However, as noted in Appendices (see: Appendix #_), the Rules of Civil Procedure have changed drastically in relation to Civil Case Management (see: Rule 77) wherein the Registrar does NOT have power as of late 2000's to assign proceedings to case management.

Simply put, a general question of central importance to the legal system as a whole is whether insurance companies in a group of insurance companies, although having different insurance company profiles, distinct at law, different FSRA registration numbers et al, are "one and the same" or separate persons.

Costs of Motions: Clarified when motion costs could be assessed and the consequences for failing to pay them, potentially leading to dismissal or a stay of proceedings. Abandonment of Claims: Prevented parties from abandoning a claim (like a loss of income) to fit under the simplified procedure and then re-filing it later, ensuring finality. 	Tab I: Amendments to the Rules of Civil Procedure in 2008
		O. Reg. 438/08 Key Changes Introduced by O. Reg. 438/08: Expert Duty (Rule 4.1): Established a strict duty for expert witnesses to provide independent opinions, requiring them to sign a certificate acknowledging this responsibility, significantly impacting expert evidence. Pre-Trial Conferences (Rule 50): Mandated pre-trial conferences for actions set down for trial, requiring parties to discuss simplification, liability, damages, and trial length, with reports placed with the trial record. Status Notices & Hearings (Rule 48.1): Introduced a process where the registrar sends a notice for actions inactive for two years, potentially leading to dismissal for delay if not actively pursued. Discovery Plans: Required parties to create discovery plans, consulting principles for electronic discovery (the principles outlined in Sedona Principles), to manage the discovery process efficiently. Inference from Evidence: Allowed courts to draw reasonable inferences from evidence and better evaluate witness credibility. Simplified Procedure Limits (Rule 76): Restricted certain discovery methods, like written discovery questions, in simplified actions. Impact: These changes aimed to reduce delays, manage costs, and improve	Applicability Herein: pre-trial conferences apply to trials. Nota bene: there are some odd language issues in Rule 50 but nonetheless Rule 77 is paramount to other rules in the Rules of Civil Procedure. Rule 50 has a different purpose than Rule 77. Rule 50 is titled "Conferences" and Rule 77 is titled, "Civil Case Management" Rule 50 has its purpose: 50.01 The purpose of this Rule is to provide an opportunity for any or all of the issues in a proceeding to be settled without a hearing and, with respect to any issues that are not settled, to obtain from the court orders or directions to assist in the just, most expeditious and least expensive disposition of the proceeding, including orders or directions to ensure that any hearing proceeds in an orderly and efficient manner. O. Reg. 438/08, s. 47. NOTA BENE: both Rule 50.01 and Rule 77.01 were passed under the same regulation. Rule 77: 77.01 (1) The purpose of this Rule is to establish a case management system that provides case management only of those proceedings for which a need for the court's intervention is demonstrated and only to the degree that is appropriate, as determined in the fairness and predictability of civil trials in Ontario. They represented a major overhaul of the Rules of Civil Procedure, significantly altering litigation practice from their implementation.	reliance on the criteria set out in this Rule. O. Reg. 438/08, s. 64. Rule 77 only applies to City of Toronto, Ottawa and County of Essex. In effect, only the capital of Ontario and capital of Canada with respect to "Cities". However, Rule 77 is paramount to any other rule in the Rules of Civil Procedure where there is a conflict between a provision in Rule 77 and a provision in any other Rule (see: Rule 77.02(4)). As such, for JRPA Applications, Rule 77 and all of its provisions are paramount particularly between Rule 77 and Rule 50. Rule 50.03 is titled "Pre-Trial Conferences for Applications" contains somewhat of a misnomer or internally inconsistent language because only an "Action" is one that can be set for trial. 50.03 In an application, a judge may at any time, on his or her own initiative or at a party's request, direct that a pre-trial conference be held before a judge or associate judge. O. Reg. 170/14, s. 13; O. Reg. 383/21, s. 15. Rule 50.03, being passed by multiple amendments in 2014 and 2021, relates only to a judge, whereas the comparative subrule is that of Rule 77.05. Rule 77.05 is paramount to Rule 50.03. Rule 77.05 states the following: Assignment for Case Management On Consent of Parties 77.05 (1) A regional senior judge or, subject to the direction of a regional senior judge, any judge or associate judge may, with the consent of all parties, assign a proceeding to which this Rule may apply for case management under this Rule. O. Reg. 438/08, s. 64; O. Reg. 383/21, s. 15. No Consent (2) At any time on or after the filing of the first defence in a proceeding to which this Rule may apply, a regional senior judge or, subject to the direction of a regional senior judge, any judge or associate judge may assign the proceeding for case management under this Rule, (a) on his or her own initiative; or (b) on the request of a party or on motion if the court requires it. O. Reg. 438/08, s. 64; O. Reg. 383/21, s. 15 As there is no multiple proceedings issue, Rule 77.05(4) requires the following to be considered by way of criteria: Criteria (4) In considering whether to assign a proceeding for case management, the regional senior judge, other judge or associate judge shall have regard to all the relevant circumstances, including any or all of the following: 1. The purpose set out in subrule 77.01 (1). 2. The complexity of the issues of fact or law. 3. The importance to the public of the issues of fact or law. 4. The number and type of parties or prospective parties, and whether they are represented.

			5. The number of proceedings involving the same or similar parties or causes of action. 6. The amount of intervention by the court that the proceeding is likely to require. 7. The time required for discovery, if applicable, and for preparation for trial or hearing. 8. In the case of an action, the number of expert witnesses and other witnesses. 9. The time required for the trial or hearing. 10. Whether there has been substantial delay in the conduct of the proceeding. O. Reg. 438/08, s. 64; O. Reg. 383/21, s. 15. The distinctions between Rule 77.05(1-2,4) and Rule 50.03 are monumental on so many levels leaving aside the paramountcy of Rule 77 to Rule 50. Rue 77.05 is only triggered after the filing of First Defence by a Respondent (nota bene: change from previous language in the Rules of Civil Procedure for Rule 77 for "last defence" et al (see: Appendices). Rule 50.03 allows for a judge on request or initiative at "any time" to direct a pre-trial conference. The distinction between a conference and assigning a case for case management are also distinct in fact and at law. Seminal point: In this JRPA Proceeding, there was no filing of a First Defence and it is a Toronto Region matter. There was also NO assignment of the JRPA Proceeding to case management. As such, there was no assignment to a particular individual judge under Rule 77.06 of the Rules of Civil Procedure. Ergo, the Madam Justice Shore purported direction of compelling (purportedly) the parties to attend before her for a case conference was without any legal validity. The purported Madam Justice Shore direction was pursuant to the Ibula Email of January 7, 2025. Ergo, the Madam Justice Shore purported direction was impermissible in law for the following legal grounds: 1. There was no filing of a First Defence by any Respondent at the time of the request by the LAT on December 3, 2024; 2. At the time of the Madam Justice Shore purported direction, there was no filing of a First Deference by any Respondent; 3. There was no exercise of discretion by a judge, regional senior judge or associate judge (although not permitted) under Rule 77.05(4) although none would have been permitted 4. There could not have been any assignment to a particular judge in Shore J by the CJ of the SCJ, ACJ of the SCJ or a LAJ of the Divisional Court, and in fact there was none as no notice to the Applicant and Respondents was provided that Shore J was assigned to hear all steps in the proceeding but for the preclusion on her hearing the JRPA Application but for consent of the parties [sic: in relation to this JRPA Proceeding at the time]

			5. Until the Respondents "Delivered" their NOA's, they were not entitled to any steps in the JRPA Proceeding, to be served with documents in the JRPA proceeding, or to present evidence or submissions in the same (see: Rule 1.065 with reference to Form 68A) 6. Ergo, the purported Madam Justice Shore direction was a nullity, void ab initio, void on its face and of no force and effect. Ergo, all that flowed from the Purported Madam Justice Shore Direction through the Ibula Email was all void b initio. Void of void is void. Void ab initio is void from the time it was made. 7. Moreover, by Madam Justice Shore acting on her own volition to issue the purported Madam Justice Shore direction on January 7, 2025, through Ms. Ibula, who had no phone number with the Divisional Court, and under suspicious circumstances and no active email per se, are all aggravating circumstances but nonetheless void ab initio is void from the time it was made. 8. Further, as there was no power for Madam Justice Shore under Rule 50.03, any attempt to have done so was void ab initio. Madam Justice Shore could not rely and did not rely on any inherent jurisdiction (SCJ Judge only) but nonetheless any such purported attempt, although not de facto, would have been void (see: Baxter); 9. Moreover, as the language of pre-trial conference is utilized in relation to an application [sic], Rule 50.05 would have required not only he lawyers for the parties to appear at the pre-trial conference but also the parties themselves. 10. It remains now obvious that the reason that Madam Justice Shore breached the CJA and Rules of Civil Procedure (inter alia) was her prior undisclosed judicial involvement with the Applicant in the "Ex Parte In Camera Hearing" "Undisclosed Criminal Proceeding". This is address in NOM #3. 11. While void ab initio documents, step or orders are setting aside as a matter of right as they are nullities, to the extent that anything was an irregularity, the Applicant moved expeditiously and without knowledge of the same after taking any steps. 12. This issue of nullity and/or irregularity is distinct from that of conflicts of interest and/or fraud through discovery post-facto. 13. Moreover, since the Purported Madam Justice Shore Direction was not an "order", it amounts to a document to be set aside by NOM #3; 14. As such, anything that related to or involved Madam Justice Shore is without question void ab initio and must be set aside. There are other grounds cited with analytical precision from the facts to the law.

		O. Reg. 231/13 (2013) Key Aspects of O. Reg. 231/13: Limited Scope Retainers (Unbundled Legal Services): The regulation clarified how parties represented under these retainers are treated under the rules, essentially treating them as acting in person for many purposes, but with specific rules for their lawyer of record. Procedure Updates: It amended various rules, including those concerning how parties act, service of documents, and processes for transferring actions between courts.	Applicability Herein:

Modernization and digital Key Provisions of O. Reg. 584/17:	Applicability Herein: in 2017, the JSO Portal was the authorized software utilized introduced by the MAG with respect to electronic filings for documents to be issued or filed. SEMINAL DIFFERENCE BETWEEN JSO PORTAL RULES AND OCPP RULES: NOTICE OF ACCEPTED FILING (WITH CONFIRMATION) VS. SUBJECT TO CONFIRMATION

		Electronic Filing Confirmation: Introduced a "notice of accepted filing" via authorized software for electronic document submissions. [nota bene: this was removed in 2025 (October) under the OCPP for Toronto Region matters in the SCJ and the Divisional Court] Retention of Original Documents: Required parties to keep original paper documents (signed, certified, or commissioned) until after the appeal period expired and to make them available for inspection upon request. Civil Claims Online Portal: Addressed procedures related to this new online system for filing civil claims. Bilingual Documents: Amended rules regarding bilingual court documents. In essence, O. 		O. Reg. 441/20 Primarily to introduce Rule 4.05.2, authorizing the use of the new Civil Submissions Online (CSO) system for electronically filing over 250 types of documents with the Superior Court of Justice. This change, driven by the pandemic, allowed for electronic submission and issuance of court documents, streamlining civil court processes. Key Aspects: Purpose: To modernize civil litigation by enabling electronic filing and issuance of court documents. Effective Date: Filed on August 5, 2020. Mechanism: Introduced Rule 4.05.2, allowing electronic filing through the Civil Submissions Online system. Impact: Facilitated electronic certification and issuance of orders, applications, and other documents in civil actions. In essence, O. Reg. 441/20 was a crucial step in digitizing Ontario's civil courts, making it possible to submit and receive documents electronically instead of physically	Applicability Herein: in 2020, the JSO Portal was introduced for the filing of over 250 types documents. However, it remained subject to the two step model: 1. Registrar Acceptance Required; and 2. Confirmation. Under the OCPP model, which was in response to the issues with delays and non-acceptance of submitted for filing documents (see:), it is a one step model of "subject to confirmation".

Key Changes Introduced by O. Reg. 711/20: Abolition of Masters: Adjusted definitions and references to reflect the shift from "masters" to "case management masters" (now Associate Judges) in the Superior Court. CaseLines Platform: Amended Rule 4.05.3(6) to specify requirements for document naming when submitting to the CaseLines platform, including adding the party's name and creation date. Jurisdiction: Clarified the jurisdiction of Associate Judges, ensuring motions previously handled by masters were appropriately assigned. In essence, it was a housekeeping regulation to modernize Ontario's civil court rules for the digital age and structural judicial changes.	Applicability Herein: introduction of Case Lines which is now Case Center Case management masters: included in court

Practical: in effect, the OCCP: No longer requires the Registrar's Acceptance; No longer requires the Registrar to send a Notice of Acceptaed Filing; The date of the filing is the date in the confirmation notice which is tied to the time of filing which may be after business hours or on weekends or holidays which is tied to the time of the "submitted filing" Proportionate Justice: Added a new rule (1.04(1.1)) requiring courts to ensure orders are proportionate to the

Primus inter pares was in 1980 (labour board decision referenced in Ontario Nurses' Association v. Kent-Chatham Board of Health, 1980 CanLII 978 (ON LRB) but that as in relation toa department head with that Nurses Association. A similar usage of primus inter pares was used in 1986 in PEI but again in relation to a school board decision (see: Holland v. P.E.I. School Board Regional Administrative Unit #4, 1986 CanLII 178 (PE SCTD), It was not until 1995 in Ruffo in the SCC, a decision two years prior to 1997 Judicial Independence Reference was "primus inter pares" utilized in the judicial context (see: Ruffo, infra). The 1997 Filmon Friday Decision was the second usage ever by the SCC. While the initial decisions referred to "primus inter pares" as merely a leader among equals, the case law has evolved since that time as seen infra. While this phrase suggests a purely ceremonial seniority, the evolution of Canadian law through landmark cases and ethical controversies has revealed a much more complex reality. The Chief Justice (or Chief Judge in provincial contexts) serves not only as a judicial peer but as the "Master of the Roster," an administrative steward, and the primary guardian of institutional reputation. However, when the administrative power to assign, reassign, or "take over" cases intersects with political pressure or internal ethical failures, the constitutional boundaries of judicial independence are tested

	CHAPTER #2(A)(V): first SCC reference to primus inter pares in relation to chief judge of the SCC or chief judge of provincial courts:
		1995: First Reference to Primus Inter Pares in relation to Judicial Branch

		The focus herein is now “Take Over the Case” or a chief’s case Supervisory powers of the CJ of the Divisional Court CJ of any SCJ Court: efficient operation of which he or she oversees in all other respects, is in a preferred position to ensure (guarantee) compliance with judicial ethics. In order to handle ethics, ethical issues must be brought to the attention of the CJ of the SCJ
			Compliance with ethics: (1) First, because of the chief judge's role as co-ordinator, events that may raise ethical issues are more readily brought to his or her attention; and (2) because of the chief judge's status, he or she is often the best situated to deal with such delicate matters, thereby relieving the other judges of the court of the difficult task of laying a complaint against one of their colleagues where necessary Power to lay complaints: the power to lay a complaint is an intrinsic part of the chief judge's responsibility in this area and it would not be fitting for the chief judge to act through someone else, whether a judge or a person outside the judiciary, to fulfil his or her obligations in this regard (monumental change because this is distinct from the language relating to shutting down the courts in the Filmon Friday Decision) (nota bene: however, this also changed by the 2014 TLABC Decision)

64		Ruffo v. Conseil de la magistrature, 1995 CanLII 49 (SCC) ["Ruffo 1995"] at paragraphs 58 and 59 [15] (see: 2215 to 2225)	It must not be forgotten that a large part of the chief judge's role in maintaining high-quality justice was defined gradually over the years, in the same way as judicial precedents. Many aspects of this role derived from judicial tradition without being transferred to legislation (see: paragraph 58) (the "Incremental Change" generally; and the ""primus inter pares Incremental Change" Quebec's "CJA" is distinct int hat section 96 states: 96. The chief judge has the direction of the Court. The functions of the chief judge shall be, in particular, ….. 2° to coordinate, apportion and supervise the work of the judges and see to their complementary training; the judges must comply with his orders and directives; 3° to ensure that the judicial code of ethics is observed. Paragraph 58 of Ruffo is of great important because of that came the following here cases in: (i) Baldovi 2016 (MBQB); (ii) CJC v. Girouard (FCA) (2019) and (iii) Dugre v. 	CHAPTER #2(A)(V)(i): RUFFO: NOTED UP
		The salient judicial point is whether a judge is under the supervision of a CJ or in this instance a President of the Divisional Court (see: paragraph 44 of CJC)
			In short, the power to lay a complaint is an intrinsic part of the chief judge's responsibility in this area and it would not be fitting for the chief judge to act through someone else, whether a judge or a person outside the judiciary, to fulfil his or her obligations in this regard. As well, because of the chief judge's status, he or she is often the best situated to deal with such delicate matters, thereby relieving the other judges of the court of the difficult task of laying a complaint against one of their colleagues where necessary see: Ruffo at paragraph 59 cited in CJC v. Girouard at paragraph 43) Applicability herein: with the sudden departure of Former Registrar Gentles it may be that she resigned and was being pressured by the likes of Madam Justice Shore She was employed by the MAG (Crown in Right of Ontario) but NOT part of the judiciary. Certainly, if a Registrar, court clerk or court staff were engaged in embezzlement or theft, or lesser breaches of provincial statutes or duties, he would be required to lay a complaint against he or she for misconduct. Canada (Attorney General), 2019 FC 1604 at paragraph 21[19] ["Dugre"][20] (see: Pages 2251 to 2262) (Summary: justice Gérard Dugré: The Failure of Diligence While Cosgrove dealt with bad decisions, the case of Justice Gérard Dugré (Quebec Superior Court) dealt with no decisions or inactivity or failure to act. This case illustrates that "due execution" encompasses the duty of diligence. Justice Dugré faced a litany of allegations centered on two themes: chronic delays in rendering judgments and an aggressive, undignified temperament in court. Evidence showed he had delayed judgments for years, leaving litigants in limbo The Inquiry Findings: Abdication of Duty	Applicability herein: the removal of Madam Justice Shore should and must have occurred prior but never a wrong time to do the right thing. The Divisional Court President occupies a privilege he therefore occupies a privileged position to ensure compliance with judicial ethics within the Court (Ruffo v. Conseil de la magistrature , 1995 CanLII 49 (SCC) , [1995] 4 SCR 267 at paras. 58-59) (see: paragraph 21 of Dugre). Divisional Court President should remove Madam Justice Shore during investigation or investigations into her conduct whether it be CJC or by the Divisional Court President (nota bene: improper for ACJ of the SCJ to conduct the same as she sits on the CJC). NOTA BENE: is it necessary (see: , to the extent that this may appear necessary in the best interests of justice and its administration, and to preserve public confidence in the courts and the judges who are part of them.

		The Inquiry Committee found that the office of a judge imposes a positive duty to decide cases. Delay as Failure: A judge who hears a case but fails to render a judgment within a reasonable time has failed to execute the primary function of the office. The Committee found Dugré's delays were not merely administrative lapses but a "failure in the due execution of judicial office Insight: The "Consumer" Perspective The Dugré report is notable for its focus on the litigant's perspective. A "reasonable, fair-minded observer" expects a decision. When a judge fails to deliver that product, the due execution of the office has ceased. Dugré resigned following the recommendation for removal.

	CHAPTER #2(A)(XXVI): Three Pillars of Judicial Independence

		CHAPTER #2(A)(XXVI)(a):Focus on Pillar #3: Complete Independence from interference with the administration of courts
		Judicial independence rests in part on "administrative matters bearing directly on the exercise of judicial function." The administration of the courts by the judiciary is essential to this independence –
			Applicability Herein: Bearing In this context, bearing refers to the nexus or causal connection between an administrative decision and the judicial process. Definition: To have a relation, connection, or influence upon. Relation to Judicial Independence: It implies that not every administrative task (like buying office pens) is protected by judicial independence. Only those matters that "bear" or have a weight-bearing relationship with the court's ability to operate without interference are protected. It filters out trivial "purely" bureaucratic tasks from those that affect the integrity of the court.
			Directly Directly serves as a qualifier of proximity. It limits the scope of judicial independence to ensure it does not become an overreaching shield for every minor clerical preference. Definition: Without intervening medium; immediately; in a straight line of influence. Relation to Judicial Independence: For an administrative matter to fall under the umbrella of judicial independence, the impact must be immediate.

			For example, the confirming of filings by the Registrar of the Divisional Court is an executory (ministerial) (required to be carried out) duty. Without confirming of filings, particularly those paid with completed transactions, there can be no adjudications. For example, the assignment of judges to specific cases "directly" affects the outcome and perception of impartiality. If the executive branch (the government) controlled case assignments, they could "steer" sensitive cases toward favorable judges, thereby destroying independence.
			Exercise Exercise refers to the active performance or implementation of authority. Definition: The discharge of an official function or the use of a power or right. Relation to Judicial Independence: Independence is not a static status; it is protected so that the act of judging can occur freely. This term emphasizes that the protection is functional. It ensures that when a judge is in the process of hearing evidence, weighing law, and delivering a verdict, the "machinery" behind them (the staff, the courtroom scheduling, the record-keeping) is functioning in a way that supports, rather than hinders, that active work.
			4Judicial Judicial defines the nature of the power being protected, distinguishing it from legislative or executive power. Definition: Relating to a judgment, the function of a judge, or the administration of justice. Relation to Judicial Independence: This limits the scope to the core mission of the third branch of government. Administrative matters are only protected if they are "judicial" in nature—meaning they involve the adjudication of disputes, the interpretation of law, and the upholding of the Rule of Law. It separates the "business" of the court from the "politics" of the state.

			Functions Functions refers to the specific duties and roles assigned to the court. Definition: The activities or purposes natural to or intended for a person or thing. Relation to Judicial Independence: "Judicial functions" include specific tasks such as presiding over trials, determining the admissibility of evidence, sentencing, and managing the court's docket. If the executive branch controls the "functions" (e.g., by refusing to fund a court reporter for a specific type of trial), they effectively control the court's output. Therefore, the judiciary must have administrative control over the essential tools required to perform these functions.
			Synthesis of the Five Definitions from : The "Core of the Core" When combined, these definitions create a protective zone often called Administrative Independence. The theory is that if the government controls the "administrative matters" (money, staff, space, and timing), they can indirectly control the "judicial function" (the decision). By ensuring these matters bear directly on the exercise of the judicial function, the law mandates that the judiciary must have the final say over: Assignment of judges to cases. Sittings of the court (when and where the court meets). Court lists (the order in which cases are heard).

			Allocation of court personnel directly assisting judges (law clerks, registrars). Access to courts: Including: access to confirmed filings : access to justice Without control over these elements, the judiciary would be "independent" in name only, while being functionally subservient to the executive branch
		Administrative failures that frustrate the Judiciary's ability to assign and hear cases—the "adjudicative function"—are an interference (see: page 175 of Motion Record #4)
		Courts are defenders of the constitution – focus on Constitution Act, 1867:
			A SCJ judge of the Quebec superior court challenge s. 29.1 of the Judges Act – court pension salary contribution requirement The principle of judicial independence is fundamental to our Constitution. The role of our courts as resolver of disputes, interpreter of the law and defender of the Constitution, requires that they be completely separate in authority and function from all other participants in the justice system, in particular, from the executive and the legislative branches of government.

He cites the statement of the law by Lord Halsbury in Sharp v. Wakefield[14]: An extensive power is confided to the justices in their capacity as justices to be exercised judicially; and "discretion" means when it is said that something is to be done within the discretion of the authorities that that something is to be done according to the rules of reason and justice, not according to private opinion: Rooke's Case; according to law, and not humour. It is to be, not arbitrary, vague, and fanciful, but legal and regular. 		Superior Court of Justice COURTS VERY BOOK OF BUSINESS:
			THEIR VERY BOOK OF BUSINESS [32] The historic task of the superior courts is to resolve disputes between individuals and decide questions of private and public law. Measures that prevent people from coming to the courts to have those issues resolved are at odds with this basic judicial function. The resolution of these disputes and resulting determination of issues of private and public law, viewed in the institutional context of the Canadian justice system, are central to what the superior courts do. Indeed, it is their very book of business. To prevent this business being done strikes at the core of the jurisdiction of the superior courts protected by s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. As a result, hearing fees that deny people access to the courts infringe the core jurisdiction of the superior courts.
		CHAPTER #2(E): CHAPTER #2(E): CORE JURISDICTION OF THE SUPERIOR COURTS AS OF 2014:
			SCC FINDS AND ISSUES JUDICIAL PRECEDENT: ROL – PART OF CORE JURISDICTION UNDER INDEPENDENCE OF THE JUDICIARY UNDER CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867 – ANY BREACH OF ACCESS TO THE COURTS – BREACH OF ROL – BREACH OF CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867 – BREACH OF INDEPENDENCE OF JUDICIARY

			Applicability herein: THE PROCEDURAL RECTIFICATION HEREIN CONSTITUTES AN INDISPENSABLE PREREQUISITE TO ENSURE THAT THE APPLICANT'S FUNDAMENTAL CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT OF ACCESS TO JUSTICE IS NOT UNDULY PREJUDICED BY ADMINISTRATIVE TEMPORAL DELAYS, A PRINCIPLE CONSISTENTLY MAINTAINED IN THE JURISPRUDENCE, INCLUDING ENSURING THAT LITIGANTS ENJOY ACCESS TO PUBLIC COURTS TO RESOLVE THEIR CIVIL LEGAL DISPUTES IS FUNDAMENTAL TO OUR COUNTRY'S CONSTITUTIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

			Measures that prevent people from coming to the courts to have those issues resolved are at odds with this basic judicial function. If people cannot challenge government actions in court, individuals cannot hold the state to account — the government will be, or be seen to be, above the law. If people cannot bring legitimate issues to court, the creation and maintenance of positive laws will be hampered, as laws will not be given effect. .

		Distinction between utilization of section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 to strike down impugned legislation or government conduct versus the usage of the open courts under section 2(b) of THE CHARTER)
			Constitution Act, 1867, Section 96 utilized in TLABC 2014 as opposed to section 2(b) of the Charter under Constitution Act, 1982. Distinction is important because the latter would involve the application of the Oakes test in the event of a breach. However, the open court principle is more about the courts being open to that which was and is filed. The failure to confirm filings is more about access to justice and access to courts.

			Ergo, whether by Executive Branch or Legislative Branch, judicial review cannot be ousted. 	CHAPTER #13: Due Execution of Office by Judge (the new legal test since Bill C-9 was passed), Judicial Ethics and CJC articles on document classification, document retention et al (see: pages 4314 to 4507)

		Quamdiu se bene gesserit—during good behaviour his protection serves as a bulwark against executive interference, ensuring judicial independence. However, this security is not absolute; it is counterbalanced by the necessity of accountability. When a judge's conduct erodes public confidence to a degree that renders the administration of justice in disrepute, the mechanisms of removal are engage "Failure in due execution" not merely as a metric of competence but as a functional abdication of the judicial role—whether through incompetence (Cosgrove), sloth (Dugré), or defiance of the rule of law (Ruffo). Simultaneously, it explores the "incompatible position" test, a relational standard that measures the rupture of the bond of trust between the judge and the public, often triggered by bias (Camp), dishonesty (Girouard, Einfeld), or compromised independence (Matlow, Wilson).

		Drawing on inquiry reports, legislative debates (Bill C-9), and comparative case law, this document synthesizes the global judicial understanding of the point at which a judge ceases to be "fit" for office. It argues that while "misconduct" is the broad genus of judicial error, "failure in due execution" and "incompatibility" are the specific species that justify the ultimate sanction of removal.
		The previous section of the Judges Act read as follows: Report and Recommendations Report of Council • 65 (1) After an inquiry or investigation under section 63 has been completed, the Council shall report its conclusions and submit the record of the inquiry or investigation to the Minister. • Recommendation to Minister (2) Where, in the opinion of the Council, the judge in respect of whom an inquiry or investigation has been made has become incapacitated or disabled from the due execution of the office of judge by reason of o (a) age or infirmity, o (b) having been guilty of misconduct, o (c) having failed in the due execution of that office, or o (d) having been placed, by his or her conduct or otherwise, in a position incompatible with the due execution of that office, the Council, in its report to the Minister under subsection (1), may recommend that the judge be removed from office.

		The current section of the Judges Act reads as: Removal from Office Justification 80 For the purposes of this Division, the removal from office of a judge is justified only if, for any of the following reasons, the judge's continuation in office would undermine public confidence in the impartiality, integrity or independence of the judge or of their office to such an extent that it would render the judge incapable of executing the functions of judicial office: • (a) infirmity; • (b) misconduct; • (c) failure in the due execution of judicial office; • (d) the judge is in a position that a reasonable, fair-minded and informed observer would consider to be incompatible with the due execution of judicial office.
		The change in the statutory legal test is significant to this JRPA Proceeding and that Madam Justice Shore not add other atrocities to her misconduct and that the Divisional Court President engage forthwith to remedy the previous failures in due execution of office
		Introduction of Bill C-9 The introduction of Bill C-9 was driven by the need to streamline a process that had become bogged down in procedural delays (as seen in the Girouard and Cosgrove affairs). The Bill replaces the old inquiry committee structure with a new "hearing panel" system but retains the core definitions of removal-worthy conduct.[5] Critically, the legislation explicitly incorporates the "reasonable, fair-minded and informed observer" into the text of subsection (d), cementing the objective standard of public confidence as the touchstone for removal.[3]

		The "Marshall Test" and Common Law Origins Before these statutory grounds were so explicitly parsed in recent amendments, Canadian jurisprudence relied on the "Marshall Test," derived from the CJC inquiry into the judges involved in the wrongful conviction of Donald Marshall Jr. This common law test asks: "Is the conduct alleged so manifest and totally contrary to the impartiality, integrity and independence of the judiciary that the confidence of individuals appearing before the judge, or of the public in its justice system, would be undermined, rendering the judge incapable of performing the duties of his office?" [8] This test serves as the interpretive lens for subsections (c) and (d). It clarifies that "failure in due execution" is not about a single reversible error, but about a "manifest and total" departure from the standards of the office

#298		REPORT OF THE REVIEW PANEL, CONSTITUTED BY THE CANADIAN JUDICIAL COUNCIL, REGARDING THE HONOURABLE D.E. SPIRO (the "Justice Spiro Decision") [159] Subject: Interference by Justice Spiro in the appointment of The referral was based on a number of distinct complaints concerning the alleged conduct of the judge in respect of the potential appointment of Dr. Valentina Azarova to the position of Director of the University of Toronto Faculty of Law's International Human Rights Program ("IHRP This complainant further submitted: The reports further allege that the interference may have been motivated by a judge's disapproval of Dr. Azarova's research on Israeli occupation of Palestinian lands. If that were so, it would be very troubling. It would put the integrity and impartiality of the Court in jeopardy. Any party or lawyer before it who is Palestinian, Arab, or Muslim could reasonably fear bias.
			Therrien (Re), 2001 SCC 35 at para. 147, is often cited: before making a recommendation that a judge be removed, the question to be asked is whether the conduct for which he or she is blamed is so manifestly and totally contrary to the impartiality, integrity and independence of the judiciary that the confidence of individuals appearing before the judge, or of the public in its justice system, would be undermined, rendering the judge incapable of performing the duties of his office

GOODMAN OF THE SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE OF ONTARIO CJC Files: 24-0799 and 24-0818 ("Justice Goodman Decision") Review Panel Members: The Honourable Shane I. Perlmutter The Honourable John S. Little Mr. Curtis Kleisinger (the "Goodman Decision") Justice Andrew J. Goodman File: 24-0799 / 24-0818 | Court: Superior Court of Justice of Ontario | Date: June 23, 2025 • Nature of Complaint: Inadvertently read the wrong version of a sentencing decision (8 years instead of 6) and failed to disclose or correct the error for 14 months until the appeal was imminent. • Key Findings: The panel found the delay to be a "serious ethical lapse." The judge's belief that he was functus officio (lacking jurisdiction to change the decision) was an error in judgment; he should have addressed the matter in open court immediately.

		• Outcome: * Public Reprimand (the most severe sanction short of removal). o Order to issue a formal apology to the defendant and both sets of counsel.
#300		CHANG DECISION (Justice) DECISION OF THE REVIEW PANEL IN THE MATTER OF: THE HONOURABLE CHARLES C. CHANG OF THE SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE OF ONTARIO CJC File 23-0488 Review Panel Members: The Honourable Associate Chief Justice Kenneth G. Nielsen The Honourable Justice Johanna Price Ms. Julia Pavlenko File: 23-0488 | Nature of Complaint: Allegations of verbally abusive, intimidating, and disrespectful behavior during an urgent family law motion. The judge reportedly yelled and frequently interrupted counsel. Key Findings: The panel found the judge was impatient and his tone was "abusive and intimidating at times." While the judge was under stress due to a courthouse closure and ill-prepared counsel, the panel ruled these factors did not justify a breach of civility.

		Outcome: * Action of a private nature (Expression of concern/warning). Order to engage in mentoring/coaching with a senior judge

The judge presided over a settlement conference where a former law partner (from 4.5 years prior) was a party to the dispute. Key Findings: The judge made an "honest mistake" by assuming the three-year "cooling off" period for former firm lawyers applied to former partners appearing as parties. The panel found a reasonable person would apprehend a lack of impartiality, especially since the opposing party was self-represented. Outcome: Private measure (expression of concern/warning). In 2010 (September 1, 2010), the LGIC made substantial amendments in Reg 283, effected by was amended by Ontario Regulation 38/10, but primarily due to industry wide consultation including the FCSO (see: FSCO's A07 interpretative bulletin), were not passed until September 2010. Therefore, after September 2010, Reg 283 as it was after September 2010, clarified and particularized the following: (i) First Insurer definition; (ii) the duty to not only pay but to respond to an Applicant where such an insurer had received a Completed Application; (iii)

[6]SABS AMENDED IN 2014 :SABS AMENDMENTS 2014

In 2014, the LGIC amended SABS. On December 17, 2013, and without any fanfare, the government released Ontario Regulation 347/13, amending the Statutory Accident Benefits Schedule. According to the Ministry of Finance, the amendments (which affect the attendant care, medical & rehabilitation and weekly benefits) will help reduce costs and uncertainty in the system by continuing to crack down on abuse and fraud, and clarifying benefits for auto insurance claimants. The amendments came into force on February 1, 2014

[7]On June 1, 2016, the LGIC amended SABS. One of the substantial amendments under the 2016 version of SABS was: The definition of CAT Impairment; The word "essential" with reference to Med/Rehab benefits; Benefit statements (see: 50(3)(d) of SABS); Removal of mediation, arbitration, appeal or variation under section 280 to 284 of the Insurance Act (see: section 55 of SABS)

[9]51 The mandate of this Court is to determine and apply the intention of the legislature (Bell ExpressVu, at para. 62) without crossing the line between judicial interpretation and legislative drafting (see R. v. McIntosh, 1995 CanLII 124 (SCC), [1995] 1 S.C.R. 686, at para. 26; Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., at para. 174). That being said, this rule allows for the application of the "doctrine of jurisdiction by necessary implication"; the powers conferred by an enabling statute are construed to include not only those expressly granted but also, by implication, all powers which are practically necessary for the accomplishment of the object intended to be secured by the statutory regime created by the legislature (see Brown, at p. 2-16.2; Bell Canada, at p. 1756). Canadian courts have in the past applied the doctrine to ensure that administrative bodies have the necessary jurisdiction to accomplish their statutory mandate:

When legislation attempts to create a comprehensive regulatory framework, the tribunal must have the powers which by practical necessity and necessary implication flow from the regulatory authority explicitly conferred upon it.

[10][42] In any event, since the Law Society has the power to create a CPD scheme, it necessarily has the power to enforce the scheme's standards. Given the breadth of the statutory authority, the Act must be construed such that the powers it confers "include not only those expressly granted but also, by implication, all powers which are practically necessary for the accomplishment of the object intended to be secured by the statutory regime created by the legislature": ATCO Gas and Pipelines Ltd. v. Alberta (Energy and Utilities Board), 2006 SCC 4, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 140, at para. 51. This is consistent with s. 32(1) of The Interpretation Act, which provides that "[t]he power to do a thing or to require or enforce the doing of a thing includes all necessary incidental powers."

[11]"The Decision Review Process[24] In-house counsel for the LAT swore an affidavit explaining that the executive chair implemented a decision review process at the LAT. The stated reason was to maximize the quality of the tribunal's decisions. The peer review process has not been adopted formally. No written policy was provided but counsel swore that, "generally, the LAT decision review process for final decisions is, and at all material times in this case was" as follows:

First, there is peer review: After drafting a decision, an adjudicator is expected to send the decision for peer review by the Duty Vice-Chair. The Duty Chair offers suggestions to improve clarity, reasoning and readability and might also evaluate, for example, whether the correct legal test has been applied and whether any related case law that was not mentioned might be helpful. Second, there is legal review:

The SLASTO Legal Services Unit reviews the decision to ensure [guarantee] that the correct legal test has been applied and to identify any related case law that was not mentioned that might be helpful[11].
Third, there is a second peer review by the executive chair: "In some rare instances – such as when a decision involves a novel, contentious, precedent-setting, or high-profile issue – the Legal Services Unit will send the decision to the Executive chair for her review. In these instances, the Executive chair serves, in essence, as a second peer reviewer and accordingly will order the same kinds of comments that the author would typically receive during the initial peer review."
Fourth, there is a review by the file's case management officer: The case management officer acts as an intake officer and primary point of contact for the parties. This review involves examining the decision's format, correcting grammatical and spelling errors, and ensuring that the template and parties' names are correct." [Emphasis added.]
[12]The record shows that the government effectively shut down the Manitoba Provincial Court by ordering the withdrawal of court staff several days before the Chief Judge announced the closing of the Manitoba Provincial Court. As well, the government also shut down the courts by rescheduling trials involving accused persons who had already been remanded by the court. Paragraphs 269 to 276 of 1997 Judicial Independence Impartiality Case: Manitoba Closing of Provincial Court: Filmon Fridays – the Executive Branch's decision to close the courts two weeks before the order of the Chief Justice of Manitoba ordered the same by imitation in verbatim form (the "Parrot Order") was operating under the power of dictation by the Executive Branch of These acts constituted a violation of the administrative independence of the Manitoba Provincial Court.
[13]Nota bene: also cited at Motion Record #4, pages 22 and 23; page 26;
[14]"These facts clearly demonstrate that the decision to withdraw court staff was taken almost two weeks before the Chief Judge ordered the closure of the Manitoba Provincial Court. As well, the court was closed on the same days as the unpaid days of leave for court staff. Moreover, it is the uncontroverted evidence of Judge Linda Giesbrecht, which was presented at trial, that the Manitoba Provincial Court could not function "without the assistance and presence of Courts' staff including Court clerks, Crown Attorneys, Legal Aid lawyers and Sheriff's officers and other administrative personnel".
[15]As cited in Baldovi, the Supreme Court's decision in Ruffo (1995) is the primary authority for the "preferred position" of the Chief Justice in ethical matters.
The Court held that:
The supervisory powers of Chief Judges over ethics are inherent in their functions; The Chief Justice possesses a unique "moral authority" naturally associated with their status; and This authority allows them to initiate complaints against colleagues to protect the institution's reputation without compromising the impartiality of the subsequent disciplinary process.
[16] [42] The appellant's argument that its powers are constitutional since they are inherent to the office of chief justice is based on the following passage from Ruffo [at paragraphs 57 and 58]:
… It must not be forgotten that a large part of the chief judge's role in maintaining high-quality justice was defined gradually over the years, in the same way as judicial precedents. Many aspects of this role derived from judicial tradition without being transferred to legislation. Therefore, the fact that there was no explicit legislation on ethics until quite recently does not mean we can doubt the continuity that marked the development of the chief judge's responsibilities in this regard. It accordingly cannot be argued that the supervisory powers conferred on the chief judge by … s. 96 [of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.Q., c T-16 then in force] were assigned spontaneously by the legislature; in my view, they must rather be seen as the expression of a reality that is consistent with general practice and gradual developments over time. This opinion is shared by the American author … Geyh, who asserts that the chief judge's supervisory powers over ethics are inherent in the exercise of his or her functions and need not be conferred by specific statutory provisions …. I agree. [Emphasis in original.]
[43] However, to understand its real import, this excerpt from Ruffo should be put in its original context. Those comments were made by Justice Gonthier, on behalf of the majority, in response to the argument that the chief judge of the Court of Québec should not be allowed to lay a complaint with the Conseil de la magistrature against a judge of his court because it would go against the principles of judicial impartiality and independence. It is in this very specific context that the comments reproduced above were made and should be understood. This is clear from the paragraph that follows [at paragraph 59]:
We must recognize that the chief judge, as primus inter pares in the court, the efficient operation of which he or she oversees in all other respects, is in a preferred position to ensure compliance with judicial ethics. First, because of the chief judge's role as co-ordinator, events that may raise ethical issues are more readily brought to his or her attention. As well, because of the chief judge's status, he or she is often the best situated to deal with such delicate matters, thereby relieving the other judges of the court of the difficult task of laying a complaint against one of their colleagues where necessary. In short, the power to lay a complaint is an intrinsic part of the chief judge's responsibility in this area and it would not be fitting for the chief judge to act through someone else, whether a judge or a person outside the judiciary, to fulfil his or her obligations in this regard. [Emphasis added.]
[44] What we understand from this passage is that the only inherent power of a chief justice identified by the Supreme Court in Ruffo with respect to judicial discipline is that of laying a complaint against one of the judges under his or her supervision. There is nothing to suggest that this power should necessarily include that of holding an inquiry into such a complaint. Moreover, when chief justices act in such a way, they do so by reason of their role as coordinators of the court in their division. In other words, if this power is "inherent," it is so with respect to their functions as chief justices, which are essentially administrative functions (Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Tobiass, 1997 CanLII 322 (SCC), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 391, at paragraph 99), not their functions as judges (if that were the case, every judge would be granted this power). Nor does that decision mention that a chief justice would have such power in respect of judges other than those of his or her court. The Council's powers are not limited in this manner.
[17] [50] In focussing on the practice directive, Crown counsel pointed out that the practice directive was not made pursuant to the rule making power of the court under s. 482(2) of the Criminal Code. Rather, the practice directive was made pursuant to the provincial legislation in s. 8.1 of The Provincial Court Act. Crown counsel also pointed out that administrative independence of the judiciary attaches to the court as a whole and that because the practice directive lacks the collective dimension that a rule would have had (as it is made by the Chief Judge alone), it is not of the same force as a rule. In support of this position, Crown counsel relies on the following from Provincial Court Judges Assn. (Manitoba) v. Manitoba (Minister of Justice) (at para. 275):

Even if the trial judge had been right to conclude that the Chief Judge retained control over the decision to close the Manitoba Provincial Court throughout, there would nevertheless have been a violation of s. 11(d), because the Chief Judge would have exceeded her constitutional authority when she made that decision. As this Court held in Valente, control over the sittings of the court falls within the administrative independence of the judiciary. And as I indicated above, administrative independence is a characteristic of judicial independence which normally has a collective or institutional dimension. It attaches to the court as a whole. Although certain decisions may be exercised on behalf of the judiciary by the Chief Judge, it is important to remember that the Chief Judge is no more than "primus inter pares": Ruffo v. Conseil de la magistrature, 1995 CanLII 49 (SCC), [1995] 4 S.C.R. 267, at para. 59. Important decisions regarding administrative independence cannot be made by the Chief Judge alone. In my opinion, the decision to close the Manitoba Provincial Court is precisely this kind of decision.

[18]It should be recalled that, according to the teachings of the Supreme Court of Canada, the supervisory powers of a chief justice with respect to professional conduct are inherent in the exercise of his judicial functions and do not require any specific legislative authority, whereas, as primus inter pares , he therefore occupies a privileged position to ensure compliance with judicial ethics within the Court (Ruffo v. Conseil de la magistrature , 1995 CanLII 49 (SCC) , [1995] 4 SCR 267 at paras. 58-59). In any event, when a Committee of Inquiry has been established under subsection 63(3) of the Act , the Chief Justice has the implied power to relieve, in whole or in part, a judge of certain judicial functions, pending the outcome of the investigation into a disciplinary complaint, to the extent that this may appear necessary in the best interests of justice and its administration, and to preserve public confidence in the courts and the judges who are part of them.

[19][21] Moreover, the directive to no longer assign cases to Justice Dugré is not subject to review by the Federal Court. It should be recalled that, according to the teachings of the Supreme Court of Canada, the supervisory powers of a chief justice with respect to professional conduct are inherent in the exercise of his judicial functions and do not require any specific legislative authority, whereas, as primus inter pares , he therefore occupies a privileged position to ensure compliance with judicial ethics within the Court (Ruffo v. Conseil de la magistrature , 1995 CanLII 49 (SCC) , [1995] 4 SCR 267 at paras. 58-59). In any event, when a Committee of Inquiry has been established under subsection 63(3) of the Act , the Chief Justice has the implied power to relieve, in whole or in part, a judge of certain judicial functions, pending the outcome of the investigation into a disciplinary complaint, to the extent that this may appear necessary in the best interests of justice and its administration, and to preserve public confidence in the courts and the judges who are part of them.

[20]Subsequent case involving suspending the CJC proceedings by way of relief sought, which was denied, until the applicant judge's leave application to SCC was heard

[21]Manitoba Procedure: a duty judge receives applications for wiretap "Ex Parte In Camera Hearing": It was explained to counsel that it is the duty judge who typically receives applications for authorizations like the application in the present case. It was also explained to counsel that the "duty judge" is assigned that role by the trial coordinator. That assignment by the trial coordinator of the duty judge is in turn done arbitrarily and randomly based upon the availability of the judge and the general exigencies and vagaries of the Court of Queen's Bench rota. Accordingly, where there is an initial application for something such as a wiretap authorization, the supporting materials are brought to the court after they are prepared and without prior knowledge of the identity of the assigned duty judge

[22]R. v. Baldovi et al, 2016 MBQB 90 (CanLII), at para 72: [72] In addition to the practical reality discussed above, it can also be said that from time to time, a case presents as "a Chief's case". Such a case may be defined by its challenges, its controversy and/or its high profile nature. Such a case may also present as one whose circumstances place the focus on the integrity of the court. Even if an ultimate adjudication (concerning initial questions that touch the integrity of a court's process) proves not to be determinative in a legal sense, there is in most cases – given the stakes – no one more appropriately positioned to conduct such adjudications than the Chief Justice. While not all judicial decisions to recuse or not recuse can or should be reduced to an ethical issue, to the extent that a potential link does exist, the Chief Justice as primus inter pares is often in a preferred position to comment. No less so in the context of a formal adjudication. See Ruffo v. Conseil de la magistrature, 1995 CanLII 49 (SCC), [1995] 4 S.C.R. 267 at paras. 58-59. That is not to say that any Chief Justice can or should consider him or herself in court or in chambers as the final arbiter of ethical questions. Yet, as the face of the court, the Chief Justice is uniquely placed to present for his colleagues, the legal profession and the public generally, a leadership that will address potential legal/ethical issues that require administrative or adjudicative clarification so as to ensure public confidence not only in his or her own court, but the judiciary generally.

[23]Such a case may be defined by its challenges, its controversy and/or its high profile nature. Such a case may also present as one whose circumstances place the focus on the integrity of the court (issue in Request of the Applicant on January 5, 2026: Has the case been defined by (i) challenges; (ii) controversy; (iii) high profile nature; and/or (iv) circumstance place focus on integrity of the court) such that this JRPA Proceeding, particularly NOM #3 and Motion #4 present a chief's case)Even if an ultimate adjudication (concerning initial questions that touch the integrity of a court's process) proves not to be determinative in a legal sense, there is in most cases – given the stakes – no one more appropriately positioned to conduct such adjudications than the Chief Justice. One question could not be asked in isolation and there is an obligation to preserve the judicial immunity for the benefit of the public. For this immunity, in the performance of judicial duties, is not for a judge personally, it is for the benefit of the public "to protect the judicial system against interference or influence which might pervert the course of justice" (Morier, p. 737).

Hence, the CJ of the SCJ (in capacity as President of the Divisional Court) can lead a panel should that arise.

[27]COMPREHENSIVE SUMMARY: "THE ROLE OF A CHIEF JUSTICE IN CANADA" BY PETER W. HOGG

In this seminal article, Professor Peter W. Hogg—widely regarded as Canada's preeminent constitutional scholar—provides a definitive analysis of the multifaceted and often precarious role of the Chief Justice within the Canadian superior court system. While Chief Justices share the core adjudicative duties of their colleagues (the "puisne" or associate judges), Hogg argues that their office carries a unique, non-shared responsibility: managing the "delicate interface" between the judiciary and the executive branch of government. This relationship is not merely administrative; it is a central pillar in the maintenance of judicial independence and the rule of law in Canada.

1. Appointment, Qualifications, and the "Judge-Administrator"

The appointment of a Chief Justice is a high-level political act, performed by the Governor in Council (the federal Cabinet). Hogg notes a subtle but critical distinction in the selection process: while recommendations for puisne judges typically originate with the Minister of Justice, the recommendation for a Chief Justice usually comes directly from the Prime Minister. This procedural difference underscores the perceived importance of the role as a bridge between the state and the law, marking the Chief Justice as the primary diplomatic representative of the judicial branch to the executive.

Legally, the requirements are identical to those of any superior court judge—ten years of standing at the bar of a province. However, Hogg emphasizes that the practical demands of the office require a specialized skillset that transcends legal scholarship. A Chief Justice must be more than a scholar; they must be a "judge-administrator." This role demands:

- Leadership and Diplomacy: The ability to foster consensus among a group of fiercely independent peers. Unlike a corporate CEO, a Chief Justice cannot simply issue orders to other judges; they must lead through persuasion and moral authority. They must maintain court harmony while often making difficult decisions regarding workload distribution and internal policy.
- Organizational Mastery: Navigating the complex bureaucracy of the Department of Justice to ensure the court remains functional. This involves understanding public service staffing, procurement cycles, and governmental reporting structures. The Chief Justice must speak the language of "estimates" and "budget cycles" to effectively advocate for the court's operational needs without becoming a "politician."
- Political Acumen: Representing the court's interests to the government without compromising the appearance of neutrality. The Chief Justice must advocate for resources—such as more judges, modern facilities, or better technology—while simultaneously presiding over cases where that same government is a party. This requires a sophisticated understanding of how to exert pressure through appropriate channels without appearing partisan or compromised.

In practice, this means Chief Justices are almost exclusively drawn from the existing bench rather than directly from the bar. They require an intimate understanding of the court's internal culture and the daily realities of trial or appellate work before they can effectively manage the institution.

2. Tenure, Discipline, and the Canadian Judicial Council (CJC)

A Chief Justice's tenure is protected by the constitutional standard of "good behaviour" until age 75, shielding them from arbitrary dismissal by the executive. However, their role extends to protecting the tenure of all superior court judges through their leadership within the Canadian Judicial Council (CJC).

The CJC, chaired by the Chief Justice of Canada and composed of all provincial and federal Chief Justices, acts as the primary guardian of judicial integrity. Hogg highlights two essential functions that have profound implications for the independence of the bench:

- Professional Development and Ethical Standards: The CJC standardizes judicial education and administrative best practices. By controlling the curriculum of judicial training and setting ethical guidelines, the Chief Justices ensure that the standards of the profession are determined by the judiciary itself, rather than by government officials or external political bodies. This prevents the executive from indirectly influencing the law through the "training" of its interpreters.
- The Disciplinary "Buffer": This is perhaps the most critical protection for judicial tenure. When a complaint is lodged against a judge, the CJC—a body of the judge's own peers—conducts the investigation. Hogg explains that by ensuring the government cannot initiate the removal of a judge without a prior recommendation from the CJC, the Chief Justices provide a vital institutional buffer. This prevents the executive from using disciplinary threats or "frivolous complaints" as a weapon to influence judicial outcomes. It ensures that no judge is removed for making a decision that is legally sound but politically unpopular, effectively placing the "keys" to judicial tenure in the hands of the judiciary itself.

3. The Administrative Paradox: Authority vs. Resources

The core of Hogg's thesis is the "administrative paradox" that defines the modern Canadian judiciary. This paradox is rooted in the Supreme Court's landmark decision in Valente v. R. (1985), which established that "institutional independence" is a constitutional prerequisite for any court. According to Valente, the judiciary must have exclusive control over administrative matters that "bear directly on the exercise of its judicial function."

Hogg identifies three "red line" powers that must remain under the exclusive control of the Chief Justice to prevent executive overreach:

1. The Assignment of Judges: The Chief Justice alone decides which judge hears which case. This prevents the government from "forum shopping" or assigning a "pro-government" judge to a sensitive constitutional challenge or a high-profile criminal trial involving state interests.
2. Sittings and Dockets: The court, not the government, determines its own schedule and location. This prevents the executive from effectively "shutting down" or delaying the court's work by refusing to schedule sittings in specific regions or on specific dates.
3. Case Prioritization: The management of court lists ensures that the executive cannot bury controversial cases or fast-track political priorities to the detriment of ordinary litigants. The Chief Justice ensures that the "queue" is managed according to the interests of justice and the rule of law, not the interests of the state.

The paradox arises because the Chief Justice possesses the legal authority to manage these functions but lacks the financial autonomy to fund them. They do not have an independent treasury; instead, they must petition the Minister of Justice for every dollar required to pay staff, maintain buildings, and purchase the technology necessary to maintain these lists and assignments.

4. Friction with the Executive: The "Principal Litigant" Problem

Hogg explores the profound tensions created by this financial dependence. The Chief Justice is "inescapably dependent" on the executive for three vital pillars of court operation, each carrying its own structural risks:

- The Budgetary Approval Process: The Minister of Justice (the Attorney General) acts as the court's advocate in Cabinet. If the Minister fails to secure adequate funding—either through a lack of political influence or a disagreement over judicial priorities—the court's efficiency and the public's access to justice suffer. The Chief Justice has no direct voice in the Cabinet room where these final resource allocations are made, leaving them reliant on a political intermediary who may have competing priorities.
- The Staffing Dilemma and "Dual Loyalty": Court registrars, clerks, and security are typically public servants. Their pay scales, promotions, and job descriptions are dictated by the executive's treasury board. Hogg observes that these employees may feel a "dual loyalty": they serve the judge in the courtroom, but their long-term career prospects, benefits, and workplace rules depend on the government. This can complicate a Chief Justice's ability to implement long-term administrative reforms if those reforms conflict with general government employment policies, union agreements, or budgetary cuts.
- Logistics, Infrastructure, and Procurement: Everything from the physical courthouse to case management software is provided through government procurement processes. These processes often prioritize cost-savings or generic government-wide standards over the specific, high-security, and high-efficiency needs of a court of law. A Chief Justice may find themselves with a "one-size-fits-all" computer system that is ill-suited for the complex task of managing a modern judicial docket, yet they lack the independent authority to hire their own specialized vendors.

The most glaring anomaly, Hogg notes, is that the Minister of Justice is the "Principal Litigant" in the country. This creates a theoretical conflict of interest: the person responsible for prosecuting the Crown's cases and defending its laws is the same person providing the judge's pens, paper, support staff, and courtroom security.

5. The Great Debate: Total Independence vs. Accountability

Hogg provides a critical counter-perspective to the 1981 Masters in their Own House report by Chief Justice Jules Deschênes. Deschênes argued that the current system was an inherent threat to independence and proposed that courts should submit their budgets directly to the legislature, entirely bypassing the executive branch and the Ministry of Justice.

Hogg rejects this radical path, offering a staunch defense of the traditional parliamentary model based on three profound principles:

- The Principle of Ministerial Accountability: In a democracy, public funds must be overseen by someone who can be voted out of office. An unelected Chief Justice cannot be held politically accountable for a botched court budget or inefficient spending. Accountability must rest with an elected Minister who can be questioned daily in the House of Commons. To grant the judiciary total financial control would be to create a "state within a state" that is immune to democratic oversight.
- The Reality of Fiscal Competition: The judiciary does not exist in a vacuum. Hogg argues they should not be a "privileged class" exempt from the trade-offs that affect healthcare, education, or social services. The government must be able to weigh the court's needs against other societal priorities in a unified budget. If the courts were exempt from treasury constraints, they would be uniquely insulated from the economic realities facing all other citizens, which Hogg views as a violation of democratic norms.
- The "Shield" of the Minister: Hogg argues that if Chief Justices were forced to defend their budgets in public legislative committees (as seen in some U.S. jurisdictions), they would inevitably be drawn into partisan politics. They would have to justify their spending against political attacks and perhaps even "lobby" politicians for funds. Having a Minister "champion" the budget in Cabinet actually protects the Chief Justice from political mudslinging, preserving their essential image of impartiality.

6. Case Studies in Institutional Pressure: Askov and Beyond

Hogg illustrates the power dynamics between the branches using the R. v. Askov (1990) case as a pivotal example. In Askov, the Supreme Court ruled that excessive delays in bringing a case to trial—delays fundamentally caused by a lack of resources, courtrooms, and personnel—violated the Charter right to a trial within a reasonable time. This resulted in the staying or withdrawal of roughly 47,000 criminal charges in Ontario alone.

The consequence was a massive public outcry and a "virtual amnesty" for accused criminals, which created immediate and intense political pressure on the Attorney General. Hogg notes that this judicial decision effectively "forced the hand" of the government, leading to prompt and significant increases in court resources. This demonstrates that while the Chief Justice lacks the "power of the purse," the judiciary possesses a "legal lever" that can compel the executive to act. When underfunding begins to infringe on constitutional rights, the courts can issue rulings that carry such heavy political costs that the government is forced to provide the necessary resources to restore order and public confidence.

7. The Registrar and the Federal Compromise

Hogg points to federal reforms as a potential "middle path" for provincial courts. In the federal system, officials like the Registrar of the Supreme Court or the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs have the status of "deputy heads." This means they manage the court's administrative staff and budget under the direction of the Chief Justice, while still reporting formally to the Minister of Justice for budgetary purposes.

This arrangement seeks to:

- Insulate court staff from the broader Department of Justice bureaucracy, fostering a sense of loyalty to the court first.
- Grant the Chief Justice more direct control over day-to-day spending and personnel management.
- Maintain ministerial accountability by keeping the ultimate budgetary responsibility within the Cabinet and the legislature.

While this does not solve the fundamental paradox of funding, Hogg suggests it goes a long way toward securing the "institutional independence" required by the Valente decision without dismantling the foundations of parliamentary government.

Conclusion: The Chief Justice as a Guardian and Negotiator

Hogg concludes by framing the Chief Justice as a "guardian of the judicial function" who must operate within a system of "mutual dependence." While the Chief Justice cannot control the total amount of funding, they must be vigilant in ensuring that the process of funding does not "infect" the substance of judicial decision-making.

The role is ultimately one of high-stakes diplomacy and constant vigilance. The Chief Justice must maintain a productive, professional relationship with the executive to secure the necessary tools for the court, while remaining fiercely, constitutionally independent in the pursuit of justice. For Hogg, the strength of the Canadian system lies not in total separation, but in this carefully managed tension where the Chief Justice serves as the vital, human point of contact between the law and the state. They ensure that even when the state pays the bills, the law remains the final, independent authority in the courtroom.

[28]When a judge's conduct becomes a matter of public controversy, the Chief Justice often uses their administrative prerogative to “take over” the judge’s entire caseload by removing them from the schedule: (a) Justice Paul Cosgrove: Following an Ontario Court of Appeal ruling that his trial conduct brought the administration of justice into disrepute, the Chief Justice of the Ontario Superior Court requested that he not preside over any matter until his CJC inquiry was resolved.[3;] and Justice Russell Brown: In 2023, Chief Justice Richard Wagner placed SCC Justice Brown on paid leave, effectively removing him from the court's hearing schedule while a conduct complaint was investigated regarding his conduct while he was out of office in Arizona and argued with a patron at a resto-bar.

[29][14] Black's Law Dictionary®, Ninth Edition does not have a definition for the word “interfere,” but it does define “interference” as: “1. The act of meddling in another's affairs. 2. An obstruction or hindrance.”

[30]Scope of s. 127(2): The Court held that s. 127(2) of the Criminal Code is not limited to judicial proceedings that are existing or proposed. The phrase "the course of justice" includes attempts to obstruct investigations that may lead to prosecution, even if no decision to prosecute has been made. The legislative history and case law support this broad interpretation.

[31]The ejusdem generis rule (Latin for "of the same kind") is a principle of legal interpretation where general words following a list of specific words are interpreted to apply only to things of the same class or type as those specifically listed, helping to clarify ambiguous language and prevent overly broad meanings, like interpreting "cars, trucks, and other vehicles" to mean land-based vehicles, not airplanes. It's a tool used to find legislative intent in statutes or contracts, ensuring general words don't expand beyond the specific category established by the preceding term

[32]The expression "the course of justice" in s. 127(2) (rep. & sub. 1972, c. 13, s. 8) of the Criminal Code which provides that everyone who "wilfully attempts in any manner ... to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice is guilty of an indictable offence" includes judicial proceedings existing or proposed but is not limited to such proceedings and includes an attempt to obstruct, pervert or defeat a prosecution which the accused contemplates may take place, notwithstanding that no decision to prosecute has been made. Although s. 127(1), which deals with obstructing justice through indemnifying sureties, and s. 127(3), which deems certain acts to constitute obstructing justice, both use the words "in a judicial proceeding" and s. 127(3) provides that the proceeding may be "existing or proposed" the ejusdem generis rule should not be applied to similarly limit the offence in s. 127(2). Accordingly, where an accused gives a police officer a false name in order to avoid a charge of driving while disqualified and to thus escape a prosecution which he apprehends may ensue, the "course of justice" has commenced and the accused may be convicted of the offence contrary to s. 127(2) of the Criminal Code. The accused's common law right to remain silent cannot protect him in such circumstances. Although not every false statement to the police, such as a false denial of guilt, will be capable of supporting a charge of wilfully attempting to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice, whatever protection is afforded the accused by his right to remain silent cannot shield him from prosecution where he makes false statements to the police and misleads the police by giving a false name in order to protect himself.

[33]In acquitting the accused Judge Waisberg said at p. 169 C.C.C., p. 658 O.R.:

The principle to be gleaned from the cases is that while a third party may commit an offence by lying on behalf of an offender, the offender himself has no obligation to be truthful about his own criminal conduct. The doctrines nemo tenetur seipsum accusare -- no man can be compelled to criminate himself -- and nemo tenetur prodere seipsum -- no one is bound to betray himself -- have been carefully safeguarded and preserved.

[34]The appellant's actions in removing the parking tags interfered with the police's ability to enforce the by-law, thereby obstructing the course of justice. The conviction was therefore upheld.

[35] Similarly, the Ontario Court of Appeal, in R. v. Zeck (1980), 1980 CanLII 2849 (ON CA), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 551 (Ont. C.A.), found that s. 139(2) was applicable to proceedings arising from the infraction of a municipal parking by-law. In R. v. May (1984), 1984 CanLII 3489 (ON CA), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 257 (Ont. C.A.), it was held that the section was applicable to the Ontario Highway Traffic Act provisions pertaining to the issuing of traffic tickets.

[37]In my opinion the inherent jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench is not such as to empower a judge of that Court to make an order negating the unambiguous expression of the legislative will. The effect of the order made in this case was to alter the statutory priorities which a court simply cannot do.

In the Court of Appeal Matas J.A. per curiam said:

In any event, I am of the opinion that sec. 11(1), supra, cannot be interpreted, under the circumstances before us, so as to frustrate the jurisdiction of Court of Queen's Bench to appoint a receiver with effective power to carry out his mandate. (Montreal Trust Company et al. v. Churchill Forest Industries (Manitoba) Limited, 1971 CanLII 960 (MB CA), [1971] 4 W.W.R. 542 at p. 546 et seq.) In my view, the order appealed from is not in conflict with The Mechanics' Liens Act, supra, and is in accordance with its intent.

Montreal Trust Company et al. v. Churchill Forest Industries (Manitoba) Limited may well be cited as a paradigm of the exercise of judicial discretion but Chief Justice Freedman, speaking for all his colleagues, was careful to state, p. 547:

Inherent jurisdiction cannot, of course, be exercised so as to conflict with a statute or Rule. Moreover, because it is a special and extraordinary power, it should be exercised only sparingly and in a clear case.
[38]The Court rejected the appellant's argument that the word "may" in section 48(2) should be interpreted as "shall," thereby imposing a mandatory duty on the Deputy Minister to review classifications. It found that the Deputy Minister had discretion under the section and was not obligated to act.
[39] The Court held that the 1948 amendment to section 48(2) of The Customs Act was not retroactive. The amendment created a new substantive right of appeal, which could not apply to importations made before its effective date. The Court emphasized that section 54 of the pre-1948 Act did not provide a right of appeal for past importations regarding classification errors, as it only contemplated future declarations by the Board of Customs.

The Court rejected the appellant's argument that the word "may" in section 48(2) should be interpreted as "shall," thereby imposing a mandatory duty on the Deputy Minister to review classifications. It found that the Deputy Minister had discretion under the section and was not obligated to act.

Finally, the Court concluded that mandamus would not lie in this case because the appellant had other remedies available, such as pursuing the matter in the courts. Mandamus is discretionary and is not granted when alternative remedies exist.
[40]The request for mandamus was improperly brought as a counterclaim instead of a judicial review application. Additionally, the counterclaim failed to articulate a discernible cause of action (paras 42-50).

Moreover, SNIC provided a singular fax number to the Appellant in September 2022 of 416-774-3120. [44]n the claim, the plaintiff states that Farnoosh was present at "various meetings" where her mother, the defendant Kobra Fathi declared herself to be the sole support parent and where she (Farnoosh) remained silent and failed to correct the misinformation provided to the Region and to the Halton Housing Authority by the mother. The "failure to correct" is stated to be the equivalent of making a false representation to the plaintiff. I disagree. The plaintiff's counsel relied on the case of Sidhu Estate v. Bains, 1996 CanLII 3332 (BC CA), [1996] B.C.J. No. 1246 to establish that silence in the face of a false representation can lead to liability for deceit. In the Sidhu Estate case, the B.C. Court of Appeal found that all the elements of a successful claim in deceit were proven against the defendant Bains who had remained silent at the time false information had been communicated to induce an executor to invest estate monies in a company in which the defendant had an interest. Bains was a director, shareholder and president of the company. The directors and shareholders intended the company to be listed on the VSE. The defendant attended a meeting with the estate executor where false statements were made particularly with respect to the extent of Bain's investment in the company. Bains remained silent when these false representations, designed to induce investment by the executor, were made. Liability was found.
[45]The Federal Court, in Apotex Inc. v. Canada (A.G.), 1993 CanLII 3004 (FCA), [1994] 1 F.C. 742 (Fed. C.A.) at para. 45, aff'd 1994 CanLII 47 (SCC), [1994] SCJ No. 113. [1994] 1 F.C. 742, set out mandatory conditions that must be fulfilled before a court will issue an order of mandamus. The conditions include:

(1) there must be a public legal duty (as opposed to a mere power) to act;

(2) the duty must be owed to the Applicant;

(3) there must be a clear right to expect performance of the duty and all conditions precedent giving rise to the duty must be satisfied including the demand that the duty be exercised and a refusal to do so;

(4) where the duty sought to be enforced is discretionary, the following rules apply:

(a) in exercising a discretion, the decision-maker must not act in a manner which can be characterized as "unfair", "oppressive" or demonstrate "flagrant impropriety" or "bad faith";

(b) mandamus is unavailable if the decision-maker's discretion is characterized as being "unqualified", "absolute", "permissive" or "unfettered";

(c) in the exercise of a "fettered" discretion, the decision-maker must act upon "relevant", as opposed to "irrelevant", considerations;

(d) mandamus is unavailable to compel the exercise of a "fettered discretion" in a particular way; and

(e) mandamus is only available when the decision-maker's discretion is "spent", i.e., the claimant has a vested right to the performance of the duty.

(5) the applicant must have no other remedy or recourse available to him;

(6) the order sought must be of some practical value or effect;

(7) there must be no equitable bar to the court granting mandamus; and

(8) the balance of convenience must favour the granting of mandamus.

[46][16] Normally, this Court awards mandamus only where the outcome of the case on the merits is a foregone conclusion – in other words the evidence can lead only to one result. However, there are exceptions in the authorities: LeBon v. Canada (Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness), 2013 FCA 55 and the so-called "directed verdict" cases referred to; see also Wihksne v. Canada (Attorney General), 2002 FCA 356, Canada (Attorney General) v. Richard, 2008 FCA 69 and Canada (Minister of Human Resources Development) v. Tait, 2006 FCA 380 where this Court has issued directions on particular issues in conjunction with a remittal for re-decision. One recognized exception is where there has been substantial delay and the additional delay caused by remitting the matter to the administrative decision-maker for re-decision threatens to bring the administration of justice into disrepute: Pointon v. British Columbia (Superintendent of Motor Vehicles), 2002 BCCA 516; Norgard v. Anmore (Village), 2009 BCSC 823 at paragraph 46; LeBon, supra at paragraph 14. In such circumstances, the Court exceptionally may direct that a certain result be reached.
[47]There must be a public legal duty to act:
The duty must be owed to the applicant:
There is a clear right to performance of that duty, in particular the applicant has satisfied all conditions precedent giving rise to the duty;
there was (i) a prior demand for performance of the duty; (ii) a reasonable time to comply with the demand unless refused outright; and (iii) a subsequent refusal which can be either expressed or implied, e.g. unreasonable delay;
Where the duty sought to be enforced is discretionary, the following rules apply: in exercising a discretion, the decision-maker must not act in a manner which can be characterized as "unfair", "oppressive" or demonstrate "flagrant impropriety" or "bad faith";
mandamus is unavailable if the decision-maker's discretion is characterized as being "unqualified", "absolute", "permissive" or "unfettered";
in the exercise of a "fettered" discretion, the decision-maker must act upon "relevant", as opposed to "irrelevant", considerations; mandamus is unavailable to compel the exercise of a "fettered discretion" in a particular way; and mandamus is only available when the decision-maker's discretion is "spent"; i.e., the applicant has a vested right to the performance of the duty.
No other adequate remedy is available to the applicant.
The order sought will be of some practical value or effect.
The Court in the exercise of its discretion finds no equitable bar to the relief sought.
On a "balance of convenience" an order in the nature of mandamus should (or should not) issue

[52]Sheriffs are municipal in nature

[53]In Sunrise North Sneior Living Ltd. v The Sheriff (York Region)The Court found that the Sheriff had a clear statutory duty to enforce the eviction order under the Residential Tenancies Act and the Courts of Justice Act (paras 61-64). The Applicant met all conditions for mandamus, including demonstrating a clear right to enforcement and the absence of alternative remedies (paras 66-77). The Court rejected the Sheriff's argument that enforcement was impractical, noting that the resident's consent was not a legal prerequisite for eviction and that alternative accommodations were available (paras 78-96).

The balance of convenience favored enforcement, as the Applicant's interests extended beyond economic harm to include deteriorating relations with the resident, while the resident's health and safety concerns were not insurmountable (paras 90-98). The Court emphasized the public interest in upholding the rule of law and ensuring compliance with valid eviction orders (paras 92-97).

The Court declined to provide specific directions on how the Sheriff should carry out the eviction, leaving it to the Sheriff's discretion to determine a temporary location if necessary (paras 102-105). The March 31, 2020 deadline was set to allow the resident time to secure alternative accommodations (paras 106-109).

Nota bene no. 2:

[55]concerned whether a party has a duty to disclose material information relating to the performance of a contract when it knows that silence could mislead the other party.

C.M. Callow Inc., a property maintenance company owned and operated by Christopher Callow, had winter and summer maintenance contracts with a group of condominium corporations.

The winter contract allowed the condos to terminate for any reason on 10 days' notice (a "Convenience Termination Clause"). In early 2013, the condos decided that they would terminate the winter contract, which was set to begin later that year, but withheld that decision from Mr. Callow. During that summer, Mr. Callow performed various "freebie work" in the expectation that the condos would renew the winter contract. Upon completion of the summer maintenance work, the condos gave notice that they were terminating the winter agreement. Callow Inc. sued, alleging that the condos breached their duty of good faith. At trial, the judge found that while the condos had an express right to terminate the contract on notice, they "deliberately" misled and deceived Callow Inc. The trial judge held that the condos acted in bad faith (1) by failing to disclose material information to ensure Callow completed the summer maintenance work, and (2) by *leadin*g Callow to believe that the winter contract was not in danger of non-renewal. ONCA REVERSES TRIAL JUDGE

The Ontario Court of Appeal reversed the trial judge's decision, observing that Bhasin did not impose on the condos a unilateral duty to disclose their intention to terminate apart from the express notice period. The Court of Appeal held that the trial judge improperly expanded the duty of honest performance in a way that altered and conflicted with the express terms of the winter agreement. While recognizing that the condos failed to act 'honorably', the Court of Appeal held that their conduct did not rise to the "high level" of bad faith.

[56]n appeal to the SCC, Callow argued that the condos' silence coupled with "active statements" breached (i) the duty of honest performance; and (ii) the duty not to abuse discretionary contractual rights. In the alternative, Callow asked the Court to recognize a new duty under the organizing principle that prohibits "active non-disclosure".

Knowing – misleading – believing – one thing would happen – when it would not – breach of duty of good faith

The SCC found, as per Wagner C.J. and Abella, Karakatsanis, Martin and Kasirer JJ., that the duty to act honestly in the performance of the contract precluded the active deception by Baycrest by which it knowingly misled Callow into believing that the winter maintenance agreement would not be terminated. By exercising the termination clause dishonestly, it breached the duty of honesty on a matter directly linked to the performance of the contract, even if the 10-day notice period was satisfied. Accordingly, the Court of Appeal should not have interfered with the conclusions of the trial judge.

Lying: What is performance?

The duty of honest performance in contract, formulated in Bhasin applies to all contracts and requires that parties must not lie or otherwise knowingly mislead each other about matters directly linked to the performance of the contract.

Legal test: whether dishonesty – connected – linked to contract

In determining whether dishonesty is connected to a given contract, the relevant question is whether: (i) a right under that contract was exercised; or (ii) an obligation under that contract was performed, dishonestly.

While the duty of honest performance is not to be equated with a positive obligation of disclosure, in circumstances where a contracting party lies to or knowingly misleads another, a lack of a positive obligation of disclosure does not preclude an obligation to correct a false impression created through that party's own actions.
The duty of honesty as contractual doctrine has a limiting function on the exercise of an otherwise complete and clear right since the duty, irrespective of the intention of the parties, applies to the performance of all contracts, and by extension, to all contractual obligations and rights. Instead of constraining the decision to terminate in and of itself, the duty of honest performance attracts damages where the manner in which the right was exercised was dishonest. This focus on the manner in which the termination right was exercised should not be confused with whether the right could be exercised. No contractual right, including a termination right, can be exercised dishonestly and, as such, contrary to the requirements of good faith.

The Requirements of Honesty
Knowingly misleading: (i) half-truths; (ii) omissions; (iii) silence; and (iv) inaction (failing to correct)

The requirements of honesty in performance can go further than prohibiting outright lies. Whether or not a party has knowingly misled its counterparty is a highly fact specific determination, and can include lies, half truths, omissions, and even silence, depending on the circumstances. One can mislead through action, by saying something directly to its counterparty, or through inaction, by failing to correct a misapprehension caused by one's own misleading conduct.
As Per Moldaver, Brown and Rowe JJ, there is, in the context of misrepresentation, a rich law accepting that sometimes silence or half-truths amount to a statement. Although contracting parties have no duty to disclose material information, a contracting party may not create a misleading picture about its contractual performance by relying on half-truths or partial disclosure. Representations need not take the form of an express statement. So long as it is clearly communicated, it may comprise other acts or conduct on the part of the defendant [respondent[s]].

[58] Constitutional law—Proposal to establish unified criminal court—Transfer of criminal jurisdiction to new court—Judges provincially appointed—Inferior court transformed into a superior court—Whether proposal constitutional—Constitution Act, 1867, R.S.C 1970, Appendix II, ss. 91(2), 92(14), 96.
Appeal—Reference—Abstract questions—Whether the Court should answer referred questions—Judicature Act, R.S.N.B. 1973, c. J-2 as amended, s. 23(1).
[59]The Privy Council accepted this view, describing section 96 as "at the root of the means adopted by the framers of the [Constitution] … to secure the impartiality and independence of the Provincial judiciary."121 This theory is most famously found in Professor William Lederman's extensive piece entitled "The Independence of the Judiciary." Yet, Lederman posited that it was the cumulative effect of sections 96-100 of the Constitution (the "Judicature Provisions"), not just section 96 alone, that safeguards the independence of the superior court judges. As only superior courts provided the qualities of an independent judiciary in Canada, through the guarantee of tenure until age seventy-five122 and a fixed salary,123 those courts possessed an "irreducible core of substantive jurisdiction assured to them."124

[60]Attorney general v. LSBC: was a landmark 1982 supreme court of Canada decision affirming provincial law societies' power to regulate lawyer advertising, even against federal competition law claims, establishing that regulating professional conduct falls under provincial jurisdiction. A lawyer named Jabour was disciplined by the BC law society for advertising his services and prices, challenging their authority under the federal combines investigation act, but the SCC found the society acted within its provincial powers.

[62] As this Court has said, universal access to the courts is an important component of the rule of law: Jonsson at para 10. As the Supreme Court of Canada has said in Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia v British Columbia (Attorney General), 2014 SCC 59 at paras 32 and 40:
Measures that prevent people from coming to the courts to have those issues resolved are at odds with this basic judicial function. The resolution of these disputes and resulting determination of issues of private and public law, viewed in the institutional context of the Canadian justice system, are central to what the superior courts do. Indeed, it is their very book of business. To prevent this business being done strikes at the core of the jurisdiction of the superior courts protected by s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. . .
In the context of legislation which effectively denies people the right to take their cases to court, concerns about the maintenance of the rule of law are not abstract or theoretical. If people cannot challenge government actions in court, individuals cannot hold the state to account — the government will be, or be seen to be, above the law. If people cannot bring legitimate issues to court, the creation and maintenance of positive laws will be hampered, as laws will not be given effect. . .

[63]in Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia v Attorney General of British Columbia, 2014 SCC 59 at paras 24 to 43, (2014) 375 DLR (4th) 599.

[64] That being so, the "doctrine of inherent jurisdiction does not operate without limits"[200] and may be circumscribed.[201] It is "limited by the institutional roles and capacities that emerge out of our constitutional framework and values".[202] One must therefore "take into account the structure of our Constitution, which includes other fundamental principles, such as the rule of law and parliamentary supremacy".[203] In other words, a province may legislate in matters of administration of justice, even if this power affects the core jurisdiction of the superior courts to adjudicate civil disputes. It must, however, do so in a manner that is consistent with that jurisdiction. Trial Lawyers is helpful on this point:

> [36] It follows that the province's power to impose hearing fees cannot deny people the right to have their disputes resolved in the superior courts. To do so would be to impermissibly impinge on s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Rather, the province's powers under s. 92(14) must be exercised in a manner that is consistent with the right of individuals to bring their cases to the superior courts and have them resolved there.[204]

he Supreme Court clearly indicated in Trial Lawyers that the power under section 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867 must be exercised "in a manner that is consistent with the right of individuals to bring their cases to the superior courts and have them resolved there".[232] As explained in Scowby v. Glendinning by La Forest, J., who dissented, but not on this issue:[233]

> In examining the matter, it is obvious that one should have an eye on what the Fathers must have had in mind, and this demands that one look to see if the jurisdiction sought to be vested in a tribunal is one that generally conforms to that exercised by a s. 96 court in 1867. But judicial functions, like other parts of the Constitution, cannot be frozen in an 1867 mold. Adaptations must be permitted to allow the legislatures scope to deal effectively with emerging social problems and concerns, and to develop new techniques of dispute resolution and the expeditious disposition of relatively minor disputes. At the same time, the s. 96 courts must continue their exclusive function of determining basic judicial questions of public order and public policy, or as Estey J. has put it, those "serious and frequently profound difficulties arising in the community" which the Constitution obviously contemplated should be their responsibility; see B.C. Family Relations Act, Re, supra, at p. 107.[234]

[65]Monetary Ceiling (article 35 C.C.P.): The Court applied the three-part test from Re Residential Tenancies Act, 1979 and found that the $85,000 ceiling failed the historical compatibility assessment. Based on updated 1867 values, $85,000 exceeded the constitutional limit that should apply to the Quebec Court's civil jurisdiction. The Court emphasized that the Quebec Superior Court must retain jurisdiction over substantial disputes, a key component of its constitutional role (paras 103-172).

- Judicial Deference: The standards of review applied to appeals of administrative decisions to the Quebec Court respect legislative intent and the constitutional framework. The distinction between appeals and judicial reviews allows for flexibility without infringing on the Superior Court's supervisory powers, as these remain intact. The Court noted that while duplicative reviews may present practical challenges, they do not pose a constitutional issue under section 96 (paras 252-357).
- Legislative Schemes and Precedents: The lack of full privative clauses eliminating the Superior Court's oversight function was decisive. Relying on Supreme Court precedents in Farrah, Crevier, and Grondin, the Court held that the schemes granting appellate jurisdiction to the Quebec Court are compatible with section 96 as long as the supervisory power of Superior Courts remains intact (paras 325-348).

[66] One would have thought the fundamental values undeniably protected by the preamble – open courts – would have been the constitutional tool best suited to evaluate the constitutionality of British Columbia's contested law.

[67] No new element or exceptional circumstance justifies the reopening of the investigations or trials, since the accused voluntarily closed their evidence without reserving their rights despite the legal uncertainties raised by the Supreme Court's decision in St-Onge Lamoureux (paras. 158-160)

[69]This precedent is directly applicable to the current situation. An email that does not comply with the formal requirements of the Rules is a legal nullity. A judicial suggestion is not a legal command. Furthermore, the OCPP Case View confirms that no appeal book, compendium, or record was filed by the Respondents. The documentary record of the defence is entirely vacant. Consequently, it is submitted that no order was "made." The absence of an upload to Case Center rendered it impossible for any member of the judiciary to execute an endorsement upon the record. A member of the judiciary deprived of a record is a judge deprived of a voice.

[70] A textual and purposive approach to s. 32(1) of the Charter does not support the conclusion that a legislative assembly can never be subject to the Charter. By the terms of the Charter itself, the word "legislature" in s. 32(1) cannot conclusively be narrowly defined to ~~cover only those actions for which the legislative body and the Queen's representative are jointly responsible. Further, the tradition of curial~~ deference does not extend to everything a legislative assembly might do, but is firmly attached to certain specific activities -- the privileges -- of legislative assemblies. Without deciding that the legislative assembly is a government actor for all purposes, as a public body it might be capable of impinging on individual freedoms in areas not protected by privilege. The legislative assembly could, therefore, fall within the rationale for regarding such bodies as government actors subject to the Charter. Absent specific Charter language to the contrary, however, the long history of curial deference to the independence of the legislative body, and to the rights necessary to the functioning of that body, cannot be lightly set aside, even conceding that our notions of what is permitted to government actors have been significantly altered by the enactment and entrenchment of the Charter.

[71] Historically, the courts have been careful to respect the independence of the legislative process just as legislators have been careful to protect the independence of the judiciary. In Beauregard v. Canada, 1986 CanLII 24 (SCC), [1986] 2 S.C.R. 56, at p. 72, Dickson C.J. said the following:

The preamble to the Constitution Act, 1867 states that Canada is to have a Constitution "similar in Principle to that of the United Kingdom". Since judicial independence has been for centuries an important principle of the Constitution of the United Kingdom, it is fair to infer that it was transferred to Canada by the constitutional language of the preamble.

There is a clear parallel between the doctrines of independence of the judiciary and of parliamentary privilege as the latter is the means by which the Houses of Parliament protect their independence. In Canada, it is through the exercise of the privileges inherent in all legislative bodies that the provincial Houses of Assembly are able to control their own proceedings and thereby maintain the independence of the legislative process. To incorporate by way of the preamble the broad principle of the fostering of the independence of the legislative process through the exercise of parliamentary privileges is much more palatable than incorporating a specific article of the Bill of Rights of 1689.

[73] The court emphasized that the approval of a draft order is an administrative act necessary for the proper functioning of the court system. Approval signifies agreement that the draft reflects the court's decision, not that the decision itself is correct or unappealable (paras 8-9, 12).Solicitors, as officers of the court, have a duty to approve draft orders unless there are legitimate objections. This duty is owed to the court, opposing counsel, and the client, and it is not negated by the solicitor ceasing to act for the client (paras 10-11, 13).The refusal to approve a draft order without valid grounds contravenes the Rules of Professional Conduct of the Law Society of Upper Canada, particularly rules requiring lawyers to act with courtesy, good faith, and respect for the court process (paras 14-15).The court found that the defendants' solicitors acted in good faith and attempted to persuade their client to act reasonably. However, their belief that they were bound to follow the client's instructions was incorrect. Despite this error, their conduct did not amount to outrageous behavior or incompetence warranting personal cost consequences (paras 16-18).

[75]He criticized the parties for using case management as a means to escalate disputes rather than streamline the process (paras 11-13). Justice Myers highlighted the principles of fairness and justice in civil litigation, referencing the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Hryniak v Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7, which emphasizes the importance of a fair and efficient process (para 15).
[76] Emphasized that counsel must act in good faith during the order settlement process to avoid unnecessary costs and emotional strain on the parties.

[80] When silence constitutes falsity. There are two main classes of case in which reticence may contribute to establish a misrepresentation: (1) where known material qualifications of an absolute statement are omitted; and (2) where the circumstances raise a duty on the representor to state certain matters, if they exist, and where, therefore, the representee is entitled as against the representor to infer their non-existence from the representor's silence as to them and
[81] way of elaboration, Halsbury's notes (at paras. 749-50):

The representor must not merely abstain from positive falsehood; he must not knowingly or willingly omit anything which is required to render completely true that which without it is not completely true. … mere incompleteness is not a factor in misrepresentation; it must always be proved clearly that it rendered what was stated fallacious and false.

Where a person has said something to another, a duty may at once arise to say more, and if he fails to discharge this duty his reticence from that point becomes an implied misrepresentation, although complete silence throughout the transaction would not have amounted to, or have afforded any evidence of, misrepresentation, or even of actionable non-disclosur
[82]This court and the Manitoba Court of Appeal have both confirmed that silence and half-truths can amount to fraudulent misrepresentation and that, where a vendor, who has no duty to speak, decides to break that silence, the doctrine of caveat emptor falls away as a defence mechanism and the vendor must speak truthfully and completely about the matters raised: see Krawchuk v. Scherbak (2011), 106 O.R. (3d) 598, [2011] O.J. No. 2064, 2011 ONCA 352, at para. 77, citing Kaufmann v. Gibson, [2007] O.J. No. 2711, 59 R.P.R. (4th) 293 (S.C.J.); Alevizos v. Nirula, [2003] M.J. No. 433, 2003 MBCA 148, 180 Man. R. (2d) 186, at paras. 18-25. These cases involved situations where vendors completed voluntary vendor disclosure statements in residential real estate transactions.
[83]The leading authority on equitable fraud is the English Court of Appeal's decision in Kitchen v. Royal Air Force Assn., [1958] 2 All E.R. 241, [1958] 1 W.L.R. 563 (C.A.), where Lord Evershed M.R. defined equitable fraud as "conduct which, having regard to some special relationship between the two parties concerned, is an unconscionable thing for the one to do towards the other" (at p. 249 All E.R.).
Although not necessarily an exclusive list, there appear to be certain recognized circumstances where the concept of equitable fraud is engaged. First, conduct amounting to equitable [page764] fraud or fraudulent concealment may prevent a party from relying on a limitation period or other statutory provision that would otherwise exonerate the party from liability: see Guerin v. Canada, 1984 CanLII 25 (SCC), [1984] 2 S.C.R. 335, [1984] S.C.J. No. 45, at p. 356 S.C.R. (per Wilson J.), and at p. 390 S.C.R. (per Estey J.); First City Capital Ltd. v. British Columbia Building Corp., 1989 CanLII 2868 (BC SC), [1989] B.C.J. No. 130, 43 B.L.R. 29 (S.C.); Sun-Rype Products Ltd. v. Archer Daniels Midland Co., [2008] B.C.J. Second, conduct amounting to equitable fraud is one of the preconditions to the availability of the remedy of rectification of a contract on the grounds of unilateral mistake: see Sylvan Lake, at paras. 38-39. Finally, equitable fraud has been used to describe conduct that gives rise to a breach of a fiduciary duty or other equitable obligation: see Canson Enterprises Ltd. v. Boughton & Co., 1991 CanLII 52 (SCC), [1991] 3 S.C.R. 534, [1991] S.C.J. No. 91, at p. 571 S.C.R.
[84] The trial judge emphasized that a trial judge who has not been rendered functus (i.e., before the formal judgment is taken out) has broad discretion to re-open a trial to prevent a miscarriage of justice. The judge rejected the argument that the same strict rules governing appellate courts, including the requirement of reasonable diligence, should apply to trial judges in such circumstances. The primary consideration is avoiding injustice.
On the issue of new evidence, the judge found that the unsworn statements from two witnesses, if accepted, could have significantly affected the trial's outcome. The evidence suggested that the premises were occupied by a new tenant, Beverly Hills Realty Corporation (a Century 21 office), in late 1989. While the tenant admitted that this evidence could have been obtained before the trial, the judge exercised discretion to re-open the trial, noting the potential for the court to have been misled by the landlord's evidence and the importance of avoiding a miscarriage of justice.
However, the judge declined to re-open the trial to consider the tenant's new legal argument regarding the interest rate. The tenant failed to demonstrate that the argument was prima facie meritorious, and there was no explanation for why this issue was not raised earlier. The judge noted that the claim for interest was not based on an agreement to extend payment but rather on damages for late payment, which is not governed by the Interest Act.
The judge directed that the trial be re-opened to hear the new evidence and any reply evidence from the landlord, with costs reserved for the conclusion of the re-opened trial.

- Jurisdiction of Hollingworth J.: Hollingworth J. had jurisdiction to withdraw his June 25, 1987, decision before it was entered. The judge acted judicially in reopening the matter to address concerns of natural justice, as the defendant had not completed its submissions during the initial hearing.
- Jurisdiction of Rosenberg J.: Rosenberg J. had jurisdiction to hear the appeal de novo after the matter was referred to him by Hollingworth J. The additional endorsement by Hollingworth J. on July 24, 1987, did not affect Rosenberg J.'s jurisdiction.
- Leave to Appeal: Leave to appeal was denied as the plaintiff failed to meet the test under Rule 62.02(5). There was no good reason to believe the decisions of Hollingworth J. or Rosenberg J. were wrong, nor were there conflicting decisions relevant to the issues in this case.

[87]The motion judge's reasons for dismissing the motion were inadequate, as they failed to address the proposed new evidence or explain why it would not reasonably affect the outcome. The appellant met the test for re-opening a trial under rule 59.06(2)(a) and relevant case law, including Tsaoussis v. Baetz and Sagaz Industries Canada Inc.. The new evidence was not available at the time of the trial, was cogent, and could undermine the respondents' credibility while supporting the appellant's claims. Additionally, there was no undue delay or prejudice to the respondents in re-opening the trial. The matter was remitted to the trial judge to determine the admissibility and impact of the new evidence (paras 14-22)
[88]Yatar v. TD Insurance Meloche Monnex, the SCC found the following in relation to what is applicable herein, wherein the SCC also emphasized that judicial review plays an important role in upholding the rule of law and ensuring that public authorities – including LAT adjudicators – are subject to the supervisory power of the superior courts. In addition, the SCC reiterated the constitutional nature of the right to seek judicial review. Citing Mr. Paul Daly, the SCC held that it cannot be the case that a court has discretion to not hear a judicial review application, as this would allow the court's "perception of the quality and quantity of internal reconsiderations … to trump [a] constitutional principle."
[89]The Licence Appeal Tribunal Act, 1999 does not contain any privative clause that seeks to bar or otherwise restrict judicial review. The SCC held that both the Divisional Court and Court of Appeal erred in their application of Strickland to this case. Properly applied, the Strickland framework indicated that the court should exercise its discretion to grant relief. The Court of Appeal was mistaken when it held that the statutory appeal right reflected legislative intent to restrict judicial review. The fact that the legislature provided for a statutory right of appeal on questions of law can only demonstrate legislative intention to subject questions of law arising from an LAT adjudicator's decision to correctness review.

Before the plaintiff even commenced her tort action, State Farm would therefore have been in possession of a significant body of highly confidential information to which the plaintiff had a privacy interest, and which State Farm was obliged as a fiduciary to maintain confidential." (paragraph 45 as per Justice Edwards for a three judge unanimous bench); Apart from its fiduciary obligation, the statutory accident benefit insurer also has an obligation to ensure that the information supplied by its insured is kept private. While decided in the context of a claim arising out of the unauthorized access by a bank employee to the banking records of a customer, the decision of the Court of Appeal in Jones v. Tsige, 2012 ONCA 32 (CanLII), [2012] O.J. No. 148, is a significant advancement in the law insofar as whether this court should follow the decision of the Divisional Court in Klingbeil.

part from its fiduciary obligation, Transamerica also had an obligation to ensure that the information supplied by its insured was kept private. Justice Marlyss Edwards, speaking for the Divisional Court, made this point in *Dervisholli v. The respondent submits that de Rosa supports its position that the appropriate remedy for improper information sharing is not removal of counsel, but an order that the parties comply with the prescribed process for the exchange of documents.(nota bene: distinction herein is that there have been two insurers (SNIC and TDGIC) publicly in the LAT Proceeding. There is now no dispute that the fax number of 416.774.3120 was NOT TDGIC's fax number and NOT SNIC's fax number. Therefore, there is, at the very least, one other insurer involved. The only thing that would make TD Claim #3 more tragically comical, albeit to the Appellant's prejudice, was if the 905 Fax Number was Primmum's. If that was the case, then the Appellant would have taken on four insurance companies in a two year span in SABS related matter.

[103]These are the categories set out in Dunsmuir, minus true questions of jurisdiction: "respect for the rule of law requires courts to apply the standard of correctness for certain types of legal questions: constitutional questions, general questions of law of central importance to the legal system as a whole and questions regarding the jurisdictional boundaries between two or more administrative bodies" (at para. 53). The majority's conception of the rule of law, which has been somewhat amorphous and difficult to analytically target but in more general terms it is engaged in situations where "consistency" and thus "a final, determinate answer" to a general legal question of a non-trivial nature is necessary (at para. 53; SEE: Applicant's Factum).

[104]was a monumental change. As Abella and Karakatsanis JJ noted in their concurring yet separate reasons for judgment (the "Vavilov Concurring Reasons") , "the majority's reasons strip away deference from hundreds of administrative actors subject to statutory rights of appeal" (at para. 199).

[119]CHUBB INSURANCE CO. OF CANADA V. ZURICH INSURANCE COMPANY, 2024 ONSC 2929 ("ZURICH 2024")

As described in the prevailing appellate decisions, the purpose of this regulation was to prevent SABS claims, including vital treatments and income benefits, from being delayed while insurers fought over priority under s. 268(2) of the Insurance Act. In adopting para. 34 of Juriansz J.A.'s dissent, the Supreme Court also accepted that there would have been no nexus if Chubb did not provide automobile insurance in Ontario. Because it did write such policies, it qualified as an 'insurer' who first received the OCF-1, albeit mistakenly.
I observe, in passing, that the sanctions described in the case law cited by the arbitrator, including those at the Court of Appeal, are judge-made sanctions. As a matter of principle, there is no difference between an insurer's failure to pay under s. 2 and a failure under any provision of the SABS, which was in this case O. Reg. 403/96. [paragraph 54]

[120]Application of Res Judicata: The doctrine of res judicata applies in bankruptcy proceedings. The court found that the mitigation/set-off issue had been fully argued and decided in the Singapore proceedings. The appellants, as creditors, were considered privies of EnerNorth and were bound by the prior judgment (paras 50-64).

[121]The court found that the application for judicial review of the notice of proposal was premature because the applicants had already initiated a hearing before the FST, which provided a full trial de novo with robust procedural protections. The tribunal was the appropriate forum to address the allegations in the notice of proposal, and judicial intervention was unwarranted under the principles established in Volochay v. College of Massage Therapists of Ontario (paras 7-8, 10-15, 21-22).

The court distinguished the applicants' claims regarding the FSRA's publication decisions, noting that these issues might not fall within the tribunal's jurisdiction. While the FSRA's publication guidelines were not binding, the court left open the possibility that the applicants could challenge the regulator's publication decisions if they impaired legal rights or caused reputational harm. The court emphasized that these claims were not plainly unreviewable and should proceed to a panel for further consideration (paras 23-29)

[122]In my view, the four preconditions for res judicata are satisfied. The parties are the same in both proceedings. The prior claim was within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. The decision in the first application was based on the merits. The Tribunal reviewed the submissions and evidence and found that the applicant was not entitled to the IRB or found that the applicant was not entitled to IRBs for the period of January 14, 2020 to date and ongoing. Moreover, he was not entitled to payment for the November 9, 2019 accounting report. The first decision was a final decision because he did not file a reconsideration request and nor did he appeal the decision."

[126] During initial triage of the appeal in this court, the court directed that the following inquiry be made of the appellant:

Justice Corbett directs me to advise you as follows:

This court will generally refuse to hear an appeal of an interlocutory ruling of the LAT on the basis of prematurity. While exceptions can be made to this principle, it does not appear that there are any bases for making an exception in this case. The appellant is asked to explain why this appeal should be permitted to proceed in light of the principle of prematurity.
[127]At paragraphs four to six in Mansuri, before the ONSC Divisional Court in 2023, with The Honourable Justice Lococo writing for the unanimous Divisional Court that are of great import in the analysis herein [emphasis is the Applicant's]:

> "[4] The Applicants [Mansuri brothers] argue that the court should exercise its jurisdiction upon judicial review and determine on the merits that the Tribunal erred in law in finding that there was no breach of privacy or confidentiality and no conflict of interest.
> [5] DOMINION DISPUTES the merits of the application but, together with the Tribunal, raises the issue of prematurity. The respondents argue that unless there are exceptional circumstances, the Divisional Court should decline to consider an application for judicial review of the Tribunal's interlocutory decision until the underlying Tribunal applications are completed. The respondents submit that there are no exceptional circumstances nor is it a "rare case" that would warrant the court's intervention.
> [6] Following oral submissions on the issue of prematurity, the parties were advised at the application hearing that the application was being dismissed, with written reasons to follow. These Reasons for Judgment explain the court's decision to dismiss the judicial review application as premature, without deciding the merits of the Applicants' challenge to the Initial Decision."

It is trite that the orders made or declined to be decided by VC Morrissette were final orders and final decisions as she refused to add a party, refused to add cause of actions, and refused to allow for the amendments of pleadings. No such relief was sought or dismissed in Mansuri v Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company, 2022 CanLII 138547 (ON LAT). Put another way, the Mansuri brothers did not seek to add another insurance company to their tribunal proceeding on the basis that Dominion Insurance Company was not the First Insurer. The Mansuri brothers primary complaint was that which the Applicant disagrees with them and their counsel, there was allegedly improper information sharing between their claims and not between Dominion Insurance Company of Canada and other insurance companies.
[128]at the Divisional Court also stands for the legal precedent that when an interlocutory decision is at issue, the Applicant has the burden to demonstrate why there are exceptional circumstances. However, when a final decision is at issue, the respondent raising prematurity has the burden. Hence, it is the Tribunal's sole burden to overcome.
[129]2022, the Tribunal (AABS) released its seminal decision in Mansuri v Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company, 2022 CanLII 138547 ["Mansuri"]: per Vice Chair McGee,

[130] and "what was not said" ; and Anti-Fragmentation Doctrine relates to preliminary motions and decisions
Right to bring a motion where record of proceeding filed but underinclusive; and importance of bringing a motion to be able to raise the issue

[131][74] Section 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1 provides: Record to be filed in court When notice of an application for judicial review of a decision made in the exercise or purported exercise of a statutory power of decision has been served on the person making the decision, such person shall forthwith file in the court for use on the application the record of the proceedings in which the decision was made.
[75] Ergo, pursuant to s. 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, it was available to the applicant to bring a motion seeking production of documents it alleges were relied on by the decision-maker but are not contained in the record: see, for example K.D. v. Peel Children's Aid Society, 2017 ONSC 7392 (Div. Ct.) at paras. 16-17). The applicant failed to do so. As a result, it is precluded from raising this issue for the first time on judicial review [nota bene: see "matters not adjudicated"].

[73] Although not raised in the Notice of Application, the applicant now argues that the record filed by the decision-maker was underinclusive.
[74] Section 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1 provides:
Record to be filed in court
When notice of an application for judicial review of a decision made in the exercise or purported exercise of a statutory power of decision has been served on the person making the decision, such person shall forthwith file in the court for use on the application the record of the proceedings in which the decision was made.

[75] Ergo, pursuant to s. 10 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, it was available to the applicant to bring a motion seeking production of documents it alleges were relied on by the decision-maker but are not contained in the record: see, for example K.D. v. Peel Children's Aid Society, 2017 ONSC 7392 (Div. Ct.) at paras. 16-17). The applicant failed to do so. As a result, it is precluded from raising this issue for the first time on judicial review.
[76] The applicant's argument in this regard therefore fails.

[133] Reasonable Apprehension of Bias existed because the motions judge, Molly J was engaged in ongoing litigation against the Crown
[134][31] As stated by Gillese J. (as she then was) in Urquhart v. Allen Estate, [1999] O.J. No. 4816 (Ont. S.C.), at para. 27:

> When counsel appears as a witness on a contentious matter, it causes two problems. First, it may result in a conflict of interest between counsel and his client. That conflict may be waived by the client …. The second problem relates to the administration of justice. The dual roles serve to create a conflict between counsel's obligations of objectivity and detachment, which are owed to the court, and his obligations to his client to present evidence in as favourable a light as possible. This is a conflict that cannot be waived by the client as the conflict is between counsel and the court/justice system.
> [32] The Law Society of Ontario Rules of Professional Conduct similarly state that a lawyer who appears as advocate shall not testify or submit their own affidavit evidence before the tribunal unless permitted to do so or on a purely formal or uncontroverted matter: s. 5.2-1.
> [33] While the courts are not bound by the codes of conduct applicable to lawyers, the Supreme Court of Canada stated in MacDonald Estate, at p. 1246, that "an expression of a professional standard in a code of ethics relating to a matter before the court should be considered an important statement of public policy."
> [34] In Bose v. Bangiya Parishad Toronto, 2018 ONSC 7639, at para. 98, Perell J. confirmed that a lawyer who is a material witness should not be permitted to continue acting as counsel, even if they do not intend to testify in the case.

[135]Heegsma, again referenced in the NOM #2 Factum, involved the OHRC appealing the decision of the ONSC to the ONCA that refused it being added as an intervenor in the underlying claim against the City of Hamilton by a variety of plaintiffs who were residing in encampments and removed therefrom pursuant to by-laws passed by the municipality. The OHRC was seeking to be added on its own, without ever having the proverbial litigation finger pointed at it like a TDHA in the context of a highly regulated industry of automotive insurance, as a party or friend of the court to provide insight into human rights issues of those living in encampments. It was a noble cause and use of resources by the OHRC but that involved Rule 13.02 of the Civil *Rule*s at the court level at first instance. There is no precedent to be taken from Heegsma to be applied to this JRPA Proceeding.

[139]he Supreme Court outlined the three requirements for issue estoppel: (i) The same question has been decided; (ii) the decision said to give rise to the estoppel is final; and (iii) the parties to the decision and privies were the same persons as the parties to the proceeding in which the estoppel is raised or their privies.
[140]Issue estoppel prevents re-litigation of the material facts that the cause of action in the prior action embraces: Danyluk, a"Cause of action" means: a set of facts that gives an individual the right to seek a court's help against another.

[142] It is important to note that these three cases were applications for judicial review from decisions of the Financial Services Commission of Ontario ("FSCO"), not appeals to the Divisional Court. Prior to April 1, 2016, automobile accident benefit disputes were adjudicated at FSCO, where there was no statutory right of appeal, only judicial review. These judicial reviews of FSCO decisions do not address or assist in determining whether an interlocutory decision may be appealed under s. 11(1) of the LAT Act. Only Certas discusses the doctrine of prematurity, doing so in the context of judicial review of an interlocutory decision."

[143]Elkins v. Van Wissen, 2023 ONCA 789 (CanLII), <https://canlii.ca/t/k1dgk ["Elkins"]

[144](see: the ONCA found that the Board (LTB) reasons made no mention of the second issue nor the evidence relating to it. Clearly, appellate review was prevented on that issue and, for that reason alone, the Board erred in law. ONCA went further in Elkins finding the following: "[69] In addition, however, the Board reasons on the first issue are so deficient as to constitute legal error".

[145] [103] The interplay between privacy and public access to judicial records is best summed up by The Attorney General of Nova Scotia and Ernest Harold Grainger v. Linden MacIntyre, et al, 1982 CanLII 14 (SCC), [1982] 1 S.C.R. 175 where Dickson J. stated at pp. 185-187:

Let me deal first with the 'privacy' argument. This is not the first occasion on which such an argument has been tested in the courts. Many times it has been urged that the 'privacy' of litigants requires that the public be excluded from court proceedings. It is now well established, however, that covertness is the exception and openness the rule. Public confidence in the integrity of the court system and understanding of the administration of justice are thereby fostered. As a general rule the sensibilities of the individuals involved are no basis for exclusion of the public from judicial proceedings. The following comments of Laurence J. in R. v. Wright, 8 T.R. 293, are apposite and were cited with approval by Duff J. in Gazette Printing Co. v. Shallow (1909), 1909 CanLII 46 (SCC), 41 S.C.R. 339 at p. 359:

Though the publication of such proceedings may be to the disadvantage of the particular individual concerned, yet it is of vast importance to the public that the proceedings of courts of justice should be universally known. The general advantage to the country in having these proceedings made public more than counterbalances the inconveniences to the private persons whose conduct may be the subject of such proceedings.

The leading case is the decision of the House of Lords in Scott v. Scott, [1913] A.C. 417. In the later case of McPherson v. McPherson, 1935 CanLII 276 (UK JCPC), [1936] A.C. 177, at p. 200, Lord Blanesburgh, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, referred to "publicity" as the "authentic hall-mark of judicial as distinct from administrative procedure".

... The cases mentioned, however, and many others which could be cited, establish the broad principle of "openness" in judicial proceedings, whatever their nature, and in the exercise of judicial powers. ...

... The authorities have held that subject to a few well-recognized exceptions, as in the case of infants, mentally disordered persons or secret processes, all judicial proceedings must be held in public. The editor of Halsbury's 4th Edition states the rule in these terms:

In general, all cases, both civil and criminal, must be heard in open court, but in certain exceptional cases, where the administration of justice would be rendered impractical by the presence of the public, the court may sit in camera [Vol. 10, para. 705, at p. 316].

At every stage the rule should be one of public accessibility and concomitant judicial accountability ...

In my view, curtailment of public accessibility can only be justified where there is present the need to protect social values of superordinate importance. ...

[146]the Supreme Court of Canada provided the following examples (at paragraph 17): ...it is often necessary in the interests of achieving trial efficiency for a trial judge to announce promptly the disposition on an evidentiary ruling or on a motion, with reasons to follow at a later date. In Teskey, the Supreme Court held that a trial judge "is not precluded from announcing a verdict with 'reasons to follow'" (at paragraph 16).

[147]AAAR Doctrine, Prematurity Doctrine, Rule Against Interlocutory Review, and Exhaustion Doctrine (which are effectively the same doctrine because a final decision, determination or order). If the potential party that is an Applicant avers, with supporting evidence, is subject to a cause of action is not added by decision of an administrative decision maker who becomes functus officio[147], and reconsideration fails, then he or she has exhausted any available, alternate and adequate remedies [AAAR] *before the Tribunal.

[148]There is no dispute any of the evidence on a general level but also specifically under this sub-heading that TDHA, on a balance of probabilities had and has a direct OR substantial interest in the outcome of the LAT Appeal (SEE: COMPENDIUM FEB 11 2025, Tab 6). However, the adding of the party of TDHA as the First Insurer, along with the concomitant sought orders pursuant to the declaratory relief along the addition of those "causes of action" against "another" were all final orders and decisions that squarely invoke the Constitution of Canada. "Causes of Action" is defined as: "a fact or facts that enable a person to bring an action against another". As SNIC and TDGIC were not "one and the same", neither are SNIC and TDHA.

[149]It is not the "can" in relation to participation but the "content" of the participatio

[150]Estey J. articulated the other [competing interest being a fully informed adjudication on the issues] significant consideration, namely the importance of maintaining tribunal impartiality. This obviously matters to the parties to the decision, particularly if the application results in the matter being remitted to the tribunal. Moreover, it is also important to the public's confidence in the administration of justice generally. [151]

where the tribunal serves a defined and specialized community, there may be a risk that full- fledged participation by a tribunal as an adversary in a judicial review proceeding will undermine future confidence in its objectivity (cited in Goodis in paragraph 38)

[151]Ontario (Energy Board) v. Ontario Power Generation Inc., 2015 SCC 44 (CanLII), [2015] 3 SCR 147, at para 50, <https://canlii.ca/t/glb07#par50>, retrieved on 2024-12-25

[152]If an administrative tribunal seeks to make submissions on a judicial review of its decision, it [should] pay careful attention to the tone with which it does so. Although this is not a discrete basis upon which its standing might be limited, there is no doubt that the tone of the proposed submissions provides the background for the determination of that issue. A tribunal that seeks to resist a judicial review application will be of assistance to the court to the degree its submissions are characterized by the helpful elucidation of the issues, informed by its specialized position, rather than by the aggressive partisanship of an adversary." [para. 61]

[153]This means that lawyers are part of the legal system and have a role in the administration of justice. The Applicant forcefully notes the overlap between the jurisdiction of this court to remove counsel to the Tribunal (or disregard its arguments pursuant to Taylor v. HR Solutions at paragraph 20) and the role of a lawyer, as an officer of the court in the administration of justice.

[154] [18] Section 9(2) of the JRPA does not affect this court's supervisory jurisdiction. It does not shield administrative tribunals such as the Tribunal from curial scrutiny entirely; rather, s. 9(2) permits tribunals to bring relevant matters to the attention of the court.

[19] Allowing an administrative tribunal such as the Tribunal to participate on an application for judicial review does not give rise to "unjust opposition" as Mr. Taylor contends. To the contrary, the presence of the administrative tribunal as a party may help to ensure that the court hears both sides of a dispute where there is no other well-informed party standing in opposition to the party challenging the tribunal decision: Ontario (Energy Board) v. Ontario Power Generation Inc., 2015 SCC 44, at para. 54.

[20] Once a tribunal is a party, the court still has discretion as to the scope of participation to be accorded to the tribunal during the hearing. This involves balancing the need for fully informed adjudication against the importance of maintaining tribunal impartiality: Hydro Ottawa v. Ontario (Workplace Safety and Insurance Appeals Tribunal), 2019 ONSC 4898 (Div. Ct.), at para. 6. This court is under no obligation to accept the submissions of a tribunal that appears before it.

[155]LAT represents that is not only adjudicative but "quasi-judicial" so that militates against it participating at all. Impartiality of said Tribunal (like LAT that is quasi-judicial) weights against them in the heaviest of weights in terms of any standing – impartiality is not just actual but perceived. This factor is measured against administrative tribunal impartiality (or lack thereof). For tribunals tasked with this latter responsibility, "the importance of fairness, real and perceived, weighs more heavily" against tribunal standing:

[156]"[18] The Keeprite Standard for the admission of affidavit evidence on judicial review has been applied in numerous decisions involving labour boards and labour arbitrators. These cases have held that affidavit evidence can be admitted either to show an absence of evidence on an essential point or to disclose a breach of natural justice that cannot be proven by a mere reference to the record."

[157]In relation to the damages and costs elements along with that of the avoidance of double collection, the case of , aff'd at the BCCA:

[384] As a general rule, the type of misconduct that justifies an award of special costs will relate to the course of the litigation and not to pre-litigation misconduct. This is so because reprehensible pre-litigation misconduct giving rise to a cause of action is typically addressed by an award of punitive damages. In some cases, however, reprehensible misconduct may have originated prior to litigation but continued throughout the litigation process. In these circumstances, special costs may be ordered in addition to punitive damages without double punishment being imposed: Golden Capital Sec. Ltd. at ¶ 161-176.

[385] Perjury is reprehensible misconduct, as is fraud and conspiracy. Such misconduct cannot be condoned by the court. On the contrary, it should be denounced and deterred, both specifically and generally. For these reasons, acts of perjury, fraud and conspiracy often attract an award of special costs. Such awards may be made on the basis of full indemnity: Fullerton v. Matsqui (District), [1992] B.C.J. No. 2969 (C.A.) at ¶ 17; Insurance Corporation of British Columbia v. Phung, 2003 BCSC 1619 (CanLII) at ¶ 8 & 11.

[158] Since the Society did not appear as a party, the costs awarded against it must be taken to be the equivalent of an award for the tort of maintenance. A person must intervene "officiously or improperly" to be liable for the tort of maintenance. Provision of financial assistance to a litigant by a non-party will not always constitute maintenance. Funding by a relative or out of charity must be distinguished from cases where a person wilfully and improperly stirs up litigation and strife. The society's support was "out of charity and religious sympathy" and so did not constitute maintenance. It did not put forward respondent in an attempt to escape liability for costs. Its interest in the constitutional issue was insufficient to distinguish it from interveners who appear on constitutional cases and who have never been liable for costs.

The first territories added to the Union were Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory, (subsequently designated the Northwest Territories), which were admitted pursuant to section 146 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Rupert's Land Act, 1868, 31-32 Vict., c. 105 (U.K.), by the Rupert's Land and North-Western Territory Order of June 23, 1870, effective July 15, 1870. Prior to the admission of those territories, the Parliament of Canada enacted An Act for the temporary Government of Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory when united with Canada (32-33 Vict., c. 3), and the Manitoba Act, 1870, (33 Vict., c. 3), which provided for the formation of the Province of Manitoba.

Meanwhile, all remaining British possessions and territories in North America and the islands adjacent thereto, except the colony of Newfoundland and its dependencies, were admitted into the Canadian Confederation by the Adjacent Territories Order, dated July 31, 1880.

> 4. On any such Re-adjustment the Number of Members for a Province shall not be reduced unless the Proportion which the Number of the Population of the Province bore to the Number of the aggregate Population of Canada at the then last preceding Re-adjustment of the Number of Members for the Province is ascertained at the then latest Census to be diminished by One Twentieth Part or upwards:
> 5. Such Re-adjustment shall not take effect until the Termination of the then existing Parliament.

The section was re-enacted by the British North America Act, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (U.K.), which Act was also repealed by the Constitution Act, 1982, to read as follows:

51(1) The number of members of the House of Commons shall be two hundred and fifty-five and the representation of the provinces therein shall forthwith upon the coming into force of this section and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

1. Subject as hereinafter provided, there shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members computed by dividing the total population of the provinces by two hundred and fifty-four and by dividing the population of each province by the quotient so obtained, disregarding, except as hereinafter in this section provided, the remainder, if any, after the said process of division.

2. If the total number of members assigned to all the provinces pursuant to rule one is less than two hundred and fifty-four, additional members shall be assigned to the provinces (one to a province) having remainders in the computation under rule one commencing with the province having the largest remainder and continuing with the other provinces in the order of the magnitude of their respective remainders until the total number of members assigned is two hundred and fifty-four.

3. Notwithstanding anything in this section, if upon completion of a computation under rules one and two, the number of members to be assigned to a province is less than the number of senators representing the said province, rules one and two shall cease to apply in respect of the said province, and there shall be assigned to the said province a number of members equal to the said number of senators.

4. In the event that rules one and two cease to apply in respect of a province then, for the purpose of computing the number of members to be assigned to the provinces in respect of which rules one and two continue to apply, the total population of the provinces shall be reduced by the number of the population of the province in respect of which rules one and two have ceased to apply and the number two hundred and fifty-four shall be reduced by the number of members assigned to such province pursuant to rule three.

5. Such readjustment shall not take effect until the termination of the then existing Parliament.

(2) The Yukon Territory as constituted by Chapter forty-one of the Statutes of Canada, 1901, together with any Part of Canada not comprised within a province which may from time to time be included therein by the Parliament of Canada for the purposes of representation in Parliament, shall be entitled to one member.

The section was re-enacted as follows by the British North America Act, 1952, S.C. 1952, c. 15 (which Act was also repealed by the Constitution Act, 1982):

51(1) Subject as hereinafter provided, the number of members of the House of Commons shall be two hundred and sixty-three and the representation of the provinces therein shall forthwith upon the coming into force of this section and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

1. There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members computed by dividing the total population of the provinces by two hundred and sixty-one and by dividing the population of each province by the quotient so obtained, disregarding, except as hereinafter in this section provided, the remainder, if any, after the said process of division.

2. If the total number of members assigned to all the provinces pursuant to rule one is less than two hundred and sixty-one, additional members shall be assigned to the provinces (one to a province) having remainders in the computation under rule one commencing with the province having the largest remainder and continuing with the other provinces in the order of the magnitude of their respective remainders until the total number of members assigned is two hundred and sixty-one.

3. Notwithstanding anything in this section, if upon completion of a computation under rules one and two the number of members to be assigned to a province is less than the number of senators representing the said province, rules one and two shall cease to apply in respect of the said province, and there shall be assigned to the said province a number of members equal to the said number of senators.

4. In the event that rules one and two cease to apply in respect of a province then, for the purposes of computing the number of members to be assigned to the provinces in respect of which rules one and two continue to apply, the total population of the provinces shall be reduced by the number of the population of the province in respect of which rules one and two have ceased to apply and the number two hundred and sixty-one shall be reduced by the number of members assigned to such province pursuant to rule three.

5. On any such readjustment the number of members for any province shall not be reduced by more than fifteen per cent below the representation to which such province was entitled under rules one to four of this subsection at the last preceding readjustment of the representation of that province, and there shall be no reduction in the representation of any province as a result of which that province would have a smaller number of members than any other province that according to the results of the then last decennial census did not have a larger population; but for the purposes of any subsequent readjustment of representation under this section any increase in the number of members of the House of Commons resulting from the application of this rule shall not be included in the divisor mentioned in rules one to four of this subsection.

6. Such readjustment shall not take effect until the termination of the then existing Parliament.

(2) The Yukon Territory as constituted by chapter forty-one of the statutes of Canada, 1901, shall be entitled to one member, and such other part of Canada not comprised within a province as may from time to time be defined by the Parliament of Canada shall be entitled to one member.

Subsection 51(1) was re-enacted by the Constitution Act, 1974, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 13, to read as follows:

51(1) The number of members of the House of Commons and the representation of the provinces therein shall upon the coming into force of this subsection and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following Rules:

1. There shall be assigned to Quebec seventy-five members in the readjustment following the completion of the decennial census taken in the year 1971, and thereafter four additional members in each subsequent readjustment.

2. Subject to Rules 5(2) and (3), there shall be assigned to a large province a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing the population of the large province by the electoral quotient of Quebec.

3. Subject to Rules 5(2) and (3), there shall be assigned to a small province a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing

(a) the sum of the populations, determined according to the results of the penultimate decennial census, of the provinces (other than Quebec) having populations of less than one and a half million, determined according to the results of that census, by the sum of the numbers of members assigned to those provinces in the readjustment following the completion of that census; and

(b) the population of the small province by the quotient obtained under paragraph (a).

4. Subject to Rules 5(1)(a), (2) and (3), there shall be assigned to an intermediate province a number of members equal to the number obtained

(a) by dividing the sum of the populations of the provinces (other than Quebec) having populations of less than one and a half million by the sum of the number of members assigned to those provinces under any of Rules 3, 5(1)(b), (2) and (3);

(b) by dividing the population of the intermediate province by the quotient obtained under paragraph (a); and

(c) by adding to the number of members assigned to the intermediate province in the readjustment following the completion of the penultimate decennial census one-half of the difference resulting from the subtraction of that number from the quotient obtained under paragraph (b).

5.(1) On any readjustment,

(a) if no province (other than Quebec) has a population of less than one and a half million, Rule 4 shall not be applied and, subject to Rules 5(2) and (3), there shall be assigned to an intermediate province a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing

(i) the sum of the populations, determined according to the results of the penultimate decennial census, of the provinces, (other than Quebec) having populations of not less than one and a half million and not more than two and a half million, determined according to the results of that census, by the sum of the numbers of members assigned to those provinces in the readjustment following the completion of that census, and

(ii) the population of the intermediate province by the quotient obtained under subparagraph (i);

(b) if a province (other than Quebec) having a population of

(i) less than one and a half million, or

(ii) not less than one and a half million and not more than two and a half million does not have a population greater than its population determined according to the results of the penultimate decennial census, it shall, subject to Rules 5(2) and (3), be assigned the number of members assigned to it in the readjustment following the completion of that census.

(2) On any readjustment,

(a) if, under any of Rules 2 to 5(1), the number of members to be assigned to a province (in this paragraph referred to as “the first province”) is smaller than the number of members to be assigned to any other province not having a population greater than that of the first province, those Rules shall not be applied to the first province and it shall be assigned a number of members equal to the largest number of members to be assigned to any other province not having a population greater than that of the first province;

(b) if, under any of Rules 2 to 5(1)(a), the number of members to be assigned to a province is smaller than the number of members assigned to it in the readjustment following the completion of the penultimate decennial

census, those Rules shall not be applied to it and it shall be assigned the latter number of members;

(c) if both paragraphs (a) and (b) apply to a province, it shall be assigned a number of members equal to the greater of the numbers produced under those paragraphs.

(3) On any readjustment,

(a) if the electoral quotient of a province (in this paragraph referred to as "the first province") obtained by dividing its population by the number of members to be assigned to it under any of Rules 2 to 5(2) is greater than the electoral quotient of Quebec, those Rules shall not be applied to the first province and it shall be assigned a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing its population by the electoral quotient of Quebec;

(b) if, as a result of the application of Rule 6(2)(a), the number of members assigned to a province under paragraph (a) equals the number of members to be assigned to it under any of Rules 2 to 5(2), it shall be assigned that number of members and paragraph (a) shall cease to apply to that province.

6. (1) In these Rules, electoral quotient means, in respect of a province, the quotient obtained by dividing its population, determined according to the results of the then most recent decennial census, by the number of members to be assigned to it under any of Rules 1 to 5(3) in the readjustment following the completion of that census;

intermediate province means a province (other than Quebec) having a population greater than its population determined according to the results of the penultimate decennial census but not more than two and a half million and not less than one and a half million;

large province means a province (other than Quebec) having a population greater than two and a half million;

penultimate decennial census means the decennial census that preceded the then most recent decennial census;

population means, except where otherwise specified, the population determined according to the results of the then most recent decennial census;

small province means a province (other than Quebec) having a population greater than its population determined according to the results of the penultimate decennial census and less than one and half million.

(2) For the purposes of these Rules,

(a) if any fraction less than one remains upon completion of the final calculation that produces the number of members to be assigned to a province, that number of members shall equal the number so produced disregarding the fraction;

(b) if more than one readjustment follows the completion of a decennial census, the most recent of those readjustments shall, upon taking effect, be deemed to be the only readjustment following the completion of that census;

(c) a readjustment shall not take effect until the termination of the then existing Parliament.

Subsection 51(1) was re-enacted by the Constitution Act, 1985 (Representation), S.C. 1986, c. 8, Part I, as follows:

51(1) The number of members of the House of Commons and the representation of the provinces therein shall, on the coming into force of this subsection and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census, be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

1. There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing the total population of the provinces by two hundred and seventy-nine and by dividing the population of each province by the quotient so obtained, counting any remainder in excess of 0.50 as one after the said process of division.

2. If the total number of members that would be assigned to a province by the application of rule 1 is less than the total number assigned to that province on the date of coming into force of this subsection, there shall be added to the number of members so assigned such number of members as will result in the province having the same number of members as were assigned on that date.

Subsection 51(1) was re-enacted by the Fair Representation Act, S.C. 2011, c. 26, s. 2, as follows:

51(1) The number of members of the House of Commons and the representation of the provinces therein shall, on the completion of each decennial census, be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada provides from time to time, subject and according to the following rules:

1. There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing the population of the province by the electoral quotient and rounding up any fractional remainder to one.

2. If the number of members assigned to a province by the application of rule 1 and section 51A is less than the total number assigned to that province on the date of the coming into force of the Constitution Act, 1985 (Representation), there shall be added to the number of members so assigned such number of members as will result in the province having the same number of members as were assigned on that date.

3. After the application of rules 1 and 2 and section 51A, there shall, in respect of each province that meets the condition set out in rule 4, be added, if necessary, a number of members such that, on the completion of the readjustment, the number obtained by dividing the number of members assigned to that province by the total number of members assigned to all the provinces is as close as possible to, without being below, the number obtained by dividing the population of that province by the total population of all the provinces.

4. Rule 3 applies to a province if, on the completion of the preceding readjustment, the number obtained by dividing the number of members assigned to that province by the total number of members assigned to all the provinces was equal to or greater than the number obtained by dividing the population of that province by the total population of all the provinces, the population of each province being its population as at July 1 of the year of the decennial census that preceded that readjustment according to the estimates prepared for the purpose of that readjustment.

5. Unless the context indicates otherwise, in these rules, the population of a province is the estimate of its population as at July 1 of the year of the most recent decennial census.

6. In these rules, electoral quotient means

(a) 111,166, in relation to the readjustment following the completion of the 2011 decennial census, and

(b) in relation to the readjustment following the completion of any subsequent decennial census, the number obtained by multiplying the electoral quotient that was applied in the preceding readjustment by the number that is the average of the numbers obtained by dividing the population of each province by the population of the province as at July 1 of the year of the preceding decennial census according to the estimates prepared for the purpose of the preceding readjustment, and rounding up any fractional remainder of that multiplication to one.

(1.1) For the purpose of the rules in subsection (1), there is required to be prepared an estimate of the population of Canada and of each province as at July 1, 2001 and July 1, 2011 — and, in each year following the 2011 decennial census in which a decennial census is taken, as at July 1 of that year — by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada provides from time to time.

An alternative was provided for Newfoundland by Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada (confirmed by the Newfoundland Act, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.)). Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada, set out in the penultimate paragraph of this note, was amended by the Constitution Amendment, 1998 (Newfoundland Act), (see SI/98-25) and the Constitution Amendment, 2001 (Newfoundland and Labrador) (see SI/2001-117), and now reads as follows:

17 (1) In lieu of section ninety-three of the Constitution Act, 1867, this term shall apply in respect of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

(2) In and for the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, the Legislature shall have exclusive authority to make laws in relation to education, but shall provide for courses in religion that are not specific to a religious denomination.

(3) Religious observances shall be permitted in a school where requested by parents.

Prior to the Constitution Amendment, 1998 (Newfoundland Act), Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada had been amended by the*Constitution Amendment, 1997 (Newfoundland Act*) (see SI/97-55) to read as follows:

17 In lieu of section ninety-three of the Constitution Act, 1867, the following shall apply in respect of the Province of Newfoundland:

In and for the Province of Newfoundland, the Legislature shall have exclusive authority to make laws in relation to education but

(a) except as provided in paragraphs (b) and (c), schools established, maintained and operated with public funds shall be denominational schools, and any class of persons having rights under this Term as it read on January 1, 1995 shall continue to have the right to provide for religious education, activities and observances for the children of that class in those schools, and the group of classes that formed one integrated school system by agreement in 1969 may exercise the same rights under this Term as a single class of persons;

(b) subject to provincial legislation that is uniformly applicable to all schools specifying conditions for the establishment or continued operation of schools,

(i) any class of persons referred to in paragraph (a) shall have the right to have a publicly funded denominational school established, maintained and operated especially for that class, and

(ii) the Legislature may approve the establishment, maintenance and operation of a publicly funded school, whether denominational or non-denominational;

(c) where a school is established, maintained and operated pursuant to subparagraph (b) (i), the class of persons referred to in that subparagraph shall continue to have the right to provide for religious education, activities and observances and to direct the teaching of aspects of curriculum affecting religious beliefs, student admission policy and the assignment and dismissal of teachers in that school;

(d) all schools referred to in paragraphs (a) and (b) shall receive their share of public funds in accordance with scales determined on a non-discriminatory basis from time to time by the Legislature; and

(e) if the classes of persons having rights under this Term so desire, they shall have the right to elect in total not less than two thirds of the members of a school board, and any class so desiring shall have the right to elect the portion of that total that is proportionate to the population of that class in the area under the board's jurisdiction.

Prior to the Constitution Amendment, 1997 (Newfoundland Act), Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada had been amended by the*Constitution Amendment, 1987 (Newfoundland Act*) (see SI/88-11) to read as follows:

17(1) In lieu of section ninety-three of the Constitution Act, 1867, the following term shall apply in respect of the Province of Newfoundland:

In and for the Province of Newfoundland the Legislature shall have exclusive authority to make laws in relation to education, but the Legislature will not have authority to make laws prejudicially affecting any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools, common (amalgamated) schools, or denominational colleges, that any class or classes of persons have by law in Newfoundland at the date of Union, and out of public funds of the Province of Newfoundland, provided for education,

(a) all such schools shall receive their share of such funds in accordance with scales determined on a non-discriminatory basis from time to time by the Legislature for all schools then being conducted under authority of the Legislature; and

(b) all such colleges shall receive their share of any grant from time to time voted for all colleges then being conducted under authority of the Legislature, such grant being distributed on a non-discriminatory basis.

(2) For the purposes of paragraph one of this Term, the Pentecostal Assemblies of Newfoundland have in Newfoundland all the same rights and privileges with respect to denominational schools and denominational colleges as any other class or classes of persons had by law in Newfoundland at the date of Union, and the words all such schools in paragraph (a) of paragraph one of this Term and the words all such colleges in paragraph (b) of paragraph one of this Term include, respectively, the schools and the colleges of the Pentecostal Assemblies of Newfoundland.

Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada (confirmed by the Newfoundland Act, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.)), which Term provided an alternative for Newfoundland, originally read as follows:

17 In lieu of section ninety-three of the Constitution Act, 1867, the following term shall apply in respect of the Province of Newfoundland:

In and for the Province of Newfoundland the Legislature shall have exclusive authority to make laws in relation to education, but the Legislature will not have authority to make laws prejudicially affecting any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools, common (amalgamated) schools, or denominational colleges, that any class or classes of persons have by law in Newfoundland at the date of Union, and out of public funds of the Province of Newfoundland, provided for education,

(a) all such schools shall receive their share of such funds in accordance with scales determined on a non-discriminatory basis from time to time by the Legislature for all schools then being conducted under authority of the Legislature; and

(b) all such colleges shall receive their share of any grant from time to time voted for all colleges then being conducted under authority of the Legislature, such grant being distributed on a non-discriminatory basis.

1. (1) The following grants shall be made yearly by Canada to every province, which at the commencement of this Act is a province of the Dominion, for its local purposes and the support of its Government and Legislature:

(4) The grants payable under this Act shall be paid half-yearly in advance to each province.

(5) The grants payable under this Act shall be substituted for the grants or subsidies (in this Act referred to as existing grants) payable for the like purposes at the commencement of this Act to the several provinces of the Dominion under the provisions of section one hundred and eighteen of the Constitution Act, 1867, or of any Order in Council establishing a province, or of any Act of the Parliament of Canada containing directions for the payment of any such grant or subsidy, and those provisions shall cease to have effect.

(6) The Government of Canada shall have the same power of deducting sums charged against a province on account of the interest on public debt in the case of the grant payable under this Act to the province as they have in the case of the existing grant.

PRESENT: The Honourable Madam Justice Kane

BETWEEN:

EVA NOTBURGA MARITA SYDEL

Applicant

and

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA

Respondent

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT

[1] The applicant seeks an Order for mandamus to compel the Attorney General of Canada or Minister of Justice (the "Minister") to issue a direction to the Registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada (the "Registrar"). Specifically the applicant requests that the Registrar be ordered to put her motion for reconsideration of an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada (the "SCC"), from a decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal, before a judge of the SCC.

[2] The application is dismissed for the reasons that follow.

[3] The following background information provides the context for the present application and for the reasons to refuse the relief sought.

Background

[4] In 2007, the applicant was convicted in the Provincial Court of British Columbia for tax evasion. She was sentenced to 18 months in prison and fined $244,447.

[5] The applicant appealed her conviction to the Supreme Court of British Columbia but later abandoned the appeal. Her application to reopen the appeal was refused. She then brought a civil action in the Supreme Court of British Columbia seeking a declaration that the Income Tax Act was invalid as were her convictions under that Act.

[6] The applicant sought $300 million in damages for breach of her right to a fair trial pursuant to paragraph 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, based on allegations that her criminal trial was unfair because the Judge was biased and because the Judge and the Canada Revenue Agency investigator had communicated during the trial with non-verbal signals, including those used by Freemasons. In addition, allegations were made that the Judge was likely a Freemason because he refused to indicate whether he was a Freemason, and that judicial independence has been subverted because Freemasons have infiltrated the judiciary and have placed their Freemason oath above their judicial oath.

[7] These same allegations have been made with respect to the other Judges who have dealt with the applicant's various legal proceedings and complaints have been made to the Canadian Judicial Council, all of which have been found to have absolutely no merit.

[8] On August 3, 2011, the applicant applied to the SCC for leave to appeal the Order of the British Columbia Court of Appeal which dismissed her appeal and upheld the decision of the British Columbia Supreme Court which dismissed her civil action.

[9] The applicant submitted all materials on the application for leave to the SCC by November 21, 2011.

[10] In addition, by motion to the SCC dated November 29, 2011, the applicant sought Orders that the Attorney General of Canada, the Canadian Judicial Council and the Attorney General of British Columbia be directed to investigate whether named Judges of the British Columbia Supreme Court and Court of Appeal, the Provincial Court Judge who convicted the applicant, as well as a named employee of the Canada Revenue Agency, were Freemasons. By Order dated December 15, 2011, the Registrar dismissed this motion.

[11] On December 22, 2011, a three member panel of the SCC dismissed the application for leave to appeal the decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal.

[12] On January 31, 2012, the applicant brought a motion seeking reconsideration of the application for leave to appeal. By letter dated June 19, 2012, the Registrar advised the applicant that her motion was refused as it did not reveal exceedingly rare circumstances to warrant reconsideration as required by Rule 73 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Canada (the "Supreme Court Rules")

[13] Counsel for the applicant then wrote to the Minister on September 24, 2012, requesting the Minister to "direct the Registrar to put my client's materials before the court according to the Rules of Court". The Minister did not act as requested.

[14] This brings us to the present application for judicial review of the Minister's decision to take no action. The applicant now seeks mandamus and asks this Court to compel the Attorney General of Canada or the Minister, to order the Registrar to put the motions for disclosure and the motion for reconsideration of the refusal to grant leave to appeal, before a judge of the SCC. The applicant did not make submissions with respect to the motion for disclosure and limited her application for mandamus with respect to the motion for reconsideration.

[15] This relief cannot and should not be granted.

The Applicant's Grounds to Seek Mandamus

[16] The applicant's primary argument is that the Registrar made a decision that should have been decided by a judge of the SCC. The applicant submits that the Registrar acted without authority in refusing her motion for reconsideration. Therefore, the Minister, who is responsible to superintend the administration of justice pursuant to section 4 of the Department of Justice Act, should direct the Registrar to put this motion before a judge of the SCC.

[17] The applicant submits that her motion should have been considered by a judge of the SCC in accordance with the Supreme Court Act and the Supreme Court Rules. She claims she was denied the benefit of having a judge, who is judicially independent, consider the issue of whether her motion for reconsideration raised exceedingly rare circumstances.

[18] The applicant submits that the Registrar is part of the Executive Branch of the Government and is not judicially independent.

[19] The applicant disputes that she is undermining the finality of the determination by the SCC, and argues that she seeks finality but that finality can only result from a decision of a judge of the SCC on her motion for reconsideration of leave to appeal. The applicant also disputes that this judicial review is a collateral attack on the SCC and submits that it is only an attack on the person that refused her motion, namely, the Registrar.

[20] The applicant further submits that she has satisfied all the elements of the test for mandamus as established by the Federal Court of Appeal in Apotex Inc v Canada (Attorney General), 1993 CanLII 3004 (FCA), [1993] FCJ No 1098 at para 45, [1994] 1 FC 742, affd 1994 CanLII 47 (SCC), [1994] 3 SCR 1100, [1994] SCJ No 113 [Apotex].

The Respondent's Position

[21] The respondent submits that the principle of judicial independence does not permit this Court to order mandamus to compel the Minister to direct the Registrar to put the applicant's motion for reconsideration before a judge of the SCC.

[22] The Minister or any other Minister of the Crown or member of the Executive Branch of the Government can not interfere with the decision-making process of any court.

[23] The respondent submits that the criteria for mandamus need not be considered because the Minister must refrain from acting, just as he did, in order to fulfill his duties under the Department of Justice Act and to comply with the rule of law.

[24] The respondent further submits that the relief is in fact a collateral attack on the SCC decision to dismiss her application for leave as it seeks to undo the decision of the Court.

[25] The respondent also notes that the Registrar is part of the SCC and can not be characterized as part of the Executive Branch of the Government.

The Issue

[26] The key issue is whether this Court has jurisdiction to order the Minister or the Attorney General of Canada to direct the Registrar to put the applicant's motions for disclosure and reconsideration of leave to appeal before a judge of the SCC.

[27] If the Court has such jurisdiction, then the issue of whether the test for mandamus has been met would be considered.

This Court does not have jurisdiction to order mandamus against the Registrar

[28] The relief sought by the applicant offends the principles of judicial independence, the hierarchy of our Court structure and the supremacy of the SCC.

[29] In addition, the applicant's argument that the Registrar had no authority to make the decision refusing her motion for reconsideration is without merit.

[30] I agree with the respondent that by seeking mandamus against the Minister, the applicant seeks indirectly what she can not achieve directly. Regardless of how the applicant has packaged her request, she is indeed asking that the Minister interfere with the SCC.

[31] As noted by the respondent, the Minister's role in ensuring the proper administration of justice or superintendence of the administration of justice, in accordance with section 4 of the Department of Justice Act, requires that the Minister ensure judicial independence. This, in turn, requires that the Minister not act as the applicant has requested.

The Registrar's Authority

[32] The applicant repeatedly argued that the Registrar acted without authority in refusing her motion for reconsideration of her leave application because it did not raise exceedingly rare circumstances in accordance with Rule 73 of the Supreme Court Rules. The argument has no merit.

[33] The Supreme Court Act provides as follows:

18. The Registrar has such auth ority to exercise the jurisdiction of a judge sitting in chambers as may be conferred on the Registr ar by general rules or orders ma de under this Act.	18. Le registraire exerce la juri diction d'un juge en chambre se lon les pouvoirs qui lui sont con férés par les ordonnances ou rè gles générales édictées en vertu de la présente loi.

(Emphasis added)	[Je souligne]

[35] As I interpret those provisions, the Registrar's authority to refuse the motion for reconsideration is the same as that of a judge in Chambers as that authority has been conferred by Rule 12. The Order made by the Registrar is binding.

[36] The decision of the Registrar clearly indicated that section 78 was not applicable:

> I have reviewed your motion for reconsideration and your affidavit in support. I regret to inform you that, in my opinion, your motion does not reveal the exceedingly rare circumstances which would warrant reconsideration by this Court. Furthermore, please note that Rule 78 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Canada is not applicable to this matter.

[37] The applicant is not entitled to have her motion for reconsideration heard by a judge of the SCC as her motion has been validly considered and determined by the Registrar. Therefore, the applicant's theory that the Minister is duty-bound to intervene to ensure that the Registrar acts within his authority is baseless.

Judicial independence requires no interference by the Executive Branch of the Government

[38] Judicial independence means and requires that the judiciary is separate and independent from all other participants in the justice system, including the Government

[39] The SCC has addressed the importance and hallmarks of judicial independence on many occasions and the principles are clear.

[40] In Beauregard v Canada, 1986 CanLII 24 (SCC), [1986] 2 SCR 56, [1986] SCJ No 50 [Beauregard], the SCC traced the origins of judicial independence, noting at para 21:

> Historically, the generally accepted core of the principle of judicial independence has been the complete liberty of individual judges to hear and decide the cases that come before them: no outsider--be it government, pressure group, individual or even another judge--should interfere in fact, or attempt to interfere, with the way in which a judge conducts his or her case and makes his or her decision. This core continues to be central to the principle of judicial independence. Nevertheless, it is not the entire content of the principle.

[41] And at paras 30-31:

> […] Canadian constitutional history and current Canadian constitutional law establish clearly the deep roots and contemporary vitality and vibrancy of the principle of judicial independence in Canada. The role of the courts as resolver of disputes, interpreter of the law and defender of the Constitution requires that they be completely separate in authority and function from all other participants in the justice system.
> I emphasize the word 'all' in the previous sentence because, although judicial independence is usually considered and discussed in terms of the relationship between the judiciary and the executive branch, in this appeal the relevant relationship is between the judiciary and Parliament. Nothing turns on this contextual difference. Although particular care must be taken to preserve the independence of the judiciary from the executive branch (because the executive is so often a litigant before the courts), the principle of judicial independence must also be maintained against all other potential intrusions, including any from the legislative branch.

[42] In R v Valente, 1985 CanLII 25 (SCC), [1985] SCJ No. 77, [1985] 2 SCR 673, the SCC considered the relationship between impartiality and independence, at 685:

> Although there is obviously a close relationship between independence and impartiality, they are nevertheless separate and distinct values or requirements. Impartiality refers to a state of mind or attitude of the tribunal in relation to the issues and the parties in a particular case. The word "impartial"... connotes absence of bias, actual or perceived. The word "independent" in s. 11(d) reflects or embodies the traditional constitutional value of judicial independence. As such, it connotes not merely a state of mind or attitude in the actual exercise of judicial functions, but a status or relationship to others, particularly to the executive branch of government, that rests on objective conditions or guarantees.

[43] In R v Lippé, 1990 CanLII 18 (SCC), [1990] SCJ No 128, [1991] 2 SCR 114, the SCC noted at 138:

> The content of the principle of judicial independence is to be determined with reference to our constitutional tradition and is therefore limited to independence from the government. Although the language in Beauregard, supra, may seem to have expanded the concept, it is to be remembered that the ratio of the case extended the requirement beyond the executive to the legislative branch of government. […]
> I do not intend, however, to limit this concept of "government" to simply the executive or legislative branches. By "government", in this context, I am referring to any person or body, which can exert pressure on the judiciary through authority under the state.
> [Emphasis in original.]

[44] In the present case, the applicant's request for mandamus is contrary to the separation of powers between the executive and the judiciary and undermines the judicial independence of the SCC. The applicant is really asking the Minister to ensure that her motion for reconsideration is considered for a second time and by a judge of the SCC. This would put the Minister in the role of supervising or interfering with Canada's top court. This clearly infringes the principle of judicial independence.

[45] If the Minister could be compelled to direct the Registrar to put a motion for reconsideration of a leave application – or any other motion – before a judge of the SCC, which basically compels that Judge to consider the motion, what prevents the Minister from directing the Registrar to put a motion to a judge of the SCC to consider or reconsider a matter that any Minister of the Crown is a party to?

There is no doubt that this would violate judicial independence and the rule of law. The relief requested by the applicant of the Minister is no different.

[46] In Legere v Canada, 2003 FC 869, [2003] FCJ No 1766 [Legere], this Court addressed the principles of judicial independence in circumstances similar to the present case. Mr Legere brought an action in the Federal Court against Her Majesty the Queen, as the Federal Crown, alleging that it had supervisory jurisdiction over the judges and masters of the British Columbia Supreme Court, where he had been unsuccessful in a family law matter.

[47] Prothonotary Hargrave referred to the passages cited above from Beauregard and noted that the Federal Crown has no supervisory role over the judiciary, at para 15 of Legere:

> The judiciary hold office during good behaviour. While judges and masters are appointed by the Crown they are not Crown servants: they cannot be either controlled by or given directions by the Crown, or by the Crown's ministers, or by Parliament, or by any government department. The members of the judiciary are independent and enjoy total immunity from court action based on anything done or said in the exercise of their judicial functions. There can therefore be no vicarious liability on the part of the Crown.

[48] The same principles are applicable in the present case. Judges of the SCC are not Crown servants; they cannot be controlled by or be given directions by the Crown or by the Crown's ministers. To hold otherwise would undermine the separation of powers between the executive and the judiciary.

[49] In Legere, Prothonotary Hargrave also noted that permitting the application to continue would constitute an impermissible collateral attack on the British Columbia Supreme Court. The rule against collateral attack prevents an order made by a decision-maker of competent jurisdiction from being attacked in proceedings other than those whose specific object is the reversal, variation, or nullification of the order.

[50] Although the application in the present case is brought against the Minister, the doctrine of collateral attack nonetheless applies because the effect of the relief sought by the applicant is to challenge a valid and binding decision of the Registrar in an attempt to undo a decision made by a three member panel of the SCC.

[51] In oral submissions, counsel for the applicant indicated that he agreed with the decision of Prothonotary Hargrave in Legere and that "no player in the Executive should ever have any contact with the judiciary or court". However, the applicant holds the view that the Registrar is not part of the Court or judiciary, and that, therefore, this principle is not applicable.

[52] The applicant does not seem to appreciate the effect of what she seeks. Compelling the Minister to direct the Registrar to put the motion for reconsideration before a judge of the SCC is the same as bypassing the Registrar altogether and directing the Minister to demand that a SCC judge consider the applicant's motion for reconsideration of leave to appeal.

The hierarchy of the Court must be respected

[53] In addition to violating the principles of separation of powers and judicial independence, the relief sought by the applicant ignores the hierarchy of Canada's court system. Finality would never be achieved if the Minister could be compelled to direct the Registrar to put motions before judges of the SCC.

[54] In Scheuneman v Canada (Attorney General), 2003 FCA 194, [2003] FCJ No 686 [Scheuneman], the Federal Court of Appeal noted the importance of finality and the hierarchy of our courts which places the SCC at the top.

[55] Mr Scheuneman sought judicial review of the SCC's decision to dismiss his application for leave to appeal and motion for reconsideration, arguing that the SCC fell within the definition of "federal board, commission, or other tribunal" in subsection 2(1) of the Federal Court Act, thereby giving the Federal Court jurisdiction to judicially review the SCC's decision regarding his leave application.

[56] The Federal Court of Appeal strongly rejected this argument, noting at paras 10 and 11:

> [10] We are all satisfied that this argument must fail. In our view, it would be so absurd to interpret "federal board, commission or other tribunal" as including the Supreme Court of Canada that Parliament did not think it necessary specifically to exclude the Judges of that Court from the definition. The court system in Canada, and elsewhere, is hierarchical in nature. In Canada, the Supreme Court of Canada sits at the apex of our judicial system. Subject to a residual discretion to reconsider its own decisions (R. v. Hinse, 1997 CanLII 394 (SCC), [1997] 1 S.C.R. 3), the Supreme Court's judgments (including decisions not to reconsider a leave application) are final and conclusive: Supreme Court of Canada Act, section 52. They are not subject to appeal. To interpret "federal board, commission or other tribunal" as including the Supreme Court of Canada, and as thus permitting the Federal Court to review judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada, would undermine the finality of the Supreme Court's decisions and subvert the judicial hierarchy.
> [11] If, as Mr. Scheuneman maintains, the Federal Court could review a decision or order of the Supreme Court of Canada, the decision of the Federal Court would itself be subject to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. Moreover, if the Supreme Court refused leave to appeal, that refusal could itself potentially be the subject of a further application for judicial review to the Federal Court. It would be absurd to construe the Federal Court Act as conferring on the Court jurisdiction to review the decision of a body when the result of the review could then be appealed to the very body that made the decision under review. There would be no finality to litigation.

[57] The principles set out in Scheuneman are applicable to the application before me. The applicant seeks an Order of this Court against the Minister. If granted, a decision of the Registrar, which is as binding as a decision of a SCC judge in Chambers, notwithstanding that the SCC is the court of final appeal, would be subject to or undermined by the authority of this Court.

[58] If the SCC considered the motion for reconsideration for a second time as a result of the order by the Minister via the Registrar, and refused the motion for a second time, would the applicant suggest that the Minister could continue to demand reconsideration? Although the applicant's position is that there is no finality until a judge, and not the Registrar, decides the motion for reconsideration, the very relief sought from the Minister of Justice would invite requests for reconsideration over and again, with no finality and no respect for the hierarchy of the SCC.

The test for mandamus cannot be met

[59] The applicant argued that she met the test for mandamus, as established in Apotex because: the Minister owed a duty to her to act to prevent the Registrar from exceeding his authority; she had satisfied all the conditions precedent by requesting the Minister to act; there was no other remedy available to her; the order would have practical value because it would place her affidavit outlining the exceedingly rare circumstances before a judge and bring about the finality she seeks; and, the balance of convenience favoured her as she was entitled to have her motion considered by a judge, or at minimum, it would not cause inconvenience or confusion in the SCC.

[60] The applicant has not met any of the elements of the test for mandamus for the reasons set out above. Most importantly, the Minister is not under any duty to act, and is, in fact, under a duty to refrain from acting in order to ensure judicial independence and the separation of powers.

Conclusion

[61] The relief sought by the applicant offends the principles of judicial independence, the hierarchy of our Court structure and the supremacy of the SCC.

[62] I would also note that the applicant cannot assert that she was denied the opportunity to place her affidavit alleging that exceedingly rare circumstances exist to warrant reconsideration before a judge given that her affidavit was considered by the Registrar, who has the same authority as a judge of the SCC in Chambers. Moreover, the exceedingly rare circumstances, i.e., her allegations that Freemasons have infiltrated the justice system and that Freemasons may be a criminal organisation and, as a result, have subverted judicial independence and the rule of law, are the very same allegations set out in her Statement of Claim which was dismissed and for which leave to appeal was denied by a three member panel of the SCC.

[63] The applicant claims that she wants finality and that she will only have finality when her motion is considered by a judge of the SCC. In fact, the applicant has had finality. She has relentlessly pursued all possible legal remedies over several years. Her leave to appeal to the SCC has been denied, as has her motion to reconsider her leave to appeal. These Orders are final and binding. As a result, the decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal is final in upholding the dismissal of her cause of action. The applicant must come to terms with that final decision and with the fact that her legal recourse has reached its end.

[64] As noted by the Federal Court of Appeal in Scheuneman, supra at para 12:

> […] No one has a right to consume scarce public resources indefinitely in the endless pursuit of a dispute, no matter how important the issues may seem to the individual concerned. Finality is an indispensable aspect of any system of justice.

Appropriate purposes

(3) An organization may collect, use or disclose personal information only for purposes that a reasonable person would consider are appropriate in the circumstances.

Effect of designation of individual

6 The designation of an individual under clause 4.1 of Schedule 1 does not relieve the organization of the obligation to comply with the obligations set out in that Schedule.

Valid consent

6.1 For the purposes of clause 4.3 of Schedule 1, the consent of an individual is only valid if it is reasonable to expect that an individual to whom the organization's activities are directed would understand the nature, purpose and consequences of the collection, use or disclosure of the personal information to which they are consenting.

2015, c. 32, s. 5.

Collection without knowledge or consent

7 (1) For the purpose of clause 4.3 of Schedule 1, and despite the note that accompanies that clause, an organization may collect personal information without the knowledge or consent of the individual only if

(a) the collection is clearly in the interests of the individual and consent cannot be obtained in a timely way;

(b) it is reasonable to expect that the collection with the knowledge or consent of the individual would compromise the availability or the accuracy of the information and the collection is reasonable for purposes related to investigating a breach of an agreement or a contravention of the laws of Canada or a province;

(b.01) it was disclosed under paragraph (3)(d.21);

(b.1) it is contained in a witness statement and the collection is necessary to assess, process or settle an insurance claim;

(ii) that is required by law.

Use without knowledge or consent

(2) For the purpose of clause 4.3 of Schedule 1, and despite the note that accompanies that clause, an organization may, without the knowledge or consent of the individual, use personal information only if

(a) in the course of its activities, the organization becomes aware of information that it has reasonable grounds to believe could be useful in the investigation of a contravention of the laws of Canada, a province or a foreign jurisdiction that has been, is being or is about to be committed, and the information is used for the purpose of investigating that contravention;

(b) it is used for the purpose of acting in respect of an emergency that threatens the life, health or security of an individual;

(b.1) the information is contained in a witness statement and the use is necessary to assess, process or settle an insurance claim;

(c) it is used for statistical, or scholarly study or research, purposes that cannot be achieved without using the information, the information is used in a manner that will ensure its confidentiality, it is impracticable to obtain consent and the organization informs the Commissioner of the use before the information is used;

(c.1) it is publicly available and is specified by the regulations; or

(d) it was collected under paragraph (1)(a), (b), (b.01) or (e).

Disclosure without knowledge or consent

(a) made to, in the Province of Quebec, an advocate or notary or, in any other province, a barrister or solicitor who is representing the organization;

(b) for the purpose of collecting a debt owed by the individual to the organization;

(c) required to comply with a subpoena or warrant issued or an order made by a court, person or body with jurisdiction to compel the production of information, or to comply with rules of court relating to the production of records;

(c.1) made to a government institution or part of a government institution that has made a request for the information, identified its lawful authority to obtain the information and indicated that

(i) it suspects that the information relates to national security, the defence of Canada or the conduct of international affairs,

(ii) the disclosure is requested for the purpose of enforcing any law of Canada, a province or a foreign jurisdiction, carrying out an investigation relating to the enforcement of any such law or gathering intelligence for the purpose of enforcing any such law,

(iii) the disclosure is requested for the purpose of administering any law of Canada or a province, or

(iv) the disclosure is requested for the purpose of communicating with the next of kin or authorized representative of an injured, ill or deceased individual;

(c.2) made to the government institution mentioned in section 7 of the Proceeds of Crime (Money Laundering) and Terrorist Financing Act as required by that section;

(d) made on the initiative of the organization to a government institution or a part of a government institution and the organization

(i) has reasonable grounds to believe that the information relates to a contravention of the laws of Canada, a province or a foreign jurisdiction that has been, is being or is about to be committed, or

(ii) suspects that the information relates to national security, the defence of Canada or the conduct of international affairs;

(d.1) made to another organization and is reasonable for the purposes of investigating a breach of an agreement or a contravention of the laws of Canada or a province that has been, is being or is about to be committed and it is reasonable to expect that disclosure with the knowledge or consent of the individual would compromise the investigation;

(d.2) made to another organization and is reasonable for the purposes of detecting or suppressing fraud or of preventing fraud that is likely to be committed and it is reasonable to expect that the disclosure with the knowledge or consent of the individual would compromise the ability to prevent, detect or suppress the fraud;

(d.21) made to another organization under subsection 11.01(1) of the Proceeds of Crime (Money Laundering) and Terrorist Financing Act;

(d.3) made on the initiative of the organization to a government institution, a part of a government institution or the individual's next of kin or authorized representative and

(i) the organization has reasonable grounds to believe that the individual has been, is or may be the victim of financial abuse,

(d.4) necessary to identify the individual who is injured, ill or deceased, made to a government institution, a part of a government institution or the individual's next of kin or authorized representative and, if the individual is alive, the organization informs that individual in writing without delay of the disclosure;

(e) made to a person who needs the information because of an emergency that threatens the life, health or security of an individual and, if the individual whom the information is about is alive, the organization informs that individual in writing without delay of the disclosure;

Limit

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply if the third party consents to the access or the individual needs the information because an individual's life, health or security is threatened.

Information related to paragraphs 7(3)(c), (c.1) or (d)

(a.1) the detection, prevention or deterrence of money laundering or the financing of terrorist activities; or

(b) the enforcement of any law of Canada, a province or a foreign jurisdiction, an investigation relating to the enforcement of any such law or the gathering of intelligence for the purpose of enforcing any such law.

Prohibition

(2.4) Despite clause 4.9 of Schedule 1, if an organization is notified under subsection (2.3) that the institution or part objects to the organization complying with the request, the organization

(a) shall refuse the request to the extent that it relates to paragraph (2.1)(a) or to information referred to in subparagraph (2.1)(a)(ii);

(b) shall notify the Commissioner, in writing and without delay, of the refusal; and

(a) the information is protected by solicitor-client privilege or the professional secrecy of advocates and notaries or by litigation privilege;

(b) to do so would reveal confidential commercial information;

(c) to do so could reasonably be expected to threaten the life or security of another individual;

(c.1) the information was collected under paragraph 7(1)(b);

(d) the information was generated in the course of a formal dispute resolution process; or

(e) the information was created for the purpose of making a disclosure under the Public Servants Disclosure Protection Act or in the course of an investigation into a disclosure under that Act.

However, in the circumstances described in paragraph (b) or (c), if giving access to the information would reveal confidential commercial information or could reasonably be expected to threaten the life or security of another individual, as the case may be, and that information is severable from the record containing any other information for which access is requested, the organization shall give the individual access after severing.

Limit

(4) Subsection (3) does not apply if the individual needs the information because an individual's life, health or security is threatened.

Notice

(5) If an organization decides not to give access to personal information in the circumstances set out in paragraph (3)(c.1), the organization shall, in writing, so notify the Commissioner, and shall include in the notification any information that the Commissioner may specify.

SCHEDULE 1

4.1 Principle 1 — Accountability

An organization is responsible for personal information under its control and shall designate an individual or individuals who are accountable for the organization's compliance with the following principles.

In addition, other individuals within the organization may be delegated to act on behalf of the designated individual(s).

The identity of the individual(s) designated by the organization to oversee the organization's compliance with the principles shall be made known upon request.

4.1.3

An organization is responsible for personal information in its possession or custody, including information that has been transferred to a third party for processing. The organization shall use contractual or other means to provide a comparable level of protection while the information is being processed by a third party.

Organizations shall implement policies and practices to give effect to the principles, including

(b) establishing procedures to receive and respond to complaints and inquiries;

(c) training staff and communicating to staff information about the organization's policies and practices; and

The Limiting Collection principle (Clause 4.4) requires an organization to collect only that information necessary for the purposes that have been identified.

The identified purposes should be specified at or before the time of collection to the individual from whom the personal information is collected. Depending upon the way in which the information is collected, this can be done orally or in writing. An application form, for example, may give notice of the purposes.

When personal information that has been collected is to be used for a purpose not previously identified, the new purpose shall be identified prior to use. Unless the new purpose is required by law, the consent of the individual is required before information can be used for that purpose. For an elaboration on consent, please refer to the Consent principle (Clause 4.3).

Persons collecting personal information should be able to explain to individuals the purposes for which the information is being collected.

This principle is linked closely to the Limiting Collection principle (Clause 4.4) and the Limiting Use, Disclosure, and Retention principle (Clause 4.5).

4.3 Principle 3 - Consent

The knowledge and consent of the individual are required for the collection, use, or disclosure of personal information, except where inappropriate.

Note: In certain circumstances personal information can be collected, used, or disclosed without the knowledge and consent of the individual. For example, legal, medical, or security reasons may make it impossible or impractical to seek consent. When information is being collected for the detection and prevention of fraud or for law enforcement, seeking the consent of the individual might defeat the purpose of collecting the information. Seeking consent may be impossible or inappropriate when the individual is a minor, seriously ill, or mentally incapacitated. In addition, organizations that do not have a direct relationship with the individual may not always be able to seek consent. For example, seeking consent may be impractical for a charity or a direct-marketing firm that wishes to acquire a mailing list from another organization. In such cases, the organization providing the list would be expected to obtain consent before disclosing personal information.

Consent is required for the collection of personal information and the subsequent use or disclosure of this information. Typically, an organization will seek consent for the use or disclosure of the information at the time of collection. In certain circumstances, consent with respect to use or disclosure may be sought after the information has been collected but before use (for example, when an organization wants to use information for a purpose not previously identified).

4.3.2

The principle requires “knowledge and consent”. Organizations shall make a reasonable effort to ensure that the individual is advised of the purposes for which the information will be used. To make the consent meaningful, the purposes must be stated in such a manner that the individual can reasonably understand how the information will be used or disclosed.

4.3.3

An organization shall not, as a condition of the supply of a product or service, require an individual to consent to the collection, use, or disclosure of information beyond that required to fulfil the explicitly specified, and legitimate purposes.

The form of the consent sought by the organization may vary, depending upon the circumstances and the type of information. In determining the form of consent to use, organizations shall take into account the sensitivity of the information. Although some information (for example, medical records and income records) is almost always considered to be sensitive, any information can be sensitive, depending on the context. For example, the names and addresses of subscribers to a newsmagazine would generally not be considered sensitive information. However, the names and addresses of subscribers to some special-interest magazines might be considered sensitive.

In obtaining consent, the reasonable expectations of the individual are also relevant. For example, an individual buying a subscription to a magazine should reasonably expect that the organization, in addition to using the individual's name and address for mailing and billing purposes, would also contact the person to solicit the renewal of the subscription. In this case, the organization can assume that the individual's request constitutes consent for specific purposes. On the other hand, an individual would not reasonably expect that personal information given to a health-care professional would be given to a company selling health-care products, unless consent were obtained. Consent shall not be obtained through deception.

The way in which an organization seeks consent may vary, depending on the circumstances and the type of information collected. An organization should generally seek express consent when the information is likely to be considered sensitive. Implied consent would generally be appropriate when the information is less sensitive. Consent can also be given by an authorized representative (such as a legal guardian or a person having power of attorney).

Individuals can give consent in many ways. For example:

(a) an application form may be used to seek consent, collect information, and inform the individual of the use that will be made of the information. By completing and signing the form, the individual is giving consent to the collection and the specified uses;

(b) a checkoff box may be used to allow individuals to request that their names and addresses not be given to other organizations. Individuals who do not check the box are assumed to consent to the transfer of this information to third parties;

(c) consent may be given orally when information is collected over the telephone; or

 (d) consent may be given at the time that individuals use a product or service.

4.3.8

An individual may withdraw consent at any time, subject to legal or contractual restrictions and reasonable notice. The organization shall inform the individual of the implications of such withdrawal.

4.4 Principle 4 — Limiting Collection

The collection of personal information shall be limited to that which is necessary for the purposes identified by the organization. Information shall be collected by fair and lawful means.

Organizations shall not collect personal information indiscriminately. Both the amount and the type of information collected shall be limited to that which is necessary to fulfil the purposes identified. Organizations shall specify the type of information collected as part of their information-handling policies and practices, in accordance with the Openness principle (Clause 4.8).

The requirement that personal information be collected by fair and lawful means is intended to prevent organizations from collecting information by misleading or deceiving individuals about the purpose for which information is being collected. This requirement implies that consent with respect to collection must not be obtained through deception.

This principle is linked closely to the Identifying Purposes principle (Clause 4.2) and the Consent principle (Clause 4.3).

4.5 Principle 5 —Limiting Use, Disclosure, and Retention

Personal information shall not be used or disclosed for purposes other than those for which it was collected, except with the consent of the individual or as required by law. Personal information shall be retained only as long as necessary for the fulfilment of those purposes.

Organizations using personal information for a new purpose shall document this purpose (see Clause 4.2.1).

4.5.2

Organizations should develop guidelines and implement procedures with respect to the retention of personal information. These guidelines should include minimum and maximum retention periods. Personal information that has been used to make a decision about an individual shall be retained long enough to allow the individual access to the information after the decision has been made. An organization may be subject to legislative requirements with respect to retention periods.

Personal information that is no longer required to fulfil the identified purposes should be destroyed, erased, or made anonymous. Organizations shall develop guidelines and implement procedures to govern the destruction of personal information.

This principle is closely linked to the Consent principle (Clause 4.3), the Identifying Purposes principle (Clause 4.2), and the Individual Access principle (Clause 4.9).

4.6 Principle 6 — Accuracy

Personal information shall be as accurate, complete, and up-to-date as is necessary for the purposes for which it is to be used.

4.6.1

The extent to which personal information shall be accurate, complete, and up-to-date will depend upon the use of the information, taking into account the interests of the individual. Information shall be sufficiently accurate, complete, and up-to-date to minimize the possibility that inappropriate information may be used to make a decision about the individual.

4.6.2

An organization shall not routinely update personal information, unless such a process is necessary to fulfil the purposes for which the information was collected.

4.6.3

Personal information that is used on an ongoing basis, including information that is disclosed to third parties, should generally be accurate and up-to-date, unless limits to the requirement for accuracy are clearly set out.

4.7 Principle 7 — Safeguards

Personal information shall be protected by security safeguards appropriate to the sensitivity of the information.

The security safeguards shall protect personal information against loss or theft, as well as unauthorized access, disclosure, copying, use, or modification. Organizations shall protect personal information regardless of the format in which it is held.

4.7.2

The nature of the safeguards will vary depending on the sensitivity of the information that has been collected, the amount, distribution, and format of the information, and the method of storage. More sensitive information should be safeguarded by a higher level of protection. The concept of sensitivity is discussed in Clause 4.3.4.

4.7.3

The methods of protection should include

(a) physical measures, for example, locked filing cabinets and restricted access to offices;

(b) organizational measures, for example, security clearances and limiting access on a "need-to-know" basis; and

(c) technological measures, for example, the use of passwords and encryption.

Organizations shall make their employees aware of the importance of maintaining the confidentiality of personal information.

Care shall be used in the disposal or destruction of personal information, to prevent unauthorized parties from gaining access to the information (see Clause 4.5.3).

4.8 Principle 8 — Openness

An organization shall make readily available to individuals specific information about its policies and practices relating to the management of personal information.

Organizations shall be open about their policies and practices with respect to the management of personal information. Individuals shall be able to acquire information about an organization's policies and practices without unreasonable effort. This information shall be made available in a form that is generally understandable.

4.8.2

The information made available shall include

(a) the name or title, and the address, of the person who is accountable for the organization's policies and practices and to whom complaints or inquiries can be forwarded;

(b) the means of gaining access to personal information held by the organization;

(c) a description of the type of personal information held by the organization, including a general account of its use;

(d) a copy of any brochures or other information that explain the organization's policies, standards, or codes; and

(e) what personal information is made available to related organizations (e.g., subsidiaries).

An organization may make information on its policies and practices available in a variety of ways. The method chosen depends on the nature of its business and other considerations. For example, an organization may choose to make brochures available in its place of business, mail information to its customers, provide online access, or establish a toll-free telephone number.

4.9 Principle 9 — Individual Access

Upon request, an individual shall be informed of the existence, use, and disclosure of his or her personal information and shall be given access to that information. An individual shall be able to challenge the accuracy and completeness of the information and have it amended as appropriate.

Note: In certain situations, an organization may not be able to provide access to all the personal information it holds about an individual. Exceptions to the access requirement should be limited and specific. The reasons for denying access should be provided to the individual upon request. Exceptions may include information that is prohibitively costly to provide, information that contains references to other individuals, information that cannot be disclosed for legal, security, or commercial proprietary reasons, and information that is subject to solicitor-client or litigation privilege.

Upon request, an organization shall inform an individual whether or not the organization holds personal information about the individual. Organizations are encouraged to indicate the source of this information. The organization shall allow the individual access to this information. However, the organization may choose to make sensitive medical information available through a medical practitioner. In addition, the organization shall provide an account of the use that has been made or is being made of this information and an account of the third parties to which it has been disclosed.

An individual may be required to provide sufficient information to permit an organization to provide an account of the existence, use, and disclosure of personal information. The information provided shall only be used for this purpose.

4.9.3

In providing an account of third parties to which it has disclosed personal information about an individual, an organization should attempt to be as specific as possible. When it is not possible to provide a list of the organizations to which it has actually disclosed information about an individual, the organization shall provide a list of organizations to which it may have disclosed information about the individual.

An organization shall respond to an individual’s request within a reasonable time and at minimal or no cost to the individual. The requested information shall be provided or made available in a form that is generally understandable. For example, if the organization uses abbreviations or codes to record information, an explanation shall be provided.

When an individual successfully demonstrates the inaccuracy or incompleteness of personal information, the organization shall amend the information as required. Depending upon the nature of the information challenged, amendment involves the correction, deletion, or addition of information. Where appropriate, the amended information shall be transmitted to third parties having access to the information in question.

When a challenge is not resolved to the satisfaction of the individual, the substance of the unresolved challenge shall be recorded by the organization. When appropriate, the existence of the unresolved challenge shall be transmitted to third parties having access to the information in question.

4.10 Principle 10 — Challenging Compliance

An individual shall be able to address a challenge concerning compliance with the above principles to the designated individual or individuals accountable for the organization’s compliance.

4.10.1

The individual accountable for an organization’s compliance is discussed in Clause 4.1.1.

4.10.2

Organizations shall put procedures in place to receive and respond to complaints or inquiries about their policies and practices relating to the handling of personal information. The complaint procedures should be easily accessible and simple to use.

4.10.3

Organizations shall inform individuals who make inquiries or lodge complaints of the existence of relevant complaint procedures. A range of these procedures may exist. For example, some regulatory bodies accept complaints about the personal-information handling practices of the companies they regulate.

An organization shall investigate all complaints. If a complaint is found to be justified, the organization shall take appropriate measures, including, if necessary, amending its policies and practices.

Canada Evidence Act

R.S.C., 1985, c. C-5

An Act respecting witnesses and evidence

Short Title

Short title

1 This Act may be cited as the Canada Evidence Act.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 1.

Part I

3 A person is not incompetent to give evidence by reason of interest or crime.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 3.

Accused and spouse

4 (1) Every person charged with an offence, and, except as otherwise provided in this section, the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, is a competent witness for the defence, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person.

Spouse of accused

(2) No person is incompetent, or uncompellable, to testify for the prosecution by reason only that they are married to the accused.

Communications during marriage

(3) No husband is compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during their marriage, and no wife is compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during their marriage.

(4) and (5) [Repealed, 2015, c. 13, s. 52]

Failure to testify

(6) The failure of the person charged, or of the wife or husband of that person, to testify shall not be made the subject of comment by the judge or by counsel for the prosecution.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 4; R.S., 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 17; 2002, c. 1, s. 166; 2014, c. 25, s. 34, c. 31, s. 27; 2015, c. 13, s. 52.

Incriminating questions

5 (1) No witness shall be excused from answering any question on the ground that the answer to the question may tend to criminate him, or may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any person.

Answer not admissible against witness

(2) Where with respect to any question a witness objects to answer on the ground that his answer may tend to criminate him, or may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any person, and if but for this Act, or the Act of any provincial legislature, the witness would therefore have been excused from answering the question, then although the witness is by reason of this Act or the provincial Act compelled to answer, the answer so given shall not be used or admissible in evidence against him in any criminal trial or other criminal proceeding against him thereafter taking place, other than a prosecution for perjury in the giving of that evidence or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 5; 1997, c. 18, s. 116.

Evidence of person with physical disability

6 (1) If a witness has difficulty communicating by reason of a physical disability, the court may order that the witness be permitted to give evidence by any means that enables the evidence to be intelligible.

Evidence of person with mental disability

(2) If a witness with a mental disability is determined under section 16 to have the capacity to give evidence and has difficulty communicating by reason of a disability, the court may order that the witness be permitted to give evidence by any means that enables the evidence to be intelligible.

Inquiry

(3) The court may conduct an inquiry to determine if the means by which a witness may be permitted to give evidence under subsection (1) or (2) is necessary and reliable.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 6; 1998, c. 9, s. 1.

Identification of accused

6.1 For greater certainty, a witness may give evidence as to the identity of an accused whom the witness is able to identify visually or in any other sensory manner.

1998, c. 9, s. 1.

Expert witnesses

7 Where, in any trial or other proceeding, criminal or civil, it is intended by the prosecution or the defence, or by any party, to examine as witnesses professional or other experts entitled according to the law or practice to give opinion evidence, not more than five of such witnesses may be called on either side without the leave of the court or judge or person presiding.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 7.

Handwriting comparison

8 Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the court to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by witnesses, and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting those writings, may be submitted to the court and jury as proof of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 8.

Adverse witnesses

9 (1) A party producing a witness shall not be allowed to impeach his credit by general evidence of bad character, but if the witness, in the opinion of the court, proves adverse,

the party may contradict him by other evidence, or, by leave of the court, may prove that the witness made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony, but before the last mentioned proof can be given the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, shall be mentioned to the witness, and he shall be asked whether or not he did make the statement.

Previous statements by witness not proved adverse

(2) Where the party producing a witness alleges that the witness made at other times a statement in writing, reduced to writing, or recorded on audio tape or video tape or otherwise, inconsistent with the witness' present testimony, the court may, without proof that the witness is adverse, grant leave to that party to cross-examine the witness as to the statement and the court may consider the cross-examination in determining whether in the opinion of the court the witness is adverse.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 9; 1994, c. 44, s. 85.

Cross-examination as to previous statements

10 (1) On any trial a witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements that the witness made in writing, or that have been reduced to writing, or recorded on audio tape or video tape or otherwise, relative to the subject-matter of the case, without the writing being shown to the witness or the witness being given the opportunity to listen to the audio tape or view the video tape or otherwise take cognizance of the statements, but, if it is intended to contradict the witness, the witness' attention must, before the contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the statement that are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting the witness, and the judge, at any time during the trial, may require the production of the writing or tape or other medium for inspection, and thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as the judge thinks fit.

Deposition of witness in criminal investigation

(2) A deposition of a witness, purporting to have been taken before a justice on the investigation of a criminal charge and to be signed by the witness and the justice, returned to and produced from the custody of the proper officer shall be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have been signed by the witness.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 10; 1994, c. 44, s. 86.

Cross-examination as to previous oral statements

11 Where a witness, on cross-examination as to a former statement made by him relative to the subject-matter of the case and inconsistent with his present testimony, does not distinctly admit that he did make the statement, proof may be given that he did in fact make it, but before that proof can be given the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, shall be mentioned to the witness, and he shall be asked whether or not he did make the statement.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 11.

Examination as to previous convictions

12 (1) A witness may be questioned as to whether the witness has been convicted of any offence, excluding any offence designated as a contravention under the Contraventions Act, but including such an offence where the conviction was entered after a trial on an indictment.

Proof of previous convictions

(1.1) If the witness either denies the fact or refuses to answer, the opposite party may prove the conviction.

How conviction proved

(2) A conviction may be proved by producing

(a) a certificate containing the substance and effect only, omitting the formal part, of the indictment and conviction, if it is for an indictable offence, or a copy of the summary conviction, if it is for an offence punishable on summary conviction, purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court or other officer having the custody of the records of the court in which the conviction, if on indictment, was had, or to which the conviction, if summary, was returned; and

(b) proof of identity.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 12; 1992, c. 47, s. 66.

Oaths and Solemn Affirmations

Who may administer oaths

13 Every court and judge, and every person having, by law or consent of parties, authority to hear and receive evidence, has power to administer an oath to every witness who is legally called to give evidence before that court, judge or person.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 13.

Solemn affirmation by witness instead of oath

14 (1) A person may, instead of taking an oath, make the following solemn affirmation:

I solemnly affirm that the evidence to be given by me shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Effect

(2) Where a person makes a solemn affirmation in accordance with subsection (1), his evidence shall be taken and have the same effect as if taken under oath.

to take an oath, the court or judge, or other officer or person qualified to take affidavits or depositions, shall permit the person to make a solemn affirmation in the words following, namely, "I, ..., do solemnly affirm, etc.", and that solemn affirmation has the same force and effect as if that person had taken an oath.

Effect

(2) Any witness whose evidence is admitted or who makes a solemn affirmation under this section or section 14 is liable to indictment and punishment for perjury in all respects as if he had been sworn.
R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 15; 1994, c. 44, s. 88.

16 (1) If a proposed witness is a person of fourteen years of age or older whose mental capacity is challenged, the court shall, before permitting the person to give evidence, conduct an inquiry to determine

No questions regarding understanding of promise

(3.1) A person referred to in subsection (3) shall not be asked any questions regarding their understanding of the nature of the promise to tell the truth for the purpose of determining whether their evidence shall be received by the court.

Evidence shall be received

(3) The evidence of a proposed witness under fourteen years of age shall be received if they are able to understand and respond to questions.

Burden as to capacity of witness

(4) A party who challenges the capacity of a proposed witness under fourteen years of age has the burden of satisfying the court that there is an issue as to the capacity of the proposed witness to understand and respond to questions.

Promise to tell truth

(6) The court shall, before permitting a proposed witness under fourteen years of age to give evidence, require them to promise to tell the truth.

Understanding of promise

(7) No proposed witness under fourteen years of age shall be asked any questions regarding their understanding of the nature of the promise to tell the truth for the purpose of determining whether their evidence shall be received by the court.

Disclosure order

(5) If the court having jurisdiction to hear the application concludes that the disclosure of the information to which the objection was made under subsection (1) would encroach upon a specified public interest, but that the public interest in disclosure outweighs in importance the specified public interest, the court may, by order, after considering both the public interest in disclosure and the form of and conditions to disclosure that are most likely to limit any encroachment upon the specified public interest resulting from disclosure, authorize the disclosure, subject to any conditions that the court considers appropriate, of all of the information, a part or summary of the information, or a written admission of facts relating to the information.

Exceptional circumstances

37.2 Notwithstanding any other Act of Parliament,

(a) an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from a judgment made under subsection 37.1(1) shall be made within 10 days after the date of the judgment appealed from or within any further time that the court having jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal considers appropriate in the circumstances; and

Procedure

(5) As soon as they are seized of a motion under this section, the judge

(a) must hear the representations of the Attorney General of Canada with respect to making the motion public;

(b) must, if they decide that the motion should be made public, make an order to that effect;

(c) must hear the representations of the Attorney General of Canada concerning the identity of all parties or witnesses whose interests may be affected by either the prohibition of disclosure or the conditions to which disclosure is subject and concerning the persons who should be given notice of any hearing of the matter;

Disclosure — conditions

(2) If the judge concludes that the disclosure of the information or facts would be injurious to international relations or national defence or national security but that the public interest in disclosure outweighs in importance the public interest in non-disclosure, the judge may by order, after considering both the public interest in disclosure and the form of and conditions to disclosure that are most likely to limit any injury to international relations or national defence or national security resulting from disclosure, authorize the disclosure, subject to any conditions that the judge considers appropriate, of all or part of the information or facts, a summary of the information or a written admission of facts relating to the information.

Order confirming prohibition

(3) If the judge does not authorize disclosure under subsection (1) or (2), the judge must, by order, confirm the prohibition of disclosure.

When determination takes effect

(4) An order of the judge that authorizes disclosure does not take effect until the time provided or granted to appeal the order has expired or, if the order is appealed, the time provided or granted to appeal a judgment of an appeal court that confirms the order has expired and no further appeal from a judgment that confirms the order is available.

Evidence

(5) The judge may receive into evidence anything that, in the opinion of the judge, is reliable and appropriate, even if it would not otherwise be admissible under Canadian law, and may base their decision on that evidence.

Whereas the Governor in Council is satisfied that the technology or process prescribed in the annexed Secure Electronic Signature Regulations can be proved to meet the requirements set out in paragraphs 48(2)(a) to (d) of the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act[a];

Therefore, Her Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, pursuant to subsection 48(1) of the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act[a] and paragraph 31.4(a)[b] of the Canada Evidence Act, hereby makes the annexed Secure Electronic Signature Regulations.

asymmetric cryptography means a cryptographic system that relies on key pairs. (système de chiffrement à clé publique)

certification authority means a person or entity that issues digital signature certificates and that is listed as such on the website of the Treasury Board Secretariat. (autorité de certification) digital signature certificate, in respect of a person, means an electronic document that

(a) identifies the certification authority that issued it and is digitally signed by that certification authority;

(b) identifies, or can be used to identify, the person; and

(c) contains the person's public key. (certificat de signature numérique)

entity includes any federal department, branch, office, board, agency, commission, corporation or body for the administration of the affairs of which a minister of the Crown is accountable to Parliament. (entité)

hash function means an electronic one-way mathematical process that converts data contained in an electronic document into a message digest that is unique to that data in a way that, were that data changed, it would, on conversion, result in a changed message digest. (fonction de hachage)

key pair means a pair of keys held by or for a person that includes a private key and a public key that are mathematically related to, but different from, each other. (biclé)

private key means a string of data that

(a) is used in asymmetric cryptography to encrypt data contained in an electronic document; and

(b) is unique to the person who is identified in, or can be identified through, a digital signature certificate and corresponds only to the public key in that certificate. (clé privée)

public key means a string of data contained in a digital signature certificate that

(a) is used in asymmetric cryptography to decrypt data contained in an electronic document that was encrypted through the application of the private key in the key pair; and

(b) corresponds only to the private key in the key pair. (clé publique)

SOR/2011-71, s. 1(E).

Technology or Process

2 For the purposes of the definition secure electronic signature in subsection 31(1) of the Act, a secure electronic signature in respect of data contained in an electronic document is a digital signature that results from completion of the following consecutive operations:

(a) application of the hash function to the data to generate a message digest;

(b) application of a private key to encrypt the message digest;

(c) incorporation in, attachment to, or association with the electronic document of the encrypted message digest;

(d) transmission of the electronic document and encrypted message digest together with either

(i) a digital signature certificate, or

(ii) a means of access to a digital signature certificate; and

(e) after receipt of the electronic document, the encrypted message digest and the digital signature certificate or the means of access to the digital signature certificate,

(i) application of the public key contained in the digital signature certificate to decrypt the encrypted message digest and produce the message digest referred to in paragraph (a),

(ii) application of the hash function to the data contained in the electronic document to generate a new message digest,

(iii) verification that, on comparison, the message digests referred to in paragraph (a) and subparagraph (ii) are identical, and

(iv) verification that the digital signature certificate is valid in accordance with section 3.

3 (1) A digital signature certificate is valid if, at the time when the data contained in an electronic document is digitally signed in accordance with section 2, the certificate

(a) is readable or perceivable by any person or entity who is entitled to have access to the digital signature certificate; and

(b) has not expired or been revoked.

(2) In addition to the requirements for validity set out in subsection (1), when the digital signature certificate is supported by other digital signature certificates, in order for the digital signature certificate to be valid, the supporting certificates must also be valid in accordance with that subsection.

4 (1) Before recognizing a person or entity as a certification authority, the President of the Treasury Board must verify that the person or entity has the capacity to issue digital signature certificates in a secure and reliable manner within the context of these Regulations and paragraphs 48(2)(a) to (d) of the Act.

(2) Every person or entity that is recognized as a certification authority by the President of the Treasury Board shall be listed on the website of the Treasury Board Secretariat.

Presumption

5 When the technology or process set out in section 2 is used in respect of data contained in an electronic document, that data is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have been signed by the person who is identified in, or can be identified through, the digital signature certificate.

Applications for judicial review

2 (1) On an application by way of originating notice, which may be styled "Notice of Application for Judicial Review", the court may, despite any right of appeal, by order grant any relief that the applicant would be entitled to in any one or more of the following:

1. Proceedings by way of application for an order in the nature of mandamus, prohibition or certiorari.

(2) The power of the court to set aside a decision for error of law on the face of the record on an application for an order in the nature of certiorari is extended so as to apply on an application for judicial review in relation to any decision made in the exercise of any statutory power of decision to the extent it is not limited or precluded by the Act conferring such power of decision. R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1, s. 2 (2).

Lack of evidence

Defects in form, technical irregularities

3 On an application for judicial review in relation to a statutory power of decision, where the sole ground for relief established is a defect in form or a technical irregularity, if the court finds that no substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice has occurred, the court may refuse relief and, where the decision has already been made, may make an order validating the decision, despite such defect, to have effect from such time and on such terms as the court considers proper. R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1, s. 3.

Interim order

4 On an application for judicial review, the court may make such interim order as it considers proper pending the final determination of the application. R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1, s. 4.

Time for bringing application

Extension

(2) The court may, on such terms as it considers proper, extend the time for making an application for judicial review if it is satisfied that there are apparent grounds for relief and that no substantial prejudice or hardship will result to any person affected by reason of the delay. 2020, c. 11, Sched. 10, s. 2.

Same, other Acts

(3) Subsection (2) applies with respect to any limitation of time for the bringing of an application for judicial review under any other Act, unless that Act expressly provides otherwise. 2020, c. 11, Sched. 10, s. 2.

(6) The filed affidavit and report shall form part of the evidence at the hearing of the proceeding. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 14.

Attendance on report

(7) Where a party to the proceeding disputes the facts set out in the report, the Children's Lawyer shall if directed by the court, and may when not so directed, attend the hearing on behalf of the child and cause the person who conducted the investigation or meeting under subsection (1) to attend as a witness. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 14.

Agreement preventing third party claim or crossclaim

113 Rules of court permitting a defendant to make a third party claim or crossclaim apply despite any agreement that provides that no action may be brought until after judgment against the defendant. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 113.

Agreement as to place of hearing

114 Where a party moves to change the place of hearing in a proceeding, an agreement as to the place of hearing is not binding, but may be taken into account. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 114.

Security

115 Where a person is required to give security in respect of a proceeding in a court, a bond of an insurer licensed under the Insurance Act to write surety and fidelity insurance is sufficient, unless the court orders otherwise. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 115; 1997, c. 19, s. 32.

Periodic payment and review of damages

116 (1) In a proceeding where damages are claimed for personal injuries or under Part V of the Family Law Act for loss resulting from the injury to or death of a person, the court,

(a) if all affected parties consent, may order the defendant to pay all or part of the award for damages periodically on such terms as the court considers just; and

(b) if the plaintiff requests that an amount be included in the award to offset any liability for income tax on income from the investment of the award, shall order the defendant to pay all or part of the award periodically on such terms as the court considers just. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 116 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 1 (20).

No order

(2) An order under clause (1) (b) shall not be made if the parties otherwise consent or if the court is of the opinion that the order would not be in the best interests of the plaintiff, having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

Best interests

(3) In considering the best interests of the plaintiff, the court shall take into account,

(a) whether the defendant has sufficient means to fund an adequate scheme of periodic payments;

(b) whether the plaintiff has a plan or a method of payment that is better able to meet the interests of the plaintiff than periodic payments by the defendant; and

(c) whether a scheme of periodic payments is practicable having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

Future review

(4) In an order made under this section, the court may, with the consent of all the affected parties, order that the award be subject to future review and revision in such circumstances and on such terms as the court considers just.

Amount to offset liability for income tax

(5) If the court does not make an order for periodic payment under subsection (1), it shall make an award for damages that shall include an amount to offset liability for income tax on income from investment of the award. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 116 (2-5).

Periodic payment, medical malpractice actions

116.1 (1) Despite section 116, in a medical malpractice action where the court determines that the award for the future care costs of the plaintiff exceeds the prescribed amount, the court shall, on a motion by the plaintiff or a defendant that is liable to pay the plaintiff's future care costs, order that the damages for the future care costs of the plaintiff be satisfied by way of periodic payments. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

The order

(2) If the court makes an order under subsection (1), the court shall determine the amount and frequency of the periodic payments without regard to inflation and shall order the defendant to provide security for those payments in the form of an annuity contract that satisfies the criteria set out in subsection (3). 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Form of security

(3) The annuity contract shall satisfy the following criteria:

1. The annuity contract must be issued by a life insurer.

2. The annuity must be designed to generate payments in respect of which the beneficiary is not required to pay income taxes.

3. The annuity must include protection from inflation to a degree reasonably available in the market for such annuities. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Directions from the court

(4) If the parties are unable to agree on the terms of the annuity, either party may seek directions from the court about the terms. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Filing and approval of plan

(5) Unless the court orders otherwise, a proposed plan to provide security required by an order under subsection (2) shall be filed with the court within 30 days of the judgment or within another period that the court may specify, and the court may approve the proposed plan, with or without modifications. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Effect of providing security

(6) If security is provided in accordance with a plan approved by the court, the defendant by whom or on whose behalf the security is provided is discharged from all liability to the plaintiff in respect of damages that are to be paid by periodic payments, but the owner of the security remains liable for the periodic payments until they are paid. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Effect of not providing security

(7) If a proposed plan is not filed in accordance with subsection (5) or is not approved by the court, the court shall, at the request of any party to the proceeding, vacate the portions of the judgment in which periodic payments are awarded and substitute a lump sum award. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Application for lump sum

(8) The court may order that the future care costs be paid in whole or in part by way of a lump sum payment to the extent that the plaintiff satisfies the court that a periodic payment award is unjust, having regard to the capacity of the periodic payment award to meet the needs for which the damages award for future care costs is intended to provide compensation. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Amount to offset liability for income tax

(9) If the court does not make an order for periodic payments under subsection (1) or makes an order for a lump sum payment under subsection (7) or (8), the court shall make an award for damages that shall include an amount to offset liability for income tax on income from investment of the award except to the extent that the evidence shows that the plaintiff will not derive taxable income from investing the award. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Periodic payments exempt from garnishment, etc.

(10) Periodic payments of damages for future care costs are exempt from seizure or garnishment to the same extent that wages are exempt under section 7 of the Wages Act, unless the seizure or garnishment is made by a provider of care to the plaintiff and the seizure or garnishment is to pay for the costs of products, services or accommodations or any one of them with respect to the plaintiff. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Future review

(11) In an order made under this section, the court may, with the consent of all the affected parties, order that the award be subject to future review and revision in such circumstances and on such terms as the court considers just. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Regulations

(12) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing or calculating the amount of future care costs for the purpose of subsection (1). 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Definitions

(13) In this section,

"future care costs" means the cost of medical care or treatment, rehabilitation services or other care, treatment, services, products or accommodations that is incurred at a time after judgment; ("coûts des soins futurs")

"medical malpractice action" means an action for personal injuries alleged to have arisen from negligence or malpractice in respect of professional services requested of, or rendered by, a health professional who is a member of a health profession as defined in the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991 or an employee of the health professional or for which a hospital as defined in the Public Hospitals Act is held liable; ("action pour faute professionnelle médicale")

"prescribed amount" means $250,000 or such greater amount as may be prescribed by regulation, calculated as a present value at the time of judgment in accordance with the Rules of Civil Procedure. ("montant prescrit") 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Transition

(14) This section applies to all proceedings in which a final judgment at trial or final settlement has not been made on the day the Access to Justice Act, 2006 receives Royal Assent. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 17.

Assessment of damages

117 Where damages are to be assessed in respect of,

(a) a continuing cause of action;

(b) repeated breaches of a recurring obligation; or

(c) intermittent breaches of a continuing obligation, the damages, including damages for breaches occurring after the commencement of the proceeding, shall be assessed down to the time of the assessment. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 117.

Guidance and submissions

118 In an action for damages for personal injury, the court may give guidance to the jury on the amount of damages and the parties may make submissions to the jury on the amount of damages. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 118.

Power of court on appeal

119 On an appeal from an award for damages for personal injury, the court may, if it considers it just, substitute its own assessment of the damages. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 119.

Advance payments

120 (1) If a defendant makes a payment to a plaintiff who is or alleges to be entitled to recover from the defendant, the payment constitutes, to the extent of the payment, a release by the plaintiff or the plaintiff's personal representative of any claim that the plaintiff or the plaintiff's personal representative or any person claiming through or under the plaintiff or by virtue of Part V of the Family Law Act may have against the defendant.

Same

(2) Nothing in this section precludes the defendant making the payment from demanding, as a condition precedent to such payment, a release from the plaintiff or the plaintiff's personal representative or any other person to the extent of such payment.

Payment to be taken into account

(3) The court shall adjudicate upon the matter first without reference to the payment but, in giving judgment, the payment shall be taken into account and the plaintiff shall only be entitled to judgment for the net amount, if any.

Disclosure

(4) The fact of any payment shall not be disclosed to the judge or jury until after judgment but shall be disclosed before formal entry thereof. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 120.

Foreign money obligations

121 (1) Subject to subsections (3) and (4), where a person obtains an order to enforce an obligation in a foreign currency, the order shall require payment of an amount in Canadian currency sufficient to purchase the amount of the obligation in the foreign currency at a bank in Ontario listed in Schedule I to the Bank Act (Canada) at the close of business on the first day on which the bank quotes a Canadian dollar rate for purchase of the foreign currency before the day payment of the obligation is received by the creditor.

Multiple payments

(2) Where more than one payment is made under an order referred to in subsection (1), the rate of conversion shall be the rate determined as provided in subsection (1) for each payment.

Discretion of court

(3) Subject to subsection (4), where, in a proceeding to enforce an obligation in a foreign currency, the court is satisfied that conversion of the amount of the obligation to Canadian currency as provided in subsection (1) would be inequitable to any party, the order may require payment of an amount in Canadian currency sufficient to purchase the amount of the obligation in the foreign currency at a bank in Ontario on such other day as the court considers equitable in the circumstances.

Other obligations that include conversion

(4) Where an obligation enforceable in Ontario provides for a manner of conversion to Canadian currency of an amount in a foreign currency, the court shall give effect to the manner of conversion in the obligation.

Enforcement by seizure or garnishment

(5) Where a writ of seizure and sale or notice of garnishment is issued under an order to enforce an obligation in a foreign currency, the day the sheriff, bailiff or clerk of the court receives money under the writ or notice shall be deemed, for the purposes of this section and any obligation referred to in subsection (4), to be the day payment is received by the creditor. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 121.

Actions for accounting

122 (1) Where an action for an accounting could have been brought against a person, the action may be brought against the person's personal representative. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 122 (1).

Prejudgment interest

128 (1) A person who is entitled to an order for the payment of money is entitled to claim and have included in the order an award of interest thereon at the prejudgment interest rate, calculated from the date the cause of action arose to the date of the order. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 128 (1).

Exception for non-pecuniary loss on personal injury

(2) Despite subsection (1), the rate of interest on damages for non-pecuniary loss in an action for personal injury shall be the rate determined by the rules of court made under clause 66 (2) (w). R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 128 (2); 1994, c. 12, s. 44.

Costs assessed without order

(4) Where costs are assessed without an order, the costs bear interest at the postjudgment interest rate in the same manner as if an order were made for the payment of costs on the date the person to whom the costs are payable became entitled to the costs.

Costs if motion to dismiss denied

29 Where a difference arises between the Crown and the judges' associations relating to the implementation of recommendations properly within the scope of issues set out in paragraph 13, except those related to pensions, the difference shall be referred to the Commission and, subject to affording the Crown and the judges' associations the opportunity to make representation thereupon to the Commission, its decision is final and binding on the Crown and the judges' associations.

38 The parties agree that the decision of the Commission, as set out in paragraph 36, shall be given every consideration and very great weight by the Management Board of Cabinet.

39 Neither party can utilize the dispute clauses to limit, or to narrow, the scope of the Commission's review as set out under paragraph 13, or the binding effect of recommendations within its scope as set out under paragraphs 27 and 28.

40 The parties agree that in the event that an item(s) is referred to the Commission under paragraph 34, the Minister will proceed to implement the other recommendations of the Commission as set out in paragraphs 27, 28 and 33, except where the matter in dispute under paragraph 34 directly impacts the remaining items.

Review

41 The parties agree that either party may, at any time, request the other party to meet and discuss improvements to the process.

42 The parties agree that any amendments agreed to by the parties in paragraph 41 shall have the same force and effect as if enacted by the

2. Determine the Industrial Aggregate for the twelve-month period immediately preceding the period referred to in paragraph 1.

3. Calculate the percentage that the Industrial Aggregate under paragraph 1 is of the Industrial Aggregate under paragraph 2.

4. If the percentage calculated under paragraph 3 exceeds 100 per cent, the salaries are to be calculated by multiplying the appropriate salaries for the year preceding the year for which the salaries are to be calculated by the lesser of that percentage and 107 per cent.

5. If the percentage calculated under paragraph 3 does not exceed 100 per cent, the salaries shall remain unchanged.

46 In paragraph 45, "Industrial Aggregate" for a twelve-month period is the average for the twelve-month period of the weekly wages and salaries of the Industrial Aggregate in Canada as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act (Canada).

4. Rule 35 (Examination for Discovery by Written Questions). O. Reg. 438/08, s. 25.

Considerations

General

29.2.03 (1) In making a determination as to whether a party or other person must answer a question or produce a document, the court shall consider whether,

(a) the time required for the party or other person to answer the question or produce the document would be unreasonable;

(b) the expense associated with answering the question or producing the document would be unjustified;

(c) requiring the party or other person to answer the question or produce the document would cause him or her undue prejudice;

(d) requiring the party or other person to answer the question or produce the document would unduly interfere with the orderly progress of the action; and

(e) the information or the document is readily available to the party requesting it from another source. O. Reg. 438/08, s. 25.

Overall Volume of Documents

(2) In addition to the considerations listed in subrule (1), in determining whether to order a party or other person to produce one or more documents, the court shall consider whether such an order would result in an excessive volume of documents required to be produced by the party or other person. O. Reg. 438/08, s. 25.

R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 30.04 (7).

Divided Disclosure or Production

When Examination may be Initiated

Examination of Plaintiff

Considerations for Leave

(2) In determining whether leave should be granted under subrule (1), the court shall consider,

(c) the amount of time that ought reasonably to be required in the action for oral examinations;

(d) the financial position of each party;

(e) the conduct of any party, including a party's unresponsiveness in any examinations for discovery held previously in the action, such as failure to answer questions on grounds other than privilege or the questions being obviously irrelevant, failure to provide complete answers to questions, or providing answers that are evasive, irrelevant, unresponsive or unduly lengthy;

(a) the information sought is evidence;

(b) the question constitutes cross-examination, unless the question is directed solely to the credibility of the witness; or

(c) the question constitutes cross-examination on the affidavit of documents of the party being examined. R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 31.06 (1); O. Reg. 438/08, s. 30 (1).

Divided Discovery

(6) Where information may become relevant only after the determination of an issue in the action and the disclosure of the information before the issue is determined would seriously prejudice a party, the court on the party's motion may grant leave to withhold the information until after the issue has been determined. R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 31.06 (6).

Failure to Answer on Discovery

Failure to Answer Questions

not introduce at the trial the information that was not provided, except with leave of the trial judge. O. Reg. 260/05, s. 7.

Additional Sanction

Obligatory Status of Undertakings

(4) For greater certainty, nothing in these rules relieves a party or other person who undertakes to answer a question from the obligation to honour the undertaking. O. Reg. 260/05, s. 7.

Effect of Lawyer Answering

31.08 Questions on an oral examination for discovery shall be answered by the person being examined but, where there is no objection, the question may be answered by his or her lawyer and the answer shall be deemed to be the answer of the person being examined unless, before the conclusion of the examination, the person repudiates, contradicts or qualifies the answer. R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 31.08; O. Reg. 575/07, s. 4.

Information Subsequently Obtained

Duty to Correct Answers

31.09 (1) Where a party has been examined for discovery or a person has been examined for discovery on behalf or in place of, or in addition to the party, and the party subsequently discovers that the answer to a question on the examination, the party shall forthwith provide the information in writing to every other party. R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 31.09 (1).

Costs Consequences if Multiple Defendants

49.11 Where there are two or more defendants, the plaintiff may offer to settle with any defendant and any defendant may offer to settle with the plaintiff, but where the defendants are alleged to be jointly or jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff in respect of a claim and rights of contribution or indemnity may exist between the defendants, the costs consequences prescribed by rule 49.10 do not apply to an offer to settle unless,

(a) in the case of an offer made by the plaintiff, the offer is made to all the defendants, and is an offer to settle the claim against all the defendants; or

(b) in the case of an offer made to the plaintiff,

(i) the offer is an offer to settle the plaintiff's claim against all the defendants and to pay the costs of any defendant who does not join in making the offer, or

(b) to indemnify the defendant who made the offer for any costs that defendant is liable to pay to the plaintiff, or to do both. R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 49.12 (2).

(3) Rules 49.04, 49.05, 49.06 and 49.13 apply to an offer to contribute as if it were an offer to settle. R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 49.12 (3).

Discretion of Court

49.13 Despite rules 49.03, 49.10 and 49.11, the court, in exercising its discretion with respect to costs, may take into account any offer to settle made in writing, the date the offer was made and the terms of the offer. R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 49.13.
