administrative decisions made in the court below.

20 I wish to stress that no criticism has been offered about any of the many interlocutory decisions or directions which have been made by the pre-trial management judge. One of the other defendants chose not to join with Grace in this application. I cannot fail to mention the comment of Mr. Justice Gibbs in Adams previously mentioned at p.231, where he warned against the harm and danger that is done by allegations of bias which are made perhaps too frequently. I agree entirely that that is a practice which should be discouraged.

21 For all of those reasons I would dismiss the application for leave to appeal.

22 The respondents will have their costs but taxed in the usual way on the usual scale.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: Darryl John Stickel, Plaintiff

A N D:

Unum Provident Corporation and First Unum Life Insurance Company, Defendants

BEFORE: Matlow, J.

COUNSEL: Robert Robinson, for the Plaintiff

Donna M. Kraft for the Defendants

HEARD: November 10, 2009.

[1] This motion, brought by the plaintiff for judgment pursuant to Rules 20 and 21, now stands adjourned before me to December 7, 2009. At that time I will hear a motion to be brought by the defendants described by their counsel to be for an order "changing the place of trial". In the context of this case, that must mean that the defendants will seek an order staying this action so that a new action can be commenced in its place in an appropriate state of the United States.

[2] Both counsel had envisaged that, in the motion presently before me, I would conduct some form appeal hearing from a decision made by the defendants, or one of them, to discontinue payments of disability payments which they have been making to the plaintiff, their insured. However, when I questioned them about whether the motion fell within the scope of either of the Rules invoked, they realized, and acknowledged, that it did not. Both counsel and I then engaged in a dialogue that might assist me to determine whether there might be some proper basis on which I could continue with this motion.

[3] One of the purposes of this motion is to create a record of what has already taken place and what more may be required if this motion were to continue before me.

[4] I wish to call attention to counsel that this Court is not a statutory court and that it has inherent jurisdiction to grant relief to persons entitled when required. I further wish to call attention to rule 37.13 (2)(a) which permits a judge hearing a motion, "in a proper case, (to) order that the motion be converted into a motion for judgment". This may be such a proper case.

[5] I also wish to record that I have alerted both counsel of the requirement that, because the law that is applicable to this case is foreign law, it must be proven as if it were a fact. This is particularly important with respect to the law that defines the standard of review that I would have to apply in the de novo proceeding and also with respect to the options available to me on the disposition of the motion. The filing of copies of foreign statutes and reports of judgments is not sufficient to prove foreign law. If this motion were to continue before me, I would require compliance with the rule requiring proof. In default, I would have no option but to apply the law of Ontario and proceed on the fictional assumption that it is the same as the foreign law.

[6] Counsel for the defendants advised me that she intended to make a preliminary motion for an order allowing Patrick W. Begos, a foreign lawyer, to act with her as counsel for the defendants. I will hear this motion too on the next return date either before or after the other motion that will then be heard.

[7] Counsel for the defendants also advised me that she had further material that she wishes to file to complete the record that must be before me if the motion were to continue before me. I will consider this request, if necessary, at a later time.

[8] It is my present inclination that I do have jurisdiction to deal with costs regardless of the outcome of the motion to be brought and that it is the law of Ontario that would apply. Both counsel will be at liberty to make submissions on all aspects of any request for costs.

Kelly Lynn Donovan, acting in person demonstrated a high level of sophistication. She clearly appreciates the meaning and consequences of her words. In this case, there was no evidentiary basis for the allegation, and it can be described as "spurious". Her submission therefore fails.

(5) Litigation Efficiency

[39] The appellant submits that the second motion judge erred in failing to convert the motion before him to a motion for judgment "as the best way to achieve the most just, most expeditious, and least expensive result", in accordance with r. 37.13(2)(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

[40] The short answer to this submission is that this was not fully argued before the second motion judge, and it would not have been appropriate for him to grant it in these circumstances, nor would it be appropriate to grant on this appeal: see McCracken v. Canadian National Railway Company, 2012 ONCA 445, 111 O.R. (3d) 745, at para. 141.

Conclusion

[41] For these reasons, we agree with the respondents' submission that the appellant's claims are subject to determination pursuant to the procedures set out in the collective agreement and the PSA. To the extent that the claim seeks relief that is not available under the collective agreement or the PSA, it is subject to the jurisdiction of the HRTO, in which both parties have asserted claims that are currently outstanding.

[42] We therefore dismiss the appeal. In the particular circumstances of this case, however, we vary the order of the Superior Court by staying this action until such time as the appellant's remedies under the collective agreement and in the HRTO have been exhausted.

DECISION ON MOTION

[1] The applicant, "Mr. Hiamey" brings this motion seeking to strike the responding materials served and filed by the Toronto Community Housing Corporation ("Toronto Community") to prevent the landlord from participating in the judicial review application. Alternatively, Mr. Hiamey seeks damages of $50,000 and costs of $5,000 if the landlord is permitted to continue to defend this application.

Background

[2] Mr. Hiamey brought an application to the Human Rights Tribunal against the Toronto Community alleging that it violated his human rights by terminating his tenancy when he did not pay the full rent owed. Alternatively, the Toronto Community failed to grant him a rental subsidy when he lost his job and was no longer able to pay the unsubsidized market rate for his unit as required by his lease.

[3] After a full hearing, the Tribunal dismissed his application for the following reasons:

a. it had no reasonable prospect of success;

b. it was an abuse of process; and

c. it was statute barred due to a time limitation.

[4] A subsequent request for reconsideration of the decision was dismissed as well.

[5] On November 9, 2015, Mr. Hiamey commenced a judicial review application seeking remedies and damages, reinstatement of his employment, accommodation in the old apartment from which he was evicted, or an equivalent apartment, erasing the arrears of rent owing on his rental account and requiring the Toronto Community to reimburse him for any rental arrears already paid by him or on his behalf. He is also seeking a declaration that the Tribunal's decision was discriminatory. He is also seeking to add the Tribunal as a respondent to the judicial review application.

[6] That application was filed on December 11, 2015, but not perfected until April 12, 2016. The Toronto Community received the documents in December 2015 but since it was not clear whether the materials filed by Mr. Hiamey were perfected, the Toronto Community did not file any responding materials at that time.

[7] On January 19, 2016, the Toronto Community contacted the Divisional Court's administrative offices and was informed that the application filed was unperfected and that the Toronto Community should not file responding materials at that time.

[8] The Toronto Community continued to check with the Divisional Court and on April 12, 2016, was informed that Mr. Hiamey had perfected his application. On April 13, 2016, the Toronto Community filed the responding materials.

Position of Mr. Hiamey

[9] Mr. Hiamey submits that the pleadings ought to be struck since Rule 68.04(4) has not been followed. By filing the documents on April 13, 2016, the Toronto Community violated the 30-day time limit prescribed by Rule 68.04(4). Accordingly, his position has been prejudiced since the hearing date has still not been set, and as a result, he suffers from anxiety and loss of sleep because of the uncertainty about his future.

Position of the Toronto Community

[10] It submits that Mr. Hiamey's position is totally unfounded since what triggers the 30-day time limit is the filing of the perfected materials as opposed to the original notice of application. It has acted in good faith and has taken all reasonable steps to comply with the rule. It called the administrator at Divisional Court on numerous occasions to determine when the perfected materials would be filed. Once the perfected materials were filed, it responded promptly.

[11] Alternatively, the Toronto Community submits that if it were a late filing, Mr. Hiamey has not sustained any prejudice since he himself did not perfect the application until April 12, 2016. The matter would not have been heard in any event until such time as the application was perfected.

[12] Lastly, the Toronto Community submits that the relief of striking the responding materials is an extreme remedy which is not warranted on the facts of this case.

Position of Human Rights Tribunal

[13] The Tribunal is present solely because it was given notice that at some point it would be added to these proceedings. It has not filed any materials. However, its position is that the responding materials were filed within the 30 days that the application was perfected. Further, there has been no prejudice to Mr. Hiamey even if I were to find that the response was not filed within the 30 days of the notice of application.

Discussion

[14] Rule 68.04(4) states:

> 68.04(4) The respondent shall deliver an application record and a factum within thirty days after service of the applicant's application record and factum. R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 68.04(4).

[15] On a strict interpretation of this rule, the responding materials should have been served by January 11, 2016.

[16] The position advanced by the Toronto Community is that it was not clear from the materials filed that these would be the materials to which it had to respond. The Record itself was not proper and was stapled as opposed to bound. Accordingly, it contacted the Divisional Court office to determine whether the application was perfected. The reply is that it was not and the Toronto Community should wait until the application had been perfected. Once informed of its perfection, it promptly served and filed the responding materials.

[17] In my view that is a totally reasonable and responsible course of action. Otherwise, had it filed the response by January 11, 2016, it may have had to amend its response once the perfected documentation had been served. Rule 1.04(1) states that the rules "shall be liberally construed to secure the just, most expeditious and least expensive determination of every civil proceeding on its merits." It appears to me that the wait would have met this objective.

[18] Rule 2.01.1 permits the court to … "grant all necessary amendments or other relief, on such terms as are just, to secure the just determination of the real matters in dispute."

[19] At most, and I do not make such a finding, failure to file the response by January 11, 2016, may be considered "an irregularity". The conduct exhibited by Toronto Community was not unreasonable nor in bad faith. By waiting until the application was perfected, Toronto Community knew exactly what it had to respond to. Further, even if it were "an irregularity", there is no justification for not permitting Toronto Community to participate and defend the allegations brought by Mr. Hiamey, especially when there is no prejudice.

[20] The relief being sought by Mr. Hiamey, i.e. that the response be struck and damages of $50,000 plus $5,000 in costs be awarded if I were to permit the Toronto Community to continue, is totally unrealistic and without foundation.

[21] Mr. Hiamey's submission that he has been prejudiced by the supposed delay, is not well founded. Although he states that he is not trained in law, he has had extensive and intimate experiences with all levels of courts and tribunals as a self-represented litigant. Further, according to submissions, he is involved with ongoing litigation on numerous fronts on which he is self-represented. Although he may be stressed, I cannot conclude that all of his stressors are related to the alleged late filing of the responding materials.

[22] Accordingly, I find that he has not been prejudiced and his claim for damages is dismissed. Further, the application to strike the responding materials is dismissed.

[23] The Toronto Community seeks costs in the sum of $2,103.10. It appears that two hours were required to prepare the responding materials in this motion. It also claims $1,500 for the attendance. The attendance was less than one hour. The amount claimed by the Toronto Community is excessive. Accordingly, I award costs of $800 plus HST and disbursements of $103.10 inclusive of HST on the disbursements.

[24] Order to issue as per Reasons. Should Mr. Hiamey not approve the Order within 15 days of its service, the Registrar may issue the Order without Mr. Hiamey's approval provided it complies with the Reasons.

REASONS FOR DECISION

PERELL, J.

[1] Before this case began it was apparently settled. By her lawyer's letter dated September 25, 2006, the Applicant, Ms. Majorie Pastoor, forwarded negotiated Minutes of Settlement to the Respondent's lawyer for signature by the Respondent, Mr. Pastoor. Mr. Pastoor did sign the Minutes of Settlement and returned them for signature by Ms. Pastoor. (There was a small change does not frustrate its apparent policy that matrimonial contracts be entered into with some care, solemnity, and formality, and this interpretation would also advance the policy of encouraging citizens to settle their disputes in a reasonable and fair manner without resorting to litigation.

[15] As to the first rationale for the decision in Geropolous, this involves a consideration of the scope of Scherer v. Paletta, which, in turn, requires an analysis of the rationale of that case. In Scherer, in a series of telephone calls, the plaintiff offered and the defendant accepted a settlement of a motor vehicle accident claim in an existing action. The defendant confirmed the oral settlement in writing. The plaintiff reneged, but reversing the motions court judge, the Court of Appeal enforced the settlement.

> The authority of a solicitor arises from his retainer and as far as his client is concerned it is confined to transacting the business to which the retainer extends and is subject to the restrictions set out in the retainer. The same situation, however, does not exist with respect to others with whom the solicitor may deal. The authority of a solicitor to compromise may be implied from a retainer to conduct litigation unless a limitation of authority is communicated to the opposite party. A client, having retained a solicitor in a particular matter, holds that solicitor out as his agent to conduct the matter in which the solicitor is retained. In general, the solicitor is the client's authorized agent in all matters that may reasonably be expected to arise for decision in the particular proceedings for which he has been retained. Where a principal gives an agent general authority to conduct any business on his behalf, he is bound as regards third persons by every act done by the agent which is incidental to the ordinary course of such business or which falls within the apparent scope of the agent's authority. As between principal and agent, the authority may be limited by agreement or special instructions but as regards third parties the authority which the agent has is that which he is reasonably believed to have, having regard to all the circumstances, and which is reasonably to be gathered from the nature of his employment and duties. The scope of authority is, therefore, largely governed by the class of agent employed provided that he is acting within the limit of his ordinary avocation or by relation of the agent to the principal or by the customs of the particular trade or profession. [emphasis added]
> 11 A solicitor whose retainer is established in the particular proceedings may bind his client by a compromise of these proceedings unless his client has limited his authority and the opposing side has knowledge of the limitation, subject always to the discretionary power of the Court, if its intervention by the making of an order is required, to inquire into the circumstances and grant or withhold its intervention if it sees fit; and, subject also to the disability of the client. It follows accordingly, that while a solicitor or counsel may have apparent authority to bind and contract his client to a particular compromise, neither solicitor nor counsel have power to bind the Court to act in a particular way, so that, if the compromise is one that involves the Court in making an order, the want of authority may be brought to the notice of the Court at any time before the grant of its intervention is perfected and the Court may refuse to permit the order to be perfected. If, however, the parties are of full age and capacity, the Court, in practice, where there is no dispute as to the fact that a retainer exists, and no dispute as to the terms agreed upon between the solicitors, does not embark upon any inquiry as to the limitation of authority imposed by the client upon the solicitor. Pleadings -- Amendment -- General Rule as to Permitting Amendments -- Exceptions to General Rule -- Withdrawal of Admission -- Prejudice -- Rules 183, 184.

An admission made in pleadings or otherwise for the purpose of trial is a judicial admission, and the vital feature of a judicial admission is its conclusiveness upon the party making it. Although an admission may, in some circumstances and upon proper terms, be withdrawn by leave of the Court, this should never be permitted unless it is proved by satisfactory evidence that the fact admitted was not true. The withdrawal of an admission of fact in a pleading is not something for which the other side can be compensated in costs, and is therefore not within the general rule stated in Williams v. Leonard et al. (1895), 16 P.R. 544 at 549. Delap v. Canadian Pacific R.W. Co. (1915), 8 O.W.N. 293; Wright v. Way (1880), 8 P.R. 326; Gesman v. The City of Regina et al. (1907), 1 Sask. Sale of land -- Rescission -- Land subject to mortgage -- Purchaser requisitioning partial discharge thereof -- Mortgagee at first refusing to give partial discharge -- Vendor attempting to rescind -- Mortgagee subsequently changing his mind and agreeing to give partial discharge -- Whether vendor entitled to rescind.

In 1963 the defendant acquired 10 acres of property and gave back an open mortgage as part payment thereof. In 1967 the defendant sold most of the property to a third party who was to assume the entire existing mortgage. However, the mortgage was not discharged with respect to the land remaining to the defendant. In 1969 the defendant agreed to sell his remaining property to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's solicitors requisitioned a partial discharge of the mortgage and the defendant attempted to rescind the contract.

Evidence -- Admissions -- Agreed statements of facts -- Legal effect -- Right of party to withdraw admission in statement -- Power of Court to permit withdrawal.

An agreed statement of facts is binding on the parties to it and can only be changed by mutual consent or with leave of the Court. In granting leave, the Court should exercise its discretion warily and usually only on terms, one of which should generally be that the other party is at liberty to withdraw its agreement, and that the costs of such withdrawal and the necessary fresh preparation should fall on the renouncer.

In an action for specific performance or, alternatively, damages, held, the action should be dismissed. Since the defendant rescinded the contract following receipt of a letter from the mortgagee stating that he would not give a partial discharge after reasonable efforts had been made by the defendant to obtain one, the defendant acted reasonably in rescinding the contract. Moreover, the fact that the mortgagee subsequently changed his mind and later agreed to give a partial discharge could not have affected the defendant's right to rescind at the time he exercised it.

A.B. Rosenberg, Q.C., for plaintiff.

W.G. How, Q.C., for defendant.

WRIGHT, J.:-- This is an action for a declaration that a contract for the sale of the service station property owned by the defendant, in the County of Peel, is binding, for specific performance, and, in the alternative, for damages of $10,945.30.

In June, 1963, the defendant purchased approximately 10 acres of land in the said county on which there were a motel and restaurant, and at the south-east corner a service station. The vendor was a Mr. Masionis. The sale price was $200,000. The deed was to uses. As part of the purchase price the defendant gave Masionis an open mortgage back for $32,500 secured on the whole property.

In July, 1967, the defendant sold approximately 8.2 acres of the land so purchased to a Mr. Trasiewicz for $192,500. Trasiewicz assumed the mortgage back to Masionis and thereafter made all payments on it. The Masionis mortgage was not discharged on the service station land remaining in Scherloski's name but I find as a fact that the defendant was under the impression that his remaining land was free of the Masionis mortgage, on which there was owing $22,862.92 on January 1, 1969.

On January 27, 1969, the defendant accepted an offer from the plaintiff to purchase the remaining service station property for $38,000 paying $500 as a deposit. The printed portion of the agreement of sale thus made, read, among other things:

> The purchaser is to be allowed sixty (60) days from the date of acceptance hereof to examine the title at his own expense. If within that time any valid objection to title is made in writing to the Vendor which the Vendor shall be unable or unwilling to remove, and which the Purchaser will not waive this agreement shall, notwithstanding any intermediate acts or negotiations in respect of such objections, be null and void and the deposit shall be returned by the Vendor without interest and he and the Agent shall not be liable for any cots or damages. Saave as to any valid objection so made within such time the Purchaser shall be conclusively deemed to have accepted the title of the Vendor to the real property.

The purchaser and the plaintiff Patterson entered into a further agreement of sale of the service station property on February 27, 1971, for $48,000. It provided for a second mortgage back of

93 O.R. (3d) 161

Court of Appeal for Ontario,
Moldaver, R.P. Armstrong and Blair JJ.A.
February 4, 2009

Family law -- Practice -- Wife making claim for constructive trust in husband's shares in profitable business -- Value of shares dropping deeply before trial -- Wife seeking leave to withdraw claim but not filing formal Notice of Withdrawal under rule 12(1) of Family Law Rules -- Husband delivering formal admission that he held certain shares in trust for wife -- Trial judge having residual discretion to consider wife's application -- Trial judge not erring in dismissing that application and in going on to try issue despite husband's admission -- Court not bound to give effect to admission of law or of mixed fact and law if interests of justice dictate that issue should be determined at trial -- Family law Rules, O. Reg. 114/99, rule 12(1).

Rule 12 of the Family Law Rules, O. Reg. 114/99, and an admission accepting that he holds 1,000 shares in the business in trust for Ms. Serra.

> 12.(1) A party who does not want to continue with all or part of a case may withdraw all or part of the application, answer or reply by serving a notice of withdrawal (Form 12) on every other party and filing it.

[99] In his formal Notice of Withdrawal, dated May 8, 2006, Mr. Serra stated:

> 2. The Respondent Harold Serra withdraws part of his denial of Barbara Serra's claim for a declaration that she is the beneficial owner in respect of the common shares of 821129 Ontario Inc, and states as follows:
>
> a. Harold Serra owns directly 1000 common shares representing 25% interest in 821129 Ontario Inc by reason of a gift from his brother Carl Serra and Harold confirms that he owns these shares absolutely;
>
> b. Harold Serra owns directly a further 2000 common shares representing a 50% interest in the common shares of 821129 Ontario Inc of which he is holding one half in trust for Barbara Serra as of the date of separation (being the November 2000 valuation date). . . . . .
> 5. The Respondent admits for the purposes of this proceeding that he is holding in trust for the Applicant as of valuation date, one half of his 2000 common shares [in] 821129 Ontario owned directly by him that was not acquired by way a gift from his brother, and consents to judgment accordingly. (Emphasis added)

[100] Ms. Serra continued to assert her trust claims until October 2006 when, on the eve of trial, she sought leave from the trial judge to withdraw them, without resorting to rule 12(1).

[101] In taking these steps, both parties no doubt recognized that a successful trust claim by Ms. Serra would lead to her sharing in the decline in value of the business. [page192]

[102] The trial judge addressed the request to withdraw, and the issue of Mr. Serra's formal admission, in separate reasons. [See Note 18 below] She declined to permit Ms. Serra to withdraw her trust claims. At the same time, she declined to act upon Mr. Serra's formal admission. She felt it was unfair for either position to prevail at that stage. The trial judge proceeded to try the issue and found on the evidence that there was no constructive trust, principally because, in her view, Ms. Serra had been "very well compensated" overall for her contributions to the business and had not suffered any deprivation as a result. She did not deal with the resulting trust claim.

[103] In the current family law regime, the proper way to withdraw all or part of a claim is to file a formal Notice of Withdrawal under rule 12(1) of the Family Law Rules. It would appear that this can be done unilaterally at any stage of the proceedings, unlike under the comparable provision in civil cases where leave of the court is necessary once the pleadings are closed. [See Note 19 below] But there are cost consequences. Under rule 12(3) the withdrawing party is liable for the costs in relation to the withdrawn claim "unless the court orders or the parties agree otherwise".

IN THE MATTER OF an application pursuant to section 32(1) of the Health Care Consent Act, S.O. 1996, c.2, Sch A, AND IN THE MATTER OF NODEBE AGBAPU

RE: Nodebe Agbapu,

AND:

Dr. Tariq Munshi,

BEFORE: Regional Senior Justice Firestone

COUNSEL: Nodebe Agbapu, Self-Represented

Jennifer Arduini, for the Respondent

HEARD: In Writing

ENDORSEMENT

[1] This matter arises from an appeal by Nodebe Agbapu (the "Appellant") of the decision of the Consent and Capacity Board ("CCB") dated September 29, 2022, confirming a finding of incapacity with respect to treatment with anti-psychotic medication. The Appellant has appealed that decision. Pursuant to section 18(3) of the Health Care Consent Act, 1996, S.O. 1996, c. 2 Schedule A, ("HCCA"), Dr. Tariq Munshi (the "Respondent") is not permitted to treat the Appellant with the proposed treatment pending the disposition of the Appeal.

[2] In my endorsement dated April 3, 2023, I directed that the Respondent's request to have amicus curiae appointed to assist the court was to be made by a motion in writing before me in accordance with the provisions of Rule 37.12.1(4) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194. (the "Rules"). Rule 37.12.1(4)(c) sets-out the process to have an opposed motion heard in writing.

[3] In accordance with my direction on May 11, 2023, the Respondent's motion record, factum and book of authorities was served on the Appellant in accordance with the procedure set forth in Rule 37.12.1(4). No responding materials have been delivered and no request for an oral hearing has been made within the timeframe provided in Rule 37.12.1(5).

[4] I have reviewed and considered the evidentiary record before me.

[5] The Appellant initiated the within appeal on September 30, 2022, after the CCB upheld a finding that he is incapable with respect to consenting to, or refusing, treatment with anti-psychotic medication. Given the significant deterioration in the Appellant's mental health to date and the serious risk of further deterioration, the Respondent intends to bring a motion pursuant to s. 19 of the HCCA to initiate treatment with anti-psychotic medication pending the disposition of the appeal.

[6] To date, the Appellant, who is self-represented, has not taken any steps to perfect the appeal or move this matter forward.

[7] In accordance with Rule 13.2 of the Rules and the inherent jurisdiction of the Superior Court I am satisfied that the appointment of amicus curiae as a friend of the court is appropriate, necessary and in the interest of justice. The amicus curiae can provide the necessary assistance so that all remaining steps as they relate to this appeal and the intended motion can be completed. The requested order is necessary to ensure that the integrity of the judicial process is maintained: Ontario v. Criminal Lawyers' Association, 2013 SCC 43, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 3.

[8] As requested, I appoint Jennifer Danch as amicus curiae. Order to issue in accordance with the original order signed by me today.

WARNING

This is a case under the Child, Youth and Family Services Act, 2017 and subject to subsections 87(8) and 87(9) of this legislation. These subsections and subsection 142(3) of the Child, Youth and Services Act, 2017, which deals with the consequences of failure to comply, read as follows:

87(8) Prohibition re identifying child — No person shall publish or make public information that has the effect of identifying a child who is a witness at or a participant in a hearing or the subject of a proceeding, or the child's parent or foster parent or a member of the child's family.

(9) Prohibition re identifying person charged — The court may make an order prohibiting the publication of information that has the effect of identifying a person charged with an offence under this Part.

142(3) Offences re publication — A person who contravenes subsection 87(8) or 134(11) (publication of identifying information) or an order prohibiting publication made under clause 87(7)(c) or subsection 87(9), and a director, officer or employee of a corporation who authorizes, permits or concurs in such a contravention by the corporation, is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable to a fine of not more than $10,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than three years, or to both.

REASONS FOR DECISION

[1] This matter has a long procedural history. For present purposes, it is sufficient to focus on the motion brought by M.E. on October 9, 2020, wherein she sought to add additional causes of action and new parties to the action. The motion judge dismissed the motion as frivolous, vexatious, and an abuse of process under r. 2.1.01: Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194. M.E. then sought leave to appeal the motion judge's order to the Divisional Court. A panel of the Divisional Court dismissed that motion.

[2] On May 17, 2021, M.E. applied to this court for leave to appeal the Divisional Court's order. The Registrar has repeatedly informed her that her materials do not comply with the Rules and practice directions. On July 5, 2021, M.E. filed the underlying" Notice of Motion for Non-Compliance." Simmons J.A. heard the motion on July 27, 2021. She adjourned the matter to a full panel, noting that while the Divisional Court's order was final, the motion judge's order concerned a motion to add causes of action, which may not be interlocutory. As a single judge, Simmons J.A. could not determine this issue.

[3] We conclude that M.E. was seeking to add new causes of action. An order refusing leave to amend pleadings to plead a new cause of action is final: Atlas Construction Inc. v. Brownstones Ltd. (1996), 46 C.P.C. (3d) 67 (Ont. Gen. Div.). So is an order dismissing a motion to add a party, which M.E. also appears to have been trying to do: Bryson v. Kerr (1976), 1976 CanLII 867 (ON SC), 13 O.R. (2d) 672 (Ont. Div. Ct.). Accordingly, leave to appeal is not required and an appeal lies as of right to the Court of Appeal: Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 6(1)(b).

[4] We order that the appeal of the motion judge's order of October 9, 2020 may proceed in this court. Costs of this motion are reserved to the panel hearing the appeal.

ENDORSEMENT

[1] The respondent Attorney General of Canada brings this motion to quash Mr. Almrei's appeal from the decision of Lederman J. dismissing a motion for partial summary judgment. In many circumstances, a decision dismissing a motion for full or partial summary judgment will be interlocutory because the merits of the claim remain to be tried: see Cole v. Hamilton (City) (2002), 2002 CanLII 49359 (ON CA), 60 O.R. (3d) 284 (C.A.). This court, however, has identified circumstances in which dismissal of a motion for summary judgment will constitute a final order and thus may be appealed to this court. We conclude that the order of the motion judge in this case is a final order. Accordingly, the motion to quash the appeal is dismissed.

[2] The appellant has brought an action for damages alleging, among other things, negligent investigation, false imprisonment and breaches of ss. 7, 9 and 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. His claim arises out of the actions of state actors in relation to security certificates issued under the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act, S.C. 2001, c. 27. The appellant was subject to two security certificates, one issued on October 19, 2001 and a second one on February 22, 2008, and was held in custody for many years. In lengthy public reasons reported at 2009 FC 1263, Mosley J. found that the 2008 certificate was unreasonable and he quashed it. Mosley J. held a 38-day hearing. Parts of that hearing were held in camera or ex parte. In addition to the lengthy public reasons, Mosley J. also gave secret reasons, to which the appellant has never had access.

[3] In the motion before Lederman J., the appellant sought partial summary judgment on the basis of issue estoppel. He argued, in effect, that the parties were bound by the findings made by Mosley J. that made out all or most of the elements of the causes of action. Lederman J. noted the unusual nature of this use of issue estoppel:

> What is novel about this rule 20 motion is that the plaintiff is attempting to invoke the doctrine of issue estoppel as a sword to obtain a summary judgment rather than its traditional use as a shield or a defence to preclude further litigation on issues that have already been decided between the parties.

[4] It is the novel nature of the appellant's use of issue estoppel and the unusual context in which this case arises that convinces us that the order of Lederman J. is final. The effect of Lederman J.'s decision is to finally determine the question of issue estoppel and prevent the appellant from using the findings of fact made by Mosley J. in his action against the Attorney General. The moving party submits that the order is not final, because it is still open to the appellant to prove his case by calling evidence at his trial, without relying on the findings of Mosley J. That submission, however, overlooks the nature of the hearing conducted by Mosley J., which involved hearing evidence that the appellant may never be in a position to call or to even access. Depriving the appellant of the ability to use the findings of fact by Mosley J. could deprive the appellant of substantive rights.

[5] The final nature of the order in this case is demonstrated in the position of the Attorney General that the question of issue estoppel is now res judicata. According to the Attorney General, it is not open to the appellant to relitigate the use of Mosley J.'s findings at the trial. A hallmark of an order dismissing a motion for summary judgment is that findings are not res judicata: see, for example, Leone v. University of Toronto Outing Club, 2007 ONCA 323 at para. 2:

> An order dismissing a motion for summary judgment brought under Rule 20 is not a final order in that it determines only that there are genuine issues for trial. Consequently, any apparent findings of fact made by this motion judge in the course of his reasons for dismissing the motion for summary judgment do not support a res judicata or issue estoppel claim in the subsequent proceedings: see V.K. Mason Construction Ltd. v. Canadian General Insurance Group Limited (1998), 1998 CanLII 14615 (ON CA), 42 O.R. (3d) 618 (C.A.).

[6] Where, however, the order is res judicata, the order may be final: see Stoiantsis v. Spirou, 2008 ONCA 553 at para. 26:

> Further support for this conclusion is found by resort to the doctrine of res judicata. To determine whether an order is final or interlocutory, courts often consider whether the issue can be said to be res judicata: see S.(R.) v. H.(R.) (2000), 2000 CanLII 17038 (ON CA), 52 O.R. (3d) 152 at paras. 19-21 (C.A.). Even though some orders only partially resolve issues between the parties, if the resolution of the particular question would give rise to an argument of res judicata, then the order is final despite other issues remaining outstanding.

[7] In this case, the appellant singled out for resolution the question of use of issue estoppel. A finding that issue estoppel is not available is a final determination of that issue of law. The decision of the motion judge has arguably deprived the appellant of a substantive right that could have been entirely determinative of the Attorney General's liability: see Stoiantsis v. Spirou at para. 25. The decision of Taggart J.A. in Peerless Carpet Corp. v. Desjarlias, [1987] B.C.J. No. 1555 is somewhat analogous to this case, although in Peerless Carpet the defendant was attempting to use issue estoppel in the more usual way, as a shield rather than a sword. As Taggart J.A. said, at p. 3 (Q.L.):

> As I view the order of Mr. Justice Davies now under appeal, it does finally dispose of the rights of the parties insofar as they are based upon the applicability of the doctrine of res judicata. As I see it, neither the plaintiff nor the defendants in the trial proceedings which are now in the Supreme Court, can raise the question of res judicata. The trial judge would be bound to give effect to the judgment of Mr. Justice Davies on that issue. The rights of the parties based on the single issue of res judicata have finally been disposed of.

[8] Accordingly, the motion to quash is dismissed. The appellant is entitled to his costs of the motion fixed at $5,000, inclusive of disbursements and all applicable taxes.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

WELLS, C.J.H.C.:-- This is an appeal from a motion originally brought before the Master on Wednesday, July 31, 1974, and concerned some 10 actions which arose from the same set of circumstances between the parties because of a claim for damages due to the fall in price of certain stocks and was handled by a variety of solicitors. The notice of motion asks for certain amendments to the pleadings as follows:

> (a) granting leave to amend the Third Party Notices listed in actions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in the style of cause herein or;
> (b) in the alternative, granting leave to discontinue the Third Party actions and issue new Third Party Notices in the form annexed to the affidavit of John Ronald Miller, filed, and marked as Exhibit "B" therein;
> (c) granting leave to issue a Third Party Notice in action numbered 1 in the style of cause herein in the form annexed to the affidavit of John Ronald Miller, filed, and marked as Exhibit "B" therein;
>
> (d) granting leave to the Canadian Surety Company to issue a Fourth Party Notice in action No. 5 in the style of cause herein, the form of the said Fourth Party Notice to be substantially the same as the Third Party Notice annexed to the affidavit of John Ronald Miller, filed, and marked as Exhibit "B" therein;
> (e) granting leave to issue the said Third and Fourth Party Notices plus Third Party Notices in the actions numbered 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 in the style of cause herein in the form for service outside the jurisdiction upon the proposed Third and Fourth Parties Ronald Gilbert Johnston, Peter Noel Hickey, Gordon Ernest Eddols and P. N. Hickey Ltd. or;

(f) in the alternative, an Order that service upon the solicitors of those parties who reside outside the jurisdiction shall be good and sufficient service and;

(g) extending the time for service of the said Third and Fourth Party Notices.

There appear to be in all some 12 firms of solicitors involved.

During the course of the proceedings the following parties, through their solicitors, filed statements indicating that they did not propose to take any position on the appeal except that no costs should be awarded against them and they ought not to be prejudiced by delay:

Chester M. Hooper, Frank White Jr., and Don-Bel Holdings Limited;

George E. Boynton and Ruth M. Boynton, Hubert Thauvette and Cecile Thauvette and Carl D. Boynton;

Ronald Gilbert Johnston and Gilbert Johnston Limited;

Herbert V. Fisher;

Kenneth Lloyd Carson and Richard Stanley Calder;

United Investment Services Limited.

The balance of the cases, however, were included in the notice of motion which was before the Master. It is to be noted that when he reached his decision to dismiss this application the Master gave leave to renew it on better material within 30 days. Counsel involved in these cases did not take advantage of this and elected to appeal to the Divisional Court from the Master's order.

The argument in the first instance, is whether we have jurisdiction to hear the matter because our jurisdiction is limited by s. 17, cl. (f) [rep. & sub. 1972, c. 48, s. 1] of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 228, which reads as follows:

> (f) all appeals from final judgments or orders of the master, local judge, local master, or other officer of the Supreme Court, except final judgments or orders made by a local judge under the Divorce Act (Canada).

The question therefore arises here as to whether the decision of the Master was a final or interlocutory one. Interlocutory judgments have to be appealed on leave and the time had long gone past and no effort made to obtain it.

The necessity for an appeal to us is considerably heightened in this case by the fact that an insurance company has come in and made various claims over other firms and in some cases leave was sought to issue third or fourth party notices. The matter is very complicated, but all the applicants for third or fourth party notices, some of which have been issued and then withdrawn, were involved in the motion before the Master. There is no precise description of exactly what was wanted by each litigant be they plaintiff or defendant in the main action. In consequence it is almost impossible from examining the material submitted to us to come to any conclusion as to which of the third party notices comes under what Rule. While I think the matter has to be returned to the Master the material should be put in proper order and for each action it should be clearly designated what is desired.

Rule 167 of the Rules of Practice deals with third party procedure. The parties at the moment are all out of time as far as time-limits governing the matter are concerned. On the other hand the point involved is one that should be decided by a Court and I express no opinion as to the merits of the various claims made. The third party procedure which has been refused, however, has considerable importance because any claims that arise out of this action should be dealt with by the same Court that hears the claims against the defendants.

The Rules dealing with the matter seem to stretch from Rule 167 to Rule 172. It is all very well to state, as apparently the Master believed, that no statutory limitation was involved and consequently they were free to issue separate writs for their claims. This is highly undesirable with the mass of litigation precipitated by these actions, unless the whole matter can be sorted out by one Court and the rights of any parties against each other dealt with on a proper basis.

I will therefore in a preliminary way decide whether this action of the Master in dismissing all the claims, and the failure of the parties to take advantage of his offer to deal with the matter anew if it were properly presented to him, was an interlocutory order or a final one. It was final in so far as the procedures which would have involved other claims between the parties was denied them by the Master's order.

If all the proper material and the rights of the various persons was sorted out by all the solicitors involved in the action, the prospect of having 12 or 13 actions to be heard by different Courts will create havoc and do more damage to the plaintiff's claim.

Consequently we are of the opinion that this matter should be dealt with, if possible, in such a way that the Judge hearing it can dispose of the claims of all of the parties that are involved. I therefore propose to limit myself as to whether the application to the Master and his subsequent order was interlocutory or final.

The respondents in this case rely very highly on the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Self v. City of Toronto (1908), 12 O.W.R. 705. Judgment was given by the late Chief Justice Moss. In Williston and Rolls, Law of Civil Procedure (1970), vol. 2, at p. 1035 in the footnote, this case is mentioned but the editors question whether it is still good law. In the short reasons given by Moss, C.J.O., the essence of the judgment was that this was not a case for third party procedure. The Chief Justice made the observation at p. 706, that "Nothing which affects the ultimate rights of the parties is involved." He was obviously concerned with earlier judgments on the subject from Lord Alverstone and Lord Esher. While these judgments were ones of authority they related to the ultimate disposition of the action and the distinction was that any order that did not produce that result was interlocutory.

In Hendrickson v. Kallio, 1932 CanLII 123 (ON CA), [1932] O.R. 675, [1932] 4 D.L.R. 580, Middleton, J.A., referred to amendments made to the Judicature Act, which at the time of giving his judgment he found in R.S.O. 1927, c. 88, s. 24. Later on he states as follows [at pp. 677-8]:

> The amendment of 1927 was manifestly intended to get rid of the difficulty which arose by reason of the reference to the practice before 1881 which was in a state of great confusion and extraordinary difficulty, and also to bring the practice in relation to appeals from all interlocutory orders into harmony. This statutory provision was supplemented by the provisions of the present rule 493, which only defines the cases in which leave should be given and does not contain the former description of an appealable order as one which finally disposes of the question involved in the action.
> The argument here is that the report of the referee does not finally determine the rights of the parties in such a sense as to make it final. It is a mere step in the cause and there must be a motion for judgment based upon the report which will finally determine the rights.

This was a case which would eventually be referred to a Master and Middleton, J.A., discussed the result and came to the conclusion that the order in question was not an interlocutory one. He went on to note that there are two distinct lines of cases concerning the matter and alluded first to various decisions which follow the rules laid down by Lord Alverstone and Lord Esher, at p. 680, as follows:

> This is laid down in the case of Shubrook v. Tufnell (1882), 9 Q.B.D. 621. This case was preferred to the earlier decision in Bozson v. Altrincham Urban District Council, [1903] 1 K.B. 547, a decision of the Earl of Harlsbury, L.C., Lord Alverston, C.J., and Sir F.H. Jeune. Lord Alverstone puts the point shortly:
> "It seems to me that the real test for determining this question ought to be this. Does the judgment or order as made finally dispose of the rights of the parties? If it does, then I think it ought to be treated as a final order, but if it does not it is then, in my opinion, an interlocutory order."
>
> In the more recent case of Isaacs & Sons v. Salbstein, [1916] 2 K.B. 139, this decision is followed, although there had been in the meantime dicta preferring the opposite view.
>
> Bank of Minnesota v. Page (1887), 14 O.A.R. 347, a decision of our own Court of Appeal strongly supports this view, and definitely declines to follow the earlier English cases which it is pointed out are not applicable here as relating merely to procedure with reference to appeals and not dealing with the question of a right of appeal.
> For these reasons I am of opinion that there is an appeal as of right for the judgment in question determines the merits of the action and the real rights of the parties, nor do I think that the mistake of the appellant in unnecessarily and improperly applying for leave to appeal amounts to a waiver of the right to appeal without leave which he possessed.

The Court of Appeal again had to deal with the question of whether an order was final or interlocutory in the case of Osolsky v. Schwartz (1929), 37 O.W.N. 121. In this case goods were sold to the defendant at the plaintiff's warehouse in Toronto for $622.90 with a down payment of $50. The goods were delivered to the carrier by the plaintiff and shipped to the defendant at Halifax at the defendant's expense. The defendant alleged that the goods were defective on delivery and wrote to the plaintiff complaining of this. The plaintiff had drawn on the defendant, and, when the draft was presented to the defendant, payment was refused. The defendant held the goods and the plaintiff sued for the price. An ex parte order was made by Judge Tytler of the County Court of the County of York allowing the plaintiff to issue a writ of summons for service out of the jurisdiction. The writ was issued and service was made. The defendant's Toronto solicitor, without entering an appearance, moved to set aside the order, on the ground that it was made on inadequate material. The plaintiff filed a supplementary affidavit upon which the defendant's solicitor cross-examined and the defendant's solicitor filed the cross- examination and the defendant's affidavit in reply. An exhibit to the defendant's affidavit was the receipt for $50 containing the words "balance sight draft". There was conflict in the affidavits as to the place of payment. Senior County Court Judge Denton held that the order permitting the issue of the writ for service outside the jurisdiction and the service thereof were irregular, and set aside both the order authorizing the issue of the writ and the service thereof. The plaintiff appealed from that order to the Appellate Division. The appeal came on for hearing before Latchford, C.J., and Riddell, Masten, Orde and Fisher, JJ.A. Counsel for the defendant, respondent, took the preliminary objection that the order was not appealable, being interlocutory in its nature. The plaintiff's counsel argued that the effect of the order was to deprive the plaintiff of his entire cause of action, inasmuch as the order authorizing the issue of the writ for service out of the jurisdiction had been set aside and no further steps could be taken in the action while the order of Judge Denton stood, and therefore it was final in its nature. It was argued by the defendant's counsel that no cause of action arose in Ontario, and therefore the writ should not be allowed to issue. Latchford, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the Court at the close of the argument, said that the order appealed from was not, in his opinion, merely interlocutory. It was final in its nature and therefore the appeal lay [p. 122]. The majority of the Court upheld this point of view and by its judgment, set aside the order allowing the writ to issue pursuant to Rule 25(2), and finally disposed of the rights of the parties in the Courts of this Province. The appeal was allowed with costs in the cause to the plaintiff and in effect restored the order of Judge Tytler. Orde, J.A., while not expressly dissenting, was in doubt whether the Court had the right to make the order it did.

> "I am clearly of opinion that the order in question is not an interlocutory order within the meaning of this statutory provision. The interlocutory order from which there is no appeal is an order which does not determine the real matter in dispute between the parties -- the very subject matter of the litigation, but only some matter collateral. It may be final in the sense that it determines the very question raised by the application, but it is interlocutory if the merits of the case remain to be determined."
> Mr. Justice Middleton then proceeds to discuss the cases and says that two distinct lines of cases are relied upon as leading to the contrary conclusion, and, after discussing the cases, he proceeds to say:
> "If the decision 'given in one way will finally dispose of the matter in dispute, was given the other way to allow the action to go on, then it is not final but interlocutory', so said Lord Esher, at page 67. This principle was adopted without qualification in Salaman v. Warner, [1891] 1 Q.B. 734.
>
> "An entirely inconsistent view is taken in another series of cases. There it is said that the order actually made is alone to be looked at, and if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties, then it is final and not interlocutory, and it is quite immaterial that the refusal of the order would have been interlocutory, because if the order sought had been refused, the action would have had to proceed further."

The learned Judge then proceeded to quote the passages from Hendrickson v. Kallio given above.

Henderson, J.A., also discussed the case of Menary v. Menary, 1942 CanLII 362 (BC SC), [1942] O.W.N. 417, [1942] 3 D.L.R. 746, as follows [at pp. 531-2]:

> In the case of Menary v. Menary, 1942 CanLII 362 (BC SC), [1942] O.W.N. 417, [1942] 3 D.L.R. 746, a motion to quash an appeal from an order for the custody of a child, as being an interlocutory order, at the conclusion of the argument the Chief Justice of Ontario delivered the oral judgment of the Court as follows: He said that the Court was of opinion that the order sought to be appealed from was not interlocutory, in the sense of leaving the parties to return and do something more. It finally determined rights to custody of the child at the time it was made, and if the applicant's argument were to prevail, there could never be a final order in such cases.
> Similarly, it has been held in Ontario that a judgment for alimony is a final judgment, although either party has a right to vary such order at any time.
> A consideration of these authorities makes it appear that the Courts in England have deemed it in the public interest to treat an order dismissing an action as frivolous and vexatious as interlocutory and not final in order to discourage these actions and independently of what one would ordinarily understand by the words "interlocutory" and "final". This view has not been adopted in our Courts, and the reasoning of Mr. Justice Middleton in Hendrickson v. Kallio, supra, proceeds upon quite different lines. I am not prepared to disregard the decisions in our > Courts and I therefore conclude that the order appealed from is final and not interlocutory and that there is therefore an appeal as of right.

> The motion to quash will, therefore, be dismissed with costs to the plaintiff in the cause.

In the case of Frederick et al. v. Aviation & General Ins. Co. Ltd., 1966 CanLII 271 (ON CA), [1966] 2 O.R. 356, a judgment of the Court of Appeal, the judgment of the Court was delivered by Schroeder, J.A. An action was instituted by the plaintiffs pursuant to the provisions of what was then s. 95(10) of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1960, c. 190. A judgment had been obtained against the Ottawa Aero Services Limited. Attempts to collect had been fruitless and it was returned by the sheriff nulla bona. The plaintiffs sought an order quashing the appeal of the defendant from the order of Wilson, J., pronounced on January 21, 1966, whereby he allowed an appeal from the order of the Senior Master, adding Ottawa Aero Services Limited as a defendant. It was said that this order was interlocutory and that the defendant had failed to obtain leave to appeal in accordance with Rule 499 of the Rules of Practice and Procedure. I quote from Mr. Justice Schroeder's judgment at pp. 361-2, as follows:

> It is no doubt correct in one sense to say that as between the plaintiff and the appellant the order refusing to add Ottawa Aero Services Ltd. is interlocutory, for none of the issues in the action between those parties is thereby determined. The central issue is that raised between the appellant and its insured, Ottawa Aero Services Ltd. The appellants allege that in the peculiar circumstances of this case they have a right to bring their insured into the action as a party to enable them to make full answer and defence to the plaintiffs' claim founded upon a statutory right of subrogation. In my view this is an issue which the appellant had a right to raise and, by reason of the provisions of s. 95 of the Insurance Act, the issues affecting the rights of all parties are identical. It is my conclusion that the order of Wilson, J., deprived the appellant of a substantive right and finally determined that issue subject to any right of appeal which the appellant may have.

In many respects it is analogous to the case at bar.

In the more recent case of Binkley v. Matera; Redgrave, Third Party, 1972 CanLII 718 (ON CA), [1973] 1 O.R. 386, the Court of Appeal, by a majority judgment, ruled that the refusal of a County Court Judge to extend the time for service of a third party notice was a final order and therefore an appeal from such an order was directly to the Court of Appeal. In Genier v. Commercial Credit Corp. Ltd. et al.; Knight et al., Third Parties, Pennell, J., in an unreported judgment dated April 1, 1975 [since reported 10 O.R. (2d) 493], gave extended reasons for holding that he had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the Master striking out a third-party notice because the Master's order was final and the appeal lay to the Divisional Court.

In view of these decisions we have therefore come to the conclusion that this order was in its nature a final order rather than an interlocutory one and in consequence was appealable to this Court. If it stands, the plaintiffs will have lost their rights to have all their claims dealt with in the one action and have all questions in issue determined in such a proceeding.

We would therefore direct that the order of the Master be set aside and that the matter be referred back to him for further consideration. Upon that consideration it is important that the material should disclose the rights of each litigant and what they want. The Master should be able to look at this and decide what he should do with each action of the group. In view of the fact that the proceedings from it and the appeal in consequence became necessary because of the actions of various counsel involved in the case, we have come to the conclusion that there be no order for costs of the appeal or for the first application. The application should be completed within 35 days from the issue of this judgment and if an application is not made before that time, on proper material, then the Master's order should stand in its place.

Order accordingly.

Court of Appeal for Ontario
Morden, Austin and Borins JJ.A.
October 5, 2001

Appeal -- Leave to appeal -- As general rule no appeal lies from order granting or refusing leave to appeal -- Exception to that general rule exists where submitted that judge refusing leave to appeal mistakenly declined jurisdiction.

Appeal -- Jurisdiction -- Final or interlocutory order -- Orders that finally determine issues raised in application are final orders -- Rule 14.01(3) of Rules of Civil Procedure does not apply to application for leave to appeal as appeal not "proceeding" within meaning of rule 14.01 -- Order refusing leave to appeal under s. 45 of Arbitration Act is final -- Arbitration Act, 1991, S.O. 1991, c. 17 -- Ontario Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 14.01(3).

Arbitration -- Appeal -- Order refusing leave to appeal under s. 45 of Arbitration Act is final and not interlocutory -- Appeal from order lies to Court of Appeal -- Arbitration Act, 1991, S.O. 1991, c. 17.

An application by the appellant under s. 45(1) of the Arbitration Act, 1991 for leave to appeal an arbitration award was dismissed. The appellant appealed the order dismissing its application. The respondent brought a motion to quash the appeal on the ground that, because the order in question was an interlocutory one, the Court of Appeal did not have jurisdiction.

Held, the motion should be dismissed.

As a general rule, no appeal lies from an order granting or refusing leave to appeal. However, there is an exception to that general rule where it is submitted that the judge refusing leave to appeal mistakenly declined jurisdiction. That exception applied in this case, as the appellant argued that the application judge erred in concluding that the parties had contracted out of a right of appeal, and mistakenly declined jurisdiction. The parties did not argue the merits of the application before the application judge.

Orders that finally determine the issues raised in an application are final orders. Rule 14.01(3) of the Ontario Rules of Civil Procedure, which provides that where leave to commence a proceeding is required it shall be obtained by motion, does not apply to appeals as an appeal is not a "proceeding" within the meaning of rule 14.01(3).

If that conclusion was wrong and the order in question should be considered to have been made on motion, an order refusing leave to appeal under s. 45 of the Arbitration Act, 1991 is final, not interlocutory. Accordingly, it did not make a difference whether the matter was put before the Superior Court by way of application or motion.

MOTION to quash an appeal from an order dismissing an application under s. 45(1) of the Arbitration Act, 1991, S.O. 1991, c. 17 for leave to appeal an arbitration award.

On motion to quash the appeal of the order of Justice Roland J. Haines of the Superior Court of Justice dated July 14, 2003.

[1] The plaintiffs in the class action sought to raise three issues on these motions: 1) Whether the orders in question were final or interlocutory; 2) whether a respondent can cross appeal from an interlocutory order to the Court of Appeal; 3) whether the appeals were devoid of merit.

[2] In accordance with the recent practice direction of this court we declined to hear the third issue as that is now to be heard at the time scheduled for the appeal itself.

[3] With respect to whether the orders in question are final or interlocutory, the notices of motion asked the court to deal with a question of law, namely that the claims disclose no cause of action. They were rule 20 and rule 21 motions that were heard together. The court dismissed the motions. The operative part of the order reads:

> This Court Orders and adjudges that in interpreting the Insurance Act, R.S.O. c. I.8 and the regulations made thereto, this Court is bound by the decision in the McNaughton case and the motion is therefore dismissed.

[4] The plaintiffs submit that because the order only refers to the decision in McNaughton Automotive Ltd. v. Co-operators General Insurance Co. (2000), 2000 CanLII 22409 (ON SC), 50 O.R. (3d) 300 the order is not a final order. We disagree. The order of the motions judge indicates that the court was bound by McNaughton in the interpretation of the Insurance Act. His reasons, to which this court is entitled to have regard in order to ascertain the scope of the decision, support this conclusion.

[5] The orders are also not just a declaration that the principle of stare decisis applies because there is an order dismissing the motions. As stated in S (R) v. H. (R) (2000), 2000 CanLII 17038 (ON CA), 52 O.R. (3d) 152 (C.A.) 159- 160:

> …an order dismissing a motion for summary judgment on a question of law, where the only genuine issue is the question of law (as provided for in rule 20.04(4))should probably be regarded as giving rise to a res judicata and, hence, a final order.

[6] The effect of the order of the motions judge was to preclude the defendants from contesting that they were not entitled to deduct the deductible portion of an insurance policy and claim salvage in the cases before him. Thus, the orders are final.

[7] Accordingly the motion to quash on that basis is dismissed.

[8] In the circumstances it is not necessary to deal with the second issue.

[9] The Court will entertain written submissions with respect to costs in the event that counsel cannot agree on them.

on appeal from the court of appeal for ontario

Administrative law – Issue estoppel – Employee filing complaint against employer under Employment Standards Act seeking unpaid wages and commissions – Employee subsequently commencing court action against employer for wrongful dismissal and unpaid wages and commissions – Employment standards officer dismissing employee's complaint – Employer arguing that employee's claim for unpaid wages and commissions before court barred by issue estoppel – Whether officer's failure to observe procedural fairness in deciding employee's complaint preventing application of issue estoppel – Whether preconditions to application of issue estoppel satisfied – If so, whether this Court should exercise its discretion and refuse to apply issue estoppel.

In 1993, an employee became involved in a dispute with her employer over unpaid commissions. No agreement was reached, and the employee filed a complaint under the Employment Standards Act ("ESA") seeking unpaid wages, including commissions. The employer rejected the claim for commissions and eventually took the position that the employee had resigned. An employment standards officer spoke with the employee by telephone and met with her for about an hour. Before the decision was made, the employee commenced a court action claiming damages for wrongful dismissal and the unpaid wages and commissions. The ESA proceedings continued, but the employee was not made aware of the employer's submissions in the ESA claim or given an opportunity to respond to them. The ESA officer rejected the employee's claim and ordered the employer to pay her $2,354.55, representing two weeks' pay in lieu of notice. She advised the employer of her decision and, 10 days later, notified the employee. Although she had no appeal as of right, the employee was entitled to apply under the ESA for a statutory review of this decision. She elected not to do so and carried on with her wrongful dismissal action. The employer moved to strike the part of the statement of claim that overlapped the ESA proceeding. The motions judge considered the ESA decision to be final and concluded that the claim for unpaid wages and commissions was barred by issue estoppel. The Court of Appeal affirmed the decision.

Held: The appeal should be allowed.

Although, in general, issue estoppel is available to preclude an unsuccessful party from relitigating in the courts what has already been litigated before an administrative tribunal, this is not a proper case for its application. Finality is a compelling consideration and judicial decisions should generally be conclusive of the issues decided unless and until reversed on appeal. However, estoppel is a public policy doctrine designed to advance the interests of justice. Where, as here, its application bars the courthouse door against a claim because of an administrative decision made in a manifestly improper and unfair manner, a re-examination of some basic principles is warranted.

The preconditions to the operation of issue estoppel are threefold: (1) that the same question has been decided in earlier proceedings; (2) that the earlier judicial decision was final; and (3) that the parties to that decision or their privies are the same in both the proceedings. If the moving party successfully establishes these preconditions, a court must still determine whether, as a matter of discretion, issue estoppel ought to be applied.

The preconditions require the prior proceeding to be judicial. Here, the ESA decision was judicial. First, the administrative authority issuing the decision is capable of receiving and exercising adjudicative authority. Second, as a matter of law, the decision was required to be made in a judicial manner. While the ESA officers utilize procedures more flexible than those that apply in the courts, their adjudicative decisions must be based on findings of fact and the application of an objective legal standard to those facts.

The appellant denies the applicability of issue estoppel because, as found by the Court of Appeal, the ESA decision was taken without proper notice to the appellant and she was not given an opportunity to meet the employer's case. It is clear that an administrative decision which is made without jurisdiction from the outset cannot form the basis of an estoppel. Where an administrative officer or tribunal initially possessed the jurisdiction to make a decision in a judicial manner but erred in the exercise of that jurisdiction, the resulting decision is nevertheless capable of forming the basis of an estoppel. Alleged errors in carrying out the mandate are matters to be considered by the court in the exercise of its discretion. This result makes the principle governing estoppel consistent with the law governing judicial review in Harelkin and collateral attack in Maybrun.

In this case, the pre-conditions for issue estoppel have been met: the same issue is raised in both proceedings, the decision of the ESA officer was final for the purposes of the Act since neither the employer nor the employee took advantage of the internal review procedure, and the parties are identical. The Court must therefore decide whether to refuse to apply estoppel as a matter of discretion. Here this Court is entitled to intervene because the lower courts committed an error of principle in failing to address the issue of the discretion. The list of factors to be considered with respect to its exercise is open. The objective is to ensure that the operation of issue estoppel promotes the orderly administration of justice, but not at the cost of real injustice in the particular case. The factors relevant to this case include the wording of the statute from which the power to issue the administrative order derives, the purpose of the legislation, the availability of an appeal, the safeguards available to the parties in the administrative procedure, the expertise of the administrative decision maker, the circumstances giving rise to the prior administrative proceeding and, the most important factor, the potential injustice. On considering the cumulative effect of the foregoing factors, the Court in its discretion should refuse to apply issue estoppel in this case. The stubborn fact remains that the employee's claim to commissions worth $300,000 has simply never been properly considered and adjudicated.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

Civil procedure — Issue estoppel — Administrative law — Police disciplinary proceedings — Complaint alleging police misconduct brought under Police Services Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.15 ("PSA") — Civil action for damages arising from same incident also commenced — PSA hearing officer finding no misconduct and dismissing complaint — Motion judge and Court of Appeal exercising discretion to apply issue estoppel to bar civil claims on basis of hearing officer's decision — Whether public policy rule precluding applicability of issue estoppel to police disciplinary hearings should be created — Whether unfairness arises from application of issue estoppel in this case.

P was arrested for disruptive behaviour in an Ontario courtroom. He filed a complaint against two police officers under the Police Services Act ("PSA"), alleging unlawful arrest and unnecessary use of force. He also started a civil action claiming damages arising out of the same incident. The hearing officer appointed by the Chief of Police under the PSA found the police officers not guilty of misconduct and dismissed the complaint. That decision was reversed on appeal by the Ontario Civilian Commission on Police Services on the basis that the arrest was unlawful. On further appeal, the Ontario Divisional Court concluded that the officers had legal authority to make the arrest and restored the hearing officer's decision. The police respondents then successfully moved in the Superior Court of Justice to have many of the claims in the civil action struck on the basis of issue estoppel. While finding several factors weighed against the application of issue estoppel, the Ontario Court of Appeal concluded that applying the doctrine would not work an injustice in this case and dismissed P's appeal.

Held (LeBel, Abella and Rothstein JJ. dissenting): The appeal should be allowed.

Per McLachlin C.J. and Fish, Cromwell and Karakatsanis JJ.: It is neither necessary nor desirable to create a rule of public policy excluding police disciplinary hearings from the application of issue estoppel. The doctrine of issue estoppel allows for the exercise of discretion to ensure that no injustice results; it calls for a case-by-case review of the circumstances to determine whether its application would be unfair or unjust even where, as here, the preconditions for its application have been met. There is no reason to depart from that approach. However, in the circumstances of this case, it was unfair to P to apply issue estoppel to bar his civil action on the basis of the hearing officer's decision. The Court of Appeal erred in its analysis of the significant differences between the purpose and scope of the two proceedings, and failed to consider the reasonable expectations of the parties about the impact of the proceedings on their broader legal rights.

The legal framework governing the exercise of the discretion not to apply issue estoppel is set out in Danyluk v. Ainsworth Technologies Inc., 2001 SCC 44, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 460. This framework has not been overtaken by this Court's subsequent jurisprudence. While finality is important both to the parties and to the judicial system, unfairness in applying issue estoppel may nonetheless arise. First, the prior proceedings may have been unfair. Second, even where the prior proceedings were conducted fairly, it may be unfair to use the results of that process to preclude the subsequent claim, for example, where there is a significant difference between the purposes, processes or stakes involved in the two proceedings. The text and purpose of the legislative scheme shape the parties' reasonable expectations in relation to the scope and effect of the administrative proceedings. They guide how and to what extent the parties participate in the process. Where the legislative scheme contemplates multiple proceedings and the purposes of those proceedings are widely divergent, the application of the doctrine might not only upset the parties' legitimate and reasonable expectations but may also undermine the efficacy and policy goals of the administrative proceedings, by either encouraging more formality and protraction or discouraging access to the administrative proceedings altogether. These considerations are also relevant to weighing the procedural safeguards available to the parties. A decision whether to take advantage of those procedural protections available in the prior proceeding cannot be divorced from the party's reasonable expectations about what is at stake in those proceedings or the fundamentally different purposes between them. The connections between the relevant considerations must be viewed as a whole.

In this case, the disciplinary hearing was itself fair and P participated in a meaningful way; however, the Court of Appeal failed to fully analyze the fairness of using the results of that process to preclude P's civil action. Nothing in the legislative text gives rise to an expectation that the disciplinary hearing would be conclusive of P's legal rights in his civil action: the standards of proof required, and the purposes of the two proceedings, are significantly different; and, unlike a civil action, the disciplinary process provides no remedy or costs for the complainant. Another important policy consideration arises in this case: the risk of adding to the complexity and length of administrative proceedings by attaching undue weight to their results through applying issue estoppel. P could have participated more fully by hiring counsel, however that would also have meant that the officers would effectively have been forced to face two prosecutors rather than one. This would enhance neither the efficacy nor the fairness to the officers in a disciplinary hearing and potential complainants may not come forward with public complaints in order to avoid prejudicing their civil actions. These are important considerations and the Court of Appeal did not take them into account in assessing the weight of other factors, such as P's status as a party and the procedural protections afforded by the administrative process. Finally, the application of issue estoppel had the effect of using the decision of the Chief of Police's designate to exonerate the Chief in the civil claim and is therefore a serious affront to basic principles of fairness.

Per LeBel, Abella and Rothstein JJ. (dissenting): The doctrine of issue estoppel seeks to protect the finality of litigation by precluding the relitigation of issues that have been conclusively determined in a prior proceeding. The finality of litigation is a fundamental principle assuring the fairness and efficacy of the justice system in Canada. The doctrine of issue estoppel seeks to protect the reasonable expectation of litigants that they can rely on the outcome of a decision made by an authoritative adjudicator, regardless of whether that decision was made in the context of a court or an administrative proceeding. In applying issue estoppel in the context of administrative adjudicative bodies, differences in the process or procedures used by the administrative tribunal, including procedures that do not mirror traditional court procedures, should not be used as an excuse to override the principle of finality. The purposes and procedures may vary, but the principle of finality should be maintained.

The applicable approach to issue estoppel in the context of prior administrative proceedings was most recently articulated by this Court in 2011 in British Columbia (Workers' Compensation Board) v. Figliola, 2011 SCC 52, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 422. This is the precedent that governs the application of the doctrine in this case. The key relevant aspect of this precedent is that it moved away from the approach to issue estoppel taken in Danyluk v. Ainsworth Technologies Inc., 2001 SCC 44, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 460, which had held that a different and far wider discretion should apply in the context of administrative tribunals than the "very limited" discretion applied to courts.

The twin principles which underlie the doctrine of issue estoppel — that there should be an end to litigation and that the same party shall not be harassed twice for the same cause — are core principles which focus on achieving fairness and preventing injustice by preserving the finality of litigation. The ultimate goal of issue estoppel is to protect the fairness of finality in decision-making and the avoidance of the relitigation of issues already decided by a decision-maker with the authority to resolve them. As the Court said in Figliola, this is the case whether we are dealing with courts or administrative tribunals. An approach that fails to safeguard the finality of litigation undermines these principles and risks uniquely transforming issue estoppel in the case of administrative tribunals into a free-floating inquiry. This revives the Danyluk approach that the Court refused to apply in Figliola.

This Court's recent affirmation of the principle of finality underlying issue estoppel in Figliola is also crucial to preserving the principles underlying our modern approach to administrative law. The Court's residual discretion to refuse to apply issue estoppel should not be used to impose a particular model of adjudication in a manner inconsistent with the principles of deference that lie at the core of administrative law. Where an adjudicative tribunal has the authority to make a decision, it would run counter to the principles of deference to uniquely broaden the court's discretion in a way that would, in most cases, permit an unsuccessful party to circumvent judicial review and turn instead to the courts for a re-adjudication of the merits.

Under the principles set out in Figliola, issue estoppel should apply. The difference between the standard of proof required to establish misconduct under the PSA and that required in a civil trial is irrelevant in this case. The hearing officer made unequivocal findings that there was virtually no evidence to support P's claims. That means that there is simply no evidence to support P's claims whatever standard of proof is applied. P should not be allowed to circumvent the clear findings of the hearing officer and put the parties through a duplicative proceeding which would inevitably yield the same result.

The disciplinary hearing conducted by the hearing officer was conducted in accordance with the requirements prescribed by the statute and principles of procedural fairness. The hearing officer's decision was made in circumstances in which P knew the case he had to meet, had a full opportunity to meet it, and lost. Had he won, the hearing officer's decision would have been no less binding and the application of issue estoppel would have assisted him in a subsequent civil action for damages by relieving him of having to prove liability.

Preventing the courts from applying issue estoppel in the context of these disciplinary proceedings means that decisions would not be final or binding and would be open to relitigation and potentially inconsistent results. This would undermine public confidence in the reliability of the complaints process and in the integrity of the administrative decision-making process more broadly.

Nor does the method used to appoint an adjudicator in this case provide a basis for exercising the discretion in a way that precludes the application of issue estoppel. The Chief of Police designated an outside prosecutor and an independent adjudicator. Similar methods of appointment are quite common in other parts of the law and are not seen as an obstacle to independent adjudication. Tenure is not the sole marker and condition of adjudicative independence.

November 3, 2008

Judgments and orders -- Issue estoppel -- Plaintiffs bringing class action against defendant payday loan providers alleging that they charged criminal interest rate -- Defendants moving unsuccessfully to stay action on basis of arbitration clause in some loan agreements -- Court of Appeal dismissing defendants' appeal and leave to appeal to Supreme Court of Canada denied -- Defendants subsequently renewing motion for stay on basis that two decisions of Supreme Court of Canada had changed law in Ontario and that they were entitled to benefit of that change -- Motion judge properly dismissing motion -- Doctrine of issue estoppel applying -- Litigant having no automatic or presumptive right to relitigate issue on account of change in law -- Granting stay at this late stage of proceedings would be fundamentally unjust to plaintiffs.

The defendants were in the business of providing "payday" loans. In 2001, the defendants began inserting a class action waiver into their payday loan agreements whereby the borrower purportedly waived the right to bring a court action with respect to the loan and was required to submit any dispute to binding arbitration. The plaintiffs brought a class action against the defendants alleging that they charged a criminal interest-rate. The defendants moved unsuccessfully to stay the claim pursuant to s. 7(1) of the Arbitration Act, 1991, S.O. 1991, c. 17. An appeal from that decision was dismissed in 2005. The Court of Appeal agreed with the motion judge that the issue of whether to stay the action on account of the arbitration clause should be dealt with at the certification hearing. The Supreme Court of Canada refused the defendants' request for leave to appeal. The case proceeded to a certification hearing, and the action was certified as a class proceeding. The defendants again moved for a stay under the Arbitration Act and added a request for decertification, arguing that two 2007 decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada had changed the law in Ontario and that they were entitled to the benefit of that change. The motion was dismissed. The motion judge held that the two Supreme Court decisions were distinguishable and inapplicable in Ontario; that provisions of the Consumer Protection Act, 2002, S.O. 2002, c. 30, Sch. A allowing the plaintiffs to pursue their claim in court despite the arbitration clauses applied retroactively; and that the stay should be refused pursuant to s. 7(2)5 of the Arbitration Act. In the alternative, he held that the defendants were estopped from renewing their stay motion under the doctrine of issue estoppel. The defendants appealed.

Held, the appeal should be dismissed.

The appeal could and should be resolved solely on the basis of issue estoppel. For the purposes of the appeal, it was assumed without deciding that the two Supreme Court of Canada decisions changed the law of Ontario and that ss. 7 and 8 of the Consumer Protection Act, 2002 did not have retroactive effect. The preconditions at the first stage of the test for issue estoppel were met. The same question was decided when the Court of Appeal held that the defendants were not [page642] entitled to a stay and that the issue of whether the dispute should be resolved by way of arbitration or class proceedings was a matter to be decided at the "preferable procedure" stage of the certification hearing. The decision on that issue was final. The parties or their privies were the same. At the second stage of the test, it was clear that issue estoppel ought to be applied. A litigant has no automatic or presumptive right to relitigate an issue on account of a change in the law. The matter rests upon the discretion of the court to ensure that the finality principle is applied in a manner consistent with the interests of justice. In this case, the defendants' loss of the benefit of the purported change in the law was clearly outweighed by the adverse consequences to the plaintiffs of revisiting the stay issue at this late stage in the proceedings. A stay would almost certainly defeat the claims subject to arbitration clauses, not on the merits but for reasons of practicality. Enforcing the arbitration clauses would not lead to arbitration but would immunize the defendants from any claims. Even if the claims subject to arbitration clauses were stayed, the defendants would almost certainly still have to defend a reconstituted class action by the class of borrowers who did not sign similar agreements or who signed agreements after the Consumer Protection Act, 2002 provisions came into force. The motion judge did not err in exercising his discretion in favour of applying issue estoppel in the circumstances of this case.

Engineering Limited, 2017 ONSC 909 at para. 3 (Div. Ct.), Coughlin v. Director, Ontario Disability Support Program, 2021 ONSC 1236 (Div. Ct.).

[14] I note that s. 11(1) refers to an appeal of "its" decision to the LAT. This suggests that an appeal may be brought with respect to a final decision. However, it is noteworthy that in Sazant, the Divisional Court held that the wording "any decision" in appeals from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board should be interpreted as meaning a final decision (Sazant v. R.M. and C.I.C.B., 2010 ONSC 4273 at para. 37).

[15] That brings me to some recent cases in the Divisional Court where the Court has stated that while there is normally no right to appeal an interlocutory decision of the LAT, the Court has discretion to hear an interlocutory appeal. None of these cases refers to Stockfish, or to the limits of the Court's jurisdiction pursuant to s. 11(1) because of the express language of the provision. With respect to my colleagues who sat on these cases, it appears to me that they have imported principles applying in judicial review applications to the interpretation of the appeal provision in the LAT Act. I would not follow them, as I believe they erred in failing to give effect to the wording of s. 11(1) and the longstanding jurisprudence, and they have not justified their approach in departing from the language and jurisprudence.

[16] Before I review these cases, it is important to draw a distinction between appeals and judicial reviews. As I said earlier, an appeal is a creature of statute, and the appellate body's jurisdiction is limited by the legislation. Judicial review, in contrast, is a common law remedy. Relief is discretionary, and the courts have developed a doctrine of prematurity whereby they refuse to review interlocutory decisions of administrative tribunals unless there are exceptional circumstances (see, for example, Sazant at paras. 40-42).

[17] I now turn to the recent cases involving LAT appeals. In Security National Insurance Company v. Kumar, 2018 ONSC 3556, this Court heard an appeal of an interlocutory order where both parties agreed that the appeal was not premature, because the preliminary issue was essentially the only issue in dispute between the parties. In finding that the "court does, at least on occasion, hear appeals from tribunals on specific preliminary issues that do not constitute final determination on the merits", the Court relied on the following cases (at para. 8): Certas Direct Insurance Company v. Gonsalves, 2011 ONSC 3986; Security National Insurance Company v. Hodges, 2014 ONSC 3627 and Guarantee Company of North America v. Dong Do, 2015 ONSC 1891.

[18] It is important to note that these three cases were applications for judicial review from decisions of the Financial Services Commission of Ontario ("FSCO"), not appeals to the Divisional Court. Prior to April 1, 2016, automobile accident benefit disputes were adjudicated at FSCO, where there was no statutory right of appeal, only judicial review. These judicial reviews of FSCO decisions do not address or assist in determining whether an interlocutory decision may be appealed under s. 11(1) of the LAT Act. Only Certas discusses the doctrine of prematurity, doing so in the context of judicial review of an interlocutory decision.

[19] The next case to consider is Taylor v. Aviva Insurance Canada Inc., 2018 ONSC 4472. In that case, the Divisional Court considered whether an appeal and a request for reconsideration before the LAT could proceed at the same time. The Court was not asked to determine whether it had the jurisdiction to hear an interlocutory appeal pursuant to s. 11(1). However, the Court stated at para. 19:

> This court is reluctant to hear appeals from interim or interlocutory orders of administrative decision makers for the same reason that it is reluctant to hear judicial review proceedings before the administrative decision-making process has ended. Such appeals fragment the administrative proceeding and increase costs. Accordingly, courts have interpreted language that grants an appeal from a [22] The standard of review is correctness: see Montgrand v Saskatchewan Government Insurance, 2017 SKCA 2, 406 DLR (4th) 546.

[23] Since appeals from the Commission are available only on questions of law, findings of fact are not, of themselves, appealable to this Court. In P.S.S. Professional Salon Services Inc. v Saskatchewan (Human Rights Commission), 2007 SKCA 149, [2008] 5 WWR 440 [Hitchings] (leave to appeal to the SCC denied, 2008 CanLII 32715), Cameron J.A. explained the basis for an argument that an error of fact can, in rare instances, be grounded in an error of law:

> [62] This ties in with the notion that "an unreasonable finding of fact" falls to be categorized as an error of law for the purposes of judicial review in the classical sense, and with the associated notion that when errors of law are open to judicial review unhindered by a privative clause then "unreasonable errors of fact", though no others, are subject to review: Blanchard v. Control Data Canada Ltd., 1984 CanLII 27 (SCC), [1984] 2 S.C.R. 476 at 494–95. It also ties in with the further notion that a tribunal "errs in law" if it ignores relevant evidence or evidence it is required to consider: Woolaston v. Minister of Manpower and Immigration, 1972 CanLII 3 (SCC), [1973] S.C.R. 102; Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Competition Act) v. Southam, 1997 CanLII 385 (SCC), [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748 at para. 41: "If the Tribunal did ignore items of evidence that the law requires it to consider, then the Tribunal erred in law".

> [70] Having regard for all of this, it becomes apparent that even though the right of appeal is confined to a question of law, and even though the appeal comes down to the tribunal's findings of fact, the appellant's case gives rise to a question of law and rests, therefore, on a tenable ground. It is not as though the question is whether the tribunal's findings of fact are unreasonable or unsupported by the evidence in the sense of the sufficiency and weight of the evidence. Rather, the question is whether the findings of fact are unreasonable in the sense the tribunal erred in principle by disregarding, overlooking, or mischaracterizing evidence material to its findings of fact. That then leads me to the issue regarding the standard of review.

[25] Shortly after Hitchings, in Murphy v Saskatchewan Government Insurance, 2008 SKCA 57, [2008] 7 WWR 401 [Murphy], Klebuc C.J.S. summarized examples of when an error of law may be made in the course of the finding of a fact:

> [5] Since the right of appeal is confined to a question of law, neither the right of appeal nor the jurisdiction of the Court extends to a finding of fact. However, a finding of fact may be grounded in an error of law, as will be the case, for example, when a finding: (a) is based on no evidence; (b) is made on the basis of irrelevant evidence or in disregard of relevant evidence; or, (c) is based on an irrational inference of fact. See: P.S.S. Professional Salon Services Inc. v. Saskatchewan Human Rights Commission et al., 2007 SKCA 149, (2007), 302 Sask. R. 161 at paras. 60–65 (application for leave to appeal to S.C.C. filed February 13, 2008). The right of appeal, of course, extends to such errors of law.

(3) Failure to grapple with the issues and the evidence

[67] An administrative decision maker's reasons must "meaningfully account for the central issues and concerns raised by the parties" and be responsive to the parties' submissions: Vavilov, at para. 127. The Board reasons do neither. Consequently, they prevent meaningful appellate review and constitute an error of law: R. v. Sheppard, 2002 SCC 26, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 869, at para. 28; Hanna & Hamilton Construction Co. Ltd. v. Robertson, 2021 ONCA 660, at para. 6.

[68] In this case, among other things, the T5 Application presented the Board with two issues for resolution: (1) did the Vendor Landlords give the s. 49 Termination Notice in bad faith? and (2) did the Purchasers, in good faith, require possession of the Residence for residential occupation? The Board reasons make no mention of the second issue nor the evidence relating to it. Clearly, appellate review was prevented on that issue and, for that reason alone, the Board erred in law.

[69] In addition, however, the Board reasons on the first issue are so deficient as to constitute legal error. The Board made no attempt to grapple with the body of evidence adduced, or the Tenants' submissions on whether the Vendor Landlords gave the s. 49 Termination Notice in bad faith. Instead, the Board simply recited the Vendor Landlords' assertion that when they gave the Tenants the s. 49 Termination Notice, there was no reason to believe it was not the purchasers' intention to have a family member reside in the Residence.

[71] Had the Board approached the first issue correctly, it would have considered the relevant circumstances both before and after serving the s. 49 Termination Notice. In addition to the two evidentiary considerations noted above, the Board would have had to consider that: prior to closing, the Vendor Landlords and/or their lawyer knew title to the Property was to be taken in the name of a corporation and a corporation cannot personally occupy residential premises; the Residence remained vacant for five months after closing; it was then occupied for only about 25 days by one of the Original Purchasers' sons; and, thereafter, the Residence was rented out for a higher price than that which the Tenants had paid.

[72] The failure of the Board to address the evidence on the central issue of the Vendor Landlords' bad faith prevents appellate review and constitutes an error of law.

C. Result

[73] Because the Board failed to make the factual findings necessary to fairly resolve the Tenants' T5 Application, this court is not in a position to decide it. Accordingly, I would remit it to the Board for a redetermination in accordance with these reasons.

Issue #2 The Divisional Court erred by failing to address the Purchasers' potential liability

A. The Standard of Review

[74] To determine what standard of review this court is to apply when deciding Issue 2, we must consider the statutory provision which led to that issue coming before this court: Vavilov, at para. 33. In this case, s. 6(1)(a) of the CJA is the relevant provision, as the Tenants obtained leave to appeal the Divisional Court order pursuant to it.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE – ONTARIO
DIVISIONAL COURT

RE: K.D., Applicant (Moving Party)

AND:

THE CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY OF THE REGION OF PEEL, Respondent

BEFORE: L.A. PATTILLO J.

COUNSEL: K.D., in person

Carole Jenkins, for the Respondent

HEARD at Toronto: December 5, 2017

ENDORSEMENT

[1] In March 2013, the Respondent, The Children's Aid Society of the Region of Peel, placed two children who were Crown Wards (the "Children") with K.D. and his wife. K.D. and his wife subsequently legally adopted the Children in August, 2015. Since June 2013, K.D. and his wife have been in an ongoing dispute with the Respondent over obtaining full and accurate information about the Children.

[2] On September 9, 2016, K.D. commenced an application for judicial review in respect of a purported decision of the Respondent on March 11, 2016 concerning a request that K.D. made to the Respondent pursuant to Ont. Reg. 464/07 for information concerning the Children (the "Application")

[3] The Respondent takes issue with K.D.'s characterization that the decision was on March 11, 2016. The Respondent's position is that the decision was on April 18, 2016 when it submits that it provided the information requested pursuant to Ont. Reg. 464/07.

[4] The issues in the Application are the extent of disclosure required under Ont. Reg. 464/07 and whether, in providing the information, the Respondent complied with Ont. Reg. 464/07.

The Issues

[5] K.D. brings this motion for the following relief:

1) Requiring the Respondent to file a proper response to K.D.'s Request to Admit;

2) Requiring the Respondent to file a complete Record of Proceeding;

3) Permitting K.D. to file an affidavit in support of the Application; and

4) Permitting K.D. to file a factum of up to 45 pages in length.

[6] At the outset of the motion, K.D. raised a further issue concerning the propriety of paragraph 17 in the Respondent's affidavit in response to the motion. After brief submissions, I concluded that the paragraph was improper and not relevant to the issues on the motion and ordered it struck. I struck the paragraph in the Respondent's motion record and noted my order in the margin beside it.

Discussion

a. Request to Admit

[7] On June 14, 2017, K.D. served a Request to Admit in the Application on the Respondent (the "Request"). The Request contains 137 paragraphs. The paragraphs deal with numerous issues including the steps that the Respondent did or did not take in respect of the Children after they were placed in foster care and before they were placed for adoption with K.D. and his wife; issues arising from and after the disclosure meeting with K.D. and his wife that was held on November 4, 2012; failure to disclose specific information about the Children and their birth parents; failure to request and/or provide medical, development and therapeutic records about the Children; redacting hospital records to delete the names of physicians and received dates.

[8] The Respondent provided its Response to the Request on July 4, 2017. The Respondent admitted the truth of the facts in 15 paragraphs and refused to admit the facts in the remainder of the Request with reasons. In particular, for 102 of the paragraphs, the Respondent refused to admit on the ground that the facts sought to be admitted were not relevant to the Application.

[9] K.D. seeks an order requiring the Respondent to either admit or refuse to admit all of the paragraphs that the Respondent refused to admit as not being relevant. He submits that the Respondent's "not relevant" response is not a proper response for two reasons: first, any question of relevancy should be determined at the hearing of the Application and second, given the allegation in the Notice of Application that the Respondent abused its powers in rendering the decision, the paragraphs are relevant.

[10] While compliance with rule 51.03(3)(b) may be reviewed on an interlocutory basis, the substance of the response ought to be decided by the application or trial judge. See: Glover (Litigation Guardian of) v. Gorski, 2013 ONSC 6578 (S.C.J.) at paras. 22-23. Nor is there anything in the rules or case law that requires the party served with a request to admit to respond regardless of relevance and then have the issue of relevance determined at the hearing or trial. Indeed, such a requirement would defeat the purpose of a request to admit.

[11] Given the issues in the Application together with the paragraphs in issue in the Request, I consider the response of "not relevant" is a proper reason for the refusals as required by rule 51.03(3)(b). The response is not a pro forma response, notwithstanding its repetition. The response identifies each paragraph in the Request to which it applies. Further, I do not consider that an allegation that the Respondent abused its powers in making the decision resolves the question of relevance. That is a question for the Court hearing the Application, as and when it is required to deal with the Request.

[12] For the above reasons, K.D.'s request for an order requiring the Respondent to file a proper response to the Request is denied.

b. Record of Proceedings

[13] The Respondent filed a Record of Proceeding dated June 27, 2017 and a Supplementary Record of Proceeding dated September 25, 2017 which contained additional documents which through oversight were not included in the initial Record of Proceeding.

[14] Section 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990. C.J. 1, Schedule B requires that when served with an application for judicial review of a decision made in the exercise or purported exercise of a statutory power, the person making the decision must file "the record of proceedings in which the decision was made."

[15] The Respondent has filed an affidavit which states, among other things, that the Supplementary Record of Proceeding "contains the documents upon which Peel CAS relied in answering the request…"

[16] In his factum, K.D. raises a number of reasons why the Supplementary Record of Proceedings was improper. Before me, he submitted that the Supplementary Record of Proceedings is improper in that it does not include a number of Ministry documents, primarily in the 2007 time period, dealing with the production of information in adoptions and obtained by K.D. from a Freedom of Information request; does not include the training materials that the Respondent uses to train the decision makers and contains a document that sets out a policy concerning adoption disclosure which is dated after the decision in issue. K.D. also takes issue with the late delivery of the Record of Proceedings and Supplementary Record of Proceedings by the Respondent.

[17] The documents which K.D. says should be included were not relied upon by the Respondent in reaching the decision complained of. They should not be included. Further, although the adoption policy document has a date after the decision in issue, the Respondent submits that it was included as the policy reflects, for the most part, the practice in place at the time of the decision. I would not exclude it. Nor do I consider that the late delivery of both the Record and Supplementary Record has any relevance to the sufficiency of the Record.

[18] Based on the evidence and the issues on the Application, I am satisfied that the Supplementary Record of Proceedings is complete.

c. Affidavit Evidence

[19] K.D.'s request for permission to file an affidavit in the Application arises because he is a lawyer and is concerned given the rules of professional conduct which provide that a lawyer cannot appear on his or her own affidavit unless permitted to do so. As K.D. is appearing on his own behalf in this Application and clearly is the person most intimately involved, I have no problem with him filing his own affidavit and appearing on the Application. Accordingly, I grant K.D. the permission he seeks.

d. Factum

[20] K.D. requests because the Application raises several complex issues, he be allowed to file a factum of up to 45 pages in length as opposed to the permitted 30 page maximum. K.D. also submits that as a result of a speech impediment which makes him difficult to understand, he feels he can better communicate through written argument.

[21] In my view, the issues are not that complex or K.D.'s speech impediment that severe that a 45 page factum is necessary. The issues can be more than adequately summarized within the Court's prescribed limit of 30 pages.

Conclusion

[22] Except in respect of permission to file his own affidavit, K.D.'s motion is therefore dismissed for the above reasons.

[23] Rule 68.04(1)(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure requires that the Application must be perfected within 30 days of the filing of the Record. The Supplementary Record was filed on September 25, 2016. K.D. advises that he can perfect the Application within 30 days. Accordingly, I order that the Application be perfected within 30 days of the date of this endorsement.

[24] The Respondent only opposed the issues of the sufficiency of both its Response to the Request and the Record. It was successful on those issues and is therefore entitled to its costs of the motion which I fix at $3,000 all inclusive. In my view, that amount is fair and reasonable given the issues and the fact that I struck paragraph 17 of the responding affidavit.

detention review hearings under Immigration Act, 1976, or for right to make submissions on issue of access — Applications by originating motion — Applications dismissed — Declarations may be sought by action only unless respondent expressly consents — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, being Part I of the Constitution Act, 1982, Schedule B, Canada Act 1982, 1982, c. 11 (U.K.), s. 24(1).

The Chief of Adjudicators ordered that the media not be allowed access to certain immigration detention review hearings unless the particular migrant consented. The applicants moved for declarations pursuant to the Charter, subsection 24(1) directing that the Chief of Adjudicators conduct the hearings in public, or allow the applicants to make submissions on a case-by-case basis in support of its application to have access to and report on the proceedings; prohibition to prevent the conduct of the hearings until the applicants are granted the right to be present or the right to be heard before being excluded; and mandamus directing the respondent to consider in each case the merits of excluding the applicants.

Held, the application for mandamus and prohibition should be allowed.

The applications for declarations under the Charter, subsection 24(1) cannot be allowed because the applicants proceeded by means of an originating motion. Declarations may be sought only by way of an action unless the respondent expressly consents, and not merely acquiesces with no objection. The respondent did not expressly consent to this form of proceedings.

The Immigration Act, 1976 is silent with respect to public access to detention review hearings. Where the enabling legislation is silent on a point of procedure, a statutory decision-maker is the master of his own proceedings and may determine the procedure to be followed. However, paragraph 2(b) of the Charter guarantees the freedom of "expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication." Freedom of the press encompasses a right of access to judicial proceedings. The hearings in question involved a statutory body rather than a court and it had to be determined if they are judicial or quasi-judicial and by implication subject to accessibility. The four tests set out by Dickson J. (as he then was) in Minister of National Revenue v. Coopers and Lybrand to determine if a proceeding is judicial or quasi-judicial were met by the detention review hearings. It is not unreasonable to extend to proceedings of such decision-makers the application of the principle of public accessibility. Statutory tribunals exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions involving adversarial-type processes which result in decisions affecting rights truly constitute part of the "administration of justice". The legitimacy of such tribunals' authority requires that confidence in their integrity and understanding of their operations be maintained and this can only be done if their proceedings are open to the public. The applicants have a prima facie right of access to the afin de permettre au public d'assister aux audiences portant sur la révision des motifs de détention conformément à la Loi sur l'immigration de 1976 ou de faire reconnaître le droit de présenter des observations sur la question de l'accès — Demandes formulées par voie de requête introductive d'instance — Demandes rejetées — Les jugements déclaratoires ne peuvent être obtenus qu'au moyen d'une action sauf si l'intimé y consent de façon expresse — Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, qui constitue la Partie I de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, annexe B, Loi de 1982 sur le Canada, 1982, chap. 11 (R.-U.), art. 24(1).

L'arbitre en chef a interdit aux médias d'assister à certaines audiences portant sur la révision des motifs de détention à moins que le migrant concerné n'y consente. Les requérants cherchent à obtenir des jugements déclaratoires fondés sur le paragraphe 24(1) de la Charte, enjoignant à l'arbitre en chef de tenir les audiences en public ou de leur accorder le droit de présenter leurs observations selon chaque cas d'espèce, à l'appui de leur requête visant à obtenir l'autorisation d'assister aux procédures et d'en faire rapport; ils sollicitent en outre un bref de prohibition empêchant la tenue des audiences jusqu'à ce qu'ils aient le droit d'y assister ou d'être entendus avant d'en être exclus, ainsi qu'un bref de mandamus enjoignant à l'intimé d'examiner dans chaque cas le bien-fondé de l'exclusion des requérants.

Les demandes de jugements déclaratoires fondées sur le paragraphe 24(1) de la Charte ne peuvent être accueillies car les requérants ont procédé par voie de requête introductive d'instance. Les jugements déclaratoires ne peuvent être obtenus qu'au moyen d'une action sauf si l'intimé y consent de façon expresse, et non simplement en ne soulevant pas d'objection. L'intimé n'a pas formellement consenti à ce genre de procédures.

La Loi sur l'immigration de 1976 ne se prononce pas sur le problème de l'accès du public aux audiences portant sur la révision des motifs de détention. Lorsque la loi habilitante est silencieuse sur une question de procédure, le responsable de la décision en vertu de la loi est maître de ses propres procédures, et il peut établir celle qui doit être appliquée. Toutefois, l'alinéa 2b) de la Charte garantit à chacun la liberté «d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication». La liberté de la presse englobe le droit d'assister aux procédures judiciaires. Les audiences en question mettent en cause un organisme créé par la loi plutôt qu'un tribunal et il faut établir si elles sont de nature judiciaire ou quasi judiciaire et par voie de conséquence, si elles sont visées par le principe de l'accessibilité. Les audiences portant sur la révision des motifs de détention satisfont aux quatre critères établis par le juge Dickson [tel était alors son titre] dans l'arrêt Ministre du Revenu national c. Coopers and Lybrand pour déterminer si une procédure est judiciaire ou quasi judiciaire. Il est raisonnable d'étendre la portée du principe de l'accessibilité du public aux mesures prises par les décideurs en question. Les tribunaux créés par la loi et qui exercent des fonctions judiciaires ou quasi judiciaires donnant lieu à des procédures contradictoires qui entraînent des décisions quant aux droits des parties, participent vraiment à «l'administration de la justice». > ... The cases mentioned, however, and many others which could be cited, establish the broad principle of "openness" in judicial proceedings, whatever their nature, and in the exercise of judicial powers. ...
> ... The authorities have held that subject to a few well-recognized exceptions, as in the case of infants, mentally disordered persons or secret processes, all judicial proceedings must be held in public. The editor of Halsbury's 4th Edition states the rule in these terms:
>
> > In general, all cases, both civil and criminal, must be heard in open court, but in certain exceptional cases, where the administration of justice would be rendered impractical by the presence of the public, the court may sit in camera [Vol. 10, para. 705, at p. 316].
>
> At every stage the rule should be one of public accessibility and concomitant judicial accountability ...
> In my view, curtailment of public accessibility can only be justified where there is present the need to protect social values of superordinate importance. ...

[104] These dicta are still the law in Canada and in my view apply to adjudicative tribunals which although not courts, have a quasi-judicial function. The Commission is such a tribunal because it makes decisions based on Germain's legal rights under the AAIA. Germain's claim to privacy regarding publication on the net cannot withstand the force of the open courts principle. She has the onus of demonstrating limitations on public accessability and I agree with the Commission in this case that she has not proven societal values of superordinate importance nor any other exceptional circumstance which would warrant a limit. She has not met this onus.

[105] There is no violation of any principles of fundamental justice in this case. The Commission's new Net Policy in my view properly balances Germain's concerns regarding identity theft with the open courts principle.

[106] Based on the reasons outlined above, the Commission is not prohibited from publishing its decisions online on the basis of the Charter.

CONCLUSION

[107] Nothing in the AAIA and its regulations, HIPA, FOIPP or the Charter prevent the Commission from publishing its decision regarding Germain's claim on the web or otherwise. The claim of Germain is dismissed.

on appeal from the court of appeal of alberta

Criminal law — Trial — Judgments — Trial judge delivering extensive written reasons 11 months after guilty verdicts rendered — Whether Court of Appeal erred in considering written reasons when deciding accused's appeal from convictions — Whether reasonable person would apprehend that trial judge's written reasons did not reflect real basis for convictions.

The accused was charged with aggravated assault, break and enter, and possession of stolen property. The evidence given during the five-day trial was complex, almost entirely circumstantial and contained some contradictions. The trial judge reserved his decision and, four months later, after repeated adjournments, convicted the accused on all charges, in each case essentially saying only that the Crown had proved all the essential elements of the offence beyond a reasonable doubt. The trial judge also mentioned his intention to issue written reasons, which were eventually delivered, more than 11 months after the verdicts and long after the accused's notice of appeal had been filed. The Court of Appeal found that the oral reasons did not pass the test of sufficiency, but a majority applied the presumption of regularity, considered the extensive written reasons and upheld the convictions. The dissenting judge would not have considered the written reasons. The accused appealed to this Court as of right and the only issue was whether the Court of Appeal should have considered the trial judge's written reasons.

Held (Bastarache, Deschamps and Abella JJ. dissenting): The appeal should be allowed, the convictions set aside and a new trial ordered.

Per McLachlin C.J. and Binnie, LeBel, Fish, Charron and Rothstein JJ.: Although not precluded from announcing a verdict with "reasons to follow", a trial judge in all cases should be mindful of the importance that justice not only be done but also that it appear to be done. Reasons rendered long after a verdict, particularly where it is apparent that they were crafted after the announcement of the verdict, may cause a reasonable person to apprehend that the trial judge engaged in result-driven reasoning. The necessary link between the verdict and the reasons will not be broken, however, on every occasion where there is a delay in rendering reasons after the announcement of the verdict. Since trial judges benefit from a presumption of integrity, which in turn encompasses the notion of impartiality, the reasons are presumed to reflect the reasoning underlying the decision. Fairness and impartiality must not only be subjectively present but must also be objectively demonstrated to the informed and reasonable observer. While the presumption can be displaced, the onus is on the appellant to present cogent evidence showing that, in all the circumstances, a reasonable person would apprehend that the reasons constitute an after-the-fact justification of the verdict rather than an articulation of the reasoning that led to it. Here, the written reasons should not have been considered by the Court of Appeal. While the written reasons do not appear to have been crafted to answer points raised in the appeal, in the particular circumstances of this case, a reasonable person would apprehend that these reasons, delivered more than 11 months after the verdict was rendered, did not reflect the real basis for the convictions. Without this requisite link, the written reasons provide no opportunity for meaningful appellate review of the correctness of the decision. However, the delay in rendering reasons, in and of itself, does not give rise to this apprehension. In this case, it is the combination of several factors that constitutes cogent evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption of integrity and impartiality. [2] [17-23]

Per Bastarache, Deschamps and Abella JJ. (dissenting): The presumption of judicial integrity acknowledges that judges are bound by their judicial oaths and will carry out the duties they have sworn to uphold. This includes not only a presumption of impartiality, but also of legal knowledge. The presumption of integrity is rebuttable only by cogent evidence. The threshold for displacing the presumption is high: it must be demonstrated that a reasonably informed person would be satisfied that there was a real likelihood that the trial judge had not complied with the judicial oath of office in the manner and timing of the issuance of the reasons. The presumption is not to insulate decisions from judicial review but to ensure that inappropriate assumptions, such as bias, are not idiosyncratically factored into the review. [28-29] [34] [40]

A delay, either in reaching a result or in explaining it, would not lead a reasonably informed observer to conclude that the judge had disregarded the oath of office and would not, without more, represent an error of law justifying ignoring either the result or the reasons. Issuing the reasons after a verdict does not mean that the verdict was not thought through before it was delivered. Reasons explain what a judge has decided to do and should be accepted as being honest reflections of that decision, whether delivered with or after the result, unless their content reflects the absence of judicial integrity. Inordinate delay may result in critical comment by a reviewing court but should not result in a refusal even to consider the reasons. Such an approach would do a greater disservice to the public perception of the integrity of the system than an undesirable delay. Here, given the complexity of the case, the time taken to reach the verdicts and to articulate reasons for judgment, even when considered with the other surrounding factors identified by the majority, did not represent the level of cogency necessary to displace the presumption of integrity. The reasons were responsive to the facts and issues at trial and were entitled to be reviewed on their merits. [40] [44] [46] [47] [50] [51]

> 11.9 (1) A panel shall not permit cross-examination that is repetitive, abusive or otherwise inappropriate.
> (2) A panel may reasonably limit further examination or cross-examination of a witness where it is satisfied the examination or cross-examination has been sufficient to disclose fully and fairly all matters relevant to the issues in the proceeding.

[55] A few minutes later, the Lawyer's counsel asked, "what it is that I'm alleged to have done, a repetitive, abusive or otherwise inappropriate…." The chair responded, "Ending it because of its excessive length."

[56] Rule 11.9 was not applicable here. Clearly a panel has discretion to place reasonable limits on cross-examination as part of its hearing management function. The Tribunal must act in appropriate circumstances to protect an important public interest in fair and expeditious proceedings.

[57] The exercise of a hearing panel's authority to govern its own process in this way is obviously fact-specific, and the two subsections quoted above reflect some of the relevant circumstances that can trigger a ruling to curtail cross-examination. The appeal panel expanded on these factors in Fuhgeh:[15]

> In Bahimanga [2019 ONLSTA 25] the appeal panel held that a panel is entitled to assess a fair time allotment for particular aspects of the hearing, having regard to the outstanding issues, the length of the proceeding, options for streamlining evidence and other factors. Considering how the panel conducted the hearing as a whole, we find that there was no unfairness in the case management approach taken by the panel.

[58] In this case, the nature of the proceeding was such that Ms. Harrison was entitled to a high level of procedural fairness and natural justice. A proceeding of this nature would almost certainly have potential implications for a licensee's reputation and livelihood. As the Divisional Court recently stated in the context of a conduct proceeding:

> Given the nature of the tribunals involved, and the implications for the lawyers subject to the discipline process, a high level of procedural fairness and natural justice is required. Failure to comply with such standards would result in the decisions being set aside.[16]

[59] The hearing process also must consider the public interest and the imperative of promoting public confidence in the regulation of the legal professions.

[60] Faced with a clear and repeated objection to the proposed time limits, the hearing panel was duty-bound, in this case, to engage in a proper balancing of these countervailing factors, and to properly apply them to the witnesses and the specific case that was being presented.

[61] The panel made this error because of its exclusive focus on a one-day time limit to hear the case. There never was a one-day time limit, although that might be a reasonable estimate, and indeed one day is the starting point for the balancing process in a typical interlocutory suspension case. The hearing panel however never left that starting point. It never considered the pros and cons of a firm one-day time limit, and the adverse impacts and relative prejudice that would accrue to each side in the presentation of its case. Its reasons show that there was no consideration of options such as:

- recesses during the day;
- additional time during that hearing day;
- the availability of another hearing day in short order;
- a concrete enumeration of issues that the parties had not had a full opportunity to present;
- the degree to which cross-examination time had been wasted; and
- the possibility of written evidence or submissions, or any other compromise or alternative that would lessen the impact of the arbitrarily imposed time limit.

[62] We conclude that for these reasons, the hearing panel breached the natural justice and procedural fairness rights of the appellant.

MINORITY REASONS ON GROUND 3

[63] Raj Anand and Frederika M. Rotter:– These are the reasons of the minority on the third ground of appeal.

The Teskey issue

[64] In the weeks following the brief oral decision granting the Law Society's motion for a suspension, the appellant's counsel made several attempts to obtain the panel's written reasons. When they were released on June 2, 2023, Ms. Harrison saw (as she stated in her appeal factum) that the reasons "bore an uncanny resemblance to the factum the Law Society had filed with the hearing panel before any responding written evidence, and any oral evidence at all, had been adduced." The appellant's factum contained a chart showing that the reasons included a great deal of "cut and paste" from the Law Society's written statement of the case.

[65] Based on these facts, the appellant submitted that the hearing panel's decision falls within the Teskey principle and should be set aside. In Teskey, the Supreme Court of Canada quashed a conviction that had been announced with reasons to follow because of the 11-month delay between the decision and the release of the reasons. There was a reasonable apprehension that the reasons amounted to an after the fact justification for the ruling, rather than an articulation of the reasoning that actually led to the result.

[67] In our view, this case bears little resemblance to Teskey. There the reasons were requested and promised several times. After completing the trial, the judge adjourned the case about six times over three months, then delivered an oral judgment, and then gave written reasons 11 months later, many months after the accused had delivered his notice of appeal. In these circumstances, the majority of the Supreme Court held that the reasons "were entirely crafted after the announcement of the verdict", dealt with issues that had been raised on appeal, and created an appearance that the trial judge was "advocating a particular result."[17]

[68] The court was nevertheless at pains to stress the salutary nature of an immediate decision, with reasons to follow, in many circumstances.[18] In Ms. Harrison's case, the case from a legal perspective. It is a case that turns on its facts. Nonetheless, it is the first decision of the Tribunal under the CCEYA (previously, the Day Nurseries Act[7] regulated the daycare industry) and thus the decision may have broader application.

Conclusion on the issue of mootness & jurisdiction

[30] I am not persuaded that the doctrine of mootness applies to a decision that has already been made, but even if I am wrong about this, I find that the Borowski factors are either neutral or favourable to the proceedings continuing. Moreover, I find that in the unique circumstances of this case there are added considerations relevant to whether the proceedings should continue, namely the issue of fairness to the parties and the integrity of the Tribunal's process.

[31] I agree with the appellant's submissions that an adjudicator may announce a decision with reasons to follow. As affirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada in the context of a civil case:

> The needs of justice in a given case may be better served by an announcement of the disposition of the matter as soon as the deliberation process is completed but before full written reasons can be made available to the parties.[8]

[32] I find that it would subvert the Tribunal's process for the Director to be able to circumvent the release of my reasons by renewing the appellant's licence in advance of the order it knew was coming and then claiming that the whole of the proceedings are now moot.

[33] The Director submits that the decision to renew the licence was not made merely to "action" the pending order; rather, it resulted from the Director's duty to continually reassess its NOP and deciding now that it should be withdrawn. However, no affidavit evidence was provided in support of why this decision would suddenly now be made in light of over a year of litigation in which it pursued the opposite outcome. In such circumstances, I prefer the more obvious inference – that the Director did in fact wish to prevent the release of reasons that it anticipated would be adverse to its position.

[34] Absent the appellant's agreement to forego my reasons for decision, I am going to exercise my discretion to maintain jurisdiction over the proceedings and issue them. To do otherwise would, in my opinion, undermine the integrity of the Tribunal and breach the appellant's right to procedural fairness.

[35] I find that it would also be an abuse of process were the Director able to circumvent the appellant's claim for costs by withdrawing its proposal and declaring the appeal moot. While I agree with the Director that there is no entitlement to costs at the Tribunal and that costs are only awarded in limited circumstances, the issue now is not the merits of the claim but whether the Tribunal has jurisdiction to hear it. In this regard, I note that the appellant sought costs at the end of the hearing, and the parties agreed to a process by which submissions would only be made after my decision was released, assuming either party still found it advisable to bring such a claim. It was further agreed that I would set out the timeframe for the delivery of such submissions in my final order.

[36] Given the process agreed to by the parties during the hearing, combined with the Tribunal's authority to control its process, I find that it would be unfair to deny the Federal Court of Appeal, Nadon, Evans and Stratas JJ.A.—Montréal, February 2; Ottawa, February 23, 2010.

Customs and Excise — Customs Act — Appeal from Federal Court decision allowing judicial review seeking declaration that lack of jurisdiction ruling by President of Canadian Border Services Agency a "decision" appealable to the Canadian International Trade Tribunal (C.I.T.T.) under Customs Act, s. 67(1) — Respondent submitting customs form, subsequently realizing that incorrect tariff treatment claimed — President declining to conduct re-determination under Act, s. 60(1) — Respondent not appealing to C.I.T.T. but applying for judicial review before Federal Court — Federal Court finding President's refusal to exercise jurisdiction "decision" appealable to C.I.T.T. — Whether presence of jurisdictional issue exceptional circumstance allowing party to launch judicial review before administrative process completed — Adjudications, appeals under Customs Act not allowing courts to become involved — Jurisdictional issues not exceptional circumstance justifying court intervention — "Jurisdiction" label to justify judicial interference not appropriate herein — Determination of "jurisdiction" by President involving same questions of law, fact that President normally considers — Calling one ruling "jurisdictional", not the other result-oriented labelling — Respondent not entitled to bypass appeal to C.I.T.T. herein — Not for Federal Court, this Court, to interpret word "decision" in s. 67(1), but for C.I.T.T. — Mueller Canada Inc. v. Minister of National Revenue not supporting belief that only Federal Court can rule that "non-decision" or "jurisdictional decision" a "decision" under s. 67(1) or that only "decisions on the merits" can be appealed to C.I.T.T. — Rule against judicial interference with ongoing administrative processes applying herein — Appeal allowed.

This was an appeal from a Federal Court decision allowing an application for judicial review seeking a declaration to the effect that the ruling of the President of the Canadian Border Services Agency (CBSA) that he did not have jurisdiction was a "decision" that could be appealed to the Canadian International Trade Tribunal (C.I.T.T.) under subsection 67(1) of the Customs Act.

The respondent had submitted a customs form to the CBSA for imported goods. The CBSA did not go beyond the form and the value for duty of the goods were deemed to be determined by what had been entered. An audit of the form revealed a mistaken tariff classification number and the CBSA invited the respondent to examine the matter before issuing a re-determination under section 59 of the Act. The respondent accepted that the classification number it had entered was wrong, but discovered that it also should have claimed a different tariff treatment. The prescribed delay to correct the tariff treatment had passed, but the respondent nevertheless advised the CBSA of the mistake. In issuing its re-determination, the CBSA corrected the classification number, but left the tariff treatment unchanged. The President declined to conduct a re-determination of the tariff treatment because the CBSA had not determined tariff treatment earlier, and therefore there was nothing for him to re-determine under subsection 60(1) of the Act. Rather than pursuing an appeal before the C.I.T.T., the respondent proceeded to the Federal Court by way of judicial review. The Federal Court, citing Mueller Canada Inc. v. Minister of National Revenue (Mueller), declared that the President's negative decision could be appealed to the C.I.T.T.

At issue was whether the presence of a jurisdictional issue is an exceptional circumstance that allows a party to launch a judicial review before the administrative process has been completed.

Held, the appeal should be allowed.

Parliament established an administrative process of adjudications and appeals under the Customs Act that does not allow the courts, absent exceptional circumstances, to become involved before this process is completed. The presence of jurisdictional issues is not an exceptional circumstance justifying early recourse to courts. The use of the label "jurisdiction" to justify judicial interference with ongoing administrative process is not appropriate. The inappropriateness of this labelling approach is well-illustrated by the ruling of the President in this case. The President considered his "jurisdiction" by interpreting subsection 60(1), determining the nature of the respondent's request for a ruling, and deciding whether this request fell within the scope of subsection 60(1) as interpreted. These questions of law, of fact, and of mixed fact and law, respectively, are the same questions that the President normally considers when determining the nature of imported goods, what classifications are legally available, and what classifications ought to apply to these goods. Calling one ruling "jurisdictional" and not the other, when they are both the same type, is result-oriented labelling. Applying the "jurisdictional" label to the ruling of the President under subsection 60(1) in this case did not permit the respondent to proceed to the Federal Court, bypassing the remainder of the administrative process, namely the appeal to the C.I.T.T. under subsection 67(1). It is not for the Federal Court or this Court to interpret the word "decision" in subsection 67(1) and determine whether the C.I.T.T. can hear the respondent's appeal. That is the task of the C.I.T.T. when an appeal is brought to it under subsection 67(1). Mueller does not support the belief that only the Federal Court can rule that a "non-decision" or "jurisdictional decision" is a "decision" under subsection 67(1), or that only "decisions on the merits" can be appealed to the C.I.T.T. under subsection 67(1). It was not the task of the Federal Court in Mueller to interpret the word "decision". The normal rule against judicial interference with ongoing

This application for judicial review is premature

[30] Judicial review is a discretionary remedy. There is a principle of administrative law that an application for judicial review is premature and relief should be denied if the applicant has an adequate alternative remedy to address the issues (Volochay v. College of Massage Therapists of Ontario, 2012 ONCA 541 at paras. 68, 70 and 73; C.B. Powell Ltd. v. Canada (Agence des services frontaliers), 2010 FCA 61 at paras. 30-33).

[31] Metro had an adequate alternative remedy to this application for judicial review. It could have proceeded to the HON and requested an adjournment on the basis that it had had inadequate time to prepare and to participate in the hearing because of the timing of the Notice of Grounds and the timing of the disclosure. No doubt the City would have argued that there was adequate notice, and there was no element of surprise given that the Downtown Tomorrow Plan had been adopted in 2012 and the parties had been in extensive negotiations over the years with respect to the Coldwater Street extension and the redevelopment plan for the downtown. It would then have been up to the Inquiry Officer to determine whether an adjournment was warranted in the interests of a fair hearing.

[32] Counsel stated that he did not think Metro would have been successful, citing Bezic, above. In that case, the Divisional Court dismissed an application for judicial review of a decision of an Inquiry Officer that denied an adjournment request.

[33] It is impossible to know if Metro would have been successful, had it requested an adjournment. That would have depended in part on the Inquiry Officer's review of the disclosure and a weighing of the competing interests, including the length of the proposed adjournment and the prejudice to both parties if an adjournment was granted or not. By withdrawing from the HON, Metro precluded a review by the Inquiry Officer, who would have been in a better position than this Court to assess whether there was need for an adjournment.

[34] By coming to this Court on judicial review rather than proceeding before the Inquiry Officer, Metro has ignored the statutory process in place under the Act. I agree with the submission of the City that Metro has, in effect, engaged in a collateral attack on that process. It is not entitled to a remedy in this Court.

[35] As there has been no breach of the duty of procedural fairness, and no attempt by Metro to use the remedy available to it under the Act, this ground of judicial review fails.

The Validity of the Expropriation

[36] Metro has sought also relief that would, if granted, put an end to the whole expropriation process. It seeks an order in the nature of certiorari to quash the Notice of Application for Approval in April, 2019 or an order quashing and/or striking approval by City Council of the expropriation of the interests of Metro, and a declaration that the expropriation is null and void. As I said above, Metro relies on a number of arguments: that a restrictive covenant is not an interest in land that can be expropriated; that the expropriation is an abuse of process because the City has not resorted to the dispute resolution provisions of the lease; and that the expropriation is an abuse of process because the City is not pursuing a proper public purpose, as it seeks to enhance the value of the land in a future sale by getting rid of the food covenant.

[37] The application is out of time with respect to the Notice of Application for Approval (see s. 43 of the Act). However, in any event, there is no decision respecting the expropriation of the restrictive covenants in the Notice of Application for Approval that is reviewable. The Notice is just that – a notice that the expropriating authority will seek approval for the proposed expropriation.

Administrative law -- Judicial review -- Procedure -- Divisional Court not erring in granting Privacy Commissioner full standing in application for judicial review of Commissioner's decision -- Section 9(2) of Judicial Review Procedure Act entitling administrative tribunal to be party to proceedings but leaving scope of its standing to court's discretion -- Context-specific analysis supporting full standing for Commissioner and fact that Commissioner was advancing new basis for decision on judicial review not constituting basis for curtailing scope of Commissioner's standing -- Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F.31, s. 19 -- Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1, s. 9(2).

The Children's Lawyer for Ontario (the "CLO") had acted for the requester in three different legal proceedings. When she reached majority, the requester asked for a copy of her "complete files". The CLO treated this as a request for information under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, ("FIPPA") and denied access to certain documents based on ss. 13 and 19 of FIPPA. The requester appealed to the Privacy Commissioner. The Commissioner allowed the [page310] appeal, holding that ss. 13 and 19 of FIPPA did not apply. The CLO applied for judicial review of that decision. The Commissioner opposed that application. In her factum, she argued that the second branch of s. 19 of FIPPA was not available to the CLO because the CLO was not acting as Crown counsel when she represented the requester in the various legal proceedings. This reason was not expressly set out in the Commissioner's original decision; in that decision, she had found that the second branch of s. 19 did not apply because it does not protect the CLO from a request from an individual she has represented. The CLO moved for an order that the Commissioner be denied standing, or at least prohibited from arguing that her decision was correct on a basis that was not given in her original decision. The Divisional Court dismissed the preliminary motion, finding that s. 9(2) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act gave the Commissioner the right to be a party to the judicial review application and that the court ought not exercise its discretion to limit the Commissioner's participation because the court would thereby deny itself legitimate and helpful submissions. The court then dismissed the judicial review application. The CLO appealed, challenging the role that the Commissioner was permitted to play in the Divisional Court.

Held, the appeal should be dismissed.

Section 9(2) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act entitles an administrative tribunal to be a party to the proceedings but leaves to the court's discretion the scope of its standing. Given the wide variety of administrative tribunals and types of decisions that are subjected to judicial review, the court should exercise this discretion paying attention to the context presented in the particular application. The two most significant considerations are the importance of having a fully informed adjudication of the issues before the court and the importance of maintaining tribunal impartiality. These two considerations will have to be weighed and balanced in almost every case where the scope of a tribunal's standing is in issue. Considerations which may be relevant in assessing the seriousness of the impartiality concern and the need for full argument are the nature of the problem, the purpose of the legislation, the extent of the tribunal's expertise, and the availability of another party able to kno wledgeably respond to the attack on the tribunal's decision. The last of those factors will loom largest where the judicial review application would otherwise be completely unopposed.

In this case, the requester played no part in the proceedings from the beginning. If the Commissioner were denied standing, the CLO would have been the only party before the Divisional Court. As well, the statutory scheme administered by the Commissioner was specialized. With full standing, the Commissioner's expert familiarity with the statute provided an important assurance of a fully informed adjudication. The issues raised by the judicial review application were fundamentally ones of statutory interpretation. If the Commissioner were to address the court on those issues, its ability to act impartially in future cases would not be adversely affected. The fact that in this case the Commissioner was defending her decision on a different basis than that offered in her reasons for decision did not warrant curtailing the scope of her standing. The "Crown counsel" argument was not inconsistent with the reason offered in the decision and could in fact be said to be implicit in it. Moreover, the CLO was required by s. 19 to positively establish that it was Crown counsel in order to take advantage of the protection offered by the second branch of s. 19. The CLO did not seek to do so before the Commissioner. The result was that the decision under review was simply silent on the question. Finally, if the Commissioner's standing were to preclude her from making this argument there would be no [page311] guarantee that the Divisional Court would hear it from anyone else, with a resulting risk to a fully informed adjudication. The Divisional Court did not err in exercising its discretion to refuse the CLO's attempt to preclude or limit the Commissioner's standing.

Public utilities — Electricity — Rate-setting decision by utilities regulator — Utility seeking to recover incurred or committed compensation costs in utility rates set by Ontario Energy Board — Whether Board bound to apply particular prudence test in evaluating utility costs — Whether Board's decision to disallow $145 million in labour compensation costs related to utility's nuclear operations reasonable — Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998, S.O. 1998, c. 15, Sch. B, s. 78.1(5), (6).

Administrative law — Boards and tribunals — Appeals — Standing — Whether Ontario Energy Board acted improperly in pursuing appeal and in arguing in favour of reasonableness of its own decision — Whether Board attempted to use appeal to "bootstrap" its original decision by making additional arguments on appeal.

In Ontario, utility rates are regulated through a process by which a utility seeks approval from the Ontario Energy Board for costs the utility has incurred or expects to incur in a specified period of time. Where the Board approves of the costs, they are incorporated into utility rates such that the utility receives payment amounts to cover the approved expenditures. The Board disallowed certain payment amounts applied for by Ontario Power Generation ("OPG") as part of its rate application covering the 2011-2012 operating period. Specifically, the Board disallowed $145 million in labour compensation costs related to OPG's nuclear operations on the grounds that OPG's labour costs were out of step with those of comparable entities in the regulated power generation industry. A majority of the Ontario Divisional Court dismissed OPG's appeal and upheld the decision of the Board. The Court of Appeal set aside the decisions of the Divisional Court and the Board and remitted the matter to the Board for redetermination in accordance with its reasons.

The crux of OPG's argument here is that the Board is legally required to compensate OPG for all of its prudently committed or incurred costs. OPG asserts that prudence in this context has a particular methodological meaning that requires the Board to assess the reasonableness of OPG's decision to incur or commit to costs at the time the decisions to incur or commit to the costs were made and that OPG ought to benefit from a presumption of prudence. The Board on the other hand argues that a particular prudence test methodology is not compelled by law, and that in any case the costs disallowed here were not committed nuclear compensation costs, but are better characterized as forecast costs.

OPG also raises concerns regarding the Board's role in acting as a party on appeal from its own decision, arguing that the Board's aggressive and adversarial defence of its decision was improper, and the Board attempted to use the appeal to bootstrap its original decision by making additional arguments on appeal. The Board argues that the structure of utilities regulation in Ontario makes it necessary and important for it to argue the merits of its decision on appeal.

Held (Abella J. dissenting): The appeal should be allowed. The decision of the Court of Appeal is set aside and the decision of the Board is reinstated.

Per McLachlin C.J. and Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Gascon JJ.: The first issue is the appropriateness of the Board's participation in the appeal. The concerns with regard to tribunal participation on appeal from the tribunal's own decision should not be read to establish a categorical ban. A discretionary approach provides the best means of ensuring that the principles of finality and impartiality are respected without sacrificing the ability of reviewing courts to hear useful and important information and analysis. Because of their expertise and familiarity with the relevant administrative scheme, tribunals may in many cases be well positioned to help the reviewing court reach a just outcome. Further, some cases may arise in which there is simply no other party to stand in opposition to the party challenging the tribunal decision. In a situation where no other well-informed party stands opposed, the presence of a tribunal as an adversarial party may help the court ensure it has heard the best of both sides of a dispute. The following factors are relevant in informing the court's exercise of its discretion: statutory provisions addressing the structure, processes and role of the particular tribunal and the mandate of the tribunal, that is, whether the function of the tribunal is to adjudicate individual conflicts between parties or whether it serves a policy-making, regulatory or investigative role, or acts on behalf of the public interest. The importance of fairness, real and perceived, weighs more heavily against tribunal standing where the tribunal served an adjudicatory function in the proceeding. Tribunal standing is a matter to be determined by the court conducting the first-instance review in accordance with the principled exercise of that court's discretion. In exercising its discretion, the court is required to balance the need for fully informed adjudication against the importance of maintaining tribunal impartiality.

Consideration of these factors in the context of this case leads to the conclusion that it was not improper for the Board to participate in arguing in favour of the reasonableness of its decision on appeal. The Board was the only respondent in the initial review of its decision. It had no alternative but to step in if the decision was to be defended on the merits. Also, the Board was exercising a regulatory role by setting just and reasonable payment amounts to a utility. In this case, the Board's participation in the instant appeal was not improper.

The issue of tribunal "bootstrapping" is closely related to the question of when it is proper for a tribunal to act as a party on appeal or judicial review of its decision. The standing issue concerns the types of argument a tribunal may make, while the bootstrapping issue concerns the content of those arguments. A tribunal engages in bootstrapping where it seeks to supplement what would otherwise be a deficient decision with new arguments on appeal. A tribunal may not defend its decision on a ground that it did not rely on in the decision under review. The principle of finality dictates that once a tribunal has decided the issues before it and provided reasons for its decision, absent a power to vary its decision or rehear the matter, it cannot use judicial review as a chance to amend, vary, qualify or supplement its reasons. While a permissive stance towards new arguments by tribunals on appeal serves the interests of justice insofar as it ensures that a reviewing court is presented with the strongest arguments in favour of both sides, to permit bootstrapping may undermine the importance of reasoned, well-written original decisions. In this case, the Board did not impermissibly step beyond the bounds of its original decision in its arguments before the Court. The arguments raised by the Board on appeal do not amount to impermissible bootstrapping.

The merits issue concerns whether the appropriate methodology was followed by the Board in its disallowance of $145 million in labour compensation costs sought by OPG. The just-and-reasonable approach to recovery of the cost of services provided by a utility captures the essential balance at the heart of utilities regulation: to encourage investment in a robust utility infrastructure and to protect consumer interests, utilities must be allowed, over the long run, to earn their cost of capital, no more, no less. In order to ensure the balance between utilities' and consumers' interests is struck, just and reasonable rates must be those that ensure consumers are paying what the Board expects it to cost to efficiently provide the services they receive, taking account of both operating and capital costs. In that way, consumers may be assured that, overall, they are paying no more than what is necessary for the service they receive, and utilities may be assured of an opportunity to earn a fair return for providing those services.

The Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998 does not prescribe the methodology the Board must use to weigh utility and consumer interests when deciding what constitutes just and reasonable payment amounts to the utility. However, the Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998 places the burden on the applicant utility to establish that payment amounts approved by the Board are just and reasonable. It would thus seem inconsistent with the statutory scheme to presume that utility decisions to incur costs were prudent. The Board has broad discretion to determine the methods it may use to examine costs — but it cannot shift the burden of proof contrary to the statutory scheme.

The issue is whether the Board was bound to use a no-hindsight, presumption of prudence test to determine whether labour compensation costs were just and reasonable. The prudent investment test, or prudence review, is a valid and widely accepted tool that regulators may use when assessing whether payments to a utility would be just and reasonable. However, there is no support in the statutory scheme for the notion that the Board should be required as a matter of law, under the Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998 to apply the prudence test such that the mere decision not to apply it when considering committed costs would render its decision on payment amounts unreasonable. Where a statute requires only that the regulator set "just and reasonable" payments, as the Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998 does in Ontario, the regulator may make use of a variety of analytical tools in assessing the justness and reasonableness of a utility's proposed payment amounts. This is particularly so where, as here, the regulator has been given express discretion over the methodology to be used in setting payment amounts.

Where the regulator has discretion over its methodological approach, understanding whether the costs at issue are "forecast" or "committed" may be helpful in reviewing the reasonableness of a regulator's choice of methodology. Here, the labour compensation costs which led to the $145 million disallowance are best understood as partly committed costs and partly costs subject to management discretion. They are partly committed because they resulted from collective agreements entered into between OPG and two of its unions, and partly subject to management discretion because OPG retained some flexibility to manage total staffing levels in light of, among other things, projected attrition of the workforce. It is not reasonable to treat these costs as entirely forecast. However, the Board was not bound to apply a particular prudence test in evaluating these costs. It is not necessarily unreasonable, in light of the particular regulatory structure established by the Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998, for the Board to evaluate committed costs using a method other than a no-hindsight prudence review. Applying a presumption of prudence would have conflicted with the burden of proof in the Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998 and would therefore not have been reasonable. The question of whether it was reasonable to assess a particular cost using hindsight should turn instead on the circumstances of that cost.

In this case, the nature of the disputed costs and the environment in which they arose provide a sufficient basis to find that the Board did not act unreasonably in not applying the prudent investment test in determining whether it would be just and reasonable to compensate OPG for these costs and disallowing them. Since the costs at issue are operating costs, there is little danger that a disallowance of these costs will have a chilling effect on OPG's willingness to incur operating costs in the future, because costs of the type disallowed here are an inescapable element of operating a utility. Further, the costs at issue arise in the context of an ongoing repeat-player relationship between OPG and its employees. Such a context supports the reasonableness of a regulator's decision to weigh all evidence it finds relevant in striking a just and reasonable balance between the utility and consumers, rather than confining itself to a no-hindsight approach. There is no dispute that collective agreements are "immutable" between employees and the utility. However, if the legislature had intended for costs under collective agreements to also be inevitably imposed on consumers, it would not have seen fit to grant the Board oversight of utility compensation costs. The Board's decision in no way purports to force OPG to break its contractual commitments to unionized employees. It was not unreasonable for the Board to adopt a mixed approach that did not rely on quantifying the exact share of compensation costs that fell into the forecast and committed categories. Such an approach represents an exercise of the Board's methodological discretion in addressing a challenging issue where these costs did not fit easily into one category or the other.

The Board's disallowance may have adversely impacted OPG's ability to earn its cost of capital in the short run. Nevertheless, the disallowance was intended to send a clear signal that OPG must take responsibility for improving its performance. Such a signal may, in the short run, provide the necessary impetus for OPG to bring its compensation costs in line with what, in the Board's opinion, consumers should justly expect to pay for an efficiently provided service. Sending such a signal is consistent with the Board's market proxy role and its objectives under s. 1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998.

Per Abella J. (dissenting): The Board's decision was unreasonable because the Board failed to apply the methodology set out for itself for evaluating just and reasonable payment amounts. It both ignored the legally binding nature of the collective agreements between Ontario Power Generation and the unions and failed to distinguish between committed compensation costs and those that were reducible.

The Board stated in its reasons that it would use two kinds of review in order to determine just and reasonable payment amounts. As to "forecast costs", that is, those over which a utility retains discretion and can still be reduced or avoided, the Board explained that it would review such costs using a wide range of evidence, and that the onus would be on the utility to demonstrate that its forecast costs were reasonable. A different approach, however, would be applied to those costs the company could not "take action to reduce". These costs, sometimes called "committed costs", represent binding commitments that leave a utility with no discretion about whether to make the payment. The Board explained that it would evaluate these costs using a "prudence review". The application of a prudence review does not shield these costs from scrutiny, but it does include a presumption that the costs were prudently incurred.

Rather than apply the methodology it set out for itself, however, the Board assessed all compensation costs in Ontario Power Generation's collective agreements as adjustable forecast costs, without determining whether any of them were costs for which there is no opportunity for the company to take action to reduce. The Board's failure to separately assess the compensation costs committed as a result of the collective agreements from other compensation costs, ignored not only its own methodological template, but labour law as well.

The compensation costs for approximately 90 per cent of Ontario Power Generation's regulated workforce were established through legally binding collective agreements which obligated the utility to pay fixed levels of compensation, regulated staffing levels, and provided unionized employees with employment security. The obligations contained in these collective agreements were immutable and legally binding commitments. The agreements therefore did not just leave the utility with limited flexibility regarding overall compensation or staffing levels, they made it illegal for the utility to alter the compensation and staffing levels of 90 per cent of its regulated workforce in a manner that was inconsistent with its commitments under the agreements.

The Board, however, applying the methodology it said it would use for the utility's forecast costs, put the onus on Ontario Power Generation to prove the reasonableness of all its compensation costs and concluded that it had failed to provide compelling evidence or documentation or analysis to justify compensation levels. Had the Board used the approach it said it would use for costs the company had no opportunity to reduce, it would have used an after-the-fact prudence review, with a rebuttable presumption that the utility's expenditures were reasonable.

It may well be that Ontario Power Generation has the ability to manage some staffing levels through attrition or other mechanisms that did not breach the utility's commitments under its collective agreements, and that these costs may therefore properly be characterized as forecast costs. But no factual findings were made by the Board about the extent of any such flexibility. There is in fact no evidence in the record, nor any evidence cited in the Board's decision, setting out what proportion of Ontario Power Generation's compensation costs were fixed and what proportion remained subject to the utility's discretion. Given that collective agreements are legally binding, it was unreasonable for the Board to assume that Ontario Power Generation could reduce the costs fixed by these contracts in the absence of any evidence to that effect.

Selecting a test which is more likely to confirm the Board's assumption that collectively-bargained costs are excessive, misconceives the point of the exercise, namely, to determine whether those costs were in fact excessive. Blaming collective bargaining for what are assumed to be excessive costs, imposes the appearance of an ideologically-driven conclusion on what is intended to be a principled methodology based on a distinction between committed and forecast costs, not between costs which are collectively bargained and those which are not. While the Board has wide discretion to fix payment amounts that are just and reasonable and, subject to certain limitations, to establish the methodology used to determine such amounts, once the Board establishes a methodology, it is, at the very least, required to faithfully apply it.

Absent methodological clarity and predictability, Ontario Power Generation would be unable to know how to determine what expenditures and investments to make and how to present them to the Board for review. Wandering sporadically from approach to approach, or failing to apply the methodology it declares itself to be following, creates uncertainty and leads, inevitably, to needlessly wasting public time and resources in constantly having to anticipate and respond to moving regulatory targets. Whether or not one can fault the Board for failing to use a particular methodology, what the Board can unquestionably be analytically faulted for, is evaluating all compensation costs fixed by collective agreements as being amenable to adjustment. Treating these compensation costs as reducible was unreasonable.

The appeal should accordingly be dismissed, the Board's decision set aside, and the matter remitted to the Board for reconsideration.

REASONS FOR DECISION

RYAN BELL J.

Overview

[1] The applicant, Paul Taylor, moves pursuant to s. 21(5) of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, to set aside the orders of Sachs J. made October 8, 2020. The motion judge made orders adding the Workplace Safety and Insurance Appeals Tribunal as a party to Mr. Taylor's judicial review application and dismissing the application for extreme delay.

[2] Mr. Taylor asserts that the motion judge's orders should be set aside because, i. s. 9(2) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1 infringes s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms[1];

ii. the motion judge erred in law in adding the Tribunal as a party to the application;

iii. the "Divisional Court test" for dismissing an application for judicial review infringes ss. 7 and 15 of the Charter; and

iv. in dismissing Mr. Taylor's application on the basis of excessive delay, the motion judge erred in law and infringed ss. 7 and 15 of the Charter.

Procedural History

[3] In 1997, Mr. Taylor suffered two workplace injuries while employed by his former employer. Pivotal Integrated HR Solutions is the successor to Mr. Taylor's former employer.

[4] Mr. Taylor applied to the Workplace Safety and Insurance Board for benefits. Mr. Taylor challenged the benefits he was awarded within the Board system. He then sought to have those decisions reconsidered or amended, all of which were denied.

[5] In 2005, Mr. Taylor appealed to the Tribunal. In February 2008, the Tribunal allowed Mr. Taylor's appeal in part and granted him additional benefits. The 2008 Tribunal decision is the first Tribunal decision that Mr. Taylor seeks to judicially review in his application.

[6] In October 2012, Mr. Taylor filed a request for reconsideration of the 2008 Tribunal decision. The Tribunal dismissed Mr. Taylor's application for reconsideration in June 2013. The 2013 Tribunal decision is the second Tribunal decision that Mr. Taylor seeks to judicially review in his application.

[7] On July 11, 2013, Mr. Taylor filed an application in the Superior Court of Justice under Rule 14 of the Rules of Civil Procedure in which he sought to challenge the 2008 Tribunal decision and the Tribunal's 2013 reconsideration decision. After receiving notice of Mr. Taylor's application, counsel for the Tribunal wrote to Mr. Taylor to advise that his application was, in essence, an application for judicial review, which had to be pursued in Divisional Court. Mr. Taylor abandoned his Rule 14 application after receiving the letter from Tribunal counsel.

[8] Mr. Taylor then commenced an action in February 2014 in the Superior Court of Justice against the Board and the Tribunal. In his action, Mr. Taylor sought the same relief as in his Rule 14 application and included a claim for substantial damages, which he subsequently amended to include punitive damages.

[9] On February 22, 2017, Price J. granted the motion of the Board and the Tribunal to strike Mr. Taylor's claim. Justice Price found that the Superior Court of Justice did not have jurisdiction to engage in a judicial review of the Tribunal's decisions in the context of an action and that Mr. Taylor's claim disclosed no reasonable cause of action. Justice Price also found that Mr. Taylor had not provided a reasonable explanation for his four-year delay in seeking a reconsideration of the 2008 Tribunal decision.

[10] Mr. Taylor's appeal of Price J.'s decision was dismissed by the Court of Appeal for Ontario on February 6, 2018. Among other things, the Court of Appeal upheld the motion judge's finding with respect to jurisdiction. Mr. Taylor's application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada was denied on April 16, 2020.

[11] In March 2020, Mr. Taylor commenced an application for judicial review before the Superior Court of Justice, returnable on March 24, 2020, in which he sought to challenge the Tribunal's decisions. The only named party to the application was the Tribunal. The application could not proceed on March 24 due to COVID-19. In June 2020, in response to correspondence from Mr. Taylor, counsel for the Tribunal wrote to Mr. Taylor, setting out the Tribunal's position that the matter should be brought in Divisional Court. Counsel for the Tribunal also advised that if Mr. Taylor did commence an application in Divisional Court, the Tribunal would seek to have it dismissed on a number of bases, including extreme delay.

[12] On June 26, 2020, Mr. Taylor advised the Tribunal that he was abandoning his application in the Superior Court of Justice on the basis that the Tribunal "is not a legal party" and that he would be filing a "corrected notice." Counsel for the Tribunal responded that any corrected notice should be in Divisional Court and that, pursuant to s. 9 of the JRPA, the Tribunal should be named as a respondent.

[13] The present application for judicial review was commenced by Mr. Taylor on August 14, 2020. The only named respondent on the application was Pivotal.

The Court's jurisdiction and standard of review

[14] A panel of the Divisional Court has the authority to hear a motion to set aside the order of a single judge of the court pursuant to s. 21(5) of the Courts of Justice Act. The panel hearing a motion under s. 21(5) does not hear the motion to set aside de novo. Rather, the standard of review applicable on a s. 21(5) motion is correctness on a question of law and a palpable and overriding error with respect to an error of fact: The Law Society of Upper Canada v. Piersanti, 2018 ONSC 640 (Div. Ct.), at para. 9; Canadian National Railway Company v. Teamsters Canada Railway Conference, 2019 ONSC 3644 (Div. Ct.), at para. 9.

Analysis

Section 9(2) of the JRPA does not infringe s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and does not violate s. 7 of the Charter

[15] Section 9(2) of the JRPA provides:

> For the purposes of an application for judicial review in relation to the exercise, refusal to exercise or proposed or purported exercise of a statutory power, the person who is authorized to exercise the power may be a party to the application.

[16] Mr. Taylor argues that s. 9(2) of the JRPA infringes s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 "for matters involving workers' compensation." Mr. Taylor advances four reasons in support of his submission. First, he argues that there is a difference between "administrative functioning" administrative boards, commissions, and tribunals, and administrative boards, commissions, and tribunals that are quasi-judicial in nature. Second, Mr. Taylor argues that the Tribunal has "misused" s. 9(2) to "circumvent the Court's inherent jurisdiction under s. 96." Third, he argues that there would be "unjust opposition" to applications for judicial review in matters of workers' compensation. Fourth, Mr. Taylor submits that the Tribunal does not provide the reviewing court with valuable insight.

[17] Mr. Taylor's arguments are without merit. Section 96 requires that tribunal proceedings be subject to the supervisory jurisdiction of the courts. As the Supreme Court of Canada summarized in Canada (Min. Citizenship and Immigration) v. Vavilov, 2019 SCC 65, at para. 24, Parliament and the provincial legislatures are constitutionally empowered to create administrative bodies and to endow them with broad statutory powers. Where the legislature has created an administrative decision-maker for the specific purpose of administering a statutory scheme, it must be presumed that the legislature intended the decision-maker to be able to fulfill its mandate and to interpret the law applicable to all issues that come before it. Privative clauses may oust judicial review on questions of law and on other questions not touching jurisdiction. However, because judicial review is protected by s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, legislatures cannot shield administrative decision-making from curial scrutiny entirely: Dunsmuir v. New Brunswick, 2008 SCC 9, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 190, at para. 31; Crevier v. Attorney General of Quebec, 1981 CanLII 30 (SCC), [1981] 2 S.C.R. 220, at pp. 236-37; U.E.S., Local 298 v. Bibeault, 1988 CanLII 30 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 1048, at p. 1090.

[18] Section 9(2) of the JRPA does not affect this court's supervisory jurisdiction. It does not shield administrative tribunals such as the Tribunal from curial scrutiny entirely; rather, s. 9(2) permits tribunals to bring relevant matters to the attention of the court.

[19] Allowing an administrative tribunal such as the Tribunal to participate on an application for judicial review does not give rise to "unjust opposition" as Mr. Taylor contends. To the contrary, the presence of the administrative tribunal as a party may help to ensure that the court hears both sides of a dispute where there is no other well-informed party standing in opposition to the party challenging the tribunal decision: Ontario (Energy Board) v. Ontario Power Generation Inc., 2015 SCC 44, at para. 54.

[20] Once a tribunal is a party, the court still has discretion as to the scope of participation to be accorded to the tribunal during the hearing. This involves balancing the need for fully informed adjudication against the importance of maintaining tribunal impartiality: Hydro Ottawa v. Ontario (Workplace Safety and Insurance Appeals Tribunal), 2019 ONSC 4898 (Div. Ct.), at para. 6. This court is under no obligation to accept the submissions of a tribunal that appears before it.

[21] Nor does s. 9(2) of the JRPA violate Mr. Taylor's right to a fair and unbiased hearing. Mr. Taylor cites the low "rate of success" in other cases challenging Tribunal decisions before this court and essentially asks us to infer bias or lack of fairness on this basis. I draw no such inference. The Tribunal has the benefit of a strongly worded privative clause, one that the Court of Appeal has described as "the toughest privative clause known to Ontario law": Rodrigues v. Ontario (Workplace Safety and Insurance Appeals Tribunal), 2008 ONCA 719, at para. 22.

[22] In addition, there is nothing in s. 9(2) of the JRPA that violates procedural fairness, nor is the provision arbitrary or overbroad within the meaning of the s. 7 Charter jurisprudence. Section 9(2) does not limit the ability of the court to control its own processes by determining what it does and does not wish to hear from a tribunal: see Hydro Ottawa, at para. 7. Section 9(2)'s silence as to the precise limits of the tribunal's participation "necessarily leaves this issue to the court's discretion, as part of its task of ensuring that its procedures serve the interests of justice": Ontario (Children's Lawyer) v. Ontario (Information and Privacy Commissioner), 2005 CanLII 11786 (ON CA), at para. 27.

The motion judge did not err in adding the Tribunal as a respondent to the application

[23] In exercising her discretion to add the Tribunal as a party to the application, the motion judge correctly applied the JRPA and properly considered whether the court hearing the application would benefit from the Tribunal's presence as an adversarial party. As the Supreme Court of Canada stated in Ontario (Energy Board), at para. 54,

> Some cases may arise in which there is simply no other party to stand in opposition to the party challenging the tribunal decision. Our judicial review processes are designed to function best when both sides of a dispute are argued vigorously before the reviewing court. In a situation where no other well-informed party stands opposed, the presence of a tribunal as an adversarial party may help the court ensure it has heard the best of both sides of a dispute.

[24] Based on s. 9(2), the definitions of "statutory power" and "statutory power of decision" in s. 1 of the JRPA, and the nature of the 2008 and 2013 Tribunal decisions, the motion judge found, correctly, that the Tribunal may be added as a party. As the motion judge found, the Tribunal's decisions, which Mr. Taylor seeks to challenge on his application, are an exercise of the Tribunal's power to make a decision under the Workplace Safety and Insurance Act to determine Mr. Taylor's eligibility for benefits. The Tribunal's decisions are "the exercise...of a statutory power" and, under s. 9(2), "the person who is authorized to exercise the power may be a party to the application." Section 9(2) gives the administrative tribunal the right to be a party to the proceeding if the tribunal chooses to do so: Ontario (Children's Lawyer), at para. 26.

[25] The motion judge properly considered that there was no other party who had appeared to oppose Mr. Taylor's application and that, even if the named respondent had appeared, it would not be "well-informed." The motion judge also considered that neither the Attorney General for Ontario nor the Attorney General for Canada had suggested that they would participate in the application. The motion judge noted that the Tribunal had been an active participant throughout these proceedings and found that its presence as an adversarial party "will ensure that the court can deal with this dispute in a fair and informed manner."

[26] The motion judge did not err in her ruling adding the Tribunal as a party to the application.

The Divisional Court's test does not violate ss. 7 or 15 of the Charter

[27] Judicial review is a discretionary remedy which can be denied on the basis of excessive delay, regardless of the merits of the case: Ransom v. Ontario, 2010 ONSC 3156 (Div. Ct.), at para. 4, aff'd 2010 ONSC 5594 (Div. Ct.). In exercising its discretion to dismiss an application for delay, the court will consider the following factors:

i. the length of the delay;

ii. the reasonableness of any explanation offered for the delay; and

iii. any presumed or actual prejudice suffered by the respondent as a result of that delay: Becker v. Workplace Safety and Insurance Appeals Tribunal, 2012 ONSC 6946 (Div. Ct.), at para. 4.

[28] Mr. Taylor submits that this test violates the security of the person, contrary to s. 7 of the Charter, because it violates an individual's right to a fair and unbiased hearing. Respectfully, the test does not infringe s. 7 of the Charter. There is no unfairness in the court considering and balancing the length of the delay, the explanation for the delay, and any presumed or actual prejudice to the respondent in exercising its discretion to dismiss an application for delay.

[29] Mr. Taylor relies on Blencoe v. British Columbia (Human Rights Commission), 2000 SCC 44 for the proposition that state-imposed physical and psychological harms that are greater than ordinary stress or anxiety may breach s. 7 of the Charter. In my view, Blencoe does not assist Mr. Taylor. As the Supreme Court of Canada made clear at paras. 57-59, the court's first task is to determine which alleged harms are state-imposed, and to separate those state-imposed harms from those caused by other factors such as the stressful nature of litigation. I agree with the Tribunal that whatever harms Mr. Taylor alleges from the loss of his right to a judicial review on the merits are the result of his own conduct.

[30] Nor does the Divisional Court's test infringe s. 15 of the Charter. To prove a prima facie violation of s. 15(1) of the Charter, a claimant must demonstrate that the impugned law or state action a) on its face or in its impact, creates a distinction based on enumerated or analogous grounds, and b) imposes burdens or denies a benefit in a manner that has the effect of reinforcing, perpetuating, or exacerbating disadvantage: Fraser v. Canada (A.G.), 2020 SCC 28, at para. 27.

[31] Mr. Taylor has not established a prima facie violation of s. 15(1). First, the Divisional Court's test does not create a distinction based on enumerated or analogous grounds, either on its face or in its impact. It is a flexible test, that allows the court to take into account any reasonable explanation for the delay, including the impact of disabilities and whether or not a litigant is self-represented.

[32] Second, a flexible test that permits the court, in its discretion, to dismiss an application for judicial review – itself a discretionary remedy – on the basis of excessive delay does not impose a burden or deny a benefit in a manner that has the effect of reinforcing, perpetuating, or exacerbating disadvantage. It does not stigmatize any group on the basis of disability and it does not perpetuate any prejudice against injured workers.

The motion judge did not err in dismissing the application for excessive delay

[33] In dismissing the application for excessive delay, the motion judge applied the correct test and legal principles. In concluding that the delay in this case has been "extraordinary", the motion judge considered that Mr. Taylor delayed 12 and a half years following the Tribunal's 2008 decision before commencing this application. She also noted Mr. Taylor's delay of more than four years before applying for a reconsideration of the 2008 Tribunal decision and that it had been more than seven years since the Tribunal issued its 2013 reconsideration decision.

[34] The motion judge considered, and ultimately rejected, Mr. Taylor's explanations for his delay. She agreed with Price J. that there was no reasonable explanation for the more than four-year period before Mr. Taylor filed his reconsideration application before the Tribunal. She found that Mr. Taylor's assertions about going to the Human Rights Commission and requesting a different hearing panel were not established on the record before her. She found that, contrary to Mr. Taylor's submissions, he was provided with accurate advice from the Tribunal's counsel, on more than one occasion, about the legal avenue he should pursue. The motion judge concluded that although Mr. Taylor was entitled to ignore the advice he received and to seek to litigate his concerns in inappropriate forums, he could not rely on his choices to excuse his delay in proceeding to judicially review the Tribunal's decisions in a proper manner.

[35] On the issue of prejudice to the Tribunal, the motion judge observed, correctly, that when a delay reaches the magnitude of the delay in the present case, prejudice can be presumed. In his judicial review application, Mr. Taylor relies, in part, on alleged procedural defects in the Tribunal's 2008 decision. As the motion judge observed, it is difficult for any body to effectively respond to allegations regarding the conduct of a hearing that occurred more than 12 years ago. The motion judge found that the Tribunal's interest in timeliness and finality would be severely prejudiced if its decisions continued to be challenged a dozen years after they were made.

[36] The motion judge did not err in concluding that the delay in this case was excessive, that there was no reasonable explanation for the delay, and that the Tribunal would suffer prejudice if the application was allowed to proceed. Her findings were supported by the record before her.

[37] Finally, contrary to Mr. Taylor's submission, the motion judge did not fail to accommodate Mr. Taylor as a self-represented litigant. As the motion judge correctly observed at para. 39 of her reasons, "[w]hile some allowance can be made to accommodate the known difficulties that self-represented people encounter, that allowance cannot be made at the expense of the proper functioning of the administration of justice." To the motion judge's observation I would add, "[s]elf-represented persons, like all other litigants, are subject to the provisions whereby courts maintain control of their proceedings and procedures": Canadian Judicial Council's Statement of Principles on Self-represented Litigants, at p. 5.

Disposition

[38] For these reasons, I would dismiss Mr. Taylor's motion. With respect to costs, the Tribunal seeks costs in the amount of $1,000. This amount is reasonable. It is ordered that Mr. Taylor shall pay the Tribunal its costs fixed in the amount of $1,000, all inclusive.

arising from Paccar. But even if a more nuanced 'balancing' approach like that suggested in Children's Lawyer were to be mandated in British Columbia, that approach would not in my view militate in favour of permitting WCAT to make the submissions it has in the case at bar.

[42] As already noted, no jurisdictional error (in the narrow sense suggested by Dunsmuir, supra, at para. 59) or error in the choice of standard of review was advanced here; nor is there an allegation of a breach of the rules of natural justice. The appeal does not involve the construction of the Workers Compensation Act or Regulations. The dispute is essentially a private one between Mr. Henthorne and his former employer, in which a private remedy is sought. The employer, a large corporation, is well represented and has made extensive and helpful submissions. The Tribunal's reasons for reversing the decision of first instance dealt at length with the issues that subsequently became the focus of the judicial review. In these circumstances, there is little that the Tribunal could add, or has in fact added, to the proper adjudication of the appeal. As against this, the importance of fairness, real and perceived, weighs more heavily. To permit both the employer and the tribunal whose decision is being reviewed to be lined up against the appellant does not seem to me to be "just and efficient" (see Orange Julius Canada Ltd. v. Surrey (City) 1999 BCCA 430 (Chambers) at para. 7), particularly at a time when courts are being urged to ensure the speedy resolution of disputes.

[43] I would grant Mr. Henthorne's motion to strike the factum filed by WCAT.

[44] Before returning to the substantive appeal, I should note the comment at para. 60 of Children's Lawyer, supra, that the proper procedure for seeking to limit the standing of an administrative tribunal is for the applicant to file a notice of motion and for additional material then to be filed. The motion can then be heard at the same time as the main appeal. The Court observed that this approach should not unduly complicate judicial review proceedings. The difficulty, however, is that in each case the tribunal in question files the additional material it wishes, which the appellant must then respond to in writing, before the main appeal is heard. Thus there is no real savings in time and expense if the question of standing is ultimately decided against the tribunal. Further, once the court has read the material in preparation for the appeal, it will be the rare appellant who takes the trouble to make a motion to strike. Given this, I am of the view that the appellate court should not hesitate to make an appropriate costs order if Northwestern Utilities is still to have any practical effect.

The Main Question

[45] I turn finally to the substantive appeal. Mr. Dalziel submitted at the outset that although technically this is an appeal from the order of the chambers judge, the proceedings in this court are a "re-do" of the judicial review application below, albeit on only one ground instead of two. In this regard, he cited the following passage from Dr. Q

> between the methodology of such a defence and the impermissible defence of the correctness of a decision. The mode of argument approved by the Court was one in which counsel for the tribunal explained how it had proceeded and that it had taken into account all the arguments that had been made as well as the authorities that had been presented. All this was with a view to demonstrating that it had not acted in a patently unreasonable fashion. That, of course, is all very well but patent unreasonableness is not just a matter of methodology; it involves an assessment of whether the substantive choice made by the tribunal came within the range of rationally permissible options possible on a reading of the relevant legislation. To move from an explanation of methodology to that kind of argument must, as a practical matter, make distinguishing between correctness arguments and patent unreasonableness arguments difficult to sustain in both written facta and oral submissions.

[31] Even if one were able to distinguish between the methodology to be used in arguing the reasonableness of a decision, as opposed to its correctness, practical problems arise. According to Paccar the tribunal may speak to the merits of the case only if the patent unreasonable standard applies. Yet the tribunal may not learn of the proper standard until after the reviewing court delivers its reasons. Moreover, even in cases where the parties agree that the review standard is patent unreasonableness, I have yet to see a written submission where the substantive issue is not addressed in terms of correctness and it makes no difference who authors the submission. Tribunals, like counsel, take no pride in arguing that a decision meets a minimal rationality test. Rationality is presumed. But where does all of this lead us?

[32] It seems to me that the true issue is whether the tribunal seeking intervener status has something to contribute, beyond that expected of the parties. If that can be established, the tribunal should be permitted to address the merits in its written submission. I say this for two reasons. First, the distinction between a tribunal that seeks to defend its jurisdiction in the narrow as opposed to broad sense is, with respect, tenuous. If a tribunal is entitled to defend its interpretation of jurisdictional provisions then why shouldn’t it be permitted to defend its interpretation of non-jurisdictional provisions? In both instances the purpose underscoring the value of tribunal participation is the same: to enable the reviewing court to make an informed decision as to why one interpretation was or should be preferred to another. My second reason for permitting tribunals to address the merits of their decisions is that in Northwestern Utilities Justice Estey was driven to articulating a broad rule when a narrow one would have sufficed. Provided the tribunal is not seeking to bootstrap its decision, the tribunal cannot be accused of breaching the principle of impartiality. This leads me to the problem of bootstrapping.

[33] No tribunal should be permitted to bootstrap its decisions. If the tribunal fails to provide a rational explanation for its interpretative decision, why should it be given a second opportunity to do so? Those that fail to provide sufficient reasons to support their interpretative decisions run the risk of having the matter remitted to them for reconsideration, as was ordered in Northwestern Utilities. Another possibility is that the tribunal will have to live with the interpretative arguments presented by the parties. If the issue is decided against the tribunal, in future it must be content to direct its submissions to the legislature. All tribunals should be mindful of Justice Kerans' adroit observation in Standards of Review Employed by Appellate Courts (Edmonton, Alta: Jurilibert, 1994) at 17 and reproduced by Justice Iacobucci in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Competition Act) v. Southam Inc., [1977] 1 S.C.R. 748 at para 62:

> Experts, in our society, are called that precisely because they can arrive at well-informed and rational conclusions. If that is so, they should be able to explain, to a fair-minded but less well-informed observer, the reasons for their conclusions. If they cannot, they are not very expert. If something is worth knowing and relying upon, it is worth telling. Expertise commands deference only when the expert is coherent. Expertise loses a right to deference when it is not defensible. That said, it seems obvious that [appellate courts] manifestly must give great weight to cogent views thus articulated.

[34] Frankly, the only tribunals that fail to clothe their reasons with juristic respectability are those lacking legal expertise. These are the tribunals whose principal mandate is to make findings of fact. At the same time, I do not wish to leave the impression that all tribunal decisions must be fortified by extensive reasons. If the issue is one that had been adduced in an earlier decision, there is no need to reproduce legal reasoning found elsewhere.

[35] When it comes to the application of the principle of impartiality it is helpful to distinguish between a tribunal's written and oral submissions. In my experience, tribunals accept that the principle of impartiality limits their ability to engage fully in the adversarial process. Typically, a written submission is filed without objection from opposing counsel. Costs are neither sought by, nor awarded against, the intervener who qualifies as a friend of the court. Tribunal counsel rarely walk to the podium to argue in support of the tribunal's decision. If they do, it is to respond only to questions posed by the court. On occasion it may be necessary for the intervener to address briefly matters raised in argument. There is a reason why this is so. All counsel are acutely aware of the reality that a carefully crafted written submission virtually displaces the need for oral argument. In this way the appearance of impartiality is retained. The Board in this case so conducted itself.

[36] In summary, a tribunal seeking intervener status must persuade the court that: the case is of precedential significance; the tribunal can contribute to the proceedings in a way not reasonably expected of the parties; and the principle of impartiality can and will be respected. Written submissions that address the merits of the decision do not offend this principle, except those intended to bootstrap tribunal reasons that are materially deficient. Oral submissions that respond only to questions posed by the reviewing court, or are of brief duration, qualify as non-aggressive participation that respect the principle of impartiality.

[37] In the present case, it is understandable that the Board would seek intervener status. The central issue involves the interpretation of ss. 13 and 40 of the Industrial Relations Act. The interpretative issue involves a fundamental question: May the Board look only to the date of the application for certification to determine if there is a unit of employees that is appropriate for collective bargaining? The Board's written submissions on this issue were helpful and simply amplified that contained within its reasons for decision. This is not a case of bootstrapping. The Board's oral argument was succinct and did not qualify as "aggressive participation" of the kind contemplated by Justice Estey in Northwestern Utilities. Hindsight reveals that without coaching from this Court, the Board in both its written and oral argument maintained an air of impartiality. In short, the Board had something to contribute, beyond that expected of the parties. That something was tied to the Board's specialized jurisdiction and expertise. I turn now to identifying the proper standard of review.

STANDARD OF REVIEW – JURISDICTIONAL ISSUE

[38] Bransen argues that the proper standard of review is correctness because the interpretative issue relates to the Board's jurisdiction. The argument goes as follows. The Board cannot proceed to determine the appropriateness of a bargaining unit until it has determined that a unit exists. Section 1 of the Industrial Relations Act defines unit to mean a group of employees. It is common ground that two or more employees are needed to constitute a group, otherwise the Act has no application. It is within this context that Bransen argues that the interpretative issue is jurisdictional in nature and, indeed, this Court so declared in Re Universal Constructors & Engineers Ltd. and Labour Relations Board of New Brunswick (1960), 1960 CanLII 373 (NB CA), 27 D.L.R. (2d) 423 (N.B.S.C.A.D.). The question that

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Torts — Negligence — Fiduciary duty — Bookkeeper making unsolicited and voluntary cash advances to employer law firm which was experiencing financial difficulties — Law firm acting on bookkeeper's behalf in preparing two wills and in handling two mortgage transactions while she was working for it — Law firm going bankrupt and bookkeeper finding herself unsecured creditor — Whether duty of care under negligence principles or per se fiduciary obligations arose within solicitor-client relationship — Whether ad hoc fiduciary duties arose from power dependency relationship existing between bookkeeper and lawyer — Whether in such relationships, fiduciary duties may arise simply on basis of reasonable expectations of weaker party and without any mutual understanding of both parties that one must act in interests of the other — Whether fiduciary duties may arise although fiduciary has no discretionary power to affect other party's legal or important practical interests.

P made voluntary sizeable advances of cash — some $200,000 in total — to her employer, a law firm founded by G, often without informing G beforehand. Although P was hired as the firm's part-time bookkeeper she effectively became the office manager, overseeing the firm's income, expenses and accounting and had unlimited signing authority on the firm's non-trust bank accounts. Initially, to resolve a cash flow problem, P obtained a personal loan and deposited $40,000 into the firm's bank account. G did not ask her to advance this money and he did not even know about the advance until several days later. G instructed P to reimburse herself with interest, an instruction she did not follow other than by repaying herself $15,000. As the firm's financial situation deteriorated, P made several more deposits of her own funds into the firm's account and covered some firm expenses with her personal credit card. The firm, during the time she worked for it, handled the preparation and execution of new wills for P and her husband as well as two mortgage transactions. The firm did not expect to be and was not paid for these services. When the firm was placed in receivership and G went bankrupt, P found herself an unsecured creditor. She recovered nothing. P then sued G and the defunct firm for negligence, breach of contract and breach of fiduciary duty.

The trial judge dismissed P's claims, finding that her rights were those of a creditor and nothing more. The Court of Appeal set aside that decision and granted P judgment for $200,000. The court concluded that P was entitled to equity's protection because there were ad hoc fiduciary duties owed to her by G and his law firm in relation to the cash advances, which they had breached. It held that: there was a power-dependency relationship between P and G; it is not necessary that there be any mutual understanding that G had relinquished his self-interest in favour of P's for the duty to arise; P was vulnerable; and, the evidence overwhelmingly supported the conclusion that G took advantage of her trust.

Held: The appeal should be allowed and the trial judgment should be restored except that, if the parties cannot agree, the question as to whether P is entitled to a judgment in debt against the law firm and, if so, whether there is any impact on the costs ordered at trial or on appeal to the Court of Appeal flowing from that judgment, should be remanded to the Court of Appeal.

The Court of Appeal exceeded the limits of appellate review and unduly extended the scope of fiduciary obligations. Absent an error of law or a palpable and overriding error of fact, of which there is none, the trial judge's findings of fact and conclusion that a fiduciary duty did not exist must be upheld on appeal. In this case, the Court of Appeal retried the case on the basis of the written record and substituted its view of the facts and their significance for that of the trial judge. [3] [49] [53]

In holding that the relationship between P and G and his firm gave rise to an ad hoc fiduciary duty, the Court of Appeal erred in three respects. First, the conclusion that G was in a position of power and influence relative to P is directly at odds with the clear findings of fact at trial. The trial judge found that P was not vulnerable in terms of her relationship with G, that she probably had more knowledge of the state of G's financial affairs than he did, that she had not relinquished her decision-making power with respect to the loans and that G had no discretion over her interests that he was able to exercise unilaterally or otherwise. The trial judge specifically rejected P's contention that due to the power dynamics of their relationship she was simply unable to refuse requests for loans. There was no evidence accepted by the trial judge of any express requests for loans, which makes it illogical to conclude that P was unable to refuse requests when there were in fact none. [48] [51-55] [57]

Second, not all power-dependency relationships are fiduciary in nature, and identifying a power-dependency relationship does not, on its own, materially assist in deciding whether the relationship is fiduciary or not. It follows that there are not, and should not be, special rules for recognition of fiduciary duties in the case of power-dependency relationships. Here, the Court of Appeal erred when it held that, in the case of a power-dependency relationship, a fiduciary duty may arise even in the absence of a mutual understanding that one party would act only in the interests of the other provided there is proof of an expectation on the part of the plaintiff, which is reasonable in all of the circumstances, that the defendant would act in his or her best interests. The Court of Appeal found P to have such a reasonable expectation. While a mutual understanding may not always be necessary — a point that need not be decided here — it is fundamental to all ad hoc fiduciary duties that there be an undertaking by the fiduciary, which may be either express or implied, that the fiduciary will act in the best interests of the other party, in accordance with the duty of loyalty reposed on him or her. The fiduciary's undertaking may be the result of the exercise of statutory powers, the express or implied terms of an agreement or, perhaps, simply an undertaking to act in this way. In cases of per se fiduciary relationships, this undertaking will be found in the nature of the category of relationship in issue. The critical point is that in both per se and ad hoc fiduciary relationships, there will be some undertaking on the part of the fiduciary to act with loyalty. The Court of Appeal's analysis went wrong when it found a fiduciary duty without finding an undertaking, express or implied, on the part of G that he would act in relation to the loans only in P's interests, and based its conclusion that a fiduciary duty existed on P's expectations alone. [63-64] [66] [74-75] [77] [80]

The third error arises by implication because the Court of Appeal appears to have accepted the proposition that a fiduciary duty may arise even though the fiduciary has no discretionary power to affect the other party's legal or important practical interests. The nature of this discretionary power to affect the beneficiary's legal or practical interests may, depending on the circumstances, be quite broadly defined. It may arise from power conferred by statute, agreement, perhaps from a unilateral undertaking or, in particular situations by the beneficiary's entrusting the fiduciary with information or seeking advice in circumstances that confer a source of power. While what is sufficient to constitute power in the hands of the fiduciary may be controversial in some cases, the requirement for the existence of such power in the fiduciary's hands is not. The presence of this sort of power will not necessarily on its own support the existence of an ad hoc fiduciary duty; its absence, however, negates the existence of such a duty. The findings of the trial judge that the evidence did not establish that P relinquished her decision-making power with respect to the loans to G, and that G had no discretionary power over P's interests that he was able to exercise unilaterally or otherwise, with which the Court of Appeal did not disagree, are fatal to P's claim that there was an ad hoc fiduciary duty on G's part to act solely in her interests in relation to these cash advances. [50] [84-86]

Moreover, given the limited nature of the retainers and the unusual nature of the advances, the trial judge did not err in finding that G and the law firm did not breach their duty of care arising from the solicitor-client relationship between them and P. There was no actual conflict of interest between the firm's duties to her in connection with the limited retainers and its interest in receiving the advances. Similarly, there could not be in these unusual facts any reasonable apprehension of conflict. Given the very limited nature of those retainers and the manner in which the advances were made — unsolicited and frequently without advance notice — there was no duty on the firm under negligence principles to give P advice about those advances or to insist that she obtain independent legal advice about them. [33]

With respect to P's contractual claims against the law firm, out of an abundance of caution and if the parties cannot agree, the question of whether a judgment in debt in P's favour against the firm should issue and, if so, its impact, if any, on the costs ordered at trial and on the appeal to the Court of Appeal should be remanded to the Court of Appeal. Affidavit evidence as to what evidence was given before an arbitrator is admissible to augment the record on an application for judicial review of an arbitration award. Section 2(3) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, 1971 (Ont.), c. 48, provides a statutory ground of judicial review when the findings of fact of a tribunal, made in the exercise of a statutory power of decision, are required to be based exclusively on evidence admissible before it and on facts of which it may take notice and there is no such evidence and there are no such facts to support its findings. According to s. 37(7)(c) of the Labour Relations Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 232, an arbitrator must base findings of fact on evidence admissible before him. Alternatively, absence of evidence may be characterized as jurisdictional error in a judicial tribunal. Such affidavit evidence can only be used to demonstrate complete absence of evidence on an essential point.

R. W. Cosman, for respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by MORDEN, J.A.:-- The main issues in this appeal are the admissibility of affidavit evidence filed in support of an application for judicial review to quash, on the ground of absence of evidence, an arbitration award made under a collective agreement subject to the Labour Relations Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 232, and whether, if such evidence is admissible, it showed that there was no evidence to support the award. As Mr. Justice Pennell, speaking for the Divisional Court, indicated, while this may appear to be a "small case" it is important to the law of judicial review and, of course, to the parties.

The following is a brief outline of the basic facts and of the proceedings which have brought the matter before this Court. The collective agreement contained an article which, in its essential terms, provided that:

> [a] violation of the following rules will result in discharge: ... Fighting -- On Company premises -- and/or unprovoked physical intimidation towards supervisory personnel.

The employer (the appellant in this Court) alleged that one of its employees, E. M. Judson (one of the respondents, the other being the union) on May 31, 1979, was involved in an incident with another employee, T. Vinnai, which amounted to fighting and discharged both of them. Mr. Judson filed a grievance which did not result in the matter being settled and it was, accordingly, submitted to arbitration. The hearing before the single arbitrator took place on August 27, 1979, and his award dismissing the grievance was rendered on August 29, 1979.

In his reasons for the award the arbitrator reviewed the evidence and the competing contentions of the parties. The company contended that during the incident between Mr. Judson and Mr. Vinnai, which had taken place in a test booth on the company premises shortly before the 7:00 a.m. shift,

Mr. Vinnai pushed Mr. Judson who responded by throwing the contents of his coffee cup at Mr. Vinnai's face. Mr. Vinnai responded in turn by striking Mr. Judson in the face. This, it was submitted, amounted to "fighting" within the meaning of this word in the collective agreement. The union contended that the evidence showed only that the initial jostling resulted in the spilling of some coffee on Mr. Vinnai's pants and that the weight of the evidence showed only the subsequent throwing of a small amount of coffee -- once again on Mr. Vinnai's pants. This, it submitted, did not amount to "fighting".

The arbitrator accepted the employer's contentions. At the conclusion of his reasons he said:

> Having considered the above, on the factual matter, it would appear to me that clearly a fight occurred in these circumstances. Thus, it seems that initially the grievor was responding in a manner which was disproportionate to any provocation when he threw coffee at Mr. Vinnai after he was jostled. In this regard, two facts stand out. Thus, first, he was aware that Mr. Vinnai had asked to move in and he had not responded because his mouth was full. Consequently, he would be aware that Mr. Vinnai had some reason to be perturbed. Secondly, although this is denied by the grievor, the weight of the evidence suggests that he did, in fact, throw the coffee in his face. There is really no dispute that he said this at the meeting where the incident was considered [with one D. Macaulay, the personnel supervisor, and others] and Mr. Vinnai has indicated this is the fact. Thus, the reasonable conclusion to draw from the foregoing is that he did so. Put another way, the throwing of hot coffee in a person's face after he has jostled a worker aside at the beginning of the shift when time is short, is not a normal and responsive action. Again, such an act clearly constitutes an assault. In my opinion, the following response of Mr. Vinnai, although not to be condoned in any way, clearly made the matter into a mutual "fight". In my opinion, no other description of these events would be appropriate.

The union and Mr. Judson moved before the Divisional Court for judicial review of the award on several grounds, the main one being that the arbitrator had "exceeded his jurisdiction by making findings of fact unsupported by or contrary to the evidence given". The particular finding which was challenged is that contained in the words which I have emphasized in the preceding paragraph.

The Divisional Court rejected all the grounds except the one to which I have specifically referred. The affidavits and the transcripts of the cross-examination thereon filed on the application before the Divisional Court showed, it is agreed between the parties, that there was no evidence before the arbitrator to support the conclusion that Mr. Judson admitted at the meeting where the incident was considered that he threw coffee in the face of Mr. Vinnai.

In his reasons Pennell, J., concluded:

> We regard a decision unsupported by evidence in an important particular as an error of law which is analogous to a denial of natural justice and which goes to jurisdiction. What decision the arbitrator would have reached had he not erred is unknown and unknowable. True it is that the record, which has been sent to the Court, does not disclose the error. We think that the relevant affidavit[s] should be made part of the record. We, therefore, order accordingly.
> We have said enough to indicate our conclusion that the award ought to be quashed and the grievance remitted for a further hearing.

The employer obtained leave to appeal to this Court from the order of the Divisional Court. Mr. Murray's submissions are that:

(1) the Divisional Court erred in receiving the affidavits and the transcripts of the cross-examination on them; and

(2) if this material was properly admitted, it showed that there was some evidence to support the arbitrator's finding that Mr. Judson was "fighting".

I now turn to these issues.

I. Was the affidavit material admissible before the Divisional Court?

I should make it clear at this point that the material filed with the Divisional Court was directed to showing what the evidence was that was given before the arbitrator and was not fresh evidence of what happened on May 31, 1979. As is usual, no verbatim record was made of what transpired before the arbitrator.

The appellant's submission is that absence of evidence can give rise to an error of law but not one of jurisdiction and, accordingly, unless the error appears "on the face of the record", i.e., the evidence is properly part of the record of the inferior tribunal, an application for judicial review based on the grounds for certiorari (the Judicial Review Procedure Act, 1971 (Ont.), c. 48, s. 2(1), para. 1) will not properly lie. Unless the alleged error is of a jurisdictional nature the record returned to the Court cannot be augmented by affidavit evidence. He relies principally upon R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, Ltd. (1922), 1922 CanLII 488 (UK JCPC), 65 D.L.R. 1, 37 C.C.C. 129, [1922] 2 A.C. 128. In my view, there are two, alternative, answers to this submission.

> (a) Section 2(3) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, 1971. The first answer is based on s. 2(3) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, 1971. It reads:

> 2(3) Where the findings of fact of a tribunal made in the exercise of a statutory power of decision are required by any statute or law to be based exclusively on evidence admissible before it and on facts of which it may take notice and there is no such evidence and there are no such facts to support findings of fact made by the tribunal in making a decision in the exercise of such power, the court may set aside the decision on an application for judicial review.

Mr. Murray submits that this provision does not apply because (1) it merely codifies the existing law with the result that the error (absence of evidence) still has to appear on the face of the record, and (2) the arbitrator's findings of fact are not required by any statute or law to be based exclusively upon evidence admissible before him and on facts of which he may take notice. He concedes that the arbitrator was exercising "a statutory power of decision".

I see no reason to characterize the kind of error referred to in s. 2(3) as either jurisdictional or non-jurisdictional. It is a statutory ground of judicial review, probably designed to overcome perceived defects in the common law (see Report of the Royal Commission -- Inquiry into Civil Rights (1968), vol. 1, at pp. 261-3 and 310-3), and should not be encumbered with common law limitations on the admissibility of evidence which relate to the ground of error of law on the face of the record. Further, by virtue of s. 2(1), para. 1 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, 1971 an applicant for judicial review is entitled to the relief he could have obtained on an application for certiorari, which would include the right to relief based on error of law (including absence of evidence) appearing on the face of the record. It is reasonable, therefore, to regard s. 2(3) as accomplishing something more than this. Accordingly, if affidavit evidence is necessary to show that s. 2(3) is applicable it should be admissible.

Mr. Murray's second point is that s. 2(3) does not apply because the arbitrator's findings of fact are not required by any statute or law to be based exclusively on evidence admissible before him and on facts of which he may take notice. He refers to s. 37(7)(c) of the Labour Relations Act which empowers the arbitrator:

> (c) ... to accept such oral or written evidence as the arbitrator or the arbitration board, as the case may be, in its discretion considers proper, whether admissible in a court of law or not;

In my view, it is implicit in the obviously judicial function of the arbitrator that he is required by law to base his findings of fact exclusively on evidence that is admissible before him. The law, of course, does not contemplate that arbitrators' decisions as to the existence of facts may be based on speculation and, with respect to the particular determination which the arbitrator in this case was required to make, there was no power to go outside the evidence and to base the decision in whole or in part on policy grounds: see, generally, Brown and Beatty, Canadian Labour Arbitration (1977), at pp. 24-8, 115 and 120-1.

Section 37(7)(c) of the Labour Relations Act enlarges the range of the evidence which may be accepted by an arbitrator over that which is admissible in Court of law but it clearly does not empower the arbitrator to act upon information and material not contained in the evidence before him. Indeed, s. 37(7)(c) appears to assume that the arbitrator is required to act on evidence accepted by him at a hearing. In R. v. Barber et al., Ex p. Warehousemen & Miscellaneous Drivers' Union Local 419, 1968 CanLII 446 (ON CA), [1968] 2 O.R. 245 at p. 252, 68 D.L.R. (2d) 682 at p. 689, 68 C.L.L.C. 431, Jessup, J.A., said of this provision (then s. 34(7)(c) of R.S.O. 1960, c. 202): "However, that provision does not relieve a board from acting only on evidence having cogency in law." See also Re United Glass & Ceramic Workers of North America et al. and Pilkington Brothers (Canada) Ltd. et al. (1978), 1978 CanLII 1711 (ON SC), 21 O.R. (2d) 241, 89 D.L.R. (3d) 737.

Mr. Murray stressed that part of s. 2(3) which reads:
"required to be based exclusively ... and on facts of which it may take notice", and submitted that this did not apply to the arbitrator and, hence, the subsection was inapplicable. This particular part of s. 2(3), in my view, does apply to arbitrators of the kind with which we are concerned. It recognizes, in the administrative process, a legitimate way in which some facts may be found without evidence and which is, generally, but with some allowance being made for the expertise and experience of the tribunal, equivalent to the power of a Court to take judicial notice of facts which are common knowledge. However, even if this part of s. 2(3), for some reason, did not apply to arbitrators, in the sense that they are not empowered to take judicial or official notice of facts, I think that s. 2(3) would still be applicable by reason of the requirement that their findings be based exclusively on evidence admissible before them. The notice of facts limb of the requirement is really an extension, where applicable, of the preceding evidentiary requirement. The situation would be otherwise, of course, if a tribunal were not bound by the limitations of the judicial or official notice doctrine respecting the finding of facts. In such a case it would seem that the tribunal would also not be bound to act on evidence admissible before it -- and so s. 2(3) clearly would not be applicable.

I accept Mr. Murray's concession that the arbitrator exercises a "statutory power of decision" within the meaning of this term in s. 2(3). The term is defined in s. 1(f), the relevant part of which reads:

1. In this Act,

> (f) "statutory power of decision" means a power or right conferred by or under a statute to make a decision deciding or prescribing,
> > (i) the legal rights, powers, privileges, immunities, duties or liabilities of any person or party ...

It appears to me that the reasoning in Re Int'l Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd. and Rivando, 1956 CanLII 122 (ON CA), [1956] O.R. 379, 2 D.L.R. (2d) 700 (adopted by the Supreme Court of Canada in Port Arthur Shipbuilding Co. v. Arthurs et al., 1968 CanLII 29 (SCC), [1969] S.C.R. 85 at p. 94, 70 D.L.R. (2d) 693 at p. 701, 68 C.L.L.C. 586), to the effect that an arbitrator appointed under a collective agreement which is subject to the Labour Relations Act (Ontario) is a statutory arbitrator, is applicable by analogy to support the conclusion that the arbitrator is empowered under a statute to decide legal rights and duties.

> (b) Affidavits receivable on the basis of common law jurisdictional error. The alternative answer to Mr. Murray's submission that the affidavit material is not admissible is that, quite apart from s. 2(3) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, 1971, I think that it now can be said, at least in this jurisdiction, that entire absence of evidence may properly be characterized as jurisdictional error in a judicial tribunal. No doubt the cases have gone both ways on the issue and Nat Bell has had a checkered history. None the less there are valid logical and policy grounds for regarding absence of evidence as jurisdictional error in a judicial tribunal: see D.W. Elliott, " 'No Evidence': A Ground of Judicial Review in Canadian Administrative Law", 37 Sask. L. Rev. 48 (1972), particularly at pp. 59-65; Wade, Administrative Law, 4th ed. (1977), at pp. 274-8; and Reid and David, Administrative Law and Practice, 2nd ed. (1978), at pp. 357-60, where the decisions going both ways are collected. A clear statement by this Court that it amounts to jurisdictional error is that of Gale, C.J.O., in R. v. Ontario Racing Com'n, Ex p. Taylor, 1970 CanLII 379 (ON CA), [1971] 1 O.R. 400 at p. 402, 15 D.L.R. (3d) 430 at p. 432:
> This being our view as to the proper interpretation of rule 128, there was therefore no evidence in this case on which the Commission could find that there was a failure to protect the horse from the administration of the drug, and, accordingly, the order was made without jurisdiction on the part of the Commission.

I see no value in canvassing contrary decisions because this Court, in the recent decision of Re Martin, Simard and Desjardins and The Queen (1977), 1977 CanLII 1383 (ON CA), 20 O.R. (2d) 455, 87 D.L.R. (3d) 634, 41 C.C.C. (2d) 308; affirmed 1978 CanLII 30 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 511, 87 D.L.R. (3d) 704, 41 C.C.C. (2d) 342 (which was concerned with the availability of certiorari to quash a committal for trial), held, per Estey, C.J.O., at pp. 486-7 O.R., p. 666 D.L.R.:

> [W]e conclude that the learned Provincial Court Judge here acted within his jurisdiction, unless it can be said that he committed these respondents on the counts specified without any evidence at all, in the sense of an entire absence of proper material as a basis for the formation of a judicial opinion that the evidence was sufficient to put the accused on trial. That is quite a different question from the question "whether in the opinion of the reviewing tribunal there was evidence upon which a properly instructed jury acting judicially could convict". It remained, therefore, to examine the excerpts of evidence, as placed before this Court from the lengthy transcript taken at the preliminary hearing, in order to determine whether there was any evidence at all on which the committing tribunal was able to base its opinion to commit, as required by the terms of the Code already cited.

I refer also to the recent dictum, to the same effect, of the same learned Judge in Douglas Aircraft Co. of Canada Ltd. v. McConnell et al., 1979 CanLII 51 (SCC), [1980] 1 S.C.R. 245 at p. 277, 99 D.L.R. (3d) 385 at p. 407, 29 N.R. 109, a case concerned with Ontario labour arbitral jurisdiction.

Accordingly, I think that the Divisional Court, on this alternative ground, was right in receiving the evidence which, it was submitted by the respondents, showed that the arbitrator acted without jurisdiction.

II. Was there any evidence to support the arbitrator's finding?

As I have said, it is now common ground that there was no evidence to support the conclusion of the arbitrator respecting a statement made by Mr. Judson at the meeting with Mr. Macaulay, following the incident between himself and Mr. Vinnai. However, in my view, it cannot be said that there is no evidence supporting the arbitrator's finding that Mr. Judson threw coffee in Mr.

Vinnai's face. From the cross-examination of John Clarke, who had been the union representative at the hearing before the arbitrator, it appears that there was evidence at the hearing that Mr. Judson had thrown coffee at Mr. Vinnai. There was a dispute as to whether the evidence was that the coffee had been thrown in his face. Mr. Clarke denied that Mr. Vinnai gave evidence that the coffee was thrown in his face but said that Mr. Vinnai did testify before the arbitrator that when the remainder of the coffee was thrown towards him it got on his beard and shirt. Mr. Judson, on his cross- examination, said that he had admitted before the arbitrator that he had thrown coffee at Mr. Vinnai -- but "to the extent that it was not intentional". As far as the evidence before the arbitrator of what was stated before Mr. Macaulay is concerned, Mr. Judson said the evidence was that he admitted throwing coffee at Mr. Vinnai -- but not intentionally.

The affidavit sworn by Janice Baker who appeared as counsel on behalf of the employer before the arbitrator deposed that "Mr. Vinnai testified that the coffee thrown by the grievor hit him on his face and clothing". The notes which she made of Mr. Vinnai's evidence at the hearing include: "coffee hit me on face and clothing -- was thrown at me". She was not cross- examined on this part of her evidence.

There being evidence before the arbitrator capable of supporting his finding as to what, in fact, happened between Mr. Judson and Mr. Vinnai on May 31, 1979, the absence of evidence ground of attack is not, in my view, open to the appellant on either the application of s. 2(3) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, 1971 or common law jurisdictional grounds. To treat the complete lack of evidence on the finding respecting what was admitted to Mr. Macaulay as a ground for quashing the award would be to go beyond the Court's limited supervisory function and to exercise one of an appellate nature. In this regard the following description by Lord Sumner in Nat Bell at p. 18 D.L.R., pp. 149-50 A.C., of that kind of absence of evidence which may amount to an error of law is instructive: "... complete absence of any testimony on a definite and essential point ...".

Having just completed the exercise of examining, in this fashion, the evidence that was before the arbitrator I would express the view, which is in agreement with that of Pennell, J., that the practice of admitting affidavits of this kind should be very exceptional, it being emphasized that they are admissible only to the extent that they show jurisdictional error. I would think that the occasions for the legitimate use of affidavit evidence to demonstrate the exacting jurisdictional test of a complete absence of evidence on an essential point would, indeed, be rare.

The foregoing indicates my disposition of the appellant's grounds of appeal. The respondents sought to support the Divisional Court's order on three additional grounds. Briefly, they are:

(1) The arbitrator asked himself the wrong question. The Divisional Court, reading the arbitrator's reasons as a whole, dealt with this point adversely to the respondents and I agree with its reasons on this point.

(2) The arbitrator wrongly interpreted "fighting". Again, I agree with the Divisional Court's reasons. It cannot be said that the arbitrator's interpretation is one that the word cannot reasonably bear.

(3) The arbitrator erred in rejecting the proposed evidence of one W. Robertson. This issue is not considered in the Divisional Court's reasons. At most, this error was one with respect to the admissibility of evidence only and cannot be characterized as jurisdictional in any sense -- as showing either the failure of the arbitrator to inquire into the subject-matter committed to him or a denial of natural justice. Further, I do not see how its admission could have had any bearing on the arbitrator's determination of the truth of what happened on May 31, 1979. To the extent that it could be said to be relevant to the employer's motive in discharging Mr. Judson its rejection could also be justified on the ground that no suggestion of improper motive was put to the employer's only witness during cross-examination by the union representative.

I would allow the appeal, with costs, set aside the order of the Divisional Court, and in its place make an order dismissing, without costs, the application for judicial review.

Appeal allowed; application for judicial review dismissed.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

Penny J.:

[1] This is an application for judicial review of a decision by the Registrar of the Alcohol and Gaming Commission of Ontario, which declined to issue the Applicant a retail sales authorization to operate a retail cannabis store in Toronto.

[2] The basis for the rejection of the Applicant's application for a retail sales authorization was that the Applicant's proposed location is within 150 metres of a school. Under the legislative scheme, it is a fixed requirement that no retail sales authorization will be issued in respect of any proposed location of a retail cannabis store within 150 metres of a school.

[3] This application for judicial review attacks the AGCO's internal decision to use the "straight-line" or "as the crow flies" method to measure the 150 metre requirement, rather than an "on the street" or "as the wolf runs" method of measurement. The Applicant likewise attacks the use of this approach in the Registrar's evaluation and rejection of the Applicant's application for a retail sales authorization at the proposed location. The Applicant argues that its proposed location is more than 150 metres from any school using the "on the street" method and that the AGCO's adoption of a straight-line method of measurement is unreasonable.

[4] For the reasons that follow, the application for judicial review is dismissed.

Standard of Review

[5] The parties agree that the standard of review in this application is reasonableness. What is reasonable in the circumstances will depend on context including the governing statute, the evidence before the decision maker, the submissions of the parties, and past practices of the decision maker. Written decisions, when necessary, are not assessed against a standard of perfection, but must still meet the requisite standard of "justification, intelligibility and transparency", Canada (Citizenship and Immigration) v Vavilov, 2019 SCC 65 at paras. 91-93 and 106.

Regulatory Framework

[6] The AGCO is the provincial agency responsible for regulating private retail sales of recreational cannabis in Ontario. The legislative framework for the private retail sale of cannabis is set out in the Cannabis Licence Act, 2018, S.O. 2018, c.12, Sched. 2 and the general regulation made under it, Ontario Regulation 468/18. The Registrar of the AGCO administers the CLA in the public interest and in accordance with the principles of honesty, integrity, and social responsibility.

[7] The establishment and operation of a cannabis retail store is highly regulated. A retail cannabis operator must, among other things, apply for and be issued two instruments under the CLA:

i) a Retail Operator Licence ("ROL") that attaches to an individual operator; and

ii) a Retail Sales Authorization ("RSA") that attaches to a specific cannabis retail store.

The School Distance Requirement

[8] At the heart of this application is the interpretation and application of the school distance requirement under the CLA and Regulation.

[9] The legislation sets out in detail many circumstances in which the Registrar must refuse to issue a ROL and a RSA. A threshold disqualifying criterion is the school distance requirement. Section 4(12) of the CLA prohibits the issuance of a RSA if the proposed store is located less than a distance specified by regulation from a public or private school as defined under the Education Act:

> "4(12) The Registrar shall refuse to issue a retail store authorization,
> (a) if the proposed cannabis retail store would be located less than the distance specified by or determined in accordance with the regulations from,
> (i) a school as defined in the Education Act…"

[10] Section 11(2) of the Regulation establishes 150 metres as the minimum "distance specified" in s. 4(12)(a):

> "11(2) For the purposes of clause 4(12)(a) of the Act, a proposed cannabis retail store may not be located less than 150 metres from a school or a private school, as determined in accordance with the following:
> 1. If the school or private school is the primary or only occupant of a building, 150 metres shall be measured from the property line of the property on which the school or private school is located.
> 2. If the school or private school is not the primary or only occupant of a building, 150 meters shall be measured from the boundary of any space occupied by the school or private school within the building."

[11] If a proposed location does not comply with the school distance requirement, under s. 4(10) of the CLA the Registrar must refuse to issue the RSA and may do so without further assessment of any of the other disqualifying criteria.

[12] In some cases, such as where the Registrar decides to suspend, revoke, or refuse to renew a RSA, the Registrar must issue a notice of proposal along with written reasons explaining the basis of the proposed action. The notice of proposal may be appealed to the Licence Appeal Tribunal, which can confirm or set aside the notice. Importantly for this case, however, the CLA does not provide any similar process for a decision refusing to issue an RSA. Under s. 4(14) of the CLA a decision of the Registrar to issue or refuse to issue a RSA is final.

[13] The school distance requirement is part of a clearly articulated government policy to keep cannabis away from children and limit youth access and exposure to cannabis products by creating distance buffers between schools and cannabis stores. The government has indicated in numerous public statements that it will take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that cannabis remains out of the hands of people under the age of 19. The school distance requirement is just one component of a larger regulatory framework that serves to limit youth access and exposure to cannabis.

[14] The AGCO requires prospective retailers to submit applications through the AGCO's public-facing online service delivery portal called "iAGCO". Since January 2019, the straight-line, or "as the crow flies," method for measuring the school distance requirement has been adopted by the Registrar and operationalized into the iAGCO portal for any RSA application.

[15] After entry of a proposed retail store's street address, the iAGCO portal automatically checks the proposed location against the school distance requirement. This is done by means of an automated "exclusion zone map" based on school location data provided to the AGCO by the Ministry of Education. Excluded zones are mapped out using a straight line on a horizontal plane to create a 150 metre zone around the property line of the parcel of land on which the school is located.

[16] If the location of a proposed store is within an exclusion zone, the iAGCO portal rejects it as being in an ineligible location and the application is "hard stopped". The applicant cannot continue to fill in or submit its application and the iAGCO portal will notify the applicant that its application is not eligible and state the reason why.

[17] Where a prospective applicant is hard stopped by the portal, it may request that AGCO staff conduct a manual review of the proposed location and the proximity to any school.

Background to the Applicant's Proposed Location and Application for a RSA

[18] On June 29, 2018, the government announced that cannabis retail stores would be privately owned and operated. It later announced that it would be switching from an open application system to a "lottery" system.

[19] The right to apply for one of the first 25 licenses in Ontario was awarded by way of a random lottery draw conducted in January, 2019. A second lottery was held in August, 2019 awarding 42 applicants the right to apply for retail store licenses and authorizations.

[20] In December, 2019 the Ontario Government announced that it would move to an open application system. ROL applications could be submitted beginning January 6, 2020. RSA applications would start being accepted on March 2, 2020.

[21] The Applicant's president, Mr. Bertucci, became aware in 2018 of the government's intent to grant licences to private retailers to sell cannabis. He also became aware, at around the same time, of the 150 metre school distance requirement. The Applicant applied unsuccessfully in the first lottery but did not participate in the second.

[22] Mr. Bertucci began looking for a suitable location and found his proposed location in the fall of 2018. He was aware that there was a school nearby and claims to have turned his mind to the school distance requirement and determined that the school was more than 150 metres from the proposed location. There is more than a little confusion, however, about how the Applicant formed the impression that its proposed location met the school distance requirement and how (and when) it obtained the measurement of the school distance requirement on which it now relies.

[23] In emails of February 26 and March 2, 2020, the Applicant represented to the AGCO that the distance from the school to its proposed location was 262 metres measured using a "measuring wheel". Mr. Bertucci was cross-examined. He admitted that the 262 metre measurement was not from a measuring wheel and, in fact, came from Google Maps (First Bertucci Examination Transcript at Q. 134-140). In answers to undertakings, the Applicant provided a text message purportedly showing a Google Earth measurement of 262 metres taken by an employee of the Applicant (Answers to Undertakings of Bertucci dated July 22, 2020 at R/F 1). The evidence of the Respondent, however, maintains that the Applicant's document is not a Google Earth measurement; rather it is a map image with a notation that the distance "to the property line of the [school] is 262 m" (Second Bertucci Examination Transcript at Q. 149-153). In the end, Mr. Bertucci stated that he did not know how the 262 metre measurement was made (Second Bertucci Examination Transcript at Q. 155).

[24] It also is not clear whether, at the time, Mr. Bertucci also determined that using the straight-line method, his proposed location was under 150 metres from the school. It is, in any event, common ground that, in fact, the proposed location is within 150 metres of a school using the straight-line method.

[25] Mr. Bertucci's evidence is also that he looked at other regulations to determine how distance is measured. He found a Toronto smoking by-law which used the term "radius" to establish the zone around the building in which smoking is prohibited. He also says he looked at a definition of "radius" in the Merriam Webster English Dictionary which defined that term as "a line segment extending from the centre of a circle or sphere to the circumference or bounding surface". By contrast, he said, one of the Merriam's definitions of "distance" was an "extent of space measured other than linearly". Based on this, Mr. Bertucci claims to have formed the "impression" that, because the CLA used the word "distance" rather than the word "radius", his "shortest distance on publicly available walkways" approach would be used to implement the school distance requirement rather than a straight line measurement. In cross-examination, however, Mr. Bertucci admitted that right before the definition in Merriam's of "distance" which he says he relied on, was a definition which read: "An extent of area or an advance along a route measured in a straight line" (emphasis added).

[26] Mr. Bertucci also claims to have relied on "common sense" and his experience as a contractor, although it is not clear, in either case, what relevance that had or the basis upon which those factors would support his "impression." In any event, in November 2018 the Applicant entered into a lease for its proposed location and shortly thereafter, commenced extensive renovations.

[27] After the Government announced in December 2019 that it would move to an open application system, the Applicant applied for a ROL on February 14, 2020. He also, for the first time, went to the iAGCO portal to create a draft application for a RSA. On February 26, 2020, the Applicant applied for a RSA through the portal but was "hard stopped". The Applicant received an online message through the portal that, "The Premises Physical Address is within a School Buffer Zone."

[28] This is when the Applicant, for the first time, contacted the AGCO by e-mail stating that the proposed location was 262 metres from the property line of the nearby school.

[29] The AGCO treated the Applicant's emails as a request for a manual review which was completed by an AGCO Eligibility Officer. To review the proposed location, the Eligibility Officer manually reviewed the AGCO's school exclusion zone map against the Applicant's proposed location. The exclusion zone map indicated that the buffer extending 150 metres from the property line of the school overlaid the Applicant's proposed location.

[30] The Eligibility Officer also reviewed the school and the proposed location using Google's Street View function to determine the closest point of the retail space and the closest point of the school's property line. Using the Google Maps distance calculator, the Eligibility Officer drew a straight line between these points, which measured at 120 metres, well within the 150 metre exclusion zone.

[31] On March 3, 2020, the Eligibility Officer informed the Applicant that its proposed location was ineligible. On March 3 and March 4, 2020, the Applicant requested that the AGCO reconsider its use of the straight-line method of measurement and also included a map that incorrectly stated that the distance measured by straight line was 186 metres. On March 5, 2020, the AGCO responded to the Applicant, outlining the method the AGCO uses to calculate distance to schools, the mechanics of the iAGCO portal's hard stop, and an overview of the steps taken during the manual review.

[32] On March 13, 2020, the Applicant requested a further reconsideration in a letter addressed to the Registrar. This letter and the material relied upon to conduct the manual review were provided to the Deputy Registrar. On March 25, 2020, the Deputy Registrar reaffirmed the result of the manual review. The Deputy Registrar rejected the Applicant's request to use a method of measurement other than the straight-line method.

The Issues

[33] The Applicant argues that the Registrar's Decision is unreasonable in four basic respects:

(1) the Decision suffers from a "fatal" lack of transparency;

(2) the Decision is inconsistent with principles of statutory interpretation, the scheme of the CLA and with common law interpretations of the meaning of "distance";

(3) the Registrar fettered its discretion when it made the decision not to issue the Applicant a RSA on the basis of an unpublicized, straight-line measurement for the school distance requirement; and

(4) the Decision fails to take into account the effect of the decision on the Applicant (having invested significant amounts of time and money into its proposed location).

Analysis

[34] Before turning to the Applicant's arguments, I will deal with a preliminary, evidentiary issue raised by the Respondent. The Respondent objects to the admission of evidence from Mr. Bertucci. The evidence explains the history of the matter from the Applicant's perspective and describes the "due diligence" efforts undertaken by the Applicant to satisfy itself that its proposed location complied with the school distance requirement.

[35] The Respondent argues that the Applicant's due diligence is irrelevant to the issues on the application for judicial review. The Respondent also submits that, as a general rule, affidavit evidence containing material that was not before the decision-maker is not admissible on judicial review unless it: a) provides non-argumentative background information; b) demonstrates that the decision-maker decided an essential point without any evidence; or, c) demonstrates the decision-maker breached the rules of natural justice.

[36] I would admit the evidence.

[37] This was a somewhat unusual process. There was no "hearing" before the Registrar in the normal sense of the word. The process was somewhat informal and took place, essentially by email, over a short period of time.

[38] Given the informal and abbreviated process that took place and having reviewed the affidavit, I do not find the Bertucci affidavit inadmissible on the application for judicial review. It provides background on the Applicant's perspective and on what the Applicant perceives as the issues. Its relevance, weight and utility can and will be addressed in the context of the merits of the Applicant's application.

1. Lack of Transparency

[39] The Applicant submits that reasonableness review is not a "rubber-stamp" or a means of sheltering administrative decision-makers from accountability. Reasonableness, as the Supreme Court of Canada held in Vavilov remains "a robust form of review" and is concerned with the existence of justification, transparency and intelligibility within the decision-making process. In particular, the Applicant relies on a passage from Vavilov in which the Supreme Court said that it is unacceptable for a decision-maker to provide a party with formal reasons that fail to justify its decision and "expect that its decision [will] be upheld on the basis of internal records that were not available to that party", Vavilov, para. 95.

[40] In this case, the Applicant submits that the main flaw of the Decision is that the Registrar's method for determining the school distance requirement was never transparent to the Applicant, or to the general public, until after the Applicant had invested significant time and money in its proposed location. By not publicly disclosing that the school distance requirement would be determined using a straight-line measurement, coupled with the AGCO's disclosure of this method after the Applicant's application for a RSA had been rejected, the Registrar's Decision was "arbitrary and opaque". In the absence of the method of measurement being publicized, it was not reasonable to expect the Applicant to know that a straight-line approach would be employed.

[41] I do not accept this argument. The Applicant's submission that the Decision suffers from a "fatal lack of transparency" misunderstands the Supreme Court's requirement of transparency and overlooks the Applicant's own failure to take basic steps to exercise due diligence and ascertain the AGCO's method of measuring the school distance requirement.

[42] The concept of transparency as it is used in Vavilov refers to transparency of the reasons and the decision itself, not transparency of the regulator's internal institutional decision-making process. The issue of whether the AGCO publicly announced the straight-line method is irrelevant to the issue of whether the AGCO's interpretation of the CLA and Regulations is reasonable.

[43] It is, in any event, simply inaccurate for the Applicant to state that the AGCO failed to disclose its use of a straight-line method of measurement until March 2020. The straight-line method has been utilized in the iAGCO portal since January 14, 2019. In the Second Allocation Lottery FAQs published on July 23, 2019, prospective entrants to the Second Lottery were advised they could use the iAGCO portal to ensure their proposed location met the school distance requirement. The evidence is that individuals who contacted the AGCO about the school distance requirement were advised that the iAGCO portal could be used to check whether a proposed location satisfied this requirement and the method used to measure the 150 metre distance. Thus, the details of the AGCO's interpretation were always publicly available to anyone who explored the iAGCO portal. Any prospective retailer who wanted to know and was prepared to make reasonable, prudent enquiries could have learned of the AGCO's straight-line method of measurement as early as January 2019.

[44] The fact that the AGCO did not issue a stand-alone public announcement about the straight-line method does not mean that its interpretation of the school distance requirement was, as the Applicant argues, "arbitrary and opaque".

[45] On the record before the Court, it is clear that the Applicant failed to take simple, available steps to ascertain whether its proposed location satisfied the school distance requirement. Mr. Bertucci knew there was a school near his proposed location. He knew that the Merriam's dictionary definition of "distance" on which he says he relied included, as the first definition, "an extent of area or an advance along a route measured in a straight line" (emphasis added). In spite of this, Mr. Bertucci relied on his experience in the construction industry to form the "impression" that the AGCO would interpret "distance" in this case, as measured by "the body of path [sic?] travelled without obstruction". He never made any enquiry of any kind to the AGCO about this issue and did not review the iAGCO portal until long after he had had acquired and renovated the proposed location. This was an entirely unreasonable basis upon which to reach any conclusion in the circumstances.

[46] For these reasons, I would not give any effect to the Applicant's argument based on an alleged lack of transparency.

2. Principles of Statutory Interpretation

[47] The Applicant argues that the AGCO's interpretation of the school distance requirement is unreasonable and that the AGCO failed to consider the purposes for which the legislative scheme was enacted.

[48] The Applicant submits that while protecting youth is one objective of the CLA, another objective is combatting the illegal cannabis market. In selecting a straight-line approach in this case, the AGCO has effectively given primacy to one legislative objective (protecting youth) at the expense of another (combatting the illegal market). This is because the broader the limits of the excluded school zones, the fewer the number of eligible locations there are, which limits the number of retail stores and, therefore, undermines the objective of combatting the illegal market.

[49] The Applicant submits that the shortest publicly available route approach assists in combating the illegal market by expanding the number of eligible locations and allowing the Applicant's store to open, while having no adverse impact on the policy objective of protecting youth by virtue of the fact that it is impossible for youth to access the proposed location from the nearby school along the 150 metre straight-line drawn by the AGCO.

[50] The Applicant also argues that a straight-line measurement of distance has been rejected as "illogical" and "absurd" for the purpose of calculating a distance between two points to determine a taxpayer's eligibility for moving expenses under the Income Tax Act.

[51] In Giannakopoulos v. Canada, 1995 CanLII 3517 (Fed. C.A.), the Federal Court of Appeal reversed years of jurisprudence calculating distance for moving expenses under the Income Tax Act by way of a straight-line, "as the crow flies" measurement. The Court favoured a pragmatic, realistic approach in which distance is calculated using ordinary routes of public travel. This approach was echoed by the Tax Court of Canada in 2007 in Nagy v. Canada, [2007] T.C.J. No. 244 (T.D.). Nagy emphasizes a "common sense" approach to measurement under the Income Tax Act over one which promotes "mechanical irrationality".

[52] The Applicant's first argument misconstrues the nature of the exercise in a judicial review.

[53] The onus of proving unreasonableness falls upon the Applicant. Decision-makers will often be confronted with multiple possible solutions or choices, all of which would be consistent with the applicable law that guides their decision. The ultimate choice, however, rests with the decision-maker. Their decisions on such matters are entitled to the greatest deference.

[54] The use of non-specific language in the governing legislation suggests a legislative intention that the decision-maker has the authority to decide which interpretation best furthers the statutory mandate. It is not enough for a party seeking judicial review to establish that a competing interpretation is reasonable, or even that a competing interpretation may be preferable. An applicant is required to establish that the interpretation chosen by the decision-maker is unreasonable, Pong Marketing and Promotions Inc. v. Ontario Media Development Corp., 2018 ONCA 555 at paras. 22 and 23.

[55] While the Applicant's proposed approach to the school distance requirement may be theoretically "feasible", that does not mean that the AGCO's chosen approach is unreasonable. Even if the Court were to accept the Applicant's contention that the Registrar's interpretation is "inferior," that would be still be insufficient to find that the Registrar's interpretation is unreasonable.

[56] Further, a reasonable interpretation of legislation may draw on industry knowledge and recognized practical limitations. In Canada Post Corp. v. CUPW, 2019 SCC 67, the Supreme Court of Canada upheld a decision-maker's interpretation of the Canada Labour Code. The decision-maker's interpretation was that the Code did not require Canada Post to conduct annual safety inspections of all postal routes. The Court held, amongst other reasons, that the decision-maker's interpretation appropriately bore in mind the "practical limitations of a workplace spanning 72 million kilometres of postal routes."

[57] Given day to day experience with its own administrative scheme, a statutory decision-maker often has superior expertise, relative to the Court, in deciding how to balance competing concerns and priorities. This is especially so where the governing legislation presents multiple goals, in which case the decision-maker's decision regarding which goals to prioritize and how should be given the greatest deference.

[58] The AGCO is entitled to interpret the CLA and Regulation in a manner that bears in mind the "practical limitations" of its mandate. Those working day to day in the implementation of frequently complex administrative schemes (like the regulation of retail recreational cannabis sales) have or will develop a considerable degree of expertise or field sensitivity to the imperatives and nuances of the legislative regime, Dunsmuir v. New Brunswick, 2008 SCC 9 at para. 49.

[59] As to the Applicant's second argument, relying on the interpretation of a distance-based requirement under the Income Tax Act, the tax cases themselves recognize that the interpretation of the words of an enactment must have regard to underlying legislative purpose. The deductibility of travel expenses for tax purposes arises out of a legislative purpose which is decidedly different from the purpose of the CLA. Under the CLA, legislative purpose is equally, if not better, served by straight-line measurement of the school distance requirement.

[60] The AGCO and the Registrar relied upon a reasonable interpretation and implementation of the school distance requirement when measured against both statutory and common law principles. The AGCO's approach to the school distance requirement is founded on a plain reading of the language of the CLA and Regulation in the context of the multiple policy objectives which underpin the legislative framework. It allows for consistency of application to the public at large and for efficient processing of retail store applications. It is at least a reasonable, if not the most reasonable, interpretation of the school distance requirement under the CLA and Regulations.

[61] I would give no effect to the Applicant's arguments on the issue of statutory interpretation.

3. Fettering of Discretion

[62] The Applicant argues that the AGCO's measurement of the school distance requirement on a straight-line basis constitutes an arbitrary exercise of discretion because the AGCO did not make the straight-line measurement method known to the public prior to the Applicant applying for the RSA.

[63] Fettering of discretion occurs when a decision-maker limits its exercise of discretion by some pre-determined or improper factor or consideration. Here, the school distance requirement is expressly mandated by the legislative framework. The issue is not the exercise of discretion but statutory interpretation - what does the school distance requirement of a minimum of 150 metres mean?

[64] The Applicant's "fettering" argument effectively relies upon the same grounds as the first two arguments, merely applied to a different legal label. For the reasons already articulated above, there is nothing arbitrary about the adoption, by the AGCO and the Registrar, of the straight-line method of measuring the school distance requirement. There was no fettering of discretion. The AGCO's and the Registrar's conclusions on the interpretation and practical application of the school distance requirement were reasonable.

[65] I would not give any effect to the Applicant's argument based on an alleged fettering of discretion.

4. Effect of the Decision on Applicant

[66] The Applicant argues that the Registrar was aware by March 3, 2020 that the Applicant had spent "hundreds of thousands of dollars securing and preparing" its proposed location. The Registrar was, therefore, aware of the effect the imposition of the straight-line measurement would have on the Applicant and its ability to operate a retail cannabis store at the proposed location. Yet the Decision makes no mention of, and ignores, the negative financial impact that the straight-line method would have on Applicant.

[67] Contrary to the Applicant's submission, there was no obligation on the AGCO or the Registrar to "grapple" with the impact the Decision would have on the Applicant in terms of time or financial investment. These are not relevant considerations within the statutory scheme; consideration of such factors would be extraneous and irrelevant to whether to grant a RSA on the basis of the school distance requirement and would run counter to the public protection purpose of the regulatory framework and objectives of the CLA.

[68] While the Applicant has perhaps suffered an adverse financial impact from the Decision at issue, this impact is the consequence of having made a financial commitment without appropriate due diligence. RSAs are not guaranteed by the Registrar and the statute provides no right or entitlement to a RSA. A RSA is granted to those that meet the eligibility and application requirements. The burden of ensuring those requirements are met, and the risk of not meeting them, are both borne by the Applicant.

[69] I would not give effect to the Applicant's argument that the Registrar's Decision and the AGCO's interpretation and application of the school distance requirement are unreasonable because they failed to consider the negative financial impact of the Decision on the Applicant.

Conclusion

[70] For all these reasons, the application for judicial review is dismissed.

Costs

[71] The Applicant submitted that an appropriate order for partial indemnity costs, regardless of who were to prevail, is $42,000. The AGCO sought $49,000. In my view, partial indemnity costs to the AGCO of $45,000 is an appropriate award in all of the circumstances, and it is so ordered.

monies would have been in the possession and control of the receiver and dispersed to creditors with claims having priority over Ms. Laiken's judgment.

[53] Generally a lawyer holds no duty to the opposite party. In Shuman v. Ontario New Home Warranty Program[8], Madam Justice K. Swinton held that such claims cannot succeed:

"Moreover, as to the claims against [the opposing party's solicitors] in negligence, or breach of fiduciary duty, there is no legal authority to support the proposition that a solicitor for a party owes a duty of care to an opposing party. Therefore, there is no basis for a claim in negligence or fiduciary duty against these defendants (Geo. Cluthe Manufacturing Co. v. ZTW Properties Inc. …). …."

[54] This issue was also before the Court in Brignolio v. Desmarais, Keenan & Robert[9]. In his decision, Mr. Justice D. Lane held, at paragraph 17, that an action does not lie against an adverse party or his counsel based on a lawyer's breaches of ethical duties since such duties are owed to the Court and to the Law Society of Upper Canada, but not to the opposite party in litigation, and referenced the public policy rationale that protects a lawyer from such actions:

"If the policy of the court were otherwise, the same difficulties would arise as would arise in the case of negligence. There would be a temptation, which many would find irresistible, to re-litigate in actions against their opponent's counsel the issues which they have lost in the main litigation, or to attempt to handicap the other side by eliminating experienced and knowledgeable counsel from the case. The public policy in such instances is referred to by Lord Donaldson of Lymington M.R. in Al-Kandari v. J.R. Brown & Co. [1988] 1 All E.R. 833 at p. 835 (C.A.) cited in the Cluthe case … as follows:

> I would go rather further and say that, in the context of "hostile" litigation, public policy will usually require that a solicitor be protected from a claim in negligence by his client's opponent, since such claims could be used as a basis for endless re-litigation of disputes.

In my view, the same principles apply to allegations of breaches of ethical conduct."

[55] There are a few well established exceptions to the general rule that a lawyer owes no duty to opposing or third parties, including:

i. Where a lawyer gives an undertaking to the Court or the opposing or third parties and fails to perform it, the lawyer may be ordered to do that act or make good the loss flowing from the failure to perform the undertaking[10].

ii. Where a lawyer is implicated in intentional torts, including fraud, slander of title, false imprisonment, malicious prosecution, abuse of process and civil conspiracy, those intentional torts are not defeated by the rule that a lawyer owes no duty of care to the opposing party in litigation.[11]

[56] Further, there is no absolute bar to an action against a lawyer by an opposing or third party whom the lawyer has injured while the lawyer was acting outside the scope of his or her duty as a solicitor. A lawyer can be liable to an opposing or a third party where the lawyer commits an independent tortious act that causes foreseeable injury.[12]

[57] In the present case, Ms. Laiken squarely frames her action against Mr. Carey in negligence. She does not allege that he committed any intentional tort, voluntarily gave an

[290] In Halpern Investments Ltd. v. Sovereign General Insurance Company, 2004 ABQB 865, Clark J. reviewed several cases in which the corporate veil was pierced because of fraud or other improper conduct. He went on to pierce the corporate veil to prevent an individual who was the guiding hand behind two corporate entities from benefiting from an admitted fraud; see also B.G. Preeco I (Pacific Coast) Ltd. v. Bon Street Holdings Limited (1989), 1989 CanLII 230 (BC CA), 37 B.C.L.R. (2d) 258 (C.A.)

[291] The plaintiff is obliged to mitigate damages caused by a contractual breach when he or she learns of it by taking all reasonable steps to prevent further loss. Where such steps are undertaken, the plaintiff can recover for the loss and all reasonable expenses incurred in mitigation of that loss: Asamera Oil Corp. Ltd.

[292] Once the plaintiff has proven damages on a reasonable preponderance of credible evidence, the burden lies on the defendant to raise and establish a failure to mitigate. In order to discharge the burden and limit the award of damages, the defendant must lead adequate proof of the alleged failure to the same standard of proof required of the plaintiff: Peerzan v. Cameron, 1982 CarswellBC 2113 (S.C.) at ¶ 7; Red Deer College v. Michaels, 1975 CanLII 15 (SCC), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 324 at 331; Graham v. Rogers, 2001 BCCA 432 at ¶ 85.

[293] The duty to mitigate does not require the plaintiff to act perfectly in response to the defendant's breaches of contract. Although the defendant is entitled to expect that only reasonable remedial costs will be expended, the court will not take an overly critical view taking into account the exigencies of the situation faced by the plaintiff: Addco Drywall Ltd. v. White Rock Manor Joint Venture, 1991 CarswellBC 831 (S.C.) at ¶ 105.

Application of Legal Principles to the Facts

[294] I agree with Hospitality's analysis regarding its Operational and Ownership Losses. In my view, Mr. Suddaby's calculations and underlying assumptions are logical, reasonable and fair. In particular, I am satisfied that the overall occupancy level of the 113-room Hotel skilfully operated by Mr. Somani would probably have been the same as that achieved for the 95-room Hotel throughout the relevant period. I am also satisfied that economies of scale of the sort Mr. Suddaby identified would have been enjoyed.

[295] I do not accept Mr. Instance's criticisms of Mr. Suddaby's Operational Loss analysis. Given the lead-time required for reservations and other absorption adjustments, the lack of increased profit after July 2008 is unsurprising and the summer downturn of 2008 is of negligible effect. In addition, Mr. Instance's own analysis suffered from several deficiencies. For example, it was unreasonable for him to assume that the Meeting Rooms would generate no revenue and the expense ratio per room would increase rather than decrease.

[296] I also accept Mr. Suddaby's Ownership Loss analysis and reject that of Mr. Instance. In my view, Mr. Instance's suggestion that property tax rates would likely have increased when the Louie Group Strata Lots were conveyed is inconsistent with the evidence and speculative at best. In addition, his view that Operational and Ownership Losses cannot both be properly claimed is untenable. If Hospitality did not choose to pay itself rent for the Louie Group Strata Lots, its operational profit would have increased by the same amount. Accordingly, from a loss perspective the result would be the same.

[297] In so far as the evidence of Mr. Instance conflicts with that of Mr. Suddaby, I prefer the evidence of Mr. Suddaby.

[298] I also am satisfied that the adjustments proposed by Hospitality are required to achieve full and fair compensation. I also find there is no basis for adjusting the damages awarded with respect to taxation. That is a matter for the parties.

[299] As to the breaches of Dr. Louie's covenant, again I generally agree with Hospitality's analysis. Dr. Louie acted personally, intentionally and in direct violation of his covenant by providing substantial funding for the Prohibited Actions. In so far as he also acted indirectly, through his companies, it is appropriate to pierce the corporate veil in order to prevent these entities from being used as a shield for such improper conduct.

[300] I do not accept that Hospitality's damages for Dr. Louie's breach of covenant were unforeseeable or remote, as submitted by the Louie Group Defendants. On the contrary, one of the central purposes of the LOI was to end the need for either party to engage in litigation that was adverse to Hospitality's interests. When the litigation storm continued, due in part to Dr. Louie's breaches of covenant, this contemplated purpose was defeated. The foreseeable result was that further legal fees were incurred.

[301] I also do not accept that the Prohibited Actions could well have proceeded in the absence of the impugned funding. I have found that the LSHS and Executive Actions would have ended by October 1, 2007 because the remaining LSOG defendants would have settled by then if the litigation had not been funded by Dr. Louie. I also find that the Peh Proceedings would not have been conducted and, at most, one-half of the fees incurred would have been required to conclude the Kasahara Proceedings if the Kasaharas alone had been paying their lawyer. In so far as it is necessary to do so, I resolve any uncertainty on these matters in favour of Hospitality based on the Armory principle.

[302] There is no basis in the evidence to support a finding that 25% of the fees incurred would have expended for "clean up" costs in the absence of Dr. Louie's breach of covenant. Accordingly, I decline to make such a finding in favour of the Louie Group Defendants.

[303] I do accept, however, that Hospitality is entitled to recover only those legal fees, disbursements and taxes that were reasonably incurred in responding to the Prohibited Actions: Asamera Oil Corp. Ltd. Although there is no suggestion in the evidence that any of the fees, disbursements or taxes actually incurred were unreasonable, a detailed analysis on this issue was not undertaken at trial. For this reason, I conclude this task should be performed by the Registrar.

[304] Taking into account the foregoing, I conclude that Hospitality is entitled to damages calculated as follows:

> Hotel Operations and Rental Income
>
> With respect to loss of net income for hotel operations from December 2005 to July 2008, the sum of $1,479,036; and
>
> With respect to the loss of net rental income for the Louie Group Strata Lots for the period December 25 to September 2008, the sum of $774,561;
>
> From which combined sum of $2,253,597 is to be deducted the sum of interest on the unpaid capital sum payable for the Louie Group Strata Lots,
>
> With pre-judgment interest payable on this adjusted sum calculated as though the lost income was received over time, monthly;
>
> With respect to loss of net rental income for the Louie Group Strata Lots from October 2008 to September 2009, an amount equal to the net rental income received by the Louie Group defendants during this period;
>
> Together with pre-judgment interest, less additional interest;
>
> With leave to make further submissions in writing or in person in the event agreement as to calculation is not reached.
>
> Support of Prohibited Actions
>
> With respect to the LSHS Action and the Executive Action: all legal fees and disbursements reasonably incurred by Hospitality from and after October 1, 2007, as assessed by the Registrar;
>
> With respect to the Kasahara Proceedings, 50% of all legal fees and disbursements reasonably incurred by Hospitality as assessed by the Registrar;
>
> With respect to the Peh Proceedings, all legal fees and disbursements reasonably incurred by Hospitality as assessed by the Registrar.

[305] I also award special costs against the Louie Group Defendants and 567 on a full indemnity basis, with joint and several liability for the special costs, on the basis outlined below.

Should the damages and costs awarded be set off against the purchase price of the Louie Group Strata Lots?

[306] I have awarded damages and costs against the Louie Group Defendants in addition to ordering specific performance. Hospitality seeks a term of the order permitting damages and costs to set off against the purchase price of the Louie Group Strata Lots.

[307] The damages and costs awards are based on and arise out of the Louie Group Defendants' breaches of the LOI. It is, therefore, appropriate for Hospitality to pay the purchase price of the Louie Group Strata Lots less the amount due for damages and costs: Eider; Tanu.

THE 567 ACTION AND THE COUNTERCLAIM

Are the Alleged June Agreements authentic or fraudulent?

[308] I have concluded that Mr. Nomani created the Alleged June Agreements on November 7 and 8, 2005, not in June 2005 as he claimed. I have also concluded that Dr. Louie signed seven of them on November 8, 2005 at Mr. Visram's office and Jonathon Louie signed the eighth some time thereafter. As noted, this conclusion is based on the following factors:

i) Dr. Louie's revised testimony in which he admitted signing the Alleged June Agreements on November 8, 2005 at Mr. Visram's office;

ii) Dr. Louie's admission that he committed perjury on this issue and counselled his son, Jonathon, to do the same;

iii) Dr. Louie's decision to back out of the LOI almost immediately after it was concluded;

iv) Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani's failure to disclose the Alleged June Agreements to the Court, Dr. Louie's counsel, opposing counsel or Hospitality prior to November 8, 2005, although they were obliged to do so or disclosure was in Dr. Louie's interest;

v) the forensic evidence regarding use of Mr. Nomani's computer on November 7 and 8, 2005, together with Mr. Nomani's inherently improbable explanation for that use; and

vi) Mr. Nomani's attempts to hide, alter and manufacture electronic documents related to the Alleged June Agreements.

[309] Hospitality submits that the Alleged June Agreements were created for the fraudulent purpose of asserting a pre-existing right to the Louie Group Strata Lots in order to defeat its rights under the LOI. According to Hospitality, immediately after the LOI was concluded Mr. Nomani persuaded Dr. Louie that he had made a bad deal and they could negotiate better terms. In furtherance of this goal, on November 7 and 8, 2005 Mr. Nomani created and Dr. Louie executed the Alleged June Agreements. Thereafter, both relied on them in various litigation contexts at great cost to Hospitality.

[310] Dr. Louie concedes that he signed the Alleged June Agreements on November 8, 2005, after the LOI was concluded. He also concedes that Mr. Nomani "lacks credibility" with respect to the Alleged June Agreements. He submits, however, that the alleged fraud was of no consequence because the RFRs were never exercised and Hospitality's priority status with respect to the Louie Group Strata Lots was never truly endangered. In essence, his position is that the alleged fraud was so poorly designed and executed that it caused no real damage.

[311] Mr. Nomani maintains that the Alleged June Agreements were created and executed in June, 2005. He vehemently denies committing any fraudulent act and accuses Hospitality of engaging in "a propaganda campaign to color the main facts and issues". He goes on to describe its theory as "circumstantial and anecdotal".

[312] Fraud is amongst the most serious forms of civil action: BG Checo International Ltd. v. British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority, 1990 CanLII 819 (BC CA), [1990] B.C.J. No. 672 (C.A.). Sometimes called the tort of deceit or fraudulent misrepresentation, it may be committed in a wide variety of ways. Its essential elements are:

i) a false representation of fact by the defendant;

ii) made with knowledge of its falsity or, alternatively, recklessly as to its truth;

iii) made with the intention that the plaintiff would be deceived and act upon it, which occurred; and

iv) the plaintiff suffered damage as a result:

Derry v. Peek (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337 (H.L.); Han v. Cho 2009 BCSC 458 at ¶ 79; BG Checo.

[313] An intention to defraud may be established by direct or circumstantial evidence. In many cases, the court will analyse so-called "badges of fraud" to make the necessary determination. In the context of an allegedly fraudulent transfer of property, such badges or indicia may include:

i) the relationship between the parties to the transfer;

ii) the effect of the transfer on the assets of the debtor;

iii) evidence of haste in making the transfer;

iv) the timing of the transfer relative to claims against the debtor;

v) secrecy; and

vi) the effect of the transfer on the creditor:

Frimer v. Lercher, [1984] B.C.J. No. 728 at ¶ 12 (S.C.); Wilson v. Gill (1995), 1995 CanLII 1215 (BC SC), 33 C.B.R. (3d) 21 at ¶ 25 (B.C.S.C.).

[314] In a civil proceeding, fraud must be established on a balance of probabilities: F.H. v. McDougall, 2008 SCC 53 at ¶ 49.

[315] In this case, Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani were determined to defeat the LOI within hours of its conclusion. They maintained their determination in the days that followed, despite receiving legal advice from Messrs. Epstein, Jakubec and Berger that the LOI was binding and enforceable. I conclude that, faced with this unwelcome advice, they decided to create the Alleged June Agreements for the fraudulent purpose of advancing their goal.

[316] For over three years, Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani falsely represented that the Alleged June Agreements were created and signed in June 2005, before the LOI was concluded. Based on this false representation, they claimed that 567 had a pre-existing right to the Louie Group Strata Lots and, therefore, Hospitality's rights under the LOI were superseded. Their intention in so doing was to deceive Hospitality, persuade it to negotiate better terms for the Louie Group Strata Lots, and improve 567's position. They also intended to deceive the Court in an effort to prevail in the litigation.

[317] Hospitality did not accept that the Alleged June Agreements were authentic. In consequence, Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani's fraudulent purpose was never fully achieved. Hospitality was obliged, however, to respond to the fraudulent misrepresentation, and did so by refuting the false claim and seeking to enforce its rights under the LOI. Although ultimately successful, Hospitality suffered considerable damage in connection with costs and delay incurred in the hotly contested litigation.

[318] I am satisfied the essential elements of fraud have been established. The Alleged June Agreements are fraudulent. Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani are both parties to the fraud.

Did the Louie Group grant the RFRs to 567 in June 2005, or at all?

[319] Given the absence of independent evidence, I have been unable to make findings regarding the nature and terms of any verbal agreement that existed between the Louie Group Defendants and 567. That being so, 567 has failed to discharge the requisite onus of proof and I answer this question in the negative.

Is 567's claim moot or is it necessary to decide whether any instruments or agreements give priority to 567 over Hospitality's rights under the LOI? If such instruments or agreements have been established, did Hospitality induce Dr. Louie to breach them?

[320] I have concluded that no instruments or agreements giving priority to 567 over Hospitality's rights under the LOI have been established on the evidence. If I am wrong, however, and the evidence supports such a finding, it is prudent to go on and consider whether 567 is entitled to a declaration to this effect.

[321] Throughout the course of the trial, 567 maintained that the Alleged June Agreements were executed in June 2005, before the LOI was concluded. It also maintained that, in any event, they evidence the parties' verbal agreement with respect to the RFRs. At the trial's conclusion, Mr. Nomani announced that 567 no longer sought to rely upon the RFRs. Nevertheless, he asked me to declare that the RFRs give priority to 567 over Hospitality's rights under the LOI and Hospitality induced Dr. Louie to breach them.

[322] Courts generally decline to decide cases which raise merely hypothetical questions. Occasionally, however, a court may exercise its discretion to address an issue that is moot. For example, if an important question arises recurrently, but only briefly, the court may decide to answer it even though there is no longer a live controversy in the case: Borowski v. Canada (Attorney General), 1989 CanLII 123 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 342 at 358-363.

[323] Although moot issues may be addressed in certain circumstances, the court's discretion will not be exercised if no practical purpose would be served by so doing. In particular, it has been repeatedly held that declaratory relief should not be granted where the declaration sought would be without practical effect: Gardner v. City of Williams Lake, 2005 BCSC 706 at ¶ 97-99; Haldorson v. Coquitlam (City) (2000), 3 C.P.C. 225 at ¶ 12 (B.C.C.A.).

[324] From the parties' perspective, no practical purpose would be served by granting the declaratory relief sought by 567. In addition, the existence or non-existence of the RFRs is not a matter of general importance. In the circumstances, I am satisfied the claim is moot and no further analysis is appropriate or required: Borowski; Gardner; Haldorson.

[325] I am also satisfied that even if the evidence establishes a verbal agreement between Dr. Louie and 567, Hospitality did not induce Dr. Louie to breach it.

[326] The tort of inducing breach of contract is committed where the defendant induces a breach of contract between the plaintiff and a third party and, as a result, the plaintiff suffers damage: Slade and Stewart Ltd. v. Haynes, [1969] B.C.J. No. 439 at ¶ 10 (S.C.). The essential elements are:

i) the defendant had knowledge of the contract;

ii) the defendant intended to bring about, induce or procure the breach of the contract;

iii) the defendant persuaded or otherwise prevailed upon one party to a contract to break it, thereby causing loss to the plaintiff, the other contracting party or the defendant induces the contract breaker to enter into a contract with him or her that is inconsistent with the existing contract of the plaintiff; and

iv) the plaintiff suffers damages as a consequence of the defendant's conduct.

[327] In this case, Hospitality knew there was an agreement of some sort in place between Dr. Louie, 567 and Mr. Nomani regarding the Louie Group Strata Lots. As noted, however, at the LOI negotiating session, when specifically asked about their arrangements, Dr. Louie assured its principals that they did not present an obstacle to settlement. He also remarked that Mr. Nomani may be upset by the settlement, but would have to move on.

[328] Hospitality was entitled to rely upon Dr. Louie's assurances, and did so. Given what he told its principals, I find that no intention to bring about, induce or procure a breach of the agreement between Dr. Louie, 567 and Mr. Nomani was formed by Hospitality. On the contrary, Hospitality took reasonable steps to ensure that the LOI would not interfere with any such arrangements that may have existed. It follows that Hospitality did not commit the tort of inducing breach of contract.

Did Mr. Nomani induce Dr. Louie to breach the LOI?

[329] Hospitality submits that, from October 21, 2005 to the time of trial, Mr. Nomani induced Dr. Louie to breach the LOI by refusing to follow through with its performance. His motive in so doing was to protect and enhance 567's position by maintaining its ability to operate a hotel within a hotel.

[330] According to Hospitality, within hours of the LOI's conclusion Mr. Nomani persuaded Dr. Louie that he had made a bad deal by following the advice of his lawyers. Dr. Louie was persuaded and, as a result, he decided to disavow the LOI. Thereafter, Mr. Nomani and Dr. Louie took the steps discussed in the conspiracy section below together. Those steps caused great loss to Hospitality.

[331] Mr. Nomani responds that Dr. Louie made his own decisions concerning the LOI's non-performance. Although he admits to being consulted, Mr. Nomani denies engaging in any acts of persuasion. On the contrary, Mr. Nomani claims that Dr. Louie decided on his own to send the Duress Fax and stop payment on the performance bond cheque immediately following the LOI negotiating session. Thereafter, according to Mr. Nomani, Dr. Louie acted independently, based on a sincere belief that the LOI was unfair and invalid.

[332] I do not accept Mr. Nomani's submission. Dr. Louie trusted him and relied heavily on his advice and persuasion in all matters related to the Louie Group Strata Lots. In my view, this reliance exemplifies Dr. Louie's admittedly poor business judgment and extraordinary naivety.

[333] From the outset, Mr. Nomani did all that he could to enhance his own position in connection with Hotel matters. For example, in 2003 and 2004 he acted as a consultant to both Dr. Louie and Hospitality concurrently and told Mr. Daroowala "If I can't make money from my friends, I have to make money from my friends' enemies". He also took sales commissions from LSOG owners, Mr. Franiek and Dr. Louie for agreements regarding LSOG units. I infer that this long-standing pattern of self-serving action was at the heart of his efforts to persuade Dr. Louie to disavow the LOI.

[334] As noted, the August Draft LOI included a term that Mr. Nomani would be paid $50,000 per annum and be allowed to maintain a Hotel office. Mr. Somani wisely refused to agree. For that reason, the LOI did not provide for Mr. Nomani's continued participation in Hotel operations. When he learned of its terms, Mr. Nomani immediately called Dr. Louie and prevailed upon him to change his mind.

[335] Dr. Louie was persuaded for two primary reasons: he was unsatisfied with the purchase price agreed upon and felt guilty for leaving Mr. Nomani out of the settlement. Mr. Nomani's intention in persuading him was to procure the breach of the LOI by ensuring its non-performance. Although he no doubt hoped Dr. Louie could get a better price for his units, I conclude that Mr. Nomani's primary motive was to enhance his own commercial position.

[336] As discussed below, Mr. Nomani prevailed upon Dr. Louie to breach the LOI from October 21, 2005 onward. By November 7, 2005 he knew from the lawyers that it was probably valid. By December 27, 2006 he knew from the Court that it was undeniably so. As a result of Mr. Nomani's persuasive efforts, Hospitality suffered loss and damage. It follows that the essential elements of the tort of inducing breach of contract have been made out.

Did Mr. Nomani and Dr. Louie conspire to defeat the LOI?

[337] Hospitality submits that, from October 21, 2005 to the time of trial, Mr. Nomani conspired with Dr. Louie and the other Louie Group Defendants unlawfully to undermine the LOI and to injure Hospitality. According to Hospitality, together they pursued an aggressive "scorched earth" policy aimed at robbing Hospitality of its rights and thereby destroying it, regardless of the cost to anyone concerned.

[338] In summary, Hospitality says the agreement was reached when Mr. Nomani spoke with Dr. Louie during the morning court break on October 21, 2005 and Dr. Louie expressed his willingness to reverse the LOI. Thereafter, they worked together to achieve this goal, which they knew to be unlawful, by, amongst other things: drafting and sending the Duress Fax; arranging to stop payment of the performance bond cheque and returning the deposit; creating and relying upon the Alleged June Agreements; and raising and disbursing massive sums on litigation contrary to Hospitality's interests. They also worked together to hide many of their actions and, in so doing, repeatedly breached court orders and their litigation obligations. According to Hospitality, in conspiring to carry out these acts, Mr. Nomani and Dr. Louie intended to injure Hospitality and knew that injury would result, or acted for the predominant purpose of injuring Hospitality.

[339] The Louie Group Defendants and Mr. Nomani respond that their sole motivation was to protect their own commercial self-interest. In their submission, they did so within their legal rights, albeit with a measure of distrust and hostility borne of the soured business relationship with Hospitality. According to both, this attitude was understandable given Hospitality's substantial financial power, unreasonable conduct in connection with the disputed issues and aggressive pursuit of its own commercial self-interest. So, too, was their ultimately incorrect, but sincerely held, belief that the Louie Group Defendants should not be bound by the LOI because it was unfair.

[340] The Louie Group Defendants also emphasize that Dr. Louie was extremely busy with his medical practice. In their submission, he had no time or inclination to enter into nefarious agreements with Mr. Nomani regarding Hotel matters and did not do so.

Rather, he left everything to Mr. Nomani, who was his agent, and trusted that Mr. Nomani would act appropriately. At most, Dr. Louie had knowledge of some of his agent's actions and acquiesced; he did not agree. Accordingly, they say the tort of conspiracy has not been made out.

[341] In Can-Dive Services Ltd. v. Pacific Coast Energy Corp., [1993] B.C.J. No. 2958 (C.A.), McEachern C.J.B.C. described the essential elements of the tort of conspiracy. He stated at ¶ 5:

> 5 Accordingly, the following elements must be proved:
> 1. an agreement between two or more persons;
> 2. concerted action taken pursuant to the agreement;
> 3. (i) if the action is lawful, there must be evidence that the conspirators intended to cause damage to the plaintiff;
> (ii) if the action is unlawful, there must at least be evidence that the conspirators knew or ought to have known that their action would injure the plaintiff (i.e., constructive intent);
> 4. actual damage suffered by the plaintiff.

[342] There are two types of civil conspiracy in Canada: i) conspiracy to injure; and ii) conspiracy to use unlawful means. For the first type it is necessary to prove that the conspiracy was undertaken for the predominant purpose of injuring the plaintiff. For the second, regardless of the conspiracy's predominant purpose, it is necessary to prove that the defendants should have known that injury to the plaintiff would ensue: Canada Cement LaFarge Ltd. v. British Columbia Lightweight Aggregate Ltd., 1983 CanLII 23 (SCC), [1983] 1 S.C.R. 452 at 471-472.

[343] For both types of conspiracy an agreement between the defendant and one or more others must be established either directly or by inference. The agreement need not be contractual. Rather, the plaintiff must show that a defendant combined or conspired with others to carry out a common design or a means of achieving a common objective, which, when implemented, injured the plaintiff: Golden Capital Securities Ltd. v. Rempel, 2004 BCCA 565 at ¶ 47.

[344] As in all civil cases, the standard of proof for civil conspiracy is proof on a balance of probabilities: F.H. at ¶ 49. Once an agreement has been established the statements of one co-conspirator are admissible against all others if they were made while the conspiracy was ongoing in furtherance of the common object: Sopinka and Lederman, The Law of Evidence in Civil Cases (Butterworth & Co., Toronto: 1974) at p. 149.

[345] A defendant who conspires with another to commit unlawful acts may be liable for the consequences even though some acts are instigated by a single co-conspirator. In particular, liability will be imposed if the defendant knew or should have known that such acts were a probable consequence of the common objective being carried out: Golden Capital Securities Ltd. at ¶ 74.

[346] A range of unlawful actions have been held to support a finding of civil conspiracy. For example, in Meehan v. Tremblett, [1994] N.B.J. No. 502 (Q.B.) the court based a conspiracy finding on the preparation of a false incident report in an employment context. In addition, inducing breach of contract and fraud have both been found to constitute unlawful action in connection with findings of civil conspiracy: Cotter v. Osborne, 1909 CarswellMan 28 (C.A.); Seaboard Owners Ltd. v. Cross, 1949 CarswellBC 65 (S.C.); Royal Bank v. Holoboff, [1999] A.J. No. 380 (Q.B.).

[347] I conclude that Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani entered into an agreement that Dr. Louie would disavow the LOI and refuse to follow through with its performance. The agreement was first reached on October 21, 2005 and maintained thereafter until Dr. Louie consented, mid-trial, to an order for specific performance. The agreement is established directly on Dr. Louie's and Mr. Nomani's own testimony. It is also established by inference from their conduct.

[348] Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani shared a common objective in disavowing the LOI: to obtain a better price for the Louie Group Strata Lots, if possible, and to enhance 567's position. In furtherance of this objective, they took many concerted actions, some of which were unlawful. The most obvious such action was the creation, execution and reliance upon the fraudulent Alleged June Agreements. They also worked together to raise and disburse funds in breach of Dr. Louie's covenant and the May 2008 Injunction, and unlawfully hid this conduct by swearing false affidavits in connection with document production.

[349] Although Dr. Louie was not involved in the day-to-day minutiae of all of the foregoing, he was kept apprised by Mr. Nomani. Importantly, he did not merely acquiesce; he actively agreed. Dr. Louie personally signed the fraudulent Alleged June Agreements created by Mr. Nomani and perjured himself regarding the date of his signature. He also arranged for deposit of the funds raised through the Franiek Loans in the Scotiabank Trust Account knowing that Mr. Nomani would use them to pay legal fees for the Prohibited Actions.

[350] I reject Dr. Louie's submission that, as a matter of law, he and Mr. Nomani could not engage in a civil conspiracy because Mr. Nomani was employed as his agent. In summary, he argues that, in these circumstances, he was merely agreeing with an extension of himself, which cannot be done. No case authority was cited in support of this unusual proposition and, in my view, it is untenable. Regardless of the hierarchy created by a contractual or employment relationship, independent actors are capable of entering agreements with one another to take joint action. If the joint action is intended to cause damage or is unlawful, it may form the basis of a finding of civil conspiracy.

[351] I accept that Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani may have believed the LOI was unfair and hoped it was invalid when they first agreed upon its disavowal. By November 7, 2005, however, they had received clear legal advice that the LOI was binding and enforceable. By December 27, 2006, Pitfield J. had confirmed that this was so. Nevertheless, Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani remained determined to undermine the LOI, regardless of its validity, and attempted to do so at great cost to Hospitality.

[352] I also accept that Dr. Louie's and Mr. Nomani's predominant purpose throughout was to advance their own commercial self-interest. Although Dr. Louie felt very hostile toward Hospitality, his primary focus was always the effect of his actions upon himself. The same was true of Mr. Nomani. The injurious effect of their joint action upon Hospitality was, however, entirely foreseeable and in that sense intentional. In addition, regardless of their predominant purpose Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani engaged in unlawful means to achieve their common objective.

[353] The unlawful means Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani agreed upon and implemented in pursuit of their common objective included fraud, perjury and the breach of court orders. These acts predictably caused injury to Hospitality.

[354] Taking into account the foregoing, I conclude that the essential elements of civil conspiracy have been made out.

Should punitive damages be awarded and, if so, against whom and in what amount?

[355] Hospitality seeks punitive damages of at least $500,000 against the Louie Group Defendants, 567 and Mr. Nomani. In summary, it says their misconduct from and after October 21, 2005 amounted to a malicious, sustained, secretive attack on Hospitality's interests intended to cause it as much harm as possible and, in so doing, to abuse the process of the court. Misconduct of this magnitude and complexity is, in Hospitality's submission, virtually unprecedented in the courts of British Columbia and severe punishment is required. According to Hospitality, unless high punitive damages are awarded the objective of deterrence will not be adequately achieved.

[356] Hospitality submits that the defendants' egregious misconduct far exceeded Dr. Louie's failure to perform his obligation to sell the 30 Louie Group Strata Lots. Acting jointly, Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani also immediately conspired to defeat the LOI. Thereafter they secretly supported litigation contrary to Hospitality's interests; breached injunctions; created the Alleged June Agreements; abused the Court's process by making false claims against Hospitality, commencing frivolous actions and filing CPLs in the Land Title Office; and manufactured and introduced false evidence throughout the course of the proceedings.

[357] In Hospitality's submission, some of these actionable wrongs will not be the subject of awards for compensatory damages. In combination, they dramatically increased the time, cost and difficulty associated with achieving a just resolution to the parties' dispute. Such misconduct must be soundly denounced.

[358] The Louie Group Defendants respond that the conduct complained of occurred in the context of a commercial relationship. Hospitality was far from vulnerable and, as might be expected, they pursued their own commercial interests aggressively. They submit that before Pitfield J. declared the LOI to be binding Dr. Louie believed it was invalid and, therefore, his actions were justifiable. Thereafter, his actions amounted to no more than vigorous pursuit of litigation. In the Louie Group Defendants' submission, such actions might properly result in substantial compensatory damages and a punitive costs award, but they do not justify an additional award of punitive damages.

[359] The Louie Group Defendants go on to say that their support of litigation contrary to the interests of Hospitality did not amount to an independent actionable wrong within the meaning of Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., 2002 SCC 18 at ¶ 36-40. They also say that the Alleged June Agreements were not "true" forgeries because a verbal agreement had been reached in June, 2005. In the alternative, the Louie Group Defendants submit that, if awarded, punitive damages should be in the range of $30,000 to $50,000.

[361] As noted, the primary objective of civil law is just compensation. In exceptional circumstances, however, punishment is also a legitimate, socially valuable goal. In such cases, the plaintiff acts as a public interest enforcer as well as a private interest claimant and the defendant is punished for conduct that offends the court's sense of decency: Whiten.

[362] An award of punitive damages is designed to punish, deter and denounce reprehensible misconduct that departs markedly from ordinary standards of decent behaviour. It can be made in any category of case where there is an independent actionable wrong: Whiten at ¶ 67-83; Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 (SCC), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130 at ¶ 196.

[363] Although available in principle in all categories of cases punitive damages are exceptionally rare in cases involving commercial contracts, even where there is fraud. In cases of fraudulent misconduct punitive damages will be awarded, however, if, but only if, compensatory damages do not adequately achieve the objectives of retribution, deterrence and denunciation: Performance Industries Inc. v. Sylvan Lake Golf & Tennis Club Ltd., 2002 SCC 19, at ¶ 77-92; Insurance Corp. of British Columbia v. Husseinian, 2008 BCSC 241, at ¶ 161-180.

[364] To be justified, a punitive damages award must be rationally connected to the facts and the law's objectives. It must also be imposed with restraint. The focus of analysis is the defendant's misconduct, not the loss of the plaintiff. The quantum awarded should be proportionate to the degree of misconduct, the harm caused, the plaintiff's vulnerability and any advantage wrongfully gained. Factors such as the punitive effect of the overall award and other penalties imposed should also be taken into account: Whiten at ¶ 67-76 and ¶ 94; Husseinian at ¶ 161-163.

[365] The degree of blameworthiness at issue may involve several elements. These include, amongst others: whether the misconduct was planned and deliberate; the defendant's motive and awareness that the misconduct was wrong; the period over which the misconduct persisted; attempts at concealment; and whether the interest violated was deeply personal to the plaintiff or irreplaceable: Whiten at ¶ 113; Louis Vuitton Malletier S.A. v. 486353 B.C. Ltd., 2008 BCSC 799 at ¶ 85.

[366] In Husseinian, Gerow J. awarded punitive damages ranging from $3,500 to $75,000 against several defendants who had defrauded their motor vehicle insurer. In so doing, she identified the financial means of the defendant, whether the defendant required the plaintiff to prove its claim, whether the defendant abused the court's process, whether there was planned and deliberate fraud, and whether there were multiple acts as relevant factors to be taken into account: Husseinian at ¶ 163.

[367] The Supreme Court of Canada recently considered awards of punitive damages imposed in cases involving commercial contracts in Whiten and Performance Industries. In Whiten a punitive damages award of $1,000,000 was upheld where an insurer acted exceptionally reprehensibly in denying a legitimate fire loss claim made by a policy holder. In contrast, in Performance Industries, a punitive damages award of $200,000 was set aside where one businessman attempted to gain a commercial advantage by relying on a written document that he knew misstated the oral agreement actually reached.

[368] The power imbalance between the plaintiff and defendant, and the plaintiff's consequent vulnerability, was a significant factor in the Supreme Court's analysis in Whiten. As Binnie J. noted, this factor is rarely present in cases involving commercial contracts. At ¶ 115, he stated:

> I add two cautionary notes on the issue of vulnerability. First, this factor militates against the award of punitive damages in most commercial situations, particularly where the cause of action is contractual and the problem for the court is to sort out the bargain the parties have made. Most participants enter the marketplace knowing it is fuelled by the aggressive pursuit of self-interest. Here, on the other hand, we are dealing with a homeowner's "peace of mind" contract.

[369] Binnie J. also commented on power imbalance and vulnerability as they relate to punitive damages at ¶ 88 in Performance Industries. He stated:

> This was a commercial relationship between two businessmen. One tried to pull a fast one on the other. There was no abuse of a dominant position. O'Connor's misconduct was planned and deliberate and he persisted in it over a period of four and a half years, but in the end the courts did their work and Bell obtained full compensation plus costs on a solicitor-client basis, all of which undoubtedly had a punitive effect on O'Connor. In addition, O'Connor is stigmatized with a judicial finding (now upheld by two appellate courts) that he acted in a way that was "fraudulent, dishonest and deceitful". His conduct has been soundly denounced and he has been required personally to pay a large amount of money in compensation. The respondent is unable to identify any aggravating circumstances that would not be present in almost any case of business fraud except that O'Connor was found to have behaved abominably in the conduct of the litigation. However, as stated, the trial judge excluded this consideration from the award of punitive damages because he identified it as the basis for his award of solicitor-client costs.

[370] Each case is, of course, unique and fact specific. Some examples of punitive damages awarded in recent years, in addition to those awarded in Whiten, Performance Industries, and Husseinian include: Evocation Publishing v. Hamilton, 2002 BCSC 1797 - $200,000 against certain defendants, $300,000 against another; Louis Vuitton Malletier S.A. - $100,000 against certain defendants, $200,000 against another; Golden Capital Sec. Ltd. v. Holmes et. al., 2003 BCSC 1265 - $200,000; 1 Ramjit Inc. v. 3 for 1 Pizza & Wings (Canada) Inc., 2004 CarswellOnt 6402 (Sup.Ct.) - $150,000; Canavan v. Feldman, 2004 CanLII 4787 (ON SC), 2004 CarswellOnt 3157 (Sup.Ct.) - $100,000; and Taylor & Associates Ltd. v. Louis Bull Tribe No. 439, 2006 ABQB 698 - $100,000.

[371] In this case, I find that Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani behaved utterly outrageously. Their planned, deliberate, persistent fraud went far beyond the sort of "fast one" pulled in Performance Industries. Within hours of the LOI's conclusion, they conspired to undermine it. After they were told it was valid and enforceable, they created, executed and relied upon the fraudulent Alleged June Agreements in a variety of litigation contexts for a period of over three years. In so doing, they repeatedly abused the court process and required Hospitality to prove its claim.

[372] I reject the Louie Group Defendants' submission that the Alleged June Agreements were not "true" forgeries. They most assuredly were. Whatever the terms of the informal verbal agreement with 567 may have been, they were not reduced to writing and formally executed, as falsely represented by the Alleged June Agreements. Dr. Louie's lack of insight into his misconduct is reflected in this misguided submission. Mr. Nomani's lack of shame for his own is reflected in his persistent denials.

[373] I also reject the Louie Group Defendants' submission that their support of the Prohibited Actions did not amount to an independent actionable wrong. In addition to breaching the LOI, Dr. Louie breached the May 2008 Injunction when he continued to fund the LSHS and Executive Actions.

[374] It is true that Hospitality was not a vulnerable adversary. Like Dr. Louie, it enjoys the benefit of very considerable means. It is also true that all concerned pursued their commercial interests with determination and a measure of aggression. The crucial difference is that Hospitality did so honestly. Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani did not.

[375] Hospitality was able to prevail, in part, because it was not financially vulnerable. It expended vast amounts of money, time and energy in the litigation and was thus able to uncover much of the hidden truth. While most of its losses are recoverable in damages, it will never be fully compensated. For example, the impact of the competing hotel within a hotel operation cannot be fully measured and redressed; nor can the loss of time, energy and focus Hospitality suffered as the litigation storm raged on.

[376] It is important to remember that the LOI was not an ordinary commercial contract. It was a settlement agreement. Its purpose was to end potentially expensive, disruptive court proceedings and restore productive, predictable commercial peace. In my view, there was a real and substantial public, as well as private, cost associated with its ongoing violation. There is also public value in the role played by Hospitality in exposing such conduct and pressing for its denunciation, deterrence and punishment.

[377] The awards for compensatory damages and special costs are undeniably substantial. Standing alone, they will have a significant salutary effect. Nevertheless, such awards will not address fully all of Dr. Louie's and Mr. Nomani’s wrongful conduct, including, for example, their repeated disruption of proper Strata Corporation functioning and reliance upon the Alleged June Agreements in other litigation such as the First 567 Action and the Telephone Action. In addition, they will not express fully the Court’s condemnation of such a conscious, costly, fraudulent attempt to undermine a binding settlement.

[378] I conclude that this is one of the exceptionally rare commercial cases in which punitive damages are appropriate. Taking into account the case authorities and the need to exercise restraint, I award $100,000 in punitive damages against the Louie Group Defendants and $100,000 in punitive damages against 567 and Mr. Nomani. In making these awards, I exclude from my consideration their conduct in the litigation itself in order to avoid imposing a double penalty, given the special costs awarded below.

COSTS

Should special costs be awarded and, if so, against whom and in what amount?

[379] Hospitality seeks special costs against the Louie Group Defendants, 567 and Mr. Nomani in both actions, jointly and severally, on a full indemnity basis. In summary, it submits that their conduct during the litigation was extremely reprehensible. Hospitality emphasizes that the defendants repeatedly failed to produce relevant documents, breached court orders, swore false affidavits and committed acts of perjury in these proceedings. All of these acts were undertaken with deliberate dishonesty in furtherance of the conspiracy to defeat Hospitality's rights and with utter disregard for the authority of the Court.

[380] The Louie Group Defendants submit that special costs are unjustified in the Hospitality Action. In their submission, summary judgment was secured promptly on two important issues and assessment of damages was addressed appropriately at trial. In so far as the 567 Action focused on issues of conspiracy and fraud, they say special costs, if any, should be awarded solely in that action and divided proportionally between the defendants according to their relative degree of fault.

[381] Dr. Louie acknowledges that he is not faultless in his conduct of the litigation. He emphasizes, however, that he did not participate in Mr. Nomani's computer manipulations and eventually admitted his prior misleading testimony regarding the Alleged June Agreements. He submits that considerable trial time was spent addressing the computer manipulation issues and this was misconduct in which he did not actually participate. In addition, in his submission the Alleged June Agreements were ineffective and thus did not actually endanger Hospitality's position.

[382] In Dr. Louie's submission, his contribution to any reprehensible misconduct pales in comparison to that of Mr. Nomani. Accordingly, his proportionate share of any special costs awarded should be relatively modest.

[383] Special costs may be awarded where a party has engaged in reprehensible misconduct. Such misconduct includes scandalous or outrageous acts, as well as milder forms of misconduct deserving of rebuke: Garcia v. Crestbrook Forest Industries Ltd., 1994 CanLII 2570 (BC CA), [1994] B.C.J. No. 2486 (C.A.) at ¶ 17.

[384] As a general rule, the type of misconduct that justifies an award of special costs will relate to the course of the litigation and not to pre-litigation misconduct. This is so because reprehensible pre-litigation misconduct giving rise to a cause of action is typically addressed by an award of punitive damages. In some cases, however, reprehensible misconduct may have originated prior to litigation but continued throughout the litigation process. In these circumstances, special costs may be ordered in addition to punitive damages without double punishment being imposed: Golden Capital Sec. Ltd. at ¶ 161-176.

[385] Perjury is reprehensible misconduct, as is fraud and conspiracy. Such misconduct cannot be condoned by the court. On the contrary, it should be denounced and deterred, both specifically and generally. For these reasons, acts of perjury, fraud and conspiracy often attract an award of special costs. Such awards may be made on the basis of full indemnity: Fullerton v. Matsqui (District), 1992 CanLII 5985 (BC CA), [1992] B.C.J. No. 2969 (C.A.) at ¶ 17; Insurance Corporation of British Columbia v. Phung, 2003 BCSC 1619 at ¶ 8 & 11.

[386] Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani both committed fraud and perjury. Although Dr. Louie eventually recanted, he did so for self-serving reasons in an attempt at damage control. Their conduct in relying upon the fraudulent Alleged June Agreements for over three years and perjuring themselves was reprehensible. Standing alone, this conduct would justify awards for special costs. It does not, however, stand alone.

[387] Dr. Louie and Mr. Nomani also failed repeatedly to produce relevant documents throughout the course of the litigation. They went on to swear false affidavits and breach court orders in this regard. Their purpose in so doing was to hide Dr. Louie's massive funding of the Prohibited Actions and their fraudulent conduct with respect to the Alleged June Agreements. But for Hospitality's extraordinary tenacity, they may have achieved at least a measure of success.

[388] Although I accept that Mr. Nomani was primarily responsible for the computer manipulations, he and Dr. Louie acted in general concert throughout the proceedings. In my view, there is no reason to distinguish between them from a costs perspective, particularly given Dr. Louie's key role as owner and financier. In addition, the Hospitality and 567 Actions were inextricably linked and the acts of perjury and fraud were relevant in both contexts. In all of the circumstances, I award special costs in both actions against the Louie Group Defendants, 567 and Mr. Nomani on a full indemnity basis, with joint and several liability for the special costs.

Should leave be granted to Hospitality to seek an order of costs payable by other parties?

[389] Hospitality seeks leave to apply for an order for costs against Mr. Hatch, Jonathon Louie and Mr. Franiek. In summary, Hospitality submits that Mr. Hatch's conduct in connection with 567's inadequate electronic document production justifies a costs award being sought against him personally, as does Jonathon Louie's perjury and Mr. Franiek's role in the conspiracy.

[390] I agree that 567's electronic document listing and production was woefully inadequate. I am, however, not satisfied that Mr. Hatch's contribution to that inadequacy, although unsettling, particularly in failing clearly to list the Louie Group.doc, was sufficient to justify a costs award against him personally. Given Jonathon Louie's role as a "puppet" for his father, and his potential exposure to other consequences for his perjury, I also decline to grant leave for a costs order to be sought against him.

[391] I am satisfied, however, that such leave should be granted with respect to Mr. Franiek. The evidence presented at trial supports the conclusion that he was an active, conscious participant in the secretive funding of litigation contrary to Hospitality's interests, in breach of the LOI. Accordingly, leave is granted to Hospitality to seek an order for costs against Mr. Franiek.

CONCLUSION

[392] The plaintiffs in the Hospitality Action are entitled to judgment and:

1. a declaration that Hospitality has validly exercised the Option to Purchase the Louie Group Strata Lots contained in para. 4 of the LOI;

2. an order for specific performance of the Option to Purchase by conveying the Louie Group Strata Lots to Hospitality in accordance with the terms of the LOI and doing all such further acts which are within their lawful power that may be reasonably required by Hospitality to permit the Louie Group Strata Lots to be transferred to Hospitality;

3. a declaration that the purchase price for the Louie Group Strata Lots contemplated in para. 4 of the LOI is $4,915,012.66;

4. an order for specific performance of the Lease Modification Agreement contemplated in para. 3 of the LOI in a form agreed by the parties, with liberty to apply to the Court on two clear days' notice to settle the terms if agreement is not reached; and

5. an order for damages calculated on the basis set out in these Reasons for Judgment.

[393] Damages and costs may be set off against the purchase price of the Louie Group Strata Lots.

[394] The plaintiff's claim in the 567 Action is dismissed.

[395] The plaintiffs by counterclaim in the 567 Action are entitled to judgment on the counterclaim and:

1. an award of $100,000 in punitive damages against the Louie Group Defendants; and

2. an award of $100,000 in punitive damages against 567 and Mr. Nomani.

APPENDIX 1

LETTER OF INTENT

Date: October 21, 2005

Between:

Le Soleil Hospitality Inc. and Le Soleil Restaurant Inc.

And:

Andrew Louie

This Letter of intent sets out the general terms upon which Le Soleil Hospitality Inc., ("Hospitality") is prepared to lease from Dr. Andrew Louie, the companies that he owns or controls and 587019 B.C. Ltd., owned by Dr. Louie's children (the "Louie Group"), all the strata units owned by the Louie Group, except for strata lots 128 and 130, which are already subject to a lease (the "Strata Units") in the Le Soleil Hotel ("Hotel").

The parties to this Letter of Intent intend that the terms of this Letter of Intent be binding upon them and have agreed upon terms as follows:

1. Lease of Strata Units: The Strata Units will be leased under formal leases to be negotiated by counsel for the Louie Group and Hospitality and will contain the following terms:

   (a) the tenant will be Hospitality or its nominee (where applicable to the circumstances, references to Hospitality include its nominee);

   (b) each lease will be for an initial term of five (5) years, with two renewal options: the first for a five-year term and the second for a six-year term;

   (c) the renewal terms may be exercised by the tenant provided at the time of renewal Hospitality is in good standing in all material aspects with respect to the lease;

(d) except for the Strata Units known as units #202, #203 and #205 (the "Meeting Rooms") whose leases will commence starting on December 1, 2005, each lease will commence on the date that the landlord is able to make the vacant Strata Unit available to the tenant, which the Louie Group believes should be possible by January 15, 2006;

(e) each lease will be in a registerable form;

(f) each lease will be negotiated and signed by no later than November 3rd, 2005, notwithstanding that the commencement date may be after that date;

(g) except for fundamental breaches, any disputes under the lease will be resolved by commercial arbitration;

(h) if there are fundamental breaches of the lease, which will include:

(i) basing rental payments on fraudulent financial statements,

(ii) failing to pay rent which is not cured within a reasonable period set out in the lease, and the landlord will be able to terminate the lease immediately on written notice. Upon receipt of such notice, the tenant will peaceably return possession of the Strata Unit to the landlord;

(iii) if the Strata Council at the Hotel misuses its authority through expenditures that are outside of the usual repair and maintenance requirements of a Strata Corporation or for the benefit of the operator of the Hotel, not the Strata owners, including the Louie Group, except where those out-of-the ordinary course expenditures are recommended by the Strata Corporation Property Manager, acting reasonably.

(i) the lease will contain a standard force majeur clause;

(j) the landlord will affirm the Common Area Leases for the Hotel;

(k) the landlord will not object to the placement of a internationally recognized franchise tag at the Hotel;

(l) the Lease will provide that Syed (Jewel) Nornani will not be directly involved in the dealings between Hospitality and the Louie Group.

(m) during the term of the leases of the Strata Units, the tenant shall have a right of first refusal to match any bona fide arm's length offers to purchase for which all subject conditions have been removed. In consideration of the grant of a right of first refusal, the tenant agrees to pay the purchase price in the contract plus an additional $2,000. The tenant shall have five (5) days from receipt of notice of the contract of purchase and sale to accept the offer, failing which the landlord will be free to complete the contract of purchase and sale with the third party;

(n) the landlord will assign its voting rights with respect to the Strata Corporation to the tenant, provided the tenant is in good standing in all material terms under the lease (failing which all voting rights are retained), for the following votes:

(i) for ordinary resolutions of the Strata Corporation;

(ii) for elections for Strata Council members; and

(iii) for special or extraordinary resolutions that relate to existing contracts of the Strata Corporation or the lease agreement.

The landlord does not assign its voting rights with respect to votes for special or extraordinary resolutions that relate to new contracts or non-lease related subject matters.

2. Rent Payable under Lease: Hospitality will pay monthly rent on the Strata Units as follows:

(a) based on each Strata Unit's entitlement for participating in the pool, the landlord's share of 31% of gross room revenue for the Hotel ("GRR") with respect to the first $5,500,000 in annual GRR. For clarity, GRR does not include other non-room revenues of the Hotel derived from parking, telephone and mini-bar services;

(b) based on each Strata Unit's entitlement for participating in the pool, the landlord's share of 34% of GRR with respect to any GRR in excess of $5,500,000. Such payments at the 34% threshold will commence in the month after the GRR exceeds in annual $5,500,000;

(c) Hospitality will be retaining 2% of total GRR for an FF&E account held in a separate account for all participating Strata Owners, including the Louie Group. The pro rata shares payable to this FF&E account on account of the Strata Units will be deducted prior to the distribution of the rent payable in paragraphs (a) and (b);

(d) payments will be made by no later than 10th day of each month for the previous months' rent;

(e) any adjustments to the total annual rent paid will be calculated and paid in the month following the end of the 12 month period for each lease;

(f) in addition to the rent payable pursuant to paragraphs (a) and (b), with respect to the Meeting Rooms, there will be an additional rent paid in aggregate with respect to all of the Meeting Rooms in the amount of $2,500 per month; and

(g) in addition to the rent payable pursuant to paragraphs (a) and (b), in consideration for renting strata lot 121 (the "Penthouse Unit") at the same rate as the other Strata Units and in consideration for extending the lease of strata lots 128 and 130 as set out herein, Hospitality will cause Le Soleil Restaurant Inc. ("Restaurant") to pay an additional $5,000 per year (or portion thereof as the case may be) under that lease for any period that the Penthouse Unit remains leased to the tenant.

3. Extension of Restaurant Lease: Dr. Louie will cause 585503 British Columbia Ltd. ("585503") to enter into a lease modification agreement with Restaurant with the following terms and conditions:

(a) 585503 will grant Restaurant two additional renewal terms of five years each, such renewals to be at Restaurant's option provided that Restaurant is in good standing in all material terms under the terms of the restaurant lease;

(b) by December 31, 2006, 585503 will, with respect to the calculation of base rent payable in the second and third renewal terms, elect to either maintain the same rental arrangement currently in plans for any first renewal term or have rent in the second and third renewal terms negotiated between the parties, failing which the rent will be determined through commercial arbitration and subject to submissions as to the fair market rent for these strata lots;

(c) Restaurant will, for any year (or portion thereof) that the Penthouse Unit is owned by the Louie Group and remains a part of the Hotel rental pool, pay an additional sum of $5,000 per year (prorated to the number of days in the year that the Penthouse Unit is in the Hotel rental pool) under the restaurant lease, such sum to paid in equal quarterly instalments commencing on November 1, 2005. This sum will not be included as rent in the event of that commercial arbitration is required to set rent in either a second or third renewal term. As such, the amount payable by Restaurant under the lease will be any rent determined under arbitration will be that sum plus $5,000 per year;

(d) 585503 and Restaurant will resolve outstanding issues involving the Liquor Licence, specifically whether the existing licence should be transferred to Restaurant or 585503 and Restaurant will jointly complete an application for a Third Party Operator relationship;

(e) 585503 will take reasonable commercial steps to obtain a Non-disturbance Agreement from HSBC Bank Canada. The parties acknowledge that as Restaurant is registered in priority to the HSBC Mortgage the Non-disturbance agreement, while desired, is not necessary under the terms of the Lease; and

(f) upon resolution of paragraph (d) and (e), Restaurant will provide an Estoppel Certificate to 585503 in a form provided by solicitors for 585503 and confirming that the lease is in good standing and there are no extant claims of Restaurant.

4. Option to Purchase: The Louie Group will grant to Hospitality or its nominee (for clarity, references in this section to Hospitality includes its nominee) referred to jointly in this section an option to purchase all, but not less than all of the Strata Units, except for the Penthouse Unit, on the following terms:

(a) Hospitality may exercise its option to purchase all of the Strata Units except the Penthouse Unit but it may not exercise its option to purchase on the Penthouse Unit alone. For clarity, if Hospitality exercises its option to purchase the Penthouse Unit, it must exercise its option to purchase all of the Strata Units;

(b) the purchase price for each of the Strata Units available for purchase shall be the lesser of:

(i) $171,500, or

(ii) the average cost to the Louie Group of each of the Strata Units, excluding the Penthouse Unit, such calculation to include the purchase prices, any legal fees and disbursements incurred as a result of the purchase (including the costs of any foreclosure actions, share purchase agreements or corporate transfer arrangements), Land Title Office, Corporate Registry and filing agent fees, Property Transfer Tax paid, and any other fees or expenses reasonably incurred for the purpose of acquiring the Strata Units or the companies that own the Strata Units, but specifically excluding any finder's fees or real estate commissions;

(c) the purchase price for the Penthouse Unit will be $340,000;

(d) Hospitality must exercise its options by no later than December 15, 2005 and, if it exercises its options, it must pay to the Louie Group's solicitors a deposit in the amount of $200,000 (the "Deposit") by no later than December 15, 2005, such amount to be held in trust and credited to the purchase prices of the Strata Units on closing.

(e) The Deposit will be fully refundable if Hospitality pays the Deposit prior to December 15, 2005 but does not exercise its options. The Deposit will be non-refundable if Hospitality pays the Deposit, exercises the options but does not complete due to no fault of the vendor, for whatever reason, by the Closing Date set out herein;

(f) the Closing Date for any transfers will be no later than January 15, 2006;

(g) Hospitality will have the option of acquiring the Strata Units through a real estate purchase or, where the Strata Units are owned by a company, by way of a share purchase. In the event of a share purchase, Dr. Louie, as a condition in the share purchase agreement negotiated by counsel, will personally indemnify Hospitality with respect to any previous liabilities or claims against the corporation purchased; and

(h) The purchase price shall include all furniture and chattels belonging to the landlord and any outstanding issues regarding ownership shall be the subject of good faith negotiations.

5. Dr. Louie's Covenants: Hospitality has requested and Dr. Louie has agreed that, from the date of this Letter of Intent, Dr. Louie will cause the Louie Group to refrain from the date of this Letter of Intent:

(a) entering into lease arrangements with respect to the Strata Units;

(b) purchasing any other strata units at the Hotel; and

(c) supporting any litigation that is contrary to the interests of Hospitality or Restaurant in relation to the operations of the Hotel.

6. Settle All Litigation or Existing Claims: The parties will enter into a formal mutual release and consent dismissal order relating to all current litigation, as well as any and all claims each may have against each other for matters existing prior to the date of this Letter of Intent, including all matters subject of Vancouver Registry No. S046317. Each of the parties will bear their own legal costs.

7. Adjournment of Injunction Application: The Plaintiffs in Vancouver Registry No. S046317 will adjourn generally all action relating to the injunction application and furtherance of the action as same pertains to any member of the Louie Group.

8. Bond: Hospitality/Restaurant and Dr. Louie will each pay to their respective solicitor's the sum of $10,000 by no later than October 21, 2005. The solicitors will hold these amounts in trust to secure the performance of the terms of this Letter of Intent until such time as formal lease agreements and a formal settlement agreement can be finalized and executed. If either Hospitality, Restaurant or both fail to abide by the terms of this Letter of Intent, the $10,000 will be forfeited to Dr. Louie. If Dr. Louie fails to abide by the terms of this Letter of Intent, the $10,000 will be forfeited to Hospitality/Restaurant.

9. Further Assurances: Each of the parties herein will execute or cause to be executed such further documents and instruments and do such acts and things as may be reasonably required by another party to carry out the intent and meaning of this Letter of Intent.

Agreed to this 21st day of October, 2005 by the undersigned:

Le Soleil Hospitality Inc. and Le Soleil Restaurant Inc.

Background

[1] On July 9, 2002, the Court released Reasons in this matter allowing the appeal and,

a) setting aside paragraph 3 of the order of the Motions Judge dated February 27, 2001 (requiring production of Mr. Regan's opinion letters);

b) setting aside paragraphs 2 and 3 of the order of the Motions Judge dated March 19, 2001 (requiring production of the claims file and all documents relating to the investigation details, as set out therein); and,

c) directing that the defendant insurer deliver a further and better affidavit of documents, in which all relevant documents are properly listed and any claims for privilege, and the grounds therefore, appropriately asserted with requisite particularity.

[2] The Defendant was also required to deliver proper supplementary affidavits of documents in the course of its continuing obligations for disclosure, raising therein any appropriate claims for privilege as it may be advised to do, and in a proper fashion.

[3] At the same time, the Court directed that if the parties were unable to agree with respect to costs, they were to submit brief written submissions in that regard. They have not been able to agree, and we have now reviewed the written submissions filed.

[4] We are all agreed that in the circumstances of this case there should be no order as to costs. This order applies to the costs of the appeal, of the application for leave to appeal before Hill J., and of the motion to quash before Chapnik J. Our brief reasons for arriving at this conclusion follow.

Reasons

[5] The appeal raised important issues involving solicitor-client privilege and litigation privilege, and the Defendant was substantially successful in having its position upheld on those issues. The appeal was pursued, however, because the Defendant insurer felt that the questions raised needed to be determined for reasons broader than the case at hand. It did not need to be pursued for reasons relating to the actual production ordered by the Motions Judge because the Plaintiff abandoned its request for production of the documents in question following the Defendant's successful motion for leave to appeal in June 2001.

[6] Moreover, although the Defendant was substantially successful on the issues raised in the appeal, the end result was that the Court ordered the Defendant to produce a further and better affidavit of documents – which was the alternative relief sought by the Plaintiff when the saga relating to this production issue began in the Fall of 2000. In the portion of our Reasons dealing with litigation privilege, we noted that "there was certainly some justification for the Motion Judge's concern about the frailties in the evidentiary basis for the litigation privilege claim" (at para. 36). In short, had the Defendant prepared its affidavit of documents with the particularity required by the Rules of Civil Procedure in the first place, it may be that these lengthy production proceedings could have been avoided, or at least narrowed. To put it another way, the Defendant was to a significant extent the author of its own misfortune in the proceedings.

[7] Proper compliance with the Rules requires a particularized Schedule B to an affidavit of documents and not mere boilerplate entries with respect to claims for solicitor-client privilege and/or litigation privilege. Although there was sufficient evidence before the Court in the combination of Schedule B and the affidavit materials to save the day for the Defendant on the production issue, the Defendant's affidavit of documents did not truly meet the requirements of the Rules.

[8] Accordingly, for these reasons, there will be no order as to costs on the appeal or on the motion for leave to appeal or on the motion to quash.

On appeal from the judgment of Justice Blenus Wright of the Superior Court of Justice d ated September 4, 2007, with reasons reported at (2007), 2007 CanLII 36644 (ON SC), 54 C.C.L.I. (4th) 236.

ADDENDUM AND COSTS ENDORSEMENT

Epstein J.A.:

I. Supplementary Issues

[1] In reasons released May 8, 2009, the appeal by Chubb Insurance Company of Canada was allowed, the judgment below set aside and a new trial was ordered "restricted solely to the issue of the respondent, Bridgette Sagl's, proof of loss, specifically whether she is able to prove her loss in relation to her fine arts collection, and whether the insurance policy is void due to intentional misrepresentation in the proof of loss". Further, if appropriate, the new trial would include a consideration of the application of s. 129 of the Insurance Act of Ontario.

[2] The parties were invited to make written submissions as to costs. Counsel for Sagl and Chubb responded by making submissions regarding costs and the scope of the new trial.

[3] In my view, the reasons are clear that as far as Sagl's proof of loss is concerned, the new trial will be restricted to Sagl's proof of loss in relation to her fine arts collection. This restriction applies both to whether Sagl is able to prove her loss in relation to her fine arts collection and whether the policy is void due to her intentional misrepresentation in the proof of loss as it relates to the fine arts collection.

[4] The punitive damage award made by the trial judge in the first trial has been set aside. The trial judge presiding over the second trial is entitled to consider Sagl's claim for punitive damages based on the findings of fact made in the second trial and the relevant findings of fact made by the trial judge in the first trial that have not been reversed by this court.

[5] As the reasons indicate, the trial judge is entitled to consider the application of s. 129 of the Insurance Act as may be appropriate.

[6] The trial judge presiding over the second trial will be entitled to rule on the costs of the first trial and the second trial, with one exception. That exception is the cost order made by the trial judge who presided over the first trial regarding the costs of Cosburn, Griffiths, & Brandham Insurance Brokers Limited ("CG&B"). The trial judge ordered Chubb to pay CG&B's costs on a partial indemnity basis. CG&B was specifically not brought into the appeal. The trial judge's costs award in its favour stands.

II. Costs of the Appeal

[7] On a partial indemnity scale, Chubb seeks a total of $108,657.38. Sagl submits she is entitled to her costs in the amount of $91,808.92; alternatively, that there be no order as to costs due to divided success. I do not accept that Sagl is entitled to costs. While Chubb was not successful on every issue, and only abandoned its appeal regarding arson in its factum, it was successful in obtaining an order for a new trial. In these circumstances, Chubb is entitled to costs.

[8] This appeal was argued over the course of a better part of a day. It involved the review of evidence following a lengthy trial and complex legal issues. Sagl's claim is large. Taking into account the result and the reasonable expectations of the parties, I would fix Chubb's costs in this court on a partial indemnity scale in the amount of $50,000, inclusive of its disbursements of approximately $23,000 and Goods and Services Tax.

[71] Ms. Patterson was living in Saskatchewan and preferred not to travel to Ontario unless it was absolutely essential. The application judge offered the appellants' counsel the opportunity to cross-examine Ms. Patterson by means of teleconference. He declined.

[72] Even if there is some issue as to the admissibility of the nursing notes, absent those notes the evidence of incapacity remains overwhelming. I would add that it appears that the application judge relied on the nursing notes only in concluding that the attorneys had a reasonable belief in Ms. McDougald's incapacity. The matter of the attorneys' belief was an alternative basis upon which the application judge held that s. 38(1) applied and, for the reasons already given, was unnecessary given her determination of actual incapacity.

[73] Accordingly, I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

COSTS

[74] The appellants seek their costs from the estate, on a substantial indemnity basis, in any event of the outcome of the appeal. Alternatively, if unsuccessful on appeal, they seek an order that their costs be paid from the estate on a partial indemnity basis or that they bear their own costs.

[75] As support for their primary position, the appellants point to the fact that the traditional rule in estate litigation is that the estate bears the costs of all parties. They say that the traditional rule should apply because: the dispute could have been avoided had the will been drafted more clearly or had the attorneys handled Ms. McDougald's affairs in a consistent fashion; they played no role in the events giving rise to the dispute; the legal issues relating to the doctrine of ademption and the interpretation and application of the Act were not straightforward; and, if successful, all of the residuary beneficiaries will benefit financially, therefore it is just that all the residuary beneficiaries bear the costs of the litigation, which is the effect that the requested costs award would have.

[76] The respondent asks that costs follow the event.

[77] In my view, it is appropriate that the appellants pay costs to the respondent on a partial indemnity basis. In explaining why I have reached this conclusion, it is useful to begin by considering the basis upon which costs are awarded, at first instance, in estate litigation.

[78] The practice of the English courts, in estate litigation, is to order the costs of all parties to be paid out of the estate where the litigation arose as a result of the actions of the testator, or those with an interest in the residue of the estate, or where the litigation was reasonably necessary to ensure the proper administration of the estate. See Mitchell v. Gard (1863), 3 Sw. & Tr. 275, 164 E.R. 1280 and Spiers v. English, [1907] P. 122. Public policy considerations underlie this approach: it is important that courts give effect to valid wills that reflect the intention of competent testators. Where the difficulties or ambiguities that give rise to the litigation are caused, in whole or in part, by the testator, it seems appropriate that the testator, through his or her estate, bear the costs of their resolution. If there are reasonable grounds upon which to question the execution of the will or the testator's capacity in making the will, it is again in the public interest that such questions be resolved without cost to those questioning the will's validity.

[79] Traditionally, Canadian courts of first instance have followed the approach of the English courts. While the principle was that costs of all parties were ordered payable out of the estate if the dispute arose from an ambiguity or omission in the testator's will or other conduct of the testator, or there were reasonable grounds upon which to question the will's validity, such cost awards became virtually automatic.

[80] However, the traditional approach has been – in my view, correctly – displaced. The modern approach to fixing costs in estate litigation is to carefully scrutinize the litigation and, unless the court finds that one or more of the public policy considerations set out above applies, to follow the costs rules that apply in civil litigation. Four cases usefully illustrate this modern approach.

[81] In Re Lotzkar (1985), 19 E.T.R. 135 (B.C. S.C.), a trust company was executor of an estate. It brought an application for power to lease a parcel of land; the power was not given to it by the terms of the will. Justice Spence acknowledged that an executor has an obligation to seek the advice and direction of the court where there is room for serious doubt or difference of opinion in respect to the interpretation of a will. He recognised that costs awards cannot be used to deter executors from fulfilling that obligation. However, he found the action of the executor in bringing an application in relation to a proposal that was improvident and opposed by a majority of the beneficiaries was "unnecessary and ill-advised". He ordered the executors to bear their own costs and pay the costs of the responding parties.

[82] In Beaurone v. Beaurone (1997), 31 O.T.C. 236 (Gen. Div.), a testator left a will in which she gave a small bequest to one of her sons, the plaintiff, and the balance of the estate to her other son. The plaintiff unsuccessfully challenged the will on the basis of incapacity. Justice McDermid stated that there was nothing incompatible between the need for a court to be satisfied that a testator had capacity and giving effect to Rule 49 offers. He ordered the defendant's costs payable out of the estate on a solicitor and client scale and the plaintiff to pay party and party costs to the estate, stating at paras. 6 and 7:

> In my opinion, it is often the case that wills are challenged in the expectation that there is little or nothing to lose by doing so, because at the end of the day, costs will be payable by the estate. The challenger, often a slighted relative who is denied the testator's largesse, has everything to gain and nothing to lose by trying to overturn the will.
> Here, the estate is small and the intention of the testatrix will be thwarted if the plaintiff's costs are paid from the estate. The worst that the plaintiff might expect under the traditional rules is that he would retain his $1,000 bequest and have his costs paid from the estate. He would thereby at least have the satisfaction of ensuring that if he were not to benefit from his mother's estate, neither would his brother. I believe that in such circumstances plaintiffs should be given reason to pause and reflect upon the consequences of unsuccessful litigation before commencing it.

[83] In Re Marshall Estate (1998), 50 O.T.C. 357 (Gen. Div.), Sutherland J. found that an attack on testamentary capacity was unreasonable, there were no reasonable grounds for persisting with the litigation and its continued pursuit was irresponsible. He ordered costs against the unsuccessful challenger on a solicitor and client basis.

[84] In Gamble v. McCormick (2002), 4 E.T.R. (3d) 209 (S.C.J.), Greer J. found that there was no reasonable basis to a husband's challenge to the validity of his late wife's will. At para. 13 of her reasons she states:

> The cost of the emotional wreckage caused by this trial to all parties, leaving what had been a warm, loving family unit in tatters, is incalculable. None of their lives will ever be the same again. Costs on a solicitor and client basis cannot heal those wounds. It can only pay for the monetary cost of what took place.

[85] The modern approach to awarding costs, at first instance, in estate litigation recognises the important role that courts play in ensuring that only valid wills executed by competent testators are propounded. It also recognises the need to restrict unwarranted litigation and protect estates from being depleted by litigation. Gone are the days when the costs of all parties are so routinely ordered payable out of the estate that people perceive there is nothing to be lost in pursuing estate litigation.

[86] I pass now to the question of what principles govern costs awards in estate litigation at the appellate level. Although the jurisprudence on point is limited, in my view, it is to the effect that at the appellate level, costs are normally ordered against an unsuccessful appellant. In Re Fleck (1924), 55 O.L.R. 441 (App. Div.), the appellate division of the Ontario Supreme Court ordered the unsuccessful appellant to pay costs, saying at p. 447:

> The appeal must be dismissed with costs. I should have been disposed, because the difficulty here is caused by the testator's language alone, to give costs out of the estate. But costs of an unsuccessful appeal do not come within the rule applied, for that reason, to the costs of the original application or action.

[87] Re Haig (1925), 57 O.L.R. 129 (App. Div.) was decided shortly thereafter. A majority of the court allowed the appeal and ordered that all parties be paid their costs out of the estate, with those of the executors payable on a full indemnity basis. Hodgins J.A. dissented. He would have dismissed the appeal and, relying on Re Fleck, ordered the appellants to pay costs.

[88] Justice Hodgins, writing for the court in Re Smith (1927), 61 O.L.R. 412 (App. Div.), allowed the appeal in an estate matter and ordered costs of the parties from the estate saying that, as the appellants had succeeded, the rule in Re Fleck did not apply.

[89] This court considered the matter of costs in estate litigation more recently in Eady v. Waring (1974), 1974 CanLII 492 (ON CA), 2 O.R. (2d) 627. As the court made no reference to any jurisprudence when deciding the matter of costs, it appears that it may not have had the benefit of the decisions reviewed above. Nonetheless, the court ordered costs against the unsuccessful appellant, saying at p. 643:

> The appeal should therefore be dismissed. The trial judge allowed the costs of all parties out of the estate of the testator. This was, I think, a perfectly proper order, because the executors had a duty to bring forward what purported to be the last will of the testator. I do not think their duty extended to appealing from the adverse finding against the will, particularly > when one of the appellants was a son of a principal beneficiary, and had himself been a participant in the circumstances leading up to the execution of the will in respect of which probate has been refused.

[90] While the appellants argue that the decision in Eady v. Waring should be confined to circumstances in which the appellant has been personally active in a suspicious manner in the events leading up to the litigation, I do not read the reasons as being limited to such situations.

[91] In ordering the appellants to pay costs, I act on the principle that the same rules that govern costs in civil litigation at the appeal level apply to unsuccessful appellants in estate litigation. I see nothing in the circumstances of the parties to warrant departing from that principle.

[92] The appellants are two of the eight remaining residuary beneficiaries of the estate. They are entitled to a relatively small portion of the residue of the estate. None of the other residuary beneficiaries took a position in the application by the estate trustees, the appellants' counter-application or the appeal. The matters that concerned the appellants were thoroughly dealt with below. Arguably, such matters would have been fully explored and resolved by means of the application alone. Be that as it may, the application judge gave thoughtful, cogent reasons in granting the respondent's application and dismissing the appellants' counter-application. The application judge allowed the appellants their costs, payable out of the estate of the testator. To require the estate to bear the costs of the appeal for all parties would be to make all of the residuary beneficiaries pay for the application, the counter-application and the appeal when only the appellants embarked on such litigation and on the appeal. Application of the usual costs rule, however, results in the estate bearing only that portion of the respondent's costs not recovered from the appellants.

DISPOSITION

[93] Accordingly, I would dismiss the appeal with costs to the respondent fixed at $17,000, inclusive of GST and disbursements.

Proceeding under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992)) HEARD: In writing

PERELL, J.

REASONS FOR DECISION - COSTS

A. Introduction

[2] The action has been dismissed as against the Defendants: (a) Capital One Financial Corporation, Capital One, N.A., Capital One Bank (USA), N.A., Capital One Bank (Canada Branch), Capital One Services Canada Inc., (collectively "Capital One"); and (b) Amazon Web Services Inc., and Amazon Web Services (Canada) Inc. (collectively "Amazon Web"). The action was discontinued as against the Defendant GitHub Inc.[2]

[3] In the action, it was alleged that on March 22 or 23, 2019, the Defendant Paige Thompson hacked the data base of personal information collected by Capital One from American and Canadian citizens. The Capital One data was stored on the computer servers of Amazon Web. Ms. Thompson misappropriated the data. She posted the data on the website of GitHub, which provides a forum for software developers to share information. As a consequence of this data breach, personal and confidential information of 106 million applicants for Capital One credit cards was exposed or became vulnerable to exposure to the public. It is estimated that approximately six million Canadians were affected.

[4] On August 6, 2019, Rina Del Giudice commenced a proposed Canadian class action with respect to the data breach. Subsequently, Daniel Wood became a co-Plaintiff.

[5] Class Counsel are a consortium: (a) Gardiner Roberts LLP; (b) Cambridge LLP; (c) Hotz Lawyers; and (d) Scher Law Professional Corporation. The consortium brands itself as "PDBL – Privacy and Data Breach Law Group." The lead counsel are John A. Campion and R. Douglas Elliott. On April 30, 2020, the consortium was granted carriage of the proposed class action.[3]

[6] In their original Statement of Claim, the Plaintiffs advanced a $10.9 billion data breach case against the Defendants. On August 27, 2020, the Plaintiffs delivered a Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim, in which they advanced a $240 billion data misappropriation and misuse case.

[7] On August 27, 2020, I directed that the certification motion have two phases. Phase I was to determine whether and the extent to which the Plaintiffs satisfied the cause of action criterion, the first of the five statutory criteria that must be satisfied for an action to be certified as a class proceeding. I scheduled five days of hearing in December 2021 for the four remaining certification criteria.

[8] There were three days of argument on June 7, 8, and 9, 2021 for Phase I.

[9] For Phase I, the Defendants asserted that none of the nineteen pleaded causes of action were certifiable. They submitted that the Plaintiffs had not properly pleaded any recognized causes of action. For several causes of action, the Defendants submitted that constituent elements were missing. They submitted other causes of action are not known to the law. The Defendants recognized that several of the pleaded causes of action were novel, but the Defendants submitted that these novelties should be struck because they go beyond the incremental development of the common law. The Defendants submitted that all of the causes of action should be struck without leave to amend.

[10] After the Phase I hearing, I concluded that the Plaintiffs' Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim should be struck out in its entirety without leave to deliver a Second Fresh as Amended

Statement of Claim. I struck the Plaintiffs' Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim in its entirety. I dismissed the action as against Capital One and Amazon Web.[4]

[11] Capital One incurred actual legal costs of approximately $900,000 in defending the action. It requests costs of $814,595.10, all inclusive, on a substantial indemnity basis or costs of $678,945.27, all inclusive, on a partial indemnity basis. The claim for costs does not include costs associated with the Plaintiffs' motion for an injunction and a related refusals motion.

[12] Amazon Web incurred actual legal costs of approximately $600,000. It requests costs of $549.849.04 on a substantial indemnity basis or costs of $458,207.53 on a partial indemnity basis.

[13] The Plaintiffs acknowledge that Capital One and Amazon are entitled to their costs - but only for a pleadings motion. The Plaintiffs submit that there is no basis for a costs award on a scale other than a partial indemnity basis.

[14] The Plaintiffs submit that the costs claimed by the Defendants are excessive and not within the reasonable expectations of a party bringing a s. 5(1)(a) motion, or a motion under rule 21.01(1)(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure.[5]

[15] The Plaintiffs submit that having regard to the normative costs principles and also the principles and policies of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, the appropriate awards of costs in the immediate case are $150,000, all inclusive, to Capital One and $75,000, all inclusive, to Amazon.

[16] For the reasons that follow, I grant the costs on a substantial indemnity basis. I award Capital One $725,000, all inclusive, and I award Amazon Web $500,000, all inclusive.

[17] In my Reasons for Decision on the certification motion, I describe in detail, the procedural history of this action. In those reasons, and in my Reasons for Decision with respect to several interlocutory motions including the associated costs decisions,[6] I describe in excruciating detail, some, but not all, of the unfortunate circumstances that in my opinion justify costs on a substantial indemnity basis. I incorporate those reasons for decision and make them part of the immediate decision.

B. The Scope of the Claim for Costs

[18] Capital One and Amazon One claim the costs of the action including the costs of the Phase I motion. The Plaintiffs submit, however, that the Defendants may only claim the costs associated with Phase I of the certification motion, which was a pleadings motion without evidence, cross-examinations, etc. and which motion was procedurally staged before the completion of pleadings, the delivery of responding materials for Phase 2 of the certification motion, cross-examinations, productions, examinations for discovery, etc.

[19] The Plaintiffs submit that the Defendants cannot claim costs extraneous to the Phase I motion.

[20] The Plaintiffs did not identify what portions of the Defendants' respective Bills of Costs were extraneous to Phase I of the certification motion. Rather, they submitted a Plaintiffs' Bill of Costs for what they would have claimed for costs had they been successful on Phase I of the certification motion. The Plaintiffs' Bill of Costs for Phase I certification motion reveals that the Plaintiffs actual costs for legal expenses exclusively for Phase I was $451,074.64, all inclusive. On a substantial indemnity basis, the Plaintiffs' costs claim for Phase I would have been $361,174.89, all inclusive. On a partial indemnity basis, the Plaintiffs' costs claim for Phase I would have been $271,275.14, all inclusive.

[21] The prime reason that I directed that there should be a bifurcated certification motion was to determine which of the nineteen causes of action pleaded called for the Defendants to plead and marshal evidence for a defence. Given the Defendants' position of challenging all of the causes of action and also raising jurisdictional challenges, I allocated three days of argument just for the cause of action criterion.

[22] I did not anticipate that none of the pleaded actions would fail to satisfy the cause of action criterion, and the purpose of the bifurcation motion was to reduce both sides' costs for the certification motion and to reduce both sides' exposure to costs for the certification motion. I thought it salutary not to require either party to incur the expense of putting together an evidentiary motion record until it was determined what causes of action would be going forward substantively or jurisdictionally.

[23] In the immediate case, had I not bifurcated the certification motion, and had I decided all the certification criterion at one hearing, the costs consequences for the unsuccessful Plaintiffs, who were shipwrecked on the cause of action criterion, would make the Defendants' present large claim for costs microscopic in comparison to what they could claim for having prepared an evidentiary motion record to defend nineteen causes of action and to argue the four additional certification criteria.

[24] The result of Phase I of the certification motion was that the Plaintiffs' proposed class action was dismissed in its entirety. It is trite, normal, and appropriate in these circumstances to award the successful defendants their costs for their success on the motion and for their success in having the action dismissed.

[25] No purpose would be served by bifurcating the costs assessment in the immediate case. No purpose would be served by determining just the costs of the motion and then determining by a separate subsequent costs assessment the Defendants' costs of the action, although it might be interesting to do so because it would almost certainly reveal that Class Counsel has invested millions of dollars in legal services for prosecuting this action, and that exercise of a separate assessment of the Defendants' costs would provide a better comparable for the Defendants' costs extraneous to the Phase I action.

[26] In any event, the Plaintiffs' objection to the scope of the claim for costs including costs extraneous to Phase I is a quibble precisely because the certification motion was bifurcated so that the bulk of the Defendants' work would be and was about attacking the Plaintiffs' pleading. In other words, there are not a great deal of costs for work extraneous to the Phase I motion.

[27] I, therefore, shall proceed to assess the Defendants' costs for their success in having the proposed class action dismissed which includes their work extraneous to the Phase I motion.

C. The Scale of Costs

[28] The Plaintiffs submit that there is no reason for this court to depart from the ordinary rule that costs are to be awarded on a partial indemnity basis. The Plaintiffs submit that there was simply no conduct on the part of the Plaintiffs or their Counsel that warrants a departure from the average costs awards noted for pleadings or certification motions in class proceedings.

[29] The Plaintiffs submit that they were entitled to amend their pleadings as their understanding of the case evolved over time and that they are entitled to advance every reasonable claim they have against the Defendants. The Plaintiffs submit that there is nothing in the Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim that would justify a departure from the normal partial indemnity costs award and that the Plaintiffs have a right to strategically frame their pleadings as they wish. [7]

[30] The Plaintiffs submit that in the circumstances of the immediate case, it was their counsel's solemn obligation to urge the Court to give access to justice for the vulnerable Ms. Del Giudice and to seek to modify the behaviour of Capital One, which had disregarded her right to privacy.

[31] The Plaintiffs submit that their lawyers did not make allegations of unprofessional and improper conduct against Capital One and its counsel but rather their lawyers raised the concern that there was a threat to the personal dignity of Ms. Del Giudice by the production of her data without prior Court consideration.

[32] The Plaintiffs submit that their lawyers had an unyielding duty to pursue their Plaintiffs' and the Class Members' case to the best of their ability and to protect their client's interest in the strongest possible terms. The Plaintiffs submit that believing themselves to be wronged, they had a right to litigate vigorously even if ultimately unsuccessful.[8] Thus, the Plaintiffs write in their costs submissions:

> Counsel have a duty to pursue their client's case to the best of their ability and to protect their client's interest in the strongest possible terms. This duty is not new. Henry Brougham, later Lord Chancellor, in his defence of Queen Caroline against the charge of adultery brought against her by her husband, King George IV, addressed the House of Lords in this way:
> > [A]n advocate, in the discharge of his duty, knows but one person in all the world, and that person is his client. To save that client by all means and expedients, and at all hazards and costs to other persons, and, among them, to himself, is his first and only duty; and in performing this duty he must not regard the alarm, the torments, the destruction which he may bring upon others. Separating the duty of a patriot from that of an advocate, he must go on reckless of consequences, though it should be his unhappy fate to involve his country in confusion.[9]
> This expression of a lawyer's unyielding duty to pursue his client's case to the fullest extent "endures because it is essential to the integrity of the administration of justice."

[33] The Plaintiffs submit that neither the Plaintiffs nor their Counsel should be sanctioned for pursuing the action to protect the privacy interests of the Plaintiffs or putative Class Members against powerful defendants.

[34] Respectfully, I say that the Plaintiffs' submissions do not accord with the actual circumstances of the case that I have been case managing since its outset. There are ample justifications for awarding costs on a substantial indemnity basis in the immediate case.

[35] I begin by noting that contrary to the Plaintiffs' submission, their counsel did make allegations of unprofessional and improper conduct against Capital One and its counsel and against the counsel of Amazon Web both in correspondence and in open court (and also against counsel of GitHub, for that matter before the Phase I motion.).

[36] There is no doubt that the Plaintiffs' lawyers before and at the Phase I hearing submitted that the Defendants' lawyers had breached their professional obligations. In this regard, I repeat what I wrote in paragraphs 38-41 and 48-50 of my Reasons for Decision for the Phase I motion:

> 38. On June 9, 2021, after hearing some submissions from the parties, I treated the case management conference as a preliminary motion and Phase I got underway. There was an uproar about the Document Brief.
> 39. Ms. Armstrong told me that over the weekend, Mr. Campion had objected to her filing of the Document Brief as improper and as a breach of Ms. Del Giudice's privacy and of the Rules of Civil Procedure.[10] She denied impropriety, but said, however, that the brief had never been filed in the court file and that she had withdrawn the documents from https://ontariocourts.caselines.com, where the brief had been filed for the purposes of the hearing of Phase I. She said that she had offered to refile a redacted version of the documents, but Mr. Campion had declined this solution.
> 40. Mr. Campion submitted that the filing of the Document Brief was an abusive act meant to intimidate him personally and to intimidate and embarrass Ms. Del Giudice and to scare her from proceeding with her class action. He submitted that the filing of the Document Brief was a breach of privacy by Capital One's and Amazon Web's lawyers and another invasion of privacy by Capital One and Amazon Web. He said that the Defendants' lawyers had breached their duties as officers of the court by filing the documents without court approval and without the documents being under seal. He said the Defendants' lawyers had improperly attempted to convert a pleadings motion into a summary judgment motion. He said that he had not appreciated until the week before the motion, when he began his preparation for the argument, that Capital One and Amazon Web had filed Ms. Del Giudice's credit application that contained confidential information about her occupation, her income, and her SIN number. He said the Defendants knew and had acknowledged that this information was confidential personal information. He said that the documents should not have been unilaterally filed without a sealing order and a direction from the court. He objected to the filing and unilateral use of the Document Brief. He asked the court to make a direction that the documents were not admissible. He said that the court should chastise the Defendants and their lawyers for their intimidating conduct and breaches of confidence. He said that he was entitled to cross-examine and have the authenticity of the documents and Ms. Del Giudice's signature proven. He said that he is entitled to have this case tried and that it would be egregiously unfair to allow the Defendants to turn a pleadings motion into a summary judgment motion based on contract documents that have never been proven and that were not referred to in the Plaintiffs' pleadings. He said that if the court directed that the documents were accepted, then he would proceed under protest. He said that, in any event, the filing of the documents was a fatal mistake by Capital One and Amazon Web because the filing was both an admission of wrongdoing and a demonstration that these Defendants had violated the privacy of Ms. Del Giudice once again. He said that while he objected to the filing of the contract documents, he would capitalize on their filing to show that his clients had numerous viable causes of action.

41. After hearing Mr. Campion's submissions, I did not call on Ms. Armstrong to reply, and I directed that the Document Brief could be used on the certification motion. After my direction, Mr. Campion said he would proceed under protest, and he asked that the Document Brief be sealed. Ms. Armstrong said that she would seek instructions, and later in the hearing, she advised that Capital One did not oppose a sealing Order.

48. If there is something beyond obviousness, it is that Ms. Del Giudice's application form was incorporated by reference in her Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim. If Ms. Del Giudice had a right of privacy or confidentiality with respect to those documents, she waived it when she decided to be the champion for the other Capital One cardholders and sue for $240 billion. I do not believe that she or Mr. Campion were intimidated in the least by the filing of the Document Brief. If Ms. Del Giudice is genuinely scared to proceed, then she is not qualified to be a representative plaintiff notwithstanding her affidavit in the Certification Motion record that deposes her championing qualities. Ms. Del Giudice is suing to recover $240 billion, and she has experienced battle-hardened lawyers to protect her for the legal warfare that befits such a prize. For present purposes, I assume that she is up to the task and will not be intimidated.

49. Mr. Campion's submission that there was unprofessional or improper conduct by Ms. Armstrong or Mr. Kugler is without a scintilla of merit. The filing of the contract documents was not a breach of privacy. Capital One was filing documents that ought to and normally would have been filed by Class Counsel on a certification motion. Ms. Armstrong and Mr. Kugler were professional in providing a defence of their clients who were being sued for $240 billion and whose liability remains to be determined.

50. Save for the matter of redacting the SIN number and the amount of Ms. Del Giudice's income, there was nothing that would remotely justify a sealing order in the immediate case. I simply direct that Capital One file the Document Brief with personal information redacted.

[37] The Plaintiffs' reference in their costs submission to Henry Brougham, later Lord Chancellor, in his defence of Queen Caroline is not apt. In the immediate case, the Plaintiffs' lawyers are acting pursuant to a contingency fee retainer for clients suing for $240 billion in the Superior Court of Ontario. In the Trial of Queen Caroline, Lord Brougham was acting for a client in what was in effect a public trial in the House of Lords of the English Parliament. The aristocratic peers were debating the Pains and Penalties Bill 1820. The statute had been introduced at the urging of King George IV to strip Queen Caroline of the title of queen and to dissolve the royal marriage. In the immediate case, in the context of the certification motion, the indignity that Ms. Del Guidice's lawyers sought to protect her from suffering was that it would be revealed to the public what is her salary as a cook. The indignity that Lord Brougham sought to spare Queen Caroline was being dethroned and divorced. (The bill passed the House of Lords, but the statute was not submitted to the House of Commons because of Queen Caroline's popularity with the public.)

[38] Lord Brougham said what he said, but that's not the end of the story. Years later, at a dinner in the Inner Temple, Lord Brougham, repeated his remarks, after which Lord Chief Justice Alexander Cockburn rose to speak:

> My noble and learned friend Lord Brougham said that an advocate should be fearless in carrying out the interests of his client; but I couple that with this qualification and this restriction – that the arms which he wields are to be the arms of the warrior and not of the assassin. It is his duty to strive to accomplish the interests of his clients per fas [by means of justice] not per nefas [by means of injustice]: it is his duty to the utmost of his power to seek to reconcile the interests he is bound to maintain, and the duty is incumbent upon him to discharge, with the eternal and immutable interests of truth and justice.[11]

[39] In the immediate case, the Plaintiffs' submissions of their glorious cause and duties as advocates to fight the unbeatable foe, to right the unrightable wrong, to fight for the right without question or pause, to strive with their last ounce of courage and to be willing to march into Hell for that cause is to tilt at windmills.[12] The Defendants and the Defendants' lawyers never disputed the importance of protecting the Class Members' privacy and human dignity, and the Defendants' lawyers never suggested that the Plaintiffs or the Plaintiffs' lawyers were not entitled to vigorously prosecute Capital One and Amazon Web. It was Plaintiffs' lawyers that brought up the matter of the Defendants' lawyers acting unprofessionally. It was the Plaintiffs' lawyers who brought up the issue of the courageous advocate fighting the glorious fight as the justification for advancing the unsubstantiated proposition that the Defendants' lawyers had breached their professional responsibilities and had attempted to trick the court and abuse the Plaintiffs and their lawyers.

[40] If the Plaintiffs are entitled to vigorously prosecute, then the Defendants are just as much entitled to vigorously defend, but it was the Plaintiffs not the Defendants that brought up the matter of when the line of professionalism gets crossed. In the immediate case, all the Defendants did was put the Plaintiffs to the test of the cause of action criterion of s. 5(1) of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, which, by the way, the Plaintiffs were obliged to do in any event, because even on a consent certification, the court must be satisfied that all of the criteria for certification are satisfied.[13]

[41] Similarly, the Plaintiffs' submissions about their entitlements to amend their pleadings as their understanding of the case evolved over time, to advance every reasonable claim they have against the Defendants, and to strategically frame their pleadings as they wish are to tilt at windmills that do not exist. Neither the Defendants nor the court got in the way of the Plaintiffs' rights to plead their action as they saw fit. Unfortunately, the Plaintiffs saw fit to plead in a way that did not satisfy the requirements of the Rules of Civil Procedure and the substantive law.

[42] The Plaintiffs' failure was an absolute failure, and it was a self-inflicted failure because: (a) their Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim egregiously contravened the rules of pleadings; (b) it was plain and obvious that the pleading failed to disclose any legally viable causes of action; and (c) the pleading improperly and inexplicably transformed a straightforward data breach case into a data misappropriation and misuse case that was largely unrelated to the facts that gave rise to the litigation.

[43] The Plaintiffs are largely responsible for the high litigation expense of the proceedings. They substantially expanded the scope of the action from the action that was described at the carriage fight motion. The Plaintiffs' litigation strategy and Class Counsel's conduct in implementing that strategy were an enormous investment in prosecuting the action and required Capital One and Amazon Web to respond with a commensurate investment in defending the action and in defending their counsel from unsubstantiated allegations of professional misconduct.

[44] The Defendants never suggested that the Plaintiffs' claim should be dismissed because the action was frivolous or vexatious. The Defendants, as defendants are entitled to do, submitted that the Plaintiffs had not complied with the technical rules of pleading and that the Plaintiffs had not demonstrated a reasonable cause of action. The Defendants' lawyers acted with professionalism and honourably.

[45] To be clear, I do not suggest that the Plaintiffs' lawyers acted dishonourably, and they certainly were entitled to passionately and vigorously advance the Plaintiffs' case, but I do say that there is no inevitable conflict between a lawyer's duty to resolutely advance his or her argument and his or her duty to treat the opponent and his or her lawyer with courtesy, dignity, and respect.

[46] In the immediate case, I alerted the Plaintiffs at the carriage motion that their pleadings would be challenged on technical grounds by the Defendants. It is inevitable and necessary in class actions that the Plaintiff satisfy the cause of action criterion for certification and the Plaintiffs' lawyers knew that their pleading was going to be tested at the certification motion. Plaintiffs' counsel ignored my alert. The Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim grossly violated the technical rules of pleading. The Plaintiffs failed to satisfy the substantive requirements of the cause of action requirements of the Rules of Civil Procedure and the Class Proceedings Act, 1992. The Plaintiffs' submission about unprofessional and improper conduct by the Defendants' lawyers was uncalled for and was without a scintilla of merit.

[47] Costs on a substantial indemnity scale or full indemnity scale are reserved for rare and exceptional cases, where the conduct of the party against whom costs is ordered is reprehensible or where there are other special circumstances that justify costs on the higher scale.[14] In my opinion, the case at bar is one of the rare and exceptional cases where costs on a substantial indemnity basis is warranted.

D. The Quantum of Costs

[48] I turn now to the matter of the quantum of the Defendants' award of costs.

[49] In Pearson v. Inco Ltd.,[15] at para. 13, the Court of Appeal established the following principles for fixing costs on a certification motion: (1) Ontario, unlike other class proceedings jurisdictions such as British Columbia, has not sought to interfere with the normal rule that costs will ordinarily follow the event; (2) the costs must reflect what is fair and reasonable; (3) the costs should, if possible, reflect costs awards made in closely comparable cases, recognizing that comparisons will rarely provide firm guidance; (4) a motion for certification is a vital step in the proceeding and the parties expect to devote substantial resources to prosecuting and defending the motion; (5) the costs expectations of the parties can be determined by the amount of costs that an unsuccessful party could reasonably expect to pay; (6) the complexity of the issues; (7) whether the case raises an issue of public importance; and (8) a fundamental object of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 is to provide enhanced access to justice.

[50] The court's discretion in awarding costs arises under the authority of s. 131 of the Courts of Justice Act[16] and is to be exercised by a consideration of the factors in rule 57.01(1) of the Rules of Civil Procedure.[17] The traditional discretionary principles developed for costs awards are codified in rule 57.01(1), which states:

> Factors in Discretion
>
> 57.01 (1) In exercising its discretion under section 131 of the Courts of Justice Act to award costs, the court may consider, in addition to the result in the proceeding and any offer to settle or to contribute made in writing,
>
> (0.a) the principle of indemnity, including, where applicable, the experience of the lawyer for the party entitled to the costs as well as the rates charged and the hours spent by that lawyer;
>
> (0.b) the amount of costs that an unsuccessful party could reasonably expect to pay in relation to the step in the proceeding for which costs are being fixed;
>
> (a) the amount claimed and the amount recovered in the proceeding;
>
> (b) the apportionment of liability;

(c) the complexity of the proceeding;

(d) the importance of the issues;

(e) the conduct of any party that tended to shorten or to lengthen unnecessarily the duration of the proceeding;

(f) whether any step in the proceeding was,

(i) improper, vexatious or unnecessary, or

(ii) taken through negligence, mistake or excessive caution;

(g) a party's denial of or refusal to admit anything that should have been admitted;

(h) whether it is appropriate to award any costs or more than one set of costs where a party,

(i) commenced separate proceedings for claims that should have been made in one proceeding, or

(ii) in defending a proceeding separated unnecessarily from another party in the same interest or defended by a different lawyer; and

(i) any other matter relevant to the question of costs.

[51] In their costs submissions, the Plaintiffs submit that the costs claimed by the Defendants are excessive and not within the reasonable expectations of a party bringing a s. 5(1)(a) motion, or a motion under rule 21.01(1)(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure. The Plaintiffs submit that the amount claimed for costs must be fair and reasonable for the unsuccessful party in the particular circumstances.

[52] Relying on several costs decisions of Justice Belobaba[18] and Justice Morgan[19] and two of my own costs decisions,[20] the Plaintiffs submit that costs awards tend to range between $100,000 and $300,000 on a partial indemnity basis. Based on this range of costs awards and the particular circumstances of the immediate case, the Plaintiffs submit that the appropriate awards of costs in the immediate case are $150,000, all inclusive, to Capital One and $75,000, all inclusive, to Amazon.

[53] I agree that a critical controlling principle for the awarding of costs is that the sum awarded reflect the fair and reasonable expectations of the unsuccessful litigant.[21] In Boucher v. Public Accountants for the Province of Ontario,[22] after a two-day hearing of a judicial review application, the motions judge fixed costs on a partial indemnity scale at $187,682.51, all inclusive. On appeal, the Court of Appeal reduced the aggregated award to $63,000, all inclusive. At para. 24 of his judgment, Justice Armstrong stated:

> 24. The appellants submit that the motions judge accepted the bills of costs that were presented to her without any deductions. The bills were prepared in accordance with the calculation of hours times dollar rates provided by the costs grid. While it is appropriate to do the costs grid calculation, it is also necessary to step back and consider the result produced and question whether, in all the circumstances, the result is fair and reasonable. This approach was sanctioned by this court in Zesta Engineering Ltd. v. Cloutier (2002), 2002 CanLII 25577 (ON CA), 21 C.C.E.L. (3d) 161 (Ont. C.A.) at para. 4 where it said:
> > In our view, the costs award should reflect more what the court views as a fair and reasonable amount that should be paid by the unsuccessful parties rather than any exact measure of the actual costs to the successful litigant.
> See also Stellarbridge Management Inc. v. Magna International (Canada) Inc., 2004 CanLII 9852 (ON CA), [2004] O.J. No. 2102 (C.A.) para. 97.

[54] In Davies v. Clarington (Municipality)[23] at para. 52, Justice Epstein stated that the overriding principle in awarding costs is reasonableness. She stated:

> As can be seen, the overriding principle is reasonableness. If the judge fails to consider the reasonableness of the costs award, then the result can be contrary to the fundamental objective of access to justice. Rather than engage in a purely mathematical exercise, the judge awarding costs should reflect on what the court views as a reasonable amount that should be paid by the unsuccessful party rather than any exact measure of the actual costs of the successful litigant. In Boucher [Boucher v. Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario (2004), 2004 CanLII 14579 (ON CA), 71 O.R. (3d) 291 (C.A.)], this court emphasized the importance of fixing costs in an amount that is fair and reasonable for the unsuccessful party to pay in the particular proceeding at para. 37, where Armstrong J.A. said: "[t]he failure to refer, in assessing costs, to the overriding principle of reasonableness, can produce a result that is contrary to the fundamental objective of access to justice."

[55] The assessment of reasonableness is discretionary and very much dependent upon the circumstances of each case. In some cases, it may be reasonable for the successful party to make exhaustive efforts and to commit enormous legal resources, and in those cases, it might be said that the unsuccessful party could reasonably expect to pay those costs. In other cases, however, the successful party may have been well served by giving his or her lawyer instructions to make exhaustive efforts, but it might be disproportionate and unreasonable to expect the unsuccessful party to pay those costs, even if he or she would have expected or anticipated that his or her foe would have marshalled those legal resources.

[56] The immediate case was one of those cases in which it was anticipated that each side would commit enormous legal resources to the certification motion. And they did. As noted above, the amount of the Plaintiffs' claim was ginormous and worthy of a massive allocation of legal resources both in prosecution and in defence. The Plaintiffs' evolving theory of the case was complex and designed to expand the legal universe of the law of privacy. The Books of Authorities comprised 4,353 pages of cases and legal articles. In addition, during argument, the Plaintiffs' lawyers made copious references to a 250-page academic text about big data and the information economy.[24] There were three days of argument. The amount claimed for costs in the immediate case is within the reasonable expectations of the Plaintiffs and commensurate with the nature of the case and the Phase I motion.

[57] Keeping the fairness and reasonableness factor in mind and the other principles that guide the court's discretion in awarding costs and having reviewed the Defendants' respective Bills of Costs, in my opinion, the appropriate award in the immediate case is $725,000, all inclusive, for Capital One on a substantial indemnity basis and $500,000, all inclusive, for Amazon Web, all inclusive.

[58] In arriving at the above awards, I considered the partial indemnity awards in my own other cases and extrapolated what the award might have been on a substantial indemnity basis. The exercise was interesting – for me, at least – but not particularly helpful, given that the immediate case is not comparable to any proposed class action.

[59] All class actions are unique, but this one has elements as rare as Astatine. In Pearson v. Inco Ltd.,[25] at para. 13, the Court of Appeal said that costs in class actions should, if possible, reflect costs awards made in closely comparable cases, recognizing that comparisons will rarely provide firm guidance. There was no closely comparable case to the immediate case.

[60] Although there are no closely comparable cases to the immediate case, for what it is worth, my analysis of my own costs awards is set out in the following chart. For what little it is worth, I discovered that the range of my costs awards on certification motions is from $10,000 to $1,350,000. My average (mean) award is $334,000. The medium of my awards (midpoint) is $215,000.

41. Das v. George Weston Ltd., [2017] O.J. No. 4858	Defendant awarded $1,350,000.

[61] As the above chart reveals, I have made some very substantial awards on a partial indemnity basis. I think that the immediate case falls into the type of case where a substantial award is appropriate. The intensity and intricacy of the argument in the immediate case was similar to Das v. George Weston Ltd., where like the case at bar, I held that the plaintiffs had not pleaded a reasonable cause of action and where I awarded $1.0 million and $1.35 million in costs to the defendants respectively. The Court of Appeal upheld my decision and reduced the costs awards by 30% because of the public interest component of the case.[26]

[62] In the immediate case, as noted above, on a substantial indemnity basis, the Plaintiffs' costs claim for Phase I would have been $361,174.89. However, I am skeptical that that sum is a true reflection of the legal work that the Plaintiffs' lawyers actually did in preparation for Phase I, which work might not be chargeable for the certification motion.

[63] In this last regard, it may be noted that the Plaintiffs' lawyers would have expended a great deal of legal resources in formulating legal theories for the carriage fight, which legal resource would have been carried forward into the Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim and into Phase I. In contrast, the Defendants' legal battleship had to get up to speed to meet the already full speed ahead legal battleship of the Plaintiffs.

[64] In the immediate case, I note that on a partial indemnity basis, Capital One claimed costs of $678,945.27, all inclusive, and Amazon Web claimed costs of $458,207.53, all inclusive. In my opinion, those claims for costs on a partial indemnity basis were fair and reasonable and within the expectations of the Plaintiffs on a partial indemnity basis. That being the case, awards of costs of $725,000 and $500,000 on a substantial indemnity basis are fair and reasonable, and, if anything, an under-evaluation of the Defendants' entitlement.

E. Conclusion

[65] For the above reasons, I award Capital One $725,000, all inclusive, and I award Amazon Web $500,000, all inclusive, payable forthwith.

The Claim was for $1.85 billion, punitive damages of $150 million, special damages, pre and post-judgment interest, and costs on a substantial indemnity basis. The claim was brought on behalf of the in Bangladesh citizens who were the victims of the collapse of the Rana Plaza, an apartment building being used as a clothing factory. In the collapse, 1,130 people died, and 2,520 people were seriously injured. The case at bar is a claim for 240 billion by six million Canadian citizens who were the victims of a data breach with unknown financial injuries, if any. Making this comparison between the cases for the purposes of assessing costs just reveals the venality and low utility of the whole exercise.

Court of Appeal for Ontario,

Civil procedure -- Costs -- Costs grid -- Partial indemnity costs -- Fixing costs of abandoned application -- Factors in assessing costs -- Court to consider result produced and whether result is fair and reasonable -- Overall objective of fixing costs is to fix amount that is fair and reasonable for unsuccessful party to pay in particular circumstances, rather than amount fixed by actual costs incurred by successful litigant -- Error in principle to grant award of costs on partial indemnity basis that is virtually same as award on substantial indemnity basis -- Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, rules 37.09(3), 57.01(1), (3), (3.1).

In earlier proceedings, the appellants, who were Certified General Accountants, and two other parties sought to have the court appoint disinterested persons to hear their applications for public accounting licences. Central to these proceedings was the allegation that the Public Accountants

Council for the Province of Ontario ("PA Council") was controlled by the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario ("CA Institute"), which was authorized by the Public Accountancy Act, R.S.O. 1990, P.37, to appoint 12 of the 15 members of the PA Council. Lax J. stayed the earlier proceedings on the basis that the court lacked jurisdiction to make the order requested. Lax J. fixed costs against the appellant in the amount of $97,563.

The appellants commenced the immediate application and alleged reasonable apprehension of bias against the PA Council in its review of applications for licences to practise public accounting by members of the Certified General Accounting Association of Ontario. By court order, the material for the application before Lax J. was used in the new application.

The respondents moved to have the application quashed; however, before the application was heard, it was abandoned. The respondents moved for costs pursuant to rule 37.09(3) on a substantial indemnity basis. Epstein J. fixed the costs on a partial indemnity basis, including disbursements and GST as follows: PA Council, $88,896.45; individual respondents, $60,033.96; and CA Institute, $38,752.10 for a total of $187,682.51. (This sum was only $14,528.86 less than the amount claimed on a substantial indemnity basis.)

The appellants appealed and raised the grounds that (1) costs should have been referred for assessment and not fixed; and (2) the costs, which were calculated in accordance with the costs grid, were excessive.

Held, the appeal should be allowed.

Epstein J. did not err in fixing costs rather than having costs referred to an assessment officer. There is now a presumption that costs shall be fixed by the court unless the court is satisfied that it has before it an exceptional case. If a judge is able to effect procedural and substantive justice in fixing costs, he or she ought to do so. There was no basis upon which to interfere with the motion judge's discretion not to refer the costs for assessment. [page292]

However, the costs award calculated in accordance with the costs grid was excessive. While it was appropriate to do the costs grid calculation, it was also necessary to consider the result produced and determine whether in all the circumstances the result is fair and reasonable. Subrule 57.01(3) lists a broad range of factors that the court may consider in exercising its discretion to award costs, and the fixing of costs is not simply a mechanical exercise. The fixing of costs does not begin or end with the calculation of hours times rates. The overall objective is to fix an amount that is fair and reasonable for the unsuccessful party to pay in the particular circumstances, rather than an amount fixed by the actual costs incurred by the successful litigant.

Awarding $187,682.51 was not fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this case; the costs were so excessive as to call for appellate interference. In deciding what is fair and reasonable, the expectation of the parties concerning the quantum of a costs award is a relevant factor. Consideration should be given to the fact that the costs in the earlier proceeding were fixed in the amount of $97,563 by Lax J. While there were differences between the two proceedings, the foundation upon which the two applications were prosecuted was based on the control of the PA Council by the CA Institute. The fact that all parties were satisfied to have the same evidentiary record in both cases suggested that there was much in common between the two applications. Further, the respondents filed no evidence, conducted no cross-examination and advanced substantially the same arguments in support of the motions to quash. Finally, there was no proportionality between the costs claimed on a substantial indemnity scale and the costs awarded on a partial indemnity scale. The granting of an award of costs said to be on a partial indemnity basis that is virtually the same as an award on a substantial indemnity basis constitutes an error in principle in the exercise of the motions judge's discretion, particularly when the judge rejected a claim for a substantial indemnity award. These factors suggested that the amounts awarded on a partial indemnity basis should be significantly reduced. A fair and reasonable award, taking into consideration all the factors discussed above, was as follows: PA Council, $30,000; individual respondents, $20,000; CA Institute, $13,000, for a total of $63,000, inclusive of disbursements and Goods and Services Tax.

APPEAL from an order of Epstein J. dated November 29, 2002, allowing costs for an abandoned application pursuant to rule 37.09(3) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194.

Robert D. Peck, for The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

[1] ARMSTRONG J.A.: -- This case is another chapter in the long simmering dispute between the Certified General Accountants and the Chartered Accountants concerning the practice of public accounting in Ontario. At issue in this litigation was the control of the licensing granting authority, the Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario, by a majority of members who were Chartered Accountants.

[2] The appellants, who are Certified General Accountants, brought an application for judicial review against the Public Accountants Council. The appellants alleged reasonable apprehension of bias against the Council in its review of applications for licences to practise public accounting by members of the Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario.

[3] Before the appellants' application was heard it was abandoned. The respondents then moved to have their costs fixed by a judge of the Divisional Court on a substantial indemnity basis. After a two-day hearing, Epstein J. fixed the respondents' costs, on a partial indemnity basis, at $187,682.51 inclusive of disbursements and Goods and Services Tax. The appellants now appeal from this costs order pursuant to leave granted by this court on May 22, 2003. [page294]

Background of the Proceedings

[4] The judicial review application had its genesis in the prior proceeding of Boucher v. Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario, [2000] O.J. No. 3126, [2000] O.T.C. 694 (S.C.J.) before Lax J. of the Superior Court. In the earlier proceeding, the appellants and two other parties sought to have the court appoint disinterested persons to hear the appellants' applications for public accounting licences. The appellants claimed that the court could do so under the Public Officers Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.45. The proceeding was stayed by Lax J. on the basis that the court lacked jurisdiction under the Public Officers Act to make the order requested.

[5] In granting the stay, Lax J. said [at paras. 17 and 37] in obiter dicta:

> The particulars of bias described by the applicants are sympathetic, compelling and disturbing. They are offensive to fundamental notions of fairness. They invoke a primordial judicial instinct to intervene and second-guess what appears to be a flawed legislative scheme and what is a flawed process. . . .
>
> Professional discipline is not in issue here, but professional licensure by an apparently biased tribunal is. Although the Court lacks jurisdiction to grant the proposed remedy under section 16 of the Public Officers Act, there may be other creative ways for the applicants to have their concerns addressed.

[6] Lax J. suggested that the appellants had other specific courses of action available to them which they could pursue.

[7] The appellants then commenced their judicial review application, naming as parties the same respondents with the addition of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario who had been an intervenor before Lax J. In their application, the appellants sought a broad range of remedies, including a declaration that the Public Accountants Council is institutionally biased in its granting of licences to practise public accounting. Central to the appellant's allegations of reasonable apprehension of bias is the fact that the Public Accountancy Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.37 authorizes the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario to appoint 12 of the 15 members of Council.

[8] At the request of the appellants, Lax J. made an order that the materials used in the application before her should be filed in the judicial review application in the Divisional Court. However, this judicial review application was not one of the courses of action suggested by Lax J.

[9] The respondents moved to quash or stay the judicial review application as being premature on the basis that the appellants' [page295] applications for licence before the Public Accountants Council had not yet been adjudicated on the merits.

[10] The appellants then brought a motion to consolidate the motions to quash with two pending statutory appeals arising from the Council's refusal to grant licences. The consolidation motion was dismissed.

[11] The motions to quash were scheduled to be heard on May 27, 28 and 29, 2002. On May 8, 2002, counsel for the appellants advised by letter that they had received instructions to withdraw the application for judicial review and agree to the dismissal of the motions to quash on a without costs basis. The respondents insisted on the payment of their costs of the application and the motions to quash and advised that they would continue to prepare for the motions to quash pending resolution of the matter. The appellants served their notice of abandonment on May 17, 2002. The respondents then brought their motion to have their costs fixed.

[12] The motions judge fixed the costs of the application for judicial review and the motions to quash on a partial indemnity basis including disbursements and GST as follows:

Public Accountants Council of Ontario $ 88,896.45

Individual Respondents $ 60,033.96

Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario $ 38,752.10

Total $187,682.51

Grounds of Appeal

[13] The appellants raise the following grounds of appeal:

(i) the motions judge erred in fixing the costs of the abandoned application rather than referring them for assessment; and

(ii) the costs awarded are excessive in that they are approximately 178 per cent of the costs awarded in the proceedings before Lax J. that involved substantially the same parties and issues without deduction for any amount claimed.

Did the motions judge err in fixing costs?

[14] The appellants accept that the respondents are entitled to their costs of the abandoned application pursuant to rule 37.09(3) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, which provides: [page296]

> 37.09(3) Where a motion is abandoned or is deemed to have been abandoned, a responding party on whom the notice of motion was served is entitled to the costs of the motion forthwith, unless the court orders otherwise.

However, the appellants submit that those costs ought not to be fixed by a judge in accordance with the costs grid established by rule 57.01(3). The appellants rely upon rule 57.01(3.1), which states:

> 57.01(3.1) Despite subrule (3), in an exceptional case the court may refer costs for assessment under Rule 58.

Rule 58 sets out a code of procedure for the assessment of costs by an assessment officer.

[15] The motions judge concluded, correctly in my view, that there is now a presumption that costs shall be fixed by the court unless the court is satisfied that it has before it an exceptional case. The appellants submitted to the motions court and to this court that the case at bar is such a case. The motions judge, in deciding that this was not an exceptional case, said [at para. 52]:

> Only if the assessment process will be more suited to effect procedural and substantive justice should the Court refer the matter for assessment. There must be some element to the case that is out of the ordinary or unusual that would warrant deviating from the presumption that costs are to be fixed. Neither complex litigation nor significant amounts in legal fees will be enough for a case to be exceptional. The judge should be able to fix costs with a reasonable review of the work completed without having to scrutinize each and every docket. If that type > of scrutinizing analysis is required, then perhaps, the matter would fall within the exception and be referred to assessment: BNY Financial Corp.-Canada v. National Automotive Warehousing Inc., [1999] O.J. No. 1273 (Commercial List, Gen. Div.) (BNY Financial).

[16] I agree with the motions judge that if a judge is able to effect procedural and substantive justice in fixing costs, she ought to do so. See Murano v. Bank of Montreal (1998), 1998 CanLII 5633 (ON CA), 41 O.R. (3d) 222, 163 D.L.R. (4th) 21 (C.A.) at p. 245 O.R., per Morden A.C.J.O.

[17] The appellants argued before us that an abandoned motion falls into the category of an exceptional case because the judge fixing the costs does not have the benefit of a hearing involving the presentation of evidence and legal argument. While there is no doubt that the judge who has heard a case is in the best position to determine a just costs award, it does not follow, that in the circumstances which exist here, the motions judge was obliged to decline the task.

[18] I also observe that rule 57.01(3.1) is discretionary. It provides that in an exceptional case, the trial judge may refer costs for assessment. It is not required that she do so. This is a somewhat complex case with several parties and a number of counsel, [page297] including one party with two senior counsel. Although another judge might have exercised his or her discretion under rule 57.01(3.1) differently, I see no basis upon which to interfere with the motions judge's discretion not to refer the costs for assessment.

Was the costs award excessive?

[19] The motions judge's decision is entitled to a high degree of deference. The standard of review for interfering with the exercise of the discretion by a judge of first instance was articulated by Lamer C.J.C. in Canadian Pacific Ltd. v. Matsqui Indian Band, 1995 CanLII 145 (SCC), [1995] 1 S.C.R. 3, [1995] S.C.J. No. 1, at p. 32 S.C.R.:

> This discretionary determination should not be taken lightly by reviewing courts. It was Joyal J.'s discretion to exercise, and unless he considered irrelevant factors, failed to consider relevant factors, or reached an unreasonable conclusion, then his decision should be respected. To quote Lord Diplock in Hadmor Productions Ltd. v. Hamilton, [1982] 1 All E.R. 1042, at p. 1046, an appellate court "must defer to the judge's exercise of his discretion and must not interfere with it merely on the ground that the members of the appellate court would have exercised the discretion differently".

[20] In a more recent case, Arbour J. said in Hamilton v. Open Window Bakery Ltd., [2004] S.C.J. No. 72, 2004 SCC 9, at para. 27:

> A court should set aside a costs award on appeal only if the trial judge has made an error in principle or if the costs award is plainly wrong (Duong v. NN Life Insurance Co. of Canada (2001), 2001 CanLII 24151 (ON CA), 141 O.A.C. 307, at para. 14).

[21] The appellants point out that the costs awarded in these proceedings are approximately 178 per cent of the costs awarded in the proceedings before Lax J. that involved the same parties and similar issues. The respondents, on the other hand, argue that the proceedings before Lax J. were significantly different from the abandoned judicial review application. However, it is to be noted that the same record was used in the judicial review application. When pressed in argument, counsel for the respondents had some difficulty in explaining the extent to which the factual substrata of the two applications differed. At the heart of both applications is the assertion that the Public Accountants Council of Ontario is effectively controlled by the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario.

[22] Counsel for the appellants submitted that there was much duplication of the work done by the three sets of counsel for the respondents. They also drew attention to the fact that the Public Accountants Council retained another senior counsel to prepare their factum, resulting in a duplication of services. We were [page298] assured by counsel for the respondents that the bills of costs submitted to the motions judge were appropriately adjusted to take into account such duplication.

[23] The respondents also submitted that the appellants were the authors of their own misfortune. The appellants said that they abandoned their application for judicial review because the Ontario Red Tape Commission recommended changes to the Public Accountancy Act; and a panel appointed under the Agreement on Internal Trade found that the Act offended provisions of the Agreement. The appellants claimed that the reports of these two bodies addressed the issues of concern to them, causing them to abandon their application for judicial review. However, the respondents observed that the report of the panel appointed under the Agreement on Internal Trade was released on October 5, 2001 and the Red Tape Commission report was released on December 10, 2001. It was several months later that the appellants abandoned their application. The respondents submit that the lion's share of the costs were generated in this period of delay, and particularly after February 2002, when the dates for the motion to quash were fixed for May 2002. Although this delay caused some concern to the motions judge, she concluded [at para. 67] that:

> In the circumstances of this case I do not find that the timing of the events that took place in the spring of 2002 leading up to the abandonment of the application was in bad faith or amounted to an abuse of the process of the court.

[24] The appellants submit that the motions judge accepted the bills of costs that were presented to her without any deductions. The bills were prepared in accordance with the calculation of hours times dollar rates provided by the costs grid. While it is appropriate to do the costs grid calculation, it is also necessary to step back and consider the result produced and question whether, in all the circumstances, the result is fair and reasonable. This approach was sanctioned by this court in Zesta Engineering Ltd. v. Cloutier, 2002 CanLII 25577 (ON CA), [2002] O.J. No. 4495, 21 C.C.E.L. (3d) 161 (C.A.) at para. 4 where it said:

> In our view, the costs award should reflect more what the court views as a fair and reasonable amount that should be paid by the unsuccessful parties rather than any exact measure of the actual costs to the successful litigant.

See also Stellarbridge Management Inc. v. Magna International (Canada) Inc. (2004), 2004 CanLII 9852 (ON CA), 71 O.R. (3d) 263, [2004] O.J. No. 2102 (C.A.) at para. 97.

[25] Zesta Engineering and Stellarbridge simply confirmed a well settled approach to the fixing of costs prior to the establishment of [page299] the costs grid as articulated by Morden A.C.J.O. in Murano v. Bank of Montreal at p. 249 O.R.:

> The short point is that the total amount to be awarded in a protracted proceeding of some complexity cannot be reasonably determined without some critical examination of the parts which comprise the proceeding. This does not mean, of course, that the award must necessarily equal the sum of the parts. An overall sense of what is reasonable may be factored in to determine the ultimate award. This overall sense, however, cannot be a properly informed one before the parts are critically examined.

[26] It is important to bear in mind that rule 57.01(3), which established the costs grid, provides:

> 57.01(3) When the court awards costs, it shall fix them in accordance with subrule (1) and the Tariffs.

Subrule (1) lists a broad range of factors that the court may consider in exercising its discretion to award costs under s. 131 of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43. The express language of rule 57.01(3) makes it clear that the fixing of costs is not simply a mechanical exercise. In particular, the rule makes clear that the fixing of costs does not begin and end with a calculation of hours times rates. The introduction of a costs grid was not meant to produce that result, but rather to signal that this is one factor in the assessment process, together with the other factors in rule 57.01. Overall, as this court has said, the objective is to fix an amount that is fair and reasonable for the unsuccessful party to pay in the particular proceeding, rather than an amount fixed by the actual costs incurred by the successful litigant.

[27] In considering whether the amounts claimed in the bills of costs were appropriate, the motions judge said [at paras. 69-70]:

> Here there is another point of departure between the applicants and the respondents. The respondents take the position that they are entitled to claim reimbursement for all the time spent and disbursements incurred in responding to the application for judicial review and in preparing the motion to quash. Conversely, the applicants contend that the factual background and the issues raised in the judicial review and the motion to quash are the same, or at least nearly the same, as those fully argued before Lax J. As a result, the time necessary for the respondents to respond to the judicial review application and to prepare for the motion to quash was, [or] should have been, minimal. It follows that the costs fixed should similarly be minimal.
> While it is apparent that the various proceedings have centred on the same complaints about the same licensing regime, the issues in each proceeding have differed. For example, the relief claimed in the matter before Lax J. was different than that claimed in the judicial review application. This different perspective requires a different analysis and different research. In addition, the various proceedings were spread over time and each new matter necessitated new preparation even in respect to issues that were the same or similar as those raised in earlier challenges to the licensing system. [page300] In these circumstances I do not consider it appropriate effectively to give the applicants a credit for costs ordered and paid in earlier proceedings.
> I agree with what Nordheimer J. said in Basedo v. University Health Network, [2002] O.J. No. 597 (Sup. Ct.) that "it is not the role of the court to second-guess the time spent by counsel unless it is manifestly unreasonable in the sense that the total time spent is clearly excessive or the matter has been overly lawyered." As mentioned earlier, counsel for the respondents filed substantial material in support of the detailed bills of costs. In addition, they took me through the various entries, in a general fashion, to explain the nature of the work done and why it was necessary. I have conducted my own detailed review of the functions performed, time spent and amounts claimed. In my view, the amounts for fees and disbursements, on a partial indemnity basis, are appropriate.

[28] With respect, I disagree with the motions judge. The total amount of $187,682.51 was not a fair and reasonable sum to award in the circumstances of this case, even given the respondents' separate bills of costs, which produced totals of $88,896.45, $60,033.96, and $38,752.10. It is my view that the costs awards in this case are so excessive as to call for appellate interference.

[29] While I accept that the bills of costs accurately reflect the time spent by all of the lawyers in this matter, it is inconceivable to me that the total amounts claimed are justifiable. In this regard, I accept the submission of the appellants that:

(a) the record in this application was the same record filed in the earlier proceedings;

(b) the respondents filed no evidence;

(c) the respondents conducted no cross-examination of any witness;

(d) the notices of motion to stay filed by the respondents were substantially the same; and

(e) the arguments to be advanced on the return of the motions to quash were substantially the same.

[30] In addition, I note that the amount claimed on a substantial indemnity scale, including disbursements and Goods and Services Tax, was in total only $14,528.86 more than the total partial indemnity award. In the result, the respondents received an award which is tantamount to a substantial indemnity award. This is significant in view of the fact that the motions judge expressly rejected the respondents' submission that they be awarded their costs on a substantial indemnity basis. [page301]

[31] The similarity of the amounts claimed on a substantial indemnity basis and on a partial indemnity basis appears to arise because the hourly rates applied were not significantly different on either scale.

[32] The Public Accountants Council employed four lawyers. One of the two senior counsel on the file charged three different hourly rates on a substantial indemnity basis -- $350, $385 and $425. On a partial indemnity basis, he claimed $350 per hour. The time spent by the other senior counsel was listed at a rate of $300 per hour on both a substantial indemnity scale and on a partial indemnity scale. In addition, one of the two junior counsel charged the same rate on both a substantial indemnity basis and on a partial indemnity basis. The second junior counsel docketed only 17 hours and the difference between the two rates produced a total differential of only $295.

[33] Counsel for the Institute of Chartered Accountants charged his time on the substantial indemnity scale at $400 per hour and at $350 per hour on the partial indemnity scale.

[34] There were three counsel for the individual respondents. The senior counsel charged hourly rates on a substantial indemnity basis of $330 and $350. Her partial indemnity rate was $300. For the first junior, the substantial indemnity rate was $230 and the partial indemnity rate was $225. The second junior had minimal time on the file and her time was claimed at rates of $85 on a substantial indemnity basis and $60 on a partial indemnity basis.

[35] In Wasserman, Arsenault Ltd. v. Sone, 2002 CanLII 45099 (ON CA), [2002] O.J. No. 3772, 164 O.A.C. 195 (C.A.), at para. 4, this court referred to a judgment of the Superior Court in Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Co. v. Geto Investments Ltd., [2002] O.J. No. 921, 17 C.P.C. (5th) 334 (S.C.J.), where Nordheimer J. observed at para. 16:

> As a further direct consequence of the application of the indemnity principle, when deciding on the appropriate hourly rates when fixing costs on a partial indemnity basis, the court should set those rates at a level that is proportionate to the actual rate being charged to the client in order to ensure that the court does not, inadvertently, fix an amount for costs that would be the equivalent of costs on a substantial indemnity basis when the court is, in fact, intending to make an award on a partial indemnity basis.

[36] In my view, the granting of an award of costs said to be on a partial indemnity basis that is virtually the same as an award on a substantial indemnity basis constitutes an error in principle in the exercise of the motions judge's discretion, particularly when the judge rejected a claim for a substantial indemnity award. This court took a similar view in Stellarbridge at para. 96. [page302]

[37] The failure to refer, in assessing costs, to the overriding principle of reasonableness, can produce a result that is contrary to the fundamental objective of access to justice. The costs system is incorporated into the Rules of Civil Procedure, which exist to facilitate access to justice. There are obviously cases where the prospect of an award of costs against the losing party will operate as a reality check for the litigant and assist in discouraging frivolous or unnecessary litigation. However, in my view, the chilling effect of a costs award of the magnitude of the award in this case generally exceeds any fair and reasonable expectation of the parties.

[38] In deciding what is fair and reasonable, as suggested above, the expectation of the parties concerning the quantum of a costs award is a relevant factor. See Toronto (City) v. First Ontario Realty Corp. (2002), 2002 CanLII 49482 (ON SC), 59 O.R. (3d) 568, [2002] O.J. No. 2519 (S.C.J.) at p. 574 O.R. I refrain from attempting to articulate a more detailed or formulaic approach. The notions of fairness and reasonableness are embedded in the common law. Judges have been applying these notions for centuries to the factual matrix of particular cases.

[39] Turning to what the quantum should be in this case, I would give consideration to the fact that the costs in the earlier proceeding were fixed in the amount of $97,563 by Lax J. While I accept, as the motions judge did, that there were differences between the two proceedings, the foundation upon which the two applications were prosecuted was based on the control of the Public Accountants Council of Ontario by the Chartered Accountants. The fact that all parties were satisfied to have the same evidentiary record in both cases suggests that there was much in common between the two applications.

[40] No doubt there was much more work to be done in respect of the second application. However, having expended partial indemnity costs of nearly $100,000 in response to the first application, I am confident that counsel were not starting tabula rasa when served with the application for judicial review. They would have been fully informed of the licensing application procedure, the make up and operation of the Public Accountants Council, the statutory regime and the issues that divided the Institute of Chartered Accountants for Ontario and the Certified General Accountants of Ontario. I simply cannot accept that counsel for the respondents did not take advantage of the work already done on the first application to better inform themselves in their approach to the second.

[41] I also take into account the other factors referred to in para. 29 above, i.e., the respondents filed no evidence; conducted no cross-examination; and advanced substantially the same arguments in support of the motions to quash. [page303]

[42] Finally, I consider that there is no proportionality between the costs claimed on a substantial indemnity scale and a partial indemnity scale.

[43] These factors suggest that the amounts claimed on a partial indemnity basis call for a significant reduction. The appellants submitted that the award to each of the three groupings of respondents should be $2,500 for a total of $7,500. I do not accept that submission.

[44] In my view, a fair and reasonable award, taking into consideration all the factors discussed above, would be:

Public Accountants Council of Ontario $ 30,000.00

Individual Respondents $ 20,000.00

Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario $ 13,000.00

Total $ 63,000.00

These figures are inclusive of disbursements and Goods and Services Tax.

Disposition

[45] In the result, I would allow the appeal, set aside the costs award of the motions judge and in its place substitute the award set out in para. 44 above.

[46] I would also order that the appellants are entitled to their costs of the motion for leave to appeal and the appeal, fixed on a partial indemnity basis in the total amount of $12,000, including disbursements and Goods and Services Tax.

Order accordingly.

on appeal from the court of appeal for ontario

Insurance -- Automobile insurance -- Duty of insurer -- Compulsory public automobile insurance plan -- Appellants not having underinsured motorist coverage -- Whether government-owned insurer obliged to inform its customers about all types of coverage available to them.

Torts -- Negligence -- Duty of care -- Compulsory public automobile insurance plan -- Appellants not having underinsured motorist coverage -- Whether government insurer obliged to inform its customers about all types of coverage available to them -- If so, whether insurer liable for failing to fulfil its duty.

Appeal -- Powers of appellate court -- Whether Court of Appeal erred in departing from trial judge's findings of fact.

Costs -- Whether trial judge erred in awarding appellants costs on a solicitor and client basis.

Both appellants suffered severe injuries as a result of an automobile accident caused by the driver of the other vehicle. That driver did not carry sufficient insurance to cover the appellants' losses. The appellants claimed for the shortfall against the respondent, a government-owned insurance company, whose primary function was to administer a mandatory public automobile insurance scheme within the Province of Manitoba. Under the "Autopac" scheme the owner of a motor vehicle must purchase insurance which provides minimum collision and public liability coverage. In addition, "underinsured motorist coverage" (UMC) is available upon the payment of a slightly higher premium. At the time of the accident the appellants were insured by the respondent under an Autopac policy which did not provide UMC.

The trial judge found that the respondent failed in its duty to inform the appellant of the full range of coverage available to him and in particular UMC and awarded damages to the appellant to the extent of the shortfall. The Court of Appeal (Blair J.A. dissenting) reversed that decision.

The issues in this appeal are (1) whether the court of appeal erred in departing from the trial judge's findings of fact; (2) whether a government-owned insurer selling compulsory insurance directly to vehicle owners has a duty to advise its customers of the existence, nature and extent of underinsured motorist coverage; (3) if so, whether the respondent fulfilled it in this case; (4) if the insurer did not fulfil its duty, whether it is liable for the appellants' loss; and (5) whether the trial judge erred in awarding the appellants their costs on a solicitor and client basis.

Held: The appeal should be allowed.

It was not open to the Court of Appeal to depart from the trial judge's findings of fact absent evidence of palpable and overriding error. The trial judge is in the best position to assess the credibility of testimony and his assessment of the witnesses' credibility should not be interfered with.

Reasonable reliance by a person on information provided by someone else can ground a duty of care in tort that binds the provider of the information. The sale of automobile insurance is a business in the course of which information is routinely provided to prospective customers with the expectation that they rely on it. As Autopac insurance is compulsory for all owners of motor vehicles, customers are likely to rely on the government insurer as their source of information about the kinds of additional coverage available and the nature of the protection afforded. The respondent knew or ought to have known that purchasers of insurance constitute a class of persons that may reasonably be expected to rely on the information communicated to them by its employees. It therefore owed its customers a duty of care to inform them of all available coverages, their purpose and their cost. While the duty is not as onerous as that imposed on private agents and brokers, the public insurer has the responsibility of seeing that its customers receive the information required to make intelligent decisions as to how much risk they are prepared to bear. The respondent's communication was insufficiently clear to discharge its duty of care. The initial information was inadequate and the information given with the renewal form was confusing. The purchaser was never in a position to make an informed choice about this optional coverage.

Whether a duty of care could also arise in contract was adverted to but not decided.

The trial judge's award of costs on a solicitor and client basis should stand. Prior to trial, the appellants filed an offer to settle which was not accepted by the respondent. One of the terms of that offer was that the appellants "shall have the right to structure all or part" of the sum. The respondent did not met its burden of showing that that offer was less favourable than the judgment award.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

WILSON J. -- This appeal raises questions concerning the responsibility of a government insurer to inform its customers about the types of automobile coverage open to them and the extent of such an insurer's liability should it fail to do so. The issue is particularly topical in Canada at the present time since several provinces have instituted compulsory public automobile insurance plans which have largely replaced the previous system of private insurance.

The appellants in this case were involved in a serious motor vehicle accident. The person responsible for the accident had inadequate insurance to cover the damages. When the appellants attempted to recover the shortfall from their own insurer, they were informed that they did not have "underinsured motorist coverage" (UMC), a special form of coverage which would have protected them against this type of loss. It was in this context that the question arose as to whether and to what extent the respondent insurer was duty-bound to inform the appellants about all the types of coverage which were available to them. The facts are important.

The Facts

Both appellants suffered severe injuries as a result of an automobile accident in the Province of Ontario and the appellant Cheryl Fletcher was rendered a paraplegic. The driver of the other vehicle, a Mr. Jean Piché, was found totally responsible for the collision and the appellants' damages were assessed at $1,387,090. The insurance available to indemnify Piché, however, was $500,000, leaving a shortfall of $887,090.

At the time of the accident the appellants were insured by the respondent, a government-owned insurance company. The Manitoba Public Insurance Company (MPIC) is a Crown corporation that was created by the Manitoba Public Insurance Corporation Act, R.S.M. 1987, c. P215 (the "Act"). Its primary function is to administer a mandatory public automobile insurance scheme within the province, which is widely known as "Autopac". MPIC sells insurance coverage of two basic types. The first type, which is not relevant to this appeal, provides coverage for all drivers automatically upon paying the fee for a Manitoba driver's licence. Relevant to this appeal is the second type of coverage which, pursuant to s. 48 of the Act, must be purchased by the owner of a vehicle when he or she registers that vehicle. This compulsory motor vehicle insurance provides minimum collision and public liability coverage. MPIC also offers two additional forms of coverage that are available upon payment of a slightly higher premium: UMC and P.L./P.D. (public liability and property damage), each of which is available up to a limit of $2,000,000. The public insurance scheme for automobiles in Manitoba is therefore quite straightforward: a prescribed minimum compulsory level of coverage for all automobile owners and two optional forms of coverage that are available for a higher premium.

Both the compulsory and additional forms of coverage may be purchased either from MPIC offices directly or through private insurance agents. There is no difference in price in either case. The UMC coverage that MPIC offered first became available on March 1, 1982 at a cost of $15 per year. Although private insurance companies were allowed to sell the additional forms of coverage, only one company in Manitoba was doing so when the appellants purchased their policy in 1982 and 1983.

At the time of their accident the appellants were insured under an Autopac policy which provided third party limits of $2,000,000. The policy did not provide UMC.

The appellants sued the respondent for damages in the Supreme Court of Ontario alleging breach of contract, misrepresentation, negligence and breach of duty. At trial, John Fletcher submitted that he had relied upon the expertise of MPIC's employees who served him when he obtained the compulsory insurance policy. He said that he had asked for the maximum available coverage and had assumed that he got it. But in the application for insurance and on the insurance certificate there was no mention of UMC. Counsel for MPIC placed a great deal of emphasis on a one page flyer consisting of two columns of small print which specified that UMC was available and which was sent to the appellants along with a renewal certificate for the policy several months after Mr. Fletcher had purchased the insurance. Mr. Fletcher testified that although the flyer included a brief reference to UMC, he believed that because the words "NOT APPLIC." had been typed in the box designated on the renewal certificate for UMC, this meant that the coverage offered was not applicable to him since he already had the maximum available coverage.

The trial judge found for the appellants in negligence and in contract and awarded them damages against the respondent in the amount of the shortfall. The respondent appealed and the Court of Appeal allowed the appeal and dismissed the appellants' action.

The Courts Below

Supreme Court of Ontario (McKeown J.) (1987), 1987 CanLII 4382 (ON SC), 60 O.R. (2d) 629

The trial judge found that when Mr. Fletcher first purchased his automobile insurance he was entitled to rely upon the respondent to explain to him the various forms of coverage that were available. He was not required to become his own insurance expert. Had the respondent not been prepared to do this it should have told its customers that they should consult a private insurance agent in order to obtain advice on insurance coverage.

The trial judge went on to find that the respondent did not inform Mr. Fletcher that UMC was available. He also found that had UMC been offered to Mr. Fletcher he would have purchased it. By failing to ensure both that the appellants were aware of the availability of UMC and that MPIC's employees were properly trained and instructed in order to be able to advise the appellants of UMC's availability and purpose, MPIC breached its duty to the appellants. When Mr. Fletcher dealt with the respondent he had a contractual right to rely on the offeror to advise him of the full range of coverage offered. But the duty was not only contractual; it sounded in negligence as well. McKeown J. therefore held that the respondent breached its duty to provide Mr. Fletcher with UMC when he requested maximum coverage, coverage which the respondent ought to have known included UMC. If it was not going to provide UMC, it had a duty to make clear to Mr. Fletcher that such coverage was available but was not being provided.

In McKeown J.'s view, Mr. Fletcher was a credible witness. McKeown J. accepted his testimony to the effect that he believed that "NOT APPLIC." on the renewal form meant UMC was not applicable to him since he already had the maximum available coverage. The trial judge found this interpretation to be reasonable.

Ontario Court of Appeal (1989), 1989 CanLII 10444 (ON SC), 68 O.R. (2d) 193

Finlayson J.A.

Finlayson J.A. was of the view, that much of Mr. Fletcher's evidence was self-serving and subjective. He felt that it did not support a finding that Mr. Fletcher had not been offered UMC but merely a finding that Mr. Fletcher had not read the written material designed to draw such coverage to his attention and that he had no recollection of having been told about the availability of UMC by the respondent's employees. Finlayson J.A. did not believe Mr. Fletcher's statement that he had relied upon the expertise of the respondent's employees to advise him of the coverage.

Finlayson J.A. was also of the view, at p. 198, that it would be "stretching the duty of an insurer to impose on it an affirmative obligation to ensure that each of its customers is in fact aware of the different types of insurance coverage available." The flyer received by the appellants made it clear that UMC was available and it was not the respondent's fault that the appellants failed to read it. He stated, at p. 198, that in circumstances where insurance is being sold directly to the public "it is difficult to envisage the formation of a relationship requiring the provision of unsolicited advice every time a customer comes to the counter". There was, in his view, no duty imposed upon the respondent to do any more than what was in fact done to inform the appellant of the availability of UMC.

Blair J.A. (dissenting)

Blair J.A. found no reason to interfere with the trial judge's conclusion that Mr. Fletcher's interpretation of the renewal application form was a reasonable one. He found the "NOT APPLIC." language in the UMC space on the form ambiguous and misleading. The confusion created by the renewal application form was, in his view, "compounded rather than clarified by the flyer enclosed with it".

Blair J.A. was also of the view that the evidence at trial supported McKeown J.'s conclusion both that UMC had not been mentioned to Mr. Fletcher when he attended the respondent's office to renew his coverage and that he would have purchased it had he been made aware of its availability. Moreover, little had been done by the respondent to inform the public about the existence of this type of protection. Whether customers were to be informed about the availability of UMC was left to the discretion of MPIC's employees.

Since McKeown J. had had "the inestimable benefit" of having seen and heard the testimony of all the witnesses, and since there were no manifestly unreasonable or overriding errors in the conclusions he had drawn from the evidence, Blair J.A. concluded that it was not open to the appeal court to interfere with the trial judge's findings.

Blair J.A. had no doubt that had Mr. Fletcher obtained the insurance policy through an independent agent, that agent would have been liable to him in tort. He stressed that the fact that all motor vehicle owners in Manitoba were required to obtain their prescribed minimum insurance from MPIC imposed upon it a strict duty "to inform the public adequately of its available additional coverage". He said, at p. 211:

> Autopac ... enjoyed an almost complete monopoly in automobile insurance. It seems not too much to hold that no less can be properly expected from a publicly owned corporation, established to provide compulsory insurance to all motor vehicle owners as an essential public service, than from private insurance agents in adequately informing owners of the policy options available to them. This is particularly true where the same premium is payable whether the insurance is sold directly or through an independent agent. The law must respond in a practical way to the new reality of the sale of motor vehicle insurance compulsorily and directly by a governmental agency.

He therefore agreed with the trial judge that the respondent had failed in its duty to inform Mr. Fletcher of the availability of UMC when he purchased his insurance. In Blair J.A.'s view, the respondent was directly, and not merely vicariously, liable for its negligence in failing to do so.

He declined to rule on the arguments in support of a contractual basis for the duty owed by MPIC. "Whether and to what extent the decision of this court in Wigle v. Allstate Ins. Co. of Canada (1984), 1984 CanLII 45 (ON CA), 49 O.R. (2d) 101 ... and other cases on the doctrine of reasonable expectations apply to dealings between direct insurers and their insureds can be left to another day."

Morden J.A. (concurring in the result with Finlayson J.A.)

Morden J.A. agreed with Finlayson J.A. that the appeal should be allowed. He stated that he was prepared to assume the correctness of the trial judge's finding that the respondent had a duty to advise the appellants about UMC. He did not think, however, that the evidence supported McKeown J.'s conclusion that the respondent had breached that duty. Morden J.A. noted that it was clear from the evidence that, if the appellant had read the flyer when he received it, he would have found out what UMC was, that it was available, and that he did not have it. In his mind Fletcher's failure to read the flyer was the decisive factor that defeated the appellants' claim.

The Issues

This appeal raises five issues:

1. Did the Ontario Court of Appeal err in departing from the trial judge's findings of fact?

2. Does a government-owned insurer selling compulsory insurance directly to owners of motor vehicles in the province of Manitoba have a duty to advise its customers of the existence, nature and extent of underinsured motorist coverage?

3.If such an insurer has such a duty, did it fulfil it in this case?

4.If the insurer did not fulfil its duty, is it liable for the appellants' loss?

5.Did the trial judge err in awarding the appellants their costs on a solicitor and client basis?

Analysis

1.Did the Ontario Court of Appeal err in departing from the trial judge's findings of fact?

It is essential that one have a clear picture of the facts in this appeal. In my view, we must therefore deal with a preliminary issue: in what circumstances is it appropriate for an appellate court to depart from a trial judge's findings of fact?

In The Sir Robert Peel (1880), 4 Asp. M.L.C. 321, James L.J. said at p. 322:

> The Court will not depart from the rule it has laid down that it will not overrule the decision of the Court below on a question of fact in which the judge has had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and observing their demeanour, unless they find some governing fact which in relation to others has created a wrong impression.

In Clarke v. Edinburgh Tramways Co., [1919] S.C. (H.L.) 35, Lord Shaw confirmed that primacy must be given to the trial judge's findings of fact. He said, at pp. 35-36:

> When a Judge hears and sees witnesses and makes a conclusion or inference with regard to what is the weight on balance of their evidence, that judgment is entitled to great respect, and that quite irrespective of whether the Judge makes any observation with regard to credibility or not. I can of course quite understand a Court of Appeal that says that it will not interfere in a case in which the Judge has announced as part of his judgment that he believes one set of witnesses, having seen them and heard them, and does not believe another. But that is not the ordinary case of a cause in a Court of justice. In Courts of justice in the ordinary case things are much more evenly divided; witnesses without any conscious bias towards a conclusion may have in their demeanour, in their manner, in their hesitation, in the nuance of their expressions, in even the turns of the eyelid, left an impression upon the man who saw and heard them which can never be reproduced in the printed page. What in such circumstances, thus psychologically put, is the duty of an > appellate Court? In my opinion, the duty of an appellate Court in those circumstances is for each Judge of it to put to himself, as I now do in this case, the question, Am I -- who sit here without those advantages, sometimes broad and sometimes subtle, which are the privilege of the Judge who heard and tried the case -- in a position, not having those privileges, to come to a clear conclusion that the Judge who had them was plainly wrong? If I cannot be satisfied in my own mind that the Judge with those privileges was plainly wrong, then it appears to me to be my duty to defer to his judgment.

Lord Sumner approved of this approach in Hontestroom (S.S.) v. Sagaporack (S.S.), [1927] A.C. 37 (H.L.), where he said at p. 47:

> None the less, not to have seen the witnesses puts appellate judges in a permanent position of disadvantage as against the trial judge, and, unless it can be shown that he has failed to use or has palpably misused his advantage, the higher Court ought not to take the responsibility of reversing conclusions so arrived at, merely on the result of their own comparisons and criticisms of the witnesses and of their own view of the probabilities of the case. The course of the trial and the whole substance of the judgment must be looked at, and the matter does not depend on the question whether a witness has been cross-examined to credit or has been pronounced by the judge in terms to be unworthy of it. If his estimate of the man forms any substantial part of his reasons for his judgment the trial judge's conclusions of fact should, as I understand the decisions, be let alone. [Emphasis added.]

This proposition has been repeatedly endorsed in Canada: see, for example, Prudential Trust Co. v. Forseth, 1959 CanLII 48 (SCC), [1960] S.C.R. 210, at p. 217, per Martland J. Recent cases have gone on to refine the principle set out in The Sir Robert Peel and The S.S. Hontestroom. In particular, Ritchie J. provided a thorough history of the principle's evolution in Stein v. The Ship "Kathy K", 1975 CanLII 146 (SCC), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 802, at pp. 806-8 and concluded:

> These authorities are not to be taken as meaning that the findings of fact made at trial are immutable, but rather that they are not to be reversed unless it can be established that the learned trial judge made some palpable and overriding error which affected his assessment of the facts. While the Court of Appeal is seized with the duty of re-examining the evidence in order to be satisfied that no such error occurred, it is not, in my view, a part of its function to substitute its assessment of the balance of probability for the findings of the judge who presided at the trial. [Emphasis added.]

And in Lewis v. Todd and McClure, 1980 CanLII 20 (SCC), [1980] 2 S.C.R. 694, Dickson J. (as he then was) reiterated that a trial judge's findings of fact should not be interfered with unless he or she had made a "palpable and overriding error". He stated at p. 700:

> It is trite law that an appellate court should not readily interfere with the findings of a trial judge, for reasons so often adumbrated but resting largely upon the advantage which a judge at trial enjoys over an appellate court, in having seen and heard the witnesses in the atmosphere of the arena.

These authorities, in my view, make crystal clear the test for determining when it is appropriate for an appellate court to depart from a trial judge's findings of fact: appellate courts should only interfere where the trial judge has made a "palpable and overriding error which affected his assessment of the facts." The very structure of our judicial system requires this deference to the trier of fact. Substantial resources are allocated to the process of adducing evidence at first instance and we entrust the crucial task of sorting through and weighing that evidence to the person best placed to accomplish it. As this Court and the House of Lords have repeatedly emphasized, it is the trial judge who is in the best position to assess the credibility of testimony. An appellate court should not depart from the trial judge's conclusions concerning the evidence "merely on the result of their own comparisons and criticisms of the witnesses": see Lord Sumner in The S.S. Hontestroom, supra, at p. 47.

In the appeal now before us Finlayson J.A. departed from the trial judge's findings of fact on at least two counts. He did not accept McKeown J.'s finding that Mr. Fletcher had relied on the respondent's employees for information and advice. Nor did he accept McKeown J.'s finding that had Fletcher been offered UMC, he would have purchased it. Yet at no point did Finlayson J.A. apply the test that this Court set out in "Kathy K", supra, and Lewis v. Todd and McClure, supra. No attempt was made to spell out whether and in what respects the trial judge's findings of fact constituted "palpable and overriding errors". Instead, Finlayson J.A. explained his decision to depart from the trial judge's findings of fact by observing that the trial judge had "stretched the evidence in favour of Fletcher". He refused to give much credence to the testimony of Fletcher, calling it "self-serving" and "entirely subjective", and concluded by observing that he did not propose to give much weight to the trial judge's findings of fact.

With respect, I do not think that it was open to the Court of Appeal to depart from the trial judge's findings of fact absent evidence of a palpable and overriding error. An appellate court should not substitute its views about the facts for those of the trial judge without carefully applying the strict test which has been developed over the years by the highest courts in England and Canada. Absent some manifest and palpable error, the trial judge's assessment of the witnesses' credibility must be allowed to stand.

In the case at bar, the witnesses' testimony and credibility were carefully considered by the trial judge. John Fletcher testified in chief that, "I was there to purchase insurance. I relied upon their expertise to advise me." McKeown J. was of the view, at p. 632, that Mr. Fletcher was "a very careful and honest and credible witness [who] answered all questions in a straightforward manner" and he therefore found that Mr. Fletcher had relied upon the respondent's employees for advice.

Mr. Fletcher also testified that if he had been advised about the availability of UMC, he would have purchased it for additional safety. McKeown J. commented, at p. 632, that "This is credible since the cost was only $15. He had always followed his insurance broker's advice in Ontario, and [his former insurance broker] said that he was an insurance conscious person." In summarizing his findings McKeown J. said: "I find that if John Fletcher had been offered underinsured motorist coverage he would have purchased the coverage."

McKeown J.'s findings were based on an appreciation of the appellant's state of mind when he purchased the insurance and it was for the trial judge to assess the evidence with respect to that state of mind. As Bowen L.J. observed in Edgington v. Fitzmaurice (1885), 29 Ch. D. 459, at p. 483:

> ... the state of a man's mind is as much a fact as the state of his digestion. It is true that it is very difficult to prove what the state of a man's mind at a particular time is, but if it can be ascertained it is as much a fact as anything else.

McKeown J.'s findings of fact must stand. There is no reason to believe that he made a "palpable and overriding error". He concluded, as he was entitled to do, that Mr. Fletcher was an extremely credible witness. On that basis he found that Mr. Fletcher relied on the respondent's employees for information and advice and that he would have purchased UMC had it been offered. These findings are entirely reasonable and it is no more open to this Court than it was to the Court of Appeal to depart from them.

2. Did the respondent, a government-owned insurer selling compulsory insurance directly to owners of motor vehicles in the province of Manitoba, have a duty to advise its customers of the existence, nature and extent of underinsured motorist coverage?

The appellants submit that the respondent owed them a duty to inform them of the availability of UMC. They argue that this duty sounds in both tort and contract, that there was a breach of this duty, and that they are entitled to damages in the amount of their loss.

A determination as to whether a duty is owed in either tort or contract in the circumstances of this case and, if so, the scope of that duty will have several important implications for publicly owned and operated insurance plans. For example, decisions about the type of training given to employees who deal directly with customers will almost certainly have to be made with an eye to the content of the duty imposed by law on such insurers. If the law requires them not only to advise customers of the different options available but also to explain the nature of the protection these options provide, then insurers will have to make sure that their employees are equipped to do this. If the content of the duty is even greater and the insurer is obliged to advise the customer whether he or she should acquire such additional coverage, even more extensive employee training may be required.

I propose to consider first whether a duty sounds in tort and thereafter, if necessary, whether it sounds also in contract.

(A) Tort

(a) Is there a duty of care?

The question raised by this appeal is whether MPIC owes a duty of care in the provision of information to its customers about optional forms of insurance coverage. To answer this question we must focus on the relationship between insurer and insured. In other words, we need to consider whether there is anything about the context in which customers purchase a policy from the public insurer which might be thought to give rise to a duty to provide information and to advise them of their options. I begin by reviewing the principles of law applicable to determine whether a duty of care exists and then turn to consider the application of those principles in the context of this appeal.

In Nova Mink Ltd. v. Trans-Canada Airlines, 1951 CanLII 325 (NS CA), [1951] 2 D.L.R. 241, a mink ranch operator sued an airline for damages when the noise created by one of their pilots flying low over the operator's ranch caused the female mink to eat the young. MacDonald J. found that the defendant airline had no duty to the plaintiff because the pilot did not know and could not reasonably have foreseen that there were mink farms in the area. MacDonald J. approached the case by first posing himself the question at pp. 253-54:

> Does the evidence establish that the defendant was under a legal duty to use care to avoid injury to the plaintiff's business as a mink ranch operator?

He then explained at p. 254 how this question is to be answered:

> The common law yields the conclusion that there is such a duty only where the circumstances of time, place, and person would create in the mind of a reasonable man in those circumstances such a probability of harm resulting to other persons as to require him to take care to avert that probable result.

He continued at p. 256:

> Many attempts have been made to generalize the circumstances which create a legal duty of care.... What is common ... is the idea of a relationship between parties attended by a foreseeable risk of harm .... That relationship may arise out of circumstance of physical proximity; but it is not that circumstance per se which gives rise to duty but the probability of harm inhering in the relationship of parties, spatial or otherwise. If such a relationship does exist in fact, or in contemplation, and is fraught with the likelihood of harm to another in that relationship, the basis of duty exists; and it is immaterial that the locus or date of the occurrence of the apprehended harm be unknown. [Emphasis in original.]

MacDonald J. in Nova Mink Ltd. was applying the classic formulation in Lord Atkin's famous dictum in Donoghue v. Stevenson, 1932 CanLII 536 (FOREP), [1932] A.C. 562, at p. 580:

> At present I content myself with pointing out that in English law there must be, and is, some general conception of relations giving rise to a duty of care, of which the particular cases found in the books are but instances .... You must take reasonable care to avoid acts or omissions which you can reasonably foresee would be likely to injure your neighbour.

> Who, then, in law is my neighbour? The answer seems to be -- persons who are so closely and directly affected by my act that I ought reasonably to have them in contemplation as being so affected when I am directing my mind to the acts or omissions which are called in question.

English and Canadian courts have applied Lord Atkin's "neighbour principle" to many types of relationships, including those involving the communication of information. There is now ample authority for the proposition that reasonable reliance by a person on information provided by someone else can ground a duty of care at common law that binds the provider of the information. For example, in Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners Ltd., [1964] A.C. 465, the House of Lords considered the liability of bankers who had negligently provided references concerning the solvency of one of their clients to the plaintiff company. The plaintiff company relied on these references and subsequently suffered significant losses when the client went into liquidation. The Law Lords held that in certain cases involving the provision of information or advice by one person to another, despite the absence of any contract between them, a special relationship can arise so as to impose on the provider of the information a duty of care towards the person who received it. Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest said at pp. 502-3:

> My Lords, I consider that it follows and that it should now be regarded as settled that if someone possessed of a special skill undertakes, quite irrespective of contract, to apply that skill for the assistance of another person who relies upon such skill, a duty of care will arise. The fact that the service is to be given by means of or by the instrumentality of words can make no difference. Furthermore, if in a sphere in which a person is so placed that others could reasonably rely upon his judgment or his skill or upon his ability to make careful inquiry, a person takes it upon himself to give information or advice to, or allows his information or advice to be passed on to, another person who, as he knows or should know, will place reliance upon it, then a duty of care will arise. [Emphasis added.]

Courts in England and Canada have applied the Hedley Byrne principle to other relationships of proximity where it was foreseeable that one party would reasonably rely on the information or advice given by the other: see, for example, Haig v. Bamford, 1976 CanLII 6 (SCC), [1977] 1 S.C.R. 466 (chartered accountants/investors), B.D.C. Ltd. v. Hofstrand Farms Ltd., 1986 CanLII 51 (SCC), [1986] 1 S.C.R. 228 (courier company/client), and Kamloops (City of) v. Nielsen, 1984 CanLII 21 (SCC), [1984] 2 S.C.R. 2 (municipal building inspectors/homeowners).

In Mutual Life & Citizens' Assurance Co. v. Evatt, [1971] 1 All E.R. 150, Lord Diplock discussed at p. 154 the type of circumstances which give rise to a relationship of reliance and a concomitant duty to take care:

> In Hedley Byrne itself and in the previous English cases on negligent statements which were analysed in the speeches, with the notable exceptions of Fish v. Kelly, (1864) 17 CBNS 194, Derry v. Peek, (1889) 14 App Cas 337, [1886-90] All ER Rep I, and Low v. Bouverie, [1891] 3 Ch 82, [1891-94] All ER Rep 348, the relationship possessed the characteristics (1) that the maker of the statement had made it in the ordinary course of his business or profession and (2) that the subject-matter of the statement called for the exercise of some qualification, skill or competence not possessed by the ordinary reasonable man, to which the maker of the statement was known by the recipient to lay claim by reason of his engaging in that business or profession.

The editors of MacGillivary & Parkington on Insurance Law (8th ed. 1988), commenting on the evolution of the Hedley Byrne principle, state at p. 231:

> Although the grounds and scope of the duty to take care in the making of statements cannot be said to be definitively settled, there is no doubt that the duty would apply to parties in negotiations for a policy of insurance.

Indeed, English and Canadian courts have not hesitated to apply the Hedley Byrne principle to the relationship between insurance agents and their clients: see, for example, Cherry Ltd. v. Allied Insurance Brokers Ltd., [1978] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 274 (Q.B.), General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corp. v. Peter William Tanter (The "Zephyr"), [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 529 (Eng. C.A.), Banque Financière de la Cité SA v. Westgate Ins. Co., [1989] 2 All E.R. 952 (Eng. C.A.), Pare v. Occidental Life Insurance Co. of California (1986), 1986 CanLII 7805 (BC SC), 23 C.C.L.I. 288 (B.C.S.C.), Bell v. Tinmouth (1988), 1988 CanLII 3220 (BC CA), 34 C.C.L.I. 179 (B.C.C.A.), Norlympia Seafoods Ltd. v. Dale & Co., [1983] I.L.R. 6475 (B.C.S.C.) and Woodside v. Gibraltar General Insurance Co. (1988), 1988 CanLII 4650 (ON SC), 34 C.C.L.I. 150 (Ont. S.C.) (appeal pending).

At issue in Banque Financière, supra, was the liability of the defendant insurer for the actions of its agent who had negligently failed to disclose to the plaintiff banks the deception being practised by one of the banks' debtors. Slade L.J. stated at p. 1007:

> Can a mere failure to speak ever give rise to liability in negligence under Hedley Byrne principles? In our view it can, but subject to the all-important proviso that there has been on the facts a voluntary assumption of responsibility in the relevant sense and reliance on that assumption. These features may be much more difficult to infer in a case of mere silence than in a case of misrepresentation. But that they can be inferred is shown by a recent decision of this court in Al-Kandari v J R Brown & Co. (a firm) [1988] 1 All E.R. 833, [1988] QB 665....
> In many cases where a misrepresentation has been made to another person, particularly by a professional man acting in the course of his profession, the assumption of responsibility may be readily inferred.
> We can see no sufficient reason on principle or authority why a failure to speak should not be capable of giving rise to liability in negligence under Hedley Byrne principles, provided that the two essential conditions are satisfied.

Norlympia Seafoods Ltd., supra, concerned the duty of care of an insurance broker who, while arranging insurance for the maiden voyage of a large fish processing barge, mistakenly advised the owners of the barge that certain forms of coverage were in place. The barge ran aground and suffered extensive damage to the hull and machinery. These losses were not covered by insurance. Although McLachlin J. (as she then was) was of the view that the relationship between the parties was properly analysed on the basis of contract, she added at p. 6491:

> ... it may be noted that application of recognized tort principles would also establish the liability of Dale & Company. On the principles established in Hedley Byrne ... the defendant is liable for failure to properly inform the plaintiffs of material facts and for misrepresentation of material facts.

These cases support the proposition that individuals or corporations whose business involves the provision of information or advice to others owe a duty of care in communicating that information or advice to those whom they know will reasonably rely on it. As Slade L.J. said, at p. 1007, where the information is provided in the course of doing business, the "assumption of responsibility may be readily inferred."

In my view, the sale of automobile insurance is a business in the course of which information is routinely provided to prospective customers in the expectation that they will rely on it and who do in fact reasonably rely on it. It follows, therefore, that the principle in Hedley Byrne applies and that MPIC will owe a duty of care to its customers if: (i) such customers rely on the information, (ii) their reliance is reasonable, and (iii) MPIC knew or ought to have known that they would rely on the information.

(i) Was there reliance?

McKeown J. found that the appellant Mr. Fletcher relied upon the expertise of MPIC's employees to inform him of available coverages. This is not surprising. It is only natural that customers will rely on the information that public insurers provide to them in order to make decisions about how much risk they are willing to bear. Moreover, I note that in the appeal before us Autopac insurance is compulsory for all owners of motor vehicles. Accordingly, they are likely to rely on the government insurer as their source of information about the kinds of additional coverage available and the nature of the protection it affords.

(ii) Was the reliance reasonable?

In my view, customer reliance is entirely reasonable in the circumstances. Few people approaching MPIC's counter will have any great familiarity with the compulsory insurance requirement of the law or with the specific types of optional additional coverage available and the protection they provide. They expect the employee serving them to tell them about the risks against which they must insure and those against which they may insure and what it will cost to do so.

(iii) Was the reliance expected?

In B.D.C. Ltd. v. Hofstrand Farms Ltd., supra, Estey J. made it clear that, before a court can impose a duty of care on the defendant, a plaintiff has to establish not only that there was reasonable reliance by him or her but that the defendant was aware of that reliance. On the latter criterion Estey J. followed Haig v. Bamford, supra, in which Dickson J. (as he then was) elaborated on the requirement that the defendant "know" that the plaintiff will rely on him. Dickson J. held at pp. 476-77 that it was not necessary that the defendant be aware of any specific plaintiff who was relying on him. The defendant's liability was grounded rather in his knowledge that a limited class of persons (to which class the plaintiff belonged) would use and rely upon his statement.

It is clear in this case that MPIC knew or ought to have known that purchasers of insurance constitute a class of persons that may reasonably be expected to rely on the information communicated to them by its employees. A public insurer cannot assume that customers are knowledgeable about the various optional coverages and that they will therefore know exactly what to ask for when they arrive at the counter. At the very least, customers need some clear information about available options in order to make an informed choice about the amount and type of insurance they should buy. In the case at bar, two top executives of the respondent stated on examination for discovery that MPIC purported to provide the same service to the public with respect to selling the Autopac insurance that private brokers do and that the public would have no good reason to suspect that the calibre of the advice they received from the Autopac agents would be any less competent. It is evident that these executives were well aware that customers would rely on the information their employees provided. Such anticipated reliance brings the customer within the scope of those persons directly affected by the insurer's acts or omissions. It makes him or her a "neighbour", to use Lord Atkin's phrase. I conclude therefore that MPIC owed a duty of care to its customers to inform them of all available coverages, their purpose and their cost.

(b) What is the scope of the duty?

The appellants submit that MPIC's duty of care should be the same as that of a private insurance agent or broker in Manitoba. The respondent, on the other hand, argues that, if there is a duty at all, it is merely the duty owed by a seller to a buyer in a transaction between two parties dealing at arm's length. In my view, the scope of the duty owed by MPIC lies somewhere between these two positions.

(i) The duty on private agents and brokers

Fine's Flowers Ltd. v. General Accident Assurance Co. of Canada (1977), 1977 CanLII 1182 (ON CA), 17 O.R. (2d) 529 (C.A.), is the leading Canadian case concerning the duty of care owed by private insurance agents and brokers. Mr. Fine had an extensive horticultural business. He asked his insurance agent, through whom he had purchased insurance for more than 20 years, to obtain "full coverage" for his business. The agent obtained coverage under a policy which covered a number of risks. However, it did not cover damage resulting from breakdown of the heating system due to normal wear and tear of the pumps. A pump failure subsequently occurred and extensive damage was caused to the plaintiff's plants and flowers.

The outcome of the case turned on whether the plaintiff's loss fell within the scope of the duty owed by the insurance agent. The majority discussed the agent's duty at p. 538:

> The main ground of appeal from the judgment of the learned trial Judge is that he put far too broad and sweeping a duty on insurance agents. They are not insurers. It is not part of their duty to know everything about their clients' businesses so as to be in a position to anticipate every conceivable form of loss to which they might be subject. The agent's duty, counsel submits, is "to exercise a reasonable degree of skill and care to obtain policies in the terms bargained for and to service those policies as circumstances might require".
> I take no issue with counsel's statement of the scope of the insurance agent's duty except to add that the agent also has a duty to advise his principal if he is unable to obtain the policies bargained for so that his principal may take such further steps to protect himself as he deems desirable. The operative words, however, in counsel's definition of the scope of the agent's duty, are "policies in the terms bargained for".
>
> In many instances, an insurance agent will be asked to obtain a specific type of coverage and his duty in those circumstances will be to use a reasonable degree of skill and care in doing so or, if he is unable to do so, "to inform the principal promptly in order to prevent him from suffering loss through relying upon the successful completion of the transaction by the agent".
> But there are other cases, and in my view this is one of them, in which the client gives no such specific instructions but rather relies upon his agent to see that he is protected and, if the agent agrees to do business with him on those terms, then he cannot afterwards, when an uninsured loss arises, shrug off the responsibility he has assumed. [Emphasis added.]

Thus, the agent would have discharged his duty in Fine's Flowers if he had informed the plaintiff that certain types of losses were not covered by the policy he had arranged and had advised the plaintiff to purchase additional coverage for the pumps if he really wanted "full coverage". Estey C.J.O. (as he then was) stressed that the agent owed a positive duty to warn the client. He put the standard for determining the agent's liability in negligence as follows at p. 533:

> It was the duty of the defendant agent to either procure such [requested] coverage, or draw to the attention of the plaintiff his failure or inability to do so and the consequent gap in coverage. Having done neither, the defendant agent is liable in negligence,...

In my view, Fine's Flowers stands for the proposition that private insurance agents owe a duty to their customers to provide not only information about available coverage, but also advice about which forms of coverage they require in order to meet their needs. I note that Professor Snow has summarized the effect of Fine's Flowers in "Liability of Insurance Agents for Failure to Obtain Effective Coverage: Fine's Flowers Ltd. v. General Accident Assurance Co." (1979), 9 Man. L.J. 165, in the following terms, at p. 169:

> The implication of this case and many others like it in recent years seems clear. Consumers who place their faith in insurance agents holding themselves out as competent and find their faith misplaced, will frequently be able to find recourse against the agent. ... [T]he extent of the duty owed by an insurance agent, both in placing insurance and in indicating to the insured which risks are covered and which are not, as set out in this case, is a fairly stringent one for the agent. Moreover, given the general situation of the principal relying very heavily on the expertise of the agent, it does not seem to be an unreasonable burden for an insurance agent to bear. [Emphasis added.]

The duty of care owed by an insurance agent was further elaborated in G.K.N. Keller Canada Ltd. v. Hartford Fire Insurance Co. (1983), 1983 CanLII 5487 (ON SC), 1 C.C.L.I. 34 (Ont. H.C.) (conf. on appeal (1984), 4 C.C.L.I. xxxvii (Ont. C.A.)). It was held in that case that where the customer adequately describes the nature of his or her business to the agent, the onus is then on the agent to review the insurance needs of the customer and provide the full coverage requested. Should an uninsured loss occur, the agent will be liable unless he or she has pointed out the gaps in coverage to the customer and advised him or her how to protect against those gaps.

It is clear that within the insurance industry, as also within the courts, private insurance agents and brokers are viewed as more than mere salespeople. The Continuing Legal Education Society of British Columbia's 1985 Seminar on Insurance Law focused on the services they provide, (at p. 6.1.03):

> The services of a competent agent or broker will include, in addition to advice on insurance, and the brokering or placing of insurance on behalf of the client, an active interest and involvement in loss prevention and a claims supervisory service to assist your client in the satisfactory settlement of the claims.

In my view, it is entirely appropriate to hold private insurance agents and brokers to a stringent duty to provide both information and advice to their customers. They are, after all, licensed professionals who specialize in helping clients with risk assessment and in tailoring insurance policies to fit the particular needs of their customers. Their service is highly personalized, concentrating on the specific circumstances of each client. Subtle differences in the forms of coverage available are frequently difficult for the average person to understand. Agents and brokers are trained to understand these differences and to provide individualized insurance advice. It is both reasonable and appropriate to impose upon them a duty not only to convey information but also to provide counsel and advice.

(ii) The duty on public insurers

What then is the scope of MPIC's duty? Is it, as the appellant submits, as onerous as that imposed on private agents and brokers? I think not. I think it is a duty to inform customers of the available range of coverage. Given that automobile accidents often produce tragic consequences that may be irreversible and virtually incapable of compensation in monetary terms, customers must have all the information they need in order to make an informed choice about the level of coverage appropriate for them. Where an additional optional form of coverage such as UMC is offered precisely because it is foreseeable to the insurer that there may be instances where the standard coverage is inadequate, it is right and proper that the insurer be under a duty to make the existence of such optional coverage known to the customer. Selling insurance is not, as the respondent suggests, like selling groceries, and the law should not treat them alike. The purchase of insurance is predicated on decisions made about assessing and bearing risks. Members of the public need to have all relevant information available to them in an explicit and readily comprehensible manner if they are to make intelligent decisions about how much risk they are prepared to bear. The public insurer has the responsibility of seeing to it that that information is provided to them in a reasonably intelligible fashion.

By the same token, however, there are a number of reasons why the public insurer's duty is less onerous than that of the private agent or broker. The institutional setting in which the public insurance is sold affords considerably less scope for privacy and individualized attention than that provided by a private agency. As the trial judge noted, an MPIC employee may serve as many as 60 people a day. Further, the employees who serve the customers do not hold themselves out as specialists in risk assessment and insurance advice. The service they provide is more sales and clerical than that provided by an insurance agent. Indeed, I note that the employees of MPIC are specifically exempted from the requirement set out in the Insurance Act, R.S.M. 1987, c. I40, that persons selling insurance be qualified and licensed as agents. This is not to say that the average customer should be taken to know about this statutory exemption. But one must nonetheless be sensitive to the role that the legislature envisaged that MPIC's salespeople would play. In my opinion, MPIC's employees were not intended to sit down with their customers and inquire into their personal, family and business affairs so as to provide individualized insurance advice.

The respondent submitted that, since MPIC is a public body, it should be granted the immunity traditionally accorded to public authorities from actions based on an authority's failure to act. The respondent states that the rationale behind this rule is that to expose public authorities to liability in these circumstances would "result in great hardship" and seriously impede their efforts to fulfil their administrative functions. On this reasoning, no positive duty to inform customers about coverage options should be imposed on the public insurer because it would be "overly onerous and therefore unreasonable" for MPIC to warn the hundreds of thousands of drivers in the province of Manitoba that for certain accidents their coverage might be inadequate. In my view this submission is without merit. The options that are available are simple and straightforward. It is not asking too much of the employee to have him or her tell the customer that they exist. I agree with Blair J.A. who stated:

> Autopac's duty was limited to ensuring that the necessary information, upon which applicants could make their decisions, was placed before them. The duty did not extend to advising or persuading them to take the optional coverage nor did Fletcher's counsel contend that it did.

(B) Contract

It was argued at trial that MPIC was under a contractual duty to provide the appellants with timely and accurate information about the additional forms of coverage that were available. The learned trial judge stated at p. 638: "When Mr. Fletcher dealt with M.P.I.C. he had a contractual right, as does anyone contracting for service, to rely on the offerer to advise him of the range of coverage offered. The duty is not only a contractual duty but sounds in negligence."

Since I have concluded that public insurers such as MPIC have a duty in tort to inform their customers of the additional forms of coverage available to them, it is not strictly necessary for the disposition of this appeal to determine whether such a duty can also be grounded in contract.

The appellants did not develop a detailed contractual analysis before this Court. They relied on the decision in Fine's Flowers, supra, to support their contention that MPIC owed them a duty in both tort and contract. I note, however, that in that case there was an ongoing contractual agreement binding on the broker that required him to keep the plaintiff covered for all foreseeable, insurable and normal risks associated with its horticultural business. While there may be an argument that would support a finding of contractual duty in the circumstances of the present case, the decision in Fine's Flowers is clearly distinguishable.

I note that Blair J.A. suggested that a contractual analysis rooted in the doctrine of reasonable expectations might be persuasive but did not think it necessary to reach a conclusion on this aspect of the case. Since this Court has not had the benefit of counsel's submissions on this point, I agree that the question of whether public insurers owe a duty in contract is best left for another day.

3. If such an insurer has such a duty, did it fulfil it in this case?

Having concluded on the basis of the above analysis that public insurers are under a duty to inform their customers of the full range of coverage available to them, did MPIC fulfil its duty in this case?

The trial judge made two significant findings. He found first that MPIC had made minimal efforts to inform the Manitoba public generally about the availability of UMC. He found second that it had not made sufficient efforts to inform the appellants of the existence and availability of UMC. A majority of the Court of Appeal held that MPIC's efforts were sufficient to discharge the duty they owed to the appellants.

With respect to informing the public at large, McKeown J. had the benefit of extensive testimony at trial about the comparative success of various public insurance companies' information campaigns about underinsured motorist insurance. In particular, the effort to educate the public in Manitoba was contrasted with that in British Columbia, a matter that had come under scrutiny in Sjodin v. Insurance Corporation of British Columbia, [1987] I.L.R. 8319. The trial judge found that MPIC had not set up a public education program similar to the one established by the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia (I.C.B.C.). No large scale advertising campaign was launched in Manitoba to explain the new UMC option which became available for the first time in Manitoba in March of 1982. Furthermore, MPIC's employees did not ask customers as a matter of course whether they wanted UMC. The trial judge noted that the extensive public education program had been successful in B.C. as evidenced by the relatively high acceptance rate (97 per cent of eligible B.C. drivers purchased it) compared to Manitoba. In Sjodin this evidence was viewed as crucial to the court's finding that I.C.B.C. had not failed in its duty to inform the plaintiff.

The trial judge also found that MPIC's efforts to inform Mr. Fletcher were inadequate. The evidence at trial shows (at p. 632) that when Mr. Fletcher initially went to the offices in Winnipeg in September of 1982, he explained to the agent who served him that he was a new resident of Manitoba and that in order to ensure "additional safety for both him and his wife" he wanted to purchase "the maximum coverage". The respondent's employee, a Mr. Lanthier, offered him additional P.L./P.D. coverage, and he purchased the maximum amount available, $2,000,000. But at no time was he informed of the existence, cost or purpose of UMC. As noted, the trial judge found as a fact that if Fletcher had been told about UMC, he would have purchased it, since it was relatively inexpensive and since he had done so with his previous insurer in Ontario. On the subsequent renewal certificates sent to him in 1983 there was a separate box for UMC in which was marked "NOT APPLIC." That made good sense to Fletcher since he had purchased and was paying for "the maximum coverage" available.

McKeown J. was of the view that these forms only compounded the wrong caused by the initial omission to tell customers about UMC. Their effect was to mislead Fletcher. Here was someone who had explicitly requested the maximum available coverage and whose (mistaken) belief that he was insured against all insurable risks was subsequently confirmed by the renewal form which appeared to indicate that he had no need of UMC. MPIC's general duty is to inform the public about the UMC option. Its specific duty when faced with a client like Fletcher who explicitly requests maximum coverage is either to provide the coverage requested or, if it is not providing it, to inform him clearly and unequivocally that he does not have the maximum and that there is a gap in his coverage. The trial judge concluded that absent such unequivocal notice from MPIC Fletcher's honest interpretation of the renewal form was reasonable.

The crucial point of difference between the trial judge's conclusion and that reached by the Court of Appeal concerned the flyer that was mailed out with Mr. Fletcher's renewal form in which brief mention was made of the existence of UMC. The passage pertaining to UMC consisted of nine lines of small print in the space of one inch at the very bottom of the left hand column of the one-page flyer. The trial judge found that the flyer was misleading when read together with Mr. Fletcher's renewal form. He accepted that the appellant, had he read the flyer, would reasonably have understood it to mean that UMC was not applicable to him since he had already obtained what he thought was the maximum coverage. He concluded that the appellant had been misled.

The majority of the Court of Appeal did not think that the combination of the renewal form and the flyer was misleading and therefore held that MPIC had fulfilled its duty to inform Fletcher. Morden J.A. reached this conclusion with virtually no consideration of the box in the renewal marked "NOT APPLIC." In his view, the flyer alone was sufficiently clear to have removed any doubts that Fletcher might have had about UMC. Finlayson J.A. also found the flyer to be straightforward but went on to assess the effect of the renewal form. He said at p. 199:

> To compound matters, when he made the crucial renewal application, he took no exception to the fact that the box opposite "underinsured motorist protection" was marked "not applic.". The trial judge interpreted Fletcher's evidence that this meant "not applicable to him" in the sense that "this coverage is not available". However, we must look at it from M.P.I.C.'s point of view as well. Fletcher had not purchased this coverage previously and so, when M.P.I.C. calculated his insurance premium, this cost was not included.

> In my opinion, the application for renewal, particularly when read with the enclosed flyer, was not ambiguous. It was very clear.

I note that the appellants did not argue that the flyer, standing alone, was unclear or ambiguous in its description of UMC. Their submission was that the renewal form when read with the flyer was ambiguous and misleading or at least was not sufficiently clear and unequivocal to "cure" MPIC's antecedent omission to inform Fletcher of the availability of UMC when he first purchased his Autopac policy.

The insurer's duty is to provide sufficient timely, clear and accurate information to its customers about the various options so that they can make informed choices about what level of risk beyond that required by law they want to insure themselves against. At issue in this appeal, then, is the question whether MPIC's communication was clear enough.

In cases where wording in an insurance contract is unclear or ambiguous Canadian and English courts have consistently applied the contra proferentem rule of construction: see, for example, Indemnity Insurance Co. v. Excel Cleaning Service, 1954 CanLII 9 (SCC), [1954] S.C.R. 169, per Estey J. at pp. 179-80. In Consolidated-Bathurst Export Ltd. v. Mutual Boiler and Machinery Insurance Co., 1979 CanLII 10 (SCC), [1980] 1 S.C.R. 888, Estey J. explained the rule at p. 899:

> Insurance contracts and the interpretative difficulties arising therein have been before courts for at least two centuries, and it is trite to say that where an ambiguity is found to exist in the terminology employed in the contract, such terminology shall be construed against the insurance carrier as being the author, or at least the party in control of the contents of the contract.

Professors Brown and Menezes state at p. 138 of Insurance Law in Canada (1982) that the "basis for the rule is that the burden of an irreducible ambiguity should fall on the drafter."

In Scott v. Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Co., 1989 CanLII 105 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1445, La Forest J. approved of the approach to the interpretation of insurance contracts set out in Consolidated-Bathurst and stressed that the words employed should be given their ordinary meaning, "such as the average policy holder of ordinary intelligence, as well as the insurer, would attach to [them]" (at p. 1455). He continued at pp. 1458-59:

> Policies of insurance are prepared by the insurers and in doing so they not unnaturally are minded to protect their own interests. To avoid the consequent injustices that may ensue to an insured, courts have long insisted that any ambiguity be resolved in favour of the insured.

Given the rationale that underlies the doctrine of contra proferentem, it is just as appropriate to apply it to the renewal form sent to the holder of the insurance policy as to the contract itself. The renewal form is an integral part of the process of buying insurance coverage and is the one document most likely to be read by the insured. If it contains words or terms which, when given their ordinary meaning, still produce ambiguity in the mind of the policyholder, that ambiguity must be resolved in favour of the policyholder.

In my view, MPIC's communication was insufficiently clear to discharge its duty of care. Its initial failure to inform Fletcher of the availability of UMC is conduct that clearly falls below the standard of care that MPIC owed to its customers. MPIC contends that since no harm had yet occurred it was able to "cure" this omission after the fact by means of a written notice to the appellants. But since MPIC chose to communicate by mail it was incumbent upon it to make sure the written materials it sent out were cast in the clearest of terms. All manner of customers would have received the renewal form and flyer, some more conversant in insurance than Mr. Fletcher and some less. The flyer contained nothing in particular to draw the attention of the average customer to the small print that mentioned the UMC option and these few lines simply did not convey with sufficient clarity or seriousness the availability, importance and relatively low cost of UMC. The renewal form that Mr. Fletcher received was ambiguous as regards UMC. In my opinion, the words "NOT APPLIC." are very confusing in the context in which they appear. I agree with the appellants that something like "NOT COVERED" would have been a much more appropriate way of making clear that this form of coverage was available to them and that they did not have it. The ambiguity must be resolved in favour of the appellants.

Since Mr. Fletcher went to the MPIC offices to pay for his renewal in person, it is possible that MPIC could have "cured" its initial omission to inform him about UMC at that time. However, the trial judge found that he was not told about UMC on that occasion either. There was a single poster placed at the end of a long busy counter advertising the availability of UMC. McKeown J. found that it was unlikely that Fletcher would have seen it and accepted his evidence that he did not see it. I see no reason to disturb these findings of the trial judge. These half-measures were plainly inadequate to fulfil the duty that MPIC owed to the appellants.

I conclude therefore that MPIC failed in its duty to the appellants. MPIC's acts or omissions deprived Mr. Fletcher of the relevant information initially and, given that he was subsequently misled by the renewal form and flyer, he was never in a position to make an informed choice about this optional coverage.

4.If the insurer did not fulfil its duty, is it liable for the appellants' loss?

The respondent submits that even if it had provided more information in its flyer, Mr. Fletcher would not have purchased UMC since he failed to read the flyer. Therefore, MPIC argues that it should not be held liable for the appellants' loss since its acts or omissions did not cause that loss. Mr. Fletcher was the author of his own misfortune.

This argument is without merit. The finding that MPIC did not discharge its duty to inform the appellants does not hinge solely on the adequacy or inadequacy of the flyer. Rather, it rests on the combined effect of MPIC's initial omission to tell Mr. Fletcher about UMC when he first bought his coverage, the misleading renewal form and flyer, and MPIC's failure to mention UMC when he paid for his renewal in person. Faced with this combination of acts and omissions by the respondent, the appellants cannot be viewed as the authors of their own misfortune.

The trial judge found that Mr. Fletcher would have purchased UMC had he been told of its availability. Had MPIC not breached its duty, the Fletchers would have been covered against loss caused by an underinsured motorist up to a limit of $2,000,000. The shortfall between the underinsured motorist's insurance and the appellants' loss was $887,090. I therefore find that the respondent's breach of duty caused the appellants' loss and hold it liable for damages in the amount of the shortfall.

5. Did the trial judge err in awarding the appellants their costs on a solicitor and client basis?

On March 9, 1987, some two months before trial, the appellants duly filed an "Offer to Settle" for the amount of $650,000 plus prejudgment interest. That offer was not accepted by MPIC. One of the terms of the offer was that the appellants "shall have the right to structure all or part" of the sum. McKeown J. awarded costs to the appellants on a solicitor and client basis because of MPIC's refusal to settle on these terms.

Rule 49.10(1) of the Ontario Rules of Civil Procedure, O. Reg. 560/84, confers an entitlement to solicitor and client costs on a plaintiff who has made an offer to settle which turns out to be the same as or less favourable than the judgment obtained and that offer is rejected by the defendant. The purpose of this rule is to induce settlements and avoid trials and to provide predictability with respect to costs: see Jacuzzi Canada Ltd. v. A. Mantella & Sons Ltd. (1988), 31 C.P.C. (2d) 195 (H.C.).

MPIC argues that because the offer to settle was not a lump sum but a structured settlement it is not possible to determine whether the offer is more or less favourable than the judgment and so the rule cannot apply. In the alternative, the respondent maintains that the offer was less favourable because the administrative costs involved in a structured settlement might be significant. Both of these arguments ignore the fact that there are standard and generally accepted actuarial principles by means of which the present value of future sums payable can be calculated. Even assuming the truth of MPIC's contention that the "valuation of a structured settlement is extremely complex" for which highly specialized accountants would be required, I cannot accept that it would cost more than the difference between the offer and the damage award ($237,090) to arrive at the value of a structured settlement. The onus is clearly on the respondent to show that the offer was in fact less favourable than the judgment award. It has not met this burden. I therefore see no reason to interfere with the order of the trial judge as to costs.

Disposition

I would allow the appeal and restore the order of the trial judge as to both damages and costs.

Appeal allowed with costs.

DATE HEARD: 16 November 2012

[1] The issue remaining in this matter is costs. The plaintiffs' claims were dismissed following a jury trial which continued over four weeks in the Spring of 2012. Thereafter, the court received written submissions on costs issues and, by Endorsement issued on 18 June 2012, fixed the costs payable by Giuseppina Iannarella at zero and reserved a decision on Andrea Iannarella's costs liability to permit him time to provide evidence of his ability to pay a costs award, he having submitted that he could not afford to.

[2] Specifically, the plaintiffs submitted that a significant costs award will only result in undue hardship to the plaintiffs who are both reaching retirement age at a time where the economy is unstable and this militates against the award of costs in the unique circumstances of this particular case.

[3] The plaintiffs relied upon cases in which the ability to pay costs was weighed among the factors to be considered in awarding costs.[1] As the evidence at trial regarding Mr. Iannarella's financial ability to pay any costs award was scant, I borrowed from the words of Lane J.[2] in concluding that there may be matters unknown to me which ought to influence my decisions in fixing costs and invited further evidence.

[4] In response, Mr. Iannarella submitted a brief of information and documents in support of his assertion of impecuniosity.

[5] The defendants countered by filing a brief that included affidavit evidence from a registered real estate sales representative who opined that the plaintiffs' appear to have equity in their home of between $490,000 and $535,000.

[6] The defendants correctly submit that the plaintiffs have not provided sworn affidavit evidence showing their impecuniosity or demonstrating Mr. Iannarella's claimed inability to pay an award of costs.

[7] Arguing by analogy to cases involving impecuniosity in motions for security for costs, the defendants submit that the onus is on the party claiming to be impecunious to substantiate the claim by way of evidence and the failure to adduce adequate evidence will be fatal to that position,

[8] In Shuter,[3] Master Haberman noted that:

> … in Uribe v. Sanchez [2006] O.J. No. 2370, the court held that as the plaintiffs financial capabilities are solely within his knowledge, it is incumbent on him to "provide evidence with supporting documentation as to his income, expenses, assets and liabilities" (emphasis added), and that assets should be described with particularity. Here, the master cited Quinn J's decision in Morton v. HMQ Canada 2005 CanLII 6052 (ON SC), 75 O.R. (3rd) 63, where the learned judge stated that "the financial evidence of the plaintiff must be set out with robust particularity", leaving "no one answered questions." He went on to list what should be included:
>
> > full financial disclosure is required and should include the following: the amount and source of all income; a description of all assets (including value); a list of all liabilities and other significant expenses; and indication of the extent of the ability of the plaintiffs to borrow funds; and details of any assets disposed of or encumbered since the action arose.
> It appears from these passages that there is a high evidentiary threshold that must be met before a court can find that a plaintiff is impecunious and > that this threshold can only be reached by tendering complete and accurate disclosure of the plaintiffs income, assets, expenses, liabilities and forwarding ability with full supporting documentation for each category where available or an explanation where not available. At the very least, this would require an individual plaintiff to submit his most recent tax return, complete banking records and records attesting to income and expenses…

[9] Quite apart from the my concern that the unsworn information before me at best paints an incomplete picture of Mr. Iannarella's financial position, I am not persuaded that he has met a reasonable onus of establishing that he is financially unable to pay an award of costs. Nor has he established the size of award that he would be able to pay.

[10] Accordingly, costs are fixed without further consideration of impecuniosity as a factor of relevance in this case.

[11] In Agius,[4] Ricchetti J. well summarized this court's concerns in fixing costs:

> Fixing costs is not merely a mechanical exercise in reviewing the receiving party's Costs Outline. In Anderson v, St. Jude Medical Inc. (2006), 2006 CanLII 85158 (ON SCDC), 264 D.L.R. (4th) 557, the Divisional Court set out several principles to be considered in making an award of costs:
>
> 1. the discretion of the court must be exercised in light of the specific facts and circumstances of the case in relation to the factors set out in rule 57.01(1): Boucher, Moon, 2004 CanLII 39005 (ON CA), [2004] O.J. No. 4651, and Coldmatic Refrigeration of Canada Ltd. v. Leveltek Processing LLC (2005), 2005 CanLII 1042 (ON CA), 75 O.R. (3d) 638 (C.A.).
>
> 2. A consideration of experience, rates charged and hours spent is appropriate, but is subject to the overriding principle of reasonableness as applied to the factual matrix of the particular case: Boucher. The quantum should reflect an amount court considers to be fair and reasonable rather than any exact measure of the actual costs to the successful litigant: Zesta Engineering Ltd. v. Cloutier (2002), 119 A.C.W.S. (3d) 341 (Ont.C.A.), at para. 4.
>
> 3. The reasonable expectation of the unsuccessful party is one of the factors to be considered in determining an amount that is fair and reasonable: rule 57.01(1)(0.b).
>
> 4. The court should seek to avoid inconsistency with comparable awards in other cases. "Like cases, [if they can be found], should conclude with like substantial results": Murano v. Bank of Montréal (1998), 1998 CanLII 5633 (ON CA), 41 O.R. (3d) 222 (C.A.), at p. 249.
>
> 5. The court should seek to balance the indemnity principle with the fundamental objective of access to justice: Boucher.
>
> The Court of Appeal has identified the overriding principle to be that the amount of costs awarded be reasonable in the circumstances. In Davies v.

Clarington (Municipality) (2009), 2009 ONCA 722 (CanLII), 100 O.R. (3d) 66 Epstein J.A. stated at paras. 52:

> As can be seen, the overriding principle is reasonableness. If the judge fails to consider the reasonableness of the costs award, then the result can be contrary to the fundamental objective of access to justice. Rather than engage in a purely mathematical exercise, the judge awarding costs should reflect on what the court views as a reasonable amount that should be paid by the unsuccessful party rather than any exact measure of the actual costs of the successful litigants. In Boucher [Boucher v. Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario (2004), 2004 CanLII 14579 (ON CA), 71 O.R. (3d) 291, [2004] O.J. No. 2634 (C.A.)], this court emphasized the importance of fixing costs in an amount that is fair and reasonable for the unsuccessful party to pay in the particular proceedings at para. 37, where Armstrong J.A. Said "[t]he failure to refer, in assessing costs, to the overriding principle of reasonableness, can produce a result that is contrary to the fundamental objective of access to justice.

[12] I also adopt the reasoning and conclusions of Perell J. in the Doe case.[5] At paragraphs 10 and 11, he addressed the purpose of awards of costs in circumstances such as those that present in the instant case as follows:

> [10] The court's discretion to award costs is designed to further three fundamental purposes in the administration of justice: (1) to indemnify successful litigants for the costs of litigation, although not necessarily completely; (2) to encourage settlements; and (3) to discourage and sanction inappropriate behaviour by litigants in their conduct of the proceedings: British Columbia (Minister of Forests) v. Okanagan Indian Band, 2003 SCC 71 (CanLII), [2003] 3 S.C.R. 371; Fong v. Chan (1999) 48 O.R. (3d) 330 (C.A.); Fellowes, McNeil v. Kansa General International Insurance Co. 1997 CanLII 12208 (ON SC), (1997), 37 O.R. (3d) 464.
> [11] Costs are designed as to be a tool to administer justice and to control access to justice. In British Columbia (Minister of Forests) v. Okanagan Indian Band, supra, LeBel J. for a majority of the Supreme Court of Canada stated in para. 26:
> Indeed, the traditional approach to costs can also be viewed as being animated by the broad concern to ensure that the justice system works fairly and efficiently. Because costs awards transfer some of the winner's litigation expenses to the loser rather than leaving each party's expenses where they fall (as is done in jurisdictions without costs rules), they act as a disincentive to those who might be tempted to harass others with meritless claims. And because they offset to some extent the outlays incurred by the winner, they make the legal system more accessible to litigants who seek to vindicate a legally sound position. These effects of the traditional rules can be connected to the court's concern with overseeing its own process and ensuring that litigation is conducted in an efficient and just manner. In this sense it is a natural evolution in the law to recognize the related policy objectives that are served by the modern approach to costs.

[13] Before this trial began, I directed counsel to exchange costs demands current to the commencement of the trial and to include demands for fees (on a partial indemnity basis) and disbursements, with supporting particulars. I then met with counsel for the purpose of conducting a trial management conference. At that time, I learned that both liability and damages were in issue and I again directed counsel to exchange costs demands, in order that the parties may have current and relatively precise information about the size and shape of their opponents' expectations for fee, disbursements and tax components of costs, in the event that the opponents were ultimately entitled to recover costs.

[14] In my view, requiring parties to exchange costs demands provides an important opportunity for parties to make an informed business decision on whether to court the cost and uncertainty of outcome that a trial necessarily presents. In the words of Armstrong J.A. in Boucher, there are obviously cases where the prospect of an award of costs against the losing party will operate as a reality check for the litigant and assist in discouraging frivolous or unnecessary litigation.[6]

[15] I did not require counsel to file their respective costs demands with the court before or during trial but I was assured that counsel did indeed exchange their demands with particulars. It is asserted in the Costs Submissions of the Defendants that plaintiff counsel advised his fees were over $60,000 by the time of the pre-trial and his disbursements were $32,687.19. To that point, the defendants had incurred $51,188.50 in fees and $8,155.90 in disbursements. The fees incurred by plaintiffs and defendants appear to have been of similar magnitude.

[16] There is no demonstrated access to justice issue here. There is no suggestion in this case that plaintiffs' counsel or other capable counsel would not have taken the case on or have seen it through to the time of the trial management conference or indeed through the trial.

[17] Mr. Iannarella had the benefit of the advice of counsel throughout and, armed with that advice and whatever input he may have received from the pre-trial judge and assisted by the information gleaned from the costs demands he received from the defendants, he was well able to make informed decisions upon the risks and rewards he faced when he decided to require that the trial go forward. He invited the jury to assess and award his damages in amounts totaling between $571,000 and $706,000.

[18] Mr. Iannarella was offered a substantial sum of money to settle before trial; he made no counter offer and the result was a long and complex trial which resulted in damages assessments well below his requests of the jury on almost every head of damages at issue and resulted in his action being dismissed. He now faces an award of costs against him but asks for relief from the financial consequences that the defendants' demands might produce.

[19] From the defendants' perspective, Mr. Iannarella full well knew, or ought to have known, the potential financial consequences of requiring a trial to the finish on all issues; he took his shot, miscalculated and missed the intended target. The defendants offered an alternative but it was rejected outright. Court and jury time was necessarily engaged over parts of four weeks. Did Mr. Iannarella act reasonably? They think not and I agree. I cannot liken this case to the Walsh[7] case in that other plaintiffs with better cases than Mr. Iannarella's need not fear a burdensome costs award if they act reasonably in assessing their chances of success at trial relative to a settlement alternative presented to them.

[20] In my view, the defendants are entitled to their costs on a partial indemnity basis to the time of their offer to settle on 12 March 2012. I see no reason to award a bonus to the defendants by increasing the scale of costs applicable to the date of that offer.

[21] Applying the logic of Carthy J.A. in Strasser[8] and that of judges in subsequent cases[9], I choose to exercise my jurisdiction to award substantial indemnity costs from 13 March 2012 onward, as the defendants' offer was reasonable and it encouraged and allowed Mr. Iannarella to settle his claims and avoid the trial. Given my findings on credibility and on the accuracy and completeness deficiencies in the plaintiffs' case that were plentiful, glaring and substantial,[10] Mr. Iannarella should not have courted the consequences that befell him at this trial.

[22] In determining a fair amount to award the defendants for costs up to the time of their settlement offer of 12 March 2012, I am alert to the factors I have referred to above. I am content that the time spent as claimed by counsel was actually spent and that the rates claimed for the respective timekeepers are reasonable, in keeping with their positions and experience in the Forget law firm.

[23] The plaintiffs assert that changes in the staff assigned to this matter within the Forget firm may have lead to duplication of effort that should not be visited upon the plaintiffs. I agree with that concern, in principle, but cannot and will not undertake a line by line analysis of the defendants' costs outline to quantify any potential overlap. I note that substantially all of the docketed lawyers' time on the file was docketed by Mr. Forget, who had carriage of the matter from the outset, and by his associate, Ms. Merredew. A modest discount is incorporated into my award to reflect this concern.

[24] I am not persuaded that the cost of the attendance of junior counsel at the pre-trial should be borne by Mr. Iannarella. There is no suggestion that Ms. Merredew's attendance there was reasonable or necessary and the counsel fee claim will be discounted to reflect that.

[25] This was a complicated personal injury case from a medical perspective. Eleven experts were called to testify at trial. The jury heard from twenty five witnesses in all over the course of four weeks. As noted above, Mr. Iannarella asked the jury to award many hundreds of thousands of dollars in damages. The defendants had no choice to marshal the evidence necessary to meet his claims and to defend on every issue.

[26] I am satisfied that defence counsel did nothing to unnecessarily lengthen the litigation or the trial. Mr. Iannarella's testimony was suspect and cried out for close scrutiny throughout the preparation for trial and trial phases of the matter. That the defendants enjoyed the success they did at trial is a testament to the hard work necessarily undertaken by counsel. Mr. Iannarella should reasonably have expected nothing less.

[27] Stepping back from my consideration of particular factors and considering the overall reasonableness of the defendants' claims for fee items of costs on a partial indemnity basis to the date of the offer on 12 March 2012, I award $50,000.00.

[28] Turning now to the assessment of substantial indemnity fees, in the interval between the offer and the start of the trial, it was reasonable and necessary that the defendants prepare as they did for the trial. That both Mr. Forget and Ms. Merredew prepared to assume carriage of the defence in the event one of them was unavailable for any reason was appropriate and would allow of the trial continuing on schedule regardless.

[29] I am not persuaded however that Ms. Merredew's presence as junior counsel at trial was necessary after the first day of trial. She did not participate in the examination or cross examination of witnesses or otherwise as counsel at trial. She did not step in when Mr. Forget could not appear on one trial day and the trial was adjourned to await his return. The counsel fee for trial claim will be reduced accordingly.

[30] Considering the many factors informing the exercise of my discretion and considering the overall fairness of the award of substantial indemnity costs for the interval between 13 March 2012 and 18 March 2012 and at trial, the former are fixed and awarded at $30,000.00 and counsel fee at trial is fixed and awarded at $100,000.00.

[31] All awards of Fee items of costs have been made without reference to applicable HST but I award HST at 13% in addition to those awards. By my calculations, fee item awards attract HST of $23,400.

[32] The defendants' claim for Disbursements totals $53,001.07, plus applicable taxes. Mr. Iannarella contests only some of these claims. The question for me is what portion of the contested claims are fair and reasonable?

[33] He contests the entirety of the claim for photocopy expenses on the basis that it should be absorbed by counsel as part of his firm's overhead. I disagree and allow that claim in its entirety.

[34] As for the cost of Dr. Axelrod's attendance as an expert witness at trial, this plaintiff asserts that this cost is prohibitive at $7,500.00. It is higher by at least one third than any of the costs incurred by the plaintiffs to bring their witnesses to trial. That alone, however is not the test.

[35] I consider Dr. Axelrod to have been a necessary and very important witness. He saw and examined Mr. Iannarella on two occasions and wrote reports in 2010 and 2011. His evidence was important for his description of the nature and extent of the shoulder injury complained of and the course of recovery following surgical repair. It also went to the accuracy and completeness of Mr. Iannarella's evidence as a witness before the jury, to Mr. Iannarella's ability to speak English to his credibility and to his ability to return to work.

[36] Dr. Axelrod is an orthopedic surgeon with a particular focus on upper limb injuries. He made an important contribution to the case and his evidence was certainly relevant to the issues. I believe his evidence was crucial to the outcome of the case. Its cost was not disproportional to the economic value of the case. It was not duplicated by the evidence of other witnesses. It was by no means overkill and it was of considerable assistance to the court.

[37] This said, however, I am left to wonder how Dr. Axelrod arrived at the amount of the fee he charged the defendants. Accordingly, I will reduce it to $5,000.00, an amount approximately equal to the fee charge Mr. Iannarella by Dr. Cantarutti.

[38] Mr. Iannarella contests the disbursements claimed for Drs. Soon-Shiong and Bhargava but in comparing the amount of these claims to those incurred by Mr. Iannarella and in considering the value of the evidence of these experts and the overall fairness of these disbursement claims I am content to allow them to stand [39] I am not moved to accept the submission that the disbursement incurred for surveillance should be reduced. Mr. Iannarella's credibility and his evidence of his functional capacities and limitations was measured in a significant fashion by reference to the surveillance evidence. It was very relevant and important evidence. That disbursement claim is allowed in full.

[40] Mr. Iannarella's concern over the cost claimed for an interpreter that he did not ask the defendants to retain and did not use is fair. That claim of $923.54 is disallowed. So too are his submissions that the disbursements claimed for Hotel, Transportation and court interview room (which he totals at $3,715.42) are unreasonable; those items are disallowed.

[41] The disbursement claims are otherwise fair, reasonable and allowed. As such, by my calculations, the defendants' disbursements are fixed and awarded at $51,554.18, including HST less GST exempt items.

[42] In the result, Fee items of costs are awarded in the total sum of $180,000.00 plus HST thereon of $23,400. Disbursements are awarded in the sum of $51,554.18, inclusive of relevant taxes.

COSTS ENDORSEMENT

[1] In this application for directions, Rita Issa sought a declaration setting aside Luisa Aiello's July 8, 2016 will and other associated relief. Rita alleged the 2016 Will was invalid because Luisa, Rita's mother, lacked testamentary capacity, was subject to undue influence, and did not approve or have knowledge of the contents of the will. Rita also maintained the 2016 Will was not duly executed in accordance with the requirements of the Succession Law Reform Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. S.26.

[2] In Reasons for Judgment released July 9, 2025, I dismissed Rita's application with costs to Rita's sister, the respondent Antonietta Aiello: Issa v. Aiello, 2025 ONSC 4055. I found the 2016 Will was duly executed and there was no evidence to support any of Rita's allegations: Issa, at paras. 19-27, 33-35, 36-42, 43-44.

[3] Antonietta seeks her costs of the application on a substantial indemnity basis in the amount of $70,000, apparently rounded up from the substantial indemnity costs of $68,683.91 reflected in her Bill of Costs. Rita did not provide any submissions as to costs.

[4] I conclude this is a case for substantial indemnity costs for two reasons. First, Antonietta made several offers to settle the application. In her r. 49 offer to settle made February 17, 2023, Antonietta offered to settle the application and Rita's action on the basis that both would be withdrawn, Antonietta would be paid costs in the amount of $10,000, and Rita would renounce any claim to Luisa's estate. In her June 27, 2024 offer, Antonietta proposed that the application be abandoned, with Antonietta's costs to be assessed or payable in the fixed amount of $20,000. In the result, Antonietta was the successful party – the application was dismissed, with costs to Antonietta.

[1] Antonietta Aiello's name is misspelled in the title of proceedings.

2025 ONSC 5173 (CanLII)

[5] Second, Rita made unfounded allegations of fraud and undue influence. She provided nothing to support her assertion that Antonietta financially exploited Luisa: Issa, at paras. 39-40. There was no evidence to support her claim that Antonietta defrauded Luisa's estate by registering a reverse mortgage on the Palsen Street property: Issa, at paras. 41-42. And Rita baldly asserted that Mr. Chiarello's July 8, 2016 affidavit was fabricated, but she did not even bother to cross-examine him: Issa, at para. 44.

[6] Alleging fraud and undue influence with no relevant evidence constitutes reprehensible litigation behaviour: Fanelli v. Fanelli-Bruno, 2023 ONSC 6501, at para. 48, citing Young v. Young, 1993 CanLII 34 (SCC). Rita engaged in reprehensible litigation behaviour and costs on the substantial indemnity scale are appropriate.

[7] As to the quantum of costs, there is no basis to "round up" the costs claimed. I find the hourly rates of Antonietta's counsel are reasonable having regard to their years of experience. There appears to have been some overlap in certain tasks performed by senior and more junior counsel. Otherwise, I find the time incurred by counsel was reasonable, particularly having regard to the serious and scandalous allegations made by Rita. This matter involved numerous court attendances, including case conferences and scheduled hearing dates. Some of the delays resulted from Rita's litigation conduct: for example, the hearing did not proceed in December 2023 as scheduled due to Rita's late delivery of the affidavit of Ross Talarico. The materials filed were voluminous. Antonietta conducted cross-examinations. Facta were prepared and reviewed.

[8] The costs claimed by Antonietta include costs associated with an attendance before Rees J. on May 11, 2023. At that time, Justice Rees stayed Rita's claim and ordered that cross-examinations on the application take place. Justice Rees fixed Antonietta's costs at $2,000, without prejudice to the parties making submissions to the application judge as to whether costs should be awarded in respect of the May 11, 2023 attendance. Antonietta is entitled to her costs associated with the May 11, 2023 attendance before Rees J., but only in the previously fixed amount of $2,000.

[9] Having regard to all the above, I award Antonietta substantial indemnity costs in the amount of $55,000, all inclusive. This amount is to be paid by Rita within 60 days.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

SKARICA, J: (Orally)

[1] This is a matter of William Bill Pye and Carmella Di Trapani and Vincenzo Di Trapani. These are my reasons for costs and judgment interests ruling.

OVERVIEW

[2] A Hamilton jury on October 12th, 2023, awarded the plaintiff an award of over one million dollars in damages for serious injuries suffered by the plaintiff from the motor vehicle accident collision that occurred on July 2nd, 2016. The jury award exceeded both the plaintiff's and the defendant's offer to settle. The plaintiff seeks an order for costs and prejudgment interest, which I will refer to as PJI on occasion, and post-judgment interest.

ISSUES

[3] (1) What is the appropriate costs amount to be awarded to the winning litigant, the plaintiff?

[4] (2) What is an appropriate amount of PJI?

[5] (3) What is an appropriate amount of post-judgment interest?

FACTS

[6] I believe a chronology of events best outlines the relevant facts which are as follows.

THE ACCIDENT

[7] (1) July 2nd, 2016, the plaintiff, William Bill Pye, suffered serious injuries when Ms. Di Trapani drove her vehicle into an intersection when it was not safe to do so. Mr. Pye was operating a motorcycle and was unable to avoid colliding with the defendant's motor vehicle and suffered very serious physical injuries.

OFFERS TO SETTLE AND TRIAL PROCEEDINGS

[8] (2) August 16, 2019, a failed mediation takes place. The plaintiff at that time had a lawyer named Brad Duby. May 6th, 2020, Notice of Change of a Lawyer was delivered. The plaintiff's new lawyer is Smitiuch Law Firm.

[9] (3) May 14th, 2020, the defendant makes a first Rule 49 Offer to Settle as follows:

> $150,000.00 for general damages, for pain and suffering; $30,000.00 for all income claims past and future; $30,000.00 for future care costs; and $15,000.00 for housekeeping. That's a total of $225,000.00, plus there was an offer to pay plaintiff's costs and disbursements on a partial indemnity basis. That offer, obviously, was not accepted.

[10] (4) June 21, 2021, a pretrial conference was heard before Justice Sheard. No offers were made. The matter was eventually adjourned to the jury list of September 13th, 2021 and then to the jury -- and then to the jury list of September 19th, 2022.

[11] (5) July 5th, 2022, the defendant makes a second Rule 49 Offer to Settle. The defendant offers $350,000.00 inclusive of pre-judgment interest for all damages plus costs on a partial indemnity scale.

[12] (6) September 19th, 2022, the trial is adjourned to February 13th, 2023. The plaintiff requests an adjournment which the defendant consents to. The plaintiff had another trial booked at that time for a 90 year old client.

[13] (7) February 2nd, 2023, the plaintiff makes a Rule 49 offer to settle for $799,000.00 for all claims, and interest, plus costs and accessible disbursements.

[14] (8) February 13th, 2023, the trial is adjourned a second time at the request of the plaintiff counsel as one of the plaintiff's experts was not available due to medical issues. That was a future care expert. And the defendant's counsel did not oppose the adjournment and the trial was adjourned to September 2023 sittings. That is September 11th, 2023.

[15] (9) August 30th, 2023, the defendant makes a third Offer to Settle, offering $500,000.00 inclusive of prejudgment interest for all damages, an offer to pay $150,000.00 for costs and disbursements on a partial indemnity scale.

[16] (10) September 18th, 2023, the trial proceeds and takes, approximately, 4 weeks.

[17] (11) October 12th, 2023, the jury awards the plaintiff an award exceeding one million dollars, as follows (and this is detailed at paragraph 55 of the defendant's submissions):

STATEMENT OF CLAIM

[18] The plaintiff sought two million dollars and was awarded by the jury $1,072,440.42. In general damages the plaintiff sought $450,000.00. The defendant asked for $200,000.00. The jury granted $350,000.00.

PAST LOSS OF INCOME

[19] The plaintiff asked for $66,000.00 which was agreed to by the defendant and the jury awarded that amount, $66,000.00.

FUTURE LOSS OF INCOME

[20] The plaintiff asked for zero to $252,000.00 leaving it to the jury. The jury decided zero dollars which was the defendant's position.

PAST ATTENDANT CARE

[21] The plaintiff took no real -- did not provide a real number. The defendant asked for zero dollars. The jury provided zero dollars.

FUTURE COST OF CARE – MEDICAL EXPENSES

[22] The plaintiff asked for $1,139,000.00. No number was suggested by the defence. $525,000.00 was awarded by the jury.

FUTURE HOUSEKEEPING AND HOME MAINTENANCE EXPENSES

[23] The plaintiff asked for $125,00.00. Again, the defendant did not suggest a number. The jury awarded a $105,000.00.

[24] Special damages out-of-pocket expenses were agreed to by both counsel and the jury awarded the amount suggested, $26,490.42. As well as outlined at paragraph 56 of the defendant's submissions, the plaintiff's claim also included a claim for home renovations at a cost of $438,000.00. Following a motion at the outset of trial, the defence was successful in having the claim for home renovations removed.

[25] Mr. Pye's award exceeds all the Offers to Settle and he's entitled to a costs award as the successful litigant. Mr. Pye asked for (and as outlined at paragraph one of the plaintiff's costs submissions,):

> "Mr. Pye asked that he be awarded partial indemnity cost for work performed up to and including February 1, 2023 and substantial indemnity costs on route from that date in accordance with the plaintiff's bill of costs, which is filed at Tab 2 of the plaintiff's submissions. This is on the basis of his Rule 49, Offer to Settle in the amount of $799,000.00 for damages and interest plus costs and disbursements made on February 2nd, 2023 which is more than doubled by the damages award made at trial."

[26] It was actually more than double the defendant's offer, but in any event, the real issue here for me to decide is what is an appropriate amount for costs for the successful plaintiff?

THE LAW REGARDING COSTS

[27] The principles of costs awards. Justice Turnbull in Teglas v. City of Brantford et al, 2021 ONSC 997 succinctly summarizes the relevant principles at paragraphs 4-6 of that judgment:

PARAGRAPH 4

Section 131(1) of the Courts of Justice Act provides that the cost of and incidental to a proceeding are in the discretion of the Court and the Court can decide by who and to what extent the costs should be paid. As with any discretion it should be exercised fairly and reasonably.

PARAGRAPH 5

Rule 57.01(1) sets out the general principles which may be applied by the Court in exercising its discretion under section 131(1) of the Courts of Justice Act. The preamble to the Rule invites the Court to consider the results of the proceeding and any written offer to settle, as well as the following factors:

(0.a,) the principle of indemnity, including, where applicable, the experience of the lawyer for the party entitled to the costs as well as the rates charged and the hours spent by that lawyer.

(0.b,) the amount of costs that an unsuccessful party could reasonably expect to pay in relation to this step in the proceeding for which costs are being fixed;

(a) the amount claimed and the amount recovered in the proceeding;

(b) the apportionment of liability;

(c) the complexity of the proceeding;

(d) the importance of the issues: the conduct of any party that tended to shorten or length unnecessarily the duration of the proceeding;

(e) whether any step in the proceeding was;

(i) improper, vexatious, or unnecessary, or

(ii) taken through negligence, mistake or excessive caution;

(a) a party's denial of or refusal to admit anything that should have been admitted;

(b) whether it is appropriate to award any costs or more, than one set of costs where a party commenced separate proceedings for claims that should have been made in one proceeding in defending a proceeding separated unnecessarily from another party in the same interest or defended by a different lawyer and,

(c) any other matter or relevant to the question of costs.

PARAGRAPH 6

The costs rules are designed to advance several purposes in the administration of justice. One is to indemnify successful litigants. That purpose is evident and leads to the second purpose; namely, to facilitate access to justice. Costs rules are also designed to discourage frivolous claims and defences. I find that this was not a frivolous claim despite the fact that the defence position of absolute denial of liability was sustained. The overall objective is to fix an amount that is fair and reasonable, bearing in mind the broad range of factors articulated in Rule 57.01(1). The Ontario Court of Appeal has held the failure of a judge assessing costs to consider the "overriding principle of reasonableness" can result in a denial of access to justice.

[28] Regarding offers to settle Rule 49.10 sets out the consequences of a failure to accept the plaintiff's offer:

> 49.10 (1) Where an offer to settle;
>
> (a) is made by a plaintiff at least seven days before the commencement of the hearing;
>
> (b) is not withdrawn and does not expire before the commencement of the hearing; and
> (c) is not accepted by the defendant, and the plaintiff obtains the judgment as favourable as or more favourable than the terms of the offer to settle, the plaintiff is entitled to partial indemnity costs to the date the offer to settle was served and substantial indemnity costs from that date unless the Court orders otherwise.

[29] It is obvious that the plaintiff received a judgment that is more favourable than his offer to settle and accordingly pursuant to Rule 49 he is entitled to partial indemnity costs to the date of the offer to settle, February 1, 2023, and substantial indemnity costs from that date onwards unless the Court orders otherwise. In considering the phrase "unless the Court orders otherwise", I take into account the following considerations:

> (1) in reviewing a claim for costs, the Court need not undertake a line-by-line analysis of hours claimed or second guess amounts claimed unless it is clearly excessive or overreaching. A trial judge must consider what is reasonable in the circumstances and after taking into account all the relevant factors, should award costs in a more global fashion. See TMS Lighting v. KGS Transport, 2014 ONSC 7148 at paragraph 15, R. v. Fazio and Cusumano, reported at 2005 CANLII 33782 ONSC at paragraph 8; and Ramcharran v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company reported at 2023 ONSC 3698 at paragraph 50.
> (2) Relative expenditures by adversaries on opposite sides of a motion is a relevant consideration where there is an allegation of excess in a particular matter but that is not conclusive. See TMS Lighting at paragraph 57.
>
> (3) Substantial and partial indemnity rights are, approximately, 90 per cent and 60 per cent, respectively, of a full amount billed. See Rolling Meadows v. 2560262 Ontario Inc. reported at 2018 ONSC 6455 at paragraph 15.
>
> (4) There's no requirement to apply out of date grid rates rather than the 55 to 60 per cent of a reasonable actual rate. See Bain v. UBS Securities Canada Inc., 2018 ONCA 190 at paragraph 32.

(5) A plaintiff is entitled to incur legal expenses commensurate with the amount in issue. See Tri-Associates Insurance Agency Limited v Douglas, [1986] OJ No. 557 at page 1.

(6) The principle of proportionality, indemnity, and access to justice may allow a costs award to exceed the damage settlement if that costs amount is reasonable on the totality of the circumstances. See Block v. Brown, et al at 2022 ONSC 3199 at paragraph 90.

(7) In the present case the defendant did not make an offer that was a "near miss". I am not to impose a rule arbitrarily limiting the amount of costs to some proportion of the recovery where there has been a nominal offer. Rule 49 is designed to encourage settlement by attaching costs consequences for failure to make or to accept reasonable offers. See Corbett v. Odorico, 2016 ONSC 2961 at paragraph 19.

(8) Costs premium can be awarded to successful plaintiffs where the evidence involves a detailed understanding of complex scientific material. See Maria Berendsen et al v. Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Ontario, 2008 CanLII 35263 at paragraph 24 and Teglas at paragraph 8.

(9) Proportionality has become an ever increasingly important factor in assessing costs. Costs awards should reflect more what the Court views as a fair and reasonable amount that should be paid by the unsuccessful parties rather than any exact measure of the actual costs to the successful litigant. See Bombardier Inc. v. AS Estonian Air, 2013 ONSC 4209, and Ramcharran at paragraph 50.

(10) A Court can assess and reduce a costs award to the successful litigant where adjournments required the opposite party to redo work necessary to prepare for trial. See Teglas at paragraphs 18 to 19.

(11) A Court can disallow disbursements which are either unnecessary or excessive. See Ramcharran v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company at paragraph 52, Noori v. Liu, 2021 ONSC 3445 at paragraph 55, and McCurdy et al v. Maille et al., 2024 ONSC 1222 at paragraph 55.

(12) It is accepted principle that a plaintiff requires more time to present a case than the defendant. See Ramcharran at paragraph 48.

THE LEGAL PRINCIPLES OF PREJUDGEMENT INTEREST

[30] In Maria Berendsen et al v. The Queen, Justice Seppi held at paragraph 1 that a Court has the discretion pursuant to section 131 of the Courts of Justice Act, (CJA), to allow prejudgment interest for periods other than that prescribed in section 128 and at a higher or lower rate, having regard to factors listed in section 130(2) of the CJA.

[31] In Debora v. Debora, 2006 CanLII 40663 (ON CA), [2006] OJ No. 4826, ONCA the Court of Appeal held at paragraph 93 as follows;

> The wording of section 130 is very broad and in addition to enabling the trial judge to consider the circumstances of the case, specifically, allows the trial judge to take into account Mr. Debora's conduct in lengthening unnecessarily the duration of the proceeding by his persistent refusal to make full disclosure of his income and assets. As Cronk J.A. notes in Somers v. Fournier... Armak concerns an older version of the prejudgment interest provision, and section 130(2)(f) grants the trial judge the jurisdiction to consider a litigant's conduct during the proceedings when determining whether to exercise her discretion to vary the rate of prejudgment interest.

[32] Section 128(1) and (2) and section 130(1) and (2) of the Courts of Justice Act indicate as follows:

> PREJUDGMENT INTEREST
>
> 128 (1) A person who is entitled to an order for the payment of money is entitled to claim and have included in the order an award of interest thereon at the prejudgment interest rate calculated from the date of the cause of action arose to the date of the order.
>
> EXCEPTION FOR NON-PECUNIARY LOSS ON PERSONAL INJURY
>
> (2) Despite subsection 1, the rate of interest on damages for non-pecuniary lost in an action for personal injury shall be the rate determined by the rules of Court made under clause 66 (2) (w).
>
> DISCRETION OF THE COURT
>
> 130 (1) The Court may, where it considers it just to do so, in respect of the whole or any part of the amount, on which interest is payable under section 128 or 129
>
> (a) disallow interest under either section;
>
> (b) allow interest at a rate higher or lower than that provided in either section;
>
> (c) allow interest for a period other than that provided in either section.
>
> IDEM
> (2) For the purpose of subsection one, the Court shall take into account,

(a) changes in market interest rates;

(b) the circumstances of the case;

(c) the fact that an advance payment was made;

(d) the circumstances of medical disclosure by the plaintiff;

(e) the amount claimed and the amount recovered in the proceeding;

(f) the conduct of any party that tended to shorten or lengthen unnecessarily the duration of the proceeding; and

(g) any other relevant consideration.

[33] In Somers v. Fournier, 2002 CanLII 45001 (ON CA), 214 DLR (4th), 611, (2002 ONCA) Cronk J.A. held as follows at paragraph 23 - 24;

PARAGRAPH 23

Modern theories of pre-judgement interest related to compensatory, rather than punitive, goals. Awards of pre-judgment interest are designed to recognize the impact of inflation and to provide relief to a successful litigant against the declining value of money between the date of entitlement to damages and the time when damages were awarded.

PARAGRAPH 24

The Court refers to Graham v. Rourke where this is stated at paragraph 24 of the Court of Appeal decision:

> Pre-judgment interest cannot, however, become a means of punishing or rewarding a party to the proceedings. Rather prejudgment interest must be viewed as part of the compensatory package provided to the person wronged.

[34] In Cobb v. Long Estate, 2015 ONSC 6799 Justice Belch held as follows at paragraph 24:

This motor vehicle collision occurred seven years ago and the plaintiff has been without compensation from the defendant tort insurer for this entire period of time. There has been no interim payment from the defendant. I exercise my discretion and order prejudgment interest to be paid at the rate of three per cent. I have taken into account the factors set out in section 130(2) of the Courts of Justice Act. I have considered the overall circumstances of the case. Pre-judgment interest is to compensate for the loss of use of money. And it is not to be used as a means of punishing or rewarding a party. Having been the trial judge during the civil jury trial which lasted in excess of four weeks, I'm of the view that I'm in a position to take into account and balance the various factors set out in the section. I am satisfied that the rate of three per cent is entirely just and reasonable after taking all the considerations into account.

[35] That decision was rendered November 13th, 2015.

REGARDING PRE-JUDGMENT INTEREST

[36] The Court of Appeal affirmed the Cobb's decision. See Cobb v. Long Estate, 2017 ONCA 717. The Court of Appeal explained how prejudgment interest works in motor vehicle cases at paragraph 68 through to 73.

>
> To understand the effect of s. 258.3(8.1) to accident cases to which it applies, one must read it in the context of the statutory regime for prejudgment interest. One begins with section 128(1) of the Courts of Justice Act, which creates an entitlement to prejudgment interest and refers to default rate.

[37] The Court refers to that section which I've already read.

> For the purpose of section 128, section 127.1 defines "prejudgment interest rate" as "the bank rate at the end of the first day of last month of the quarter proceeding the quarter in which the proceeding was commenced". However, section 128(2) creates an exception from this default rate of prejudgment interest for damages for non-pecuniary loss arising from personal injuries.

[38] Then again, I've read 128(2) already previously.

>
> The relevant rule of Court to which section 128(2) refers to is Rule 53.10 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, which provides:
>
> > 53.10 The prejudgment interest rate on damages for non- pecuniary losses in an action for personal injury is five per cent per year.
>
>
> Therefore, section 128 of the Courts of Justice Act contemplates two default rates of prejudgment interest. One for damages for non-pecuniary loss and personal injury actions, and one called "the prejudgment interest rate", for all other money awards for which section 128 makes prejudgment interest available. The plaintiffs commenced their action on December 8th, 2009 so the applicable prejudgment interest rate is section 128(1) is .5 per cent.
>
> I have referred to the regime of prejudgment interest rates in section 128(1) and (2) as one of "default" rates because section 130 of the Courts of Justice Act gives the Court discretion to reduce or increase the prescribed rate of interest or to disallow interest otherwise payable under section 128.

[39] The Court then outlines section 130 of the Courts of Justice Act which I have already read.

PARAGRAPH 73

Therefore, paragraph 73, the Court concludes:

Therefore the effect of section 258.3(8.1) of the Insurance Act is that, in an action for damages arising out of a motor vehicle accident the prejudgment interest rate on nonpecuniary damages will now be the rate provided for in section 127 and 128(1) of the Courts of Justice Act, subject to the overriding discretion of the Court in section 130 of the same statute to increase or reduce the rate, the changed interest period, or to allow interest altogether.

APPLICATION OF LAW TO FACTS OF THIS CASE

[40] Complexity Rule 57.01(1) subsection (c) indicates that complexity of the proceedings is a relevant factor in assessing the cost award. In my opinion the issue of liability was relatively simple in this case. However, the damage assessments and medical evidence given by the medical experts involved complex issues. There were issues regarding the impact of pre-existing injuries, especially with regard to the plaintiff's serious right shoulder injury. There was conflicting expert evidence regarding voiding and erectile dysfunction. There were extensive medical reports and diagnosis that needed to be described and explained. Both parties called as witnesses a number of medical experts to deal with these complex issues.

ADJOURNMENTS

[41] The defendant points out that this trial was adjourned twice at the behest of the plaintiff, which adjournments were acceded to by the defendant. The first adjournment occurred during the September 2022 sittings wherein the parties attended trial readiness court and plaintiff's counsel advised that he had another trial with a 90-year-old plaintiff. The defendants consented to an adjournment to the February 2023 sittings. The plaintiff's counsel contacted the defence's -- defendant's counsel on the Friday evening before the second trial date, that is before the Monday second trial date to advise that their future care expert, Ms. Deena Rogozinsky was not available for trial due to medical issues. It was agreed that a new expert would now have to be retained and a new report would have to be served.

[42] All counsel attended the first day of the trial sittings where an adjournment was granted for the second time and the matter was adjourned further. I find that these adjournment requests by the plaintiff were entirely reasonable and a second adjournment was entirely out of the control of both parties. Unlike Teglas, there is no specific evidence that any extra costs were incurred by the defendant. No, details were provided that any work was done that had to be done again. There was no evidence regarding duplication of effort attributable to the two adjournments. No details were provided as to the costs expense regarding work done that had to be reviewed or reanalyzed due to the adjournment. See Teglas at paragraphs 18 through 19. Accordingly, there will be no deductions from the plaintiff's cost award due to these two adjournments.

ADDITIONAL COUNSEL AT TRIAL PRIOR COUNSEL

[43] Michael Smitiuch was the lead counsel at trial with, approximately, 25 years of experience. Mr. Smitiuch was assisted by Shawn Snider, year of call 2019 and Philip LeDonne year of call 2022. The defendant contends that the $550.00 hourly rate of these two counsel is too high. Mr. Smitiuch indicates that Mr. LeDonne has computer and tech skills that were essential to the proper and efficient conduct of the trial. Mr. LeDonne marshalled the witnesses and examined the witnesses. The same could be said of Mr. Snider. It is clear that all three counsel worked efficiently as a highly skilled team during/throughout the trial. The result was that that the trial was conducted efficiently with no down time, a rare event. There was a constant flow of witnesses and in my, approximately, 45 years -- 40 years of litigation I've never seen a long trial run more smoothly.

[44] Credit must be given to the defendant counsel as well. Accordingly, given the results of extreme efficiency conducted by the plaintiff's team of lawyers, I find that the cost claims are reasonable in the circumstances, pursuant to the indemnity principle outlined in Rule 57.01(1) (o.a).

[45] Regarding prior counsel, Brad Duby, 2001 call, now deceased. Mr. Duby retained the plaintiff's experts and he conducted the mediation in August 2019. Mr. Duby's bill of, approximately, $31,594.80 plus prejudgment interest, I find to be reasonable. And the plaintiff is directed to pay Mr. Duby's bill to his estate as I understand Mr. Duby's account has yet to be paid.

DISBURSEMENTS

[46] The defendant submits at paragraphs 79 and 80 of his submissions that it contests a number of disbursements claimed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff concedes that its line 19 entry, in its index of disbursement regarding the ARCG invoice, it should be deducted. That invoice indicates a balance due for a total of $2,750.00. Accordingly, $2,750.00 will be deducted from the plaintiff costs awarded.

[47] I find that the remaining disbursements to be reasonable and necessary to conduct the plaintiff's litigation. The disbursements incurred by the plaintiff contributed to advance his case and were necessary to assist the jury's understanding regarding the nature and extent of the plaintiff's numerous injuries and damage claims and to contradict the defendant's claims to the contrary. There was no issue raised regarding duplication of experts or evidence at trial. Counsel for both parties released some witnesses to make the trial more efficient. I agree that Mr. Pye's disbursements are reasonable and fair and appropriate given the quantum of damages sought and awarded. See Hamfler v. Mink, 2011 CanLII 86201 (ON SC) paragraph 13.

[48] Briefly some of the defendant's objections to disbursements are simply nitpicking. For example, the trial photo boards were extremely helpful in outlining the exact nature of the plaintiff's injuries. I don't agree that photocopying and postage expenses are necessarily part of a law firm's overhead expenses. The police take a contrary view in requiring compensation for such items in Wagg Applications. Further, given the complicated nature of issues involving injuries, it is entirely reasonable to order copies of the trial transcript regarding crucial points of evidence. I agree with Justice Edwards' comments at paragraphs 11 and 12 in Hamfler v. Mink regarding these type of expenses. Respectfully, I disagree with comments to the contrary in McCurdy et al v. Maille et al, 2024 ONSC at paragraph 55 and Noori v. Liu, 2021 ONSC 3445 at paragraph 55.

[49] I note that in Liu $7,671.70 was claimed for transcripts. The amount claimed by the plaintiff in this proceeding is a far more reasonable $1,819.70. Accordingly, in the result, the plaintiff is awarded its disbursement's claim of $168,071.45 minus $2,750.00 for a total award of $165,321.45 for its disbursements.

PROPORTIONALITY

[50] The costs award claimed is almost equal to the damage award. Is that reasonable, appropriate, and fair, in these circumstances? See McCurdy and Maille, 2024 ONSC 1222 at paragraph 17 and Block v. Brown at paragraphs 83 and 87. The defendant relies on Ramcharran at paragraphs 41 through to 55 where the damaged award was, approximately, $417,000.00. The plaintiff sought $394,629.15 in costs. The costs award was dramatically reduced to, approximately, $179,000.00, inclusive of costs, HST, and disbursements.

[51] In McCurdy et al. v. Maille et al., 2024 ONSC 1222, the plaintiff received a net award of, approximately, $1.75 million inclusive of prejudgment interest. See paragraph one. The plaintiff claimed costs of $650,330.50 plus disbursements of $57,472.07. See paragraphs seven and eight of that case.

[52] The Court awarded costs of $375,000.00 plus HST of $48,750.00 plus disbursements of $55,000.00 for a grand total of $478,750.00 all inclusive. See paragraph 67.

[53] The plaintiff relies on Barry v. Anantharajah, 2024 ONSC 1267 (CanLII), wherein the plaintiff, after a three week jury trial was awarded $16,160.50 in damage. See paragraph 14 of that case. It was held that the plaintiff was more successful than the defendant at trial. See paragraph 17. The plaintiff asked for costs of, approximately, $400,000.00 but was awarded $300,000.00 inclusive of costs, disbursements, and HST. See paragraphs 33 and 34.

[54] I believe that the law is accurately set out in Block v. Brown et al, 2022 ONSC 3199 where Justice Shaw indicates as follows:

>
> The issue of proportionality is at the heart of this dispute regarding costs. The defendant's assert that the fees sought by the plaintiff are disproportionate to the amount recovered, (which according to paragraph two was $25,000.00). As I've already noted the plaintiff is seeking costs of over four times the amount of that settlement.
>
>
> Proportionality is clearly a factor although it's not the sole factor to consider when assessing costs. In Bonaiuto v. Pilot Insurance Company the plaintiff recovered $5,000.00 after a jury trial for theft and damage of her car. At paragraph seven, Harvison Young, J. found that while costs must be fair and reasonable, the mere fact that costs exceeded the damages does not render an award inappropriate. She awarded the plaintiff costs of $75,932.00 which is 15 times the amount of the recovery at trial. In that case the defendant's unsuccessful theory was that the plaintiff committed fraud.
>
>
> I agree with the comments of McCarthy, J. at paragraph 15 in Accurate General Contracting Limited v. Tarasco, 2015 ONSC 5980, that proportionality should not be "routinely invoked to save litigants from the real costs of the proceedings in circumstances where those litigants have put forward an unmeritorious defence to a legitimate claim or have caused proceedings to become unduly prolonged or complicated". This decision has been adopted or approved in several other costs decisions.
>
> I note in these reasons I have made no finding that the defendants advanced an unmeritorious defence or unduly protracted or complicated the matter other than the late acknowledgement that liability was not an issue.

PARAGRAPH 83

While proportionality is a factor to consider, an award of costs must ultimately be one that is fair and reasonable, having regard to all the circumstances.

PARAGRAPH 86

In a recent decision*, Gilbank v. Cooper and English*, Trimble, J. awarded costs of $45,000.00 to the plaintiff following a nine day trial in which he awarded the plaintiff $54,365.00 less $4,500.00 that went to the defendants for their claim. Justice Trimble set out in detail the legal principles to consider when assessing costs. He noted at paragraph 19, that when considering the principle of proportionality, the overarching consideration is determining whether the costs incurred were justified in all the circumstances. Furthermore, a costs award may be appropriate even if it exceeds a damages award.

PARAGRAPH 87

At paragraph 20, Trimble, J. noted that an undue focus on proportionality ignores the principles of indemnity and access to justice. Ultimately, an award of costs must be fair and appropriate.

PARAGRAPH 88

My role as a judge is not to sit as an assessment officer assessing costs. I will not engage in a line-by-line assessment of the Bill of Costs submitted. Rather I will look at the matter in its entirety and determine what is a reasonable amount to the unsuccessful party to pay. I've also considered the principles of proportionality but not to the exclusion of the principles of indemnity and access to justice. When I consider the totality of the factors set out herein, costs should be fixed on a partial indemnity basis in the amount of $50,000.00 plus HST of $6,500.00 and disbursements of $36,623.00 plus HST of $3,657.45 for a total of $96,780.93. Those costs shall be paid by the defendants to the plaintiff forthwith.

PARAGRAPH 90

While this cost award exceeds the damage settlement, it is an appropriate amount given the totality of the circumstances.

CONCLUSION

[55] Accordingly, I find that a potential costs award that more or less equals the damages award can be awarded provided it's fair, reasonable and appropriate in all the circumstances.

PRINCIPLES OF INDEMNITY, RULE 57.01(1) AND ACCESS TO JUSTICE

[56] The defendant claims that since it had partial successes at trial relating to future loss of income, past attendant care, contributory negligence and home renovations, that there should be an additional reduction in costs due to the result of, as they put it, as the defendant put it, "split success", see paragraphs 56 through 66 of the defendant's submission.

[57] In short, the defendant says it should get credit for winning some minor skirmishes before dramatically losing the war. And I note that the jury award was, approximately, double the last offer to settle made by the defendant; the jury awarded, approximately, double that amount. The defendant submission is directly contrary to the Rule 49.10 directive requiring the losing party to pay partial indemnity costs up to the date of the plaintiff's offer to settle and substantial indemnity, thereafter, if the judgment is more favourable than the terms of the offer to settle as is the case in this litigation.

[58] Regarding Mr. Smitiuch's billing for a $925.00 full indemnity counsel fee in particular, and the plaintiff's total costs in general, Rule 57.01(1)(i) allows me to consider any other matter relevant to the greater question of costs. At tab four of the defendant's submission, Mr. Wong in his Bill of Costs notes that his call to the bar was 1999. Pretty close to Mr. Smitiuch's call. He charges -- that is Mr. Wong, charges $350.00 per hour. Frankly, given Mr. Wong's experience and talent level, I consider that $350.00 amount to be woefully inadequate given much larger fees I have seen billed by less experienced counsel for many years now.

[59] Rule 57.01(1) allows for consideration to be given to experience of counsel. In my opinion, effectiveness of counsel is far more important than mere experience. For some reason this does not appear to be discussed in any great detail in the cases provided to me. Usually, for example, references to counsel's effectiveness are briefly summarized in cases such as "it was hard fought". That phrase was used in Sanson v. Paterson and Sanson v. Security National Insurance, 2022 ONSC, unreported, where -- there are two files with long numbers, I don't need to repeat them, but that comment "the matter was hard fought", was -- appears at paragraph 13 and I note the plaintiff's counsel was Mr. Smitiuch in that case.

[60] In my opinion, advocacy is an art form. In order to be a true artist in advocacy, what is required is a total commitment in both effort and passion towards the trial proceedings being conducted. To effectively and convincingly conduct a trial, whether criminal or civil, long hours of dedicated effort are demanded of accomplished counsel. This is no nine to five job. Intelligence, experience and a dogged work ethic are essential tools of the effective and, ultimately, the very few great advocates. In my opinion true greatness is achieved when a court room spectator sees the artform in action and comments, “it looks easy, I could do it”. You could say that watching Mr. Smitiuch’s performance.

[61] Given the commitment and skills demanded of a truly accomplished and great -- in rare cases of a great advocate, ... a commanding performance conducted by an artist in advocacy is a rare and precious item. In my 12 years of presiding over hundreds, maybe even close to a thousand proceedings on the bench, I have seen truly excellent advocacy on only a very few occasions. Mr. Smitiuch’s conduct in this trial qualifies as one of those very rare jewels of advocacy that it is a wonderful treat to behold. Mr. Smitiuch’s cross examinations were concise and penetrating. His submissions were succinct and persuasive. His presentation of Mr. Pye’s case was brilliant, especially so, as Mr. Pye presented as a miserable old man, as accurately described by his ex-girlfriend, Sue Duncan.

[62] A lost art rediscovered by Mr. Smitiuch and displayed on more than one occasion, is the ability and instinct to know when to forcefully press a point, bold as a lion and when to retreat in a losing fight in order to gain credibility and higher ground on the next battle to come. There are no dead horses flogged by Mr. Smitiuch in litigation. Being a top litigator is a very lonely experience. I’m not saying I’m a top litigator but I know what it’s like. It entails long hours in the office, when everyone else has gone home. Maintaining normal family relationships is virtually impossible given the time and focus required to excel at the top of the profession. Many interpersonal sacrifices are a significant cost, that is demanded of all dedicated litigators.

[63] In my opinion, Mr. Smitiuch is an advocate who is as excellent as any I’ve encountered in the 40 years of trial litigation I’ve conducted, both as a judge and as a lawyer. It is no coincidence that the jury awarded miserable, unlikeable, old Mr. Pye an award well in excess of the settlement offers.

[64] In order to retain excellent counsel, such as this in a serious case, most litigants would gladly pay $925.00 an hour in order to guarantee outstanding superior representation, especially since we are talking Canadian dollars.

CONCLUSION AS TO COSTS

[65] For all the reasons outlined, I find that the plaintiff’s costs claims are reasonable, fair, and appropriate in all the circumstances of this case. Accordingly, there will be an order for costs as follows;

> Partial indemnity costs from the commencement of this action up to an including February 1st, 2023, directed to Smitiuch Injury Law in the amount of $218,925.00. HST on total costs out of partial indemnity rate directed to Smitiuch Injury Law in the amount of $28,460.25.

(c) substantial indemnity cost from and after February 2nd, 2023, directed to Smitiuch Injury Law in the amount of $516,060.00.

(d) HST on total cost at a substantial indemnity rate, directed to Smitiuch Injury Law in the amount of $67,087.80.

(e) disbursement in the amount of $168,071.45 minus $2,750.00 inclusive of tax directed to Smitiuch Injury Law. Total disbursements inclusive of tax are fixed at $165,321.45.

[66] Total costs inclusive of costs, tax, and disbursements, therefore, are fixed at $998,604.50 minus $2,750.00 equaling total cost tax disbursements fixed at $995,854.50 directed to Smitiuch Injury Law.

PREJUDGMENT INTEREST

[67] As reviewed earlier the Court has an overriding discretion pursuant to section 130 of the Courts of Justice Act to increase or reduce the rate of prejudgment interest, to change the interest period or disallow interest altogether notwithstanding the provisions of section 127 and 128(1) of the Courts of Justice Act. See R. v. Maria Berendsen at paragraph 1 and Cobb v. Long Estate at paragraph 73. And that's the Court of Appeal decision.

[68] The defendant submits at paragraphs 84 to 86 of its submissions that the prejudgment interest for general damages claimed is governed by section 128(1) of the CJA, that's the Courts of Justice Act and submits the prejudgment interest should be 0.8 per cent per year from July 2nd, 2016 and should be suspended from September 20, 2022 due to the adjournment request brought by the plaintiff.

[69] The plaintiff submits that I should exercise my discretion under section 130 of the CJA and that's the Courts of Justice Act and increase the prejudgment interest rate to five per cent. I agree that from 2016 to September/October 2023, both interest rates and inflation increased dramatically. In 2016 the inflation rate was 1.43 per cent. In 2022 inflation reached 6.8 per cent. As outlined in Exhibit 1, Canada Interest Rate chart from 2014 to 2022, interest rates were relatively flat and well under two per cent or even one per cent for some time. However, in 2022, interest rates moved rapidly upward and reached five per cent in 2023.

[70] Section 130(2) of the Courts of Justice Act allows me to consider a variety of factors including changes in market interest rates. During the time period of this litigation, interest fluctuated between just under one per cent to five per cent. I note that in Cobb v. Long Estate, this is the Superior Court decision at paragraph 24, the Court ordered on November 13th, 2015 prejudgment interest rate at a rate of three per cent, stating that three per cent was entirely just and reasonable after taking section 130(2) factors into account. In late 2015, according to Exhibit 1, Canada Interest Rate chart, market interest rates were around one per cent but the Court ordered three per cent. The Cobb decision was appealed to the Court of Appeal and the Court of Appeal maintained the prejudgment interest rate at three per cent. See paragraphs 76, 77, and 130 of the Court of Appeal judgment.

[71] Given the factors outlined in section 130(2) of the Courts of Justice Act and the fluctuating market interest rates as detailed in Exhibit 1, Canada Interest Rate, and the increases in the inflation rate as set out by the plaintiff in its submissions, I find a fair and reasonable prejudgment interest rate to be three per cent. As outlined in Tab 2 of the plaintiff's submission the period to be considered is July 2nd, 2016 to October 12th, 2023 for general and special damages and July 2nd, 2016 to September 18th, 2023 for past loss of income.

[72] Counsel are agreed that at three per cent prejudgment rate an award of prejudgment interest should be fixed at a total of $84,933.00, which consists of $72,618.00 for general damages, prejudgment interest; $6,819.00 past loss of income, prejudgment interest of $5,496.00 prejudgment interest for special damages, for an overall total of $84,933.00 for prejudgment interest.

POST JUDGMENT INTEREST

[73] Post judgement interest is calculated at seven per cent from October 12th, 2023, until February 13th, 2024, when the judgment was paid by the defendant for a total of $23,770.00 for post judgment interest.

[74] Accordingly, the final order as to cost and interest is as follows; the defendant, accordingly, is ordered to pay forthwith, the following amounts to Smitiuch Injury Law;

(1) Costs fixed at $995,854.50.

(2) Prejudgment interest fixed at $84,933.00.

(3) Post judgment interest fixed at $23,770.00

[75] The overall total, therefore, to be paid is $1,104,557.50.

[76] Now, I've made the endorsement accordingly and attached paragraph 24 of the plaintiff's submissions which outlines the details of the partial and substantial indemnity costs. So, I'll put that into the record, Madam Registrar and I've made copies for both counsel.

[77] Thank you very much counsel.

On a motion to extend the time to appeal the order of Justice Jane A. Milanetti of the Superior Court of Justice, dated May 22, 2012.

COSTS ENDORSEMENT

[1] The applicant's motion to extend the time to appeal the order striking his statement of defence was heard November 13, 2012, with reasons dismissing the motion released on November 20, 2012. At that time, I indicated that the respondent was entitled to his costs with submissions as to costs to be made in writing. The time for providing submissions now having passed, this is my endorsement on costs.

[2] Laczko seeks costs on a substantial indemnity basis. The court's discretion to award costs is governed by s. 131 of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, and by r. 57.01 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194. It is well established that costs should be awarded on a partial indemnity basis unless justice can only be done by complete or substantial indemnification: see Foulis v. Robinson (1978), 1978 CanLII 1307 (ON CA), 21 O.R. (2d) 769 (C.A.). As a general rule, justice will only require substantial indemnification where there has been "reprehensible, scandalous or outrageous conduct on the part of one of the parties": Young v. Young, 1993 CanLII 34 (SCC), [1993] 4 S.C.R. 3, at p. 134. Alexander's unjustified failure to comply with his disclosure obligations was no doubt worthy of rebuke; "reprehensible," "scandalous," or "outrageous," it was not. I would, therefore, decline to award costs on a substantial indemnity basis.

[3] Having regard to the result achieved, the complexity of the motion, and the general principles set out in r. 57.01(1), I order that costs be awarded on a partial indemnity basis, fixed in the amount of $ 7,044.36, inclusive of disbursements and applicable taxes.

REPORT OF THE REVIEW PANEL CONSTITUTED BY THE CANADIAN JUDICIAL COUNCIL REGARDING THE HONOURABLE D.E. SPIRO

I. Overview

[1] In reasons dated 5 January 2021, Associate Chief Justice K.G. Nielsen, as Vice-Chair of the Judicial Conduct Committee of the Canadian Judicial Council ("CJC") referred a complaint concerning Justice D.E. Spiro of the Tax Court of Canada to a Judicial Conduct Review Panel (the "Panel"). The Panel was constituted under the CJC's Inquiries and Investigations By-Laws 2015 ("By-Laws").

[2] The referral was based on a number of distinct complaints concerning the alleged conduct of the judge in respect of the potential appointment of Dr. Valentina Azarova to the position of Director of the University of Toronto Faculty of Law's International Human Rights Program ("IHRP").

[3] The task of the Panel is to determine whether an Inquiry Committee is to be constituted to inquire into the conduct of the judge. By s. 2(4) of the By-Laws, the Panel may do so:

> only if it determines that the matter might be serious enough to warrant the removal of the judge.

[4] The test for removal of a judge from office is properly a stringent one. It has been articulated in a number of cases. The Supreme Court of Canada's formulation of the test in Therrien (Re), 2001 SCC 35 at para. 147, is often cited:

> before making a recommendation that a judge be removed, the question to be asked is whether the conduct for which he or she is blamed is so manifestly and totally contrary to the impartiality, integrity and independence of the judiciary that the confidence of individuals appearing before the judge, or of the public in its justice system, would be undermined, rendering the judge incapable of performing the duties of his office.

[5] Based on the record before the Panel, which we detail below, we cannot conclude that the judge's conduct in this matter "might be serious enough to warrant" his removal from office.

[6] The judge, as we will relate, has properly recognized the mistakes he has made in this matter. These errors are serious but in the end do not, in our view, warrant the imposition of the ultimate penalty for judicial misconduct.

[7] These are our reasons for so concluding.

II. Detailed Background

[8] Before turning to the background, it is important to discuss the process undertaken by a Judicial Conduct Review Panel under the By-Laws. It begins with the consideration of a complaint or allegation concerning the conduct of a federally appointed judge by the Chairperson or Vice-Chairperson of the CJC's Judicial Conduct Committee.

[9] By s. 2(1) of the By-Laws, they may constitute a Judicial Conduct Review Panel if they determine that the complaint or allegation "on its face might be serious enough to warrant the removal of a judge".

[10] The Chairperson or Vice-Chairperson is primarily concerned with a facial inquiry based on the complaint before them. It is informed by the particulars of the complaint or allegation and any response received from the judge and their Chief Justice. But it is not a reflection of any fact-finding by the Chairperson or Vice-Chairperson. That individual is concerned with determining only if "on its face" the matter "might be" serious enough to warrant removal of the judge.

[11] The Judicial Conduct Review Panel in turn is also concerned with the threshold that the matter "might be serious enough" to warrant removal of a judge. However, under s. 2(4) of the By-Laws, the Judicial Conduct Review Panel may only direct an inquiry committee if it so "determines".

[12] The Chairperson or Vice-Chairperson is concerned with reviewing the matter "on its face"; the Judicial Conduct Review Panel must go further and make a determination that the matter "might be" serious enough to warrant removal.

[13] This suggests a more searching inquiry by the Judicial Conduct Review Panel into the matter. However, even here the Judicial Conduct Review Panel is constrained by the record placed before it. It does not hold a hearing, witnesses are not examined or cross-examined before it; it may not undertake investigations or gather new information: In the Matter of the Honourable Gérard Dugré of the Superior Court of Québec, CJC File 18-0318, 30 August 2019; In the Matter of the Honourable F.J.C. Newbould, CJC File 2015-203, 8 February 2017.

[14] The Judicial Conduct Review Panel does not make findings of fact. That said, in making a determination as to whether the matter might be serious enough to warrant the removal of the judge, it is necessary for the panel to weigh the evidence in the record before it to see if the case as presented reaches the "might be" threshold. How high a probability is "might be"? That is not stated anywhere but it surely reflects a threshold higher than "slim to none" but short of "on a balance of probabilities". The "might be" threshold must reflect the very significant seriousness of the remedy of removal; the "crime" must fit the "punishment".

[15] In addition to the various complaints we have received, we have reviewed submissions from the judge and a brief from his legal counsel and a submission from the judge's Chief Justice (the latter is very favourable to the judge). The judge has also put before us the Independent Review of the Search Process for the Directorship of the International Human Rights Program at the University of Toronto, Faculty of Law, 15 March 2021, prepared by the Honourable Thomas A. Cromwell C.C. ("Cromwell Report"). The Panel specifically avoided reviewing the Cromwell Report and media articles concerning it until it was formally tendered to us by counsel for the judge.

[16] It is instructive to now relate the background of the matter in the context of the essential complaints received by the CJC.

The Essential Complaints

[17] The various complaints received by the CJC were largely based on newspaper and media accounts surrounding the alleged withdrawal of an offer to appoint Dr. Azarova as Director of the IHRP. It was essentially said that the judge improperly interfered in the appointment process. In the words of one complainant:

> An offer of employment in the Faculty's International Human Rights Programme was made to Dr. Valentina Azarova and she accepted that offer in August. I understand that she was the unanimous choice of the academic members of the search committee.
>
> The offer was later rescinded by Dean Iacobucci. I have been told that between the acceptance of the offer and its withdrawal, a sitting judge in the Tax Court made personal contact with the Faculty in respect of the wisdom of that offer.
>
> The committee Chair was, I believe, advised that the Judge contacted the Faculty to express concern about Dr. Azarova's academic research on the operation of international law in the context of Israel's occupation of the Palestinian Territories. Shortly thereafter, Dr. Azarova's offer was rescinded.

[18] This complainant further submitted:

> The reports further allege that the interference may have been motivated by a judge's disapproval of Dr. Azarova's research on Israeli occupation of Palestinian lands. If that were so, it would be very troubling. It would put the integrity and impartiality of the Court in jeopardy. Any party or lawyer before it who is Palestinian, Arab, or Muslim could reasonably fear bias.

[19] These sentiments are reflective of the concerns expressed by other complainants.

The University of Toronto Appointment Process

[20] The facts surrounding this process are somewhat complicated and detailed. Here we will endeavour to restrict our recital to the essential facts on the record before us necessary to give context for the determination we must make. A very comprehensive review of the process can be found in the Cromwell Report.

[21] In the summer of 2020 the Faculty of Law was in a search to fill the Director's position. The search committee had by late summer focussed on a preferred candidate – Dr. Valentina Azarova.

[22] Dr. Azarova is not a Canadian citizen herself although her spouse is. She currently lives and works in Germany and her ability to work for the University either remotely from Germany in the last quarter in 2020 and in person in Canada as of January 2021 became a central issue in the appointment process.

[23] We will restrict the background details to the involvement of the judge.

[24] The judge was a former student of the Faculty of Law. After graduation he has maintained a close relationship with the Faculty and has undertaken very significant fundraising efforts on behalf of the Faculty. By all accounts he is a very engaged alumnus and he has done much good work in supporting the law school financially and professionally. This financial support, both personally and through the judge's larger family, has been very significant. One could surmise that it was this background as distinct from the judge's judicial position that prompted the approach to him that we detail below.

[25] In this context through his work on funding campaigns, he became friends with Chantelle Courtney, the Assistant Vice-President Divisional Relations, Division of University Enhancement. Justice Spiro maintained contact from time to time with Ms. Courtney and on 30 August 2020 she emailed the judge asking for a social “catch up”.

[26] Prior to his appointment to the bench, Justice Spiro was on the Board of Directors of the Centre for Israel and Jewish Affairs (“CIJA”). According to its website CIJA is the “advocacy agent of Jewish federations across Canada” dedicated to “protecting Jewish life in Canada”. One of its priorities is “educating Canadians about the important role Israel plays in Jewish life”. The Vice-President, University and Local Partner Services for CIJA is Ms. Judy Zelikovitz. She of course came to know the judge through his work as a Director of CIJA.

[27] Rumours were apparently surfacing in at least Israel that Dr. Azarova was imminently to be appointed as Director of the IHRP. Dr. Azarova’s professional work and scholarly writing is felt by some in the larger community to be that of a “major anti-Israeli activist”. This possibility prompted Professor Gerald M. Steinberg, the President Institute for NGO Research (centred in Jerusalem) to start an email thread with a number of CIJA officials in Toronto including Ms. Zelikovitz.

[28] Professor Steinberg’s first email to, among others, Ms. Zelikovitz was sent on 2 September 2020 at 1:24 p.m. (we presume if it matters that these are Toronto times).

[29] Professor Steinberg noted his view that Dr. Azarova was “anti-Israel” whose academic work “is almost entirely focussed on promoting the Palestinian narrative, the Israel “apartheid” theme, war crimes, etc.” Professor Steinberg suggested a course of action in this email:

> If someone could quietly find out the current status and confirm Azarova’s pending appointment, that would be very helpful.
>
> The hope is that through quiet discussions, top university officials will realize that this appointment is academically unworthy, and that a public protest campaign will do major damage to the university, including in fund-raising.
>
> I am preparing a short briefing sheet and would be happy to talk about this.

[30] At 1:44 p.m. on 2 September 2020, Ms. Zelikovitz emailed two other recipients of the Steinberg initiating email inquiring:

> Is this something we can ask David Spiro about?

[31] At 10:41 a.m. the next day, one of the recipients of the Steinberg email and the Zelikovitz email responded:

> I think you can approach him. He is friends with the Dean, Ed Iacobucci. I a [sic] copying him on this, as I don't think his reaching out to Ed compromises his judicial position. If I am wrong, David will so advise.

[32] Because the entire email thread was included in Justice Spiro's brief filed with the Panel by his counsel and because each email, including that culminating in the "cc: David Spiro" of 3 September 2020, included Professor Steinberg's original subject line "re: U of T pending appointment of major anti-Israeli activist to important law school position", we assume that Justice Spiro received the entire thread including Professor Steinberg's originating email outlining his proposed strategy for dealing with the matter – "The hope is that through quiet discussions, top university officials will realize that this appointment is academically unworthy, and that a public protest campaign will do major damage to the university, including in fund-raising."

[33] We also assume that Ms. Zelikovitz provided the judge with the memo Professor Steinberg promised in his originating email describing the objections to Dr. Azarova's appointment. A draft of what we would assume to be that memorandum is attached as the last page to Appendix "A" to the judge's brief filed with the Panel. It very critically reviews Dr. Azarova's professional background in some depth and it states:

> Dr. Azarova's career is clearly devoted to anti-Israel advocacy, and the evidence indicates that she will use the position to promote her political agendas and a discriminatory focus on Israel, while ignoring other human rights concerns.

[34] Coincidentally, Ms. Courtney and the judge had arranged their "telephone catch-up" for 4 September 2020. That call was made and the parties apparently chatted about various matters affecting the faculty.

[35] According to Justice Spiro in his written response to the complaints dated 26 October 2020, he turned the conversation to the Azarova matter. In his words:

> I did not tell Ms. Courtney, or anyone else at the University, that the candidate, Dr. Valentina Azarova, should not be appointed. I expressed no opinion, political or otherwise, on the merits of her scholarship or the political positions she had advocated. I did express the hope that sufficient due diligence would be done in advance of any such appointment to enable the University of Toronto and the Faculty of Law to respond effectively if and when criticism arose as a result of the candidate's appointment. I mentioned the matter to Ms. Courtney, at the end of a personal telephone conversation that she had scheduled with me, because I cared deeply about the University and its law school.

> At no time during our conversation did I express any personal complaint, concern, disapproval, or displeasure in respect of Dr. Azarova's scholarship. My only concern was that the University and Faculty of Law should be prepared for what I had been told by Ms. Zelikovitz would likely be an adverse and highly public reaction.
> To the extent that I described to Ms. Courtney the sources of such a reaction, it is possible that she understood me as expressing my own personal views. In retrospect, I should have made it clear to Ms. Courtney that I was not expressing my own personal views in describing the reaction that I feared might ensue.

[37] We consider this distinction between giving voice to a concern that a pending appointment might cause adverse publicity for the faculty, and active lobbying against the appointment based on a personal disapproval of the candidate, is of some importance. The former characterization suggests loyalty to the faculty and love of the institution as a motivation, the latter rather goes beyond that and suggests one immersing oneself in the political, social and cultural controversy. In drawing the distinction, we do not mean to suggest that while the latter characterization would clearly not be acceptable conduct, the former is. We will return to this point below.

[38] We have not had the benefit of any input from Chantelle Courtney. Mr. Cromwell did. We reproduce this substantial portion of the Cromwell Report (at p. 32) (the AVP is Ms. Courtney, the Alumnus is the judge):

> As was previously mentioned, towards the end of the conversation on the stewardship call with the AVP, the Alumnus raised the appointment of a new IHRP Director. Their respective recollections of the conversation are consistent on the essential points.
>
> The Alumnus asked the AVP whether she knew anything about the potential appointment, naming the Preferred Candidate and the position. The AVP replied that she did not. She remembered that the Alumnus indicated that as a judge he could not become involved but that he wanted to alert the University that if the appointment were made it would be controversial and could cause reputational harm to the University and particularly to the Faculty of Law. He wanted to ensure that the University did the necessary due diligence.

> It is unclear to me exactly what was said about the reason for the controversy, but the AVP recalls that the Alumnus referred to the Preferred Candidate's published work on Israel. He did not provide the AVP with the source of his information or go into any further details about the nature of the concern.

[39] Justice Spiro did not have any contact with Dean Iacobucci. He specifically declined to approach the Dean. Justice Spiro at the same time as the Courtney conversation was speaking with another professor in the faculty with whom he had a close relationship. Justice Spiro raised the potential Azarova appointment and forwarded the Steinberg memorandum to this professor. This professor apparently did nothing with the information.

[40] Ms. Courtney learned that the Azarova appointment had not been finalized and so advised Justice Spiro. This appears to be the sum total of the judge's involvement in the matter. For her part, Ms. Courtney relayed the information from the judge to the dean of the faculty. The Cromwell Report suggests that the dean became more actively involved in the process thereafter.

[41] Of his conduct, the judge at his first opportunity in his letter to the CJC of 26 October 2020 acknowledged his mistakes and expressed his remorse. He said:

> I begin by acknowledging that I raised a controversial matter with an official of the University of Toronto on September 4, 2020 in respect of an appointment, or prospective appointment, at the Faculty of Law. In doing so, I made a mistake. I deeply regret that mistake.
>
> My contact with that official led to unintended consequences including raising a question about my absolute commitment to impartiality toward all litigants and counsel who appear before me in the Tax Court of Canada. I deeply regret that as well.

[42] On 6 September 2020 Dean Iacobucci advised the search committee that Dr. Azarova's appointment would not go ahead.

[43] The Cromwell Report concluded that on the basis of the materials Mr. Cromwell had reviewed and considered, he could not draw the inference that Justice Spiro's inquiry "factored into the decision to terminate the Preferred Candidate's candidacy" (p. 47).

[44] We said earlier that the distinction between actively campaigning against Dr. Azarova's appointment and on the contrary expressing concern that the appointment might subject the faculty to adverse criticism and publicity was of some importance. In confirming that the latter characterization is the appropriate one on the facts here, the Cromwell Report is again useful. Mr. Cromwell stated (at p. 48) (the "Alumnus" is the judge, the "professor" is Professor Steinberg and the "Organization" is the CIJA):

> Based on my view, it appears that the nature of the Alumnus' inquiry has been misunderstood in much of the public discussion. It has at various points been described as an "objection" to the candidacy, as "external interference", as a "complaint" about the candidacy, as "outside political pressure", as an "attempt to block the appointment."
>
> Those descriptions adequately convey the intent of the professor's approach to the Organization that led to the Alumnus being contacted by the Organization. However, having the benefit of a detailed account from both parties to the initial conversation, my conclusion is that the Alumnus simply shared the view that the appointment would be controversial with the Jewish community and cause reputational harm to the University.
>
> This would hardly be news to anyone who had taken a moment or two to look on the Internet. As Selection Committee Member 1 pointed out in an email to the Assistant Dean, the controversial nature of the appointment would have been evidence "as soon as [the Preferred Candidate's] name was announced.

III. Analysis

[45] The complaints can be viewed as having at least two aspects. First it is felt to be serious misconduct for a judge to actively join with campaigners whose strategy is to prevent the appointment of a person to an influential position who is actively promoting interests at variance with those of the campaigners.

[46] Second, to the extent that joining such a campaign reflects on the personal beliefs of the judge, it encourages the view that the judge could not in the exercise of their judicial duties free themselves from the bias such personal views, it is argued, suggest.

[47] Dealing first with the issue of perceived bias, and to be specific it would be seen to be a bias against Palestinian, Arab or Muslim interests, nothing in the career of David Spiro or his work supports such a suggestion. The supporting letters we have received from persons of undoubted reputation and credibility speak of the judge as a highly ethical man of moderate views, of empathy for people of all backgrounds.

[48] One esteemed commentator said this of Justice Spiro:

> I watched with admiration as his career developed and was delighted by his appointment to the Court. I knew he would be an excellent judge. He is a person of complete integrity with a powerful commitment to fairness. He is principled, thoughtful and committed to justice – just the sort of person we want on the bench. In the more than 30 years I have > known David, I have never heard a single ill-word about him in any context. He is widely respected and admired for his quiet, modest and principled approach to life.

[49] The finding of bias in the context of judging depends on this test:

> … what would an informed person, viewing the matter realistically and practically – and having thought the matter through – conclude. Would he think that it is more likely than not that [the decision-maker], whether consciously or unconsciously, would not decide fairly
> Committee for Justice and Liberty v. National Energy Board, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 369 at p. 394.

[50] In our view right thinking persons apprised of the conduct of Justice Spiro over his career and extending even to this affair – apprised in accurate terms, as opposed to the "facts" suggested in earlier media coverage of this matter, could not conclude that the case for the judge being biased as suggested has been made out. This is important because s. 65(2)(d) of the Judges Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. J-1, is forward looking. The subsection reads:

> (2) Where, in the opinion of the Council, the judge in respect of whom an inquiry or investigation has been made has become incapacitated or disabled from the due execution of the office of judge by reason of
>
> (d) having been placed, by his or her conduct or otherwise, in a position incompatible with the due execution of that office,
>
> the Council, in its report to the Minister under subsection (1), may recommend that the judge be removed from office.

[51] It will be seen that a judge's current predicament may have a forward looking disability associated with it: where it has placed the judge in a position "incompatible with due execution of that office". It is here where a current perception of bias may effectively prevent the judge from functioning in the future. Indeed that is a concern expressed by a number of the complainants. How can a Palestinian, Arab or Muslim have faith that the judge would deal with their issues free of bias?

[52] But that fear, we conclude, is based on misinformation and speculation that in fact is inaccurate as we have discussed. The conduct of Justice Spiro is not as originally characterized in the record before us.

[53] It is true that Justice Spiro held the position before his appointment as a Director of CIJA but most, if not all, appointees to judicial office have backgrounds that include similar associations or active community, religious or cultural involvement. How could it be otherwise?

[54] All judges carry the burdens of their past on appointment to office. We take a serious oath to effectively subordinate our personal views to the rule of law.

[55] Yukon Francophone School Board Education Area #23 v. Yukon (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 25, was a case involving French language education rights. The trial judge was involved as a governor of a philanthropic francophone community organization in Alberta. The Supreme Court of Canada did not view this fact by itself as contributing to a reasonable apprehension of bias:

> [61] Membership in an association affiliated with the interests of a particular race, nationality, religion, or language is not, without more, a basis for concluding that a perception of bias can reasonably be said to arise. We expect a degree of mature judgment on the part of an informed public which recognizes that not everything a judge does or joins predetermines how he or she will judge a case. Canada has devoted a great deal of effort to creating a more diverse bench. That very diversity should not operate as a presumption that a judge's identity closes the judicial mind.

[56] The following observations by the court are apposite here:

> [33] Judicial impartiality and neutrality do not mean that a judge must have no prior conceptions, opinions or sensibilities. Rather, they require that the judge's identity and experiences not close his or her mind to the evidence and issues. There is, in other words, a crucial difference between an open mind and empty one. Bora Laskin noted that the strength of the common law lies in part in the fact that > > the judges who administer it represent in themselves and in their work a mix of attitudes and a mix of opinions about the world in which they live and about the society in which they carry on their judicial duties. It is salutary that this is so, and eminently desirable that it should continue to be so.
>
> ("The Common Law is Alive and Well — And, Well?" (1975), 9 L. Soc'y Gaz. 92, at p. 99)
> [34] The reasonable apprehension of bias test recognizes that while judges "must strive for impartiality", they are not required to abandon who they are or what they know: S. (R.D.), at para. 29, per L'Heureux-Dubé and McLachlin JJ.; see also S. (R.D.), at para. 119, per Cory J. A judge's identity and experiences are an important part of who he or she is, and neither neutrality nor impartiality is inherently compromised by them. Justice is the aspirational application of law to life. Judges should be encouraged to experience, learn and understand "life" — their own and those whose lives reflect different realities. As Martha Minow elegantly noted, the ability to be open-minded is enhanced by such knowledge and understanding:

> None of us can know anything except by building upon, challenging, responding to what we already have known, what we see from where we stand. But we can insist on seeing what we are used to seeing, or else we can try to see something new and fresh. The latter is the open mind we hope for from those who judge, but not the mind as a sieve without prior reference points and commitments. We want judges and juries to be objective about the facts and the questions of guilt and innocence but committed to building upon what they already know about the world, human beings, and each person's own implication in the lives of others. Pretending not to know risks leaving unexamined the very assumptions that deserve reconsideration.
> ("Stripped Down Like a Runner or Enriched by Experience: Bias and Impartiality of Judges and Jurors" (1992), 33 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 1201, at p. 1217)

[57] In our view, the future fear of bias concern is not well-founded and cannot form the basis for directing the constitution of an Inquiry Committee in this matter.

[58] Turning to the first aspect, the spectre of misconduct associated with actively taking part in a campaign whose strategy was to prevent the appointment of Dr. Azarova, it is based on the inaccurate premise that Justice Spiro did so and indeed did so in direct contact with Dean Iacobucci. That did not occur on the record before us, a record again made much stronger and definitive with the addition of the Cromwell Report.

[59] What instead we have is an active, generous alumnus who has historically and admirably supported his law school, expressing concern that a potential faculty appointment will subject the institution to unwanted controversy and harsh publicity. It was, however, a serious mistake for the judge to pursue this course and he has admitted that in the strongest possible terms. In our view, however, it does not represent misconduct justifying the constitution of an Inquiry Committee.

[60] The CJC has provided guidance for Judicial Conduct Review Panels in Judicial Conduct: A Reference Guide for Chief Justices.

[61] In declining to send a matter to an Inquiry Committee, the Guide suggests (at 16):

> Panels have also considered absence of bad faith as a key factor. Other relevant factors have included: an expression of confidence on the part of the judge's Chief Justice; a long and distinguished career; the absence of any similar conduct in the past.

[62] All of these factors favour the judge before us. In our view, it cannot be said on the record before us that, in the language of Therrien, the judge's conduct was:

> … so manifestly and totally contrary to the impartiality, integrity and independence of the judiciary that the confidence of individuals appearing before the judge, or of the public in its justice system, would be undermined, rendering the judge incapable of performing the duties of his office…

[63] More to the point, in the words of s. 2(4) of the By-Laws, we cannot conclude:

> that the matter might be serious enough to warrant the removal of the judge.

[64] We believe that the judge's acknowledgment of his mistakes and his sincere expression of remorse mean that further remedial action by the CJC or his Chief Justice is not required. We so advise the Vice-Chairperson.

DECISION OF THE REVIEW PANEL
IN THE MATTER OF:
THE HONOURABLE ANDREW J. GOODMAN
OF THE SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE OF ONTARIO
CJC Files: 24-0799 and 24-0818

Review Panel Members:
The Honourable Shane I. Perlmutter
The Honourable John S. Little
Mr. Curtis Kleisinger

Background

[1] On August 12, 2024, just before the scheduled sentence appeal of Mr. Peter Khill, the Honourable Andrew Goodman of the Superior Court of Justice of Ontario wrote to the Associate Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Appeal. Justice Goodman explained that in imposing sentence on Mr. Khill on June 6, 2023, Justice Goodman used the wrong version of his reasons, which, in "a momentary lapse of judgment", led to him reading out a custodial sentence of eight years for Mr. Khill's conviction for manslaughter when he had intended to impose a sentence of six years. As Justice Goodman explained in his letter, following the delivery of his sentencing decision and after consulting judicial colleagues, he concluded that he was functus officio, having formally finalized the judicial task at hand. In other words, Justice Goodman believed that his jurisdiction over the matter was exhausted, such that, until his August 12, 2024 letter (14 months after the pronouncement of sentence), he took no steps to address his error as to the length of sentence imposed.

[2] Two separate complaints were submitted to the Canadian Judicial Council (CJC). In addition to complaining about Justice Goodman reading the wrong version of his sentencing decision, the complainants allege that Justice Goodman was aware of his error but failed to make it known for more than a year. One of the two complaints also alleges that it was improper for Justice Goodman to have consulted with judicial colleagues about how to address his error as this "reeks of some type of conspiracy to obstruct justice by all of the parties". This complainant requests that these judicial colleagues also be disciplined.

[3] Following a review of these complaints and after having received the related and responding comments of Justice Goodman and the Honourable Geoffrey Morawetz, the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, pursuant to s. 7.11(b) of the Canadian Judicial Council Procedures for the Review of Complaints or Allegations About Federally Appointed Judges (Review Procedures (2023)), the Chair of the Judicial Conduct Committee, as the reviewing member in this matter, referred these complaints to a Review Panel to be established by the Council under s. 8.1(1) of the Review Procedures (2023).

Review Panel Role

[4] The role of the Review Panel is set out in section 8.9 of the Review Procedures (2023), which provides:

> 8.9(1) In accordance with s. 101 of the Act, where a review panel determines that the judge's removal from office could be justified, it shall refer the complaint to the Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel.
>
> (2) In accordance with s. 102 of the Act, where the review panel determines that the judge's removal from office could not be justified, it may either dismiss the complaint or take one of the following actions if it considers it appropriate to do so in the circumstances:
>
> (a) issue a private or public expression of concern;

(b) issue a private or public warning;

(c) issue a private or public reprimand;

(d) order the judge to apologize, either privately or publicly, by whatever means the panel considers appropriate in the circumstances;

(e) order the judge to take specific measures, including attending counselling or a continuing education course;

(f) take any action that the panel considers to be equivalent to any of the actions referred to in paragraphs (a) to (e);

(g) with the consent of the judge, take any other action that the panel considers appropriate in the circumstances.

8.9(3) In the case of an action under paragraphs 102(a), (b) and (c) and for greater certainty, the ranking of severity for these three actions, from the least severe to the most severe, is as follows: - an expression of concern; - a warning; - a reprimand;

Record

[5] For the purpose of making its decision, the Review Panel reviewed the initial complaints file communicated by the Chair of the Conduct Committee, which included the two complaints, comments received by Justice Goodman, and comments from Chief Justice Morawetz. On April 21, 2025, Justice Goodman's counsel provided his response to the Review Panel. As well, on May 2, 2025, Chief Justice Morawetz provided additional comments.

[6] While not part of the record, we note that on February 27, 2025, the Ontario Court of Appeal rendered its decision in R. v. Khill, 2025 ONCA 146, in which it imposed the six-year custodial sentence that Justice Goodman had intended to impose. In doing so (and having received Justice Goodman's August 12, 2024 letter), the Court of Appeal decision included the following:

> 134 The appellant and the respondent accept that the trial judge intended to impose a sentence of six years' imprisonment, and that his letter does not suggest that he had changed his mind about the appropriate sentence after the fact. In these circumstances, the trial judge would not have been functus officio, neither in the moment when he realized his mistake, nor "in the immediate wake of that sentencing" when he consulted with his colleagues. The parties take this position notwithstanding the trial judge's delay, which they variously describe as "most unfortunate" and "extreme and concerning".
> 135 We agree with these characterizations of the delay in this case. We also agree with the parties' submissions that the trial judge was not functus officio. He could have, and should have, corrected his mistake, either in the moment or shortly afterwards. The trial judge attributes his inaction to the advice he received from judicial colleagues. That he was "dissuaded" from taking further action at the time suggests that he considered his initial instincts were correct and, but for the advice of his colleagues, he would have acted differently.
> 136 Consultation among colleagues is an important, necessary, and rewarding facet of judicial life. The advice or guidance of a trusted judicial colleague can be a lifeline for a judge who is grappling with a thorny legal issue, or for a judge who needs a sounding board while navigating > difficult terrain on the path to achieving justice for the parties. There is nothing inappropriate about this type of consultation. But for a trial judge, it can be no more than that - it is a consultation, not a collaboration. At the end of the day, it is the presiding judge who decides the case, and it is that judge who must "own" their decision.

> 137 It was the responsibility of the trial judge, and his alone, to determine whether he was functus officio, and whether any further action was required. It was not the responsibility of his judicial colleagues. Unlike the trial judge, his colleagues have no voice in these proceedings.
>
> 138 Whether or not the trial judge believed he was functus officio, doing nothing was not a reasonable option in the circumstances, especially when he imposed a penitentiary sentence that was 1/3 (i.e., two years) longer than the one he had intended to impose. He should have promptly requested that the parties attend before him, in open court, to address the matter.
>
> 139 Had he done so, counsel would have been able to provide assistance to the trial judge on whether he was in fact functus officio. They could have brought the authorities discussed above to the trial judge's attention. The submissions of counsel may have caused the trial judge to see things in a different light and correct his mistake at that time. But even if the trial judge was not convinced that he could make the correction, addressing the situation with counsel in open court would have resulted in the creation of a proper record for this court to review; instead, we are left to resolve the issue based on a letter from the trial judge written over a year after the sentence was imposed.
> 140 Fundamentally, there is considerable intrinsic value in airing such matters in open court. It permits the parties and the public to know what has happened, and to witness first-hand the steps being taken to rectify a judicial error. This type of openness and accountability enhances the integrity of the administration of justice; inaction does not.

[7] While the complaints at hand are to now be read in light of the foregoing comments by the Court of Appeal, the task of this Review Panel is not to revisit the critical comments of the Court of Appeal, which are grounded in legal principles. Rather, the considerations for this Review Panel are grounded in principles of judicial conduct. In other words, even if there may be in this case obvious overlap in the commentary of the Court of Appeal and this Review Panel's normative discussion as to what Justice Goodman should have done given his judicial role and the ethical and legal responsibilities that accompany it, this Review Panel will not in any further detail address the Court of Appeal's disposition in the Khill matter.

Justice Goodman's Position

[8] With respect to the complaint about misreading the sentence, Justice Goodman indicates that he misspoke and has apologized unreservedly for his mistake. With respect to the allegation that Justice Goodman's delay in correcting the sentence was not just inappropriate conduct but, in fact, judicial misconduct, it is Justice Goodman's position that because he considered himself to be functus officio, he was prevented from correcting the error in the period immediately following sentencing. As such, he proceeded on the basis that the only time at which his error could be corrected was when the appeal was about to be heard. Justice Goodman submits that, while his error did not result in Mr. Khill serving any additional time in custody since he was on release pending the appeal, he understands the criticism of the length of time it took him to figure out a formal way to address the error. He sincerely apologizes for any negative impact his delay caused. Justice Goodman's counsel submits on his behalf that had it not been for Justice Goodman's decision to disclose his error, whether the Court of Appeal would have reduced Mr. Khill's sentence is open to question. Lastly, it is Justice Goodman's position that the consultation undertaken by him with other colleagues was part of the candid exchange of ideas and expertise that is often invaluable in judicial decision-making.

Applicable Test

[9] The test to be applied in determining whether the judge's removal from office could be justified was set out in the Report to the Canadian Judicial Council of the Inquiry Committee in Marshall, August 27, 1990, at p. 27 (see also, Moreau-Bérubé v. New Brunswick (Judicial Council), 2002 SCC 11). That test (the Marshall test) can be expressed in the form of the following question:

> Is the conduct alleged so manifestly and profoundly destructive of the concept of the impartiality, integrity and independence of the judicial role, that public confidence would be sufficiently undermined to render the judge incapable of executing the judicial office?

[10] The Review Panel notes that it does not make ultimate findings of fact and is constrained by its role and the nature of the record placed before it. What the Review Panel will and must do is weigh the available evidence to determine whether the conduct meets the "judge's removal from office could be justified" standard in subsection 8.9(1) of the Review Procedures (2023).

Ethical Principles for Judges

[11] It is well accepted that the CJC's publication Ethical Principles for Judges is not a code of conduct and that it ought not to be used as such. That important publication and the principles and commentaries contained therein are, however, a highly useful reference point for, among other things, identifying how and where a judge's conduct may fall short of a necessarily applicable ethical principle formulated and endorsed so as to ensure a requisite respect and public confidence. That ongoing respect and public confidence is not only necessary for any individual judge, but also for the institution of the judiciary itself whose independence is so inextricably tied to a public belief that a judge's conduct will be ethical and judicious. Indeed, a consideration of the applicable principles will often identify or assist in recognizing what informs judiciousness and what might be the most judicious choice. In examining the alleged conduct in the context of the present complaints, of particular relevance are the principles discussed below taken from the Ethical Principles for Judges:

> 2.A.1 Public confidence in the judiciary is essential to an effective judicial system and, ultimately, the rule of law. Within that system, judges hold positions of significant trust, confidence and responsibility. Conduct, in and out of court, that exhibits integrity ensures public respect for and confidence in the individual judge and, more significantly, contributes to public confidence in the judiciary and the judicial system as a whole. Judges should therefore act with a high degree of decorum, propriety and humanity.
> 3.A.1 Diligence is concerned with the performance of judicial duties in a skillful, careful, attentive and timely way.

> 3.A.2 Judges should exhibit diligence and competence in the performance of all their judicial duties, including adjudication, case management, pre-trial or settlement conferences and participation in court administration.

[12] Even though the Ethical Principles for Judges and its commentaries are not a code of conduct, as mentioned, the above principles and commentary underscore both the practical and theoretical importance of what is discussed in the Analysis section of these reasons.

Analysis

Delivery of the Wrong Sentence

[13] The referral from the Chair of the Judicial Conduct Committee raises for consideration Justice Goodman's alleged lack of diligence in the performance of judicial duties by not rendering a sentencing judgment in a careful and attentive way. Justice Goodman had prepared several drafts of his decision and inadvertently read the wrong one at the sentencing hearing. Justice Goodman has unreservedly apologized for his mistake. As pointed out by Justice Goodman's counsel, judges are human and make mistakes like anyone else. The Review Panel accepts that this error (as admitted by Justice Goodman), in light of Justice Goodman's apology, does not irreparably compromise his ability to discharge his duties of office and thus does not suggest that his removal from office could be justified.

Consulting Judicial Colleagues

[14] One of the two complaints raises the question of whether it was appropriate for Justice Goodman to consult his judicial colleagues about how he could rectify the error he committed in delivering the wrong sentence. It was this consultation that Justice Goodman, in part, attributes to his delay in disclosing his error (which delay is further discussed below).

[15] The Ontario Court of Appeal addressed the question of consultation among judicial colleagues in their comments quoted above from paragraphs 136 and 137 of Khill. As discussed by the Ontario Court of Appeal, there is nothing inappropriate about consultation among judicial colleagues. Such judicial colleagues can provide useful and valuable advice and guidance or simply act as a trusted sounding board when a judge is considering the path towards achieving justice for the parties. However, as expressly stated by the Ontario Court of Appeal, "[a]t the end of the day, it is the presiding judge who decides the case, and it is that judge who must 'own' their decision". Here, Justice Goodman has always been clear that it was his decision alone not to act at the time he realized his error in the length of the sentence he delivered.

[16] The Review Panel has nothing further to add to the comments and conclusions of the Court of Appeal on the appropriateness of consultation among judicial colleagues other than to suggest that the transparency expected of a federally appointed judge (in his reply to these complaints Justice Goodman indicates his commitment to transparency) would generally require immediate reporting to his or her Chief Justice of circumstances like these which could potentially undermine public confidence (in both the judge and the court). Indeed, such prompt reporting may have led to Justice Goodman quickly addressing this situation in the manner ultimately prescribed by the Court of Appeal (as detailed above).

In these circumstances, the Review Panel will not be pursuing this issue any further.

Delay in Correcting the Sentence

[17] The Review Panel shares the concerns of the Chair of the Judicial Conduct Committee, who, in his referral of this matter, noted that Justice Goodman minimizes the consequences of his mistaken sentence by indicating Mr. Khill was released on bail and, ultimately, he did correct his error by sending his August 12, 2024 letter to the Associate Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Appeal. The submission of his counsel to the Review Panel indicates that Justice Goodman thought the lack of any immediate prejudice to Mr. Khill's liberty interest allowed him time to consider in a more deliberative manner the most appropriate way to ensure that Mr. Khill's appeal proceeded to a correct understanding of the sentence he intended. In their submissions, his counsel also notes that Justice Goodman apologizes for any negative impact this delay caused. Despite the above explanation by his counsel, the Review Panel remains concerned that Justice Goodman still fails to fully appreciate how the delay in correcting his error affects public confidence in the judiciary.

[18] As noted in the Ethical Principles for Judges, judges hold positions of significant trust. Conduct that exhibits integrity ensures public respect for, and confidence in, the judiciary and the judicial system as a whole. From the public's perspective, it may be reasonably expected that in order to ensure that justice was delivered, immediately upon realizing his mistake, Justice Goodman would have acted judiciously by taking prompt steps to correct it. By not doing so, others who may appear before Justice Goodman may be concerned about similar injudicious treatment should Justice Goodman again realize he has committed an error. They themselves may question whether Justice Goodman fully appreciates the need to act judiciously by acting promptly to address and correct any mistake.

[19] As indicated by the Ontario Court of Appeal, Justice Goodman could have, and should have, corrected his mistake, either in the moment or shortly afterwards. As noted by the Ontario Court of Appeal, whether he believed he was functus officio, doing nothing was not a reasonable option. A member of the public, who is aware of Justice Goodman's delayed efforts to correct his mistake in the case at hand, may properly question whether Justice Goodman appreciates the importance of openness and accountability in promptly identifying any error that may have been committed by him, not only for purposes of transparency, but also to rectify the error. Not doing so risks undermining the confidence of the public in the judiciary.

[20] Similarly, the Review Panel is concerned that Justice Goodman does not fully appreciate how his errors affected Mr. Khill and his counsel. While Justice Goodman suggests a lack of prejudice to Mr. Khill (as he was released on bail and ultimately the sentence imposed by the Court of Appeal reflects the sentence Justice Goodman intended to impose), Mr. Khill, his counsel, and Crown counsel would have been adversely affected by this delay. Mr. Khill, for a significant time, remained under the belief that he was sentenced to a substantially lengthier sentence. It may very well have been that if Justice Goodman's error as to the length of sentence had been immediately corrected, there would not have been any appeal. Presumably, the need for the appeal would have come at some cost and certainly additional effort on the part of both Crown and defence counsel.

[21] This Review Panel wishes to be clear in stating that Justice Goodman's inaction in this case should not be rationalized or reduced to the inaction that follows from a mere legal misapprehension. Instead, Justice Goodman's inaction constitutes a serious ethical lapse and a failure as discussed in the Court of Appeal's decision (at paragraphs 134-140) to act in a manner that would have more reasonably and promptly provided the requisite notice and transparency to not only the parties, but also the broader public whose own understanding is critical to maintaining public confidence in the administration of justice.

This leads to the question of disposition.

[22] Albeit in a completely different factual situation, the Ontario Judicial Council (OJC) in Re Zabel, (OJC, September 11, 2017), at paragraph 41, adopted the following list of factors as identified in Re Chisvin, (OJC, November 26, 2012) as relevant to the assessment of the appropriate sanction for judicial misconduct:

i. Whether the misconduct is an isolated incident or evidenced a pattern of misconduct;

ii. The nature, extent and frequency of occurrence of the acts of misconduct;

iii. Whether the misconduct occurred in or out of the courtroom;

iv. Whether the misconduct occurred in the judge's official capacity or in his private life;

v. Whether the judge has acknowledged or recognized that the acts occurred;

vi. Whether the judge has evidenced an effort to change or modify his conduct;

vii. The length of service on the bench;

viii. Whether there have been prior complaints about this judge;

ix. The effect the misconduct has upon the integrity of and respect for the judiciary; and

x. The extent to which the judge exploited his position to satisfy his personal desires.

[23] We find it helpful to assess this complaint in light of certain of those factors applicable to the conduct that gave rise to the complaints.

[24] This was an isolated incident, which occurred in the courtroom. Justice Goodman has clearly acknowledged the incident and has offered an unreserved apology to this Panel, though not to those most directly affected. To our knowledge, he has no history of substantiated complaints. There was no exploitation for personal gain.

[25] Nowhere in his response to the complaint or in his counsel's submissions to this Panel does Justice Goodman explain what steps he might take to ensure that this type of conduct does not happen again. We are satisfied that the precise conduct, namely reading the wrong judgment, will not occur again. But Justice Goodman could and should have taken more proactive steps following his recognition of his mistake, such as consulting with legal counsel for the Court, consulting with the Crown and defence counsel, and consulting with his Chief Justice. His fear of embarrassment and personal angst are greatly outweighed by the consequences of his inaction or delayed action on the public's perception of the administration of justice.

[26] As to the effect of his conduct on the integrity of and respect for the judicial office, Justice Goodman's initial inaction and failure to act in a way more consistent with the "correcting" of an error undermines the openness and accountability that is required to assist in enhancing the integrity of the administration of justice. To that extent, his conduct reflects poorly on the integrity of and respect for the judicial office.

[27] Notwithstanding those serious concerns, Justice Goodman has had a long and distinguished legal and judicial career. Chief Justice Morawetz notes that since being appointed a judge 15 years ago, Justice Goodman has demonstrated his commitment to serving the public interest through his expertise in criminal law and going above and beyond by frequently presiding through non-sit and vacation weeks to ensure that cases are heard in a timely way.

[28] We accept as well Justice Goodman's counsel's submission that there is no evidence that at any time Justice Goodman was acting in bad faith, though that is just one factor for consideration for constituting a Hearing Panel. Albeit after an inappropriately lengthy delay, Justice Goodman, on his own accord, acted so as to identify his error for the Ontario Court of Appeal.

[29] Despite our obvious and stated concerns, the Review Panel has determined that Justice Goodman's removal from office cannot be justified. The Review Panel has come to that determination given that Justice Goodman's conduct is not so manifestly and profoundly destructive of the concept of the impartiality, integrity, and independence of the judicial role that public confidence would be sufficiently undermined to render him incapable of executing the judicial office.

[30] Ideally, judicial conduct proceedings are meant to be, where possible, when removal is not required, both remedial and restorative of public confidence.

[31] While the Review Panel has determined that Justice Goodman's removal from office cannot be justified, given the Review Panel's concerns about Justice Goodman's conduct as outlined above, the Review Panel considers it appropriate in the circumstances to take action under s. 8.9(2) of the Review Procedures (2023).

[32] In the Decision of the Review Panel in the Matter of: The Honourable Diana Piccoli of the Superior Court of Justice of Ontario CJC File 23-0399, Chief Justice Wood, writing for the Review Panel, discussed some of what must be the relevant considerations in deciding whether an expression of concern, warning, or reprimand is appropriate (as an available action under s. 102 of the Judges Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. J-1, as reflected in s. 8.9(2)(a), (b), and (c) of the Review Procedures (2023)):

> Subsections (a) to (c) of section 102 set out the alternative actions of an expression of concern, warning or reprimand. We find these are hierarchical in nature with an expression of concern being the least serious. In choosing the appropriate sanction we must consider the circumstances, including: a) The seriousness of the conduct, b) The need for deterrence, c) The amelioration of any harm to the administration of justice or the reputation of the judiciary, d) The self reporting and subsequent training in relation to ethical issues for judges, e) The reputation of Justice Piccoli in the legal community.

[33] It is the Review Panel's view that an expression of concern is to be considered as an appropriate action when it is less apparent that there has been an ethical lapse. That is not the case here.

[34] A warning may be appropriate where there is a concern about possible future ethical lapses.[1] With these reasons and the acknowledgements by Justice Goodman as described above, the Review Panel has no concern that in the future Justice Goodman will fall into a similar ethical lapse.

[35] However, the seriousness of this breach suggests on the part of this Review Panel a need for a denunciatory expression signaling a message that needs to be sent, not just to Justice Goodman, but to all members of the judiciary and the public at large.

[36] In the case at hand, the Review Panel considers it appropriate to issue a reprimand to Justice Goodman because of the Review Panel's view that Justice Goodman's delay in disclosing his error could only have adversely affected public confidence in the judiciary for the reasons set out above. In addition, as indicated, the Review Panel remains concerned that Justice Goodman's lack of apology to Mr. Khill and to Crown and defence counsel reveals that he does not fully appreciate how his conduct has adversely affected them. It is the Review Panel's view that this conduct is particularly serious and the amelioration of the reputation of the judiciary requires that the public see a clear and strong message of condemnation of Justice Goodman's injudicious conduct. In so doing, the Review Panel notes that in circumstances like those at hand a reprimand is the most severe sanction available short of a recommendation for removal. For these same reasons and for the purpose of transparency, the Review Panel has also determined that this be considered a public (rather than a private) reprimand.

[37] In addition, given the Review Panel's concern that Justice Goodman has still not fully addressed how his conduct has impacted Mr. Khill as well as Crown and defence counsel, in accordance with its jurisdiction under s. 8.9(2)(d) of the Review Procedures (2023), the Review

[1] This gradation of gravity and the respective distinct purposes of those measures were recently discussed in the power point presentation "Intermediate Discipline Sanctions for Judges: A Missed Opportunity to Develop Guidelines" and lecture of Professor Stephen G.A. Pitel of Western University in March 2025 (expected to be accessible in a forthcoming article).

Panel orders that Justice Goodman issue an apology in a form that addresses the foregoing concerns.

Conclusion

[38] In conclusion, the Review Panel has determined that Justice Goodman's removal from office cannot be justified. However, in accordance with its jurisdiction under subsections 8.9(2)(c) and (d) of the Review Procedures (2023), by these reasons, the Review Panel now issues a public reprimand to Justice Goodman for his injudicious conduct and orders that within 30 days, he apologize to Crown counsel and counsel for Mr. Khill, with Mr. Khill's counsel to relay this apology to Mr. Khill in a manner they consider appropriate.

DECISION OF THE REVIEW PANEL

IN THE MATTER OF:

THE HONOURABLE CHARLES C. CHANG
OF THE SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE OF ONTARIO
CJC File 23-0488

Review Panel Members:
The Honourable Associate Chief Justice Kenneth G. Nielsen
The Honourable Justice Johanna Price
Ms. Julia Pavlenko

Background

[1] In a complaint filed with the Canadian Judicial Council (Council) on September 12, 2023, the complainant alleged that Justice Chang behaved inappropriately during a family law hearing. Justice Chang was seized of an urgent motion for temporary orders respecting decision-making responsibility, parenting time and the children's attendance at school and daycare.

[2] The complainant stated that Justice Chang was verbally abusive and intimidating during the hearing.

[3] Pursuant to s. 89 of the Judges Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. J-1 (Act), the complaint was referred to a Screening Officer.

[4] Pursuant to section 91 of the Act, and further to the review of the complaint, the Screening Officer referred the complaint for the designation of a reviewing member.

[5] In accordance with section 93 of the Act and section 7.3 of the "Canadian Judicial Council Procedures for the Review of Complaints or Allegations About Federally Appointed Judges" (Review Procedures (2023)), the reviewing member sought Justice Chang's submissions as well as those of the Honourable Geoffrey B. Morawetz, Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice of Ontario.

[6] Further to the review of Justice Chang's file, the reviewing member referred the complaint to the Council for the establishment of a review panel. The reviewing member did not believe the conduct of Justice Chang justified his removal from judicial office but did believe that an action under section 102 of the Act could be appropriate.

Ethical Principles for Judges

[7] The most current version of the Ethical Principles for Judges was adopted by Council in 2021 (Ethical Principles 2021).

[8] The relevant Ethical Principles in the present matter provide as follows:

> 2.C.1 A hallmark of judicial proceedings is that all participants, including judges, will conduct themselves in a manner that preserves the honour and dignity of both the individual proceedings and the administration of justice more generally. Judges should endeavour to treat all participants in the judicial process with civility and respect.

> 2.C.3 The circumstances of some cases and the conduct of counsel and parties sometimes require judges to act with an appropriate measure of firmness and to emphasize decisiveness, promptness, the prevention of abuse of process or improper treatment of participants in the adjudicative process. Maintaining civility and respect requires judges to ensure a proper balance between upholding the right of parties to be heard and ensuring the efficiency of the process.

[9] The Ethical Principles 2021 are not a code of conduct. They provide aspirational guidance to federally appointed judges in relation to ethical issues.

Council's Judicial Complaint Review Procedure Legal Framework

[10] The conduct review process for federally appointed judges is set out in sections 79 to 140 of the Act. It is supplemented by the Review Procedures (2023).

[11] The first stage of review for a complaint related to judicial conduct is carried out by a screening officer. The jurisdiction of a screening officer to dismiss a complaint is found in section 90(1) of the Act:

> 90 (1) Subject to subsection (2), a screening officer may dismiss a complaint if they are of the opinion that it
>
> > (a) is frivolous, vexatious or made for an improper purpose or is an abuse of process;
> >
> > (b) was not made for a reason referred to in paragraphs 80(a) to (d); or
> > (c) does not meet the other screening criteria specified by the Council.

[12] Where the screening officer does not dismiss a complaint, it is referred to the second stage of the process and Council will designate a "reviewing member" who is a member of the Judicial Conduct Committee to review the complaint. The reviewing member is required to give the judge who is the subject of the complaint an opportunity to make written submissions. Section 94(1) of the Act sets out the jurisdiction of the reviewing member to dismiss the complaint:

> 94 (1) The reviewing member shall dismiss the complaint if they are of the opinion that it should be dismissed for any reason set out in paragraphs 90(1)(a) to (c) or that it is wholly without merit.

[13] If the reviewing member does not dismiss the complaint, they shall refer it to the third stage of the process for the establishment of a review panel and provide the panel with their observations and any recommendation about how the complaint should be resolved.

[14] A review panel is established under section 98(1) of the Act. It is required to give the judge who is the subject of the complaint as well as their chief justice an opportunity to provide written submissions. Section 101 of the Act sets out the circumstances when a review panel shall refer the matter to Council for establishment of a full hearing panel:

> 101 The review panel shall refer the complaint to the Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel if it determines that the judge's removal from office could be justified.

[15] If the matter is not referred to a full hearing panel, the options available to the review panel are set out in section 102 of the Act:

> 102 If the review panel does not refer the complaint to the Council under section 101, it may dismiss the complaint or take one or more of the following actions if it considers it appropriate to do so in the circumstances:
>
> (a) issue a private or public expression of concern;
>
> (b) issue a private or public warning;
>
> (c) issue a private or public reprimand;
>
> (d) order the judge to apologize, either privately or publicly, by whatever means the panel considers appropriate in the circumstances;
>
> (e) order the judge to take specific measures, including attending counselling or a continuing education course;
>
> (f) take any action that the panel considers to be equivalent to any of the actions referred to in paragraphs (a) to (e);
>
> (g) with the consent of the judge, take any other action that the panel considers appropriate in the circumstances.

First Stage of the Judicial Conduct Review Process in this Matter

[16] On December 21, 2023, the screening officer appointed to review the complaint referred it to Council for designation of a reviewing member. The reasons for doing so stated in part that the conduct of Justice Chang could be interpreted as demonstrating disrespect for the parties, their counsel, and the hearing process. The screening officer referred to many interventions by Justice Chang that were of concern and could have been interpreted as disrespectful or even involved yelling. The screening officer noted that the judge frequently interrupted counsel and raised his voice in an intimidating manner, as if he was asserting the power of his position over those in a subordinate position to him.

[17] Referring to the Ethical Principles 2.C.1 and 2.C.3, the screening officer concluded that Justice Chang repeatedly expressed his dissatisfaction with the fact that this was a "he said/she said" scenario with little or no neutral, external evidence to support the parties' assertions.

[18] As a result, the screening officer recommended that the complaint be referred to the Council for the designation of a reviewing member pursuant to section 91 of the Judges Act.

The Second Stage of the Judicial Conduct Review Process in this Matter

[19] As required by the Act and the Review Procedures (2023), the reviewing member sought submissions from Justice Chang and the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice of Ontario, the Honourable Geoffrey B. Morawetz. Justice Chang's counsel provided submissions on his behalf on April 12, 2024.

[20] Justice Chang's counsel submitted that the context of the hearing ought to be considered in assessing whether the comments identified by the screening officer as raising concerns amounted to judicial misconduct.

[21] Justice Chang's counsel submitted that this hearing was not a typical day in court as Justice Chang was informed that the Milton Courthouse, where the matter before Justice Chang was being heard, was to be closed indefinitely due to substance contamination in the building. Justice Chang's counsel wrote that Justice Chang was "very distressed" about this development as this was the second time in the recent past that the Milton Courthouse was subject to closure as a result of issues related to the physical plant.

[22] Referring to the comments identified by the screening officer as raising concerns, Justice Chang's counsel submitted that they were Justice Chang's colloquial and direct way of expressing the concerns he had as the judge dealing with an application that he considered to have been poorly prepared and ill-considered.

[23] Justice Chang expressed the view that parties less familiar with the day-to-day 'cut and thrust' of a judicial colloquy might interpret his 'firmness' as crossing the line into actual disrespect. While that was never Justice Chang's intent, he indicated that he has reflected on this issue and sought out the assistance of a retired judicial colleague as a mentor on this area.

[24] Justice Chang's counsel submitted that, in the context of Principle 2.C.1, the comments were not made for the purpose or intent of intimidating or insulting counsel, nor were they intended to be uncivil when properly considered in the circumstances of the hearing. He explained that the identified comments were an effort by Justice Chang to engage the authority recognized by Principle 2.C.3 that recognizes the need for judges to have resort to "an appropriate level of firmness" in certain cases. Justice Chang's comments were made for the purpose of controlling and focusing the conduct and submissions of counsel in his courtroom in an urgent, contested application involving "extreme, extreme, extreme" allegations of abuse.

[25] In this regard, Justice Chang's counsel explained that Justice Chang would ask the reviewing member to consider whether the complaint could be dismissed pursuant to section 6.7(2) of the Review Procedures (2023) because, while the conduct is concerning, it does not rise to the level of judicial misconduct requiring discipline when the comments are considered in context.

[26] In his letter to the reviewing member, Justice Chang apologized to the complainant if she left the hearing feeling that she had been verbally abused and intimidated. Referring to the context of the hearing and indicating that counsel for both parties were not assisting the court, Justice Chang recognized that at times his words and tone were not appropriate. He wrote that he is mindful that all of a jurist's words during a court hearing not only impact participants, but may also affect the dignity and solemnity of the hearing itself and regretted that his approach may have caused any diminution of the public's respect for the court.

[27] The reviewing member considered the file and decided to refer the matter to a review panel.

[28] In relation to the closing of the Milton Courthouse, the reviewing member was of the opinion that while obviously causing a lot of rearrangement, reassignments and uncertainty, the closing of the courthouse cannot be given the emphasis that Justice Chang's counsel and Justice Chang put on this to justify the judge's interventions and tone in court. When called to preside over a case, a judge must be able to put aside the frustrations of the day, whether professional or personal, otherwise it becomes impossible to carry out their functions in compliance with Ethical Principle 2.C.1.

[29] In relation to the nature of the case to be decided, the reviewing member expressed that urgent family law matters can be a stressful situation for the parties involved and perhaps, at times, for the judges. However, these situations are not so unique and rare, especially in the family law context, that a judge is not able to deal with them, no doubt with a certain firmness, as recognized in Principle 2.C.3, but still with civility.

[30] In relation to the submission that there was lack of cooperation by counsel, the reviewing member stated that there is no doubt that without the cooperation of counsel, it becomes very difficult and frustrating for a judge to decide a matter, particularly in the family law context, as the decision can have serious consequences for the parties and their children. However, cases where there is limited proof and that contain "he says – she says" evidence are not so unique and rare that judges cannot get to the crux of the parties' submissions by asking them, in a firm but appropriate way, the questions that may assist them in their decision-making. Judges must also keep in mind that counsel work with what is being provided to them by the parties, which can be minimal in some circumstances.

[31] The submissions from Justice Chang, while recognizing that the tone was not always appropriate, do not refer to the audio recording, but only to the transcript. If the whole context of the hearing is to be considered, the audio recording cannot be ignored and all interventions by Justice Chang must also be considered together.

[32] The reviewing member stated that when listening to the audio recording, it becomes apparent that Justice Chang was impatient and that his tone was inappropriate, abusive and intimidating at times, even more so towards the end of the hearing. His interventions go beyond what is usually considered the exercise of proper firmness, as recognized in Principle 2.C.3. His interventions did not preserve the honour and dignity of both the individual proceedings and the administration of justice more generally, as indicated in Principle 2.C.1. The fact that Justice Chang's counsel submitted that Justice Chang's many interventions were not directed towards the complainant cannot serve as a justification of his overall behaviour. Maintaining civility and respect requires judges to ensure a proper balance between upholding the right of parties to be heard and ensuring the efficiency of the process. Justice Chang's interventions did not have the effect of maintaining such a proper balance.

[33] The fact that Justice Chang indicated that he sought the assistance of a retired judicial colleague as a mentor is certainly a step in the right direction. What is not clear, however, is who he consulted and whether this was a one-time request for assistance or whether it is meant to be on-going for a certain time.

[34] The matter is not trivial, Justice Chang is at the beginning of his judicial career and the Council cannot simply hope that this won't happen again if Justice Chang faces yet another urgent matter where counsel are ill-prepared, and if meaning is to be given to the Ethical Principles for Judges 2.C.1 and 2.C.3.

[35] The reviewing member recommended that the review panel use a remedy available under section 102 of the Act along with the encouragement to Justice Chang to get the proper mentoring from current or retired members of the court.

Third Stage of the Judicial Conduct Review Process: Review Panel

[36] As required by the section 99 of the Act and the Review Procedures (2023), the review panel received all the materials provided to the reviewing member. In addition, we invited submissions from Chief Justice Morawetz and Justice Chang.

[37] In a letter dated May 28, 2024, Chief Justice Morawetz wrote that Justice Chang was known to be a very hard-working judge and always accepts all cases without complaint or hesitation, even last-minute assignments. That Justice Chang is well liked and respected by all his judicial colleagues. He added that Justice Chang has a strong sense of justice and common sense that he applies to all cases. By reputation, although he can be outspoken, he is always frank and clear to all parties and counsel — a quality appreciated by most counsel and indeed significantly praised by the Bar in Halton where he presides.

[38] Chief Justice Morawetz had no doubt that Justice Chang sincerely accepted the complaint as a lesson learned — a reminder that his commitment to fairness and access to justice must be tempered with patience and the dignity and solemnity of the court process.

[39] In a letter dated June 10, 2024, Justice Chang wrote that he accepted the reviewing member's evaluation of the circumstances and his assessment of the record and added that his original submissions were not intended to suggest that he did not accept those concerns identified by the reviewing member.

Decision of the Review Panel

[40] The review panel first considered whether the matter should be referred to Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel or, alternatively, dismissed.

[41] The criteria for recommending removal are onerous. They are encompassed in what is referred to as the Marshall test which can be found in many judicial conduct decisions, including Moreau-Bérubé v. New Brunswick (Judicial Council), 2002 SCC 11. It requires:

> Conduct which is so manifestly and profoundly destructive of the concept of the impartially, integrity and independence of the judicial role, that > public confidence would be sufficiently undermined to render the judge incapable of executing the judicial office.

[42] The review panel agreed that removal from office is not justified in the circumstances. Therefore, the review panel concludes there was no basis to recommend appointment of a full hearing panel, which should only happen if it was determined that removal from office could be justified.

[43] The review panel also concluded the complaint should not be dismissed and agrees with and adopts the reviewing member's reasons explained above. The Council has an important role in maintaining the confidence of the public in the administration of justice. More specifically, the review panel believes that actions under section 102 of the Act are required:

- To remind Justice Chang of the importance of conducting himself in a manner that preserves the honour and dignity of both the individual proceedings and the administration of justice more generally. The words, vocabulary and tone of voice used in a hearing may have a detrimental impact on both the litigants and the confidence of the public in the administration of justice.

- To remind Justice Chang that maintaining civility and respect requires him to ensure a proper balance between upholding the right of the parties to be heard and ensuring the efficiency of the process. The nature of the case to be decided and what a judge may consider to be a lack of cooperation by counsel are no justification to brush aside principles of civility and respect.

- Justice Chang ought to have been aware that his behaviour during the hearing was contrary to the standards established in the Ethical Principles 2021.

[44] As stated by the reviewing member, this matter is not trivial. Justice Chang is at the beginning of his judicial career and the Council cannot simply hope that this will not happen again if Justice Chang faces yet another urgent matter with similar challenges, and if meaning is to be given to the Ethical Principles 2021 2.C.1 and 2.C.3.

[45] In choosing the appropriate action, we have considered the following circumstances:

1. The tone and interventions from Justice Chang at the hearing;

2. The need to reinforce the principles of respect and civility in court and in the administration of justice generally to foster public confidence;

3. The fact that Justice Chang recognizes that his tone and vocabulary were at times inappropriate;

4. The fact that Justice Chang wishes to apologize to the complainant;

5. The fact that Justice Chang agrees with the recommendation of the reviewing member;

6. The willingness of Justice Chang to receive coaching from a senior judge.

[46] We have considered all of the above and conclude that the removal of Justice Chang from office could not be justified. In the result, the complaint is not referred to the Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel pursuant to section 101 of the Act. However, we have determined that the complaint should not be dismissed. Pursuant to subsection 102(a) of the Act, the review panel will take an action of a private nature and also, pursuant to subsection 102(f), the review panel orders that Justice Chang engage in more coaching with a senior judge for a duration and frequency that is considered appropriate by his Chief Justice. We conclude that this outcome adequately reflects the nature of the misconduct as well as the role of the Council in maintaining the public confidence in the administration of the justice.

DECISION OF THE REVIEW PANEL
IN THE MATTER OF:
THE HONOURABLE ARTHUR DOYLE
OF THE COURT OF KING'S BENCH OF NEW BRUNSWICK
CJC FILE 24-0144

Review Panel Members:
The Honourable Associate Chief Justice Rosalie McGrath
The Honourable Justice Bernette Ho
Mr. Curtis Kleisinger

Background

[1] Justice Arthur Doyle was appointed to the Court of King's Bench of New Brunswick in June of 2019 where he has presided as a judge in Saint John.

[2] On 2 February 2024, the Canadian Judicial Council (Council) received a complaint concerning Justice Doyle jointly submitted by Steven Filshie and Joan E. Zed. The complaint related to a settlement conference over which Justice Doyle presided on 21 December 2023. The conference was held in an attempt to settle a dispute over the estate of Joan Zed's late husband, Kevin Zed. Steven Filshie agreed to help Joan Zed in closing her late husband's estate. Joan Zed's brother-in-law, Peter Zed, Sr., who was a partner with Cox & Palmer in their Saint John office, filed a Caveat concerning the estate and then an Application for Letters of Probate. Peter Zed, Sr.'s son, Peter Zed, Jr., who was a partner with Cox & Palmer in Nova Scotia, also filed a Caveat.

[3] The complainants alleged that, unbeknownst to them at the time, Justice Doyle had worked in the same Cox & Palmer Saint John office as Peter Zed, Sr. and in the same areas of law for many years, until his 2019 judicial appointment. For the complainants, Justice Doyle's professional relationship with Peter Zed, Sr. was an obvious yet undisclosed conflict of interest. In addition, the complainants alleged that Justice Doyle implied that he did not know much about Peter Zed, Sr. and feigned ignorance that Peter Zed, Sr.'s son, Peter Zed, Jr., who also filed a Caveat, worked with Cox & Palmer in Nova Scotia. The complainants allege Justice Doyle "volunteered" to preside at the settlement conference, knowing that his former law partner was in jeopardy of being exposed for extensive wrongdoing; in their view, this is evidence of collusion with Peter Zed, Sr. to defeat justice.

[4] In the complainants' view, the conflict of interest they noted raised a reasonable apprehension of bias. It also ran contrary to case law holding that not only must justice be done, it must be seen to be done. In this instance, the complainants alleged that Justice Doyle's biased conduct undermined public confidence in the judiciary and the justice system.

Ethical Principles for Judges

[5] The latest version of the Ethical Principles for Judges was adopted by the Council in 2021. The Principles are not a code of conduct. They provide aspirational guidance to federally appointed judges in relation to ethical issues. With respect to impartiality and potential conflicts of interest, the Ethical Principles state the following:

5.A.2 Impartiality requires not only the absence of bias and prejudgment, but also the absence of any appearance of partiality. This dual aspect of impartiality is captured in the oft-repeated words that justice must not only be done, but manifestly be seen to be done. The test is whether a reasonable and informed person with knowledge of all relevant circumstances, viewing the matter realistically and practically, would apprehend a lack of impartiality in the judge.

5.A.8 Judges have a responsibility to promote opportunities for all persons to understand the judicial process and to meaningfully present their case, whether or not they have legal representation. Self-represented persons may sometimes be uninformed about their rights and about the consequences of the options they choose. Judges should take appropriate and reasonable measures to provide a fair and impartial process and prevent an unfair disadvantage to self-represented persons. Such measures are consistent with impartiality provided that they are fair to other parties.

5.C.3 Conflicts of interest may arise from: a pecuniary or non-pecuniary interest in the outcome; a close family, personal or professional relationship with a litigant, counsel or witness; or the judge having expressed views evidencing bias regarding a litigant or an issue that is before the court.

5.C.10 In certain situations, it may be appropriate for a judge to make disclosure of a potential conflict and invite submissions from the parties. However, judges, not the parties or their counsel, bear the burden of ensuring respect for the principle of judicial impartiality. Neither disclosure of a conflict of interest nor the consent of the parties necessarily justifies judges ignoring circumstances which reasonably call into question their ability to hear a case and decide impartially.

CJC Complaint Review Procedure

[6] The conduct review process for federally appointed judges is set out in sections 79 to 140 of the Judges Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. J-1 (“the Act”). It is supplemented by the procedures adopted by the Council in June 2023, which are entitled Canadian Judicial Council Procedures for the Review of Complaints or Allegations About Federally Appointed Judges (Review Procedures (2023)).

[7] The first stage of review for a complaint related to judicial conduct is carried out by a screening officer. The jurisdiction of a screening officer to dismiss a complaint is found in section 90(1) of the Act: 90 (1). Subject to subsection (2), a screening officer may dismiss a complaint if they are of the opinion that it (a) is frivolous, vexatious or made for an improper purpose or is an abuse of process; (b) was not made for a reason referred to in paragraphs 80(a) to (d); or (c) does not meet the other screening criteria specified by the Council.

[8] Where the screening officer does not dismiss a complaint, it is referred to the Council for the designation of a “reviewing member” who is a member of the Council. The reviewing member is required to give the judge who is the subject of the complaint an opportunity to make written submissions. Section 94(1) of the Act sets out the jurisdiction of the reviewing member to dismiss the complaint: 94 (1). The reviewing member shall dismiss the complaint if they are of the opinion that it should be dismissed for any reason set out in paragraphs 90(1)(a) to (c) or that it is wholly without merit.

[9] If the reviewing member does not dismiss the complaint, they shall refer it to the Council for the establishment of a review panel.

[10] After a review panel is established, section 97 of the Act requires the reviewing member to provide the panel with every document in their possession related to the complaint. They may also provide the panel with their observations about the complaint and any recommendations about how it should be resolved.

[11] A review panel is established under section 98(1) of the Act. It is required to give the judge who is the subject of the complaint as well as their chief justice an opportunity to provide written submissions. Section 101 of the Act sets out the circumstances when a review panel shall refer the matter to the Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel: 101. The review panel shall refer the complaint to the Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel if it determines that the judge's removal from office could be justified.

[12] If the matter is not referred to a full hearing panel, the options available to the review panel are set out in section 102 of the Act: 102. If the review panel does not refer the complaint to the Council under section 101, it may dismiss the complaint or take one or more of the following actions if it considers it appropriate to do so in the circumstances: (a) issue a private or public expression of concern; (b) issue a private or public warning; (c) issue a private or public reprimand; (d) order the judge to apologize, either privately or publicly, by whatever means the panel considers appropriate in the circumstances; (e) order the judge to take specific measures, including attending counselling or a continuing education course; (f) take any action that the panel considers to be equivalent to any of the actions referred to in paragraphs (a) to (e); (g) with the consent of the judge, take any other action that the panel considers appropriate in the circumstances.

Decisions of the Screening Officer and Reviewing Member Concerning Justice Doyle

[13] On 20 March 2024, the screening officer appointed to review the complaint referred it to the Council for the designation of a reviewing member pursuant to section 91 of the Act. The screening officer concluded that it may have been incumbent upon Justice Doyle to declare his past professional relationship with one of the parties to the settlement conference in order to ensure that there were no reasonable grounds for a perception of bias.

[14] As required by the Act and the Review Procedures (2023), the reviewing member sought submissions from Justice Doyle and the Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench of New Brunswick, The Honourable Tracey DeWare.

[15] Chief Justice DeWare provided a letter dated 20 June 2024, in which she noted that it was difficult to find a judge to conduct the settlement conference. She was pleased that Justice Doyle was available and that the matter had been resolved. Chief Justice DeWare said she did not register any potential conflict at the time of the conference with Peter Zed, Sr. being a party. While in retrospect it would have been better for Justice Doyle to have disclosed his connection with Peter Zed, Sr., she is confident that Justice Doyle's intentions were solely to assist the parties in achieving a collaborative resolution to their issues. She is certain that Justice Doyle would be on the lookout for real and perceived conflicts of interest in the future.

[16] Justice Doyle provided a letter dated 21 June 2024, in which he stated that Peter Zed, Sr. became his law partner in January, 2013, while Peter Zed, Jr. became a partner in the Nova Scotia office of Cox & Palmer in 2017. He wrote that he did not work on any legal files together with Peter Zed, Sr., and they were not (and are not) close acquaintances. He did occasional legal work with Peter Zed, Jr., but again they never socialized. When he was appointed to the bench, Justice Doyle advised that he was told not to have dealings in his court with lawyers from his former law firm or former clients for a period of three years. He was also advised that he could never hear matters where his friends were counsel. He limited his contact with his "friends" to one person and identified them on his conflict list. When he agreed to conduct the settlement conference, he did so thinking about Peter Zed, Sr. as a former law partner appearing before him in general and not as a party to a dispute where a higher onus regarding disclosure may have been applicable, particularly where Ms. Zed was self-represented. Justice Doyle wrote that he did not believe he had a conflict of interest or any need to disclose his previous association with Peter Zed, Sr. or his son, Peter Zed, Jr., because they were not, and are not, close acquaintances, he never worked on legal matters with Peter Zed, Sr. and rarely did so with Peter Zed, Jr., and he had been a judge for four-and-a-half years when he presided over the settlement conference, well past the three-year ban on dealing with cases involving lawyers from his former law firm. While confident that he acted impartially, in retrospect Justice Doyle recognized the difference between Peter Zed, Sr. being a party and not simply counsel, said it was not his intention to conceal any relationship, and that he simply did not identify the potential conflict in the situation. He now recognizes, however, that the complainants could have perceived the situation differently.

[17] In a decision dated 28 August 2024, the reviewing member concluded that the conduct of Justice Doyle was not such as to justify removal from judicial office, but an action under section 102 of the Act would be appropriate. He referred the matter to a review panel, firstly, in reference to the following in the Ethical Principles for Judges:

> I.C. Judges exhibit and promote high standards of judicial conduct so as to reinforce public confidence in the independence of the judiciary.

> V.A. Judges ensure that their conduct at all times maintains and enhances confidence in their impartiality and that of the judiciary.
>
> 5.C.2. The potential for a conflict of interest arises when the personal interest of the judge (or of those close to the judge) conflicts with the judge's duty to adjudicate impartially. Judicial impartiality is concerned with impartiality in fact and in the perception of a reasonable and informed person. As a result, judges should be attentive to both actual conflicts between their self-interest and their duty of impartial adjudication, and to circumstances in which a reasonable and informed person would reasonably apprehend a conflict.
>
> 5.C.3 Conflicts of interest may arise from: a pecuniary or non-pecuniary interest in the outcome: a close family, personal or professional relationship with a litigant, counsel or witness; or the judge having expressed views evidencing bias regarding a litigant or an issue that is before the court.
> 5.C.10 In certain situations, it may be appropriate for a judge to make disclosure of a potential conflict and invite submissions from the parties. However, judges, not the parties or their counsel, bear the burden of ensuring respect for the principle of judicial impartiality. Neither disclosure of a conflict of interest nor the consent of the parties necessarily justifies judges ignoring circumstances which reasonably call into question their ability to hear a case and decide impartially.

[18] The decision to refer the matter to a review panel was also based, in part, on the Report of the Review Panel Constituted by the Canadian Judicial Council Regarding the Honourable Kelly A. Gorman, dated 3 May 2023. The reviewing member found that the following ethical principles applied to both this case and the Gorman case:

> 1. Judges should strive to ensure that their conduct, both in and out of Court, maintains and enhances confidence in their impartiality and that of the judiciary.
> 2. The appearance of impartiality is to be assessed from the perspective of a reasonable, fair minded and informed person.
> 3. Judges should disqualify themselves in any case in which they believe that a reasonable, fair minded and informed person would have a reasoned suspicion of conflict between a judge's personal interest (or that of a judge's immediate family or close friends or associates) and a judge's duty.

In light of these principles, the reviewing member concluded that Justice Doyle should have disclosed his past connection with Peter Zed, Sr. and Peter Zed, Jr. as lawyers working in the same law firm prior to his judicial appointment. In doing so, this situation could have been prevented and would have enhanced confidence in the judiciary. This is particularly so given that one of the parties to the settlement conference was self-representing.

[19] The reviewing member's decision to refer this matter to a review panel was also based, in part, on Justice Doyle's comments to the Council. Justice Doyle wrote that he agreed to preside at the settlement conference thinking of Peter Zed, Sr. as a former law partner of his appearing in general, as opposed to a former law partner of his appearing in the specific capacity as a party to a dispute, in which a higher onus regarding disclosure may or may not have been applicable, particularly as Joan Zed was representing herself. The reviewing member found this reasoning to be flawed as Justice Doyle should have disclosed his past affiliation with the opposing party whether he viewed the opposing party as a former law partner appearing in general or as a party to a dispute. Furthermore, Justice Doyle wrote that he acted completely impartially in the context of the settlement conference, but recognized that the complainants could have perceived the situation differently. It is precisely because of his previous affiliation with one party that he should have raised that they had worked at the same firm even though they had no real close relationship.

[20] The reviewing member referred this matter to the Council for the establishment of a review panel pursuant to section 95 of the Act, and section 7.11 (b) of the Review Procedures (2023). In addition, and in accordance with section 97 of the Act, he observed that the complaint would not justify the removal of Justice Doyle from office. He recommended that the complaint should not be dismissed and an action of a private nature should be issued to Justice Doyle pursuant to section 102 of the Act.

Review Panel Procedure and Disposition

[21] As required by the Act and the Review Procedures (2023), the review panel received all the materials provided to the reviewing member. In addition, we invited submissions from Chief Justice DeWare and Justice Doyle. Chief Justice DeWare and Justice Doyle both referred to their earlier submissions to the reviewing member.

[22] The review panel first considered whether the matter should be referred to the Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel or, alternatively, dismissed. We concluded there was no basis to recommend appointment of a full hearing panel, which should only happen if we were to determine that removal from office could be justified. The criteria for recommending removal are onerous. They are encompassed in what is referred to as the Marshall test, which can be found in many judicial conduct decisions, including Moreau-Bérubé v. New Brunswick (Judicial Council), 2002 SCC 11. It requires conduct which is so manifestly and profoundly destructive of the concept of the impartiality, integrity and independence of the judicial role, that public confidence would be sufficiently undermined to render the judge incapable of executing the judicial office.

[23] The review panel agreed there was no basis on which Justice Doyle's removal from office could be justified in the circumstances. He thought there was no need to disclose that Peter Zed, Sr. had worked at the same firm after considering that the three-year window for not hearing from lawyers from his previous firm had passed. It was an honest mistake.

[24] The review panel did not accept that Justice Doyle intentionally concealed knowing Peter Zed, Sr. or that Justice Doyle reached any conclusion about whether Peter Zed, Sr. was engaged in wrongdoing. We concluded, nonetheless, that the complaint should not be dismissed. The factors which led us to this decision include:

- the Ethical Principles for Judges make it clear that impartiality requires not only the absence of bias and prejudgment, but also the absence of any appearance of partiality. This is a case where a reasonable and informed person with knowledge of all relevant circumstances could apprehend a lack of impartiality in Justice Doyle, given his past professional relationship with one of the parties;
- this was a situation where it was appropriate for a judge to make disclosure of a past working relationship, even if minor, and invite submissions from the parties. However, as the Ethical Principles for Judges makes clear, it was Justice Doyle who bore the burden of ensuring respect for the principle of judicial impartiality;
- the obligation on Justice Doyle to notify the parties that there was a previous working relationship was heightened by the fact that one of the parties was self-represented; and
- Justice Doyle was mistaken about the appearance of a conflict of interest at the settlement conference. It did not matter whether Peter Zed, Sr. was a party or counsel at the conference – the appearance of partiality would be present in either case. Disclosing the previous working relationship at the outset of the hearing was required and any appearance of partiality could not be addressed solely by acting in a strictly impartial fashion at the settlement conference.

[25] While this complaint should not be dismissed, we find that there are a number of factors that should mitigate any sanction imposed upon Justice Doyle. Those mitigating factors include:

- at no time did Justice Doyle have an intention to mislead. He did not think that there was a conflict of interest and that is why he did not disclose his previous professional relationship with Peter Zed, Sr.;
- Justice Doyle had every intention to conduct a fair proceeding for the benefit of all parties by helping them resolve their differences without the need for costly and time-consuming litigation;
- Justice Doyle acknowledges that while he did not identify the previous working relationship, the complainants could have perceived the situation differently. This realization should help Justice Doyle in the future; and
- the settlement conference took place outside of a large, urban centre. In such a setting, it can be difficult to find judges, counsel, and parties who have had no previous dealings with each other. Such circumstances may require participants > who know each other to nevertheless engage in judicial proceedings more frequently than is the case in large cities.

[26] In choosing an appropriate sanction we must consider the circumstances, including: a) the seriousness of the conduct, b) the need for deterrence, c) the amelioration of any harm to the administration of justice or the reputation of the judiciary, d) the mitigating factors, and e) the reputation of Justice Doyle in the legal community.

[27] We have considered all the above and conclude that a private measure pursuant to section 102 of the Judges Act is the appropriate sanction. This recognizes the nature of the honest mistake on the part of Justice Doyle and the potential impact on public confidence in the impartiality of the judiciary, along with the mitigating circumstances described above.

DECISION OF THE REVIEW PANEL
IN THE MATTER OF
THE HONOURABLE MARC ST-PIERRE
OF THE SUPERIOR COURT OF QUÉBEC
FILE 24-0784

The text of this decision has been translated from the original decision in French.

Review Panel Members:
The Honourable Larry Landry
The Honourable Miriam Maisonville
Ms. Julia Pavlenko

Background

[1] Justice Marc St-Pierre was appointed to the Superior Court of Québec in June 2008 and sits in the Montréal region.

[2] On April 9, 2024, the Canadian Judicial Council (the Council) received a complaint about Justice St-Pierre from Me Mathieu Decelles, who works as counsel for the Société d'assurance automobile du Québec (SAAQ). The complainant had appeared as an individual before Justice St-Pierre in a judicial review case against the City of Montréal. Justice St-Pierre's decision, handed down in January 2022, went against him, and the Québec Court of Appeal refused him permission to appeal.

[3] On January 8, 2024, a colleague of the complainant, also counsel for the SAAQ, appeared before Justice St-Pierre in a judicial review case against the City of Montréal, a case completely independent of the first one. During the hearing, the colleague in question submitted as case law a decision in which the complainant had acted as counsel. Justice St-Pierre interrupted the colleague and made remarks about the complainant, which are the subject of the complaint lodged with the Council.

[4] The following is a free transcription by Mathieu Decelles of the exchange among Justice St-Pierre, counsel for the City of Montréal, and the complainant's colleague:
(from 46 minutes 25 seconds).

Justice St-Pierre to the parties:
"Hey, don't tell me, wait a second. Hmm (little laugh)."

Justice St-Pierre to counsel for the City of Montréal:
"You don't do zoning, do you?"

Counsel for the City of Montréal:
"No?"

Justice St-Pierre:
"Don't you know Mathieu Decelles?"

Counsel for the City of Montréal:
"Excuse me?"

Justice St-Pierre:
"Don't you know Mathieu Decelles?"

Counsel for the City of Montréal:
"No, I don't know him?"

SAAQ counsel:
"He is my colleague."

Justice St-Pierre:
“I know he’s your colleague, I know him well. You’ll talk to him about me, but don’t get too close because... you risk...”

SAAQ counsel:
“In all transparency I don’t know what you are referring to.”

Justice St-Pierre:
“It’s public, it’s a judgment of, it’s Decelles against the City of Montréal. A zoning issue, he wanted to modify his vehicle, his building.”

“And it took a long, long time, because every time that you know, I did what I’m doing with you, then he was always adding other things, Maître Decelles, he even had the investigation reopened, reamended, amended, he did everything, unfortunately for him he didn’t win.”

This transcription is faithful to the recording of the hearing to which we have listened.

[5] The complainant alleges that it is not a matter of commenting on a judgment rendered in connection with the hearing, but rather of commenting on a party itself, overstepping a judge’s duty of reserve and disrupting the professional calm that any lawyer is entitled to expect from the Court. The complainant further alleges that Justice Marc St-Pierre’s comments were directed personally against him, the complainant.

[6] The complainant alleges that the judge’s actions tainted his impartiality with regard to all cases in which the complainant would be a party, both personally and professionally as a lawyer, since Justice St-Pierre had himself made personal comments about him in another case.

[7] The complainant alleges that these comments call into question Justice St-Pierre’s judicial impartiality and neutrality, especially with regard to the complainant, and that the personalization of Justice Marc St-Pierre’s comments during the hearing on January 8, 2024, in no way meets the standards of judicial conduct for a judge.

Council procedure for review of complaints

[8] Before addressing the allegation made against Justice St-Pierre, an overview of the review process and the principles of judicial ethics is necessary to understand the framework of this process, the mandate and powers of the review panel, and the foundations of the judicial conduct considered by the review panel.

[9] The conduct review process for federally appointed judges is set out in sections 79 to 140 of the Judges Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. J-1 (the “Act”). It is supplemented by the procedures adopted by the Council in 2023 and recently amended in 2025, which are entitled Canadian Judicial Procedures for the Review of Complaints or Allegations About Federally Appointed Judges (“Review Procedures (2025)”).

[10] The first step in investigating a complaint about a judge's conduct is carried out by a screening officer. The screening officer's authority to dismiss a complaint is set out in subsection 90(1) of the Act:

> 90(1) Subject to subsection (2), a screening officer may dismiss a complaint if they are of the opinion that it (a) is frivolous, vexatious or made for an improper purpose or is an abuse of process; (b) was not made for a reason referred to in paragraphs 80(a) to (d); or (c) does not meet the other screening criteria specified by the Council.

[11] When the screening officer decides that the complaint should proceed, it is referred to the Council for the designation of a "reviewing member," who is a member of the Council. The reviewing member shall give the judge who is the subject of the complaint an opportunity to provide written observations. Section 94(1) of the Act defines the reviewing member's authority to dismiss a complaint:

> 94(1) The reviewing member shall dismiss the complaint if they are of the opinion that it should be dismissed for any reason set out in paragraphs 90(1)(a) to (c) or that it is wholly without merit.

[12] If the complaint is not dismissed, the reviewing member shall refer it to the Council for the establishment of a review panel. A review panel is made up of three people: a member of the Council, a puisne judge (who is not a member of the Council) and a lay person.

[13] Once the review panel has been established, section 97 of the Act requires the reviewing member to provide it with the documents in their possession relating to the complaint. The reviewing member may also provide their observations about the complaint and their recommendations about how it should be resolved.

[14] A review panel is established under subsection 98(1) of the Act. This panel is required to give the judge who is the subject of the complaint, as well as their chief justice, an opportunity to provide written submissions. The review panel shall make its decision only on the basis of the substance of the complaint, the information provided to it by the reviewing member, the written submissions provided by the judge in question and the chief justice and any other document that it considers relevant (section 100 of the Act).

[15] In examining a complaint, a review panel takes into account the Ethical Principles for Judges developed by the Council. Each ethical principle is structured around a statement that expresses a fundamental value or theme of judicial ethics. The principles set out the elements that follow from the statement and describe ideal conduct for a judge, but they are not a code of conduct. The principles are followed by commentaries that serve to explain them and put them into context. For the purposes of this case, the review panel considered the following principles and comments:

V. Judges are impartial and appear to be impartial in the performance of their judicial duties.

V.B. Judges avoid conduct which could reasonably cause others to question their impartiality.

5.A.5 Judges should avoid using words or conduct, in and out of court, that might give rise to a reasonable perception of bias. The expectations of litigants are high. Disappointed litigants will sometimes perceive bias when neither actual bias nor a reasonable apprehension of bias exists. A judge's remarks or tone may diminish the judge's perceived impartiality. An unjustified reprimand of counsel, an improper remark about a litigant or a witness or a statement evidencing prejudgment or intemperate and impatient behaviour may undermine the appearance of impartiality. Casual conversations or familiarity with counsel or participants in the proceedings may be perceived by others as a form of exclusion. Therefore, judges should ensure that their comments or conduct do not provide reasonable grounds for a perception of bias.

II.C. Judges treat everyone with civility and respect in the performance of their judicial duties.

2.C.1 A hallmark of judicial proceedings is that all participants, including judges, will conduct themselves in a manner that preserves the honour and dignity of both the individual proceedings and the administration of justice more generally. Judges should endeavor to treat all participants in the judicial process with civility and respect.

[16] Finally, under sections 101 and 102 of the Act, the review panel may either refer the complaint to the Council, dismiss it or take certain measures set out in the Act. Sections 101 and 102 read as follows:

> 101 The review panel shall refer the complaint to the Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel if it determines that the judge's removal from office could be justified.
>
> 102 If the review panel does not refer the complaint to the Council under section 101, it may dismiss the complaint or take one or more of the following actions if it considers it appropriate to do so in the circumstances:
>
> a) issue a private or public expression of concern;
> b) issue a private or public warning;
> c) issue a private or public reprimand;
> d) order the judge to apologize, either privately or publicly, by whatever means the panel considers appropriate in the circumstances;
> e) order the judge to take specific measures, including attending counselling or a continuing education;
> f) take any action that the panel considers to be equivalent to any of the actions referred to in paragraphs (a) to (e);
> g) with the consent of the judge, take any other action that the panel considers appropriate in the circumstances.

Decisions of the screening officer and reviewing member concerning Justice St-Pierre [17] On October 29, 2024, the screening officer appointed to examine the complaint referred it to the Council for the appointment of a reviewing member, in accordance with section 91 of the Act. The screening officer concluded that the complaint could not be dismissed.

[18] As required by the Act and the Review Procedures (2023) in effect at the time, the reviewing member asked Justice St-Pierre and the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Québec, the Honourable Marie-Anne Paquette, to provide written comments.

[19] Chief Justice Paquette responded by e-mail dated January 7, 2025, in which she noted that Justice St-Pierre had acknowledged that his comments were inappropriate in the circumstances. In addition, she noted that Justice St-Pierre had demonstrated a genuine and concrete commitment to doing whatever was necessary to ensure that such an incident did not reoccur, hence his commitment to attend a bias training seminar in the near future.

[20] Justice St-Pierre provided a letter dated January 7, 2025, in which he acknowledged that he had failed in his duty of reserve and that he was sorry for this. He asked the Council to convey his apologies to the complainant. He wrote that his reflections following the communication of the complaint had given him a new awareness of the impact and reception of a magistrate's comments on the bench. He assured the Council that he would retain the conclusions and lessons in the performance of his duties. In addition, he wrote that he had registered for a seminar on cognitive bias and prejudice organized by the Canadian Institute for the Administration of Justice on February 27, 2025, which could help him to be more circumspect.

[21] Although the reviewing member agreed with Justice St-Pierre that his conduct fell short of the high standards set out in the Ethical Principles for Judges, these standards articulate an ideal, and failure to meet them does not, in all cases, constitute misconduct. In a decision dated January 20, 2025, the reviewing member concluded that he would dismiss this complaint if it were within his power to do so, or, if the complaint were accepted, he would suggest that a measure under section 102 of the Act be adopted.

Procedure and decision of the review panel

[22] As required by the Act and the Review Procedures (2023), the review panel received all the documents relating to the complaint in the reviewing member's possession. We also invited Chief Justice Paquette and Justice St-Pierre to share their observations with us.

[23] In his letter, Justice St-Pierre referred to the observations made to the attention of the reviewing member in his letter of January 7, 2025. This letter reflects his perception of events. Furthermore, in his letter of March 31, 2025, Justice St-Pierre noted that he had nothing new to add other than that he had read the decision of the reviewing member and had taken due note of its contents. Justice St-Pierre also noted that on February 27, 2025, he took the training referred to in his response of January 7, 2025, namely the seminar on cognitive bias and prejudice, and that this training was useful in pursuing and deepening his reflection on people's reactions to his remarks in the courtroom.

[24] In her e-mail, the Chief Justice emphasized that she had nothing to add to what she had already stated in her e-mail of January 7, 2025.

[25] The review panel examined Justice St-Pierre's comments in light of the Ethical Principles for Judges. We agree with the reviewing member that the principles are not a code of conduct. They are recommendations intended (i) to describe the exemplary conduct that judges strive to observe; (ii) to help judges resolve the thorny ethical and professional issues they face; and (iii) to help members of the public better understand the judicial function.

[26] The Ethical Principles for Judges represent an ideal, offering guidance rather than prescribing a code of conduct. Every judge should endeavour to treat those who appear before them with civility and respect.

[27] There is no doubt that Justice St-Pierre's comments did not meet the high ethical standards set out in the Ethical Principles for Judges. The crucial question, however, is whether the judge's behaviour rises to the level of misconduct found in section 80 of the Judges Act. Taken in isolation, it may. Justice St-Pierre himself seems to recognize this possibility. Nevertheless, any assessment of the impugned conduct must, in our view, take into account the entire context, including the judge's response to the complaint. In this case, Justice St-Pierre has acknowledged that his comments fell short of the ethical standards expected of judges and offered his sincere apologies.

[28] The review panel first considered whether the matter should be referred to the Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel or, alternatively, dismissed.

[29] We concluded there was no basis to recommend the appointment of a full hearing panel, which should only happen if we were to determine that removal from office could be justified. The criteria for recommending removal are onerous. They are encompassed in what is referred to as the Marshall test which can be found in many judicial conduct decisions, including Moreau-Bérubé v. New Brunswick (Judicial Council), 2002 SCC 11. It requires:

> Conduct which is so manifestly and profoundly destructive of the concept of the impartiality, integrity and independence of the judicial role, that public confidence would be sufficiently undermined to render the judge incapable of executing the judicial office.

[30] The review panel agreed there was no possible basis on which Justice St-Pierre's removal from office could be justified in these circumstances.

[31] We also concluded that the complaint should not be dismissed. The factors which led us to this decision include:

- Justice St-Pierre's words are contrary to the standards set out in the Ethical Principles for Judges, particularly those concerning courtesy and respect;
- Justice St-Pierre acknowledged that he had breached his duty of reserve;
- Justice St-Pierre sincerely apologized for having breached his duty of reserve;
- He took action to ensure that this discrepancy would not reoccur when he attended a seminar on bias;
- Nevertheless, we reiterate the importance of courtesy and respect. A judge must also preserve honour and dignity in each matter and in the administration of justice in general.

[32] The review panel believes that action under section 102 of the Act is necessary for the following reasons:

- the need for deterrence;
- the amelioration of any harm to the administration of justice or the reputation of the judiciary.

[33] Section 102 sets out the various measures that the panel can take. Some may be public, others private. To choose the appropriate sanction, we must take into account the circumstances, including:

a) the seriousness of the conduct;

b) the need for deterrence;

c) the amelioration of any harm to the administration of justice or the reputation of the judiciary;

d) Justice St-Pierre's apology and subsequent training on bias;

e) Justice St-Pierre's reputation in the legal community.

[34] We have examined all the above elements and have concluded that two private actions under section 102 are appropriate.

[35] We conclude that the imposition of these measures adequately reflects the impact of Justice St-Pierre's remarks and is appropriate in this case, in light of the mitigating circumstances raised in Justice St-Pierre's favour.

Dated this 27th day of May, 2025.

Ethical Principles for Judges

Principes de déontologie judiciaire

CJC
CCM
Canadian Judicial Council
Conseil canadien de la magistrature

Foreword

As the Canadian Judicial Council marks its 50th anniversary of service to Canadians, it is timely that we have revised and modernized Ethical Principles for Judges. From their first publication in 1998, these principles have laid out the ethical frame of reference to which all judges aspire: judicial independence, integrity and respect, diligence and competence, equality and impartiality.

Canada is fortunate to be served by a highly competent and skilled judiciary. Judges can face ethical questions as we go about our personal and professional lives. While the 1998 document served us well, and indeed was the model on which other judicial systems around the world relied, we understand that ethical considerations evolve and need to keep pace with society's expectations.

When I was appointed Chief Justice of Canada, I was pleased to learn that the Canadian Judicial Council had embarked on a public consultation exercise to hear firsthand from Canadians and our valued partners, what they expect of our judges. From those extensive consultations, and the tireless work of the Council's Judicial Independence and Appointment Process Committee, co-chaired by Chief Justice Martel D. Popescul and Chief Justice Deborah K. Smith, a new and refreshed document emerged.

Préface

L'édition revue et actualisée des Principes de déontologie judiciaire arrive à point nommé, alors que le Conseil canadien de la magistrature célèbre 50 ans de service à la population canadienne. Depuis la parution de la première édition en 1998, ces principes constituent le cadre de référence déontologique auquel tous les juges aspirent : l'indépendance judiciaire, l'intégrité et le respect, la diligence et la compétence, l'égalité et l'impartialité.

Le Canada a la chance d'être servi par une magistrature hautement compétente et qualifiée. Les juges sont parfois confrontés à des questions déontologiques dans leur vie personnelle et professionnelle. Bien que l'édition de 1998 nous ait bien servi, et qu'elle ait été prise pour modèle par d'autres systèmes judiciaires du monde entier, nous comprenons que les considérations d'ordre déontologique évoluent et qu'elles doivent s'adapter aux attentes de la société.

Lorsque j'ai été nommé juge en chef du Canada, j'ai été heureux d'apprendre que le Conseil canadien de la magistrature avait amorcé un processus de consultation publique pour entendre directement ce que la population canadienne et nos partenaires estimés attendent de nos juges. À la suite de ces vastes consultations et du travail inlassable du Comité sur l'indépendance judiciaire et le processus de nomination du Conseil, coprésidé par le juge en chef Martel D. Popescul et la juge en chef Deborah K. Smith, un nouveau document actualisé a pris forme. Je sais que le comité a examiné attentivement tous les commentaires qu'il a reçus, et je remercie personnellement toutes les personnes qui ont fait connaître leurs points de vue.

I know that the Committee carefully considered every comment received and I personally extend my thanks to every person who provided his or her views.

The revised Ethical Principles build on the original publication, and explore new and emerging issues relevant to our modern times: case management and settlement conferences, social media, interacting with self-represented litigants, professional development and the post-judicial role. While these principles are intended to assist judges with the ethical and professional questions they may confront, they are also written to provide the public with a better understanding of the judicial role.

I am proud of this document and proud of the dedication of those who developed it. It is my sincere hope that Ethical Principles will be consulted regularly by judges for years to come.

Sincerely,

The Right Honourable
Richard Wagner, P.C.

Chief Justice of Canada and Chairperson of the Canadian Judicial Council

Cette version révisée des Principes de déontologie judiciaire s'appuie sur l'édition originale et traite de questions nouvelles et naissantes qui ont rapport à nos temps modernes : la gestion des instances et les conférences de règlement, les médias sociaux, l'interaction avec les parties non représentées par un avocat, le perfectionnement professionnel, et le rôle des juges après leur départ de la magistrature. Ces principes visent à aider les juges à trouver réponse aux questions déontologiques et professionnelles qui peuvent se poser à la magistrature, mais ils sont aussi rédigés pour permettre au public de mieux comprendre le rôle des juges.

Je suis fier de ce document et fier du dévouement des personnes qui y ont travaillé. J'espère sincèrement que les juges consulteront régulièrement les Principes de déontologie judiciaire dans les années à venir.

Je vous offre mes meilleures salutations.

Le très honorable
Richard Wagner, c.p.

Juge en chef du Canada et Président du Conseil canadien de la magistrature

Introduction

Introduction

Purpose

1. Ethical Principles for Judges [Ethical Principles] provides ethical guidance for federally appointed judges. In doing so, it expresses a vision of what it means to be a judge. Taken together, the principles of independence, integrity and respect, diligence and competence, equality and impartiality define the judicial role. Ethical Principles was drafted with confidence that it would be read by judges and the public as an expression of the judiciary's highest ethical aspirations in the service of justice and the rule of law.

2. An independent and impartial judiciary is the right of all and constitutes a fundamental pillar of democratic governance, the rule of law and justice in Canada. Everyone needs and deserves impartial, competent, and respectful judges. All members of the judiciary commit to perform their role in such a manner so as to maintain the confidence of the public. The guidance that follows describes the high ethical standards that all judges strive to maintain in their professional and personal lives. While the overarching principles that guide the judiciary are largely immutable, evolving expectations of the public, societal developments and new understandings of issues relevant to the judiciary will serve to constantly inform the interpretation of Ethical Principles in the future.

Objet

1. Les Principes de déontologie judiciaire [Principes de déontologie] offrent des conseils d'ordre déontologique aux juges de nomination fédérale. Ce faisant, ils expriment une vision de ce que cela représente que d'être un juge. Le rôle des juges est défini par les principes d'indépendance, d'intégrité et de respect, de diligence et de compétence, d'égalité et d'impartialité. Les Principes de déontologie se veulent l'expression des idéaux d'ordre déontologique les plus élevés auxquels aspirent les juges, au service de la justice et de la primauté du droit; c'est l'intention que devraient y lire les juges et le public.

2. Piliers fondamentaux de la gouvernance démocratique, de la primauté du droit et de la justice, l'indépendance et l'impartialité de la magistrature sont des droits reconnus à chacun. Toute personne doit et mérite d'être entendue par des juges impartiaux, compétents et respectueux. Tous les membres de la magistrature s'engagent à exercer leur charge de manière à préserver la confiance du public. Les recommandations qui suivent exposent les normes d'ordre déontologique élevées que les juges s'efforcent d'observer dans leurs fonctions professionnelles et dans leur vie personnelle. Si les grands principes qui guident les juges demeurent largement immuables, en revanche les attentes du public, la société elle-même et notre compréhension des questions qui touchent la fonction judiciaire évoluent, et cette évolution éclairera de façon constante l'interprétation des Principes de déontologie à l'avenir.

3. A judge must be and be seen to be free to decide honestly and impartially on the basis of the law and the evidence, without external pressure or influence and without fear of interference from anyone. Nothing in Ethical Principles can or is intended to limit or restrict this judicial independence in any manner. Judges have the duty to uphold and defend judicial independence, not as a privilege of judicial office but as the constitutionally guaranteed right of everyone to have their disputes heard and decided in a fair way by impartial and independent judges.

4. The ethical principles articulated in this document are aspirational. They are not intended to be a code of conduct that sets minimum standards. They are advisory in nature and are designed to (i) describe exemplary behaviour which all judges strive to maintain; (ii) assist judges with the difficult ethical and professional issues that confront them; and (iii) help members of the public better understand the judicial role. The guidance provided in Ethical Principles does not preclude reasonable disagreements about their application in particular cases or imply that any departure from them necessarily warrants disapproval. The ethical principles are intended to be applied in light of all of the relevant circumstances and consistently with the requirements of judicial independence and the law. They should not be viewed as an exhaustive expression of the ethical considerations that judges may face in their professional or personal lives.

3. Les juges doivent être libres et paraître libres de juger avec intégrité et impartialité sur le seul fondement du droit et de la preuve présentée, sans pressions ni influences extérieures et sans crainte d'ingérence de la part de qui que ce soit. Les Principes de déontologie ne sauraient limiter ou restreindre en aucune façon cette indépendance de la magistrature et ils ne visent pas à le faire. Les juges sont tenus de soutenir et de défendre l'indépendance de la magistrature, non parce qu'elle constitue un privilège rattaché à leur charge, mais parce que la Constitution garantit à quiconque le droit de voir son litige entendu et tranché de façon équitable par des juges impartiaux et indépendants.

4. Les principes d'ordre déontologique exposés dans ce document articulent un idéal à atteindre. Ils ne constituent pas un code de conduite imposant des normes minimales à suivre. Ce sont des recommandations ayant pour objectif (i) de décrire la conduite exemplaire que les juges s'efforcent d'observer; (ii) d'aider les juges à résoudre les épineuses questions d'ordre déontologique et professionnel auxquelles ils sont confrontés; et (iii) d'aider les membres du public à mieux comprendre la fonction judiciaire. Il n'est pas exclu que les recommandations énoncées dans les Principes de déontologie puissent faire l'objet d'interprétations divergentes raisonnables quant à leur application dans un cas donné; de plus, le fait d'énoncer ces recommandations n'implique pas qu'il y aurait nécessairement matière à réprobation si on s'en écartait. Les principes de déontologie doivent être appliqués au regard de toutes les circonstances pertinentes ainsi qu'en conformité avec le principe de l'indépendance de la magistrature et avec le droit. On ne saurait y voir l'énumération complète des questions éthiques auxquelles les juges peuvent faire face dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions ou dans leur vie personnelle.

Context

5. The Canadian Judicial Council [the CJC] has been attentive to judicial ethics for decades. It published Commentaries on Judicial Conduct in 1991. This was followed by Ethical Principles for Judges [Ethical Principles 1998]. It provided ethical guidance to judges aligned with a set of central principles and better informed the public about the high ideals which judges embrace and toward which they strive. While drawing heavily on existing resources, Ethical Principles 1998 was the most comprehensive treatment of the subject at that time in Canada. Further, it was uniquely the work of Canadian judges. An extensive process of consultation within the judiciary and beyond ensured that Ethical Principles 1998 was the subject of painstaking examination and vigorous debate. The intention was that Canadian judges would accept Ethical Principles 1998 as reflective of their high ethical aspirations and would find it worthy of respect and deserving of careful consideration when facing ethical issues

Contexte

5. Le Conseil canadien de la magistrature [le Conseil] s'intéresse aux questions de déontologie judiciaire depuis des décennies. En 1991, il a publié des Commentaires sur la conduite des juges. Puis, a suivi les Principes de déontologie judiciaire [Principes de déontologie de 1998] qui a proposé un ensemble de principes fondamentaux pour guider les juges sur des questions d'ordre déontologique et mieux renseigner le public sur les normes élevées auxquelles les juges adhèrent et qu'ils s'efforcent d'observer. Les Principes de déontologie de 1998, qui puisaient abondamment aux sources existantes, représentaient néanmoins l'exposé le plus complet en cette matière jamais publié au Canada. De plus, ils étaient entièrement le fruit du travail de juges canadiens. De vastes consultations menées auprès de la magistrature et du public avaient permis de soumettre les Principes de déontologie de 1998 à un examen minutieux et à un débat vigoureux. Cette démarche avait pour but d'assurer que les juges du Canada verraient dans les Principes de déontologie de 1998 le reflet de leurs aspirations élevées en matière de déontologie, qu'ils les considéreraient comme un document digne de respect et leur accorderaient une attention soutenue lorsqu'ils seraient confrontés à des questions d'ordre déontologique.

6. Over the past twenty years Ethical Principles 1998 has provided valuable ethical guidance to federally appointed judges in a broad range of complex circumstances. It has become a crucial resource in the training provided to judges upon appointment, and forms part of ongoing discussions in professional development settings throughout a judge's career. In addition, the publication of Ethical Principles 1998 coincided with the establishment of an Advisory Committee on Judicial Ethics [Advisory Committee] to which specific ethical questions have been submitted by judges. The Advisory Committee continues to respond to these queries with advisory opinions that contribute to the ongoing review and elaboration of the subjects dealt with in Ethical Principles 1998. These opinions may also identify new issues that this version of Ethical Principles does not directly address. The Advisory Committee continues to ensure that help is readily available to judges looking for guidance.

6. Depuis deux décennies, les Principes de déontologie de 1998 ont fourni aux juges de nomination fédérale des conseils précieux en matière déontologique dans un éventail de situations complexes. Les Principes de déontologie sont au cœur de la formation offerte aux juges à la suite de leur nomination, et ils sont examinés et discutés dans les programmes de perfectionnement professionnel auxquels participent les juges tout au long de leur carrière. Par ailleurs, la publication des Principes de déontologie de 1998 a coïncidé avec la création d'un comité consultatif sur la déontologie judiciaire [le Comité consultatif] auquel les juges soumettent depuis des questions précises touchant la déontologie. Les avis que le Comité consultatif fournit en réponse à ces demandes contribuent à l'examen et à l'approfondissement continus des questions traitées dans les Principes de déontologie de 1998. Ils peuvent également contribuer à mettre en lumière des problèmes qui ne sont pas abordés directement dans la présente version des Principes de déontologie. Le Comité consultatif continue de veiller à ce que les juges qui recherchent des conseils puissent aisément recevoir de l'aide.

7. A document of this nature can never be viewed as the "final word" on such an important and complex subject. After more than twenty years from its initial publication, Ethical Principles 1998 needed modernization to address significant societal changes, changes in the role of the judiciary, and the social context in which judges serve. In 2016, the revision of Ethical Principles 1998 was commenced by the Judicial Independence and Appointment Process Committee of the CJC [Independence Committee], with input from Chief Justices and puisne judges from across Canada. As was done in 1998, broad consultations were conducted within the judiciary and beyond to ensure that Ethical Principles is responsive to the needs of judges and takes community expectations into account. The consultations included an on-line survey of issues relevant to judicial ethics and a series of meetings and dialogue with organizations representing the judiciary and other interested parties. Once a draft document was prepared it was made public and judges, judges' organizations, other professional organizations and members of the public were invited to provide comments and feedback. Throughout the project, the Independence Committee reviewed every submission and every proposed amendment, and incorporated into the final version of Ethical Principles many of the proposals and suggestions submitted to it.

7. De par sa nature, un document comme celui-ci ne saurait prétendre apporter une réponse définitive sur un sujet aussi important et complexe. Plus de vingt ans après leur publication, les Principes de déontologie de 1998 étaient mûrs pour une mise à jour qui permette de traiter d'enjeux importants soulevés par l'évolution de la société, de la fonction judiciaire et du contexte social dans lequel les juges s'acquittent de leur charge. À partir de 2016, le Comité sur l'indépendance judiciaire et le processus de nomination du Conseil [Comité sur l'indépendance] s'est attelé à la tâche de réviser les Principes de déontologie de 1998, avec l'apport des juges en chef et des juges puînés de partout au Canada. Comme ce fut le cas en 1998, de vastes consultations ont été menées au sein de la magistrature et auprès du public afin que les Principes de déontologie répondent aux besoins des juges et tiennent compte des attentes du public. Ces consultations ont compris, entre autres, un sondage en ligne sur des questions de déontologie judiciaire, de même qu'une série de rencontres et d'échanges avec des organisations représentant la magistrature et d'autres parties intéressées. L'ébauche rédigée à la suite de ces consultations a été rendue publique, et les juges, les associations qui les représentent, des organismes professionnels et les membres du public ont été invités à présenter des commentaires. Tout au long du projet, le Comité sur l'indépendance s'est penché sur chacun des commentaires reçus et chacune des modifications proposées et a intégré dans la version définitive des Principes de déontologie bon nombre des propositions et suggestions qui lui avaient été soumises.

8. Today, judges' work includes case management, settlement conferences, judicial mediation, and frequent interaction with self-represented litigants. These responsibilities invite further consideration with respect to ethical guidance. In the same manner, the digital age, the phenomenon of social media, the importance of professional development for judges and the transition to post-judicial roles all raise ethical issues that were not fully considered twenty years ago. Judges are expected to be alert to the history, experience and circumstances of Canada's Indigenous peoples, and to the diversity of cultures and communities that make up this country. In this spirit, the judiciary is now more actively involved with the wider public, both to enhance public confidence and to expand its own knowledge of the diversity of human experiences in Canada today.

9. The format of Ethical Principles 1998 is preserved. Each chapter is organized hierarchically, beginning with a Statement, followed by a set of Principles and then a series of Commentaries aligned with each Principle. At the highest level of abstraction, each Statement expresses a fundamental value or theme of judicial ethics. The Principles identify components of each Statement and articulate behaviours that would constitute the highest aspirations of an ethical judge with respect to that Principle. With occasional exceptions, the Statements and Principles are stated in 'declarative' language – essentially statements of what an ethical judge does or how an ethical judge acts, consistent with the goal of describing the attributes of an ethical judge. The Commentaries associated with each Principle provide explanations, context and further elucidation of the Principles, almost always in aspirational language, often using concrete examples.

8. De nos jours, les responsabilités des juges s'étendent à la gestion des instances ainsi qu'aux conférences de règlement et aux séances de médiation judiciaires. De plus, il arrive fréquemment que les juges doivent interagir avec des parties non représentées. Ces responsabilités appellent une nouvelle réflexion sur le soutien à apporter en matière déontologique. Parallèlement, d'autres phénomènes soulèvent des enjeux déontologiques qui n'avaient pas été pleinement considérés il y a vingt ans : l'arrivée de l'ère numérique, l'émergence des médias sociaux, l'importance du perfectionnement professionnel des juges et le passage de certains de ceux-ci à une autre carrière après leur départ de la magistrature. On attend des juges qu'ils soient sensibles et au fait de l'histoire, du vécu et de la réalité des peuples autochtones au Canada, ainsi que de la diversité des cultures et des communautés qui composent le pays. C'est dans cet esprit que la magistrature joue un rôle plus actif qu'auparavant auprès du public, aussi bien pour soutenir la confiance que le public accorde à la magistrature que pour approfondir sa connaissance de la diversité des expériences humaines au Canada.

9. L'organisation générale des matières établie dans les Principes de déontologie de 1998 a été préservée. Structuré de façon hiérarchique, chaque chapitre commence par un Énoncé, suivi par des Principes auxquels succèdent une série de Commentaires liés à chacun des Principes. L'Énoncé exprime une valeur ou un thème fondamental de la déontologie judiciaire, à un niveau élevé d'abstraction. Les Principes exposent les éléments qui découlent de l'Énoncé et décrivent la conduite idéale vers laquelle tendrait le juge éthique au regard de ceux-ci. En règle générale, les Énoncés et les Principes sont rédigés de manière déclarative, énonçant essentiellement ce que fait un juge éthique ou comment il agit, l'objectif étant de décrire la conduite exemplaire d'un juge éthique. Quant aux Commentaires, ils servent à expliquer les Principes et à les mettre en contexte, presque toujours sous la forme de recommandations, et présentent souvent des exemples concrets.

10. When an ethical issue arises for a judge more than one principle may be relevant. The approach taken in Ethical Principles is to discuss the aspects of each Principle discretely, recognizing that multiple Principles and chapters of Ethical Principles may need to be considered in obtaining comprehensive guidance in the resolution of the ethical issue. The comprehensive Index, as well as links within electronic versions of Ethical Principles, will enable the reader to identify and access associated Principles and Commentaries.

11. The language adopted in this edition of Ethical Principles provides greater consistency of meaning between the English and French versions. Ethical Principles was co-drafted in English and French and each version is equally authoritative. As well, the document is written in gender-neutral language. Whenever pronouns are used, they are intended to be inclusive of all genders.

12. This edition of Ethical Principles also addresses circumstances associated with judges contemplating or undertaking post-judicial legal careers. In particular, it discusses unique ethical issues that may arise in the transition to post-judicial legal careers and those that continue after judges leave office. This guidance is provided to present and former judges for their benefit and with a view to maintaining public confidence in the judiciary.

10. Lorsqu'un juge fait face à une question d'ordre déontologique, il se peut que plus d'un principe entre en jeu. L'approche retenue dans les Principes de déontologie consiste à aborder de façon distincte les différents aspects de chaque principe; il est donc possible qu'il faille considérer plusieurs principes et consulter plus d'un chapitre des Principes de déontologie pour obtenir des conseils sur l'ensemble des éléments permettant de résoudre une question. L'index détaillé et les hyperliens insérés dans les versions électroniques des Principes de déontologie permettront au lecteur de repérer les principes pertinents et les commentaires qui s'y rapportent, et d'y accéder facilement.

12. La présente édition des Principes de déontologie traite également de la situation des juges qui envisagent ou amorcent une nouvelle carrière après leur départ de la magistrature. Ainsi, elle examine certaines des questions particulières qui sont susceptibles de se poser sur le plan déontologique à l'occasion du passage à une nouvelle carrière, ainsi que les principes qui continuent de s'appliquer après le départ de la magistrature. Ces conseils s'adressent aussi bien aux juges en poste qu'aux anciens juges et visent à préserver la confiance du public envers la magistrature.

I. Judicial Independence

Statement

An independent judiciary is indispensable to impartial justice under law. Judges uphold and exemplify judicial independence in both its individual and institutional aspects.

Principles

A. Judges exercise their judicial functions independently and free of extraneous influence.

B. Judges firmly reject improper attempts to influence their decisions in any matter before the court.

C. Judges exhibit and promote high standards of judicial conduct so as to reinforce public confidence in the independence of the judiciary.

D. Judges encourage and uphold arrangements and safeguards to maintain and enhance the institutional and administrative independence of the judiciary.

I. Indépendance de la magistrature

Énoncé

L'indépendance de la magistrature est indispensable à l'exercice d'une justice impartiale sous un régime de droit. Les juges soutiennent l'indépendance de la magistrature et l'incarnent tant dans ses éléments individuels qu'institutionnels.

Principes

A. Les juges exercent leurs fonctions judiciaires de façon indépendante, à l'abri de toute influence extérieure.

B. Dans les affaires dont la cour est saisie, les juges repoussent fermement toute tentative inappropriée visant à influencer leur décision.

C. Les juges observent des normes élevées de conduite judiciaire et en favorisent l'application, afin de renforcer la confiance du public envers l'indépendance de la magistrature.

D. Les juges encouragent et soutiennent les mesures et les garanties qui visent à préserver et à accroître l'indépendance de la magistrature, tant sur le plan institutionnel qu'administratif.

Commentary

General

1.A.1 Judicial independence refers to the liberty and responsibility of judges to hear and decide cases that come before them in accordance with their conscience, without interference from others. The guarantee of judicial independence aims to make judges impervious to improper external intervention in the exercise of their functions. Judges are, and must reasonably be perceived to be, independent, both individually and institutionally. Judicial independence is not the private right of judges. It is the foundation of judicial impartiality and a constitutional right of all. The right to be tried by an independent and impartial tribunal is an integral principle of fundamental justice protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

1.A.2 Judges are called upon to resolve a wide array of disputes and generally to determine legal rights and obligations. Public confidence in the judiciary rests on the fact that their decisions are made according to law.

1.A.3 Judicial independence refers to a state of mind or attitude in the actual exercise of judicial functions. It also connotes a status or relationship with others, including the executive branch of government and other judges. Judicial independence is the foundation for impartial decision-making. The first qualification of a judge is the ability to make independent and impartial decisions. Judges apply the law without fear or favour and without regard to whether the decision is popular. This is a cornerstone of the rule of law, and it is secured through respect for the principle of judicial independence.

Commentaires

Général

1.A.1 L'indépendance judiciaire s'entend de la liberté et de la responsabilité du juge d'instruire et de trancher une affaire donnée selon sa conscience, sans l'intervention d'autres personnes. La garantie d'indépendance judiciaire vise à rendre les juges imperméables aux interventions extérieures indues dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions. Les juges sont indépendants et doivent être raisonnablement perçus comme tels, tant sur le plan individuel que sur le plan institutionnel. L'indépendance judiciaire n'est pas un droit qui appartient en propre à chaque juge. Elle constitue le fondement de l'impartialité judiciaire et est un droit constitutionnel qui appartient à chacun. Le droit d'être jugé par un tribunal indépendant et impartial est un principe essentiel de justice fondamentale garanti par la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés de la personne.

1.A.2 Il incombe aux juges de trancher une large gamme de litiges et, de manière générale, de déterminer les droits et obligations juridiques. La confiance du public envers la magistrature s'appuie sur le fait que les décisions des juges sont rendues en fonction du droit.

1.A.3 L'indépendance judiciaire désigne un état d'esprit ou une attitude dans l'exercice concret des fonctions judiciaires. Elle connote aussi un statut ou une relation à l'égard d'autrui, y compris le pouvoir exécutif et les autres juges. L'indépendance judiciaire est le fondement permettant la prise de décisions impartiales. La qualité première du juge réside dans sa capacité de rendre des décisions de manière indépendante et impartiale. Les juges appliquent la loi, sans crainte de représailles ni favoritisme, et indépendamment de l'accueil, favorable ou non, de leur décision. C'est là une des pierres angulaires de la primauté du droit, garantie par le respect du principe d'indépendance de la magistrature.

1.A.4 Judicial independence is fundamental to ensuring that decisions are made without external influence and to maintaining individual and public confidence in the administration of justice. Preserving the constituent elements of judicial independence is critical to the public's perception of the impartiality of judges. In that sense, judicial independence is an important means to a fundamental end. Judicial independence ensures that judges are impartial in fact, and also that they are perceived to be so.

1.A.5 Judges protect judicial independence not for their own benefit but for the benefits of all Canadians. Solely self-interested claims for judicial independence risk undermining public confidence in the judiciary.

1.A.6 Informing the public with respect to the role of the judiciary and judicial independence is an important judicial function. It is in the public interest for judges to take advantage of appropriate opportunities to enhance the public's understanding of the fundamental importance of judicial independence.

Avoiding and Rejecting Improper Influence

1.B.1 Judges should avoid all communications with anyone external to a case that might raise reasonable concerns about judicial independence. Judges must firmly reject improper attempts to influence their decisions. Communications intended to influence a specific judicial decision can only be received within the judicial process.

1.A.4 L'indépendance de la magistrature est fondamentale afin d'assurer que les décisions sont rendues sans influence extérieure et de soutenir la confiance individuelle et collective dans l'administration de la justice. Le maintien des conditions de l'indépendance de la magistrature est essentiel à la perception qu'a le public de l'impartialité des juges. En ce sens, l'indépendance de la magistrature constitue un moyen crucial d'atteindre cet objectif fondamental. L'indépendance de la magistrature garantit l'impartialité objective des juges et fait en sorte qu'ils soient perçus comme des personnes impartiales.

1.A.5 Les jugent protègent l'indépendance de la magistrature dans l'intérêt de tous, et non par intérêt personnel. Revendiquer la protection de l'indépendance de la magistrature par pur intérêt personnel risquerait de miner la confiance du public à l'endroit des juges.

1.A.6 L'une des fonctions importantes des juges consiste à renseigner le public sur le rôle de la magistrature et sur son indépendance. Il est dans l'intérêt public que les juges profitent d'occasions appropriées pour aider le public à mieux comprendre l'importance fondamentale de l'indépendance de la magistrature.

Éviter et repousser les tentatives d'influence indue

1.B.1 Les juges devraient éviter toute communication – avec quiconque est étranger à l'affaire dont ils sont saisis – qui pourrait soulever des craintes raisonnables en ce qui concerne l'indépendance de la magistrature. Les juges doivent fermement repousser toute tentative inappropriée d'influencer leurs décisions. Les communications ayant pour objet d'influencer une décision dans une affaire donnée doivent s'inscrire dans le cadre du processus judiciaire.

1.B.2 Attempts to influence judges may come from many sources, including social media. Judges should be cautious in their communications on social media relating to matters that could come before the court. Also, their social media activities should be undertaken in ways that avoid compromising public confidence in the judiciary.

Public Confidence

1.C.1 Judicial independence and judicial ethics are interrelated. Judges should exemplify and promote high standards of judicial conduct as one element of assuring the independence of the judiciary. In turn, the independence and integrity of the judiciary preserves public confidence in the rule of law and acceptance of court decisions. Unethical conduct by judges erodes that confidence. Thus, judges share a collective responsibility to promote and observe high standards of conduct.

Institutional and Administrative Independence

1.D.1 Judicial independence is secured by institutional and operational structures that protect judges and courts from external influence so that judicial decisions are made according to law in a fair process. For example, judges have security of tenure and their remuneration is set through an independent process so that neither fear of sanction nor hope of reward stands in the way of rendering justice. For the same reasons, judges also have immunity from liability in relation to their decisions.

Confiance du public

1.C.1 L'indépendance judiciaire et le respect des principes déontologiques sont interdépendants. Les juges devraient observer des normes de conduite élevées contribuant à assurer l'indépendance de la magistrature et en favoriser l'application. En retour, l'indépendance et l'intégrité des juges préservent la confiance du public dans la primauté du droit et l'acceptation par celui-ci des décisions des tribunaux. Une conduite contraire à l'éthique de la part d'un juge mine cette confiance. C'est pourquoi les juges ont la responsabilité collective de favoriser et d'observer des normes de conduite élevées.

Indépendance institutionnelle et administrative

1.D.1 L'indépendance de la magistrature est garantie par des structures institutionnelles et opérationnelles qui protègent les juges et les tribunaux contre toute influence extérieure afin qu'ils puissent rendre leurs décisions judiciaires conformément au droit, dans le cadre d'un processus équitable. Ainsi, afin d'assurer que ni la crainte d'une sanction ni l'espoir d'un gain ne puissent nuire à l'application juste du droit, les juges sont inamovibles et leur rémunération est déterminée dans le cadre d'un processus indépendant. Pour les mêmes raisons, les juges jouissent d'une immunité contre les poursuites à l'égard des décisions qu'ils rendent.

1.D.2 In keeping with the principle of judicial independence, professional development for judges is organized, designed and delivered under the authority of the judiciary.

1.D.3 At an institutional level, courts require sufficient autonomy to guarantee that the administration of justice is free from any political or other improper influence.

1.D.4 The judiciary should remain vigilant with respect to any initiative that may have the effect of undermining its institutional or administrative independence. That said, not every proposed change in the administrative arrangements affecting the judiciary constitutes a threat to judicial independence.

1.D.2 Afin de préserver le principe de l'indépendance de la magistrature, les programmes de perfectionnement professionnel destinés aux juges sont organisés, élaborés et prodigués sous l'égide de la magistrature.

1.D.3 Au niveau institutionnel, les tribunaux ont besoin d'une autonomie suffisante pour garantir que l'administration de la justice est libre de toute influence indue, notamment politique.

1.D.4 La magistrature devrait rester à l'affût de toute tentative susceptible de miner son indépendance institutionnelle ou administrative. Cela dit, ce ne sont pas tous les changements qu'on propose d'apporter aux dispositions administratives affectant les juges qui constituent une menace pour l'indépendance judiciaire.

II. Integrity and Respect

Statement

Judges conduct themselves respectfully and with integrity so as to sustain and enhance public confidence in the judiciary.

Principles

A. Judges comply with the law and conduct themselves both inside and outside the courtroom in a manner that is above reproach in the view of reasonable and informed persons.

B. Judges are discreet and do not use or disclose confidential information acquired in their judicial capacity for any purpose not related to judicial duties.

C. Judges treat everyone with civility and respect in the performance of their judicial duties.

D. Judges foster access to justice for all. Judges carry out their duties with appropriate consideration for all the parties, whether or not they are represented, and ensure that they are treated fairly and respectfully, so as to provide them with reasonable access to court processes.

E. Judges avoid all forms of harassment and abuse of authority or status.

F. Judges do not allow their status or the prestige of judicial office to be used to advance a private interest.

G. Judges encourage and support the observance of Ethical Principles by their judicial colleagues.

II. Intégrité et respect

Énoncé

Les juges font preuve, dans leur conduite, de respect et d'intégrité de façon à soutenir et à renforcer la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature.

Principes

A. Les juges se conforment au droit et adoptent, tant à l'intérieur qu'à l'extérieur de la salle d'audience, une conduite irréprochable aux yeux d'une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée.

B. Les juges font preuve de discrétion et n'utilisent ni ne divulguent les renseignements confidentiels acquis dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires, si ce n'est pour une fin liée à ces fonctions.

C. Les juges traitent toutes les personnes avec courtoisie et respect dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires.

D. Les juges favorisent l'accès à la justice. Dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions, les juges accordent la considération appropriée à toutes les parties, représentées et non représentées, et veillent à ce qu'elles soient traitées avec équité et respect, afin de leur assurer un accès raisonnable aux processus judiciaires.

E. Les juges évitent toute forme de harcèlement et d'abus d'autorité ou de statut.

F. Les juges ne permettent pas que leur statut ou le prestige de la fonction judiciaire soit utilisé au profit d'un intérêt privé.

G. Les juges encouragent et soutiennent le respect des Principes de déontologie par leurs collègues de la magistrature.

Commentary

General

2.A.1 Public confidence in the judiciary is essential to an effective judicial system and, ultimately, the rule of law. Within that system, judges hold positions of significant trust, confidence and responsibility. Conduct, in and out of court, that exhibits integrity ensures public respect for and confidence in the individual judge and, more significantly, contributes to public confidence in the judiciary and the judicial system as a whole. Judges should therefore act with a high degree of decorum, propriety and humanity.

2.A.2 Public expectations of the integrity of judges are understandably high. Behaviour considered acceptable if exhibited by some members of the public may not be appropriate for members of the judiciary. Judges should therefore be mindful of the ways in which their conduct would be perceived by reasonable and informed members of the community and whether that perception is likely to lessen respect for the judge or the judiciary as a whole. Behaviour that would diminish that respect in the minds of such persons should be avoided.

Behaviour in Private Life

2.A.3. Public expectations of judges are not limited to the actions of judges in their judicial capacities. Judges should exhibit respect for the law and act with integrity in their private lives and should avoid the appearance of impropriety.

Commentaires

Général

2.A.1 La confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature est essentielle au bon fonctionnement du système de justice et, en définitive, à la primauté du droit. Les juges occupent une position de grande confiance et de responsabilité au sein de ce système. Les juges qui adoptent, en salle d'audience ou ailleurs, une conduite empreinte d'intégrité s'assurent du respect et de la confiance du public et, surtout, contribuent à soutenir la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature et du système de justice tout entier. Les juges devraient en conséquence se conduire avec décorum, décence et humanité.

2.A.2 Les attentes du public à l'égard de l'intégrité des juges sont bien entendu élevées. Les comportements qu'on jugerait acceptables pour un membre du public pourraient ne pas convenir à un membre de la magistrature. Les juges devraient donc être conscients de la perception que des personnes raisonnables et bien renseignées pourraient avoir de leur conduite et de la possibilité que cette perception diminue le respect dont jouissent les juges individuellement et la magistrature dans son ensemble. Tout comportement qui porterait atteinte à ce respect dans l'esprit de ces personnes est à proscrire.

Le comportement dans la vie privée

2.A.3 Les attentes du public à l'endroit des juges ne se limitent pas aux actes que ces derniers posent dans l'exercice de leur charge. Les juges devraient faire montre de leur respect pour la loi, agir avec intégrité dans leur vie personnelle et éviter toute apparence d'inconduite.

2.A.4 After appointment, judges are not required to withdraw from the world. They may lead a normal life in the community, while retaining a sense of the dignity of judicial office and realizing that the public expects virtually irreproachable conduct from judges.

2.A.5 A judge's conduct, in and out of court, may be the subject of public scrutiny and comment. At the same time, judges have private lives and are entitled to enjoy, as much as possible, the rights and freedoms generally available to all. Nevertheless, judges accept some restrictions on their activities — even activities that would not elicit adverse notice if carried out by other members of the community. For example, judges should exercise caution in their use of social media. Judges should strive to strike a balance between the expectations of judicial office and their personal lives. In finding this balance, judges should be guided by these Ethical Principles.

2.A.4 Les juges ne sont pas tenus de se tenir à l'écart du monde après leur nomination. Ils peuvent participer à la vie de leur collectivité, tout en gardant à l'esprit la dignité rattachée à leur charge et le fait que le public s'attend à une conduite quasi irréprochable de la part des juges.

2.A.5 La conduite des juges, en salle d'audience ou ailleurs, peut être soumise à l'examen attentif et à la critique du public. Par ailleurs, les juges ont aussi une vie privée et jouissent, dans toute la mesure du possible, des mêmes droits et libertés que ceux qui sont conférés aux autres personnes de manière générale. Néanmoins, les juges acceptent certaines restrictions à l'égard de leurs activités — même celles qui ne susciteraient aucune critique si elles étaient le fait d'autres membres de la collectivité. Par exemple, les juges devraient utiliser les médias sociaux avec prudence. Ils devraient s'efforcer de maintenir l'équilibre entre les attentes associées à leur charge et la conduite de leur vie personnelle. Les Principes de déontologie peuvent les guider à cet égard.

Confidentiality and Discretion[1]

2.B.1 Judges are entrusted with preserving confidentiality. The performance of judicial duties necessarily entails that judges receive or come into possession of confidential information. While justice is, in principle, transparent, open and public, some of the facts, documents, records and circumstances of a dispute may be subject to confidentiality orders, including the identity of one or more parties. Judges should not use or reveal confidential information except where, in the performance of their judicial duties, such disclosure is necessary, or done in accordance with relevant rules on archiving and disclosure. When judges work as a group, their internal discussions remain confidential.

2.B.2 Judges should be discreet when discussing their work, including in contexts in which what they say may be inadvertently overheard by others.

2.B.3 Confidentiality and discretion extend past a judge's departure from judicial office.

Civility and Respect

2.C.1 A hallmark of judicial proceedings is that all participants, including judges, will conduct themselves in a manner that preserves the honour and dignity of both the individual proceedings and the administration of justice more generally. Judges should endeavor to treat all participants in the judicial process with civility and respect.

1 Canadian Judicial Council, Use of Personal Information in Judgments and Recommended Protocol (2005)

Confidentialité et discrétion[1]

2.B.1 Les juges sont les gardiens de la confidentialité. L'exercice des fonctions judiciaires a pour conséquence que les juges, inévitablement, reçoivent des renseignements de nature confidentielle ou entrent en possession de tels renseignements. Même si, en principe, la justice est publique, ouverte et transparente, certains faits, documents, dossiers ou circonstances entourant un litige, y compris l'identité d'une ou de plusieurs parties, peuvent être assujettis à des ordonnances de confidentialité. Les juges ne devraient jamais utiliser ou révéler des renseignements de nature confidentielle, sauf lorsque cela est nécessaire dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires, ou conformément aux règles applicables qui régissent l'archivage et la divulgation. Lorsqu'ils travaillent en groupe, leurs discussions demeurent confidentielles.

2.B.2 Les juges devraient faire preuve de discrétion lorsqu'ils discutent de leur travail, y compris dans des contextes où leurs propos peuvent être entendus par inadvertance.

2.B.3 La confidentialité et la discrétion demeurent importantes pour les juges même après leur départ de la magistrature.

Courtoisie et respect

2.C.1 L'une des caractéristiques du processus judiciaire est que toutes les personnes qui y participent, y compris les juges, se comportent de manière à préserver l'honneur et la dignité tant des instances individuelles que de l'administration de la justice en général. Les juges devraient s'efforcer de traiter chaque personne qui intervient dans le processus judiciaire avec courtoisie et respect.

1 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, L'usage de renseignements personnels dans les jugements et protocole recommandé (2005)

2.C.2 The commitment of judges to civility and respect is not limited to judicial proceedings. Judges should attempt, in all of their engagements with others, including their judicial colleagues, to act in accordance with these values. By showing dignified consideration for others, judges enhance public respect for and confidence in the judiciary as an institution.

2.C.3 The circumstances of some cases and the conduct of counsel and parties sometimes require judges to act with an appropriate measure of firmness and to emphasize decisiveness, promptness, the prevention of abuse of process or improper treatment of participants in the adjudicative process. Maintaining civility and respect requires judges to ensure a proper balance between upholding the right of parties to be heard and ensuring the efficiency of the process.

2.C.4 It is often necessary for judges in the adjudication process to make findings of credibility and to rule on the propriety of a person's conduct. That being said, in court proceedings or in their judgments, judges should not make inappropriate remarks about a person's conduct or motives. Furthermore, judges should not make comments about persons who are not before the court unless, in the judge's opinion, it is necessary for the proper disposition of the case.

2.C.5 Judges should be alert to the possibility that ill-considered, comical or facetious remarks, often made spontaneously and intended to be humorous, may give offence or diminish the dignity of the proceedings.

2.C.2 Cet engagement des juges envers la courtoisie et le respect ne se limite pas au processus judiciaire. Les juges devraient s'efforcer de respecter ces valeurs dans tous leurs rapports avec autrui, y compris les autres membres de la magistrature. Les juges contribuent au respect de la magistrature et à la confiance que le public lui accorde en tant qu'institution en se comportant de manière digne et respectueuse avec autrui.

2.C.3 Les aspects particuliers d'une affaire et la conduite des avocats et des parties peut parfois obliger les juges à utiliser une certaine fermeté et à privilégier l'efficacité dans la prise de décision, la célérité ainsi que la prévention des abus de procédure et des comportements répréhensibles envers les participants au processus judiciaire. Le maintien d'une attitude courtoise et respectueuse exige des juges qu'ils préservent un juste équilibre entre le droit des parties d'être entendues et l'efficacité du processus.

2.C.4 Il arrive souvent aux juges de devoir se prononcer sur la crédibilité ou la conduite de certaines personnes pour trancher un litige. Cela étant, les juges devraient s'abstenir, au cours du processus judiciaire ou dans leurs jugements, de formuler des commentaires inappropriés concernant la conduite d'une personne ou ses motivations. Les juges devraient aussi s'abstenir de formuler des commentaires concernant des personnes qui ne comparaissent pas devant le tribunal, à moins que cela ne soit nécessaire au règlement de l'affaire du point de vue du juge.

2.C.5 Les juges devraient être sensibles au fait que les commentaires inconsidérés, humoristiques ou facétieux, qui sont souvent formulés spontanément et se veulent drôles, peuvent être offensants et miner la dignité des procédures.

2.C.6 It is a delicate question whether and in what circumstances a judge should report, or cause to be reported, a lawyer's conduct to the lawyer's professional governing body. Taking such action may affect the ability of the judge to continue in the proceeding in which that lawyer is appearing, given that the judge's view of the lawyer's conduct may give rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias against the lawyer or the lawyer's client. On the other hand, a judge is in a special position to observe lawyers' conduct before the court. Judges should remain alert to the lawyer's legal and ethical duty of resolute advocacy on behalf of a client and commitment to the client's cause. A judge should take, or cause to be taken, appropriate action where the judge becomes aware of misconduct by a lawyer or incompetence that seriously compromises the interests of justice. Where a judge intends to take action, the judge should follow court protocols and consider whether the interests of justice require that such action await the end of the proceeding or whether the circumstances require earlier action.

Access to Justice and Self-Represented Litigants[2]

2.D.1 Judges have a responsibility to promote and foster access to justice. In fulfilling their role, judges should be aware of the different ways in which disputes can be resolved fairly and efficiently.

2.C.6 La question de savoir si les juges devraient signaler ou faire signaler certains agissements d'un avocat à l'ordre professionnel de celui-ci, et dans quelles circonstances ils devraient le faire, est délicate. Les juges qui prennent ce genre de mesures risquent de ne plus être aptes à entendre la cause dans laquelle agit l'avocat dénoncé, puisque l'opinion exprimée sur la conduite de l'avocat peut susciter une crainte raisonnable quant à l'existence d'un parti pris contre l'avocat ou son client. Il reste que les juges occupent une position privilégiée pour observer la conduite des avocats devant le tribunal. Les juges devraient demeurer attentifs au fait que les avocats ont une obligation déontologique et légale de représenter leur client avec vigueur et de se dévouer à sa cause. Lorsque des juges sont témoins de l'inconduite d'un avocat ou d'une incompétence qui porte gravement atteinte à l'intérêt de la justice, ils devraient prendre ou faire prendre les mesures qui s'imposent conformément aux protocoles en vigueur dans leur cour s'il en est. Avant de prendre de telles mesures, les juges devraient déterminer si l'intérêt de la justice commande d'attendre la fin de l'audience ou si des circonstances spéciales justifient une action immédiate.

L'accès à la justice et les parties non représentées[2]

2.D.1 Les juges ont la responsabilité de promouvoir et de favoriser l'accès à la justice. Ce rôle impose aux juges d'être sensibles aux différents processus qui permettent une résolution juste et efficace des différends.

2 Canadian Judicial Council Statement of Principles on Self-represented Litigants and Accused Persons (2006)

2 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, Énoncé de principes concernant les plaideurs et les accusés non représentés par un avocat (2006)

2.D.2 Passive neutrality and treating everyone in the same manner may not always be appropriate. Parties often appear before the court as self-represented litigants. Judges should provide information and reasonable assistance, proactively where appropriate, on procedural and evidentiary rules, while being alert not to compromise judicial impartiality and the fairness of the proceeding.

Conduct Towards Others

2.E.1 The conduct of judges towards others is an important aspect of their commitment to integrity and respect. Judges should be attentive to the ways in which offensive remarks, or conduct, or inappropriate behaviour may adversely affect or intimidate others, particularly those in subordinate positions to the judge. A judge's conduct in this respect affects their individual reputation and that of the judiciary as a whole.

2.E.2 A common concern in the modern workplace is the possibility that authority may be used in inappropriate ways. The workplace of the judiciary is no exception. Judges refrain from any form of harassment in the workplace. It is also important for judges to avoid relationships with others with whom they work or associate that could be reasonably perceived as the judge taking advantage of their position or authority.

2.D.2 Il se pourrait que la neutralité passive et le traitement identique de toutes les parties ne soit pas toujours approprié. Il arrive souvent que des parties agissent devant les tribunaux sans être représentées. Les juges devraient informer les parties non représentées et leur fournir une aide raisonnable, de manière proactive lorsque les circonstances s'y prêtent, en ce qui concerne les règles de preuve et de procédure, tout en se gardant de compromettre leur impartialité et l'équité des procédures.

Comportement à l'égard d'autrui

2.E.1 La conduite des juges à l'égard d'autrui est un aspect important de leur engagement envers l'intégrité et le respect. Les juges devraient se montrer sensibles aux propos désobligeants et aux comportements offensants ou inappropriés qui pourraient atteindre ou intimider les personnes qu'ils côtoient, en particulier celles sur lesquelles s'exerce leur autorité. La conduite des juges à cet égard est susceptible d'affecter tant leur réputation individuelle que celle de la magistrature dans son ensemble.

Use of Status or Authority

2.F.1 Judges should not use their status or authority, or the status of their office, to seek, for themselves or others, an advantage or benefit to which they would not otherwise be entitled.

Fundraising

2.F.2 Judges should not allow the prestige of judicial office to be used in aid of fundraising for particular causes, however worthy. They should not solicit funds (except from judicial colleagues or from family members) or lend the prestige of their judicial office to such solicitations.

Letters of Reference

2.F.3 Judges may be called upon to provide letters of reference. It is important that the prestige of judicial office not be used to advance another person's private interests or create an impression that certain persons stand in a particular position of influence or favour with the judge. Factors for the judge to consider include whether: (i) providing the reference will not compromise the integrity of judicial office; (ii) it is the judge's personal knowledge of the individual that is called for; and (iii) the judge has an important perspective about the individual to contribute such that it would be unfair to the individual were the judge to refuse. Judges should keep in mind that letters of reference may be made public. Such letters may also be rendered inappropriate or inaccurate by a subsequent change in circumstances, thereby having the potential to reflect adversely on the judge or the judiciary. Judges may assist judicial appointment advisory committees on a confidential basis.

Statut et pouvoir judiciaire

2.F.1 Les juges ne devraient pas utiliser leur statut ou leur pouvoir, ou le prestige de leur fonction, pour rechercher un avantage ou un bénéfice, pour eux-mêmes ou pour autrui, qui ne pourrait être obtenu autrement.

Collecte de fonds

2.F.2 Les juges ne devraient pas permettre que le prestige de la fonction judiciaire contribue à la collecte de fonds pour des causes particulières, si méritoires soient-elles. Ils ne devraient pas recueillir de dons (sauf auprès de collègues juges ou auprès de membres de leur famille), ni associer le prestige de leur fonction à de telles collectes.

Lettres de recommandation

2.F.3 On demande parfois aux juges de fournir des lettres de recommandation. Il est important que le prestige de la fonction judiciaire ne serve pas à promouvoir les intérêts privés d'un tiers ou à donner l'impression que certaines personnes jouissent auprès d'eux d'une influence ou de faveurs particulières. Les facteurs que les juges devraient prendre en considération comprennent, notamment, les suivants : (i) le fait de fournir la recommandation ne mettra pas en péril l'intégrité de la fonction judiciaire; (ii) c'est à leur connaissance de la personne concernée que l'on fait appel; et (iii) lorsqu'ils ont un point de vue important à exprimer sur la personne concernée, un refus de leur part ne serait pas équitable envers cette personne. Les juges devraient garder à l'esprit que les lettres de recommandation peuvent être rendues publiques, que leur contenu peut devenir mal adapté ou inexact par suite d'un changement de circonstances et qu'elles sont donc susceptibles de nuire à leur image ou à celle de la magistrature. Les juges peuvent aider les comités consultatifs sur la nomination des juges de manière confidentielle.

Collegial Support

2.G.1 Judges should encourage and support their judicial colleagues' observance of ethical principles. Judges may become aware of circumstances that indicate a strong likelihood of unethical conduct by a judicial colleague. In such instances, judges should act in a manner that best ensures that action is taken to preserve public confidence in the administration of justice. Depending on the circumstances, such action may include communication with the Chief Justice of the court.

Soutien collégial

2.G.1 Les juges devraient encourager leurs collègues de la magistrature à respecter les principes de déontologie et les appuyer dans cette démarche. Il peut arriver que des juges soient informés de circonstances signalant une forte probabilité que la conduite d'un juge comporte des lacunes d'ordre déontologique. Dans ces cas, les juges devraient agir de manière à s'assurer que des mesures sont prises pour préserver la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. Selon la situation, de telles mesures pourraient inclure la divulgation du problème au juge en chef de la cour.

III. Diligence and Competence

Statement

Judges perform their duties with diligence and competence.

Principles

A. Judges devote themselves to their judicial duties, broadly defined, which include presiding in court and making decisions, as well as those duties essential to court operations and to the administration of justice. Judges do not engage in activities incompatible with the diligent discharge of judicial duties.

B. Judges perform all judicial duties, including the delivery of reserved judgments, with punctuality and reasonable promptness, having due regard to the urgency of the matter and other special circumstances.

C. Judges maintain and enhance their knowledge, skills, sensitivity to social context and the personal qualities necessary to perform their judicial duties.

D. Judges strive to maintain their wellness to optimize the performance of judicial duties.

III. Diligence et compétence

Énoncé

Les juges exercent leurs fonctions avec diligence et compétence.

Principes

A. Les juges se consacrent à leurs fonctions judiciaires, entendues au sens large, lesquelles englobent le fait de présider les audiences et de rendre des décisions, ainsi que celles qui sont essentielles au bon fonctionnement de leur tribunal et de l'administration de la justice. Les juges s'abstiennent de toute activité incompatible avec l'exercice diligent de leurs fonctions judiciaires.

B. Les juges exercent toutes leurs fonctions judiciaires, et rendent les jugements mis en délibéré, de façon ponctuelle et avec une célérité raisonnable, compte tenu des circonstances propres à chaque affaire, y compris leur caractère urgent.

C. Les juges maintiennent et améliorent les connaissances, les compétences, la sensibilité au contexte social et les qualités personnelles qui sont nécessaires à l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires.

D. Les juges s'efforcent de se maintenir en bonne santé afin d'exercer leurs fonctions judiciaires de manière optimale.

Commentary

General

3.A.1 Diligence is concerned with the performance of judicial duties in a skillful, careful, attentive and timely way.

3.A.2 Judges should exhibit diligence and competence in the performance of all their judicial duties, including adjudication, case management, pre-trial or settlement conferences and participation in court administration.

3.A.3 Section 55 of the Judges Act[3] provides that: "No judge shall, either directly or indirectly, for himself or herself or others, engage in any occupation or business other than his or her judicial duties, but every judge shall devote himself or herself exclusively to those judicial duties". Subject to the limitations imposed by the Judges Act and guided by these Ethical Principles, judges may participate in other activities that do not detract from the performance of judicial duties or compromise their independence or impartiality.

3.A.4 Upon appointment, judges should withdraw expeditiously from professional, commercial and business activities.

3.A.5 Generally speaking, a judge is entitled to have 'passive' investments that do not constitute 'carrying on business', provided that little active management is required and there is no interference with the diligent performance of judicial duties. For these reasons, judges should undertake a careful examination of their investments.

3 Judges Act, RSC 1985, c J-1

Commentaires

Général

3.A.1 On entend par diligence le fait d'exercer ses fonctions judiciaires de manière compétente, prudente et attentive, de même qu'avec une célérité raisonnable.

3.A.2 Les juges devraient faire preuve de diligence et de compétence dans l'exercice de toutes leurs fonctions judiciaires, y compris les fonctions décisionnelles, la gestion d'instance, les conférences préparatoires ou de règlement et la participation à l'administration de la justice.

3.A.3 L'article 55 de la Loi sur les juges[3] prévoit que « Les juges se consacrent à leurs fonctions judiciaires à l'exclusion de toute autre activité, qu'elle soit exercée directement ou indirectement, pour leur compte ou celui d'autrui ». Sous réserve des restrictions imposées par la Loi sur les juges et des recommandations formulées dans les Principes de déontologie, les juges peuvent participer à d'autres activités qui ne nuisent pas à l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires ou mettent en péril leur indépendance ou impartialité.

3.A.4 Après leur nomination, les juges devraient se retirer rapidement de leurs activités commerciales et professionnelles, ainsi que de leur intérêts d'affaires.

3.A.5 De manière générale, les juges peuvent avoir des placements « passifs » qui ne constituent pas la « poursuite d'une entreprise », exigent peu de gestion active et ne les empêchent pas d'exercer leurs fonctions judiciaires avec diligence. Pour cette raison, les juges devraient effectuer une analyse serrée de leurs placements.

3.A.6 On occasion, judges are asked by governments to serve on commissions, inquiries or in other public roles. In considering such a request, in addition to the limitations imposed by the Judges Act and the guidance provided by Ethical Principles, judges should consider all implications and discuss the matter with their Chief Justice to ensure that acceptance of an appointment will not unduly interfere with the effective functioning of the court. The terms of reference and other conditions such as time and resources should be examined carefully so as to assess their compatibility with the judicial function.[4]

3.A.7 Judges are uniquely placed to make a variety of contributions to the administration of justice. Subject to the limitations imposed by judicial office, judges are encouraged, for example, to take part in legal education programs for students, lawyers and judges, and in activities to make the law and the legal process more understandable and accessible to the public, such as giving lectures, participating in moot courts or through legal writing.

Timeliness

3.B.1 Judges should perform all assigned judicial duties in a timely manner.

3.A.6 Il arrive que les gouvernements demandent à des juges d'exercer des fonctions publiques, notamment au sein d'une commission ou à l'occasion d'une enquête. Avant de répondre à une telle demande, outre les restrictions imposées par la Loi sur les juges et les recommandations formulées dans les Principes de déontologie, les juges devraient prendre en considération l'ensemble des conséquences et en discuter avec leur juge en chef afin de s'assurer que l'acceptation de la charge proposée ne nuira pas indûment au bon fonctionnement du tribunal. Le mandat et d'autres facteurs tels que la durée et les ressources devraient entrer en ligne de compte lorsqu'il s'agit d'évaluer la compatibilité de la charge proposée avec les fonctions judiciaires.[4]

3.A.7 Les juges sont particulièrement bien placés pour contribuer de diverses manières à l'administration de la justice. Sous réserve des restrictions qui leur sont imposées par leur charge, les juges sont encouragés, par exemple, à prendre part à des programmes de formation juridique à l'intention des étudiants, des avocats et des juges, et à participer à des activités destinées à mieux faire comprendre le droit et la procédure judiciaire au grand public, notamment en donnant des conférences, en participant à un tribunal-école ou en rédigeant des articles ou des livres de droit.

Célérité

3.B.1 Les juges devraient exercer toutes les fonctions judiciaires qui leur sont assignées avec une célérité raisonnable.

4 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, Protocole sur la nomination de juges à des commissions d'enquête (2010)

3.B.2 The preparation of judgments is frequently difficult and time consuming. Judges are expected to produce their decisions and reasons for judgment as soon as reasonably possible, having regard to the urgency of the matter and the length or complexity of the case. In this respect, the CJC has resolved that reserved judgments should be delivered within a maximum of six months after hearings, except in special circumstances.[5] Judges must also comply with legal requirements associated with timeliness of judgments applicable in their jurisdiction.

3.B.3 While judges strive to be diligent in the performance of their judicial duties, their ability to do so may be affected by various factors, including illness, exceptionally heavy burdens of work or the inadequacy of resources supporting their work.

Professional Development[6]

3.C.1 A well-educated and informed judiciary that adheres to high standards of competence is essential to preserving public confidence.

3.C.2 Judges should have and maintain knowledge of the law. Knowledge extends not only to substantive and procedural law but also to an understanding of the impact of the law on those it affects.

3.B.2 L'élaboration d'un jugement est souvent longue et ardue. Les juges sont censés prononcer leurs jugements et les motifs qui les accompagnent dès qu'il est raisonnablement possible de le faire, compte tenu de l'urgence de l'affaire, de sa longueur ou de sa complexité. En cette matière, le Conseil a, par voie de résolution, exprimé l'avis que, sauf s'il existe des circonstances particulières, les juges qui ont mis une affaire en délibéré devraient rendre leur jugement dans les six mois qui suivent l'audience.[5] Les juges doivent aussi respecter les délais imposés par la loi dans leur juridiction, le cas échéant.

3.B.3 Bien que les juges s'efforcent d'agir avec diligence dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires, il peut leur être difficile de le faire en raison de différents facteurs, comme la maladie, une charge de travail exceptionnellement lourde ou l'insuffisance des ressources qui appuient leur travail.

Perfectionnement professionnel[6]

3.C.1 Afin de préserver la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature, il est essentiel que les juges adhèrent à des normes élevées en matière de formation et de compétence.

3.C.2 Les juges devraient connaître le droit et se tenir à jour à cet égard. Cette connaissance s'étend non seulement aux règles de fond et de procédure, mais également à leur compréhension de l'impact qu'elles ont sur les personnes touchées.

3.C.3 Judges are responsible for maintaining and enhancing their knowledge, skills and personal qualities necessary for effective judging. This important element of judicial diligence and competence involves participation in continuing professional development.

3.C.4 Professional development describes formal and informal learning activities that include education, training and private study. It also covers education on social context issues affecting the administration of justice. Social context encompasses knowledge and understanding of the realities of the lives of those who appear in court. This includes the history, heritage and laws related to Indigenous peoples, as well as matters of gender, race, ethnicity, religion, culture, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, differing mental or physical abilities, age and socio-economic background.

3.C.5 Judges should develop and maintain proficiency with technology relevant to the nature and performance of their judicial duties.

3.C.6 As part of a judge's commitment to continuing professional development, judges should engage in self-assessment and self-development, taking responsibility for their standard of knowledge, skill and the development of personal qualities related to judicial duties.

3.C.3 Il incombe aux juges de maintenir et d'accroître les connaissances, les compétences et les qualités personnelles qui leur sont nécessaires pour bien juger. Cet important volet de la diligence et de la compétence des juges implique la participation à des programmes de perfectionnement professionnel continu.

3.C.4 Le perfectionnement professionnel s'entend des activités d'apprentissage, formelles ou informelles, qui visent l'amélioration des connaissances et des compétences et les études personnelles. Il s'étend aussi à la formation touchant le contexte social pertinent à l'administration de la justice, ce qui comprend la connaissance et la compréhension de la réalité vécue par les personnes qui comparaissent devant le tribunal, y compris l'histoire et le patrimoine des peuples autochtones, le droit relatif aux peuples autochtones, ainsi que les questions liées au genre, à la race, à l'origine ethnique, à la religion, à la culture, à l'orientation sexuelle, à l'identité ou à l'expression de genre, aux différences de capacités physiques ou mentales, à l'âge et à l'origine socio-économique.

3.C.5 Les juges devraient développer et maintenir les habiletés technologiques qui ont rapport à la nature et à l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires.

3.C.6 En lien avec leur engagement envers le perfectionnement professionnel continu, les juges devraient évaluer leur niveau de connaissances et de compétences et les qualités individuelles qui leur permettent de s'acquitter de leurs fonctions judiciaires et s'engager dans un processus continu de perfectionnement professionnel.

3.C.7 To support judges' commitments to their continuing professional development, the CJC and National Judicial Institute, as well as other organizations, have developed relevant, comprehensive, quality educational programs. Judges should participate in these programs in their continuing commitment to acquire, maintain and strengthen their judicial knowledge and skills.

3.C.8 Consistent with their judicial duties, judges are encouraged to take advantage of opportunities to engage with and learn from the wider public, including communities with which the judge has little or no life experience.

Wellness

3.D.1 While judges should exhibit diligence in the performance of their judicial duties, the importance of judges' responsibilities to their families is also recognized.

3.D.2 Judges should set aside sufficient time and make a commitment to the maintenance of physical and mental wellness, and take advantage of judicial assistance programs as appropriate.[7]

3.C.7 Pour soutenir les juges dans cette démarche de perfectionnement professionnel continu, le Conseil et l'Institut national de la magistrature, de même que d'autres organismes, ont élaboré des programmes de formation pertinents, exhaustifs et de qualité. Les juges devraient participer à ces programmes afin de maintenir et d'améliorer leurs connaissances et leurs compétences judiciaires et d'en acquérir de nouvelles.

3.C.8 Lorsque cela est compatible avec leurs fonctions judiciaires, les juges sont encouragés à profiter des occasions de s'intéresser à la collectivité, notamment d'apprendre à mieux connaître les personnes issues de communautés dont l'expérience diffère de la leur.

Bien-être

3.D.1 Bien que les juges soient tenus de faire preuve de diligence dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires, l'on reconnaît par ailleurs l'importance des responsabilités familiales des membres de la magistrature.

3.D.2 Les juges devraient réserver suffisamment de temps au maintien de leur bonne santé physique et mentale et se prévaloir, au besoin, des programmes d'aide qui leur sont offerts.[7]

IV. Equality

Statement

Judges conduct themselves and the proceedings before them to ensure equality according to law.

Principles

A. Judges carry out their duties with respect for all persons, including parties, counsel, witnesses, court personnel and judicial colleagues, without discrimination or prejudice.

B. Judges refrain from discriminatory behaviour. They disassociate themselves from and disapprove of offensive or discriminatory comments or conduct by court staff, counsel or any other person involved in judicial proceedings.

C. Judges are sensitive to and are not influenced by attitudes based on stereotype, myth or prejudice. They make meaningful efforts to recognize and dissociate themselves from such attitudes.

D. Judges do not belong to any organization that engages in or countenances any form of discrimination that contravenes the law.

IV. Égalité

Énoncé

Les juges adoptent une conduite propre à assurer à tous un traitement égal conformément à la loi et ils conduisent les instances dont ils sont saisis dans ce même esprit.

Principes

A. Les juges exercent leurs fonctions en faisant preuve de respect à l'endroit de toutes les personnes, sans discrimination ni préjugés, qu'il s'agisse des parties, des avocats, des témoins, de membres du personnel de la cour ou d'autres juges.

B. Les juges s'abstiennent de comportements discriminatoires. Ils se dissocient de la conduite ou des propos offensants ou discriminatoires que pourraient avoir les membres du personnel de la cour, les avocats ou les autres personnes participant à une instance judiciaire et expriment leur désapprobation à cet égard.

C. Les juges sont sensibles aux attitudes fondées sur des stéréotypes, des mythes ou des préjugés et ne se laissent pas influencer par celles-ci. Les juges font des efforts concrets pour reconnaître ces attitudes et s'en dissocier.

D. Les juges n'adhérent à aucun organisme qui pratique ou approuve une forme quelconque de discrimination prohibée par la loi.

Commentary

General

4.A.1 The Constitution and a variety of statutes guarantee equality before and under the law and equal protection and benefit of the law without discrimination. The law's commitment to substantive equality seeks to protect members of the community from both direct discrimination and from the impact of laws and policies that, though neutral on their face, produce adverse effects, or adverse impact, discrimination. This approach to equality seeks to acknowledge the equal worth and dignity of all persons and to ensure that discrimination is prevented and rectified as it affects individuals or groups experiencing disadvantage in our society, often on a systemic or structural basis. The law's strong societal commitment places concern for equality at the core of justice according to law.

4.A.2 Equality, according to law, is fundamental to justice and is strongly linked to judicial impartiality and to public confidence in the administration of justice. Accordingly, judges should ensure that their commitment to equality is unwavering and that their conduct is such that any reasonable and informed member of the public would have confidence in the judge's respect for and commitment to equality.

Commentaires

Général

4.A.1 La Constitution et de nombreuses lois garantissent l'égalité devant la loi et sous le régime de la loi, de même que l'égalité en matière de protection et de bénéfice de la loi, sans discrimination. Cet engagement du législateur envers l'égalité réelle vise à protéger les membres de la collectivité contre la discrimination directe et contre les lois et les politiques qui, en apparence neutres, entraînent de la discrimination par suite d'un effet préjudiciable. Cette approche vise à reconnaître une même valeur à tous les êtres humains et la dignité de toutes les personnes, de manière à prévenir la discrimination, souvent systémique ou structurelle, dont sont victimes les personnes ou les groupes défavorisés de notre société et à y remédier. Cet engagement ferme pris par le législateur au nom de la société place l'égalité au cœur de la justice sous le régime de la loi.

4.A.2 Fondamentale pour la justice, l'égalité sous le régime de la loi est aussi étroitement liée à l'impartialité judiciaire et à la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. Par conséquent, les juges devraient être inébranlables dans leur engagement envers l'égalité et s'assurer que leur conduite est telle qu'une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée y verrait la manifestation de leur respect pour le principe d'égalité et leur engagement à l'égard de celui-ci.

Equality in Proceedings

4.B.1 Judges should avoid comments, expressions, gestures or behaviour that may reasonably be interpreted as showing insensitivity to or disrespect for anyone. Examples include inappropriate comments based on stereotypes linked to gender, race, ethnicity, religion, culture, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, differing mental or physical abilities, age and socio-economic background, or other conduct that may create the impression that persons before the court will not be afforded equal consideration and respect. Inappropriate statements by judges, in or out of court, have the potential to call into question their commitment to equality and their ability to be impartial.

4.B.2 Judges should avoid engaging in activities on social media that could reasonably reflect negatively on their commitment to equality.

4.B.3 In proceedings before them, judges should intervene when confronted with discriminatory comments or behaviour. The principle of equality does not, however, require that proper advocacy or admissible testimony be curtailed where, for example, matters of gender, race or other similar factors are properly before the court. The adversarial system gives the parties and their counsel considerable leeway, and the relevance and importance of evidence may be difficult to assess accurately as it is being presented. Judges are expected to listen impartially, but, when necessary, should assert control over the proceeding and act with appropriate firmness to maintain an atmosphere of dignity, equality and order in the courtroom. Judges should be alive to the issues before the court and, where appropriate, seek clarification and provide balanced rulings on the relevance of a given line of questioning.

L'égalité dans le processus judiciaire

4.B.2 Les juges devraient éviter d'avoir, sur les réseaux sociaux, des activités qui sont raisonnablement susceptibles de discréditer leur engagement envers le principe d'égalité.

4.B.3 Dans le cadre des affaires dont ils sont saisis, les juges devraient intervenir lorsqu'ils font face à des propos ou à une conduite discriminatoires. Le principe d'égalité n'implique pas, cependant, que l'on doive interdire la défense légitime d'idées, ou empêcher la présentation de témoignages par ailleurs admissibles, lorsque, par exemple, des questions de genre, de race ou d'autres facteurs semblables sont légitimement soulevés devant la cour. Le système contradictoire donne beaucoup de latitude aux parties et à leurs avocats, et il peut être difficile d'évaluer avec justesse la pertinence et l'importance de la preuve au moment de sa présentation. Les juges sont censés écouter le débat en toute impartialité, mais devraient, si nécessaire, le contrôler fermement et faire preuve de toute la rigueur voulue pour maintenir un climat de dignité, d'égalité et d'ordre dans la salle d'audience. Les juges devraient être sensibles aux questions qui sont devant le tribunal et, lorsque cela est utile, obtenir des précisions sur la pertinence des questions posées par les avocats et rendre des décisions équilibrées sur celles-ci.

4.B.4 Judges should not permit court staff or others subject to their authority or control to engage in conduct that may: show disrespect toward others; constitute discrimination; or reasonably reflect negatively on their commitment to equality.

Avoidance of Stereotypes

4.C.1 Judges do not make assumptions based on general characterizations or attach labels to people that invite stereotypical assumptions about their behaviour or characteristics. Stereotypes are simplistic mental short cuts that generate misleading perceptions and cause mistakes and errors in fact and in law.

4.C.2 Reliance on stereotypes may arise for different reasons, often unintentionally. Judges may not properly appreciate that their reasoning is linked to stereotypical thinking. A judge may be unfamiliar with cultural traditions that would, if known, provide a greater understanding of a party's or a witness's appearance, mannerisms or behaviour.

4.C.3 Judges should educate themselves on the extent to which assumptions rest on stereotypical thinking and should become and remain informed about changing attitudes and values. They should take up opportunities to engage with cultures and communities that are different from their own life experiences to expand their knowledge and understanding. In doing this, judges should take care that these efforts enhance and do not detract from their independence and impartiality. In addition, judges should take advantage of educational opportunities and self-study that will assist them in this regard.

4.B.4 Les juges ne devraient pas laisser le personnel de la cour ou d'autres personnes agissant sous leur autorité ou leur contrôle manquer de respect à autrui, ou adopter des comportements qui peuvent constituer de la discrimination ou qui sont raisonnablement susceptibles de discréditer leur engagement envers le principe d'égalité.

La prévention des stéréotypes

4.C.1 Les juges s'abstiennent de formuler des hypothèses fondées sur des caractérisations générales et d'accoler des étiquettes susceptibles d'encourager la formulation d'hypothèses stéréotypées au sujet du comportement ou des caractéristiques de certaines personnes. Les stéréotypes sont des raccourcis dans le raisonnement qui nourrissent des perceptions trompeuses et conduisent à des erreurs de fait ou de droit.

4.C.2 Le recours aux stéréotypes peut résulter d'un ensemble de causes et n'est souvent pas intentionnel. Il est possible que des juges ne soient pas conscients que leur raisonnement est relié à un stéréotype. Il peut aussi arriver que des juges ne connaissent pas certaines traditions culturelles qui, s'ils les connaissaient, leur permettraient de mieux comprendre la façon de se présenter, d'agir et de se comporter d'une partie ou d'un témoin.

4.C.3 Les juges devraient être sensibilisés au fait que les hypothèses peuvent reposer sur des stéréotypes et prendre les moyens appropriés pour demeurer au fait des changements d'attitudes et de valeurs. Ils devraient s'intéresser aux cultures et aux communautés qui diffèrent de celles qu'ils côtoient de par leur expérience de vie, afin d'élargir leurs connaissances et leur compréhension. Toutefois, les juges devraient s'assurer que les efforts déployés en ce sens renforcent leur indépendance et leur impartialité plutôt que de leur nuire. De plus, les juges devraient profiter des activités de formation et des lectures qui permettent d'en apprendre plus sur ces questions.

Association with Discriminatory Organizations

4.D.1 Judges should conduct their personal lives honourably and in ways that would not reasonably be perceived as an endorsement of any invidious form of discrimination. Judges should avoid associations with organizations that engage in or countenance discrimination contrary to law. A judge's membership in such an organization has the potential to call into question the judge's commitment to equality and may erode public confidence in the judiciary. Judges should also be sensitive to the fact that some organizations' activities, policies and public positions, though not unlawful, may still be offensive to legitimate expectations of equality.

4.D.2 Neither the practice of religion nor membership in a religious organization is inconsistent with Ethical Principles.

Association avec des organismes ayant des pratiques discriminatoires

4.D.1 Les juges devraient se conduire de manière honorable dans leur vie personnelle et faire en sorte que leur comportement ne puisse donner à raisonnablement penser qu'ils appuient une quelconque forme de discrimination préjudiciable. Par conséquent, les juges devraient éviter toute association avec un organisme qui pratique ou approuve une forme de discrimination prohibée par la loi. L'adhésion à un tel organisme est susceptible de remettre en cause l'engagement des juges envers le principe d'égalité et de miner la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature. Les juges devraient aussi être sensibles au fait que l'activité et les politiques de certains organismes ainsi que les opinions qu'ils expriment, quoique licites, peuvent porter atteinte aux attentes légitimes en matière d'égalité.

4.D.2 Ni la pratique d'une religion, ni l'appartenance à un organisme religieux ne sont incompatibles avec les Principes de déontologie.

V. Impartiality

Statement

Judges are impartial and appear to be impartial in the performance of their judicial duties.

Principles

A. Judges ensure that their conduct at all times maintains and enhances confidence in their impartiality and that of the judiciary.

B. Judges avoid conduct which could reasonably cause others to question their impartiality.

C. Judges conduct their affairs so as to avoid real or apparent conflicts of interest between their private interests and their judicial duties.

D. While preserving their impartiality, judges make meaningful efforts to inform and educate the public and the legal profession regarding the law, judicial independence, and the role of judges and the courts in the administration of justice.

E. Judges contemplating retirement and former judges avoid conduct that is likely to bring the judicial office into disrepute or put at risk public expectations of judicial independence, integrity and impartiality.

V. Impartialité

Énoncé

Les juges sont impartiaux et donnent l'apparence d'impartialité dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires.

Principes

A. Les juges veillent en toutes circonstances à ce que leur conduite entretienne et accroisse la confiance dans leur impartialité et celle de la magistrature en général.

B. Les juges évitent les comportements pouvant raisonnablement amener autrui à mettre en doute leur impartialité.

C. Les juges mènent leurs affaires de manière à éviter tout conflit réel ou apparent entre leurs intérêts personnels et leurs fonctions judiciaires.

D. Tout en veillant à préserver leur impartialité, les juges s'efforcent d'éduquer le public et la profession juridique et de les informer sur le droit, l'indépendance judiciaire et le rôle des juges et des tribunaux dans l'administration de la justice.

E. Les juges qui songent à quitter ou qui ont quitté la magistrature évitent toute conduite susceptible de jeter le discrédit sur la fonction judiciaire ou de miner les attentes du public quant à l'indépendance, à l'intégrité et à l'impartialité de la magistrature.

Commentary

General

5.A.1 For centuries, adjudication by impartial and independent judges has been recognized as fundamental to the rule of law. Impartiality is a fundamental qualification of a judge and a core attribute of the judiciary.

5.A.2 Impartiality requires not only the absence of bias and prejudgment, but also the absence of any appearance of partiality. This dual aspect of impartiality is captured in the oft-repeated words that justice must not only be done, but manifestly be seen to be done. The test is whether a reasonable and informed person with knowledge of all relevant circumstances, viewing the matter realistically and practically, would apprehend a lack of impartiality in the judge.

5.A.3 While there is a close association between the judge's ethical and legal duties of impartiality, Ethical Principles is not intended to deal with the law relating to judicial disqualification or recusal.

Judicial Duties

5.A.4 Judges have a fundamental obligation to be and to appear to be impartial. This obligation of impartiality does not presuppose that judges are free of life experiences, sympathies or opinions. Rather, it requires judges to be sensitive to their own biases and to consider different points of view with an open mind. Judges should interact with all parties fairly and even-handedly.

Commentaires

Général

5.A.1 Depuis des siècles, on reconnaît que la décision des litiges par des juges impartiaux et indépendants est essentielle à la primauté du droit. L'impartialité est l'une des qualités fondamentales des juges et un attribut central de la fonction judiciaire.

5.A.2 L'impartialité requiert non seulement l'absence de préjugés et de partis pris, mais également l'absence d'apparence de partialité. Ces deux volets de l'impartialité sont bien résumés dans la maxime selon laquelle non seulement justice doit être rendue, mais encore elle doit paraître avoir été rendue. Le critère applicable consiste à se demander si une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée, qui serait au courant de toutes les circonstances pertinentes et étudierait la question de façon réaliste et pratique, craindrait que le juge ne soit pas impartial.

5.A.3 Bien qu'il existe des liens étroits entre les devoirs éthiques et juridiques des juges en matière d'impartialité, les Principes de déontologie ne sont pas destinés à traiter du droit relatif à la récusation des juges.

Fonctions judiciaires

5.A.4 Les juges ont l'obligation fondamentale d'être et de paraître impartiaux. L'obligation d'impartialité ne présuppose pas que les juges n'ont aucune expérience personnelle, sympathie ou opinion. Elle exige plutôt que les juges soient conscients de leurs propres préjugés et accueillent différents points de vue en gardant un esprit ouvert. Les juges devraient traiter toutes les parties avec équité et sur un pied d'égalité.

5.A.5 Judges should avoid using words or conduct, in and out of court, that might give rise to a reasonable perception of bias. The expectations of litigants are high. Disappointed litigants will sometimes perceive bias when neither actual bias nor a reasonable apprehension of bias exists. A judge's remarks or tone may diminish the judge's perceived impartiality. An unjustified reprimand of counsel, an improper remark about a litigant or a witness or a statement evidencing prejudgment or intemperate and impatient behaviour may undermine the appearance of impartiality. Casual conversations or familiarity with counsel or participants in the proceedings may be perceived by others as a form of exclusion. Therefore, judges should ensure that their comments or conduct do not provide reasonable grounds for a perception of bias.

5.A.6 While judges may wish to signal support for causes or viewpoints through words or in the wearing or display of symbols of support, even if they seem innocuous, such communications may be interpreted as reflecting a lack of impartiality or the use of the position of the judge to make a political or other statement. For these reasons, judges should avoid statements or visible symbols of support, particularly in the context of court proceedings.

5.A.7 Judges should ensure that proceedings are conducted in an orderly and efficient manner and that the court process is not abused. An appropriate measure of firmness may be necessary to achieve this end. In the presence of challenging or vexatious litigants, judges should be firm, decisive and at the same time respectful to ensure that litigants' rights are protected.

5.A.5 Les juges devraient éviter de s'exprimer ou de se comporter, en salle d'audience ou ailleurs, de manière à susciter une perception raisonnable de partialité. Les attentes des parties sont élevées. Il peut arriver qu'une partie déçue perçoive l'existence d'un préjugé malgré l'absence de partialité réelle ou de crainte raisonnable de partialité. Des remarques formulées par les juges ou le ton employé pour exprimer celles-ci peuvent miner la perception d'impartialité des juges. Les remontrances injustifiées faites aux avocats, les remarques déplacées au sujet des parties ou des témoins, les déclarations manifestant un parti pris et les comportements immodérés et impatients peuvent saper l'apparence d'impartialité. Les conversations ou comportements empreints de familiarité avec les avocats ou les participants à l'instance peuvent être perçus par d'autres comme une forme d'exclusion. Par conséquent, les juges devraient s'assurer que leurs commentaires ou leur conduite ne donnent pas prise à une perception raisonnable de partialité.

5.A.6 Bien que des juges puissent vouloir exprimer leur appui pour certaines causes ou points de vue, les paroles ou le port d'insignes marquant cet appui, même lorsqu'ils semblent inoffensifs, peuvent être interprétés comme un manque d'impartialité ou être vus comme un moyen d'utiliser la fonction judiciaire pour faire une déclaration politique ou autre. Pour cette raison, les juges devraient éviter de tenir des propos ou de porter des insignes visibles marquant leur appui, en particulier dans le cadre du processus judiciaire.

5.A.7 Les juges devraient veiller à ce que l'instance se déroule de manière ordonnée et efficace, tout en prévenant les abus de procédure. Une certaine fermeté peut s'imposer selon les circonstances. En présence d'une partie difficile ou quérulente, les juges devraient se comporter de manière ferme et décisive, sans renoncer au respect requis pour assurer la protection des droits des parties.

5.A.8 Judges have a responsibility to promote opportunities for all persons to understand the judicial process and to meaningfully present their case, whether or not they have legal representation. Self-represented persons may sometime be uninformed about their rights and about the consequences of the options they choose. Judges should take appropriate and reasonable measures to provide a fair and impartial process and prevent an unfair disadvantage to self-represented persons.[8] Such measures are consistent with impartiality provided that they are fair to other parties.

5.A.9 Judges should be particularly attuned to the perception of bias that might arise in circumstances where one or more parties are self-represented. Appropriate assistance to a self-represented litigant may be perceived by the opposing, represented party as manifesting bias. Accommodations extended to self-represented litigants should not extend to the point where they become unfair to the other party. Clear and transparent communication with all parties is necessary to avoid unwarranted apprehension of bias.

5.A.8 Les juges ont la responsabilité de s'assurer que toute personne, qu'elle soit représentée ou non représentée, ait la possibilité de comprendre le processus judiciaire et de faire valoir sa position. Les personnes non représentées peuvent parfois être mal informées de leurs droits et des conséquences de leurs choix. Les juges devraient prendre des moyens appropriés et raisonnables afin d'établir un processus équitable et impartial et d'empêcher que les personnes non représentées ne soient pas injustement désavantagées.[8] De tels moyens se concilient avec l'impartialité pour autant qu'ils soient équitables envers toutes les parties.

5.A.9 Les juges devraient être particulièrement sensibles à la possibilité d'une perception de partialité dans les situations où l'une des parties ou plusieurs d'entre elles ne sont pas représentées. L'assistance congruente que les juges apportent à une partie non représentée peut être perçue par la partie adverse représentée par avocat comme la manifestation d'un parti pris. Les accommodements accordés aux parties non représentées ne devraient pas rendre le processus injuste pour les parties représentées. Il est nécessaire de communiquer de façon claire et transparente avec toutes les parties afin de dissiper les craintes injustifiées de partialité.

8 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, Énoncé de principes concernant les plaideurs et les accusés non représentés par un avocat (2006)

5.A.10 An expanding aspect of judicial responsibility for judges is their work in settlement conferences and the judicial mediation of disputes. Direct engagement with litigants and counsel in these non-adjudicative settings often takes judges outside the confines of their traditional roles and presents additional challenges in relation to impartiality. Given the variety of settings in which this work takes place, it is not possible to articulate bright line rules to provide guidance in every situation. However, there are values and boundaries which judges should respect in these settings. When engaging in non-adjudicative dispute resolution, judges should ensure that: (i) the process and outcomes are acceptable to the parties themselves; (ii) the outcomes are the subject of informed decision-making by the parties; (iii) the process is transparent to the parties; (iv) the outcomes are not coercive, unconscionable, or illegal; and (v) the legitimate interests of known non-involved third parties are considered. Transparency in this context means openness in the broadest sense and is not intended to discourage caucusing in appropriate circumstances.

Restraints

5.B.1 On appointment, judges do not surrender all of the rights and freedoms enjoyed by everyone else in Canada. Nevertheless, the office of the judge imposes restraints that are necessary to maintain public confidence in the impartiality and independence of the judiciary. In defining the appropriate degree of public involvement by a judge there are two fundamental considerations. The first is whether the involvement could reasonably undermine confidence in the judge's impartiality. The second is whether such involvement may expose the judge to criticism or be inconsistent with the dignity and integrity of judicial office.

5.A.10 Les responsabilités des juges s'étendent de plus en plus aux modes alternatifs de règlement des litiges et à la médiation judiciaire. Les interactions directes entre juges, parties et avocats inhérentes à ces processus non juridictionnels s'inscrivent souvent en dehors des cadres traditionnels de l'activité judiciaire et soulèvent des enjeux additionnels en matière d'impartialité. Comme ces cadres de travail varient grandement, il n'est pas possible d'établir des règles claires et précises susceptibles d'apporter des solutions à toutes les éventualités. Néanmoins, les juges devraient respecter certaines valeurs et limites dans ces situations et notamment s'assurer de ce qui suit : (i) le processus et les résultats qui en découleront sont acceptables pour les parties elles-mêmes; (ii) les parties ont consenti en toute connaissance de cause aux résultats; (iii) le processus est transparent pour les parties; (iv) les résultats ne sont pas coercitifs, iniques ou contraires à la loi; et (v) les intérêts légitimes des tiers connus qui ne sont pas parties au litige sont pris en compte. Dans ce contexte, la transparence s'entend d'une ouverture, au sens large, et n'est pas incompatible avec la possibilité de rencontres individuelles, le cas échéant.

Restrictions

5.B.1 Les juges ne renoncent pas, du fait de leur nomination, à l'ensemble des droits et libertés dont jouit chaque personne au Canada. Cependant, la charge de juge impose des contraintes qui sont nécessaires au maintien de la confiance du public dans l'impartialité et l'indépendance de la magistrature. Deux questions fondamentales entrent en ligne de compte lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer le niveau d'intervention publique qui convient à un membre de la magistrature. La première consiste à savoir si l'intervention pourrait raisonnablement saper la confiance dans l'impartialité du juge et la deuxième, si cette intervention est susceptible d'exposer le juge aux critiques ou est par ailleurs incompatible avec la dignité et l'intégrité de la fonction judiciaire.

Political Activity

5.B.2 Judges must cease all partisan political activity upon the assumption of judicial office. Moreover, judges refrain from conduct that, in the mind of a reasonable and informed person, could give rise to the appearance that the judge is engaged in political activity. For this reason, judges must refrain from: (i) membership in political parties and political fundraising; (ii) attendance at political gatherings and political fundraising events; (iii) contributing financially or otherwise to political parties or campaigns; (iv) signing petitions to influence a political decision; and (v) taking part publicly in controversial political discussions, except in respect of matters directly affecting the operation of the courts, the independence of the judiciary or fundamental aspects of the administration of justice.

5.B.3 Like partisan political activity, out of court statements by a judge concerning issues of public controversy may undermine impartiality. They are also likely to lead to public confusion about the nature of the relationship between the judiciary on the one hand and the executive and legislative branches of government on the other. Partisan actions and political statements by definition involve publicly choosing one side of a debate over another. In order to preserve their impartiality, judges should refrain from any political action or involvement. The perception of partiality will be reinforced if the judge's activities attract criticism and/or rebuttal. This in turn tends to undermine public confidence in the judiciary. Judges should not use the privileged platform of judicial office to enter the public arena because it puts at risk public confidence in the impartiality and the independence of the judiciary.

Activités politiques

5.B.2 Les juges doivent se retirer de toute activité politique de nature partisane dès leur entrée en fonction. De plus, les juges évitent toute conduite susceptible de donner à une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée l'impression qu'ils s'adonnent à une activité politique. Pour cette raison, les juges doivent éviter de faire ce qui suit : (i) adhérer à des partis politiques et à des campagnes de financement politique; (ii) participer à des rassemblements politiques ou à des activités de financement politique; (iii) verser des contributions financières à des partis ou à des campagnes politiques ou y contribuer d'autres manières; (iv) signer des pétitions visant à influencer une décision politique; et (v) intervenir publiquement dans des débats politiques, sauf sur des questions concernant directement le fonctionnement des tribunaux, l'indépendance de la magistrature ou des éléments fondamentaux de l'administration de la justice.

5.B.3 Tout comme les activités politiques de nature partisane, les propos hors du cadre judiciaire sur des questions soulevant une controverse publique peuvent miner l'image d'impartialité du juge. En outre, ils risquent de créer de la confusion auprès du public en ce qui concerne les rapports entre le pouvoir judiciaire, d'une part, et les pouvoirs exécutif et législatif, d'autre part. Par définition, les activités partisanes et les déclarations politiques impliquent une prise de position publique à l'égard d'une question particulière. Afin de préserver leur impartialité, les juges devraient éviter toute activité ou participation politique. La perception de partialité sera plus aiguë si les activités auxquelles s'adonnent les juges font l'objet de critiques ou de contestations. Ces réactions, à leur tour, tendront à miner la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature. Les juges ne devraient pas utiliser le prestige associé à la fonction judiciaire comme levier dans l'arène publique, car, ce faisant, ils mettent en péril la confiance du public dans l'impartialité et l'indépendance de la magistrature.

5.B.4 Chief Justices and other judges with administrative responsibilities will necessarily have contact and interaction with the executive branch of government, including attorneys general, deputy attorneys general and court services officials. These engagements are appropriate provided that the interactions are not partisan in nature.

5.B.5 If a member of a judge's family is politically active, the judge should recognize that such activities of close family members may adversely affect the public perception of the judge's impartiality. In cases where such public perceptions may arise, a judge should consider whether recusal is the appropriate remedy in a given case.

Public Statements

5.B.6 There are limited circumstances in which judges may properly speak out, though with restraint, about a matter that is publicly controversial, namely, when the matter directly affects the operation of the courts, the independence of the judiciary or fundamental aspects of the administration of justice. Chief Justices have particular responsibilities in this regard. Judges should follow any protocol established by their Court on these matters.

5.B.7 If their personal integrity has been called into question in a public context, judges should seek guidance from their Chief Justice and, if appropriate, other trusted advisors.

5.B.4 Les juges en chef et les autres juges qui exercent des responsabilités administratives sont appelés à communiquer et à interagir avec des membres du pouvoir exécutif, dont les procureurs généraux, les sous-ministres ou sous-procureurs généraux et les administrateurs des tribunaux. Ces interactions sont appropriées, en autant qu'elles n'ont pas de dimension partisane.

5.B.5 Les juges devraient être conscients que les activités politiques d'un membre de leur famille immédiate peuvent compromettre leur image d'impartialité auprès du public. Dans les cas où la perception du public pourrait être compromise dans une affaire particulière dont ils sont saisis, les juges devraient considérer s'il y a lieu de se récuser.

Déclarations publiques

5.B.6 Il existe des circonstances où les juges, quoique avec retenue, peuvent exprimer publiquement leur avis sur un sujet controversé, notamment lorsque ce dernier concerne directement le fonctionnement des tribunaux, l'indépendance de la magistrature ou des aspects fondamentaux de l'administration de la justice. Les juges en chef ont une responsabilité particulière à cet égard. Les juges devraient se conformer aux protocoles établis par leur propre cour, le cas échéant.

5.B.7 Dans le cas où leur intégrité personnelle serait publiquement mise en doute, les juges devraient obtenir l'avis de leur juge en chef et, au besoin, d'autres conseillers dignes de confiance.

Judicial Promotion and Opportunities

5.B.8 Leadership positions in courts, opportunities for elevation to a higher court and other opportunities for judges arise from time to time. These decisions are ultimately made by the executive branch of government. Judges are entitled to seek these positions and advance their qualifications, but should exercise reserve in their communication of interest, or the communication of interest by others on their behalf, so as to avoid any conduct that would compromise their impartiality or undermine the integrity of the appointment process.

Public Engagement, Civic and Charitable Activity

5.B.9 Many judges wish to become or continue to be active in various forms of public service to their communities. This involvement benefits the community and judges but also carries risks.

5.B.10 On one hand, there are likely to be beneficial aspects of the judge being active in appropriate forms of public service. Judges administer the law on behalf of the community and are appointed to serve the public. Therefore, unnecessary isolation from the community does not promote wise or just judgments. In order to undertake their work with competence and diligence, and in ways that are consistent with judicial duties, judges are encouraged to take up opportunities to engage with and learn from the wider public, including communities with which they have little or no life experience.

Promotion et autres opportunités pour les juges

5.B.8 Il arrive que des juges soient pressentis pour des fonctions de leadership au sein d'une cour ou en vue de leur accession à une cour de juridiction supérieure, ou que d'autres occasions se présentent à eux. Les décisions finales en cette matière relèvent du pouvoir exécutif. Les juges sont en droit de soumettre leur candidature à ces postes et de faire valoir leurs compétences, mais devraient faire preuve de réserve lorsqu'il s'agit d'exprimer leur intérêt soit directement, soit par l'entremise d'une autre personne, afin d'éviter toute conduite qui mettrait en péril leur impartialité ou minerait l'intégrité du processus de nomination.

Participation à la vie publique et activités sociales ou communautaires

5.B.9 Nombre de juges souhaitent s'impliquer dans des activités sociales ou communautaires ou maintenir leur engagement à cet égard. Cet engagement est bénéfique tant pour la société que pour les juges, mais comporte également des risques.

5.B.10 D'une part, la participation des juges à diverses activités sociales ou communautaires appropriées est sans doute avantageuse. Les juges appliquent la loi au nom de la société et sont nommés pour servir la population. Par conséquent, leur isolement excessif du reste de la collectivité est peu propice à des décisions justes et judicieuses. Afin qu'ils exercent leurs fonctions avec compétence et diligence, dans le respect des devoirs de leur charge, les juges sont encouragés à saisir les occasions qui leur permettent d'interagir avec le public et de mieux comprendre leur société, y compris les groupes qu'ils connaissent peu ou pas de par leur expérience personnelle.

5.B.11 On the other hand, the judge's civic involvement may, in some cases, jeopardize the perception of impartiality. Judges should exercise caution when considering their involvement in community activities and be attentive to the limits that judicial appointment places upon their freedom to undertake these activities. Community involvement on the part of the judge should be assessed in light of the form of public service under consideration, the activities and goals of the organization, the role to be played by the judge within it, the risk that the organization may become engaged in litigation and any other relevant factor.

5.B.12 Generally speaking, judges should refrain from membership in or association with groups or organizations or participation in public discussion which, in the mind of a reasonable and informed person, would undermine confidence in a judge's impartiality with respect to issues that could come before the courts. In service to their communities, judges must not give legal or investment advice, and should avoid involvement in causes or organizations that are likely to be engaged in litigation. Judges should use even greater caution in considering whether to become officers or directors of community organizations.

5.B.13 While, in the past, Canadian judges have served in leadership positions with organizations such as universities and religious bodies, this service is potentially problematic. The risk that such organizations will become involved in litigation or be the subject of public controversy creates the possibility that the judge will be placed in an awkward position, both in relation to public confidence in the judge's impartiality and in the judiciary as a whole. While judges may consider accepting such positions, they should reflect on issues of perceived or actual conflict before doing so, all with a view to determining whether the role can be structured in such a way so as to avoid conflicts and appearances of conflict.

5.B.11 D'autre part, l'engagement social et communautaire des juges peut parfois compromettre leur image d'impartialité. Les juges devraient faire preuve de prudence lorsqu'ils envisagent de participer à des activités sociales ou communautaires et être sensibles au fait que l'accession à la magistrature leur impose des limites à cet égard. L'opportunité d'une participation devrait être appréciée en fonction du type de service public envisagé, des activités et objectifs de l'organisme, du rôle que le juge serait appelé à y jouer, du risque que l'organisme soit partie à un litige et de tout autre facteur pertinent.

5.B.12 En général, les juges devraient s'abstenir d'adhérer ou de s'associer à un groupement ou à un organisme, ou de participer à un débat public, lorsque, du point de vue d'une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée, cette adhésion ou cette participation serait susceptible de miner la confiance dans l'impartialité des juges relativement à des questions susceptibles d'être soumises aux tribunaux. Dans le cadre de leurs activités sociales ou communautaires, les juges doivent s'abstenir de donner des conseils juridiques ou des conseils en matière de placements et devraient éviter de participer à des causes ou à des organisations susceptibles d'être impliquées dans un litige. Les juges ne devraient envisager d'occuper des postes de dirigeant ou d'administrateur d'un organisme social ou communautaire qu'avec la plus grande prudence.

5.B.13 Bien que certains juges du Canada aient dans le passé occupé des fonctions de leadership au sein d'entités telles que des universités ou des organisations religieuses, l'exercice de telles fonctions peut soulever des difficultés. Il existe un risque que ces entités soient parties à un litige, ou qu'elles fassent l'objet d'une controverse publique, ce qui pourrait placer le juge dans une situation délicate du point de vue de la confiance du public, tant à l'égard de son impartialité qu'à l'endroit de la magistrature dans son ensemble. Avant d'accepter de telles fonctions, les juges devraient considérer les risques de conflit réel ou perçu et s'il est possible d'établir une structure permettant d'éviter les conflits et les apparences de conflit.

5.B.14 Involvement with a community organization that at one time was appropriate may become inappropriate. Judges should re-evaluate these associations in light of changing circumstances.

Social Media

5.B.15 Social media activities are subject to the overarching principles that guide judicial behaviour. Judges should be aware of how their activities on social media may reflect on themselves and upon the judiciary and should be attentive to the potential implications for their ability to perform their judicial role. Judges should also be attentive to and may wish to inform family members of the ways in which their social media activities could reflect adversely on the judge.

5.B.16 Communication by social media is more public and more permanent than many other forms of communication. It enables messages to be re-transmitted beyond the originators' control and without their consent. Comments or images intended for a limited audience can be shared, almost instantaneously, with a vast audience and may create an adverse reaction far beyond what one may have considered possible. Social media can also create greater opportunities for inappropriate communications to judges from others.

5.B.14 La participation à un organisme social ou communautaire qui est jugée appropriée à un moment donné peut cesser de l'être par la suite. Les juges devraient réévaluer leurs associations en fonction des changements de circonstances.

Médias sociaux

5.B.15 Les communications dans les médias sociaux sont assujetties aux principes fondamentaux qui guident la conduite des juges. Les juges devraient être conscients du fait que ces communications peuvent ternir leur réputation et celle de la magistrature et se répercuter sur leur capacité d'exercer leurs fonctions judiciaires. Par ailleurs, les juges devraient être conscients que les communications des membres de leur famille pourraient également se répercuter défavorablement sur eux; il pourrait y avoir lieu de les en informer.

5.B.16 Les communications affichées dans les médias sociaux peuvent rarement être effacées et n'ont pas vraiment de caractère privé. Elles peuvent facilement être disséminées sans le consentement de leur auteur et échapper à son contrôle. Les commentaires et les images destinés à être partagés dans un cercle fermé peuvent être rediffusés, parfois instantanément, à un vaste auditoire et provoquer une réaction défavorable qui dépasse largement ce qu'on aurait imaginé. Les médias sociaux ouvrent aussi des avenues additionnelles permettant à un membre du public de transmettre des communications inappropriées à un membre de la magistrature.

5.B.17 Judges' communications and associations with others are commonly used as a basis for claims of lack of impartiality. Judges should be vigilant in minimizing reasonable apprehensions of bias arising from these communications and associations. This is all the more important, and difficult, in the age of social media. Judges who choose to use social media should exercise great caution in their communications and associations within these networks, including expressions of support or disapproval. This includes judges informing themselves about the functioning, and the application, of security and privacy settings appropriate to their use of social media.

5.B.18 In a digital world, out-of-court information is much more accessible and the acquisition of such information by a judge is more readily discoverable. Accordingly, judges should be vigilant to avoid inappropriately acquiring or receiving out-of-court information related to the parties, witnesses or issues under consideration in matters before them. Fairness issues may need to be considered by the judge should this happen.

Gifts and Remuneration

5.B.19 Judges must not accept gifts from litigants, lawyers, law firms or any other person in contexts that give rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias. This does not prevent judges from accepting gifts of nominal value in appreciation for having spoken at or contributed to events or conferences, or have their reasonable expenses reimbursed. Such gifts are acceptable, provided that they do not represent remuneration and their acceptance would not create, in the mind of a reasonable and informed person, a perception of partiality.

5.B.17 Les allégations touchant le manque d'impartialité sont souvent fondées sur des propos des juges ou sur le fait qu'ils entretiennent des rapports avec certaines personnes. Les juges devraient éviter que de telles communications ou de tels rapports donnent prise à une crainte raisonnable quant à leur impartialité. Les médias sociaux compliquent les choses à cet égard. Les juges qui choisissent d'y être présents devraient faire preuve d'une grande prudence dans leurs communications, y compris en ce qui concerne l'usage de symboles d'approbation ou de désaccord. Ils devraient également se renseigner sur le fonctionnement et l'application des paramètres de sécurité et de protection de la vie privée convenant à leur utilisation des médias sociaux.

5.B.18 À l'ère numérique, il est beaucoup plus facile d'accéder à des renseignements extrajudiciaires et de laisser des traces en le faisant. Par conséquent, les juges devraient veiller à éviter d'obtenir ou de recevoir de façon inappropriée des renseignements extrajudiciaires relatifs aux parties, aux témoins ou aux questions dont ils sont saisis. Une telle situation, si elle survenait, pourrait soulever des questions d'équité que le juge pourrait devoir prendre en considération.

Cadeaux et rémunération

5.B.19 Les juges ne doivent pas accepter de cadeaux de la part des parties à un litige, d'avocats ou de leur cabinet ou de toute autre personne lorsque cela est susceptible de susciter une crainte raisonnable de partialité. Cela ne signifie pas qu'il est interdit aux juges d'accepter des cadeaux de valeur symbolique pour leur contribution à la tenue d'événements ou de conférences ou d'obtenir le remboursement de frais raisonnables. De tels cadeaux sont acceptables, en autant qu'ils ne constituent pas une rémunération et que le fait de les accepter ne susciterait pas chez une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée une perception de partialité.

Speeches and Conferences

5.B.20 It is common for judges to be asked to speak in public. Judges' public engagement aimed at educating others is a benefit to the judiciary and the public they serve. Judges are encouraged to attend events as speakers, both to contribute their knowledge and to undertake their own professional development. However, speaking in public carries risks to the public perception of the judge's impartiality and must be approached with care. Judges should give careful consideration to a range of factors when deciding whether to accept a speaking invitation and, if so, what the judge may properly address in a speech. These include: (i) the organization inviting the judge to speak; (ii) the anticipated audience; (iii) the topic or general theme to be addressed in the speech; (iv) the degree to which the topic relates to matters concerning the judiciary or the courts; (v) whether the topic or the judge's remarks relates to a matter of public policy or public controversy; vi) the likelihood that the speech will be reported on, recorded or made available to a broader public; and (vii) the value of the judge's remarks in informing or educating the intended audience. If judges have any doubts regarding the appropriateness of accepting a speaking engagement they should seek the advice of their Chief Justice.

Attendance at Events

5.B.21 Judges may attend social or public events, or conferences provided that such attendance does not compromise their impartiality and the nature of the event, or host, does not raise other concerns related to Ethical Principles.

Discours et participation à des conférences

5.B.20 Il est fréquent que des juges soient invités à prendre la parole en public. La participation des juges à des programmes éducatifs est bénéfique, tant pour la magistrature que pour le public qu'elle sert. Il est souhaitable que les juges donnent des conférences et contribuent par ce moyen à l'avancement des connaissances et à leur propre perfectionnement professionnel. Cependant, la prise de parole en public peut nuire à la perception d'impartialité des juges et devrait être abordée prudemment. Avant d'accepter une invitation à prononcer une conférence, et d'en déterminer le contenu, les juges devraient analyser avec soin un certain nombre d'éléments, dont les suivants : (i) la provenance de l'invitation, (ii) l'auditoire envisagé, (iii) le sujet ou le thème à aborder, (iv) le rapport plus ou moins étroit entre le sujet à aborder et les questions qui touchent la magistrature ou les tribunaux, (v) le rapport entre le sujet à aborder ou l'allocution du juge et des questions de politique publique ou des enjeux controversés, (vi) la probabilité que le discours soit cité dans les médias, enregistré ou autrement mis à la disposition du public et (vii) l'intérêt des propos du juge du point de vue de l'information ou de l'éducation du public. En cas de doute quant à l'opportunité d'accepter une invitation, les juges devraient consulter leur juge en chef.

Présence à des événements

5.B.21 Les juges peuvent participer à des événements sociaux ou publics ou à des congrès ou colloques, pourvu que leur présence ne mette pas en péril leur impartialité, ou que la nature de l'événement ou l'identité de l'hôte ne soulève pas de crainte au regard des Principes de déontologie.

5.B.22 Judges may participate in social programs at conferences provided that they are generally available to attendees or speakers and the sponsorship, nature and extent of social programs would not create, in the view of a reasonable and informed person, a perception of lack of impartiality.

5.B.23 Attendance by a judge at conferences and social events sponsored by businesses or organizations is potentially problematic. Where invited, the judge should consider the organization hosting the event, whether the invitation has also been extended to community leaders, the purpose for which the judge was invited and the potential for adverse public perception as a result of the attendance.

5.B.24 When judges are invited to attend social events associated with the law or the legal profession, or hosted by law firms, they should consider the nature of the social event, its sponsorship, the other invitees and attendees at the event, the purpose for which the judge has been invited, the existence of a previous personal relationship with the host and attendees, as well as the benefit to the judge, the judiciary and the legal profession as a result of the judge's attendance. Judges should avoid attendance at such events if a purpose of the event is to advance a commercial interest, to showcase the host's relationship with the judge, or if clients are in attendance.

5.B.22 Les juges peuvent participer au volet social de congrès ou de colloques, en autant que ces activités soient normalement accessibles aux participants ou aux conférenciers et que le commanditaire, la nature et l'étendue de ces activités sociales soient tels qu'ils ne puissent susciter chez une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée la perception d'un manque d'impartialité.

5.B.23 La participation des juges à des congrès ou colloques ou à des activités sociales qui sont commandités par des entreprises ou des organismes peut soulever des difficultés. Lorsqu'ils sont invités, les juges devraient prendre en compte la nature de l'organisme hôte, le fait que d'autres personnes en vue au sein de la collectivité ont aussi été invitées, l'intention derrière l'invitation faite aux juges et la possibilité que le public perçoive défavorablement la présence de juges à un tel événement.

5.B.24 La participation des juges à des activités sociales liées au droit ou à la profession juridique ou organisées par un cabinet d'avocats devrait aussi être évaluée en fonction de la nature de l'événement, de l'identité des commanditaires, de l'identité des autres participants ou invités, de l'intention derrière l'invitation faite aux juges, de l'existence de liens personnels antérieurs entre le juge et les hôtes ou autres invités, et du bénéfice qui résulterait de la présence du juge d'un point de vue personnel, du point de vue de la magistrature ou de celui de la profession juridique. Les juges devraient s'abstenir de participer à de telles activités si leur objet est lié à des fins commerciales, si l'événement vise à souligner l'existence d'une relation entre le juge et l'hôte ou si des clients de l'hôte sont présents.

Conflicts of Interest

5.C.1 The discussion of conflicts of interest in Ethical Principles is not intended to state the law relating to judicial disqualification or recusal. It is intended to provide guidance to judges as they identify and assess the circumstances in which their personal interests may be reasonably viewed by others as conflicting with their judicial duties. In assessing their ethical duties in this context, judges should remain conscious of the demands of the sound administration of justice and their duty to hear the cases assigned to them.

5.C.2 The potential for a conflict of interest arises when the personal interest of the judge (or of those close to the judge) conflicts with the judge's duty to adjudicate impartially. Judicial impartiality is concerned with impartiality in fact and in the perception of a reasonable and informed person. As a result, judges should be attentive to both actual conflicts between their self-interest and their duty of impartial adjudication, and to circumstances in which a reasonable and informed person would reasonably apprehend a conflict.

5.C.3 Conflicts of interest may arise from: a pecuniary or non-pecuniary interest in the outcome; a close family, personal or professional relationship with a litigant, counsel or witness; or the judge having expressed views evidencing bias regarding a litigant or an issue that is before the court.

Conflits d'intérêts

5.C.1 Les Principes de déontologie n'ont pas pour objet de traiter du droit relatif à la récusation des juges. Dans le présent document, la discussion des conflits d'intérêts vise à offrir aux juges des pistes de réflexion qui leur permettent d'identifier et d'évaluer les circonstances où leurs intérêts personnels pourraient raisonnablement être vus par d'autres comme entrant en conflit avec leurs fonctions judiciaires. Lorsqu'ils évaluent leurs obligations déontologiques dans ce cadre, les juges devraient garder à l'esprit les exigences d'une saine administration de la justice et leur devoir d'entendre les affaires qui leur sont confiées.

5.C.2 Il y a risque de conflit d'intérêts lorsque l'intérêt personnel du juge (ou de ses proches) s'oppose à son devoir de rendre la justice avec impartialité. L'impartialité judiciaire s'entend à la fois de l'impartialité réelle et de l'impartialité apparente, selon la perception d'une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée. Par conséquent, les juges doivent être sensibles non seulement aux conflits réels entre leur intérêt personnel et leur devoir de rendre la justice de manière impartiale, mais également aux situations dans lesquelles une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée éprouverait une crainte raisonnable de conflit d'intérêts.

5.C.3 Un conflit d'intérêts peut survenir lorsque les juges ont un intérêt patrimonial ou extrapatrimonial dans l'issue d'un procès; une relation de parenté, une amitié proche ou une relation professionnelle avec une partie, un avocat ou un témoin; ou lorsque les juges expriment des opinions manifestant de la partialité à l'égard d'une partie ou d'un enjeu débattu devant le tribunal.

5.C.4 Upon appointment, judges must immediately cease practicing law, and should divest themselves and remain divested of their interests in commercial and business activities. Severance of all association with the judge's legal practice should be done as quickly as possible, ideally in an immediate and final way.

5.C.5 Generally speaking, judges are entitled to manage 'passive' investments that do not constitute 'carrying on business', provided that the investment is truly passive with little active management required. Nevertheless, judges should not participate in a case in which they have a financial, property or other interest that could be affected by its outcome or in which their interest would give rise to a potential apprehension of lack of impartiality by a reasonable and informed person. This is true whether the interest is itself the subject matter of the controversy or where the outcome of the case could materially affect the value of any interest or property owned by the judge, the judge's family or close associates. There is no conflict where the judge's financial or property interest is limited to one shared by citizens generally. Owning an insurance policy, having a bank account, using a credit card or owning securities in a widely held enterprise would not, in normal circumstances, constitute a conflict of interest, unless the outcome of the proceedings before the judge could substantially affect such holdings.

5.C.4 Dès leur nomination, les juges doivent immédiatement cesser de pratiquer le droit et devraient se départir, de façon définitive, de leurs intérêts dans toute activité commerciale ou d'affaires. Les liens existant avec leur cabinet devraient être rompus aussi rapidement que possible, idéalement de manière immédiate et définitive.

5.C.5 De manière générale, les juges peuvent détenir des placements « passifs » qui ne constituent pas « la poursuite d'une entreprise », en autant qu'il s'agisse de placements véritablement passifs exigeant peu ou pas de gestion active. Néanmoins, les juges ne devraient pas présider de procès qui mettent en jeu leur propre intérêt pécuniaire ou autre ou leur patrimoine ou dans lesquels leur intérêt pourrait susciter chez une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée la crainte qu'ils pourraient ne pas juger de façon impartiale. Ce principe s'applique aussi bien dans le cas où l'intérêt lui-même est l'objet du litige que dans celui où l'issue du procès pourrait avoir une incidence importante sur la valeur de tout intérêt ou bien appartenant au juge, à sa famille ou à des proches. Il n'y a généralement pas de conflit d'intérêts lorsque l'intérêt financier ou patrimonial du juge est équivalent à celui de la population en général. Ainsi, dans des circonstances normales, ne constituerait pas un conflit d'intérêts le fait de détenir une police d'assurance, d'avoir un compte bancaire, d'utiliser une carte de crédit ou de détenir des titres d'une société inscrite en bourse, à moins que le résultat du litige devant le juge ne puisse affecter substantiellement la valeur de ces intérêts.

Acting as Executors

5.C.6 Judges should not normally act as an executor or fiduciary, unless it concerns the affairs of a close friend or relative and is unlikely to become contentious. Even in that case, judges should not be remunerated for that role and should not act if the executorship may interfere with the performance of judicial duties.

Judges' Former Legal Practice

5.C.7 Judges should be sensitive to the existence of relationships which, to a reasonable and informed person, would give rise to reasonable apprehension of lack of impartiality. In particular, judges will face this issue in relation to cases involving former clients, members of the judge's former law firm or lawyers from the government department or legal aid office in which the judge practiced before appointment. Each case is unique and the apprehension of bias should be assessed in light of all the circumstances. The following general guidelines may be helpful: (i) judges who were involved in private practice should not sit on any case in which the judge or, to their knowledge, the judge's former firm was directly involved in any capacity before the judge was appointed to office; (ii) judges who practised law in government service or legal aid should not sit on cases in which they had any involvement prior to their appointment; (iii) judges should not sit on a matter in which the judge's former law firm is involved until after a 'cooling off period', often established by local law or tradition, of between two and five years; and, (iv) judges should not sit on a matter in which the judge's former law firm is involved for at least as long as there continues to be a financial relationship between the judge and the law firm.

Agir comme liquidateur

5.C.6 De manière générale, les juges ne devraient pas agir comme liquidateur d'une succession ou comme fiduciaire ou fondé de pouvoir, si ce n'est pour le bénéfice d'un ami proche ou d'un membre de leur famille, et à la condition qu'il soit peu probable que la situation devienne litigieuse. Même dans ce cas, les juges ne devraient pas être rémunérés pour cette tâche, laquelle ne devrait pas être acceptée si elle est susceptible de nuire à l'exercice des fonctions judiciaires.

Activités professionnelles antérieures

5.C.7 Les juges devraient être sensibles à l'existence de relations susceptibles de susciter, chez une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée, une crainte raisonnable quant à leur impartialité. Les juges devront parfois se demander s'il convient d'entendre des affaires qui impliquent d'anciens clients, des membres de leur ancien cabinet ou des avocats du ministère ou du bureau d'aide juridique dans lequel ils ont exercé avant leur accession à la magistrature. Chaque cas est unique et la crainte de partialité devrait être appréciée en fonction de toutes les circonstances. Les recommandations suivantes pourraient s'avérer utiles : (i) les juges qui exerçaient en pratique privée ne devraient pas entendre les litiges dans lesquels ils agissaient ou, à leur connaissance, leur ancien cabinet agissait à quelque titre que ce soit, avant leur accession à la magistrature; (ii) les juges qui exerçaient au sein de la fonction publique ou à l'aide juridique ne devraient pas entendre les litiges dans lesquels ils agissaient à quelque titre que ce soit avant leur accession à la magistrature; (iii) les juges ne devraient pas entendre les autres dossiers menés par leur ancien cabinet avant l'expiration d'une certaine période, souvent établie par la loi ou les usages locaux, de deux à cinq ans à compter de leur nomination, et (iv) les juges ne devraient pas entendre les dossiers menés par leur ancien cabinet au moins aussi longtemps que perdurent leurs relations financières avec celui-ci.

Personal Relationships

5.C.8 Frequently judges are faced with situations where the lawyer appearing before the judge is from a law firm where a close friend or member of the judge's immediate family is a partner, associate or employee. It would be inappropriate for a judge to hear a case involving a close friend or family member. Generally speaking, it would not be problematic for a judge to sit on a case involving a lawyer from a firm in which the close friend or family member is a member or employee, provided that the friend or family member has not been involved in the matter. However, there may be circumstances where it would be inappropriate for a judge to hear such a case. For example, where the law firm is very small (such that there is a greater risk of the perception of lack of impartiality) or where the law firm stands to gain or lose significantly by the outcome, such that the judge's decision would result in a monetary or reputational gain or loss to the close family member or friend or former colleague.

Judges in Financial Difficulty

5.C.9 Judges who are in financial difficulty should be particularly vigilant for conflicts of interest, both actual and perceived. Problems arise where judges in these circumstances preside over matters involving their creditors. Serious questions arise if any aspect of the judge's financial difficulties becomes contentious and the possibility of the judge appearing before a judicial colleague as a party or a witness could arise. The actual day-to-day impact of the financial difficulties on the judge's ability to perform the job will obviously vary considerably depending on the circumstances.

Relations personnelles

5.C.8 Il arrive fréquemment que les juges entendent des affaires où l'une des parties est représentée par un cabinet au sein duquel un ami proche ou un membre de leur famille immédiate pratique le droit ou est employé. Il serait inapproprié que des juges entendent des affaires impliquant des membres de leur famille immédiate ou des amis proches. De manière générale, il n'est pas inapproprié qu'un juge entende une affaire où l'une des parties est représentée par un avocat appartenant au même cabinet qu'un ami proche ou un membre de leur famille, pour autant que cette personne n'ait pas participé au dossier. Néanmoins, cette situation pourrait devenir problématique dans certaines circonstances, comme lorsque le cabinet est très petit (accroissant le risque que le juge soit perçu comme manquant d'impartialité) ou lorsque l'enjeu du litige est susceptible de profiter ou de nuire grandement au cabinet, de telle sorte que la décision du juge puisse entraîner un gain ou une perte pécuniaire pour le membre de la famille immédiate, l'ami ou l'ancien collègue ou être favorable ou défavorable à sa réputation.

Les juges en difficulté financière

5.C.9 Les juges qui éprouvent des difficultés financières devraient prendre particulièrement garde aux conflits d'intérêts, tant réels qu'apparents. Des problèmes surviennent lorsque des juges, dans de telles circonstances, président des procès dont l'objet concerne un de leurs créanciers. De graves questions se poseront si un aspect ou un autre des difficultés financières du juge devient litigieux et qu'il est possible que le juge soit forcé de comparaître devant un collègue à titre de partie ou de témoin. Il est difficile de systématiser les conséquences réelles des difficultés financières des juges sur leur capacité d'accomplir quotidiennement leur tâche; ces conséquences varieront selon les circonstances.

Disclosure and Consent

5.C.10 In certain situations, it may be appropriate for a judge to make disclosure of a potential conflict and invite submissions from the parties. However, judges, not the parties or their counsel, bear the burden of ensuring respect for the principle of judicial impartiality. Neither disclosure of a conflict of interest nor the consent of the parties necessarily justifies judges ignoring circumstances which reasonably call into question their ability to hear a case and decide impartially.

Extraordinary Circumstances: Interests of Justice

5.C.11 Extraordinary or urgent circumstances may require judges to weigh the requirements of judicial impartiality against the risk of injustice.

5.C.12 Circumstances which might cause only minor inconvenience to a large court might nonetheless have a significant practical impact on a smaller court. Judges should organize their private affairs to minimize the potential for such conflicts.

Divulgation et consentement

5.C.10 Il peut être approprié pour un juge de divulguer l'existence d'une situation de conflit d'intérêts potentiel et d'inviter les parties à faire des représentations à ce sujet. C'est effectivement aux juges, plutôt qu'aux parties ou à leurs avocats, qu'il incombe de faire respecter le principe d'impartialité. Ni la divulgation du conflit d'intérêts ni le consentement des parties ne permettent forcément aux juges d'ignorer les circonstances dans lesquelles une personne raisonnable pourrait craindre que l'affaire ne puisse être entendue ou jugée de manière impartiale.

Circonstances extraordinaires : intérêt de la justice

5.C.11 Des circonstances extraordinaires ou urgentes peuvent exiger que les juges cherchent un équilibre entre le principe l'impartialité judiciaire et la nécessité d'éviter une injustice.

5.C.12 Les circonstances qui pourraient n'entraîner que de légers inconvénients pour une juridiction de grande taille pourraient avoir de graves répercussions pour un tribunal de moindre envergure. Les juges devraient organiser leurs affaires personnelles de manière à atténuer le risque que surviennent de tels conflits.

Public Education Activities

5.D.1 Judges possess significant knowledge of the law and the legal system. For this reason, they should make reasonable efforts to become engaged in informing and educating the public regarding the rule of law and the role of judges and courts in the administration of justice. Chief Justices have particular responsibilities and opportunities in relation to such public engagement, including public communications on behalf of their courts.

5.D.2 Subject to the limitations imposed by s. 55 of the Judges Act and these Ethical Principles, judicial participation in law reform or other scholarly or educational activities are not discouraged, provided that such involvement does not include participation in campaigns in support of, or the championing of, law reform initiatives.

Éducation du public

5.D.1 Les juges connaissent à fond le droit et le système de justice. Pour cette raison, ils devraient s'efforcer dans la mesure du possible d'informer et de renseigner le public sur la primauté du droit et le rôle des juges et des tribunaux dans l'administration de la justice. À cet égard, les juges en chef ont une responsabilité accrue, y compris pour ce qui concerne les communications qui émanent de leur cour.

5.D.2 Sous réserve des restrictions imposées par l'article 55 de la Loi sur les juges et par les Principes de déontologie, la participation des juges à des travaux de réforme du droit et à d'autres activités de recherche ou d'éducation n'est pas découragée, pour autant qu'elle n'inclue pas la contribution à des campagnes de soutien à des initiatives de réforme du droit ou la promotion de telles initiatives.

Post-Judicial Careers[9]

5.E.1 Judges may choose to move on to another career after leaving the bench. This raises several ethical considerations. One issue relates to the situation of judges prior to departure from judicial office. There may well be circumstances in which planning for one's post-judicial career undermines the perception of impartiality a judge should maintain. Discussions, negotiations or proposals of employment with a law firm, a prospective employer who is a litigant before the judge or a party in a case where the judge has delivered a judgment, may create the impression of a conflict of interest. The same concern exists where a judge is soliciting such opportunities. Whether the overture comes from the judge or the prospective employer, there is a risk that the judge's self-interest and duty would appear to conflict in the eyes of a reasonable and informed person. Accordingly, judges should refrain from engaging in such conversations before their judicial term has come to an end.

9 Canadian Judicial Council Position on Former Judges Returning to Practice (2017)

Carrière post-judiciaire[9]

5.E.1 Il est possible que des juges amorcent une nouvelle carrière après avoir quitté la magistrature. Cette situation soulève plusieurs enjeux éthiques. Un premier type de préoccupation concerne la situation des juges pendant la période qui précède leur départ de la magistrature. Les gestes posés par les juges dans la planification de leur carrière post-judiciaire peuvent, dans certaines circonstances, porter atteinte à l'apparence d'impartialité qu'ils devraient maintenir. Les discussions ou négociations relatives à un emploi avec un cabinet d'avocats ou un autre employeur éventuel qui est partie à une affaire en cours ou à un litige tranché par le juge pourraient susciter une apparence de conflit d'intérêts. La même inquiétude s'attache aux expressions d'intérêt ou propositions qui pourraient être faites par les juges auprès d'employeurs éventuels. Que les invitations discrètes émanent des juges ou de l'employeur éventuel, une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée pourrait y voir un conflit entre l'intérêt personnel du juge et son devoir. Par conséquent, les juges devraient éviter de participer à de telles conversations avant que leurs fonctions judiciaires n'aient pris fin.

9 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, Position sur les anciens juges qui reprennent l'exercice du droit après avoir quitté la magistrature (2017)

5.E.2 The situation of the judge upon leaving judicial office also introduces ethical considerations. Where former judges are professionally active, their conduct can have an impact on the public's perception of the judiciary as a whole. Accordingly, former judges should be attentive to the ways in which their post-judicial actions or activities could undermine public confidence in the judiciary. Former judges are able to return to the legal profession, but there are limits to the types of activities in which they can engage, consistent with the preservation of the principle of impartiality. A former judge could act as an arbitrator, mediator or commissioner. However, former judges should not appear as counsel before a court or tribunal in Canada. Appearance as counsel is broader than physical appearance. While it is appropriate for former judges to review or draft legal arguments and pleadings, to provide advice to counsel and parties, a former judge should not stand, speak or appear as counsel in court or before a tribunal or sign legal documents that are or may be the subject of proceedings before a court or tribunal. This constraint may be subject to exceptions where a judge has left the judiciary after a very short time.

5.E.3 Former judges should exercise appropriate caution in accepting retainers and providing legal advice in high profile or politically contentious matters where it can be anticipated that a client may make use of the judge's former status to advance the client's interests.

5.E.4 Former judges should not disclose the confidential discussions among judges – for example, the deliberations of an appellate court – or discuss anything that gives the appearance of relying on confidential information or judicial confidences.

5.E.2 La situation des juges qui quittent la magistrature soulève également des considérations éthiques. La conduite des juges qui retournent à la vie professionnelle peut affecter la perception qu'a le public de la magistrature dans son ensemble. Les anciens juges devraient être sensibles au fait que leurs activités ou actions pourraient miner la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature. Les juges peuvent réintégrer la profession juridique à l'issue de leur carrière judiciaire, mais certaines restrictions s'appliquent aux types d'activités qui s'ouvrent à eux afin que soit préservé le principe d'impartialité. Les anciens juges peuvent exercer des fonctions d'arbitre, de médiateur ou de commissaire. Néanmoins, ils ne devraient pas comparaître en tant qu'avocat devant une cour ou un tribunal au Canada. La comparution en tant qu'avocat va au-delà de la comparution en personne. Bien qu'il soit approprié pour un ancien juge de rédiger ou de réviser des documents juridiques ou des actes de procédure, ou de donner des conseils aux avocats et aux parties, ils ne devraient pas plaider devant une cour de justice ou un tribunal, ni apposer leur signature sur un document juridique dont l'objet est ou pourrait être lié à une instance. Il est possible que des exceptions à ce principe soient admises à l'égard de juges qui ont quitté la magistrature très peu de temps après leur nomination.

5.E.3 Les anciens juges devraient faire preuve de la prudence requise avant d'accepter un mandat et de donner des conseils juridiques lorsque le client est susceptible d'utiliser l'ancien statut du juge comme levier pour faire avancer ses intérêts dans un dossier controversé sur le terrain politique ou une affaire qui attire beaucoup d'attention sur la scène publique.

5.E.4 D'autre part, les anciens juges ne devraient pas révéler la teneur des discussions confidentielles auxquelles ils ont participé – en tant que membre d'une formation d'une cour d'appel, par exemple – ou révéler quoi que ce soit qui puisse donner à croire qu'ils s'appuient sur des informations confidentielles ou liées au secret judiciaire.

Model Definition of Judicial Information

BACKGROUND AND PURPOSE

The purpose of this document is to propose a single model for identifying, defining and classifying the terms "Judicial Information" and "Judicial Users" which could be recommended for use by all courts in Canada. Such definitions are required for claiming control over information, whether in the hands of the court, the judiciary, or third parties; protecting the security of sensitive information (in accordance with the Blueprint[1]); safeguarding the independent oversight of judicial administration; migrating to the cloud (as contemplated in the Cloud Guidelines), and developing a retention schedule. In fact, the establishment of a common definition and framework for identification and classification is necessary to allow the courts to react and respond to the evolution of technology, court operations and the practice of law.

This work is a companion to the Background Report presented to the Council's Technology Committee on February 16, 2020. Past efforts at defining Judicial Information have tended to emphasize the distinctions between Judicial Information and Court Information. Using a broad constitutional model, it seemed simple (and appropriate) to assign the governance of Court Information to the Executive Branch (as the body legally responsible for the administration of justice) and the governance of a distinct yet smaller collection of so-called Judicial Information to the judiciary. The definition of Judicial Information as proposed in the 2013 Framework was adopted in the Blueprint and in some courts.

It is important to note that while the Framework helped isolate "Judicial Information" from the broader category of "Court Information," it did not purport to limit the judiciary's policy-making role in that regard. On the contrary.

Council's focus on Judicial Information as a data source distinct from Court Information helped many courts to develop policies protecting the core of judicial independence, deliberative secrecy and personal privacy. The Blueprint (and the subsequent Cloud Guidelines) assigned special status to information derived from the adjudicative process, to data about judicial education, productivity and discipline; and to the personal information of judges.

Contrary to the narrower focus that has been historically applied, the Framework was intended to apply to all Court Information. While Judicial Information is a special category of Court Information that may demand enhanced measures to protect judicial independence, the judiciary should not consider itself limited to policy-making in that regard alone.

Given the broad and comprehensive scope of the Framework, and its detailed proposed definitions, why is further work required of Council now? The main reason is that the landscape has changed. Technology moves quickly, bureaucracy moves slowly. 2013 seems a lifetime ago. For example:

1. Many Canadian judges have had their office productivity tools and data (email, word processing, calendar) moved to the cloud, and most others are in transition or in the planning stages of such a move; for the Council, this is the key driver for a reassessment of what constitutes Judicial Information.

2. Some courts have implemented electronic case management and e-filing systems, and more are in development. This represents a significant change in the form and accessibility of Court and Judicial Information.
3. Concerns about the erosion of judicial independence in some jurisdictions continue to prompt more innovative thinking in respect of information and technology governance.
4. New technologies such as analytics and artificial intelligence are driving more sophisticated requests for bulk access to Court and Judicial Information.
5. Despite the availability of the Framework as a guide to policy development in the area, there is growing recognition that few courts have actually developed robust information governance policies.
6. The sudden restrictions imposed on courts in light of COVID-19 has been a wake-up call for the urgent need for policies and procedures in respect of virtual hearings and e-filing solutions.
7. As policies are developed, inconsistent approaches to the definition of key terms add unnecessary cost and complexity.

The benefits of a model definition are therefore clear:

1. Lowering the risks of moving sensitive information to the cloud and managing online case management systems.
2. Developing clearer scopes for agreements such as MOUs in relation to information governance, the sharing of roles and responsibilities and the opportunity to co-operate more meaningfully with the executive branch.
3. The ability of courts to consistently and appropriately respond to novel requests for bulk access to court information, balancing the open courts principle against legitimate needs for confidentiality, privacy and integrity.
4. Improving the decision-making process and reducing risk and liability, on a solid foundation of information governance policies.
5. Smoothing the transition from in-person to virtual proceedings to maximize access to justice and the efficiency of court administration.
6. Increased standardization and consistency in how information is governed across all courts and jurisdictions to enhance public trust in the system, reduce conflicts and lower costs.

TABLE OF KEY DEFINITIONS

The definitions table illustrates the complex, interwoven relationships among the different types of information in a court. This is one of the important distinctions between the pre-computer days and today. Before courts used digital information systems, all court information was in the form of a “document” or “record.” These were physical items that were filed in manila folders and lodged in steel filing cabinets. Today we are dealing with invisible data, often not in the form of a document or file but in the form of a database entry, an embedded object or a hypertext link. A judge’s case notes are clearly “Judicial Information” but how do we isolate them when they are embedded in a PDF file or comprise text in a field in a database of an online case management system?

The table shows that some Court Operations, Administrative and Adjudicative Judicial Information may be found within the Case File and Court Record. For example, a draft judgment is Adjudicative Information, but when finalized it forms part of the Court Record. Some Registry Office Information about a particular proceeding could find its way into the Case File. The model below provides flexibility, is consistent with the constitutional premise of the administration of justice, and at the same time shows how the judiciary must be involved in developing governance policies over a broad swathe of Information.

Framework: “This term refers to the “Official” Court Record. [2] In Quebec, “Documents d’activité des tribunaux” (synonymous with “Documents judiciaires”) is translated as “Court Records (plural).” This is a broad category that includes the “Dossier judiciaire”, or Case file. In the Framework, which is followed here, the Court Record (singular) is a part of the broader Case File. There does not appear to be a corresponding term in Quebec for the narrower concept of Court Record.

MODEL DEFINITIONS

These proposed definitions derive from a number of sources, including the Framework, the references cited in Annex 6, and documents referred to in the Background Report.

Term	Definition
Case File / Dossier judiciaire	A Case File contains the Information that relates directly to a single court proceeding or to a number of related court proceedings that have all been assigned the same case file number. It includes the Information that comprises the Court Record and any other Information that has been captured or placed in the Case File.
Court Information / Information judiciaire	Court Information is Information that is received, collected, stored, used or produced by a court in relation to its mission.
Court Operations Information[3]	Information related to the supervision, management and direction of matters necessary for the operation of the Court or other matters assigned to the Executive by law or agreement (such as a Memorandum of Understanding). In Quebec, Case Management Tools (Outils de gestion des causes) and Court Monitoring Tools (Outils de suivi des affaires judiciaires) are included as subsets of the broad category of Court Records (Documents d'activité des tribunaux) and are probably best included under Court Operations Information.
Court Record / Document judiciaire	Information and other tangible items filed in proceedings and the information about those proceedings stored by the court. Refers to the "Official" recorded Information of a proceeding. It is the portion of the Case File that is made accessible to the public, subject to privacy constraints regarding, for example, disclosure of personal Information.
Information	Information includes recorded information in any medium or format, regardless of how it has been created. This includes information generated by human or other means.
Judicial Administration /	The supervision, management and direction of matters necessary for carrying out judicial functions, including:

[3] For the Framework definition and examples see Framework p. 66.

Term	Definition
Administration judiciaire	1. the scheduling, preparation, assignment and adjudication of court events; 2. the education, performance, conduct and discipline of Judicial Users; 3. the governance of Court Information and technology, and 4. all other matters assigned to the judiciary by law or agreement (such as a Memorandum of Understanding).
Judicial Information / Renseignements de la magistrature[4]	Irrespective of who created it or how it was created, Judicial Information includes: 1. Personal Information of Judicial Officers (Annex 5); 2. Information related to the exercise of a judicial function ("Adjudicative Information," Annex 3), and 3. Information related to Judicial Administration ("Administrative Information," Annex 4).
Judicial Agent / Agente ou agent judiciaire	A Judicial Agent is a Judicial User who supports a Judicial Officer and may include court staff such as executive officers, lawyers, paralegals, law clerks, JITSOs, law students, articling students, judicial clerks, administrative assistants, as well as independent consultants working under retainer or contract. (See Annex 1B: Judicial Agents.)
Judicial Officer / Officière ou officier judiciaire	A Judicial Officer is a Judicial User acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity, and includes judges, deputy judges, masters, justices of the peace, registrars, prothonotaries or anyone else authorized to act in an adjudicative role. (See Annex 1A: Judicial Officers.)
Judicial User / Utilisateur ou utilisatrice judiciaire	A Judicial User performs or supports judicial functions and may be authorized to access Judicial Information at various levels of permissions, depending on their role.

Annexes 1-5 list particular examples gathered from courts across the country: these lists are meant to be illustrative, not exhaustive, and may be modified to suit different purposes.

[4] While "Information Judiciaire" has been used for "Judicial Information" in the past, in French it means "Court Information." To avoid confusion, it is proposed that "Judicial Information" be translated as "Renseignements de la magistrature."

ANNEX 1A: JUDICIAL OFFICERS

- Assessment or taxation officers
- Associate Chief Judge / Justice
- Chief Judge / Justice
- [Puisne] Judge / Justice (including Supernumerary / Retired)
- Magistrate
- Master
- Prothonotary, Deputy Prothonotary
- Registrar, Deputy Registrar
- Senior Regional Judge / Justice
- Other judicial or quasi-judicial decision makers

ANNEX 1B: JUDICIAL AGENTS

- Administrative Assistant
- Bailiff
- Conciliator / Mediator
- Court Clerk
- Court Reporter
- Counsel
- Executive Officer
- External counsel, consultants and advisers
- JITSO (Judicial Information Technology Security Officer)
- Law Clerk
- Legal Counsel, Legal Officer
- Paralegal
- Public Relations Officer
- Publications Director
- Scheduling / ROTA Manager
- Sheriff
- Social media manager
- Supervisor of Court Administration
- Supervisor of Judicial Support
- Other

ANNEX 3: ADJUDICATIVE INFORMATION

Corresponding Framework definition:[5] Individual Judicial Information includes work product, research material and professional development information of staff Lawyers, Law Clerks and Judicial Officers.

- Bench books
- Bench memos or research memos prepared for a Judicial Officer
- Case planning conferences
- Communications and correspondence
- Condensed books and transcript
- Court clerk log notes
- Court Rules and Court Forms (blank)
- Court digital audio recordings and minute sheets
- Draft transcripts
- Judicial activities external to the court
- Jury charges
- Orders, endorsements, rulings, decisions, judgments and reasons for judgment
- Publication bans
- Recordings, notes or transcripts
- Reports - medical, psychiatric, financial
- Research material
- Settlement conferences
- Transcripts
- Trial management conferences
- Weekly Lists (Redacted or un-redacted)
- Working notes and annotations
- Other

ANNEX 4: ADMINISTRATIVE INFORMATION

Corresponding Framework definition: General Judicial Information includes information used by Chief Justices, committee materials, statistics, research material, and court-wide professional development information.

- Activity workload statistics

[5] The three categories of "Judicial Information" here (Adjudicative, Administrative and Personal) correspond broadly to the Framework's categories of "Individual, General and Personal respectively. For each category the original Framework definition is provided for cross-reference purposes. The new terminology is intended to make the distinctions clearer while maintaining the broad outline of the Framework's approach.

- Ad hoc appointments
- Appointment of various officials and representatives
- Attendance at educational programs
- Audio and video conferencing setup and configuration
- Blank electronic forms or templates
- Business intelligence
- Case management and tracking data
- Committee management
- Committee materials
- Communications with governments and other justice system stakeholders
- Conduct and discipline management
- Conference management
- Contracting and tender administration
- Court reporting
- Court-wide professional development information
- Courthouse telephone lists
- Education and training content and management
- E-filing systems information
- Emergency contact lists
- Administrative activities external to the court
- Financial resources management
- Governance management
- Human resources management
- Information and records management
- Information produced by the Executive Office
- Inventory management
- Judicial administration research material
- Language, translation and interpretation management
- Office of the Chief Judge / Justice information
- Policies, policy development and procedures
- Professional development information of Judicial Users
- Publication and public/media relations management
- Reporting and approving judicial leaves of absence
- Research, library and knowledge management
- Scheduling information (ROTA) (e.g. court events, sittings, orders, hearings, conferences, appearances)
- Standards setting e.g. for decision publication format
- Statistics
- Technology management
- Webcasting and televising of proceedings
- Other

ANNEX 5: PERSONAL INFORMATION OF JUDICIAL OFFICERS

Corresponding Framework definition: Personal Judicial Information includes information produced by, on behalf of, or relating to a Judicial Officer that does not directly relate to the function or role of the Judicial Officer and is not associated with a Case.[6]

- Audit logs containing summaries of computer system activities
- Conduct, discipline information
- Contact lists
- Educational program attendance record
- Expense claims and reimbursements
- File access log and user audit trail
- Judicial administration work product
- Judicial education program content
- Judicom messages, posts and other information
- Location tracking / security swipe card
- Personal account information
- Personal communications including email, voice mail, text messages etc.
- Personal calendar
- Personal notes, research or working papers
- Private or personal affairs and social interactions
- Scheduling of a Judicial Officer within a court calendar
- Social media drafts and posts
- Software applications or other electronic repositories
- Statistics showing a Judicial Officer's individual activity or workload
- Travel and location information
- Website browsing and search history
- Workload and performance information
- Other

[6] [Footnote 38, Framework:] The Administration of Justice Committee's Definitions Working Group concluded that it was not useful to venture a detailed definition of Personal Judicial Information beyond this. In each jurisdiction, it will be necessary to provide precise guidance to technologists in relation to Judicial Internet browsing history logs, email repositories, contact lists, calendars, text messages and voice mail when considering candidate information for this category.

BACKGROUND

This Model Policy follows upon the Council's earlier initiatives concerning court information. All courts, and the Council, recognized that the modern concept of "court information" was no longer merely a matter of official or administrative court records acquired or created intermittently, with limited bespoke content, and with practical obscurity arising from its documentary character and its ease of destruction.

A decade on, it is even more obvious and pressing that courts must recognize that "court information" is a far more encompassing concept and is far more accessible and far more durable than it once was. Accordingly, and in addition to its other responsibilities as to court information, each court needs to create, maintain, and review a systematic approach to the protection of sensitive court information throughout its life cycle. This Model Policy proposes a framework for courts to consider in that effort, and elaborates on policy 16 from the Council's Blueprint for the Security of Court Information:[1]

Policy 16a: Courts should adopt a classification scheme so that sensitive court information may be designated for special protection. Classification schemes as adopted should be consistent across all courts to ensure a common understanding of asset sensitivity and protection requirements.

Policy 16b: Classified information may be made available to a person only when the originator establishes that the person has a valid "need to know," appropriate personnel security controls are in place, and the access is necessary to the accomplishment of official court duties.

Classification is a perpetual balancing act that must protect sensitive information without unduly restricting access. The purpose of classification is to ensure that the risk of harm from a security or privacy breach is kept at a level acceptable to the court, corresponding to the court's risk tolerance, through proper designation, labeling and handling of sensitive information.

[1] Blueprint for the Security of Court Information (6th edition, CJC 2021). In French: Plan directeur pour la sécurité de l'information judiciaire. Henceforth, Blueprint.

CLASSIFICATION IS ONLY PART OF ACCESS CONTROL

The classification of an information asset guides holders with respect to its safe handling and dissemination, but classification is not the only safeguard that limits access. Classified information should be made available to a person only when the originator establishes that the person has a valid “need to know,” such that access is necessary to the accomplishment of their official court duties.

There are other potential restrictions on accessing classified information, including personnel security clearances, and non-disclosure agreements.

CHALLENGES

The protection of sensitive information relies largely upon its originators - judicial officers, court officials and staff - to make the right classification decisions with respect to every email or file they draft or receive. This responsibility can be overwhelming, especially in light of the volume of digital information courts handle, and the velocity at which it moves.

The act of classifying information is not just a one-time activity. Security classifications are dynamic and must be revisited periodically, as the court’s risk profile changes; as its system capabilities or architecture changes, or as the nature of the information assets themselves changes over time.

Remote work, virtual hearings and cloud computing are now a routine part of court operations, expanding the scope of cyber threats well beyond the premises of the courthouse.

Courts should address these issues by promoting a modern approach to classification. Until artificial intelligence can be trusted to make reliable security classification decisions on our behalf, there are steps available to take the burden of classification, but not control, away from members of the court. Hybrid solutions are available that combine automated and manual classification processes. Systems that parse information can be configured in various ways to suggest appropriate classifications based on the content or context of the information.

For example, Microsoft 365 provides a resource tagging feature with sensitivity labels that can be pre-configured by the court. This makes it easier for users to apply (or simply confirm) labels as they prepare emails and documents.[2]

Data loss prevention (DLP) systems are automated programs that can act as a backstop for classification lapses. They work by parsing outgoing communications and blocking unauthorized communications or warning senders.[3]

Ultimately, the goal of a modern classification scheme should be to establish the groundwork for fully automatic, artificially intelligent classification software.

JUDICIAL INDEPENDENCE

The judiciary is conferred with institutional and individual independence, which adds an important layer of cooperation to court information governance. The judiciary and executive, or other non-judicial administrators, involved with facilities management, human resources, infrastructure, or supply, administer Canadian courts jointly. At the same time, any form of court business intelligence that the court finds appropriate to its mandate or capacity, falls into the category of judicial administration. Chief Justices are looking at matters like judgment delay, load balancing, judicial education, judicial conduct, wellness, public outreach, and many other issues that are common to courts but not covered by business processes like "human resources." Thus, while court information is subject to broad-based legislation[4] and established government policies, it is also subject to individually negotiated MOUs, judicial discretion and the court's jurisdiction over its process and its records.

[2] See Azure Information Protection

[3] DLP systems must always be configured with the principles of judicial independence in mind, but judicial officers should not be exempt from the court's classification rules and security controls.

[4] Examples of relevant legislation include Official Secrets, Archives and Public Records, Criminal Code and Provincial Offences, Judicature acts, Evidence, Electronic Commerce and Privacy, Freedom of Information or Access to Information.

This document should not be read to alter the distinction between court information that is exclusively owned and controlled by the court, and any court information which by its nature can be delegated to or acquired by the executive branch directly or indirectly.

POLICY STATEMENT

1. PURPOSE

This policy establishes a formal process for classifying information assets to ensure that the baseline security controls used to protect court information are proportional to the risks of unauthorized access. It sets out clearly defined classification levels that can be efficiently and consistently applied to all court information assets.

COMMENTARY

Ultimately, the classification of court information is designed to prevent harm to individuals (including loss of life); to the court or other organizations; to financial markets, or to the justice system. It protects privacy, legal privileges, and judicial deliberative secrecy, or any type of sensitive information.

A classification scheme ensures clear lines of accountability for proper securing of court information. It helps prioritize budget allocations for security measures, makes it easier to comply with laws, court orders, non-disclosure agreements, licensing, and other obligations. It is an important means of identifying information that can be safely migrated to a cloud service provider or shared with justice partners.

2. SCOPE

This policy applies to all court information assets, wherever those assets may be located and in whatever format or medium they may be transmitted or stored.

Court information that contains personally identifiable information (for example about litigants, witnesses, judges, and staff) is to be classified accordingly.

Personal papers unrelated to the business of the court are private and do not form part of the court's information assets.

3. GLOSSARY

Case File

A Case File contains the Information that relates directly to a single court proceeding or to a number of related court proceedings that have all been assigned the same case file number. It includes the Information that comprises the Court Record and any other Information that has been captured or placed in the Case File.[5]

Court Record

Information and other tangible items filed in proceedings and the information about those proceedings stored by the court.[6]

Information asset

"An information asset is a body of information, defined and managed as a single unit so it can be understood, shared, protected, and exploited efficiently. Information assets have recognizable and manageable value, risk, content, and lifecycles."[7]

Information assets include physical information assets (such as paper documents, film, photographic prints) or digital assets stored electronically. An information asset can be a hardcopy document or a box of documents, a spreadsheet, or the contents of a shared network drive; a database, an operating system, an e-filing system, or a PDF file uploaded to such a system; a Case File, a Court Record, an email or an entire email account.

Depending on the context, some courts may wish to categorize non-documentary physical evidentiary objects (for example forensic samples) as information assets.

[5] See Canadian Judicial Council, Model Definition of Judicial Information (2020).
[6] See footnote 9.
[7] UK National Archives factsheet.

Custodian

The individual or business unit responsible for maintaining communications and technology systems used for court information.

Provider

External individual or organization that submitted or transferred information assets to the court.

4. ROLES AND RESPONSIBILITIES

Information controller

The information controller has legal control of information assets. This control is divorced from the concept of physical custody or possession.[8] Information controllers (or data owners) define the overarching information policies governing access, use, and retention of information assets.

Controllers are responsible for determining the classification of court information assets in their control and are authorized to approve access or downgrading requests. Controllers may require additional security controls on an ad hoc basis or strengthen information handling protocols as needed.

Originator

An originator is an individual or business unit of the court that authors or receives court information. Originators are responsible for considering and applying classification labels to the assets they create or receive, in accordance with this policy and other directions of the court.

[8] It is important to bear in mind the distinctions made in the 2013 CJC report: Court Information Management Policy Framework to Accommodate the Digital Environment, at page 6: "In a paper based world possession of a court file is synonymous with control over that file. It was easy for the judiciary to control Case Files in such an environment because an original paper file could only reside in one physical location at a time and those with possession of the physical file could easily control the ways in which information within it could be accessed.
In the digital domain however, it is quite possible to have possession of information without control and conversely, it is possible to have control of information without physical possession."

Judicial Information Technology Security Officer (JITSO)

The JITSO (or other qualified court-appointed officer) is responsible for the administration of this policy. The JITSO periodically updates the Information Asset Register (Policy 6) and ensures compliance through regular review and audit functions. Training on the handling of classified information must be provided regularly to all users.

Users

Anyone with access to court information is a user. Users must attend training and adhere to all policies and procedures relating to the handling of classified court information.

5. TRANSITION

This policy is effective upon its approval by the court.

COMMENTARY

This policy may be implemented progressively, on a day-forward basis. Existing assets can be classified over time, in priority based on the length of their retention period.

6. INFORMATION ASSET REGISTER

The court must prepare and update an Information Asset Register (IAR) that lists, briefly describes, and categorizes all court information assets.

COMMENTARY

The IAR is the first step to gaining control over court information. Key elements to consider recording for each asset category include:

1. Brief description including the purpose and use of the assets
2. Date range
3. Controller (with contact information)
4. Custodian (with contact information)
5. Users, including internal and external sharing relationships

6. Location – cloud, on premise, database, repository, domain
7. Form – paper, electronic, or other format or medium
8. Sensitivities - for example, copyright, private, privileged, confidential
9. Should this be a designated asset?[9]

Current thinking in the information governance profession is that larger, more inclusive categories make more sense for digital information, which is dynamic and often stored in unstructured repositories rather than filed in discrete folders. The more detailed or granular the IAR – for example a listing by document title, the more assets need to be listed and tracked individually.

While the establishment of high-level groupings simplifies the process of assigning classifications, some assets will require classification on a granular level. For example, a single field or record in a database, or particular form or file may contain information requiring classification that differs from its assigned group. Creative design may be required to assign classifications on a granular level, for example within a database, where certain groups of records or fields in the same database may require different classifications. These designs are constrained by the security features and controls built into each system.

Assets can be grouped in various ways. How depends on the court's mandate, size, and technology environment. Typically, the following methods are used:

- Content, which groups information by meaning or purpose
- Context, which groups information by business unit, function, system or platform
- User, which groups information by individual, position or role in the court.

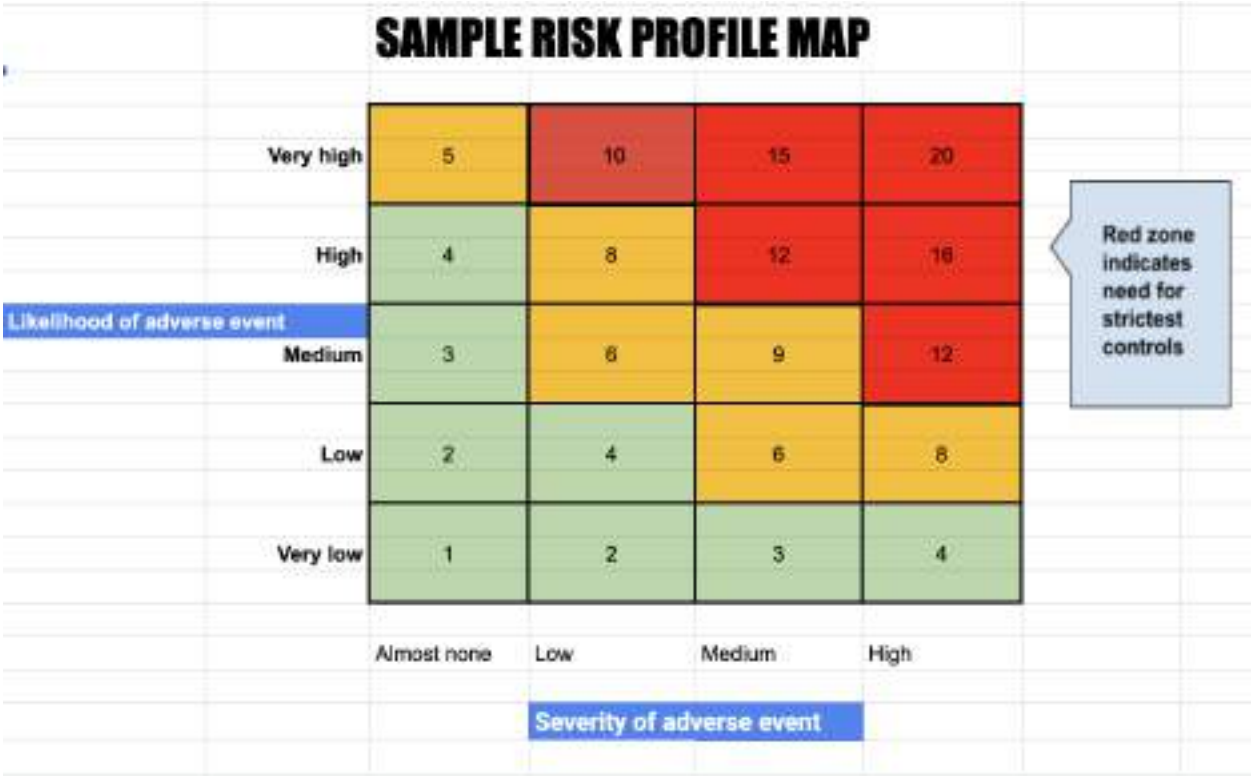
[9] The IAR forms the basis not only for decisions about classification but is also the foundation of a threat and risk assessment, the retention and disposition of court information, and business continuity procedures. The designation of assets in this listing is relevant to retention issues. See Canadian Judicial Council, Model Policy for the Retention of Court Information (2022).

7. RISK ASSESSMENT

The court must plan, conduct, and consider the results of a threat and risk assessment (TRA) in order to determine appropriate classifications for each information asset grouping in the IAR.[10]

COMMENTARY

The TRA helps the court assess the degree of harm that could reasonably be expected to result from unauthorized disclosure. A simplified schematic is shown below. Identified risks are assessed in terms of their likelihood and harm. The resulting chart provides decision makers with a basis for determining the court's risk profile, proportionate security controls and classification designations. The TRA report also identifies residual risks which need to be addressed to achieve a level of risk acceptable to the court.



[10] See Blueprint Policy 3b.

8. CLASSIFICATION OF INFORMATION ASSETS

All court information must be classified according to the sensitivity of its content and the risks associated with unauthorized disclosure and access.

Information that is copied, extracted, printed, or otherwise derived from classified information inherits the same classification as the source information.

The following classifications are to be used:

PUBLIC

Applies to information that, if compromised, would pose little or no risk to an individual, the court, or another organization. Information may be made public, as release would have no anticipated adverse impact, or is required by law. For example: Records of Proceedings, Annual Reports, Hearing Lists and Court Dockets.

CONFIDENTIAL[11]

Applies to information that, if compromised, could cause injury to an individual, the court, or another organization.[12] Internal and external access is limited to individuals or organizations with a valid need to know. For example: internal policies and directives; routine email, case conference briefs and case conference memoranda.

RESTRICTED

Applies to information that, if compromised, could cause serious injury to an individual, the court, or another organization.[13] Internal access is limited. External access is subject to order of the court, legislation, court policy, court rules, and court-approved security clearance and NDA. Access and actions to be logged. For example: draft judgments and judicial notes; rulings, endorsements and draft jury charges; documents and orders subject to a publication ban, and [11] This departs from the suggestion in the Blueprint, in which the designation "Official" was proposed. However, as the word "official" could be used to designate certain types of court records for purposes other than security, the term "Confidential" is preferred here.

[12] Corresponds to Canada Protected A.
[13] Corresponds to Canada Protected B.

digital recordings of a closed or sealed proceeding. Restricted court information would be subject to more stringent treatment than Confidential, including special markings, encryption, and storage on designated devices. All such information should be clearly and conspicuously labeled "RESTRICTED."

SECRET

Applies to information that, if compromised, could cause extremely grave injury to an individual, the court, or another organization.[14] Access is restricted to designated, cleared individuals with a need to know, a non-disclosure agreement, or upon order of the court. All access and actions to be logged. For example: government intelligence, sealed Case Files, and information concerning informers. All such information should be clearly and conspicuously labeled "SECRET." (Original source markings should also be left in place.)

COMMENTARY

Each court information asset must be assigned a classification based on the level appropriate to the most sensitive information in its category. Information assets should be classified to the lowest possible level, but as high as necessary. This dynamic represents the critical balance to be achieved between the harm that could be done by unauthorized access and the advantages of accessibility to the court, to parties or the public.

Over-classification leads to increased maintenance costs, restricts legitimate access, and may encourage some users to evade security controls.

Descriptive words like "Confidential" and "Secret" are more meaningful and thus preferred to abstract language such as "Protected A" or "Level 3". Irrespective of their labels, though, the four-level court information classification scheme in this policy aligns with Canadian federal and provincial government classification schemes, reducing confusion for those court staff regularly working with both government and court information. In specialized courts, more classification levels may be required to fine-tune the handling of sensitive data received from providers such as foreign governments.

[14] Corresponds to Canada Protected C.

One way to clarify the differences among the three secure classifications is to train users that disclosure of Secret information would cause about ten times as much damage as disclosure of Restricted information, and disclosure of Restricted information would cause about ten times as much damage as disclosure of Confidential information.[15]

Originators should be aware that the compilation of low-level classified information could in rare cases lead to the compilation requiring a higher classification. This is due to the possibility that the compilation reveals a relationship or a trend that should be classified at a higher level than its components.

9. INFORMATION ALREADY CLASSIFIED

Information that has been classified elsewhere must be classified by the court at a level corresponding to the provider's and handled in accordance with the provider's controls to the extent they are more stringent than the court's.

Information received from external organizations must be protected in accordance with any relevant legislative or regulatory requirements, including any international agreements and obligations.

COMMENTARY

When the court receives information that has been classified by a provider, the court should follow the rules applicable to that classification.

10. DOWNGRADING CLASSIFICATIONS

Information controllers may downgrade information in their control.

Originators (or their successors) may downgrade their own information assets.

Users may not downgrade a court information asset without the approval of its originator or the controller.

[15] See Quist, Security Classification of Information, volume 2, chapter 7.

COMMENTARY

Asset classifications may be upgraded or downgraded as necessary, with the proper authority. Over time, classifications of a document or other asset may be modified depending on an expired time frame, a certain event, or a routine re-evaluation.

11. LABELING CLASSIFIED INFORMATION – BANNERS

All assets (including copies and printouts) must be labeled with a banner indicating their classification level.

The banner consists of the name (or abbreviation) of the court and the classification level in UPPER CASE. For example:

Sample Classification Banner (options)
Canadian Judicial Council – CONFIDENTIAL	CJC – CONFIDENTIAL

At the time of original classification, the banner must be clearly and conspicuously displayed on the face and every page of the asset, for example in headers and footers, or if the information is not susceptible to such marking, the classification designation must be clearly associated with its subject in a manner suited to its form. Where it is impractical to apply any marking, users must be made aware of the classification designation and any special handling required.

If portions of a document have different classifications, each portion shall be appropriately labeled to indicate its level of classification.

COMMENTARY

The classification banner is the primary mechanism by which the sensitivity of an information asset is displayed. A key aspect of a classification label is that it is like a passport - an important piece of identification that must accompany it on its travels. Whatever method is used to apply a label, it should be conspicuous, legible, and persistent.

Where classifications are pre-determined, they can be added to document templates. For emails, the classification should be marked in the subject line and optionally in the body of the email. Email signatures can also contain classification marking, which works well when policies are applied by user or user group. Preferably, email systems should be configured to compel users to select a classification before sending, for example in a drop-down menu.

12. LABELING CLASSIFIED INFORMATION – BLOCK

In addition to the banner, classified assets may be marked with an optional information block. The purpose is to provide users with more information about the status of the asset. The block should be displayed on the face of every classified document, or otherwise in a conspicuous manner suited to the form of the asset.

The sample below shows the type of information a block would contain:

Classified by: Hon. Moreau, C.J. Reason: Sealed evidence Declassification: On order of the court Additional dissemination restrictions: None

COMMENTARY

By providing the name of the classifying authority (controller or originator), users know who to contact in the event a reclassification is proposed. Providing a reason for the classification is useful for audit and compliance purposes. If a declassification date or event can be determined when the asset is created, this helps users with making decisions about dissemination. Additional restrictions can be useful in various circumstances, for example when handling assets classified by providers who require more than the established controls.[16]

[16] Access to court information is not determined by classification alone. Rather, access rights are determined by a combination of classification-based controls, individual security screening or clearance, and the individual's function or assigned work, which determines their need to know.

13. HANDLING CLASSIFIED ASSETS

All court information must be handled in accordance with its classification and the procedures set out in the sample Classification Guide. (See Annex 1.)

Where classified court information is transferred to a third party, the court must ensure that the third party's security policies and procedures are sufficiently robust to respect the required classification controls.

APPENDIX 1: CLASSIFICATION GUIDE

TABLE 1: MAP OF RISK AND ACCESS

Classification	Risk level	Risk Description	Access
Public	Almost none	Applies to information or assets that, if compromised, would pose little or no risk to an individual, the court, or another organization.	Information may be made public.
Confidential	Low	Applies to information or assets that, if compromised, could cause injury to an individual, the court, or another organization.[17]	Information may be shared internally, and to third parties with a valid need to know.
Restricted	Medium	Applies to information or assets that, if compromised, could cause serious injury to an individual, the court, or another organization.[18]	Internal access is limited. External access subject to court-approved security clearance and NDA. Access and actions to be logged.
Secret	High	Applies to information or assets that, if compromised, could cause extremely grave injury to an individual, the court, or another organization.[19]	Access restricted to designated, cleared individuals with a need to know, and NDA. All access and actions to be logged.

TABLE 2: SAMPLE CONTROLS

Classification	At rest (storage)	In transit	Destruction
Public	May be stored on removable devices and public cloud service	No special controls.	No special deletion requirements.
Confidential	• All baseline Blueprint[20] security policies in place. • On premises, must be stored on the court's network with folder-based access controls (and backed up). • May be stored on a court-approved public cloud service. • May be stored on removable devices only if encrypted with court-approved tools. • Technical controls at this level will be based on assured, commercially available products and services, without need for any customization. • Information at rest will be protected at rest by default. Data must only be transmitted via a secure network. • Data traversing an untrusted (insecure) network must incorporate industry standard cryptography.	Only use approved court email, text and other communication platforms.	Information should be purged using industry standard tools.
Restricted	• Enhanced Blueprint[21] security policies in place. • May be stored on a court-approved public cloud service. • Access requires multi-factor authentication • May be stored on removable devices only if encrypted with court-approved tools.	Information must be encrypted with court-approved tools.	Information should be purged using industry standard tools.
Secret	• Requires the highest level of security controls reasonably available. • All access to be logged and tracked (subject to the Monitoring Guidelines).[22]	Not to be transmitted by email or any means over public networks.	Information must be irretrievably purged; storage devices may need to be physically

[20] Courts should have reference to the Blueprint for details on access control, physical security, and other controls.

Classification	At rest (storage)	In transit	Destruction
	• May not be stored on removable devices. • Not suitable for hosting on a public cloud service. • Data stores should be disconnected from the public internet. • Electronic files and/or data must be stored on a court shared directory or stationary device (i.e., desktop computer or server) with controlled physical access and role based logical access controls. • Electronic files and/or data must be encrypted when stored on portable or insecure devices. • Confidential or sensitive information shared with third parties must use file-based encryption. • Portable or insecure devices must be stored in a secure location when not in use.	Exchanged only via appropriately secured mechanisms. This will involve use of appropriately accredited shared services with high-grade encryption. Information will only be shared with designated users.	destroyed. Data and media must be degaussed (magnetically wiped) or rendered unreadable by other means. Devices may be physically destroyed.

TABLE 3: MARKING CLASSIFIED INFORMATION

The days of the rubber stamp are numbered, so to speak, as are the days of manila envelopes and wax seals. Digital information is not always in the form of a word-processed document to which headers and footers can be readily applied. This table provides some sample methods of marking digital information. Any method used must be appropriate to the format of the asset and must make it clear to the end-user that the information has been classified.

Format	Marking
Email or text message	Insert label banner in subject line. If not possible, insert at the top of the body of the email or signature block.
Text or image file	Insert label in metadata, on all images, or in available in header, footer or watermark.
Database	Insert label in header, footer or watermark of reports generated, and in metadata for each record, field or report.
Audio	Insert audible classification information at the beginning of the file.
Video	Insert audible classification information at the beginning of the file. Insert visible classification label on every frame.

TABLE 4: EXAMPLES OF CLASSIFIED COURT INFORMATION

Please note that these listings are drawn from several public and internal resources as examples only and are neither definitive nor comprehensive. They are simply representative of the type of information that might appear on a court's classification framework.

Classification	Examples
Public	• Case listing history • Pleadings • Orders and reasons for judgment • Trial transcripts • List of judicial districts • Annual reports • Forms, rules and practice directions or notes • Names of judges and dates of appointment
Confidential	• Internal policies and directives • Scheduling of judicial officers and hearings • Professional development information • Staff meeting records (other than judicial administration) • Jury charges • Routine email and other communications • Court Record / Case File not subject to a sealing order
Restricted	• Draft judgments, rulings, endorsements • Final court judgments if subject to a publication ban • Digital recording of a closed proceeding • Research memoranda, judicial notes • Outstanding warrants, pardons • Agendas, note and minutes of meetings regarding judicial administration • Personnel administration information • Information concerning judges • Information obtained with judicial authorization (sealed documents, child/youth protection)

Classification	Examples
Secret	• Certain draft judgments • Personnel information of judicial officers • Applications for warrant for search and seizure, electronic surveillance, and corresponding documentation • Information concerning informers • Psychiatric assessments • Personal information of judges • Privileged documents • Information related to national security

BACKGROUND

This Model Policy follows upon the Council's 2013 initiatives concerning court information including the Blueprint for the Security of Court Information. All courts, and the Council, recognized that the modern concept of "court information" was no longer merely a matter of official or administrative court records acquired or created intermittently, with limited bespoke content, and with practical obscurity arising from its documentary character and its ease of destruction.

A decade on, it is even more obvious and pressing that courts must recognize that "court information" is a far more encompassing concept and is far more accessible and far more durable than it once was. Accordingly, and in addition to its other responsibilities as to court information, each court needs to create, maintain, and review a systematic approach to the audit and regulation of the life cycle of court Information. This Model Policy proposes a framework for courts to consider in that effort.

Using the Council's Model Definition of Judicial Information[1] as a guide, this Model Policy is aimed at the life cycle of court information and should not be read to alter the Blueprint for the Security of Court Information,[2] nor alter the distinction between court information that is exclusively owned and controlled by the court, and any court information which by its nature can be delegated to or acquired by the executive branch directly or indirectly.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT

The author would like to thank members of the CJC Technology Subcommittee for their valuable feedback on an earlier version of this Model Policy.

CURRENT STATE OF RECORDS MANAGEMENT

For any organization, implementing a records retention and disposition policy is not easy. Conventional practices based on paper collections often do not work, because the burden of identifying and retaining records worth keeping falls on individual employees. Making these decisions is time-consuming, complicated, and thus often neglected. Enforcement is almost impossible, as business heads have more important concerns than document retention. Retention schedules are granular, can run to hundreds of pages, and are stale dated as soon as they are published.

For these reasons, many courts are in the same position as any other organization: records at the end of their life cycle are treated in an unregulated fashion. By some estimates only 20% of records are disposed of in accordance with their applicable retention schedules.[3]

DIGITAL IS DIFFERENT

The conventional approach to records management does not translate to email and other electronic forms of communication such as text messaging, where billions of bits of data are stored in dynamic databases. Digital information can be structured or unstructured and exist in many different formats. Transactional records, which used to be compiled in a single file folder are now distributed in email threads, word processing files, SharePoint sites, online court registries and e-filing applications. The fact that many applications, including essential communications tools, were not designed with retention needs in mind adds to the challenge. Users must apply policies and schedules manually after the fact, unless the software is designed, configured, and deployed with the appropriate features in place.[4]

[3] Stephens, Records Management: Making the Transition from Paper to Electronic (ARMA, 2007).
[4] Over time, more software will include retention management features if customers demand it. For example, see the Microsoft 365 Purview feature set designed for records retention management.

Digital information may not require warehouse space, but it does require disk space. While the price per terabyte has been decreasing over time, the rate of data volume growth outpaces any savings, especially in cloud hosting services. Holding too much information slows down information access and retrieval, increases the risk of a security or privacy breach. As one expert wryly points out, keeping everything online "turns data management into waste management".[5]

On the other hand, in contrast with paper, digital information can be cost-effectively researched, analyzed and reused. Advocates of information mining argue that it is no longer necessary to enforce a complex matrix of varying retention periods.

COURTS ARE DIFFERENT

Managing retention and disposition in courts is more challenging than in most other organizations for several reasons, some of which are outlined below.

THE COURT RECORD

Courts are not like other organizations. First, "courts of record" are required to preserve the record of proceedings, generally to ensure than an appeal court can effectively perform its review function and other courts can follow precedent.[6] Second, the Court Record is considered a "source of truth'" in the sense that unlike records of other persons or organizations, information upon which the court has acted to make a determination thereby receives an imprimatur of reliability and accuracy. When a court finds a fact in a record of a proceeding to be true on the balance of probabilities, it is generally taken to be true thereafter.

[5] Stephens, supra.
[6] "The term "record" and other expressions such as "court of record', "on the record", "for the record" are used regularly and frequently in legal parlance and have been for years without, in my opinion, a clear consistent understanding of what those expressions mean." R. v. H. (K.), Re, 1985 CanLII 3577 (ON CJ). Per Nevins, Prov. Ct. J.

OPEN COURTS

As public bodies, and in accordance with the open courts principle, courts have a responsibility to ensure that a record of their activities is permanently and publicly accessible.

At the same time, courts are guardians of the copious records submitted by third parties (voluntarily or otherwise), including members of the public and justice partners, some of which are provided conditionally and may be subject to being returned at the end of a proceeding.[7] A great deal of this information routinely contains personal, sensitive, confidential, and privileged information.

INDEPENDENCE

The judiciary is conferred with institutional and individual independence, which adds an important layer of delicate governance and cooperation. The judiciary and executive branch, or other non-judicial administrators, involved with facilities management, human resources, infrastructure or supply, administer Canadian courts jointly. At the same time, any form of court business intelligence that the court finds appropriate to its mandate or capacity, falls into the category of judicial administration. Chief Justices are looking at matters like judgment delay, load balancing, judicial education, judicial conduct, wellness, public outreach and many other issues that are common to courts but not covered by business processes like "human resources." Thus, while court information is subject to broad-based legislation[8] and established government policies, it is also subject to individually negotiated Memoranda of Understandings, judicial discretion and the court's jurisdiction over its process and its records.

[7] Different courts have rules respecting access or control of specific documents: see, for example, MediaQMI inc. v. Kamel, 2021 SCC 23 (CanLII).

[8] Examples of relevant legislation include Official Secrets, Archives and Public Records, Criminal Code and Provincial Offences, Judicature acts, Evidence, Electronic Commerce and Privacy, Freedom of Information or Access to Information.

LEGACY

Courts have long histories, and truckloads of physical records including paper are stored in courthouse basements and suburban warehouses. Costs of storage are high, and the corresponding public benefits hard to quantify.

As courts steadily transform their operations from paper to digital, they are now faced with the novel complications of long-term, cost-effective secure data storage in the cloud.

The purpose of this Model Policy is to assist courts in addressing these challenges, by proposing an innovative, practicable approach to retention and disposition. For some courts this may help in the development of new policy, while for others it may contribute to existing policy amendments.

RECORDS MANAGEMENT IN TRANSITION

Records and information management is amid a decades-long transition from paper to digital. The challenge for all organizations including courts is to manage this transition without compromising the principles and values underlying sound information governance practices.

GLOSSARY

Case File

A Case File contains the Information that relates directly to a single court proceeding or to a number of related court proceedings that have all been assigned the same case file number. It includes the Information that comprises the Court Record and any other Information that has been captured or placed in the Case File.[9]

[9] See Canadian Judicial Council, Model Definition of Judicial Information (2020).

Court Record

Information and other tangible items filed in proceedings and the information about those proceedings stored by the court.[10]

Information asset

"An information asset is a body of information, defined and managed as a single unit so it can be understood, shared, protected and exploited efficiently. Information assets have recognizable and manageable value, risk, content and lifecycles."[11]

Information assets include physical information assets (such as paper documents, film, photographic prints) or digital assets stored electronically. An information asset can be a hardcopy document or a box of documents, a spreadsheet, or the contents of a shared network drive; a database, an operating system, an e-filing system or a PDF file uploaded to such a system; a Case File, a Court Record, an email or an entire email account.

Depending on the context, some courts may wish to categorize non-documentary physical evidentiary objects (for example forensic samples) as information assets.

Record

Elsewhere used interchangeably with information asset, in this policy record is used to denote an individual physical document or digital file, including those in the Court Record. Many leading information governance authorities refer to "records", though the broader, more modern and more technology-friendly term "information asset" is emerging. All records are information assets, but not all information assets are records.[12]

Though the definition of record can be expanded to include digital assets, it originates and resonates in the concept of recorded information as a physical object.

[10] The use of the terms "Judicial Information" and "Judicial Officer" also conform to the Model Definition paper. See footnote 9.
[11] UK National Archives factsheet.
[12] The conventional definition is provided by way of ISO 15489 Information and documentation—Records management, which defines "record" as "Information created, received and maintained as evidence and information by an organisation or person, in pursuance of legal obligations or in the transaction of business."

POLICY STATEMENTS

POLICY 1 – PURPOSE

The purpose of this policy is to ensure that court information assets are systematically preserved for as long as needed, but no longer.

COMMENTARY:

The manner in which the court receives, controls, maintains and disposes of its records is not just a part of the institutional characteristics of the court but is a crucial part of the court's reputation for integrity, accuracy, consistency and reliability in the delivery of equal justice under the rule of law. The systems created must be accessible, intelligible, coherent, explicable, predictable and accountable.

A systematic approach may also:

1. Improve access for practical uses throughout the information life cycle.
2. Minimize time wasted in searching for information.
3. Minimize the risks and costs associated with over-retention.
4. Provide a public rationale for the destruction of information assets that might otherwise be criticized as arbitrary.
5. Guide members of the court who may ask - I am allowed to delete this email? Do we need to keep these duplicate submissions?
6. Ensure compliance with applicable legislation, regulations, rules, court orders, and best practices.
7. Ease the burdens associated with conventional records retention programs by proposing a modern strategy.
8. Ensure that courts robustly address the retention and disposition of digital information, as traditional paper-based practices are not suitable.

9. Reduce unnecessary duplication of records.
10. Improve public access to information of historical value.
11. Preserve the court's legacy.
12. Ensure that confidential or private court information is not inadvertently made public when transferred to a public archive.
13. Eliminate the cost and risk of storing information for longer than is justified.
14. Address capacity limits on the storage of old, low-value paper records.

POLICY 2 – JURISDICTION

The court has jurisdiction over its own information.

COMMENTARY:

The court is sole owner of and is responsible for court information throughout its life cycle. That responsibility includes maintaining continuity, accuracy, and accessibility of the information throughout the retention period.

The information controller has legal control of information assets. This control is divorced from the concept of physical custody or possession.[13] Information controllers (or data owners), define the overarching information policies governing access, use, and retention of information assets.

[13] It is important to bear in mind the distinctions made in the 2013 CJC report: Court Information Management Policy Framework to Accommodate the Digital Environment, at page 6: "In a paper based world, possession of a court file is synonymous with control over that file. It was easy for the judiciary to control Case Files in such an environment because an original court file could only reside in one physical location at a time and those with possession of the physical file could easily control the ways in which information within it could be accessed.
In the digital domain however, it is quite possible to have possession of information without control and conversely, it is possible to have control of information without physical possession."

POLICY 3 – SCOPE

This policy applies to all court information assets, wherever those assets may be located and in whatever format or medium they may be transmitted or stored.

Information assets of the court do not include personal information of judicial officers, court officials or staff, which is to be segregated and clearly identified as personal.[14]

COMMENTARY:

This policy is designed to apply to all court information assets irrespective of their format, as the principles of retention and disposition should apply consistently to information based on its context, meaning, purpose, and value.

POLICY 4 – COMING INTO EFFECT

This policy is effective upon its approval by the court.

All information assets must be reviewed prior to [date] and any assets existing beyond the period indicated in the retention schedule must be destroyed within a period to be determined by the court.

COMMENTARY:

Given that the retention periods for many information assets in the custody of courts have already expired, the court must establish a timetable for clearing the backlog, so it is in compliance with its own newly established schedules.

[14] "[Personal papers … are unrelated to an organization's mission, goals, objectives, or business operations or to an employee's assigned duties. They are information-bearing objects of a private nature. … These items are the personal property of their creators and are consequently excluded from records management authority." Saffady, Records and Information Management Fundamentals of Professional Practice (4th edition, 2021) at p. 6.

POLICY 5 – INFORMATION ASSET REGISTER (IAR)

The court must prepare and update an Information Asset Register (IAR) that lists, briefly describes, and categorizes at a high level, all court information assets.

COMMENTARY:

The IAR forms the basis not only for decisions about retention scheduling but is also the foundation of a threat and risk assessment, the security classification of court information, and business continuity procedures. It is the first step to gaining control over court information.

The descriptive elements of the IAR should be determined in accordance with the volume of information in the court, and the state of the court's transition from paper to digital. Key elements to consider for each asset would include:

1. Relevant category
2. Brief description including the asset's purpose and use
3. Date range
4. Controller (with contact information)
5. Custodian (with contact information)
6. Users, including internal and external sharing relationships
7. Location – cloud, on premise, database, repository
8. Form – paper, digital, other medium
9. Should this be a designated asset? See Designated Asset policy here.
10. Information Sensitivity - for example, copyright, privacy, confidentiality

Current thinking in the information governance profession is that larger, more inclusive groupings, with longer retention periods, makes more sense for digital information, which is dynamic and often stored in unstructured repositories rather than filed in discrete folders. The more detailed or granular the IAR – for example a listing by document title, the more assets need to be listed and tracked individually.

The IAR therefore should be structured with the broadest possible categories of information, grouped by function, user group, purpose, or repository.

POLICY 6 – DESIGNATED ASSET

Where duplicate copies of information assets are stored in multiple environments such as email inboxes, shared folders on file servers, cloud databases, local hard drives or mobile devices, the court may designate one of these as authoritative (and subject to the court's retention schedule), in which case copies of the duplicate assets in the other repositories are considered transitory and may disposed of accordingly.[15]

COMMENTARY:

One of the features of digital information is the ease with which it is copied, distributed and otherwise shared. This places an unnecessary onus on individuals or business units to manage and retain duplicate information assets. For example, a court's e-filing database may be designated, in which case duplicate copies of e-filed material uploaded for a virtual hearing may be deleted when no longer needed, assuming the files have not been annotated or the content otherwise altered.

POLICY 7 – ASSET APPRAISAL

To determine appropriate retention periods, the court must appraise its information assets using methods that are cogent, cost effective, and appropriate for the court's circumstances.

The ability to properly appraise information assets will be much assisted where the structure under which the court receives, controls, maintains and disposes of its records involves systems for auditing the records regularly when in place to ensure the records are being properly preserved, verified and secured.

[15] Transitory records are "records of convenience" which may be deleted when they are no longer needed by the user. There is no fixed retention period for transitory records.

Similarly, the ability to appraise information assets will be much improved if the court has a full and integrated scheme for court business intelligence derived from the records and their handling by the court.[16]

When appraising information assets, the court will consider factors including:

1) Applicable laws and orders
2) The operational needs of the court
3) The impact on the administration of justice
4) The legacy of the court
5) The needs of parties and justice partners
6) The public interest

COMMENTARY:

There are three main appraisal methodologies in use. The conventional method is a file-by-file review, now considered obsolete and impracticable given the volume and nature of digital information assets.

A more modern approach is "macro appraisal." This method is consistent with a high-level IAR and involves an understanding of the court's mission, its history, and its structure. For some courts, a functional methodology may be more fitting. Like the macro approach, it focusses on the organization, but at a business unit, activity, or transactional level (i.e., the level at which most records are created). This analysis provides a better context for the asset, through which its meaning and value can be ascertained.

The main aspect of this approach is to analyze and understand the functional context in which the records were created – a functional analysis. Kelvin Smith, in his book Public Sector Records Management, summarizes the importance of appraisal thus:

> Records appraisal must not be an ad hoc exercise. It should not be undertaken in a hurry when the quantity of records has outgrown the storage space available or [16] Audit and court business intelligence regimes are beyond the scope of this policy and hence not elaborated upon here, but such regimes are of considerable value to an effective and secure court operation.

> when an organisation has to move to new accommodation. If it is done in such an unplanned, non-systematic manner, the wholesale, uncritical destruction of records may take place. Similarly it is often the case that records are examined item-by-item in order to separate current, semi-current records and non-current records – a very time-consuming exercise. Some of the non-current records may then be offered to an archival institution for appraisal to determine whether any of the records have historical value. The archival institution then has to review these records without the necessary contextual information about their origins or purpose. All of these scenarios are extremely wasteful of resources.[17]

Assets of Historical Value

The decision to designate assets as historical is often subjective. Differences of opinion may arise when stakeholders are consulted. In the recent Federal Court notice, the preamble explains that "The great majority of Court records are never consulted after being sent to the Court's archives." This may be, as implied, because they are not of much historical value after all. On the other hand, mountains of paper records are difficult to find, time consuming to review, and very difficult to compile into meaningful statistics. Digital archives provide a much better opportunity for future researchers, and courts cannot today anticipate easily how and what data will be used a hundred years from today.

The International Criminal Court assesses historical value based on the asset's "use in the future for the purposes of supporting any sort of legal dispute or reconstructing the general history of the development and governance of the Court and its legacy."[18] The court may consider information shedding light on the development or organization of the court, or its impact on the community, as having historical interest.

[17] Smith, supra at p. 110.
[18] International Criminal Court, Records retention and disposal policy (2015).

POLICY 8 – RETENTION SCHEDULE

All court information assets are subject to a retention period as defined by the court for each category of asset.

A retention schedule setting out these periods must be published on the court's website. The court may retain any information asset after the expiry of its designated retention period should the court find it necessary to do so.

COMMENTARY:

Retention schedules must be carefully crafted by professionals in consultation with court staff, court officials, legal counsel and the judiciary. If the court's information assets are broadly defined in the IAR, then the number of different retention periods is accordingly minimized. Lengthy, complicated registers are difficult to update, complicated to explain, and therefore at risk of non-compliance. Drastic simplification is the key to compliance.[19]

Default guidance is provided in some courts. For example, the International Criminal Court provides:

1. Transitory assets must be destroyed in two years
2. Operational assets must be destroyed ten years from the date of last active use
3. Legacy assets – those of historical value – are retained permanently.

The Federal Court recently provided its guidance in an effort to reduce the cost of permanent retention:[20]

1. Court information that was not adjudicated on the merits – destroyed in seven years (with some enumerated exceptions)
2. Court information that was adjudicated on the merits – destroyed in fifteen years (with one exception)

[19] A reduction of 80% in the number of categories of information assets is not unexpected, according to some experts. For example see Kahn, "The Incredibly Compelling Case to Rethink Records Retention in 2018 and Beyond" (Business Law Today, American Bar Association 2018).
[20] Document Retention Schedule pursuant to Rule 23.1 of the Federal Courts Rules (2021).

POLICY – 9 TRIGGERS

Where trigger event dates cannot be tracked automatically, the court should set a reasonable retention date based on the time the asset is received, created, or last accessed.

COMMENTARY:

Trigger dates based on the expiration, termination, or completion of a process, such as the final determination of a matter and the expiry of any period for review or appeal, may be necessary but can complicate the calculation of retention periods if they cannot be tracked automatically.[21] Manual tracking is difficult and leads to non-compliance.

POLICY 10 – RETENTION BY DIGITIZATION

Requirements for retention of information assets in paper form are satisfied by retention of a reliable digitized or microfilmed copy.

COMMENTARY:

Digitization of high-value information assets is highly recommended, as it can serve to reduce long-term costs of paper storage; provide a critical backup and offers an opportunity to readily encrypt sensitive information that would otherwise be difficult to protect from unauthorized access.

Digitization of paper records, if used as a method of retention, requires attention to the quality control process to ensure that the digital version is reliable and that contextual information about the hard copy is maintained as metadata after the paper is destroyed.

Local standards may be adopted if available, such as the Digitization Standard from Service Alberta. A Canadian standard, CAN/CGSB-72.11-93, was withdrawn but contains many useful guidelines for preserving the integrity of digitized records. It has been replaced by the less detailed CGSB 72.34-2017, Electronic Records as Documentary Evidence, and in French Enregistrements électroniques utilisés à titre de preuves documentaires. Other resources include those from Library and Archives Canada and ISO, the International Organization for Standardization.

[21] Analysis of the matter type may be required to properly document the applicable trigger date. For example, in some courts the trigger for child support cases is tied to the age of the minor involved – that is, their period of dependency.

POLICY 11 – DIGITAL VERSION AUTHORITATIVE

Unless legislation or a court order provides otherwise, digital forms of information assets are authoritative.

COMMENTARY:

Paper documents that have corresponding electronic files, for example computer printouts, are transitory records that may be destroyed when no longer needed for active use.

Paper records can be destroyed when their retention period has been reached or if they have been digitized to an appropriate standard of quality.[22]

POLICY 12 – LONG-TERM PRESERVATION

The court must take proper steps to ensure the preservation of its information assets in all forms, where the assets are scheduled for long term or permanent retention.

If there are known issues with asset integrity during a migration, and these issues cannot be mitigated, they should be carefully documented. Data migration must be planned and tested in such a way as to ensure the integrity of all content and metadata.[23]

[22] For guidance see Library and Archives Canada, Destruction of Source Records following Digitization.
[23] ARMA International TR22-2016 defines "metadata" as "The structured information that describes, explains, locates, or otherwise makes it easier to retrieve, use, or manage information resources."

COMMENTARY:

Significant volumes of data will need to be meaningfully preserved by courts beyond the typical lifecycle of the technology used to store them. Systems become obsolete quickly, and the pace of change increases over time. Many courts today are undergoing a major platform replacement as they move information from local servers to the cloud. Custom-built case management systems developed fifteen or more years ago are being replaced with commercial off-the-shelf solutions. If a court is required to keep certain assets for, say, fifteen years, it will most likely need to be migrated, converted, or otherwise refreshed at least once.[24] Conversion to archival formats such PDF/A are partial solutions, as original metadata can be lost, and these formats are only suitable for certain types of document-based assets.[25]

POLICY 13 – DISPOSITION

At the end of their retention periods, the court must promptly dispose of information assets either by secure destruction, by transfer to a storage or archive facility, or by returning them to the parties from whom they were received.

POLICY 14 – CONFIDENTIALITY

Arrangements for the conversion, retention or disposal of Court Information that are sealed or otherwise deemed confidential must preserve the level of protection and non-access required by law.

[24] MoReq 2010 (Modular Requirements for Records Systems) at p. 23 suggests that typically, organizations refresh their technologies every 3-5 years.

[25] There are several useful references for long-term preservation, including ISO/TR 18492:2005, Long-term preservation of electronic document-based information; ISO 19005 series.), Storing Data For The Next 1000 Years (Tom's Hardware), and many others including for example the Minnesota State Archives.

POLICY 15 – DISPOSITION BY TRANSFER

Information assets scheduled for long-term or permanent preservation may be transferred to the custody of an approved third-party entity. The court must adopt effective transfer protocols for long-term accessibility and security of information assets.

COMMENTARY:

The court should follow professional guidelines such as Guidelines on File Formats for Transferring Information Resources of Enduring Value published by Library and Archives Canada.

POLICY 16 – DESTRUCTION

Information assets may only be deleted or destroyed in accordance with the approved retention schedule and procedures.

The court ensures that information assets scheduled for destruction are disposed of in a manner that protects sensitive information and renders it unrecoverable.

Where the destruction has been carried out by third parties, written certification of such destruction should be obtained.

The court must maintain a listing of all scheduled assets destroyed. Such listing must include the category of assets from the retention schedule, a brief description of the assets, the date range during which the assets were created, the date of destruction, and the method used to destroy the assets.

COMMENTARY:

The court may classify certain types of information or data, such as personal Judicial Information, draft documents, or other things, as being subject to discretionary deletion or removal by the Judicial Officer or senior court official involved.

Deletion or removal of any specific information may be reversible or irreversible, depending on the established policies of the court. Where information is deleted or removed, a record should be kept as to the nature of the information, the policy justifying its deletion or removal, and the date of its deletion or removal unless those policies provide otherwise.

Some courts require that notification to the affected parties be provided, depending on the nature of the assets.[26]

POLICY 17 – LEGAL HOLD

Any information subject to a lawful information access request or likely to be subject to a legal proceeding should be retained until the matter is resolved, even if its retention period has expired.

COMMENTARY:

The routine destruction of information assets at the expiry of the retention period should be paused if there is a risk of non-compliance with a lawful request for such an asset. An investigation into judicial conduct, a lawsuit by or against a contractor or supplier, or a statutory access request are examples of triggers that may, in the opinion of the court, justify a legal hold.

POLICY 18 – SENIOR COURT OFFICAL

The court must appoint or designate a senior court official accountable to the court and responsible for implementing and enforcing this policy.

The retention-related duties of this senior official would include:

1. Implementing the policy
2. Developing the IAR and retention schedules, and updating them periodically
3. Training users and system administrators and advising the court on information governance issues

[26] For example, see Document Retention Schedule pursuant to Rule 23.1 of the Federal Courts Rules (2021).

4. Contributing to systems procurement activities to ensure that court systems are compatible with automated retention processes

COMMENTARY:

The senior court official handles the administrative tasks associated with the implementation of information governance policies, including retention and disposition.

Quong v. Pong

E.F. Raney, for the appellants.

Norman Sommerville, K.C., for the defendant Pong, respondent.

M. Grant, for the defendant Thomson, respondent.

[1] By consent of counsel, the appeal was heard upon the merits of the action, treating the motion before MOWAT, J., as a motion for judgment.

[2] March 6. The judgment of the Court was read by MIDDLETON, J.A.:—The facts are simple. Thomson is the owner of premises on Spadina avenue, Toronto, occupied or used as a Chinese laundry. The plaintiff Lum Quong and the defendant Pong were members of a firm carrying on the laundry business. There was a third partner in the firm, but he does not appear to be a factor of importance. Thomson leased the premises to Pong in his own name for a term of three years, from the 1st March, 1916. The partnership was dissolved before the expiry of this lease, on the 19th June, 1918. Pong thereupon acquired a lease of the property in his own name for a period of five years commencing at the expiry of the first term. Litigation followed. The action was tried before the late Judge Winchester in the County Court of the County of York, and, among other things, he directed that Pong should assign the lease to Quong and his co-partner in consideration of $600 to be paid to him. The lease was accordingly assigned, and in and by the assignment it is provided that the assignees “may hold and enjoy the premises for the residue of the term granted by such lease and for a renewal thereof (if any) for their own use and benefit without any interference of the assignor." Notwithstanding this, before the expiry of this second lease, which did not contain any provision for renewal, Pong procured from Thomson a further lease of the premises for six years from the 1st March, 1924, being the expiry of the second term, and the defendant Thomson is now proceeding to evict Quong with a view to Pong entering under this new lease. The plaintiffs are desirous of continuing the laundry business in the same premises and would suffer a substantial loss if Pong could obtain possession of the premises in question.

[3] The result of the rivalry between these parties has been to enure to the benefit of the landlord, for the new lease is at an increased rental, but the plaintiffs are willing to assume the burden of this new lease, and the landlord stands indifferent and is ready to accept either faction as tenant if protected from claims by the other.

[4] The learned Judge, as we understand it, took the view that there was nothing to prevent the defendant obtaining a lease in his own name for his own benefit, and that the plaintiffs, not having been provident enough to arrange for a renewal, and, in fact, having at one stage, long before their lease had expired, intimated that they would not pay an increased rental, had no rights in the premises.

[5] With this decision we cannot agree, as we think that when Pong received his $600 for an assignment of the current term and "for a renewal thereof (if any)" he precluded himself from entering into competition with the assignees in seeking a renewal of the lease. If it had not been for this provision the case would not have been brought within the provision of the equitable principle of Keech v. Sandford (1726), 2 W. & T.L.C., 8th ed., 706. In that well-known case a term had descended to an infant. The landlord refused to renew, not desiring to have an infant tenant. The trustee then took a renewal for his own benefit. He acted without fraud, but Lord Chancellor King said he "should rather have let it run out than to have had the lease to himself. This may seem hard, that the trustee is the only person of all mankind who may not have the lease; but it is very proper that rule should be strictly pursued, and not in the least relaxed; for it is very obvious what would be the consequence of letting trustees have the lease on refusal to renew to cestui que use."

[6] It is true that here there was not an express trust, but there was a trust implied, raised and created, by the act of the parties and by implication of law. When Pong, for good consideration, sold the right of renewal, he precluded himself from seeking to renew the lease for his own benefit.

[7] The parties well knew that there was not in strictness any right of renewal, and what was meant by this expression when used in the assignment was clearly the probability that the landlord would grant a new lease to the tenant in preference to a stranger.

[8] The principle is of wide and general application. As said by Parker, J., in Griffith v. Owens, [1907] 1 Ch. 195, at p. 205, “I see no reason why, if there existed on the part of the purchaser the necessary fiduciary relationship or duty, the principle of Keech v. Sandford should not be applied whether the lease were renewable of right or not renewable at all.”

[9] The same result is reached by a slightly different process of reasoning. Pong sold the renewal of the lease, having at that time no title to it. When a new lease was granted, that went to feed his title, and so he became a trustee for the plaintiffs.

[10] The appeal should be allowed and the plaintiffs should have judgment directing that the lease he assigned by Pong to the plaintiffs, who should covenant to indemnify him against the lessee’s covenants contained in the new lease. Pong should be ordered to pay the costs of the action and of the appeal, both of the plaintiffs and of his co-defendant Thomson.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

ON APPEAL FROM THE APPELLATE DIVISION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO.

Appeal to Supreme Court of Canada—Jurisdiction—Value of matter in controversy—Parties each claiming right to lease of premises used for laundry—Elements to be considered in estimating value.

On a motion to affirm jurisdiction in the Supreme Court of Canada to entertain an appeal from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, deciding which party was entitled to a certain lease of premises used for a laundry business, the Registrar affirmed jurisdiction, taking into account, in estimating the value of the matter in controversy, the exceptional value of the premises by reason of the existing privilege of running a laundry business thereon; and his order was affirmed by the court. In such a case the question to be considered, with regard to jurisdiction, is the value of the subject matter as between the parties.

MOTION by respondents by way of appeal from the Registrar's order affirming jurisdiction.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, reversing the order of Mowat J., had declared that the defendant Pong was trustee for the plaintiffs of a certain lease of premises used in the carrying on of a Chinese laundry, and ordered that the defendant

Pong assign the lease to the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs should covenant in the assignment to indemnify the defendant against the lessee's covenants contained in the lease[1].

The defendant Pong appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, and moved before the Registrar of that Court for an order affirming its jurisdiction to hear his appeal. The Registrar's decision, delivered 21st June, 1926, was as follows:

> The sole question for determination on this motion to affirm jurisdiction, is with respect to the elements which can be taken into consideration when estimating the value of a leasehold property in view of its commercial possibilities.
>
> In Toronto premises can not be used for the purpose of carrying on a Chinese laundry except with the approval of the ratepayers in the > neighbourhood. The premises in question have received that approval. A laundry business has been established there for many years. The premises therefore have an exceptional value for this special purpose. I have no doubt on the evidence, that without this privilege, the property would not have a leasehold value sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, but with the privilege, I think the amount in controversy is more than $2,000. I therefore affirm the jurisdiction of the court; costs in the cause.

> If I am wrong in the above expressed view, there is nothing to prevent the respondent, when the case comes to be heard on the merits, from moving to quash for want of jurisdiction. No order made by me can confer jurisdiction, if otherwise there is none.

The respondents moved by way of appeal from the Registrar's order affirming jurisdiction, on the ground that the sole question at issue was the right to possession of the premises under the lease in question, and that any rights conferred upon the occupant of the premises by virtue of a license from the city of Toronto to conduct a laundry business were not appurtenant to the said lease as between the parties to this appeal.

After argument, judgment was rendered dismissing the motion with costs, the Chief Justice stating that the members of the court were all agreed that the proper question to be considered was the value of the property as between the parties, and it was impossible to say that the Registrar had erred in his appreciation of the evidence.

Motion dismissed with costs.

ON APPEAL FROM THE APPELLATE DIVISION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO.

Trust—Procuring of new lease by former partner—Assignment thereof to those continuing the business on the premises—Covenants in assignment—Rights between the parties as to acquisition of further lease—Implied trust—Question of estoppel by res judicata—Effect of judgment in overholding tenants proceedings—Jurisdiction of judge in such proceedings—The Landlord and Tenant Act, R.S.O.,1914, c.155.

P. and others had, as partners, conducted a laundry business on leased premises. The partnership was dissolved, the others continuing the business on the premises. P. procured from the landlord a new lease dating from the expiry of the existing one. As a result of litigation, P., for a certain sum, assigned to the others the new lease, covenanting that the assignees might “hold and enjoy the said premises for the residue of the term granted by the said lease and every renewal thereof (if any) for their own use and benefit, without any interruption of the assignor.” The lease had no provision for renewal. Before its expiry P. procured from the landlord a further lease dated from the expiry of the existing one. Plaintiffs, the aforesaid assignees or their successors in interest, sued for a declaration that P., the defendant, was a trustee of the lease for them, and for other relief.

Held, affirming judgment of the Appellate Division, Ont. (1925 CanLII 11 (ON CA), 56 Ont. L.R. 616) that P. held the lease as trustee for plaintiffs; his obtaining it was a breach of good faith and contravened an implied obligation with regard to renewals; the allusion to renewal in the assignment must be taken to refer to the reasonable expectation of the tenants in possession to obtain a renewal; Griffith v. Owen ([1907] 1 Ch. 195) applied.

Held further, that plaintiffs were not estopped by res judicata by reason of certain overholding tenants proceedings (under The Landlord and Tenant Act, R.S.O., 1914, c. 155) and judgment therein; in such proceedings the judge had no jurisdiction to adjudicate as to the relations between Pong and plaintiffs.

APPEAL by the defendant Pong from the judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario[1] which (reversing order of Mowat J.) declared that said defendant was trustee for the plaintiffs of a certain lease, and ordered that he assign it to the plaintiffs.

The plaintiff Quong and the defendant Pong were members of a firm carrying on a laundry business on premises leased from the defendant Mrs. Thomson. Mrs. Thomson had leased the premises to Pong in his own name for a term of three years from 1st March, 1916. Before the expiry of this lease, the partnership was dissolved (in November, 1917). Pong, in June, 1918, acquired a lease of the property in his own name for a period of five years, commencing on 1st March, 1919 (at the expiry of the first term). Litigation followed. A judgment of Winchester Co. C.J. contained an alternative direction that Pong should assign the lease to Quong and his co-partner in consideration of $600 to be paid to him. The lease was accordingly assigned, and in the assignment it was provided that the assignees might > hold and enjoy the said premises for the residue of the term granted by the said lease and every renewal thereof (if any) for their own use and benefit, without any interruption of the assignor.

The lease did not contain any provision for renewal. Before the expiry of the lease, Pong procured from Mrs. Thomson a further lease of the premises for six years from 1st March, 1924 (the date of expiry of the existing lease). The plaintiffs, Quong and his co-partner Chong (who was the successor in interest of Quong's former co-partner Lum Lin), remained in possession after 1st March, 1924, being willing to assume the burden of the new lease (which was at an increased rental), and claiming the right to the benefit of it. They continued to pay rent which was taken by Mrs. Thomson without prejudice. The latter took proceedings under the overholding tenants provisions of The Landlord and Tenant Act, R.S.O., 1914, c. 155. The proceedings came on before His Honour, Judge Denton, of the County Court of the County of York. It was apparently agreed that the hearing should proceed on the basis of the assumption that rent from the plaintiffs had not been accepted by Mrs. Thomson; in other words, that, if Quong and Chong were not entitled to the benefit of the lease made to Pong, she should not be prejudiced in the proceedings by having taken rent from Quong and Chong. It appeared that the real dispute was between Pong on the one hand, and Quong and Chong on the other, as to the right to the lease. There was some discussion, and, apparently, misunderstanding, as to the question of jurisdiction, and consent in regard thereto, which is referred to in the judgment now reported.

His Honour, Judge Denton, held that the lease acquired by Pong was not a renewal, in any sense, of the former lease, and made an order for possession against the present plaintiffs. The latter appealed to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, which dismissed the appeal without written reasons. See the reference to this appeal in the judgment now reported.

The plaintiffs then brought the present action in the Supreme Court of Ontario, claiming a declaration that the defendant Pong was a trustee for the plaintiffs of the lease, and that it should be assigned to them, and for an injunction restraining him from assigning the lease to any person other than the plaintiffs, and for an injunction restraining the defendant Mrs. Thomson from evicting them.

The plaintiffs' motion for an interlocutory injunction was dismissed by Mowat J. The plaintiffs appealed to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario. By consent of counsel, the motion was turned into a motion for judgment and the case was heard upon the merits. The Appellate Division allowed the appeal, holding that the defendant Pong was a trustee of the lease for the plaintiffs, and that the lease should be assigned by Pong to the plaintiffs, who should covenant to indemnify him against the lessee's covenants contained therein[2].

The defendant Pong appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada. His two main grounds of appeal were:[2] That plaintiffs were estopped by res judicata by reason of the overholding tenants proceedings above mentioned and the judgment of Denton Co. C.J. therein, sustained by the Appellate Division; and (2) That, on the merits, the Appellate Division was wrong in holding that Pong should be deemed a trustee of the lease for the plaintiffs.

Norman Sommerville K.C. for the appellant.

Fraser Raney for the plaintiffs, respondents.

No one appeared for the defendant (respondent) Mrs. Thomson.

[Page 274]

At the conclusion of the argument for the appellant, the Chief Justice orally delivered the judgment of the court as follows:

"It is not necessary to call on you, Mr. Raney.

"We have all had an opportunity of considering this case over night, and the position seems to us quite clear.

"The first ground of appeal is that the respondent is estopped from bringing this action by reason of the judgment given in the overholding tenancy proceedings by His Honour, Judge Denton, nominally affirmed on appeal. I say "nominally" for reasons presently to appear.

"Judge Denton's only jurisdiction under the overholding tenants provisions was to determine the right of the landlord to possession. He himself states that in order that he should proceed it was necessary that there must be an admission before him that the rent had not been paid. His jurisdiction was to determine whether or not the landlord was entitled to possession. It was apparently desired that he should deal with issues as to the relationship of Pong and Quong, and determine the rights between them. Mr. Raney consented in some sort of form to that being done, but it would appear that his consent was given on the understanding and basis that the judge should deal with the matter as one within his jurisdiction under the overholding tenants provisions. It is perfectly manifest that he had no jurisdiction to do so—no jurisdiction subject to appeal; that he could entertain such collateral matter only either as persona designata or as arbitrator. That being so, the Appellate Division, when the case came before it on appeal from Judge Denton, must have taken the view, as Mr. Raney states, and as the subsequent proceedings bear out, that the judge had assumed a jurisdiction he did not possess under the overholding tenants provisions, and that as to the relations between Pong and Quong the matter was coram non judice. Mr. Raney's consent had been given subject to a condition which could not be fulfilled; in other words, he consented upon the condition that he would retain an effective right of appeal. On the appeal in the present action, the Appellate Division must have taken the view that the former proceeding was not binding as to the obligations of Pong; that the only thing judici-ally determined by it was the landlord's right to possession, the order in this respect, assuming non-payment of rent, being within the jurisdiction of the judge who made it. Taking that view,—and they of course knew what had been their appreciation of the former proceeding—it was open to the Appellate Division to deal with the appeal from the judgment of Mowat J. in this action, as they did.

"The other branch of the appeal is directed to the merits. It is claimed by the plaintiffs that the lease obtained by Pong is held by him as trustee for them. The Appellate Division gave effect to that contention, and, in our opinion, upon the whole case, rightly gave effect to it. It is manifest to us that the transaction carried out by Pong was in breach of good faith and contravened his obligation with regard to renewals, which was implied in the whole arrangement between him and Quong. While there is no express right of renewal in the lease, the assignment of it does deal with renewal, and the allusion must be taken to refer to the reasonable expectation of the tenant in possession to obtain a renewal. The case is fairly within the principle stated by Mr. Justice Parker in Griffith v. Owen. That principle was properly applied in the judgment now appealed from. That judgment is affirmed, and the appeal is dismissed with costs."

Appeal dismissed with costs.

The Chief Justice was absent when judgment was delivered.

ON APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF NOVA SCOTIA.

Absent and absconding debtors Act of Nova Scotia, Ch. 97, Rev. St. of N. S.—Attachment —Demurrer—Conversion by Sheriff—Corporation, sale by—Justification under Order of Court—Seal.

One H. instituted proceedings against the L. C. M. Company, the officers of which resided in the United States, but which did business in Nova Scotia, and, on the 25th May, 1872, caused a Writ of Attachment to be issued out of the Supreme Court at Amherst, under the absent and absconding debtors Act of Nova Scotia,[1] directed to the Appellant, the High Sheriff of the County of Cumberland. Under this Writ, the Appellant seized certain chattels, as being the chattels of the said Company. On the 12th November, 1872, an order was issued out of the said. Court, directing the Appellant to sell, and the Appellant did sell said chattels as being of a perishable nature. On the 11th December, 1874, a discontinuance was filed in the said cause by H. On the 30th May, 1876, the Respondent commenced an action against the Appellant for the conversion of the chattels in question, contending that the Company, having failed in its operations and being desirous of winding up its affairs, and being indebted to him, had sold and conveyed to him the said chattels by a certain memorandum of sale, dated July 5th, 1867, "signed on behalf of the Company," by one "Hawley, agent." To this memorandum a seal was affixed which did not purport to be the seal of the Company. The Appellant pleaded to the Declaration, that he did not convert; goods not Plaintiff's; not possessed; and also a special plea of justification, setting forth the proceedings by H., and that he had seized and sold the goods as the goods of the Company, in obedience to the attachment and order issued in said proceedings. The Respondent replied, setting up the discontinuance.

The Appellant rejoined that the proceedings were not discontinued, and that the discontinuance was not filed till after the sale. He also demurred, on the ground that being bound to obey the order of the Court, he could not be affected by the discontinuance., At the trial a verdict of $500 damages was rendered for Respondent. The Appellant obtained a rule nisi to set aside verdict, and the rule and demurrer were argued together. The. Court below refused to set aside the verdict and gave judgment for Plaintiff on the demurrer.

Held,—That the appeal should be allowed; that the plea of justification showed a sufficient answer to the declaration; that the replication was bad, and that the verdict must be set aside and judgment be for the Defendant on the demurrer.

Ritchie, J., dissented, on the ground that the seizing under the attachment, and not the sale, constituted the conversion; that there was sufficient evidence to show that the chattels in question had been transferred by the Company to Respondent, and that under Sec. 15, ch. 53 of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia, the sale of the chattels did not require to be under the corporate seal of the Company.

Per Strong, J.: The sale, and not the seizure, was the conversion complained of, and to this the order of the Court was a sufficient answer. Semble, a mere taking of the goods of a third person under a mesne attachment against a Defendant to keep them in medio until the termination of the action is not a conversion.

Per Henry, J.: The order for sale would not have been a justification for the original levy on the goods, as well as for the sale, if they had been the property of the Respondent, but the evidence failed to show a sale by the Company to the Respondent. Such a sale would require to be under the corporate seal of the Company, and did not come within the meaning of Sec. 15, ch. 53 of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia.

This was an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from the judgment of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, giving judgment on demurrer in favour of the Plaintiff (Respondent), and discharging a rule nisi, granted to the Defendant (Appellant), to set aside the verdict for the Plaintiff.

The Lawrence Coal Mining Company, a body corporate, incorporated out of Nova Scotia, in the State of Massachusetts, in the United States of America, under the Joint Stock Companies Act of Nova Scotia, commenced coal mining operations in 1862 on a colliery property at or near river Hebert, in the County of Cumberland, in the Province of Nova Scotia, purchased from one George Hibbard, and continued to work the same until 1865, when the Company became hopelessly, insolvent. Hibbard, the former owner, who resided on the spot, continued from the outset to be a Director, and was the only resident Director in Nova Scotia, and was Managing Director from 1862 up to the spring of 1867, excepting only one season in 1864, and as such had charge of all the property of the Company. He also attended all the annual meetings of the Company held at Boston.

To enable the Company to carry on its operations, the Company, through Hibbard as Managing Director, obtained from Bradley a loan of $10,000, for which Hibbard, as Managing Director, gave a note or notes and a warrant to confess to Bradley, the Respondent, on which judgment was entered up by Bradley for $10,022.75, for principal and interest, on the 11th September, 1865. In 1866 the real and personal property was advertized for sale under Respondent's judgment, and the' real estate was sold to him for $3,975, leaving $6,025 still due; the personal property was not sold, and remained on the premises until July, 1867, when Hawley, as agent of the Company, transferred it to Respondent, who, in consideration of the transfer, gave up notes and claims for about $1,500. Hawley, at the same time, gave the following memorandum of sale (filed in the case as exhibit A):—

"River Hebert, Cumberland County,

"Nova Scotia, July 5th, 1867.

"Know all men by these presents, that Benjamin

Mark.

There was no seal to this document purporting to be the seal of the Company, nor had any resolution been passed by the shareholders authorizing a sale by Hawley, but at an adjourned meeting of the Company, held on the 26th February, 1866, it had been, on motion, voted that Messrs. Hawley, W. G. Howe and Alden, should be and were thereby authorized to sell all the real and personal estate, and also the leasehold of the Company for such sum or sums, and on such terms as in their judgment would be for the best interest of the Company, and pay the proceeds of such sale into the hands of the Treasurer for the benefit of the creditors of said Company, and if the amount of such sale exceeded the debts the balance to be paid pro rata among the stockholders.

From the date of the sale, Bradley, and others claiming under him as proprietors, employed an agent to take care of the property, and paid all taxes and expenses connected with it. The mem. of sale was delivered by Hawley to Alden, who acted as Secretary of the Company.

No meetings of the Company were held subsequent to that of the 26th February, 1866, until December 30 and 31, 1874, when the Company, being still largely indebted to Respondent on his judgment, by a resolution unanimously adopted by the shareholders present, further resolved that all the interest of the Company in the mining lease of the Company be transferred to Respondent.

On the 25th May, 1872, Hibbard, who claimed $1,760 from the Company, brought an action against the Company, and caused a writ of attachment to be issued out of the Supreme Court at Amherst, under the absent or absconding debtors Act of Nova Scotia[2], directed to the Appellant, as High Sheriff of the County of Cumberland, requiring him to seize, and in obedience to the writ the Appellant did seize, certain chattels as being the chattels of the said Company.

On the 12th November, 1872, an order was issued out of the said Court, directing the Sheriff to sell the said chattels, as being of a perishable nature within the meaning of sec. 6, of the last mentioned Act; and they were sold by the Sheriff.

On the 11th December, 1874, a discontinuance of the cause "and all proceedings thereunder," was entered in the action brought by Hibbard against the Company.

4527On the 30th May, 1876, the Respondent, contending that the chattels in question were his property, commenced an action of trover against the Appellant, the Sheriff, for the conversion of the said chattels.

The Appellant pleaded to the declaration:—1st. That he did not convert. 2nd. That goods were not the property of the Plaintiff. 3rd. Not possessed. And 4th. A special plea of justification setting forth the proceedings by Hibbard, against the Lawrence Coal Mining Company, and that the Defendant, as Sheriff, under the said writ of attachment, and the said order made in such proceedings, seized and sold the chattels in question as and being the chattels of the Company.

The Plaintiff replied to the fourth plea, that after the proceedings aforesaid the said proceedings were discontinued.

The Defendant rejoined that the proceedings were not discontinued, and that the discontinuance was not filed till after the sale in the fourth plea mentioned.

He also demurred to the replication, on the ground that, being bound to act in obedience to the order of the Court, he could not be affected by a discontinuance of a suit under which property was sold.

The Plaintiff joined in demurrer.

The issues of fact were tried at Amherst on the 16th October, 1876, before the Chief Justice, Sir William Young, and a jury, when a verdict was rendered for the Respondent for five hundred dollars damages.

The Appellant obtained a rule nisi to set aside the verdict, and the said rule nisi and the demurrer were argued together.

The Court below, after argument, gave judgment refusing to set aside the verdict, and, on the 2nd April, 1877, a rule was made ordering that the rule nisi be discharged with costs, and that the Plaintiff have judgment of the demurrer with costs.

The Appellant, thereupon, appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Gormully, for Appellant:—

The Respondent claims title to the chattels in question by a transfer or conveyance thereof from the Lawrence Coal Mining Company. If once admitted to be the property of the Company, they must so remain until divested. The principal question is whether there was an actual sale of the goods; whether exhibit A had the effect of transferring the chattels to Bradley; I contend it had not. That document must operate either as a contract or conveyance. If it operates as a contract, it must be regarded as a contract under seal, or as a simple contract. It is not binding on the Company, because it does not purport to bind them, and because the seal affixed is not the corporate seal of the Company, which was necessary, there having been evidence of the existence of one. Sec. 15, ch. 87, Rev. Stat., N. S., 3rd series, only establishes as a rule of statute law what was formally a rule of common law. It has been held that as to personalty a corporation could sell it, but whether they could do so, except under seal, is another question.

The Statute says: "Acts within the scope of their charter." This sale, purporting to convey all the property, and showing an intention to abandon the object for which the Company was incorporated, should have been under seal.

Hawley never was duly authorized. There never was a meeting respecting the sale, and no evidence of that concerted action which was necessary.

D'Arcy v. The Tamar, Kit Hill and Callington Railway Co.[3]; Ridley v. Plymo Grinding Co.[4]. There is no evidence that the Company delegated their power; and further, if they did delegate it, they had no right to do so. The last delegation of authority is to Hawley, Howe and Alden—and this was a power which must have been exercised by all three, and was not a power which could be delegated. The Respondent was bound to know what was being done. Exparte Brown[5].

The transaction was a fraudulent one as against the statute of Elizabeth[6], there was no change of possession, and this was a document which should have been registered under the statute.

The learned counsel then proceeded to argue that the learned judge who tried the action had improperly admitted evidence and had misdirected the jury; and that as to the demurrer, the Appellants fourth plea was good in law, and replication bad because it admits and does not sufficiently avoid the plea:

Mr. Halliburton, Q. C., for Respondent:—

The Company became indebted to Bradley for an advance of $10,000. In 1865, they find themselves insolvent. Hibbard, from whom the Company purchased their mine, was the only director resident in Nova Scotia, and was the only person up to this date who had any benefit from the Company. He attended all the meetings and was familiar with all that was done. In 1865, meetings were called, but nothing was done, and at last Bradley enters up judgment and issues execution. He unwisely allowed the matter to stand over to save Sheriffs' fees, and a conveyance became necessary from, the Company. Five days after the sale of the personal property, Hibbard renders an account, showing $25 due him. The Company set off against that the rent, and considered they had paid every body; they supposed all claims were paid both in Canada and the United States. The Company authorized Hawley to go to Nova Scotia to sell the property.

[RITCHIE, J.:—Will you show us from the evidence that he was authorized by the Company?]

There is no one at present claiming the property except Bradley. The Company did not claim it, nor any shareholder or director on behalf of the Company.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE:—A question has been raised which seems important. This property was sold by order of the Court as perishable property. How can the Sheriff be held responsible for selling this specific property under the order of the Court?]

I am prepared to show that the Sheriff, under the circumstances, was not justified in selling.

Where there is a seal, the seal must be presumed to be the seal of the Company. Ontario Salt Co. v. Merchants Salt Co. (limited)[7].

[RITCHIE, J.:—Where is the evidence that Hawley had any right to use the seal of the Company?]

It is to be presumed he had the right.

[RITCHIE, J.:—What evidence raises this presumption?]

The Company took this man's money, which was the consideration for the sale.

[RITCHIE, J.:—If you can show that this party was professing to act for the Company and entered into this sale, and afterwards the Company had known of the facts and received the money, you will have good evidence that the sale was the sale of the Company.]

In 1874 a general meeting of the Company was called, and it is to be presumed the Company ratified the action of Mr. Hawley. When proceedings have been manifestly illegal between a Company and an individual, and the Company choose to continue these dealings, that is a ratification by the Company of such dealings.

[HENRY, J.:—The difficulty seems to me to be that there were no meetings, and no Company.]

It is to be presumed all necessary by-laws were passed to continue the Company, and the meeting of 1874 was a ratification of what was done before.

The transfer purporting to be signed and sealed by R. Hawley, as their agent, was given to the Secretary of the Company, and was never repudiated by them, and Bradley continued thenceforth to be in undisputed possession of the property and paid taxes on it, and employed an agent to take charge of it.

Even though the Company could not contract directly except under seal, yet they could without the corporate seal appoint an agent, whose acts and contracts within the scope of his authority were binding on the Company. 3 P. Wms. 419. 1 Fonb., 305; Phil. Ed., n. o. Abbott's Dig. of Law of Corporations[8].

The sale was not ultra vires, but was a lawful means of making the most of the assets of the Company to discharge its liabilities. Featherstonehaugh v. Lee Moor Porcelain Clay Co. [9]; Burrell on assignments, 36.

The promises and engagements of a Company may as well be implied from its acts and the acts of its agent as if it were an individual. Abbott's Dig. of Law of Corporations[10].

In a case like the present the law presumes omnia rite acta and, unless the contrary appears, that all necessary by-laws and resolutions have been passed necessary for the validity or ratification of the acts performed by the Company's agent. Field on Corporations[11].

The Company, after notice to it of sale by Hawley, did, by their acquiescence for so many years in the possession of Respondent of the personal property sold to him, by their accepting therefor notes, &c., to the amount of $1,500, and by their unanimous vote in 1874 in further satisfaction of the balance due Respondent, that the lease of the mine should be transferred to him, ratify and confirm the sale of the personal property to Respondent by Hawley, as their agent; and it must be assumed that all necessary by-laws and resolutions had been passed and adopted to ratify and confirm the sale by Hawley, as agent of the Company. To enforce an executory contract against a corporation it may be necessary to show that it was by deed: but where the corporation has acted upon an executed contract, it is to be presumed against them that everything has been done that was necessary to make it a binding contract upon both parties, they having had all the advantage they would have had if the contract had been regularly made. Doe dem. Pennington v. Taniere[12]; Wilson v. Miers[13]; Royal British Bank v. Turquand[14]; Renter v. Electric Tel. Co.[15]; Australian Steam Navigation Co. v. Marzetti et al[16]; Crook v. Corporation of Seaford[17]; Buffalo and Lake Huron Railway Co. v. Whitehead (in appeal)[18]; Brewster v. The Canada Co.[19]; Mayor of Stafford v. Till[20]; Angel & Ames on Corporations[21]; Bigelow on Estoppel[22].

If any question could be raised as to the power of the Company to sell, or the agency of Hawley, or as to the validity of the sale by him, or as to the ratification of such agency, or of such sale by the Company, it is settled by the provisions of the Nova Scotian Act respecting factors and agents. Rev. Stat. Nova Scotia, Fourth Series, App. 63, secs. 1—10.

The Respondent further contends that Appellant's plea of justification is bad in substance, for the following reasons:—

Because it appears by it that the attachment under the Nova Scotian Act respecting absent or absconding debtors, was issued against "a body corporate doing business in Nova Scotia," the said Act not extending to such a company, but only to companies "incorporated out of the Province and doing business by an agent within the Province." Rev. Stat. Nova Scotia, Fourth Series, ch. 97.

Because, even if sec. 6 of the said Act refers to such foreign companies doing business in Nova Scotia, it does not appear that the goods in question were exhibited to the Sheriff as the goods of the Company, nor does it appear that they were valued by two sworn appraisers, or that the amount of appraisement was endorsed on writ of attachment, or that the Sheriff levied on such part of the goods as would be sufficient to refund the sum so sworn to, &c.

Because, if sec. 7 is also applicable to such foreign companies, it does not appear that notice of such assessment was given to the agent of the Company, or that the three days were allowed him to find security; nor does it appear that the prothonotary had any power to issue the order for sale in consequence of the absence of a judge. Rex. v. Croke[23].

Because the plea of justification does not show that the Sheriff has made a return of the writ of attachment, without which he cannot be allowed to justify in such a case. Rev. Stat. Third Series, ch. 40, s. 13. Rowland v. Veale[24]; Cheaseley v. Barnes[25]; Freeman v. Bluett[26]; Williams v. Babbitt[27]; also, American cases cited in 2 Greenleaf on Ev., 597.

And Respondent further contends:—That as it is only service of summons on the agent of a foreign company doing business in the Province by an agent, which the statute says "gives jurisdiction to the Court," and as it appears that the summons was served on the agent of Respondent, and not of the company, the Court had no jurisdiction, and the writ of attachment and order for sale, and all proceedings thereunder, were null and void; that a Court of law has in itself no inherent power or right to order perishable goods seized under attachment to be sold, La Rochelle v. Piche et al[28]; and that sec. 6 and 7 of Absent or Absconding Debtors Act does not extend to foreign companies doing business in the Province by an agent, and the Court has no power to order a sale of their property under the said Act, and that all proceedings for a sale of such property are therefore null and void. "When the Court has no jurisdiction of the cause, the whole proceeding is coram non judice, and actions will lie against the above mentioned parties without any regard to the precept or process, and in this case it is not necessary to obey one who is not judge of the cause." Broom, L. M. 90, Taylor v. Clemson[29]. Factum a judice, quod ad officium jure non pertinet, ratum non est. "A plea of justification by a constable acting under the warrant of a justice will accordingly be bad, if it does not show that the justice had jurisdiction over the subject matter upon which it is granted." Taylor v. Clemson[30]; Broom's Prac.[31]; Broom, L. M.[32].

As to evidence necessary in support of defence, see Crocker on Sheriffs[33].

Mr. Gormully in reply:—

RITCHIE, J.:—

This was an action brought against the Sheriff of the County of Cumberland for converting to his own use Plaintiff's goods. Defendant, as such Sheriff, levied on these goods under an attachment. There is a provision in the Act under which these goods were seized, giving power to the Court to order perishable goods to be sold[34]. The Court did in this case order the goods to be sold, and they were sold, and after such sale all the proceedings under the attachment appears to have been discontinued. If the Sheriff had properly taken the goods in the first instance, and if they were legally in his hands, and he sold them under the order of the Court, I think that order would protect him; but, in this case, in my opinion, the conversion of the goods took place when the Sheriff levied on them. The evidence shows the goods originally belonged to the St. Lawrence Coal Mining Company, the officers of which were domiciled in New York. The Company appears to have failed in its operations, and all their property in Nova Scotia was disposed of, except that now in question, and all debts in that Province, except $28, appear to have been settled, leaving a large debt due to the Plaintiff, who had been connected with the Company, and for which he held the promissory notes of the Company. The Supreme Court of Nova Scotia held there was evidence of a sale of these goods; and there appears to me to have been ample evidence for the consideration of the jury of a bonâ fide sale, for a valuable consideration, by the officers of the Company to the Plaintiff, for the purpose of discharging the lawful indebtedness of the Company. I think this was within the legislative power given to incorporated companies under ch. 53, sec. 15, N. S. Acts, which makes acts performed within the scope of their charter, or acts creating them, valid, notwithstanding they may not be done under, or authenticated by, the seal of the Company, if such an authentication was needed, but which, I think, was, in this case, wholly unnecessary[35].

The Company having in the due course of its business become indebted to the Plaintiff, I can see no reason why it might not as well pay that liability by a sale and delivery of personal property to their creditor in discharge thereof, as by handing him the amount in money, or selling the property to third parties, and handing over the proceeds to the creditor.

With reference to the conversion, I think the very circumstance of Defendant's levying on the goods, and subsequently selling them, was a clear conversion. There was not, it is true, evidence that the goods were on the levy moved, but it is clear the Sheriff did levy on them, and it is equally clear that the Court ordered the goods, thus in his hands and under his control, to be sold, as being in his possession under the levy, and that they were so sold.

The definition of a conversion, as given by the editor of Bacon's abridgment "Trover" (B), is this:—

> The action being founded upon a conjunct right of property and possession, any act of the Defendant which negatives or is inconsistent with such right, amounts in law to a conversion. It is not necessary to a conversion that there should be a manual taking of the thing in question by the Defendant; it is not necessary that it should be shown that he has applied it to his own use. Does he exercise a dominion over it in exclusion or in defiance of Plaintiff's right? If he does, that is in law a conversion, be it for his own or another person's use."

I think when a Sheriff levies on property he does take possession of it, as against the party, and does convert it. If he exercises control in defiance of the party who had the right, there is a conversion, and he may be sued for the conversion, and, as said by Alderson, B., in Fouldes v. Willoughby[36],

> For this simple reason, that it is an act inconsistent with the general right of dominion which the owner of the chattel has in it, who is entitled to the use of it at all times and in all places. When, therefore, a man takes that chattel, either for the use of himself or another, it is a conversion.

I think the Plaintiff's right of action did not commence at the time of the sale, but so soon as the Sheriff levied upon the goods, and so exercised a claim and dominion over them adverse to the Plaintiff and inconsistent with his general right of dominion.

Under these circumstances, I think the Plaintiff has made out his case, viz.: that the Company, by its officers, was competent to sell the goods in question, that there was evidence to establish the sale of the goods to the Plaintiff, and of a conversion by the Defendant. I state this with hesitancy, only because the views of my learned brethren are at variance with the conclusion at which I have arrived.

STRONG, J.:—

The conversion complained of by the declaration was the sale, not the seizure or taking of the goods. The 4th plea justifies the sale under the order of the Court, and avers that to have been the act complained of in the declaration. The Plaintiff is therefore confined to the sale as the conversion for which he sues. If he wanted to insist on the taking as constituting a conversion he should have new assigned. I should doubt, however, if a mere taking of the goods of a third person under a mesne attachment against a Defendant, to keep them in medio until the termination of the action, is a conversion. A conversion is defined to be a taking of chattels with an intent to deprive the Plaintiff of his property in them, or with an intent to destroy them or change their nature. Taking under a mesne attachment does not, like taking under a writ of fieri facias with intent to sell, imply any such intention. But, be that as it may, the conversion here must, on the pleadings, be taken to be the sale. Now, this sale was under an order of the Court, and was the act of the Court, not the act of the

Sheriff. It was not the case of a writ of execution or attachment being placed in the Sheriff's hands against the goods of A, and a seizure under it of the goods of B, which the exigency of the writ did not warrant; but these specific goods being already in the Sheriff's hands, having been seized under the attachment, the Court orders them to be sold. The Sheriff is, therefore, protected by the order for sale. The issue, it is true, on this line of pleading, is narrowed to this: Was the discontinuance after or before the sale? It appears that the sale took place on the 7th November, 1866, and that there was no discontinuance until December 11th, 1874. The issue on the rejoinder to the replication to the plea of justification ought, therefore, to have been found for the Defendant. But it was proper to consider, whether the plea did disclose a good justification, since there would be no use in granting a new trial if in point of law the Sheriff could not justify. As regards the other point argued, there can, in my judgment, be no doubt that the Company was one to which the Rev. Stats. p. 8, (4th Series), ch. 97, was applicable. I am, therefore, of opinion that the verdict ought to have been set aside with costs, and a new trial ordered.

TASCHEREAU and FOURNIER, J. J., concurred.

HENRY, J.:—

The points to be decided in this case are in an action of trover, brought by the Respondent against the Appellant, who, as Sheriff of the County of Cumberland, sold certain chattel property claimed by the Respondent to belong to him to recover its value.

To the charge of conversion in the Respondent's writ the Appellant pleaded:—

> 1st. That he did not convert to his own use the Plaintiff's goods, as in the writ alleged.

[Page 552]

> 2nd. That the goods were not the property of the Plaintiff.
> 3rd. That the Plaintiff was not possessed, nor was he entitled to the possession of the said goods.

And by a fourth plea, he justifies the taking of the goods, as and being the goods of the Lawrence Coal Mining Company, under a writ of attachment at the suit of one George Hibbard, against the said Lawrence Coal Mining Company, directed to him as Sheriff of the County of Cumberland; and the subsequent sale thereof under an order issued by the Supreme Court and signed by A. S. Blenkhorn, Esquire, Prothonotary of the said Court at Amherst in the said County of Cumberland, whereby he was ordered and required, amongst other things, as such Sheriff, as aforesaid, to put up and sell the said goods at public auction to respond the judgment which might be obtained. The Plaintiff replied to the latter plea:—

> That after the proceedings in the plea mentioned, taken by the said George Hibbard, the suit instituted by the said George Hibbard against the Lawrence Coal Mining Company was discontinued by him, and the attachment and all proceeding thereunder were thereby abandoned; which said discontinuance is on the fyles of this honorable court.

To that replication the Appellant rejoined, first, that the said cause was not discontinued, and second:—

That the said discontinuance was not filed until after the goods in said writ mentioned were sold under the order in his said plea mentioned, and the proceeds applied as therein mentioned.

On the trial of the issues of fact, leave was given to the Appellant to demur to the replication of the Respondent, which he did, and therein says that the Plaintiff's replication is bad in substance, inasmuch as the Sheriff is justified by his writ of attachment and order for sale, and was bound to execute it:—

That the act of the Plaintiff in the cause under which the attachment was made, in discontinuing the cause after the Sheriff had sold the property in question, cannot and does not affect his justification, as pleaded.

Marginal note on the demurrer:—

Matter of law to be argued—that the Sheriff, being bound to act in obedience to the order of the Court, cannot be affected by a discontinuance of a suit under which property was sold.

Joinder in demurrer by Respondent. Under the charge of the learned Chief Justice of Nova Scotia, before whom the cause was tried in October, 1876, the jury found a verdict for the Plaintiff for $500, and a rule nisi was granted to set it aside on the following grounds:—

1st. That the verdict was against law and evidence.

2nd. That the learned Chief Justice misdirected the jury.

3rd. That evidence was improperly received.

4th. That evidence was improperly rejected, and

5th. That there was no sufficient evidence of the conversion of the goods.

This rule and the demurrer were argued before the whole Court at Halifax, and by a majority of the Court the rule nisi was discharged with costs, and a judgment on the demurrer given in favor of the Respondent.

In the majority judgment, the fourth plea is pronounced bad, and a doubt expressed as to the sufficiency of the replication to it. Hence the judgment on the demurrer. The appeal to this Court is from that judgment on all the points, both as to the facts and the law.

I will first deal with the demurrer. I would not question the correctness of the judgment if the fourth plea is defective, but I don't think it is.

To decide that point, we must first consider the nature of the position held by the Appellant when he received the order for the sale of the goods. He had previously levied on the goods under the attachment, but had not removed them. Section 6, ch. 97 of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia, entitled: "Of suits against absent and absconding debtors," provides that:—

[Page 554]

Where the goods consist of stock, or are shown by affidavit to be of a perishable nature, and the agent shall not, within three days after notice of the appraisement, give security for their value, a judge, or a prothonotary of the county, in his absence, may, at his discretion, cause the same to be sold at public auction, and the proceeds thereof shall be retained by the Sheriff, or paid into Court, to respond the judgment.

The prothonotary of the county made an order under the provisions of that section, and directed to the Sheriff, to sell the said goods under the terms thereof.

On receipt of that order it was the Sheriff's duty to execute it. He could have been compelled by legal and summary means to do it, and would also be answerable to the Plaintiff in that suit for any resulting loss or damage to the goods, in case he eventually obtained judgment. So far, therefore, as the conversion by the sale, the order to sell the specific goods would be a complete justification and the plea to that extent is a sufficient answer.

If the plea admitted the goods were the property of the Plaintiff it would have been bad; but, on the contrary, it alleges them to have been, when levied upon, the goods of the Lawrence Coal Mining Company, and that, with the other allegations contained in it, forms a perfect answer to the writ; and, as a whole, is consequently a good plea The Respondent virtually says:— they were not the Plantiff's goods, but those of the Lawrence Coal Mining Company, and I, as Sheriff, levied upon them under the attachment, and subsequently sold them.

A special plea of justification is only necessary where goods of one party are taken out of the possession of another, and is only necessary as a justification for interfering with the possession. If goods are not taken out of the possession of the Plaintiff the right is tried by a simple denial of ownership. The justification in this case would only be necessary in case the goods in question, were, when taken, in contemplation of law, in the possession of the Respondent.

The replication to the plea is bad, for the simple reason that the Respondent could not, by any possibility, be affected by any subsequent act of the Plaintiff in regard to the discontinuance of the suit. I think, therefore, the judgment on the demurrer must be in favor of the Appellant.

Under that ruling the judgment on the facts submitted to the jury should also be for him, if the order for sale would be a justification to the officer for the original levy on the goods, as well as for the sale, even had they been the property of the Respondent; but, as it is not, the result must be affected by the question as to the ownership of the goods when the levy was made. If, then, they were not the Respondent's, he cannot recover; but the whole case, as far as the rule nisi for a new trial goes, depends altogether on the settlement of that question. The property, as admitted by both parties, was that of the Lawrence Coal Mining Company up to the date of the transfer claimed by the Respondent. Did he, then, obtain the property in the goods by the document signed by "J. W. Hawley, agent." If not, he had no property in them. In determining that point we must see if, in the first place, Hawley had sufficient authority to divest the Company of the ownership. The alleged transfer is signed by him on the 5th of July, 1867. He, the Respondent, and others were appointed Directors of the Company on the 18th of January, 1865, for one year from that date. No subsequent appointment of Directors was ever made, and there is no provision to be found anywhere, as far as the evidence goes, as is sometimes the case in respect of public officers, that the Directors should hold office till others were appointed in their place. There may have been such a provision in the

by-laws of the Company, but evidence of it is wanting. On the 18th of January, 1866, the Directors ceased to be so; and, as such, could not collectively or individually bind the Company. Resolutions of the stockholders were passed in April and December, 1865, authorizing certain Directors named, to sell on certain conditions the real and personal property of the Company; but Hawley was not one of them. On the 26th of February, 1866, at a meeting of the stockholders, a resolution was passed authorizing Messrs. Hawley, W. G. Howe and Alden:—

> To sell all the real and personal estate, and also the leasehold of the Company for such sum or sums, and on such terms, as in their judgment will be for the best interest of the Company, and pay the proceeds of such sale into the hands of the Treasurer for the benefit of the creditors of the said Company, and if the amount of such sale exceeds the debts, the balance to be paid pro rata among the stockholders.

No one will pretend for a moment that Hawley alone had power to make the sale to the Respondent, which the document signed by him purports to have been made. The delegated power by the Company was to three, and the three were to exercise their judgment in regard to it; and besides, none of them, nor the three together, had power to give any portion of the property in payment of any particular debt. It was to be sold for cash, and that paid into the hands of the Treasurer. The Respondent was himself a Director; and was quite aware, no doubt, of the nature of the authority given to Hawley, Howe and Alden, and is concluded thereby. There is no evidence of any ratification of the sale by the Company. In fact, there was but one meeting of the Company after that of February, 1866, and that was in 1874, which appears to have been called for the purpose of authorizing a transfer of the lease of the mines to the Respondent, which was done; and that only.

Some oral evidence was offered of the authority of Hawley to sell the personal property; but it was objected to and cannot be received for the obvious reason that no meeting had ever considered the subject. In the absence, then, of legitimate evidence, and when considering, too, that if any Directors existed at the time of the transfer, the Respondent was one, and could not become a purchaser through a sale by the Directors' he having with them a fiduciary authority to sell, if any such existed, I must say I can see no authority for the transfer to bind the Company, even if it had been made in the name of the Company and under its seal.

The instrument in question does not purport to be a transfer by the Company. It contains no words making a transfer. It only says baldly that the Respondent has purchased through T. R. Hawley, authorized to sell the same, the property mentioned in the schedule. A mere naked purchase, without evidence of any consideration given, or any delivery of the property, will not pass it. I cannot think the instrument of any more value than a letter to some person would have been, containing the same substance. It does not say who owned the property, or by whom he was authorized to sell it, and it is signed by "T. R. Hawley, agent." Agent of whom? It discloses no consideration or terms for the purchase. No consideration is shown either by, or dehors, the instrument by any one present at the alleged purchase. I will not say a written transfer was absolutely necessary, but I am of opinion the document per se is insufficient to make it. There is no other evidence of it; for neither of the parties to the transfer, Hawley and Dillingham, or any of the witnesses to it, or any other person present, was examined; and there is, therefore, no legal evidence of it. Alden's hearsay evidence upon this point, objected to at the trial, cannot be received.

The Respondent, in his evidence, says:—

> Alden, Dillingham, Hawley and Wentworth, were all creditors of the Company, and were the four interested with me in the transfer of the personal property—under his honorary obligation. Thus, then, was Hawley undertaking to act as the agent of the Company to convey, with the assistance of Dillingham, the property of the Company to the Respondent for his, Hawley's, Dillingham's and Wentworth's benefit. Surely the Company, at any time, could repudiate such a transfer; and, if void, as against the Company, it must be so as against a creditor of the Company, as Hibbard appears to have been.

And, now, in conclusion, as to the seal. I have carefully examined all the authorities, and have had no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that, in the absence of statutory enactment, the contract in question could only be valid under the seal of the Company.

By the registry of the articles of association in evidence, this Company was incorporated, not as a trading company, but:—

> For the special purpose of opening and working mines and veins, or deposits of coal and oils in the River Hebert Settlement, * * * and the exporting and making sale thereof, and of constructing and operating railways, tramways, or plank roads, necessary for transporting the said coal, when mined, to tide water, and for the purpose of constructing piers, docks and buildings necessary for carrying on said business, and of doing all other business which may be lawfully undertaken and connected therewith.

This is not, then, a "trading" Company, and therefore rules as to buying and selling stocks in trade will not apply to it.

The "selling" contemplated by this Company was to be of coal and oil, not the houses, buildings, or plant. The intention was to keep the latter as means to enable the Company to carry out the intentions of the charter.

The intention is clear and obvious, and I cannot strain words declaring, as do those of section 15, chap. 53 of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia, that:—

> The acts of incorporated companies performed within the scope of their charters, or acts creating them, shall be valid, notwithstanding they may not be done under, or authenticated by the seal of such corporations, to mean that a company may, without seal, sell and dispose of their whole property, and thereby wind up the company. Such a power is certainly, to my mind, not given by the section just quoted; for that section clearly has reference, as to this Company, to acts done "in the opening and working mines, &c." and the exporting and making sale of "coal and oil, &c." It, in fact, only applies to a going Company, and cannot be applied to the expiring flicker, or final sale of the houses, plant, &c., of a bankrupt company. For the reasons given, I think, the rule for the discharge of the rule nisi herein should itself be discharged and the said rule nisi made absolute with costs.

Appeal allowed with costs, and new trial ordered with costs in the Court below.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT
OF THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE HARRADENCE

[1] This is an appeal from a decision on a preliminary point of law. A representative action had been commenced by the Appellant, Ricky William Turigan, on behalf of the class of persons convicted under Section 238(3) of the Criminal Code (rep. & sub. 1974-75-76, C. 93, s. 19(2)) against Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of Alberta (the Crown), the Attorney General of Alberta, the Solicitor General for Alberta, and the Provincial Treasurer of Alberta. The statement of claim was struck out in respect to the latter three Defendants, leaving the Crown as the sole Defendant. The Appellant was granted leave pursuant to R. 220 of the Alberta Rules of Court for determination of a preliminary point of law. The agreed statement of facts for the R. 220 application was:

> "1. On or about the 15th day of April, A.D. 1980, the Plaintiff Ricky William Turigan was convicted under s. 238(3) (rep. & sub. 1974-75-76 C. 93 s.19(2)) Criminal Code, and fined Two Hundred and Fifty ($250.00) Dollars, which fine was paid by TURIGAN to the Defendant.
> 2. On February 3, A.D. 1981, the said s. 238(3) was declared to be ultra vires by the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Boggs (1981) 1981 CanLII 39 (SCC), 58 CCC (2d) 7 (S.C.C.).
>
> 3. The said fine has never been returned to TURIGAN nor has said conviction been removed from the Plaintiff's criminal record."

The question of law for determination was phrased in the following terms:

> "As a matter of law, is TURIGAN entitled to have his fine refunded by the Defendant?

The learned Judge in chambers, without providing reasons for judgment, answered this question in the negative. The same question is now before this Court.

[2] The basic issue that confronts us in this appeal involves the legal consequences attaching to a judicial pronouncement that a law is unconstitutional. What effect does the pronouncement have on rights and obligations that have arisen pursuant to that law? In the case at bar, is the Appellant entitled to the return of the fine paid as an incident of conviction under Section 238(3)? That law was declared to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in R. V. Boggs (1981) 1981 CanLII 39 (SCC), 1 S.C.R. 49.

[3] The direct result of a declaration of unconstitutionality is that the impugned legislation is rendered void ab initio. The legislation is, and always has been, invalid and of no force or effect. The United States Supreme Court, as noted by Professor Hogg at p. 345 of his text Constitutional Law of Canada (2 ed., 1985), has strayed from this principle by ruling that it possesses a discretion in certain cases to make the declaration of unconstitutionality prospective only. This discretion has been primarily exercised in relation to criminal statutes, where a retroactive ruling of unconstitutionality would result in the reopening of a significant number of convictions. The Supreme Court of Canada, however, has never adopted this doctrine of "prospective overruling". This is confirmed by the result in Reference Re Language Rights Under the Manitoba Act (1985) 1985 CanLII 33 (SCC), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 1. In that case, the Supreme Court was forced to grapple with the consequences flowing from its declaration that "All unilingually enacted Acts of the Manitoba Legislature are, and always have been, invalid and of no force and effect" (at p. 36). Rather than simply apply the doctrine of "prospective overruling" to overcome the legal chaos that would result from a wholesale declaration of unconstitutionality, the Supreme Court chose instead to preserve the rights, obligations and other effects that accrued through past reliance on Manitoba's unconstitutional laws. This was accomplished through the de facto doctrine, the res judicata doctrine, the doctrine of mistake of law, and where those doctrines were ineffective to preserve rights, obligations and other effects, a declaration that (at p. 29):

> "… in order to uphold the rule of law, these rights, obligations and other effects have and will continue to have, the same force and effect they would have had if they had arisen under valid enactments …"

In addition, it should be recalled that the Supreme Court temporarily validated Manitoba's laws to allow the Manitoba Legislature sufficient time to re-enact its laws in compliance with the requirements of the constitution thereby preventing a legal vacuum in that province.

[4] In the case at bar, the declaration by the Supreme Court in Boggs that Section 238(3) is unconstitutional has the effect of nullifying that section of the Criminal Code. Extreme circumstances similar to those in the Manitoba Language Reference are not present in this case. Legal chaos has not and will not result from the Supreme Court's declaration in Boggs. The rule of law, which was the Supreme Court's motivating force in the Manitoba Language Reference, is not threatened by the striking down of Section 238(3). Consequently, there is no need in the present case to take the exceptional steps taken by the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference, in the result, all actions taken in pursuance of Section 238(3) have been done without legal authority.

[5] Therefore, the criminal court that convicted and fined the Appellant did so without legal authority. This result, the Appellant submits, entitles him to a return of the fine. Unfortunately, the solution is not that simple. There are three legal hurdles that must be cleared before the Appellant can successfully claim entitlement:

1. Mistake of Law - Honey paid under a mistake of law is generally not recoverable. There are exceptions however.

2. Res Judicata - Is the Appellant's action barred by reason that as between the Appellant and the Respondent Crown, s. 238(3) must be considered to be constitutionally valid?

3. The De Facto Doctrine - Although the criminal court had no legal authority to convict the Appellant, did s. 238(3) nevertheless give that court sufficient colour of authority to convict? If so, then the conviction (and fine) are protected from collateral attack.

For the reasons that follow, I am of the view that the Appellant is not entitled to the recovery of his fine.

1. Recovery of Money Paid Under a Mistake of Law

[6] The Appellant clearly paid the fine as a result of a mutual mistake of law. The mistake of law was in respect to the constitutional validity of Section 238(3) of the Criminal Code. If the mistake of law had not been made, the Appellant would not have been convicted, nor would he have paid the fine.

[7] No authority need be cited for the principle that money paid as a result of a mistake of law cannot be recovered in an action for monies had and received. This must be contrasted with money paid under a mistake of fact, which is recoverable. This distinction has been subjected to much criticism, on the basis that it is hard to differentiate mistakes of fact and law. In fact, Dickson, J. (as he then was) in Hydro Electric Commission of Township of Nepean v. Ontario Hydro (1982) 1982 CanLII 42 (SCC), 132 D.L.R. (3d) 193 (S.C.C.) recently called for the elimination of this distinction, preferring instead to rely on principles of unjust enrichment to determine entitlement to recovery of money. However. Dickson, J. (Laskin, C.J.C. concurring) was in dissent in Nepean. The majority judgment, written by Estey. J., Martland and Lamer, JJ. concurring, upheld the distinction. In the words of Estey, J. (at p. 243):

> "These authorities, both old and current, relating to the situation where mistake of law alone is present, are founded, in my respectful view, on good sense and practicality. Certainty in commerce and in public transactions such as we have here is an essential element of the well-being of the community. The narrower rule applicable to mistake of law as compared to that applicable to mistake of fact springs from the need for this security and the consequential freedom from > disruptive undoing of past concluded transactions. Mistake of fact is, of course, limited to the parties and has no in rem consequences; hence the more generous view. In any event, nothing has been brought to light in the review of the law by the parties on this appeal to indicate any basis for the merging of the principles applicable to the categories of mistake, and indeed the wisdom embodied in the authorities augurs for the maintenance of this ancient distinction."

Consequently, I am bound by precedent to apply the principles relating to recovery of money paid under mistake of law.

[8] The Appellant submits that where the mistake of law is in respect to the constitutional validity of the legislation in question, the common law principles relating to recovery of money paid under mistake of law do not apply. In such cases, it is argued, the money that was paid to the government in reliance of the constitutionality of the legislation must be returned; to retain the funds would be to flout the constitution. The Appellant places the foundation for this proposition on the Supreme Court of Canada's judgment in Amax Potash v. Government of Saskatchewan 1976 CanLII 15 (SCC), [1976] 6 W.W.R. 61. Further reliance is placed in the British Columbia Court of Appeal's judgment in Air Canada v. The Queen in Right of British Columbia 1986 CanLII 1118 (BC CA), [1986] 5 W.W.R. 385. In my opinion, Amax Potash cannot be interpreted as supporting the proposition submitted by the Appellant. Consequently, inasmuch as the Air Canada decision interprets Amax Potash in a manner similar to that put forth by the Appellant, it cannot provide further support for the Appellant's proposition. I now propose to examine both of these cases.

[9] At issue in Amax Potash was the constitutionality of certain taxes imposed on Saskatchewan potash producers. Amax Potash was one of several potash producers who objected to the taxing provisions and therefore commenced an action to test their constitutionality. In their statement of claim, the potash producers asked for a declaration that all monies paid under the provisions, if found to be ultra vires the provincial Legislature, be returned. The Saskatchewan government, in its statement of defence, submitted that the taxing provisions were intra vires the provincial Legislature, and even if they were not, the statement of claim disclosed no cause of action because Section 5(7) of The Proceedings Against The Crown Act, R.S.S. 1965, c. 87 provided a complete defence. Section 5(7) purported to bar actions against the government for recovery of monies paid notwithstanding that the taxing provisions under which the monies were levied had been declared ultra vires. The potash producers applied for an interim preservation order in respect of monies paid to the government under the taxing provisions in dispute. The interlocutory application was refused at first instance in chambers. The refusal was upheld in the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal (reported [1976] 1 H.W.R. 569). On further appeal to the Supreme Court, leave was granted to challenge the constitutionality of Section 5(7) of The Proceedings Against The Crown Act itself. Although the Supreme Court upheld the refusal of the interim preservation order, the Court did declare Section 5(7) to be ultra vires the Province of Saskatchewan.

[10] In finding Section 5(7) to be constitutionally offensive. Dickson. J. (as he then was), writing for a unanimous Court, was repulsed by the notion that a legislature could insulate itself from the effect of its own ultra vires actions merely by legislatively extending Crown immunity. The gist of Dickson. J.'s reasoning can be found in the following paragraph (at p. 73):

> "Section 5(7) of The Proceedings against the Crown Act, in my opinion, has much broader implications than mere Crown immunity. In the present context, it directly concerns the right to tax. It affects, therefore, the division of powers under the B.N.A. Act. It also brings into question the right of a province, or the federal Parliament for that matter, to act in violation of the Canadian Constitution. Since it is manifest that if either the federal Parliament or a provincial legislature can tax beyond the limit of its powers, and by prior or ex post facto legislation give itself immunity from such illegal act, it could readily place itself in the same position as if the act had been done within proper constitutional limits. To allow moneys collected under compulsion, pursuant to an ultra vires statute, to be retained would be tantamount to allowing the provincial legislature to do indirectly what it could not do directly, and by covert means to impose illegal burdens."

At p. 74, his Lordship summarizes the governing principle:

> "The principle governing this appeal can be shortly and simply expressed in these terms: if a statute is found to be ultra vires the legislature which enacted it, legislation which would have the effect of attaching legal consequences to acts done pursuant to that invalid law must equally be ultra vires because it relates to the same subject matter as that which was involved in the prior legislation. If a state cannot take by unconstitutional means, it cannot retain by unconstitutional means."

[11] It should be emphasized that the proceedings in Amax Potash were interlocutory. The Supreme Court did not rule on the constitutionality of the taxing provisions in dispute. It therefore did not decide whether the potash producers would be entitled to the return of taxes paid should the taxing provisions be found to be unconstitutional. The Court merely examined the constitutional propriety of the bar against recovery of those taxes contained in Section 5(7) of The Proceedings Against the Crown Act.

[12] However, the trial court as well as arguably a majority of the British Columbia Court of Appeal in the Ait Canada case, [1986] 5 W.W.R. at p. 385, interpreted the Amax Potash decision as deciding that any monies paid to government under legislation subsequently declared to be unconstitutional cannot be retained by the government. With respect, and for the reasons set out above as well as those that follow. I cannot agree.

[13] Air Canada concerned, inter alia, a British Columbia taxing statute that was found to be unconstitutional. The plaintiff airlines sued for judgment against the defendant government claiming the return of the taxes paid under the unconstitutional taxing scheme. There existed two statutory bars against recovery similar in effect to the one in Amax Potash that was found to be ultra vires. Both the trial court and the Court of Appeal quickly disposed of the statutory bars by applying the governing principle in Amax Potash.

The courts were then left with the question of whether the plaintiff airlines were entitled to the return of their funds.

[14] The trial judge gave judgment to the plaintiffs. In his opinion (reported at 1984 CanLII 686 (BC SC), [1984] 3 W.W.R. 353), the decision in Amax Potash "foreclosed" all argument on mistake of law as a bar to recovery. In other words, the trial judge accepted the argument that the appellant in the case at bar submitted, namely that the government must return all monies paid under unconstitutional legislation for to retain the money would be to disregard the constitution.

[15] In the Court of Appeal, three judgments were delivered with three separate conclusions as to the issue of entitlement to the return of taxes. Hinkson, J.A. concluded that the plaintiffs were entitled to repayment, not on the basis of common law principles relating to payments under mistake of law which if applied precluded recovery, but rather on his interpretation of the Amax Potash case. In his opinion, a government cannot assert any claim to monies paid under unconstitutional legislation, whether that claim is based on a statutory bar to recovery (as was the case in Amax Potash) or based on a common law doctrine such as mistake of law. To uphold a claim would be tantamount to disregarding the "paramount concern" mentioned by Dickson, J. in Amax Potash, namely the preservation of the Constitution.

[16] Esson, J.A. came to the opposite conclusion. In his view, Amax Potash should not be interpreted as widely as was done by both the trial judge and Hinkson, J.A. Amax Potash merely declared offensive attempts by the legislature to protect itself from the consequences of unconstitutional legislation. The case did not go so far as to remove the application of general principles of law relating to the recovery of money paid under a mistake of law. After applying those principles to the facts before him, Esson, J.A. concluded that the plaintiffs were not entitled to repayment.

[17] The third judgment was delivered by Lambert, J.A. He agreed with Esson, J.A. that on a strict reading of Amax Potash, it does not establish the proposition that government must return monies levied under unconstitutional legislation. However, this did not prevent Lambert, J.A. from accepting the proposition. In his opinion, there must be an exception to the general mistake of law bar, where the mistake of law in question was the constitutionality of a taxing statute, "otherwise the Constitution would be flouted in the result" (at p. 409). His Lordship reasoned further that even if no such exception existed, money paid under an unconstitutional taxing statute should be considered to be money paid under practical compulsion, which is a recognized exception to the mistake of law bar.

[18] In my view, and with respect to those who disagree, the judgment of Esson, J.A. is to be preferred in regard to the effect that the Amax Potash decision had on the common law principles relating to recovery of money paid under mistake of law. In my view, Dickson, J. in Amax Potash did not decide that money paid to a government under unconstitutional legislation must in all cases be returned. That issue was not before him. What was before his Lordship was the constitutional propriety of attempts by government to insulate itself from repayment by extending Crown immunity from suit to cover actions for the recovery of taxes paid under unconstitutional taxing statutes. Dickson, J. does not remove the applicability of the general common law principles respecting payments made under mistake of law.

[19] In the result, the issue of entitlement to repayment of funds paid under unconstitutional legislation is still governed by the common law principles relating to recovery of money paid under mistake of law. Furthermore, no new exception to the mistake of law bar is created by the Amax Potash decision. With the greatest respect, I am unable to agree with the reasoning of Lambert, J.A. that the Constitution would be flouted if government was able to retain the monies through application of the mistake of law doctrine. In such cases, it is not the violation of the constitution which is providing the basis for the government's defence. Rather, it is the application of principles of fairness and equity that have evolved through the centuries which courts have seen fit to apply in situations where one person has paid another while operating under a mistake of law.

[20] I am supported in my conclusion by the Supreme Court's judgment in the Manitoba Language Reference case, supra. In that case it should be recalled that the Supreme Court had declared all of Manitoba's statutes and regulations to be unconstitutional and therefore of no force or effect because of the provincial Legislature's failure to enact the legislation in both English and French. This created a problem for the Supreme Court in that rights, obligations and other effects that had arisen under the invalid legislation could be challenged on the ground that the legislation was unconstitutional. Legal chaos would result. As a partial solution, the Supreme Court relied on the doctrine of mistake of law to provide some relief from the aforementioned consequences. As was stated by the Court (at p. 29):

> "It should be noted that there are other doctrines which might provide relief from the consequences of the invalidity of Manitoba's laws. … The doctrine of mistake of law might, in some circumstances, preclude recovery of moneys paid under invalid laws …"

From this it can be inferred that the Supreme Court was of the view that the principles relating to recovery of money paid under a mistake of law govern even where the mistake of law in question is the constitutional validity of the particular legislation in issue.

[21] Finally, it should be noted that leave has been granted by the Supreme Court in the Air Canada case: [1987] 1 W.W.R. lxviii.

[22] Consequently, the fact that Section 238(3) of the Criminal Code was declared to be unconstitutional does not by itself entitle the Appellant to the return of his fine. Reference must be made to the principles governing recovery of money paid under mistake of law. What, then, are these principles? The Supreme Court of Canada recently had the opportunity to examine this subject in Nepean, supra. In Nepean, the plaintiff municipality (Nepean) had commenced an action for the repayment of certain surcharges which it argued were beyond the legislative jurisdiction of Ontario Hydro to levy. The Supreme Court concluded that Ontario Hydro did exceed its jurisdiction, therefore the payments were made by Nepean under a mutual mistake of law. As a result, the recovery by Nepean of those payments was governed by the principles relating to recovery of money paid under mistake of law.

[23] After thoroughly canvassing the authorities and tracing the historical development of the doctrine of payment under mistake of law, Estey, J., writing for the majority, summarized the present state of the law in the following terms (at p. 242):

> "Mistake of law 'without more' and without 'something more in addition' (in the words of Lord Denning in Kiriri, supra, at p. 204) may be an allusion to the need to find compulsion or illegality to introduce a right of recovery on the happening of mutual mistake of law. In compulsion, recovery is allowed as the payment is not made voluntarily and there is no reason to suppose, only because of the fact of payment, that the plaintiff had surrendered his right to recover his moneys paid under practical compulsion. In the case of illegal transactions, the concept of in pari delicto is introduced to determine entitlement to recovery. In the absence of either of these elements, the 'something more in addition to a mistake of law' is missing, and the rule applicable on mutual mistake of law operates to deny recovery."

The following principles regarding recovery of monies paid under mistake of law can be extracted from the majority judgment in Nepean:

1. The general rule is that "without more", money paid under a mistake of law is not recoverable.

2. "Something more" has been found to exist where:

   i. the money was paid under compulsion; or

   ii. the money was paid in the context of an illegal transaction and the parties were not in pari delicto.

Under either of these two branches, the money is recoverable notwithstanding that it may in addition have been paid under a mistake of law.

3. Under the first branch of recovery, the compulsion need only be "practical" compulsion. Estey, J. refers to Eadie v. Township of Brantford (1967) 1967 CanLII 13 (SCC), 63 D.L.R. (2d) 561 (S.C.C.), where at p. 571 Mr. Justice Spence discussed the concept of "practical" compulsion:

> "It was submitted by counsel for the respondent that in order to justify the plaintiff demanding repayment of money paid under mutual mistake in law upon the basis that he was under compulsion to do so, the plaintiff must have been faced with a situation where there was no other alternative available to him. I am of the opinion that the bar to the plaintiff's recovery is not so stringent and that a practical compulsion is alone necessary. In each of the three cases in this Court approving Haskell v. Horner, which I have cited above, there were other courses available to the plaintiffs but those other courses were time consuming and impractical."

to establish compulsion, payment need not be the only choice; recovery is permitted where payment was compelled by practical considerations.

4. With respect to the second branch of recovery, Estey, J. held that it does not extend to situations where the illegality in question was an excess of jurisdiction by a statutory entity. The transaction must be one that is "contrary to public policy or prohibited by statute" (at p. 239) if entitlement to recovery is to be established under this branch of recovery.

[24] It is appropriate to note at this juncture that what the Appellant was essentially arguing for in respect to his reliance on the Amax Potash and Air Canada decisions was the establishment of a third branch of recovery. In other words, "something more" than the mistake of law exists where the payment was made to a government entity in pursuance of unconstitutional legislation. For the reasons set out above, I reject this line of argument.

[25] Applying these principles to the case at bar, the Appellant cannot recover his fine paid as a result of the mistake as to the constitutional validity of Section 238(3) unless he is able to establish entitlement under either of the two branches of recovery mentioned above. Clearly the second branch of recovery is inapplicable. The transaction with which we are concerned is not contrary to public policy or prohibited by statute. It is illegal only in the sense that the criminal court exceeded its jurisdiction by convicting the Appellant under a section of the Criminal Code that was unconstitutional. Consequently, the nature of illegality required by the second branch of recovery is not present in this case.

[26] However, in my view the Appellant is not barred from recovering the fine on the basis of the first branch of recovery. There is no doubt in my mind that the Appellant was under practical compulsion to pay the fine. Why? Because the consequence of not paying the fine was imprisonment. Therefore, while payment may not have been the only option open to the Appellant, it was the only practical choice. After all, what can be more compelling than the threat of imprisonment if the fine is not paid? Consequently. I have no difficulty in finding that the Appellant paid the fine under practical compulsion.

[27] In the result, the mistake of law hurdle has been cleared. I now turn to the second hurdle, that being the doctrine of res judicata.

2. Res Judicata

[28] The Respondent Crown submits that the Appellant is barred from recovering the fine by the doctrine of res judicata:

> "It is respectfully submitted that as between the Crown and the Appellant the matter is res judicata. In a court proceeding between the same parties (the Crown and the Appellant), Turigan was judicially required to pay. He did not appeal. The matter as between Turigan and the Crown is now final and conclusive.
>
> Res judicata applies when an issue is decided, expressly or implicitly, in court proceedings between the same parties (that is, the issue is either argued or could have been argued in earlier proceedings).

> In the case at bar, Turigan either (i) could have, but did not, raise the defence of ultra vires at his trial or (ii) raised the defence unsuccessfully, but failed to appeal. His conviction could not have followed but for section 238(3) having been recognized as valid by the Court; therefore res judicata applies."

[29] The Crown's argument is essentially that as between the Appellant and the Crown, the Appellant is bound by the decision of the criminal court that Section 238(3) is constitutional. As a consequence, the Appellant is prohibited from coming to court to seek relief from the Crown on a claim which for its viability is dependent upon a result contrary to that decided by the criminal court.

[30] Technically speaking, this plea would more accurately be described as issue estoppel. As noted in Halsbury's Laws of England (4th ed.), vol. 16, para. 1528 and 1529, res judicata relates to situations where the second suit is based on essentially the same cause of action as the first suit. In the case at bar the cause of action in the proceedings now before this Court cannot be said to have also been before the criminal court. In fact it is difficult to conceptualize a criminal proceeding as having a distinct cause of action, other than I suppose the guilt or innocence of the accused, and in that regard the pleas of autrefois acquit and autrefois convict stem from the doctrine of res judicata. Consequently, the plea of res judicata is not strictly appropriate.

[31] In my view, the proper plea is issue estoppel which evolved from res judicata. The vires of Section 238(3) was at issue in the prior criminal proceedings, and is again at issue in the present proceedings. Halsbury's, op. cit. at para 1530, describes this form of estoppel in the following terms:

> "A party is precluded from contending the contrary of any precise point which, having once been distinctly put in issue, has been solemnly and with certainty determined against him. Even if the objects of the first and second actions are different, the finding on a matter which came directly (not collaterally or incidentally) in issue in the first action, provided it is embodied in a judicial decision that is final, is conclusive in a second action between the same parties and their privies. This principle applies whether the point involved in the earlier decision, and as to which the parties are estopped, is one of fact or one of law, or one of mixed fact and law. The conditions for the application of the doctrine have been stated as being that (1) the same question was decided in both proceedings; (2) the judicial decision said to create the estoppel was final; and (3) the parties to the judicial decision or their privies were the same persons as the parties to the proceedings in which the estoppel is raised or their privies."

This Court had the opportunity to examine the doctrine of issue estoppel in R. v. Duhamel (No. 2) (1981) 1981 ABCA 295 (CanLII), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 538. At issue in Duhamel (No. 2) was whether a finding by one trial judge as to the voluntariness of a confession was binding on a second trial judge before whom the confession was again sought to be admitted. Mr. Justice Moir, writing for the Court, acknowledged (at p. 541) that issue estoppel originated from the principle of "estoppel per rem judicatam". His Lordship proceeded to accept and apply the six probanda set out by Spencer Bower and Turner in their text, Res Judicata, (2nd ed., 1969), at para. 19 as the "constituent elements of estoppel per rem judicatam" (at p. 542). The party attempting to set up the estoppel has the burden of establishing:

> "(i) that the alleged judicial decision was what in law is deemed such;
>
> (ii) that the particular judicial decision relied upon was in fact pronounced, as alleged;
>
> (iii) that the judicial tribunal pronouncing the decision had competent jurisdiction in that behalf;
>
> (iv) that the judicial decision was final;
>
> (v) that the judicial decision was, or involved, a determination of the same question as that sought to be controverted in the litigation in which the estoppel is raised;
> (vi) that the parties to the judicial decision, or their privies, were the same persons as the parties to the proceeding in which the estoppel is raised, or their privies, or that the decision was conclusive in rem".

[32] Can the Crown Respondent in the case at bar establish all six probanda? The first, second and fourth requirements are not at issue in this case. Furthermore, the sixth requirement, namely that the same parties must be involved, cannot be disputed. That leaves us with the third and fifth requirements for consideration.

[33] Dealing first with the fifth requirement, > that the judicial decision was, or involved, a determination of the same question as that sought to be controverted in the litigation in which the estoppel is raised;

The question with which we are concerned is the constitutionality of Section 238(3) of the Criminal Code. The Crown Respondent argues that the Appellant's claim is dependent upon a determination that the Appellant paid the fine pursuant to conviction for an offence that was ultra vires Parliament. There can be no argument that Section 238(3) is ultra vires. However, what is argued by the Respondent is that as between it and the Appellant, Section 238(3) must be considered to be intra vires, because the criminal court could not have convicted without first deciding, either expressly or by necessary implication, that Section 238(3) was intra vires. Therefore, the Respondent continues, the Appellant's claim must fail, because it depends on an opposite determination to a question that was fundamental to the earlier criminal proceedings.

[34] In my view, the two proceedings do involve the same question. We were not told whether the Appellant raised the issue of constitutionality in the criminal proceedings. However, this is not critical. It is settled law that to establish an issue estoppel, it is not necessary to show that the issue was one that was expressly determined in the previous judicial proceedings, so long as the issue must necessarily have been determined and determined in a particular way by the court to have reached the decision it pronounced. This principle of issue estoppel by implication is formulated by Spencer Bower and Turner in the following terms (at para. 193):

> "Where the decision set up as a res judicata necessarily involves a judicial determination of some question of law or issue of fact, in the sense that the decision could not have been legitimately or rationally pronounced by the tribunal without at the same time, and in the same breath, so to speak, determining that question or issue in a particular way, such determination, even though not declared on the face of the recorded decision, is deemed to constitute an integral part of it as effectively as if it had been made so in express terms: but, beyond these limits, there can be no such thing as a res judicata by implication."

This same principle has been formulated in a slightly different context in the leading case of Hoystead v. Taxation Commissioner 1925 CanLII 607 (UK JCPC), [1926] A.C. 155 (P.C.):

> "… the same principle - namely, that of setting to rest rights of litigants, applies to the case where a point, fundamental to the decision, taken or assumed by the plaintiff and traversable by the defendant, has not been traversed. In that case also a defendant is bound by the judgment, although it may be true enough that subsequent light or ingenuity might suggest some traverse which had not been taken. The same principle of setting parties' rights to rest applies and estoppel occurs."

These principles apply even where the previous judgment was given by default: Spencer Bower and Turner, para. 196; Halsbury's, vol. 16, para. 1533. Presumably, then, they should also apply where the defendant in the previous criminal proceeding entered a guilty plea.

[35] In the case at bar, the question of constitutionality was clearly an issue fundamental to the decision by the criminal court to convict the accused. Regardless of whether or not the constitutionality of Section 238(3) was actually raised by the Appellant in the criminal proceedings, the criminal court must have either expressly or impliedly (perhaps through reliance on the presumption of constitutionality) ruled that Section 238(3) was constitutional, otherwise it would not have had the jurisdiction to convict the Appellant. Consequently, the same issue of constitutionality which is now before this Court, was decided against the Appellant in the previous criminal proceedings. In the result, the fifth requirement for issue estoppel is established.

[36] That leaves us with only the third of the six probanda for consideration. To recall, the third requirement is "that the judicial tribunal pronouncing had jurisdiction in that behalf". As noted by Spencer Bower and Turner, at paras. 113 and 114:

> "113 Competent jurisdiction is an essential condition of every valid res judicata, which means that, in order that a judicial decision relied upon, whether as a bar, or as the foundation of an action, may conclusively bind the parties, or (in the case of in rem decisions) the world, it must appear that the judicial tribunal pronouncing the decision had jurisdiction over the cause or matter, and over the parties, sufficient to warrant it in so doing.

> 114 A tribunal may exceed its jurisdiction either by embarking upon an inquiry outside its province, or, while confining its inquiry within the proper limits, by making an order in excess of its powers. In either case the result will be to nullify the decision as a res judicata: in the former case, by the effect of the events we have mentioned upon the declaratory part of the decision, and, in the second, by their effect upon its jussive or prohibitory provisions."

See also Halsbury's, op. cit., para. 1554, where it is stated that:

> "1554. Lack of jurisdiction. In order that estoppel by record may arise out of a judgment the court which pronounced the judgment must have had jurisdiction to do so: the lack of jurisdiction deprives the judgment of any effect, whether by estoppel or otherwise."

The lack or excess of jurisdiction is said to deprive the decision of the court of any "conclusive effect".

[37] It is for this reason that the Respondent's plea of issue estoppel must fail. The section under which the Appellant was convicted and ordered to pay the fine was subsequently declared to be ultra vires Parliament. As a result, the section was void ab initio, and not merely voidable. The section never had any force or effect. Consequently, the criminal court exceeded its jurisdiction by convicting the Appellant under that section. Canadian courts have no inherent jurisdiction, apart from their contempt jurisdiction, to order criminal sanction. Our courts can only convict for those offences validly created by statute. In the result, the decision by the criminal court to convict the Appellant for an offence that never existed is a nullity. Consequently, the conviction cannot form the basis for res judicata.

[38] However, it may be argued that even though the criminal court had no jurisdiction to convict under s. 238(3), it nevertheless had jurisdiction to enter into a determination as to the constitutionality of that section; therefore, while the conviction may be a nullity, the Court's decision that the section was constitutional is not and may still form the basis for a plea of issue estoppel. The flaw in this argument is that the constitutionality of a provision under the Criminal Code is a jurisdictional question. Although I have not been referred to any authority directly on point, the constitutionality of the charging section must be an issue going to the criminal court's jurisdiction, for if that Court finds that the section is unconstitutional, the proceedings are terminated; the Court has no jurisdiction to proceed any further. In my view, this is a clear indication that the constitutionality of a charging section is a jurisdictional question.

[39] It is a well-established principle of law that a tribunal cannot give itself jurisdiction by a wrong decision on a question of law. In short, a court only has jurisdiction to decide a jurisdictional question correctly; it exceeds its jurisdiction by deciding the question incorrectly.

[40] Consequently, while the criminal Court in the case at bar did have jurisdiction to enter into a determination as to the constitutionality of s. 238(3), it exceeded its jurisdiction by incorrectly deciding the issue. In the result, its decision on that issue cannot raise an issue estoppel.

[41] The requirement that the court whose decision is relied upon as forming the res judicata have jurisdiction to make that decision has long been recognized. For instance, in Toronto Railway Company v. Corporation of the City of Toronto [1904] A.C. 809 (P.C.), the plaintiff railway had decided to challenge the defendant municipality's decision to tax its railway cars as realty. Both the Court of Revision (the court of first instance), and the Court of Appeal of Ontario held against the plaintiff. The following year, the plaintiff decided to challenge the assessment again and met with the same results in the Court of Revision and Court of Appeal. However, on appeal to the Privy Council, the decision was reversed. The City argued res judicata. The Privy Council rejected their plea, holding that both lower courts exceeded their jurisdiction by deciding that the railway cars were realty. Like the criminal Court in the case at bar, both of the lower Courts' jurisdictions were statutorily defined; their jurisdictions did not include the power to determine whether railway cars were assessable as realty. The Supreme Court of Canada applied the same reasoning in Pong v. Quong 1927 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1927] S.C.R. 271 in rejecting a plea of res judicata, as did the High Court of Australia in O'Keefe v. Williams (1907) 5 C.L.R. 217.

[42] Normally it would not be necessary to cite strong authority to support a principle as basic as the requirement that a court whose decision is relied upon for the plea of res judicata have jurisdiction to make that decision. However, in my view, such recitation is made necessary in this case by the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference case referred to earlier. The Court, in order to preserve legal rights, obligations and other effects that had arisen pursuant to Manitoba legislation which had been declared to be ultra vires, turned to the doctrine of res judicata (at p. 29):

> "It should be noted that there are other doctrines which might provide relief from the consequences of the invalidity of Manitoba's laws. For example, res judicata would preclude the reopening of cases decided by the courts on the basis of invalid laws."

The Supreme Court cited no authority for this proposition. In my view, the Supreme Court did not intend to effect a fundamental change in the law of res judicata. This is evidenced by the complete absence of analysis and precedent in their judgment in respect to res judicata. Furthermore, it is possible to reconcile the Supreme Court's statement with the above mentioned authorities. This is accomplished by recognizing that not all laws upon which a court bases its decision relate to that court's jurisdiction over the matter in question. In some cases the court will have had jurisdiction to decide the matter, even though legislation (not pertaining to the court's jurisdiction) which affected the outcome is subsequently declared to be ultra vires. In my view, it is this type of situation to which the Supreme Court is referring in its statement quoted above. In such cases, even though the court decided the matter on the basis of an invalid law, res judicata applies to prevent the reopening of the court's decision because the court did not exceed its jurisdiction by deciding the matter. This must be contrasted with those situations where the impugned legislation relates to the very jurisdiction of the court to decide the matter. The Supreme Court, in my view, did not intend to extend their above quoted comment to this latter situation. Consequently, the Manitoba Language Reference case has not obviated the requirement that the decision upon which the plea of res judicata is based must have been decided by a court with jurisdiction to make that decision.

[43] It should be pointed out that the Supreme Court in Wigman v. The Queen (1987) 1985 CanLII 1 (SCC), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 97 refers to the comments it made in the Manitoba Language Reference concerning the scope of the doctrine of res judicata. The accused in Wigman had been charged with attempted murder. The trial judge's charge to the jury in regard to the requisite intent for attempted murder was based on Lajoie v. The Queen (1973) 1973 CanLII 146 (SCC), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 313 (S.C.C.) which expressed the applicable law as of the date of the trial. The accused was convicted. An appeal to the British Columbia Court of Appeal proved unsuccessful. However, the accused was granted leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. Subsequent to granting leave, the Supreme Court in R. v. Ancio (1984) 1984 CanLII 69 (SCC), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 385 held that Lajoie should no longer be followed. As a consequence, one of the issues facing the Supreme Court in Wigman was whether the accused could rely on the overruling of Lajoie subsequent to his trial and conviction. At p. 104 the Supreme Court states:

> "The appropriate test is whether or not the accused is still in the judicial system. As expressed in the Crown's factum, this test affords a means of striking a balance between the 'wholly impractical dream of providing perfect justice to all those convicted under the overruled authority and the practical necessity of having some finality in the criminal process'. Finality in criminal proceedings is of the utmost importance but the need for finality is adequately served by the normal operation of res judicata: a matter once finally judicially decided cannot be relitigated. Thus a person convicted under Lajoie will not be able to reopen his or her case, unless, of course, the conviction is not final. In the Reference re Language Rights under Manitoba Act, 1870 (1985), 1985 CanLII 33 (SCC), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 1 at pp. 28-9, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 721 at p. 757, [1985] 4 W.W.R. 385 at pp. 414-5, the court observed that res judicata would even preclude the reopening of cases decided by the courts on the basis of constitutionally invalid laws. The res judicata principle would apply with at least as much force to cases decided on the basis of subsequently overruled case-law."

In my view, this pronouncement does not add to what was stated by the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference regarding the scope of res judicata. The subsequent overruling of Lajoie by the Supreme Court did not vitiate the jurisdiction of the trial judge in Wigman. As was the case in the Manitoba Language Reference, the Supreme Court in Wigman does not purport to extend the scope of res judicata to situations where the judge exceeded his jurisdiction by deciding the matter in issue.

[44] In the result, the Respondent's plea of issue estoppel cannot succeed. The criminal Court exceeded its jurisdiction by deciding (either expressly or implicitly) that s.

238(3) was intra vires, and had no jurisdiction to convict under that section. Consequently, there is nothing upon which the Respondent Crown can base its plea of issue estoppel.

[45] This leaves us with the final hurdle for consideration.

3. The De Facto Doctrine

[46] It is argued on behalf of the Respondent Crown that both the conviction and fine paid by the Appellant, although arising under unconstitutional legislation, are protected from collateral attack by the de facto doctrine. The premise underlying this argument is that although the criminal Court had no de jure authority to convict and order the payment of a fine pursuant thereto, it nevertheless had de facto authority by reason of the colour of authority imparted upon the criminal Court by s. 238(3). The Manitoba Language Reference, supra, and Bilodeau v. A.-G. Manitoba (1986) 27 D.L.R. (4th) 39 (S.C.C.) are cited in support of this argument.

[47] In my view, the Supreme Court has extended the scope of the de facto doctrine through its decisions in the Manitoba Language Reference and Bilodeau. Therefore, it may prove illuminative to set out the state of the law prior to the rendering of those two decisions before examining how the doctrine has been extended.

[48] The de facto doctrine has been defined in the following terms by Judge Albert Constantineau in his treatise entitled The De Facto Doctrine (1910) at p. 3:

> "The de facto doctrine is a rule or principle of law which, in the first place, justifies the recognition of the authority of governments established and maintained by persons who have usurped the sovereign authority of the State, and assert themselves by force and arms against the lawful government; secondly, which recognizes the existence of, and protects from collateral attack, public or private bodies corporate, which, though irregularly or illegally organized, yet, under color of law, openly exercise the powers and functions of regularly created bodies; and thirdly, which imparts validity to the official acts of persons who, under color of right or authority, hold office under the aforementioned governments or bodies, or exercise lawfully existing offices of whatever nature, in which the public or third persons are interested, where the performance of such official acts is for the benefit of the public or third persons, and not for their own personal advantage. The doctrine is grounded upon considerations of public policy, justice, and necessity, and is designed to protect and shield from injury the community at large or private individuals, who, innocently or through coercion, submit to, acknowledge, or invoke the authority assumed by the governments, corporate bodies, or officers, above mentioned."

This definition was quoted with approval by the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference (at p. 27). It is the third branch of this definition with which we are concerned, namely, the imparting of "validity to the official acts of persons who, under colour of right or authority … exercise lawfully existing offices of whatever nature …". Professor Wade, in his text Administrative Law (4th ed., 1977), at p. 287, describes this branch of the de facto doctrine in similar terms:

> "In one class of cases there is a long-standing doctrine that collateral challenge is not to be allowed: where there is some unknown flaw in the appointment or authority of some officer or judge. The acts of the officer or judge may be held to be valid in law even though his own appointment is invalid and in truth he has no legal power at all. The logic of annulling all his acts has to yield to the desirability of upholding them where he has acted in the office under a general supposition of his competence to do so. In such a case he is called an officer or judge de facto, as opposed to an officer or judge de jure."

A similar definition can be found in de Smith's Judicial Review of Administrative Action (4th ed., 1980) at p. 153:

> "In a few cases [the courts] have gone so far as to accord full legal recognition, in the public interest, to decisions by de facto officers, who because of the informality of their appointment, were not strictly entitled to exercise any jurisdiction at all."

The de facto doctrine has experienced its most widespread usage in the United States. Corpus Juris Secundum defines the doctrine in the following terms (48A C.J.S., s. 2, Judges):

> "A judge de facto is one acting with color of right and who is regarded as, and has the reputation of, exercising the judicial function he assumes. He differs, on the one hand, from a mere usurper of an office who undertakes to act without any color of right; and, on the other, from an officer de jure who is in all respects legally appointed and qualified to exercise the office."

[49] What should be discerned from the above quoted definitions is that the de facto doctrine was originally intended to prevent the decisions and actions of public officials from being collaterally attacked on the ground that the official did not have proper legal title to the office he purported to hold and exercise. The scope of the doctrine was limited to preventing collateral attack on the basis of irregularity of appointment to office. As will be illustrated infra, the case law prior to the Manitoba Language Reference supports this characterization of the de facto doctrine.

[50] As acknowledged by the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference (at p. 27), the rationale underlying the de facto doctrine is premised on the preservation of the rule of law. The House of Lords attributed the doctrine to the same theoretical underpinnings:

> "With regard to the competence of the vestrymen, who were vestrymen de facto, but not vestrymen de jure, to make the rate, your Lordships will see at once the importance of that objection, when you consider how many public officers and persons there are who are charged with very important duties, and whose title to the office on the part of the public cannot be ascertained at the time. You will at once see to what it would lead if the validity of their acts, when in such office, depended upon the propriety of their election. It might tend, if doubts were cast upon them, to consequences of the most destructive kind. It would create uncertainty with respect to the obedience to public officers, and it might also lead to persons, instead of resorting to the ordinary legal remedies to set right anything done by the officers, taking the law into their own hands."

Scadding v. Lorant (1851) 3 H.L.C. 418 at 447, 10 E.R. 164 at 175.

[51] Constantineau, op. cit., sets out three prerequisites that must be established to constitute one a de facto officer:

> "Three things are essential to constitute one an officer de facto, viz: -
>
> 1. The office held by him must have a de jure existence, or at least one recognized by law;
>
> 2. He must be in the actual possession thereof; and
>
> 3. His holding must be under color of title or authority.
> Without the existence and concurrence of these three elements, no person can be regarded as an officer de facto. Indeed, whatever color of title one may have, and whatever may be his possession, if the office be one not recognized by law, he can never acquire the status of an officer. On the other hand, however strong and well founded may be a person's claim to a lawfully existing office, yet if he be deprived of the actual possession thereof, he may be an officer de jure, but he cannot be an officer de facto. Finally, the bare possession of a de jure office, without color of title or authority, will only constitute the occupant a usurper."

The same three prerequisites exist in American jurisprudence: see Corpus Juris Secundum, op. cit.

[52] The rationale underlying the prerequisite that the office have a de jure existence before the possessor of that office can be given de facto recognition was succinctly stated by Mr. Justice Field of the United States Supreme Court in Norton v. Shelby County (1886) 118 U.S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L.Ed. 178 as follows:

> "The idea of an officer implies the existence of an office which he holds. It would be a misapplication of terms to call one an officer who holds no office, and a public office can only exist by force of law."

It follows from this requirement that the office cannot be one created by unconstitutional legislation in that an office established under an unconstitutional statute cannot be said to enjoy a de jure existence. This proposition is well supported by the authorities: see Constantineau, op. cit., pp. 51 et seq. However, it should not be confused with appointment under unconstitutional legislation to a de jure office; in this case the officer may possess de facto authority. In other words, although unconstitutional legislation cannot create a de jure office, it does not prevent an officer who has been appointed to a de jure office under unconstitutional legislation from being an officer de facto. This stems from the fact that the de facto doctrine was originally designed to prevent collateral attacks based on a defect in appointment or title, and not defects as to the constitution of the office itself.

[53] The de facto doctrine has long been recognized by Canadian courts. A case typical of situations where the doctrine has traditionally been applied is O'Neil v. A.-G. Canada (1896) 1896 CanLII 58 (SCC), 26 S.C.R. 122. The Criminal Code had authorized "the chief constable or deputy chief constable" to apply for a warrant to seize gaming equipment. In O'Neil, the warrant had been applied for by the son of the chief constable, the chief constable having appointed his son to act as his deputy in his absence. A police magistrate declared that the money that had been seized pursuant to the warrant forfeited to the Crown. The plaintiff sought the return of this money, inter alia, on the ground that the son had not been duly sworn into office as deputy chief constable thereby invalidating the search warrant. The Supreme Court of Canada held that even if the son had not been properly sworn in as deputy, he held the office de facto, given that he had performed the functions of a deputy constable for several years. The Supreme Court described the de facto doctrine in the following terms (at p. 130):

> "The rule of law is that the acts of a person assuming to exercise the functions of an office to which he has no legal title are, as regards third persons, that is to say, with reference to all persons but the holder of the legal title to the office, legal and binding. Especially is this so in the case of officers holding over and continuing to perform official duties after their term has expired. Further, this rule has been held to apply to a delegate of a delegate whose appointment would be manifestly without legal authority. Further, it has been held to apply even to judicial officers and a fortiori to those appointed for the performance of mere ministerial duties such as a head constable. And particularly it has been held to apply to officers who have failed to qualify themselves by taking an oath of office prescribed by law."

[54] Further illustration of the classic application of the de facto doctrine can be seen in the case of R. v. Cyr [1917] 2 W.W.R. 1185 (Alta. S.C.T.D.). In Cyr, the defendant sought to quash her conviction on the ground that the convicting magistrate was a woman. Women, it was argued, were not capable of holding judicial office. Scott, J. (as he then was) held that (at p. 1187):

> "While I entertain serious doubt whether a woman is qualified to be appointed to that office, I am of opinion that the legality of such an appointment cannot be questioned or inquired into on this application."

His Lordship proceeded to examine the authorities regarding the de facto doctrine, and concluded that the conviction could not be collaterally attacked on the regularity of the magistrate's appointment.

[55] It is readily apparent that the de facto doctrine as explained and illustrated above would not serve to preclude the Appellant from recovering his fine. The defect with which we are concerned is not one going to the validity of title or regularity of appointment to office. The convicting judge was presumably properly appointed to that office; he was an officer de jure. The defect which had been subjected to challenge in these proceedings is that the convicting judge exercised powers which went beyond the jurisdiction of his office. In other words, what we are faced with is an exercise of power in excess of jurisdiction by a de jure officer. Traditionally, the de facto doctrine did not prevent collateral attacks on this basis. This limitation on the de facto doctrine is recognized by the authors of Corpus Juris Secundum, op. cit., where at s. 63 they state:

> "The rule that the official acts of de facto judges are valid as against third persons cannot be applied to an attempted exercise of judicial power by an officer de jure > who claims the right so to act by virtue of his office, when in fact no such power is vested therein."

This is precisely the situation we face in the case at bar: the de jure convicting judge, in convicting the Appellant and ordering him to pay a fine pursuant to s. 238(3) of the Criminal Code, exercised a power that was not vested within his judicial office, given that s. 238(3) was declared to be of no force or effect ab initio by the Supreme Court in Boggs. The de facto doctrine did not preclude a collateral challenge on this basis.

[56] This limitation on the scope of the de facto doctrine can be viewed in a slightly different context. It is possible to conceptualize the power to convict under s. 238(3) as an office separate and apart from the office of the convicting judge. It can then be argued that although the convicting judge was never legally appointed to hold that "s. 238(3) office", he was nevertheless a de facto possessor of that office. Under this reasoning, the actions of the convicting judge in performing his duties as a de facto officer of the s. 238(3) office would not be subject to collateral challenge. However, it should be recalled that one of the prerequisites for application of the de facto doctrine was that the office have a de jure existence, and that an office could not have a de jure existence if attempted to be created under unconstitutional legislation. Given that the "s. 238(3) office" was created under unconstitutional legislation, it had no de jure existence. In the result, this reasoning collapses; the convicting judge cannot be said to be a de facto officer of the s. 238(3) office.

[57] Therefore, the de facto doctrine, as traditionally understood and applied, would not preclude the Appellant from challenging the validity of his conviction under s. 238(3) and hence recovering his fine. However, the de facto doctrine has undergone a significant revision in light of the Supreme Court's recent decisions in the Manitoba Language Reference, supra and Bilodeau, supra. As a result of this revision, I am bound to conclude that while the convicting judge did not possess de jure authority to convict, he nevertheless had de facto authority, thereby prohibiting collateral attack on this basis.

[58] The Manitoba Language Reference was referred to earlier in these Reasons. One should recall that the Supreme Court in that case was faced with the task of preventing legal chaos from erupting as a result of their finding that all of Manitoba's laws were invalid ab initio. The Supreme Court examined the de facto doctrine in this context. After reviewing some of the authorities on this subject, the Supreme Court (at p. 28) stated that:

> "There is only one true condition precedent to the application of the doctrine: the de facto officer must occupy his or her office under colour of authority. This is consistent with the rationale for the doctrine, viz., that the members of the public with whom the officer dealt relied upon his ostensible status."

No mention is made of the first of Constantineau's three prerequisites, namely that the office have a de jure existence. Perhaps one could argue that an official has no colour of authority if the office he occupies has no de jure existence. However, as is subsequently made clear by the Supreme Court, the office need no longer have a de jure existence for the de facto doctrine to apply: it is sufficient that the office enjoy de facto recognition. The Supreme Court summarized the effect of the de facto doctrine in the following terms (at p. 28):

> "Thus, the de facto doctrine will save those rights, obligations and other effects which have arisen out of actions performed pursuant to invalid Acts of the Manitoba Legislature by public and private bodies corporate, courts, judges, persons exercising statutory powers and public officials. Such rights, obligations and other effects are, and will always be, enforceable and unassailable."

[59] The conclusion that one is forced to draw from the statements of the Supreme Court above quoted is that a public official can be given colour of authority by unconstitutional legislation, even though such legislation is said to have had no force or effect ab initio. This colour of authority can relate to both the existence of the office, as well as the powers associated with that office. Consequently, in the Manitoba Language Reference, even though the office and powers which the public officials purported to hold and exercise arose under unconstitutional legislation, the actions of the public officials were enforceable and unassailable because the unconstitutional legislation imparted colour of authority, not only to the official's actions, but also to the existence of the office itself.

[60] It is clear that the de facto doctrine, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, now applies to preclude collateral challenge to the actions of public officials on the basis that the power which the official purported to exercise was unconstitutional. I confess to difficulty in rationalizing this decision with the approach taken by the Supreme Court in Amax Potash v. Saskatchewan, supra. It should be recalled that the Supreme Court in Amax Potash found offensive any attempt by a government to legislatively immunize itself from the effects of unconstitutional legislation. It would now appear that the de facto doctrine immunizes all acts done pursuant to unconstitutional legislation from collateral attack. Nevertheless, this extension of the de facto doctrine is confirmed by the Supreme Court's judgment in Bilodeau supra.

[61] Bilodeau arose out of the aftermath that followed the Supreme Court's decision in the Manitoba Language Reference. Bilodeau had been charged with speeding contrary to the Highway Traffic Act, R.S.M. 1970, c. H-60 and was issued a court summons under the Summary Convictions Act, R.S.M. 1970, c. S-230. Bilodeau had raised the invalidity of the two statutes as a defence at his trial, but did not succeed in persuading the trial judge. As a result, he was convicted. His conviction was confirmed on appeal to the Manitoba Court of Appeal. Subsequent to the Court of Appeal's decision, the Supreme Court rendered judgment in the Manitoba Language Reference, which in effect ruled that the two above mentioned statutes were invalid because they were not enacted in both English and French. Therefore, when Bilodeau appealed his conviction to the Supreme Court, that Court was faced with the question of whether his conviction could be upheld in light of the invalidity of the laws under which he was convicted.

[62] The conviction was challenged on three grounds: first, that the summons was invalid because it was issued under the Summary Convictions Act, which was itself invalid; secondly, that the summons itself was printed in English only and for that reason was invalid; and thirdly, that the conviction under the Highway Traffic Act was invalid because that Act was enacted in English only. The first and third grounds are of interest in the case at bar.

[63] With respect to the validity of the summons, the Supreme Court held that even though the Act under which the summons was issued was invalid, the summons itself was protected from challenge by the de facto doctrine. The operation of the de facto doctrine was summarized as follows (at p. 43):

> "… the rights, obligations and other effects which have arisen under this Act will be forever enforceable if they arose out of, inter alia, reliance 'upon the acts of those administering the invalid laws' under colour of authority. Actions performed pursuant to invalid Acts by courts and judges, acting upon colour of authority, will be saved by the de facto doctrine. Thus in the present case, the de facto doctrine will preclude any challenge to the effectiveness or enforceability of the summons on the ground that it was issued pursuant to an invalid Act, since the summons was clearly issued under colour of the authority of the Summary Convictions Act."

[64] As for the validity of the conviction under the Highway Traffic Act, the Supreme Court held that the de facto doctrine would not preserve the conviction because the de facto doctrine only prohibited collateral attacks against the acts of public officials acting under de facto authority. Whereas the challenge to the validity of the issuance of the summons was collateral, the attack on the conviction was direct; Bilodeau had raised the validity of the Highway Traffic Act both at trial and on appeal from his conviction. As stated by Dickson, C.J.C., for the majority (at p. 45):

> "I do not believe that a trial judge can be said to be acting under colour of authority when the very ground for the defence is the invalidity of his authority and when his or her decision on this point is appealed. If a person is convicted under a statute which, on appeal from conviction, is deemed invalid, the conviction cannot be saved by invoking de facto authority on the part of the judge."

Although the de facto doctrine did not protect the conviction, the Supreme Court held that the declaration made by the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference temporarily validating all rights, obligations and other effects arising under Manitoba's invalid laws (to uphold the rule of law) preserved the conviction entered against Bilodeau under the invalid Highway Traffic Act.

[65] From the foregoing analysis, the following can be concluded:

1. The de facto doctrine is no longer restricted to situations involving defects in the public official's title to office or regularity of appointment. The de facto doctrine may apply to preserve the acts of de jure officials acting outside their jurisdiction as well as the acts of persons whose office has no de jure existence where those acts are done with colour of authority.

2. Unconstitutional legislation, although it is said to be of no force or effect ab initio, has sufficient force and effect to impart colour of authority to public officials holding office or exercising powers created under that legislation.

3. The de facto doctrine does not apply to direct challenges to an official's authority. It only precludes collateral challenges where the official acted under colour of authority.

[66] In the result, the Appellant's claim cannot succeed. Although the Appellant was convicted and paid a fine pursuant thereto under an unconstitutional law, that law nevertheless gave the convicting judge sufficient colour of authority to protect his decision from collateral impeachment. To rephrase, although the convicting judge had no de jure authority to convict, s. 238(3) gave him de facto authority. Consequently, the Appellant's claim, which amounts to a collateral attack on the conviction, must fail.

4. Conclusion

"As a Matter of Law, is Turiaan Entitled to Have His Fine Refunded by the Defendant?"

[67] This preliminary question of law must be answered in the negative. Although the mistake of law and res judicata doctrines do not bar the recovery proceedings, the Appellant is barred from collaterally challenging the authority of the convicting judge by virtue of the de facto doctrine.

[68] Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed. Given the uniqueness and importance of the legal principles herein discussed, I would not award costs.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT OF

---

[69] I have read the draft judgment of my brother Harradence and agree that the appellant is not entitled, as a matter of law, to the refund of his fine. However, I do so on the basis that the original conviction is not open to collateral impeachment in these proceedings and is a bar to the recovery.

[70] The original conviction constitutes an estoppel per rem judicatem. The elements of such an estoppel were adopted by Moir, J.A. in Duhamel (No. 2) (1981), 1981 ABCA 295 (CanLII), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 538 from Spencer-Bower and Turner, Res Judicata, (second ed., 1969), para. 19. In my opinion all of the necessary elements are present.

[71] The argument is advanced that the convicting judge lacked jurisdiction because he convicted under a law that was later held to be ultra vires. The validity of that law was impliedly in issue in that original proceeding and the court in pronouncing its judgment necessarily concluded that the law was valid even if the issue was not expressly raised. A party cannot re-litigate a claim which might have been raised in an earlier proceeding: 17 Halsbury (4th) para. 1533.

[72] As Spencer-Bower and Turner note, at pp.14 and 15, the correctness of a decision does not, of itself, go to jurisdiction: a competent tribunal has "… jurisdiction to decide wrongly, as well as rightly." The convicting judge made an error in the exercise of his jurisdiction in accepting the validity of the impugned section of the Code.

[73] In the Manitoba Language Reference, 1985 CanLII 33 (SCC), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 721 at 757 the court noted that "… res judicata would preclude the re-opening of cases decided by the courts on the basis of invalid laws." That proposition is affirmed in Wigman (1987), 1985 CanLII 1 (SCC), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 97 where the court, at 104, says the earlier case "… observed that res judicata would even preclude the reopening of cases decided by the courts on the basis of constitutionally invalid laws." The point is also made in Bilodeau v. A.G. Manitoba, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 449.

[74] I derive no assistance from Toronto Railway v. Corporation of City of Toronto, [1904] A.C. 809 (P.C.); Pong v. Quong, 1927 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1927] S.C.R. 271, or O'Keefe v. Williams (1907), 5 C.L.R. 217. In Toronto Railway, the Privy Council held that an earlier decision, apparently deciding an issue and thus said to be res judicata, was not a bar because the tribunal, and the court which exercised a statutory appeal from it, lacked jurisdiction to decide that issue. In Pong it was argued that an earlier judgment decided an issue, but the Supreme Court held that the judge in the earlier case lacked jurisdiction to decide the issue. Similarly, in O'Keefe, the court held that the first tribunal lacked jurisdiction to decide the question in issue. The issue here is the constitutionality of the charging section, which the convicting judge unquestionably had jurisdiction to decide.

[75] I disagree with, and know no authority, for the proposition that the constitutionality of a provision of the Criminal Code is a jurisdictional question. Indeed, the proposition is contrary to the well recognized principle I quoted from Spencer-Bower and Turner that a competent tribunal has jurisdiction to decide wrongly as well as rightly.

[76] Reference was made to Neely v. U.S.A. (1976), 41 A.L.R. Fed. 331. That was an action for the return of fines paid under unconstitutional convictions. The decision that such an action lies is based on U.S. legislation, the Tucker Act, which (quoting from the headnote) "… provides authority for a district court to order the return of fines and costs based upon unconstitutional convictions." Moreover, the action there sought to "vacate, annul and set aside judgments and sentences of conviction" (p.340). That relief, which I doubt is available in civil proceedings in Canada, is not, in any event, sought. The conviction at bar has not been impeached by any proper proceedings to that end.

[77] The appellant is seeking to re-litigate an issue open to him in the earlier proceedings and is precluded from so doing as long as that conviction stands. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal, with costs.

RULE 77CIVIL CASE MANAGEMENT

APPLICATION AND INTERPRETATION

Scope

77.01 (1) This Rule applies to actions and applications,

(a) commenced in a county named in the Schedule to this rule on or after the date specified in the Schedule for the county;

(b) commenced in The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto or the City of Toronto before July 3, 2001 and randomly assigned to case management by the registrar, acting under the direction of the regional senior judge; and

(c) commenced in the City of Toronto on or after July 3, 2001 and assigned to case management by the registrar, acting under the direction of the regional senior judge. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 442/97, s. 4; O. Reg. 113/01, s. 5 (1).

Ordering Proceeding into Case Management

(1.1) This Rule also applies to an action or application that is brought under case management by an order under subrule 77.11 (1.1). O. Reg. 570/98, s. 16 (1).

Assignment Under Rule 78.12

(1.2) This Rule also applies to an action that is assigned, under rule 78.12, to case management in accordance with this Rule. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 6 (1).

Revocation

(1.3) Subrule (1.2) is revoked on May 6, 2008. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 6 (1).

Exception

(2) This Rule does not apply to,

(a) Revoked: O. Reg. 198/05, s. 6 (2).

(b) Revoked: O. Reg. 198/05, s. 6 (2).

(c) actions or applications placed on the Commercial List established by practice direction in the Toronto Region;

(d) actions or applications under Rules 74 and 75;

(d.0.1) applications for the removal or replacement of personal representatives under the Trustee Act;

(d.0.2) applications under Part V of the Succession Law Reform Act;

(d.0.3) applications for guardianship of property or persons under the Substitute Decisions Act, 1992;

(d.0.4) Revoked: O. Reg. 198/05, s. 6 (2).

(d.0.5) Revoked: O. Reg. 198/05, s. 6 (2).

(d.1) actions under Rule 64 (Mortgage Actions);

(d.2) actions under Rule 76;

(e) actions or applications under the Construction Lien Act, except trust claims;

(f) actions or applications under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (Canada); and

(g) actions or applications certified as class proceedings under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992.
O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 118/97, s. 5; O. Reg. 570/98, s. 16 (2); O. Reg. 113/01, s. 5 (2); O. Reg. 457/01, s. 10; O. Reg. 206/02, s. 21 (1); O. Reg. 198/05, s. 6 (2).

Class Proceedings Act, 1992

(2.1) This Rule applies to an action or application commenced under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 only if certification as a class proceeding has been denied. O. Reg. 570/98, s. 16 (3).

Conflict with Other Rules

(3) In the event of conflict between a provision of Rules 1 to 76 and a provision of this Rule, the latter prevails. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Time

(4) In a proceeding to which this Rule applies, a time prescribed in any of Rules 1 to 76 or in this Rule may be extended or abridged only by order of a case management judge or case management master. O. Reg. 570/98, s. 16 (4).

Place of Hearing of Motions

(5) Unless the court orders otherwise, all motions shall be heard in the county where the proceeding was commenced or to which it has been transferred under rule 13.1.02. O. Reg. 14/04, s. 41.

SCHEDULE

Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton	January 2, 1997
(known as City of Ottawa on and after January 1, 2001)
County of Essex	December 31, 2002

O. Reg. 206/02, s. 21 (2).

PURPOSE

77.02 The purpose of this Rule is to establish a case management system throughout Ontario that reduces unnecessary cost and delay in civil litigation, facilitates early and fair settlements and brings proceedings expeditiously to a just determination while allowing sufficient time for the conduct of the proceeding. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

DEFINITIONS

77.03 In rules 77.03 to 77.17,

"case management judge" means the judge or a member of a team of judges assigned to manage a proceeding; ("juge responsable de la gestion de la cause")

"case management master" means a person appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council under section 86.1 of the Courts of Justice Act; ("protonotaire responsable de la gestion de la cause")

"defence" includes a notice of intent to defend, a statement of defence, a notice of appearance and a notice of motion in response to a proceeding; ("défense")

"defendant" includes a respondent; ("défendeur")

"plaintiff" includes an applicant; ("demandeur")

"timetable" means a schedule for the completion of one or more steps required to advance the proceeding (including delivery of affidavits of documents, examinations under oath, where available, or motions), established by,

(a) an order of a case management judge or case management master, or

(b) a written agreement of the parties that is not contrary to an order; ("calendrier")

"track" means either the fast track or the standard track provided by this Rule. ("voie") O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 118/97, s. 6; O. Reg. 113/01, s. 6; O. Reg. 457/01, s. 11.

CASE MANAGEMENT MASTER

77.04 (1) A case management master has,

(a) the power to hear motions that are within the jurisdiction of a master under subrule 37.02 (2); and

(b) case management powers and duties provided by this Rule. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

(2) Under the direction of the case management judge, a case management master may manage any proceeding to which this Rule applies. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

OTHER MATTERS

File Number for Third and Subsequent Party Claims

77.05 (1) Third and subsequent party claims shall be given the same file number as the main action, followed by a suffix letter. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Format of Documents

(2) The forms prescribed in this Rule and notices, certificates and orders referred to in it may be single spaced and need not have a backsheet. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 118/97, s. 7.

COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDING

77.06 (1) Revoked: O. Reg. 457/01, s. 12.

(2) Revoked: O. Reg. 627/98, s. 8.

(3) Revoked: O. Reg. 284/01, s. 26.

(4) Revoked: O. Reg. 284/01, s. 26.

(4.1) Revoked: O. Reg. 284/01, s. 26.

Choice of Track

(5) On filing Form 14F (Information for court use), the plaintiff shall choose the fast track or the standard track for the proceeding. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 206/02, s. 22.

(6) In choosing a track, the plaintiff shall have regard to all relevant considerations, including,

(a) the complexity of the issues of fact or law;

(b) the likely expense to the parties;

(c) the importance to the public of the issues of fact or law;

(d) the number of parties or prospective parties;

(e) the amount of intervention by the case management judge that the proceeding is likely to require; and

(f) the time required for proper discovery, if applicable, and preparation for trial or hearing. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Track Chosen by Plaintiff

(7) The proceeding shall proceed on the track chosen by the plaintiff unless the court orders otherwise. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

(8) Revoked: O. Reg. 284/01, s. 26.

(9) Revoked: O. Reg. 284/01, s. 26.

(10) Revoked: O. Reg. 284/01, s. 26.

CHANGE OF TRACK

77.07 (1) A case management judge or case management master may order that a proceeding be transferred from one track to the other. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

(2) A party who seeks an order under subrule (1) shall move for the order,

(a) in the case of an action, before the close of pleadings;

(b) in the case of an application, on or before the tenth day after the first affidavit has been filed by a respondent. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

(3) On a motion under subrule (1), a case management judge or case management master shall have regard to the matters set out in subrule 77.06 (6). O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

DISMISSAL BY REGISTRAR

77.08 (1) Where no defence has been filed and the proceeding has not been disposed of by final order or judgment, the registrar shall, 180 days after the date of issue of the originating process, make an order dismissing the proceeding as abandoned. O. Reg. 118/97, s. 9.

(2) The dismissal of an action as abandoned has the same effect as a dismissal for delay under rule 24.05. O. Reg. 653/00, s. 10.

DEFENCE OF PROCEEDING

77.09 (1) Revoked: O. Reg. 457/01, s. 13.

Assignment to Case Management

(2) On the filing of a defence, the proceeding shall be assigned to a case management judge or team for management in accordance with rules 77.10 to 77.17. O. Reg. 284/01, s. 27.

ASSIGNMENT OF PARTICULAR JUDGE

On Consent of Parties

77.09.1 (1) A regional senior judge or a judge designated by him or her may, with the written consent of all parties, assign one or more proceedings to a judge, or in exceptional circumstances to two or more judges, for management in accordance with rules 77.10 to 77.17. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 7.

On Motion — Action

(2) In an action, on the filing of the last defence or on the expiration of the time for filing defences, a regional senior judge or a judge designated by him or her may, on a party's motion, assign the action to a judge, or in exceptional circumstances to two or more judges, for management in accordance with rules 77.10 to 77.17. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 7.

On Motion — Application

(3) In an application, on the filing of the last notice of appearance or on the expiration of the time for filing notices of appearance, a regional senior judge or a judge designated by him or her may, on a party's motion, assign the application to a judge, or in exceptional circumstances to two or more judges, for management in accordance with rules 77.10 to 77.17. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 7.

Multiple Proceedings

(4) Two or more actions or applications may be assigned together under subrule (2) or (3). O. Reg. 113/01, s. 7.

Criteria

(5) In considering whether to assign a proceeding in accordance with this rule, the regional senior judge or designated judge shall have regard to all the relevant circumstances, including,

(a) the purpose of case management;

(b) the complexity of the issues of fact or law;

(c) the importance to the public of the issues of fact or law;

(d) the number and kind of the parties or prospective parties, and whether they are represented;

(e) the number of proceedings involving the same or similar parties or causes of action;

(f) the amount of intervention by the case management judge that the proceeding is likely to require;

(g) the time required for discovery, if applicable, and for preparation for trial or hearing;

(h) the number of expert witnesses and other witnesses;

(i) the time required for the trial or hearing; and

(j) any other factors that the judge considers relevant or that are raised by a party. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 7; O. Reg. 132/04, s. 20.

Assistance by Case Management Master

(6) A judge or group of judges to whom a proceeding is assigned under this rule may assign a case management master or, in exceptional circumstances, two or more case management masters, to assist in managing the proceeding. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 7.

TIMETABLES AND COMPLIANCE WITH TIME REQUIREMENTS

Time Requirement Established by Rules

77.10 (1) If a party fails to comply with a time requirement established by these rules, a case management judge or case management master may convene a case conference and at the case conference may,

(a) establish or amend a timetable and order the party to comply with it; and

(b) order the party to pay costs. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 8.

Duty of Plaintiff

(2) In a proceeding to which this Rule applies, the plaintiff shall file a timetable or request a case conference to establish a timetable,

(a) if an order is made under rule 24.1.05 (exemption from mediation), within 30 days after the order is made;

(b) if a mediation session is held but the proceeding is not settled, within 30 days after the mediator's report is given to the parties under subrule 24.1.15 (1);

(c) in any other case, within 180 days after the proceeding is commenced. O. Reg. 206/02, s. 23.

Duty of Case Management Judge or Case Management Master

(3) If the plaintiff fails to comply with subrule (2), a case management judge or case management master shall convene a case conference to establish a timetable. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 8.

Limited Application

(4) Subrules (2) and (3) do not apply to proceedings,

(a) commenced before July 3, 2001 in the City of Toronto;

(b) commenced on or after January 1, 2001 in the City of Ottawa, as established by the City of Ottawa Act, 1999;

(c) commenced before January 1, 2001 in The Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 8.

Contents of Timetable

(5) A timetable established under this rule shall,

(a) provide for the completion of examinations for discovery and any incidental motions at least 10 days before the settlement conference under rule 77.14; or

(b) include an explanation of the non-compliance with clause (a). O. Reg. 113/01, s. 8.

Case Conference to Review Timetable

(6) A case management judge or case management master may convene a case conference to review a timetable established under this rule. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 8.

Non-Compliance with Timetable

(7) If a party fails to comply with a time requirement set out in a timetable established under this rule, a case management judge or case management master may,

(a) strike out any document filed by the party;

(b) dismiss the party's proceeding or strike out the party's defence;

(c) amend the timetable and order the party to comply with it;

(d) order the party to pay costs; and

(e) make any other order that is just. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 8.

CASE MANAGEMENT POWERS

Powers Generally

77.11 (1) A case management judge or case management master may,

(a) extend or abridge a time prescribed by an order or the rules;

(b) transfer a proceeding from one track to the other;

(c) adjourn a case conference;

(d) set aside an order made by the registrar; and

(e) make orders, impose terms, give directions and award costs as necessary to carry out the purpose of this Rule. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 113/01, s. 9.

Transfer to Case Management

(1.1) A case management judge or case management master may order that this Rule apply to any proceeding that is not already under case management, except a proceeding mentioned in subrule 77.01 (2), and may include any necessary directions in the order, including a direction that proceedings under this Rule be governed by a common timetable. O. Reg. 570/98, s. 18.

(1.2) An order under subrule (1.1) may be made only on notice to the affected parties. O. Reg. 570/98, s. 18.

Exception

(1.3) For greater certainty, subrule (1.1) does not apply to an action that is governed by Rule 78. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 7.

Revocation

(1.4) Subrule (1.3) is revoked on May 6, 2008. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 7.

Powers on Own Initiative

(2) The case management judge or case management master may, on his or her own initiative, require a hearing, case conference or conference call to deal with any matter arising in connection with case management, including a failure to comply with the rules. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

To Whom Made

77.12 (1) A motion may be made only to a case management judge or case management master. O. Reg. 570/98, s. 19 (1).

Moving Party's Case Management Motion Form

(2) The moving party shall serve a case management motion form (Form 77C) in accordance with rule 37.07 and shall submit it to the court before the motion is heard. O. Reg. 570/98, s. 19 (1).

Procedure

(2.1) Depending on the practical requirements of the situation, the motion may be made,

(a) with or without supporting material or a motion record;

(b) by attendance, in writing, by fax or under rule 1.08 (telephone and video conferences). O. Reg. 570/98, s. 19 (1); O. Reg. 113/01, s. 10.

Responding Party's Case Management Motion Form

(2.2) The responding party may serve and submit a case management motion form but is not required to do so. O. Reg. 570/98, s. 19 (1).

Confirmation — Opposed Motion

(3) On an opposed motion that is to be argued other than in writing, the moving party's solicitor shall confirm to the registrar by fax or notice in writing, by 2 p.m. the day before the hearing date, that the motion is to proceed as scheduled, failing which the motion shall not proceed on that date. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Note: On July 1, 2008, subrule (3) is amended by striking out "solicitor" and substituting "lawyer". See: O. Reg. 575/07, ss. 1, 39 (1).

Costs on Motions

(4) The case management judge or case management master shall, at the conclusion of each motion, address the issue of costs and, where appropriate, fix the costs and order them payable forthwith. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Motions Dealt With by Registrar

(5) The registrar shall make an order granting the relief sought on the following motions:

1. A motion for an order on consent, where the consent of all parties is filed, the consent states that no party affected by the order is under disability and the order is for,

   i. amendment of a pleading, notice of application or notice of motion,

   ii. addition, deletion or substitution of a party, where the consent of the party is filed,

   iii. removal of a solicitor as solicitor of record,

Note: On July 1, 2008, subparagraph iii is revoked and the following substituted:

iii. removal of a lawyer as lawyer of record,

See: O. Reg. 575/07, ss. 35, 39 (1).

iv. setting aside the noting of a party in default,

v. setting aside a default judgment,

vi. discharge of a certificate of pending litigation,

vii. security for costs in a specified amount,

viii. re-attendance of a witness to answer questions on an examination,

ix. fulfilment of undertakings given on an examination, or

x. dismissal of a proceeding with or without costs.

2. A motion where no responding material is filed, the notice of motion or the case management motion form states that no party affected by the order is under disability and the order is for relief set out in paragraph 1. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 570/98, s. 19 (2).

Disposition of Motion

(6) The case management judge, case management master or registrar shall record the disposition of the motion on the case management motion form. O. Reg. 570/98, s. 19 (3).

(7) No formal order need be prepared, signed or entered unless,

(a) the case management judge, case management master or registrar directs otherwise;

(b) an appeal is made to a judge; or

(c) an appeal or a motion for leave to appeal is made to an appellate court. O. Reg. 570/98, s. 19 (3).

CASE CONFERENCE

How Convened

77.13 (1) A case management judge or a case management master may convene a case conference at any time, on his or her own initiative or at a party's request. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Parties' Attendance

(2) A case management judge or case management master may direct that the parties, or a representative of the parties responsible for making decisions regarding the proceeding and instructing the solicitor, attend the conference personally. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Note: On July 1, 2008, subrule (2) is amended by striking out "solicitor" and substituting "lawyer". See: O. Reg. 575/07, ss. 1, 39 (1).

Matters to be Dealt With

(3) At the conference, a case management judge or case management master may,

(a) identify the issues and note those that are contested and those that are not;

(b) explore methods to resolve the contested issues;

(c) if possible, secure the parties' agreement on a specific schedule of events in the proceeding;

(d) create a timetable for the proceeding; and

(e) review and, if necessary, amend an existing timetable. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 570/98, s. 20 (1).

Counsel

(4) Counsel attending the conference shall have authority to deal with the matters referred to in subrule (3) and shall be fully acquainted with the facts and legal issues. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Note: On July 1, 2008, subrule (4) is amended by striking out "Counsel" and substituting "The lawyers". See: O. Reg. 575/07, ss. 4, 39 (1).

Powers of Judge

(5) At the conference, a case management judge may, where appropriate, in addition to exercising the powers conferred by subrule 77.11 (1),

(a) make a procedural order;

(b) on consent of the parties, make an order for interlocutory relief;

(c) on consent of the parties, refer any issue for alternative dispute resolution;

(d) convene a settlement conference;

(e) convene a hearing; and

(f) give directions. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 11 (1).

Powers of Case Management Master

(6) At the conference, a case management master may, where appropriate, in addition to exercising the powers conferred by subrule 77.11 (1),

(a) make a procedural order;

(b) on consent of the parties, make an order within the jurisdiction of a case management master;

(c) on consent of the parties, refer any issue for alternative dispute resolution; and

(d) convene a settlement conference. O. Reg. 113/01, s. 11 (1).

(7) Revoked: O. Reg. 284/01, s. 28.

(8) Revoked: O. Reg. 113/01, s. 11 (2).

SETTLEMENT CONFERENCES

Scheduled Automatically by Registrar

77.14 (1) The registrar shall, on at least 45 days notice to the parties, schedule a settlement conference to take place,

(a) if the proceeding is on the fast track, not later than 150 days after the first defence is filed;

(b) if the proceeding is on the standard track, not later than 240 days after the first defence is filed. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 570/98, s. 21 (1).

Steps to be Completed Before Conference

(2) All examinations, production of documents and motions arising out of examinations and production of documents shall be completed before the settlement conference date. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Parties' Attendance At Settlement Conference

(3) A case management judge or case management master may direct the parties, or a representative of a party responsible for making decisions in the proceeding and instructing the solicitor, to attend all or part of a settlement conference personally with their counsel. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Note: On July 1, 2008, subrule (3) is amended by striking out "solicitor" and substituting "lawyer". See: O. Reg. 575/07, ss. 1, 39 (1).

Note: On July 1, 2008, subrule (3) is amended by striking out "counsel" and substituting "lawyers". See: O. Reg. 575/07, ss. 4, 39 (1).

Settlement Conference Brief

(4) The plaintiff shall deliver not later than 10 days before the settlement conference a settlement conference brief, containing all material the plaintiff considers necessary for the settlement conference, and shall certify that subrule (2) has been complied with. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 284/01, s. 29 (1).

Other Parties To Deliver Briefs

(5) Every other party shall deliver a settlement conference brief containing any other material the party considers necessary for the settlement conference not later than five days before the conference. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 284/01, s. 29 (2).

Contents of Brief

(6) A settlement conference brief shall contain,

(a) a concise summary of the facts, including the agreed upon facts and admissions;

(b) where necessary, a concise summary of the issues and the law to be relied upon by each party;

(c) a list of witnesses and a summary of each witness's evidence;

(d) the relevant portions only of transcripts, experts' reports and other evidence that may be adduced at trial; and

(e) the party's pleadings, including any demand or order for particulars of a pleading and the particulars delivered in response. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 570/98, s. 21 (2).

Trial Date

(7) At the conference, a case management judge or case management master shall assign a trial or hearing date, or refer the parties to a judge responsible for the assignment of a trial or hearing date. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 118/97, s. 11.

Trial Record

(8) A trial or application record shall be served and filed in accordance with rule 48.02 or subrule 38.09 (1) no later than seven days before the trial or hearing date. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

(9) Revoked: O. Reg. 284/01, s. 29 (3).

Settlement Conference Judge Not to Preside at Hearing

(10) A judge who conducts a settlement conference shall not preside at the trial of the action or the hearing of the application. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Exception, Toronto Actions

(11) Subrules (1) to (10) do not apply to actions commenced in the City of Toronto, which shall, instead, be set down for trial under Rule 48. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 8.

Revocation

(12) Subrule (11) is revoked on May 6, 2008. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 8.

TRIAL MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE

When Conference to be Held

77.15 (1) A trial management conference may be held on or following the setting of a trial date, at the request of one of the parties or on the initiative of the trial judge, case management judge or case management master. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2.

Filing of Form

(2) A trial management conference form (Form 77D) shall be filed by the plaintiff and the defendant no later than 14 days before the trial or four days before the trial management conference, whichever is earlier. O. Reg. 118/97, s. 12.

Powers of Judge or Master

(3) At the trial management conference, the trial judge, case management judge or case management master may in addition to exercising the powers conferred by subrule 77.11 (1),

(a) canvass with the parties the names of the witnesses intended to be called and the substance of their testimony;

(b) explore whether admissions can be made that will facilitate proof of non-contentious matters;

(c) explore alternative methods of presentation of evidence, such as the filing of affidavits or reports;

(d) explore with counsel expeditious means for the presentation of evidence; and

Note: On July 1, 2008, clause (d) is amended by striking out "counsel" and substituting "the lawyers". See: O. Reg. 575/07, ss. 4, 39 (1).

(e) give directions that will facilitate the orderly and expeditious conduct of the trial. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 113/01, s. 12.

(4) Revoked: O. Reg. 284/01, s. 30.

CASE MANAGEMENT ADVISORY COMMITTEE

77.16 The Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice shall appoint an advisory committee composed of such members of the bench, the bar, the Ministry of the Attorney General and the public as are necessary to monitor the operation of this Rule and, where appropriate, to make recommendations for improvement. O. Reg. 555/96, s. 2; O. Reg. 292/99, s. 3.

TRANSITION

77.17 Despite Rule 77.01, the following transitional provisions apply:

1. Where a proceeding has been commenced in a county before the date set out in the Schedule to rule 77.01 for the county and where no defence has been filed as of that date, rule 77.08 applies to the proceeding and the 180-day period described in rule 77.08 begins to run on that date.

2. Where a proceeding has been commenced in a county before the date set out in the Schedule to rule 77.01 for the county and a defence has been filed before that date, the proceeding shall be dismissed by the registrar unless the parties have fixed a date for a settlement conference within 365 days from that date. O. Reg. 206/02, s. 24.

RULE 78 TORONTO CIVIL CASE MANAGEMENT PILOT PROJECT

APPLICATION AND INTERPRETATION

Scope

78.01 (1) This Rule applies to actions commenced in the City of Toronto on or after December 31, 2004. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Exception

(2) This Rule does not apply to,

(a) actions placed on the Commercial List established by practice direction in the Toronto Region;

(b) actions under Rules 74 and 75 (Estates);

(c) actions under Rule 64 (Mortgage Actions);

(d) actions under Rule 76 (Simplified Procedure);

(e) actions under the Construction Lien Act, except trust claims;

(f) actions under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (Canada); and

(g) actions certified as class proceedings under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Class Proceedings Act, 1992

(3) This Rule applies to an action commenced under the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 only if certification as a class proceeding has been denied. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Conflict with Other Rules

(4) In the event of conflict between a provision of Rules 1 to 77 and a provision of this Rule, this Rule prevails. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

PURPOSE

78.02 The purpose of this Rule is to establish a pilot project under which the parties will have the greater responsibility for managing actions commenced in the City of Toronto and moving them to trial or other resolution, and the court will provide partial or full case management for such actions only where a need for the court's intervention is demonstrated. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

DEFINITIONS

78.03 In rules 78.03 to 78.12,

"case management master" means a person appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council under section 86.1 of the Courts of Justice Act; ("protonotaire responsable de la gestion de la cause")

"timetable" means a schedule for the completion of one or more steps required to advance the action (including delivery of affidavits of documents, examinations under oath, where available, or motions), established by,

(a) an order of a judge or case management master, or

(b) a written agreement of the parties that is not contrary to an order. ("calendrier") O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

CASE MANAGEMENT POWERS

Generally

78.04 (1) A judge or case management master may,

(a) extend or abridge a time prescribed by an order or the rules;

(b) adjourn a case conference;

(c) set aside an order made by the registrar;

(d) amend a timetable made under Rule 77 or under this Rule;

(e) make orders, impose terms, give directions and award costs as necessary to carry out the purpose of this Rule. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Case Management Master

(2) A case management master has power,

(a) to hear motions that are within the jurisdiction of a master under subrule 37.02 (2);

(b) to preside and make orders at a status hearing under rule 48.14; and

(c) to preside and make orders at a pre-trial conference that are within the jurisdiction of a case management master. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

OTHER MATTERS

File Number for Third and Subsequent Party Claims

78.05 (1) Third and subsequent party claims shall be given the same file number as the main action, followed by a suffix letter. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Format of Documents

(2) The form prescribed in this Rule and notices, certificates and orders referred to in it may be single spaced and need not have a backsheet. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

DISMISSAL BY REGISTRAR

Dismissing Action as Abandoned

78.06 (1) The registrar shall make an order dismissing an action as abandoned if the following conditions are satisfied, unless the court orders otherwise:

1. More than two years have passed since the date the originating process was issued.
2. No statement of defence has been filed.
3. The action has not been disposed of by final order or judgment.
4. The action has not been set down for trial or summary trial.
5. The registrar has given 45 days notice that the action will be dismissed as abandoned. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Service on Parties

(2) The registrar shall serve a copy of the order made under subrule (1) on the parties. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Effect on Subsequent Action

(3) The dismissal of an action as abandoned has the same effect as a dismissal for delay under rule 24.05. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

POWERS OF COURT ON MOTION TO DISMISS FOR DELAY

78.07 If a defendant moves to have an action dismissed for delay and the court is satisfied that the action should proceed, the court may,

(a) establish a timetable (Form 78A) for the action;

(b) order a case conference in accordance with rule 78.09, but only if it is impractical to establish a timetable; or

(c) make such other order as is just. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

STATUS HEARING

Effect of Filing Timetable

78.08 (1) If a status hearing has been requested under subrule 48.14 (5) and a party files the documents described in subrule (2) at least seven days before the date of the hearing, the hearing shall be held in writing and without the attendance of the parties, despite anything in rule 48.14, unless the court orders otherwise. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

(2) The documents mentioned in subrule (1) are:

1. A timetable (Form 78A), signed by all the parties.
2. A draft order establishing the timetable. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

(3) The timetable shall,

(a) identify the steps to be completed before the action will be ready to be set down for trial;

(b) show the date or dates by which the steps will be completed; and

(c) show a date, which shall be no more than 12 months after the date of the status hearing, before which the action shall be set down for trial. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Case Conference

(4) If no documents described in subrule (2) are filed and the presiding judge or case management master at the status hearing under rule 48.14 is satisfied that the action should proceed, he or she may,

(a) make an order under clause 48.14 (8) (a);

(b) order a case conference in accordance with rule 78.09, but only if it is impractical to establish a timetable; or

(c) make such other order as is just. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

CASE CONFERENCE

Powers of Judge and Case Management Master

78.09 At a case conference convened under clause 78.07 (b), clause 78.08 (4) (b), clause 78.10 (3) (b) or clause 78.12 (6) (a), a judge or case management master may,

(a) create a timetable for the action;

(b) review and, if necessary, amend an existing timetable;

(c) require written reports as to compliance with any directions that are given;

(d) on consent of the parties, make an order for interlocutory relief; and

(e) make an order under rule 78.12 (assignment to case management under Rule 77). O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

PRE-TRIAL CONFERENCE

Notice

78.10 (1) After an action is set down for trial, the registrar shall give the parties 90 days notice to appear before a judge or case management master for a pre-trial conference under Rule 50. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Materials to be Filed

(2) At least five days before the pre-trial conference, each party shall file with proof of service a pre-trial conference brief containing concise statements, without argument, of the following matters:

1. The nature of the case.

2. The issues raised and the party's position.

3. The names of the witnesses that the party is likely to call at the trial.

4. The steps that need to be completed before the action is ready for trial. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Decision of Judge or Case Management Master

(3) If the action is not settled at the pre-trial conference, the judge or case management master may,

(a) establish a timetable and, subject to the direction of the regional senior judge, set a peremptory date for trial;

(b) order a case conference in accordance with rule 78.09, but only if it is impractical to establish a timetable; or

(c) make such other order as is just. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

(4) If the judge or case management master has set a date for trial under subrule (3), he or she shall complete a pre-trial conference report,

(a) stating what steps need to be completed before the action is ready for trial and how much time is needed to complete those steps;

(b) stating the anticipated length of the trial; and

(c) setting out any other matter relevant to scheduling the trial. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

(5) A copy of the pre-trial conference report shall be placed with the trial record. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Certificate

(6) The following persons shall certify, on the copy of the pre-trial conference report that is to be placed with the trial record, that they understand the contents of the report and acknowledge the obligation to be ready to proceed on the date fixed for the trial:

1. Each lawyer who represents a party.

2. Each party who is not represented by a lawyer. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Duty of Lawyer

(7) Each lawyer who represents a party shall, in addition to giving the certificate described in subrule (6), undertake to the court to advise the party of,

(a) the contents of the pre-trial conference report; and

(b) the obligation to be ready to proceed on the date fixed for the trial. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

TIMETABLE

Amendment

78.11 (1) A timetable that is established under this Rule by order of a judge or case management master may be amended by the parties, by a written agreement, unless the order expressly prohibits amendment. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

(2) An agreement to amend a timetable established under rule 78.08 shall not amend the date before which the action shall be set down for trial. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Non-Compliance

(3) If a party fails to comply with a timetable that is established under this Rule, the court may, on any other party's motion,

(a) stay the party's action;

(b) dismiss the party's action or strike out the party's defence; or

(c) make such other order as is just. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

ASSIGNMENT TO CASE MANAGEMENT UNDER RULE 77

On Consent of Parties

78.12 (1) If all the parties consent in writing, a judge or case management master may, on a party's motion, assign one or more actions to case management in accordance with Rule 77. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

(2) A motion under subrule (1) shall be made in writing, without a supporting affidavit, and the moving party shall file,

(a) the written consent of the parties; and

(b) a bound and tabbed copy of all the pleadings. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Obstruction

(3) The judge or case management master may, on a party's motion or on his or her own initiative, assign one or more actions to case management in accordance with Rule 77 if a party has taken steps that amount to chronic and substantial obstruction of the action, in the case of a single action, or of one or more actions, in the case of two or more. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Criteria

(4) In considering whether to assign an action to case management under subrule (1) or (3), the judge or case management master shall have regard to all the relevant circumstances, including the criteria set out in subrule 77.09.1 (5). O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Effect of Assignment

(5) When an action is assigned to case management in accordance with Rule 77 under subrule (1) or (3), that Rule applies to the action with necessary modifications, and the judge or case management master may include any necessary directions in the order. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

Case Conference or Other Order

(6) On a motion under subrule (1) or (3), the judge or case management master may,

(a) if the action is not being assigned to case management in accordance with Rule 77, order a case conference in accordance with rule 78.09, but only if it is impractical to establish a timetable; or

(b) make such other order as is just. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE

78.13 The regional senior judge for the Toronto Region shall appoint an advisory committee composed of such members of the bench, the bar and the public and such employees of the Ministry of the Attorney General as are necessary to monitor and evaluate the operation of this Rule. O. Reg. 198/05, s. 9.

9. Clauses 37.11 (1) (c) and (d) of the Regulation are revoked and the following substituted:

(c) the motion is to be heard by telephone conference or video conference;

(d) the motion is made in the course of a pre-trial conference or case conference; or

10. Rules 48.14 and 48.15 of the Regulation are revoked and the following substituted:

DISMISSAL OF ACTION FOR DELAY

Fr

48.14 (1) Unless the court orders otherwise, the registrar shall dismiss an action for delay in either of the following circumstances, subject to subrules (4) to (8):

1. The action has not been set down for trial or terminated by any means by the later of the fifth anniversary of the commencement of the action and January 1, 2017.

2. The action was struck off a trial list and has not been restored to a trial list or otherwise terminated by any means by the later of the second anniversary of being struck off and January 1, 2017.

Order to be Served

(2) The registrar shall serve an order made under subrule (1) (Form 48D) on the parties.

Order to Client

(3) A lawyer who is served with an order made under subrule (1) shall promptly give a copy of the order to his or her client.

Timetable

(4) Subrule (1) does not apply if, at least 30 days before the expiry of the applicable period referred to in that subrule, a party files the following documents:

1. A timetable, signed by all the parties, that, i. identifies the steps to be completed before the action may be set down for trial or restored to a trial list, as the case may be,

   ii. shows the date or dates by which the steps will be completed, and

   iii. shows a date, which shall be no more than two years after the day the applicable period referred to in subrule (1) expires, before which the action shall be set down for trial or restored to a trial list.

2. A draft order establishing the timetable.

Status Hearing

(5) If the parties do not consent to a timetable under subrule (4), any party may, before the expiry of the applicable period referred to in subrule (1), bring a motion for a status hearing.

(6) For the purposes of subrule (5), the hearing of the motion shall be convened as a status hearing.

Fr

(7) At a status hearing, the plaintiff shall show cause why the action should not be dismissed for delay, and the court may,

 (a) dismiss the action for delay; or

(b) if the court is satisfied that the action should proceed,

(i) set deadlines for the completion of the remaining steps necessary to have the action set down for trial or restored to a trial list, as the case may be, and order that it be set down for trial or restored to a trial list within a specified time,

(ii) adjourn the status hearing on such terms as are just,

(iii) if Rule 77 may apply to the action, assign the action for case management under that Rule, subject to the direction of the regional senior judge, or

(iv) make such other order as is just.

Party Under Disability

(8) Subrule (1) does not apply if, at the time the registrar would otherwise be required under that subrule to dismiss an action for delay, the plaintiff is under a disability.

Effect of Dismissal

(9) Rules 24.03 to 24.05 (effect of dismissal for delay) apply to an action dismissed under subrule (1).

Setting Aside

(10) The dismissal of an action under subrule (1) may be set aside under rule 37.14.

Transition

(11) Subject to subrule (12), every status notice served under this rule, as it read immediately before January 1, 2015, ceases to have effect on that date, if the action was not dismissed before that date.

(12) If a status hearing in relation to a status notice was scheduled but not held before January 1, 2015, this rule, as it read immediately before that date, continues to apply to the matter.

(13) Every notice that an action will be dismissed as abandoned that was given by the registrar under rule 48.15, as it read immediately before January 1, 2015, ceases to have effect on that date, if the action was not dismissed before that date.

11. The heading to Rule 50 of the Regulation is revoked and the following substituted:
