Courts in both England and the United States have traditionally recognized the existence of a common law right to inspect and copy judicial records. This right has often been referred to as a "right of access". It has a long and honoured history, gaining recognition as early as the fourteenth century. In 1644, Lord Coke advocated an unrestricted right of access to judicial records. In England, however, while all persons enjoyed a general right of access, only those with an evidentiary or proprietary interest in the records were able to enforce their right if it were denied them.

The American approach, on the other hand, was based on a clear general right of access to court records, the enforcement of which was not restricted to those asserting a special interest in the documents. Generally, the American approach has favoured access for all citizens. As early as 1894, American courts recognized the right of access to judicial records including transcripts, evidence and other material. They did so on the basis that the denial of access would be an attempt to maintain secrecy in judicial records and would conflict with "the common understanding of what belongs to a public court of record, to which all persons have the right of access, and to its records, according to long established usage and practice". See Ex parte Drawbaugh, 2 App. D.C. 404, at pp. 407-8.

B. The United States Supreme Court and the Open Court Principle

The open court principle has two facets. The first is the right of the public and of the media, as members or agents of the public, to attend trials and court proceedings and to report on all that transpires. The second facet is the right of the public to scrutinize and criticize the judicial process. In order to exercise this right effectively, it is necessary to have full access to the information upon which such scrutiny and criticism may be based.

The United States Supreme Court has on several occasions emphasized the importance of public scrutiny of the judicial process. In Craig v. Harney, 331 U.S. 367 (1947), the court stressed the public nature of court proceedings and vindicated the right of members of the press to report on them. In his reasons, Douglas J. stated, at p. 374: "A trial is a public event. What transpires in the court room is public property. . . . Those who see and hear what transpired can report it with impunity."

The importance of the press in securing the principle of open courts and court processes was emphasized again by the U.S. Supreme Court in Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333 (1966), where it stated (at p. 350):

A responsible press has always been regarded as the handmaiden of effective judicial administration, especially in the criminal field. . . . The press does not simply publish information about trials but guards against the miscarriage of justice by subjecting the police, prosecutors, and judicial processes to extensive public scrutiny and criticism.

In Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn, 420 U.S. 469 (1975), the Supreme Court stressed the importance of the public's right to know the contents of public records. Although recognizing the legitimacy of privacy concerns, the court relied on the First Amendment to conclude (at p. 491) that the State could not impose sanctions on the accurate publication of the name of a rape victim obtained from public records -- more specifically, from judicial records which are maintained in connection with a public prosecution and which themselves are open to public inspection.

The court emphasized the need in modern society for full and open access to public records. It stated (at p. 495):

Public records by their very nature are of interest to those concerned with the administration of government, and a public benefit is performed by the reporting of the true contents of the records by the media. The freedom of the press to publish that information appears to us to be of critical importance to our type of government in which the citizenry is the final judge of the proper conduct of public business. In preserving that form of government the First and Fourteenth Amendments command nothing less than that the States may not impose sanctions on the publication of truthful information contained in official court records open to public inspection.

The Cox decision also contains important observations about the role of the media in facilitating public debate and in furthering the open court principle. The court stated (at pp. 491-92):

. . . in a society in which each individual has but limited time and resources with which to observe at first hand the operations of his government, he relies necessarily upon the press to bring to him in convenient form the facts of those operations. Great responsibility is accordingly placed upon the news media to report fully and accurately upon the proceedings of government, and official records and documents open to the public are the basic data of governmental operations. Without the information provided by the press most of us and many of our representatives would be unable to vote intelligently or to register opinions on the administration of government generally. With respect to judicial proceedings in particular, the function of the press serves to guarantee the fairness of trials and to bring to bear the beneficial effects of public scrutiny upon the administration of justice.

See also Nebraska Press Assn. v. Stuart, 427 U.S. 539 (1976), where the Supreme Court again reaffirmed the essential role of the press in safeguarding effective judicial administration by exposing the judicial process to public scrutiny.

Finally, the U.S. Supreme Court in Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555 (1980), held that the right to attend criminal trials is implicit in the guarantees of the First Amendment. On behalf of the majority, Burger C.J. recognized public access to the criminal courtroom as a right guaranteed by the American Constitution and, in doing so, emphasized the importance of public acceptance of the criminal justice process. At page 571, he noted that:

. . . especially in the administration of criminal justice, the means used to achieve justice must have the support derived from public acceptance of both the process and its results.

He went on to state (at pp. 571-73):

When a shocking crime occurs, a community reaction of outrage and public protest often follows. . . . Thereafter the open processes of justice serve an important prophylactic purpose, providing an outlet for community concern, hostility, and emotion. Without an awareness that society's responses to criminal conduct are underway, natural human reactions of outrage and protest are frustrated and may manifest themselves in some form of vengeful "self-help," . . .

The crucial prophylactic aspects of the administration of justice cannot function in the dark; no community catharsis can occur if justice is "done in a corner [or] in any covert manner." . . . It is not enough to say that results alone will satiate the natural community desire for "satisfaction." A result considered untoward may undermine public confidence, and where the trial has been concealed from public view an unexpected outcome can cause a reaction that the system at best has failed and at worst has been corrupted. To work effectively, it is important that society's criminal process "satisfy the appearance of justice,"

Instead of acquiring information about trials by firsthand observation or by word of mouth from those who attended, people now acquire it chiefly through the print and electronic media. In a sense, this validates the media claim of functioning as surrogates for the public. While media representatives enjoy the same right of access as the public, they often are provided special seating and priority of entry so that they may report what people in attendance have seen and heard. This "contribute[s] to public understanding of the rule of law and to comprehension of the functioning of the entire criminal justice system" [citing the concurring judgment of Brennan J. in Nebraska Press Assn., supra.] [Emphasis added.]

These decisions stress the vital importance of the open court principle and the public scrutiny of the judicial process which it facilitates. In so doing, they provide a context in which to consider the American approach to the more immediate question of access to taped evidence.

C. The American Approach to Access to Audio and Video Tape Evidence

The U.S. Supreme Court considered the issue of public and media access to taped evidence in Nixon v. Warner Communications, Inc., 435 U.S. 589 (1978). The media sought access to audio tapes which had been introduced in evidence at the trial of aides to President Nixon on charges arising out of the Watergate break-ins. During the trial, 22 hours of audio tapes were played for the jury. All those in court, including members of the media, were provided with earphones and transcripts of the tapes. Six weeks after the trial had begun, several broadcasters filed a motion seeking permission to obtain and copy the tapes played at trial. They based their claim on the common law right of access to judicial records. District Court Judge Sirica denied access on the grounds that broadcast of the tapes would endanger the rights of the defendants on appeal. The broadcasters appealed Judge Sirica's order to the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

In United States v. Mitchell, 551 F.2d 1252 (1976), the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals considered the common law right to inspect and copy judicial records and determined that the right is essential to the functioning of a democratic state, although it is not absolute. Since no clear guidelines could be articulated as to when judicial records should be closed to the public, the decision necessarily rested within the discretion of the trial court, subject to appellate review for abuse of discretion. However, the court stated that any incursions on the right of access should be made only where "justice so requires". It observed as well that "once an exhibit is publicly displayed [in open court], the interests in subsequently denying access to it necessarily will be diminished" (p. 1261). The Court of Appeals thus found a strong presumption in favour of access and determined that only compelling circumstances could militate against release. Since such circumstances were absent in that case, the D.C. Court of Appeals overturned the decision of Judge Sirica and granted access to the tapes.

In Nixon v. Warner Communications, supra, the U.S. Supreme Court reviewed the Mitchell decision. In a 5/4 split, the court reversed the Court of Appeals and denied the broadcasters' request for access. The broadcasters had claimed a constitutional right of access under both the free press clause of the First Amendment and the Sixth Amendment guarantee of a public trial. The court rejected these claims. It held that, while physical access to judicial records is a right at common law, the right is not absolute and is not constitutional in nature. In rejecting the Sixth Amendment claim, Powell J. stated at p. 610:

The requirement of a public trial is satisfied by the opportunity of members of the public and the press to attend the trial and to report what they have observed.

It is important to note, however, that this statement was made in refuting the broadcasters' claim to a constitutional right of access. It was not directed to the balancing process required when considering the common law right of access.

With respect to the latter issue, the court held that the general common law right of access is subject to the "sound discretion" of the trial court. It observed that the question of access would typically be resolved by weighing "the interests advanced by the parties in light of the public interest and the duty of the courts", and that this balancing exercise would take place in the larger context of "the presumption -- however gauged -- in favor of public access to judicial records" (p. 602).

At the same time, the court refused to define the scope of the common law right or to identify the specific factors to be weighed in determining whether to grant access. Rather, the majority decided the issue on the basis of "an additional, unique element" not argued by either of the parties -- namely, the Presidential Recordings Act. In the court's view, the Act provided an alternative administrative procedure by which the public could gain access to all presidential materials of historical interest, including the recordings at issue. Accordingly, the court held (at p. 606) that it:

. . . need not weigh the parties' competing arguments as though the District Court were the only potential source of information regarding these historical materials. The presence of an alternative means of public access tips the scales in favor of denying release.

Since then, American federal appeal courts have differed as to the interpretation which should be given to the Nixon decision and have articulated varying approaches to the issue of access to taped evidence.

In the first line of cases, which arose out of various FBI "sting" operations, the Nixon decision was construed narrowly as turning on the applicability of the Presidential Recordings Act. Having distinguished Nixon in this way, several appeal courts followed, either expressly or implicitly, the approach taken by the D.C. Circuit Court in the Mitchell case, supra. They held that the common law right created an extremely strong presumption in favour of access which, though not of constitutional stature, could be overcome only rarely and in the clearest of cases. The holding of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in United States v. Myers, 635 F.2d 945 (1980), is typical. The court stated (at p. 952):

. . . it would take the most extraordinary circumstances to justify restrictions on the opportunity of those not physically in attendance at the courtroom to see and hear the evidence, when it is in a form that readily permits sight and sound reproduction. . . . When physical evidence is in a form that permits inspection and copying without any significant risk of impairing the integrity of the evidence or interfering with the orderly conduct of the trial, only the most compelling circumstances should prevent contemporaneous public access to it.

The same approach was adopted by the Third Circuit Court of Appeals in United States v. Criden, 648 F.2d 814 (1981), and by the District of Columbia Circuit in In re National Broadcasting Co., 653 F.2d 609 (1981).

It is important to consider the grounds advanced in opposition to the release of the tapes in these cases. The defendants argued that access would jeopardize their right to a fair trial as guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment and would also render unfair the pending criminal trials of other defendants through the prejudicial effect publicity would have upon present and prospective jurors. All the appeal courts rejected this argument. They held that standard jury instructions and the examination of prospective jurors in the selection process together provided sufficient mechanisms to safeguard the fair trial rights of criminal defendants from any potential prejudice which might arise from broadcasting the tapes.

A contrary position was taken by the Fifth Circuit in Belo Broadcasting Corp. v. Clark, 654 F.2d 423 (1981). The court accepted that a common law right of access exists, but determined that the standard of appellate review was whether or not the trial court had abused its discretion in its decision regarding access. In direct refutation of the earlier line of authority, the court held that the observations of the trial judge were essential in considering whether a fair trial could be ensured for present and prospective defendants and that the balancing of competing values was heavily reliant on the observations and insights of the presiding judge. The court considered its appellate role to be a narrow one.

In subsequent cases, American appellate courts have attempted to reconcile the more extreme positions and to articulate a "middle ground". The first such attempt was made by the Seventh Circuit in United States v. Edwards, 672 F.2d 1289 (1982). The court recognized the presumption in favour of access and citing the Mitchell case, supra, observed that the "common law right supports and furthers many of the same interests which underlie those freedoms protected by the Constitution" (p. 1294). At the same time, referring to Belo Broadcasting, supra, the court acknowledged that the right was non-constitutional in origin and conceded that a number of factors might militate against public access. It set out its position in these words (at p. 1294):

. . . we hold that there is a strong presumption in support of the common law right to inspect and copy judicial records. Where there is a clash between the common law right of access and a defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial, a court may deny access, but only on the basis of articulable facts known to the court, not on the basis of unsupported hypothesis or conjecture. . . . We stress that it is vital for a court clearly to state the basis of its ruling, so as to permit appellate review of whether relevant factors were considered and given appropriate weight. [Emphasis added.]

This position was echoed by the Sixth Circuit in United States v. Beckham, 789 F.2d 401 (1986), and by the Eighth Circuit in United States v. Webbe, 791 F.2d 103 (1986).

Finally, in Valley Broadcasting Co. v. United States District Court for the District of Nevada, 798 F.2d 1289 (1986), the Ninth Circuit reaffirmed the middle ground position. In so doing, the court expanded upon the holding in Edwards, supra, by specifically requiring the trial judge not only to articulate the reasons for denying access, but also to substantiate possible prejudice with a clear factual basis for the danger. The court put its position this way (at p. 1295):

The only potential prejudice appropriate for consideration by the district court was, therefore, the added prejudice that might result from broadcasting excerpts of the tapes as opposed to simply describing their contents. While we recognize that the added danger of jury taint arising from the transmission of the tapes themselves may vary from case to case, we reemphasize that the district court must articulate the factual basis for the danger without relying on hypothesis or conjecture.

D. General Principles Emerging from the American Cases

The American courts have for many years recognized a common law right of access to judicial records. All courts have held this right to include a common law, but not a constitutional, right of access to taped evidence introduced at trial. There is also a consensus that the decision as to whether to grant access is within the discretion of the trial court, which must balance the relevant interests at stake. In Nixon, the U.S. Supreme Court committed this determination to "the sound discretion" of the trial judge.

American courts have agreed that the standard of appellate review to be applied to the trial judge's determination regarding access is whether there has been an "abuse of discretion". Although there is agreement as to the standard to be applied, there is variation amongst the appellate courts as to whether the application of that standard should be deferential or strict.

All courts considered the media to be the representatives of the public with regard to judicial proceedings. The cases recognize the right and responsibility of the media to keep the public informed of the workings of the courts, particularly in the criminal context. The courts have acknowledged that the media play an essential role in furnishing the information upon which public scrutiny and criticism of court proceedings can properly be based, and that in fulfilling this role the media make a substantial contribution to the democratic process of government. It is the media which make the courts truly accessible and "public".

The American cases indicate that there are several factors weighing in favour of public access to evidentiary tapes. First, it is said that audio and video tapes provide additional meaning to the written word or eyewitness account. Gestures, facial expressions, voice patterns and voice intensity are all modes of communication common to humanity that are lost in transcripts. Second, all persons present in the courtroom at trial witness the tapes as they are introduced into evidence for the benefit of the triers of fact. Broadcasting the tapes publicly would give effect and meaning to the open court principle by allowing members of the public who are unable to be physically present in the courtroom to witness all that privileged members of the public have been able to see for themselves. Third, public broadcasting of the taped evidence allows those who cannot be present at the trial to weigh the evidence and form their own opinion. This, it is said, satisfies both the appearance and the reality of justice within the community. Finally, public access to judicial records permits the public to keep an eye on all branches of government, including the judiciary.

On the other side of the balance, certain interests are put forward as militating against media access to audio and video tapes. In the American cases, the primary countervailing concern is the possible prejudice to the right of an accused to a fair trial. Other interests weighing against access are concerns relating to admissibility and privacy.

It must be remembered that the balancing in the American cases is far different from that required in the case at bar. In the American decisions the common law right of access had to be balanced against the constitutional right of present or prospective defendants to a fair trial as guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment to the American Constitution. In those cases where access was denied, the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial was considered to outweigh the common law right of access. Furthermore, it is not without significance that, despite their concern for the Sixth Amendment rights of present and prospective defendants, the majority of American appellate courts were still willing to grant access.

In the case at bar, the fair trial interest simply does not arise. Nugent stands in no criminal jeopardy. He has been acquitted of the murder charge and the time for any further appeal has long since elapsed. He cannot claim any prejudice to a present or future right to a fair trial. Thus, the primary concern weighing in the balance against access in the American jurisprudence is not present in this case.

It is worth bearing in mind that some of the American cases suggest that the right to a fair trial is the only countervailing interest which could overcome the strong presumption in favour of access. It is significant as well that in the American setting, the principal contention of those writers who argue most vehemently against access is the need to preserve the right of the accused to a fair trial. Furthermore, none of them would recommend that the denial of access be indefinite. See, for example, William J. Whelan, "Copying and Broadcasting Video and Audio Tape Evidence: A Threat to the Fair Trial Right" (1982), 50 Fordham L. Rev. 551, at pp. 580-81:

. . . it is clear that the proper time to stem any possible prejudice is before it is allowed to occur. In the cases that involve requests to copy tapes in evidence, the trial judge should deny their release until all risk of prejudice to the current defendants and to those implicated by the tapes has passed. Only when all rights to appeal are exhausted should the tapes be made available for copying.

. . .

When the records are video and audio tapes introduced into evidence at trial, the presumption in favor of release should not apply. Because there is a reasonable possibility that the broadcast of those tapes will irreparably harm the accused's right to a fair trial, the courts as a matter of law should deny the release of the tapes for copying until the accused is no longer in jeopardy. [Emphasis added.]

In light of the above analysis, it would appear that in the United States the media would be granted access to the tapes filed as exhibits in the trial of Mr. Nugent.

The Factors to be Considered in the Present Case

At the outset, I should say that for the reasons given by my colleague, I agree that the appellant's argument that his s. 2\(b\) Charter right to freedom of expression had been breached should not be considered. This argument was not raised before the judge of first instance and, although argued before the Court of Appeal, was not considered by that court in its reasons.

A. The Nature and Extent of the Common Law Right of Access to Court Documents in Canada

There can be no doubt that there exists in Canada a common law right of access to court documents. The nature and extent of that right will determine the outcome of this appeal. The common law right of access is of fundamental importance to the functioning of courts and to the preservation of public confidence in court processes. The right of access was considered in the pre-Charter case of Attorney General of Nova Scotia v. MacIntyre, 1982 CanLII 14 \(SCC\), [1982] 1 S.C.R. 175. In that case Dickson J., as he then was, clearly acknowledged that there is a strong general presumption in favour of access to judicial records. At page 184 he stated:

In short, what should be sought is maximum accountability and accessibility but not to the extent of harming the innocent or of impairing the efficiency of the search warrant as a weapon in society's never-ending fight against crime.

He went on to observe that there is a need for contextual balancing in deciding whether to grant access in individual cases. After noting the general right to inspect and copy public records that exists in the United States, he said at p. 183:

By reason of the relatively few judicial decisions it is difficult, and probably unwise, to attempt any comprehensive definition of the right of access to judicial records or delineation of the factors to be taken into account in determining whether access is to be permitted. The question before us is limited to search warrants and informations. The response to that question, it seems to me, should be guided by several broad policy considerations, namely, respect for the privacy of the individual, protection of the administration of justice, implementation of the will of Parliament that a search warrant be an effective aid in the investigation of crime, and finally, a strong public policy in favour of "openness" in respect of judicial acts.

In emphasizing the need for openness with respect to judicial acts, Dickson J. stated at p. 185:

It is now well established, however, that covertness is the exception and openness the rule. Public confidence in the integrity of the court system and understanding of the administration of justice are thereby fostered. As a general rule the sensibilities of the individuals involved are no basis for exclusion of the public from judicial proceedings.

B. Some General Policy Considerations

It is important that the public have confidence in the workings and proceedings of the courts. There can be a cathartic effect to a criminal trial. When a serious crime has been committed, the community quite naturally is outraged. In earlier times that sense of outrage sometimes led to vengeful acts which triggered a chain of violent action and reaction and occasionally led to mob violence. The criminal trial has pre-empted violence by providing an outlet and a means of sublimating the community's sense of outrage at the commission of a serious crime. It provides both a stage and a forum whereby the alleged crime can be explored and, if the accused is found to be guilty, the appropriate penalty imposed. An open trial process demonstrates to all, whether the family of the victim, the family of the accused, or the members of the community in general, that the entire criminal process has been conducted fairly and that those accused of crimes have been dealt with justly.

To operate effectively, the criminal law must have the support of the community. The public has traditionally, and very properly, had a compelling interest in the criminal trial process. In simpler days gone by, a significant segment of the community could attend criminal proceedings. Those who were present could and did advise their families and friends as to the nature of those proceedings. The process was, in the truest sense of the term, open to the public.

Obviously times have changed. Courtroom space is limited. Even if it were not, it is impossible for most members of the community to attend in court no matter how much they might wish to do so. Obligations to work and family make attendance impossible. The public is now represented by members of the media who are, in a very practical sense, the proxies of the community at the trial process. This has been recognized by reserving a special place for members of the press in most courtrooms.

The public has accepted the media as their representatives at the unfolding of the criminal process. However, it necessarily follows that the modern community must rely upon the media for a fair and accurate depiction of the proceedings in order to facilitate the public right to comment on and criticize that process. This simply cannot be done without the degree of openness which would provide the media with full access to court documents, records and exhibits. The more barriers that are placed in the way of access, the more suspect the proceedings become and the greater will be the irrational criticism of the process. It is through the press that the vitally important concept of the open court is preserved.

The open court principle has been clearly recognized by this Court in previous decisions. As noted above, the MacIntyre case, supra, emphasized the importance of public scrutiny of the courts. More recently, in Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), 1989 CanLII 20 \(SCC\), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326, I discussed the open court principle in the context of the s. 2\(b\) Charter right to freedom of expression. I stated at p. 1339:

It can be seen that freedom of expression is of fundamental importance to a democratic society. It is also essential to a democracy and crucial to the rule of law that the courts are seen to function openly. The press must be free to comment upon court proceedings to ensure that the courts are, in fact, seen by all to operate openly in the penetrating light of public scrutiny.

With regard to the role which the media play in advancing this principle, the following appears at p. 1340:

It is only through the press that most individuals can really learn of what is transpiring in the courts. They as "listeners" or readers have a right to receive this information. Only then can they make an assessment of the institution. Discussion of court cases and constructive criticism of court proceedings is dependent upon the receipt by the public of information as to what transpired in court. Practically speaking, this information can only be obtained from the newspapers or other media.

Although these remarks were made in the Charter context, the underlying principles are of general application and import in a democratic society. The rationale of the open court principle is important to the balancing exercise whether under the Charter or, as in the present case, at common law.

Appeals are the natural and frequent continuation of the criminal trial process. What is the community to make of a situation where an accused has been found guilty and the decision reversed by a court of appeal? No matter how right and proper that appellate decision may be, it will always be difficult for a community to accept. These difficulties will be magnified if the appellate court decision is based upon material which is not made accessible to the public's representative, the media.

Therefore, like the criminal trial, the criminal appeal should be as open as possible. The media, as the public's representative, should have access to all the exhibits which are part of the appeal proceedings and which may form the basis for the appellate court's decision. There can be no confidence in the criminal law process unless the public is satisfied with all court proceedings from the beginning of the process to the end of the final appeal. Of the three levels of government, it is the courts above all which must operate openly. While what is done in secret is forever suspect, what is done openly, whether susceptible to praise or condemnation, is more likely to meet with acceptance. There cannot be reasonable comment or criticism unless all aspects of the proceedings are known to the public.

In the absence of some overriding principle, there should, in my view, be access to the tapes filed as exhibits at trial and on appeal. Particularly is this true in a situation such as the present where the issue of the admissibility of the tapes formed the very basis of the appeal court decision. Access is essential if the community is to continue to support and have confidence in the work of the courts, particularly in the criminal context. Let us see if there is any such overriding principle applicable in this case.

C.Should Access be Denied on the Grounds that the Tapes were Found to be Inadmissible?

In arguing that access to the tapes should be denied, Nugent emphasized that the tapes had been ruled inadmissible by the Court of Appeal as having been obtained in violation of his Charter and common law rights. Nugent argued that the tapes should not remain part of the public record after the Court of Appeal made "the very pointed rulings that resulted in their inadmissibility".

In the American case of Criden, supra, there was a question as to the admissibility of the tapes filed in evidence. Nevertheless, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the public interest in access prevailed over the issue of admissibility. Noting that the right of access is based on the public's interest in seeing and knowing the events which actually transpired, the Court pointed out that it would be unduly restrictive of the right of access were it to be confined to evidence found to have been properly admitted. Only through access can the public reasonably consider and criticize the rulings of the court, including rulings as to admissibility. Therefore, it would appear that in the United States access to the tapes would not be denied simply because they were ruled inadmissible. The approach of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals seems eminently sound.

It is not without significance that in the case at bar the majority of the Court of Appeal indicated that there was nothing manifest on the videotape itself which would make it inadmissible; rather, it is what had transpired earlier which rendered it so. This contrasts with the situation with respect to some of the audio tapes which should clearly not have been admitted in view of the police conduct recorded on the tapes themselves. Apart from any question of prior police misconduct, a viewing of the videotape demonstrates that there is nothing in it that would cater to a morbid or prurient appetite. It is a measured, unemotional recounting of a killing. If anything to do with a murder case can be said to be unexceptional, this tape fits that description.

Should the issue of admissibility in itself prohibit access to the tapes? I think not. The media as the agent of the public ought to have access to the tapes and be able to make copies of them. The public has a right to know what was excluded by the appellate court and the reason for its exclusion. To prohibit access to all evidence which has been ruled inadmissible would permit the courts to operate in secret.

Although it is necessary and appropriate that rulings be made at the trial level as to what may be properly admitted for consideration by the triers of fact, the trial is now over. The principal issue in the Court of Appeal was the admissibility of the taped evidence. There should not be a priestly cult of the law whereby lawyers and judges exclusively determine those items of the appeal record which can be seen and heard by members of the public. What evidence is admitted or excluded usually determines the outcome of a trial. Appeal court decisions on this issue are important to the public. Anything that prevents light being shed upon the subject can only lead to dark suspicion of the process.

The ruling of the Court of Appeal was based to a large extent on the denial to Nugent of his Charter right to counsel. Section 24\(2\) of the Charter provides:

24. . . .

(2) Where . . . a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

The importance of the Charter as the supreme law of the land cannot be denied. It follows as the night the day that the public has a right to know what courts consider to be evidence which is so unacceptable that its admission would bring the administration of justice into disrepute. The public should be able to comment on and, if appropriate, to criticize the court's position on that issue. It is a matter of public importance, interest and concern.

In this case, judicial opinion differed on the issue of admissibility. The trial judge admitted all the tapes. Four members of the Court of Appeal held all of the tapes to be inadmissible. The dissenting member of the court would have admitted the video tape and most of the audio tapes. This diversity of views on the issue of admissibility further supports the case for access, since the public is entitled to know the actual evidence that was the subject of differing judicial opinion. I therefore conclude that the fact that the tapes were ruled inadmissible should not constitute a bar to their accessibility by the media. The public has a right to know what was ruled admissible and the reason for that ruling.

D. Did the Production and Playing of the Tapes in Open Court Satisfy the Common Law Right to Access?

It was argued that the production and playing of the tapes during the trial satisfied the common law right of access and the underlying open court principle.

It may be that in some cases the production of audio or video tapes in open court would satisfy the public's right of access to those tapes. However, it cannot be forgotten that the ruling as to their inadmissibility determined the outcome of the appeal. So far as the community in which Nugent lived was concerned, he had been found guilty by a jury of his peers. The community and the public in general had a right to know the basis for the reversal of that decision by the Court of Appeal.

Surely the media cannot be faulted for not knowing at the time of trial what grounds of appeal might be raised or the issues upon which an appeal would be decided. Even experienced appellate counsel often raise additional legal issues that were not considered at trial. The media, on behalf of the public, are entitled to gain access to and copy the tapes which became the focal point of the appeal. It is neither fair nor reasonable to say that the media at trial should have recognized the legal issue or anticipated the centrality of the question of admissibility of the tapes on appeal and reported and commented on the tapes accordingly.

In my view, it cannot be said that the production of the tapes at trial satisfies the principle of open courts. The appellate proceeding must be as open as the trial. Court records and documents, including exhibits filed at trial which form part of the appeal record, should, as a general rule, be open to all. The fact that the tape has been played before should not weaken any claim for access. Indeed, the fact that the tape has been publicly viewed renders the privacy interest less compelling. The view expressed by the Third Circuit Court of Appeals in the Criden case, supra, is apposite (at p. 828):

Whatever the validity of the original ruling, the tapes were in fact admitted into evidence, their contents publicized, and the transcripts of the tapes released to the press. Thus, whatever privacy right defendants may have claimed in such tapes is irretrievably lost, and if any remedy remains, it must perforce be confined to appellate action with regard to the underlying conviction.

Developments in Canada since 1982 have raised the common law right of access and the open court principle on which it is based to even greater prominence. With the advent of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, courts are playing a far wider role in the affairs of all Canadians than ever before. The concepts of freedom of religion, freedom of expression and equality rights have been and will continue to be before the courts. With this widening judicial role, there is an increased public interest in judicial decisions and their effects. As a result, the principle of open courts has attained ever-greater significance. When the balancing of competing rights and interests is undertaken, due weight must be given to the added importance of open courts. What is done by the courts away from the clear light of public scrutiny fosters public suspicion, no matter how ill-founded that suspicion might be. Suspicion nurtures the cancerous growth of mistrust which must, if possible, be avoided.

In this case, on balancing the privacy considerations of Nugent against the principle of open courts, the openness of the courts must prevail. This result is necessary to avoid ill-founded suspicion of the courts and to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice. It is openness which maintains both the integrity of the court system and public confidence in it. The preservation of that essential policy of openness must outweigh Mr. Nugent's privacy interest in the tapes which were already displayed to the public at the time of trial.

E. Proprietary Interests

Finally, my colleague has raised the issue of proprietary interests in exhibits. With respect, I am of the view that it does not arise in the present case. Regardless of the question of ownership of the audio and video tapes, the fact remains that the tapes were in the custody of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia at the time the application for access was brought. Thus, it was entirely appropriate that a party seeking access apply to the court; indeed, this was the only manner a party seeking access could proceed. Once the application was made, the court was correct in retaining custody of the exhibits until the question of access was determined. Its right to do so flows from a court's supervisory and protecting power over its own records, as recognized by this Court in MacIntyre, supra. As a result, I am of the view that the question of proprietary interest in the tapes is irrelevant to the determination of the present appeal.

Conclusion

There can be no question that there must be a strong presumption in favour of openness to ensure judicial accountability. Certainly, it is clear that the right of access not only facilitates the openness of court processes, but also promotes and advances the constitutional values of freedom of expression. As a result, it is deserving of recognition and protection in appropriate instances, of which the present case is a prime example. Accordingly, I am of the view that access was properly granted in the present case.

The Discretionary Nature of the Order of the Trial Judge and Appellate Review of that Order

There is a further and independent basis for upholding the decision of the judge of first instance. Glube C.J.T.D. considered the matter fully before granting access to the tapes. She was well aware of the effect that the reproduction or broadcast of the tapes might have upon Nugent and specifically reserved the question of what use might be made of the tapes. Referring to the videotape, she stated that steps might be taken to protect the identity of Nugent. It was clearly implicit in her order that before any use could be made of the tapes, the matter was to come before her again once the media had gained access. Thus, the trial judge carefully considered the matter before exercising her discretion. I would note in passing that the question as to what steps might properly be taken to control the use of the tapes is not before this Court. The sole issue is the media's right of access to the tapes.

It is clear that an appellate court should not interfere with a discretionary order unless a significant error is revealed. In Manitoba (Attorney General) v. Metropolitan Stores Ltd., 1987 CanLII 79 (SCC), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 110, Beetz J., speaking for the Court, quoted with approval from the decision of the House of Lords in Hadmor Productions Ltd. v. Hamilton, [1982] 1 All E.R. 1042.

The latter case emphasized the limits imposed upon a court of appeal in substituting its own discretion for that of a motion judge granting an interlocutory injunction, even in situations where the appellate court has had the benefit of additional evidence. In that case Lord Diplock stated:

. . . it is I think appropriate to remind your Lordships of the limited function of an appellate court in an appeal of this kind. An interlocutory injunction is a discretionary relief and the discretion whether or not to grant it is vested in the High Court judge by whom the application for it is heard. On an appeal from the judge's grant or refusal of an interlocutory injunction the function of an appellate court, whether it be the Court of Appeal or your Lordships' House, is not to exercise an independent discretion of its own. It must defer to the judge's exercise of his discretion and must not interfere with it merely on the ground that the members of the appellate court would have exercised the discretion differently. The function of the appellate court is initially one of review only. It may set aside the judge's exercise of his discretion on the ground that it was based on a misunderstanding of the law or of the evidence before him or on an inference that particular facts existed or did not exist, which, although it was one that might legitimately have been drawn on the evidence that was before the judge, can be demonstrated to be wrong by further evidence that has become available by the time of the appeal, or on the ground that there has been a change of circumstances after the judge made his order that would have justified his acceding to an application to vary it. Since reasons given by judges for granting or refusing interlocutory injunctions may sometimes be sketchy, there may also be occasional cases where even though no erroneous assumption of law or fact can be identified the judge's decision to grant or refuse the injunction is so aberrant that it must be set aside on the ground that no reasonable judge regardful of his duty to act judicially could have reached it. It is only if and after the appellate court has reached the conclusion that the judge's exercise of his discretion must be set aside for one or other of these reasons that it becomes entitled to exercise an original discretion of its own.

I can find no error that would justify setting aside the order of Glube C.J.T.D. Indeed, in my view, the decision in MacIntyre, supra, would lead to the conclusion that Glube C.J.T.D. was correct in the order which she granted.

Summary

There is a common law right of access to judicial records and this right includes the opportunity to inspect and to copy such records.

It is not necessary in this case to consider whether that right is guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Charter. Nevertheless, the right of access plays an important role in promoting openness of the courts and accountability of the judiciary, and clearly advances the values enshrined in s. 2(b) of the Charter.

There is a very strong presumption in favour of access. That presumption must be balanced against other important rights and interests.

The balancing exercise must be conducted on a case-by-case basis. Any order made with regard to access is discretionary. If access is to be denied, the trial court should outline the opposing interests which have been deemed sufficient to overcome the strong presumption in favour of the common law right of access.

In considering and balancing the right of Nugent to privacy, it must be remembered that Nugent has undergone a trial and the tapes were played in public. In those circumstances the right to privacy, although it always must be taken into account, is of less weight than it would be had the tapes never been played. Further, the importance of the openness of the courts and judicial accountability weighs heavily in favour of access in the present case.

Appellate deference should be accorded to the discretionary order of the trial judge concerning access. See Attorney General of Manitoba v. Metropolitan Stores, supra.

Disposition

The trial judge's decision to grant access in this case is reasonable and should be upheld. In the result, I would allow the appeal and restore the order of the judge of first instance.

Appeal dismissed, L'HEUREUX-DUBÉ, CORY and MCLACHLIN JJ. dissenting.

Solicitors for the appellant: Boyne, Clarke, Dartmouth.

*Solicitor for the respondent the Prothonotary of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia at Halifax:
The Department of the Attorney General, Halifax.*

Solicitors for the respondent Nugent: Coady, Filliter, Halifax.

Solicitors for the intervener: Gordon, Strathy & Henderson, Ottawa.

TAB 39

Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 (SCC), [1978] 2 SCR 229

Source:	Supreme Court of Canada
Date:	1978-01-19
Other citations:	19 NR 50 — 83 DLR (3d) 452 — [1978] 1 WWR 577 — AZ-78111098 — 8 AR 182 — 3 CCLT 225 — [1978] CarswellAlta 214 — EYB 1978-147395 — [1978] SCJ No 6 (QL) — [1978] ACS no 6
Citation:	Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 (SCC), [1978] 2 SCR 229, < https://canlii.ca/t/1mkb5 >, retrieved on 2026-03-23
Most recent unfavourable mention	Laurie v Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Alberta , 2021 ABQB 833 (CanLII) [...] [23] Ms. Laurie did not identify why this Court is not bound by Andrews v Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd. As such, though Ms. Laurie clearly believes otherwise, Canadian law does indeed establish a maximum price on a person's health, well-being, comfort, and life expectancy: $365,000. [...]

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229

Date: 1978-01-19

J. A. Andrews, Dorothy Andrews, Ivan Stefanyk (Plaintiffs) Appellants;

and

Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd. and Robert G. Anderson (Defendants) Respondents.

1977: June 15, 16; 1978: January 19.

Present: Laskin C.J. and Martland, Judson, Ritchie, Spence, Pigeon, Dickson, Beetz and de Grandpré JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF ALBERTA, APPELLATE DIVISION

Damages — Young adult rendered a quadriplegic and faced with lifetime of dependency on others — Applicable principles in assessment of damages.

In a negligence action for personal injury involving a young man rendered a quadriplegic in a traffic accident, ' the trial judge awarded $1,022,477.48. The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Alberta reduced that sum to $516,544.48. Leave to appeal to this Court was granted on the question whether the Appellate Division erred in law in the assessment of damages.

Liability was not an issue. The trial judge found that the fault was entirely that of the respondents. The Appellate Division (one member dissenting on this issue) found the appellant James Andrews 25 per cent contributorily negligent. Those findings did not arise for discussion in this appeal. Nor did the question of special damages.

This Court was called upon to establish the correct principles of law applicable in assessing damages in cases such as this where a young person has suffered wholly incapacitating injuries and faces a lifetime of dependency on others. On the date of the accident, Andrews was an apprentice carman, 21 years of age and unmarried.

Held: The appeal should be allowed. General damages were assessed at $740,000 which together with the special damages of $77,344 gave a final figure of $817, 344. Of this amount the appellant was granted judgment for 75 per cent, that is $613,008, under the uncontested apportionment of liability.

[Page 230]

1. Pecuniary loss

(a) Future care

(i) Standard of care: The paramount issue to be decided was whether in a case of total or near-total disability the future care of the victim should be in an institutional or a home care environment. The trial judge chose home care and found that it would take $4,135 per month to provide such care for Andrews. The Appellate Division agreed that home care would be better but denied it to him. It considered that this standard of care was unreasonably and unrealistically high. Without giving any reason for selecting the particular figure chosen, it substituted $1,000 per month. The Court of Appeal erred in law in the approach it took. It failed to show that the trial judge applied any wrong principle of law or that the overall amount awarded by him was a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage.

Contrary to the view expressed in the Appellate Division, there is no duty to mitigate damage, in the sense of being forced to accept less than real loss. There is a duty to be reasonable. There cannot be "complete" or "perfect" compensation. An award must be moderate and fair to both parties. Clearly, compensation must not be determined on the basis of sympathy, or compassion for the plight of the injured person. What is being sought is compensation, not retribution. But, in a case like the present, where both Courts have favoured a home environment, "reasonable" means reasonableness in what is to be provided in that home environment. It does not mean that Andrews must languish in an institution which on all evidence is inappropriate for him. The ability of the defendant to pay has never been regarded as a relevant consideration in the assessment of damages at common law. The focus should be on the injuries of the innocent party. Fairness to the other party is achieved by assuring that the claims against him are legitimate and justifiable.

Was it reasonable for Andrews to ask for $4,135 per month for home care? Home care is expensive, but auxiliary hospital care is so utterly unattractive and so utterly in conflict with the principle of proper compensation that this Court was offered no middle ground.

(ii) Life expectancy: Figures introduced at trial showed that the life expectancy of 23-year-old persons in general is 50 years. However, a statistical average is helpful only if the appropriate group is used. Medical testimony at trial indicated that possibly five years less than normal would be a reasonable expectation of life for a quadriplegic. This figure was accepted by the Appellate Division and also by this Court.

[Page 231]

(iii) Contingencies of life: The trial judge allowed a 20 per cent discount for "contingencies and hazards of life". The allowance by the Appellate Division of a further 10 per cent discount was an error. The trial judge's figure of 20 per cent as a discount for contingencies was not an allowance for a decreased life expectancy, as the Appellate Division characterized it, for this had already been taken into account by reducing the normal 50-year expectancy to 45 years. The "contingencies and hazards of life" in the context of future care are distinct. They relate essentially to duration of expense and are different from those which might affect future earnings, such as unemployment, accident, illness. They are not merely to be added to the latter so as to achieve a cumulative result. The trial judge's figure of 20 per cent was accepted by this Court as a reasonable allowance for the contingencies relating to future care.

(iv) Duplication with compensation for loss of future earnings: Proper future care is the paramount goal of damages for personal injuries. To determine accurately the needs and costs in respect of future care, basic living expenses should be included. The costs of necessities when in an infirm state may well be different from those when in a state of health. Thus, while the types of expenses would have been incurred in any event, the level of expenses for the victim may be seen as attributable to the accident. The projected cost of necessities should, therefore, be included in calculating the cost of future care, and a percentage attributable to the necessities of a person in a normal state should be reduced from the award for future earnings.

(v) Cost of special equipment: In addition to his anticipated monthly expenses, Andrews required an initial capital amount for special equipment. The assessment by both Courts below was correct in principle and was therefore accepted.

(b) Prospective loss of earnings

It is not loss of earnings but, rather, loss of earning capacity for which compensation must be made.

(i) Level of earnings: The holding of the Appellate Division that $1,200 per month represents a reasonable estimate of Andrews' future average level of earnings was affirmed.

(ii) Length of working life: The capitalization of future earning capacity must be based not on the shortened life expectancy but rather on the expected working life span prior to the accident. It is the loss of the income-earning capacity which existed prior to the accident for which the appellant must be compensated.

[Page 232]

(iii) Contingencies: The figure used to take account of contingencies which might have affected future earnings, such as unemployment, illness, accidents and business depression, is obviously an arbitrary one. The figure of 20 per cent which was used in the lower Courts (and in many other cases), although not entirely satisfactory, should be accepted.

(iv) Duplication of the cost of future basic maintenance: At trial evidence was given that the cost of basics for a person in the position of Andrews prior to the accident would be approximately 53 per cent of income. This figure was accepted and his anticipated future monthly earnings were accordingly reduced to $564.

(c) Considerations relevant to both heads of pecuniary loss

(i) Capitalization rate: allowance for inflation and the rate of return on investments: The discount rate to be used in calculating the present value of the awards for future care and loss of earnings in this case should be varied from five to seven per cent. The approach at trial was to take as a rate of return the rental value of money which might exist during periods of economic stability, and consequently to ignore inflation. The approach adopted by this Court was to use present rates of return on long-term investments and to make some allowance for the effects of future inflation.

(ii) Allowance for Tax: As it is earning capacity and not lost earnings which is the subject of compensation, no consideration should be taken of the amount by which the income from the award for prospective earnings will be reduced by payment of taxes on the interest, dividends or capital gain. A capital sum is appropriate to replace the lost capital asset of earning capacity. Tax on income is irrelevant either to decrease the sum for taxes the victim would have paid on income from his job, or to increase it for taxes he will now have to pay on income from the award.

The impact of taxation upon the income from the capital sum for future care is mitigated by the existence of s. 110(1) (c) (IV.1) of the Income Tax Act in respect of the deduction of medical expenses. Because of this provision and because of the position taken in the Courts below, where no allowance was made to adjust the amount assessed for future care in light of the reduction from taxation, this Court made no allowance for that item.

[Page 233]

Also, with respect to the determination of the present value of the cost of future care, the calculations should provide for a self-extinguishing sum. To allow a residual capital amount would be to over-compensate the injured person by creating an estate for him.

2. Non-pecuniary losses

In the case of a young adult quadriplegic like Andrews the amount of $100,000 should be adopted as the appropriate award for all non-pecuniary loss, including such factors as pain and suffering, loss of amenities and loss of expectation of life. Save in exceptional circumstances, this should be regarded as an upper limit of non-pecuniary loss in cases of this nature.

Total award

Rather than make an overall assessment of the total sum, it is more appropriate to make an overall assessment of the total under each head of future care, prospective earnings, and non-pecuniary loss, in each case in light of general considerations such as the awards of other courts in similar cases and an assessment of the reasonableness of the award.

Nance v. B.C. Electric Railway Co., 1951 CanLII 374 \(UK JCPC\), [1951] A.C. 601; Admiralty Commissioners v. S.S. Susquehanna, [1926] A.C. 655; West & Son Ltd. v. Shephard, [1964] A.C. 326; Admiralty Commissioners v. S.S. Valeria, [1922] 2 A.C. 242; Livingstone v. Rawyards Coal Co. (1880), 5 App. Cas. 25; Cunningham v. Harrison, [1973] 3 All E.R. 463; Fletcher v. Autocar & Transporters Ltd., [1968] 1 All E.R. 726; R. v. Jennings, 1966 CanLII 11 \(SCC\), [1966] S.C.R. 532; Bisson v. Corporation of Powell River (1967), 1967 CanLII 521 \(BC CA\), 62 W.W.R. 707, 64 W.W.R. 768; Jennings v. Cronsberry (1965), 1965 CanLII 24 \(ON CA\), 50 D.L.R. (2d) 385; Skelton v. Collins (1966), 39 A.L.J.R. 480; Olivier v. Ashman, [1962] 2 Q.B. 210; McCann v. Sheppard, [1973] 1 W.L.R. 540; Warren v. King, [1963] 3 All E.R. 521; McKay v. Board of Govan School Unit No. 29 of Saskatchewan, 1968 CanLII 76 \(SCC\), [1968] S.C.R. 589; Bresatz v. Przibilla (1962), 108 C.L.R. 541; Mallet v. McMonagle, [1970] A.C. 166; Re: Anti-Inflation Act, 1976 CanLII 16 \(SCC\), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 373; Schroth v. Innes, Perry and Shiels, 1976 CanLII 1085 \(BC CA\), [1976] 4 W.W.R. 225; Ward v. James, [1965] 1 All E.R. 563; Hamel v. Prather, 1976 ALTASCAD 3 \(CanLII\), [1976] 2 W.W.R. 742; Jackson v. Millar, 1975 CanLII 20 \(SCC\), [1976] 1 S.C.R. 225, referred to.

APPEAL by the plaintiffs, from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Alberta, Appellate Division^[1], reducing an award of damages of Kirby

[Page 234]

J. in a negligence action for personal injuries. Appeal allowed.

D. K. Laidlaw, Q.C., R. Cummings and D. Andrews, for the plaintiffs, appellants.

J. A. Weir and B. Larbalestier, for the defendants, respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

DICKSON J.—This is a negligence action for personal injury involving a young man rendered a quadriplegic in a traffic accident for which the respondent Anderson and his employer, Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., have been found partially liable. Leave to appeal to this Court was granted on the question whether the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Alberta erred in law in the assessment of damages. At trial Mr. Justice Kirby awarded $1,022,477.48; the Appellate Division reduced that sum to $516,544.48.

The amount awarded in each Court under each of the several heads of damages is set out below:

Pecuniary Loss
(a) Cost of Future Care	Trial	Appellate Division
—special equipment	$14,200	$14,200
—monthly amount	4,135	1,000
—contingencies	20%	30%
—capitalization rate	5%	5%
—life expectancy	45 years	45 years
-	$735,594	$164,200
(b) Loss of Prospective Earnings
—level of earnings	$ 830	$1,200
—basic deduction to avoid duplication between the award for future care and that part of the lost earnings that would have been spent on living expenses	440	—
Net	$390	$1,200

—contingencies	20%	20%
—work span	30.81	30.81
—capitalization rate	5%	5%
Total	$ 59,539	$175,000
Non-Pecuniary Loss
—Pain and Suffering	$150,000	$100,000
—Loss of Amenities
—Loss of Expectation of Life
Special Damages	$77,344	$77,344

[Page 235]

Liability is not an issue. The trial judge found that the fault was entirely that of the respondents. The Appellate Division (McDermid J.A. dissenting on this issue) found the appellant James Andrews 25 per cent contributorily negligent. Those findings do not arise for discussion in this appeal. Nor does the question of special damages.

This Court is called upon to establish the correct principles of law applicable in assessing damages in cases such as this where a young person has suffered wholly incapacitating injuries and faces a lifetime of dependency on others. The question of "million dollar" awards has not arisen in Canada until recently, but within the past several years four such cases have been before the Courts, namely: (i) the case at bar; (ii) Thornton v. The v Board of School Trustees of School District No. 57 (Prince George), at present under appeal to this Court, in which the award at trial was $1,534,058, reduced on appeal to $649,628; (iii) Teno v. Arnold, also under appeal to this Court, in which the award for general damages at trial was $950, 000, reduced on appeal to $875,000; (iv) McLeod v. Hodgins, (unreported), in which Mr. Justice Robins, of the Ontario High Court, awarded at trial an amount of $1,041,197, of which $1,000, 000 were general damages.

Let me say in introduction what has been said many times before, that no appellate court is justified in substituting a figure of its own for that awarded at trial simply because it would have awarded a different figure if it had tried the case at first instance. It must be satisfied that a wrong principle of law was applied, or that the overall amount is a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage; Nance v. B.C. Electric Railway Co.^[2]

The method of assessing general damages in separate amounts, as has been done in this case, in my opinion, is a sound one. It is the only way in which any meaningful review of the award is possible on appeal and the only way of affording reasonable guidance in future cases. Equally important, it discloses to the litigants and their advisers the components of the overall award, assuring them thereby, that each of the various heads of damage going to make up the claim has been given thoughtful consideration.

[Page 236]

The subject of damages for personal injury is an area of the law which cries out for legislative reform. The expenditure of time and money in the determination of fault and of damage is prodigal. The disparity resulting from lack of provision for victims who cannot establish fault must be disturbing. When it is determined that compensation is to be made, it is highly irrational to be tied to a lump sum system and a once-and-for-all award.

The lump sum award presents problems of great importance. It is subject to inflation, it is subject to fluctuation on investment, income from it is subject to tax. After judgment new needs of the plaintiff arise and present needs are extinguished; yet, our law of damages knows nothing of periodic payment. The difficulties are greatest where there is a continuing need for intensive and expensive care and a long-term loss of earning capacity. It should be possible to devise some system whereby payments would be subject to periodic review and variation in the light of the continuing needs of the injured person and the cost of meeting those needs. In making this comment I am not unaware of the negative recommendation of the British Law Commission (Law Com. 56-Report on Personal Injury Litigation-Assessment of Damages) following strong opposition from insurance interests and the plaintiffs' bar.

The apparent reliability of assessments provided by modern actuarial practice is largely illusory, for actuarial science deals with probabilities, not actualities. This is in no way to denigrate a respected profession, but it is obvious that the validity of the answers given by the actuarial witness, as with a computer, depends upon the soundness of the postulates from which he proceeds. Although a useful aid, and a sharper tool than the "multiplier-multiplicand" approach favoured in some jurisdictions, actuarial evidence speaks in terms of group experience. It cannot, and does not 'purport to, speak as to the individual sufferer. So long as we are tied to lump sum awards, however, we are tied also to actuarial calculations as the best available means of determining amount.

[Page 237]

In spite of these severe difficulties with the present law of personal injury compensation, the positive administrative machinery required for a system of reviewable periodic payments, and the need to hear all interested parties in order to fashion a more enlightened system, both dictate that the appropriate body to act must be the Legislature rather than the Courts. Until such time as the Legislature acts, the Courts must proceed on established principles to award damages which compensate accident victims with justice and humanity for the losses they may suffer.

I proceed now to a brief recital of the injuries sustained by the appellant James Andrews in the present case. He suffered a fracture with dislocation of the cervical spine between the fifth and sixth cervical vertebrae, causing functional transection of the spinal cord, but leaving some continuity; compound fracture of the left tibia and left humerus; fracture of the left patella. The left radial nerve was damaged. The lesion of the spinal cord left Andrews with paralysis involving most of the upper limbs, spine and lower limbs. He has lost the use of his legs, his trunk, essentially his left arm and most of his right arm. To add to the misery he does not have normal bladder, bowel and sex functions. He suffers from spasticity in both upper and lower limbs. He has difficulty turning in bed and must be repositioned every two hours. He needs regular physiotherapy and should have someone in close association with him at all times, such as a trained male orderly. The only functioning muscles of respiration are those of the diaphragm and shoulders. There is much more in the evidence but it need not be recited. Andrews is severely, if not totally disabled. Dr. Weir, a specialist in neurosurgery, said of Andrews' condition that "there is no hope of functional improvement." For the rest of his life he will be dependent on others for dressing, personal hygiene, feeding and, indeed, for his very survival. But, of utmost importance, he is not a vegetable or a piece of cordwood. He is a man of above average intelligence and his mind is unimpaired. He can see, hear and speak as before. He has partial use of his right arm and hand. With the aid of a wheelchair he is mobile. With a specially-designed van he can go out in the evening to visit friends, or to the movies, or to a pub. He is taking driving lessons and proving to be an apt pupil. He wants to live as other human beings live. Since May 31, 1974, he has resided in his own apartment with private attendant care. The medical long-term care required is not at a sophisticated level but rather at a practical care level.

[Page 238]

Andrews was twenty-one years of age and unmarried on the date of the accident. On that date he was an apprentice carman employed by the Canadian National Railways in the City of Edmonton.

I turn now to consider assessment of the damages to which Andrews is entitled.

Pecuniary Loss

(a) Future Care

(i) Standard of Care: While there are several subsidiary issues to be decided in this case, there is one paramount issue: in a case of total or near-total disability should the future care of the victim be in an institutional or a home care environment? The trial judge chose home care. The Appellate Division agreed that home care would be better but denied it to him. Chief Justice McGillivray who delivered the judgment of the Court on this issue said: "All the evidence called supports the proposition that psychologically and emotionally Andrews would be better in a home of his own, where he would be lord of the manor, as it were." Some evidence even indicated the medical superiority of a home environment.

The trial judge found that it would take $4,135 per month to provide care for Andrews in a home environment. The Appellate Division considered that this standard of care was unreasonably and unrealistically high. Without giving any reason for selecting the particular figure chosen, the Appellate Division substituted $1,000 per month. Obviously, here is the heart of the controversy. On other matters there was substantial agreement between the lower Courts.

[Page 239]

In my opinion, the Court of Appeal erred in law in the approach it took. After the statement quoted above that Andrews would be better psychologically and emotionally in a home of his own, Chief Justice McGillivray referred to some of the evidence supporting that proposition. He quoted the following passage from the evidence of Dr. Weir:

Well, I think [sic] that the greatest problem they have and the greatest burden of their affliction is the fact that they are all depressed because not only have they lost the potential for many normal and enjoyable human activities. In fact up until the present they pretty well have been converted into lifelong inhabitants of a hospital institution and an institution is an institution, it is virtually a life sentence and has been to this date. I would say that if you really, you know, if you wanted to give him the optimal potential it would be in a home environment in which he had some, in which he had the control of it to the same extent that the rest of us have control over our own homes and dwelling places. I don't really think that any hospital or medical institution has the potential to give someone that same feeling that they are in fact the lords and masters of their own castle.

The Chief Justice noted that Andrews had said he would not live in an institution and the following excerpts from the evidence were quoted:

Q. Tell us, Jim, would you be prepared to live in an auxiliary hospital?

A. Never.

Q. Would you elaborate on that?

A. Well there is just no way that I would go into an auxiliary hospital that is—I don't know, I think that is one step into a grave, that is all it is, too many old folks that have nothing to do but reminisce, you know, I don't know, but just from what I have heard of auxiliary hospitals.

Q. Well how about other disabled people, do you have any difficulty getting along with them, would you be prepared to live with them, say if they were even younger?

A. My age?

Q. Yes.

A. With my same disability?

Q. Yes, if you were in some place with people that have disabled problems?

A. No, because it is the same thing, people get into a state of depression and they throw it on the group, like even now in the hospital like the way it is now there is a group of younger people and, you know, even friction can be created amongst us because of one person's bad day kind of thing, and I wouldn't want to live with other disabled persons, not at all.

[Page 240]

I am hesitant to enter upon a detailed analysis of the reasons advanced by the Appellate Division for its decision, but in view of the importance of the matters raised in this litigation, not only for the appellant Andrews but for others in a similar plight, I do not think any other course is open.

Following the passage from the evidence of Andrews which I have quoted, Chief Justice McGillivray said:

In having a home of his own, it is stated that Andrews needs at least 20 hours a day care. He has to be turned at night every two hours, he has to have constant attention, and it is on this footing that two orderlies and a housekeeper and the cost of operating a three-bedroom home are advanced as being reasonable costs. Now, while the proposition that to the extent that money can do it, a plaintiff should be put into the position he would have been in, but for the accident, this does not mean that the plaintiff does not have to be reasonable and mitigate damage.

With respect, I agree that a plaintiff must be reasonable in making a claim. I do not believe that the doctrine of mitigation of damages which might be applicable, for example, in an action for conversion of goods, has any place in a personal injury claim. In assessing damages in claims arising out of personal injuries, the ordinary common law principles apply. The basic principle was stated by Viscount Dunedin in Admiralty Commissioners v. S.S. Susquehanna^[3], at p. 661 (cited with approval in West & Son Ltd. v. Shephard^[4], at p. 345) in these words:

... the common law says that the damages due either for breach of contract or for tort are damages which, so far as money can compensate, will give the injured party reparation for the wrongful act ...

The principle was phrased differently by Lord Dunedin in the earlier case of Admiralty Commissioners

[Page 241]

v. S.S. Valeria^[5], at p. 248, but to the same effect:

... in calculating damages you are to consider what is the pecuniary sum which will make good to the sufferer, so far as money can do, the loss which he has suffered as the natural result of the wrong done to him.

The principle that compensation should be full for pecuniary loss is well established. See McGregor on Damages, 13 ed., at p. 738:

The plaintiff can recover, subject to the rules of remoteness and mitigation, full compensation for the pecuniary loss he has suffered. This is today a clear principle of law.

To the same effect, Kemp & Kemp, Quantum of Damages, vol. 1, 3rd ed., at p. 4: "The person suffering the damage is entitled to full compensation for the financial loss suffered." This broad principle was propounded by Lord Blackburn at an early date in Livingstone v. Rawyards Coal Company^[6], at p. 39, in these words:

I do not think there is any difference of opinion as to its being a general rule that, where any injury is to be compensated by damages, in settling the sum of money to be given for reparation of damages you should as nearly as possible get at that sum of money which will put the party who has been injured, or who has suffered, in the same position as he would have been in if he had not sustained the wrong for which he is now getting his compensation or reparation.

In theory a claim for the cost of future care is a pecuniary claim for the amount which may reasonably be expected to be expended in putting the injured party in the position he would have been in if he had not sustained the injury. Obviously, a plaintiff who has been gravely and permanently impaired can never be put in the position he would have been in if the tort had not been committed. To this extent, restitutio in integrum is not possible. Money is a barren substitute for health and personal happiness, but to the extent [sic] within reason that money can be used to sustain or improve the mental or physical health of the injured person it may properly form part of a claim.

Contrary to the view expressed in the Appellate Division of Alberta, there is no duty to mitigate, in the sense of being forced to accept less than real loss. There is a duty to be reasonable. There cannot be "complete" or "perfect" compensation. An award must be moderate and fair to both parties. Clearly, compensation must not be determined on the basis of sympathy, or compassion for the plight of the injured person. What is being sought is compensation, not retribution. But, in a case like the present, where both Courts have favoured a home environment, "reasonable" means reasonableness in what is to be provided in that home environment. It does not mean that Andrews must languish in an institution which on all evidence is inappropriate for him.

The reasons for judgment of the Appellate Division embodied three observations which are worthy of brief comment. The first: "It is the choice of the Respondent to live in a home of his own, and from the point of view of advancing a claim for damages, it is a most salutary choice, because it is vastly the most expensive." I am not entirely certain as to what is meant by this observation. If the import is that the appellant claimed a home life for the sole purpose of inflating his damage claim, then I think the implication is both unfair and unsupported by evidence. There is no doubt upon the medical and other evidence that a home environment would be salutary to the health of the appellant and productive of good effects. It cannot be unreasonable for a person to want to live in a home of his own.

The next observation:

Secondly, it should be observed that in many cases, particularly in Alberta, where damages have been awarded, the persons injured were going to live with their families. Here, the evidence (in spite of the fact that the Respondent's mother advanced a claim for $237.00 which represented a towing charge for the motor cycle and parking, taxis and bus fare expended on visits to her son in the Hospital for approximately a nine-month period prior to the issue of the Statement of Claim) is that the Respondent and his mother were not close before the accident, and matters proceeded on the footing that the mother's natural love and affection should have no part in Andrews' future. Again, this situation is the most expensive from the point of view of the Respondent.

The evidence showed that the mother of the appellant James Andrews was living alone, in a second-floor apartment and that relations between Andrews and his mother were strained at times. This should have no bearing in minimizing Andrews' damages. Even if his mother had been able to look after Andrews in her own home, there is now ample authority for saying that dedicated wives or mothers who choose to devote their lives to looking after infirm husbands or sons are not expected to do so on a gratuitous basis. The second observation is irrelevant.

The third observation was in these words:

Thirdly, it should be observed that the learned trial judge has referred with approval to the English authorities which held that full compensation for pecuniary loss must be given. It does not, however, follow that every conceivable expense which a plaintiff may conjure up is a pecuniary loss. On the evidence, then, should this Court consider that Andrews should live in a home of his own for the next 45 years at the expense of the Appellant?

I agree that a plaintiff cannot "conjure up" "every conceivable expense." I do not think that a request for home care falls under that rubric.

Each of the three observations seems to look at the matter solely from the point of view of the respondents and the expense to them. An award must be fair to both parties but the ability of the defendant to pay has never been regarded as a relevant consideration in the assessment of damages at common law. The focus should be on the injuries of the innocent party. Fairness to the other party is achieved by assuring that the claims raised against him are legitimate and justifiable.

[Page 244]

The Appellate Division relied upon Cunningham v. Harrison^[7]. In that case, as a result of an accident, the plaintiff was permanently paralyzed in his body and all four limbs. The trial judge found that the plaintiff was a self-opinionated person who should, if possible, live in some dwelling of his own where he would be looked after by a housekeeper and the persons who did the nursing. The Court of Appeal held that the plaintiff's entitlement to reasonable expenses for nursing and accommodation appropriate to a normal person should not be increased by reason of his exceptional personality. The Court of Appeal in reducing the award from £72,616 to £59,316 took into account three factors: (i) the difficulty of obtaining a housekeeper and nurses; (ii) that ground floor flats specially designed for handicapped persons were being built in the Borough; (iii) that the plaintiff might accept the aid of statutory and voluntary organizations at much less cost. None of these factors is significant in the present case. Although it reduced the award, the Court nevertheless affirmed that the award included provision for a housekeeper and nursing services and also for extra accommodation. The case does not stand for the proposition that though home care is better, it will not be provided because the cost is excessive. In the present case, the Appellate Division asked: "If Andrews does have a home of his own, however, should he not so locate that orderly service from existing hospitals could be available to him at night and in the daytime for his hygienic and getting-up periods? Is it to be assumed that in a province such as Alberta, orderly services could not be given outside the four walls of an institution if the subject of the service is a nearby resident?" The respondents did not raise the possibility about which the Court speculated. There was no evidence as to the feasibility of such a proposal, no evidence as to the availability or cost of outpatient care.

[Page 245]

With respect to Andrews' disinclination to live in an institution, the Court commented: "He might equally say that he would not live in Alberta, as he did not wish to face old friends, or for any other reasons, and that he wished to live in Switzerland or the Bahamas." Andrews is not asking for a life in Europe or in the Caribbean. He asks that he be permitted to continue to live in Alberta and to see his old friends, but in his own home or apartment, not in an institution.

The Court then expressed the view that the standard accepted by the trial judge was the equivalent of supplying a private hospital. The phrase "private hospital" is both pejorative and misleading. It suggests an extravagant standard of care. The standard sought by the appellant is simply practical nursing in the home. The amount Andrews is seeking is, without question, very substantial, but essentially it means providing two orderlies and a housekeeper. The amount is large because the victim is young and because life is long. He has forty-five years ahead. That is a long time.

In reducing the monthly amount to $1,000, the Appellate Division purported to apply a "final test" which was expressed in terms of the expenses that reasonably-minded people would incur, assuming sufficient means to bear such expense. It seems to me difficult to conceive of any reasonably-minded person of ample means who would not be ready to incur the expense of home care, rather than institutional care, for himself or for someone in the condition of Andrews for whom he was responsible. No other conclusion is open upon the evidence adduced in this case. If the test enunciated by the Appellate Division is simply a plea for moderation then, of course, no one would question it. If the test was intended to suggest that reasonably-minded people would refuse to bear the expense of home care, there is simply no evidence to support that conclusion.

The Appellate Division, seeking to give some meaning to the test, said that it should be open to consider "standards of society as a whole as they presently exist." As instances of such standards the Court selected the daily allowances provided under The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1973 (Alta.), c. 87, s. 56, and the federal Pension Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. P-7, s. 28. The standard of care expected in our society in physical injury cases is an elusive concept. What a legislature sees fit to provide in the cases of veterans and in the cases of injured workers and the elderly is only of marginal assistance. The standard to be applied to Andrews is not merely "provision", but "compensation": i.e. what is the proper compensation for a person who would have been able to care for himself and live in a home environment if he had not been injured? The answer must surely be home care. If there were severe mental impairment, or in the case of an immobile quadriplegic, the results might well be different; but where the victim is mobile and still in full control of his mental facilities, as Andrews is, it cannot be said that institutionalization in an auxiliary hospital represents proper compensation for his loss. Justice requires something better.

[Page 246]

Other points raised by the Appellate Division in support of its reversal of the trial judge, may be briefly noted: (i) "It seems to me probable that there will be, at Government expense, people employed to look after quadriplegics. In the United States, there are now a few institutions which have special apartments as part of the hospital setting, where patients can receive attention and, at the same time, have privacy." There is no evidence that the Government of Alberta at present has any plans to provide special care or institutions for quadriplegics. Any such possibility is speculation. (ii) "Will the Respondent, in fact, operate a home of his own?" The Court expressed the fear that Andrews would take the award, then go into an auxiliary hospital and have the public pay. It is not for the Court to conjecture upon how a plaintiff will spend the amount awarded to him. There is always the possibility that the victim will not invest his award wisely but will dissipate it. That is not something which ought to be allowed to affect a consideration of the proper basis of compensation within a fault-based system. The plaintiff is free to do with that sum of money as he likes. Financial advice is readily available. He has the flexibility to plan his life and to plan for contingencies. The preference of our law to date has been to leave this flexibility in the plaintiffs hands: see Fleming, "Damages: Capital or Rent?" (1969), 19 U. of Toronto L.J. 295. Save for infants and the mentally incompetent, the courts have no power to control the expenditure of the award. There is nothing to show that the dangers the Appellate Division envisaged have any basis in fact.

[Page 247]

In its conclusion, the Appellate Division held that the damages awarded by the trial judge were "unreasonably and unrealistically high" and an award which would result in the appellant receiving approximately $1,000 a month for cost of care would be entirely adequate and would constitute a generous award. The Appellate Division further reduced the award by 30 per cent for potential contingencies. Why $1,000? The main issue at trial was the choice between home care and institutional care. There is no question but that Andrews could be taken care of in an auxiliary hospital, but both Courts below concluded that home care was the appropriate standard. The trial judge made an award reflecting the cost of home care. The Appellate Division made an award related to neither home care nor institutional care. The effect is to compel a youthful quadriplegic to live the rest of his life in an auxiliary hospital. In my opinion, the Appellate Division failed to show that the trial judge applied any wrong principle of law or that the overall amount awarded by him was a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage. With great respect, the irrelevant considerations which the Appellate Division took into account were errors in law.

Is it reasonable for Andrews to ask for $4,135 per month for home care? Part of the difficulty of this case is that twenty-four hour orderly care was not directly challenged. Counsel never really engaged in consideration of whether, assuming home care, such care could be provided at lesser expense. Counsel wants the Court, rather, to choose between home care and auxiliary hospital care. There are unanimous findings below that home care is better. Although home care is expensive, auxiliary hospital care is so utterly unattractive and so utterly in conflict with the principle of proper compensation that this Court is offered no middle ground.

[Page 248]

The basic argument, indeed the only argument, against home care is that the social cost is too high. In these days the cost is distributed through society through insurance premiums. In this respect, I would adopt what was said by Salmon L.J. in Fletcher v. Autocar & Transporters, Ltd.^[8], at p. 750, where he stated:

Today, however, virtually all defendants in accident cases are insured. This certainly does not mean compensation should be extravagant, but there is no reason why it should not be realistic... . It might result in some moderate increase in premium rates which none would relish, but of which no one in my view, could justly complain. It would be monstrous to keep down premiums by depressing damages below their proper level, i.e., a level which ordinary men would regard as fair-unprejudiced by its impact on their own pockets.

I do not think the area of future care is one in which the argument of the social burden of the expense should be controlling, particularly in a case like the present where the consequences of acceding to it would be to fail in large measure to compensate the victim for his loss. Greater weight might be given to this consideration where the choice with respect to future care is not so stark as between home care and an auxiliary hospital. Minimizing the social burden of expense may be a factor influencing a choice between acceptable alternatives. It should never compel the choice of the unacceptable.

[Page 249]

(ii) Life expectancy: At trial, figures were introduced which showed that the life expectancy of 23-year-old persons in general is 50 years. As Chief Justice McGillivray said in the Appellate Division, it would be more useful to use statistics on the expectation of life of quadriplegics. A statistical average is helpful only if the appropriate group is used. At trial, Dr. Weir and Dr. Gingras testified that possibly five years less than normal would be a reasonable expectation of life for a quadriplegic. The Appellate Division accepted this figure. On the evidence I am willing to accept it.

(iii) Contingencies of Life: The trial judge did, however, allow a 20 per cent discount for "contingencies and hazards of life." The Appellate Division allowed a further 10 per cent discount. It characterized the trial judge's discount as being for "life expectancy" or "duration of life", and said that this ignored the contingency of "duration of expense": i.e. that despite any wishes to the contrary, Andrews in the years to come may be obliged to spend a great deal of time in hospital for medical reasons or because of the difficulty of obtaining help. With respect, the Appellate Division appears to have misunderstood what the trial judge did. The figure of 20 per cent as a discount for contingencies was arrived at first under the heading of Prospective Loss of Earnings and then simply transferred to the calculation of Costs of Future Care. It was not an allowance for a decreased life expectancy, for this had already been taken into account by reducing the normal 50-year expectancy to 45 years. The "contingencies and hazards of life" in the context of future care are distinct. They relate essentially to duration of expense and are different from those which might affect future earnings, such as unemployment, accident, illness. They are not merely to be added to the latter so as to achieve a cumulative result. Thus, so far as the action taken by the Appellate Division is concerned, in my opinion, it was an error to increase by an extra 10 per cent the contingency allowance of the trial judge.

This whole question of contingencies is fraught with difficulty, for it is in large measure pure speculation. It is a small element of the illogical practice of awarding lump sum payments for expenses and losses projected to continue over long periods of time. To vary an award by the value of the chance that certain contingencies may occur is to assure either over-compensation or under-compensation, depending on whether or not the event occurs. In light of the considerations I have mentioned, I think it would be reasonable to allow a discount for contingencies in the amount of 20 per cent, in accordance with the decision of the trial judge.

[Page 250]

(iv) Duplication with compensation for loss of future earnings

It is clear that a plaintiff cannot recover for the expense of providing for basic necessities as part of the cost of future care while still recovering fully for prospective loss of earnings. Without the accident, expenses for such items as food, clothing and accommodation would have been paid for out of earnings. They are not an additional type of expense occasioned by the accident.

When calculating the damage award, however, there are two possible methods of proceeding. One method is to give the injured party an award for future care which makes no deduction in respect of the basic necessities for which he would have had to pay in any event. A deduction must then be made for the cost of such basic necessities when computing the award for loss of prospective earnings: i.e. the award is on the basis of net earnings and not gross earnings. The alternative method is the reverse: i.e. to deduct the cost of basic necessities when computing the award for future care and then to compute the earnings award on the basis of gross earnings.

The trial judge took the first approach, reducing loss of future earnings by 53 per cent. The Appellate Division took the second. In my opinion, the approach of the trial judge is to be preferred. This is in accordance with the principle which I believe should underlie the whole consideration of damages for personal injuries: that proper future care is the paramount goal of such damages. To determine accurately the needs and costs in respect of future care, basic living expenses should be included.

[Page 251]

The costs of necessities when in an infirm state may well be different from those when in a state of health. Thus, while the types of expenses would have been incurred in any event, the level of expenses for the victim may be seen as attributable to the accident. In my opinion, the projected cost of necessities should, therefore, be included in calculating the cost of future care, and a percentage attributable to the necessities of a person in a normal state should be reduced from the award for future earnings. For the acceptability of this method of proceeding see the judgment of this Court in The Queen v. Jennings^[9], at pp. 540-1, and also Bisson v. Corporation of Powell River^[10], at pp. 720-1, Jennings v. Cronsberry^[11], at p. 418,

(v) Cost of special equipment: In addition to his anticipated monthly expenses, Andrews requires an initial capital amount for special equipment. Both Courts below held that $14,200 was an appropriate figure for the cost of this equipment. In my opinion, this assessment is correct in principle, and I would therefore accept it.

(b) Prospective loss of earnings

We must now gaze more deeply into the crystal ball. What sort of a career would the accident victim have had? What were his prospects and potential prior to the accident? It is not loss of earnings but, rather, loss of earning capacity for which compensation must be made: The Queen v. Jennings, supra. A capital asset has been lost: what was its value?

(i) Level of earnings: The trial judge fixed the projected level of earnings of Andrews at $830 per month, which would have been his earnings on January 1, 1973. The Appellate Division raised this to $1,200 per month, a figure between his present salary and the maximum for his type of work of $1,750 per month. Without doubt the value of Andrews' earning capacity over his working life is higher than his earnings at the time of the accident. Although I am inclined to view even that figure as somewhat conservative, I would affirm the holding of the Appellate Division that $1,200 per month represents a reasonable estimate of Andrews' future average level of earnings.

[Page 252]

(ii) Length of working life: Counsel for the appellants objected to the use of 55 rather than 65 as the projected retirement age for Andrews. It is agreed that he could retire on full pension at 55 if he stayed with his present employer, Canadian National Railways. I think it is reasonable to assume that he would, in fact, retire as soon as it was open for him to do so on full pension.

One must then turn to the mortality tables to determine the working life expectancy for the appellant over the period between the ages of 23 and 55. The controversial question immediately arises whether the capitalization of future earning capacity should be based on the expected working life span prior to the accident, or the shortened life expectancy. Does one give credit for the "lost years"? When viewed as the loss of a capital asset consisting of income-earning capacity rather than a loss of income, the answer is apparent: it must be the loss of that capacity which existed prior to the accident. This is the figure which best fulfils the principle of compensating the plaintiff for what he has lost: see Mayne and McGregor on Damages, 12 ed., at p. 659; Kemp & Kemp, Quantum of Damages, 3rd ed., vol. 1, Supplement, c. 3, p. 28; Skelton v. Collins^[12]. In the instant case, the trial judge refused to follow the Olivier v. Ashman^[13] approach, the manifest injustice of which is demonstrated in the much criticized case of McCann v. Sheppard^[14], and in this I think the judge was right. I would accept his decision that Andrews had a working life expectancy of 30.81 years.

[Page 253]

(iii) Contingencies: It is a general practice to take account of contingencies which might have affected future earnings, such as unemployment, illness, accidents and business depression. In the Bisson case, which also concerned a young quadriplegic, an allowance of 20 per cent was made. There is much support for the view that such a discount for contingencies should be made: see e.g. Warren v. King^[15]; McKay v. Board of Govan School Unit No. 29 of Saskatchewan^[16]. There are, however, a number of qualifications which should be made. First, in many respects, these contingencies implicitly are already contained in an assessment of the projected average level of earnings of the injured person, for one must assume that this figure is a projection with respect to the real world of work, vicissitudes and all. Second, not all contingencies are adverse, as the above list would appear to indicate. As is said in Bresatz v. Przibilla^[17], in the Australian High Court, at p. 544: "Why count the possible buffets and ignore the rewards of fortune?" Finally, in modern society there are many public and private schemes which cushion the individual against adverse contingencies. Clearly, the percentage deduction which is proper will depend on the facts of the individual case, particularly the nature of the plaintiff's occupation, but generally it will be small: see Stevens, "Actuarial Assessment of Damages: The Thalidomide Case" (1972), 35 M.L.R. 140, at p. 150.

In reducing Andrews' award by 20 per cent Mr. Justice Kirby gives no reasons. The Appellate Division also applied a 20 per cent reduction. It seems to me that actuarial evidence could be of great help here. Contingencies are susceptible to more exact calculation than is usually apparent in the cases; see Traversy: "Actuaries and the Courts", 29 Aust. L.J. 557. In my view, some degree of specificity, supported by evidence, ought to be forthcoming at trial.

[Page 254]

The figure used to take account of contingencies is obviously an arbitrary one. The figure of 20 per cent which was used in the lower Courts (and in many other cases) although not entirely satisfactory, should, I think, be accepted.

(iv) Duplication of the Cost of Future Basic Maintenance

As discussed, since basic needs such as food, shelter, and clothing have been included in the cost of future care, a deduction must be made from the award for prospective earnings to avoid duplication. The injured person would have incurred expenses of this nature even if he had not suffered the injury. At trial evidence was given that the cost of basics for a person in the position of Andrews prior to the accident would be approximately 53 per cent of income. I would accept this figure and reduce his anticipated future monthly earnings accordingly to a figure of $564.

(c) Considerations relevant to both heads of pecuniary loss

(i) Capitalization rate: allowance for inflation and the rate of return on investments

What rate of return should the Court assume the appellant will be able to obtain on his investment of the award? How should the Court recognize future inflation? Together these considerations will determine the discount rate to use in actuarially calculating the lump sum award.

The approach at trial was to take as a rate of return the rental value of money which might exist during periods of economic stability, and consequently to ignore inflation. This approach is widely referred to as the Lord Diplock approach, as he lent it his support in Mallett v. McMonagle^[18]. Although this method of proceeding has found favour in several jurisdictions in this country and elsewhere, it has an air of unreality. Stable, non-inflationary economic conditions do not exist at present, nor did they exist in the recent past, nor are they to be expected in the foreseeable future.

[Page 255]

In my opinion, it would be better to proceed from what known factors are available rather than to ignore economic reality. Analytically, the alternate approach to assuming a stable economy is to use existing interest rates and then make an allowance for the long-term expected rate of inflation. At trial the expert actuary, Mr. Grindley, testified as follows:

Yes, as J mentioned yesterday, I was comfortable with that assumption 5% interest because it produces the same result as for example 8% interest and 3% inflation.

...

I would be happy to use either of the following two packages of assumption, either an 8% interest rate combined with provision for amounts which would increase 3% in every year in the future or a 5% interest rate and level amount, level amounts, that is no allowance for inflation.

One thing is abundantly clear: present interest rates should not be used with no allowance for future inflation. To do so would be patently unfair to the plaintiff. It is not, however, the level of inflation in the short term for which allowance must be made, but that predicted over the long term. It is this expectation which is built into present interest rates for long-term investments. It is also this level of inflation which may at present be predicted to operate over the lifetime of the plaintiff to increase the cost of care for him at the level accepted by the Court, and to erode the value of the sum provided for lost earning capacity.

In Bisson v. Corporation of Powell River, supra, the British Columbia Court of Appeal held that there had been a misdirection, or non-direction amounting to misdirection, in the trial judge's charge to the jury with respect to quantum of damages for the plaintiff's personal injuries. Bull J.A. listed several instances of misdirection, including failure to instruct the jury that although they might give some thought to possibilities of future inflation, it was wrong to include any built-in inflation factors in the actuarial calculations with respect to the sums for future care and loss of prospective earnings. An appeal to this Court was dismissed^[19], Cartwright C.J.C. giving short oral reasons as follows:

[Page 256]

We are all of opinion that the Court of Appeal (1968) 1967 CanLII 521 (BC CA), 62 W.W.R. 707, were right in holding that they were justified in setting aside the assessment of damages made by the jury. In such circumstances they had jurisdiction under R. 36 of the British Columbia Court of Appeal Rules to reduce the damages instead of ordering a new trial. We find ourselves unable to say that in fixing the amount of damages the Court of Appeal erred in principle or that the figure at which they arrived was such as to represent a wholly erroneous estimate.

In my opinion, this cannot be taken as an express endorsement by this Court of the method of calculation expressed by Bull J.A. When discussing this issue, Bull J.A. stated that the correct procedure was to use a capitalization rate of five or six per cent, since there was evidence that six per cent was a normal and available rate of return on first-class securities, and not to build in any inflation rate at all. With respect, I cannot understand how thought is to be given to the possibility of inflation in calculating the award if no inflation factor is to be built into the calculation of the award. In his judgment, Bull J.A. further states, p. 723:

If inflationary trends appear, it may well be that the use to which the money is put, whatever it may be, will itself increase its own amount as part of an inflationary process. It is well known that interest rates, or the "wages" of money, rise in times of inflation.

One might offer two comments: First, the words: "If inflationary trends appear ..." reflect economic conditions in 1967 when serious inflation was only on the horizon. During the past ten years, inflation has become one of the most serious Canadian problems. This Court^[20] recognized the Anti-Inflation Act, 1974-75-76 (Can.), c. 75, as a measure necessary to meet a situation of economic crisis imperilling the well-being of the people of Canada as a whole. Second, the passage immediately above quoted accepts the proposition that interest rates or the "wages" of money rise in times of inflation. This rise is attributable, at least in part, to the erosion of the dollar. Accepting the highly unlikely proposition that the appellant will be able to invest for the balance of his lifetime at current high rates the capital sum awarded to him, this investment will provide him with a constant number of dollars each year, but the services which those dollars will provide will become more costly by the year. If current high interest rates abate with a reduction of inflationary pressures and return, say, to the 1967 rates of five or six per cent, it is obvious that reinvestment from time to time in later years of the equities or fixed income securities comprising the capital sum will be at rates which fall far short of those at present available. Then, even the number of dollars the appellant gets will be less than even the present cost of care. With respect, the economic analysis in Bisson proceeds on the erroneous basis that the cost of services decreases as the rate of inflation decreases. On the contrary, a decrease in the rate of inflation merely results in a lower rate of increase in the cost of these services.

[Page 257]

In Schroth v. Innes, Perry and Shiels^[21], Bull J.A., delivering the judgment of the Court, repeated his views on this matter. Again, the relevance of inflation was recognized in principle but was excluded from the calculation of the award. At p. 236, Bull J.A. states, "... it is today's money to which the respondent Shiels is entitled in damages." With respect, we are not concerned only with today's money. The real concern is in determining what that money will provide in the way of services over the next 45 years.

Bull J.A. voiced his disapproval of any recognition for inflation, whether by building in an inflation factor while using current rates of return, or by using a hypothetical "stable state."

The learned judge attempted to refute the conclusion that inflation should be included. He said, p. 239:

[Page 258]

With the greatest deference, I do not agree with the basic premises of those conclusions. To me what was really said was that current interest rates, much higher than those prevailing in the old days of the so-called "stable economy", exist only because of an existing inflated economy and of current fear of future inflation; and hence should not be used unless future inflation estimates or factors are fed into the computer also. That may well be so in England but I am not prepared to accede to that proposition with respect to this country. I think it general knowledge that interest rates in Canada for many years have reached higher levels because of the desire and need to attract new capital from abroad to create and service our expanding industrial and commercial economy. But I content myself with saying that I am satisfied that the current high rates of interest (which have been with us for years with only modest variations up and down) reflect today the present value of already inflated money in exactly the same way as do current high wages and prices generally. They live together, and the use of a high level of wages as one side of the coin and a low level of interest for the other is, in my respectful view, wrong.

In my opinion, this analysis is manifestly in error. Fear of future inflation is not confined to England. It is such as to have constituted a national emergency in this country. The current high rates of interest do not merely reflect the present value of already inflated money. They reflect the present expectation of future inflation. This is not the only factor which determines the existing interest rate, but it is without doubt one of the major factors. In my opinion, recognition of this fact must be made in the calculations of a damage award.

The approach which I would adopt, therefore, is to use present rates of return on long-term investments and to make some allowance for the effects of future inflation. Once this approach is adopted, the result, in my opinion, is different from the five per cent discount figure accepted by the trial judge. While there was much debate at trial over a difference of a half to one percentage point, I think it is clear from the evidence that high quality long-term investments were available at time of trial at rates of return in excess of ten per cent. On the other hand, evidence was specifically introduced that the former head of the Economic Council of Canada, Dr. Deutsch, had recently forecast a rate of inflation of three and one-half per cent over the long-term future. These figures must all be viewed flexibly. In my opinion, they indicate that the appropriate discount rate is approximately seven per cent. I would adopt that figure. It appears to me to be the correct result of the approach I have adopted: i.e. having regard to present investment market conditions and making an appropriate allowance for future inflation. I would, accordingly, vary to seven per cent the discount rate to be used in calculating the present value of the awards for future care and loss of earnings in this case. The result in future cases will depend upon the evidence adduced in those cases.

[Page 259]

(ii) Allowance for tax: In The Queen v. Jennings, supra, this Court held that an award for prospective income should be calculated with no deduction for tax which might have been attracted had it been earned over the working life of the plaintiff. This results [sic] from the fact that it is earning capacity and not lost earnings which is the subject of compensation. For the same reason, no consideration should be taken of the amount by which the income from the award will be reduced by payment of taxes on the interest, dividends, or capital gain. A capital sum is appropriate to replace the lost capital asset of earning capacity. Tax on income is irrelevant either to decrease the sum for taxes the victim would have paid on income from his job, or to increase it for taxes he will now have to pay on income from the award.

In contrast with the situation in personal injury cases, awards under the Fatal Accident Acts should reflect tax considerations, since they are to compensate dependants for the loss of support payments made by the deceased. These support payments could only come out of take-home pay, and the payments from the award will only be received net of taxes: see the contemporaneous decision of this Court in Keizer v. Hanna and Buch.

The impact of taxation upon the income from the capital sum for future care is mitigated by the existence of s. 110(1)(c)(iv.1) of the Income Tax Act, in respect of the deduction of medical expenses, which provides that medical expenses in excess of three per cent of the taxpayer's income includes "remuneration for one full-time attendant upon an individual who was a taxpayer ... in a self-contained domestic establishment in which the cared for person lived." This exemption, I should think, permits a deduction for the payment of one full-time attendant for seven days a week, regardless of whether this attendance is provided by several attendants working over twenty-four hour periods, or one person working twenty-four hour shifts seven days a week.

[Page 260]

The exact tax burden is extremely difficult to predict, as the rate and coverage of taxes swing with the political winds. What concerns us here is whether some allowance must be made to adjust the amount assessed for future care in light of the reduction from taxation. No such allowance was made by the Courts below. Elaborate calculations were provided by the appellant to give an illusion of accuracy to this aspect of the wholly speculative projection of future costs. Because of the provision made in the Income Tax Act and because of the position taken in the Alberta Courts, I would make no allowance for that item. The Legislature might well consider a more generous income tax treatment of cases where a fund is established by judicial decision and the sole purpose of the fund is to provide treatment or care of an accident victim.

One subsidiary point should be affirmed with respect to the determination of the present value of the cost of future care. The calculations should provide for a self-extinguishing sum. To allow a residual capital amount would be to over-compensate the injured person by creating an estate for him. This point was accepted by the lower Courts and not challenged by the parties.

Non-Pecuniary Losses

Andrews used to be a healthy young man, athletically active and socially congenial. Now he is a cripple, deprived of many of life's pleasures and subjected to pain and disability. For this, he is entitled to compensation. But the problem here is qualitatively different from that of pecuniary losses. There is no medium of exchange for happiness. There is no market for expectation of life. The monetary evaluation of non-pecuniary losses is a philosophical and policy exercise more than a legal or logical one. The award must be fair and reasonable, fairness being gauged by earlier decisions; but the award must also of necessity be arbitrary or conventional. No money can provide true restitution. Money can provide for proper care: this is the reason that I think the paramount concern of the courts when awarding damages for personal injuries should be to assure that there will be adequate future care.

[Page 261]

However, if the principle of the paramountcy of care is accepted, then it follows that there is more room for the consideration of other policy factors in the assessment of damages for non-pecuniary losses. In particular, this is the area where the social burden of large awards deserves considerable weight. The sheer fact is that there is no objective yardstick for translating non-pecuniary losses, such as pain and suffering and loss of amenities, into monetary terms. This area is open to widely extravagant claims. It is in this area that awards in the United States have soared to dramatically high levels in recent years. Statistically, it is the area where the danger of excessive burden of expense is greatest.

It is also the area where there is the clearest justification for moderation. As one English commentator has suggested, there are three theoretical approaches to the problem of non-pecuniary loss (Ogus, 35 M.L.R.I). The first, the "conceptual" approach, treats each faculty as a proprietary asset with an objective value, independent of the individual's own use or enjoyment of it. This was the ancient "bot," or tariff system, which prevailed in the days of King Alfred, when a thumb was worth thirty shillings. Our law has long since thought such a solution unsubtle. The second, the "personal" approach, values the injury in terms of the loss of human happiness by the particular victim. The third, or "functional" approach, accepts the personal premise of the second, but rather than attempting to set a value on lost happiness, it attempts to assess the compensation required to provide the injured person "with reasonable solace for his misfortune." "Solace" in this sense is taken to mean physical arrangements which can make his life more endurable rather than "solace" in the sense of sympathy. To my mind, this last approach has much to commend it, as it provides a rationale as to why money is considered compensation for non-pecuniary losses such as loss of amenities, pain and suffering, and loss of expectation of life. Money is awarded because it will serve a useful function in making up for what has been lost in the only way possible, accepting that what has been lost is incapable of being replaced in any direct way. As Windeyer J. said in Skelton v. Collins, supra, at p. 495:

[Page 262]

... he is, I do not doubt, entitled to compensation for what he suffers. Money may be compensation for him if having it can give him pleasure or satisfaction.... But the money is not then a recompense for a loss of something having a money value. It is given as some consolation or solace for the distress that is the consequence of a loss on which no monetary value can be put.

If damages for non-pecuniary loss are viewed from a functional perspective, it is reasonable that large amounts should not be awarded once a person is properly provided for in terms of future care for his injuries and disabilities. The money for future care is to provide physical arrangements for assistance, equipment and facilities directly related to the injuries. Additional money to make life more endurable should then be seen as providing more general physical arrangements above and beyond those relating directly to the injuries. The result is a coordinated and interlocking basis for compensation, and a more rational justification for non-pecuniary loss compensation.

However one may view such awards in a theoretical perspective, the amounts are still largely arbitrary or conventional. As Denning L.J. said in Ward v. James^[22], there is a great need in this area for assessability, uniformity and predictability. In my opinion, this does not mean that the courts should not have regard to the individual situation of the victim. On the contrary, they must do so to determine what has been lost. For example, the loss of a finger would be a greater loss of amenities for an amateur pianist than for a person not engaged in such an activity. Greater compensation would be required to provide things and activities which would function to make up for this loss. But there should be guidelines for the translation into monetary terms of what has been lost. There must be an exchange rate, albeit conventional. In Warren v. King, supra, at p. 528, the following dictum of Harman L.J. appears, which I would adopt, in respect of the assessment of non-pecuniary loss for a living plaintiff:

It seems to me that the first element in assessing such compensation is not to add up items as loss of pleasures, of earnings, of marriage prospects, of children and so on, but to consider the matter from the other side, what can be done to alleviate the disaster to the victim, what will it cost to enable her to live as tolerably as may be in the circumstances.

Cases like the present enable the Court to establish a rough upper parameter on these awards. It is difficult to conceive of a person of his age losing more than Andrews has lost. Of course, the figures must be viewed flexibly in future cases in recognition of the inevitable differences in injuries, the situation of the victim, and changing economic conditions.

The amounts of such awards should not vary greatly from one part of the country to another. Everyone in Canada, wherever he may reside, is entitled to a more or less equal measure of compensation for similar non-pecuniary loss. Variation should be made for what a particular individual has lost in the way of amenities and enjoyment of life, and for what will function to make up for this loss, but variation should not be made merely for the province in which he happens to live.

There has been a significant increase in the size of awards under this head in recent years. As Moir J.A., of the Appellate Division of the Alberta Supreme Court, has warned: "To my mind, damages under the head of loss of amenities will go up and up until they are stabilized by the Supreme Court of Canada." (Hamel v. Prather^[23], at p. 748.) In my opinion, this time has come.

It is customary to set only one figure for all non-pecuniary loss, including such factors as pain and suffering, loss of amenities, and loss of expectation of life. This is a sound practice. Although these elements are analytically distinct, they overlap and merge at the edges and in practice. To suffer pain is surely to lose an amenity of a happy life at that time. To lose years of one's expectation of life is to lose all amenities for the lost period, and to cause mental pain and suffering in the contemplation of this prospect. These problems, as well as the fact that these losses have the common trait of irreplaceability, [sic] favour a composite award for all non-pecuniary losses.

There is an extensive review of authorities in the Court of Appeal judgment in this case (reported 1975 ALTASCAD 42 \(CanLII\), [1976] 2 W.W.R. 385) as well as in the Thornton (reported 1976 CanLII 1083 \(BC CA\), [1976] 5 W.W.R. 240) and Teno (reported (1976), 67 D.L.R. (3d.) 9) cases to which I have referred. I need not review these past authorities.

What is important is the general picture. It is clear that until very recently damages for non-pecuniary losses, even from very serious injuries such as quadriplegia, were substantially below $100,000. Recently, though, the figures have increased markedly. In Jackson v. Millar^[24], this Court affirmed a figure of $150,000 for non-pecuniary loss in an Ontario case of a paraplegic. However, this was done essentially on the principle of non-interference with awards allowed by provincial Courts of Appeal. The need for a general assessment with respect to damages for non-pecuniary loss, which is now apparent, was not as evident at that time. Even in Ontario, prior to these recent cases, general damages allocable for non-pecuniary loss, such as pain and suffering and loss of amenities, were well below $100,000.

[Page 265]

In the present case, $150,000 was awarded at trial, but this amount was reduced to $100,000 by the Appellate Division. In Thornton and Teno $200,000 was awarded in each case, unchanged in the provincial Courts of Appeal.

I would adopt as the appropriate award in the case of a young adult quadriplegic like Andrews the amount of $100,000. Save in exceptional circumstances, this should be regarded as an upper limit of non-pecuniary loss in cases of this nature.

Total Award

This is largely a matter of arithmetic. Of course, in addition, it is customary for the Court to make an overall assessment of the total sum. This, however, seems to me to be a hangover from the days of global sums for all general damages. It is more appropriate to make an overall assessment of the total under each head of future care, prospective earnings, and non-pecuniary loss, in each case in light of general considerations such as the awards of other courts in similar cases and an assessment of the reasonableness of the award.

In the result I would assess general damages for the appellant Andrews as follows:

1. Pecuniary Loss
(a) Cost of future care
—special equipment	$14,200
—amount for monthly payments (monthly amount $4,135: life expectancy 45 years; contingencies 20%; capitalization rate 7%)	557,232

[Page 266]

(b) Prospective loss of earnings
(monthly amount $564; work span 30.81 years; contingencies 20%; capitalization rate 7%)	$ 69,981

2. Non-pecuniary Loss
—compensation for physical and mental pain and suffering endured and to be endured, loss of amenities and enjoyment of life, loss of expectation of life	100,000
Total General Damages	$741,413
Rounded off at	$740,000

To arrive at the total damage award, the special damages of $77,344 must be added to give a final figure of $817,344.

The appellant Andrews will have judgment for seventy-five per cent of that amount, that is, $613,008.

The appellants should have their costs in this Court and in the trial court. The respondents should have their costs in the Court of Appeal as they achieved substantial success in that Court in respect of the finding of contributory negligence on the part of Andrews.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, appellants.. Klinge, Cummings, Andrews & Wilton, Edmonton.

Solicitors for the defendants, respondents: Newson, Hyde, Edmonton.

[1] 1975 ALTASCAD 42 (CanLII), [1976] 2 W.W.R. 385, 64 D.L.R. (3d) 663.

[2] 1951 CanLII 374 (UK JCPC), [1951] A.C. 601.

[3] [1926] A.C. 655.

[4] [1964] A.C. 326.

[5] [1922] 2 A.C. 242.

[6] (1880), 5 App. Cas. 25.

[7] [1973] 3 All E.R. 463.

[8] [1968] 1 All E.R. 726.

[9] 1966 CanLII 11 (SCC), [1966] S.C.R. 532.

- [10] (1967), 1967 CanLII 521 (BC CA), 62 W.W.R. 707.
- [11] (1965), 1965 CanLII 24 (ON CA), 50 D.L.R. (2d) 385.
- [12] (1966), 39 A.L.J.R. 480.
- [13] [1962] 2 Q.B. 210.
- [14] [1973] 1 W.L.R. 540.
- [15] [1963] 3 All E.R. 521.
- [16] 1968 CanLII 76 (SCC), [1968] S.C.R. 589.
- [17] (1962), 108 C.L.R. 541.
- [18] [1970] A.C. 166.
- [19] [1968] S.C.R. v., 64 W.W.R. 768.
- [20] 1976 CanLII 16 (SCC), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 373.
- [21] 1976 CanLII 1085 (BC CA), [1976] 4 W.W.R. 225.
- [22] [1965] 1 All E.R. 563.
- [23] 1976 ALTASCAD 3 (CanLII), [1976] 2 W.W.R. 742.
- [24] 1975 CanLII 20 (SCC), [1976] 1 S.C.R. 225.

TAB 40

Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 (SCC), [1995] 2 SCR 1130

Source:	Supreme Court of Canada
Date:	1995-07-20
File number:	24216
Other citations:	24 OR (3d) 865 — 126 DLR (4th) 129 — 184 NR 1 — 56 ACWS (3d) 495 — 84 OAC 1 — 25 CCLT (2d) 89 — 30 CRR (2d) 189 — [1995] CarswellOnt 396 — EYB 1995-68609 — JE 95-1495 — [1995] SCJ No 64 (QL) — [1995] ACS no 64
Citation:	Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 (SCC), [1995] 2 SCR 1130, < https://canlii.ca/t/1frgn >, retrieved on 2026-03-23
Most recent unfavourable mention	Greenaway v. Festeryga , 2022 ONSC 3210 (CanLII) [...] [108] The facts in Hill are distinguishable and far more egregious than here. [...]

Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130

Morris Manning and the Church of Scientology of Toronto

Appellants

v.

S. Casey Hill

Respondent

and

The Attorney General for Ontario, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the Writers' Union of Canada, PEN Canada, the Canadian Association of Journalists, the Periodical Writers Association of Canada, the Book and Periodical Council, the Canadian Daily Newspaper Association, the Canadian Community Newspapers Association, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the Radio-Television News Directors Association of Canada, the Canadian Book Publishers' Council and the Canadian Magazine Publishers' Association

Interveners

Indexed as: Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto

File No.: 24216.

1995: February 20; 1995: July 20.

Present: La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé, Gonthier, Cory, McLachlin, Iacobucci and Major JJ.

on appeal from the court of appeal for ontario

Constitutional law -- Charter of Rights -- Application -- Libel and slander -- Church of Scientology commencing criminal contempt proceedings against Crown attorney -- Church's counsel and representatives holding press conference on courthouse steps -- Counsel reading from and commenting on allegations in contempt motion -- Contempt allegations subsequently found to be untrue -- Crown attorney bringing action for damages in libel -- Whether Crown attorney's action for damages "government action" -- Whether Charter applies -- Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 32(1).

Libel and slander -- Common law of defamation -- Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms -- Whether common law of defamation complies with values underlying Charter -- Whether "actual malice" rule should be adopted.

Libel and slander -- Defences -- Qualified privilege -- Church of Scientology commencing criminal contempt proceedings against Crown attorney -- Church's counsel and representatives holding press conference on courthouse steps -- Counsel reading from and commenting on allegations in contempt motion -- Contempt allegations subsequently found to be untrue -- Crown attorney bringing action for damages in libel -- Whether defence of qualified privilege available.

Libel and slander -- Damages -- General damages -- Aggravated damages -- Punitive damages -- Church of Scientology commencing criminal contempt proceedings against Crown attorney -- Church's counsel and representatives holding press conference on courthouse steps -- Counsel reading from and commenting on allegations in contempt motion -- Contempt allegations subsequently found to be untrue -- Crown attorney bringing action for damages in libel -- Counsel and Church found jointly liable for general damages -- Church found liable for aggravated and punitive damages -- Whether cap should be imposed on general damages in defamation cases -- Whether damage awards should stand.

The appellant M, accompanied by representatives of the appellant Church of Scientology, held a press conference on the courthouse steps. M, who was wearing his barrister's gown, read from and commented upon allegations contained in a notice of motion by which Scientology intended to commence criminal contempt proceedings against the respondent, a Crown attorney. The notice of motion alleged that the respondent had misled a judge and had breached orders sealing certain documents belonging to Scientology. The remedy sought was the imposition of a fine or his imprisonment. At the contempt proceedings, the allegations against the respondent were found to be untrue and without foundation. He thereupon commenced an action for damages in libel against the appellants. Both appellants were found jointly liable for general damages in the amount of $300,000 and Scientology alone was found liable for aggravated damages of $500,000 and punitive damages of $800,000. This judgment was affirmed by the Court of Appeal. The major issues raised in this appeal are whether the common law of defamation is consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and whether the jury's award of damages can stand.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed.

Per La Forest, Gonthier, Cory, McLachlin, Iacobucci and Major JJ.: The respondent's action for damages does not constitute government action within the meaning of s. 32 of the Charter. The fact that persons are employed by the government does not mean that their reputation is automatically divided into two parts, one related to their personal life and the other to their employment status. Reputation is an integral and fundamentally important aspect of every individual; it exists for everyone quite apart from employment. The appellants impugned the character, competence and integrity of the respondent himself, and not that of the government. He, in turn, responded by instituting legal proceedings in his own capacity. There was no evidence that the Ministry of the Attorney General or the Government of Ontario required or even requested him to do so. Neither is there any indication that the Ministry controlled the conduct of the litigation in any way. The fact that the respondent's suit may have been funded by the Ministry does not alter his constitutional status or cloak his personal action in the mantle of government action. Further, even if there were sufficient government action to bring this case within s. 32, the appellants failed to provide any evidentiary basis upon which to adjudicate their constitutional attack.

The common law must be interpreted in a manner which is consistent with Charter principles. This obligation is simply a manifestation of the inherent jurisdiction of the courts to modify or extend the common law in order to comply with prevailing social conditions and values. In its application to the parties in this action, the common law of defamation complies with the underlying values of the Charter and there is no need to amend or alter it. The common law strikes an appropriate balance between the twin values of reputation and freedom of expression. The protection of reputation is of vital importance, and consideration must be given to the particular significance reputation has for a lawyer. Although it is not specifically mentioned in the Charter, the good reputation of the individual represents and reflects the innate dignity of the individual, a concept which underlies all the Charter rights. Further, reputation is intimately related to the right to privacy, which has been accorded constitutional protection. The "actual malice" rule should not be adopted in Canada in an action between private litigants. The law of defamation is not unduly restrictive or inhibiting. Freedom of speech, like any other freedom, is subject to the law and must be balanced against the essential need of individuals to protect their reputation.

Qualified privilege attaches to the occasion upon which the communication is made, and not to the communication itself. The legal effect of the defence of qualified privilege is to rebut the inference, which normally arises from the publication of defamatory words, that they were spoken with malice. Where the occasion is shown to be privileged, the bona fides of the defendant is presumed and the defendant is free to publish, with impunity, remarks which may be defamatory and untrue about the plaintiff. The privilege is not absolute, however, and can be defeated if the dominant motive for publishing the statement is actual or express malice. Malice is commonly understood, in the popular sense, as spite or ill-will. However, it also includes any indirect motive or ulterior purpose that conflicts with the sense of duty or the mutual interest which the occasion created. Malice may also be established by showing that the defendant spoke dishonestly, or in knowing or reckless disregard for the truth. Qualified privilege may also be defeated when the limits of the duty or interest have been exceeded. The fact that an occasion is privileged does not necessarily protect all that is said or written on that occasion. The information communicated must be reasonably appropriate in the context of the circumstances existing on the occasion when that information was given.

The traditional common law rule with respect to reports on documents relating to judicial proceedings is that, where there are judicial proceedings before a properly constituted judicial tribunal exercising its jurisdiction in open court, then the publication without malice of a fair and accurate report of what takes place before that tribunal is privileged. However, the common law immunity was not extended to a report on pleadings or other documents which had not been filed with the court or referred to in open court. Prior to holding the press conference M had every intention of initiating the contempt action in accordance with the prevailing rules, and had given instructions to this effect. The fact that the proper documents were not filed until the next morning should not defeat the qualified privilege which attached to this occasion. M's conduct, however, far exceeded the legitimate purposes of the occasion. The circumstances of this case called for great restraint in the communication of information concerning the proceedings launched against the respondent. As an experienced lawyer, M ought to have taken steps to confirm the allegations that were being made. This is particularly true since he should have been aware of the Scientology investigation pertaining to access to the sealed documents. In those circumstances he was duty bound to wait until the investigation was completed before launching such a serious attack on the respondent's professional integrity. M failed to take either of these reasonable steps. As a result of this failure, the permissible scope of his comments was limited and the qualified privilege which attached to his remarks was defeated. The press conference was held on the courthouse steps in the presence of representatives from several media organizations. This constituted the widest possible dissemination of grievous allegations of professional misconduct that were yet to be tested in a court of law. His comments were made in language that portrayed the respondent in the worst possible light. This was neither necessary nor appropriate in the existing circumstances. While it is not necessary to characterize M's conduct as amounting to actual malice, it was certainly high-handed and careless and exceeded any legitimate purpose the press conference may have served. His conduct therefore defeated the qualified privilege that attached to the occasion.

When properly instructed, jurors are uniquely qualified to assess the damages suffered by the plaintiff. An appellate court is not entitled to substitute its own judgment as to the proper award for that of the jury merely because it would have arrived at a different figure. General damages in defamation cases are presumed from the very publication of the false statement and are awarded at large. It is members of the community in which the defamed person lives who will be best able to assess the damages. The jury as representative of that community should be free to make an assessment of damages which will provide the plaintiff with a sum of money that clearly demonstrates to the community the vindication of the plaintiff's reputation. No cap should be placed on general damages for defamation. First, the injury suffered by a plaintiff as a result of injurious false statements is entirely different from the non-pecuniary damages suffered by a plaintiff in a personal injury case. Second, at the time the cap was placed on non-pecuniary damages in personal injury cases, their assessment had become a very real problem for the courts and for society as a whole, which is not the case with libel actions. The award of $300,000 by way of general damages was justified in this case. Both appellants published the notice of motion. All persons who are involved in the commission of a joint tort are jointly and severally liable for the damages caused by that tort, and it would thus be wrong in law to have a jury attempt to apportion liability for general damages between the joint tortfeasors. The reports in the press were widely circulated and the television broadcast had a wide coverage. The setting and the persons involved gave the coverage an aura of credibility and significance that must have influenced all who saw and read the accounts. The misconduct of the appellants continued after the first publication. Prior to the commencement of the hearing of the contempt motion, Scientology was aware that the allegations it was making against the respondent were false, yet it persisted with the contempt hearings, as did M. At the conclusion of the hearings, both appellants were aware of the falsity of the allegations. Nonetheless, when the libel action was instituted, the defence of justification was put forward by both of them. Although M withdrew the plea of justification, this was only done in the week prior to the commencement of the trial itself, and Scientology did not withdraw its plea until the hearing of the appeal. Finally, the manner in which the respondent was cross-examined by the appellants, coupled with the manner in which they presented their position to the jury, in light of their knowledge of the falsity of their allegations, are further aggravating factors to be taken into account.

Aggravated damages may be awarded in circumstances where the defendant's conduct has been particularly high-handed or oppressive, thereby increasing the plaintiff's humiliation and anxiety arising from the libellous statement. If aggravated damages are to be awarded, there must be a finding that the defendant was motivated by actual malice, which increased the injury to the plaintiff, either by spreading further afield the damage to the reputation of the plaintiff, or by increasing the mental distress and humiliation of the plaintiff. The factors that a jury may properly take into account in assessing aggravated damages include whether there was a withdrawal of the libellous statement made by the defendant and an apology tendered, whether there was a repetition of the libel, conduct that was calculated to deter the plaintiff from proceeding with the libel action, a prolonged and hostile cross-examination of the plaintiff or a plea of justification which the defendant knew was bound to fail. The general manner in which the defendant presented its case is also relevant. Further, it is appropriate for a jury to consider the conduct of the defendant at the time the libel was published. In this case, there was ample evidence upon which the jury could properly base their finding of aggravated damages. Every aspect of this case demonstrates the very real and persistent malice of Scientology.

Punitive damages may be awarded in situations where the defendant's misconduct is so malicious, oppressive and high-handed that it offends the court's sense of decency. They should only be awarded in those circumstances where the combined award of general and aggravated damages would be insufficient to achieve the goal of punishment and deterrence. Unlike compensatory damages, punitive damages are not at large, and consequently courts have a much greater scope and discretion on appeal. The appellate review should be based upon the court's estimation as to whether the punitive damages serve a rational purpose, as they did in this case. Further, the circumstances presented in this exceptional case demonstrate that there was such insidious, pernicious and persistent malice that the award for punitive damages cannot be said to be excessive.

Per L'Heureux-Dubé J.: Cory J.'s reasons were generally agreed with, except with respect to the scope of the defence of qualified privilege. The common law of defamation, as it is applied to the parties in this action, is consistent with the values enshrined in the Charter. There is accordingly no need to amend or alter it or, in particular, to adopt the "actual malice" rule. The defence of qualified privilege, however, is not available with respect to reports of pleadings in purely private litigation upon which no judicial action has yet been taken. The defence is available only with respect to reports of judicial proceedings. While there is a right to publish details of judicial proceedings before they are heard in open court, such publication does not enjoy the protection of qualified privilege if it is defamatory.

Cases Cited

By Cory J.

Not followed: New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964); referred to: Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), 1989 CanLII 20 \(SCC\), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326; RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., 1986 CanLII 5 \(SCC\), [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573; McKinney v. University of Guelph, 1990 CanLII 60 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 229; Nelles v. Ontario, 1989 CanLII 77 \(SCC\), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 170; Lavigne v. Ontario Public Service Employees Union, 1991 CanLII 68 \(SCC\), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 211; MacKay v. Manitoba, 1989 CanLII 26 \(SCC\), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 357; B.C.G.E.U. v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 1988 CanLII 3 \(SCC\), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 214; R. v. Swain, 1991 CanLII 104 \(SCC\), [1991] 1 S.C.R. 933; R. v. Salituro, 1991 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1991] 3 S.C.R. 654; Dagenais v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., 1994 CanLII 39 \(SCC\), [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835; Re British Columbia Government Employees' Union, 1983 CanLII 572 \(BC SC\), [1983] 6 W.W.R. 640; R. v. Oakes, 1986 CanLII 46 \(SCC\), [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103; Sweeney v. Patterson, 128 F.2d 457 (1942), cert. denied 317 U.S. 678 (1942); Reference re Alberta Statutes, 1938 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1938] S.C.R. 100; Switzman v. Elbling, 1957 CanLII 2 \(SCC\), [1957] S.C.R. 285; Boucher v. The King, 1950 CanLII 2 \(SCC\), [1951] S.C.R. 265; Cherneskey v. Armadale Publishers Ltd., 1978 CanLII 20 \(SCC\), [1979] 1 S.C.R. 1067; United States of America v. Cotroni, 1989 CanLII 106 \(SCC\), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1469; R. v. Keegstra, 1990 CanLII 24 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 697; R. v. Butler, 1992 CanLII 124 \(SCC\), [1992] 1 S.C.R. 452; Globe and Mail Ltd. v. Boland, 1960 CanLII 2 \(SCC\), [1960] S.C.R. 203; Derrickson v. Tomat (1992), 1992 CanLII 8669 \(BC CA\), 88 D.L.R. (4th) 401; De Libellis Famosis (1605), 5 Co. Rep. 125a, 77 E.R. 250; King v. Lake (1679), Hardres 470, 145 E.R. 552; Rosenblatt v. Baer, 383 U.S. 75 (1966); Vogel v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., 1982 CanLII 801 \(BC SC\), [1982] 3 W.W.R. 97; R. v. Dymont, 1988 CanLII 10 \(SCC\), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 417; Barr v. Matteo, 360 U.S. 564 (1959); Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc., 472 U.S. 749 (1985); Coughlin v. Westinghouse Broadcasting & Cable, Inc., 476 U.S. 1187 (1986); Derbyshire County Council v. Times Newspapers Ltd., [1993] 1 All E.R. 1011; Theophanous v. Herald & Weekly Times Ltd. (1994), 124 A.L.R. 1; Silkin v. Beaverbrook Newspapers Ltd., [1958] 1 W.L.R. 743; Adam v. Ward, [1917] A.C. 309; McLoughlin v. Kutasy, 1979 CanLII 39 \(SCC\), [1979] 2 S.C.R. 311; Horrocks v. Lowe, [1975] A.C. 135; Taylor v. Despard, 1956 CanLII 124 \(ON CA\), [1956] O.R. 963; Netupsky v. Craig, 1972 CanLII 19 \(SCC\), [1973] S.C.R. 55; Douglas v. Tucker, 1951 CanLII 54 \(SCC\), [1952] 1 S.C.R. 275; Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada v. Dalrymple, 1965 CanLII 9 \(SCC\), [1965] S.C.R. 302; Gazette Printing Co. v. Shallow (1909), 1909 CanLII 46 \(SCC\), 41 S.C.R. 339; Canadian Newspapers Co. v. Canada (Attorney General), 1988 CanLII 52 \(SCC\), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 122; Walker v. CFTO Ltd. (1987), 1987 CanLII 126 \(ON CA\), 59 O.R. (2d) 104; Rantzen v. Mirror Group Newspapers (1986) Ltd., [1993] 4 All E.R. 975; Ley v. Hamilton (1935), 153 L.T. 384; Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229; Arnold v. Teno, 1978 CanLII 2 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287; Thornton v. Board of School Trustees of School District No. 57 (Prince George), 1978 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 267; Jill Fishing Ltd. v. Koranda Management Inc., [1993] B.C.J. No. 1861 (QL); Cassell & Co. v. Broome, [1972] 1 All E.R. 801; Blackshaw v. Lord, [1983] 2 All E.R. 311; Sutcliffe v. Pressdram Ltd., [1990] 1 All E.R. 269; Carson v. John Fairfax & Sons Ltd. (1993), 113 A.L.R. 577; Lawson v. Burns, 1976 CanLII 1499 \(BC SC\), [1976] 6 W.W.R. 362; Kerr v. Conlogue (1992), 1992 CanLII 924 \(BC SC\), 65 B.C.L.R. (2d) 70; Egger v. Chelmsford, [1965] 1 Q.B. 248.

By L'Heureux-Dubé J.

Not followed: New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964); referred to: RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., 1986 CanLII 5 \(SCC\), [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573; R. v. Salituro, 1991 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1991] 3 S.C.R. 654; Dagenais v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., 1994 CanLII 39 \(SCC\), [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835; R. v. Park, 1995 CanLII 104 \(SCC\), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 836; Gazette Printing Co. v. Shallow (1909), 1909 CanLII 46 \(SCC\), 41 S.C.R. 339; Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), 1989 CanLII 20 \(SCC\), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act, 1984, S.O. 1989, c. 67, s. 4.

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 2(b), 32(1).

Constitution Act, 1982, s. 52.

Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 137(1).

Crown Attorneys Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.49.

Criminal Code, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-46, ss. 490(15), 504.

Libel and Slander Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.12.

Marriage Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 256, s. 20(2).

Ministry of the Attorney General Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.17.

Authors Cited

Australia. Law Reform Commission. Report No. 11. Unfair Publication: Defamation and Privacy. Canberra: Australian Government Publishing Service, 1979.

Barrett, David A. "Declaratory Judgments for Libel: A Better Alternative" (1986), 74 Cal. L. Rev. 847.

Barron, Jerome A. "Access to the Press -- A New First Amendment Right" (1966-67), 80 Harv. L. Rev. 1641.

Bezanson, Randall P. "Libel Law and the Realities of Litigation: Setting the Record Straight" (1985), 71 Iowa L. Rev. 226.

Bollinger, Lee C. "The End of New York Times v Sullivan: Reflections on Masson v New Yorker Magazine", [1991] Sup. Ct. Rev. 1.

Brown, Raymond E. The Law of Defamation in Canada, 2nd ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 1994 (loose-leaf).

Canadian Daily Newspaper Association. Response to A Consultation Draft of the General Limitations Act (September 1991).

Carter-Ruck on Libel and Slander, 4th ed. By Peter F. Carter-Ruck, Richard Walker and Harvey N. A. Starte. London: Butterworths, 1992.

Christie, George C. "Injury to Reputation and the Constitution: Confusion Amid Conflicting Approaches" (1976), 75 Mich. L. Rev. 43.

Epstein, Richard A. "Was New York Times v. Sullivan Wrong?" (1986), 53 U. Chi. L. Rev. 782.

- Gatley on Libel and Slander*, 8th ed. By Philip Lewis. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1981.
- Gatley on Libel and Slander in a Civil Action: With Precedents of Pleadings*, 4th ed. By Richard O'Sullivan. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1953.
- Hawreluk, David. "The Lawyer's Duty to Himself and the Code of Professional Conduct" (1993), 27 L. Soc. Gaz. 119.
- Ireland. Law Reform Commission. Report on the Civil Law of Defamation. Dublin: Law Reform Commission, 1991.
- Lepofsky, M. David. "Making Sense of the Libel Chill Debate: Do Libel Laws 'Chill' the Exercise of Freedom of Expression?" (1994), 4 N.J.C.L. 169.
- Leval, Pierre N. "The No-Money, No-Fault Libel Suit: Keeping Sullivan in its Proper Place" (1988), 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1287.
- Lewis, Anthony. "New York Times v. Sullivan Reconsidered: Time to Return to 'The Central Meaning of the First Amendment'" (1983), 83 Colum. L. Rev. 603.
- London, Martin. "The 'Muzzled Media': Constitutional Crisis or Product Liability Scam?". In At What Price? Libel Law and Freedom of the Press. New York: Twentieth Century Fund, 1993.
- McLellan, A. Anne, and Bruce P. Elman. "To Whom Does the Charter Apply? Some Recent Cases on Section 32" (1986), 24 Alta. L. Rev. 361.
- Salmond and Heuston on the Law of Torts*, 20th ed. By R. F. V. Heuston and R. A. Buckley. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1992.
- United Kingdom. Report of the Committee on Defamation. London: H.M.S.O., 1975.
- Veeder, Van Vechten. "The History and Theory of the Law of Defamation" (1903), 3 Colum. L. Rev. 546.
- Waddams, S. M. The Law of Damages, 2nd ed. Toronto: Canada Law Book, 1991 (loose-leaf).

APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal (1994), 1994 CanLII 10572 \(ON CA\), 18 O.R. (3d) 385, 114 D.L.R. (4th) 1, 71 O.A.C. 161, 20 C.C.L.T. (2d) 129, affirming a judgment of the Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) awarding the respondent damages for libel against the appellants. Appeal dismissed.

Bryan Finlay, Q.C., and Christopher J. Tzekas, for the appellant Morris Manning.

Marc J. Somerville, Q.C., and R. Ross Wells, for the appellant the Church of Scientology of Toronto.

Robert P. Armstrong, Q.C., and Kent E. Thomson, for the respondent.

Lori Sterling and Hart Schwartz, for the intervener the Attorney General for Ontario.

Robert J. Sharpe and Kent Roach, for the intervener the Canadian Civil Liberties Association.

Edward M. Morgan, for the interveners the Writers' Union of Canada, PEN Canada, the Canadian Association of Journalists, the Periodical Writers Association of Canada, and the Book and Periodical Council.

Peter W. Hogg, Q.C., and Brian MacLeod Rogers, for the interveners the Canadian Daily Newspaper Association, the Canadian Community Newspapers Association, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the Radio-Television News Directors Association of Canada, the Canadian Book Publishers' Council and the Canadian Magazine Publishers' Association.

The judgment of La Forest, Gonthier, Cory, McLachlin, Iacobucci and Major JJ. was delivered by 1 CORY J. -- On September 17, 1984, the appellant Morris Manning, accompanied by representatives of the appellant Church of Scientology of Toronto ("Scientology"), held a press conference on the steps of Osgoode Hall in Toronto. Manning, who was wearing his barrister's gown, read from and commented upon allegations contained in a notice of motion by which Scientology intended to commence criminal contempt proceedings against the respondent Casey Hill, a Crown attorney. The notice of motion alleged that Casey Hill had misled a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario and had breached orders sealing certain documents belonging to Scientology. The remedy sought was the imposition of a fine or the imprisonment of Casey Hill.

2 At the contempt proceedings, the allegations against Casey Hill were found to be untrue and without foundation. Casey Hill thereupon commenced this action for damages in libel against both Morris Manning and Scientology. On October 3, 1991, following a trial before Carruthers J. and a jury, Morris Manning and Scientology were found jointly liable for general damages in the amount of $300,000 and Scientology alone was found liable for aggravated damages of $500,000 and punitive damages of $800,000. Their appeal from this judgment was dismissed by a unanimous Court of Appeal: (1994), 1994 CanLII 10572 \(ON CA\), 18 O.R. (3d) 385, 114 D.L.R. (4th) 1, 71 O.A.C. 161, 20 C.C.L.T. (2d) 129.

I. Factual Background

3 As in all actions for libel, the factual background is extremely important and must be set out in some detail. At the time the defamatory statements were made, Casey Hill was employed as counsel with the Crown Law Office, Criminal Division of the Ministry of the Attorney General for the Province of Ontario. He had given advice to the Ontario Provincial Police ("OPP") regarding a warrant obtained on March 1, 1983 which authorized a search of the premises occupied by Scientology. During the execution of the search warrant on March 3 and 4, 1983, approximately 250,000 documents, comprising over 2 million pages of material, were seized. These documents were stored in some 900 boxes at an OPP building in Toronto.

4 Immediately following the seizure, Scientology retained Clayton Ruby to bring a motion to quash the search warrant and to seek the return of the seized documents. Casey Hill, who had gained experience and special skill in the area of search and seizure, acted as counsel for the Crown.

- 5 The litigation commenced on March 7, 1983 and continued throughout 1983 and 1984. On July 11, 1984, Osler J. ruled that solicitor-and-client privilege applied to 232 of the seized documents he had reviewed and ordered that they remain sealed pending further order of the court. Several sealing orders and endorsements were ultimately made by Justices of the Supreme Court of Ontario.
- 6 Throughout this period, Casey Hill dealt frequently with Clayton Ruby and other counsel for Scientology in connection with various matters ranging from the trivial to the significant. They were invariably resolved in a spirit of co-operation and professional courtesy, even in those situations where the parties proceeded with contested motions.
- 7 In March of 1983, Scientology retained Charles Campbell to make an application to Rosemarie Drapkin, the Deputy Registrar General of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, requesting that its president, Earl Smith, be granted the authorization to solemnize marriages pursuant to s. 20(2) of the Marriage Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 256. One year later, Scientology commenced an application for judicial review of Rosemarie Drapkin's failure to approve that application.
- 8 Rosemarie Drapkin believed that it would help her to assess the application if she could review the seized documents. To that end, Kim Twohig, a solicitor in the Civil Division of the Crown Law Office, approached Casey Hill in July 1984. He advised her that there was a motion outstanding before Osler J. for an order quashing the search warrant and that access would only be granted if a court order was obtained pursuant to s. 490(15) (formerly 446(15)) of the Criminal Code, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-46. He explained that there had been several interim rulings in this matter and stated that "this was probably the type of case where the judge hearing such an application would want notice given to Scientology".

- 9 During the last week of July 1984, Casey Hill travelled to Nassau to meet with the Attorney General of the Bahamas in respect of an ongoing criminal investigation. In the course of a telephone conversation, Kim Twohig conveyed to Casey Hill the urgent need she had to gain access to the documents as a date had been fixed to hear Scientology's application for judicial review. Casey Hill testified that he told Kim Twohig that her Criminal Code application would have to be served on the Crown Law Office, Criminal Division in the usual fashion to obtain its consent.
- 10 Kim Twohig prepared the necessary materials, including the notice of motion and an affidavit of Rosemarie Drapkin, and obtained the requisite consent from James Blacklock of the Crown Law Office, Criminal Division. The application was then filed in Weekly Court on July 30, 1984 with the assistance of Jerome Cooper, a solicitor with the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. No notice was given to Scientology. The following day, a consent order granting access to all of the seized documents was issued by Sirois J. in chambers without submissions from counsel.
- 11 In her testimony at the trial of this action, Kim Twohig agreed that she alone made the decision not to provide notice to Scientology of her application. She testified that she assumed that the presiding judge would determine whether notice was necessary or appropriate. It was only later that she realized that the order of Sirois J. might provide access to sealed documents.
- 12 By letter dated August 22, 1984, Rosemarie Drapkin wrote to Charles Campbell concerning Scientology's application and advised that she had "reviewed certain documents relating to the Scientology organization which were seized pursuant to the search warrant" issued on March 1, 1983. Attached to the letter was a list of 89 documents, some of which had purportedly been sealed by order of Osler J. It was this information which raised the concern of Scientology and its legal advisers.

- 13 In response, Clayton Ruby wrote a somewhat precipitous and very aggressive letter to the Solicitor General of Ontario dated August 28, 1984. In it he accused the OPP of acting "as if there were no rule of law" and of "simply ignoring solicitor/client privilege and making a mockery of the courts". He called for a "full investigation" and demanded disciplinary action be taken "against everyone involved". Clayton Ruby was not aware of the order of Sirois J. at that time. He simply assumed that those involved had acted improperly.
- 14 As early as September 5, 1984, Clayton Ruby, along with other counsel and representatives of Scientology, decided that what had occurred was "disgraceful and shocking" and constituted contempt. They arrived at this conclusion without having taken any steps to ensure the accuracy of their impressions.
- 15 In a letter addressed to Casey Hill dated September 6, 1984, Clayton Ruby asked for Casey Hill's assistance in obtaining information regarding the circumstances under which the order of Sirois J. had been granted and why Scientology had not received notice of the application. He requested a response within five days. It should be noted that at the time this letter was written, Clayton Ruby was a Bencher of the Law Society and Vice-Chairman of the Law Society's Discipline Committee.
- 16 The letter implied that there could be disciplinary proceedings brought before the Law Society of Upper Canada and that a contempt action might be instituted. Not surprisingly, it was given serious consideration by Casey Hill and others at the Ministry of the Attorney General. Hill sought the advice of his Director, Howard Morton. Morton wrote a letter to Ruby stating that in light of the serious nature of the allegations, he would not be able to reply within the five-day period imposed by Ruby.
- 17 On September 6 and 7, 1984, Michael Code (then an associate of Clayton Ruby) telephoned Casey Hill, Jerome Cooper and Kim Twohig to find out how access to the privileged documents had been obtained. They all conveyed a similar version of the past events and assured him that the sealed documents were not opened but rather that unsealed copies must have been examined. Code conceded in cross-examination that everyone he spoke to was cooperative.

18 On September 11, 1984, however, without making any further inquiries and without awaiting the reply from Casey Hill and Howard Morton, Ruby retained the appellant Morris Manning to advise Scientology in respect of possible contempt proceedings. On September 13, 1984, representatives of Scientology met with Morris Manning, Charles Campbell, Clayton Ruby, Michael Code and an articling student at Ruby's office. A decision was made to commence an application for criminal contempt against both Casey Hill and Jerome Cooper. Morris Manning testified that a critical piece of information which prompted him to bring the contempt application was the characterization by Michael Code of Casey Hill's attitude during their conversation. Casey Hill had allegedly said that if the Church missed sealing all copies of the privileged documents it was "too bad". In Morris Manning's opinion, this demonstrated a contemptuous attitude towards the court. He reached this conclusion without ever speaking to Casey Hill or any of the others involved in the incident such as Rosemarie Drapkin, Kim Twohig, James Blacklock, Jerome Cooper or Detective Inspector Ormsby, the senior officer of the OPP responsible for the investigation of Scientology. Nor had Morris Manning interviewed those representatives of Scientology who were directly involved in the sealing of the documents.

19 The evidence adduced at the contempt hearing clearly established that Casey Hill played no part in the application before Sirois J. and had nothing to do with the execution or filing of the consent on behalf of the Attorney General for Ontario. In fact, he was only informed of any difficulties associated with the order of Osler J. in late August 1984, when he received a telephone call from Detective Inspector Ormsby. At that time, Ormsby advised him that Rosemarie Drapkin had attended at the OPP building in which the seized documents were held with the order of Sirois J., but that she was denied access to the sealed documents. The sealed documents were never opened. What Rosemarie Drapkin may have seen were unsealed copies of the sealed documents that were probably located in different boxes than the sealed originals.

20 Between September 13 and 17, 1984, Morris Manning prepared a notice of motion for the contempt application returnable in Weekly Court some time in early January 1985. During this time, he did not make any attempt to determine what was being done with the seized documents or to ascertain whether any continuing breach of privilege was occurring.

(A) The "Enemy Canada" File

21 Long before he gave advice to the OPP in connection with the search and seizure of documents which took place on March 3 and 4, 1983, Casey Hill had become a target of Scientology's enmity. Over the years, he had been involved in a number of matters concerning Scientology's affairs. As a result, it kept a file on him. This was only discovered when the production of the file was ordered during the course of this action. The file disclosed that from approximately 1977 until at least 1981, Scientology closely monitored and tracked Casey Hill and had labelled him an "Enemy Canada". Casey Hill testified that from his experience, persons viewed by Scientology as its enemies were "subject to being neutralized".

(B) The Press Conference

22 In the file of Charles Campbell there was a note dated September 10 or 11, 1984 which made reference to a press conference to be held the following Monday, September 17, 1984. It appears, then, that before it had even consulted Morris Manning, Scientology intended to call a press conference

23 The press conference was organized by Earl Smith. He contacted a number of media organizations, including CFTO-TV, CBC television and The Globe and Mail and invited them to the event which was to be held in front of Osgoode Hall. Morris Manning was appearing on that day before the Court of Appeal in an unrelated matter and attended the press conference in his barrister's gown.

24 He testified that he answered a number of questions concerning the contempt proceedings and then, at the request of the media, read a passage from the notice of motion for the television cameras. Copies of the notice of motion were distributed to the media along with a typewritten document, prepared by Scientology, entitled "Chronology of Events Leading to Contempt Motion".

25 The notice of motion in essence alleged that Casey Hill had participated in the misleading of Sirois J. and that he had participated in or aided and abetted others in the opening and inspection of documents which to his knowledge were sealed by Osler J.

26 On the evening of September 17, 1984, the CFTO broadcast was seen by an audience of approximately 132,000 people. The text of the broadcast is set out in Appendix A to these reasons. The CBC broadcast was seen by approximately 118,000 people. The text is found in Appendix B. The following morning, an article appeared in The Globe and Mail entitled "Motion of Contempt Launched by Church". Approximately 108,000 copies of the edition containing this article were distributed. The article is reproduced in Appendix C. All three publications repeated the allegations made in the notice of motion.

(C) The Felske Memorandum

27 Patricia Felske is a Scientologist who had attended at the offices of the OPP on a regular basis since March 1983 for the purpose of reviewing the seized materials and ensuring that the privileged documents were sealed. Between August 29, 1984, and September 27, 1984, she, along with other representatives from Scientology, opened the sealed envelopes and verified their contents against photocopies of the documents that Rosemarie Drapkin had examined. Their purpose was to determine whether Ms. Drapkin had been granted access to the restricted materials.

28 On September 17, 1984, the day of the press conference, the Scientology investigation was well advanced and neither then nor later was there any indication that Drapkin gained access to sealed documents. Scientology and Manning nevertheless proceeded with the press conference before any conclusive findings had been made on this issue.

29 On November 2, 1984, Patricia Felske prepared a brief summary of her findings, entitled "Time Track Re: Solicitor and Client Privileged Documents", which she sent to Clayton Ruby, Charles Campbell, Morris Manning and Diane Martin, another of Scientology's lawyers. In it she concluded that "[t]here was no evidence to support any allegation that the sealed envelopes had been tampered with by the OPP" (emphasis added).

(D) The Contempt Trial

30 The contempt trial was heard by Cromarty J. for 11 days beginning the next Monday, November 5, 1984. Morris Manning and Charles Campbell had carriage of the proceedings on behalf of Scientology. A number of witnesses were called by them, including Clayton Ruby, Michael Code, Kim Twohig, Rosemarie Drapkin, James Blacklock, Detective Inspector Ormsby and four other members of the OPP who had direct responsibility for the seized documents.

31 Following the presentation of Scientology's case, Cromarty J. dismissed the application on a motion for non-suit on December 7, 1984: 13 W.C.B. 231. He held that there was no evidence that Casey Hill participated in any stage of the application made before Sirois J. or that he should have been aware of any need for further inquiry into Kim Twohig's actions.

32 From the contents of the Felske Memorandum, which only came to light at the trial of the present action, it is evident that prior to the start of the contempt hearing, Scientology was well aware that no sealed envelopes had been opened. Yet, it still proceeded with a contempt prosecution against Casey Hill.

33 Morris Manning testified that he never received the Felske Memorandum and conceded that if he had been aware of it, he would have been obliged to disclose it to Casey Hill. However, on the weekend prior to the start of the contempt trial, Morris Manning was briefed by Charles Campbell. At trial, both Campbell and Ruby acknowledged that they had received the Felske Memorandum. In addition, Campbell testified that all important information concerning the prosecution was shared with everybody involved. It might be inferred that this would include Manning.

34 Further, Morris Manning met with Patricia Felske and two other representatives of Scientology during the weekend prior to the hearing of the contempt motion. However, he testified that they were not interviewed for the purpose of giving evidence at the contempt trial nor were they called to do so. Cromarty J. characterized the failure to call these individuals as "a most eloquent omission".

35 There was another equally eloquent omission. The OPP officers who were called by Scientology to testify were not asked to produce the sealed envelopes they were directed to bring with them to court. If they had, it would have been obvious that the envelopes had not been tampered with.

(E) The Attempt to Disqualify Casey Hill from the Search and Seizure Proceedings

36 As stated earlier, Scientology made an application in March 1983 to quash the search warrant which the OPP had used to seize its documents. This application was commenced before Osler J. prior to September 17, 1984, but was adjourned until the completion of the contempt proceedings. Throughout this time, Casey Hill represented the Crown as lead counsel.

37 The application was resumed on December 18, 1984. By that time, the contempt charges had been dismissed as unfounded and this libel action had been commenced. Casey Hill continued to represent the Crown but made a full disclosure of all the relevant circumstances to Osler J. He submitted that the proceedings involved the interpretation and application of legal principles rather than the exercise of prosecutorial discretion and, as a consequence, his ability to act as responding counsel was not impaired.

38 Scientology, nevertheless, moved to disqualify Casey Hill on the ground that occasions might arise where he would have to exercise a discretion as to the production of a document and as to the significance to be attached to it. Scientology contended that this could reflect adversely upon it and, in due course result in a favourable consideration of Casey Hill's libel suit. Scientology was essentially suggesting that Casey Hill would use his position as Crown counsel to further his private interests. This was a serious attack on his professional integrity which added to the sting of the libel uttered to that point.

39 Osler J. emphatically rejected these arguments. He stated that it was fundamentally important for the Crown to "proceed courageously in the face of threats and attempts at intimidation or in the face of proceedings that have been found to be groundless but have obviously had the effect of harassment".

(F) Pleas of Justification

40 On February 18, 1985, Scientology delivered its statement of defence in this action. Notwithstanding the findings contained in the Felske Memorandum prepared by its own members, and the conclusion reached by Cromarty J. in the contempt hearing, Scientology entered a plea of justification.

41 Scientology also put forward as true an allegation that Casey Hill directed and supervised the OPP in the opening and reviewing of 20 boxes of documents which had been sealed by order of Linden J. This was found by the Court of Appeal to constitute a separate allegation of contempt and a further attack upon the integrity of Casey Hill in the performance of his duties as Crown counsel.

42 Scientology maintained its plea of justification throughout the trial and did not withdraw it until the first day of the hearing before the Court of Appeal on December 6, 1993, some nine years after the original libel.

43 Morris Manning delivered his statement of defence on April 1, 1985, and also asserted a plea of justification which he did not withdraw until the week prior to the commencement of the trial. He persisted in this plea despite the decision of Cromarty J. dismissing the motion to commit Casey Hill for contempt and despite the overwhelming evidence indicating that the allegations made against Hill were false.

(G) The Conduct of Scientology at Trial

44 Scientology continued its attack against Casey Hill throughout the trial of this action, both in the presence of the jury and in its absence. More than once, it reiterated the libel even though it knew that these allegations were false. Clearly, it sought to repeatedly attack Casey Hill's moral character. Some examples are set out below.

(1) The Cross-Examination of Casey Hill

45 Counsel for Scientology subjected Casey Hill to a lengthy cross-examination which the Court of Appeal correctly described as a "skilful and deliberate attempt at character assassination" (p. 452 O.R.). Counsel suggested that Casey Hill often improperly coached his witnesses and took the same approach with respect to his own testimony at the libel trial. It was insinuated that Casey Hill was an untrustworthy person who would breach his undertakings as he had done in this case in relation to the sealed documents. Attempts were also made to blame him for the failure to give notice to Scientology concerning the application before Sirois J. even though he had been vindicated seven years earlier by Cromarty J.

(2) The "Veiled Threat" Against Clayton Ruby

46 Michael Code testified that during the course of his conversation with Casey Hill on September 6, 1984, the latter had made a veiled threat against Clayton Ruby which he described in the following terms:

He [Casey Hill] suggests we may receive an ominous reply to Clay's complaints. He is awaiting a report back from the police. What he said to me was something to the effect that there was a police investigation of Mr. Ruby's conduct and basically, you better watch it. [Emphasis added.]

47 When Casey Hill was called in reply, he denied making any such threat or using the word "ominous" during the conversation. Rather, he testified that he had used the word "omnibus" in reference to a combined reply to the letters that Ruby sent to the Solicitor General and to himself.

48 In cross-examination, counsel for Scientology accused Casey Hill of fabricating this version of events. Not only did counsel suggest that Hill had lied on the stand, but the general tenor of his questioning implied that Hill was so unprincipled that he would use the power of the state to intimidate an opposing lawyer.

(3) The Closing Address to the Jury by Counsel for Scientology

49 During his closing address, counsel for Scientology contended that Casey Hill had demonstrated feigned and insincere emotion when he described his reaction to seeing the publication of the CFTO broadcast on the evening of September 17, 1984. He suggested to the jury that it may have been nothing more than a "skilled performance to tug at your heartstrings" in order to influence the verdict.

(H) The Events Following the Verdict of the Jury

50 The day after the jury's verdict, on October 4, 1991, Scientology republished the libel in a press release delivered to the media. A few weeks later, it issued another press release attacking the verdict of the jury as "outrageous" and "so exorbitant and so grossly out of proportion that it was influenced more by L.A. Law than Canadian legal tradition". Shortly thereafter, it proceeded with a motion before Carruthers J. to adduce evidence which, it contended, would bear "directly on the credibility and reputation of the plaintiff S. Casey Hill". That motion was later withdrawn.

II. Judgments Below

(A) Trial by Jury (Carruthers J. presiding)

51 This action for damages for libel was commenced on December 14, 1984. The trial before Carruthers J. and a jury lasted from September 3, 1991 until October 3, 1991. The questions posed to the jury and their answers were as follows:

SPECIAL VERDICT

QUESTIONS

A. With Respect to the Defendant, Morris Manning

1. Did the CBC broadcast refer to the plaintiff?

A. Yes

2. Did Morris Manning instruct, authorize or consent to the publication of the Notice of Motion at the press conference?

A. Yes

B. With Respect to Both Defendants

3. Are the words complained of in the CFTO and CBC broadcasts on September 17, 1984, the Globe & Mail article on September 18, 1984 and the Notice of Motion defamatory of the plaintiff?

A. Yes

4. If the answer to Question 3 is "yes", what general damages, if any, is the plaintiff, Casey Hill, entitled to from the defendants, The Church of Scientology of Toronto and Morris Manning?

A. $300,000

5. If your answer to Question 3 is "yes", is he entitled to any aggravated damages from the defendant, Morris Manning, in addition to any general damages already assessed, and if so, in what amount?

A. Nil

6. If your answer to Question 3 is "yes", is he entitled to any aggravated damages from the defendant, The Church of Scientology of Toronto, in addition to any general damages already assessed, and if so, in what amount?

A. $500,000

7. If your answer to Question 3 is "yes", is he entitled to any punitive damages from the defendant, The Church of Scientology of Toronto, and if so, in what amount?

A. $800,000

52 Following the verdict, the appellants made a motion before Carruthers J. requesting that he completely disregard the jury's assessment of damages because it was "outrageous, exorbitant and entirely out of proportion to the sting of the defamation" ((1992), 1992 CanLII 7516 \(ON SC\), 7 O.R. (3d) 489, at p. 497). Carruthers J. concluded that the jury was properly instructed as to the object and purpose of each head of damage and that there was evidence upon which the jury could have reached a conclusion that it was entitled to award damages under each of the three heads.

53 Carruthers J. refused to "invade the province of the jury" in order to make his own assessment of the damages (at p. 502). He noted that since both defendants vigorously opposed each of the several motions on behalf of the plaintiff to discharge the jury, it was not open to them to suggest that he fix damages himself.

54 The Court of Appeal, in its careful and extensive reasons, rejected the appellants' allegation that the common law of defamation violated s. 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It did so for two reasons. First, the court held that it was nothing more than a "bare assertion" of unconstitutionality which could not support their constitutional challenge (at p. 414). Second, the court held that even if the constitutional challenge could be resolved in the absence of an evidentiary foundation, the appellants failed to show that the action for damages commenced by Casey Hill was a form of "government action" which was necessary in order to attract the application of the Charter. The court rejected the argument that Casey Hill's position as a public figure implicated the government in whatever action he pursued. It also dismissed the submission that the government funding of his action was relevant to this question.

55 The Court of Appeal then considered the argument that interpreting the common law in a manner consistent with the Charter required the adoption of the "actual malice" standard of liability set out in the reasons of the U.S. Supreme Court in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964). There, Brennan J. held that public officials could only collect damages for statements concerning their fitness for office in circumstances where they could demonstrate that the defamatory statement was made "with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not" (p. 280). After noting that the common law concept of malice involves an assessment of different factors, such as animosity, hostility, ill will and spite, the court concluded that the adoption of the rule in New York Times v. Sullivan, supra, would result in a major change to the common law that was neither necessary nor merited. It found that the existing rule was historically based on sound policy reasons which recognized the importance of the protection of the reputation of individuals who assume the responsibilities of public officials.

56 The appellants also submitted that the trial judge erred in ruling that the circumstances of the press conference did not constitute an occasion of qualified privilege and in declining to charge the jury with respect to that defence. The Court of Appeal found that under the common law, qualified privilege attached only to the publication of documents read or referred to in open court. It was opposed to conferring a privilege on a press conference held for the purpose of disseminating to the public details of a pending legal proceeding at a time when no document in connection with that legal proceeding had yet been filed in any court office. In rejecting the argument that this Court's judgment in Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), 1989 CanLII 20 (SCC), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326, superseded the common law rule, the court stated that, while there is a right to publish details of judicial proceedings before they are heard in open court, "such publication does not enjoy the protection of qualified privilege if it is defamatory" (p. 427).

57 On the subject of general damages, the Court of Appeal examined the libellous statement, the circumstances of its publication and its effect on Casey Hill. It found that "[t]he false statements can be seen as little short of allegations of a criminal breach of trust" (p. 437), "calculated to engender in the minds of those who learned of [them] that they were very serious and entirely credible" (p. 438). Accordingly, they justified a very substantial award of general damages to compensate Casey Hill for the damage to his reputation and the injury to his feelings. This, it was held, should be the result even though he had received several promotions and appointments by the time of trial.

58 With respect to aggravated damages, the Court of Appeal examined the circumstances existing prior to, at the time of and following the publication of the libel. It concluded that the jury was entitled to find that its award for general damages was not large enough to provide adequate solatium to Casey Hill for the aggravation of his injury which was caused by Scientology's malicious libel and reprehensible conduct.

59 The court then turned its attention to the issue of punitive damages and concluded as follows at p. 459:

What the circumstances of this case demonstrated beyond peradventure to the jury was that Scientology was engaged in an unceasing and apparently unstoppable campaign to destroy Casey Hill and his reputation. It must have been apparent to the jury that a very substantial penalty was required because Scientology had not been deterred from its course of conduct by a previous judicial determination that its allegations were unfounded nor by its own knowledge that its principal allegation [that the sealed documents had been opened] was false.

60 The court also observed that it would not interfere with the award of punitive damages on the ground that Scientology persisted in its attack on Casey Hill's reputation even after the jury's verdict.

61 On the question of pre-judgment interest, the court concluded that since the appellants had accommodated counsel for Casey Hill in order to permit him to participate in a Royal Commission, it would be unfair to charge them with prejudgment interest for this period. Also, in considering whether Morris Manning should bear an equal portion of the costs of the trial with Scientology, the court pointed out that much of the trial was devoted to the plea of justification pursued by Scientology alone. Furthermore, the majority of the damages were awarded against Scientology. Therefore, the court concluded that the trial costs should be apportioned, with Morris Manning paying only 30 percent of the assessed costs and Scientology the balance. However, it added that the parties should remain jointly and severally liable for all costs with each having a claim over against the other for any amount paid beyond their apportioned liability.

III. Analysis

62 Two major issues are raised in this appeal. The first concerns the constitutionality of the common law action for defamation. The second relates to the damages that can properly be assessed in such actions.

63 Let us first review the appellants' submissions pertaining to defamation actions. The appellants contend that the common law of defamation has failed to keep step with the evolution of Canadian society. They argue that the guiding principles upon which defamation is based place too much emphasis on the need to protect the reputation of plaintiffs at the expense of the freedom of expression of defendants. This, they say, is an unwarranted restriction which is imposed in a manner that cannot be justified in a free and democratic society. The appellants add that if the element of government action in the present case is insufficient to attract Charter scrutiny under s. 32, the principles of the common law ought, nevertheless, to be interpreted, even in a purely private action, in a manner consistent with the Charter. This, the appellants say, can only be achieved by the adoption of the "actual malice" standard of liability articulated by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of New York Times v. Sullivan, supra.

64 In addition, the appellant Morris Manning submits that the common law should be interpreted so as to afford the defence of qualified privilege to a lawyer who, acting on behalf of a client, reads and comments in public upon a notice of motion which he believes, in good faith, has been filed in court, and which subsequently is filed. Let us consider first whether the Charter is directly applicable to this case.

(A) Application of the Charter

65 The appellants have not challenged the constitutionality of any of the provisions of the Libel and Slander Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.12. The question, then, is whether the common law of defamation can be subject to Charter scrutiny. The appellants submit that by reason of his position as a government employee, Casey Hill's action for damages constitutes "government action" within the meaning of s. 32 of the Charter. In the alternative, the appellants submit that, pursuant to s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the common law must be interpreted in light of Charter values. I will address the s. 32 argument first.

(1) Section 32: Government Action

66 Section 32(1) reads:

32. (1) This Charter applies

(a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and

(b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province.

67 In RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., 1986 CanLII 5 (SCC), [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573, McIntyre J., with regard to the application of the Charter to the common law, stated at pp. 598-99:

It is my view that s. 32 of the Charter specifies the actors to whom the Charter will apply. They are the legislative, executive and administrative branches of government. It will apply to those branches of government whether or not their action is invoked in public or private litigation. . . . It will apply to the common law, however, only in so far as the common law is the basis of some governmental action which, it is alleged, infringes a guaranteed right or freedom. [Emphasis added.]

68 La Forest J., writing for the majority in McKinney v. University of Guelph, 1990 CanLII 60 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 229, stressed the importance of this limitation on the application of the Charter to the actions of government. He said this at p. 262:

The exclusion of private activity from the Charter was not a result of happenstance. It was a deliberate choice which must be respected. We do not really know why this approach was taken, but several reasons suggest themselves. Historically, bills of rights, of which that of the United States is the great constitutional exemplar, have been directed at government. Government is the body that can enact and enforce rules and authoritatively impinge on individual freedom. Only government requires to be constitutionally shackled to preserve the rights of the individual.

69 La Forest J. warned that subjecting all private and public action to constitutional review would mean reopening whole areas of settled law and would be "tantamount to setting up an alternative tort system" (p. 263). He expressed the very sage warning that this "could strangle the operation of society" (p. 262). See also McLellan and Elman, "To Whom Does the Charter Apply? Some Recent Cases on Section 32" (1986), 24 Alta. L. Rev. 361, at p. 367, cited in Dolphin Delivery Ltd., supra, at p. 597.

70 The appellants argue that at all material times Casey Hill was an agent of the Crown, acting on behalf of the Attorney General of Ontario, and that the defamatory statements which are the subject of the present action were made in relation to acts undertaken by him in that capacity. They further submit that Casey Hill commenced these legal proceedings at the direction and with the financial support of the Attorney General in order to vindicate the damage to the reputation of the Ministry resulting from criticism levelled at the conduct of one of its officials. It is, therefore, contended that this action represents an effort by a government department to use the action of defamation to restrict and infringe the freedom of expression of the appellants in a manner that is contrary to the Charter.

71 These submissions cannot be accepted. They have no legal, evidentiary or logical basis of support. Casey Hill's constitutional status for the purpose of the application of the Charter should not be determined by the nature of the allegations made against him.

Rather, the determination of whether state involvement existed is dependent upon the circumstances surrounding the institution of the libel proceedings.

72 The fact that persons are employed by the government does not mean that their reputation is automatically divided into two parts, one related to their personal life and the other to their employment status. To accept the appellants' position would mean that identical defamatory comments would be subject to two different laws, one applicable to government employees, the other to the rest of society. Government employment cannot be a basis for such a distinction. Reputation is an integral and fundamentally important aspect of every individual. It exists for everyone quite apart from employment.

73 In order to establish the requisite government action for Charter scrutiny, the appellants argue that it is easy to distinguish between a janitor working in a government building who is simply an employee and a Crown Attorney who is an agent of the state. It is said that when a person who is clearly an agent of the state acts, he or she is acting for or on behalf of the state. I cannot accept this proposition. There are a significant number of public servants who represent the Crown in any number of ways. While it might be easy to differentiate between the extreme examples set forth by the appellants, the grey area between those extremes is too extensive and the functions of the officials too varied to draw any effective line of distinction. The experience in the United States following the decision in New York Times v. Sullivan, supra, is instructive in this regard. That case modified the common law in relation to defamation suits brought by public officials and touched off an intense debate with respect to who might be designated as a public official or figure rather than a private person. See, for example, G. C. Christie, "Injury to Reputation and the Constitution: Confusion Amid Conflicting Approaches" (1976), 75 Mich. L. Rev. 43.

74 There is no doubt that Crown Attorneys exercise statutory powers as agents of the government. See Ministry of the Attorney General Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.17; Crown

Attorneys Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.49; and the Criminal Code, s. 504. Therefore, as McIntyre J. pointed out in Nelles v. Ontario, 1989 CanLII 77 (SCC), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 170, at p. 209, they benefit from the protection of any immunity which attaches to their office. However, they may become personally liable when they exceed their statutory powers. By extension, actions taken by Crown Attorneys which are outside the scope of their statutory duties are independent of and distinct from their status as agents for the government. Such was the case here.

75 The appellants impugned the character, competence and integrity of Casey Hill, himself, and not that of the government. He, in turn, responded by instituting legal proceedings in his own capacity. There was no evidence that the Ministry of the Attorney General or the Government of Ontario required or even requested him to do so. Neither is there any indication that the Ministry controlled the conduct of the litigation in any way. See Lavigne v. Ontario Public Service Employees Union, 1991 CanLII 68 (SCC), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 211, at pp. 311-14. Further, the fact that Casey Hill's suit may have been funded by the Ministry of the Attorney General does not alter his constitutional status or cloak his personal action in the mantle of government action. See McKinney, supra, at p. 269.

76 The private nature of these proceedings is apparent, as well, from the respondent's statement of claim, and particularly from the allegation contained in para. 19 that the defamatory statements:

. . . constituting as they do statements of the most serious professional misconduct by the Plaintiff, have damaged his professional reputation and brought him into public scandal, odium and contempt, by reason of which the Plaintiff has suffered damage.

77 The position taken by the appellants at trial is also revealing. Scientology argued that Casey Hill was proceeding with the litigation to advance his "secondary private interest", that he was trying to "get back at [Scientology] for prosecuting him for contempt", and that the libel action amounted to "a risk-free opportunity . . . to pick up some easy money".

78 The personal nature of the libel action is also evident in the cross-examination of Casey Hill concerning his work with the OPP. At that time, counsel for Scientology stated that the libel action had nothing "to do with damages suffered by Mr. Hill. It's part of an attack motivated by the attitude towards the Church of Scientology, motivated by the fact that as a result of the contempt prosecution he is removed from prosecuting".

79 In my opinion, the appellants have not satisfied the government action requirement described in s. 32. Therefore, the Charter cannot be applied directly to scrutinize the common law of defamation in the circumstances of this case.

80 Even if there were sufficient government action to bring this case within s. 32, the appellants failed to provide any evidentiary basis upon which to adjudicate their constitutional attack. This Court has stated on a number of occasions that it will not determine alleged Charter violations in the absence of a proper evidentiary record. See, for example, MacKay v. Manitoba, 1989 CanLII 26 (SCC), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 357. In light of the conclusion that the government action requirement of s. 32 has not been met, I need not address this issue. Yet, I feel a brief comment is necessary because of the light it sheds on the manner in which the appellants have conducted themselves in this litigation.

81 The action was commenced in December 1984. By the fall of 1985, the appellants were made aware of the requirement to adduce constitutional evidence. In dismissing the appellants' pre-trial motion with respect to the constitutional issues, O'Driscoll J. clearly indicated that the constitutional questions must be decided upon evidence adduced at trial. The date for trial was fixed in January 1991 and confirmed in June. On September 4, 1991, two days into the proceedings, counsel for Scientology sought to adjourn the trial on the grounds that there was "a possibility of . . . seeking to call expert evidence in regard to the freedom of speech issue in this trial". Counsel conceded that he had not prepared or delivered any reports of experts in respect to this issue, and indeed, that he had not yet even consulted with experts. He simply wanted the adjournment in order to "explore that area". The request for adjournment was very properly dismissed.

82 There is no government action involved in this defamation suit. It now must be determined whether a change or modification in the law of defamation is required to make it comply with the underlying values upon which the Charter is founded.

(2) Section 52: Charter Values and the Common Law

(a) *Interpreting the Common Law in Light of the Values Underlying the *Charter

(i) Review of the Decisions Dealing With the Issue

83 This Court first considered the application of the Charter to the common law in Dolphin Delivery, supra. In that case, the issue was whether an injunction to restrain secondary picketing violated the Charter freedom of expression. It was held that, pursuant to s. 32(1) of the Charter, a cause of action could only be based upon the Charter when particular government action was impugned. Therefore, the constitutionality of the common law could be scrutinized in those situations where a case involved government action which was authorized or justified on the basis of a common law rule which allegedly infringed a Charter right. However, Dolphin Delivery, supra, also held that the common law could be subjected to Charter scrutiny in the absence of government action. McIntyre J. wrote, at pp. 592-93, that, in light of s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, "there can be no doubt" that the Charter, applies to the common law:

The English text provides that "any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect". If this language is not broad enough to include the common law, it should be observed as well that the French text adds strong support to this conclusion in its employment of the words "elle rend inopérantes les dispositions incompatibles de tout autre règle de droit". . . . To adopt a construction of s. 52(1) which would exclude from Charter application the whole body of the common law which in great part governs the rights and obligations of the individuals in society, would be wholly unrealistic and contrary to the clear language employed in s. 52(1) of the Act. [Emphasis in Dolphin Delivery.]

In emphasizing that the common law should develop in a manner consistent with Charter principles, a distinction was drawn between private litigants founding a cause of action on the Charter and judges exercising their inherent jurisdiction to develop the common law. At page 603 this was written:

Where, however, private party "A" sues private party "B" relying on the common law and where no act of government is relied upon to support the action, the Charter will not apply. I should make it clear, however, that this is a distinct issue from the question whether the judiciary ought to apply and develop the principles of the common law in a manner consistent with the fundamental values enshrined in the Constitution. The answer to this question must be in the affirmative. In this sense, then, the Charter is far from irrelevant to private litigants whose disputes fall to be decided at common law. But this is different from the proposition that one private party owes a constitutional duty to another, which proposition underlies the purported assertion of Charter causes of action or Charter defences between individuals.

[Emphasis added.]

84 Since 1986, this Court has subjected the common law to Charter scrutiny in a number of situations where government action was based upon a common law rule: B.C.G.E.U. v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 1988 CanLII 3 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 214; R. v. Swain, 1991 CanLII 104 (SCC), [1991] 1 S.C.R. 933; R. v. Salituro, 1991 CanLII 17

(SCC), [1991] 3 S.C.R. 654; and Dagenais v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., 1994 CanLII 39 (SCC), [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835. However, Dolphin Delivery, supra, remains the only case which has closely examined the application of the Charter in the context of purely private litigation. Nevertheless, it is helpful to review the different approaches which have been suggested in those cases in order to better appreciate which principles should properly apply in cases of private litigation.

85 In R. v. Salituro, supra, the Crown called the accused's estranged wife as a witness. The common law rule prohibiting spouses from testifying against each other was found to be inconsistent with developing social values and with the values enshrined in the Charter. At page 670, Iacobucci J., writing for the Court, held:

Judges can and should adapt the common law to reflect the changing social, moral and economic fabric of the country. Judges should not be quick to perpetuate rules whose social foundation has long since disappeared. Nonetheless, there are significant constraints on the power of the judiciary to change the law. As McLachlin J. indicated in Watkins, supra, in a constitutional democracy such as ours it is the legislature and not the courts which has the major responsibility for law reform; and for any changes to the law which may have complex ramifications, however necessary or desirable such changes may be, they should be left to the legislature. The judiciary should confine itself to those incremental changes which are necessary to keep the common law in step with the dynamic and evolving fabric of our society.

Further, at p. 675 this Court held:

Where the principles underlying a common law rule are out of step with the values enshrined in the Charter, the courts should scrutinize the rule closely. If it is possible to change the common law rule so as to make it consistent with Charter values, without upsetting the proper balance between judicial and legislative action that I have referred to above, then the rule ought to be changed.

86 Unlike the present appeal and the decisions of this Court in B.C.G.E.U., Swain, and Dagenais, the common law rule in Salituro was not alleged to infringe a specific Charter right. Rather, it was alleged to be inconsistent with those fundamental values that provide the foundation for the Charter. Although the Court in Salituro considered whether Parliament had, through the Evidence Act, intended to preserve the common law rule, it did not undertake an analysis similar to that which would be required under s. 1 to determine if the Charter breach was justifiable. Rather, it proceeded to balance, in a broad and flexible manner, the conflicting values. The reasons examined the origins of the impugned common law rule and the justifications which had been raised for upholding it. These concerns were weighed against the Charter's recognition of the equality of women and, more specifically, against the concept of human dignity which inspires the Charter. It was held that the values which were set out in the common law rule did not represent the values of today's society which are reflected in the provisions of the Charter.

87 In B.C.G.E.U., supra, McEachern C.J.B.C. on his own motion issued an injunction against a union picketing in front of the courthouse: 1983 CanLII 572 (BC SC), [1983] 6 W.W.R. 640. It was held that the common law rule giving rise to the picketing injunction breached s. 2(b). The breach was then found to be justified following a traditional s. 1 analysis.

88 Subsequently, in R. v. Swain, supra, Lamer C.J. observed that the s. 1 analysis, which has evolved since R. v. Oakes, 1986 CanLII 46 (SCC), [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103, may not always provide the appropriate framework by which to evaluate the justifications for maintaining a common law rule. In R. v. Swain, the Crown raised the insanity defence, over objections by the accused, on the basis of the common law rule which authorized such a procedure. That rule was found to violate s. 7 of the Charter. At pages 978-79, Lamer C.J. held:

Before turning to s. 1, however, I wish to point out that because this appeal involves a Charter challenge to a common law, judge-made rule, the Charter analysis involves somewhat different considerations than would apply to a challenge to a legislative provision. For example, having found that the existing common law rule limits an accused's rights under s. 7 of the Charter, it may not be strictly necessary to go on to consider the application of s. 1. Having come to the conclusion that the common law rule enunciated by the Ontario Court of Appeal limits an accused's right to liberty in a manner which does not accord with the principles of fundamental justice, it could, in my view, be appropriate to consider at this stage whether an alternative common law rule could be fashioned which would not be contrary to the principles of fundamental justice.

If a new common law rule could be enunciated which would not interfere with an accused person's right to have control over the conduct of his or her defence, I can see no conceptual problem with the Court's simply enunciating such a rule to take the place of the old rule, without considering whether the old rule could nonetheless be upheld under s. 1 of the Charter. Given that the common law rule was fashioned by judges and not by Parliament or a legislature, judicial deference to elected bodies is not an issue. If it is possible to reformulate a common law rule so that it will not conflict with the principles of fundamental justice, such a reformulation should be undertaken. Of course, if it were not possible to reformulate the common law rule so as to avoid an infringement of a constitutionally protected right or freedom, it would be necessary for the Court to consider whether the common law rule could be upheld as a reasonable limit under s. 1 of the Charter.

Nevertheless, in R. v. Swain, the formal s. 1 analysis was undertaken since Oakes, supra, provided a familiar structure for analysis, the constitutional questions were stated with s. 1 in mind and the Court had the benefit of extensive argument on s. 1.

89 Finally, in Dagenais, supra, the CBC challenged a publication ban which prevented them from airing one of their programmes. It was held that where the common law rule on publication bans conflicted with Charter values, the common law rule must be varied in such a manner as to enable the Court to consider both the objective of a publication ban and the proportionality of the ban's effect on protected Charter rights. Without adopting a formal s. 1 analysis, it was held that this approach "clearly reflects the substance of the Oakes test applicable when assessing legislation under s. 1 of the Charter" (p. 878).

90 In light of these cases, then, it remains to be determined what approach should be followed when, in the context of private litigation with no government action involved, a common law rule is alleged to be inconsistent with the Charter.

(ii) Approach That Should Be Followed

91 It is clear from Dolphin Delivery, supra, that the common law must be interpreted in a manner which is consistent with Charter principles. This obligation is simply a manifestation of the inherent jurisdiction of the courts to modify or extend the common law in order to comply with prevailing social conditions and values. As was said in Salituro, supra, at p. 678:

The courts are the custodians of the common law, and it is their duty to see that the common law reflects the emerging needs and values of our society.

92 Historically, the common law evolved as a result of the courts making those incremental changes which were necessary in order to make the law comply with current societal values. The Charter represents a restatement of the fundamental values which guide and shape our democratic society and our legal system. It follows that it is appropriate for the courts to make such incremental revisions to the common law as may be necessary to have it comply with the values enunciated in the Charter.

93 When determining how the Charter applies to the common law, it is important to distinguish between those cases in which the constitutionality of government action is challenged, and those in which there is no government action involved. It is important not to import into private litigation the analysis which applies in cases involving government action.

94 In Dolphin Delivery, supra, it was noted that the Charter sets out those specific constitutional duties which the state owes to its citizens. When government action is challenged, whether it is based on legislation or the common law, the cause of action is founded upon a Charter right. The claimant alleges that the state has breached its constitutional duty. The state, in turn, must justify that breach. While criminal cases present the prime example of government action, challenges to government action can also arise in civil cases. The state's obligation to uphold its constitutional duties is no less pressing in the civil sphere than in the criminal. The two cases of B.C.G.E.U., supra, and Dagenais, supra, present a very specific type of "government action" in the civil context. In both cases, the Court was called upon to consider the operations of the Court and to determine the extent of its own jurisdiction to consider matters which were essentially public in nature. The cases did not involve strictly private litigation. Therefore, they must be approached with caution when considering what analysis should be applied in purely private civil litigation.

95 Private parties owe each other no constitutional duties and cannot found their cause of action upon a Charter right. The party challenging the common law cannot allege that the common law violates a Charter right because, quite simply, Charter rights do not exist in the absence of state action. The most that the private litigant can do is argue that the common law is inconsistent with Charter values. It is very important to draw this distinction between Charter rights and Charter values. Care must be taken not to expand the application of the Charter beyond that established by s. 32(1), either by creating new causes of action, or by subjecting all court orders to Charter scrutiny. Therefore, in the context of civil litigation involving only private parties, the Charter will "apply" to the common law only to the extent that the common law is found to be inconsistent with Charter values.

96 Courts have traditionally been cautious regarding the extent to which they will amend the common law. Similarly, they must not go further than is necessary when taking Charter values into account. Far-reaching changes to the common law must be left to the legislature.

97 When the common law is in conflict with Charter values, how should the competing principles be balanced? In my view, a traditional s. 1 framework for justification is not appropriate. It must be remembered that the Charter "challenge" in a case involving private litigants does not allege the violation of a Charter right. It addresses a conflict between principles. Therefore, the balancing must be more flexible than the traditional s. 1 analysis undertaken in cases involving governmental action cases. Charter values, framed in general terms, should be weighed against the principles which underlie the common law. The Charter values will then provide the guidelines for any modification to the common law which the court feels is necessary.

98 Finally, the division of onus which normally operates in a Charter challenge to government action should not be applicable in a private litigation Charter "challenge" to the common law. This is not a situation in which one party must prove a prima facie violation of a right while the other bears the onus of defending it. Rather, the party who is alleging that the common law is inconsistent with the Charter should bear the onus of proving both that the common law fails to comply with Charter values and that, when these values are balanced, the common law should be modified. In the ordinary situation, where government action is said to violate a Charter right, it is appropriate that the government undertake the justification for the impugned statute or common law rule. However, the situation is very different where two private parties are involved in a civil suit. One party will have brought the action on the basis of the prevailing common law which may have a long history of acceptance in the community. That party should be able to rely upon that law and should not be placed in the position of having to defend it. It is up to the party challenging the common law to bear the burden of proving not only that the common law is inconsistent with Charter values but also that its provisions cannot be justified.

99 With that background, let us first consider the common law of defamation in light of the values underlying the Charter.

(b) The Nature of Actions for Defamation: The Values to Be Balanced

100 There can be no doubt that in libel cases the twin values of reputation and freedom of expression will clash. As Edgerton J. stated in Sweeney v. Patterson, 128 F.2d 457 (D.C. Cir. 1942), at p. 458, cert. denied 317 U.S. 678 (1942), whatever is "added to the field of libel is taken from the field of free debate". The real question, however, is whether the common law strikes an appropriate balance between the two. Let us consider the nature of each of these values.

(i) Freedom of Expression

101 Much has been written of the great importance of free speech. Without this freedom to express ideas and to criticize the operation of institutions and the conduct of individual members of government agencies, democratic forms of government would wither and die. See, for example, Reference re Alberta Statutes, 1938 CanLII 1 (SCC), [1938] S.C.R. 100, at p. 133; Switzman v. Elbling, 1957 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1957] S.C.R. 285, at p. 306; and Boucher v. The King, 1950 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1951] S.C.R. 265, at p. 326. More recently, in Edmonton Journal, supra, at p. 1336, it was said:

It is difficult to imagine a guaranteed right more important to a democratic society than freedom of expression. Indeed a democracy cannot exist without that freedom to express new ideas and to put forward opinions about the functioning of public institutions. The concept of free and uninhibited speech permeates all truly democratic societies and institutions. The vital importance of the concept cannot be over-emphasized.

102 However, freedom of expression has never been recognized as an absolute right. Duff C.J. emphasized this point in Reference re Alberta Statutes, supra, at p. 133:

The right of public discussion is, of course, subject to legal restrictions; those based upon considerations of decency and public order, and others conceived for the protection of various private and public interests with which, for example, the laws of defamation and sedition are concerned. In a word, freedom of discussion means . . . "freedom governed by law." [Emphasis added.]

See also Cherneskey v. Armadale Publishers Ltd., 1978 CanLII 20 \(SCC\), [1979] 1 S.C.R. 1067, at pp. 1072 and 1091.

103 Similar reasoning has been applied in cases argued under the Charter. Although a Charter right is defined broadly, generally without internal limits, the Charter recognizes, under s. 1, that social values will at times conflict and that some limits must be placed even on fundamental rights. As La Forest J. explained in United States of America v. Cotroni, 1989 CanLII 106 \(SCC\), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1469, at p. 1489, this Court has adopted a flexible approach to measuring the constitutionality of impugned provisions wherein "the underlying values [of the Charter] must be sensitively weighed in a particular context against other values of a free and democratic society . . .".

104 In R. v. Keegstra, 1990 CanLII 24 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 697, for example, s. 319(2) of the Criminal Code was found to be justified as a reasonable limit on the appellant's freedom to spread falsehoods relating to the Holocaust and thus to promote hatred against an identifiable group. Dickson C.J. adopted the contextual approach to s. 1 and concluded that, since hate propaganda contributed little to the values which underlie the right enshrined under s. 2(b), namely the quest for truth, the promotion of individual self-development, and participation in the community, a restriction on this type of expression might be easier to justify than would be the case with other kinds of expression.

105 In R. v. Butler, 1992 CanLII 124 \(SCC\), [1992] 1 S.C.R. 452, the obscenity provisions of the Criminal Code, s. 163, were questioned. It was held, under the s. 1 analysis, that pornography could not stand on an equal footing with other kinds of expression which directly engage the "core" values of freedom of expression. Further, it was found that the fact that the targeted material was expression motivated by economic profit more readily justified the imposition of restrictions.

106 Certainly, defamatory statements are very tenuously related to the core values which underlie s. 2(b). They are inimical to the search for truth. False and injurious statements cannot enhance self-development. Nor can it ever be said that they lead to healthy participation in the affairs of the community. Indeed, they are detrimental to the advancement of these values and harmful to the interests of a free and democratic society. This concept was accepted in Globe and Mail Ltd. v. Boland, 1960 CanLII 2 \(SCC\), [1960] S.C.R. 203, at pp. 208-9, where it was held that an extension of the qualified privilege to the publication of defamatory statements concerning the fitness for office of a candidate for election would be "harmful to that 'common convenience and welfare of society'". Reliance was placed upon the text Gatley on Libel and Slander in a Civil Action: With Precedents of Pleadings (4th ed. 1953), at p. 254, wherein the author stated the following:

It would tend to deter sensitive and honourable men from seeking public positions of trust and responsibility, and leave them open to others who have no respect for their reputation.

See also Derrickson v. Tomat (1992), 1992 CanLII 8669 \(BC CA\), 88 D.L.R. (4th) 401 (B.C.C.A.), at p. 408.

(ii) The Reputation of the Individual

107 The other value to be balanced in a defamation action is the protection of the reputation of the individual. Although much has very properly been said and written about the importance of freedom of expression, little has been written of the importance of reputation. Yet, to most people, their good reputation is to be cherished above all. A good reputation is closely related to the innate worthiness and dignity of the individual. It is an attribute that must, just as much as freedom of expression, be protected by society's laws. In order to undertake the balancing required by this case, something must be said about the value of reputation.

108 Democracy has always recognized and cherished the fundamental importance of an individual. That importance must, in turn, be based upon the good repute of a person. It is that good repute which enhances an individual's sense of worth and value. False allegations can so very quickly and completely destroy a good reputation. A reputation tarnished by libel can seldom regain its former lustre. A democratic society, therefore, has an interest in ensuring that its members can enjoy and protect their good reputation so long as it is merited.

109 From the earliest times, society has recognized the potential for tragic damage that can be occasioned by a false statement made about a person. This is evident in the Bible, the Mosaic Code and the Talmud. As the author Carter-Ruck, in Carter-Ruck on Libel and Slander (4th ed. 1992), explains at p. 17:

The earliest evidence in recorded history of any sanction for defamatory statements is in the Mosaic code. In Exodus XXII 28 we find 'Thou shalt not revile the gods nor curse the ruler of thy people' and in Exodus XXIII 1 'Thou shalt not raise a false report: put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness'. There is also a condemnation of rumourmongers in Leviticus XIX 16 'Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people'.

110 To make false statements which are likely to injure the reputation of another has always been regarded as a serious offence. During the Roman era, the punishment for libel varied from the loss of the right to make a will, to imprisonment, exile for life, or forfeiture of property. In the case of slander, a person could be made liable for payment of damages.

111 It was decreed by the Teutons in the Lex Salica that if a man called another a "wolf" or a "hare", he must pay the sum of three shillings; for a false imputation of unchastity in a woman the penalty was 45 shillings. In the Normal Costumal, if people falsely called another "thief" or "manslayer", they had to pay damages and, holding their nose with their fingers, publicly confess themselves a liar.

112 With the separation of ecclesiastical and secular courts by the decree of William I following the Norman conquest, the Church assumed spiritual jurisdiction over defamatory language, which was regarded as a sin. The Church "stayed the tongue of the defamer at once pro custodia morum of the community, and pro salute animae of the delinquent". See V. V. Veeder, "The History and Theory of the Law of Defamation" (1903), 3 Colum. L. Rev. 546, at p. 551.

113 By the 16th century, the common law action for defamation became commonplace. This was in no small measure due to the efforts of the Star Chamber to eradicate duelling, the favoured method of vindication. The Star Chamber even went so far as to punish the sending of challenges. However, when it proscribed this avenue of recourse to injured parties, the Star Chamber was compelled to widen its original jurisdiction over seditious libel to include ordinary defamation.

114 The modern law of libel is said to have arisen out of the case De Libellis Famosis (1605), 5 Co. Rep. 125a, 77 E.R. 250. There, the late Archbishop of Canterbury and the then Bishop of London were alleged to have been "traduced and scandalized" by an anonymous person. As reported by Coke, it was ruled that all libels, even those against private individuals, ought to be sanctioned severely by indictment at common law or in the Star Chamber. The reasoning behind this was that the libel could incite "all those of the same family, kindred, or society to revenge, and so tends per consequens to quarrels and breach of the peace" (p. 251). It was not necessary to show publication to a third person and it made no difference whether the libel was true or whether the plaintiff had a good or bad reputation. Eventually, truth was recognized as a defence in cases involving ordinary defamation.

115 It was not until the late 17th century that the distinction between libel and slander was drawn by Chief Baron Hale in King v. Lake (1679), Hardres 470, 145 E.R. 552, where it was held that words spoken, without more, would not be actionable, with a few exceptions. Once they were reduced to writing, however, malice would be presumed and an action would lie.

116 The character of the law relating to libel and slander in the 20th century is essentially the product of its historical development up to the 17th century, subject to a few refinements such as the introduction and recognition of the defences of privilege and fair comment. From the foregoing we can see that a central theme through the ages has been that the reputation of the individual is of fundamental importance. As Professor R. E. Brown writes in The Law of Defamation in Canada (2nd ed. 1994), at p. 1-4:

"(N)o system of civil law can fail to take some account of the right to have one's reputation remain untarnished by defamation." Some form of legal or social constraints on defamatory publications "are to be found in all stages of civilization, however imperfect, remote, and proximate to barbarism." [Footnotes omitted.]

117 Though the law of defamation no longer serves as a bulwark against the duel and blood feud, the protection of reputation remains of vital importance. As David Lepofsky suggests in "Making Sense of the Libel Chill Debate: Do Libel Laws 'Chill' the Exercise of Freedom of Expression?" (1994), 4 N.J.C.L. 169, at p. 197, reputation is the "fundamental foundation on which people are able to interact with each other in social environments". At the same time, it serves the equally or perhaps more fundamentally important purpose of fostering our self-image and sense of self-worth. This sentiment was eloquently expressed by Stewart J. in Rosenblatt v. Baer, 383 U.S. 75 (1966), who stated at p. 92:

The right of a man to the protection of his own reputation from unjustified invasion and wrongful hurt reflects no more than our basic concept of the essential dignity and worth of every human being -- a concept at the root of any decent system of ordered liberty.

118 In the present case, consideration must be given to the particular significance reputation has for a lawyer. The reputation of a lawyer is of paramount importance to clients, to other members of the profession and to the judiciary. A lawyer's practice is founded and maintained upon the basis of a good reputation for professional integrity and trustworthiness. It is the cornerstone of a lawyer's professional life. Even if endowed with outstanding talent and indefatigable diligence, a lawyer cannot survive without a good reputation. In his essay entitled "The Lawyer's Duty to Himself and the Code of Professional Conduct" (1993), 27 L. Soc. Gaz. 119, David Hawreluk described the importance of a reputation for integrity. At page 121, he quoted Lord Birkett on the subject:

The advocate has a duty to his client, a duty to the Court, and a duty to the State; but he has above all a duty to himself and he shall be, as far as lies in his power, a man of integrity. No profession calls for higher standards of honour and uprightness, and no profession, perhaps, offers greater temptations to forsake them; but whatever gifts an advocate may possess, be they never so dazzling, without the supreme qualification of an inner integrity he will fall short of the highest . . .

119 Similarly, Esson J. in Vogel v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., 1982 CanLII 801 \(BC SC\), [1982] 3 W.W.R. 97 (B.C.S.C.), at pp. 177-78 stated:

The qualities required of a lawyer who aspires to the highest level of his profession are various, but one is essential. That is a reputation for integrity. The programs were a massive attack upon that reputation. The harm done to it can never be wholly undone, and therefore the stigma so unfairly created will always be with the plaintiff.

When the details of the Vogel affair have faded from memory, what will remain in the minds of many people throughout Canada is a lurking recollection that he was the centre of a scandal which arose out of his conduct in office.

120 Although it is not specifically mentioned in the Charter, the good reputation of the individual represents and reflects the innate dignity of the individual, a concept which underlies all the Charter rights. It follows that the protection of the good reputation of an individual is of fundamental importance to our democratic society.

121 Further, reputation is intimately related to the right to privacy which has been accorded constitutional protection. As La Forest J. wrote in R. v. Dyment, 1988 CanLII 10 \(SCC\), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 417, at p. 427, privacy, including informational privacy, is "[g]rounded in man's physical and moral autonomy" and "is essential for the well-being of the individual". The publication of defamatory comments constitutes an invasion of the individual's personal privacy and is an affront to that person's dignity. The protection of a person's reputation is indeed worthy of protection in our democratic society and must be carefully balanced against the equally important right of freedom of expression. In order to undertake the requisite balancing of values, let us first review the change to the existing common law proposed by the appellants.

(c) The Proposed Remedy: Adopting the New York Times v. Sullivan "Actual Malice" Rule

122 In New York Times v. Sullivan, supra, the United States Supreme Court ruled that the existing common law of defamation violated the guarantee of free speech under the First Amendment of the Constitution. It held that the citizen's right to criticize government officials is of such tremendous importance in a democratic society that it can only be accommodated through the tolerance of speech which may eventually be determined to contain falsehoods. The solution adopted was to do away with the common law presumptions of falsity and malice and place the onus on the plaintiff to prove that, at the time the defamatory statements were made, the defendant either knew them to be false or was reckless as to whether they were or not.

123 At the outset, it is important to understand the social and political context of the times which undoubtedly influenced the decision in New York Times v. Sullivan, supra. The impugned publication was an editorial advertisement, placed in the appellant's newspaper, entitled "Heed Their Rising Voices". It criticized the widespread segregation which continued to dominate life in the southern states in the late 1950s and early 1960s. Prominent and well respected individuals, including Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, lent their name to the advertisement. It communicated information, recited grievances, protested abuses and sought financial support. The group or movement sponsoring the advertisement was characterized by Brennan J. as one "whose existence and objectives are matters of the highest public interest and concern" (p. 266). Black J. described the controversy at the heart of the suit in the following terms at p. 294:

One of the acute and highly emotional issues in this country arises out of efforts of many people, even including some public officials, to continue state-commanded segregation of races in the public schools and other public places, despite our several holdings that such a state practice is forbidden by the Fourteenth Amendment.

124 The advertisement did not mention by name the plaintiff, who was a white elected commissioner from Montgomery, Alabama. Only 35 copies of the edition of the New York Times which carried that advertisement were circulated in Montgomery, and only 394 were circulated in the entire state of Alabama. The trial took place in 1960, in a segregated court room in Montgomery, before a white judge and all-white jury. Damages of $500,000 U.S. were awarded. This would be the current equivalent in Canada of approximately $3.5 million.

125 The Supreme Court, in overturning the verdict, clearly perceived the libel action as a very serious attack not only on the freedom of the press but, more particularly, on those who favoured desegregation in the southern United States. It was concerned that such a large damage award could threaten the very existence of, in Black J.'s words, "an American press virile enough to publish unpopular views on public affairs and bold enough to criticize the conduct of public officials" (p. 294). This concern was intensified by the fact that a second libel verdict of $500,000 U.S. had already been awarded to another Montgomery commissioner against the New York Times. In addition, 11 other libel suits, arising out of the same advertisement, were pending against the newspaper.

126 Another motivating factor for this radical change to the common law was the American jurisprudence to the effect that the statements of public officials which came "within the outer perimeter of their duties" were privileged unless actual malice was proved. The rationale behind this privilege was that the threat of damage suits would "dampen the ardor of all but the most resolute, or the most irresponsible, in the unflinching discharge of their duties": Barr v. Matteo, 360 U.S. 564 (1959), at p. 571. The Supreme Court in the Sullivan decision held that analogous considerations supported the protection which it accorded to critics of the government.

(d) Critiques of the "Actual Malice" Rule

(i) Comments on the Decision in the United States

127 The "actual malice" rule has been severely criticized by American judges and academic writers. It has been suggested that the decision was overly influenced by the dramatic facts underlying the dispute and has not stood the test of time. See, for example, R. A. Epstein, "Was New York Times v. Sullivan Wrong?" (1986), 53 U. Chi. L. Rev. 782, at p. 787; Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc., 472 U.S. 749 (1985), at p. 767. Commentators have pointed out that, far from being deterred by the decision, libel actions have, in the post-Sullivan era, increased in both number and size of awards. They have, in this way, mirrored the direction taken in other tort actions. See Epstein, supra; R. P. Bezanson, "Libel Law and the Realities of Litigation: Setting the Record Straight" (1985), 71 Iowa L. Rev. 226, at pp. 228-29. It has been said that the New York Times v. Sullivan, decision has put great pressure on the fact-finding process since courts are now required to make subjective determinations as to who is a public figure and what is a matter of legitimate public concern. See Christie, supra, at pp. 63-64.

128 Perhaps most importantly, it has been argued the decision has shifted the focus of defamation suits away from their original, essential purpose. Rather than deciding upon the truth of the impugned statement, courts in the U.S. now determine whether the defendant was negligent. Several unfortunate results flow from this shift in focus. First, it may deny the plaintiff the opportunity to establish the falsity of the defamatory statements and to determine the consequent reputational harm. This is particularly true in cases where the falsity is not seriously contested. See Bezanson, supra, at p. 227.

129 Second, it necessitates a detailed inquiry into matters of media procedure. This, in turn, increases the length of discoveries and of the trial which may actually increase, rather than decrease, the threat to speech interests. See D. A. Barrett, "Declaratory Judgments for Libel: A Better Alternative" (1986), 74 Cal. L. Rev. 847, at p. 855.

130 Third, it dramatically increases the cost of litigation. This will often leave a plaintiff who has limited funds without legal recourse. See P. N. Leval, "The No-Money, No-Fault Libel Suit: Keeping Sullivan in its Proper Place" (1988), 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1287, at p. 1288; A. Lewis, "New York Times v. Sullivan Reconsidered: Time to Return to 'The Central Meaning of the First Amendment'" (1983), 83 Colum. L. Rev. 603; M. London, "The 'Muzzled Media': Constitutional Crisis or Product Liability Scam?" in At What Price? Libel Law and Freedom of the Press (1993), at pp. 17-20.

131 Fourth, the fact that the dissemination of falsehoods is protected is said to exact a major social cost by deprecating truth in public discourse. See L. C. Bollinger, "The End of New York Times v. Sullivan: Reflections on Masson v. New Yorker Magazine", [1991] Sup. Ct. Rev. 1, at p. 6; J. A. Barron, "Access to the Press -- A New First Amendment Right" (1966-67), 80 Harv. L. Rev. 1641, at pp. 1657-58.

132 A number of jurists in the United States have advocated a reconsideration of the New York Times v. Sullivan standard. These include one of the justices of the Supreme Court who participated in that decision. In Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., supra, White J. stated, in a minority concurring opinion with which Burger C.J. concurred on this point, that he had "become convinced that the Court struck an improvident balance in the New York Times case between the public's interest in being fully informed about public officials and public affairs and the competing interest of those who have been defamed in vindicating their reputation" (p. 767). He went on to state at pp. 767-69:

In a country like ours, where the people purport to be able to govern themselves through their elected representatives, adequate information about their government is of transcendent importance. That flow of intelligence deserves full First Amendment protection. Criticism and assessment of the performance of public officials and of government in general are not subject to penalties imposed by law. But these First Amendment values are not at all served by circulating false statements of fact about public officials. On the contrary, erroneous information frustrates these values. They are even more disserved when the statements falsely impugn the honesty of those men and women and hence lessen the confidence in government. As the Court said in Gertz: "(T)here is no constitutional value in false statements of fact. Neither the intentional lie nor the careless error materially advances society's interest in 'uninhibited, robust, and wide-open' debate on public issues." . . . Yet in New York Times cases, the public official's complaint will be dismissed unless he alleges and makes out a jury case of a knowing or reckless falsehood. Absent such proof, there will be no jury verdict or judgment of any kind in his favor, even if the challenged publication is admittedly false. The lie will stand, and the public continue to be misinformed about public matters. . . . Furthermore, when the plaintiff loses, the jury will likely return a general verdict and there will be no judgment that the publication was false, even though it was without foundation in reality. The public is left to conclude that the challenged statement was true after all. Their only chance of being accurately informed is measured by the public official's ability himself to counter the lie, unaided by the courts. That is a decidedly weak reed to depend on for the vindication of First Amendment interests . . .

Also, by leaving the lie uncorrected, the New York Times rule plainly leaves the public official without a remedy for the damage to his reputation. Yet the Court has observed that the individual's right to the protection of his own good name is a basic consideration of our constitutional system, reflecting "our basic concept of the essential dignity and worth of every human being -- a concept at the root of any decent system of ordered liberty." . . .

The New York Times rule thus countenances two evils: first, the stream of information about public officials and public affairs is polluted and often remains polluted by false information; and second, the reputation and professional life of the defeated plaintiff may be destroyed by falsehoods that might have been avoided with a reasonable effort to investigate the facts. In terms of the First Amendment and reputational interests at stake, these seem grossly perverse results. [Emphasis added.]

133 In the subsequent case of Coughlin v. Westinghouse Broadcasting & Cable, Inc., 476 U.S. 1187 (1986), the majority of the United States Supreme Court refused to grant certiorari. Burger C.J. and Rehnquist J. dissented because of their view that the court should re-examine New York Times v. Sullivan, supra, and "give plenary attention to this important issue" (p. 1187).

(ii) Consideration of the Actual Malice Rule in the United Kingdom

134 The courts in England have refused to adopt the "actual malice" standard. In Derbyshire County Council v. Times Newspapers Ltd., [1993] 1 All E.R. 1011, the House of Lords considered an action brought by a municipal council against the publisher of a Sunday newspaper. The claim for damages, which was denied, arose from articles concerning the authority's management of its superannuation fund. In his reasons, Lord Keith stated that public interest considerations similar to those underlying the New York Times v. Sullivan, supra, decision were involved in that it was "of the highest public importance that a democratically elected governmental body, or indeed any governmental body, should be open to uninhibited public criticism" (p. 1017). However, the appropriateness of the "actual malice" standard was not considered and it was not incorporated into the law of England. In fact, Lord Keith stated that if the individual reputation of any of the local councillors had been wrongly damaged by the impugned publication, they could have brought an action for defamation in their personal capacity.

(iii) The Australian Position on Actual Malice

135 The Australian case of Theophanous v. Herald & Weekly Times Ltd. (1994), 124 A.L.R. 1 (H.C.), considered an action brought by a member of that country's House of Representatives in response to a letter to the editor of a local newspaper which was critical of his views. Although a plurality of the seven judges sitting on the High Court held that the existing law of defamation curtailed the constitutionally protected right to political discussion, it rejected the adoption of the "actual malice" standard, stating at pp. 22-23:

Even assuming that, in conformity with Sullivan, the test is confined to plaintiffs who are public officials, in our view it gives inadequate protection to reputation. . . .

. . . the protection of free communication does not necessitate such a subordination of the protection of individual reputation as appears to have occurred in the United States.

(iv) The Position Taken by International Law Reform Commissions

136 International law reform organizations have also criticized the New York Times v. Sullivan rule. The Australian Law Reform Commission's Report No. 11, Unfair Publication: Defamation and Privacy (the Kirby Committee Report) (1979), criticized the concept of "public official" on the basis that "a minor elected official or public servant [would be] in a more vulnerable position than a prominent businessman" (p. 252). The United Kingdom Report of the Committee on Defamation (the Faulks Committee Report) (1975), held that the rule "would in many cases deny a just remedy to defamed persons" (p. 169). Finally, the Irish Law Reform Commission's Report on the Civil Law of Defamation (the Keane Final Report) (1991), stated that "while the widest possible range of criticism of public officials and public figures is desirable, statements of fact contribute meaningfully to public debate only if they are true" (p. 82).

(e) Conclusion: Should the Law of Defamation be Modified by Incorporating the Sullivan Principle?

137 The New York Times v. Sullivan decision has been criticized by judges and academic writers in the United States and elsewhere. It has not been followed in the United Kingdom or Australia. I can see no reason for adopting it in Canada in an action between private litigants. The law of defamation is essentially aimed at the prohibition of the publication of injurious false statements. It is the means by which the individual may protect his or her reputation which may well be the most distinguishing feature of his or her character, personality and, perhaps, identity. I simply cannot see that the law of defamation is unduly restrictive or inhibiting. Surely it is not requiring too much of individuals that they ascertain the truth of the allegations they publish. The law of defamation provides for the defences of fair comment and of qualified privilege in appropriate cases. Those who publish statements should assume a reasonable level of responsibility.

138 The Canadian Daily Newspaper Association indicated, in its response to A Consultation Draft of the General Limitations Act (September 1991) at p. 3, that the law of libel is a "carefully-crafted regime" which has "functioned fairly for the media and for complainants for many years". Freedom of speech, like any other freedom, is subject to the law and must be balanced against the essential need of the individuals to protect their reputation. The words of Diplock J. in Silkin v. Beaverbrook Newspapers Ltd., [1958] 1 W.L.R. 743, at pp. 745-46, are worth repeating:

Freedom of speech, like the other fundamental freedoms, is freedom under the law, and over the years the law has maintained a balance between, on the one hand, the right of the individual . . . whether he is in public life or not, to his unsullied reputation if he deserves it, and on the other hand . . . the right of the public . . . to express their views honestly and fearlessly on matters of public interest, even though that involves strong criticism of the conduct of public people.

139 None of the factors which prompted the United States Supreme Court to rewrite the law of defamation in America are present in the case at bar. First, this appeal does not involve the media or political commentary about government policies. Thus the issues considered by the High Court of Australia in Theophanous, supra, are also not raised in this case and need not be considered.

140 Second, a review of jury verdicts in Canada reveals that there is no danger of numerous large awards threatening the viability of media organizations. Finally, in Canada there is no broad privilege accorded to the public statements of government officials which needs to be counterbalanced by a similar right for private individuals.

141 In conclusion, in its application to the parties in this action, the common law of defamation complies with the underlying values of the Charter and there is no need to amend or alter it.

142 Consideration must now be given to the submission made on behalf of Morris Manning that the defence of qualified privilege should be expanded to include reports upon pleadings and court documents that have been filed or are at the point of being filed.

(f) Should the Common Law Defence of Qualified Privilege be Expanded to Comply with Charter Values?

143 Qualified privilege attaches to the occasion upon which the communication is made, and not to the communication itself. As Lord Atkinson explained in Adam v. Ward, [1917]
A.C. 309 (H.L.), at p. 334:

. . . a privileged occasion is . . . an occasion where the person who makes a communication has an interest or a duty, legal, social, or moral, to make it to the person to whom it is made, and the person to whom it is so made has a corresponding interest or duty to receive it. This reciprocity is essential.

This passage was quoted with approval in McLoughlin v. Kutasy, 1979 CanLII 39 (SCC), [1979] 2
S.C.R. 311, at p. 321.

144 The legal effect of the defence of qualified privilege is to rebut the inference, which normally arises from the publication of defamatory words, that they were spoken with malice. Where the occasion is shown to be privileged, the bona fides of the defendant is presumed and the defendant is free to publish, with impunity, remarks which may be defamatory and untrue about the plaintiff. However, the privilege is not absolute and can be defeated if the dominant motive for publishing the statement is actual or express malice.

See Horrocks v. Lowe, [1975] A.C. 135 (H.L.), at p. 149.

145 Malice is commonly understood, in the popular sense, as spite or ill-will. However, it also includes, as Dickson J. (as he then was) pointed out in dissent in Cherneskey, supra, at p. 1099, "any indirect motive or ulterior purpose" that conflicts with the sense of duty or the mutual interest which the occasion created. See, also, Taylor v. Despard, 1956 CanLII 124 (ON CA), [1956] O.R. 963 (C.A.). Malice may also be established by showing that the defendant spoke dishonestly, or in knowing or reckless disregard for the truth. See McLoughlin, supra, at pp. 323-24, and Netupsky v. Craig, 1972 CanLII 19 (SCC), [1973] S.C.R. 55, at pp. 61-62.

146 Qualified privilege may also be defeated when the limits of the duty or interest have been exceeded. See The Law of Defamation in Canada, supra, at pp. 13-193 and 13-194; Salmond and Heuston on the Law of Torts (20th ed. 1992), at pp. 166-67. As Loreburn E. stated at pp. 320-21 in Adam v. Ward, supra:

. . . the fact that an occasion is privileged does not necessarily protect all that is said or written on that occasion. Anything that is not relevant and pertinent to the discharge of the duty or the exercise of the right or the safeguarding of the interest which creates the privilege will not be protected.

147 In other words, the information communicated must be reasonably appropriate in the context of the circumstances existing on the occasion when that information was given. For example, in Douglas v. Tucker, 1951 CanLII 54 (SCC), [1952] 1 S.C.R. 275, the defendant, during an election campaign, stated that the plaintiff, who was the officer of an investment company, had charged a farmer and his wife an exorbitant rate of interest causing them to lose their property. The plaintiff maintained that the allegation was without foundation. In response, the defendant asserted that the plaintiff was facing a charge of fraud which had been adjourned until after the election. This Court held that the defendant had an interest in responding to the plaintiff's denial, thereby giving rise to an occasion of qualified privilege. However, it ruled that the occasion was exceeded because the defendant's comments went beyond what was "germane and reasonably appropriate" (p. 286).

148 In Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada v. Dalrymple, 1965 CanLII 9 \(SCC\), [1965] S.C.R. 302, the district manager of the defendant insurance company threatened to resign and take the district agents with him. This Court held that it fell within the scope of the privilege for the company to make certain defamatory comments about the plaintiff in order to dissuade its agents from leaving.

149 The principal question to be answered in this appeal is whether the recitation of the contents of the notice of motion by Morris Manning took place on an occasion of qualified privilege. If so, it remains to be determined whether or not that privilege was exceeded and thereby defeated.

150 The traditional common law rule with respect to reports on documents relating to judicial proceedings is set out in Gatley on Libel and Slander (8th ed. 1981), at p. 252, in these words:

The rule of law is that, where there are judicial proceedings before a properly constituted judicial tribunal exercising its jurisdiction in open court, then the publication without malice of a fair and accurate report of what takes place before that tribunal is privileged.

See, also, The Law of Defamation in Canada, supra, at pp. 14-35, 14-42; Carter-Ruck on Libel and Slander, supra, at pp. 140-41.

The rationale behind this rule is that the public has a right to be informed about all aspects of proceedings to which it has the right of access. This is why a news report referring to the contents of any document filed as an exhibit, or admitted as evidence during the course of the proceedings, is privileged. However, the common law immunity was not extended to a report on pleadings or other documents which had not been filed with the court or referred to in open court. Duff C.J. explained the reasoning for this in Gazette Printing Co. v. Shallow (1909), 1909 CanLII 46 (SCC), 41 S.C.R. 339, at p. 360:

The publicity of proceedings involving the conduct of a judicial authority serves the important purposes of impressing those concerned in the administration of justice with a sense of public responsibility, and of affording every member of the community an opportunity of observing for himself the mode in which the business of the public tribunals is carried on; but no such object would appear to be generally served by applying the privilege to the publication of preliminary statements of claims and defence relating only to private transactions; formulated by the parties themselves; in respect of which no judicial action has been taken, and upon which judicial action may never be invoked. It is only when such preliminary statements or the claims or defences embodied in them form the basis or the subject of some hearing before, or some action by, a court or a judicial officer, that their contents can become the object of any real public concern as touching the public administration of justice.

In Edmonton Journal, supra, at pp. 1338-40, I noted that the public scrutiny of our courts by the press was fundamentally important in our democratic society and that s. 2(b) protected not only speakers, but listeners as well. This right to report on court proceedings extended to pleadings and court documents filed before trial, since access to these documents served the same societal needs as reporting on trials. Even in private actions, such as those for wrongful dismissal or for personal damages, the public may well have an interest in knowing the kinds of submissions which can be put forward.

Both societal standards and the legislation have changed with regard to access to court documents. When the qualified privilege rule was set out in Shallow, supra, court documents were not open to the public. Today, the right of access is guaranteed by legislative provision, in this case s. 137(1) of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43. As well, s. 2(b) of the Charter may in some circumstances provide a basis for gaining access to some court documents. However, just as s. 137(1) provides for limitations on the right of access to court documents, so too is the s. 2(b) guarantee subject to reasonable limits that can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. This Court's reasons in Canadian Newspapers Co. v. Canada (Attorney General), 1988 CanLII 52 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 122, provide an illustration of the kind of restriction that has been upheld in relation to information flowing from court proceedings. In that case, the constitutionality of s. 442(3) of the Criminal Code was upheld. It imposed a publication ban on the identity of a complainant in sexual assault cases (or any information that might disclose her identity) upon the request of that complainant. There is no need to elaborate further on the scope of access, however, since it does not arise on the facts of this case. It is sufficient to observe that, in appropriate circumstances, s. 2(b) may provide the means to gain access to court documents. It follows that the concept of qualified privilege should be modified accordingly.

The public interest in documents filed with the court is too important to be defeated by the kind of technicality which arose in this case. The record demonstrates that, prior to holding the press conference, Morris Manning had every intention of initiating the contempt action in accordance with the prevailing rules, and had given instructions to this effect. In fact, the proper documents were served and filed the very next morning. The fact that, by some misadventure, the strict procedural requirement of filing the documents had not been fulfilled at the time of the press conference should not defeat the qualified privilege which attached to this occasion.

155 This said, it is my conclusion that Morris Manning's conduct far exceeded the legitimate purposes of the occasion. The circumstances of this case called for great restraint in the communication of information concerning the proceedings launched against Casey Hill. As an experienced lawyer, Manning ought to have taken steps to confirm the allegations that were being made. This is particularly true since he should have been aware of the Scientology investigation pertaining to access to the sealed documents. In those circumstances he was duty bound to wait until the investigation was completed before launching such a serious attack on Hill's professional integrity. Manning failed to take either of these reasonable steps. As a result of this failure, the permissible scope of his comments was limited and the qualified privilege which attached to his remarks was defeated.

156 The press conference was held on the steps of Osgoode Hall in the presence of representatives from several media organizations. This constituted the widest possible dissemination of grievous allegations of professional misconduct that were yet to be tested in a court of law. His comments were made in language that portrayed Hill in the worst possible light. This was neither necessary nor appropriate in the existing circumstances. While it is not necessary to characterize Manning's conduct as amounting to actual malice, it was certainly high-handed and careless. It exceeded any legitimate purpose the press conference may have served. His conduct, therefore, defeated the qualified privilege that attached to the occasion.

(B) Damages

(1) The Standard of Appellate Review

157 The appellants do not contend that the trial judge made any substantive error in his careful directions to the jury. Thus, there is no question of misdirection of the jury or of its acting upon an improper basis or of any jury consideration given to wrongfully admitted or excluded evidence. The sole issue is whether the quantum of the jury's award can stand.

158 Jurors are drawn from the community and speak for their community. When properly instructed, they are uniquely qualified to assess the damages suffered by the plaintiff, who is also a member of their community. This is why, as Robins J.A. noted in Walker v. CFTO Ltd. (1987), 1987 CanLII 126 \(ON CA\), 59 O.R. (2d) 104 (C.A.), at p. 110, it is often said that the assessment of damages is "peculiarly the province of the jury". Therefore, an appellate court is not entitled to substitute its own judgment as to the proper award for that of the jury merely because it would have arrived at a different figure.

159 The basis upon which an appellate court can act was very clearly enunciated by Robins J.A. in Walker, supra. He stated at p. 110 that the court should consider:

. . . whether the verdict is so inordinately large as obviously to exceed the maximum limit of a reasonable range within which the jury may properly operate or, put another way, whether the verdict is so exorbitant or so grossly out of proportion to the libel as to shock the court's conscience and sense of justice.

160 The history of this action emphasizes the reasonableness of the jury's verdict. It was the appellants who had always insisted upon the jury assessing damages for the libel. When the jury had retired to consider their verdict, they returned after four hours with the sagacious question: "what if any are realistic maximums that have been assessed by society in recent history?". The trial judge prudently sought the advice of counsel on the question. Counsel for the appellants agreed with the trial judge that no guidance could be given to the jury as to the quantum of damages. The jury was so advised. They deliberated for another five hours and returned the verdict which is the subject matter of this appeal.

161 There can be no doubt that the decision of the trial judge on this issue, which was concurred in by counsel for the appellants, was correct. In Ontario, there is no statutory provision for giving guidelines to a jury on this issue. It is significant that in 1989, when the Courts of Justice Act was amended (S.O. 1989, c. 67, s. 4) to permit trial judges and counsel to give guidance to juries concerning damage awards in personal injury actions, no provision was made in the Act pertaining to libel actions or any other type of tort action. It would appear, then, that the legislators specifically left the assessment of damages in libel actions to the jury.

162 The appellants relied upon the case of Rantzen v. Mirror Group Newspapers (1986) Ltd., [1993] 4 All E.R. 975 (C.A.), to support their position that an appellate court should reduce this award. In that case, however, the English Court of Appeal was acting pursuant to newly enacted legislation. This legislation, passed in 1990, specifically provided that, in cases where the court had the authority to order a new trial on the ground that the damages awarded by a jury were excessive or inadequate, it could, instead of ordering a new trial, substitute a sum for damages which it considered to be proper. This statutory provision led the court in Rantzen to modify its approach to the review of a jury's assessment of damages. Therefore, this case is of little use.

163 If guidelines are to be provided to juries, then clearly this is a matter for legislation. In its absence, the standard which must be applied remains that the jury's assessment should not be varied unless it shocks the conscience of the court. With this in mind, let us first consider the jury's assessment of damages.

(2) General Damages

164 It has long been held that general damages in defamation cases are presumed from the very publication of the false statement and are awarded at large. See Ley v. Hamilton (1935), 153 L.T. 384 (H.L.), at p. 386. They are, as stated, peculiarly within the province of the jury. These are sound principles that should be followed.

165 The consequences which flow from the publication of an injurious false statement are invidious. The television report of the news conference on the steps of Osgoode Hall must have had a lasting and significant effect on all who saw it. They witnessed a prominent lawyer accusing another lawyer of criminal contempt in a setting synonymous with legal affairs and the courts of the province. It will be extremely difficult to correct the impression left with viewers that Casey Hill must have been guilty of unethical and illegal conduct.

166 The written words emanating from the news conference must have had an equally devastating impact. All who read the news reports would be left with a lasting impression that Casey Hill has been guilty of misconduct. It would be hard to imagine a more difficult situation for the defamed person to overcome. Every time that person goes to the convenience store, or shopping centre, he will imagine that the people around him still retain the erroneous impression that the false statement is correct. A defamatory statement can seep into the crevasses of the subconscious and lurk there ever ready to spring forth and spread its cancerous evil. The unfortunate impression left by a libel may last a lifetime. Seldom does the defamed person have the opportunity of replying and correcting the record in a manner that will truly remedy the situation. It is members of the community in which the defamed person lives who will be best able to assess the damages. The jury as representative of that community should be free to make an assessment of damages which will provide the plaintiff with a sum of money that clearly demonstrates to the community the vindication of the plaintiff's reputation.

(a) Should a Cap be Imposed on Damages in Defamation Cases?

167 The appellants contend that there should be a cap placed on general damages in defamation cases just as was done in the personal injury context. In the so-called "trilogy" of Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229, Arnold v. Teno, 1978 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287, and Thornton v. Board of School Trustees of School District No. 57 (Prince George), 1978 CanLII 12 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 267, it was held that a plaintiff claiming non-pecuniary damages for personal injuries should not recover more than $100,000.

168 In my view, there should not be a cap placed on damages for defamation. First, the injury suffered by a plaintiff as a result of injurious false statements is entirely different from the non-pecuniary damages suffered by a plaintiff in a personal injury case. In the latter case, the plaintiff is compensated for every aspect of the injury suffered: past loss of income and estimated future loss of income, past medical care and estimated cost of future medical care, as well as non-pecuniary damages. Second, at the time the cap was placed on non-pecuniary damages, their assessment had become a very real problem for the courts and for society as a whole. The damages awarded were varying tremendously not only between the provinces but also between different districts of a province. Perhaps as a result of motor vehicle accidents, the problem arose in the courts every day of every week. The size and disparity of assessments was affecting insurance rates and, thus, the cost of operating motor vehicles and, indeed, businesses of all kinds throughout the land. In those circumstances, for that one aspect of recovery, it was appropriate to set a cap.

169 A very different situation is presented with respect to libel actions. In these cases, special damages for pecuniary loss are rarely claimed and often exceedingly difficult to prove. Rather, the whole basis for recovery for loss of reputation usually lies in the general damages award. Further, a review of the damage awards over the past nine years reveals no pressing social concern similar to that which confronted the courts at the time the trilogy was decided. From 1987 to 1991, there were only 27 reported libel judgments in Canada, with an average award of $30,000. Subsequent to the decision in this case, from 1992 to 1995, there have been 24 reported libel judgments, with an average award of less than $20,000. This later figure does not include the award in Jill Fishing Ltd. v. Koranda Management Inc., [1993] B.C.J. No. 1861 (S.C.), which involved the assessment of damages for a number of different causes of action. Therefore, there is no indication that a cap is required in libel cases.

170 There is a great difference in the nature of the tort of defamation and that of negligence. Defamation is the intentional publication of an injurious false statement. While it is true that an actual intention to defame is not necessary to impose liability on a defendant, the intention to do so is nevertheless inferred from the publication of the defamatory statement. This gives rise to the presumption of malice which may be displaced by the existence of a qualified privilege. Personal injury, on the other hand, results from negligence which does not usually arise from any desire to injure the plaintiff. Thus, if it were known in advance what amount the defamer would be required to pay in damages (as in the personal injury context), a defendant might look upon that sum as the maximum cost of a licence to defame. A cap would operate in a manner that would change the whole character and function of the law of defamation. It would amount to a radical change in policy and direction for the courts.

171 The courts in England have unequivocally rejected the comparison of libel and personal injury cases. See, for example, Cassell & Co. v. Broome, [1972] 1 All E.R. 801 (H.L.), at p. 824; Blackshaw v. Lord, [1983] 2 All E.R. 311 (C.A.), at pp. 337, 340; Sutcliffe v. Pressdram Ltd., [1990] 1 All E.R. 269 (C.A.), at pp. 281-82, 289; and Rantzen v. Mirror Group Newspapers (1986) Ltd., supra.

172 It is true that in Australia a majority of the High Court held in Carson v. John Fairfax & Sons Ltd. (1993), 113 A.L.R. 577, that some useful reference could be made to personal injury cases in assessing general damages. However, the 4-3 division in the court shows the serious concern which this issue engendered. McHugh J., a member of the minority, wrote (at p. 629):

Awards in personal injury cases and defamation actions serve different purposes, have different elements and different histories. They are not comparable. I think that it is a mistake to believe that the pain and suffering component of a personal injury award can be isolated from the other components of that award and then compared to an award of compensatory damages in a defamation action.

173 In any event, I would observe that, if the trilogy were to be applied, the value of the cap in 1991 would be approximately $250,000. It follows that even if the appellants' contention on this issue was accepted, the general damages of $300,000 assessed by the jury would come very close to the range said to be reasonable by the appellants.

(b) Joint Liability for General Damages

174 Manning complains that the judge erred in refusing to accept his request that the verdict in general damages be rendered separately. He argues that his liability should be limited to the statement he made at the press conference and should not extend to the subsequent circulation of the notice of motion. The trial judge's error, he argues, contributed to the very high award by the jury. This position cannot be accepted.

175 It must be remembered that at trial: a) it was the position of Manning's counsel that Manning and Scientology should be jointly and severally liable for general damages in respect of each of the defamatory statements published by them; b) Scientology admitted that it published each of the defamatory statements at issue in the action; c) Manning admitted that he published each of the defamatory statements with the exception of the notice of motion; and d) the jury specifically found that Manning published the notice of motion.

Thus, both Manning and Scientology published the notice of motion. It is a well-established principle that all persons who are involved in the commission of a joint tort are jointly and severally liable for the damages caused by that tort. If one person writes a libel, another repeats it, and a third approves what is written, they all have made the defamatory libel. Both the person who originally utters the defamatory statement, and the individual who expresses agreement with it, are liable for the injury. It would thus be inappropriate and wrong in law to have a jury attempt to apportion liability either for general or for special damages between the joint tortfeasors Manning and Scientology. See Lawson v. Burns, 1976 CanLII 1499 \(BC SC\), [1976] 6 W.W.R. 362 (B.C.S.C.), at pp. 368-69; Gatley on Libel and Slander (8th ed.), supra, at p. 600. However, this comment does not apply to aggravated damages, which are assessed on the basis of the particular malice of each joint tortfeasor.

(c) Application of Principles to the Facts Established in this Case

It cannot be forgotten that at the time the libellous statement was made, Casey Hill was a young lawyer in the Crown Law office working in the litigation field. For all lawyers their reputation is of paramount importance. Clients depend on the integrity of lawyers, as do colleagues. Judges rely upon commitments and undertakings given to them by counsel. Our whole system of administration of justice depends upon counsel's reputation for integrity. Anything that leads to the tarnishing of a professional reputation can be disastrous for a lawyer. It matters not that subsequent to the publication of the libel, Casey Hill received promotions, was elected a bencher and eventually appointed a trial judge in the General Division of the Court of Ontario. As a lawyer, Hill would have no way of knowing what members of the public, colleagues, other lawyers and judges may have been affected by the dramatic presentation of the allegation that he had been instrumental in breaching an order of the court and that he was guilty of criminal contempt.

178 This nagging doubt and sense of hurt must have affected him in every telephone call he made and received in the course of his daily work, in every letter that he sent and received and in every appearance that he made before the courts of the province of Ontario. He would never know who, as a result of the libellous statement, had some lingering suspicion that he was guilty of misconduct which was criminal in nature. He would never know who might have believed that he was a person without integrity who would act criminally in the performance of his duties as a Crown counsel. He could never be certain who would accept the allegation that he was guilty of a criminal breach of trust which was the essential thrust of the libel.

179 The publication of the libellous statement was very carefully orchestrated. Members of the press and the television media attended at Osgoode Hall in Toronto to meet two prominent lawyers, Morris Manning and Clayton Ruby. Osgoode Hall is the seat of the Court of Appeal and the permanent residence of the Law Society. The building is used as the background in a great many news reports dealing with important cases emanating from the Court of Appeal. In the minds of the public, it is associated with the law, with the courts and with the justice system. Manning went far beyond a simple explanation of the nature of the notice of motion. He took these very public steps without investigating in any way whether the allegations made were true.

180 At the time this press conference was called, Scientology members had been working with the sealed documents for some time and they had not yet discovered any of the sealed documents to have been opened. Yet, Scientology persisted in the publication of this libel against Hill, who was listed in their files as an "enemy".

181 Hill movingly described the effect the reading of the press reports of the press conference had upon him and of viewing the television broadcast. He put it in this way:

I was sick. I was shocked. I understood from reading it that it related to access to the documents. The type of thing that Mr. Ruby and I had been dealing with over many months, and I was just incredulous.

. . .

I was horrified when I saw it. I had had a long history of dealing with counsel for the Church of Scientology. Small problems, medium-sized problems and very serious problems had been raised between us.

Every effort was made to answer those issues as they came up. When I saw the newscast, I realized that there was really nothing I could do to stop the information from getting out. I thought it was false. I thought it was a very dramatic representation . A well-known lawyer as Mr. Manning was -- and he was gowned.

. . .

And he was standing before the High Court. The indication that I had been involved in opening sealed documents and giving permission was totally false. For me, in seeing it, it was equivalent to saying I was a cheat and that I had obstructed the course of justice. It was an attack on my professional reputation and I had no way of stopping it.

. . .

I also have no way of knowing whether there are people in the community who would be in a position to place some reliance on the fact that regardless of the outcome of the criminal case, Manning, a prominent lawyer, and the Church of Scientology of Toronto, had still expressed a view on September 17th.

182 The factors which should be taken into account in assessing general damages are clearly and concisely set out in Gatley on Libel and Slander (8th ed.), supra, at pp. 592-93, in these words:

SECTION 1. ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGES

1451. Province of the jury. In an action of libel "the assessment of damages does not depend on any legal rule." The amount of damages is "peculiarly the province of the jury," who in assessing them will naturally be governed by all the circumstances of the particular case. They are entitled to take into their consideration the conduct of the plaintiff, his position and standing, the nature of the libel, the mode and extent of publication, the absence or refusal of any retraction or apology, and "the whole conduct of the defendant from the time when the libel was published down to the very moment of their verdict. They may take into consideration the conduct of the defendant before action, after action, and in court at the trial of the action," and also, it is submitted, the conduct of his counsel, who cannot shelter his client by taking responsibility for the conduct of the case. They should allow "for the sad truth that no apology, retraction or withdrawal can ever be guaranteed completely to undo the harm it has done or the hurt it has caused." They should also take into account the evidence led in aggravation or mitigation of the damages.

183 There will of necessity be some overlapping of the factors to be considered when aggravated damages are assessed. This can be seen from a further reference to the Gatley text at pp. 593-94 where this appears:

1452. Aggravated damages. The conduct of the defendant, his conduct of the case, and his state of mind are thus all matters which the plaintiff may rely on as aggravating the damages. "Moreover, it is very well established that in cases where the damages are at large the jury (or the judge if the award is left to him) can take into account the motives and conduct of the defendant where they aggravate the injury done to the plaintiff. There may be malevolence or spite or the manner of committing the wrong may be such as to injure the plaintiff's proper feelings of dignity and pride. These are matters which the jury can take into account in assessing the appropriate compensation." "In awarding 'aggravated damages' the natural indignation of the court at the injury inflicted on the plaintiff is a perfectly legitimate motive in making a generous, rather than a more moderate award to provide an adequate solatium. . . that is because the injury to the plaintiff is actually greater, and, as the result of the conduct exciting the indignation, demands a more generous solatium."

184 In considering and applying the factors pertaining to general damages in this case it will be remembered that the reports in the press were widely circulated and the television broadcast had a wide coverage. The setting and the persons involved gave the coverage an aura of credibility and significance that must have influenced all who saw and read the accounts. The insidious harm of the orchestrated libel was indeed spread widely throughout the community.

185 The misconduct of the appellants continued after the first publication. Prior to the commencement of the hearing of the contempt motion before Cromarty J., Scientology was aware that the allegations it was making against Casey Hill were false. Yet, it persisted with the contempt hearings as did Morris Manning. At the conclusion of the contempt hearing, both appellants were aware of the falsity of the allegations. Nonetheless, when the libel action was instituted, the defence of justification was put forward by both of them. The statement of defence alleging justification or truth of the allegation was open for all the public to see. Despite their knowledge of its falsity, the appellants continued to publish the libel. Although Manning withdrew the plea of justification, this was only done in the week prior to the commencement of the trial itself. For its part, Scientology did not withdraw its plea of justification until the hearing of the appeal. Finally, the manner in which Hill was cross-examined by the appellants, coupled with the manner in which they presented their position to the jury, in light of their knowledge of the falsity of their allegations, are further aggravating factors to be taken into account.

186 When all these facts are taken into account there is no question that the award of $300,000 by way of general damages was justified in this case.

(d) Comparison with Other Libel Cases

187 At the outset, I should state that I agree completely with the Court of Appeal that each libel case is unique and that this particular case is in a "class by itself". The assessment of damages in a libel case flows from a particular confluence of the following elements: the nature and circumstances of the publication of the libel, the nature and position of the victim of the libel, the possible effects of the libel statement upon the life of the plaintiff, and the actions and motivations of the defendants. It follows that there is little to be gained from a detailed comparison of libel awards.

(3) Aggravated Damages

(a) General Principles

188 Aggravated damages may be awarded in circumstances where the defendants' conduct has been particularly high-handed or oppressive, thereby increasing the plaintiff's humiliation and anxiety arising from the libellous statement. The nature of these damages was aptly described by Robins J.A. in Walker v. CFTO Ltd., supra, in these words at p. 111:

Where the defendant is guilty of insulting, high-handed, spiteful, malicious or oppressive conduct which increases the mental distress -- the humiliation, indignation, anxiety, grief, fear and the like -- suffered by the plaintiff as a result of being defamed, the plaintiff may be entitled to what has come to be known as "aggravated damages".

189 These damages take into account the additional harm caused to the plaintiff's feelings by the defendant's outrageous and malicious conduct. Like general or special damages, they are compensatory in nature. Their assessment requires consideration by the jury of the entire conduct of the defendant prior to the publication of the libel and continuing through to the conclusion of the trial. They represent the expression of natural indignation of right-thinking people arising from the malicious conduct of the defendant.

190 If aggravated damages are to be awarded, there must be a finding that the defendant was motivated by actual malice, which increased the injury to the plaintiff, either by spreading further afield the damage to the reputation of the plaintiff, or by increasing the mental distress and humiliation of the plaintiff. See, for example, Walker v. CFTO Ltd., supra, at p. 111; Vogel, supra, at p. 178; Kerr v. Conlogue (1992), 1992 CanLII 924 \(BC SC\), 65 B.C.L.R. (2d) 70 (S.C.), at p. 93; and Cassell & Co. v. Broome, supra, at

pp. 825-26. The malice may be established by intrinsic evidence derived from the libellous statement itself and the circumstances of its publication, or by extrinsic evidence pertaining to the surrounding circumstances which demonstrate that the defendant was motivated by an unjustifiable intention to injure the plaintiff. See Taylor v. Despard, supra, at p. 975.

191 There are a number of factors that a jury may properly take into account in assessing aggravated damages. For example, was there a withdrawal of the libellous statement made by the defendants and an apology tendered? If there was, this may go far to establishing that there was no malicious conduct on the part of the defendant warranting an award of aggravated damages. The jury may also consider whether there was a repetition of the libel, conduct that was calculated to deter the plaintiff from proceeding with the libel action, a prolonged and hostile cross-examination of the plaintiff or a plea of justification which the defendant knew was bound to fail. The general manner in which the defendant presented its case is also relevant. Further, it is appropriate for a jury to consider the conduct of the defendant at the time of the publication of the libel. For example, was it clearly aimed at obtaining the widest possible publicity in circumstances that were the most adverse possible to the plaintiff?

(b) The Application to the Facts of this Case

192 In this case, there was ample evidence upon which the jury could properly base their finding of aggravated damages. The existence of the file on Casey Hill under the designation "Enemy Canada" was evidence of the malicious intention of Scientology to "neutralize" him. The press conference was organized in such a manner as to ensure the widest possible dissemination of the libel. Scientology continued with the contempt proceedings although it knew its allegations were false. In its motion to remove Hill from the search warrant proceedings, it implied that he was not trustworthy and might act in those proceedings in a manner that would benefit him in his libel action. It pleaded justification or truth of its statement when it knew it to be false. It subjected Hill to a demeaning cross-examination and, in its address to the jury, depicted Hill as a manipulative actor.

193 It is, as well, appropriate for an appellate court to consider the post-trial actions of the defendant. It will be recalled that Scientology, immediately after the verdict of the jury, repeated the libel, thus forcing the plaintiff to seek and obtain an injunction restraining Scientology from repeating the libel. It did not withdraw its plea of justification until the hearing of the appeal. All this indicates that the award of aggravated damages was strongly supported by the subsequent actions of Scientology.

194 In summary, every aspect of this case demonstrates the very real and persistent malice of Scientology. Their actions preceding the publication of the libel, the circumstances of its publication and their subsequent actions in relation to both the search warrant proceedings and this action amply confirm and emphasize the insidious malice of Scientology. Much was made of their apology tendered at the time of the hearing in the Court of Appeal. There is a hollow ring to that submission when it is remembered that it was not until the fifth day of oral argument before the Court of Appeal that the apology was tendered. Scientology can gain little comfort from such a late and meaningless apology.

195 These damages were awarded solely against Scientology and are based upon the misconduct of that appellant. There is no question of Manning being in any way responsible for these damages. Indeed, there cannot be joint and several responsibility for either aggravated or punitive damages since they arise from the misconduct of the particular defendant against whom they are awarded. See, for example, Sun Life, supra, at p. 1310; Egger v. Chelmsford, [1965] 1 Q.B. 248 (C.A.), at pp. 263 and 265; Vogel, supra, at p. 171; S. M. Waddams, The Law of Damages (2nd ed. 1991), at pp. 11-23 and 11-24. Scientology's behaviour throughout can only be characterized as recklessly high-handed, supremely arrogant and contumacious. There seems to have been a continuing conscious effort on Scientology's part to intensify and perpetuate its attack on Casey Hill without any regard for the truth of its allegations.

(4) Punitive Damages

(a) General Principles

196 Punitive damages may be awarded in situations where the defendant's misconduct is so malicious, oppressive and high-handed that it offends the court's sense of decency. Punitive damages bear no relation to what the plaintiff should receive by way of compensation. Their aim is not to compensate the plaintiff, but rather to punish the defendant. It is the means by which the jury or judge expresses its outrage at the egregious conduct of the defendant. They are in the nature of a fine which is meant to act as a deterrent to the defendant and to others from acting in this manner. It is important to emphasize that punitive damages should only be awarded in those circumstances where the combined award of general and aggravated damages would be insufficient to achieve the goal of punishment and deterrence.

197 Unlike compensatory damages, punitive damages are not at large. Consequently, courts have a much greater scope and discretion on appeal. The appellate review should be based upon the court's estimation as to whether the punitive damages serve a rational purpose. In other words, was the misconduct of the defendant so outrageous that punitive damages were rationally required to act as deterrence?

198 This was the test formulated by Robins J.A. in Walker v. CFTO Ltd., supra. In that case, he found that the general damages award of $908,000 was obviously sufficient to satisfy whatever need there was for punishment and deterrence. He found that, in those circumstances, the $50,000 punitive damage award served no rational purpose. The Court of Appeal, in the case at bar, applied the same reasoning and upheld the award of punitive damages.

199 Punitive damages can and do serve a useful purpose. But for them, it would be all too easy for the large, wealthy and powerful to persist in libelling vulnerable victims. Awards of general and aggravated damages alone might simply be regarded as a licence fee for continuing a character assassination. The protection of a person's reputation arising from the publication of false and injurious statements must be effective. The most effective means of protection will be supplied by the knowledge that fines in the form of punitive damages may be awarded in cases where the defendant's conduct is truly outrageous.

(b) The Application to the Facts of this Case

200 There can be no doubt that the conduct of Scientology in the publication of the injurious false statement pertaining to its "enemy" was malicious. Its publication was carefully planned and carried out in a manner which ensured its widest possible dissemination in the most damaging manner imaginable. The allegation made against Hill was devastating. It was said that he had been guilty of breach of trust, breach of a court order and that his conduct and behaviour was criminal. Scientology's actions from the time of publication, throughout the trial, and after the trial decision was rendered constituted a continuing attempt at character assassination by means of a statement which it knew to be false. It was such outrageous conduct that it cried out for the imposition of punitive damages.

201 There might have been some concern that, in light of the award of general and aggravated damages totalling $800,000, there might not be a rational basis for punitive damages. However any lingering doubt on that score is resolved when Scientology's persistent misconduct subsequent to the trial is considered. On the very next day following the verdict, Scientology republished the libel in a press release delivered to the media. It then brought a motion to adduce fresh evidence which it stated would have a bearing "on the credibility and reputation of the plaintiff S. Casey Hill" which, if presented at trial, "would probably have changed the result". Its actions were such that Hill was forced to bring an application for an injunction enjoining Scientology from republishing the libel. In his reasons for granting the injunction, Carruthers J. stated that he was forced to take that action because "no amount awarded on account of punitive damages would have prevented or will prevent the Church of Scientology from publishing defamatory statements about the plaintiff". Even the injunction did not deter Scientology which moved to set it aside. Further, in its notice of appeal of the libel judgment, Scientology alleged that the trial judge had erred in ruling the decision of Cromarty J. in the contempt proceedings was res judicata of the issues raised in the libel trial.

202 During the appeal, it was conceded and the evidence and events confirmed that in all likelihood, no amount of general or aggravated damages would have deterred Scientology. Clearly then, this was an appropriate case for an award of punitive damages. Scientology did not withdraw its plea of justification until the first day of the oral argument in the Court of Appeal. Nor was any apology tendered by Scientology until the fifth day of oral argument before the Court of Appeal.

203 The award of punitive damages, therefore, served a rational purpose in this case. Further, the circumstances presented in this exceptional case demonstrate that there was such insidious, pernicious and persistent malice that the award for punitive damages cannot be said to be excessive. Scientology has alleged that the size of the award of punitive damages had a chilling effect on its right to freedom of expression. However as stated earlier, in spite of the slow and methodical progress of this case to trial and appeal, and despite the motion brought six years before the trial which drew attention to the need for evidence, Scientology adduced no evidence as to the chilling effect of the award. In its absence, this argument should not be considered. It may be that different factors will have to be taken into consideration where evidence is adduced and where a member of the media is a party to the action. However, those are considerations for another case on another day.

IV. Disposition

204 The appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPENDIX A

CFTO BROADCAST

The Toronto Church of Scientology has filed charges of contempt of court against two provincial lawyers. The Church believes the lawyers violated a court order by opening sealed documents which were seized last year in a raid on the Church's headquarters. A report from CFTO's Tim Webber:

Webber:

Eighteen months ago, more than one hundred O.P.P. officers stormed out of three buses and into the offices of the Church of Scientology. They seized hundreds of thousands of documents in two days of searching. Police said they were looking for evidence of tax fraud, consumer fraud and other indictable offences. Many of these seized documents were deemed confidential by the Church. Some they said were confessions between priests and penitents and they convinced a judge to order about two hundred of the documents sealed. Today, lawyers for the Church filed charges alleging that the sealing order has been violated.

Manning:

The documents were ordered sealed by Mr. Justice Osler, pursuant to a request by counsel, in a very serious matter, and they were opened and revealed to persons whom we say were unauthorized to so do.

Webber:

The charges are against Jerome Cooper, a lawyer for Consumer and Commercial Relations, and Crown Attorney S. Casey Hill. The documents filed today alleged that the two convinced another Supreme Court Justice to allow the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to view the sealed documents in the company of O.P.P. officers. One of the lawyers being charged, Jerome Cooper, today told us he had absolutely no comment on the matter. The trial date has already been set for the 17th of January, but lawyers for the Church of Scientology are hoping to convince the defendants and the Court so start even sooner.

APPENDIX B

CBC BROADCAST

The Church of Scientology has filed a suit against two Toronto based Crown Attorneys. The Church had its offices raided by police and documents seized in March of 1983. Lawyers for the Church say those documents were opened and read by persons not authorized to do so.

Manning:

They were confidential documents which have been ordered sealed by Supreme Court of Ontario Justices which were opened with the permission of counsel for the Crown. And this constitutes, in the opinion of the Church, a contempt of court. We've had a date set in January. But hopefully, we can get a date set earlier with the consent of the Chief Justice of the Trial Division, or the Chief Justice of Ontario on the basis that it's a very important matter. It's important to the administration of justice.

APPENDIX C

GLOBE AND MAIL

The Church of Scientology of Toronto is asking the Supreme Court of Ontario to find a Crown prosecutor and a lawyer with the Ontario Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations in contempt of court.

Morris Manning, a lawyer acting for the church, said in an interview yesterday that he has filed a motion asking for S. Casey Hill, a prosecutor with the Ontario Ministry of the Attorney-General, and Jerome Cooper, a lawyer with the Consumer Ministry, to be jailed or fined.

The motion claims that Mr. Cooper misled Mr. Justice Jean-Charles Sirois of the Supreme Court of Ontario into releasing to the Consumer Ministry documents seized by the Ontario Provincial Police in a raid on the Church's headquarters.

The motion says Judge Sirois was not told that many of the documents had been ordered sealed by another Ontario Supreme Court judge while the Church contests the legality of the search warrant used by the O.P.P. in the raid last year.

The motion claims Mr. Hill, who represented the Attorney-General during the search warrant hearings "aided and abetted in the misleading of Mr. Justice Sirois".

A hearing on the motion has been set for January 17.

The following are the reasons delivered by

205 L'HEUREUX-DUBÉ J. -- I have had the advantage of reading the reasons of my colleague Justice Cory and, except on one point, generally agree with them as well as with his disposition of this appeal.

206

First, however, in order to dispel any possible confusion regarding the applicability of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to the common law, I note that this issue can be easily summarized in the following two principles, both of which were first articulated by McIntyre J. in RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., 1986 CanLII 5 (SCC), [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573:

1. The Charter does not directly apply to the common law unless it is the basis of some governmental action.
2. Even though the Charter does not directly apply to the common law absent government action, the common law must nonetheless be developed in accordance with Charter values. (To the same effect, see R. v. Salituro, 1991 CanLII 17 (SCC), [1991] 3 S.C.R. 654, Dagenais v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., 1994 CanLII 39 (SCC), [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835, and R. v. Park, 1995 CanLII 104 (SCC), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 836, per L'Heureux-Dubé J.)

In other words, the basic rule is that, absent government action, the Charter only applies indirectly to the common law.

207

In light of the above, I agree with Cory J. that where the common law is "challenged" on Charter grounds, a traditional s. 1 analysis will generally not be appropriate. Instead, "Charter values, framed in general terms, should be weighed against the principles which underlie the common law. The Charter values will then provide the guidelines for any modification to the common law which the court feels is necessary" (para. 97). As well, I agree with Cory J. that "the party who is alleging that the common law is inconsistent with the Charter should bear the onus of proving both that the common law fails to comply with Charter values and that, when these values are balanced, the common law should be modified" (para. 98). Such an approach is, in my view, consistent with the fact that, absent government action, the Charter only applies indirectly to the common law.

208 Applying this approach in the case at hand, I agree with Cory J.'s conclusion that the common law of defamation, as it is applied to the parties in this action, is consistent with the values enshrined in the Charter. Accordingly, I agree with my colleague that there is no need to amend or alter the common law. In particular, I agree that the "actual malice" rule adopted by the U.S. Supreme Court in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964), should not be adopted into the Canadian common law of defamation.

209 Second, the one issue on which I part company with my colleague concerns the scope of the defence of qualified privilege. Traditionally, this Court has held that the defence of qualified privilege is available with respect to reports of judicial proceedings, but not with respect to reports of pleadings in purely private litigation upon which no judicial action has yet been taken: Gazette Printing Co. v. Shallow (1909), 1909 CanLII 46 (SCC), 41 S.C.R. 339. The appellants, however, argue that Shallow is no longer good law as it had been overtaken by this Court's more recent decision in Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), 1989 CanLII 20 (SCC), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326. My colleague appears to accept this argument. Accordingly, he broadens the scope of the defence of qualified privilege, making it available with respect to reports of pleadings upon which no judicial action has yet been taken. I disagree. In my view, Shallow and Edmonton Journal are entirely consistent. In this respect, I adopt the following statement from the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case at hand ((1994), 1994 CanLII 10572 (ON CA), 18 O.R. (3d) 385, at p. 427):

We were urged to extrapolate from Edmonton Journal the proposition that the common law of defamation should respect such constitutional forms of expression as the reporting of information pertaining to intended court proceedings by conferring qualified privilege on the occasion of the publication of such reports. With respect, we do not agree. Edmonton Journal struck down, in the name of freedom of expression, statutory provisions which sought to inhibit the publication of the details of pending matrimonial and other civil actions. But it by no means follows that the publication of such details should be accorded the mantle of qualified privilege if they are defamatory.

Edmonton Journal and Gazette Printing stand together without conflict: there is a right to publish details of judicial proceedings before they are heard in open court, but such publication does not enjoy the protection of qualified privilege if it is defamatory. As Duff J. noted in the extract from p. 364 of Gazette Printing set out above, no such privilege is necessary if the statements published are true, and no such privilege is desirable if they are not true.

210 Subject to the above, I would dispose of this appeal as does my colleague Cory J.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant Morris Manning: Weir & Foulds, Toronto.

Solicitors for the appellant the Church of Scientology of Toronto: Gowling, Strathy & Henderson, Kitchener.

Solicitors for the respondent: Tory Tory DesLauriers & Binnington, Toronto.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General for Ontario: The Ministry of the Attorney General, Toronto.

Solicitors for the intervener the Canadian Civil Liberties Association: Robert Sharpe and Kent Roach, Toronto.

Solicitors for the interveners the Writers' Union of Canada, PEN Canada, the Canadian Association of Journalists, the Periodical Writers Association of Canada, and the Book and Periodical Council: Davies, Ward & Beck, Toronto.

Solicitors for the interveners the Canadian Daily Newspaper Association, the Canadian Community Newspapers Association, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the Radio-Television News Directors Association of Canada, the Canadian Book Publishers' Council and the Canadian Magazine Publishers' Association: Blake, Cassels & Graydon, Toronto.

TAB 41

Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27 (CanLII), [2008] 2 SCR 114

Source:	Supreme Court of Canada
Date:	2008-05-22
File number:	31902
Other citations:	293 DLR (4th) 29 — 375 NR 81 — 165 ACWS (3d) 954 — 238 OAC 130 — AZ-50492888 — 55 CCLT (3d) 36 — [2008] CarswellOnt 2824 — EYB 2008-133554 — JE 2008-1083 — [2008] SCJ No 27 (QL) — [2008] ACS no 27
Citation:	Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27 (CanLII), [2008] 2 SCR 114, < https://canlii.ca/t/1wz6f >, retrieved on 2026-03-23
Most recent unfavourable mention	Xiang v Wong , 2024 BCSC 512 (CanLII) [...] As a matter of law, despite the guidance of Mustapha , there remains limited jurisprudence that would guide a party in evaluating its claim. [...]

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CITATION: Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., [2008] 2 S.C.R. 114, 2008 SCC 27

DATE: 20080522
DOCKET: 31902

BETWEEN:

Waddah Mustapha (a.k.a. Martin Mustapha)
Appellant / Respondent on cross-appeal
and Culligan of Canada Ltd.
Respondent / Appellant on cross-appeal

CORAM: McLachlin C.J. and Bastarache, Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Charron and Rothstein JJ.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT: McLachlin C.J. (Bastarache, Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Charron and Rothstein JJ. concurring)
(paras. 1 to 20)

Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., [2008] 2 S.C.R. 114, 2008 SCC 27

Waddah Mustapha

(a.k.a. Martin Mustapha)

Appellant/Respondent on cross-appeal

v.

Culligan of Canada Ltd.

Respondent/Appellant on cross-appeal

Indexed as: Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd.

Neutral citation: 2008 SCC 27.

File No.: 31902.

2008: March 18; 2008: May 22.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and Bastarache, Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Charron and Rothstein JJ.

on appeal from the court of appeal for ontario

Torts — Negligence — Duty of care — Foreseeability — Personal injury — Mental injury — Customer suing his bottled water supplier in negligence after finding remains of flies in unopened bottle — Customer claiming mental injury — Whether damage too remote to allow recovery.

In the course of replacing an empty bottle of drinking water with a full one, M saw a dead fly and part of another dead fly in the unopened replacement bottle. Obsessed with the event and its “revolting implications” for the health of his family, he developed a major depressive disorder, phobia and anxiety. He sued C, the supplier of the bottle of water, for psychiatric injury. The trial judge awarded him general and special damages, as well as damages for loss of business, but the Court of Appeal overturned the judgment on the basis that the injury was not reasonably foreseeable and hence did not give rise to a cause of action.

Held: The appeal and the cross-appeal should be dismissed.

M’s damage is too remote to allow recovery. As the manufacturer of a consumable good, C owed M, the ultimate consumer of that good, a duty of care in supplying bottled water to him, and it breached the standard of care by providing M with contaminated water. The requirement of personal injury, which includes serious and prolonged psychological injury, is also met: M suffered a debilitating psychological injury which had a significant impact on his life. C’s breach caused that injury in fact, but not in law: M failed to show that it was foreseeable that a person of ordinary fortitude would suffer serious injury from seeing the flies in the bottle of water he was about to install. Unusual or extreme reactions to events caused by negligence are imaginable but not reasonably foreseeable. In this case, the trial judge erred in applying a subjective standard. [3] [6-11] [15] [18]

The claim for damages for breach of contract also fails. M’s damage could not be reasonably supposed to have been within the contemplation of the parties when they entered into their agreement. [19]

Cases Cited

Referred to: Donoghue v. Stevenson, 1932 CanLII 536 \(FOREP\), [1932] A.C. 562; Anns v. Merton London Borough Council, [1978] A.C. 728; Cooper v. Hobart, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 537, 2001 SCC 79; Page v. Smith, [1996] 1 A.C. 155; Hinz v. Berry, [1970] 2 Q.B. 40; Vanek v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Co. of Canada (1999), 1999 CanLII 2863 \(ON CA\), 48 O.R. (3d) 228; Overseas Tankship (U.K.) Ltd. v. Morts Dock & Engineering Co., [1961] A.C. 388; Overseas Tankship (U.K.) Ltd. v. Miller Steamship Co. Pty., [1967] A.C. 617; White v. Chief Constable of South Yorkshire Police, [1998] 3 W.L.R. 1509; Devji v. Burnaby (District) (1999), 180 D.L.R. (4th) 205, 1999 BCCA 599; Tame v. New South Wales (2002), 211 C.L.R. 317, [2002] HCA 35; Hadley v. Baxendale (1854), 9 Ex. 341, 156 E.R. 145; Fidler v. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 3, 2006 SCC 30.

Authors Cited

Linden, Allen M., and Bruce Feldthusen. Canadian Tort Law, 8th ed. Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis Butterworths, 2006.

APPEAL and CROSS-APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal (Cronk and Blair JJ.A. and Then J. (ad hoc)) (2006), 2006 CanLII 41807 \(ON CA\), 84 O.R. (3d) 457, 275 D.L.R. (4th) 473, 218 O.A.C. 271, 43 C.C.L.T. (3d) 27, [2006] O.J. No. 4964 (QL), 2006 CarswellOnt 7937, setting aside a judgment of Brockenshire J. (2005), 32 C.C.L.T. (3d) 123, [2005] O.J. No. 1469 (QL), 2005 CarswellOnt 1456, allowing an action in negligence. Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed.

Paul J. Pape, Susan M. Chapman and John J. Adair, for the appellant/respondent on cross-appeal.

Hillel David and Lisa La Horey, for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[1] THE CHIEF JUSTICE — The plaintiff, Mr. Mustapha, sues for psychiatric injury sustained as a result of seeing the dead flies in a bottle of water supplied by the defendant, Culligan. In the course of replacing an empty bottle of drinking water with a full one, Mr. Mustapha saw a dead fly and part of another dead fly in the unopened replacement bottle. He became obsessed with the event and its “revolting implications” for the health of his family, which had been consuming water supplied by Culligan for the previous 15 years. The plaintiff developed a major depressive disorder with associated phobia and anxiety. He sued Culligan for damages.

[2] The trial judge found that seeing the flies in the water resulted in psychiatric injuries to Mr. Mustapha, and awarded him $80,000 in general damages, $24,174.58 in special damages, and $237,600 in damages for loss of business ((2005), 32 C.C.L.T. (3d) 123). The Ontario Court of Appeal overturned the judgment on the basis that the injury was not reasonably foreseeable and hence did not give rise to a cause of action ((2006), 2006 CanLII 41807 \(ON CA\), 84 O.R. (3d) 457). The issue before this Court is whether the cause of action has been established. For different reasons than the Court of Appeal, I conclude that it has not.

[3] A successful action in negligence requires that the plaintiff demonstrate (1) that the defendant owed him a duty of care; (2) that the defendant’s behaviour breached the standard of care; (3) that the plaintiff sustained damage; and (4) that the damage was caused, in fact and in law, by the defendant’s breach. I shall examine each of these elements of negligence in turn. As I will explain, Mr. Mustapha’s claim fails because he has failed to establish that his damage was caused in law by the defendant’s negligence. In other words, his damage is too remote to allow recovery.

1. Did the Defendant Owe the Plaintiff a Duty of Care?

[4] The first question to consider in an action for negligence is whether the defendant owed the plaintiff a duty of care. The question focuses on the relationship between the parties. It asks whether this relationship is so close that the one may reasonably be said to owe the other a duty to take care not to injure the other: Donoghue v. Stevenson, 1932 CanLII 536 (FOREP), [1932] A.C. 562 (H.L.). Whether such a relationship exists depends on foreseeability, moderated by policy concerns: Anns v. Merton London Borough Council, [1978] A.C. 728 (H.L.).

[5] In many cases, the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant is of a type which has already been judicially recognized as giving rise to a duty of care. In such cases, precedent determines the question of duty of care and it is unnecessary to undertake a full-fledged duty of care analysis. As stated by A. M. Linden and B. Feldthusen, categories of relationships that have been recognized and relationships analogous to such pre-established categories need not be tested by the Anns formula: Canadian Tort Law (8th ed. 2006), at p. 302; Cooper v. Hobart, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 537, 2001 SCC 79, at paras. 35-36.

[6] The relationship between the parties in this case does not belong to a novel category. It has long been established that the manufacturer of a consumable good owes a duty of care to the ultimate consumer of that good: Donoghue v. Stevenson. It follows that Culligan owed Mr. Mustapha a duty of care in the supplying of bottled water to him.

-

2. Did the Defendant's Behaviour Breach the Standard of Care?

[7] The second question in a negligence action is whether the defendant's behaviour breached the standard of care. A defendant's conduct is negligent if it creates an unreasonable risk of harm (Linden and Feldthusen, at p. 130). The trial judge found that the defendant Culligan breached the standard of care by providing the plaintiff with contaminated water, and the parties did not appeal that finding before this Court. This is hardly surprising; it is clear that a supplier of bottled water intended for personal consumption is under a duty to take reasonable care to ensure that the water is not contaminated by foreign elements. The second element of liability in tort for negligence is therefore met.

3. Did the Plaintiff Sustain Damage?

[8] Generally, a plaintiff who suffers personal injury will be found to have suffered damage. Damage for purposes of this inquiry includes psychological injury. The distinction between physical and mental injury is elusive and arguably artificial in the context of tort. As Lord Lloyd said in Page v. Smith, [1996] 1 A.C. 155 (H.L.), at p. 188:

In an age when medical knowledge is expanding fast, and psychiatric knowledge with it, it would not be sensible to commit the law to a distinction between physical and psychiatric injury, which may already seem somewhat artificial, and may soon be altogether outmoded. Nothing will be gained by treating them as different "kinds" of personal injury, so as to require the application of different tests in law. [Emphasis added.]

[9] This said, psychological disturbance that rises to the level of personal injury must be distinguished from psychological upset. Personal injury at law connotes serious trauma or illness: see Hinz v. Berry, [1970] 2 Q.B. 40 (C.A.), at p. 42; Page v. Smith, at p. 189; Linden and Feldthusen, at pp. 425-27. The law does not recognize upset, disgust, anxiety, agitation or other mental states that fall short of injury. I would not purport to define compensable injury exhaustively, except to say that it must be serious and prolonged and rise above the ordinary annoyances, anxieties and fears that people living in society routinely, if sometimes reluctantly, accept. The need to accept such upsets rather than seek redress in tort is what I take the Court of Appeal to be expressing in its quote from Vanek v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Co. of Canada (1999), 1999 CanLII 2863 \(ON CA\), 48 O.R. (3d) 228 (C.A.): “Life goes on” (para. 60). Quite simply, minor and transient upsets do not constitute personal injury, and hence do not amount to damage.

[10] On the findings of the trial judge, supported by medical evidence, Mr. Mustapha developed a major depressive disorder with associated phobia and anxiety. This psychiatric illness was debilitating and had a significant impact on his life; it qualifies as a personal injury at law. It follows that Mr. Mustapha has established that he sustained damage.

4. Was the Plaintiff’s Damage Caused by the Defendant’s Breach?

[11] The fourth and final question to address in a negligence claim is whether the defendant’s breach caused the plaintiff’s harm in fact and in law. The evidence before the trial judge establishes that the defendant’s breach of its duty of care in fact caused Mr. Mustapha’s psychiatric injury. We are not asked to revisit this conclusion. The remaining question is whether that breach also caused the plaintiff’s damage in law or whether it is too remote to warrant recovery.

[12] The remoteness inquiry asks whether “the harm [is] too unrelated to the wrongful conduct to hold the defendant fairly liable” (Linden and Feldthusen, at p. 360). Since The Wagon Mound (No. 1), the principle has been that “it is the foresight of the reasonable man which alone can determine responsibility” (Overseas Tankship (U.K.) Ltd. v. Morts Dock & Engineering Co., [1961] A.C. 388 (P.C.), at p. 424).

[13] Much has been written on how probable or likely a harm needs to be in order to be considered reasonably foreseeable. The parties raise the question of whether a reasonably foreseeable harm is one whose occurrence is probable or merely possible. In my view, these terms are misleading. Any harm which has actually occurred is “possible”; it is therefore clear that possibility alone does not provide a meaningful standard for the application of reasonable foreseeability. The degree of probability that would satisfy the reasonable foreseeability requirement was described in The Wagon Mound (No. 2) as a “real risk”, i.e. “one which would occur to the mind of a reasonable man in the position of the defendant[t] . . . and which he would not brush aside as far-fetched” (Overseas Tankship (U.K.) Ltd. v. Miller Steamship Co. Pty., [1967] A.C. 617 (P.C.), at p. 643).

[14] The remoteness inquiry depends not only upon the degree of probability required to meet the reasonable foreseeability requirement, but also upon whether or not the plaintiff is considered objectively or subjectively. One of the questions that arose in this case was whether, in judging whether the personal injury was foreseeable, one looks at a person of “ordinary fortitude” or at a particular plaintiff with his or her particular vulnerabilities. This question may be acute in claims for mental injury, since there is a wide variation in how particular people respond to particular stressors. The law has consistently held — albeit within the duty of care analysis — that the question is what a person of ordinary fortitude would suffer: see White v. Chief Constable of South Yorkshire Police, [1998] 3 W.L.R. 1509 (H.L.); Devji v. Burnaby (District) (1999), 180 D.L.R. (4th) 205, 1999 BCCA 599; Vanek. As stated in White, at p. 1512: “The law expects reasonable fortitude and robustness of its citizens and will not impose liability for the exceptional frailty of certain individuals.”

[15] As the Court of Appeal found, at para. 49, the requirement that a mental injury would occur in a person of ordinary fortitude, set out in Vanek, at paras. 59-61, is inherent in the notion of foreseeability. This is true whether one considers foreseeability at the remoteness or at the duty of care stage. As stated in Tame v. New South Wales (2002), 211 C.L.R. 317, [2002] HCA 35, per Gleeson C.J., this “is a way of expressing the idea that there are some people with such a degree of susceptibility to psychiatric injury that it is ordinarily unreasonable to require strangers to have in contemplation the possibility of harm to them, or to expect strangers to take care to avoid such harm” (para. 16). To put it another way, unusual or extreme reactions to events caused by negligence are imaginable but not reasonably foreseeable.

[16] To say this is not to marginalize or penalize those particularly vulnerable to mental injury. It is merely to confirm that the law of tort imposes an obligation to compensate for any harm done on the basis of reasonable foresight, not as insurance. The law of negligence seeks to impose a result that is fair to both plaintiffs and defendants, and that is socially useful. In this quest, it draws the line for compensability of damage, not at perfection, but at reasonable foreseeability. Once a plaintiff establishes the foreseeability that a mental injury would occur in a person of ordinary fortitude, by contrast, the defendant must take the plaintiff as it finds him for purposes of damages. As stated in White, at p. 1512, focusing on the person of ordinary fortitude for the purposes of determining foreseeability “is not to be confused with the ‘eggshell skull’ situation, where as a result of a breach of duty the damage inflicted proves to be more serious than expected”. Rather, it is a threshold test for establishing compensability of damage at law.

[17] I add this. In those cases where it is proved that the defendant had actual knowledge of the plaintiff’s particular sensibilities, the ordinary fortitude requirement need not be applied strictly. If the evidence demonstrates that the defendant knew that the plaintiff was of less than ordinary fortitude, the plaintiff’s injury may have been reasonably foreseeable to the defendant. In this case, however, there was no evidence to support a finding that Culligan knew of Mr. Mustapha’s particular sensibilities.

[18] It follows that in order to show that the damage suffered is not too remote to be viewed as legally caused by Culligan's negligence, Mr. Mustapha must show that it was foreseeable that a person of ordinary fortitude would suffer serious injury from seeing the flies in the bottle of water he was about to install. This he failed to do. The only evidence was about his own reactions, which were described by the medical experts as "highly unusual" and "very individual" (C.A. judgment, at para. 52). There is no evidence that a person of ordinary fortitude would have suffered injury from seeing the flies in the bottle; indeed the expert witnesses were not asked this question. Instead of asking whether it was foreseeable that the defendant's conduct would have injured a person of ordinary fortitude, the trial judge applied a subjective standard, taking into account Mr. Mustapha's "previous history" and "particular circumstances" (para. 227), including a number of "cultural factors" such as his unusual concern over cleanliness, and the health and well-being of his family. This was an error. Mr. Mustapha having failed to establish that it was reasonably foreseeable that a person of ordinary fortitude would have suffered personal injury, it follows that his claim must fail.

5. The Claim in Contract

[19] The plaintiff also brought a claim for damages arising out of breach of contract, although he appears not to have pursued it with vigour. This claim fails. With regards to Mr. Mustapha's psychiatric injury, there is no inconsistency in principle or in outcome between negligence law and contract law. Damages arising out of breach of contract are governed by the expectation of the parties at the time the contract was made (Hadley v. Baxendale (1854), 9 Ex. 341, 156 E.R. 145, at p. 151, applied with respect to mental distress in Fidler v. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 3, 2006 SCC 30), as distinguished from the time of the tort, in the case of tort. I have concluded that personal injury to Mr. Mustapha was not reasonably foreseeable by the defendant at the time of the alleged tort. The same evidence suggests that Mr. Mustapha's damage could not be reasonably supposed to have been within the contemplation of the parties when they entered into their agreement.

6. Conclusion

[20] For the reasons discussed, I conclude that the loss suffered by the plaintiff, Mr. Mustapha, was too remote to be reasonably foreseen and that consequently, he cannot recover damages from the defendant. I would dismiss the appeal with costs. In light of these findings, I find it unnecessary to deal with the cross-appeal, and dismiss it without costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs. Cross-appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant/respondent on cross-appeal: Pape Barristers, Toronto.

Solicitors for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal: McCague Peacock Borlack McInnis & Lloyd, Toronto.

TAB 42

TAB 43

Cinar Corporation v. Robinson, 2013 SCC 73 (CanLII), [2013] 3 SCR 1168

Source:	Supreme Court of Canada
Date:	2013-12-23
File number:	34469; 34468; 34467; 34466
Other citations:	366 DLR (4th) 193 — 452 NR 123 — 235 ACWS (3d) 495 — AZ-51029656 — [2014] EXP 62 — 118 CPR (4th) 1 — 8 CCLT (4th) 1 — EYB 2013-230908 — JE 2014-32 — [2013] SCJ No 73 (QL) — [2013] ACS no 73
Citation:	Cinar Corporation v. Robinson, 2013 SCC 73 (CanLII), [2013] 3 SCR 1168, < https://canlii.ca/t/g2fgx >, retrieved on 2026-03-23
Most recent unfavourable mention	Canadian Copyright Licensing Agency (Access Copyright) v. Canada , 2018 FCA 58 (CanLII) [...] [124] I consider that Robinson is distinguishable . [...]

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CITATION: Cinar Corporation v. Robinson, 2013 SCC 73, [2013] 3 S. C.R. 1168 DATE: 20131223
DOCKET: 34466, 34467, 34468, 34469

BETWEEN:

Cinar Corporation and Les Films Cinar inc.
Appellants
and
Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc.
Respondents

- and -

France Animation S.A., Christophe Izard, Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH, RTV Family Entertainment AG, Christian Davin, Ronald A. Weinberg, Ronald A. Weinberg, in his capacity as sole liquidator of the succession of the late Micheline Charest, BBC Worldwide Television, Theresa Plummer-Andrews, Hélène Charest, McRaw Holdings Inc., Videal Gesellschaft Zur Hertellung Von Audiovisuellen Produkten MHB, 3918203 Canada
Inc. and Music Canada
Intervenors

AND BETWEEN:

Ronald A. Weinberg and Ronald A. Weinberg, in his capacity as sole liquidator of the succession of the late Micheline Charest

Appellants
and

Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc.

Respondents

- and -

Christophe Izard, France Animation S.A., Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH, RTV Family Entertainment AG, Cinar Corporation, Les Films Cinar inc., Christian Davin, BBC Worldwide Television, Theresa Plummer-Andrews, Hélène Charest, McRaw Holdings
Inc., Videal Gesellschaft Zur Hertellung Von Audiovisuellen Produkten MHB, 3918203 Canada Inc. and Music Canada

Intervenors

AND BETWEEN:

Christophe Izard, France Animation S.A., Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH and RTV Family Entertainment AG

Appellants
and

Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc.

Respondents

- and -

Les Films Cinar inc., Cinar Corporation, Ronald A. Weinberg, Ronald A. Weinberg, in his capacity as sole liquidator of the succession of the late Micheline Charest and Music Canada

Intervenors

AND BETWEEN:

Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc.

Appellants
and

France Animation S.A., Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH, Videal Gesellschaft Zur Hertellung
Von Audiovisuellen Produkten MHB, RTV Family Entertainment AG, Christian Davin, Christophe Izard, Les Films Cinar inc., Cinar Corporation, 3918203 Canada Inc., Ronald A.
Weinberg and Ronald A. Weinberg, in his capacity as sole liquidator of the succession of the late Micheline Charest

Respondents

- and -

Music Canada

Intervener

CORAM: McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell and Moldaver JJ.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT:
(paras. 1 to 152)

McLachlin C.J. (LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell and Moldaver JJ. concurring)

Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc., 2013 SCC 73, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 1168

Cinar Corporation and Les Films Cinar inc.

Appellants

v.

Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc.

Respondents

and

France Animation S.A., Christophe Izard, Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH,
RTV Family Entertainment AG,
Christian Davin, Ronald A. Weinberg,
Ronald A. Weinberg, in his capacity as sole liquidator of the succession of the late Micheline Charest,
BBC Worldwide Television, Theresa Plummer-Andrews,
Hélène Charest, McRaw Holdings Inc.,
Videal Gesellschaft Zur Herstellung Von Audiovisuellen
Produkten MHB, 3918203 Canada Inc. and Music Canada

Interveners

- and -

Ronald A. Weinberg and Ronald A. Weinberg, in his capacity as sole liquidator of the succession of the late Micheline Charest

Appellants

v.

Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc.

Respondents

and

Christophe Izard, France Animation S.A.,
Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH,
RTV Family Entertainment AG,
Cinar Corporation, Les Films Cinar inc.,
Christian Davin, BBC Worldwide Television,
Theresa Plummer-Andrews,
Hélène Charest, McRaw Holdings Inc.,
Videal Gesellschaft Zur Hertellung Von Audiovisuellen
Produkten MHB, 3918203 Canada Inc. and Music Canada

Interveniers

- and -

Christophe Izard, France Animation S.A., Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH and RTV Family Entertainment AG

Appellants

v.

Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc.

Respondents

and

Les Films Cinar inc., Cinar Corporation, Ronald A. Weinberg, Ronald A. Weinberg, in his capacity as sole liquidator of the succession of the late Micheline Charest and Music Canada

Interveniers

- and -

Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc.

Appellants

v.

France Animation S.A., Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH,

Videal Gesellschaft Zur Herstellung Von Audiovisuellen Produkten MHB, RTV Family Entertainment AG, Christian Davin, Christophe Izard,
Les Films Cinar inc., Cinar Corporation, 3918203 Canada Inc.,
Ronald A. Weinberg and Ronald A. Weinberg,
in his capacity as sole liquidator of the succession
of the late Micheline Charest

Respondents

and

Music Canada

Intervener

Indexed as: Cinar Corporation v. Robinson

2013 SCC 73

File Nos.: 34466, 34467, 34468, 34469.

2013: February 13; 2013: December 23.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell and Moldaver JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR QUEBEC

Intellectual property — Copyright — Infringement — Reproduction of a substantial part of an original work — Whether trial judge failed to follow correct approach in assessing whether a “substantial part” of a work was reproduced — Whether trial judge failed to give sufficient weight to differences between works at issue — Whether trial judge erred in finding that features of original work are protected by the Copyright Act — Whether trial judge erred by relying on inadmissible expert evidence.

Intellectual property — Copyright — Infringement — Damages — Quantum — Disgorgement of profits — Whether Court of Appeal erred in interfering with trial judge’s assessment of profits — Whether liability for disgorgement of profits may be imposed on a solidary basis — Whether Andrews trilogy cap applies to non-pecuniary damages that do not stem from bodily injury — Whether Court of Appeal erred in interfering with trial judge’s assessment of punitive damages — Whether punitive damages may be awarded on a solidary basis — Copyright Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-42, s. 35 — Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64, art. 1621 — Charter of human rights and freedoms, R.S.Q., c. C-12, s. 49.

R spent years developing an educational children’s television show, “The Adventures of Robinson Curiosity” (“Curiosity”). R drew his inspiration from Daniel Defoe’s novel Robinson Crusoe, as well as from his own life experiences. He developed characters, drew detailed sketches and storyboards, wrote scripts and synopses, and designed promotional materials for his Curiosity project.

From 1985 to 1987, R and his company, Les Productions Nilem inc. (“Nilem”), undertook various initiatives to get the Curiosity project developed. In so doing, R gave a copy of his Curiosity work to W and C, who were directors and officers of Cinar Corporation (“Cinar”). During this same period, a presentation on Curiosity was given to I, a French creator of children’s television shows. Despite the various efforts undertaken by R and his partners, the project failed to attract investors and stalled.

R shelved his project, but did not forget about it. On September 8, 1995, R watched on television the first episode of a new children’s television show, “Robinson Sucroë” (“Sucroë”). He was stunned to see that Sucroë, as he perceived it, was a blatant copy of Curiosity. R subsequently discovered that several parties who had been given access to his Curiosity project, namely Cinar, W, C and I, were also involved in the production of Sucroë.

R and Nilem commenced an action for copyright infringement against Cinar, W, C, and I, and various co-producers and distributors of Sucroë.

The trial judge concluded that R's Curiosity was an original work protected by copyright, that the creators of Sucroë had copied Curiosity, and that the features reproduced in Sucroë represented a substantial part of Curiosity. He found that Cinar, W, C, I, France Animation S.A., Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH and RTV Family Entertainment AG (collectively the "Cinar appellants") were liable for infringement of copyright. He also held D, the chief executive officer of France Animation at the relevant time, personally liable for the infringement. Finally, the trial judge found that Cinar, W, and C were extra-contractually liable towards R and Nilem for having violated their obligations of good faith and of loyalty.

The trial judge awarded damages on a solidary basis (the equivalent of "joint and several" liability in the common law) and costs in the amount of $5,224,293: $607,489 in compensatory damages for R's pecuniary losses stemming from the infringement; $1,716,804 to disgorge the profits earned as a result of the infringement; $400,000 for the psychological harm suffered by R; $1,000,000 in punitive damages; and $1,500,000 for costs on a solicitor-client basis.

The Court of Appeal upheld the trial judge's findings on infringement. It confirmed the trial judge's findings of personal liability for copyright infringement, except for D, against whom the evidence was insufficient in its view.

The Court of Appeal also upheld the trial judge's award of compensatory damages for R's pecuniary losses, subject to a minor mathematical correction. It rejected the trial judge's order for disgorgement of profits against W, C and I because those profits were retained by corporations. It also ordered disgorgement on a joint basis (the equivalent of "several" liability in the common law) rather than solidarily. In addition, the Court of Appeal excluded amounts incorrectly included by the trial judge in the calculation of profits, reducing the amount to be disgorged.

The Court of Appeal held that the cap established in the Andrews trilogy was applicable to the award for psychological suffering and reduced the award to $121,350, which represents 50 percent of the cap's value at the date of the summons.

In addition, the Court of Appeal reduced the award for punitive damages from $1,000,000 to $250,000, on the ground that punitive damages in Quebec must be moderate, and held that they could not be awarded on a solidary basis. It held Cinar liable for $100,000 in punitive damages, and each of W, C and I liable for $50,000. It also affirmed the trial judge's award of $1,500,000 for costs on a solicitor-client basis, but declined to award additional costs on a solicitor-client basis for the appeal.

Four appeals have been brought from the Court of Appeal's judgment (in files 34466, 34467, 34468, and 34469). The Cinar appellants appeal the finding of liability for infringement (in files 34466, 34467 and 34468). R and Nilem appeal the reduction in damages and disgorgement of profits ordered by the Court of Appeal (in file 34469).

Held: The appeals in files 34466, 34467 and 34468 should be dismissed, and the appeal in file 34469 should be allowed in part.

The need to strike an appropriate balance between giving protection to the skill and judgment exercised by authors in the expression of their ideas, on the one hand, and leaving ideas and elements from the public domain free for all to draw upon, on the other, forms the background against which the arguments of the parties must be considered.

In the present case, the trial judge found that the Cinar appellants copied a number of features from R's Curiosity and that, considered as a whole, the copied features constituted a substantial part of R's work. The Cinar appellants argue that instead of applying a holistic approach, the trial judge should have applied a three-step approach requiring him to (1) determine what elements of Curiosity were original, within the meaning of the Copyright Act; (2) exclude non-protectable features of R's work (such as ideas, elements drawn from the public domain, and generic elements commonplace in children's television shows); and (3) compare what remains of Curiosity after this "weeding-out" process to Sucroë, and determine whether a substantial part of Curiosity was reproduced.

As a general matter, it is important to not conduct the substantiality analysis by dealing with the copied features piecemeal. The approach proposed by the Cinar appellants would risk dissecting R's work into its component parts. The "abstraction" of R's work to the essence of what makes it original and the exclusion of non-protectable elements at the outset of the analysis would prevent a truly holistic assessment. This approach focuses unduly on whether each of the parts of R's work is individually original and protected by copyright law. Rather, the cumulative effect of the features copied from the work must be considered, to determine whether those features amount to a substantial part of R's skill and judgment expressed in his work as a whole. The trial judge accordingly did not err by failing to follow the three-step approach advocated by the Cinar appellants.

Likewise, the trial judge did not err by engaging in a qualitative and holistic assessment of the similarities between the works, which took into account the relevant similarities and differences between the works. The question of whether there has been substantial copying focuses on whether the copied features constitute a substantial part of the plaintiff's work — not whether they amount to a substantial part of the defendant's work. The alteration of copied features or their integration into a work that is notably different from the plaintiff's work does not necessarily preclude a claim that a substantial part of a work has been copied.

In essence, the aspects of the trial judge's reasons that the Cinar appellants take issue with are findings of mixed fact and law. They invite this Court to embark on a fresh assessment of the features copied from Curiosity. However, they have failed to demonstrate palpable or overriding errors in the trial judge's findings on substantiality.

The Cinar appellants further argue that the trial judge based the bulk of his findings on the issue of substantial copying on inadmissible expert evidence. For expert evidence to be admitted at trial, it must (a) be relevant; (b) be necessary to assist the trier of fact; (c) not offend any exclusionary rule; and (d) involve a properly qualified expert. These criteria apply to trials for copyright infringement, as they do in other intellectual property cases.

The Cinar appellants argue that the second criterion — necessity of the evidence — is not met in the case at hand. The expert evidence was not necessary to assist the court, they say, because the question of whether a substantial part has been copied must be assessed from the perspective of the lay person in the intended audience for the works at issue.

The perspective of the lay person in the intended audience for the works at issue is a useful one. It has the merit of keeping the analysis of similarities concrete and grounded in the works themselves, rather than in esoteric theories about the works. However, the question always remains whether a substantial part of the plaintiff's work was copied. This question should be answered from the perspective of a person whose senses and knowledge allow him or her to fully assess and appreciate all relevant aspects — patent and latent — of the works at issue. In some cases, it may be necessary to go beyond the perspective of a lay person in the intended audience for the work, and to call upon an expert to place the trial judge in the shoes of someone reasonably versed in the relevant art or technology. In the present case, the necessity criterion of the test for the admissibility of expert evidence is satisfied.

With respect to damages, R and Nilem seek inter alia to have the trial judge's entire award of profits reinstated. Regarding profits from the Sucroë soundtrack, they argue that there is a causal link between the infringement and the profits derived from the soundtrack and that the trial judge therefore correctly included them as part of his award of profits. The apportionment of profits between infringing and non-infringing components of a work is essentially a factual determination which is subject to judicial discretion. An appellate court may only disturb the trial judge's findings on apportionment if there are errors of law or palpable and overriding errors of fact. The trial judge did not make a reviewable error in concluding that it was inappropriate to apportion profits to the soundtrack as a non-infringing component of the work. The Court of Appeal accordingly erred by interfering with the trial judge's conclusion in this regard.

As for the trial judge's characterization of the payment from Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH to France Animation S.A. as revenue, there is agreement with the Court of Appeal that this characterization constitutes a palpable and overriding error and that this amount should be removed from the revenues taken into account when calculating the profits generated by Sucroë. However, in connection with the characterization of the payment due by Cinar to a partnership called Jaffa Road as revenue, the trial judge did not err in this regard and this amount should not be deducted as an expense when calculating the profits from Sucroë.

On the issue of liability for disgorgement of profits under the Copyright Act, the Court of Appeal was correct in concluding that the trial judge erred in ordering disgorgement against all infringers on a solidary basis. Section 35 of the Copyright Act provides a dual remedy for copyright infringement: damages for the plaintiff's losses and disgorgement of the profits retained by the defendant. The latter is not intended to compensate the plaintiff and is not subject to the principles that govern general damages awarded under Quebec's law of extra-contractual liability, whose aim is compensatory. Disgorgement under s. 35 of the Copyright Act goes no further than is necessary to prevent each individual defendant from retaining a wrongful gain. Defendants cannot be held liable for the gains of co-defendants by imposing liability for disgorgement on a solidary basis. For the same reasons, W, C, and I are not personally liable to disgorge profits. In addition, the Court of Appeal's apportionment with respect to the disgorgement of profits should be maintained.

In connection with non-pecuniary damages, and in particular whether the Andrews trilogy cap should be applied in the present case, the scope of application of the cap beyond non-pecuniary damages stemming from bodily injury should not be extended. Furthermore, R's non-pecuniary damages cannot be characterized as stemming from bodily injury, within the meaning of art. 1607 of the Civil Code of Québec. It is more appropriate to characterize R's psychological suffering as a non-pecuniary damage stemming from material injury. Indeed, the infringement of copyright was a breach of R's property rights. It is the initial breach, rather than the consequences flowing from that breach, which serves to characterize the type of injury suffered. The Court of Appeal accordingly erred in applying the Andrews trilogy cap in the present case.

In terms of assessing quantum for this injury, there is agreement with the trial judge that R's non-pecuniary damages are analogous to those claimed by a victim of defamation. The trial judge had the advantage of observing R in court over a long period of time and was well placed to conduct a personalized evaluation of his non-pecuniary damages. He made no palpable and overriding error in his assessment of R's non-pecuniary damages.

As regards punitive damages, they cannot be awarded on a solidary basis. This Court has recognized that the punitive damages regime under the Charter is autonomous from the extra-contractual civil liability regime established under the Civil Code of Québec. Article 1526 of the Civil Code of Québec applies to extra-contractual fault causing injury and cannot ground the solidarity of punitive damages awarded under the Charter. Furthermore, awarding punitive damages on a solidary basis would be inconsistent with the principles set forth in art. 1621 of the Civil Code of Québec, which expressly requires that the objectives of punitive damages — prevention, deterrence (both specific and general), and denunciation of acts that are particularly reprehensible in the opinion of the justice system — be taken into account when awarding them. Both the objectives of punitive damages and the factors relevant to assessing them suggest that awards of punitive damages must be individually tailored to each defendant against whom they are ordered. This requirement of individualization militates against awarding punitive damages on a solidary basis.

In addition, the Court of Appeal was correct to re-assess the quantum of punitive damages, although it did not give sufficient weight to the gravity of the conduct in this case. Indeed, Cinar, W, C, and I consistently and contemptuously denied having access to R's work, and disparaged R's claims that they had copied his work. The impact of this conduct on R was equally serious. It deprived him not only of a source of revenue, but also of his sense of proprietorship over a project that had deep personal significance for him. This said, punitive damages must be awarded with restraint. Article 1621 of the Civil Code of Québec expressly provides that the award of punitive damages “may not exceed what is sufficient to fulfil their preventive purpose”. An amount of $500,000 reaches an appropriate balance between the overarching principle of restraint that governs these damages, on the one hand, and the need to deter conduct of this gravity, on the other. The Court of Appeal held Cinar liable for two-fifths of the amount of punitive damages, and each of W, C, and I liable for one-fifth, and this represents a reasonable apportionment in the circumstances.

Cases Cited

Distinguished: Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229; Thornton v. School District No. 57 (Prince George), 1978 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 267; Arnold v. Teno, 1978 CanLII 2 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287; referred to: Massie & Renwick Ltd. v. Underwriters' Survey Bureau Ltd., 1940 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1940] S.C.R. 218; Théberge v. Galerie d'Art du Petit Champlain inc., 2002 SCC 34, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 336; Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada v. Bell Canada, 2012 SCC 36, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 326; Entertainment Software Association v. Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada, 2012 SCC 34, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 231; Rogers Communications Inc. v. Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada, 2012 SCC 35, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 283; CCH Canadian Ltd. v. Law Society of Upper Canada, 2004 SCC 13, [2004] 1 S.C.R. 339; Ladbroke (Football), Ltd. v. William Hill (Football), Ltd., [1964] 1 All E.R. 465; Designers Guild Ltd. v. Russell Williams (Textiles) Ltd., [2001] 1 All E.R. 700; Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corporation, 45 F.2d 119 (1930); Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235; Baigent v. The Random House Group Ltd., [2007] EWCA Civ 247, [2007] F.S.R. 24; Delrina Corp. v. Triolet Systems Inc. (2002), 2002 CanLII 11389 \(ON CA\), 58 O.R. (3d) 339; Computer Associates International, Inc. v. Altai, Inc., 982 F.2d 693 (1992); Productions Avanti Ciné-Vidéo Inc. v. Favreau (1999), 1999 CanLII 13258 \(QC CA\), 177 D.L.R. (4th) 568, leave to appeal refused, [2000] 1 S.C.R. xi; R. v. Mohan, 1994 CanLII 80 \(SCC\), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 9; Masterpiece Inc. v. Alavida Lifestyles Inc., 2011 SCC 27, [2011] 2 S.C.R. 387; Preston v. 20th Century Fox Canada Ltd. (1990), 1990 CanLII 13741 \(FC\), 33 C.P.R. (3d) 242, aff'd (1993), 1993 CanLII 17624 \(FCA\), 53 C.P.R. (3d) 407; Arbique v. Gabriele, [1998] J.Q. n° 3794 (QL), aff'd 2003 CanLII 16298; Mentmore Manufacturing Co. v. National Merchandising Manufacturing Co. (1978), 1978 CanLII 2037 \(FCA\), 89 D.L.R. (3d) 195; Longpré v. Thériault, [1979] C.A. 258; Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, 106 F.2d 45 (1939); Wellcome Foundation Ltd. v. Apotex

Inc., 2001 CanLII 22028 (FCA), [2001] 2 F.C. 618; Lubrizol Corp. v. Imperial Oil Ltd., 1996 CanLII 4095 (FCA), [1997] 2 F.C. 3; Monsanto Canada Inc. v. Schmeiser, 2004 SCC 34, [2004] 1 S.C.R. 902; Quebec (Public Curator) v. Syndicat national des employés de l'hôpital St-Ferdinand, 1996 CanLII 172 (SCC), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 211; Lindal v. Lindal, 1981 CanLII 35 (SCC), [1981] 2 S.C.R. 629; Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 (SCC), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130; Snyder v. Montreal Gazette Ltd., 1988 CanLII 66 (SCC), [1988] 1 S.C.R. 494; Schreiber v. Canada (Attorney General), 2002 SCC 62, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 269; Landry v. Audet, 2011 QCCA 535 (CanLII), leave to appeal refused, [2011] 3 S.C.R. v; Gauthier v. Beaumont, 1998 CanLII 788 (SCC), [1998] 2 S.C.R. 3; Stations de la Vallée de Saint-Sauveur inc. v. M.A., 2010 QCCA 1509, [2010] R.J.Q. 1872; Société Radio-Canada v. Gilles E. Neron Communication Marketing inc., 2002 CanLII 41249 (QC CA), [2002] R.J.Q. 2639, aff'd 2004 SCC 53, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 95; Construction Denis Desjardins inc. v. Jeanson, 2010 QCCA 1287 (CanLII); Markarian v. Marchés mondiaux CIBC inc., 2006 QCCS 3314 (CanLII); Genex Communications inc. v. Association québécoise de l'industrie du disque, du spectacle et de la vidéo, 2009 QCCA 2201, [2009] R.J.Q. 2743; Solomon v. Québec (Procureur général), 2008 QCCA 1832, [2008] R.J.Q. 2127; de Montigny v. Brossard (Succession), 2010 SCC 51, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 64; Richard v. Time Inc., 2012 SCC 8, [2012] 1 S.C.R. 265; Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., 2002 SCC 18, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 595.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Charter of human rights and freedoms, R.S.Q., c. C-12, ss. 1, 4, 6, 49.

Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64, arts. 1525, 1526, 1607, 1618, 1619, 1621, 2846, 2849.

Copyright Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-42, ss. 2 “infringing”, 3, 5, 27(1), 34 [am. 2012, c. 20, s. 43], 34.1, 35.

Authors Cited

Baudouin, Jean-Louis, et Patrice Deslauriers. La responsabilité civile, 7^e éd., vol. I, Principes généraux. Cowansville, Qué.: Yvon Blais, 2007.

Baudouin, Jean-Louis, et Pierre-Gabriel Jobin. Les obligations, 7^e éd. par Pierre-Gabriel Jobin et Nathalie Vézina. Cowansville, Qué.: Yvon Blais, 2013.

Clermont, Benoît. “Les compilations et la Loi sur le droit d’auteur: leur protection et leur création” (2006), 18 C.P.I. 219.

Gardner, Daniel. Le préjudice corporel, 3^e éd. Cowansville, Qué.: Yvon Blais, 2009.

Gardner, Daniel. “Revue de la jurisprudence 2011 en droit des obligations” (2012), 114 R. du N. 63.

Judge, Elizabeth F., and Daniel J. Gervais. Intellectual Property: The Law in Canada, 2nd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 2011.

Karim, Vincent. Les obligations, 3^e éd., vol. 2. Montréal: Wilson & Lafleur, 2009.

Lluelles, Didier, et Benoît Moore. Droit des obligations, 2^e éd. Montréal: Thémis, 2012.

McKeown, John S. Fox on Canadian Law of Copyright and Industrial Designs, 4th ed., vol. 1. Toronto: Carswell, 2012 (loose-leaf updated 2013, release 4).

Tarantino, Bob. “‘I’ve Got This Great Idea for a Show. . .’ — Copyright Protection for Television Show and Motion Picture Concepts and Proposals” (2004), 17 I.P.J. 189.

Vaver, David. Intellectual Property Law: Copyright, Patents, Trade-marks, 2nd ed. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2011.

APPEALS from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal (Thibault, Morin and Doyon JJ.A.), 2011 QCCA 1361, [2011] R.J.Q. 1415, 108 C.P.R. (4th) 165, [2011] Q.J. No. 9469 (QL), 2011 CarswellQue 15414, SOQUIJ AZ-50771854, setting aside in part a decision of Auclair J., 2009 QCCS 3793, [2009] R.J.Q. 2261, 83 C.P.R. (4th) 1, [2009] R.R.A. 1135, [2009] J.Q. n° 8395 (QL), 2009 CarswellQue 8380, SOQUIJ AZ-50572488. Appeals in files 34466, 34467 and 34468 dismissed. Appeal in file 34469 allowed in part.

William Brock and Cara Cameron, for the appellants (34466)/respondents (34469) Cinar Corporation and Les Films Cinar inc. and for the respondent (34469) 3918203 Canada Inc.

Guy Régimbald, Normand Tamaro, Gilles M. Daigle and Marie-Catherine Deschênes, for the respondents (34466, 34467, 34468)/appellants (34469) Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc.

Pierre Y. Lefebvre and Alain Y. Dussault, for the appellants (34468)/respondents (34469) Christophe Izard, France Animation S.A., Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH and RTV

Family Entertainment AG and for the respondent (34469) Videal Gesellschaft Zur Hertellung Von Audiovisuellen Produkten MHB.

Guy J. Pratte, Daniel Urbas and Marc-André Grou, for the respondent (34469) Christian Davin.

Raynold Langlois, Q.C., Dimitri Maniatis, Jean-Patrick Dallaire and Fabrice Vil, for the appellants (34467)/respondents (34469) Ronald A. Weinberg and Ronald A. Weinberg, in his capacity as sole liquidator of the succession of the late Micheline Charest.

Barry B. Sookman and Daniel G. C. Glover, for the intervener Music Canada.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[1] THE CHIEF JUSTICE — Canadian law protects the exclusive right of copyright owners to reproduce or to authorize the reproduction of their works. The unauthorized reproduction of a substantial part of an original work constitutes copyright infringement, for which a copyright owner can seek various remedies. The present appeals require this Court to determine whether a substantial part of a work has been reproduced, to examine the role of expert evidence in infringement cases, and to assess whether the trial judge committed reviewable errors in his award of damages.

[2] I conclude that copyright was infringed and would order compensatory damages, disgorgement of profits, and punitive damages.

I. Background

[3] Claude Robinson was a dreamer. He spent years meticulously crafting an imaginary universe for an educational children’s television show, “The Adventures of Robinson Curiosity” (“Curiosity”). Robinson drew his inspiration from Daniel Defoe’s novel Robinson Crusoe, as well as from his own life experiences. He developed a character — Robinson Curiosity — who lives on a tropical island and must learn to interact with its other inhabitants. From 1982 onwards, he drew detailed sketches and storyboards, wrote scripts and synopses, and designed promotional materials. In October 1985, the Copyright Office issued a registration certificate identifying Robinson as the author of Curiosity and Les Productions Nilem inc. (“Nilem”) — a corporation of which Robinson is the sole director and shareholder — as the owner of the rights to the literary work.

[4] From 1985 to 1987, Robinson and Nilem undertook various initiatives to get the Curiosity project developed. Of particular relevance to this appeal, in 1986 Cinar Corporation (“Cinar”) was retained by one of Robinson’s production partners, Pathonic International Inc. (“Pathonic”), as a consultant to promote the project in the United States and to offer general production advice. Ronald Weinberg and his late wife Micheline Charest, who were directors and officers of Cinar, became involved in the project. Robinson gave Weinberg and Charest a copy of his Curiosity work. Ultimately, nothing came of Cinar’s efforts to find financial partners for the project in the United States.

[5] In 1987, Robinson partnered with Les Productions SDA ltée (“SDA”) to produce the television show. Nilem and SDA set up two corporations, Curious Island Productions Inc. and Curious Island Enterprises Inc., which they intended to use as vehicles for the production.

[6] During that same year, Robinson and SDA participated in a television industry convention held at Cannes, in France. At this convention, they allegedly gave a presentation on Curiosity to Christophe Izard, a French creator of children’s television shows.

[7] Despite the various efforts undertaken by Robinson and his partners, the project failed to attract investors and stalled. Curious Island Productions and Curious Island Enterprises were dissolved on December 12, 1990.

[8] Robinson shelved his project, but did not forget about it. In 1995, he explored the possibility of converting his Curiosity project into interactive educational software for children.

However, these fresh efforts were cut short when, on September 8, 1995, Robinson watched on television the first episode of a new children's television show, "Robinson Sucroë" ("Sucroë"). He was stunned to see that Sucroë, as he perceived it, was a blatant copy of Curiosity.

[9] In Robinson's view, the characters and environment depicted in Sucroë closely tracked his work. Like Curiosity, Sucroë features a bearded, Robinson Crusoe-inspired protagonist who wears glasses and a straw hat. In both works, the protagonist lives on an island and interacts with other characters. There are however notable differences between the works. Many of the "side-kicks" in Curiosity are animals, whereas in Sucroë they are predominantly humans. Also, Sucroë, unlike Curiosity, features a band of marauding pirates as "villains".

[10] Robinson discovered that several parties who had been given access to his Curiosity project, namely Cinar, Weinberg, Charest, and Izard, were also involved in the production of Sucroë. He concluded that Sucroë was not an independent creation, but rather had been developed by copying Curiosity. He and Nilem commenced an action for copyright infringement against Cinar, Weinberg, Charest, Izard, and various co-producers and distributors of Sucroë. They also claimed damages under the rules of extra-contractual liability, contending that Cinar, Weinberg, and Charest had breached their obligations of good faith and loyalty under the contract for services that they concluded with Pathonic, and that in doing so they knowingly caused damages to Robinson and Nilem.

[11] The trial lasted 83 days and resulted in the production of a voluminous evidentiary record. After considering the testimony of over 40 witnesses and 4 experts, as well as extensive documentary and audio-visual evidence, the trial judge concluded that Robinson's Curiosity was an original work protected by copyright, that the creators of Sucroë had copied Curiosity, and that the features reproduced in Sucroë represented a substantial part of Curiosity. He found that Cinar, Weinberg, Charest, Izard, France Animation S.A., Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH and RTV Family Entertainment AG (collectively referred to as the "Cinar appellants" in these reasons) were liable for infringement of copyright. He also held Christian Davin, the chief executive officer of France Animation at the relevant time, personally liable for the infringement. Finally, the trial judge found that Cinar, Weinberg, and Charest were extra-contractually liable towards Robinson and Nilem for having violated their obligations of good faith and of loyalty: 2009 QCCS 3793, [2009] R.J.Q. 2261.

[12] The trial judge awarded damages on a solidary basis (the equivalent of “joint and several” liability in the common law) and costs in the amount of $5,224,293: $607,489 in compensatory damages for Robinson’s pecuniary losses stemming from the infringement; $1,716,804 to disgorge the profits earned as a result of the infringement; $400,000 for the psychological harm suffered by Robinson; $1,000,000 in punitive damages; and $1,500,000 for costs on a solicitor-client basis.

[13] The Court of Appeal upheld the trial judge’s findings on infringement. It confirmed the trial judge’s findings of personal liability for copyright infringement, except for Davin, against whom the evidence was insufficient in its view: 2011 QCCA 1361, 108 C.P.R. (4th) 165.

[14] The Court of Appeal upheld the trial judge’s award of compensatory damages for Robinson’s pecuniary losses, subject to a minor mathematical correction. It rejected the trial judge’s order for disgorgement of profits against Weinberg, Charest, and Izard because those profits were retained by corporations. It also ordered disgorgement on a joint basis (the equivalent of “several” liability in the common law) rather than solidarily. In addition, the Court of Appeal excluded amounts incorrectly included by the trial judge in the calculation of profits, reducing the amount to be disgorged.

[15] The Court of Appeal held that the cap established in the Andrews trilogy (Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229, Thornton v. School District No. 57 (Prince George), 1978 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 267, and Arnold v. Teno, 1978 CanLII 2 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287) was applicable to the award for psychological suffering and reduced the award to $121,350, which represents 50 percent of the cap’s value at the date of the summons.

[16] The Court of Appeal reduced the award for punitive damages from $1,000,000 to $250,000, on the ground that punitive damages in Quebec must be moderate, and held that they could not be awarded on a solidary basis. It held Cinar liable for $100,000 in punitive damages, and each of Weinberg, Charest, and Izard liable for $50,000.

[17] The Court of Appeal held that interest and the additional indemnity (arts. 1618 and 1619 of the Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64 (“CCQ”)) on the award of compensatory damages should be computed as of July 16, 1996, and as of July 1, 2001, for the award of profits. It also affirmed the trial judge’s award of $1,500,000 for costs on a solicitor-client basis, but declined to award additional costs on a solicitor-client basis for the appeal.

[18] Four appeals have been brought from the Court of Appeal’s judgment (in files 34466, 34467, 34468, and 34469). The Cinar appellants appeal the finding of liability for infringement. Robinson and Nilem appeal the reduction in damages and disgorgement of profits ordered by the Court of Appeal.

II. Issues

[19] The appeals raise a number of issues, which I will address as follows:

- A. The Standing of Robinson and Nilem
- B. The Infringement of Copyright
- C. The Personal Liability of Weinberg, Charest, and Davin for Infringement
- D. The Extra-contractual Liability of Cinar, Weinberg, and Charest
- E. Disgorgement of Profits
- F. Non-pecuniary Damages
- G. Punitive Damages

III. Analysis

A. The Standing of Robinson and Nilem

[20] The appellant Weinberg argues that neither Robinson nor Nilem has standing to bring an action for copyright infringement because Robinson assigned all of his rights in Curiosity to Nilem, and Nilem thereafter assigned those rights to Curious Island Enterprises. He argues that, as a result of these assignments, neither Robinson nor Nilem retains any rights in Curiosity.

[21] Weinberg bears the burden of proving the loss of copyright: s. 34.1 of the Copyright Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-42 (“Copyright Act” or “Act”) (s. 34 at the time this action was commenced); Massie & Renwick Ltd. v. Underwriters’ Survey Bureau Ltd., 1940 CanLII 1 (SCC), [1940] S.C.R. 218, at pp. 233-34. In my view, he has failed to discharge this burden. On the record before this Court, I would not interfere with the conclusion of the courts below that Robinson and Nilem were co-owners of the rights to Curiosity. And I agree with the courts below that any rights transferred by Nilem to Curious Island Enterprises reverted to Nilem. The 1987 shareholders’ agreement by which Nilem transferred its rights to Curious Island Enterprises contained a resolutory clause pursuant to which the rights would revert back to Nilem if Curious Island Enterprises was dissolved, and Curious Island Enterprises was indeed dissolved on December 12, 1990.

[22] Consequently, Robinson and Nilem have standing to bring their action.

B. The Infringement of Copyright

(1) The Scope of the Protection Afforded by the Copyright Act

[23] The Copyright Act strikes “a balance between promoting the public interest in the encouragement and dissemination of works of the arts and intellect and obtaining a just reward for the creator”: Théberge v. Galerie d’Art du Petit Champlain inc., 2002 SCC 34, [2002] 2 S.C.R.

336, at para. 30; see also Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada v. Bell Canada, 2012 SCC 36, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 326, at paras. 8-11; Entertainment Software Association v. Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada, 2012 SCC 34, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 231, at paras. 7-8; Rogers Communications Inc. v. Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada, 2012 SCC 35, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 283, at para. 40. It seeks to ensure that an author will reap the benefits of his efforts, in order to incentivize the creation of new works. However, it does not give the author a monopoly over ideas or elements from the public domain, which all are free to draw upon for their own works. For example, “[t]he general stock of incidents in fiction or drama is free for all to use — a substantial part of everyone’s culture, not of any one individual’s work”: D. Vaver, Intellectual Property Law: Copyright, Patents, Trade-marks (2nd ed. 2011), at p. 182.

[24] The Act protects original literary, dramatic, musical, and artistic works: s. 5. It protects the expression of ideas in these works, rather than ideas in and of themselves: CCH Canadian Ltd. v. Law Society of Upper Canada, 2004 SCC 13, [2004] 1 S.C.R. 339, at para. 8. An original work is the expression of an idea through an exercise of skill and judgment: CCH, at para. 16. Infringement consists of the unauthorized taking of that originality.

[25] However, the Act does not protect every “particle” of an original work, “any little piece the taking of which cannot affect the value of [the] work as a whole”: Vaver, at p. 182. Section 3 of the Copyright Act provides that the copyright owner has the sole right to reproduce “the work or any substantial part thereof”.

[26] A substantial part of a work is a flexible notion. It is a matter of fact and degree. “Whether a part is substantial must be decided by its quality rather than its quantity”: Ladbroke (Football), Ltd. v. William Hill (Football), Ltd., [1964] 1 All E.R. 465 (H.L.), at p. 481, per Lord Pearce. What constitutes a substantial part is determined in relation to the originality of the work that warrants the protection of the Copyright Act. As a general proposition, a substantial part of a work is a part of the work that represents a substantial portion of the author’s skill and judgment expressed therein.

[27] A substantial part of a work is not limited to the words on the page or the brushstrokes on the canvas. The Act protects authors against both literal and non-literal copying, so long as the copied material forms a substantial part of the infringed work. As the House of Lords put it, the “part” which is regarded as substantial can be a feature or combination of features of the work, abstracted from it rather than forming a discrete part. . . . [T]he original elements in the plot of a play or novel may be a substantial part, so that copyright may be infringed by a work which does not reproduce a single sentence of the original.

(Designers Guild Ltd. v. Russell Williams (Textiles) Ltd., [2001] 1 All E.R. 700, at p. 706, per Lord Hoffmann; see also Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corporation, 45 F.2d 119 (2d Cir. 1930), per Learned Hand J.)

[28] The need to strike an appropriate balance between giving protection to the skill and judgment exercised by authors in the expression of their ideas, on the one hand, and leaving ideas and elements from the public domain free for all to draw upon, on the other, forms the background against which the arguments of the parties must be considered.

(2) The Issue on Appeal

[29] The Cinar appellants no longer contest the trial judge’s findings that Robinson’s work as a whole was original, that several of the appellants had access to the work, and that Sucroë and Curiosity share common features. Rather, they argue that the trial judge made several errors in his assessment of whether a substantial part of Curiosity is reproduced in Sucroë, giving rise to a remedy for copyright infringement.

(3) The Standard of Review

[30] The conclusion of the trial judge that a substantial part of a plaintiff’s work was copied is entitled to appellate deference. The issue of substantiality is one of mixed fact and law. Consequently, an appellate court should generally defer to the trial judge’s findings on substantiality, unless those findings are based on an error of law or palpable and overriding errors of fact: Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235; Designers Guild, at p. 707, per Lord Hoffman, and p. 708, per Lord Millett; Baigent v. The Random House Group Ltd., [2007] EWCA Civ 247, [2007] F.S.R. 24, at paras. 125-26; Delrina Corp. v. Triolet Systems Inc. (2002), 2002 CanLII 11389 (ON CA), 58 O.R. (3d) 339 (C.A.), at para. 81; Vaver, at p. 182.

(4) Did the Trial Judge Err in Finding That a Substantial Part of Robinson’s Work Was Reproduced in Sucroë?

[31] The trial judge, upheld by the Court of Appeal, found that the Cinar appellants infringed Robinson’s copyright by copying a substantial part of his original work without his or Nilem’s authorization: see ss. 3(1) and 27(1) of the Copyright Act.

[32] The Cinar appellants contend that the trial judge (a) failed to follow the correct approach to assessing substantiality; (b) failed to give sufficient weight to the significant differences between Sucroë and Curiosity; (c) made an error in finding that the features of Curiosity reproduced in Sucroë were protected by the Copyright Act; and (d) based his findings on inadmissible expert evidence. I will address each of these arguments in turn.

(a) Did the Trial Judge Fail to Follow the Correct Approach to Assessing Whether a “Substantial Part” of a Work Was Reproduced?

[33] The trial judge found that the Cinar appellants copied a number of features from Robinson’s Curiosity, including the visual appearance of the main protagonist, the personality traits of the main protagonist and of other characters, visual aspects of the setting, and recurring scenographic elements. He concluded that, considered as a whole, the copied features constituted a substantial part of Robinson’s work.

[34] The Cinar appellants argue that instead of applying a holistic approach, the trial judge should have applied a three-step approach requiring him to (1) determine what elements of Curiosity were original, within the meaning of the Copyright Act; (2) exclude non-protectable features of Robinson’s work (such as ideas, elements drawn from the public domain, and generic elements commonplace in children’s television shows); and (3) compare what remains of Curiosity after this “weeding-out” process to Sucroë, and determine whether a substantial part of Curiosity was reproduced.

[35] The approach proposed by the Cinar appellants is similar to the “abstraction-filtration-comparison” approach used to assess substantiality in the context of computer software infringement in the United States: see Computer Associates International, Inc. v. Altai, Inc., 982 F.2d 693 (2d Cir. 1992); B. Clermont, “Les compilations et la Loi sur le droit d’auteur: leur protection et leur création” (2006), 18 C.P.I. 219, at p. 237; B. Tarantino, “‘I’ve Got This Great Idea for a Show. . .’ — Copyright Protection for Television Show and Motion Picture Concepts and Proposals” (2004), 17 I.P.J. 189, at pp. 199-200. It has been discussed, though not formally adopted, in Canadian jurisprudence: Delrina Corp., at paras. 43-47. I do not exclude the possibility that such an approach might be useful in deciding whether a substantial part of some works, for example computer programs, has been copied. But many types of works do not lend themselves to a reductive analysis. Canadian courts have generally adopted a qualitative and holistic approach to assessing substantiality. “The character of the works will be looked at, and the court will in all cases look, not at isolated passages, but at the two works as a whole to see whether the use by the defendant has unduly interfered with the plaintiff’s right”: J. S. McKeown, Fox on Canadian Law of Copyright and Industrial Designs (loose-leaf), at p. 21-16.4 (emphasis added).

[36] As a general matter, it is important to not conduct the substantiality analysis by dealing with the copied features piecemeal: Designers Guild, at p. 705, per Lord Hoffman. The approach proposed by the Cinar appellants would risk dissecting Robinson’s work into its component parts. The “abstraction” of Robinson’s work to the essence of what makes it original and the exclusion of non-protectable elements at the outset of the analysis would prevent a truly holistic assessment. This approach focuses unduly on whether each of the parts of Robinson’s work is individually original and protected by copyright law. Rather, the cumulative effect of the features copied from the work must be considered, to determine whether those features amount to a substantial part of Robinson’s skill and judgment expressed in his work as a whole.

[37] I thus conclude that the trial judge did not err by failing to follow the three-step approach advocated by the Cinar appellants.

(b) Did the Trial Judge Fail to Give Sufficient Weight to the Differences Between Sucroë and Curiosity?

[38] The Cinar appellants contend that the trial judge focused almost exclusively on the similarities between Sucroë and Curiosity, and failed to consider the differences between the works. They point to significant differences between the works: the secondary characters in Sucroë are humans, whereas in Curiosity several of those characters are animals; Sucroë prominently features as its “villains” a band of marauding pirates, whereas Curiosity does not seem to have any villains; and the protagonist in Sucroë is not particularly curious, whereas curiosity is the dominant personality trait of the protagonist in Curiosity.

[39] The question of whether there has been substantial copying focuses on whether the copied features constitute a substantial part of the plaintiff’s work — not whether they amount to a substantial part of the defendant’s work: Vaver, at p. 186; E. F. Judge and D. J. Gervais, Intellectual Property: The Law in Canada (2nd ed. 2011), at p. 211. The alteration of copied features or their integration into a work that is notably different from the plaintiff’s work does not necessarily preclude a claim that a substantial part of a work has been copied. As the Copyright Act states, infringement includes “any colourable imitation” of a work: definition of “infringing”, s. 2.

[40] This is not to say that differences are irrelevant to the substantiality analysis. If the differences are so great that the work, viewed as a whole, is not an imitation but rather a new and original work, then there is no infringement. As the Court of Appeal put it, “the differences may have no impact if the borrowing remains substantial. Conversely, the result may also be a novel and original work simply inspired by the first. Everything is therefore a matter of nuance, degree, and context” (para. 66).

[41] The trial judge engaged in a qualitative and holistic assessment of the similarities between the works, which took into account the relevant similarities and differences between the works. For example, he gave little weight to similarities that were due to the generic island setting of both works: the fact that beaches, luxuriant vegetation, and bananas are present in both works was, at best, a “minor” similarity (paras. 621 and 631). He also gave little weight to the alleged similarities between Gladys, a female character in Sucroë, and Gertrude, a character in Curiosity (paras. 577-81). He examined whether Robinson Sucroë could be said to be as curious as Robinson Curiosity, and recognized that curiosity was a less predominant personality trait in Sucroë than it was in Curiosity (paras. 529-31). He concluded that, despite any differences between the works, it was still possible to identify in Sucroë features copied from Curiosity and that these features constituted a substantial part of Robinson’s work. The trial judge did not err in approaching the matter in this way.

(c) Did the Trial Judge Err in Finding That the Features of Curiosity Reproduced in Sucroë Are Protected by the Copyright Act?

[42] The Cinar appellants contend that, by failing to follow their three-step approach and to give sufficient weight to differences between the works, the trial judge characterized as a substantial part of the work a series of features that are not protected by copyright law. They argue that, at most, Sucroë reproduced the ideas embodied in Curiosity, elements drawn from the public domain (such as the protagonist of Daniel Defoe’s nearly 300-year-old novel), and other elements that are not original within the meaning of the Copyright Act.

[43] I turn first to the argument that Sucroë merely reproduced the idea of a children’s television show about a Robinson Crusoe-inspired character living on a tropical island, as opposed to Robinson’s expression of that idea. I cannot accept this contention. The trial judge clearly grounded his finding of copying of a substantial part not in the idea behind Curiosity, but in the way Robinson expressed that idea. He concluded that the overall architecture of Robinson’s submission for a television show was copied. He found that the graphic appearance and several aspects of the personality of Curiosity’s protagonist were copied; the personalities of the secondary characters that gravitate around Curiosity's protagonist were copied; and the graphic appearance of the makeshift village that these characters inhabit was also copied in part (paras. 685 and 824-26). These findings are not confined to the reproduction of an abstract idea; they focus on the detailed manner in which Robinson's ideas were expressed.

[44] This leaves the second argument — the suggestion that to the extent that the characters and setting of Sucroë replicated those found in Curiosity, these are generic elements that are not protected by copyright law. The story of a man marooned on an island interacting with animals, native inhabitants, and the environment is archetypal and has been reproduced for centuries, the Cinar appellants assert.

[45] Again, the trial judge's findings refute this contention. He found that Curiosity was an original work, within the meaning of the Copyright Act. He based this not on the generic nature of the characters, but on their distinct visual appearance and particular personalities, which were the product of Robinson's skill and judgment. Nor was Curiosity's island an entirely generic island; the trial judge cited particular visual elements of the setting that Robinson had conceived and that the Cinar appellants had copied.

[46] The development of a group of characters that have specific personality traits and whose interactions hinge on those personalities can require an exercise of skill and judgment sufficient to satisfy the Copyright Act's originality criterion: see for example Productions Avanti Ciné-Vidéo Inc. v. Favreau (1999), 1999 CanLII 13258 (QC CA), 177 D.L.R. (4th) 568 (Que. C.A.), leave to appeal refused, [2000] 1 S.C.R. xi. Sucroë reproduces more than generic elements which all are free to draw upon for inspiration. It reproduces Curiosity's particular combination of characters with distinct personality traits, living together and interacting on a tropical island — elements that represent a substantial part of the skill and judgment expressed in Curiosity.

[47] In essence, the aspects of the trial judge's reasons that the Cinar appellants take issue with are findings of mixed fact and law. They invite this Court to embark on a fresh assessment of the features copied from Curiosity. I would decline to do so. They have failed to demonstrate palpable or overriding errors in the trial judge's findings on substantiality.

(d) Did the Trial Judge Err by Relying on Inadmissible Expert Evidence?

[48] The Cinar appellants argue that the trial judge based the bulk of his findings regarding substantial copying on inadmissible expert evidence — the evidence of a semiologist, Dr. Charles Perraton. Semiology is the study of signs and symbols and how they convey meaning. Dr. Perraton offered evidence that, quite apart from the surface meaning of the works at issue, there were latent similarities in how the two works used atmosphere, dynamics, motifs, symbols, and structure to convey meaning. The trial judge relied on this evidence in concluding that the Cinar appellants had copied a substantial part of Robinson's work.

[49] For expert evidence to be admitted at trial, it must (a) be relevant; (b) be necessary to assist the trier of fact; (c) not offend any exclusionary rule; and (d) involve a properly qualified expert: R. v. Mohan, 1994 CanLII 80 (SCC), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 9. These criteria apply to trials for copyright infringement, as they do in other intellectual property cases: Masterpiece Inc. v. Alavida Lifestyles Inc., 2011 SCC 27, [2011] 2 S.C.R. 387, at para. 75.

[50] The Cinar appellants argue that the second criterion — necessity of the evidence — is not met in the case at hand. The expert evidence was not necessary to assist the court, they say, because the question of whether a substantial part has been copied must be assessed from the perspective of the lay person in the intended audience for the works at issue: see Preston v. 20th Century Fox Canada Ltd. (1990), 1990 CanLII 13741 (FC), 33 C.P.R. (3d) 242 (F.C.T.D.), aff'd (1993), 1993 CanLII 17624 (FCA), 53 C.P.R. (3d) 407 (F.C.A.); Arbique v. Gabriele, [1998] J.Q. n° 3794 (QL) (Sup. Ct.), aff'd 2003 CanLII 16298 (Que. C.A.). They argue that trial judges are well placed to understand a lay person's point of view and that the assistance of an expert is unnecessary to help them grasp this perspective.

[51] In my view, the perspective of a lay person in the intended audience for the works at issue is a useful one. It has the merit of keeping the analysis of similarities concrete and grounded in the works themselves, rather than in esoteric theories about the works. However, the question always remains whether a substantial part of the plaintiff's work was copied. This question should be answered from the perspective of a person whose senses and knowledge allow him or her to fully assess and appreciate all relevant aspects — patent and latent — of the works at issue. In some cases, it may be necessary to go beyond the perspective of a lay person in the intended audience for the work, and to call upon an expert to place the trial judge in the shoes of “someone reasonably versed in the relevant art or technology”: Vaver, at p. 187.

[52] To take an example, two pieces of classical music may, to the untrained ear, sound different, perhaps because they are played on different instruments, or at different tempos. An expert musician, however, might see similarities suggesting a substantial part has been copied — the same key signature, the same arrangement of the notes in recurring passages, or a recurrent and unusual harmonic chord. It will be for the judge to determine whether the similarities establish copying of a substantial part, to be sure. But in making that determination, the judge may need to consider not only how the work sounds to the lay person in the intended audience, but also structural similarities that only an expert can detect.

[53] In the present case, the necessity criterion of the test for the admissibility of expert evidence is satisfied. First, the works at issue are intended for an audience of young children. A rigid application of the “lay person in the intended audience” standard would unduly restrict the court's ability to answer the central question, namely whether a substantial part of Robinson's work was copied. It would shift the question to whether the copied features are apparent to a five-year-old.

[54] Second, the nature of the works at issue makes them difficult to compare. The trial judge was faced with the task of comparing a sprawling unrealized submission for a television show to a finished product that had aired on television. These are not works that are easily amenable to a side-by-side visual comparison conducted by a judge without the assistance of an expert.

[55] Finally, the works at issue had both patent and latent similarities. Or, as Dr. Perraton explained it, they shared “perceptible” and “intelligible” similarities. “Perceptible” similarities are those that can be directly observed, whereas “intelligible” similarities — such as atmosphere, dynamics, motifs, and structure — affect a viewer’s experience of the work indirectly. Expert evidence was necessary to assist the trial judge in distilling and comparing the “intelligible” aspects of the works at issue, which he would not otherwise appreciate. Consequently, the trial judge did not err in admitting the expert evidence of Dr. Perraton.

(5) Conclusion

[56] The Cinar appellants have failed to establish that the trial judge erred in concluding that they copied a substantial part of Robinson’s work.

C. The Personal Liability of Weinberg, Charest, and Davin for Infringement

[57] France Animation, Cinar, Ravensburger, and RTV Family Entertainment no longer argue that they cannot be found liable in their capacity as producers of Sucroë. Nor does Izard argue that he cannot be found liable in his personal capacity. However, Weinberg, Charest, and Davin contend that they cannot be found personally liable for copyright infringement.

(1) Weinberg and Charest

[58] The trial judge found that Weinberg and Charest were personally liable for the infringement of Robinson’s copyright, since they deliberately and knowingly engaged in the infringement.

[59] Weinberg argues that Robinson failed to establish on a balance of probabilities that he and Charest knowingly engaged in copyright infringement, contending that they had little direct involvement in the creative process of Sucroë.

[60] For a director and/or officer to be held liable for his or her company's infringement of a copyright, "there must be circumstances from which it is reasonable to conclude that the purpose of the director or officer was not the direction of the manufacturing and selling activity of the company in the ordinary course of his relationship to it but the deliberate, wilful and knowing pursuit of a course of conduct that was likely to constitute infringement or reflected an indifference to the risk of it": Mentmore Manufacturing Co. v. National Merchandising Manufacturing Co. (1978), 1978 CanLII 2037 (FCA), 89 D.L.R. (3d) 195 (F.C.A.), at pp. 204-5, per Le Dain J.

[61] The trial judge concluded from the whole of the evidence that Weinberg and Charest deliberately, wilfully, and knowingly infringed Robinson's copyright. This conclusion was supported by the evidence. The trial judge accepted testimony to the effect that Weinberg and Charest personally had access to and actively consulted Robinson's drawings during the development of Sucroë (paras. 786-99). He drew adverse inferences from Weinberg and Charest's persistent denials that they had access to Robinson's work, despite the fact that they were given copies of the work and even made comments on it in the course of their consultations with Pathonic (paras. 254-58). The findings of personal liability are supported by the evidence and should not be set aside.

(2) Davin

[62] The trial judge found Davin, the chief executive officer of France Animation at the relevant time, personally liable for copyright infringement. He relied on evidence that Davin was involved in schemes orchestrated by Cinar in order to fraudulently obtain royalties and government subsidies, and noted that Davin was the hierarchical superior of Izard, who was personally involved in the copying of Robinson's work. The Court of Appeal overturned this finding of personal liability on the ground that it was not supported by the evidence. I agree with the Court of Appeal's conclusion.

[63] The trial judge established Davin's liability by presumption, i.e. by the inductive process of inferring an unknown fact (Davin's personal participation in copyright infringement) from known facts (Davin's hierarchical position within France Animation and his participation in other fraudulent schemes): art. 2846 CCQ. Courts may only rely on presumptions that are "serious, precise and concordant": art. 2849 CCQ; see also Longpré v. Thériault, [1979] C.A. 258, at p. 262.

[64] The evidence relied upon by the trial judge did not support a serious, precise and concordant presumption that Davin was personally, deliberately and knowingly involved in the copying of Robinson's work, as required by Mentmore. The trial judge inferred Davin's knowing and deliberate participation from general circumstantial evidence. He observed that Davin was a [TRANSLATION] "Teflon man" who had participated in fraudulent schemes (para. 835). However, these schemes were unrelated to the copying of Robinson's work. Evidence of a dishonest and arrogant personality does not suffice to ground an inference of participation in copyright infringement. He also relied on Davin's position as Izard's hierarchical superior. Yet, this alone does not establish personal participation in copyright infringement. An officer of a corporation cannot be held personally liable for copyright infringement merely on the basis of his hierarchical status as officer.

[65] Robinson also argues that Davin "authorized" the copying of Robinson's work, within the meaning of s. 3 of the Copyright Act. "Under s. 27(1) of the Copyright Act, it is an infringement of copyright for anyone to do anything that the Act only allows owners to do, including authorizing the exercise of his or her own rights": CCH, at para. 37. As stated in CCH:

"Authorize" means to "sanction, approve and countenance" Countenance in the context of authorizing copyright infringement must be understood in its strongest dictionary meaning, namely "[g]ive approval to; sanction, permit; favour, encourage" Authorization is a question of fact that depends on the circumstances of each particular case and can be inferred from acts that are less than direct and positive, including a sufficient degree of indifference [References omitted; para. 38.]

[66] There is no evidence that Davin actively or passively authorized the copying of Robinson’s work in this sense. Indeed, the record fails to establish that Davin even knew or should have known that Sucroë was developed by copying Robinson’s work.

[67] Finally, Robinson argues that Davin is liable as a producer of Sucroë. His name appears as [TRANSLATION] “executive producer” in the show’s credits in Canada, and as “producteur délégué” in France. This alone is insufficient to hold Davin personally liable. As executive producer, he was acting as an officer of France Animation. It is France Animation, as a corporate entity distinct from its directors and officers, that reproduced a substantial part of Robinson’s work by commissioning and commercializing Sucroë. As the Court of Appeal correctly noted, various contracts establish that it is France Animation and its co-producers, Cinar and Ravensburger, who hired the production staff and assumed financial as well as artistic responsibility for the production of Sucroë (para. 141).

[68] I accordingly agree with the Court of Appeal that Davin cannot be held personally liable for copyright infringement on any of the grounds argued by Robinson.

D. The Extra-contractual Liability of Cinar, Weinberg, and Charest

[69] Having concluded that Cinar, Weinberg, and Charest are liable for copyright infringement, it is unnecessary to examine whether they can be found liable under Quebec’s regime of extra-contractual liability. This form of liability was only argued in the alternative by Robinson and Nilem.

E. Disgorgement of Profits

[70] Pursuant to s. 35 of the Copyright Act, the trial judge awarded both compensatory damages to account for Robinson’s losses (including non-pecuniary damages, discussed below) and 50 percent of the profits made by the infringers, against all the Cinar appellants, on a solidary basis.

[71] The Court of Appeal took issue with the trial judge's award of profits and made several corrections. First, it excluded $1,117,816 in profits derived from Sucroë's soundtrack, on the ground that there was no causal link between the infringement and the soundtrack. Second, it found that the trial judge erred in characterizing a payment of $684,000 from Ravensburger to France Animation (the "Ravensburger amount") as revenue, and excluded the amount from the calculation of profits. Third, it found that a payment of $1,111,201 made by Cinar to a partnership called Jaffa Road (the "Jaffa Road amount") should have been characterized as an expense and deducted from the calculation of profits. Fourth, it held that only the corporate defendants should have been ordered to disgorge profits, and that under s. 35 of the Copyright Act profits can only be ordered disgorged on a joint basis. Finally, it modified the date from which to calculate interest and the additional indemnity on the award of profits.

[72] Having concluded that under s. 35 of the Copyright Act profits cannot be disgorged on a solidary basis, the Court of Appeal apportioned the total amount of profits between France Animation (60 percent), Ravensburger (15 percent), and Cinar (25 percent).

[73] Robinson and Nilem now seek to have the trial judge's entire award of profits reinstated. No appeal is brought against the award of compensatory damages ordered by the trial judge under s. 35 of the Copyright Act for Robinson's pecuniary losses.

[74] The trial judge refused to order an accounting of profits, a decision which has not been appealed. Instead, he calculated the net profits made from Sucroë on the basis of documentary evidence produced by the parties. As a result, this Court does not have the benefit of the type of detailed record that typically results from a taking of accounts, and must confine itself to the trial judge's findings of fact and the documentary evidence on the record before it.

[75] I will deal in turn with each of the alleged defects in the trial judge's award of profits.

(1) Profits From the Sucroë Soundtrack

[76] The soundtrack to Sucroë is the result of an independent creative process. It was not copied from Robinson’s work, but rather was incorporated into the materials that were copied. Robinson argues that there is nevertheless a causal link between the infringement and the profits derived from the soundtrack. In his view, the soundtrack is an inextricable component of a television show that was created through a process of copyright infringement. The Cinar appellants, for their part, argue that since the soundtrack results from independent creation, there can be no causal link between the infringement and the profits related to musical rights.

[77] Section 35 of the Copyright Act provides that a defendant can be ordered to “disgorge its profit to the extent that such profit is caused by the infringement.” The requirement for a [causal] link between infringement and profit may require that the profit be apportioned between that which is attributable to the infringement and that which is not”: McKeown, at p. 24-82.3 (emphasis added). The onus is on the infringer to “satisfactorily separate non-infringing from infringing activities”: Vaver, at p. 653; Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, 106 F.2d 45 (2d Cir. 1939), per Learned Hand J. In some cases, “an infringer may so interweave the right-holder’s work with its own as to make separation impossible”: Vaver, at p. 637.

[78] The apportionment of profits between infringing and non-infringing components of a work is essentially a factual determination which is subject to judicial discretion: Wellcome Foundation Ltd. v. Apotex Inc., 2001 CanLII 22028 (FCA), [2001] 2 F.C. 618 (C.A.), at para. 23; Lubrizol Corp. v. Imperial Oil Ltd., 1996 CanLII 4095 (FCA), [1997] 2 F.C. 3 (C.A.), at para. 9. An appellate court may only disturb the trial judge’s findings on apportionment if there are errors of law or palpable and overriding errors of fact (Housen).

[79] In the case at hand, the trial judge found that [TRANSLATION] “the music revenues cannot be disassociated from the overall . . . work” (para. 1016). The Court of Appeal disagreed and asked itself what profits would have been generated if the soundtrack had been commercialized as a separate product, independently of the infringing material (para. 196). It relied on the “differential profit” approach used in patent infringement cases, in which a comparison is made “between the defendant’s profit attributable to the invention and his profit had he used the best non-infringing option”: Monsanto Canada Inc. v. Schmeiser, 2004 SCC 34, [2004] 1 S.C.R. 902, at para. 102.

[80] In my view, the Court of Appeal erred by interfering with the trial judge’s conclusion that the profits stemming from the soundtrack could not be dissociated from the profits derived from the infringing material. The “differential profit” approach on which the Court of Appeal relied is generally used in cases where an infringement allows the infringer to commercialize a good in a more profitable manner than he could have without the infringement. However, there is no evidence that the soundtrack could have been commercialized as a separate product if Curiosity had not been infringed in the first place. The soundtrack was only commercialized as a component of the television show Sucroë, which was itself created by copying a substantial part of Robinson’s work. The trial judge was entitled to conclude that the soundtrack had no stand-alone value, and that it generated profits only as an accessory to the television show. Consequently, he did not make a reviewable error in concluding that it was inappropriate to apportion profits to the soundtrack as a non-infringing component of the work.

(2) The Ravensburger Amount

[81] The Ravensburger amount represents $684,000 that Ravensburger paid to France Animation. The trial judge characterized this as a form of revenue stemming from Sucroë. I agree with the Court of Appeal that this characterization constitutes a palpable and overriding error.

[82] The trial judge calculated the net profits stemming from Sucroë on a global basis, taking into account the revenue and expenses of all the co-producers. However, he treated the Ravensburger amount in isolation, looking only to the fact that it constituted a form of revenue for one of the co-producers, France Animation. This treatment of the Ravensburger amount was inconsistent with the global approach adopted elsewhere. The amount also represented an outlay of capital for another co-producer, Ravensburger. It was a contribution by Ravensburger to the financing of Sucroë, and its net effect was simply to partially shift the burden of the production expenses from France Animation to Ravensburger. The amount did not constitute a form of revenue for the group of co-producers taken as a whole. The Court of Appeal was correct to remove this amount from the revenues taken into account when calculating the profits generated by Sucroë.

(3) The Jaffa Road Amount

[83] Pursuant to a distribution agreement, Cinar sold an interest in Sucroë to Jaffa Road for $1,853,333. It is not contested that this amount was collected by Cinar and constitutes revenue stemming from Sucroë. In a later agreement, Jaffa Road transferred back to Cinar the distribution rights for Canada and the United States. That agreement provided that a minimum payment of $1,111,201 as part of a “revenue guarantee” would be due unconditionally by Cinar about a year after the execution of the agreement. The trial judge did not characterize this amount as an expense incurred by Cinar, whereas the Court of Appeal did.

[84] The substance of the trial judge’s finding was that the Cinar appellants had not proven the actual occurrence of a transfer of $1,111,201 from Cinar to Jaffa Road (para. 1022). The document submitted to establish this payment provided only for a “revenue guarantee” to be paid a year from the moment of execution. No evidence was tendered to demonstrate that this guarantee was executed when it actually became due. The trial judge was entitled to conclude that this document did not constitute proof of payment of the amount. Contrary to the suggestion of the Court of Appeal, he had no obligation to take this evidence at face value. Consequently, I would not deduct this amount as an expense when calculating the profits from Sucroë.

(4) Ordering Disgorgement Against All Infringers on a Solidary Basis

[85] The trial judge ordered disgorgement against all the parties that he found liable for infringement on a solidary basis. The Court of Appeal held that this misconstrued the disgorgement remedy under s. 35 of the Copyright Act. It held that a defendant can only be made to disgorge profits that it made, as opposed to the profits of other defendants with whom it participated in an infringement.

[86] I agree with the Court of Appeal. Section 35 of the Copyright Act provides a dual remedy for copyright infringement: damages for the plaintiff's losses and disgorgement of the profits retained by the defendant. Disgorgement of profits under s. 35 is designed mainly to prevent unjust enrichment, although it can also serve a secondary purpose of deterrence: Vaver, at p. 650. It is not intended to compensate the plaintiff. This remedy is not subject to the principles that govern general damages awarded under Quebec's law of extra-contractual liability, whose aim is compensatory. Consequently, solidarity of profits ordered disgorged under s. 35 of the Copyright Act cannot be inferred from art. 1526 of the CCQ, which makes co-authors of a fault solidarily liable for the "obligation to make reparation for injury caused to another".

[87] Disgorgement under s. 35 of the Copyright Act goes no further than is necessary to prevent each individual defendant from retaining a wrongful gain. Defendants cannot be held liable for the gains of co-defendants by imposing liability for disgorgement on a solidary basis.

[88] For the same reasons, Weinberg, Charest, and Izard are not personally liable to disgorge profits. The profits from Sucroë were retained by the corporate entities that acted as co-producers. Weinberg, Charest, and Izard should not be required to disgorge profits that they did not retain in their personal capacity.

[89] Having concluded that disgorgement must be ordered on a joint basis, I would maintain the Court of Appeal's apportionment. France Animation must disgorge 60 percent of the profits; Ravensburger, 15 percent; and Cinar, 25 percent.

(5) Interest and Additional Indemnity

[90] The trial judge applied interest and the additional indemnity (arts. 1618 and 1619 CCQ) to the award of profits from the date of the letter of demand, i.e. December 5, 1995.

[91] The Court of Appeal held that this amounted to imposing interest on the profits before they were earned. The profits ordered disgorged were earned during a period of over a decade, largely after December 5, 1995. Since the trial judge refused to order an accounting, it is impossible to apply the interest with precision. Consequently, the Court of Appeal applied interest and the additional indemnity from a date situated roughly at the halfway point of the period during which Sucroë generated revenue, i.e. July 1, 2001.

[92] The Court of Appeal's solution was fair in the circumstances of this case. The parties ordered to disgorge profits should not pay interest from a date clearly prior to the period during which the bulk of the profits were earned.

F. Non-pecuniary Damages

[93] The trial judge awarded Robinson $400,000 in non-pecuniary damages as compensation for his psychological suffering. He analogized Robinson's psychological suffering to the injury sustained by a victim of defamation.

[94] The Court of Appeal reduced this award of damages to $121,350. It reasoned that Robinson's physical symptoms of shock and depression stemmed from a bodily injury. Therefore, the trial judge should have applied the cap on non-pecuniary damages established by this Court in the Andrews trilogy.

(1) Applicability of the Andrews Cap

[95] In the Andrews trilogy, this Court set a cap of $100,000 on the non-pecuniary losses that can be recovered following catastrophic bodily injury. Non-pecuniary loss is a broad category that covers elements such as "loss of enjoyment of life, esthetic prejudice, physical and psychological pain and suffering, inconvenience, loss of amenities, and sexual prejudice": Quebec (Public Curator) v. Syndicat national des employés de l'hôpital St-Ferdinand, 1996 CanLII 172 (SCC), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 211, at para. 63; Andrews, at p. 264. In cases where the cap applies, it is adjusted to account for inflation during the time that has elapsed since the trilogy was decided in 1978: Lindal v. Lindal, 1981 CanLII 35 (SCC), [1981] 2 S.C.R. 629, at pp. 640-41.

[96] Although the cap was articulated by this Court in the context of appeals from common law provinces, it is applied by Quebec courts when assessing non-pecuniary damages stemming from bodily injury: J.-L. Baudouin and P. Deslauriers, La responsabilité civile (7th ed. 2007), vol. I, at pp. 481-84; D. Gardner, Le préjudice corporel (3rd ed. 2009), at pp. 376-77. This is consistent with the concern, expressed in Andrews, that the amounts of these non-pecuniary damages awards “should not vary greatly from one part of the country to another. Everyone in Canada, wherever he may reside, is entitled to a more or less equal measure of compensation for similar non-pecuniary loss” (p. 263).

[97] However, the Andrews cap is inapplicable to non-pecuniary damages that do not stem from bodily injury, such as those that result from defamation: Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 (SCC), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130, at para. 168; see also Snyder v. Montreal Gazette Ltd., 1988 CanLII 66 (SCC), [1988] 1 S.C.R. 494, in which Lamer J. failed to attract a majority with his proposition that damages in civil law defamation cases should be capped.

[98] The Cinar appellants argue (i) that a cap should be imposed on all non-pecuniary damages, regardless of whether they stem from bodily injury, and alternatively (ii) that the non-pecuniary damages in this case do in fact stem from bodily injury.

[99] On the first argument, I would decline to extend the scope of application of the Andrews cap beyond non-pecuniary damages stemming from bodily injury. In Hill, this Court refused to apply the cap to non-pecuniary damages stemming from defamation. The Court reasoned that the policy concerns specific to bodily injury cases identified in the Andrews trilogy — namely the socially burdensome inflation of the amounts awarded as non-pecuniary damages — had not been made out in the field of defamation law. Likewise, the Cinar appellants have not persuaded me that there is an imminent risk of a burdensome upward trend in non-pecuniary damages awarded in copyright infringement cases.

[100] On the second argument, I do not agree that Robinson’s non-pecuniary damages can be characterized as stemming from bodily injury, within the meaning of art. 1607 of the CCQ. In Quebec civil law, an injury can only be characterized as a bodily injury (“préjudice corporel”) if “some form of a breach of physical integrity” is made out: Schreiber v. Canada (Attorney General), 2002 SCC 62, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 269, at para. 62. In making this characterization, it is important to look to whether the act that caused the injury was itself a breach of the victim’s physical integrity, rather than to whether the act had an impact on the physical health of the victim: Gardner, at p. 17. Conversely, “interferences with rights properly characterized as being of a moral nature will not be included within this class of claims”: Schreiber, at para. 64.

[101] The infringement of Robinson’s copyright was not a breach of his physical integrity. The infringement caused severe shock resulting in deterioration of Robinson’s physical health. However, as discussed, impact on a victim’s physical health does not suffice to characterize the injury as a bodily injury, in the absence of a breach of physical integrity: see for example Landry v. Audet, 2011 QCCA 535 (CanLII), at para. 107, leave to appeal refused, [2011] 3 S.C.R. v. The Court of Appeal, with respect, lost sight of this distinction.

[102] It is more appropriate to characterize Robinson’s psychological suffering as a non-pecuniary damage stemming from material injury. Indeed, the infringement of copyright was a breach of Robinson’s property rights. It is the initial breach, rather than the consequences flowing from that breach, which serves to characterize the type of injury suffered. As Professor Gardner states it, [TRANSLATION] “the appropriation of Claude Robinson’s work is, for him, a material injury with pecuniary consequences (the profits generated by using it) and non-pecuniary consequences (the stress, emotional distress or, in other words, psychological injury that results from it)”: “Revue de la jurisprudence 2011 en droit des obligations” (2012), 114 R. du N. 63, at p. 70. As discussed, the scope of application of the Andrews cap is limited; it does not apply to non-pecuniary damages stemming from material injury.

[103] Consequently, I conclude that in this case the Court of Appeal erred in applying the Andrews cap.

(2) Quantum

[104] The Cinar appellants contend that even if the Andrews cap is inapplicable to Robinson's non-pecuniary damages, the trial judge nevertheless committed a palpable and overriding error by awarding a grossly disproportionate amount under this head of damages.

[105] In Quebec, the quantum of non-pecuniary damages is generally assessed by combining a conceptual approach, a personal approach, and a functional approach: St-Ferdinand, at paras. 72-73, 75 and 77; Gauthier v. Beaumont, 1998 CanLII 788 (SCC), [1998] 2 S.C.R. 3, at para. 101. The conceptual approach measures loss "based on an appreciation of the objective seriousness of the injury": Stations de la Vallée de Saint-Sauveur inc. v. M.A., 2010 QCCA 1509, [2010] R.J.Q. 1872, at para. 83, per Kasirer J.A. The personal approach "seeks to evaluate, from a subjective point of view, the pain and inconvenience resulting from the injuries suffered by the victim": St-Ferdinand, at para. 75, citing A. Wéry, "L'évaluation judiciaire des dommages non pécuniaires résultant de blessures corporelles: du pragmatisme de l'arbitraire?", [1986] R.R.A. 355. The functional approach seeks to calculate the cost of measures that could provide solace to the victim: Andrews, at p. 262. These approaches "apply jointly, and thereby encourage a personalized evaluation" of non-pecuniary damages: St-Ferdinand, at para. 80.

[106] In addition to applying these approaches, courts assessing non-pecuniary damages should compare the case at hand to other analogous cases in which non-pecuniary damages were awarded: Stations de la Vallée, at para. 83. They must attempt to treat "like cases alike" (ibid.), by giving roughly similar compensation to victims whose injuries are alike when assessed from the point of view of the combined approaches discussed above. However, it is not helpful to compare cases where non-pecuniary damages are capped to those where they are not. Arguments to the effect that a victim of copyright infringement should not receive more compensation for non-pecuniary damages than an accident victim rendered quadriplegic carry no weight, since the Andrews cap applies as binding precedent in one case but not in the other.

[107] In this case, the trial judge relied heavily on the personal approach, emphasizing the subjective impact of the infringement of copyright on Robinson's mental state and personal life. He bolstered his analysis by comparing Robinson's anguish to the similar level of anguish experienced by the plaintiff in the defamation case Société Radio-Canada v. Gilles E. Néron Communication Marketing inc., 2002 CanLII 41249 (QC CA), [2002] R.J.Q. 2639 (C.A.), aff'd 2004 SCC 53, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 95. In Néron, the Court of Appeal confirmed an award of non-pecuniary damages in the amount of $300,000. The trial judge also looked to the Hill case, in which this Court awarded $300,000 in general damages to a victim of defamation. He correctly took into account the fact that Hill had been decided over a decade before the case at hand, and that a valid comparison required the amount awarded to be adjusted for inflation.

[108] I agree with the trial judge that Robinson's non-pecuniary damages are analogous to those claimed by a victim of defamation. The product of Robinson's artistic exertions was taken from him and the integrity of his personal creative process was violated, causing deep psychological suffering. These harms are similar to those suffered by a victim of defamation.

[109] The trial judge had the advantage of observing Robinson in court over a long period of time and was well placed to conduct a personalized evaluation of his non-pecuniary damages. He made no palpable and overriding error in his assessment of Robinson's non-pecuniary damages.

G. Punitive Damages

[110] In addition to compensatory damages and disgorgement of profits, the trial judge awarded $1,000,000 in punitive damages on a solidary basis, against Cinar, Weinberg, Charest, Izard, Davin, and France Animation. He justified this award largely by referring to the persistently dishonest behaviour of these parties: they had engaged in fraudulent schemes to obtain royalties and government subsidies, had lied repeatedly about their involvement in these schemes, had lied to the court about their access to Robinson's work, and had treated Robinson with callous disregard.

[111] The Court of Appeal reduced the award to $250,000, and apportioned jointly: $100,000 against Cinar, and $50,000 against each of Weinberg, Charest and Izard. It held that the other defendants had not intentionally and deliberately violated Robinson’s rights, and were thus not liable for punitive damages; that the nature of punitive damages requires them to be assessed and awarded on an individualized basis, which precludes solidarity; and that the award of punitive damages in Quebec is governed by a spirit of moderation.

[112] Robinson and Nilem submit that the trial judge’s award of punitive damages is not in error and that the Court of Appeal should not have interfered with it.

(1) Statutory Basis for Punitive Damages

[113] In Quebec, punitive damages can only be awarded where they are provided for by a specific enabling enactment: art. 1621 CCQ. The courts below did not fully examine the basis for the punitive damages awarded in this case, although the Court of Appeal alluded to the Charter of human rights and freedoms, R.S.Q., c. C-12 (“Charter”).

[114] Section 49 of the Charter provides that punitive damages may be awarded if there is an unlawful and intentional interference with any of the rights and freedoms that the Charter recognizes. The evidence establishes unlawful and intentional interference with several of Robinson’s Charter rights. Copyright infringement is a violation of s. 6 of the Charter, which provides that “[e]very person has a right to the peaceful enjoyment and free disposition of his property, except to the extent provided by law”: see Construction Denis Desjardins inc. v. Jeanson, 2010 QCCA 1287 (CanLII), at para. 47. Additionally, the infringement of copyright in this case interfered with Robinson’s personal rights to inviolability and to dignity, recognized by ss. 1 and 4 of the Charter.

[115] An interference with the right to inviolability “must affect the victim’s physical, psychological or emotional equilibrium in something more than a fleeting manner”: St-Ferdinand, at para. 97. The trial judge made detailed findings of fact to the effect that Robinson’s psychological and emotional equilibrium was deeply affected as a result of the infringement and the ensuing legal proceedings (paras. 981-82).

[116] An interference with the right to dignity is a violation of “the respect to which every person is entitled simply because he or she is a human being and the respect that a person owes to himself or herself”: St-Ferdinand, at para. 105. In Markarian v. Marchés mondiaux CIBC inc., 2006 QCCS 3314 (CanLII), the Quebec Superior Court found that

[TRANSLATION] [a] lack of respect, contempt and degrading treatment constitute interference with dignity. They must reach a certain degree to be sanctioned under the Charter. [para. 589]

[117] Here, Cinar, Weinberg, Charest, and Izard consistently and contemptuously denied having access to Robinson’s work, and disparaged Robinson’s claims that they had copied his work. Their behaviour constitutes an interference with Robinson’s Charter right to dignity, and provides an additional basis for the award of punitive damages.

(2) The Parties Liable for Punitive Damages

[118] The Court of Appeal was correct to conclude that only Cinar, Weinberg, Charest, and Izard could be found liable for punitive damages. Under s. 49 of the Charter, punitive damages are only awarded if an interference with protected rights and freedoms is “intentional”. An interference is intentional “when the person who commits the unlawful interference has a state of mind that implies a desire or intent to cause the consequences of his or her wrongful conduct, or when that person acts with full knowledge of the immediate and natural or at least extremely probable consequences that his or her conduct will cause”: St-Ferdinand, at para. 121. The detailed findings of the trial judge establish intentional interference with protected rights by Cinar, Weinberg, Charest, and Izard.

[119] As discussed, the same cannot be said of Davin. The record does not support the contention that he had or should have had knowledge of the actions that gave rise to an interference with Robinson's Charter rights. Nor can France Animation be said to have engaged in an intentional interference with Robinson's rights as a result of its employer-employee relationship with Izard, who personally engaged in infringement. I agree with the Court of Appeal that Izard was a relatively low-level employee of France Animation and that the employer-employee relationship is not sufficient to hold France Animation liable for his intentional interference with Robinson's rights under the Charter. In order to establish that an employer shares its employee's intent to interfere with Charter rights, there must be evidence of factors such as "[o]rders given by the employer, knowledge of or failure to prohibit the unlawful acts, failure to order that the acts cease", or the employee's relatively elevated hierarchical position within the organization: Gauthier, at para. 111. These factors are not present here.

(3) Solidarity of Punitive Damages

[120] In my view, punitive damages cannot be awarded on a solidary basis under the Charter. I come to this conclusion for two reasons.

[121] First, there is no statutory basis, whether in the Civil Code or the Charter, for the solidarity of punitive damages. In Quebec civil law, solidarity of obligations between debtors is the exception, rather than the norm: D. Lluelles and B. Moore, Droit des obligations (2nd ed. 2012), at p. 1524. Article 1525 of the CCQ provides that "[s]olidarity between debtors is not presumed; it exists only where it is expressly stipulated by the parties or imposed by law." Consequently, [TRANSLATION] "[i]n the absence of a contractual stipulation, solidarity is . . . available only if it is clearly provided for in a legislative provision": J.-L. Baudouin and P.-G. Jobin, Les obligations (7th ed. 2013), by P.-G. Jobin and N. Vézina, at p. 710.

[122] The Quebec Court of Appeal's jurisprudence is divided on the issue of whether there is a statutory basis for the solidarity of punitive damages awarded under the Charter. In Genex Communications inc. v. Association québécoise de l'industrie du disque, du spectacle et de la vidéo, 2009 QCCA 2201, [2009] R.J.Q. 2743, the court, per Dalphond J.A., held that art. 1526 of the CCQ provides a statutory basis for solidarity. It reasoned that the co-authors of an intentional interference with rights protected by the Charter are essentially in the same position as co-authors of an extra-contractual fault, who would be liable solidarily under art. 1526 of the CCQ.

[123] However, in Solomon v. Québec (Procureur général), 2008 QCCA 1832, [2008] R.J.Q. 2127, the court, per Pelletier J.A., found that art. 1526 of the CCQ does not provide a basis for awarding punitive damages on a solidary basis under the Charter. It noted that the provision applies to “[t]he obligation to make reparation for injury”. This wording suggests that solidarity between co-authors of a fault only applies to compensatory damages, the purpose of which is to repair injury. The purpose of punitive damages, by contrast, is not to repair injury, but rather to achieve prevention, deterrence, and denunciation.

[124] I prefer the reasoning and result in Solomon. The wording of art. 1526 of the CCQ, which emphasizes its application to the obligation to repair injury, does not extend to the Charter’s punitive damages regime. Moreover, in the years since both Solomon and Genex were decided, this Court has recognized that the punitive damages regime under the Charter is autonomous from the extra-contractual civil liability regime established under the Civil Code: de Montigny v. Brossard (Succession), 2010 SCC 51, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 64, at para. 44, per LeBel J. In my view, art. 1526 of the CCQ applies to extra-contractual fault causing injury and cannot ground the solidarity of punitive damages awarded under the Charter.

[125] The second reason for concluding that punitive damages cannot be awarded on a solidary basis is that this would be inconsistent with the principles set forth in art. 1621 of the CCQ, which provides:

1621. Where the awarding of punitive damages is provided for by law, the amount of such damages may not exceed what is sufficient to fulfil their preventive purpose.

Punitive damages are assessed in the light of all the appropriate circumstances, in particular the gravity of the debtor’s fault, his patrimonial situation, the extent of the reparation for which he is already liable to the creditor and, where such is the case, the fact that the payment of the damages is wholly or partly assumed by a third person.

[126] Article 1621 of the CCQ expressly requires that the objectives of punitive damages — prevention, deterrence (both specific and general), and denunciation of acts that are particularly reprehensible in the opinion of the justice system — be taken into account when awarding them: Richard v. Time Inc., 2012 SCC 8, [2012] 1 S.C.R. 265, at para. 155, per LeBel and Cromwell JJ. Among the non-exhaustive list of factors that should be taken into account when assessing the quantum of punitive damages are “(1) the gravity of the debtor’s fault, (2) the debtor’s patrimonial situation, (3) the extent of the reparation for which the debtor is already liable to the creditor and (4), where such is the case, the fact that the payment of the damages is wholly or partly assumed by a third person” (e.g. an insurer): ibid., at para. 199.

[127] Both the objectives of punitive damages and the factors relevant to assessing them suggest that awards of punitive damages must be individually tailored to each defendant against whom they are ordered. This requirement of individualization militates against awarding punitive damages on a solidary basis.

[128] As art. 1621 of the CCQ makes clear, punitive damages “may not exceed what is sufficient to fulfil their preventive purpose”. Whether the quantum of damages is sufficient to ensure prevention is determined by looking to factors that, by their very nature, are specific to each individual defendant against whom punitive damages are awarded: V. Karim, Les obligations (3rd ed. 2009), vol. 2, at pp. 801-2. The gravity of the conduct of several co-defendants may vary from one defendant to the other (ibid.). As well, the patrimonial situation of co-defendants, the extent of the reparation for which they are already liable, and the assumption of payments by a third party are all factors that are specific to each defendant.

[129] It has been argued that awarding punitive damages on a solidary basis against the co-authors of an intentional interference with Charter rights would contribute to the preventive purpose of these damages. [TRANSLATION] “In some cases, such a condemnation cannot help but encourage individuals to refuse to participate in civil faults such as this for fear of having to pay punitive damages in the place of a co-author”: Genex, at para. 135, per Dalphond J.A.

[130] I agree that the possibility of being ordered to pay punitive damages on a solidary basis may have a deterrent effect. However, a properly tailored award of punitive damages, which takes into account the factors enumerated by art. 1621 of the CCQ and all other appropriate circumstances, will already achieve sufficient deterrence. Adding solidarity to a properly tailored award will only create a risk that the amount of punitive damages exceeds what is sufficient to ensure prevention. This would be the case where one of the defendants is insolvent, which would prevent co-defendants from recovering that defendant's share of the damages and effectively increase the punitive damages for which they are liable: Jobin and Vézina, at p. 716.

[131] I add this. In St-Ferdinand, this Court awarded punitive damages on a solidary basis. L'Heureux-Dubé J. (writing for the Court), held that "nothing . . . would prevent joint and several liability [from] operating" in the context of an award of punitive damages, "as it does in respect of other kinds of damages" (para. 131). However, St-Ferdinand was decided under the provisions of the Civil Code of Lower Canada. In my view, the legislative and jurisprudential developments since that ruling, in particular the introduction of art. 1621 of the CCQ, justify departing from the precedent set in that case.

[132] For these reasons, I conclude that the trial judge erred by awarding punitive damages under the Charter on a solidary basis.

(4) Quantum of Punitive Damages

[133] The Court of Appeal reduced the award of punitive damages from $1,000,000 to $250,000. In my view, the Court of Appeal was correct to re-assess the trial judge's award of damages. However, it gave too little weight to the gravity of Cinar, Weinberg, Charest, and Izard's conduct. I would award an amount of $500,000 in punitive damages.

[134] In Richard, this Court held that an appellate court may only interfere with a trial judge's assessment of punitive damages (1) if there is an error of law; or (2) if the amount is not rationality connected to the purposes for which the damages are awarded, namely prevention, deterrence (both specific and general), and denunciation (see para. 190).

[135] The Court of Appeal was justified in reducing the trial judge's award for punitive damages because the trial judge considered factors that were not relevant to the assessment. The trial judge took into account the fact that the Cinar appellants engaged in fraudulent schemes to obtain royalties and government subsidies to which they were not entitled. Here, punitive damages are being awarded because of an intentional interference with several of Robinson's rights under the Charter. Fraudulent schemes perpetrated against third parties may attract distinct remedies at civil law or sanctions at criminal law, but they are not relevant to the purposes pursued by this award of punitive damages. In light of this error of law, it is necessary to re-assess the quantum of punitive damages awarded by the trial judge: Richard, at para. 198.

[136] As discussed, punitive damages are assessed by looking to the purposes they serve — prevention, deterrence, and denunciation. Factors to be considered include the gravity of the debtor's fault; the debtor's patrimonial situation; the extent of the reparation for which the debtor is already liable to the creditor; and the fact that the payment of damages will be wholly or partly assumed by a third person: art. 1621 CCQ. I also note that, in Quebec civil law, "it is perfectly acceptable to use punitive damages, as is done at common law, to relieve a wrongdoer of its profits where compensatory damages would amount to nothing more than an expense paid to earn greater profits while flouting the law": Richard, at para. 206.

[137] In addition, particular attention must be paid to the gravity of the debtor's fault, which "is undoubtedly the most important factor": Richard, at para. 200. The gravity is assessed from two perspectives: ". . . the wrongful conduct of the wrongdoer and the seriousness of the infringement of the victim's rights" (ibid.).

[138] This said, punitive damages must be awarded with restraint. Article 1621 of the CCQ expressly provides that the award of punitive damages "may not exceed what is sufficient to fulfil their preventive purpose". The typical range for punitive damages in Quebec is between $5,000 and $250,000: see review of the case law in the reasons of the Court of Appeal, at para. 249. However, in cases where the gravity of the conduct warrants it, punitive damages reaching $1,000,000 or more have been awarded: Markarian; Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., 2002 SCC 18, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 595.

[139] In this case, the relevant factors point in different directions. On the one hand, the gravity of the conduct suggests a high amount of punitive damages. Cinar, Weinberg, Charest, and Izard engaged in intentional and calculated copyright infringement, which they planned to keep secret, all the while reaping profits from an internationally successful children's television series. They persistently denied having copied any portion of Robinson's work throughout the lengthy legal proceedings. Conduct of this nature threatens one of the fundamental goals of Canadian copyright law, namely "to prevent someone other than the creator [of a work] from appropriating whatever benefits may be generated": Théberge, at para. 30. The impact of this conduct on Robinson was equally serious. It deprived him not only of a source of revenue, but also of his sense of proprietorship over a project that had deep personal significance for him. He experienced profound anguish. Insult was added to injury by the callous denials of copying and by insinuations to the effect that Robinson was simply an attention-seeking eccentric.

[140] On the other hand, Cinar, Weinberg, Charest, and Izard have already been found liable towards Robinson for substantial amounts of money. As the Court of Appeal noted, they will be largely deprived of any benefits they may have gained from the infringement.

[141] I would award $500,000 in punitive damages. The amount of $1,000,000 awarded by the trial judge is too high. It was awarded on the basis of irrelevant factors and did not give sufficient weight to the substantial amounts awarded under other heads of damages. On the other hand, the amount of $250,000 awarded by the Court of Appeal fails to fully reflect the gravity of the conduct and the need to deter others from engaging in similar conduct. The offending conduct was extremely lucrative; the penalties associated with it must be proportionally significant. An amount of $500,000 reaches an appropriate balance between the overarching principle of restraint that governs these damages, on the one hand, and the need to deter conduct of this gravity, on the other.

[142] Since I have found that these damages cannot be awarded on a solidary basis, I must apportion them among the parties. The Court of Appeal held Cinar liable for two-fifths of the amount of punitive damages, and each of Weinberg, Charest, and Izard liable for one-fifth. This appears to be reasonable, considering that Cinar drew greater financial benefit from the infringement than Weinberg, Charest, or Izard.

IV. Conclusion

[143] I conclude that the copyright in Curiosity was infringed. The trial judge committed no reviewable errors in finding that Sucroë reproduced a substantial part of Curiosity. The Cinar appellants incorrectly argue for an approach that dissects Robinson's work into its constituent parts. Rather, a qualitative and holistic approach must be adopted. In order to determine whether a substantial part of Robinson's work was copied, the features that were copied by the Cinar appellants must be considered cumulatively, in the context of Robinson's work taken as a whole. This is precisely the approach adopted by the trial judge. In addition, the expert evidence relied upon by the trial judge in his analysis was admissible.

[144] On the issue of liability, I agree with the Court of Appeal that the record does not ground a finding of personal liability against Davin. As for Weinberg, Charest, and Izard, their personal liability for infringement is engaged. I also find Cinar, France Animation, Ravensburger, and RTV Family Entertainment liable for infringement.

[145] My conclusions on the issue of infringement make it unnecessary to examine the extra-contractual liability of Cinar, Weinberg, and Charest.

[146] With respect to damages, I agree with the Court of Appeal that profits cannot be ordered disgorged on a solidary basis under s. 35 of the Copyright Act. I also agree that a payment made by Ravensburger to France Animation could not be treated as revenue for the purpose of calculating profits. However, unlike the Court of Appeal, I would include in the calculation of profits those profits associated with the soundtrack of Sucroë. I would also refrain from deducting from the profits a payment that was allegedly made by Cinar to Jaffa Road. Finally, I would maintain the Court of Appeal's apportionment with respect to the disgorgement of profits.

[147] On the issue of non-pecuniary damages, the Court of Appeal erred in applying the Andrews trilogy cap to damages that did not stem from bodily harm. I find that the trial judge committed no palpable and overriding error in his assessment and would reinstate the award of $400,000.

[148] As regards punitive damages, I agree with the Court of Appeal that they cannot be awarded on a solidary basis. In addition, the Court of Appeal was correct to re-assess the quantum of damages, although it did not give sufficient weight to the gravity of the conduct in this case. I would award an amount of $500,000. Cinar is liable for two-fifths of that amount, and each of Weinberg, Charest, and Izard are liable for one-fifth.

[149] Finally, I agree with the Court of Appeal's solution with respect to the computation of interest and the additional indemnity.

[150] It follows that I would dismiss the appeals in files 34466, 34467, and 34468.

[151] With respect to file 34469, I would allow the appeal in part. Specifically, I would reinstate the profits from the Sucroë soundtrack and the Jaffa Road amount in the trial judge's calculation of profits; reinstate the trial judge's order of non-pecuniary damages; and award $500,000 in punitive damages, subject to apportionment on a joint basis as discussed in these reasons.

[152] I would award Robinson and Nilem costs throughout, in addition to the trial judge's award of $1,500,000 in solicitor-client costs for the proceedings at the trial level. The trial judge was well placed to observe the litigation strategy of the Cinar appellants, as well as all other factors relevant to exercising his discretion to award solicitor-client costs under the Copyright Act. I would decline to award Robinson and Nilem costs on a solicitor-client basis for the appeals before the Court of Appeal and this Court. There were serious points of law to argue and it is not established that, on appeal, the Cinar appellants acted in bad faith or otherwise conducted themselves in a manner that warrants an award of costs on a solicitor-client basis.

Appeals 34466, 34467 and 34468 dismissed. Appeal 34469 allowed in part with costs throughout.

Solicitors for the appellants (34466)/respondents (34469) Cinar Corporation and Les Films Cinar inc. and for the respondent (34469) 3918203 Canada Inc.: Davies Ward Phillips & Vineberg, Montréal.

Solicitors for the respondents (34466, 34467, 34468)/appellants (34469) Claude Robinson and Les Productions Nilem inc.: Gowling Lafleur Henderson, Ottawa; Mannella Gauthier Tamaro, Montréal.

Solicitors for the appellants (34468)/respondents (34469) Christophe Izard, France Animation S.A., Ravensburger Film + TV GmbH and RTV Family Entertainment AG and for the respondent (34469) Videal Gesellschaft Zur Hertellung Von Audiovisuellen Produkten MHB: Fasken Martineau DuMoulin, Montréal.

Solicitors for the respondent (34469) Christian Davin: Borden Ladner Gervais, Montréal.

Solicitors for the appellants (34467)/respondents (34469) Ronald A. Weinberg and Ronald A. Weinberg, in his capacity as sole liquidator of the succession of the late Micheline Charest: Langlois Kronström Desjardins, Montréal.

Solicitors for the intervener Music Canada: McCarthy Tétrault, Toronto.

TAB 44

Saadati v. Moorhead, 2017 SCC 28 (CanLII), [2017] 1 SCR 543

Source:	Supreme Court of Canada
Date:	2017-06-02
File number:	36703
Other citations:	409 DLR (4th) 395 — 279 ACWS (3d) 84 — [2017] 6 WWR 431 — [2017] EXP 1678 — 96 BCLR (5th) 1 — 37 CCLT (4th) 1 — [2017] CarswellBC 1446 — EYB 2017-280397 — [2017] SCJ No 28 (QL)
Citation:	Saadati v. Moorhead, 2017 SCC 28 (CanLII), [2017] 1 SCR 543, < https://canlii.ca/t/h42pw >, retrieved on 2026-03-23
Most recent unfavourable mention	R. v. Wyminga , 2019 ONCJ 621 (CanLII) [...] In my view, Saadati is distinguishable from the case at bar, as it dealt with an issue of the law of negligence not a regulatory offence as Mr Wyminga faces. [...]

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CITATION: Saadati v. Moorhead, 2017 SCC 28, [2017] 1 S.C.R. 543

APPEAL HEARD: January 16, 2017
JUDGMENT RENDERED: June 2, 2017
DOCKET: 36703

BETWEEN:

Mohsen Saadati, by his Litigation Guardian, Sara Zarei
Appellant

and

Grant Iain Moorhead,
Able Leasing (2001) Ltd. and
Thi Hao Hoang
Respondents

- and -

Insurance Bureau of Canada
Intervener

CORAM: McLachlin C.J. and Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté, Brown and Rowe JJ.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT: Brown J. (McLachlin C.J. and Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté and Rowe JJ. concurring)
(paras. 1 to 45)

Saadati v. Moorhead, 2017 SCC 28, [2017] 1 S.C.R. 543

Mohsen Saadati, by his Litigation Guardian, Sara Zarei

Appellant

v.

Grant Iain Moorhead,
Able Leasing (2001) Ltd. and
Thi Hao Hoang

Respondents

and

Insurance Bureau of Canada

Intervener

Indexed as: Saadati v. Moorhead

2017 SCC 28

File No.: 36703.

2017: January 16; 2017: June 2.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté, Brown and Rowe JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Torts — Negligence — Motor vehicles — Mental injury — Damages — Claimant suing in negligence as result of motor vehicle accident — Trial judge awarding claimant damages for mental injury based on testimony of lay witnesses rather than on expert evidence establishing identified medical cause — What constitutes mental injury — Whether recovery for mental injury requires expert evidence or other proof of recognized psychiatric illness — Whether claimant sustained damage — Whether matter should be remanded to Court of Appeal.

S's tractor-truck was struck by a vehicle driven by M. This accident was the second in a series of five motor vehicle collisions involving S. S had suffered chronic pain since the first accident, which was later aggravated by the third accident. S sued M and the other defendants in negligence, seeking damages for non-pecuniary loss and past income loss arising from the second accident. The trial judge found that the second accident caused S psychological injuries, including personality change and cognitive difficulties. This finding did not rest on an identified medical cause or expert evidence, but was based on the testimony of S's friends and family to the effect that S's personality had changed for the worse after the accident. The trial judge further found that the mental injury originally caused by the second accident was indivisible from any injury caused by the third accident and awarded S $100,000 for non-pecuniary damages. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal on the ground that S had not demonstrated by expert evidence a medically recognized psychiatric or psychological injury. It also observed that the trial judge had erred by deciding the case on a basis neither pleaded nor argued by S.

Held: The appeal should be allowed and the trial judge's award restored.

The trial judge's award for mental injury was not made in breach of procedural fairness. While cases should not be decided on grounds not raised, in claims for negligently caused mental injury, it is generally sufficient that the pleadings allege some form of such injury. The many allegations of mental injury in S's oral and written closing submissions, combined with the broad heads of damage alleged in the pleadings, provided ample notice to the defendants of the case which they had to answer, and they did not object to these allegations.

Recovery for mental injury in negligence law depends upon the claimant satisfying the criteria applicable to any successful action in negligence: a duty of care, a breach, damage, and a legal and factual causal relationship between the breach and the damage. Canadian negligence law recognizes that a duty exists at common law to take reasonable care to avoid causing foreseeable mental injury, and that this cause of action protects a right to be free from negligent interference with one's mental health. The ordinary duty of care analysis is therefore to be applied to claims for negligently caused mental injury. In particular, liability for mental injury must be confined to claims which satisfy the proximity analysis within the duty of care framework and the remoteness inquiry.

A finding of legally compensable mental injury need not rest, in whole or in part, on the claimant proving a recognized psychiatric injury. The law of negligence accords identical treatment to mental and physical injury. Requiring claimants who allege mental injury to prove that their condition meets the threshold of recognizable psychiatric illness, while not imposing a corresponding requirement upon claimants alleging physical injury to show that their condition carries a certain classificatory label, would accord unequal protection to victims of mental injury. Distinct rules which operate to preclude liability in cases of mental injury, but not in cases of physical injury, should not be erected. The elements of the cause of action of negligence, together with the threshold stated in Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 114, for proving mental injury, furnish a sufficiently robust array of protections against unworthy claims.

Furthermore, confining compensable mental injury to conditions that are identifiable with reference to psychiatric diagnostic tools is inherently suspect as a matter of legal methodology. While, for treatment purposes, an accurate diagnosis is obviously important, a trier of fact adjudicating a claim of mental injury is not concerned with diagnosis, but with symptoms and their effects. There is no necessary relationship between reasonably foreseeable mental injury and a diagnostic classification scheme. A negligent defendant need only be shown to have foreseen injury, and not a particular psychiatric illness that comes with its own label. The trier of fact's inquiry should be directed to the level of harm that the claimant's particular symptoms represent, not to whether a label could be attached to them.

To establish mental injury, claimants must show that the disturbance is serious and prolonged and rises above the ordinary annoyances, anxieties and fears that come with living in civil society. Expert evidence can assist in determining whether or not a mental injury has been shown, but where a psychiatric diagnosis is unavailable, it remains open to a trier of fact to find on other evidence adduced by the claimant that he or she has proven on a balance of probabilities the occurrence of mental injury. It also remains open to the defendant, in rebutting a claim, to call expert evidence establishing that the accident cannot have caused any mental injury, or at least any mental injury known to psychiatry.

In the instant case, the trial judge accepted evidence that clearly showed a serious and prolonged disruption that transcended ordinary emotional upset or distress. These findings have not been challenged and are entitled to appellate deference. There is no legal error in the trial judge's treatment of the evidence of S's symptoms as supporting a finding of mental injury, even in the absence of expert testimony associating them with an identified condition.

It would not be just in the circumstances to remand this matter to the Court of Appeal on the questions of indivisible injury and the damage award. The indivisibility of two injuries is a finding of fact, which is entitled to deference. In addition, without full submissions and a pertinent lower court record, this is not an appropriate case to decide the effect of workers' compensation legislation on the divisibility of injuries. Similarly, the trial judge's damage award is reasonable, supported by the record, and fairly compensates S's loss. It should therefore be restored.

Cases Cited

Applied: Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 114, aff'g (2006), 2006 CanLII 41807 \(ON CA\), 84 O.R. (3d) 457; referred to: Clements v. Clements, 2012 SCC 32, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 181; Bradley v. Groves, 2010 BCCA 361, 326 D.L.R. (4th) 732; Insurance Corp. of British Columbia v. Patko, 2008 BCCA 65, 290 D.L.R. (4th) 687; Rodaro v. Royal Bank of Canada (2002), 2002 CanLII 41834 \(ON CA\), 59 O.R. (3d) 74; Burgsteden v. Long, 2014 SKCA 115, 378 D.L.R. (4th) 562; R. v. E.M.W., 2011 SCC 31, [2011] 2 S.C.R. 542; Canada Trustco Mortgage Co. v. Renard, 2008 BCCA 343, 298 D.L.R. (4th) 216; Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, 2003 SCC 69, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263; McLoughlin v. O'Brian, [1983] 1 A.C. 410; Miner v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co. (1911), 1910 CanLII 340 \(AB CA\), 18 W.L.R. 476; Dulieu v. White & Sons, [1901] 2 K.B. 669; Hambrook v. Stokes Brothers, [1925] 1 K.B. 141; Horne v. New Glasgow, 1953 CanLII 335 \(NS SC\), [1954] 1 D.L.R. 832; Alcock v. Chief Constable of South Yorkshire Police, [1992] 1 A.C. 310; Page v. Smith, [1996] 1 A.C. 155; White v. Chief Constable of South Yorkshire Police, [1999] 2 A.C. 455; Tame v. New South Wales, [2002] HCA 35, 211 C.L.R. 317; Beecham v. Hughes (1988), 1988 CanLII 2839 \(BC CA\), 27 B.C.L.R. (2d) 1; Rhodes v. Canadian National Railway (1990), 1990 CanLII 5401 \(BC CA\), 75 D.L.R. (4th) 248; Toronto Railway Co. v. Toms (1911), 1911 CanLII 3 \(SCC\), 44 S.C.R. 268; Bourhill v. Young, [1943] A.C. 92; Cooper v. Hobart, 2001 SCC 79, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 537; Donoghue v. Stevenson, 1932 CanLII 536 \(FOREP\), [1932] A.C. 562; Hinz v. Berry, [1970] 2 Q.B. 40; McDermott v. Ramadanovic Estate (1988), 1988 CanLII 2840 \(BC SC\), 27 B.C.L.R. (2d) 45; Cox v. Fleming (1995), 1995 CanLII 3127 \(BC CA\), 15 B.C.L.R. (3d) 201; Mason v. Westside Cemeteries Ltd. (1996), 1996 CanLII 8113 \(ON SC\), 135 D.L.R. (4th) 361; Flett v. Maxwell, [1996] B.C.J. No. 1455 (QL); Vanek v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Co. of Canada (1999), 1999 CanLII 2863 \(ON CA\), 48 O.R. (3d) 228; Healey v. Lakeridge Health Corp., 2011 ONCA 55, 103 O.R. (3d) 401; Frazer v. Haukioja, 2010 ONCA 249, 101 O.R. (3d) 528; Kotai v. "Queen of the North" (The), 2009 BCSC 1405, 70 C.C.L.T. (3d) 221; Young v. Borzoni, 2007 BCCA 16, 277 D.L.R. (4th) 685; Graham v.

MacMillan, 2003 BCCA 90, 15 C.C.L.T. (3d) 155; Koerfer v. Davies, [1994] O.J. No. 1408 (QL); Duwyn v. Kaprielian (1978), 1978 CanLII 1271 (ON CA), 22 O.R. (2d) 736; van Soest v. Residual Health Management Unit, [1999] NZCA 206, [2000] 1 N.Z.L.R. 179; Sutherland v. Hatton, [2002] EWCA Civ 76, [2002] 2 All E.R. 1; Augustus v. Gosset, 1996 CanLII 173 (SCC), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 268; Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235; Pinch v. Hofstee, 2015 BCSC 1888; Zawadzki v. Calimoso, 2011 BCSC 45; Wells v. Newfoundland, 1999 CanLII 657 (SCC), [1999] 3 S.C.R. 199.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Civil Code of Québec, art. 1457.

Supreme Court Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-26, s. 46.1.

Workers Compensation Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 492, s. 10.

Authors Cited

American Psychiatric Association. Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, 5th ed. Arlington, Va.: American Psychiatric Association, 2013.

Beever, Allan. Rediscovering the Law of Negligence. Oxford: Hart, 2007.

Bélanger-Hardy, Louise. “Reconsidering the ‘Recognizable Psychiatric Illness’ Requirement in Canadian Negligence Law” (2013), 38 Queen’s L.J. 583.

Bélanger-Hardy, Louise. “Thresholds of Actionable Mental Harm in Negligence: A Policy-Based Analysis” (2013), 36 Dal. L.J. 103.

Bryant, Richard A. “Grief as a psychiatric disorder” (2012), 201 Brit. J. Psychiatry 9.

Cochran, Susan D., et al. “Proposed declassification of disease categories related to sexual orientation in the International Statistical Classification of Diseases and Related Health Problems (ICD-11)” (2014), 92 Bull. World Health Organ. 672.

Drescher, Jack. “Out of DSM: Depathologizing Homosexuality” (2015), 5 Behav. Sci. 565.

Fridman, G. H. L. The Law of Torts in Canada, 3rd ed. by G. H. L. Fridman et al. Toronto: Carswell, 2010.

Gray, John E., Margaret Shone and Peter F. Liddle. Canadian Mental Health Law and Policy, 2nd ed. Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis, 2008.

- Jones, Michael A. “Liability for Psychiatric Damage: Searching for a Path between Pragmatism and Principle”, in Jason W. Neyers, Erika Chamberlain and Stephen G. A. Pitel, eds., Emerging Issues in Tort Law. Oxford: Hart, 2007, 113.
- Klar, Lewis N. Tort Law, 5th ed. Toronto: Carswell, 2012.
- Linden, Allen M., and Bruce Feldthusen. Canadian Tort Law, 10th ed. Toronto: LexisNexis, 2015.
- Markesinis and Deakin's Tort Law*, 7th ed. by Simon Deakin, Angus Johnston and Basil Markesinis. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 2013.
- Mulheron, Rachael. “Rewriting the Requirement for a ‘Recognized Psychiatric Injury’ in Negligence Claims” (2012), 32 Oxford J. Leg. Stud. 77.
- Mullany, Nicholas J., and Peter R. Handford. Tort Liability for Psychiatric Damage. Sydney, N.S.W.: Law Book Co., 1993.
- Ripstein, Arthur. Private Wrongs. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 2016.
- Stapleton, Jane. “In Restraint of Tort”, in Peter Birks, ed., The Frontiers of Liability, vol. 2. New York: Oxford University Press, 1994, 83.
- Stevens, Robert. Torts and Rights. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2007.
- Teff, Harvey. Causing Psychiatric and Emotional Harm: Reshaping the Boundaries of Legal Liability. Oxford: Hart, 2009.
- Todd, Stephen, et al. The Law of Torts in New Zealand, 5th ed. Wellington, N.Z.: Brookers, 2009.
- World Health Organization. International Statistical Classification of Diseases and Related Health Problems, 10th rev. Geneva: W.H.O., 1992.

APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Saunders, Chiasson and Frankel JJ.A.), 2015 BCCA 393, 81 B.C.L.R. (5th) 1, 377 B.C.A.C. 106, 648 W.A.C. 106, 23 C.C.L.T. (4th) 177, 390 D.L.R. (4th) 63, [2016] 4 W.W.R. 259, [2015] B.C.J. No. 2027 (QL), 2015 CarswellBC 2694 (WL Can.), setting aside a decision of Funt J., 2014 BCSC 1365, [2014] B.C.J. No. 1898 (QL), 2014 CarswellBC 2133 (WL Can.). Appeal allowed.

Dairn Shane and Joseph Fearon, for the appellant.

Kathleen S. Duffield and Steven W. Lesiuk, for the respondents.

Alan D'Silva and Aaron Kreaden, for the intervener.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

BROWN J. —

I. Introduction

[1] This appeal, which arises from a motor vehicle accident in British Columbia, concerns principally the application of the common law of negligence to claims for mental injury.

[1] A trial judge awarded damages for mental injury to the appellant, Mohsen Saadati, on the strength not of expert evidence, but of the testimony of lay witnesses to the effect that, after the appellant’s involvement in an automobile accident caused by the respondents, his personality had changed. The British Columbia Court of Appeal reversed, holding that recovery for mental injury requires a claimant to prove, with expert medical opinion evidence, a “recognizable [or recognized] psychiatric illness”.

[2] This Court has, however, never required claimants to show a recognizable psychiatric illness as a precondition to recovery for mental injury. Nor, in my view, would it be desirable for it to do so now. Just as recovery for physical injury is not, as a matter of law, conditioned upon a claimant adducing expert diagnostic evidence in support, recovery for mental injury does not require proof of a recognizable psychiatric illness. This and other mechanisms by which some courts have historically sought to control recovery for mental injury are, in my respectful view, premised upon dubious perceptions of psychiatry and of mental illness in general, which Canadian tort law should repudiate. Further, the elements of the cause of action of negligence, together with the threshold stated by this Court in Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 114, at para. 9, for proving mental injury, furnish a sufficiently robust array of protections against unworthy claims. I therefore conclude that a finding of legally compensable mental injury need not rest, in whole or in part, on the claimant proving a recognized psychiatric illness. It follows that I would allow the appeal and restore the trial judge’s award.

II. Overview of Facts and Proceedings

A. Background

[3] On the night of July 5, 2005, the appellant was driving a tractor-truck along Front Street in New Westminster, British Columbia, when his vehicle was struck by a vehicle driven by the respondent Grant Iain Moorhead. The appellant's truck sustained significant damage, but he appeared at the time to have been uninjured. He went to a nearby hospital, but was not admitted for observation.

[4] This accident ("accident") was the second in a series of five motor vehicle collisions involving the appellant between January 2003 and March 2009, inclusive. The appellant had suffered chronic pain since the first accident, which was later aggravated by the third accident (which occurred on September 17, 2005). In 2007, the appellant sued the respondents in negligence, seeking damages for non-pecuniary loss and past income loss. Two further accidents followed in 2008 and 2009. In 2010, the appellant was declared mentally incompetent and his action was continued by a litigation guardian.

B. Judicial History

(1) Supreme Court of British Columbia — 2014 BCSC 1365

[5] The respondents collectively admitted liability for the accident, but took the position that the appellant suffered no damage. Expert evidence was tendered on behalf of the appellant to support his claim of an injury resulting from the accident, much of which the trial judge ruled inadmissible (2013 BCSC 636, 46 B.C.L.R. (5th) 392). After weighing the admissible evidence, he concluded that the appellant had not demonstrated any physical injury resulting from the accident. Citing the test for factual causation stated in Clements v. Clements, 2012 SCC 32, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 181, at para. 46, however, he did find (at para. 50 (CanLII)) that the accident caused the appellant "psychological injuries, including personality change and cognitive difficulties". While this finding did not rest on an identified medical cause, it was based upon the testimony of friends and family of the appellant to the effect that, after the accident, the appellant's personality changed for the worse. Once a funny, energetic, and charming individual, he had become sullen and prone to mood swings. Historically close relationships with family and friends had deteriorated. He complained of headaches.

[6] The trial judge further found that the appellant's mental injury was aggravated by the third (September 17, 2005) accident. Applying the principle from Bradley v. Groves, 2010 BCCA 361, 326 D.L.R. (4th) 732, he found that the mental injury originally caused by the accident was indivisible from any injury caused by that later accident. Having regard to the appellant's personality change, his loss of close personal relationships with family and friends, his age, and the period involved, the trial judge awarded him $100,000 for non-pecuniary damage. The claim for past income loss was dismissed.

(2) British Columbia Court of Appeal — 2015 BCCA 393, 81 B.C.L.R. (5th) 1

[7] On appeal, the respondents argued (inter alia) that the trial judge erred by awarding damages for mental injury where the appellant had not proven "a medically recognized psychiatric or psychological illness or condition" (para. 22). The Court of Appeal agreed, adding that such an illness or condition must be demonstrated by "expert medical opinion evidence" (para. 32). The law in this regard, it concluded, was left unchanged by this Court's judgment in Mustapha.

[8] Further, the Court of Appeal also observed (at para. 34) that, in awarding damages for mental injury, the trial judge erred by "decid[ing] the case on a basis neither pleaded nor argued by [the appellant]". Rather, the trial judge should have notified counsel that he was prepared to consider a claim that had not been pleaded, given the appellant an opportunity to amend his pleadings and, if the amendments were allowed, given the respondents an opportunity to call further evidence and make further submissions.

III. Analysis

A. Sufficiency of the Pleadings

[9] Drawing from the Court of Appeal’s statements regarding notice, the respondents argue that the trial judge’s award for mental injury was made in breach of procedural fairness, having no basis in the pleadings or submissions at trial. While I note that the respondents did not argue this point at the Court of Appeal, as the respondents now say and as the Court of Appeal said, cases should not be decided on grounds not raised (Insurance Corp. of British Columbia v. Patko, 2008 BCCA 65, 290 D.L.R. (4th) 687, at para. 37; Rodaro v. Royal Bank of Canada (2002), 2002 CanLII 41834 (ON CA), 59 O.R. (3d) 74 (C.A.), at para. 60; Burgsteden v. Long, 2014 SKCA 115, 378 D.L.R. (4th) 562, at para. 17; R. v. E.M.W., 2011 SCC 31, [2011] 2 S.C.R. 542, at para. 4). This rule is an instance of natural justice: each party is entitled to know and respond to the case that it must answer (Canada Trustco Mortgage Co. v. Renard, 2008 BCCA 343, 298 D.L.R. (4th) 216, at paras. 38-39).

[10] In claims for negligently caused mental injury, it is generally sufficient that the pleadings allege some form of such injury (Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, 2003 SCC 69, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263, at para. 74). The appellant’s Statement of Claim alleges various injuries caused by the accident, including:

- h) such further and other injuries as may become apparent through medical reports and examinations, details of which shall be provided as they become known;

and the effects or results of the said injuries upon the Plaintiff include headaches, fatigue, dizziness, nausea and sleeplessness.

(R.R., vol. I, at p. 7)

It also claims “general damages for pain and suffering, loss of earning capacity past, present and future, loss of opportunity, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of physical health . . .” (R.R., vol. I, at p. 7).

[11] At trial, the appellant introduced an expert report from Dr. Hiram Mok, a psychiatrist, who diagnosed the appellant with mental disorders (although it was unclear whether these disorders resulted from the accident or subsequent accidents). The appellant’s written closing submissions at trial also alleged the occurrence of a psychological reaction to the accident (or in other words a mental injury):

It is submitted that if the court does not accept a proven concussion, the evidence still shows that the Plaintiff suffered from a change in mood/personality, memory loss, and cognitive difficulties as a result of the July 5 2005 accident.

If not caused by a concussion, then it must be caused by something. The only logical conclusion is that these were caused by a psychological reaction to the accident, new pains, or an aggravation of old pains.

...

It is therefore submitted that, on a balance of probabilities, if the court finds that Mohsen did not suffer a concussion, then the only logical conclusion is that Mohsen's problems with memory, cognition and change in behavior arose as a result of the July 2005 accident, which compounded upon the January 2003 accident injuries, and was compounded upon again in the September 2005 accident. [Emphasis added.]

(R.R., vol. I, at p. 285)

A similar line of argument was delivered in the appellant's oral submissions:

Now, the alternative argument, of course, we have is that if you don't find that a concussion has been made out, we submit that there is still evidence that he suffered chronic pain and some kind of emotional reaction, with resulting memory problems and cognitive problems, and change in mood, in the July 2005 accident, which but for the accident he would not have suffered from.

...

We say it's a concussion. . . . But if it's not a concussion, it's some reaction to that accident that may be compounding upon the fact that he was injured in an earlier accident back in January 2003, but something changed in this man. . . . That accident triggered that, either by way of it being a concussion or by some kind of psychological, emotional reaction to everything.

...

. . . Something happened to him that changed him. We say it's a concussion, but if it's not a concussion, it must be some kind of emotional psychiatric reaction, which isn't something that he could control. It clearly just came on him after the accident and caused him to become a changed individual between July and September 2005. And that is clear from the evidence of all of the family members. [Emphasis added.]

(R.R., vol. I, at pp. 190-92)

[12] None of these arguments regarding a “psychological”, “emotional” or “psychiatric” reaction elicited an objection from the respondents before the trial judge. And, in my view, the many allegations of such reaction appearing in the appellant’s oral and written closing submissions, combined with the broad heads of damage alleged in the pleadings, provided ample notice to the respondents of the case which they had to answer. I see no breach of procedural fairness here.

B. Mental Injury

[13] Liability in negligence law is conditioned upon the claimant showing (i) that the defendant owed a duty of care to the claimant to avoid the kind of loss alleged; (ii) that the defendant breached that duty by failing to observe the applicable standard of care; (iii) that the claimant sustained damage; and (iv) that such damage was caused, in fact and in law, by the defendant’s breach (Mustapha, at para. 3). At issue here is the third element. As they argued at the Court of Appeal, the respondents say that the trial judge erred by awarding damages for mental injury that did not correspond to a proven, recognized psychiatric illness. More specifically, the Court must answer the narrow question of whether it is strictly necessary, in order to support a finding of legally compensable mental injury, for a claimant to adduce expert evidence or other proof of a recognized psychiatric illness.

(1) Recovery for Mental Injury in Negligence Law

[14] The early common law’s posture towards claims for negligently caused mental harm was one of suspicion and sometimes outright hostility (McLoughlin v. O’Brian, [1983] 1 A.C. 410 (H.L.), at p. 433), and was “virtually programmed to entrench primitive suspicions and prejudices about ‘invisible’, intangible harm” (H. Teff, Causing Psychiatric and Emotional Harm: Reshaping the Boundaries of Legal Liability (2009), at p. 40). Mental injury was seen as “not derived through the senses, but [as] a product of the imagination” (Miner v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co. (1911), 1910 CanLII 340 (AB CA), 18 W.L.R. 476 (Alta. S.C. en banc), at p. 478). This scepticism persisted into the last century, such that mental injury was not compensable unless accompanied by physical injury (see L. Bélanger-Hardy, “Reconsidering the ‘Recognizable Psychiatric Illness’ Requirement in Canadian Negligence Law” (2013), 38 Queen’s L.J. 583, at pp. 599-600).

[15] While the absolute bar to recovery for mental injury absent physical injury was eventually lifted, the suspicion which originally impelled that bar persisted, and common law courts continued to impose conditions upon recovery beyond those applied to claims for negligently caused physical injury. While, therefore, in England liability for negligently caused mental injury was first recognized as early as 1901 (Dulieu v. White & Sons, [1901] 2 K.B. 669 (Div. Ct.)), it was conditional upon “a shock which arises from a reasonable fear of immediate personal injury to oneself” (p. 675), or (after Hambrook v. Stokes Brothers, [1925] 1 K.B. 141 (C.A.)), “a reasonable fear of immediate personal injury either to [the claimant, or the claimant’s children]” (p. 152). While recovery for mental injury in Canada remained parasitic to recovery for compensable physical injury well into the 20th century (e.g. Miner), by mid-century Canadian courts had also begun to permit recovery on similar conditions as English law — typically, on claimants having had at the material time a reasonable fear of physical injury to themselves or to their family (e.g. Horne v. New Glasgow, 1953 CanLII 335 \(NS SC\), [1954] 1 D.L.R. 832 (N.S.S.C.)).

[16] Further obstacles to recovery for mental injury arose in English law. In McLoughlin v. O’Brian, at pp. 419-21, Lord Wilberforce posited three considerations that could limit the boundaries of compensable “nervous shock”: the class of persons whose claims should be recognized (often referred to as relational proximity), the proximity of such persons to the accident (locational, or geographical proximity), and the means by which the “shock” is caused (temporal proximity) (G. H. L. Fridman, The Law of Torts in Canada (3rd ed. 2010), at p. 326). Where claimants alleged mental injury arising out of a sudden traumatic event, later judgments further distinguished between a “primary” victim (who was directly involved as a participant) and a “secondary” victim (who witnessed physical injuries caused to others) (see Alcock v. Chief Constable of South Yorkshire Police, [1992] 1 A.C. 310 (H.L.); and Page v. Smith, [1996] 1 A.C. 155 (H.L.)). This distinction has, however, sometimes proven difficult to apply in practice (as shown by the English law’s difficulty in categorizing the status of rescuers — see White v. Chief Constable of South Yorkshire Police, [1999] 2 A.C. 455 (H.L.)), and has been criticized as lacking foundation in principle, having no relevance to the justice of the claimant's case (A. Beever, Rediscovering the Law of Negligence (2007), at pp. 405-7; J. Stapleton, "In Restraint of Tort", in P. Birks, ed., The Frontiers of Liability (1994), vol. 2, 83, at p. 95; Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd. (2006), 2006 CanLII 41807 \(ON CA\), 84 O.R. (3d) 457 (C.A.), at para. 43). That this is so has never really been disputed. As Lord Hoffmann candidly acknowledged in White, "in this area of the law, the search for principle was called off in Alcock No one can pretend that the existing law . . . is founded upon principle."

[17] Other Commonwealth courts have taken a different path. The High Court of Australia expressly rejected the categories delineated by the House of Lords, preferring a more flexible foreseeability of harm test (Tame v. New South Wales, [2002] HCA 35, 211 C.L.R. 317). In New Zealand, the primary/secondary victim distinction has not been definitively considered (S. Todd et al., The Law of Torts in New Zealand (5th ed. 2009), at pp. 182-84).

[18] Like the English courts, Canadian courts have occasionally struggled, as Professor Klar has described, "to find words which can clearly explain why, on the basis of arbitrary policy choices, certain types of claims seem to be too remote and uncompensable" (L. N. Klar, Tort Law (5th ed. 2012), at p. 505 (emphasis in original)). In Beecham v. Hughes (1988), 1988 CanLII 2839 \(BC CA\), 27 B.C.L.R. (2d) 1 (C.A.), and Rhodes v. Canadian National Railway (1990), 1990 CanLII 5401 \(BC CA\), 75 D.L.R. (4th) 248 (B.C.C.A.), for example, the multi-faceted proximity analysis formalized in McLoughlin v. O'Brian found favour. In Beecham, Lambert J.A. wrote (at p. 43):

. . . I would not put the entire emphasis on "causal proximity", to the exclusion of "temporal proximity", "geographical proximity" or "emotional proximity". I would try to balance them all. A close but foreseeable emotional bond, as between a parent and child, may compensate, in the determination of the composite answer on liability, for a more remote causal proximity, as where the parent is not present when the child is injured.

[19] This Court has not, however, adopted either the primary/secondary victim distinction, or McLoughlin v. O'Brian's disaggregated proximity analysis. Rather, in Mustapha, recoverability of mental injury was viewed (at para. 3) as depending upon the claimant satisfying the criteria applicable to any successful action in negligence — that is, upon the claimant proving a duty of care, a breach, damage, and a legal and factual causal relationship between the breach and the damage. Each of these elements can pose a significant hurdle: not all claimants alleging mental injury will be in a relationship of proximity with defendants necessary to ground a duty of care; not all conduct resulting in mental harm will breach the standard of care; not all mental disturbances will amount to true “damage” qualifying as mental injury, which is “serious and prolonged” and rises above the ordinary emotional disturbances that will occasionally afflict any member of civil society without violating his or her right to be free of negligently caused mental injury (Mustapha, at para. 9); and not all mental injury is caused, in fact or in law, by the defendant's negligent conduct.

[20] Indeed, the claim in Mustapha failed on that last element: the claimant's damage was not caused in law by (that is, it was too remote from) the defendant's breach. Mustapha thus serves as a salutary reminder that, even where a duty of care, a breach, damage and factual causation are established, there remains the pertinent threshold question of legal causation, or remoteness — that is, whether the occurrence of mental harm in a person of ordinary fortitude was the reasonably foreseeable result of the defendant's negligent conduct (Mustapha, at paras. 14-16). And, just as recovery for physical injury will not be possible where injury of that kind was not the foreseeable result of the defendant's negligence, so too will claimants be denied recovery (as the claimant in Mustapha was denied recovery) where mental injury could not have been foreseen to result from the defendant's negligence.

[21] It follows that this Court sees the elements of the cause of action of negligence as furnishing principled and sufficient barriers to unmeritorious or trivial claims for negligently caused mental injury. The view that courts should require something more is founded not on legal principle, but on policy — more particularly, on a collection of concerns regarding claims for mental injury (including those advanced in this appeal by the intervener Insurance Bureau of Canada) founded upon dubious perceptions of, and postures towards, psychiatry and mental illness in general: that mental illness is “subjective” or otherwise easily feigned or exaggerated; and that the law should not provide compensation for “trivial matters” but should foster the growth of “tough hides not easily pierced by emotional responses” (A. M. Linden and B. Feldthusen, Canadian Tort Law (10th ed. 2015), at p. 449; R. Mulheron, “Rewriting the Requirement for a ‘Recognized Psychiatric Injury’ in Negligence Claims” (2012), 32 Oxford J. Leg. Stud. 77, at p. 82). The stigma faced by people with mental illness, including that caused by mental injury, is notorious (J. E. Gray, M. Shone and P. F. Liddle, Canadian Mental Health Law and Policy (2nd ed. 2008), at pp. 139 and 300-301), often unjustly and unnecessarily impeding their participation, so far as possible, in civil society. While tort law does not exist to abolish misguided prejudices, it should not seek to perpetuate them.

[22] Where, therefore, genuine factual uncertainty arises regarding the worthiness of a claim, this can and should be addressed by robust application of those elements by a trier of fact, rather than by tipping the scales via arbitrary mechanisms (R. Stevens, Torts and Rights (2007), at p. 56). Certainly, concerns about “subjective” symptoms or about feigned or exaggerated claims of mental injury are — like most matters of credibility — questions of fact best entrusted to the good sense of triers of fact, upon whose credibility determinations of liability and even of liberty often rest. In short, such concerns should be resolved by “a vigorous search for the truth, not the abdication of judicial responsibility” (Linden and Feldthusen, at p. 449; see also Toronto Railway Co. v. Toms (1911), 1911 CanLII 3 \(SCC\), 44 S.C.R. 268, at p. 276; Stevens, at p. 56).

[23] I add this. As to that first necessary element for recovery (establishing that the defendant owed the claimant a duty of care), it is implicit in the Court’s decision in Mustapha that Canadian negligence law recognizes that a duty exists at common law to take reasonable care to avoid causing foreseeable mental injury, and that this cause of action protects a right to be free from negligent interference with one’s mental health. That right is grounded in the simple truth that a person’s mental health — like a person’s physical integrity or property, injury to which is also compensable in negligence law — is an essential means by which that person chooses to live life and pursue goals (A. Ripstein, Private Wrongs (2016), at pp. 87 and 252-53). And, where mental injury is negligently inflicted, a person's autonomy to make those choices is undeniably impaired, sometimes to an even greater degree than the impairment which follows a serious physical injury (Bourhill v. Young, [1943] A.C. 92 (H.L.), at p. 103; Toronto Railway, at p. 276). To put the point more starkly, "[t]he loss of our mental health is a more fundamental violation of our sense of self than the loss of a finger" (Stevens, at p. 55).

[24] It is also implicit in Mustapha that the ordinary duty of care analysis is to be applied to claims for negligently caused mental injury. With great respect to courts that have expressed contrary views, it is in my view unnecessary and indeed futile to re-structure that analysis so as to mandate formal, separate consideration of certain dimensions of proximity, as was done in McLoughlin v. O'Brian. Certainly, "temporal", "geographic" and "relational" considerations might well inform the proximity analysis to be performed in some cases. But the proximity analysis as formulated by this Court is, and is intended to be, sufficiently flexible to capture all relevant circumstances that might in any given case go to seeking out the "close and direct" relationship which is the hallmark of the common law duty of care (Cooper v. Hobart, 2001 SCC 79, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 537, at para. 32, citing Donoghue v. Stevenson, 1932 CanLII 536 (FOREP), [1932] A.C. 562 (H.L.), at pp. 580-81). As the Court has said, that analysis focuses on factors arising from the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant. . . .

. . .

As this Court stated in Hercules Managements Ltd. v. Ernst & Young, 1997 CanLII 345 (SCC), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 165, at para. 24, per La Forest J.:

The label "proximity", as it was used by Lord Wilberforce in [Anns v. Merton London Borough Council, [1978] A.C. 728 (H.L.)], was clearly intended to connote that the circumstances of the relationship inhering between the plaintiff and the defendant are of such nature that the defendant may be said to be under an obligation to be mindful of the plaintiff's legitimate interests in conducting his or her affairs.

(Cooper, at paras. 30 and 33 (emphasis in original))

(2) Recognized Psychiatric Illness

[25] As I have already said, the principal issue presented by this appeal — and, in particular, by the Court of Appeal’s conclusion that the appellant’s claim failed for lack of expert evidence demonstrating a recognized psychiatric illness — concerns the element of the cause of action of negligence requiring the claimant to show damage. More specifically, it requires the Court to consider what constitutes mental injury, and how it may be proven.

[26] The origins of the putative requirement of showing a recognized psychiatric illness appear to lie in Lord Denning M.R.’s speech in Hinz v. Berry, [1970] 2 Q.B. 40 (C.A.), at p. 42:

In English law no damages are awarded for grief or sorrow caused by a person’s death. No damages are to be given for the worry about the children, or for the financial strain or stress, or the difficulties of adjusting to a new life. Damages are, however, recoverable for nervous shock, or, to put it in medical terms, for a recognisable psychiatric illness caused by the breach of duty by the defendant.

This statement has been reiterated, albeit with some variation as to terminology. In McLoughlin v. O’Brian, at p. 431, for example, Lord Bridge described this hurdle as requiring “a positive psychiatric illness”. It has also been variously referred to as a “genuine”, “recognized” or “recognizable” psychiatric illness (Mulheron, at p. 81).

[27] Howsoever the term is phrased, it is far from clear on the text of Hinz v. Berry that it was intended to impose upon claimants the burden of showing a positive expert diagnosis. At the very least, it is not obvious that Hinz v. Berry sought to download to expert psychiatric witnesses the trier of fact’s task of determining whether the claimant sustained mental injury (Teff, at p. 53; Bélanger-Hardy, at pp. 607-11). The respondents’ submission, therefore — that, by “recognizable psychiatric illness”, it was intended that mental injury be “recognizable” to a psychiatrically trained expert witness, and not to an ordinary witness — is founded upon a shaky premise.

[28] Despite some early resistance, however (e.g. McDermott v. Ramadanovic Estate (1988), 1988 CanLII 2840 \(BC SC\), 27 B.C.L.R. (2d) 45 (S.C.); Rhodes, per Southin J.A., concurring; Cox v. Fleming (1995), 1995 CanLII 3127 \(BC CA\), 15 B.C.L.R. (3d) 201 (C.A.); Mason v. Westside Cemeteries Ltd. (1996), 1996 CanLII 8113 \(ON SC\), 135 D.L.R. (4th) 361

(Ont. C.J. (Gen. Div.)); Flett v. Maxwell, [1996] B.C.J. No. 1455 (QL) (Prov. Ct. (Civ. Div.)), Canadian trial and appellate courts after Hinz v. Berry began to see the requirement of a “recognizable psychiatric illness” as conditioning recovery for mental injury upon the claimant adducing expert testimony verifying a condition recognizable to the expert (e.g. Vanek v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Co. of Canada (1999), 1999 CanLII 2863 \(ON CA\), 48 O.R. (3d) 228 (C.A.), at paras. 65-67; Healey v. Lakeridge Health Corp., 2011 ONCA 55, 103 O.R. (3d) 401; Frazer v. Haukioja, 2010 ONCA 249, 101 O.R. (3d) 528; Kotai v. “Queen of the North” (The), 2009 BCSC 1405, 70 C.C.L.T. (3d) 221; Young v. Borzoni, 2007 BCCA 16, 277 D.L.R. (4th) 685; Graham v. MacMillan, 2003 BCCA 90, 15 C.C.L.T. (3d) 155; Koerfer v. Davies, [1994] O.J. No. 1408 (QL) (C.A.); Duwyn v. Kaprielian (1978), 1978 CanLII 1271 \(ON CA\), 22 O.R. (2d) 736 (C.A.)). Similarly, despite some resistance elsewhere in the Commonwealth to restricting recovery for mental injury to claimants who can adduce such expert psychiatric evidence (N. J. Mullany and P. R. Handford, Tort Liability for Psychiatric Damage (1993), at p. 21), this threshold now prevails in the United Kingdom, Australia, and New Zealand (White, at p. 491; Tame, at paras. 193-94; van Soest v. Residual Health Management Unit, [1999] NZCA 206, [2000] 1 N.Z.L.R. 179, at para. 65).

[29] In sum — and this is the state of the law which this Court must now evaluate — the law developed by Canadian lower courts (albeit, as I have mentioned, on an unstable premise) requires claimants alleging mental injury to show that such injury has manifested itself to an expert in psychiatry in the form of a clinically diagnosed, recognizable psychiatric illness. This has therefore “place[d] the categories of mental and emotional harm for which damages may be recovered in the hands of psychiatry. Whatever that discipline chooses to identify and name as a psychiatric illness becomes the law’s boundaries for damages in this area” (van Soest, at p. 205, per Thomas J., dissenting).

[30] Usually, this has been done with reference to what has been said to represent a “considerable degree of international agreement on the classification of mental disorders and their diagnostic criteria”, which are contained in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (“DSM”), published by the American Psychiatric Association, and the International

Statistical Classification of Diseases and Related Health Problems (“ICD”), published by the World Health Organization (Mulheron, at p. 78, citing Sutherland v. Hatton, [2002] EWCA Civ 76, [2002] 2 All E.R. 1, per Hale L.J. (as she then was); see also Bélanger-Hardy, at p. 586). The DSM, now in its 5th edition (2013), stipulates diagnostic criteria for, and classifies, mental disorders, while the ICD, now in its 10th revision (1992), contains statistically based classifications of all diseases (including “mental and behavioural disorders”).

[31] Confining compensable mental injury to conditions that are identifiable with reference to these diagnostic tools is, however, inherently suspect as a matter of legal methodology. While, for treatment purposes, an accurate diagnosis is obviously important, a trier of fact adjudicating a claim of mental injury is not concerned with diagnosis, but with symptoms and their effects (Mulheron, at p. 88). Put simply, there is no necessary relationship between reasonably foreseeable mental injury and a diagnostic classification scheme. As Thomas J. observed in van Soest (at para. 100), a negligent defendant need only be shown to have foreseen injury, and not a particular psychiatric illness that comes with its own label. In other words, the trier of fact’s inquiry should be directed to the level of harm that the claimant’s particular symptoms represent, not to whether a label could be attached to them. Downloading the task of assessing legally recoverable mental injury to the DSM and ICD therefore imports an arbitrary control mechanism upon recovery for mental injury, conditioning recovery not upon any legally principled basis directed to the alleged injury, but upon conformity with a legally irrelevant classification scheme designed to facilitate identification of particular conditions (L. Bélanger-Hardy, “Thresholds of Actionable Mental Harm in Negligence: A Policy-Based Analysis” (2013), 36 Dal. L.J. 103, at pp. 113-15; Mulheron, at pp. 87-88).

[32] Resort to the DSM or ICD in the context of litigating claims for mental injury has been variously rationalized as fostering objectivity, certainty and predictability of outcomes; and as preventing “indeterminate liability” (Tame, at paras. 193-94; Healey, at para. 65; Queen of the North, at para. 68). These rationalizations, however, do not withstand scrutiny. In particular, the putative objectivity, certainty and predictability said to be furnished by the recognizable psychological illness requirement are in my view overstated. Psychiatric diagnoses — like diagnoses of physical illness or injury — can sometimes be controversial even among treating practitioners (M. A. Jones, “Liability for Psychiatric Damage: Searching for a Path between Pragmatism and Principle”, in J. W. Neyers, E. Chamberlain and S. G. A. Pitel, eds., Emerging Issues in Tort Law (2007), 113, at p. 131). The categories identified in the DSM are, therefore, not static, and continue to be revised to reflect evolving psychiatric consensus on the classification of psychiatric disorders. Labels that were at one time widely accepted may become obsolete. The DSM (DSM-II), for example, identified homosexuality as a psychiatric disorder until 1973, after which it continued to identify “sexual orientation disturbance” for people “in conflict with” their sexual orientation. This was later replaced in the DSM-III with “ego-dystonic homosexuality”, which was itself removed in 1987 (J. Drescher, “Out of DSM: Depathologizing Homosexuality” (2015), 5 Behav. Sci. 565, at p. 571). The ICD retained homosexuality in its classification until 1990, and continues to identify ego-dystonic homosexuality as a recognized condition (although in 2014 the World Health Organization recommended its removal from its 11th revision, now in development) (S. Cochran et al., “Proposed declassification of disease categories related to sexual orientation in the International Statistical Classification of Diseases and Health Related Problems (ICD-11)” (2014), 92 Bull. World Health Organ. 672).

[33] Conversely, potential disorders originally excluded from the DSM may be “legitimized” by later inclusion. For example, “post-traumatic stress disorder” first appeared in the DSM (DSM-III) in 1980. And, with the publication of the DSM-IV, it no longer required “a psychologically traumatic event that is generally outside the range of usual human experience” (Jones, at p. 132). Similarly, the release of the 5th edition of the DSM (DSM-V) was preceded by a debate about the inclusion of grief as a psychiatric condition (R. A. Bryant, “Grief as a psychiatric disorder” (2012), 201 Brit. J. Psychiatry 9, at pp. 9-10). Rather than fostering objectivity, certainty and predictability of outcomes, then, tethering determinations of legal liability to these iterative diagnostic tools relegates the law of negligence to following a sometimes meandering path as it is cleared by the cutting edge of au courant thinking in modern psychiatry — wherever it may lead, or from wherever it may retreat.

[34] The view that a recognizable psychiatric illness requirement is necessary to prevent indeterminate liability, advanced before us by the respondents and the Insurance Bureau of Canada, is similarly untenable. Article 1457 of the Civil Code of Québec imposes a liability rule binding defendants “to make reparation for the injury, whether it be bodily, moral or material in nature” (see, e.g., Augustus v. Gosset, 1996 CanLII 173 \(SCC\), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 268, at para. 27). And yet, our attention has not been drawn to any instances where Quebec courts imposed liability that was in some way “indeterminate”. Further, and as I have explained is the case with unmeritorious or trivial claims for negligently caused mental injury, robust application of the elements of the cause of action of negligence should also be sufficient to address concerns for indeterminate liability. In particular, liability for mental injury must be confined to claims which satisfy the proximity analysis within the duty of care framework, which focuses on the relationship between the parties (Cooper, at para. 30), and the remoteness inquiry, which asks whether “the harm [is] too unrelated to the wrongful conduct to hold the defendant fairly liable” (Mustapha, at para. 12, quoting Linden and Feldthusen, at p. 360). We have been given no reason to suppose that the same sort of constraints which negligence law imposes upon claimants alleging physical injury would be less effective in weeding out unworthy claims for mental injury. It is therefore not only undesirable, but unnecessary to distort negligence law by applying the mechanism of a diagnostic threshold for proving mental injury.

[35] In short, no cogent basis has been offered to this Court for erecting distinct rules which operate to preclude liability in cases of mental injury, but not in cases of physical injury. Indeed, there is good reason to recognize the law of negligence as already according each of these different forms of personal injury — mental and physical — identical treatment. As the Court observed in Mustapha (at para. 8), the distinction between physical and mental injury is “elusive and arguably artificial in the context of tort”. Continuing (and citing Page v. Smith, at p. 188), the Court explained that, “[i]n an age when medical knowledge is expanding fast, and psychiatric knowledge with it, it would not be sensible to commit the law to a distinction between physical and psychiatric injury, which may . . . soon be altogether outmoded. Nothing will be gained by treating them as different ‘kinds’ of personal injury, so as to require the application of different tests in law” (emphasis in original; see also S. Deakin, A. Johnston and B. Markesinis, Markesinis and Deakin's Tort Law (7th ed. 2013), at p. 124). This is entirely consistent with the Court's longstanding view, expressed over a century ago, by Fitzpatrick C.J. in Toronto Railway, at pp. 269-70:

It would appear somewhat difficult to distinguish between the injury caused to the human frame by the impact and that resulting to the nervous system in consequence of the shock The nature of the mysterious relation which exists between the nervous system and the passive tissues of the human body has been the subject of much learned speculation, but I am not aware that the extent to which the one acts and reacts upon the other has yet been definitely ascertained. . . . I cannot find the line of demarcation between the damage resulting to the human [body] . . . and that which may flow from the disturbance of the nervous system The latter may well be the result of a derangement of the relation existing between the bones, the sinews, the arteries and the nerves. In any event the resultant effect is the same. The victim is incapacitated

Or, as Davies J. (as he then was) added in Toronto Railways (at p. 275), “[t]he nervous system is just as much a part of man’s physical being as the muscular or other parts”. In a similar vein, Lord Macmillan, in Bourhill v. Young (at p. 103), said “[t]he distinction between mental shock and bodily injury was never a scientific one, for mental shock is presumably in all cases the result of, or at least accompanied by, some physical disturbance in the sufferer’s system.”

[36] It follows that requiring claimants who allege one form of personal injury (mental) to prove that their condition meets the threshold of “recognizable psychiatric illness”, while not imposing a corresponding requirement upon claimants alleging another form of personal injury (physical) to show that their condition carries a certain classificatory label, is inconsistent with prior statements of this Court, among others. It accords unequal — that is, less — protection to victims of mental injury. And it does so for no principled reason (Beever, at p. 410). I would not endorse it.

[37] None of this is to suggest that mental injury is always as readily demonstrable as physical injury. While allegations of injury to muscular tissue may sometimes pose challenges to triers of fact, many physical conditions such as lacerations and broken bones are objectively verifiable. Mental injury, however, will often not be as readily apparent. Further, and as Mustapha makes clear, mental injury is not proven by the existence of mere psychological upset. While, therefore, tort law protects persons from negligent interference with their mental health, there is no legally cognizable right to happiness. Claimants must, therefore, show much more — that the disturbance suffered by the claimant is “serious and prolonged and rise[s] above the ordinary annoyances, anxieties and fears” that come with living in civil society (Mustapha, at para. 9). To be clear, this does not denote distinct legal treatment of mental injury relative to physical injury; rather, it goes to the prior legal question of what constitutes “mental injury”. Ultimately, the claimant’s task in establishing a mental injury is to show the requisite degree of disturbance (although not, as the respondents say, to show its classification as a recognized psychiatric illness).

[38] Nor should any of this be taken as suggesting that expert evidence cannot assist in determining whether or not a mental injury has been shown. In assessing whether the claimant has succeeded, it will often be important to consider, for example, how seriously the claimant’s cognitive functions and participation in daily activities were impaired, the length of such impairment and the nature and effect of any treatment (Mulheron, at p. 109). To the extent that claimants do not adduce relevant expert evidence to assist triers of fact in applying these and any other relevant considerations, they run a risk of being found to have fallen short. As Thomas J. observed in van Soest (at para. 103), “[c]ourts can be informed by the expert opinion of modern medical knowledge”, “without needing to address the question whether the mental suffering is a recognisable psychiatric illness or not”. To be clear, however: while relevant expert evidence will often be helpful in determining whether the claimant has proven a mental injury, it is not required as a matter of law. Where a psychiatric diagnosis is unavailable, it remains open to a trier of fact to find on other evidence adduced by the claimant that he or she has proven on a balance of probabilities the occurrence of mental injury. And, of course, it also remains open to the defendant, in rebutting a claim, to call expert evidence establishing that the accident cannot have caused any mental injury, or at least any mental injury known to psychiatry. While, for the reasons I have given, the lack of a diagnosis cannot on its own be dispositive, it is something that the trier of fact can choose to weigh against evidence supporting the existence of a mental injury.

[39] The trial judge found that the accident caused the appellant to suffer “psychological injuries, including personality change and cognitive difficulties” (para. 50) such as slowed speech, leading to a deterioration of his close personal relationships with his family and friends. He remarked (at para. 65) that the appellant “was a changed man with his irritability likely reflecting a dark realization that he was not the man he once was”. These findings have not been challenged. And, as findings of fact, they are entitled to appellate deference, absent palpable and overriding error (Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235, at para. 10).

[40] I see no legal error in the trial judge’s treatment of the evidence of the appellant’s symptoms as supporting a finding of mental injury. Those symptoms fit well within the Mustapha parameters of mental injury which I have already recounted. While there was no expert testimony associating them with a condition identified in the DSM or ICD, I reiterate that what matters is substance — meaning, those symptoms — and not the label. And, the evidence accepted by the trial judge clearly showed a serious and prolonged disruption that transcended ordinary emotional upset or distress.

IV. Conclusion and Disposition

[41] I would allow the appeal, with costs in this Court and in the courts below.

[42] The respondents seek to have the matter returned to the Court of Appeal for determination of their alternative grounds of appeal before that court — that the trial judge erred in finding that the mental injury caused by the accident was indivisible from any injury arising from the third accident; and that the damage award was excessive. I would, instead, restore the trial judge’s award.

[43] The (in)divisibility of two injuries is a question of fact (Bradley, at paras. 32 and 37). Here, the trial judge found that “the cause of the change to the plaintiff’s personality and his cognitive difficulties cannot be divided based on the events before and after September 17, 2005” (para. 58). That finding, which was open to him to make on this record, is entitled to deference.

The respondents now argue that the Workers Compensation Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 492, “serves to sever the case even in the context of an indivisible injury”, “because the [Act] creates a complete scheme and bars compensation” (transcript, at p. 82). This argument, based on an interpretation of s. 10 of the Workers Compensation Act, was made briefly in oral argument at trial (see R.R., vol. I, at pp. 253-54), but did not appear in their written submissions. While this argument appears to have found support in Pinch v. Hofstee, 2015 BCSC 1888, it was not dealt with by the trial judge in this case. For whatever reason, the respondents did not raise it at the Court of Appeal or in their factum filed at this Court. It was revived only in their oral submissions before us. Without endorsing or rejecting the reasoning in Pinch, I observe that, without full submissions and a pertinent lower court record, this is not an appropriate circumstance to decide the effect of workers’ compensation legislation on the divisibility of injuries.

[44] As to the quantum of the award, I note that both accidents at the root of this appeal occurred nearly 12 years ago, and that the litigation — in which the respondents have admitted liability — is now (as of this month) fully 10 years old. Further, the modest award in this case is not out of step with non-pecuniary damage awards from British Columbia courts for injuries causing personality changes and cognitive difficulties with similar consequences upon the plaintiff’s enjoyment of life (e.g. Zawadzki v. Calimoso, 2011 BCSC 45).

[45] The Court’s power to remand to a court of appeal is discretionary (Supreme Court Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-26, s. 46.1; Wells v. Newfoundland, 1999 CanLII 657 (SCC), [1999] 3 S.C.R. 199, at para. 68). The passage of time since the acknowledged wrong against Mr. Saadati and the commencement of these proceedings militates against remand. As in Wells, the damages assessed by the trial judge are reasonable, supported by the record, and fairly compensate the appellant’s loss. I conclude, therefore, that it would not “be just in the circumstances” (s. 46.1) to remand this matter to the Court of Appeal.

Appeal allowed with costs throughout.

Solicitors for the appellant: Preszler Law, Vancouver.

Solicitor for the respondents: Intact Insurance Company, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the intervener: Stikeman Elliott, Toronto.

[1] Legal nomenclature describes this kind of injury variously: for example, as “nervous shock” (see L. N. Klar, Tort Law (5th ed. 2012), at p. 498); or “mental injury” (see Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 114; L. Bélanger-Hardy, “Reconsidering the ‘Recognizable Psychiatric Illness’ Requirement in Canadian Negligence Law” (2013), 38 Queen’s L.J. 583, at p. 586); or “psychological injury” (see Bélanger-Hardy, at p. 584); or “psychiatric damage” (A. M. Linden and B. Feldthusen, Canadian Tort Law (10th ed. 2015), at p. 447), or “psychiatric injury” (Mustapha). For his part, the trial judge employed the term “psychological injury”, while the Court of Appeal referred to “psychiatric or psychological illness”. While there may be meaningful distinctions among these terms within the relevant disciplines, for the purpose of deciding the general bounds of recoverability in law, no legal significance attaches to the particular term used. For the sake of clarity, however, I refer to the injury alleged here as “mental injury”.

TAB 45

TAB 46

R. v. Tsekouras, 2017 ONCA 290 (CanLII)

Source: Court of Appeal for Ontario
Date: 2017-04-11
File number: C60103
Other citations: 353 CCC (3d) 349 — 139 WCB (2d) 144 —
378 CRR (2d) 243 — [2017] OJ No 1768 (QL)
Citation: R. v. Tsekouras, 2017 ONCA 290 (CanLII), <<https://canlii.ca/t/h34nj>>, retrieved on 2026-03-23

COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

CITATION: R. v. Tsekouras, 2017 ONCA 290
DATE: 20170411
DOCKET: C60103

Strathy C.J.O., Weiler and Watt JJ.A.

BETWEEN

Her Majesty the Queen

Respondent

and

John Tsekouras

Appellant

Joseph S. Wilkinson, for the appellant

Stephen Dawson, for the Crown

Heard: September 6-7, 2016

On appeal from the conviction entered on March 5, 2015 by Justice John deP. Wright of the Superior Court of Justice, sitting without a jury, with reasons reported at 2015 ONSC 1470.

Watt J.A.:

[1] Project Dolphin was in its final few days. But some unfinished business remained. Searches. Seizures. Arrests. The dismantling of a drug trafficking enterprise.

[2] On takedown day investigators coordinated their activities. Searches, seizures and arrests were to take place simultaneously.

[3] For some time, police had suspected John Tsekouras was the person in charge of this organization. But their suspicions fell short of what was required to arrest Tsekouras. So investigators watched John Tsekouras. Very closely. What he did. Where he went. Whom he met. To whom he spoke.

[4] When John Tsekouras took some documents out of one vehicle and put them into another, investigators changed their minds. No more surveillance. It was time to make an arrest.

[5] John Tsekouras had his Blackberry in his hand. An officer approached Tsekouras. Gun drawn, but pointed downward. Tsekouras took the battery out of his Blackberry and threw the device when ordered to the ground by the officer.

[6] The reasons for the arrest are not entirely clear. Perhaps, it was for attempting to obstruct justice. Or maybe it was for possession of the proceeds of crime. What is clear is that John Tsekouras did not remain under arrest for long. A senior officer arrived and directed that Tsekouras be released immediately and unconditionally. And so John Tsekouras went on his way.

[7] Among the things taken from John Tsekouras incidental to his arrest were two Blackberry devices. Neither the one he had thrown down, nor the other one seized from his vehicle, were returned. Police told John Tsekouras that they wanted to search the Blackberry devices. And depending on what investigators found during their search, they told Tsekouras, the charge on which he had been arrested and released may be "revisited".

[8] A few months later, police did search the contents of the Blackberry Tsekouras had thrown to the ground. What they found became a critical part of the case against Tsekouras at his trial on several preliminary and substantive drug offences. And the authority relied upon to harvest the contents of the Blackberry became a central focus of the trial and the appeal to this court from convictions that were entered at trial.

[9] These reasons explain why I would dismiss John Tsekouras' appeal despite the investigative missteps made in the collection of this evidence adduced at trial.

THE BACKGROUND FACTS

[10] The grounds of appeal advanced do not command protracted reference to the evidence adduced at trial. However, what is required is a review of the manner in which the evidentiary cornucopia located in the Blackberry was collected by investigators.

Project Dolphin

[11] Project Dolphin was a joint forces investigation into drug trafficking in Thunder Bay and elsewhere in Canada. The police services involved included the Royal Canadian Mounted Police ("RCMP"), the Ontario Provincial Police ("OPP"), and the Thunder Bay Police Service ("TBPS").

[12] The targets of Project Dolphin included John Tsekouras, Frank Muzzi and Salvatore Larizza. The drugs involved were marijuana and cocaine. In the course of the investigation, police also seized oxycodone. The RCMP was conducting a joint proceeds of crime investigation.

[13] The principal transactions with which the investigators were concerned were the planned purchase of two kilograms of cocaine by Tsekouras and Keith Ritchie from a person known as "Penguin" and 18 pounds of marijuana and one kilogram of cocaine left by Frank Muzzi in Salvatore Larizza's garage with Larizza's agreement.

The Case for the Crown

[14] The case for the Crown at trial included evidence of:

- i. messages found on Tsekouras' Blackberry seized incident to his arrest and retained by police after his unconditional release without formal charge;
- ii. the hearsay statement of Salvatore Larizza admitted under the principled exception to the hearsay rule after Larizza's death prior to trial; and
- iii. the guilty plea and accompanying agreed statement of facts on which it was based in the prosecution of Frank Muzzi.

Takedown Day

[15] The investigative plan for takedown day for Project Dolphin included the execution of warranted searches, the seizures of controlled substances and related paraphernalia and the arrests of some of the participants in the drug trafficking enterprise.

[16] The investigative plan for takedown day for John Tsekouras consisted of surveillance of Tsekouras and his family contemporaneously with searches of several properties with which Tsekouras was associated. The simple fact was that police lacked reasonable grounds to arrest Tsekouras, although they suspected he was the head of the drug trafficking organization they were investigating.

The Arrest of John Tsekouras

[17] When surveillance officers saw John Tsekouras remove a box of papers from one parked vehicle and put it into another occupied by some of his family members, they decided to stop him.

[18] A police officer approached Tsekouras on foot, his gun drawn but pointed downward and at his side. Tsekouras had a Blackberry in his hand. As the officer approached, he told Tsekouras to get down on the ground. Tsekouras took the battery out of his Blackberry and threw it on the ground. As the officer took Tsekouras to the ground, Tsekouras threw his Blackberry on the ground.

[19] The officer arrested Tsekouras. Incidental to the arrest, officers seized the Blackberry on the ground; a second Blackberry from Tsekouras' vehicle; and two amounts of cash.

[20] A few moments later, one of the senior investigating officers arrived at the scene of Tsekouras' arrest. He directed that Tsekouras be released unconditionally. And this was done.

The Blackberry is Retained

[21] Despite Tsekouras' unconditional release, police kept the Blackberry seized incident to his arrest. They also kept the second Blackberry seized on the same basis from Tsekouras' vehicle.

[22] A police officer told Tsekouras that they (the police) would be keeping both Blackberrys to examine them. If they found any evidence during their examination, the officer told Tsekouras they (the police) would "revisit" the obstruct justice charge.

The Initial Examination of the Blackberry

[23] An officer of the TBPS attempted to examine Tsekouras' Blackberry. The device was locked and password protected. The officer lacked the capacity to examine the Blackberry.

[24] The Blackberry that was seized from Tsekouras' vehicle was not password protected. A review of the contents by TBPS revealed nothing relevant for the purposes of the investigation. No further mention need be made of this phone.

The Request for Further Examination

[25] The password protected Blackberry seized from Tsekouras was one of several electronic devices officers of TBPS had seized on takedown day. They wanted these devices examined, their data harvested and an analysis conducted. Since TBPS lacked the capacity to gain access to and analyze the data on the locked devices, these devices were sent to the RCMP laboratory to open the encryption and to recover the documents.

[26] The RCMP laboratory required completion of a form to accompany any device sent to their lab for examination and analysis. Among other things, the form required the submitting police agency to state the legal authority for the examination and analysis sought. Search warrants accompanied every device but one – the Blackberry of John Tsekouras.

[27] The authority relied upon to permit the examination and analysis of Tsekouras' Blackberry was a decision of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice. This authority – R. v. McTavish (8 December 2010), CR-09-00003591-00 (Ont. S.C.J.) – was said to permit examination and analysis of the contents of an electronic device seized as incident to an arrest. On the Charter application to exclude the evidence, it was agreed that this decision did not authorize the search.

[28] Over the next several months, the RCMP laboratory proceeded to decrypt the device and harvest its contents as requested by TBPS.

The Larizza Defection

[29] Salvatore Larizza was in a tight spot. Project Dolphin investigators had searched his garage. There, they found 18 pounds of marijuana and 1 kilogram of cocaine. He was charged with several drug offences, but released from custody. The conditions on which Larizza had been released included house arrest, a term that chafed on him.

[30] Larizza along with his counsel approached Project Dolphin investigators. Larizza had decided to cooperate with the investigators. About six months after takedown day, he provided a KGB statement that implicated Muzzi in delivery of the drugs found in his (Larizza's) garage. The delivery occurred the night before takedown day.

[31] As a result of Larizza's statement, Frank Muzzi was arrested on several charges arising out of the seizure made at Larizza's garage.

[32] The Crown consented to the variation Larizza requested in his release terms after the KGB statement had been completed.

The Data Return

[33] A month after Larizza's KGB statement, about seven months after takedown day, TBPS received the data the RCMP had harvested from Tsekouras' Blackberry. An officer, whose task it had been to prepare informations to obtain (ITOs) for the search warrants for Project Dolphin, discovered that no warrant had accompanied Tsekouras' Blackberry when it had been sent to the RCMP lab.

[34] Analysis of the data sent to TBPS was suspended until a search warrant could be obtained. The purpose of the warrant was to authorize a re-search of the Blackberry and a second harvest of its data. But this could not be done because of the effect of the first search on the Blackberry.

[35] TBPS continued their analysis of the original data from the Blackberry. Two months later, they completed their task.

The Reports to a Justice

[36] About one month after the initial seizure of Tsekouras' Blackberry, an officer from TBPS completed a Report to a Justice in Form 5.2 as required by s. 489.1 of the Criminal Code. In accordance with what was then the practice in Thunder Bay, the officer put the report in the Court Services mail slot to be sent to the offices of the justice of the peace for signature. About 90 days later, and periodically thereafter, the officer sent applications for further detention as required by s. 490(2) of the Criminal Code. He forwarded these applications in the same manner by leaving them in the Court Services mail slot for delivery to a justice of the peace.

[37] The officer who completed the applications for further detention under s. 490(2) was unaware of the notice requirement in the section. No notice was given to John Tsekouras on any of the three occasions on which the extensions were sought. The officer was also unaware that a search warrant had been issued later for Tsekouras' Blackberry.

[38] About 18 months later, investigators found out that 49 Reports to a Justice required for Project Dolphin searches never reached a justice of the peace. These reports were never signed.

The Arrest of John Tsekouras

[39] About ten months after takedown day, police arrested John Tsekouras on several drug charges arising out of the Project Dolphin investigation.

Frank Muzzi Pleads Guilty

[40] Almost 18 months after takedown day, Frank Muzzi pleaded to four counts on an indictment including conspiracy to traffic in cocaine and in marijuana. One of the counts was in connection with the drugs he had left in Larizza's garage the night before the takedown.

[41] The basis upon which Muzzi entered his guilty pleas included:

- i. an agreed statement of facts; and
- ii. a portion of Larizza's KGB statement that Muzzi acknowledged was correct.

[42] Frank Muzzi received an agreed-upon sentence. Charges against his mother and sister were withdrawn. The Crown agreed Frank Muzzi would not be called as a witness for the Crown at any co-conspirators' trial.

The Trial Proceedings

[43] At John Tsekouras' trial, the Crown proposed to tender evidence of the results of the search of Tsekouras' Blackberry, of Larizza's KGB statement; and of Muzzi's guilty plea and the statement of facts on which the guilty plea and conviction were based. Each attracted objection from trial counsel (who is also counsel on appeal) and was the subject of a pre-trial admissibility ruling.

[44] The trial judge made several rulings as each pre-trial application concluded.

[45] He rejected the trial Crown's contention that Tsekouras had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the contents of the Blackberry because he had thrown it down, thus discarding it, immediately before or on arrest.

[46] The trial judge found the warrantless search of Tsekouras' Blackberry infringed s. 8 of the Charter, but admitted the evidence obtained in the search under s. 24(2). He also admitted Larizza's KGB statement and Muzzi's guilty plea and its factual underpinnings under the principled exception to the hearsay rule.

[47] John Tsekouras did not testify or call any defence evidence in response to the case for the Crown.

THE GROUNDS OF APPEAL

[48] John Tsekouras ("the appellant") advances five grounds of appeal. Four relate to evidentiary rulings made by the trial judge. The fifth challenges the reasonableness of some of the convictions.

[49] The appellant says that the trial judge erred in admitting as evidence:

- i. the contents extracted from the appellant's Blackberry seized and examined without warrant;
- ii. the hearsay statement of Sal Larizza;
- iii. the statement of fact filed and relied upon in the guilty plea proceedings of Frank Muzzi; and
- iv. the hearsay statements of Larizza and Muzzi under the co-conspirators' exception to the hearsay rule.

[50] The appellant also argues that the convictions entered on four counts of preliminary and substantive crimes relating to cocaine are unreasonable.

Ground #1: The Admissibility of the Blackberry Evidence

[51] For all practical purposes, this ground of appeal reduces to a claim that the trial judge, having correctly found breaches of s. 8 of the Charter in the warrantless search and wrongful detention of the appellant's Blackberry, erred in failing to exclude the contents recovered from the Blackberry under s. 24(2).

[52] The circumstances in which the appellant's Blackberry was seized, detained and its contents harvested have already been canvassed. No useful purpose would be served by a further recital of them. However, to provide some background for the arguments advanced, it is worthwhile to record the essential features of the trial judge's s. 24(2) analysis before turning to the attacks marshalled against them.

The Ruling of the Trial Judge

[53] The trial judge's analysis under s. 24(2) was premised on three discrete, but related breaches of s. 8 of the Charter:

- i. the warrantless search of the Blackberry;
- ii. the unauthorized seizure of the contents of the Blackberry; and
- iii. the unlawful detention of the Blackberry in breach of ss. 489.1 and 490 of the Criminal Code.

[54] In his admissibility analysis under s. 24(2), the trial judge considered the three lines of inquiry mandated by R. v. Grant, 2009 SCC 32, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 353. He characterized the first line of inquiry – the seriousness of the breach – as a potential "tiebreaker in what is essentially a contest between [the second and third lines of inquiry]".

[55] In his assessment of the seriousness of the Charter infringement, the trial judge found that investigators did not ignore the necessity for warrants in this major crime investigation. They made a mistake, however, in connection with the appellant's Blackberry and, on realizing their mistake, immediately sought and obtained a warrant. Similarly, the failure to obtain orders under ss. 489.1 and 490 was not the fault of Project Dolphin investigators, rather it was "ultimately the fault of another branch of the justice system". The failure to obtain the orders arose from carelessness, not bad faith or recklessness.

[56] The trial judge acknowledged that the impact of the breach on the Charter-protected interests of the appellant was significant in light of the enhanced privacy interest associated with such devices. That said, the trial judge concluded that the impact of the breach on the Charter-protected interests of the appellant was mitigated by several factors:

- i. the uncertain state of the law about the need for a warrant to search cellphones at the time the search was conducted;
- ii. the fact that the appellant was advised when released unconditionally that his phone might be searched but took no steps to retrieve it;
- iii. the fact that a warrant was subsequently obtained, which indicated not only that it would have been granted had it been sought earlier, but also that it belied any deliberate, reckless or negligent conduct on behalf of anyone to violate the Charter; and
- iv. the fact that the officer who sent the Blackberry to the RCMP to extract the data made reasonable inquiries about search authority and was provided with a response that was wrong through carelessness rather than unacceptable negligence or recklessness.

[57] The trial judge concluded that the third line of inquiry under Grant favoured admission of the evidence which consisted of the actual messages sent and received on the appellant's Blackberry. This was real evidence of a high degree of reliability, which was crucial to the case for the Crown.

[58] In the final analysis, the trial judge was satisfied that the Grant lines of inquiry favoured admissibility of the messages recovered from the appellant's Blackberry.

The Arguments on Appeal

[59] The appellant takes no issue with the findings of constitutional infringement made by the trial judge. A warrantless search of the Blackberry and seizure of its data and the unlawful detention of the Blackberry, which amounted to a further breach of s. 8. But, the appellant says, the trial judge erred in his section 24(2) analysis. Properly conducted, that analysis would have resulted in exclusion of the Blackberry evidence, the result which should follow here.

[60] The appellant says that the trial judge erred in his overall approach to s. 24(2). The first line of inquiry cannot be fairly described as a "tiebreaker", the role assigned to it by the trial judge, between the second and third lines of inquiry. The first two lines of inquiry favour exclusion; the third, admission of the evidence. But all are of equal importance and are to be balanced together. What is more, the trial judge failed to properly characterize the seriousness of the Charter violation and considered factors relevant to the seriousness of the Charter-infringing state conduct when assessing the impact of the breach on the Charter-protected interests of the appellant.

[61] The appellant also alleges the trial judge made several specific errors in his s. 24(2) analysis. He erred in characterizing the Blackberry evidence as "crucial" for the Crown's case. The Crown had available to it viva voce evidence from two co-conspirators, one awaiting trial in separate proceedings (Ritchie) and another (Muzzi) already convicted and sentenced on the basis of a joint submission. In addition, the trial judge was wrong in minimizing the seriousness of the Charter breach on the basis that the law on cellphone searches was in a state of flux at the time the Blackberry was searched. Investigators knew that a search warrant was required. A warrant accompanied every device except the appellant's Blackberry. Their reliance on R. v. McTavish was unreasonable and reflected bad faith in the face of obvious knowledge of the need for a warrant. The trial judge committed a further error in finding comfort from the fact that there were grounds to get a warrant. The existence of grounds – while relevant to the seriousness of the state conduct – does not affect the significance of the invasion of the appellant's privacy rights.

[62] In connection with the reporting requirements of s. 489.1 and those of s. 490 concerning retention of seized items, the appellant says that the trial judge made further errors:

- i. in finding good faith in attempted compliance with ss. 489.1 and 490 by simply leaving the Reports to a Justice in a Court Services mail slot and failing to follow up about receipt;
- ii. in failing to find that non-compliance with the notice requirements of s. 490(2) was based on plain ignorance of the statutory requirements, or at best, unacceptable negligence; and
- iii. in reversing the burden imposed by s. 490(2) by considering as mitigation of the failure to give notice, the appellant's failure to seek the return of his Blackberry.

[63] According to the appellant, a proper application of the lines of inquiry mandated by Grant would yield a result contrary to the ruling admitting the evidence made at trial.

[64] The violations were serious. The arrest was arbitrary, thus could not ground a lawful seizure of the Blackberry incident to arrest, much less a subsequent search, intentionally done without a warrant. The search could not comply with the requirements set out by the Supreme Court of Canada for searches of cell phones incident to arrest in R. v. Fearon, 2014 SCC 77, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 621.

[65] The appellant says the unconstitutional conduct of the authorities had a significant impact on his Charter-protected interests. He had a high expectation of privacy in the information contained in the Blackberry, an interest that continued without proper judicial supervision for a period of 10 months. This detention was the result of serious systemic failures on the part of TBPS investigators, failures that were not mitigated by the belated attempt to regularize unconstitutional conduct by the subsequent issue of a search warrant.

[66] Exclusion of this evidence, the appellant continues, requires that acquittals be substituted for the convictions entered at trial. Without the evidence provided by search of the Blackberry, the convictions would be unreasonable. To order a new trial would permit the Crown to reverse a tactical decision it made at the first trial and to attempt to establish guilt on an evidentiary basis available but not pursued at first instance. The prevailing jurisprudence does not permit the Crown to do so.

[67] The respondent does not take issue with the findings of constitutional infringement made by the trial judge, but resists any suggestion of legal error or palpable or overriding errors of fact in the trial judge's s. 24(2) analysis, or in his conclusion to admit the evidence harvested from the appellant's Blackberry.

[68] At the outset, the respondent reminds us that we must begin from a stance of deference to the findings of fact made by the trial judge, absent palpable and overriding error in connection with those findings. We should approach the appellant's complaints with caution because, in the main, they are grounded on a set of facts that the appellant wishes the trial judge had found, rather than those that he did find.

[69] The respondent says that the trial judge did not treat any single factor or line of inquiry under Grant as a first among equals or as dispositive of the issue of admissibility. What is more, no overarching rule mandates how to balance the lines of inquiry or Grant factors. The trial judge's reference to the absence of an automatic rule of exclusion upon proof of constitutional infringement reflects existing jurisprudence and does not constitute error. His misplace of the seriousness of police misconduct when considering the impact of that misconduct on the Charter-protected interests of the appellant is at best a venial error that would not affect the ultimate conclusion.

[70] According to the respondent, the trial judge's characterization of the law relating to the search of cellphones as uncertain was accurate. At the time of trial, neither this court nor the Supreme Court of Canada had issued any definitive pronouncement describing the legal authority required to search a cellphone or similar electronic device. It follows, the respondent continues, that the failure to obtain a warrant could properly be attributed to legal uncertainty, rather than an intentional, reckless or negligent disregard for the appellant's Charter rights.

[71] The respondent submits that the existence of grounds to obtain a search warrant, as demonstrated by the warrant subsequently issued, was properly considered a factor that mitigated the seriousness of the police conduct in this case.

[72] As for the breaches of ss. 489.1 and 490, the respondent takes issue with the appellant's submission that the trial judge imposed an obligation on the appellant to apply for the return of his Blackberry. Fairly read, the reasons of the trial judge do not support the appellant's claim. Rather, his reference to the appellant not seeking the return of his Blackberry was just one factor in the totality of the circumstances that the trial judge considered. The trial judge properly characterized the nature of the breach and its impact on the admissibility determination.

[73] The respondent contends that the trial judge properly described the evidence from the Blackberry as "crucial" to the case for the Crown. It was not rendered less crucial because of the existence of compellable co-conspirators. The problems associated with calling such witnesses are notorious.

[74] In the end, the respondent says, the trial judge got it right. This evidence was properly admitted at trial.

The Governing Principles

[75] Section 24(2) of the Charter is an admissibility rule. It determines whether evidence obtained in a constitutionally impermissible manner will make its way into a criminal trial for the use of the trier of fact or be denied entry. The section not only recognizes that the admission of constitutionally tainted evidence and its use to demonstrate guilt may bring the administration of justice into disrepute, but also that exclusion of the evidence can equally bring the administration of justice into disrepute: R. v. McGuffie, 2016 ONCA 365, 336 C.C.C. (3d) 486, at para. 60.

[76] We determine the admissibility of constitutionally tainted evidence under s. 24(2) by considering all the circumstances and pursuing three lines of inquiry. We examine:

- the seriousness of the Charter-infringing state conduct;
- the impact of the breach on the Charter-protected interests of the accused; and
- society's interest in an adjudication on the merits.

See, Grant, at paras. 71-86.

[77] In this case, the parties occupy common ground about the fact of constitutional infringement and that evidence harvested from the appellant's Blackberry was obtained in a constitutionally impermissible manner. But they part company on the seriousness of the Charter-infringing state conduct; the impact of that conduct on the appellant's Charter-protected interests; and on the result that should follow from the pursuit of those lines of inquiry in this case.

[78] The three lines of inquiry to be followed under Grant entail not only findings of fact, but also the weighing of various interests frequently at odds with one another: McGuffie, at para. 64. The trial judge's role in the s. 24(2) application made at trial was to balance the assessments under each of the three Grant lines of inquiry to determine whether, considering all the circumstances, admission of the evidence would bring the administration of justice into disrepute: Grant, at para. 71.

[79] The trial judge found two infringements of s. 8 of the Charter, one of which yielded evidence that the Crown tendered for admission at trial. The infringements were:

- i. the non-warranted search of the appellant's Blackberry and harvesting of its contents for use as evidence; and
- ii. the detention of the Blackberry without the supervision required under s. 489.1 and notice to the appellant under s. 490(2).

[80] Before turning to the principles that govern the Grant lines of inquiry and the standard of review that we are to apply when invited to scrutinize a trial judge's application of them, it is worthwhile to begin with a brief examination of the authority to conduct a search of a Blackberry or similar electronic device and the obligations of seizing authorities to ensure post-seizure supervision of detained items.

The Authority to Search the Blackberry

[81] I discuss first, the authority to search a Blackberry or similar device seized incident to arrest.

[82] The appellant's initial arrest and the seizure of his Blackberry incident to arrest took place in 2011. The subsequent extraction of its data took place in 2011 and 2012. The trial judge's s. 24(2) ruling was released on October 20, 2014, nearly two months before the Supreme Court of Canada released its decision in Fearon about the availability of the power to search incident to arrest as an authority to permit the search of cellphones and similar devices taken from a suspect.

[83] Several points of significance to the trial judge's determination of the seriousness of the Charter-infringing state conduct and its impact on the appellant's Charter-protected interests emerge from the decision in Fearon.

[84] First, the Fearon court pointed out that in 2014 Canadian courts had not provided a consistent response to the question of whether the power of search incident to arrest permitted the search of cellphones and similar devices found on the suspect. At least four approaches had emerged: Fearon, at para. 2. If the law lacked consistency in 2014, it is a reasonable inference that it was equally unsettled, if not more so, in 2011.

[85] Second, a cellphone may be searched incident to arrest, provided what is searched and how the search is conducted are strictly incidental to the arrest and the police keep detailed notes of what has been searched and why: Fearon, at para. 4.

[86] Third, the power to search incident to arrest is a focused power assigned to police so that they can pursue their investigations promptly upon arrest. But the authority is not without its limits. The search must be truly incidental to the arrest, that is to say, exercised in the pursuit of a valid purpose related to the proper administration of justice: Fearon, at paras. 16 and 21.

[87] Fourth, a search is properly incidental to arrest when the police attempt to achieve some valid purpose connected to the arrest, such as protecting evidence from destruction by the arrested person or others, or discovering evidence. If the purpose of the search is the discovery of evidence, there must be some reasonable prospect of finding evidence of the offence for which the accused is being arrested: Fearon, at para. 22; R. v. Caslake, 1998 CanLII 838 (SCC), [1998]

1 S.C.R. 51, at paras. 19-25. What matters is that there be a link between the location and purpose of the search and the grounds for the arrest: Fearon, at para. 25; R. v. Nolet, 2010 SCC 24, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 851, at para. 49.

[88] The Fearon court recognized that some modification of the common law search incident to arrest power was necessary when the object to be searched was a cellphone or similar device. After all, searches of these devices have the potential to be a much more significant invasion of privacy than the typical search incident to arrest of pockets, purses, briefcases and motor vehicles: Fearon, at para. 58. Something more than the requirements of a lawful arrest and a search that is at once truly incidental to the arrest and reasonably conducted is essential to further protect a suspect against the risk of wholesale invasion of privacy: Fearon, at para. 58.

[89] The Fearon court made it clear that nothing short of strict adherence to the requirement that a search incident to arrest be truly incidental to the arrest would be tolerated where the object to be searched was a cellphone or similar device. The searches must be done promptly to effectively serve their purpose, such as the discovery of evidence: Fearon, at para. 75. To give effect to this approach, the court modified the general rules applicable to searches incident to arrest in three ways.

[90] First, the scope of the search. The scope of the search of a cellphone or similar device incident to arrest must be tailored to the purpose for which it may lawfully be conducted. Not only the nature, but also the extent of the search performed on the cellphone or similar device must be truly incidental to the particular arrest for the particular offence. And so it is, at least as a general rule, that only recently sent or drafted emails, texts, photos and the call log may be examined. The reason is simple: only those sorts of items will have the necessary degree of connectedness to the purposes for which prompt examination of the device is authorized: Fearon, at para. 76. Investigators must be able to explain, within the limited purposes of search incident to arrest or with reference to some other valid purpose, what they searched and why they did so: Caslake, at para. 25.

[91] From this modification of the general rule relating to searches incident to arrest, it necessarily follows that this search authority is not a blank cheque for investigators to forage in the device unbounded. For example, to search or download its entire contents: Fearon, at para. 78.

[92] Second, searches to discover evidence. Cellphone searches incident to arrest are not routinely permitted simply for the purpose of discovering additional evidence. A cellphone or similar device search incident to arrest for the purpose of discovering evidence is only a valid law enforcement objective when the investigation will be stymied or significantly hampered without the ability to search the device incident to arrest. Investigators must be able to explain why it was not practical, in all the circumstances of the investigation, to postpone the search until they could obtain a warrant: Fearon, at para. 80.

[93] Third, a record of the search. Officers executing the search must make detailed notes of what they have examined on the device and how it was searched. The applications searched, the extent and time of the search. Its purpose and duration. See, Fearon, at para. 82.

[94] From Fearon we also learn that police are not entitled to navigate through unsettled areas of the law by following the least burdensome route. As a general rule, faced with genuine uncertainty, police should err on the side of caution by settling on a course of action that is more, rather than less respectful of the accused's privacy rights: Fearon, at para. 94.

Post-Seizure Supervision

[95] Section 489.1(1) applies to seizures made by peace officers as a result of searches incident to arrest: R. v. Backhouse (2005), 2005 CanLII 4937 \(ON CA\), 194 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.), at paras. 112-113. Where the thing seized is not being returned to the person lawfully entitled to possess it, s. 489.1(1)(b)(ii) requires the seizing officer, as soon as it is practicable to do so, to report to a justice that she or he has seized something and is detaining it to be dealt with by the justice under s. 490(1).

[96] The Report to a Justice must be in a statutory form – Form 5.2. This form must describe the authority under which the seizure was made; the thing that was seized; and where, how or where applicable by whom it is being detained. The officer who files the report must date and sign it.

[97] The reporting requirement of s. 489.1(1)(b)(ii) provides a link to s. 490(1) and ensures long-term post-seizure supervision of the things seized by a judicial officer: R. v. Garcia-Machado, 2015 ONCA 569, 327 C.C.C. (3d) 215, at paras. 15-16; Backhouse, at para. 112.

[98] Failure to file a Report to a Justice in Form 5.2 means that no post-seizure supervision of the thing seized will take place: Garcia-Machado, at para. 16. But failure to file a Report to a Justice as soon as practicable after a thing has been seized also has a constitutional dimension: the continued detention constitutes a breach of s. 8 of the Charter: Garcia-Machado, at paras. 44-48.

[99] Neither section 489.1 nor Form 5.2 has anything to say about how the report is to be provided to a justice. The Report requires the signature of the peace officer who submits it, but does not require or provide space for a justice to sign the report to acknowledge its receipt, endorse a disposition or advise the submitting officer of either event.

[100] Section 490 governs extended detention of seized items. Section 490(2) requires notice to the person from whom a thing has been seized if the thing has been detained more than three months from the date of seizure. Neither the section nor any other Code provision prescribes a form for the notice, although s. 490(2)(a) describes the procedure as a "summary application". But one thing is clear: while the provision provides the opportunity, no obligation is imposed upon the person from whom the thing was seized to take any steps for its recovery.

[101] In Garcia-Machado, this court left for another day whether any breach of s. 490, even one that had no real impact on the judicial oversight contemplated by the provision, would amount to a breach of s. 8 of the Charter. Garcia-Machado, at para. 55.

The Grant Lines of Inquiry

[102] Section 24(2) of the Charter requires that the admissibility of constitutionally-tainted evidence be determined on the basis of all the circumstances. The test, broad and imprecise (Grant, at para. 60), requires a trial judge to assess and balance the effect of admitting the evidence on societal confidence in the justice system. The focus of s. 24(2) is long-term, prospective and societal: Grant, at paras. 67-71.

[103] The admissibility determination under s. 24(2) involves a balancing of assessments under each of the three lines of inquiry:

- i. the seriousness of the Charter-infringing state conduct;
- ii. the impact of the breach on the Charter-protected interests of the accused; and
- iii. society's interest in the adjudication of the case on its merits.

See, Grant, at para. 71.

[104] The first two inquiries operate in tandem. Both pull toward exclusion of constitutionally-tainted evidence. When the state's Charter-infringing conduct becomes more serious and the impact of it on the Charter-protected interests of the accused becomes greater, the synergistic effect of their combination strengthens the pull for and towards exclusion: McGuffie, at para. 62.

[105] The third line of inquiry – society's interest in the adjudication of the merits – is contraindicative – pulls towards the inclusion or admission of the evidence. This is a pull that reaches its zenith when the evidence tendered for admission is at once reliable and crucial to the case for the Crown: McGuffie, at para. 62. See also, R. v. Harrison, 2009 SCC 34, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 494, at paras. 33-34.

[106] These lines of inquiry under Grant involve fact-finding and the assignment of weight to various interests often at odds with each other. There is no overarching principle that mandates how this balance is to be achieved: Grant, at para. 86; R. v. Patterson, 2017 SCC 15, at para. 54; R. v. Côté, 2011 SCC 46, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 215, at para. 48; R. v. Manchulenko, 2013 ONCA 543, 301 C.C.C. (3d) 182, at paras. 89-93.

[107] A trial judge's decision to admit or exclude evidence obtained in a constitutionally flawed manner is entitled to deference on appeal, absent an error in principle, a palpable and overriding error of fact or a determination that is unreasonable: McGuffie, at para. 64; Grant, at paras. 86, 127; R. v. Cole, 2012 SCC 53, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 34, at para. 82.

[108] The first line of inquiry under Grant requires a trial judge to evaluate the seriousness of the Charter-infringing state conduct. This conduct will vary in its seriousness, from inadvertent or minor, on the one hand, to wilful or reckless, on the other. The same may be said about the effect of admitting the evidence on the repute of the administration of justice: Grant, at para. 74.

[109] Various factors may attenuate or exacerbate the seriousness of the Charter-infringing state conduct. Extenuating factors, such as the need to prevent the disappearance of evidence, or good faith on the part of investigators, may attenuate the seriousness of police conduct that results in a Charter breach. On the other hand, no rewards are given for ignorance of Charter standards. Negligence or wilful blindness is not the equivalent of good faith: Grant, at para. 75. Nor can good faith be based on an unreasonable error or ignorance about the officer's scope of authority: R. v. Buhay, 2003 SCC 30, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 631, at para. 59; R. v. Mann, 2004 SCC 52, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 59, at para. 55. The more deliberate the conduct of the police in breach of the Charter, the more likely this line of inquiry will favour exclusion: Grant, at para. 75.

[110] The second line of inquiry requires an examination of the extent to which the Charter breach actually interfered with or undermined the interests protected by the right infringed. Again here there is a spectrum: fleeting and technical to profoundly intrusive. The more serious the impact, the greater the risk that admission of the evidence will bring the administration of justice into disrepute by signalling to the public that the high-sounding nature of the rights is belied by their feeble evidentiary impact in proceedings against the person whose rights have been trampled: Grant, at para. 76.

[111] To determine the seriousness of the infringement under this line of inquiry, a court must look to the interests engaged by the right infringed and examine the extent to which the violation actually impacted on those interests: Grant, at para. 77. An unreasonable search that intrudes upon an area in which an individual reasonably enjoys a high expectation of privacy or that demeans a person's dignity is more serious than one that does not: Grant, at para. 78.

[112] In assessing the actual impact of a breach on a Charter-protected interest of an accused, discoverability retains a useful role. The more likely that the evidence would have been obtained without the Charter-infringing state conduct, the lesser may be the impact of that Charter-infringing conduct on the underlying interests protected by the Charter right. The converse is also true: Grant, at para. 122. See also, Cole, at paras. 93 and 97. Of course discoverability is a double edged sword. It may signal that the breach of the accused's right was less serious. But it also renders the state conduct more egregious as the evidence was "discoverable" without breaching the accused's Charter rights: R. v. Bains, 2014 BCCA 43, 306 C.C.C. (3d) 222, at para. 51; Côté, 2011 SCC 46, [2011] S.C.R. 215, at paras. 70-72.

[113] A final point concerns the evidentiary underpinnings for circumstances said to mitigate the seriousness of the Charter-infringing state conduct or its impact on the Charter-protected interests of the accused. These factual findings of mitigation must be soundly grounded in the evidence, not based on speculation: R. v. Pino, 2016 ONCA 389, 337 C.C.C. (3d) 402, at paras. 95-98.

The Principles Applied

[114] As I will explain, I would not give effect to this ground of appeal. In my view, the trial judge did not err in his overall approach to the admissibility issue under s. 24(2) or in connection with the specific flaws identified by the appellant.

[115] At the outset, it is essential to keep in mind that the admissibility inquiry in which the trial judge engaged under s. 24(2) of the Charter includes not only findings of fact, but also the weighing of various interests frequently at odds with one another. These findings of fact, assessments of competing interests and characterizations of the nature and extent of any breach are entitled to deference absent palpable and overriding errors of fact, errors of law or principle or plainly unreasonable conclusions.

[116] Second, while it was necessary for the trial judge to consider the three lines of inquiry demanded by Grant, no overarching principle dictates the manner or order in which these lines of inquiry are to be considered. Further, the trial judge's ultimate assessment need not be mathematically precise. The overarching principle is that the trial judge must take into account all the circumstances. This trial judge did that.

[117] Third, I do not read the trial judge's observation about the first line of inquiry being a "tie breaker" as reflecting error in assigning that line of inquiry a place of superordinance in the Grant analysis. Read in its appropriate context, the trial judge was simply pointing out that when one factor favours exclusion (line of inquiry #2) and another admission (line of inquiry #3), the outcome of the remaining line of inquiry is apt (although not in every circumstance) to dictate the ultimate result of an analysis of an issue that is to be decided on a basis of probabilities.

[118] Fourth, the trial judge did not err in considering the uncertain state of the law as a relevant factor in his s. 24(2) analysis. Recall that in 2014 the Supreme Court of Canada described the inconsistencies among Canadian courts about whether a search of a cellphone was permitted as part of a search incident to arrest, or whether some further authority, like a search warrant, was required. In such a state of uncertainty, it scarcely follows that it was unreasonable or indicative of bad faith for investigators to rely on a judicial precedent said to support such a search.

[119] Further, it was not error for the trial judge to conclude from the fact that a search warrant was later obtained that had one been sought immediately after seizure of the Blackberry, it would likely have been granted, the contents harvested and evidence obtained. Discoverability has a place in the Grant analysis. That the evidence was discovered without a warrant was not the product of deliberate Charter-infringing state conduct.

[120] The trial judge also found an infringement of s. 8 of the Charter because police had failed to file any Report to a Justice in Form 5.2 and failed to notify the appellant of their summary application under s. 490.

[121] In this case, unlike in Garcia-Machado, the police did complete on several occasions a Report to a Justice. In accordance with what was then the practice, they left the reports for delivery to a justice of the peace. Delivery never happened, but not for dint of effort. This case is different from Garcia-Machado, which was not available for the trial judge to consider.

Ground #2: The Hearsay Statement of Salvatore Larizza

[122] The second ground of appeal challenges the decision of the trial judge to admit as evidence a sworn videotaped statement of Sal Larizza, a former accused who had been separately charged but died before trial.

[123] A brief description of the background, the circumstances under which the statement came to be taken and the ruling of the trial judge for admitting it as evidence will serve as a useful framework for the discussion that follows.

The Essential Background

[124] On takedown day, police executed a search warrant at Sal Larizza's home. In a box in his garage, officers found 1 kilogram of cocaine and 18 pounds of marijuana. Police suspected, but could not prove, that the drugs had been stashed there by Muzzi and Ritchie. Larizza was arrested. Neither Muzzi nor Ritchie were charged.

[125] Sal Larizza remained in custody for about a week after his arrest until he was released on bail. The terms of his release required him to live at his sister's home where he was to occupy a single room together with his young daughter. He was also subject to house arrest.

[126] A few days after his arrest, Sal Larizza was interviewed by police. The interview was audio and videotaped. Larizza denied knowing about how the drugs came to be found in his garage at home. He said that his home was not a stash house. He claimed not to know Muzzi well.

[127] There was no formal motion to admit Larizza's post-arrest statement on the voir dire to determine the admissibility of his later KGB statement. In the interests of trial fairness, the trial judge admitted the earlier statement. It was relevant to both threshold and ultimate reliability.

The KGB Statement

[128] About three months after his arrest, Sal Larizza asked the Crown to consent to variations in his judicial interim release order. Larizza wanted a deletion of the house arrest term and a change in the residence condition. Discussions took place between Larizza, his lawyer and the lead investigator about Larizza providing a statement explaining how the marijuana and cocaine got into his garage where they were found on takedown day.

[129] Sal Larizza agreed to provide a statement to police.

[130] Larizza's statement was audio and video recorded. It was given under oath. Larizza was warned about the consequences of making a false statement. He was told that the statement would be disclosed to those facing trial. The statement lasted 1 hour and 20 minutes.

[131] In his KGB statement, Sal Larizza admitted that he had provided a stash house for Muzzi and another man. Both had a key to his (Larizza's) house and could come and go as they pleased. Muzzi and another man showed up in Muzzi's truck the evening before takedown day. They asked whether they could store some marijuana in Larizza's garage overnight. Muzzi promised he would remove the marijuana early the next morning.

[132] Sal Larizza denied knowledge of any cocaine being part of the delivery the night prior to takedown day. Police noticed indicia of a cocaine-cutting operation in Larizza's home.

The Death of Sal Larizza

[133] Sal Larizza died prior to trial. Somebody killed him in his own home.

The Ruling of the Trial Judge

[134] The case for admissibility of Larizza's KGB statement was advanced under the principled exception to the hearsay rule.

[135] Necessity was uncontroversial. Larizza was dead.

[136] The trial judge considered the cumulative effect of several factors in concluding that threshold reliability had been established:

- i. the statement was audio and video recorded;
- ii. the statement was under oath;
- iii. Larizza was warned about the consequences of providing false information;
- iv. the events described in the statement were within Larizza's direct knowledge;
- v. the narrative provided was in Larizza's own words, not in response to leading or suggestive questioning;
- vi. the initiative for the statement originated with Larizza, not the police or the Crown;
- vii. Larizza had legal advice before making the statement;
- viii. the statement was confirmed by real evidence in some of its material aspects;

- ix. the statement was strikingly similar in content to what Muzzi admitted to be his involvement when he pleaded guilty to various charges;
- x. Larizza repeated crucial information a number of times; and
- xi. What Larizza appeared to regard as his interest in co-operating with the authorities.

[137] The trial judge also considered Larizza's previous statement to the police as a prior inconsistent statement.

[138] The trial judge admitted Larizza's KGB statement. It does not appear that he was asked to exclude it on the basis that its prejudicial effect exceeded its probative value.^[1]

The Arguments on Appeal

[139] The appellant contests the trial judge's admissibility ruling on two grounds. He says that the trial judge did not provide adequate reasons for his decision, thus rendering it impervious to appellate review. He also argues that what the trial judge did say reveals that he considered irrelevant factors and failed to consider relevant factors in concluding that the requirement of threshold reliability had been met.

[140] On the inadequacy of reasons, the appellant says that the trial judge devoted the majority of his reasons to a rote repetition of the governing legal principles, but offered no real insight into why he found threshold reliability established and the statement admissible. The most important consideration here was the inability of the appellant to cross-examine the declarant. Yet the trial judge failed to consider whether or how the circumstances in which the statement was made could and did function as an adequate substitute or proxy for the inability to cross-examine.

[141] The appellant submits that in reaching his conclusion on reliability, the trial judge failed to consider that Larizza's motive in providing the statement was to obtain a significant bail variation and that the KGB statement was fundamentally at odds with his post-arrest statement – given five months earlier – in which he claimed no knowledge of events he described in much detail later.

[142] In addition to his failure to consider relevant factors, the appellant continues, the trial judge assigned a place in his analysis to factors of which no account should have been taken. That Larizza took the initiative, consulted a lawyer and repeated crucial information several times. And that the statement was strikingly similar to what Muzzi admitted on his guilty plea. The trial judge also failed to recognize the double hearsay aspect of the statement when Larizza repeated what he claimed Muzzi said when he (Muzzi) had asked to store the drugs in Larizza's garage.

[143] The respondent supports the admissibility ruling of the trial judge. The trial judge's reasons are adequate to permit meaningful appellate review. They reveal no consideration of irrelevant factors or failure to consider relevant factors. The case for admissibility was overwhelming.

[144] The respondent reminds us that in considering this alleged error, we are to begin from a stance of deference, absent an error in principle or in law, a palpable and overriding error of fact or a plainly unreasonable conclusion. Deference should not be shunted aside here.

[145] The respondent says that the trial judge's ruling reflects governing principles. Inability to cross-examine a hearsay declarant is not dispositive of an application to admit a hearsay statement. This inability may be overcome by circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness arising out of the circumstances in which the statement came about. In this case, the trial judge took into account relevant factors, including that essential parts of Larizza's narrative were confirmed by other evidence, such as Muzzi's guilty plea. He did not consider irrelevant factors, at least none that marred the essential features of his analysis that provided an appropriate foundation for meaningful appellate review.

The Governing Principles

[146] At the outset, factual findings that underpin a finding of admissibility are entitled to deference absent palpable and overriding error: R. v. Youvarajah, 2013 SCC 41, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 720, at para. 31; R. v. Chretien, 2014 ONCA 403, 309 C.C.C. (3d) 418, at para. 44.

[147] The central underlying concern with the admission of hearsay evidence is the inability of the party opposite to cross-examine the declarant on the truth and accuracy of the reported statement, to test his or her perception, memory, narration and sincerity:, at paras. 18-19; R. v. Khelawon, 2006 SCC 57, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 787, at para. 2.

[148] When hearsay evidence is tendered for admission under the principled exception to the hearsay rule and no issue arises about the necessity requirement because of the death of the declarant, the task of the trial judge is to determine whether the reliability requirement has been met. Reliability, the current equivalent of Wigmore's "circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness" or "probability of trustworthiness", operates as a substitute or surrogate for the more traditional mechanism for testing reliability – cross-examination. Reliability intervenes to ensure that only hearsay statements worthy of consideration by a trier of fact get before it.

[149] It is well established that the reliability requirement under the principled exception to the hearsay rule refers to threshold, not ultimate reliability. After all, the ultimate reliability of any piece of evidence received in a criminal trial is for the trier of fact to determine in the context of all the evidence adduced at trial: Khelowan, at paras. 2-3, 50; Youvarajah, at para. 23.

[150] Since the underlying concern when hearsay evidence is proposed for admission is the opponent's ability to test it by traditional means, the reliability requirement under the principled approach seeks to identify those cases in which this difficulty is sufficiently expunged to justify receiving the evidence by exception to the general exclusionary rule: Khelowan, at para. 61.

[151] A proponent who seeks the reception of hearsay evidence under the principled exception usually tries to satisfy the reliability requirement in either of two ways. One way is to show that no real concern exists about the truth of the statement because of the circumstances in which the statement came about. Another way of satisfying the reliability requirement is to demonstrate that no real concern arises from the introduction of the statement in hearsay form because, in the circumstances, the opponent can sufficiently test its truth and accuracy: Khelowan, at paras. 62-63. See also, R. v. Blackman, 2008 SCC 37, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 298, at para. 35.

[152] These two methods of satisfying the reliability requirement are not mutually exclusive: Khelowan, at para. 65; Blackman, at para. 65; R. v. Devine, 2008 SCC 36, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 283, at paras. 22-23. That said, where the declarant is not available for cross-examination, the focus of the reliability inquiry will necessarily be on the circumstances in which the statement came about. The trial judge should consider the cumulative effect of all the evidence relevant to the reliability issue with his or her focus on the particular dangers presented by the evidence: Khelowan, at para. 4.

[153] The factors to be considered on the inquiry into reliability cannot be categorized in terms of threshold and ultimate reliability. Trial judges are to undertake a more functional approach with their focus on the particular dangers raised by the hearsay evidence tendered for admission. But the approach of the trial judge to the reliability requirement and, more broadly, the issue of admissibility, must respect the distinction in roles between the trier of law and the trier of fact. To retain the integrity of the fact-finding process, the issue of ultimate reliability must not be pre-empted by a determination made on the admissibility voir dire: Khelowan, at paras. 4, 93.

[154] Where a proponent seeks to satisfy the reliability requirement by evidence about the circumstances in which the statement was made, a trial judge may also consider the presence of corroborating, or for that matter, conflicting evidence: Khelowan, at para. 100; Chretien, at para. 54.

[155] A final point concerns the duty of a trial judge to give reasons when ruling on the admissibility of evidence and the scope of appellate review of those reasons.

[156] The robust body of jurisprudence about the duty of trial judges to provide reasons for recording convictions and the scope of appellate review of those reasons for sufficiency does not apply in the same way to evidentiary rulings. Subject to a duty of procedural fairness, there is no general duty to provide reasons for an evidentiary ruling. The failure to give reasons on an evidentiary ruling is not fatal provided that the decision is supportable on the evidence or the basis for the decision is apparent from the circumstances. The importance of the subject-matter of the ruling also has a bearing on whether procedural fairness compels reasons: See, R. v. Woodard, 2009 MBCA 42, 245 C.C.C. (3d) 522, at paras. 22, 24-25.

The Principles Applied

[157] As I will explain, I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

[158] The trial judge was required to decide whether the Crown had established that Larizza's KGB statement satisfied the reliability requirement of the principled exception to the hearsay rule. That determination required a functional approach, a consideration of all the circumstances surrounding the making of the statement, to determine whether the Crown had shown that there was no real concern about the truth of the statement because of the circumstances in which it came about.

[159] To begin, I am satisfied that the reasons of the trial judge on his admissibility ruling are adequate to permit meaningful appellate review. The reasons record the principles that the trial judge considered and, albeit briefly, why he was satisfied that the reliability requirement had been met. Nothing more was necessary.

[160] Second, the factual findings that go into the determination of reliability are entitled to deference. The trial judge was well-placed to assess the hearsay dangers, in this case, essentially sincerity, and the effectiveness of any safeguards to assist in their conquest. Absent an error in principle, the trial judge's determination of the threshold reliability is entitled to deference in this case.

[161] Among the circumstances in which the statement was made, recall that, unlike most hearsay statements where a declarant is unavailable to testify, this statement was made under oath with a warning about the consequences of providing false information to the police. Larizza was told that the statement would be disclosed to those affected by it. The information Larizza provided was first-hand, much of it confirmed by other evidence gathered during the investigation.

[162] To be fair, some of the factors that the trial judge noted seem unhelpful in determining the threshold reliability of the statement. That Larizza took the initiative in contacting the police. That he repeated crucial pieces of information on different occasions during the statement. However, I am satisfied that those considerations do not warrant interference with the reliability finding, given the other valid considerations.

[163] Third, the trial judge was well aware of the motive that underlay Larizza's statement. He wanted his bail varied. But the judge also knew that whatever Larizza said, it would make no difference to the charges outstanding against him. He took those factors into account although they seem to have greater relevance to the issue of the ultimate reliability than to what is required for reliability under the principled exception to the hearsay rule.

[164] Fourth, the trial judge had an advantage not often available in cases involving unavailable declarants and hearsay said to meet the reliability requirement because of the circumstances in which the statement was made. The trial judge was an eye and ear witness to the statement, thus was in a position to evaluate, at the threshold, the sincerity of Larizza to the extent it was revealed by his appearance on the video.

[165] Finally, the double hearsay claim is misplaced. Larizza recounted what Muzzi (and Ritchie) said and did the night before takedown day. They brought drugs to Larizza's house. They asked about leaving them in his garage. They did so. With Larizza's permission. Their conduct was an act in furtherance of a common unlawful design to traffic in controlled substances. What they did and what Larizza saw them doing was not hearsay. Their joint request was not hearsay. To the extent it implied trafficking, it was properly admissible under the co-conspirators' exception to the hearsay rule.

Ground #3: The Muzzi Guilty Plea and Underlying Facts

[166] This ground of appeal also has to do with evidence received at trial after a voir dire into its admissibility. First, some added background.

The Additional Background

[167] Frank Muzzi was arrested on takedown day on several drug offences and a related criminal organization charge. None of the charges related to the cocaine and marijuana found in Larizza's garage on takedown day. Shortly after Sal Larizza gave his KGB statement to police, Muzzi was charged with further offences arising out of the seizure of the cocaine and marijuana in Larizza's garage.

[168] Within a year of Larizza's statement, Muzzi pleaded guilty to several charges, including those related to the seizures at Larizza's residence. Muzzi was represented by very experienced counsel. The statement of facts read by the trial Crown to support the plea included a reference to a part of Larizza's KGB statement. The excerpt was a passage in which Larizza recounted what Muzzi had said when he brought a box over to Larizza's house and asked whether he could store it (the box) overnight:

It's just for the night. ...Tomorrow morning it will be out, it'll be off the property.

Muzzi left the box. The following morning police executed a search warrant at Larizza's house, found the box and arrested Larizza.

[169] Muzzi's counsel said: "...my client acknowledges his involvements in the events in question and the facts with respect to these activities are acknowledged as being correct and ample for a finding of guilt."

[170] Frank Muzzi received an agreed-upon sentence. Charges against his mother and sister were withdrawn. Although the record of his guilty plea and sentencing proceedings contains no mention of it, the trial Crown also agreed not to call Frank Muzzi as a witness in any future proceedings against the other alleged co-conspirators.

The Ruling of the Trial Judge

[171] The trial judge admitted the fact that Muzzi pleaded guilty and made admissions for a non-hearsay purpose on the voir dire and the trial. The judge concluded:

I am prepared to admit that fact for use on this voir dire for the determination of the threshold reliability of the Larizza statement. It doesn't matter whether the contents of Muzzi's statements were true. The fact that he made the statements many months after Larizza made his statement is something the trier of fact may consider in determining the reliability of Larizza's statement. The fact that the truth of Muzzi's statements is not in evidence detracts from but does not nullify the usefulness of the fact that he made statements that tend to confirm Larizza's statement.

I am prepared to admit that fact and the contents of his admissions into evidence at trial as evidence to be used in determining the collateral issue of identification of the cell phone communicators other than the accused.

The Arguments on Appeal

[172] The appellant says that the trial judge was wrong to admit the Muzzi plea and acknowledged facts. Each was hearsay. Neither was necessary nor reliable.

[173] The appellant focuses principally on the trial judge's failure to consider the threshold requirement of necessity. Muzzi was in custody serving a sentence in a federal penitentiary. He was a competent and compellable witness for the Crown. There was no suggestion that, if called as a witness, he would resile from the admissions he made on entering his guilty plea. His availability meant that the necessity requirement could not be satisfied and the evidence should have been excluded.

[174] The appellant says that this evidence had no legitimate non-hearsay use, thus should not have been received on this basis either. It is well-settled that the plea of guilty of one person, even of a co-accused, is not admissible against another accused of the same or a related crime.

[175] The respondent rejects any suggestion that this evidence was received or used by the trial judge as evidence of the truth of the facts admitted. The evidence was tendered, received and used for a non-hearsay purpose, as circumstantial evidence to assist in proof of the identity of a person with whom the appellant communicated on his Blackberry.

The Governing Principles

[176] The plea of guilty of one person accused of a crime is not evidence, much less proof, that another, accused of the same crime, committed it: R. v. Berry (1957), 1957 CanLII 505 \(ON CA\), 118 C.C.C. 55 (Ont. C.A.), at p. 60. A plea of guilty is a formal admission by its maker of each essential element of the offence to which the plea is entered. This formal admission relieves the Crown of the burden of proving these essential elements on admissible evidence beyond a reasonable doubt.

[177] The pleas of guilty or convictions of other alleged co-conspirators are not admissible to prove the existence or fact of the conspiracy in the trial of another or other alleged co-conspirators: R. v. May (1984), 1984 CanLII 3489 \(ON CA\), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 257 (Ont. C.A.), at p. 260, leave to appeal refused, [1984] 2 S.C.R. viii; R. v. Paquet (1999), 1999 CanLII 2259 \(NB CA\), 140 C.C.C. (3d) 283 (N.B. C.A.), at paras. 22-23.

[178] Where a plea of guilty by a third party is admissible in a criminal trial, it may be proven in a variety of ways. For example, the person who pleaded guilty may testify to that effect. Documentary evidence of the plea may be received under the principles relating to the admission of public documents or court records or the provisions of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5. See, R. v. Caesar, 2016 ONCA 599, 339 C.C.C. (3d) 354, at para. 33.

[179] Transcripts of court proceedings, including transcripts of guilty pleas, may be admissible to prove what was actually said or what actually happened in an earlier proceeding, but they are not rendered admissible as evidence of the truth of their contents simply because of their nature, common law principles or statutory provisions. The hearsay rule intercedes and must be overcome by some listed or principled exception if proving the truth of their contents is the object of their proponent: Caesar, at para. 47. Needless to say, if the proponent's purpose is otherwise, the hearsay rule erects no bar.

[180] Three brief points should be made about the operation of the hearsay rule in the circumstances.

[181] First, a critical feature of the hearsay rule is the purpose for which the evidence, which is said to be hearsay, is tendered. It is only where the evidence is offered to prove the truth of its contents that the hearsay rule applies and renders the evidence prima facie inadmissible: Khelowan, at para. 57; R. v. Baldree, 2013 SCC 35, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 520, at para. 36.

[182] Second, what a person says may have probative value as non-hearsay, as for example, to establish the identity of the speaker. Used in this way, no assumption of the truth of the statement is required and the hearsay rule is not implicated: R. v. Evans, 1993 CanLII 86 (SCC), [1993] 3 S.C.R. 653, at pp. 662-663; R. v. Ferber (1987), 1987 ABCA 86 (CanLII), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 157 (Alta. C.A.), at p. 160.

[183] Third, evidence of things done and said by alleged co-conspirators may be admitted as circumstantial evidence of the existence of an agreement. Admissibility on this basis for this purpose depends on the inferences available from the evidence as a whole. Evidence of things done and said admitted for this purpose need not be done or said in furtherance of the common design: R. v. Puddicombe, 2013 ONCA 506, 299 C.C.C. (3d) 534, at para. 112.

The Principles Applied

[184] I would not accede to the argument advanced in support of this ground of appeal for three reasons.

[185] First, the basis on which the evidence was admitted and used. The evidence of Muzzi's plea of guilty and the iteration of the facts on which it was based was neither tendered nor used to prove the truth of what was said. It was used on the voir dire in determining the threshold reliability of Larizza's KGB statement and in proving Muzzi's identity as a person with whom the appellant communicated. Neither use attracted the application of the hearsay rule.

[186] Second, the admissibility of the evidence as non-hearsay. Evidence of what Muzzi said and did, as for example in Larizza's garage the night before the takedown, was admissible as circumstantial evidence of the existence of an agreement to traffic in controlled substances. The manner in which the trial judge used this evidence in determining whether the appellant's guilt had been proven beyond a reasonable doubt did not exceed the basis upon which it was tendered and properly admissible.

[187] Third, the inclusion of Larizza's statement in the uncontested statement of facts. This complaint is unavailing as a result of my determination that Larizza's KGB statement was properly admitted at trial.

Ground #4: The Admissibility of Muzzi's and Larizza's Statements under the Co-conspirators' Exception

[188] This ground of appeal asserts error in the reception of evidence of Muzzi's utterances on the night before takedown day and Larizza's repetition of them in his KGB statement admitted in evidence at trial. It is unnecessary to repeat the background events that resulted in Larizza's statement or its admission at trial. The point raised is a narrow one and can be determined briefly in light of the discussions that have preceded it.

The Ruling of the Trial Judge

[189] In a brief endorsement, the trial judge reviewed the argument advanced at trial and relying upon R. v. Chang (2003), 2003 CanLII 29135 \(ON CA\), 173 C.C.C. (3d) 397 (Ont. C.A.) explained his rejection of it:

The defence argued that since Muzzi is incarcerated, he was "available" and the Crown should not take refuge behind an exception to the hearsay rule. I was impressed with the defence argument that the Crown could not avoid presenting Muzzi to the court in person simply because of a promise by the Crown not to call him as a witness which was part of Muzzi's sentencing proceedings. In retrospect I agree with the Crown that just as the Crown has a discretion to proceed against alleged co-conspirators jointly thereby making them "unavailable" so too the Crown should not be restricted in the exercise of its discretion with respect to plea discussions. (R. v. Chang ¶ 103). In any event, we cannot expect in the circumstances of this case to get evidence from Muzzi of the same value. (See Chang ¶ 105.) In the event the defence has not met the onus placed upon it.

The Arguments on Appeal

[190] In advancing argument in support of this ground of appeal, the appellant accepts that under the co-conspirators' exception to the hearsay rule, acts and declarations of co-conspirators in furtherance of the common design may be admitted against other probable members of the conspiracy to prove their actual membership or participation in that conspiracy. The appellant also accepts that even when it applies to double hearsay, the co-conspirators' exception as articulated in R. v. Carter, 1981 CanLII 158 \(SCC\), [1982] 1 S.C.R. 937, satisfies the necessity and reliability requirements of the principled exception to the hearsay rule, at least where the declarant's testimony is unavailable to the Crown because he or she is a co-accused.

[191] The appellant also accepts that it is his burden to demonstrate why in this case the evidence did not meet the fundamental criteria applicable to the principled approach to the hearsay rule. However, he says that he has met that burden because the acts and declarations of Muzzi do not satisfy the necessity requirement under the principled approach. The appellant points out that Muzzi was available to testify for the Crown. He was in a federal penitentiary serving a sentence for his involvement in various drug offences. He was a competent witness for the Crown and his attendance could be compelled by subpoena. Nothing in the trial record indicates that he would have been uncooperative or would have failed to give evidence in accordance with the admissions he made when he pleaded guilty. This demonstrated lack of necessity renders the evidence inadmissible.

[192] The respondent takes the position that the evidence in issue was properly admitted. The evidence, which consisted of acts and declarations of Muzzi in furtherance of the common unlawful object, was admissible despite its hearsay nature under the co-conspirators' exception to the hearsay rule. As a general rule, the co-conspirators' exception satisfies the criteria of necessity and reliability under the principled approach.

[193] The respondent acknowledges that in some circumstances evidence that is admissible under the co-conspirators' exception may not satisfy the necessity and reliability requirements of the principled approach. But those instances will be rare. In this case, as the trial judge properly concluded, the appellant has failed to meet that burden in connection with the necessity requirement.

[194] Neither Ritchie nor Muzzi was available to testify.

[195] Ritchie was awaiting trial on a separate indictment. Although he was a competent witness for the Crown at the appellant's trial and could be compelled to testify, calling him as a witness would leave the Crown open to an argument that any prosecution of Ritchie after he gave evidence at the appellant's trial would be an abuse of process.

[196] In connection with Muzzi, who was also a competent witness for the Crown who could be compelled by subpoena to attend the appellant's trial, the respondent submits that he too was unavailable. When Muzzi pleaded guilty and received an agreed-upon sentence, the trial Crown agreed that Muzzi would not be called as a prosecution witness in the subsequent trials of any alleged co-conspirators. This was an agreement that the trial Crown could make in the exercise of his prosecutorial discretion. There is no suggestion that such an agreement was beyond the reach of prosecutorial discretion or amounted to an abuse of that discretion. As a result, Muzzi was not available as a witness.

[197] In addition, the respondent reminds us, the necessity requirement refers to reasonable necessity. It may be met where a trial judge is satisfied that there is no reasonable prospect of obtaining meaningful evidence from a witness of an accurate and frank rendition of relevant events or evidence of equivalent value to contemporaneous acts and declarations.

The Governing Principles

[198] Several principles combine to inform the determination of this ground of appeal.

[199] First, the relationship between the listed and principled exceptions to the hearsay rule.

[200] The traditional or listed exceptions to the hearsay rule, such as the co-conspirators' exception, remain presumptively in place. However, a listed exception can be challenged to determine whether it is supported by the indicia of necessity and reliability required by the principled approach: R. v. Mapara, 2005 SCC 23, [2005] 1 S.C.R. 358, at para. 15.

[201] Sometimes, evidence that would be admissible under a listed exception may be excluded because, in a given set of circumstances, the requirements of necessity and reliability have not been met. But these instances are said to be "rare": Mapara, at para. 15.

[202] Second, the relationship between the co-conspirators' exception and the principled approach.

[203] The co-conspirators' exception to the hearsay rule meets the requirements of the principled approach to the hearsay rule: Mapara, at para. 31. The conditions imposed under Carter provide sufficient circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness to satisfy the reliability requirement: Mapara, at para. 27. The necessity requirement is satisfied by a combination of factors such as the non-compellability of a co-accused declarant, the undesirability of trying alleged co-conspirators separately, and the evidentiary value of contemporaneous declarations made in furtherance of an alleged conspiracy: Mapara, at para. 18; Chang, at para. 105.

[204] Third, the requirement or indicium of necessity.

[205] The criterion or requirement of necessity is accorded a flexible definition, capable of encompassing diverse situations with a common feature – the unavailability of relevant direct evidence. Necessity may be established not only by the unavailability of the declarant for testing by cross-examination, but also where we cannot expect to get evidence of the same value from the same or other sources: R. v. Smith, 1992 CanLII 79 (SCC), [1992] 2 S.C.R. 915, at pp. 933-934; Chang, at para. 105. Whether the necessity criterion has been met requires a consideration of all of the circumstances in each individual case: R. v. B. (K.G.), 1993 CanLII 116 (SCC), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 740, at p. 798; Chang, at para. 105.

The Principles Applied

[206] Several reasons persuade me to reject this ground of appeal.

[207] First, it is a "rare case" in which evidence that is admissible under the co-conspirators' exception does not also satisfy the indicia of necessity and reliability under the principled exception. Reliability is not an issue here and, in any event, is satisfied by the Carter rule. Necessity is to be determined on the basis of a consideration of all the circumstances. A trial judge's conclusion on this issue is entitled to deference.

[208] Second, necessity is accorded a flexible definition. It is capable of encompassing diverse situations. At its core, necessity is concerned with the unavailability of relevant direct evidence. The physical or testimonial unavailability of the declarant is not the only basis upon which necessity may be established.

[209] Third, for different reasons, relevant direct evidence was not available from either Ritchie or Muzzi, thus the necessity for its introduction under the hearsay exception.

[210] For practical purposes, Muzzi was not available to give evidence for the prosecution at trial. As a non-party at the appellant's trial, Muzzi was a competent witness for the Crown and could be compelled to testify. But whether as a quid pro quo for his guilty plea or otherwise, the trial Crown agreed that Muzzi would not be called as a witness for the Crown in any later prosecution of an alleged co-conspirator. This decision was an exercise of prosecutorial discretion elusive of judicial review absent evidence of abuse of process of which there is none here.

[211] As for the availability of Ritchie to provide relevant direct evidence, the circumstances are different, but the result the same. As a separately indicted accused Ritchie was competent and could be compelled to give evidence for the Crown. But, leaving to one side his willingness to testify and to do so truthfully, about which we know nothing, requiring him to testify at the appellant's trial would invite an application by Ritchie at his own trial to stay proceedings for abuse of process.

[212] In the end, there is also the question of onus. That fell upon the appellant to establish that this was one of the "rare cases" in which the co-conspirators' exception failed to comply with the requirements of the principled approach, in this case, because it failed to establish necessity. In that task, the appellant failed.

Ground #5: Unreasonable Verdicts

[213] The appellant challenges as unreasonable the convictions entered on several counts alleging preliminary and substantive offences involving cocaine. A brief reference to the trial judge's reasons provides sufficient background to assess the viability of this complaint.

The Reasons of the Trial Judge

[214] The trial judge found the appellant not guilty of trafficking cocaine as a result of his purchase of cocaine from a person described as "Penguin" and also of conspiracy to traffic cocaine with Penguin. The trial judge considered the evidence adduced at trial insufficient to ground a finding that Penguin was aware that the appellant purchased the cocaine for the purpose of selling it.

[215] The trial judge then examined the relationship between the appellant and Ritchie. He found that Ritchie's assistance in acquiring the cocaine from Penguin bespoke an agreement to which Ritchie and the appellant were parties. In reaching this conclusion, the judge considered the nature of the relationship between the two men; the substantial amount of cocaine involved; and Ritchie's use of the same method of transferring money that he had used in the past in drawing an inference that the cocaine – two kilograms – would be trafficked. The agreement to traffic established a conspiracy to traffic cocaine and rendered the appellant and Ritchie parties to trafficking.

[216] The trial judge was also satisfied that the appellant had constructive possession of the cocaine from Penguin when three factors coalesced:

- i. the money was paid;
- ii. the cocaine was shipped to the appellant; and
- iii. the appellant was provided with the tracking details for the package containing the cocaine.

The Arguments on Appeal

[217] The appellant acknowledges that the trial judge correctly concluded that, as a mere purchaser of cocaine, the appellant could not be convicted of conspiracy to traffic or trafficking cocaine with Penguin. Where the trial judge erred, the appellant says, was in drawing the further inferences necessary to reach a conclusion of guilt on the counts involving Ritchie.

[218] The appellant contends that the cumulative effect of the evidence demonstrated nothing more than that Ritchie was an agent for the purchaser – the appellant – whose only role was to send the money to Penguin. There was no evidence that Ritchie knew the purpose for which the money was being sent. It follows that the evidence could not support a finding that Ritchie and the appellant conspired to traffic cocaine. In addition, the simple fact that money was sent and cocaine shipped did not establish that the appellant was in possession of cocaine or party to a conspiracy to possess it.

[219] The respondent begins with a brief reminder about the scope of review available when an appellant claims a verdict is unreasonable. The fundamental issue is whether the verdict is one that a properly instructed jury, acting judicially, could reasonably have rendered. Absent a palpable and overriding error, an appellate court must not revisit findings of fact made or inferences drawn by triers of fact. These findings and inferences are entitled to significant deference and cannot be pushed aside simply because other inferences may have been available or the reviewing court would not have decided the case in the same way.

[220] The respondent says that the cumulative effect of the email correspondence adduced at trial showed that the appellant and Ritchie worked together to purchase and have delivered two kilograms of cocaine from Penguin. It was acknowledged at trial that two kilograms of cocaine was an amount sufficient for the purpose of trafficking.

[221] The respondent contends that the appellant had constructive possession of the two kilograms of cocaine shipped by Penguin in return for the cash payment sent by Ritchie. The appellant knew that Penguin sent cocaine to him, in return for a cash payment, and provided the appellant with the tracking details necessary to take delivery. This satisfied the requirements of constructive possession.

[222] Finally, the respondent relies on the fact that the appellant did not provide an innocent explanation of his conduct as a factor that undermines the appellant's assertion that the verdict was unreasonable.

The Governing Principles

[223] Several principles of general application have a say in our decision on this ground of appeal. Some have to do with the scope of review permitted in response to claims of an unreasonable verdict. Others relate to drawing inferences from evidence adduced at trial. Yet others explain the requirements for constructive possession.

[224] First, unreasonable verdict review.

[225] To decide whether a verdict is unreasonable, we must determine whether the verdict rendered is one that a properly instructed jury or a judge could reasonably have rendered: R. v. Yebes, 1987 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1987] 2 S.C.R. 168, at p. 186 R. v. R.P., 2012 SCC 22, [2012] 1 S.C.R. 746, at para. 9. We must not of course merely substitute our view for that of the trial judge. However, in order to apply the test, we must re-examine and to some extent, within the limit of appellate disadvantage, re-weigh and consider the effect of the evidence adduced at trial: Yebes, at p. 186.

[226] A verdict may also be unreasonable if the trial judge has drawn an inference or made a finding of fact essential to the verdict that is:

- i. plainly contradicted by the evidence relied on by the trial judge in support of that inference or finding; or
- ii. incompatible with evidence that has not otherwise been contradicted or rejected by the trial judge.

See, R.P., at para. 9; R. v. Sinclair, 2011 SCC 40, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 3, at paras. 4, 16 and 19-21.

[227] In considering the reasonableness of the verdict, this court may infer from the appellant's failure to testify, an inability to provide an innocent explanation: R. v. Ellis, 2013 ONCA 739, 303 C.C.C. (3d) 228, at para. 51.

[228] Second, inferences and claims of unreasonable verdicts.

[229] An inference is a deduction of fact that may logically and reasonably be drawn from another fact or group of facts found or otherwise established by evidence adduced at trial. An inference is a conclusion that may, not must, be drawn in the circumstances. A single item or several items of evidence may give rise to more than one inference. It is for the trier of fact, whether judge or jury, to determine what inferences are to be drawn from the evidence taken as a whole and whether the cumulative effect of those inferences satisfies or falls short of the standard of proof required in a criminal case.

[230] Whether a trial judge has drawn the proper inference from a fact or group of facts established by the evidence is a question of fact, as is whether the whole of the evidence is sufficient to establish an essential element of an offence: R. v. Kent, 1994 CanLII 62 \(SCC\), [1994] 3 S.C.R. 133, at p. 143. Appellate courts may not interfere with the findings of fact made and the factual inferences drawn by a trial judge unless those findings and inferences are:

- i. clearly wrong;
- ii. unsupported by the evidence; or
- iii. otherwise unreasonable.

Any error must be plainly identified and be shown to have affected the result. In other words, the error must be shown to be at once palpable and overriding: R. v. Clark, 2005 SCC 2, [2005] 1 S.C.R. 6, at para. 9.

[231] It is of the essence of circumstantial evidence that a single item of evidence may support more than one inference. The same may be said of several items of circumstantial evidence, whether considered individually or assessed cumulatively. That different inferences may be drawn from individual items of evidence, or from the evidence as a whole, does not entitle a reviewing court to re-weigh or recalibrate the evidence by substituting, for a reasonable inference drawn by the trial judge, an equally – or even more – persuasive inference of its own. The task of the reviewing court is to determine whether the inferences drawn by the trial judge are "reasonably supported by the evidence". No more. No less. See, H.L. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 25, [2005] 1 S.C.R. 401, at para. 74.

[232] Third, the elements of possession.

[233] A person may be found in possession of a thing in different ways. Among those ways is knowingly having the thing in some place, irrespective of whether the person owns or occupies the place, for the use or benefit of himself or somebody else: Criminal Code, s. 4(3)(a)(ii).

The Principles Applied

[234] As I will briefly explain, I would reject this ground of appeal.

[235] The core findings of fact made by the trial judge do not reflect palpable and overriding error. The inferences drawn by the trial judge from the cumulative effect of this evidence fall well within the field of reasonable inferences available on this evidence. As the communications reveal, this was not a first-time transaction between Ritchie and the appellant, on the one hand, and Penguin, on the other. The quantity of drugs shipped – two kilograms – was plainly for the purpose of trafficking. The drugs were being shipped to a place for pick-up in a package that the appellant had the information necessary to locate. Nothing more was required.

CONCLUSION

[236] For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal.

Released: April 11, 2017 ("G.R.S.")

"David Watt J.A."

"I agree. G.R. Strathy C.J.O."

"I agree. K.M. Weiler J.A."

[1] While a trial judge is nevertheless obliged to balance whether the probative effect of the statement outweighs its prejudicial value, here, it was obvious that he did.

TAB 47

R. v. Gauthier, 2013 SCC 32 (CanLII), [2013] 2 SCR 403

Source:	Supreme Court of Canada
Date:	2013-06-07
File number:	34444
Other citations:	360 DLR (4th) 1 — 445 NR 97 — [2013] EXP 1924 — 298 CCC (3d) 277 — 2 CR (7th) 269 — 108 WCB (2d) 793 — EYB 2013-222820 — JE 2013-1033 — [2013] SCJ No 32 (QL)
Citation:	R. v. Gauthier, 2013 SCC 32 (CanLII), [2013] 2 SCR 403, < https://canlii.ca/t/fxsxs >, retrieved on 2026-03-24
Most recent unfavourable mention	R. v. Bengy , 2015 ONCA 397 (CanLII) [...] This case is distinguishable from R. v. Gauthier, 2013 SCC 32 , [2013] 2 S.C.R. 403 , in which the trial judge ruled that even though two defences had an air of reality, only one would be sent to the jury because the two defences were incompatible. [...]

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CITATION: R. v. Gauthier, 2013 SCC 32, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 403

DATE: 20130607

DOCKET: 34444

BETWEEN:

Cathie Gauthier
Appellant
and
Her Majesty The Queen
Respondent
- and -
Attorney General of Ontario
Intervener

OFFICIAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION: Reasons of Wagner J.

CORAM: LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT: Wagner J. (LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver and Karakatsanis JJ. concurring)
(paras. 1 to 65)

DISSENTING REASONS: Fish J.
(paras. 66 to 107)

R. v. Gauthier, 2013 SCC 32, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 403

Cathie Gauthier Appellant

v.

Her Majesty The Queen Respondent

and

Attorney General of Ontario Intervener

Indexed as: R. v. Gauthier

2013 SCC 32

File No.: 34444.

2012: December 13; 2013: June 7.

Present: LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR QUEBEC

Criminal law — Defences — Charge to jury — Defences that are incompatible in theory — Accused charged with being party, together with her spouse, to murder of their three children — Alternative defence that accused had abandoned common intention to kill children — Whether it was appropriate to exclude defence of abandonment from defences put to jury on basis that it was incompatible with defence's principal theory, absence of mens rea.

*Criminal law — Defences — Abandonment — Participation in crime — Accused charged with being party, together with her spouse, to murder of their three children — Alternative defence that accused had abandoned common intention to kill children — Essential elements of defence of abandonment in context of forms of participation in crime provided for in s. 21\(1\) and s. 21\(2\) of Criminal Code — Whether defence of abandonment raised by accused met air of reality test.*

G was charged with being a party, together with her spouse, L, to the murder of their three children at the dawn of the year 2009. According to the Crown's theory, G was a party to the murder in planning it as part of a murder-suicide pact and in supplying the murder weapon. She did not act to prevent the children from being poisoned with drinks served by her spouse, which contained Gravol and oxazepam. Thus, she aided L to kill the children. At her jury trial, G submitted in her defence that she had not bought the medication to poison her children, that she was in a dissociative state on December 31, 2008 when she wrote some incriminating documents, and that this state meant she could not have formed the specific intent to commit the murders. In the alternative, should her argument based on the absence of mens rea be rejected, she claimed to have abandoned the common purpose of killing the children and to have clearly communicated her intention to do so to her spouse. The jury found G guilty of the first degree murder of her three children. The Court of Appeal upheld the guilty verdict, concluding that the trial judge had not erred in refusing to put the defence of abandonment to the jury, since it was incompatible with the defence's principal theory.

Held (Fish J. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed.

Per LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ.: There is no cardinal rule against putting to a jury an alternative defence that is at first glance incompatible with the primary defence. The issue is not whether such a defence is compatible or incompatible with the primary defence, but whether it meets the air of reality test. In any case, the trial judge must determine whether the alternative defence has a sufficient factual foundation, that is, whether a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could accept the defence if it believed the evidence to be true.

The defence of abandonment must be submitted to the jury only if there is evidence in the record that is reasonably capable of supporting the necessary inferences in respect of each of the elements of this defence. The defence can be raised by an accused who is a party to an offence on the basis that he or she did or omitted to do anything for the purpose of aiding any person to commit the offence, or abetted any person in committing it (s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code), or on the basis that he or she had formed with other persons an intention to carry out an unlawful purpose and to assist each other therein and that an offence was committed in carrying out the common purpose (s. 21(2) of the Criminal Code), if the evidence shows (1) that there was an intention to abandon or withdraw from the unlawful purpose; (2) that there was timely communication of this abandonment or withdrawal from the person in question to those who wished to continue; (3) that the communication served unequivocal notice upon those who wished to continue; and (4) that the accused took, in a manner proportional to his or her participation in the commission of the planned offence, reasonable steps in the circumstances either to neutralize or otherwise cancel out the effects of his or her participation or to prevent the commission of the offence. There will be circumstances in which timely and unequivocal communication by the accused of his or her intention to abandon the unlawful purpose will be considered sufficient to neutralize the effects of his or her participation in the crime. But there will be other circumstances, primarily where a person has aided in the commission of the offence, in which it is hard to see how timely communication to the principal offender of the person's intention to withdraw from the unlawful purpose will on its own be considered reasonable and sufficient.

In this case, G's evidence that she communicated her withdrawal from the deadly plan and that her communication was timely and unequivocal is insufficient. The only relevant passage from her testimony is one in which she used the plural pronoun "we" (using the French pronoun "on" as an equivalent for the plural "nous") in saying "I told Marc we couldn't [do that]". But even if it were assumed that this evidence would be sufficient for a jury to reasonably conclude that G had communicated her intention to withdraw from the plan and that her communication was timely and unequivocal, that communication would not on its own have sufficed, in the circumstances of this case, for the judge to put the defence of abandonment to the jury. G did more than merely promise to take part in the murder-suicide pact. She supplied her spouse with the intoxicants he used to cause the children's deaths. She therefore had to do more either to neutralize the effects of her participation or to prevent the commission of the offence. For example, she could have hidden or destroyed the medication she had purchased, remained watchful and taken the children to a safe place for the evening, insisted that her spouse give her verbal confirmation of what he intended to do, or simply called the authorities. The record did not therefore contain evidence upon which a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could have found that G had abandoned the common unlawful purpose, and could accordingly have acquitted her, if it believed the evidence to be true. The defence of abandonment therefore did not meet the air of reality test, and the trial judge was not required to put the defence to the jury.

Per Fish J. (dissenting): Canadian courts have for more than 70 years held that the defence of abandonment comprises only two essential elements: (i) change of intention; and (ii) where practical and reasonable, timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal. This test has been repeatedly and consistently applied in prosecutions under s. 21\(1\) and s. 21\(2\) of the Criminal Code alike. The defence of abandonment does not require that the accused take steps to neutralize prior participation in the criminal enterprise or to prevent the commission of the offence. While such evidence may strengthen a defence of abandonment, failure to take neutralizing or preventative steps is not fatal.

In light of the state of the law universally accepted in Canada at the time of G's trial, it would be fundamentally unfair at this stage to fault her for failing to demonstrate anything more than a change of intention, plus timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal from the murder-suicide pact. Since G's testimony provided some evidence on these two essential elements, there was an air of reality to the defence. The trial judge therefore erred by withholding the defence of abandonment from the jury. Incompatibility between G's defence of abandonment and her primary defence should not be relied upon to deprive the accused of a defence for which an air of reality has been established.

G testified that she told L his plan did not make sense and he "could not do it". She also told him that she did not want to be a part of it. She demonstrated her disapproval of the murder-suicide pact by tearing up two documents: a last will and testament written by her and a story of L's life containing references to the pact. She was convinced by his facial expression that the murder-suicide pact was off. This testimony provides some evidence that G no longer intended to participate in the murder-suicide pact and that she provided timely and unequivocal notice of this change of intention to the principal offender. That the evidence could have left the jury with a reasonable doubt as to G's guilt is all that was required. It was for the jury to determine whether G's words and conduct were believable and sufficient to demonstrate timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal.

G is entitled to a fresh trial, where the jury will not be wrongly prevented from considering on its merits her defence of abandonment, however weak and unpromising this Court might believe it to be.

Cases Cited

By Wagner J.

Considered: Wu v. The King, 1934 CanLII 28 \(SCC\), [1934] S.C.R. 609; R. v. Whitehouse (1940), 1940 CanLII 244 \(BC CA\), 55 B.C.R. 420; referred to: R. v. Cinous, 2002 SCC 29, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 3; R. v. Caron (1998), 1998 CanLII 10146 \(QC CA\), 126 C.C.C. (3d) 84; R. v. Graveline, 2006 SCC 16, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 609; R. v. Faid, 1983 CanLII 136 \(SCC\), [1983] 1 S.C.R. 265; Miller v. The Queen, 1976 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1977] 2 S.C.R. 680; Henderson v. The King, 1948 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1948] S.C.R. 226; R. v. Kirkness, 1990 CanLII 57 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 74; R. v. Bird, 2009 SCC 60, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 638; R. v. Fournier, 2007 QCCA 1822 \(CanLII\).

By Fish J. (dissenting)

R. v. Whitehouse (1940), 1940 CanLII 244 \(BC CA\), 55 B.C.R. 420; Henderson v. The King, 1948 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1948] S.C.R. 226; R. v. de Tonnancourt (1956), 1956 CanLII 470 \(MB CA\), 115 C.C.C. 154; R. v. Merrifield, 1977 CarswellOnt 1806; Miller v. The Queen, 1976 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1977] 2 S.C.R. 680; R. v. Wagner (1978), 1978 CanLII 401 \(BC CA\), 8 B.C.L.R. 258; R. v. Joyce (1978), 1978 CanLII 2422 \(BC CA\), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 141; R. v. Kirkness, 1990 CanLII 57 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 74; R. v. Johanson (1995), 1995 CanLII 18031 \(AB CJ\), 166 A.R. 60; R. v. Fournier, 2002 NBCA 71, 252 N.B.R. (2d) 256; R. v. McKercher, [2002] O.J. No. 5859 (QL); R. v. Forknall, 2003 BCCA 43, 176 B.C.A.C. 284; R. v. Lacoursière (2002), 2002 CanLII 41284 \(QC CA\), 7 C.R. (6th) 117; R. v. P.K., 2006 ABCA 299, 397 A.R. 318; R. v. S.R.B., 2009 ABCA 45, 448 A.R. 124, rev'd 2009 SCC 60, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 638 (sub nom. R. v. Bird); R. v. Ball, 2011 BCCA 11, 298 B.C.A.C. 166; R. v. Leslie, 2012 BCSC 683 \(CanLII\); R. v. O'Flaherty, [2004] EWCA Crim 526, [2004] 2 Cr. App. R. 20 (p. 315); R. v. Otway, [2011] EWCA Crim 3 (BAILII); R. v. Fournier, 2007 QCCA 1822 \(CanLII\); R. v. Edwards, 2001 BCSC 275 \(CanLII\); R. v. Cinous, 2002 SCC 29, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 3.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, s. 21.

Authors Cited

Campbell, Mark. “Turning Back the Clock: Aiders and the Defence of Abandonment” (2010), 14 Can. Crim. L.R. 1.

Manson, Allan. “Re-codifying Attempts, Parties, and Abandoned Intentions” (1989), 14 Queen’s L.J. 85.

Smith, John C. Commentary on R. v. Mitchell, [1999] Crim. L.R. 497.

Stuart, Don. Canadian Criminal Law: A Treatise, 6th ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 2011.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal (Rochette, Morin and Bouchard JJ.A.), 2011 QCCA 1395 \(CanLII\), SOQUIJ AZ-50774324, [2011] J.Q. n° 9850 (QL), 2011 CarswellQue 7766, upholding the accused’s convictions for first degree murder. Appeal dismissed, Fish J. dissenting.

René Duval, for the appellant.

Sonia Rouleau, Régis Boisvert and Mélanie Paré, for the respondent.

Grace Choi and Christine Bartlett-Hughes, for the intervener.

English version of the judgment of LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ. delivered by

WAGNER J. —

I. Overview

[1] Under Canadian law, individuals who intend to commit crimes may change their minds and avoid criminal liability by abandoning that intention. This appeal concerns, first of all, the circumstances in which a trial judge may put seemingly incompatible defences to a jury. Another question it raises is in what circumstances the trial judge must put the defence of abandonment to the jury in the context of the form of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21\(1\) of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46.

[2] The appellant, Cathie Gauthier, was charged with being a party, together with her spouse, to the murder of their three children at the dawn of the year 2009. On October 24 of that same year, upon completion of a trial by judge and jury, she was convicted on all three counts of first degree murder.

[3] She submits that the trial judge erred in deciding not to put to the jury the defence of abandonment of the common intention to kill the children. For reasons that differ from those of the Court of Appeal, I find that the judge did not err in doing so, and I would dismiss the appeal.

II. Facts

[4] The facts of this case reveal a set of circumstances, as dramatic as they were tragic, that engendered the despair that ultimately led to the murder of three young children.

[5] Before I discuss the questions of law raised by this appeal, a brief review of the facts is therefore in order.

[6] The appellant met Marc Laliberté in 2000 and decided to move in with him in Chibougamau with her daughter Joëlle from a previous union. The couple had two other children: Marc-Ange, born in 2001, and Louis-Philippe, born in 2004. They moved to Amos in 2002. Misfortune seemed to dog the family. The appellant was sexually assaulted, and this caused her considerable emotional distress as a result of which she was unable to leave the family home for very long. Marc Laliberté lost his mother and fell into a deep depression. Hoping for better luck, the family left Amos for Saguenay, where Kathie Ouellet, a childhood friend of the appellant's, lived. Marc Laliberté sold the family home and quit his job, and the family settled into their new surroundings. However, their new life got off to a rough start.

[7] Once in Saguenay, Marc Laliberté had difficulty finding a stable job and resigned himself to receiving employment insurance benefits. Meanwhile, the appellant was unable to hold on to the few short-term jobs she was able to find. In short, the couple encountered ever greater financial difficulties, and were forced to make an assignment in bankruptcy in October 2008.

[8] The holiday season was drawing near. On Christmas Eve, despite their bad luck, the couple decided to give the children the chance to enjoy this “festive” period. Marc Laliberté refused to pay the rent for December, and used the money so saved to buy numerous gifts for the children and for friends.

[9] On December 27, 2008, the appellant renewed her and her spouse's prescriptions for oxazepam, a soporific drug used to treat anxiety attacks, giving false reasons for doing so early. She told the pharmacist that her spouse was going through a difficult period and that they were about to go on a trip. While at the drug store, she also purchased some children's Graval. That same day, the family went to Normandin to visit members of Marc Laliberté's family for a few hours.

[10] On December 28, 2008, the appellant sent an e-mail message entitled [TRANSLATION] “a miracle, please” to the Fondation maman Dion in which, after recounting the family's difficulties, she asked for help. She wrote: “. . . I would like a miracle for Dec. 31, 2008”.

[11] The evening of December 29, she visited her friend Kathie Ouellet and told her that she did not know what she would do with her children if her spouse was not there. The next day, the appellant gave her nicest clothes to Ms. Ouellet.

[12] On December 31, according to the appellant, her spouse spent the morning working on the computer, and he turned the screen off every time she came near. Around noon, he joined her in the kitchen. He told her that he had made a decision and that the whole family would be leaving together. He then dictated some documents to her that she wrote down like a robot, she said, after which she had no memory of what was in them. Marc Laliberté then left the house. According to the appellant, it was then that she noticed some papers left on the kitchen counter, and after reading them, she realized what was going on. When her spouse returned in the afternoon, she told him she did not agree with the murder-suicide pact, and she tore up the documents. She claimed to have understood from the expression on her spouse's face that he had resigned himself to abandoning the dark plan.

[13] The appellant testified that the rest of the day was uneventful. That evening, as planned, the family sat down in front of the television to watch a movie together. Marc Laliberté prepared some drinks and popcorn for all the family. Shortly after that, the appellant noticed that one of the boys had fallen asleep, and then she too fell asleep. She said she had not suspected that their drinks had been poisoned.

[14] The physical evidence that was filed included two torn-up documents that had been found in the garbage can: a handwritten joint will, in the appellant's hand, and a document prepared on the computer by Marc Laliberté in which he told his life's story. Another copy of the will, typed out and signed by both spouses, was found on the kitchen island. Three handwritten letters from Cathie Gauthier to her friend Kathie Ouellet, to her biological mother and to her last employer completed the evidence. All these letters mentioned that the couple had decided together to end their and their children's lives. Some empty medicine bottles, as well as the prescriptions for oxazepam and the drug store's sales slip dated December 27, 2008, were also found in the kitchen.

[15] During the evening of January 1, 2009, the appellant called the emergency services number, asked for an ambulance and told the operator that her left wrist was slit, saying that [TRANSLATION] “it was a pact, my husband killed our three children”, and adding that “we told ourselves we wouldn’t start 2009, but . . .”.

[16] When first responders arrived on the scene, they found the appellant with an injured wrist and pronounced her spouse and their three children dead. The evidence shows that the children were poisoned with Gravol and oxazepam. Traces of oxazepam were also detected in the appellant, whose left wrist had allegedly been slit by her spouse, Marc Laliberté.

III. Trial by Judge and Jury

[17] At her jury trial, the appellant submitted in her defence that she had not bought the medication to poison her children, that she was in a dissociative state on December 31, 2008 when she wrote the incriminating documents, and that this state meant she could not have formed the specific intent to commit the murders. In the alternative, should her argument based on the absence of mens rea be rejected, she claimed to have abandoned the common purpose of killing the children and to have clearly communicated her intention to do so to her spouse.

[18] The Crown’s theory was based on the proposition that the appellant was a party, together with her spouse, to the murder of her three children in that they planned it together as part of a murder-suicide pact and in that she supplied the murder weapon. She did not act on December 31, 2008 to prevent the children from being poisoned with the drinks containing the medication. Thus, she aided Marc Laliberté to kill the children.

[19] In his final instructions, the trial judge told the jury that three possible verdicts were open to it: first degree murder, second degree murder or acquittal. On whether it was appropriate to put the defence of abandonment of the common purpose to the jury, the judge pointed out to counsel, in the jury’s absence, that when the defence of abandonment has come before Canadian courts, it has been in the context of the form of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21\(2\) of the Criminal Code, and he questioned the availability of this defence in the context of s. 21\(1\). Although he mentioned the defence of abandonment in summarizing the argument of counsel for the appellant for the jury, the judge did not put this alternative defence to the jury. After three days of deliberations, the jury found the appellant guilty of the first degree murder of her three children.

[20] Cathie Gauthier appealed that decision to the Court of Appeal, which upheld the guilty verdict. Bouchard J.A. concluded that the trial judge had not erred in refusing to put the defence of abandonment to the jury. In his view, an alternative defence that is incompatible with the defence's principal theory cannot be put to the jury (2011 QCCA 1395 \(CanLII\)).

IV. Relevant Provisions

[21] Section 21 of the Criminal Code reads as follows:

21. (1) [Parties to offence] Every one is a party to an offence who

(a) actually commits it;

(b) does or omits to do anything for the purpose of aiding any person to commit it; or

(c) abets any person in committing it.

(2) [Common intention] Where two or more persons form an intention in common to carry out an unlawful purpose and to assist each other therein and any one of them, in carrying out the common purpose, commits an offence, each of them who knew or ought to have known that the commission of the offence would be a probable consequence of carrying out the common purpose is a party to that offence.

V. Issues

[22] There are two main issues in this appeal. First, was it appropriate to exclude the defence of abandonment from the defences put to the jury on the basis that it was incompatible with the defence's principal theory, the absence of mens rea? If not, did the defence of abandonment meet the air of reality test? For the reasons that follow, I find that the answer to both these questions is no.

VI. Analysis

A. Was It Appropriate to Exclude the Alternative Defence of Abandonment From the Defences Put to the Jury Solely Because It Was Theoretically Incompatible With the Defence's Principal Theory?

1. When It Is Appropriate to Put a Defence to the Jury

[23] It is well established that any defence with an air of reality should go to the jury (R. v. Cinous, 2002 SCC 29, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 3, at para. 51). This Court has held that a defence meets the air of reality test if there is “(1) evidence (2) upon which a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could acquit if it believed the evidence to be true” (Cinous, at para. 82).

[24] The reason why the trial judge is required to screen the defences that can be put to the jury should be borne in mind. This requirement is essentially rooted in a concern not to confuse jurors by putting to them a defence that lacks an evidential foundation. This premise gives rise to two principles: On the one hand, a trial judge must put to the jury all defences that arise on the facts, regardless of whether they have been specifically raised by the accused. On the other hand, the judge must withhold from the jury any defences that lack an air of reality.

[25] The burden on the accused is merely evidential. If the trial judge properly applies the relevant principles, he or she must identify the evidence that is most favourable to the accused and assume it to be true, regardless of whether it was adduced or mentioned by the accused. The judge must not enquire into whether the witnesses are credible or assess the probative value of this evidence. If each element of a defence is supported by direct evidence or may reasonably be inferred from circumstantial evidence, the judge must put this defence to the jury.

2. Alternative Defences That Are Incompatible With the Defence's Principal Theory

[26] The Court of Appeal concluded, on the basis that the alternative defence of abandonment was incompatible with the appellant's principal theory, that the trial judge did not have to put this defence to the jury:

[TRANSLATION] In my opinion, the judge was right not to draw the jury's attention to this defence. I note that, according to the appellant, there was no suicide pact or planning, and she was in a dissociative state when her spouse told her of his plan for all of them to leave together. She could not therefore be allowed, if she were not believed, to change her story and maintain that she had pulled out of a plan whose existence she had been denying from the start. Taking part in a suicide pact and then pulling out of it is in itself plausible. However, that is not what the appellant is arguing. Rather, she is denying the very existence of such a pact and then claiming that she can pull out of it if she is not believed. The judge did not have to put to the jury this alternative defence that is incompatible with the appellant's principal theory [para. 71]

[27] The Crown takes a more nuanced position, arguing that, because the effect of the appellant's primary defence — which was essentially based on a total absence of mens rea — was that the defence of abandonment lacked any factual foundation and could not therefore apply, this alternative defence did not meet the air of reality test:

[TRANSLATION] Refusing to take part in a plan and abandoning a plan are defences that are logically incompatible with one another. If, throughout the trial, the appellant denies intending to kill her children, how can she, if she is not believed in this regard, change her position and say that she withdrew from a plan whose existence she has previously denied? The defence of abandonment of a common purpose necessarily implies a recognition of having been a party to that common purpose, which the appellant has always denied. [R.F., at para. 57]

[28] In this case, I agree with the Court of Appeal, although for different reasons, that the defence of abandonment should not have been put to the jury. Let me explain this.

[29] In Wu v. The King, 1934 CanLII 28 \(SCC\), [1934] S.C.R. 609, which was mentioned in R. v. Caron (1998), 1998 CanLII 10146 \(QC CA\), 126 C.C.C. (3d) 84 (Que. C.A.), a case the Court of Appeal cited with approval, this Court stated that a judge does not have a duty to put to the jury an alternative defence whose factual foundation is incompatible with the defence's principal theory. In Wu, the accused, after having raised only an alibi defence at trial, argued on appeal that the trial judge had erred in not putting to the jury the alternative defences of self-defence and provocation. Lamont J. made the following comments:

The rule, therefore, that an accused person at trial is entitled to have the jury pass upon all his alternative defences is limited to the defences of which a foundation of fact appears in the record. Even then the rule, in my opinion, is not without exception, and one exception is, that it has no application where the accused, by the defence which he sets up at the trial, has negatived the alternative defence for which he afterwards seeks a new trial.

...

. . . The defence that the accused was in Victoria at the time of the shooting was not only inconsistent with, but it negatived the defence now sought to be set up. Under these circumstances I fail to see how any duty could rest on the trial judge to instruct the jury to consider an alternative defence which the accused, by the defence he did set up, declared had no foundation in fact. [p. 617]

[30] With respect, Wu does not stand for the proposition that a judge does not have a duty to put to the jury an alternative defence that is theoretically incompatible with the defence's principal theory. Rather, it reaffirms the cardinal rule that the trial judge need not — indeed must not — put to the jury a defence in respect of which there is no evidence in the record that would be sufficient, if it existed and if it were believed to be true, for a jury acting reasonably to accept the defence. This is clear from the comments of Lamont J. on this point, which read in full as follows:

There is no doubt that in the trial court an accused person is ordinarily entitled to rely upon all alternative defences for which a foundation of fact appears in the record, and, in my opinion, it makes no difference whether the evidence which forms that foundation has been given by the witnesses for the Crown or for the accused, or otherwise. What is essential is, that the record contains evidence which, if accepted by the jury, would constitute a valid defence to the charge laid. Where such evidence appears it is the duty of the trial judge to call the attention of the jury to that evidence and instruct them in reference thereto. The only evidence appearing in the record upon which even an argument could be founded that the accused shot in self defence is that of Irwin and Bodner that, prior to the shooting, the complainant was running after the accused and his companion, waving his arms and shouting in Oriental. What he was saying we do not know. If it were material to the defence to prove that the words amounted to provocation, the onus was upon the accused to prove what the words were. On any event provocation, which would reduce murder to manslaughter, is not a defence to the charge as laid. Shooting in self defence would constitute a valid defence provided the accused brings himself within sections 53 and 54 of the Criminal Code. It is justifiable to repel an unprovoked attack if the force used by the accused is not meant to cause death or grievous bodily harm and is not more than is necessary for the purpose of self defence. It is justified, even if it does cause death or grievous bodily harm, if it is done under reasonable apprehension of death or grievous bodily harm to himself, and if he believes, on reasonable grounds, that it is necessary for his own preservation. There is no evidence in the record from which a jury could reasonably infer that the accused when he shot the complainant did so under a reasonable apprehension of death or bodily harm to himself, or that he reasonably believed that he could not otherwise save himself from bodily injury. [Emphasis added; pp. 616-17.]

[31] The passage from Wu quoted in the Court of Appeal's reasons, at para. 71, in support of the proposition that the trial judge is not required to put to the jury an alternative defence that is incompatible with the primary defence is merely an obiter dictum that could be a source of confusion and should not be relied on. An accused might, for example, raise an alibi defence and testify that he or she was not in the city where the crime was committed at the relevant time, whereas certain Crown witnesses say that the accused was at the scene of the crime but was highly intoxicated. Even though the defences of alibi and of self-induced intoxication are incompatible in theory, the trial judge should, in my view, put both of them to the jury if they both meet the air of reality test.

[32] More recently, in R. v. Graveline, 2006 SCC 16, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 609, this Court clarified the principle that if two defences are theoretically incompatible, they can nevertheless be put to the jury so long as they both meet the air of reality test. Although Fish J. pointed out that it is dangerous to put theoretically incompatible defences to a jury, he saw no error in the trial judge's decision to put to the jury, in addition to the primary defence of automatism, the alternative defence of self-defence the accused wished to raise. Regarding the incompatibility of the two defences, Fish J. wrote the following, at para. 10:

. . . the particular defences in issue here — automatism and self-defence — are, as the Crown suggested on the hearing of this appeal, incompatible in theory, though perhaps not always in practice. That is because self-defence implies deliberate conduct that is at odds with the fundamental premise of automatism, a state of dissociative, involuntary conduct.

[33] Nevertheless, the Court had held in R. v. Faid, 1983 CanLII 136 \(SCC\), [1983] 1 S.C.R. 265, that the trial judge had not erred in refusing to put the defence of provocation to the jury as an alternative to the primary defence of self-defence. Although it is true that these two defences are incompatible in theory — self-defence involves reasoned conduct, whereas provocation, on the contrary, presupposes a temporary loss of self-control — it is important to point out that the refusal was not based on this incompatibility. Rather, the Court found that there was no evidence in the record to support the argument that the accused had acted in the heat of passion. That case was not therefore one in which the effect of the primary defence was to deprive the alternative defence of the support of evidence that was actually in the record. In Faid, the defence of provocation quite simply did not meet the air of reality test, because there was no evidence related to its elements. Faid is one illustration of the principle that any defence with an air of reality should be put to the jury.

[34] In conclusion, there is no cardinal rule against putting to a jury an alternative defence that is at first glance incompatible with the primary defence. The issue is not whether such a defence is compatible or incompatible with the primary defence, but whether it meets the air of reality test. In any case, the trial judge must determine whether the alternative defence has a sufficient factual foundation, that is, whether a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could accept the defence if it believed the evidence to be true.

B. If the Defence of Abandonment Was Not Incompatible With the Principal Theory, Did It Meet the Air of Reality Test?

1. Essential Elements of the Defence of Abandonment

[35] The defence of abandonment had to be submitted to the jury only if there was evidence in the record that was reasonably capable of supporting the necessary inferences in respect of each of the elements of this defence. That being said, it is necessary to begin by identifying the essential elements of the defence.

[36] In Canadian law, the defence of abandonment, which has rarely been raised, was first referred to in R. v. Whitehouse (1940), 1940 CanLII 244 \(BC CA\), 55 B.C.R. 420 (C.A.). That case concerned the application of the defence in the specific context of the offence of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21\(2\) of the Criminal Code.

[37] In that context, the relevant test — which was subsequently endorsed in Miller v. The Queen, 1976 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1977] 2 S.C.R. 680, Henderson v. The King, 1948 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1948] S.C.R. 226, and R. v. Kirkness, 1990 CanLII 57 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 74 — was laid down as follows in Whitehouse, at p. 425:

I would not attempt to define too closely what must be done in criminal matters involving participation in a common unlawful purpose to break the chain of causation and responsibility. That must depend upon the circumstances of each case but it seems to me that one essential element ought to be established in a case of this kind: where practicable and reasonable there must be timely communication of the intention to abandon the common purpose from those who wish to dissociate themselves from the contemplated crime to those who desire to continue in it. What is “timely communication” must be determined by the facts of each case but where practicable and reasonable it ought to be such communication, verbal or otherwise, that will serve unequivocal notice upon the other party to the common unlawful cause that if he proceeds upon it he does so without the further aid and assistance of those who withdraw. The unlawful purpose of him who continues alone is then his own and not one in common with those who are no longer parties to it nor liable to its full and final consequences.

[38] Thus, it was held that a defence of abandonment has three essential elements: (1) there must be an intention to abandon or withdraw from the unlawful purpose, (2) there must be timely communication of this abandonment or withdrawal from the person in question to those who wish to continue, and (3) the notice so communicated to those who continue to participate in the common purpose must be unequivocal.

[39] This appeal raises the issue of the application of the defence of abandonment in the context of the form of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21\(1\) of the Criminal Code.

[40] The reasons for recognizing the defence of abandonment in Canadian law bear repeating. There are two policy reasons in criminal law for making this defence available to parties to offences. First, there is a need to ensure that only morally culpable persons are punished; second, there is a benefit to society in encouraging individuals involved in criminal activities to withdraw from those activities and report them.

[41] This Court implicitly acknowledged that the defence of abandonment applies in the context of s. 21(1) in R. v. Bird, 2009 SCC 60, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 638, in which it found that this defence did not meet the air of reality test in the case of an accused who had aided in the commission of a crime (see also R. v. Fournier, 2007 QCCA 1822 (CanLII)). However, since the Court found that the defence did not have an air of reality in that case, it did not on that occasion rule on the content of the defence in the specific context of the form of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code.

[42] It is well established that the scope of the defence of abandonment varies from case to case, depending on the circumstances (see the above-quoted passage from Whitehouse, at p. 425). In Kirkness, Wilson J. expressed the opinion that the content of the defence of abandonment depends on the type of offence and on the degree and form of participation of the accused. She endorsed, at p. 115, the following comment by Professor Manson:

Looking at the defence of abandoned intention in respect of parties, the key issues relate to the quality of withdrawal from the original plan and whether more is required to exculpate. These questions take on different significance depending on the form of accomplice liability in issue and the particular circumstances of a given case.

(A. Manson, “Re-codifying Attempts, Parties, and Abandoned Intentions” (1989), 14 Queen’s L.J. 85, at p. 95)

[43] Wilson J. also noted that there is a difference between the forms of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21(1) and s. 21(2), respectively, of the Criminal Code:

It is my view that since aiders and abettors have been treated differently from common intenders by Parliament, some difference between these two subsections must be recognized.

(Kirkness, at p. 116)

[44] Section 21(2) of the Criminal Code provides that a person who forms an intention to carry out an unlawful purpose in common with other persons is a party to an incidental offence committed by one of those other persons to the same extent as the person who actually committed it. This result derives from the first person's promise to devote physical and intellectual resources to the achievement of the common unlawful purpose. The person's liability in respect of the incidental offence therefore stems from his or her decision to participate in carrying out the unlawful purpose and to contribute resources needed to achieve it.

[45] In such a context, an intention to withdraw from the common purpose will — if a timely and unequivocal communication of this intention is addressed to the co-conspirators who persist in carrying out the unlawful purpose — be sufficient for the defence of abandonment to succeed. Communicating the intention to abandon the common purpose reduces the resources available to carry out the unlawful purpose and in so doing cancels out the effects of the participation of the withdrawing or abandoning person.

[46] The situation is very different in the context of the form of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code. Aiders and abettors generally do much more than promise their support in carrying out an unlawful purpose in the future. They perform concrete acts to aid the principal offender to commit the offence or to abet him or her in committing it. Their criminal liability and their moral culpability are proportional to these acts and stem from the fact that they have performed them. Thus, merely communicating in unequivocal terms their intention to cease participating in the commission of the offence will not be enough “to break the chain of causation and responsibility”, to repeat the words of Sloan J. from Whitehouse.

[47] Where a person's participation in a crime is more than a simple promise to carry out a common unlawful purpose — where, for example, the person is a party to the offence within the meaning of s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code — requiring an unequivocal communication of the intention to cease participating in the commission of the offence (the Whitehouse test) means that the accused must show that he or she took reasonable steps to neutralize the effects of his or her participation. As one author explains, using a colourful image to make his point, the intention to withdraw must be accompanied by acts that are likely to cancel out the effects of the acts that have already been performed to aid or abet the offender:

Once the arrow is in the air, it is no use wishing to have never let it go — “Please God, let it miss!” The archer is guilty of homicide when the arrow gets the victim through the heart. The withdrawer, it is true, does not merely change his mind: he withdraws — but is that relevant if the withdrawal has no more effect on subsequent events than the archer’s repentance? [Emphasis added.]

(J. C. Smith, Commentary on R. v. Mitchell, [1999] Crim. L.R. 497)

[48] In the Quebec Court of Appeal’s judgment in Fournier, the accused was convicted of the first degree murder of her husband because she had hired a contract killer to murder him, had promised and later paid financial consideration to the killer, and had provided the killer with the necessary details of time and place and with information needed to identify the target. Because of the numerous acts that had been performed to aid in the commission of the murder, communicating an intention to withdraw by merely leaving the message [TRANSLATION] “cancel” on the killer’s answering device was found to be insufficient to exculpate the accused. The acts of abandonment were not proportional to the acts performed in support of the commission of the offence.

[49] For all these reasons, I would reformulate as follows the test already established in Whitehouse and Kirkness for determining whether the defence of abandonment applies, in order to adapt it specifically to the various degrees and forms of participation in crimes.

[50] One who is a party to an offence on the basis that he or she did or omitted to do anything for the purpose of aiding any person to commit the offence, or abetted any person in committing it (s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code), or on the basis that he or she had formed with other persons an intention to carry out an unlawful purpose and to assist each other therein and that an offence was committed in carrying out the common purpose (s. 21(2) of the Criminal Code), may raise the defence of abandonment if the evidence shows

(1) that there was an intention to abandon or withdraw from the unlawful purpose;

- (2) that there was timely communication of this abandonment or withdrawal from the person in question to those who wished to continue;
- (3) that the communication served unequivocal notice upon those who wished to continue; and
- (4) that the accused took, in a manner proportional to his or her participation in the commission of the planned offence, reasonable steps in the circumstances either to neutralize or otherwise cancel out the effects of his or her participation or to prevent the commission of the offence.

[51] I recognize that there will be circumstances, even where the accused is a party within the meaning of s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code, in which timely and unequivocal communication by the accused of his or her intention to abandon the unlawful purpose will be considered sufficient to neutralize the effects of his or her participation in the crime. But there will be other circumstances, primarily where a person has aided in the commission of the offence, in which it is hard to see how timely communication to the principal offender of the person's intention to withdraw from the unlawful purpose will on its own be considered reasonable, and sufficient to meet the test set out in the preceding paragraph.

[52] In conclusion, and more specifically in the context of s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code, the defence of abandonment should be put to the jury only if there is evidence in the record that is capable of supporting a finding that a person who was initially a party to the carrying out of an unlawful purpose subsequently took reasonable steps in the circumstances either to neutralize the effects of his or her participation or to prevent the commission of the offence.

2. Application to the Case at Bar

[53] In the case at bar, the defence of abandonment did not have an air of reality.

[54] The evidence showed that the appellant had written several documents, including some incriminating letters that were evidence of the couple's intention to end their and their children's lives. The couple explained in the letters how they planned to kill the children and take their own lives: by intoxication using a soporific drug. It was the appellant who purchased the medication that caused the children's deaths.

[55] What evidence could therefore have justified the trial judge's putting the defence of abandonment to the jury?

[56] The evidence is incomplete, to say the least.

[57] The only evidence comes from the appellant's testimony that, in the afternoon of December 31, 2008, she had notified her spouse that she had changed her mind and no longer intended to participate in the common purpose:

[TRANSLATION] I noticed some papers he'd left lying around. I, I realized what was happening. I didn't want that. When Marc came back, I, I told him it was crazy, what he was telling me. I ripped up the papers. [A.R., at p. 834]

On cross-examination, she made the following statement:

[TRANSLATION] When I saw the papers and looked at what was written on them, I said that's crazy. And I told Marc we couldn't . . .

. . .

I told Marc he couldn't do that, that I didn't want to be part of it. [Emphasis added; A.R., at p. 910.]

[58] The appellant also testified that the expression on her spouse's face had convinced her that he too had abandoned the sinister plan:

[TRANSLATION] But I gathered from his face that he was getting the message, too, and that it was all right. [A.R., at p. 913]

[59] Counsel for the appellant argues that, in light of this evidence, the trial judge had sufficient reasons to put the defence of abandonment to the jury. I find this argument wanting.

[60] In my view, the appellant's evidence that she communicated her withdrawal from the deadly plan and that her communication was timely and unequivocal is insufficient for the purposes of the air of reality test. To meet that test, it is not enough to simply identify "some evidence" or "any evidence"; the evidence must be "reasonably capable of supporting the inferences required for the defence to succeed" (Cinous, at paras. 82-83).

[61] The only relevant passage from the appellant's testimony is the one in which she used the plural pronoun "we" (using the French pronoun "on" as an equivalent for the plural "nous") in saying "I told Marc we couldn't [do that]". This passage stands alone in the appellant's principal narrative to the effect that she never agreed to the murder-suicide pact, that she wrote the incriminating letters while in a dissociative state and that she told her spouse she disagreed with what he was planning to do as soon as she realized what it was.

[62] Nevertheless, even if it were assumed that the evidence the appellant relies upon would be sufficient for a jury to reasonably conclude that she had communicated her intention to withdraw from the plan and that her communication was timely and unequivocal, that communication would not on its own have sufficed, in the circumstances of this case, for the judge to put the defence of abandonment to the jury.

[63] The appellant did more than merely promise to take part in the murder-suicide pact. She supplied her spouse with the intoxicants he used to cause the children's deaths. She therefore had to do more either to neutralize the effects of her participation or to prevent the commission of the offence. For example, she could have hidden or destroyed the medication she had purchased, remained watchful and taken the children to a safe place for the evening, insisted that her spouse give her verbal confirmation of what he intended to do, or simply called the authorities.

[64] I conclude that the record did not contain evidence upon which a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could have found that the appellant had abandoned the common unlawful purpose, and could accordingly have acquitted her, if it believed the evidence to be true. The defence of abandonment therefore did not meet the air of reality test, and the trial judge was not required to put the defence to the jury.

VII. Disposition

[65] For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal.

The following are the reasons delivered by

FISH J. (dissenting) —

I

[66] Justice Wagner has set out with care and sensitivity the tragic and desperate circumstances that culminated in the murder by the appellant's husband of their three children and his own virtually contemporaneous suicide.

[67] In the wake of that tragedy and despair, the appellant, Cathie Gauthier, now stands convicted of first degree murder. And she has been sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for 25 years.

[68] The Crown's case against Ms. Gauthier is that she and her husband entered a murder-suicide pact that was executed with her help. She testified at trial that she had demonstrated her disapproval of the pact before the children were murdered and had notified her husband of this unwillingness to go through with the plan.

[69] Defence counsel urged the trial judge to leave open for the jury’s consideration Ms. Gauthier’s defence of abandonment. The trial judge declined to do so. The Court of Appeal upheld the trial judge on the ground that it was an [TRANSLATION] “incompatible . . . defence”: 2011 QCCA 1395 \(CanLII\). Both courts below erred in law in this regard.

[70] The Court of Appeal did not consider whether the appellant’s defence of abandonment had an “air of reality” — that is to say, whether there was any evidence upon which a properly instructed jury might entertain a reasonable doubt on that issue.

[71] On the law as it was then understood, the trial judge was bound to put abandonment to the jury if there was evidence that the appellant (a) had changed — or “abandoned” — her earlier intention to aid or abet the murder of her children, and (b) had adequately communicated to her husband that she had withdrawn from their pact.

[72] This Court has repeatedly held that the defence of abandonment includes no other essential elements. And our attention has not been drawn to a single Canadian decision to the contrary, at any level.

[73] In my view, there was evidence at Ms. Gauthier’s trial upon which a properly instructed jury might well have found that she had abandoned the suicide pact in respect of which she was charged and convicted of murder. Or at least have been left with a reasonable doubt on this issue, which would of course have sufficed to warrant Ms. Gauthier’s acquittal.

[74] As a matter of law, the appellant is entitled, in my respectful view, to a fresh trial, where the jury will not be wrongly prevented from considering on its merits Ms. Gauthier’s defence of abandonment, however weak and unpromising we might believe it to be. I am aware of no legal principle that permits us to deprive her of that right.

[75] In his thorough and thoughtful reasons, Justice Wagner proposes that we now adopt additional requirements for a valid defence of abandonment where the accused, as in this case, has done something to aid or abet the commission of the offence before satisfying the two established elements of abandonment. As we shall see, there are strong reasons of policy and precedent for resisting the proposed changes.

[76] As we shall see as well, I am not persuaded that the modifications we endorse should be made applicable on a retrial of the appellant. But even if we decide that they are, the appellant would at least be entitled to a fair opportunity to satisfy those newly recognized requirements. Her failure to do so at her first trial — prior to their recognition by this Court or, it seems, by any Canadian court — can hardly deprive Ms. Gauthier of a proper opportunity to do so now.

[77] With respect for those who are of a different view, I would therefore allow the appeal, set aside the appellant's convictions and order a new trial.

II

[78] Canadian courts have for more than 70 years held that the defence of abandonment comprises only two essential elements: (i) change of intention; and (ii) where practical and reasonable, timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal.

[79] These requirements emanate from R. v. Whitehouse (1940), 1940 CanLII 244 \(BC CA\), 55 B.C.R. 420 (C.A.), a decision that has been repeatedly approved and followed by this Court, as I mentioned earlier, and has long been firmly entrenched in Canadian law: see Henderson v. The King, 1948 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1948] S.C.R. 226, at pp. 236-37; R. v. de Tonnancourt (1956), 1956 CanLII 470 \(MB CA\), 115 C.C.C. 154 (Man. C.A.), at pp. 176 and 201-3; R. v. Merrifield, 1977 CarswellOnt 1806 (C.A.), at para. 3; Miller v. The Queen, 1976 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1977] 2 S.C.R. 680, at p. 708; R. v. Wagner (1978), 1978 CanLII 401 \(BC CA\), 8 B.C.L.R. 258 (C.A.), at pp. 260-61; R. v. Joyce (1978), 1978 CanLII 2422 \(BC CA\), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 141 (B.C.C.A.), at p. 150; R. v. Kirkness, 1990 CanLII 57 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 74, at p. 89; R. v. Johanson (1995), 1995 CanLII 18031 \(AB CJ\), 166 A.R. 60 (Prov. Ct.), at para. 23; R. v. Fournier, 2002 NBCA 71, 252 N.B.R. (2d) 256, at para. 22; R. v. McKercher, [2002] O.J. No. 5859 (QL) (Ct.

J.), at para. 77; R. v. Forknall, 2003 BCCA 43, 176 B.C.A.C. 284, at paras. 51-53; R. v. Lacoursière (2002), 2002 CanLII 41284 (QC CA), 7 C.R. (6th) 117 (Que. C.A.), at paras. 25-29; R. v. P.K., 2006 ABCA 299, 397 A.R. 318, at para. 12; R. v. S.R.B., 2009 ABCA 45, 448 A.R. 124, at paras. 10, 19-20 and 24-30, rev'd R. v. Bird, 2009 SCC 60, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 638, at para. 1; R. v. Ball, 2011 BCCA 11, 298 B.C.A.C. 166, at paras. 44-47; and R. v. Leslie, 2012 BCSC 683 (CanLII), at paras. 552-58.

[80] Justice Wagner does not suggest that the defence of abandonment, as it stood at the time of Ms. Gauthier's trial, required anything more than a change of intention, accompanied by timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal. Rather, my colleague proposes a new and different test.

[81] To this end, my colleague distinguishes for present purposes between s. 21(1) and s. 21(2) of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46. The former deals with liability for aiding or abetting another in the commission of a specific offence; the latter, with liability for an offence committed by another in carrying out a common unlawful purpose.

[82] Justice Wagner would impose additional requirements on the defence of abandonment, particularly with respect to liability under s. 21(1), where the accused would need to adduce evidence that he or she took steps to neutralize any prior contribution to the commission of the offence or, in the alternative, to prevent the commission of the offence.

[83] With respect, this approach overlooks the fact that both s. 21(1) and s. 21(2) can involve active participation by the accused: see for example Henderson and Miller.

[84] Moreover, the Whitehouse test has been repeatedly and consistently applied in prosecutions under s. 21(1) and s. 21(2) alike.

[85] The application of the Whitehouse criteria to an aiding and abetting case was endorsed very recently by this Court in 2009, and even more recently by other Canadian courts:

Bird (affirming Costigan J.A.'s dissent); Ball, at paras. 44-47; and Leslie, at paras. 552-58.

[86] Indeed, Whitehouse itself involved parties to an offence who had “aided and abetted in the commission of the crime”: p. 424. They had “performed part, at least, of the tasks assigned to them”: again, at p. 424.

[87] It was out of this factual context that the test for abandonment was born. And the court identified only two requirements: the first, change of intention; the second, timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal — that is, the accused must clearly communicate to the principal “that if he proceeds upon it he does so without the further aid and assistance of those who withdraw”: Whitehouse, at p. 425 (emphasis added).

[88] As the language of this oft-cited passage makes clear, the Whitehouse test for abandonment expressly contemplates prior aid and assistance.

[89] Moreover, to suggest that an accused under either subsection of s. 21 must neutralize prior involvement disregards an important rationale of the defence of abandonment, namely, giving the principal offender the opportunity to abandon the criminal objective. As Allan Manson explains in “Re-codifying Attempts, Parties, and Abandoned Intentions” (1989), 14 Queen's L.J. 85, at p. 101:

. . . the premise upon which Whitehouse is based: “Let it be known, if you go then you go alone.” Unequivocal withdrawal and the element of timeliness are sufficiently expansive to accommodate abettors and aiders alike because, as in Becerra and Gundy, the aim is to compel the principal to reconsider the objective in time to abandon it. This, after all, is the preventative rationale for party responsibility. Thus the defence of abandonment as structured in Whitehouse can apply with equal fairness and effect to all parties including aiders by interpreting timeliness in relation to the offence and the goal of ultimate abandonment.

[90] Even the most ardent proponents of a more stringent abandonment defence recognize that to require neutralizing or preventative steps would necessitate a change to Canadian law: see

M. Campbell, “Turning Back the Clock: Aiders and the Defence of Abandonment” (2010), 14 Can. Crim. L.R. 1, at pp. 16-17.

[91] Courts in the United Kingdom, approving Whitehouse, have concluded that neutralizing or preventative steps are not required to establish abandonment. In R. v. O’Flaherty, [2004] EWCA Crim 526, [2004] 2 Cr. App. R. 20 (p. 315), at para. 60, the Court of Appeal acknowledged that whether an accused has done enough “to demonstrate that he or she is withdrawing from the joint enterprise . . . is ultimately a question of fact and degree for the jury”. The jury should account for “the nature of the assistance and encouragement already given and how imminent the infliction of the fatal injury or injuries is, as well as the nature of the action said to constitute withdrawal”. And, the court explicitly rejected the proposition that effective withdrawal requires reasonable steps to prevent the crime:

In cases of assistance it has sometimes been suggested that, for there to be an effective withdrawal, reasonable steps must have been taken to prevent the crime. It is clear, however, this is not necessary. [Para. 60; see also para. 61.]

See also R. v. Otway, [2011] EWCA Crim 3 (BAILII), at para. 32, where the court held that efforts to prevent the crime were relevant but not required for withdrawal.

[92] Justice Wagner relies on R. v. Fournier, 2007 QCCA 1822 \(CanLII\), to support his position that mere communication of changed intention should henceforth be insufficient for abandonment in s. 21(1) cases (para. 48 of Justice Wagner’s reasons). However, in Fournier, unlike this case, the defence of abandonment was not kept from the jury. Indeed, the Court of Appeal held that the trial judge properly instructed the jury that abandonment required timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal: Fournier, at paras. 18-20.

[93] I agree with my colleague that the internally repentant archer cannot, having let the arrow fly, seek refuge in the defence of abandonment (para. 47 of Justice Wagner’s reasons). The defence fails in Sir John Smith’s illustration not because preventative or neutralizing steps are required, but rather because notice of withdrawal comes too late, or not at all.

[94] These authorities all make clear that the defence of abandonment does not require that the accused take steps to neutralize prior participation in the criminal enterprise or to prevent the commission of the offence. While such evidence may strengthen a defence of abandonment, failure to take neutralizing or preventative steps is not fatal. Thus, for example, in R. v. Edwards, 2001 BCSC 275 (CanLII), at para. 186, the accused’s efforts to stop the commission of the offence were treated as evidence that the Whitehouse requirements were met — not as additional requirements of the defence.

[95] If we were to accept that the defence of abandonment now requires that an accused take steps to neutralize previous assistance or to prevent the commission of the crime, I am inclined to believe that this change should only be given prospective effect — at least in this case. As Don Stuart explains in Canadian Criminal Law: A Treatise (6th ed. 2011), at p. 9: “It is almost universally accepted that the view that judges merely declare existing law rather than create new law is outmoded and wrong.”

[96] But on any view of the matter, in light of the state of the law universally accepted in Canada at the time of the appellant’s trial, it would be fundamentally unfair at this stage to fault the appellant for failing to demonstrate anything more than a change of intention, plus timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal from the murder-suicide pact. Since the appellant’s testimony provided some evidence on these two essential elements, there was an air of reality to the defence. The trial judge therefore erred by withholding the defence of abandonment from the jury.

III

[97] I agree with Justice Wagner that the “incompatibility” between Ms. Gauthier’s defence of abandonment and her primary defence did not justify the trial judge’s decision to prevent the jury from considering them both. And I am therefore content to add only these brief comments on the issue of incompatibility.

[98] Incompatibility should not be relied upon to deprive the accused of a defence for which an air of reality has been established, particularly where — as in this case — defence counsel has requested that it be included in the judge’s charge: A.R., at pp. 1018 and 1037-38.

[99] As Kellock J. stated in Henderson: “It is a paramount principle of law that when a defence, however weak it may be, is raised by a person charged, it should be fairly put before the jury”: p. 241. Taschereau J. likewise emphasized the accused’s “fundamental right . . . to have all the features of [the] defence adequately put to the jury”: Henderson, at p. 237.

IV

[100] For abandonment to be left for the jury, there must be some evidence upon which a properly instructed jury could form a reasonable doubt on the two essential elements of the defence: R. v. Cinous, 2002 SCC 29, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 3, at paras. 2, 49, 52-54 and 83. In my view, the appellant’s testimony satisfied this modest evidentiary threshold.

[101] Indeed, there was no suggestion at trial by the Crown— nor finding by the trial judge or the Court of Appeal — that the defence of abandonment lacked an air of reality.

[102] The appellant testified that she told Marc Laliberté his plan did not make sense and he [TRANSLATION] “could not do it” (“pouvait pas faire ça”). She also told him that she did not want to be a part of it. She demonstrated her disapproval of the murder-suicide pact by tearing up two documents: a last will and testament written by the appellant and a story of Marc Laliberté’s life containing references to the pact. She was convinced by his facial expression that the murder-suicide pact was off: A.R., at pp. 834-35 and 910-11.

[103] This testimony provides some evidence that the appellant no longer intended to participate in the murder-suicide pact and that she provided timely and unequivocal notice of this change of intention to the principal offender. That the evidence could have left the jury with a reasonable doubt as to the appellant’s guilt is all that was required.

[104] Whether the appellant ultimately “did enough” to communicate timely and unequivocal withdrawal was a question of fact that should have been left for the jury to decide: P.K., at para. 11; O’Flaherty, at para. 60; Cinous, at paras. 52 and 54.

[105] In short, it was for the jury to determine whether the appellant’s words and conduct were believable and sufficient to demonstrate timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal. As Taschereau J. stated, again in Henderson, at p. 237: “The question whether the agreement has been put to an end, must be judged in view of all the circumstances revealed by the evidence, and I have no doubt that it is a question for the jury.”

[106] With respect, I feel bound to conclude that the trial judge, by declining to instruct on the defence of abandonment, encroached “on the jury’s traditional function as arbiter of fact”: Cinous, at para. 56.

V

[107] For the foregoing reasons, I would allow the appeal, set aside the appellant’s convictions, and order a new trial.

Appeal dismissed, FISH J. dissenting.

Solicitors for the appellant: Duval Lauzon Ménard, Trois-Rivières.

Solicitor for the respondent: Directeur des poursuites criminelles et pénales du Québec, Chicoutimi.

Solicitor for the intervener: Attorney General of Ontario, Toronto.

TAB 48

R. v. Gauthier, 2013 SCC 32 (CanLII), [2013] 2 SCR 403

Source:	Supreme Court of Canada
Date:	2013-06-07
File number:	34444
Other citations:	360 DLR (4th) 1 — 445 NR 97 — [2013] EXP 1924 — 298 CCC (3d) 277 — 2 CR (7th) 269 — 108 WCB (2d) 793 — EYB 2013-222820 — JE 2013-1033 — [2013] SCJ No 32 (QL)
Citation:	R. v. Gauthier, 2013 SCC 32 (CanLII), [2013] 2 SCR 403, < https://canlii.ca/t/fxsxs >, retrieved on 2026-03-23
Most recent unfavourable mention	R. v. Bengy , 2015 ONCA 397 (CanLII) [...] This case is distinguishable from R. v. Gauthier, 2013 SCC 32 , [2013] 2 S.C.R. 403 , in which the trial judge ruled that even though two defences had an air of reality, only one would be sent to the jury because the two defences were incompatible. [...]

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CITATION: R. v. Gauthier, 2013 SCC 32, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 403

DATE: 20130607

DOCKET: 34444

BETWEEN:

Cathie Gauthier
Appellant
and
Her Majesty The Queen
Respondent
- and -
Attorney General of Ontario
Intervener

OFFICIAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION: Reasons of Wagner J.

CORAM: LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT: Wagner J. (LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver and Karakatsanis JJ. concurring)
(paras. 1 to 65)

DISSENTING REASONS: Fish J.
(paras. 66 to 107)

R. v. Gauthier, 2013 SCC 32, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 403

Cathie Gauthier Appellant

v.

Her Majesty The Queen Respondent

and

Attorney General of Ontario Intervener

Indexed as: R. v. Gauthier

2013 SCC 32

File No.: 34444.

2012: December 13; 2013: June 7.

Present: LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR QUEBEC

Criminal law — Defences — Charge to jury — Defences that are incompatible in theory — Accused charged with being party, together with her spouse, to murder of their three children — Alternative defence that accused had abandoned common intention to kill children — Whether it was appropriate to exclude defence of abandonment from defences put to jury on basis that it was incompatible with defence's principal theory, absence of mens rea.

*Criminal law — Defences — Abandonment — Participation in crime — Accused charged with being party, together with her spouse, to murder of their three children — Alternative defence that accused had abandoned common intention to kill children — Essential elements of defence of abandonment in context of forms of participation in crime provided for in s. 21\(1\) and s. 21\(2\) of Criminal Code — Whether defence of abandonment raised by accused met air of reality test.*

G was charged with being a party, together with her spouse, L, to the murder of their three children at the dawn of the year 2009. According to the Crown's theory, G was a party to the murder in planning it as part of a murder-suicide pact and in supplying the murder weapon. She did not act to prevent the children from being poisoned with drinks served by her spouse, which contained Gravol and oxazepam. Thus, she aided L to kill the children. At her jury trial, G submitted in her defence that she had not bought the medication to poison her children, that she was in a dissociative state on December 31, 2008 when she wrote some incriminating documents, and that this state meant she could not have formed the specific intent to commit the murders. In the alternative, should her argument based on the absence of mens rea be rejected, she claimed to have abandoned the common purpose of killing the children and to have clearly communicated her intention to do so to her spouse. The jury found G guilty of the first degree murder of her three children. The Court of Appeal upheld the guilty verdict, concluding that the trial judge had not erred in refusing to put the defence of abandonment to the jury, since it was incompatible with the defence's principal theory.

Held (Fish J. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed.

Per LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ.: There is no cardinal rule against putting to a jury an alternative defence that is at first glance incompatible with the primary defence. The issue is not whether such a defence is compatible or incompatible with the primary defence, but whether it meets the air of reality test. In any case, the trial judge must determine whether the alternative defence has a sufficient factual foundation, that is, whether a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could accept the defence if it believed the evidence to be true.

The defence of abandonment must be submitted to the jury only if there is evidence in the record that is reasonably capable of supporting the necessary inferences in respect of each of the elements of this defence. The defence can be raised by an accused who is a party to an offence on the basis that he or she did or omitted to do anything for the purpose of aiding any person to commit the offence, or abetted any person in committing it (s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code), or on the basis that he or she had formed with other persons an intention to carry out an unlawful purpose and to assist each other therein and that an offence was committed in carrying out the common purpose (s. 21(2) of the Criminal Code), if the evidence shows (1) that there was an intention to abandon or withdraw from the unlawful purpose; (2) that there was timely communication of this abandonment or withdrawal from the person in question to those who wished to continue; (3) that the communication served unequivocal notice upon those who wished to continue; and (4) that the accused took, in a manner proportional to his or her participation in the commission of the planned offence, reasonable steps in the circumstances either to neutralize or otherwise cancel out the effects of his or her participation or to prevent the commission of the offence. There will be circumstances in which timely and unequivocal communication by the accused of his or her intention to abandon the unlawful purpose will be considered sufficient to neutralize the effects of his or her participation in the crime. But there will be other circumstances, primarily where a person has aided in the commission of the offence, in which it is hard to see how timely communication to the principal offender of the person's intention to withdraw from the unlawful purpose will on its own be considered reasonable and sufficient.

In this case, G's evidence that she communicated her withdrawal from the deadly plan and that her communication was timely and unequivocal is insufficient. The only relevant passage from her testimony is one in which she used the plural pronoun "we" (using the French pronoun "on" as an equivalent for the plural "nous") in saying "I told Marc we couldn't [do that]". But even if it were assumed that this evidence would be sufficient for a jury to reasonably conclude that G had communicated her intention to withdraw from the plan and that her communication was timely and unequivocal, that communication would not on its own have sufficed, in the circumstances of this case, for the judge to put the defence of abandonment to the jury. G did more than merely promise to take part in the murder-suicide pact. She supplied her spouse with the intoxicants he used to cause the children's deaths. She therefore had to do more either to neutralize the effects of her participation or to prevent the commission of the offence. For example, she could have hidden or destroyed the medication she had purchased, remained watchful and taken the children to a safe place for the evening, insisted that her spouse give her verbal confirmation of what he intended to do, or simply called the authorities. The record did not therefore contain evidence upon which a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could have found that G had abandoned the common unlawful purpose, and could accordingly have acquitted her, if it believed the evidence to be true. The defence of abandonment therefore did not meet the air of reality test, and the trial judge was not required to put the defence to the jury.

Per Fish J. (dissenting): Canadian courts have for more than 70 years held that the defence of abandonment comprises only two essential elements: (i) change of intention; and (ii) where practical and reasonable, timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal. This test has been repeatedly and consistently applied in prosecutions under s. 21\(1\) and s. 21\(2\) of the Criminal Code alike. The defence of abandonment does not require that the accused take steps to neutralize prior participation in the criminal enterprise or to prevent the commission of the offence. While such evidence may strengthen a defence of abandonment, failure to take neutralizing or preventative steps is not fatal.

In light of the state of the law universally accepted in Canada at the time of G's trial, it would be fundamentally unfair at this stage to fault her for failing to demonstrate anything more than a change of intention, plus timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal from the murder-suicide pact. Since G's testimony provided some evidence on these two essential elements, there was an air of reality to the defence. The trial judge therefore erred by withholding the defence of abandonment from the jury. Incompatibility between G's defence of abandonment and her primary defence should not be relied upon to deprive the accused of a defence for which an air of reality has been established.

G testified that she told L his plan did not make sense and he "could not do it". She also told him that she did not want to be a part of it. She demonstrated her disapproval of the murder-suicide pact by tearing up two documents: a last will and testament written by her and a story of L's life containing references to the pact. She was convinced by his facial expression that the murder-suicide pact was off. This testimony provides some evidence that G no longer intended to participate in the murder-suicide pact and that she provided timely and unequivocal notice of this change of intention to the principal offender. That the evidence could have left the jury with a reasonable doubt as to G's guilt is all that was required. It was for the jury to determine whether G's words and conduct were believable and sufficient to demonstrate timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal.

G is entitled to a fresh trial, where the jury will not be wrongly prevented from considering on its merits her defence of abandonment, however weak and unpromising this Court might believe it to be.

Cases Cited

By Wagner J.

Considered: Wu v. The King, 1934 CanLII 28 \(SCC\), [1934] S.C.R. 609; R. v. Whitehouse (1940), 1940 CanLII 244 \(BC CA\), 55 B.C.R. 420; referred to: R. v. Cinous, 2002 SCC 29, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 3; R. v. Caron (1998), 1998 CanLII 10146 \(QC CA\), 126 C.C.C. (3d) 84; R. v. Graveline, 2006 SCC 16, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 609; R. v. Faid, 1983 CanLII 136 \(SCC\), [1983] 1 S.C.R. 265; Miller v. The Queen, 1976 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1977] 2 S.C.R. 680; Henderson v. The King, 1948 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1948] S.C.R. 226; R. v. Kirkness, 1990 CanLII 57 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 74; R. v. Bird, 2009 SCC 60, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 638; R. v. Fournier, 2007 QCCA 1822 \(CanLII\).

By Fish J. (dissenting)

R. v. Whitehouse (1940), 1940 CanLII 244 \(BC CA\), 55 B.C.R. 420; Henderson v. The King, 1948 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1948] S.C.R. 226; R. v. de Tonnancourt (1956), 1956 CanLII 470 \(MB CA\), 115 C.C.C. 154; R. v. Merrifield, 1977 CarswellOnt 1806; Miller v. The Queen, 1976 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1977] 2 S.C.R. 680; R. v. Wagner (1978), 1978 CanLII 401 \(BC CA\), 8 B.C.L.R. 258; R. v. Joyce (1978), 1978 CanLII 2422 \(BC CA\), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 141; R. v. Kirkness, 1990 CanLII 57 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 74; R. v. Johanson (1995), 1995 CanLII 18031 \(AB CJ\), 166 A.R. 60; R. v. Fournier, 2002 NBCA 71, 252 N.B.R. (2d) 256; R. v. McKercher, [2002] O.J. No. 5859 (QL); R. v. Forknall, 2003 BCCA 43, 176 B.C.A.C. 284; R. v. Lacoursière (2002), 2002 CanLII 41284 \(QC CA\), 7 C.R. (6th) 117; R. v. P.K., 2006 ABCA 299, 397 A.R. 318; R. v. S.R.B., 2009 ABCA 45, 448 A.R. 124, rev'd 2009 SCC 60, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 638 (sub nom. R. v. Bird); R. v. Ball, 2011 BCCA 11, 298 B.C.A.C. 166; R. v. Leslie, 2012 BCSC 683 \(CanLII\); R. v. O'Flaherty, [2004] EWCA Crim 526, [2004] 2 Cr. App. R. 20 (p. 315); R. v. Otway, [2011] EWCA Crim 3 (BAILII); R. v. Fournier, 2007 QCCA 1822 \(CanLII\); R. v. Edwards, 2001 BCSC 275 \(CanLII\); R. v. Cinous, 2002 SCC 29, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 3.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, s. 21.

Authors Cited

Campbell, Mark. “Turning Back the Clock: Aiders and the Defence of Abandonment” (2010), 14 Can. Crim. L.R. 1.

Manson, Allan. “Re-codifying Attempts, Parties, and Abandoned Intentions” (1989), 14 Queen’s L.J. 85.

Smith, John C. Commentary on R. v. Mitchell, [1999] Crim. L.R. 497.

Stuart, Don. Canadian Criminal Law: A Treatise, 6th ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 2011.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal (Rochette, Morin and Bouchard JJ.A.), 2011 QCCA 1395 \(CanLII\), SOQUIJ AZ-50774324, [2011] J.Q. n° 9850 (QL), 2011 CarswellQue 7766, upholding the accused’s convictions for first degree murder. Appeal dismissed, Fish J. dissenting.

René Duval, for the appellant.

Sonia Rouleau, Régis Boisvert and Mélanie Paré, for the respondent.

Grace Choi and Christine Bartlett-Hughes, for the intervener.

English version of the judgment of LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ. delivered by

WAGNER J. —

I. Overview

[1] Under Canadian law, individuals who intend to commit crimes may change their minds and avoid criminal liability by abandoning that intention. This appeal concerns, first of all, the circumstances in which a trial judge may put seemingly incompatible defences to a jury. Another question it raises is in what circumstances the trial judge must put the defence of abandonment to the jury in the context of the form of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21\(1\) of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46.

[2] The appellant, Cathie Gauthier, was charged with being a party, together with her spouse, to the murder of their three children at the dawn of the year 2009. On October 24 of that same year, upon completion of a trial by judge and jury, she was convicted on all three counts of first degree murder.

[3] She submits that the trial judge erred in deciding not to put to the jury the defence of abandonment of the common intention to kill the children. For reasons that differ from those of the Court of Appeal, I find that the judge did not err in doing so, and I would dismiss the appeal.

II. Facts

[4] The facts of this case reveal a set of circumstances, as dramatic as they were tragic, that engendered the despair that ultimately led to the murder of three young children.

[5] Before I discuss the questions of law raised by this appeal, a brief review of the facts is therefore in order.

[6] The appellant met Marc Laliberté in 2000 and decided to move in with him in Chibougamau with her daughter Joëlle from a previous union. The couple had two other children: Marc-Ange, born in 2001, and Louis-Philippe, born in 2004. They moved to Amos in 2002. Misfortune seemed to dog the family. The appellant was sexually assaulted, and this caused her considerable emotional distress as a result of which she was unable to leave the family home for very long. Marc Laliberté lost his mother and fell into a deep depression. Hoping for better luck, the family left Amos for Saguenay, where Kathie Ouellet, a childhood friend of the appellant's, lived. Marc Laliberté sold the family home and quit his job, and the family settled into their new surroundings. However, their new life got off to a rough start.

[7] Once in Saguenay, Marc Laliberté had difficulty finding a stable job and resigned himself to receiving employment insurance benefits. Meanwhile, the appellant was unable to hold on to the few short-term jobs she was able to find. In short, the couple encountered ever greater financial difficulties, and were forced to make an assignment in bankruptcy in October 2008.

[8] The holiday season was drawing near. On Christmas Eve, despite their bad luck, the couple decided to give the children the chance to enjoy this “festive” period. Marc Laliberté refused to pay the rent for December, and used the money so saved to buy numerous gifts for the children and for friends.

[9] On December 27, 2008, the appellant renewed her and her spouse's prescriptions for oxazepam, a soporific drug used to treat anxiety attacks, giving false reasons for doing so early. She told the pharmacist that her spouse was going through a difficult period and that they were about to go on a trip. While at the drug store, she also purchased some children's Graval. That same day, the family went to Normandin to visit members of Marc Laliberté's family for a few hours.

[10] On December 28, 2008, the appellant sent an e-mail message entitled [TRANSLATION] “a miracle, please” to the Fondation maman Dion in which, after recounting the family's difficulties, she asked for help. She wrote: “. . . I would like a miracle for Dec. 31, 2008”.

[11] The evening of December 29, she visited her friend Kathie Ouellet and told her that she did not know what she would do with her children if her spouse was not there. The next day, the appellant gave her nicest clothes to Ms. Ouellet.

[12] On December 31, according to the appellant, her spouse spent the morning working on the computer, and he turned the screen off every time she came near. Around noon, he joined her in the kitchen. He told her that he had made a decision and that the whole family would be leaving together. He then dictated some documents to her that she wrote down like a robot, she said, after which she had no memory of what was in them. Marc Laliberté then left the house. According to the appellant, it was then that she noticed some papers left on the kitchen counter, and after reading them, she realized what was going on. When her spouse returned in the afternoon, she told him she did not agree with the murder-suicide pact, and she tore up the documents. She claimed to have understood from the expression on her spouse's face that he had resigned himself to abandoning the dark plan.

[13] The appellant testified that the rest of the day was uneventful. That evening, as planned, the family sat down in front of the television to watch a movie together. Marc Laliberté prepared some drinks and popcorn for all the family. Shortly after that, the appellant noticed that one of the boys had fallen asleep, and then she too fell asleep. She said she had not suspected that their drinks had been poisoned.

[14] The physical evidence that was filed included two torn-up documents that had been found in the garbage can: a handwritten joint will, in the appellant's hand, and a document prepared on the computer by Marc Laliberté in which he told his life's story. Another copy of the will, typed out and signed by both spouses, was found on the kitchen island. Three handwritten letters from Cathie Gauthier to her friend Kathie Ouellet, to her biological mother and to her last employer completed the evidence. All these letters mentioned that the couple had decided together to end their and their children's lives. Some empty medicine bottles, as well as the prescriptions for oxazepam and the drug store's sales slip dated December 27, 2008, were also found in the kitchen.

[15] During the evening of January 1, 2009, the appellant called the emergency services number, asked for an ambulance and told the operator that her left wrist was slit, saying that [TRANSLATION] “it was a pact, my husband killed our three children”, and adding that “we told ourselves we wouldn’t start 2009, but . . .”.

[16] When first responders arrived on the scene, they found the appellant with an injured wrist and pronounced her spouse and their three children dead. The evidence shows that the children were poisoned with Gravol and oxazepam. Traces of oxazepam were also detected in the appellant, whose left wrist had allegedly been slit by her spouse, Marc Laliberté.

III. Trial by Judge and Jury

[17] At her jury trial, the appellant submitted in her defence that she had not bought the medication to poison her children, that she was in a dissociative state on December 31, 2008 when she wrote the incriminating documents, and that this state meant she could not have formed the specific intent to commit the murders. In the alternative, should her argument based on the absence of mens rea be rejected, she claimed to have abandoned the common purpose of killing the children and to have clearly communicated her intention to do so to her spouse.

[18] The Crown’s theory was based on the proposition that the appellant was a party, together with her spouse, to the murder of her three children in that they planned it together as part of a murder-suicide pact and in that she supplied the murder weapon. She did not act on December 31, 2008 to prevent the children from being poisoned with the drinks containing the medication. Thus, she aided Marc Laliberté to kill the children.

[19] In his final instructions, the trial judge told the jury that three possible verdicts were open to it: first degree murder, second degree murder or acquittal. On whether it was appropriate to put the defence of abandonment of the common purpose to the jury, the judge pointed out to counsel, in the jury’s absence, that when the defence of abandonment has come before Canadian courts, it has been in the context of the form of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21\(2\) of the Criminal Code, and he questioned the availability of this defence in the context of s. 21\(1\). Although he mentioned the defence of abandonment in summarizing the argument of counsel for the appellant for the jury, the judge did not put this alternative defence to the jury. After three days of deliberations, the jury found the appellant guilty of the first degree murder of her three children.

[20] Cathie Gauthier appealed that decision to the Court of Appeal, which upheld the guilty verdict. Bouchard J.A. concluded that the trial judge had not erred in refusing to put the defence of abandonment to the jury. In his view, an alternative defence that is incompatible with the defence's principal theory cannot be put to the jury (2011 QCCA 1395 \(CanLII\)).

IV. Relevant Provisions

[21] Section 21 of the Criminal Code reads as follows:

21. (1) [Parties to offence] Every one is a party to an offence who

(a) actually commits it;

(b) does or omits to do anything for the purpose of aiding any person to commit it; or

(c) abets any person in committing it.

(2) [Common intention] Where two or more persons form an intention in common to carry out an unlawful purpose and to assist each other therein and any one of them, in carrying out the common purpose, commits an offence, each of them who knew or ought to have known that the commission of the offence would be a probable consequence of carrying out the common purpose is a party to that offence.

V. Issues

[22] There are two main issues in this appeal. First, was it appropriate to exclude the defence of abandonment from the defences put to the jury on the basis that it was incompatible with the defence's principal theory, the absence of mens rea? If not, did the defence of abandonment meet the air of reality test? For the reasons that follow, I find that the answer to both these questions is no.

VI. Analysis

A. Was It Appropriate to Exclude the Alternative Defence of Abandonment From the Defences Put to the Jury Solely Because It Was Theoretically Incompatible With the Defence's Principal Theory?

1. When It Is Appropriate to Put a Defence to the Jury

[23] It is well established that any defence with an air of reality should go to the jury (R. v. Cinous, 2002 SCC 29, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 3, at para. 51). This Court has held that a defence meets the air of reality test if there is “(1) evidence (2) upon which a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could acquit if it believed the evidence to be true” (Cinous, at para. 82).

[24] The reason why the trial judge is required to screen the defences that can be put to the jury should be borne in mind. This requirement is essentially rooted in a concern not to confuse jurors by putting to them a defence that lacks an evidential foundation. This premise gives rise to two principles: On the one hand, a trial judge must put to the jury all defences that arise on the facts, regardless of whether they have been specifically raised by the accused. On the other hand, the judge must withhold from the jury any defences that lack an air of reality.

[25] The burden on the accused is merely evidential. If the trial judge properly applies the relevant principles, he or she must identify the evidence that is most favourable to the accused and assume it to be true, regardless of whether it was adduced or mentioned by the accused. The judge must not enquire into whether the witnesses are credible or assess the probative value of this evidence. If each element of a defence is supported by direct evidence or may reasonably be inferred from circumstantial evidence, the judge must put this defence to the jury.

2. Alternative Defences That Are Incompatible With the Defence's Principal Theory

[26] The Court of Appeal concluded, on the basis that the alternative defence of abandonment was incompatible with the appellant's principal theory, that the trial judge did not have to put this defence to the jury:

[TRANSLATION] In my opinion, the judge was right not to draw the jury's attention to this defence. I note that, according to the appellant, there was no suicide pact or planning, and she was in a dissociative state when her spouse told her of his plan for all of them to leave together. She could not therefore be allowed, if she were not believed, to change her story and maintain that she had pulled out of a plan whose existence she had been denying from the start. Taking part in a suicide pact and then pulling out of it is in itself plausible. However, that is not what the appellant is arguing. Rather, she is denying the very existence of such a pact and then claiming that she can pull out of it if she is not believed. The judge did not have to put to the jury this alternative defence that is incompatible with the appellant's principal theory [para. 71]

[27] The Crown takes a more nuanced position, arguing that, because the effect of the appellant's primary defence — which was essentially based on a total absence of mens rea — was that the defence of abandonment lacked any factual foundation and could not therefore apply, this alternative defence did not meet the air of reality test:

[TRANSLATION] Refusing to take part in a plan and abandoning a plan are defences that are logically incompatible with one another. If, throughout the trial, the appellant denies intending to kill her children, how can she, if she is not believed in this regard, change her position and say that she withdrew from a plan whose existence she has previously denied? The defence of abandonment of a common purpose necessarily implies a recognition of having been a party to that common purpose, which the appellant has always denied. [R.F., at para. 57]

[28] In this case, I agree with the Court of Appeal, although for different reasons, that the defence of abandonment should not have been put to the jury. Let me explain this.

[29] In Wu v. The King, 1934 CanLII 28 \(SCC\), [1934] S.C.R. 609, which was mentioned in R. v. Caron (1998), 1998 CanLII 10146 \(QC CA\), 126 C.C.C. (3d) 84 (Que. C.A.), a case the Court of Appeal cited with approval, this Court stated that a judge does not have a duty to put to the jury an alternative defence whose factual foundation is incompatible with the defence's principal theory. In Wu, the accused, after having raised only an alibi defence at trial, argued on appeal that the trial judge had erred in not putting to the jury the alternative defences of self-defence and provocation. Lamont J. made the following comments:

The rule, therefore, that an accused person at trial is entitled to have the jury pass upon all his alternative defences is limited to the defences of which a foundation of fact appears in the record. Even then the rule, in my opinion, is not without exception, and one exception is, that it has no application where the accused, by the defence which he sets up at the trial, has negatived the alternative defence for which he afterwards seeks a new trial.

...

... The defence that the accused was in Victoria at the time of the shooting was not only inconsistent with, but it negatived the defence now sought to be set up. Under these circumstances I fail to see how any duty could rest on the trial judge to instruct the jury to consider an alternative defence which the accused, by the defence he did set up, declared had no foundation in fact. [p. 617]

[30] With respect, Wu does not stand for the proposition that a judge does not have a duty to put to the jury an alternative defence that is theoretically incompatible with the defence's principal theory. Rather, it reaffirms the cardinal rule that the trial judge need not — indeed must not — put to the jury a defence in respect of which there is no evidence in the record that would be sufficient, if it existed and if it were believed to be true, for a jury acting reasonably to accept the defence. This is clear from the comments of Lamont J. on this point, which read in full as follows:

There is no doubt that in the trial court an accused person is ordinarily entitled to rely upon all alternative defences for which a foundation of fact appears in the record, and, in my opinion, it makes no difference whether the evidence which forms that foundation has been given by the witnesses for the Crown or for the accused, or otherwise. What is essential is, that the record contains evidence which, if accepted by the jury, would constitute a valid defence to the charge laid. Where such evidence appears it is the duty of the trial judge to call the attention of the jury to that evidence and instruct them in reference thereto. The only evidence appearing in the record upon which even an argument could be founded that the accused shot in self defence is that of Irwin and Bodner that, prior to the shooting, the complainant was running after the accused and his companion, waving his arms and shouting in Oriental. What he was saying we do not know. If it were material to the defence to prove that the words amounted to provocation, the onus was upon the accused to prove what the words were. On any event provocation, which would reduce murder to manslaughter, is not a defence to the charge as laid. Shooting in self defence would constitute a valid defence provided the accused brings himself within sections 53 and 54 of the Criminal Code. It is justifiable to repel an unprovoked attack if the force used by the accused is not meant to cause death or grievous bodily harm and is not more than is necessary for the purpose of self defence. It is justified, even if it does cause death or grievous bodily harm, if it is done under reasonable apprehension of death or grievous bodily harm to himself, and if he believes, on reasonable grounds, that it is necessary for his own preservation. There is no evidence in the record from which a jury could reasonably infer that the accused when he shot the complainant did so under a reasonable apprehension of death or bodily harm to himself, or that he reasonably believed that he could not otherwise save himself from bodily injury. [Emphasis added; pp. 616-17.]

[31] The passage from Wu quoted in the Court of Appeal's reasons, at para. 71, in support of the proposition that the trial judge is not required to put to the jury an alternative defence that is incompatible with the primary defence is merely an obiter dictum that could be a source of confusion and should not be relied on. An accused might, for example, raise an alibi defence and testify that he or she was not in the city where the crime was committed at the relevant time, whereas certain Crown witnesses say that the accused was at the scene of the crime but was highly intoxicated. Even though the defences of alibi and of self-induced intoxication are incompatible in theory, the trial judge should, in my view, put both of them to the jury if they both meet the air of reality test.

[32] More recently, in R. v. Graveline, 2006 SCC 16, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 609, this Court clarified the principle that if two defences are theoretically incompatible, they can nevertheless be put to the jury so long as they both meet the air of reality test. Although Fish J. pointed out that it is dangerous to put theoretically incompatible defences to a jury, he saw no error in the trial judge's decision to put to the jury, in addition to the primary defence of automatism, the alternative defence of self-defence the accused wished to raise. Regarding the incompatibility of the two defences, Fish J. wrote the following, at para. 10:

. . . the particular defences in issue here — automatism and self-defence — are, as the Crown suggested on the hearing of this appeal, incompatible in theory, though perhaps not always in practice. That is because self-defence implies deliberate conduct that is at odds with the fundamental premise of automatism, a state of dissociative, involuntary conduct.

[33] Nevertheless, the Court had held in R. v. Faid, 1983 CanLII 136 \(SCC\), [1983] 1 S.C.R. 265, that the trial judge had not erred in refusing to put the defence of provocation to the jury as an alternative to the primary defence of self-defence. Although it is true that these two defences are incompatible in theory — self-defence involves reasoned conduct, whereas provocation, on the contrary, presupposes a temporary loss of self-control — it is important to point out that the refusal was not based on this incompatibility. Rather, the Court found that there was no evidence in the record to support the argument that the accused had acted in the heat of passion. That case was not therefore one in which the effect of the primary defence was to deprive the alternative defence of the support of evidence that was actually in the record. In Faid, the defence of provocation quite simply did not meet the air of reality test, because there was no evidence related to its elements. Faid is one illustration of the principle that any defence with an air of reality should be put to the jury.

[34] In conclusion, there is no cardinal rule against putting to a jury an alternative defence that is at first glance incompatible with the primary defence. The issue is not whether such a defence is compatible or incompatible with the primary defence, but whether it meets the air of reality test. In any case, the trial judge must determine whether the alternative defence has a sufficient factual foundation, that is, whether a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could accept the defence if it believed the evidence to be true.

B. If the Defence of Abandonment Was Not Incompatible With the Principal Theory, Did It Meet the Air of Reality Test?

1. Essential Elements of the Defence of Abandonment

[35] The defence of abandonment had to be submitted to the jury only if there was evidence in the record that was reasonably capable of supporting the necessary inferences in respect of each of the elements of this defence. That being said, it is necessary to begin by identifying the essential elements of the defence.

[36] In Canadian law, the defence of abandonment, which has rarely been raised, was first referred to in R. v. Whitehouse (1940), 1940 CanLII 244 \(BC CA\), 55 B.C.R. 420 (C.A.). That case concerned the application of the defence in the specific context of the offence of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21\(2\) of the Criminal Code.

[37] In that context, the relevant test — which was subsequently endorsed in Miller v. The Queen, 1976 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1977] 2 S.C.R. 680, Henderson v. The King, 1948 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1948] S.C.R. 226, and R. v. Kirkness, 1990 CanLII 57 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 74 — was laid down as follows in Whitehouse, at p. 425:

I would not attempt to define too closely what must be done in criminal matters involving participation in a common unlawful purpose to break the chain of causation and responsibility. That must depend upon the circumstances of each case but it seems to me that one essential element ought to be established in a case of this kind: where practicable and reasonable there must be timely communication of the intention to abandon the common purpose from those who wish to dissociate themselves from the contemplated crime to those who desire to continue in it. What is “timely communication” must be determined by the facts of each case but where practicable and reasonable it ought to be such communication, verbal or otherwise, that will serve unequivocal notice upon the other party to the common unlawful cause that if he proceeds upon it he does so without the further aid and assistance of those who withdraw. The unlawful purpose of him who continues alone is then his own and not one in common with those who are no longer parties to it nor liable to its full and final consequences.

[38] Thus, it was held that a defence of abandonment has three essential elements: (1) there must be an intention to abandon or withdraw from the unlawful purpose, (2) there must be timely communication of this abandonment or withdrawal from the person in question to those who wish to continue, and (3) the notice so communicated to those who continue to participate in the common purpose must be unequivocal.

[39] This appeal raises the issue of the application of the defence of abandonment in the context of the form of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21\(1\) of the Criminal Code.

[40] The reasons for recognizing the defence of abandonment in Canadian law bear repeating. There are two policy reasons in criminal law for making this defence available to parties to offences. First, there is a need to ensure that only morally culpable persons are punished; second, there is a benefit to society in encouraging individuals involved in criminal activities to withdraw from those activities and report them.

[41] This Court implicitly acknowledged that the defence of abandonment applies in the context of s. 21(1) in R. v. Bird, 2009 SCC 60, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 638, in which it found that this defence did not meet the air of reality test in the case of an accused who had aided in the commission of a crime (see also R. v. Fournier, 2007 QCCA 1822 (CanLII)). However, since the Court found that the defence did not have an air of reality in that case, it did not on that occasion rule on the content of the defence in the specific context of the form of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code.

[42] It is well established that the scope of the defence of abandonment varies from case to case, depending on the circumstances (see the above-quoted passage from Whitehouse, at p. 425). In Kirkness, Wilson J. expressed the opinion that the content of the defence of abandonment depends on the type of offence and on the degree and form of participation of the accused. She endorsed, at p. 115, the following comment by Professor Manson:

Looking at the defence of abandoned intention in respect of parties, the key issues relate to the quality of withdrawal from the original plan and whether more is required to exculpate. These questions take on different significance depending on the form of accomplice liability in issue and the particular circumstances of a given case.

(A. Manson, “Re-codifying Attempts, Parties, and Abandoned Intentions” (1989), 14 Queen’s L.J. 85, at p. 95)

[43] Wilson J. also noted that there is a difference between the forms of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21(1) and s. 21(2), respectively, of the Criminal Code:

It is my view that since aiders and abettors have been treated differently from common intenders by Parliament, some difference between these two subsections must be recognized.

(Kirkness, at p. 116)

[44] Section 21(2) of the Criminal Code provides that a person who forms an intention to carry out an unlawful purpose in common with other persons is a party to an incidental offence committed by one of those other persons to the same extent as the person who actually committed it. This result derives from the first person's promise to devote physical and intellectual resources to the achievement of the common unlawful purpose. The person's liability in respect of the incidental offence therefore stems from his or her decision to participate in carrying out the unlawful purpose and to contribute resources needed to achieve it.

[45] In such a context, an intention to withdraw from the common purpose will — if a timely and unequivocal communication of this intention is addressed to the co-conspirators who persist in carrying out the unlawful purpose — be sufficient for the defence of abandonment to succeed. Communicating the intention to abandon the common purpose reduces the resources available to carry out the unlawful purpose and in so doing cancels out the effects of the participation of the withdrawing or abandoning person.

[46] The situation is very different in the context of the form of participation in a crime provided for in s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code. Aiders and abettors generally do much more than promise their support in carrying out an unlawful purpose in the future. They perform concrete acts to aid the principal offender to commit the offence or to abet him or her in committing it. Their criminal liability and their moral culpability are proportional to these acts and stem from the fact that they have performed them. Thus, merely communicating in unequivocal terms their intention to cease participating in the commission of the offence will not be enough “to break the chain of causation and responsibility”, to repeat the words of Sloan J. from Whitehouse.

[47] Where a person's participation in a crime is more than a simple promise to carry out a common unlawful purpose — where, for example, the person is a party to the offence within the meaning of s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code — requiring an unequivocal communication of the intention to cease participating in the commission of the offence (the Whitehouse test) means that the accused must show that he or she took reasonable steps to neutralize the effects of his or her participation. As one author explains, using a colourful image to make his point, the intention to withdraw must be accompanied by acts that are likely to cancel out the effects of the acts that have already been performed to aid or abet the offender:

Once the arrow is in the air, it is no use wishing to have never let it go — “Please God, let it miss!” The archer is guilty of homicide when the arrow gets the victim through the heart. The withdrawer, it is true, does not merely change his mind: he withdraws — but is that relevant if the withdrawal has no more effect on subsequent events than the archer’s repentance? [Emphasis added.]

(J. C. Smith, Commentary on R. v. Mitchell, [1999] Crim. L.R. 497)

[48] In the Quebec Court of Appeal’s judgment in Fournier, the accused was convicted of the first degree murder of her husband because she had hired a contract killer to murder him, had promised and later paid financial consideration to the killer, and had provided the killer with the necessary details of time and place and with information needed to identify the target. Because of the numerous acts that had been performed to aid in the commission of the murder, communicating an intention to withdraw by merely leaving the message [TRANSLATION] “cancel” on the killer’s answering device was found to be insufficient to exculpate the accused. The acts of abandonment were not proportional to the acts performed in support of the commission of the offence.

[49] For all these reasons, I would reformulate as follows the test already established in Whitehouse and Kirkness for determining whether the defence of abandonment applies, in order to adapt it specifically to the various degrees and forms of participation in crimes.

[50] One who is a party to an offence on the basis that he or she did or omitted to do anything for the purpose of aiding any person to commit the offence, or abetted any person in committing it (s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code), or on the basis that he or she had formed with other persons an intention to carry out an unlawful purpose and to assist each other therein and that an offence was committed in carrying out the common purpose (s. 21(2) of the Criminal Code), may raise the defence of abandonment if the evidence shows

(1) that there was an intention to abandon or withdraw from the unlawful purpose;

- (2) that there was timely communication of this abandonment or withdrawal from the person in question to those who wished to continue;
- (3) that the communication served unequivocal notice upon those who wished to continue; and
- (4) that the accused took, in a manner proportional to his or her participation in the commission of the planned offence, reasonable steps in the circumstances either to neutralize or otherwise cancel out the effects of his or her participation or to prevent the commission of the offence.

[51] I recognize that there will be circumstances, even where the accused is a party within the meaning of s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code, in which timely and unequivocal communication by the accused of his or her intention to abandon the unlawful purpose will be considered sufficient to neutralize the effects of his or her participation in the crime. But there will be other circumstances, primarily where a person has aided in the commission of the offence, in which it is hard to see how timely communication to the principal offender of the person's intention to withdraw from the unlawful purpose will on its own be considered reasonable, and sufficient to meet the test set out in the preceding paragraph.

[52] In conclusion, and more specifically in the context of s. 21(1) of the Criminal Code, the defence of abandonment should be put to the jury only if there is evidence in the record that is capable of supporting a finding that a person who was initially a party to the carrying out of an unlawful purpose subsequently took reasonable steps in the circumstances either to neutralize the effects of his or her participation or to prevent the commission of the offence.

2. Application to the Case at Bar

[53] In the case at bar, the defence of abandonment did not have an air of reality.

[54] The evidence showed that the appellant had written several documents, including some incriminating letters that were evidence of the couple's intention to end their and their children's lives. The couple explained in the letters how they planned to kill the children and take their own lives: by intoxication using a soporific drug. It was the appellant who purchased the medication that caused the children's deaths.

[55] What evidence could therefore have justified the trial judge's putting the defence of abandonment to the jury?

[56] The evidence is incomplete, to say the least.

[57] The only evidence comes from the appellant's testimony that, in the afternoon of December 31, 2008, she had notified her spouse that she had changed her mind and no longer intended to participate in the common purpose:

[TRANSLATION] I noticed some papers he'd left lying around. I, I realized what was happening. I didn't want that. When Marc came back, I, I told him it was crazy, what he was telling me. I ripped up the papers. [A.R., at p. 834]

On cross-examination, she made the following statement:

[TRANSLATION] When I saw the papers and looked at what was written on them, I said that's crazy. And I told Marc we couldn't . . .

. . .

I told Marc he couldn't do that, that I didn't want to be part of it. [Emphasis added; A.R., at p. 910.]

[58] The appellant also testified that the expression on her spouse's face had convinced her that he too had abandoned the sinister plan:

[TRANSLATION] But I gathered from his face that he was getting the message, too, and that it was all right. [A.R., at p. 913]

[59] Counsel for the appellant argues that, in light of this evidence, the trial judge had sufficient reasons to put the defence of abandonment to the jury. I find this argument wanting.

[60] In my view, the appellant's evidence that she communicated her withdrawal from the deadly plan and that her communication was timely and unequivocal is insufficient for the purposes of the air of reality test. To meet that test, it is not enough to simply identify "some evidence" or "any evidence"; the evidence must be "reasonably capable of supporting the inferences required for the defence to succeed" (Cinous, at paras. 82-83).

[61] The only relevant passage from the appellant's testimony is the one in which she used the plural pronoun "we" (using the French pronoun "on" as an equivalent for the plural "nous") in saying "I told Marc we couldn't [do that]". This passage stands alone in the appellant's principal narrative to the effect that she never agreed to the murder-suicide pact, that she wrote the incriminating letters while in a dissociative state and that she told her spouse she disagreed with what he was planning to do as soon as she realized what it was.

[62] Nevertheless, even if it were assumed that the evidence the appellant relies upon would be sufficient for a jury to reasonably conclude that she had communicated her intention to withdraw from the plan and that her communication was timely and unequivocal, that communication would not on its own have sufficed, in the circumstances of this case, for the judge to put the defence of abandonment to the jury.

[63] The appellant did more than merely promise to take part in the murder-suicide pact. She supplied her spouse with the intoxicants he used to cause the children's deaths. She therefore had to do more either to neutralize the effects of her participation or to prevent the commission of the offence. For example, she could have hidden or destroyed the medication she had purchased, remained watchful and taken the children to a safe place for the evening, insisted that her spouse give her verbal confirmation of what he intended to do, or simply called the authorities.

[64] I conclude that the record did not contain evidence upon which a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could have found that the appellant had abandoned the common unlawful purpose, and could accordingly have acquitted her, if it believed the evidence to be true. The defence of abandonment therefore did not meet the air of reality test, and the trial judge was not required to put the defence to the jury.

VII. Disposition

[65] For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal.

The following are the reasons delivered by

FISH J. (dissenting) —

I

[66] Justice Wagner has set out with care and sensitivity the tragic and desperate circumstances that culminated in the murder by the appellant's husband of their three children and his own virtually contemporaneous suicide.

[67] In the wake of that tragedy and despair, the appellant, Cathie Gauthier, now stands convicted of first degree murder. And she has been sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for 25 years.

[68] The Crown's case against Ms. Gauthier is that she and her husband entered a murder-suicide pact that was executed with her help. She testified at trial that she had demonstrated her disapproval of the pact before the children were murdered and had notified her husband of this unwillingness to go through with the plan.

[69] Defence counsel urged the trial judge to leave open for the jury’s consideration Ms. Gauthier’s defence of abandonment. The trial judge declined to do so. The Court of Appeal upheld the trial judge on the ground that it was an [TRANSLATION] “incompatible . . . defence”: 2011 QCCA 1395 \(CanLII\). Both courts below erred in law in this regard.

[70] The Court of Appeal did not consider whether the appellant’s defence of abandonment had an “air of reality” — that is to say, whether there was any evidence upon which a properly instructed jury might entertain a reasonable doubt on that issue.

[71] On the law as it was then understood, the trial judge was bound to put abandonment to the jury if there was evidence that the appellant (a) had changed — or “abandoned” — her earlier intention to aid or abet the murder of her children, and (b) had adequately communicated to her husband that she had withdrawn from their pact.

[72] This Court has repeatedly held that the defence of abandonment includes no other essential elements. And our attention has not been drawn to a single Canadian decision to the contrary, at any level.

[73] In my view, there was evidence at Ms. Gauthier’s trial upon which a properly instructed jury might well have found that she had abandoned the suicide pact in respect of which she was charged and convicted of murder. Or at least have been left with a reasonable doubt on this issue, which would of course have sufficed to warrant Ms. Gauthier’s acquittal.

[74] As a matter of law, the appellant is entitled, in my respectful view, to a fresh trial, where the jury will not be wrongly prevented from considering on its merits Ms. Gauthier’s defence of abandonment, however weak and unpromising we might believe it to be. I am aware of no legal principle that permits us to deprive her of that right.

[75] In his thorough and thoughtful reasons, Justice Wagner proposes that we now adopt additional requirements for a valid defence of abandonment where the accused, as in this case, has done something to aid or abet the commission of the offence before satisfying the two established elements of abandonment. As we shall see, there are strong reasons of policy and precedent for resisting the proposed changes.

[76] As we shall see as well, I am not persuaded that the modifications we endorse should be made applicable on a retrial of the appellant. But even if we decide that they are, the appellant would at least be entitled to a fair opportunity to satisfy those newly recognized requirements. Her failure to do so at her first trial — prior to their recognition by this Court or, it seems, by any Canadian court — can hardly deprive Ms. Gauthier of a proper opportunity to do so now.

[77] With respect for those who are of a different view, I would therefore allow the appeal, set aside the appellant's convictions and order a new trial.

II

[78] Canadian courts have for more than 70 years held that the defence of abandonment comprises only two essential elements: (i) change of intention; and (ii) where practical and reasonable, timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal.

[79] These requirements emanate from R. v. Whitehouse (1940), 1940 CanLII 244 \(BC CA\), 55 B.C.R. 420 (C.A.), a decision that has been repeatedly approved and followed by this Court, as I mentioned earlier, and has long been firmly entrenched in Canadian law: see Henderson v. The King, 1948 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1948] S.C.R. 226, at pp. 236-37; R. v. de Tonnancourt (1956), 1956 CanLII 470 \(MB CA\), 115 C.C.C. 154 (Man. C.A.), at pp. 176 and 201-3; R. v. Merrifield, 1977 CarswellOnt 1806 (C.A.), at para. 3; Miller v. The Queen, 1976 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1977] 2 S.C.R. 680, at p. 708; R. v. Wagner (1978), 1978 CanLII 401 \(BC CA\), 8 B.C.L.R. 258 (C.A.), at pp. 260-61; R. v. Joyce (1978), 1978 CanLII 2422 \(BC CA\), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 141 (B.C.C.A.), at p. 150; R. v. Kirkness, 1990 CanLII 57 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 74, at p. 89; R. v. Johanson (1995), 1995 CanLII 18031 \(AB CJ\), 166 A.R. 60 (Prov. Ct.), at para. 23; R. v. Fournier, 2002 NBCA 71, 252 N.B.R. (2d) 256, at para. 22; R. v. McKercher, [2002] O.J. No. 5859 (QL) (Ct.

J.), at para. 77; R. v. Forknall, 2003 BCCA 43, 176 B.C.A.C. 284, at paras. 51-53; R. v. Lacoursière (2002), 2002 CanLII 41284 (QC CA), 7 C.R. (6th) 117 (Que. C.A.), at paras. 25-29; R. v. P.K., 2006 ABCA 299, 397 A.R. 318, at para. 12; R. v. S.R.B., 2009 ABCA 45, 448 A.R. 124, at paras. 10, 19-20 and 24-30, rev'd R. v. Bird, 2009 SCC 60, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 638, at para. 1; R. v. Ball, 2011 BCCA 11, 298 B.C.A.C. 166, at paras. 44-47; and R. v. Leslie, 2012 BCSC 683 (CanLII), at paras. 552-58.

[80] Justice Wagner does not suggest that the defence of abandonment, as it stood at the time of Ms. Gauthier's trial, required anything more than a change of intention, accompanied by timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal. Rather, my colleague proposes a new and different test.

[81] To this end, my colleague distinguishes for present purposes between s. 21(1) and s. 21(2) of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46. The former deals with liability for aiding or abetting another in the commission of a specific offence; the latter, with liability for an offence committed by another in carrying out a common unlawful purpose.

[82] Justice Wagner would impose additional requirements on the defence of abandonment, particularly with respect to liability under s. 21(1), where the accused would need to adduce evidence that he or she took steps to neutralize any prior contribution to the commission of the offence or, in the alternative, to prevent the commission of the offence.

[83] With respect, this approach overlooks the fact that both s. 21(1) and s. 21(2) can involve active participation by the accused: see for example Henderson and Miller.

[84] Moreover, the Whitehouse test has been repeatedly and consistently applied in prosecutions under s. 21(1) and s. 21(2) alike.

[85] The application of the Whitehouse criteria to an aiding and abetting case was endorsed very recently by this Court in 2009, and even more recently by other Canadian courts:

Bird (affirming Costigan J.A.'s dissent); Ball, at paras. 44-47; and Leslie, at paras. 552-58.

[86] Indeed, Whitehouse itself involved parties to an offence who had “aided and abetted in the commission of the crime”: p. 424. They had “performed part, at least, of the tasks assigned to them”: again, at p. 424.

[87] It was out of this factual context that the test for abandonment was born. And the court identified only two requirements: the first, change of intention; the second, timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal — that is, the accused must clearly communicate to the principal “that if he proceeds upon it he does so without the further aid and assistance of those who withdraw”: Whitehouse, at p. 425 (emphasis added).

[88] As the language of this oft-cited passage makes clear, the Whitehouse test for abandonment expressly contemplates prior aid and assistance.

[89] Moreover, to suggest that an accused under either subsection of s. 21 must neutralize prior involvement disregards an important rationale of the defence of abandonment, namely, giving the principal offender the opportunity to abandon the criminal objective. As Allan Manson explains in “Re-codifying Attempts, Parties, and Abandoned Intentions” (1989), 14 Queen's L.J. 85, at p. 101:

. . . the premise upon which Whitehouse is based: “Let it be known, if you go then you go alone.” Unequivocal withdrawal and the element of timeliness are sufficiently expansive to accommodate abettors and aiders alike because, as in Becerra and Gundy, the aim is to compel the principal to reconsider the objective in time to abandon it. This, after all, is the preventative rationale for party responsibility. Thus the defence of abandonment as structured in Whitehouse can apply with equal fairness and effect to all parties including aiders by interpreting timeliness in relation to the offence and the goal of ultimate abandonment.

[90] Even the most ardent proponents of a more stringent abandonment defence recognize that to require neutralizing or preventative steps would necessitate a change to Canadian law: see

M. Campbell, “Turning Back the Clock: Aiders and the Defence of Abandonment” (2010), 14 Can. Crim. L.R. 1, at pp. 16-17.

[91] Courts in the United Kingdom, approving Whitehouse, have concluded that neutralizing or preventative steps are not required to establish abandonment. In R. v. O’Flaherty, [2004] EWCA Crim 526, [2004] 2 Cr. App. R. 20 (p. 315), at para. 60, the Court of Appeal acknowledged that whether an accused has done enough “to demonstrate that he or she is withdrawing from the joint enterprise . . . is ultimately a question of fact and degree for the jury”. The jury should account for “the nature of the assistance and encouragement already given and how imminent the infliction of the fatal injury or injuries is, as well as the nature of the action said to constitute withdrawal”. And, the court explicitly rejected the proposition that effective withdrawal requires reasonable steps to prevent the crime:

In cases of assistance it has sometimes been suggested that, for there to be an effective withdrawal, reasonable steps must have been taken to prevent the crime. It is clear, however, this is not necessary. [Para. 60; see also para. 61.]

See also R. v. Otway, [2011] EWCA Crim 3 (BAILII), at para. 32, where the court held that efforts to prevent the crime were relevant but not required for withdrawal.

[92] Justice Wagner relies on R. v. Fournier, 2007 QCCA 1822 \(CanLII\), to support his position that mere communication of changed intention should henceforth be insufficient for abandonment in s. 21(1) cases (para. 48 of Justice Wagner’s reasons). However, in Fournier, unlike this case, the defence of abandonment was not kept from the jury. Indeed, the Court of Appeal held that the trial judge properly instructed the jury that abandonment required timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal: Fournier, at paras. 18-20.

[93] I agree with my colleague that the internally repentant archer cannot, having let the arrow fly, seek refuge in the defence of abandonment (para. 47 of Justice Wagner’s reasons). The defence fails in Sir John Smith’s illustration not because preventative or neutralizing steps are required, but rather because notice of withdrawal comes too late, or not at all.

[94] These authorities all make clear that the defence of abandonment does not require that the accused take steps to neutralize prior participation in the criminal enterprise or to prevent the commission of the offence. While such evidence may strengthen a defence of abandonment, failure to take neutralizing or preventative steps is not fatal. Thus, for example, in R. v. Edwards, 2001 BCSC 275 (CanLII), at para. 186, the accused's efforts to stop the commission of the offence were treated as evidence that the Whitehouse requirements were met — not as additional requirements of the defence.

[95] If we were to accept that the defence of abandonment now requires that an accused take steps to neutralize previous assistance or to prevent the commission of the crime, I am inclined to believe that this change should only be given prospective effect — at least in this case. As Don Stuart explains in Canadian Criminal Law: A Treatise (6th ed. 2011), at p. 9: “It is almost universally accepted that the view that judges merely declare existing law rather than create new law is outmoded and wrong.”

[96] But on any view of the matter, in light of the state of the law universally accepted in Canada at the time of the appellant's trial, it would be fundamentally unfair at this stage to fault the appellant for failing to demonstrate anything more than a change of intention, plus timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal from the murder-suicide pact. Since the appellant's testimony provided some evidence on these two essential elements, there was an air of reality to the defence. The trial judge therefore erred by withholding the defence of abandonment from the jury.

III

[97] I agree with Justice Wagner that the “incompatibility” between Ms. Gauthier's defence of abandonment and her primary defence did not justify the trial judge's decision to prevent the jury from considering them both. And I am therefore content to add only these brief comments on the issue of incompatibility.

[98] Incompatibility should not be relied upon to deprive the accused of a defence for which an air of reality has been established, particularly where — as in this case — defence counsel has requested that it be included in the judge’s charge: A.R., at pp. 1018 and 1037-38.

[99] As Kellock J. stated in Henderson: “It is a paramount principle of law that when a defence, however weak it may be, is raised by a person charged, it should be fairly put before the jury”: p. 241. Taschereau J. likewise emphasized the accused’s “fundamental right . . . to have all the features of [the] defence adequately put to the jury”: Henderson, at p. 237.

IV

[100] For abandonment to be left for the jury, there must be some evidence upon which a properly instructed jury could form a reasonable doubt on the two essential elements of the defence: R. v. Cinous, 2002 SCC 29, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 3, at paras. 2, 49, 52-54 and 83. In my view, the appellant’s testimony satisfied this modest evidentiary threshold.

[101] Indeed, there was no suggestion at trial by the Crown— nor finding by the trial judge or the Court of Appeal — that the defence of abandonment lacked an air of reality.

[102] The appellant testified that she told Marc Laliberté his plan did not make sense and he [TRANSLATION] “could not do it” (“pouvait pas faire ça”). She also told him that she did not want to be a part of it. She demonstrated her disapproval of the murder-suicide pact by tearing up two documents: a last will and testament written by the appellant and a story of Marc Laliberté’s life containing references to the pact. She was convinced by his facial expression that the murder-suicide pact was off: A.R., at pp. 834-35 and 910-11.

[103] This testimony provides some evidence that the appellant no longer intended to participate in the murder-suicide pact and that she provided timely and unequivocal notice of this change of intention to the principal offender. That the evidence could have left the jury with a reasonable doubt as to the appellant’s guilt is all that was required.

[104] Whether the appellant ultimately “did enough” to communicate timely and unequivocal withdrawal was a question of fact that should have been left for the jury to decide: P.K., at para. 11; O’Flaherty, at para. 60; Cinous, at paras. 52 and 54.

[105] In short, it was for the jury to determine whether the appellant’s words and conduct were believable and sufficient to demonstrate timely and unequivocal notice of withdrawal. As Taschereau J. stated, again in Henderson, at p. 237: “The question whether the agreement has been put to an end, must be judged in view of all the circumstances revealed by the evidence, and I have no doubt that it is a question for the jury.”

[106] With respect, I feel bound to conclude that the trial judge, by declining to instruct on the defence of abandonment, encroached “on the jury’s traditional function as arbiter of fact”: Cinous, at para. 56.

V

[107] For the foregoing reasons, I would allow the appeal, set aside the appellant’s convictions, and order a new trial.

Appeal dismissed, FISH J. dissenting.

Solicitors for the appellant: Duval Lauzon Ménard, Trois-Rivières.

Solicitor for the respondent: Directeur des poursuites criminelles et pénales du Québec, Chicoutimi.

Solicitor for the intervener: Attorney General of Ontario, Toronto.

TAB 49

R. v. Cole, 2012 SCC 53 (CanLII), [2012] 3 SCR 34

Source:	Supreme Court of Canada
Date:	2012-10-19
File number:	34268
Other citations:	353 DLR (4th) 447 — 436 NR 102 — 297 OAC 1 — [2012] EXP 3703 — 290 CCC (3d) 247 — 96 CR (6th) 88 — [2012] EXPT 2118 — 269 CRR (2d) 228 — DTE 2012T-731 — JE 2012-1986 — [2012] SCJ No 53 (QL) — [2012] ACS no 53
Citation:	R. v. Cole, 2012 SCC 53 (CanLII), [2012] 3 SCR 34, < https://canlii.ca/t/ft969 >, retrieved on 2026-03-23
Most recent unfavourable mention	R. v Summers , 2023 CanLII 37444 (NL PC) [...] [45] As we have seen, despite its ruling in Cole on the inapplicability of third-party consent in Canada, the Reeves' Court proceeded "on the assumption that the entry was lawful" because of the third-party consent (at paragraph 22). [...]

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CITATION: R. v. Cole, 2012 SCC 53, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 34

DATE: 20121019

DOCKET: 34268

BETWEEN:

Her Majesty The Queen
Appellant
and Richard Cole
Respondent

- and -
Director of Public Prosecutions, Attorney General of Quebec, Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario), Canadian Civil Liberties Association and Canadian Association of Counsel to Employers
Intervenors

CORAM: McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell and Moldaver JJ.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT: Fish J. (McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Rothstein, Cromwell and (paras. 1 to 106) Moldaver JJ. concurring)

DISSENTING REASONS: Abella J.
(paras. 107 to 136)

R. v. Cole, 2012 SCC 53, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 34

Her Majesty The Queen

Appellant

v.

Richard Cole

Respondent

and

Director of Public Prosecutions, Attorney General of Quebec,
Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario),
Canadian Civil Liberties Association and Canadian Association of Counsel to Employers

Intervenors

Indexed as: R. v. Cole

2012 SCC 53

File No.: 34268.

2012: May 15; 2012: October 19.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell and Moldaver JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Search and seizure — Information contained on computer — Pornographic pictures of child found on employer-issued work computer — Whether accused had reasonable expectation of privacy in employer-issued work computer — Whether warrantless search and seizure of laptop computer and disc containing Internet files breached accused's rights under s. 8 of Charter — If so, whether evidence ought to be excluded pursuant to s. 24(2) of Charter.

The accused, a high-school teacher, was charged with possession of child pornography and unauthorized use of a computer. He was permitted to use his work-issued laptop computer for incidental personal purposes which he did. While performing maintenance activities, a technician found on the accused's laptop a hidden folder containing nude and partially nude photographs of an underage female student. The technician notified the principal, and copied the photographs to a compact disc. The principal seized the laptop, and school board technicians copied the temporary Internet files onto a second disc. The laptop and both discs were handed over to the police, who without a warrant reviewed their contents and then created a mirror image of the hard drive for forensic purposes. The trial judge excluded all of the computer material pursuant to ss. 8 and 24(2) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The summary conviction appeal court reversed the decision, finding that there was no s. 8 breach. The Court of Appeal for Ontario set aside that decision and excluded the disc containing the temporary Internet files, the laptop and the mirror image of its hard drive. The disc containing the photographs of the student was found to be legally obtained and therefore admissible. As the trial judge had wrongly excluded this evidence, the Court of Appeal ordered a new trial.

Held (Abella J. dissenting): The appeal should be allowed. The exclusionary order of the Court of Appeal is set aside and the order of a new trial is affirmed.

Per McLachlin C.J., and LeBel, Fish, Rothstein, Cromwell and Moldaver JJ.:

Computers that are reasonably used for personal purposes — whether found in the workplace or the home — contain information that is meaningful, intimate, and touching on the user’s biographical core. Canadians may therefore reasonably expect privacy in the information contained on these computers, at least where personal use is permitted or reasonably expected. Ownership of property is a relevant consideration, but is not determinative. Workplace policies are also not determinative of a person’s reasonable expectation of privacy. Whatever the policies state, one must consider the totality of the circumstances in order to determine whether privacy is a reasonable expectation in the particular situation. While workplace policies and practices may diminish an individual’s expectation of privacy in a work computer, these sorts of operational realities do not in themselves remove the expectation entirely. A reasonable though diminished expectation of privacy is nonetheless a reasonable expectation of privacy, protected by s. 8 of the Charter. Accordingly, it is subject to state intrusion only under the authority of a reasonable law.

The police in this case infringed the accused’s rights under s. 8 of the Charter. The accused’s personal use of his work-issued laptop generated information that is meaningful, intimate, and organically connected to his biographical core. Pulling in the other direction are the ownership of the laptop by the school board, the workplace policies and practices, and the technology in place at the school. These considerations diminished the accused’s privacy interest in his laptop, at least in comparison to a personal computer, but they did not eliminate it entirely. On balance, the totality of the circumstances support the objective reasonableness of the accused’s subjective expectation of privacy. While the principal had a statutory duty to maintain a safe school environment, and, by necessary implication, a reasonable power to seize and search a school-board issued laptop, the lawful authority of the accused’s employer to seize and search the laptop did not furnish the police with the same power. Furthermore, a third party cannot validly consent to a search or otherwise waive a constitutional protection on behalf of another. The school board was legally entitled to inform the police of its discovery of contraband on the laptop. This would doubtless have permitted the police to obtain a warrant to search the computer for the contraband. But receipt of the computer from the school board did not afford the police warrantless access to the personal information contained within it. This information remained subject, at all relevant times, to the accused's reasonable and subsisting expectation of privacy.

Unconstitutionally obtained evidence should be excluded under s. 24(2) if, considering all of the circumstances, its admission would bring the administration of justice into disrepute. The conduct of the police officer in this case was not an egregious breach of the Charter. While the police officer did attach great importance to the school board's ownership of the laptop, he did not do so to the exclusion of other considerations. The officer sincerely, though erroneously, considered the accused's Charter interests. Further, the officer had reasonable and probable grounds to obtain a warrant. Had he complied with the applicable constitutional requirements, the evidence would necessarily have been discovered. Finally, the evidence is highly reliable and probative physical evidence. The exclusion of the material would have a marked negative impact on the truth-seeking function of the criminal trial process. The admission of the evidence would not bring the administration of justice into disrepute and therefore the evidence should not be excluded.

Generally speaking, the decision to exclude evidence under s. 24(2) should be final. In very limited circumstances however, a material change of circumstances may justify a trial judge to revisit an exclusionary order. In this case, the Court of Appeal invited the trial judge to re-assess the admissibility of the temporary Internet files disc if the evidence becomes important to the truth-seeking function as the trial unfolds. Unconstitutionally obtained evidence, once excluded, will not become admissible simply because the Crown cannot otherwise satisfy its burden to prove the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt.

Per Abella J. (dissenting): While it is agreed that there has been a Charter breach, the evidence in this case should be excluded under s. 24(2). The Charter-infringing conduct in this case was serious in its disregard for central and well-established Charter standards. The police officer had years of experience in investigating cyber-crime and was expected to follow established Charter jurisprudence. Further, the police officer's exclusive reliance on ownership to determine whether a warrant was required, was unreasonable and contradicted a finding of good faith for the purposes of s. 24(2). There were also no exigent circumstances or other legitimate reasons preventing the police from getting a warrant. The decision not to get a warrant mandates in favour of exclusion.

The impact of the breach on the accused's Charter-protected interests, even assuming that his reasonable expectation of privacy was reduced because it was a workplace computer, was significant given the extent of the intrusion into his privacy. The warrantless search and seizure in this case included the entire contents of the accused's computer. It had no restrictions as to scope. The extent of the search of the accused's hard drive and browsing history was significant and weighs in favour of exclusion.

Finally, while the evidence in this case is reliable, its importance to the prosecution's case is at best speculative given that the pornographic photographs themselves were admitted.

Balancing these factors, and in light of the deference owed to trial judges in applying s. 24(2), the evidence should be excluded.

Cases Cited

By Fish J.

Applied: R. v. Morelli, 2010 SCC 8, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 253; referred to: R. v. Tessling, 2004 SCC 67, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 432; R. v. Evans, 1996 CanLII 248 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 8; R. v. Borden, 1994 CanLII 63 (SCC), [1994] 3 S.C.R. 145; R. v. Patrick, 2009 SCC 17, [2009] 1 S.C.R. 579; R. v. Nolet, 2010 SCC 24, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 851; Hunter v. Southam Inc., 1984 CanLII 33 (SCC), [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145; R. v. Collins, 1987 CanLII 84 (SCC), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 265; R. v. M. (M.R.), 1998 CanLII 770 (SCC), [1998] 3 S.C.R. 393; R. v. Edwards, 1996 CanLII 255 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 128; R. v. Plant, 1993 CanLII 70 (SCC), [1993] 3 S.C.R. 281; R. v. Buhay, 2003

SCC 30, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 631; O'Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709 (1987); R. v. Gomboc, 2010 SCC 55, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 211; R. v. Colarusso, 1994 CanLII 134 (SCC), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 20; Quebec (Attorney General) v. Larocche, 2002 SCC 72, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 708; R. v. Jarvis, 2002 SCC 73, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757; R. v. D'Amour (2002), 2002 CanLII 45015 (ON CA), 166 C.C.C. (3d) 477; R. v. Dymont, 1988 CanLII 10 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 417; United States v. Matlock, 415 U.S. 164 (1974); Illinois v. Rodriguez, 497 U.S. 177 (1990); United States v. Ziegler, 474 F.3d 1184 (2007); R. v. Duarte, 1990 CanLII 150 (SCC), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 30; R. v. Wong, 1990 CanLII 56 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 36; R. v. Grant, 2009 SCC 32, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 353; R. v. Côté, 2011 SCC 46, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 215; R. v. Belnavis, 1997 CanLII 320 (SCC), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 341; R. v. Harrison, 2009 SCC 34, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 494; R. v. Calder, 1996 CanLII 232 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 660; R. v. Underwood, 1998 CanLII 839 (SCC), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 77; R. v. M. (C.A.), 1996 CanLII 230 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 500; R. v. Trask, 1987 CanLII 24 (SCC), [1987] 2 S.C.R. 304.

By Abella J. (dissenting)

R. v. Morelli, 2010 SCC 8, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 253; R. v. Kokesch, 1990 CanLII 55 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 3; Hunter v. Southam Inc., 1984 CanLII 33 (SCC), [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145; R. v. Wong, 1990 CanLII 56 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 36; R. v. Buhay, 2003 SCC 30, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 631; R. v. Côté, 2011 SCC 46, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 215; R. v. Grant, 2009 SCC 32, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 353; R. v. Harrison, 2009 SCC 34, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 494.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 8, 24(2).

Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, ss. 163.1(4), 342.1(1).

Education Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. E.2, s. 265.

Authors Cited

Westin, Alan F. Privacy and Freedom. New York: Atheneum, 1970.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal (Winkler C.J.O. and Sharpe and Karakatsanis JJ.A.), 2011 ONCA 218, 105 O.R. (3d) 253, 277 O.A.C. 50, 231 C.R.R. (2d) 76, 269 C.C.C. (3d) 402, 83 C.R. (6th) 1, 2011 CLC ¶210-018, 90 C.C.E.L. (3d) 1, [2011] O.J. No. 1213 (QL), 2011 CarswellOnt 1766, setting aside a decision of Kane J. (2009), 190 C.R.R. (2d) 130, 2009 CanLII 20699, [2009] O.J. No. 1755 (QL), 2009 CarswellOnt 2251, setting aside a decision of Guay J., 2008 ONCJ 278, 175 C.R.R. (2d) 263, [2008] O.J. No. 2417 (QL), 2008 CarswellOnt 3601. Appeal allowed, Abella J. dissenting.

Amy Alyea and Frank Au, for the appellant.

Frank Addario, Gerald Chan and Nader R. Hasan, for the respondent.

Ronald C. Reimer and Monique Dion, for the intervener the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Dominique A. Jobin and Gilles Laporte, for the intervener the Attorney General of Quebec.

Jonathan Dawe and Michael Dineen, for the intervener the Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario).

Jonathan C. Lisus and Michael Perlin, for the intervener the Canadian Civil Liberties Association.

Daniel Michaluk and Joseph Cohen-Lyons, for the intervener the Canadian Association of Counsel to Employers.

The judgment of McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Fish, Rothstein, Cromwell and Moldaver JJ. was delivered by

I

[1] The Court left no doubt in R. v. Morelli, 2010 SCC 8, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 253, that Canadians may reasonably expect privacy in the information contained on their own personal computers. In my view, the same applies to information on work computers, at least where personal use is permitted or reasonably expected.

[2] Computers that are reasonably used for personal purposes — whether found in the workplace or the home — contain information that is meaningful, intimate, and touching on the user’s biographical core. Vis-à-vis the state, everyone in Canada is constitutionally entitled to expect privacy in personal information of this kind.

[3] While workplace policies and practices may diminish an individual’s expectation of privacy in a work computer, these sorts of operational realities do not in themselves remove the expectation entirely: The nature of the information at stake exposes the likes, interests, thoughts, activities, ideas, and searches for information of the individual user.

[4] Such was the case here. Mr. Cole, a high-school teacher, was permitted to use his work-issued laptop computer for incidental personal purposes. He did. He browsed the Internet and stored personal information on his hard drive.

[5] While performing maintenance activities, a technician found on Mr. Cole’s laptop a hidden folder containing nude and partially nude photographs of a female student. He notified the principal, and, under the latter’s discretion, copied the photographs to a compact disc or CD. The principal seized the laptop, and school board technicians copied the temporary Internet files onto a second CD. The laptop and both CDs were handed over to the police, who without a warrant reviewed their contents and then created a mirror image of the hard drive for forensic purposes.

[6] Mr. Cole was charged with possession of child pornography and unauthorized use of a computer, contrary to ss. 163.1(4) and 342.1(1) of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, respectively, and prosecuted by way of summary conviction. The trial judge excluded all of the computer material pursuant to ss. 8 and 24(2) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Crown offered no further evidence and the charges were therefore dismissed (2008 ONCJ 278, 175 C.R.R. (2d) 263).

[7] The summary conviction appeal court reversed the decision of the trial judge, finding that there was no s. 8 breach ((2009), 2009 CanLII 20699 (ON SC), 190 C.R.R. (2d) 130). The Court of Appeal for Ontario set aside that decision and excluded the disc containing the temporary Internet files, the laptop, and the mirror image of its hard drive (2011 ONCA 218, 105 O.R. (3d) 253).

[8] I agree with the Court of Appeal that the police infringed Mr. Cole's rights under s. 8 of the Charter. He expected a measure of privacy in his personal information on the laptop. Even taking into account the relevant workplace policies, this expectation of privacy was reasonable in the circumstances. It was, however, a diminished expectation of privacy in comparison with the privacy interest considered in Morelli — which, unlike this case, involved a personal computer that belonged to Mr. Morelli and was searched and seized in his home.

[9] A reasonable though diminished expectation of privacy is nonetheless a reasonable expectation of privacy, protected by s. 8 of the Charter. Accordingly, it is subject to state intrusion only under the authority of a reasonable law.

[10] The Crown in this case could point to no law authorizing the police to conduct, as they did, a warrantless search of Mr. Cole's work laptop. The lawful authority of his employer — a school board — to seize and search the laptop did not furnish the police with the same power. And the school board's "third party consent" to the search was of no legal consequence.

[11] Unlike the Court of Appeal, however, I would not exclude any of the unconstitutionally obtained evidence under s. 24(2).

[12] For these reasons and the reasons that follow, I would allow the appeal and set aside the decision of the Court of Appeal.

II

[13] The parties agree that Mr. Cole may face a new trial regardless of the outcome of this appeal: If the appeal is allowed, the Crown may proceed to a new trial with the benefit of all of the computer evidence excluded by the trial judge; if the Crown's appeal is dismissed, the Crown can still return to trial, but only with regard to the disc containing the nude photographs.

[14] As a new trial may thus be had, I shall discuss the facts only to the extent necessary to explain my conclusion.

[15] Mr. Cole, as mentioned earlier, was a high-school teacher. In addition to his regular teaching duties, he was responsible for policing the use by students of their networked laptops. To this end, he was supplied with a laptop owned by the school board and accorded domain administration rights on the school's network. This permitted him to access the hard drives of the students' laptops.

[16] The use of Mr. Cole's work-issued laptop was governed by the school board's Policy and Procedures Manual, which allowed for incidental personal use of the board's information technology. The policy stipulated that teachers' e-mail correspondence remained private, but subject to access by school administrators if specified conditions were met. It did not address privacy in other types of files, but it did state that “all data and messages generated on or handled by board equipment are considered to be the property of [the school board]”.

[17] There is evidence as well that the school’s Acceptable Use Policy — written for and signed by students — applied mutatis mutandis to teachers. This policy not only restricted the uses to which the students could put their laptops, but also warned users not to expect privacy in their files.

[18] Mr. Cole was not the only person who could remotely access networked laptops. School board technicians could do so as well. While performing maintenance activities, a school board technician found, on Mr. Cole’s laptop, a hidden folder containing nude and partially nude photographs of an underage female student.

[19] As mentioned earlier, the technician notified the principal, who directed him to copy the photographs to a compact disc. After discussing the matter with school board officials, the principal seized the laptop.

[20] At no time did Mr. Cole disclose his password. But he did ask the principal not to access a folder containing photographs of his wife.

[21] Technicians at the school board eventually gained access to Mr. Cole’s laptop and made a compact disc containing his temporary Internet files, which is said by the Crown to contain pornographic images.

[22] The next day, a police officer attended at the school and at the offices of the school board, where he took possession of the laptop and the two CDs: one containing photographs of the student; the other, Mr. Cole’s temporary Internet files. The officer reviewed the contents of both discs at the police station, and then sent the laptop away for forensic examination. A mirror image of the hard drive was created for that purpose.

[23] At no time did the officer obtain a warrant to search the laptop's hard drive or either of the compact discs.

III

[24] Mr. Cole brought a pre-trial motion seeking exclusion of the computer evidence pursuant to s. 24(2) of the Charter. The trial judge found that the police had violated Mr. Cole's s. 8 Charter rights, and, for that reason, he excluded all of the computer evidence. The summary conviction appeal court granted the Crown's appeal, finding that Mr. Cole had no reasonable expectation of privacy in his work laptop.

[25] Mr. Cole appealed successfully to the Court of Appeal for Ontario. The Court of Appeal held that Mr. Cole had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the informational content of the laptop, but that this expectation was "modified to the extent that [Mr. Cole] knew that his employer's technician could and would access the laptop as part of his role in maintaining the technical integrity of the school's information network" (para. 47).

[26] On this approach, the initial remote access by the technician was not a "search" for the purposes of s. 8. But the examinations by the police, the principal, and the school board (assuming the Charter applied to the latter two) did engage s. 8.

[27] The Court of Appeal concluded that the search and seizure of the laptop by the principal and the school board was authorized by law and reasonable. The disc containing the photographs was thus created without breaching s. 8. And since Mr. Cole had no privacy interest in the photographs themselves, he had no legal basis to attack the search and seizure by the police of the disc to which they had been copied.

[28] The laptop and the disc with Mr. Cole's temporary Internet files, however, involve different considerations. Mr. Cole had a continuing reasonable expectation of privacy in this material, and its seizure by school officials did not endow the police with their authority. Nor could the school board consent to the search by the police. As the police had no other lawful authority, the s. 8 breach was established.

[29] The Court of Appeal excluded the laptop and the mirror image of its hard drive pursuant to s. 24(2) of the Charter. The court also excluded the disc containing the Internet files, but only provisionally, leaving it “open to the trial judge to re-assess the admissibility of this evidence if the evidence becomes important to the truth-seeking function as the trial unfolds” (para. 92).

[30] The disc containing the photographs of the student was legally obtained and therefore admissible. As the trial judge had wrongly excluded this evidence, the Court of Appeal ordered a new trial.

[31] The Crown appeals from the order excluding the laptop, its mirror image, and the Internet files disc. Mr. Cole does not challenge the admission, under ss. 8 and 24(2) of the Charter, of the disc containing the photographs, or the order of a new trial.

[32] This appeal thus raises three issues: (1) whether the Court of Appeal erred in concluding that Mr. Cole had a reasonable expectation of privacy in his employer-issued work computer; (2) whether the Court of Appeal erred in concluding that the search and seizure by the police of the laptop and the disc containing the Internet files was unreasonable within the meaning of s. 8 of the Charter; and (3) whether the Court of Appeal erred in excluding the evidence under s. 24(2) of the Charter.

[33] I would answer the first two questions in the negative, but not the third.

IV

[34] Section 8 of the Charter guarantees the right of everyone in Canada to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure. An inspection is a search, and a taking is a seizure, where a person has a reasonable privacy interest in the object or subject matter of the state action and the information to which it gives access (R. v. Tessling, 2004 SCC 67, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 432, at para. 18; R. v. Evans, 1996 CanLII 248 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 8, at para. 11; R. v. Borden, 1994 CanLII 63 (SCC), [1994] 3 S.C.R. 145, at p. 160).

[35] Privacy is a matter of reasonable expectations. An expectation of privacy will attract Charter protection if reasonable and informed people in the position of the accused would expect privacy (R. v. Patrick, 2009 SCC 17, [2009] 1 S.C.R. 579, at paras. 14-15).

[36] If the claimant has a reasonable expectation of privacy, s. 8 is engaged, and the court must then determine whether the search or seizure was reasonable.

[37] Where, as here, a search is carried out without a warrant, it is presumptively unreasonable (R. v. Nolet, 2010 SCC 24, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 851, at para. 21; Hunter v. Southam Inc., 1984 CanLII 33 (SCC), [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145, at p. 161). To establish reasonableness, the Crown must prove on the balance of probabilities (1) that the search was authorized by law, (2) that the authorizing law was itself reasonable, and (3) that the authority to conduct the search was exercised in a reasonable manner (Nolet, at para. 21; R. v. Collins, 1987 CanLII 84 (SCC), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 265, at p. 278).

[38] Before applying this analytical framework here, I pause to explain why it is unnecessary on this appeal to decide whether the Charter applies to school officials. The Crown conceded in the courts below that it does. Like the Court of Appeal, I shall proceed on that assumption, as did Cory J. in R. v. M. (M.R.), 1998 CanLII 770 (SCC), [1998] 3 S.C.R. 393, at paras. 24-25.

V

[39] Whether Mr. Cole had a reasonable expectation of privacy depends on the “totality of the circumstances” (R. v. Edwards, 1996 CanLII 255 (SCC), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 128, at para. 45).

[40] The “totality of the circumstances” test is one of substance, not of form. Four lines of inquiry guide the application of the test: (1) an examination of the subject matter of the alleged search; (2) a determination as to whether the claimant had a direct interest in the subject matter; (3) an inquiry into whether the claimant had a subjective expectation of privacy in the subject matter; and (4) an assessment as to whether this subjective expectation of privacy was objectively reasonable, having regard to the totality of the circumstances (Tessling, at para. 32; Patrick, at para. 27). I will discuss each in turn.

[41] In this case, the subject matter of the alleged search is the data, or informational content of the laptop’s hard drive, its mirror image, and the Internet files disc — not the devices themselves.

[42] Our concern is thus with informational privacy: “[T]he claim of individuals, groups, or institutions to determine for themselves when, how, and to what extent information about them is communicated to others” (Tessling, at para. 23, quoting A. F. Westin, Privacy and Freedom (1970), at p. 7).

[43] Mr. Cole’s direct interest and subjective expectation of privacy in the informational content of his computer can readily be inferred from his use of the laptop to browse the Internet and to store personal information on the hard drive.

[44] The remaining question is whether Mr. Cole’s subjective expectation of privacy was objectively reasonable.

[45] There is no definitive list of factors that must be considered in answering this question, though some guidance may be derived from the relevant case law. As Sopinka J. explained in R. v. Plant, 1993 CanLII 70 (SCC), [1993] 3 S.C.R. 281, at p. 293:

In fostering the underlying values of dignity, integrity and autonomy, it is fitting that s. 8 of the Charter should seek to protect a biographical core of personal information which individuals in a free and democratic society would wish to maintain and control from dissemination to the state. This would include information which tends to reveal intimate details of the lifestyle and personal choices of the individual.

[46] The closer the subject matter of the alleged search lies to the biographical core of personal information, the more this factor will favour a reasonable expectation of privacy. Put another way, the more personal and confidential the information, the more willing reasonable and informed Canadians will be to recognize the existence of a constitutionally protected privacy interest.

[47] Computers that are used for personal purposes, regardless of where they are found or to whom they belong, “contain the details of our financial, medical, and personal situations” (Morelli, at para. 105). This is particularly the case where, as here, the computer is used to browse the Web. Internet-connected devices “reveal our specific interests, likes, and propensities, recording in the browsing history and cache files the information we seek out and read, watch, or listen to on the Internet” (ibid.).

[48] This sort of private information falls at the very heart of the “biographical core” protected by s. 8 of the Charter.

[49] Like Morelli, this case involves highly revealing and meaningful information about an individual’s personal life — a factor strongly indicative of a reasonable expectation of privacy. Unlike in Morelli, however, this case involves a work-issued laptop and not a personal computer found in a private residence.

[50] The Policy and Procedures Manual of the school board asserted ownership over not only the hardware, but also the data stored on it: “Information technology systems and all data and messages generated on or handled by board equipment are considered to be the property of [the board], and are not the property of users of the information technology”.

[51] While the ownership of property is a relevant consideration, it is not determinative (R. v. Buhay, 2003 SCC 30, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 631, at para. 22). Nor should it carry undue weight within the contextual analysis. As Dickson J. (later C.J.) noted in Hunter, at p. 158, there is “nothing in the language of [s. 8] to restrict it to the protection of property or to associate it with the law of trespass”.

[52] The context in which personal information is placed on an employer-owned computer is nonetheless significant. The policies, practices, and customs of the workplace are relevant to the extent that they concern the use of computers by employees. These “operational realities” may diminish the expectation of privacy that reasonable employees might otherwise have in their personal information (O’Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709 (1987), at p. 717, per O’Connor J.).

[53] Even as modified by practice, however, written policies are not determinative of a person’s reasonable expectation of privacy. Whatever the policies state, one must consider the totality of the circumstances in order to determine whether privacy is a reasonable expectation in the particular situation (R. v. Gomboc, 2010 SCC 55, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 211, at para. 34, per Deschamps J.).

[54] In this case, the operational realities of Mr. Cole’s workplace weigh both for and against the existence of a reasonable expectation of privacy. For, because written policy and actual practice permitted Mr. Cole to use his work-issued laptop for personal purposes. Against, because both policy and technological reality deprived him of exclusive control over — and access to — the personal information he chose to record on it.

[55] As mentioned earlier, the Policy and Procedures Manual stated that the school board owned “all data and messages generated on or handled by board equipment”. Moreover, the principal reminded teachers, annually, that the Acceptable Use Policy applied to them. This policy provided that “[t]eachers and administrators may monitor all student work and e-mail including material saved on laptop hard drives”, and warned that “[u]sers should NOT assume that files stored on network servers or hard drives of individual computers will be private”.

[56] Though Mr. Cole’s laptop was equipped with a password, the contents of his hard drive were thus available to all other users and technicians with domain administration rights — at least when the computer was connected to the network. And even if the Acceptable Use Policy did not directly apply to teachers, as Mr. Cole maintains, he and other teachers were in fact put on notice that the privacy they might otherwise have expected in their files was limited by the operational realities of their workplace.

[57] The “totality of the circumstances” consists of many strands, and they pull in competing directions in this case. On balance, however, they support the objective reasonableness of Mr. Cole’s subjective expectation of privacy.

[58] The nature of the information in issue heavily favours recognition of a constitutionally protected privacy interest. Mr. Cole’s personal use of his work-issued laptop generated information that is meaningful, intimate, and organically connected to his biographical core. Pulling in the other direction, of course, are the ownership of the laptop by the school board, the workplace policies and practices, and the technology in place at the school. These considerations diminished Mr. Cole’s privacy interest in his laptop, at least in comparison to the personal computer at issue in Morelli, but they did not eliminate it entirely.

VI

[59] As Mr. Cole had a reasonable expectation of privacy in his Internet browsing history and the informational content of his work-issued laptop, any non-consensual examination by the state was a “search”; and any taking, a “seizure”.

[60] Mr. Cole does not challenge the initial inspection of the laptop by the school technician in the context of routine maintenance activities. He concedes, moreover, that the technician did not breach his s. 8 rights. In this light, I leave for another day the finer points of an employer’s right to monitor computers issued to employees.

[61] The Court of Appeal concluded that, in the circumstances of this case, the subsequent search and seizure of the laptop by school officials acting under the direction of the principal was not unreasonable within the meaning of s. 8 of the Charter. Mr. Cole does not challenge this conclusion.

[62] In any event, I agree with the Court of Appeal. The principal had a statutory duty to maintain a safe school environment (Education Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. E.2, s. 265), and, by necessary implication, a reasonable power to seize and search a school-board-issued laptop if the principal believed on reasonable grounds that the hard drive contained compromising photographs of a student. This implied power is not unlike the one found by the majority of this Court in M. (M.R.), at para. 51.

[63] I likewise agree with the Court of Appeal that other school board officials had the same implied powers of search and seizure as the principal (paras. 64-66).

[64] I turn then to the conduct of the police.

[65] The police may well have been authorized to take physical control of the laptop and CD temporarily, and for the limited purpose of safeguarding potential evidence of a crime until a search warrant could be obtained. However, that is not what occurred here. Quite the contrary: The police seized the laptop and CD in order to search their contents for evidence of a crime without the consent of Mr. Cole, and without prior judicial authorization.

[66] The unresolved question on this appeal is whether the authority of the school officials afforded the police lawful authority to conduct this warrantless search and seizure. In my view, it did not.

[67] In taking possession of the computer material and examining its contents, the police acted independently of the school board (R. v. Colarusso, 1994 CanLII 134 (SCC), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 20, at pp. 58-60). The fact that the school board had acquired lawful possession of the laptop for its own administrative purposes did not vest in the police a delegated or derivative power to appropriate and search the computer for the purposes of a criminal investigation.

[68] This was made clear in Colarusso, where a coroner who had lawfully seized bodily samples then turned them over to the police. As La Forest J. explained:

The arguments advanced by the Crown seeking to establish the reasonableness of warrantless seizures by a coroner rely on the underlying premise that the coroner fulfils an essential non-criminal role. The state cannot, however, have it both ways; it cannot be argued that the coroner's seizure is reasonable because it is independent of the criminal law enforcement arm of the state while the state is at the same time attempting to introduce into criminal proceedings the very evidence seized by the coroner. It follows logically, in my opinion, that a seizure by a coroner will only be reasonable while the evidence is used for the purpose for which it was seized, namely, for determining whether an inquest into the death of the individual is warranted. Once the evidence has been appropriated by the criminal law enforcement arm of the state for use in criminal proceedings, there is no foundation on which to argue that the coroner's seizure continues to be reasonable. [pp. 62-63]

[69] Where a lower constitutional standard is applicable in an administrative context, as in this case, the police cannot invoke that standard to evade the prior judicial authorization that is normally required for searches or seizures in the context of criminal investigations.

[70] The Crown relies on Quebec (Attorney General) v. Laroche, 2002 SCC 72, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 708, R. v. Jarvis, 2002 SCC 73, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 757, and R. v. D'Amour (2002), 2002 CanLII 45015 \(ON CA\), 166 C.C.C. (3d) 477 (Ont. C.A.), for the proposition that a warrant is not required for a regulatory authority to transfer material to law enforcement officers — and that this empowers the officers to examine the transferred materials without a warrant.

[71] I would reject this submission. All of the cases relied on by the Crown arose in heavily regulated environments. In each instance, given the regulated nature of the documents in question, the individual claiming the protection of s. 8 did not have a reasonable expectation of preventing or controlling the further dissemination of his or her information to the law enforcement branch of the state.

[72] No warrant was required because the claimants in the cases cited by the Crown, unlike Mr. Cole in this case, did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the information remitted to law enforcement officials. Mr. Cole, throughout, retained a reasonable and “continuous” expectation of privacy in the personal information on his work-issued laptop (Buhay, at para. 33 (emphasis added); R. v. Dymont, 1988 CanLII 10 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 417, at p. 435).

[73] The school board was, of course, legally entitled to inform the police of its discovery of contraband on the laptop. This would doubtless have permitted the police to obtain a warrant to search the computer for the contraband. But receipt of the computer from the school board did not afford the police warrantless access to the personal information contained within it. This information remained subject, at all relevant times, to Mr. Cole’s reasonable and subsisting expectation of privacy.

[74] The Crown alleges a second justification for the conduct of the police: third party consent. An employer (a third party), says the Crown, can validly consent to a warrantless search or seizure of a laptop issued to one of its employees. The underlying premise of this submission is that a third party may waive another person’s privacy interest — thereby disengaging that person’s guarantee under s. 8 of the Charter.

[75] In the United States, unlike in Canada, there is high authority for a doctrine of third party consent (United States v. Matlock, 415 U.S. 164 (1974); Illinois v. Rodriguez, 497 U.S. 177 (1990)).

[76] Matlock is premised on the notion that third party consent is justifiable because the individual voluntarily assumed the risk that his information would fall into the hands of law enforcement (see United States v. Ziegler, 474 F.3d 1184 (9th Circ. 2007), at p. 1191). However, this Court rejected that sort of “risk analysis” in R. v. Duarte, 1990 CanLII 150 (SCC), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 30, at pp. 47-48, and R. v. Wong, 1990 CanLII 56 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 36, at p. 45.

[77] Moreover, the doctrine of third party consent is inconsistent with this Court's jurisprudence on first party consent. As Iacobucci J. explained in Borden, at p. 162, "[i]n order for a waiver of the right to be secure against an unreasonable seizure to be effective, the person purporting to consent must be possessed of the requisite informational foundation for a true relinquishment of the right."

[78] For consent to be valid, it must be both voluntary and informed. The adoption of a doctrine of third party consent in this country would imply that the police could interfere with an individual's privacy interests on the basis of a consent that is not voluntarily given by the rights holder, and not necessarily based on sufficient information in his or her hands to make a meaningful choice.

[79] I would therefore reject the Crown's contention that a third party could validly consent to a search or otherwise waive a constitutional protection on behalf of another.

VII

[80] With the Charter breach established, the inquiry shifts to s. 24(2).

[81] Unconstitutionally obtained evidence should be excluded under s. 24(2) if, considering all of the circumstances, its admission would bring the administration of justice into disrepute. This determination requires a balancing assessment involving three broad inquiries: (1) the seriousness of the Charter-infringing state conduct; (2) the impact of the breach on the Charter-protected interests of the accused; and (3) society's interest in the adjudication of the case on its merits (R. v. Grant, 2009 SCC 32, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 353, at para. 71).

[82] The standard of review is deferential: "Where a trial judge has considered the proper factors and has not made any unreasonable finding, his or her determination is owed considerable deference on appellate review" (R. v. Côté, 2011 SCC 46, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 215, at para. 44). But where the relevant factors have been overlooked or disregarded, a fresh Grant analysis is both necessary and appropriate.

[83] Both the trial judge and the Court of Appeal — erroneously, in my respectful view — excluded the unconstitutionally obtained evidence pursuant to s. 24(2) of the Charter.

[84] Regarding the seriousness of the Charter-infringing conduct, the courts below focused on the actions of Detective Constable Timothy Burt, the officer who took possession of the computer material, who searched the discs, and who sent the laptop away for forensic examination. The trial judge concluded that this officer's actions were "egregious" (para. 26), and the Court of Appeal considered his conduct serious enough to favour exclusion.

[85] I am unable to share either conclusion.

[86] The police officer did not knowingly or deliberately disregard the warrant requirement. As events were unfolding in this case, the law governing privacy expectations in work computers was still unsettled. Without the guidance of appellate case law, D.C. Burt believed, erroneously but understandably, that he had the power to search without a warrant.

[87] He did not act negligently or in bad faith. Nor does his conduct evidence insensitivity to Charter values, or an unacceptable ignorance of Mr. Cole's rights under the Charter. The officer did not rely exclusively, as the courts below suggested, on his mistaken belief that the ownership of the laptop was necessarily determinative. While this was an important factor underlying his decision not to obtain a search warrant, the officer also turned his mind to whether Mr. Cole had an expectation of privacy in the laptop (p. 130). He was alert to the possibility that the hard drive contained private or privileged material (pp. 130-31 and 164). And he testified that he intended to respect Mr. Cole's privacy interest in this regard (p. 131).

[88] More particularly, D.C. Burt testified as follows:

Q. Did you consider whether or not Richard Cole had any expectation of privacy in that computer?

A. I did consider that. The information that I was receiving was that it was the School Board's computer and that was their property. I had never received any information in regards to Mr. Cole owning that computer or that he had any privileged material. And I've dealt with cases where there have been privileged material on a laptop or on a computer. And the only information I had received about any private material that was on that computer came from Mr. Bourget and that was in regards to some images of Mr. Cole's — personal images of his wife and that was the only information I had in regards to any private information there.

Q. And having received that information that there may be images of his wife on the laptop, would you respect that any privacy interest in those photographs?

A. Yes, sir. Business computer or any computers may have some personal stuff on there. [Emphasis added.]

[89] What of the fact that the officer had reasonable and probable grounds to obtain a warrant? In some circumstances, this may aggravate the seriousness of the breach (Côté, at para. 71). Where a police officer could have acted constitutionally but did not, this might indicate that the officer adopted a casual attitude toward — or, still worse, deliberately flouted — the individual's Charter rights (Buhay, at paras. 63-64). But that is not this case: The officer, as mentioned earlier, appears to have sincerely, though erroneously, considered Mr. Cole's Charter interests.

[90] Accordingly, in my view, the trial judge's finding of "egregious" conduct was tainted by clear and determinative error (Côté, at para. 51). On the undisputed evidence, the conduct of the officer was simply not an egregious breach of the Charter. As earlier seen, the officer did attach great importance to the school board's ownership of the laptop, but not to the exclusion of other considerations. He did not "confuse ownership of hardware with privacy in the contents of software" (trial reasons, at para. 29).

[91] Turning then to the impact of the breach on Mr. Cole's Charter-protected interests, the question relates to "the extent to which the breach actually undermined the interests protected by the right infringed" (Grant, at para. 76). In the context of a s. 8 breach, as here, the focus is on the magnitude or intensity of the individual's reasonable expectation of privacy, and on whether the search demeaned his or her dignity (R. v. Belnavis, 1997 CanLII 320 (SCC), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 341, at para. 40; Grant, at para. 78).

[92] In his s. 24(2) analysis, the trial judge neglected entirely to consider the diminished nature of Mr. Cole's reasonable expectation of privacy. Likewise, the Court of Appeal overlooked the fact that the operational realities of Mr. Cole's workplace attenuated the effect of the breach on his Charter-protected interests.

[93] Moreover, the courts below failed to consider the impact of the "discoverability" of the computer evidence on the second Grant inquiry. As earlier noted, the officer had reasonable and probable grounds to obtain a warrant. Had he complied with the applicable constitutional requirements, the evidence would necessarily have been discovered. This further attenuated the impact of the breach on Mr. Cole's Charter-protected interests (Côté, at para. 72).

[94] Finally, I turn to the third Grant inquiry: society's interest in an adjudication on the merits. The question is "whether the truth-seeking function of the criminal trial process would be better served by admission of the evidence, or by its exclusion" (Grant, at para. 79).

[95] Not unlike the considerations under the first and second inquiries, the considerations under this third inquiry must not be permitted to overwhelm the s. 24(2) analysis (Côté, at para. 48; R. v. Harrison, 2009 SCC 34, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 494, at para. 40). They are nonetheless entitled to appropriate weight and, in the circumstances of this case, they clearly weigh against exclusion of the evidence.

[96] The laptop, the mirror image of its hard drive, and the disc containing Mr. Cole's temporary Internet files are all highly reliable and probative physical evidence. And while excluding it would not "gut" the prosecution entirely, I accept the Crown's submission that the forensic examination of the laptop, at least, is "critical": the metadata on the laptop may allow the Crown to establish, for example, when the photographs were downloaded and whether they have ever been accessed.

[97] In sum, the admission of the evidence would not bring the administration of justice into disrepute. The breach was not high on the scale of seriousness, and its impact was attenuated by both the diminished privacy interest and the discoverability of the evidence. The exclusion of the material would, however, have a marked negative impact on the truth-seeking function of the criminal trial process.

[98] For all of these reasons, I would not exclude the evidence unlawfully obtained by the police in this case.

VIII

[99] Having concluded that none of the computer evidence should have been excluded pursuant to s. 24(2), it is not strictly necessary to address the provisional nature of the Court of Appeal's ruling in respect of the Internet files disc. Nevertheless, I find it appropriate to do so.

[100] Generally speaking, the decision to exclude evidence under s. 24(2) should be final. In "very limited circumstances", however, a "material change of circumstances" may justify a trial judge to revisit an exclusionary order (R. v. Calder, 1996 CanLII 232 \(SCC\), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 660, at para. 35).

[101] For reasons of principle and of practice, the exclusion of evidence should generally be final. As the intervener Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario) points out, an accused is entitled, as a matter of principle, to know the case to meet. If an exclusionary order is revisited after the Crown closes its case, this principle is necessarily undermined. If the case to meet continues to shift, the prejudice is obvious and the trial might well become unmanageable (R. v. Underwood, 1998 CanLII 839 \(SCC\), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 77, at paras. 6-7).

[102] Moreover, even when an exclusionary order is revisited before the Crown closes its case, there is a serious danger of prejudice to the defendant. The decisions of defence counsel over the course of the trial — premised on the assumption that the evidence has been excluded — risk being undercut. It would be extraordinarily difficult for a trial court to remedy this sort of prejudice.

[103] In this case, the Court of Appeal invited the trial judge “to re-assess the admissibility of [the temporary Internet files disc] if the evidence becomes important to the truth-seeking function as the trial unfolds” (para. 92).

[104] In my respectful view, this would not — at least not on its own — qualify as “very limited circumstances” justifying an exception to the rule. Unconstitutionally obtained evidence, once excluded, will not become admissible simply because the Crown cannot otherwise satisfy its burden to prove the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt.

IX

[105] As stated at the outset, I would allow the appeal, set aside the exclusionary order of the Court of Appeal, and affirm the order of a new trial.

[106] Mr. Cole asks that he be awarded his costs regardless of the outcome of the appeal. While the Court has the discretion to make such an order, I would decline to do so. There is nothing “remarkable” about this case — the principal criterion — and there was no allegation of “oppressive or improper conduct” on the part of the Crown (R. v. Trask, 1987 CanLII 24 \(SCC\), [1987] 2 S.C.R. 304, at p. 308; R. v. M. (C.A.), 1996 CanLII 230 \(SCC\), [1996] 1 S.C.R. 500, at para. 97).

The following are the reasons delivered by [107] ABELLA J. (dissenting) — While I agree with Justice Fish that there has been a Charter breach, in my respectful view, like Justice Karakatsanis in the Court of Appeal, I would exclude the disc containing the temporary Internet files and the copy of the hard drive.

[108] In R. v. Morelli, 2010 SCC 8 (CanLII), [2010] 1 S.C.R. 253, Fish J. observed that “it is difficult to imagine a more intrusive invasion of privacy than the search of one’s home and personal computer” (para. 105). Workplace computers, while clearly engaging different considerations, nonetheless attract many of the same privacy concerns as home computers.

[109] Workplace computers are increasingly given to employees for their exclusive use, and employees are allowed — and often expected — to use them away from the workplace for both work-related and personal use. And as more data is stored in the cloud and accessed on both workplace and personal computers, the ownership of the device or the data, far from being determinative of the reasonable expectation of privacy, becomes an increasingly unhelpful marker. In deciding whether to exclude evidence illegally seized from workplace computers, this blurring of the line between personal and workplace usage should inform the analysis.

[110] Three considerations come into play in this case in determining whether to exclude the evidence. The first is the seriousness of the Charter-infringing state conduct, which looks at whether the police acted in good faith based on their presumed knowledge of the law. Detective Constable Burt, an experienced officer with years of experience in investigating cyber-crime, was expected to follow established Charter jurisprudence. His failure to do so, in my view, represents a serious breach.

[111] This Court’s decision in R. v. Kokesch, 1990 CanLII 55 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 3, is particularly helpful. In that case, the Court decided that a perimeter search of the accused’s residence violated s. 8 of the Charter. Prior to Kokesch, it was unclear whether such a search violated the Charter. Nonetheless, the Court excluded the impugned evidence, noting that the law of trespass was firmly settled, and that the police “ought to have known” that they were trespassing. In the words of Sopinka J.:

I do not wish to be understood as imposing upon the police a burden of instant interpretation of court decisions. The question of the length of time after a judgment that ought to be permitted to pass before knowledge of its content is attributed to the police for the purposes of assessing good faith is an interesting one, but it does not arise on these facts. The police here had the benefit of slightly more than twelve years to study Eccles, slightly less than six years to consider Colet, and slightly more than two years to digest the constitutional warrant requirement set out in Hunter. Any doubt they may have had about their ability to trespass in the absence of specific statutory authority to do so was manifestly unreasonable, and cannot, as a matter of law, be relied upon as good faith for the purposes of s. 24(2). [Emphasis added; p. 33.]

[112] In other words, the Court concluded that if, in conducting their search, the police disregarded settled law, any specific uncertainty in the law becomes far less determinative. Otherwise, it would open the door too widely for the admission of evidence under s. 24(2).

[113] In this case, the trial judge found that D.C. Burt assumed that “because the laptop belonged to the Rainbow District School Board, there was no need for him to get a warrant”. To borrow from Kokesch, D.C. Burt’s exclusive reliance on ownership to determine whether a warrant was required was unreasonable and cannot be relied on as good faith for the purposes of s. 24(2).

[114] While the law relating to the search of workplace computers was unsettled at the time of the search, what was settled was the fact that property rights did not determine whether a warrant was required. In 1984, Hunter v. Southam Inc., 1984 CanLII 33 \(SCC\), [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145, divorced the concept of privacy from the law of trespass and said that s. 8 protects “people, not places” (p. 159). In 1990, the Court found a reasonable expectation of privacy in a hotel room in R. v. Wong, 1990 CanLII 56 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 36, and in 2003, found a reasonable expectation of privacy in a rented locker in R. v. Buhay, 2003 SCC 30 \(CanLII\), [2003] 1 S.C.R. 631. The search in this case, in June 2006, occurred many years after this established jurisprudence, undeniably a sufficient amount of time for an officer who had years of experience in cyber-crime to have known that property interests did not determine the reasonable expectation of privacy.

[115] Justice Fish finds that the trial judge made a “clear and determinative” error in finding that D.C. Burt wrongly relied on the ownership of the laptop in deciding not to get a warrant. With respect, in my view the trial judge’s conclusion is fully supported by the evidence.

[116] D.C. Burt accepted that he had reasonable grounds for a warrant. Then, on multiple occasions, he stated explicitly that he chose not to obtain a warrant because the computer, and therefore its data, were the property of the School Board:

[Crown Counsel Mr. Roy]. And did you consider obtaining a search warrant?

A. Yes, I did, sir.

Q. And whose decision was it to make with respect to whether or not you would be obtaining a search warrant? Did you consult with anyone else?

A. No, that was my decision, sir.

Q. And why did you decide not to obtain a search warrant?

A. It was my belief that the laptop in question was the property of the Rainbow District School Board, that Mr. Slywchuk had said that it was a teacher or a staff computer, that the sticker on the bottom of the laptop indicated it was property of Rainbow District School Board, and at that point I was advised that it was their property. . . .

. . .

Q. Now would your approach have been different if you were seizing a computer from a residence?

A. In a residence there are several users on computers. This is a personal computer as opposed to a business computer with a property. Most of us don't put a "Property of Tim Burt" on the back of my computer as opposed to a property of an employer. So I would look in my household and there are three, four people who could use my computer and I believe that each one of them would have a privacy interest because my son may be chatting with someone or somebody in a household may be chatting and they may claim that they have some kind of privacy. I would get a search warrant even if, use an example, a wife catches her husband doing something and says I don't want this computer, I want you to do this because I caught him doing something illegal, and it's in my possession already at headquarters, I would get a warrant for it in that time because I would be respecting the privacy of all those people on that personal computer.

Q. Did you consider whether or not Richard Cole had any expectation of privacy in that computer?

A. I did consider that. The information that I was receiving was that it was the School Board's computer and that was their property. I had never received any information in regards to Mr. Cole owning that computer or that he had any privileged material. And I've dealt with cases where there have been privileged material on a laptop or on a computer. And the only information I had received about any private material that was on that computer came from Mr. Bourget [the school principal] and that was in regards to some images of Mr. Cole's — personal images of his wife and that was the only information I had in regards to any private information there.

. . .

[Defence Counsel Mr. Keaney]. Okay. And you decided not to get a search warrant before looking at that CD called the temporary Internet folder. Why?

A. Because of the same reasons as I explained with the laptop, that I believe that the data and the images were all part of that laptop and that that laptop belonged to the Rainbow District School Board.

...

A. . . . if I believe that there's a privacy interest I would get a warrant . . . for it, but based on the information I collected up until the examination of the computer, including the procedures, the data contained within and that would be, I guess, a subject to review, the data contained and created within being the Board's property, what they call their property, I didn't believe that that data belonged to Mr. Cole. [Emphasis added.]

[117] Apart from vague references to “privileged material”, the distinction that D.C. Burtt drew between the search of a shared home computer and that of a work computer was the fact that the laptop belonged to the School Board. He acknowledged that if he were searching a home computer used by several people, he would obtain a warrant “because [he] would be respecting the privacy of all those people on that personal computer”. The distinction for him appears to have been that “[m]ost of us don't put a ‘Property of Tim Burtt’ on the back of [a] computer as opposed to a property of an employer.” Indeed, immediately after this statement, D.C. Burtt reaffirmed that he did not get a warrant in Mr. Cole's case because of the School Board's ownership of the laptop. This echoes the repeated statements he made throughout his testimony to justify his failure to get a warrant or to conduct a further inquiry into the privacy interests at play.

[118] Despite acknowledging that there could be personal information on Mr. Cole's computer, and despite being told by the principal of the school that Mr. Cole kept personal photographs on it, there is no evidence that D.C. Burtt took any steps to discover the extent of the private information on Mr. Cole's computer before effecting a warrantless search.

[119] D.C. Burtt acknowledged that he knew about the private use that Mr. Cole made of the laptop before he looked at the content of the CDs. He knew that Mr. Cole had a password to his computer. He had also received statements confirming that the photos were in a hidden folder, that teachers regularly kept personal information on their laptops and that Mr. Cole specifically had “personal private information on his computer”, namely the photos of his wife. In fact, D.C. Burt even acknowledged that, in conducting a warrantless search of Mr. Cole’s workplace computer, he knew there could be “personal stuff on there”, and would make efforts to avoid it:

Business computer or any computers may have some personal stuff on there. I can even use an example from our own computers that I know that officers may check a website and may send an e-mail. So some people will have a personal folder or a personal picture or something like that. I’ll respect that because it’s not what I’m looking for. Essentially I’ve been given information in regards to possible child pornography. Mr. Cole’s wife is not part of the investigation and it’s — when the forensic images obtain . . . It’s hard to explain but the whole computer, when the . . . The forensic program takes all of the images, not just from one area. It takes it so that it can recreate a proper image. So when all those images come in I’m not particularly — I’m not looking for Mr. Cole’s family pictures. I’m not looking for Mr. Cole’s financial records. I’m not looking for anything that may be in there. What I’m looking for are images of child pornography or improper Internet — not Internet searches but web browsing where there may be access of child pornography and illegal activity related to child pornography or any other offence. [Emphasis added.]

[120] D.C. Burt would not have been able to rely on the School Board’s ownership of an office desk for a warrantless search of Mr. Cole’s personal files in the desk’s drawer, in complete disregard for Mr. Cole’s privacy interests (see Buhay). The same should be true of Mr. Cole’s school-owned laptop.

[121] There were also no exigent circumstances or other legitimate reasons that forced the police to proceed without a warrant. As the trial judge noted, “[h]ad the legal route to accessing the data in that computer been followed, it is likely that it could have been obtained without alerting Richard Cole about what was transpiring.” There was therefore no urgent need on the part of the police to preserve the evidence.

[122] In his testimony, D.C. Burt accepted that once he received the CDs and the laptop, he was confident that they would remain uncompromised, that their integrity would not be at issue, and that there was ample time to get a warrant. In fact, though he looked at the CDs immediately after seizing the materials on June 28, the laptop was not sent for forensic analysis until August 18, nearly two months later. This too weighs in favour of exclusion.

[123] It is also uncontested that D.C. Burt not only had ample time to obtain a warrant, he had reasonable and probable grounds to do so. The relevance of this factor was recently discussed in R. v. Côté, 2011 SCC 46 \(CanLII\), [2011] 3 S.C.R. 215, where the Court said that the failure to obtain a warrant can either be a mitigating or an aggravating factor under the first branch of the Grant test, depending on whether the police had a “legitimate” reason for it (R. v. Grant, 2009 SCC 32 \(CanLII\), [2009] 2 S.C.R. 353). In this case, it seems to me that the “legitimacy” of the warrantless search hinges on the finding that D.C. Burt’s good faith was compromised by his disregard for the established law. Since I see no reason justifying his decision not to get a warrant, this factor too mandates in favour of exclusion.

[124] The second aspect of the Grant test considers the impact on the Charter-protected interests of the accused. This factor “calls for an evaluation of the extent to which the breach actually undermined the interests protected by the right infringed” (Grant, at para. 76). The interest in this case is privacy. Grant, R. v. Harrison, 2009 SCC 34 \(CanLII\), [2009] 2 S.C.R. 494, and Côté address the key relevant concerns at play in determining the impact of a breach of a privacy interest in this case: the reasonable expectation of privacy and the extent of the intrusion.

[125] The reasonable expectation of privacy is central to assessing the impact of the breach on the accused’s Charter-protected interests. Even if it can be said that there is a diminished expectation of privacy in a workplace computer, this is not the end of the inquiry. The record shows that teachers at the school kept a great deal of personal information on their computers, a fact that was known both to the school and to D.C. Burt prior to the police search. Mr. Cole himself kept personal photos, financial records, tax records, and information about a property he owned on his computer. The search also included Mr. Cole’s Internet browsing history, which would provide an extensive, unfiltered view of many aspects of his life. As Justice Fish recognized, the information that was available on the search of Mr. Cole’s computer was “meaningful, intimate, and organically connected to his biographical core”.

[126] The substantial amount of private information which was seized by the police from Mr. Cole’s computer meant that it was a highly intrusive search. In other words, regardless of whether there is a diminished expectation of privacy in a workplace computer, the extent of the seizure in a given case should be relevant under s. 24(2). In Harrison, the Court asked whether “the breach [was] merely transient or trivial in its impact” and considered it a mitigating fact that, “[h]ad it not turned up incriminating evidence, the detention would have been brief” (paras. 28 and 30). In Côté, the Court noted that the police had conducted a two-hour warrantless search of the accused’s home (para. 85). And in Morelli, the breadth of the search of the accused’s computer was significant to the analysis (paras. 104-5).

[127] The warrantless search and seizure in this case included not only the impugned photos, but also the computer and a copy of the data on the hard drive. In other words, it had no restrictions as to scope. As a result, regardless of any diminished reasonable expectation of privacy in a workplace computer, the extent of the search of Mr. Cole’s hard drive and browsing history was significant, which weighs in favour of exclusion.

[128] The fact that the police had reasonable and probable grounds to obtain a search warrant and discover the evidence does little to attenuate the intrusiveness of the search that actually occurred. As this Court explained in Côté, the absence of prior judicial authorization still constitutes a significant infringement of privacy. Indeed, it must not be forgotten that the purpose of the Charter’s protection against unreasonable searches is to prevent them before they occur, not to sort them out from reasonable intrusions on an ex post facto analysis: R. v. Feeney, 1997 CanLII 342 (SCC), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 13, at para. 45. Thus, prior authorization is directly related to, and forms part of, an individual’s reasonable expectation of privacy. [para. 84]

[129] The third and final factor in Grant is society’s interest in an adjudication on the merits, which “asks whether the truth-seeking function of the criminal trial process would be better served by admission of the evidence, or by its exclusion” (para. 79). Three considerations have been emphasized by the Court in weighing this factor: the reliability of the evidence, its importance to the prosecution’s case, and the seriousness of the offence.

[130] First, “[i]f a breach . . . undermines the reliability of the evidence, this points in the direction of exclusion of the evidence” (Grant, at para. 81). While I agree with Justice Fish that the evidence in this case is reliable, a factor arguing in favour of admission, its importance to the prosecution’s case is, it seems to me, minimal, and it can hardly be said to reach the level described in Grant of “effectively gut[ting] the prosecution” (para. 83).

[131] There is little evidence in this case about the particular relevance of the laptop and Internet browsing history, especially given that the pornographic photographs themselves, as well as the screenshot showing their location on Mr. Cole’s computer, were both admitted. The Crown suggests that the information in the laptop, including the metadata accompanying the photos (data stored on each file that records when it was created and altered) and the Internet browsing history, help establish the context in which the files were downloaded and whether the files were viewed, copied or transmitted.

[132] At best, the Crown’s need for Mr. Cole’s entire hard drive and his browsing history in order to establish possession of child pornography, is highly speculative. In Morelli, the Court held that in order to be guilty of possession of child pornography, “one must knowingly acquire the underlying data files and store them in a place under one’s control”, such as by storing it on the hard drive (para. 66). That knowledge and control can be inferred if the pornography is found in a folder where users typically keep their personal files.

[133] In Mr. Cole’s case, the pornographic photos were stored in a folder under “My Documents” and the screenshot records their location. This location supports an inference that they were deliberately placed there by Mr. Cole. As a result, the Crown may well be able to establish possession without the metadata and browsing history.

[134] Finally, while the seriousness of the offence is a relevant factor to consider, Grant observed that it “has the potential to cut both ways”. Section 24(2) is focussed on the longer-term reputation of the administration of justice. As a result, “while the public has a heightened interest in seeing a determination on the merits where the offence charged is serious, it also has a vital interest in having a justice system that is above reproach, particularly where the penal stakes for the accused are high” (para. 84). This statement was reaffirmed in Harrison and Côté, cases where the Court excluded evidence that was central to the prosecution of a serious offence. It seems to me that the result of these decisions is to seriously attenuate the impact of the seriousness of the offence in the s. 24(2) analysis.

[135] This brings us to balancing these factors. The Charter-infringing conduct in this case was serious in its disregard for central and well-established Charter standards. Nor were there any exigent circumstances or other legitimate reasons preventing the police from getting a warrant. The impact of the breach on Mr. Cole’s Charter-protected interests, even assuming that his reasonable expectation of privacy was reduced because it was a workplace computer, was significant given the extent of the intrusion into his privacy. And while the evidence in this case is reliable, its importance to the prosecution’s case is at best speculative. Balancing these factors, and in light of the deference owed to trial judges in applying s. 24(2), it seems to me that the trial judge was reasonable in excluding the evidence.

[136] I would dismiss the appeal.

Appeal allowed, ABELLA J. dissenting.

Solicitor for the appellant: Attorney General of Ontario, Toronto.

Solicitors for the respondent: Addario Law Group, Toronto; Ruby Shiller Chan, Toronto.

Solicitor for the intervener the Director of Public Prosecutions: Public Prosecution Service of Canada, Edmonton.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Quebec: Attorney General of Quebec, Québec.

Solicitors for the intervener the Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario): Dawe & Dineen, Toronto.

Solicitors for the intervener the Canadian Civil Liberties Association: Lax O'Sullivan Scott Lisus, Toronto.

Solicitors for the intervener the Canadian Association of Counsel to Employers: Hicks Morley Hamilton Stewart Storie, Toronto.

TAB 50

Exclusion of Evidence Due to Multiple Charter Breaches in Police Investigation

Facts

- The case arose from allegations of domestic violence and unsafe firearm storage. A woman left her home with her children, alleging physical abuse by her husband, a police officer. The police initiated a high-risk response, including warrantless searches, containment, and surveillance of the family property, leading to the husband's arrest and the seizure of firearms and drugs (paras 1-3, 211-213).

Procedural History

- [Not applicable or not found]

Parties' Submissions

- Crown: Argued that the police actions, including warrantless searches and containment, were justified by exigent circumstances and public safety concerns. Asserted that the evidence obtained was admissible and that the searches were conducted in good faith (paras 202-203, 238, 307-309, 331-332).
- Accused: Contended that the police violated his s. 8 Charter rights through warrantless searches, an unlawful strip search, and improper execution of warrants. Argued that the evidence obtained should be excluded due to serious constitutional breaches and lack of good faith (paras 203, 238-239, 286-287, 331, 343-345, 359-360).

Legal Issues

- Did the warrantless entry onto the accused's property and subsequent actions violate s. 8 of the Charter?
- Was the strip search of the accused conducted in a lawful and reasonable manner?
- Was the warrantless entry into the accused's dwelling justified under the circumstances?
- Was the consent to search and seize firearms valid and informed?
- Was the public safety warrant issued on sufficient and valid grounds?
- Was the s. 487 Criminal Code warrant valid, particularly regarding the search of out-buildings?
- Should the evidence obtained through these searches be excluded under s. 24(2) of the Charter?

Disposition

- The court excluded all evidence obtained through the searches, including firearms and drugs, under s. 24(2) of the Charter (para 431).

Reasons

Per Hill J.:

- Warrantless Entry and Containment: The police actions, including trespass, surveillance, and destruction of property, were not justified by exigent circumstances. The police failed to prioritize obtaining a Feeney warrant and acted on speculative risks rather than specific, articulable facts (paras 204-235, 408-410).
- Strip Search: The search exceeded the scope of a lawful frisk search and amounted to a strip search under Golden. Conducted in freezing conditions without proper justification, it violated the accused's dignity and privacy (paras 240-255, 409).
- Stealth Clear: The warrantless entry into the dwelling was based on theoretical risks rather than reasonable suspicion. The search was not supported by case-specific facts and was therefore unconstitutional (paras 258-285, 410).
- Consent Search: The accused's consent to seize firearms was not informed, as he was misled about the legality of prior police actions. The consent was invalid under the Wills criteria (paras 286-306, 419).
- Public Safety Warrant: While the warrant met statutory requirements, it was tainted by prior unconstitutional searches. The issuing justice was not informed of these breaches, undermining the warrant's validity (paras 307-330, 419).
- s. 487 Warrant and Out-Buildings: The warrant was facially invalid due to the Branton error and lack of grounds for searching out-buildings. The search of the workshop was effectively warrantless and unconstitutional (paras 331-378, 425).
- Exclusion of Evidence: The cumulative pattern of serious s. 8 breaches, institutional indifference to Charter rights, and lack of good faith warranted exclusion of the evidence. Admission would undermine the administration of justice (paras 404-430).

Generated on 2025-03-14

The present AI analysis was made possible with the financial support of the Law Foundation of Ontario .

You may use our feedback form to send us your questions or suggestions.

R. v. N.M., 2007 CanLII 31570 (ON SC)

Source:	Superior Court of Justice
Date:	2007-07-18
File number:	CRIM J(P) 1329/03; CRIM J(F) 664/06
Other citations:	223 CCC (3d) 417 — 159 CRR (2d) 50 — [2007] OJ No 3022 (QL)
Citation:	R. v. N.M., 2007 CanLII 31570 (ON SC), < https://canlii.ca/t/1sg9k >, retrieved on 2026-03-23

COURT FILE NOS.: CRIM J(P) 1329/03
CRIM J(F) 664/06
DATE: 20070718

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

- and -

N.M.

)
)
)
) M.E. Cullen, for the Attorney General of Ontario
) S. Coroza, for the Attorney General of Canada

)
)
)
)
)
)
) P. Brauti, for the Accused

)
)
)
)
)

) HEARD: May 14-18, 22-24, 28, 29, 31, and June 1, 4-6, 2007

JUDGMENT

Subject to any further Order by a court of competent jurisdiction, an Order has been made in this proceeding directing that the identity of the complainant and any information that could disclose such identity, shall not be published in any document or broadcast or transmitted in any way. In the circumstances, any further publication, broadcast or transmission of this judgment shall refer to the accused as "N.N.M."

-
-
-
-
-
HILL J.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Para. No.

INTRODUCTION

THE FACTS

The OPP Integrated Response Procedures are Activated.....

4

The Incident Commander's Initial Briefing..... 10

Judicial Authorization and Perimeter "Containment" 18

TRU Team Actions on the M... P...

Information-Gathering at the Command Post

Mr. N.M.' Surrender

Personal Search of the Arrestee

The "Stealth Clear"

The N.M. Property is Secured

The Consent to Seize Four Firearms

execution of the consent

consent seizure at the residence

The Public Safety Warrant

background

execution of the s.117.04 warrant

The s. 487 Code Warrant

the Special Task Force investigation

the STF approach to Det. Const. Manser

Det. Sgt. Scott's role

preparation for a warrant application

the decision to search out-buildings

non-disclosure to Det. Lowry

the warrant issuance process

execution of the warrant

ANALYSIS

General s. 8 Charter Principles

Warrantless Entry on P... P...

position of parties

findings/conclusions

The Strip Search

position of parties

findings/conclusions

Warrantless Entry of Dwelling-House

position of parties

findings/conclusions

Consent Search

position of parties

findings/conclusions

Public Safety Warrant

position of parties

findings/conclusions

Section 487 Code Warrant

Branton error

position of parties

findings/conclusions

night search error

position of parties

findings/conclusions

non-disclosure in ITO

position of parties

findings/conclusions

out-buildings search

position of parties

findings/conclusions

Admission /Exclusion of Evidence

position of parties

findings/conclusions

CONCLUSION

INTRODUCTION

[1] A mother took her three children and left the family home telling her husband she was picking up groceries. She did not return. The next day, a family shelter worker phoned the police to report the woman's allegations of physical abuse in her marriage.

[2] These apparently simple circumstances triggered about seventy-two hours of intense police activity, including warrantless and warranted searches, directed toward the complainant's husband, N.M., and the family property.

[3] Mr. N.M. faces trial on two indictments, one with domestic violence and weapons charges, and a second for unlawful possession of illicit drugs. This judgment determines the admissibility of seized evidence in the face of the accused's claim that, in a number of ways, his s. 8 Charter right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure was violated.

THE FACTS

The OPP Integrated Response Procedures are Activated

[4] On March 19th, 2002, Det. Const. James was the Acting Sergeant in the crime unit of the Dufferin OPP detachment in Shelburne, Ontario. At 5:10 p.m. she was contacted at home by OPP Sgt. D. Quinton who passed on information he had received from an employee of a family shelter in Orangeville. There were allegations that a Toronto Police Service (TPS) officer had assaulted his wife. James was informed that the suspect, Mr. N.M., had stated that he would kill any police officer who came to his door. She assumed it was the complainant who had related this information to the shelter staff member who in turn contacted Quinton. James, a sergeant by the time of these proceedings, requested Quinton to contact Insp. R. Jones because Mr. N.M. had access to guns and there were "threats in regards to officers".

[5] In March of 2002, Inspector R. Jones was the Duty Officer for the OPP Central Region and a Level 2 Incident Commander who had received training "to resolve...high risk incidents which generally speak to barricaded persons, hostage takings, high risk search warrants...and other complicated incidents".

[6] At 6:00 p.m. on March 19th, 2002, Insp. Jones received a phonecall from Sgt. Quinton relating the information he learned from an employee at a family violence shelter:

- (1) the detachment was investigating a Toronto police officer, N.M., aged 39 years, regarding a spousal assault allegation
- (2) the suspect had, in the past, been physically violent toward his wife
- (3) the complainant and the couple's three children were in a shelter in Orangeville
- (4) Mr. N.M. was suicidal and homicidal
- (5) the suspect had his service revolver and other firearms in his residence
- (6) there was increased use of alcohol by Mr. N.M. and he was "self-medicating"
- (7) the suspect had said to the complainant that he would kill any cops who came to his house.

[7] Insp. Jones decided to activate an integrated response leading to a call in of specialist teams such as crisis negotiators, the Emergency Response Team (ERT), the Tactics and Rescue Unit (TRU) team, canine unit, technical and medical support. According to the Inspector:

I was concerned for public safety. I was concerned for any police officers who would have gone to knock on the door to speak to Mr. N.M.. I was concerned for other members of the public and for Mr. N.M.'s wife and children, should they decide to return to the house. The – and that was my decision that the safest way of resolving this was not to send uniform officers to the house but in – to knock on the door, but instead initiate our integrated response which would end up having a containment put around Mr. N.M.' house, having a trained crisis negotiator call to speak to him, all with the intentions of course of a safe resolution to this matter.

...

...if we found Mr. N.M. at his residence, we prevented him from leaving, prevented anybody from joining him, and have trained people negotiate him out.

...

The mission statement for this call was safe containment of the subject, to safely negotiate a peaceful and safe surrender.

[8] Sgt. James produced a sketch drawn by Const. Skelding who was assigned, sometime before 7:00 p.m. on March 19th, 2002, to prepare a diagram of the N.M. property. The diagram depicts a pick-up truck in the driveway near the house and trees surrounding the property. Sgt. James testified that she believed “there was trees around the property”. As far as she knew, Skelding was simply to get “what he could see in regards to that property” without going onto the property. In cross-examination, it was pointed out to Sgt. James that Const. Skelding’s diagram (Ex. #14) showed an out-building directly behind the house. She not only agreed that the out-building could not be seen from the end of the driveway or from the roadway at the front but also that there were no photos of the property in the possession of the police which “would demonstrate that you could possibly see that out-building from off the property”. Sgt. James then stated, “I don’t know where he went on the roadway, off the roadway”.

[9] At 7:20 p.m., OPP Const. Tardiff interviewed and took a signed statement from the complainant at the shelter in Orangeville. The complainant described the domestic abuse during her marriage to the accused. The statement includes this text:

During some of the sessions with all the other yelling and comments he has said things like – never try to leave me or I’ll get you, I’ll fucking kill you and the kids and your family.

There is no time specifically assigned to these statements attributed to Mr. N.M.. The last described assault was March 4th, 2002. In the prior two weeks, her husband had been “quiet” and “withdrawn”. The complainant was concerned he was a “time bomb” building toward something “bad”.

The Incident Commander's Initial Briefing

[10] Sgt. James understood that Const. Tardiff was dispatched to interview Ms. S.M. at the shelter. Sgt. James learned that Mr. N.M. was on injury leave from his police duties. She obtained the details of the suspect's three registered handguns. In a phonecall from Const. Tardiff after 7:30 p.m. it was learned that the complainant believed her husband was at home and that he had a cellphone in a bag in the car. On March 18th, after leaving home with her children, the complainant had called Liz and Rick Benoit, two TPS officers, to tell them she had left and ask that they communicate that to Mr. N.M.. Tardiff advised that Rick Benoit spent the night of March 18/19 with the suspect at the N.M. home and that Benoit, when he left in the morning for work, found his friend to be calm and remorseful. Tardiff passed along further information including that Mr. N.M. had made reference to the "Kirec" situation.

[11] Although she made no note about Mr. N.M. being suicidal, the accused's reference to Kirec concerned Sgt. James as she knew of the 1995 or 1996 homicide/suicide investigation by her detachment. Ms. Kirec and her children were temporarily residing at a family shelter. During a visit with Mr. Kirec he shot and killed his children. When Ms. Kirec arrived to pick up the couple's children, she was sexually assaulted and killed. Mr. Kirec then took his own life. At no time during the ensuing hours did Sgt. James determine exactly what Mr. N.M. said, the context of his reference to Kirec or when the statement was made. After drawing the sergeant's attention to the fact that Ms. S.M. and the children were not in the home on March 19th, this evidence was given:

Q. So the one thing that this wasn't was a Kirec situation, true?

A. It – no, it wasn't. It – but it did bring images of – of your client being, at least in past references, homicidal and suicidal.

...

Q. Okay. Then you'll agree with me, because we've eliminated everybody else, that you had no reason to believe, no objective reason to believe that Mr. N.M. was going to harm himself, did you?

A. No.

Q. Is that, no, you agree with me?

A. I had no information that he was specifically going to harm himself this night, no.

[12] Insp. Jones arrived at the Dufferin OPP detachment at 7:30 p.m. where she was briefed by Sgt. Quinton and Det. Const. James. In the course of an early briefing, to the Inspector's recall, she was told that Mr. N.M. had, at some point, made the statement: "I am a cop. I know what to do. They'll never get me out of the house". The inspector did not know when Mr. N.M. made the statement, or to whom, but assumed it had been to his wife. Over the course of the evening, this statement attributed to N.M. was rephrased or interpreted by a number of persons to be a stated intention to shoot any police officer coming to the door of his home.

Subsequent taperecorded exchanges between trained OPP crisis negotiators also reflect a measure of uncertainty of the context of the oral statement of the complainant to Const. Tardiff in turn passed on to Sgts. Quinton and James and then to Insp. Jones:

Negotiator 1: Okay everybody why are we here, why are we here today?

Negotiator 2: Well exactly...

Negotiator 3: That, that...

Negotiator 2: ...we can't leave, the shelter called where the wife and kids are because they heard through the wife that he had made a comment that ah...

Negotiator 3: I, I'm a policeman...

Negotiator 2: Yeah.

Negotiator 3: ...I know how police work...

Negotiator 2: Work.

Negotiator 3: ...you'll never get me out of the house.

Negotiator 2: Okay.

Negotiator 3: But I, I, I said...

Negotiator 1: That, that's what we're, we're basing...

Negotiator 3: Yeah.

Negotiator 1: ...everything here. But he has never...

Negotiator 2: Well all the background of the guns and the (Inaudible)...

(Discussion).

Negotiator 2: ...how it all can be a little weird and, and...

Negotiator 1: Okay but we have never gone to the house...

Negotiator 2: No, no and asked him to come out.

(Discussion).

Negotiator 3: It could've been as simple as he could've been making that comment in regards to who's gonna get custody of the house.

Negotiator 2: Yes. But you can't read too much into this but...

[13] As well, Insp. Jones was told that the complainant was last assaulted on March 4th, 2002 and that Ms. S.M. had photos "to support the assault". The Inspector was informed that Rick Benoit, a Toronto Police Service (TPS) officer and friend of the accused, had last seen Mr. N.M. that morning and assessed him as calm and remorseful. In fact, according to the accused and Benoit, it was during the afternoon of March 19th that Benoit left the N.M. residence. Benoit was an Emergency Task Force (ETF) officer with the TPS. Insp. Jones also learned that:

- (1) the accused possessed several registered handguns
- (2) he might have one long gun
- (3) Mr. N.M. didn't drink alcohol
- (4) he was taking four types of medication
- (5) the accused stayed in the living room area of the residence
- (6) he possessed no police scanners
- (7) he had spoken of Kirec.

On the last point, the Inspector could not recall at the time of this hearing the significance of the reference to Kirec.

[14] Insp. Jones accepted that there was conflicting information, for example, that Mr. N.M. was calm not agitated. She nonetheless believed that the safest way to resolve the situation was to contain the residence and "phone Mr. ...N.M. and ask him to leave the residence".

[15] Prior to 8:35 p.m., Sgt. James received faxed diagrams from Const. Tardiff prepared by Ms. S.M. depicting the N.M. property site as well as the layout of the main floor and basement of the residence.

[16] A command post was set up at the Mono Township offices one to two kilometres distant from the N.M. property.

[17] Insp. Jones arrived at the command post at 8:40 p.m. She attended the briefing of Staff Sgt. Schwyer given to his TRU team which had been summoned from Barrie. The Inspector did not attend the scene of the N.M. residence staying at the command post throughout the evening with the TRU team supervisor, the crisis negotiators, Sgt. James and others.

Judicial Authorization and Perimeter "Containment"

[18] Insp. Jones did not know whether an OPP ERT team had gone onto Mr. N.M.' property between 6:00 and 7:30 p.m. on March 19th, 2002. Had they done so, it would have been "a normal routine response of setting up containment by ERT team members". The Inspector could not, however, say who would have authorized such an entry. The evidence suggests that no ERT officers did enter the property.

[19] Insp. Jones anticipated that the TRU team would “set up a perimeter containment...of the residence” to isolate Mr. N.M., to control his access to others and their access to him, to evacuate people in the area who might be in harm’s way, and to negotiate.

[20] Containment is accomplished by invisible deployment of TRU team officers on a perimeter to allow a 360° “visual containment of the premises”. The officers take cover to remain concealed from view from the residence. Asked if the containment involves an approach to a home, the inspector responded that:

...they may well be on the property of the residence that they are establishing containment on.

...

The purpose of containment is, they’re not searching, they’re not gathering any evidence, they are watching the residence to look for Mr. N.M., or anyone else who may be there.

...

And you have...officers deployed on his property?

Correct.

This is the “inner perimeter”. An “outer perimeter” of ERT officers with roadblocks is maintained to ensure that pedestrian and vehicular traffic is rerouted to avoid members of the public entering the area of the inner perimeter.

[21] Insp. W. McKinnon, the OPP Manager of Staff Development and Training for the Central Region, is himself a Level 2 Incident Commander. His understanding of a barricaded person corresponded to the 1997 Emergency Response Services Manual definition of an individual who has assumed a defensible position, poses a threat to life, and refuses to immediately surrender. The inspector and the Manual define “containment” as constant 360 degree observation of the subject location and an “inner perimeter” as the smallest possible area in which the incident can be contained without endangering life.

[22] Insp. McKinnon considered that, in exigent circumstances, containment by warrantless entry onto private property may be permissible. While each case is circumstance-driven, the police must be able to articulate grounds for their actions.

Legal, constitutional and caselaw requirements must be complied with. OPP training material defines exigent circumstances as including “a now or never” situation to preserve life. The officer noted the general police duty to preserve life and property. According to Insp. Jones, the containment process was described in the OPP standard operating procedures and manuals. The OPP standard operating procedure manuals, Police Orders, and relevant training material are all silent regarding warrantless entry onto private property to set up inner perimeter containment.

[23] Insp. Jones considered that because Sgt. James “was overseeing the criminal investigation...she had responsibilities in regards to judicial authorizations”. The witness was pressed further on the point:

Q. With respect to the potential for arrest – and you’ve referred to an arrest team – did you take any steps with respect to obtaining any kind of warrant for Mr. N.M.’s arrest?

A. The detectives were. I had a conversation with Sergeant James in regards to the judicial authorization. I know it was being worked on, but I’m not clear today whether it was a search warrant or an arrest warrant with a Feeney.

[24] Insp. McKinnon testified that, in an integrated response situation, criminal investigators are immediately assigned to prepare warrants including a Feeney warrant where an arrest may be necessary in a dwelling.

[25] Between 5:40 p.m. and about 8:00 p.m. on March 19th, according to her notes, Sgt. James started a warrant:

I had started or I was working a little bit on a warrant myself. I don’t know what warrant. I would have to assume it was a Feeney warrant, because I wouldn’t have any other reason to do any other warrant at this time.

In cross-examination, Sgt. James stated that she believed, in the circumstances, that a Feeney warrant “was required”.

[26] By 8:06 p.m., Det. Sgt. C. McCormick, then a detective constable, was assigned to be the “warrant writer”. She was tasked to prepare material for a Feeney warrant application to enter the N.M. residence to arrest N.M.. She had only prepared one or two Feeney warrant applications before. The officer was briefed as to initial information including that the situation involved a “barricaded male” which she understood to be a male party who was refusing to come out after contact by the authorities.

[27] Only in cross-examination was Insp. Jones asked to describe the legal authority to enter upon private property, without a warrant, to take up surveillance of a dwelling-house:

Q. What is the legal authority that you’re relying on for entering onto that property without a warrant?

A. It’s – the legal authority is our common law duty –

Q. Yes.

A. -- in regard to public safety. We’re not searching, we’re not gathering evidence. I believe that we had a situation where in order to ensure public safety for all three groups, Mr. N.M. –

Q. Yes.

A. -- the general public and ourselves, we needed to put a professional police containment around the property.

...

- A. Our common law duty for the – to preserve the peace and to – that's –
- Q. Yes.
- A. -- part of our – our requirement under the Police Services Act, that's part of our – our mandate, is to ensure that we maintain order and keep the public safe.

[28] Insp. Jones accepted that the intention was to arrest Mr. N.M. at his residence for assaulting his wife. The witness was asked if prior judicial authorization was required:

- Q. And so you understand as such you require a Feeney warrant to go onto the property, true?
- A. Unless there's exigent circumstances such as this.
- Q. Okay. So what you're saying is, is that there were exigent circumstances in this case?
- A. Yes, I believed we need[ed] to resolve the situation as quickly and as safely as we could and prevent – if Mr. N.M. was in the house, prevent him from leaving the house.
- Q. Is that – is that different than the public safety exception that you seemed to indicate before, or is that the same thing that you're talking about when you talk about exigent circumstances? Are they one and the same or are they two different ideas?
- A. I'm not clear what you're asking.
- Q. Sure. You seemed to suggest that there was some type of – you were acting under some type of public duty to preserve the peace –
- A. Correct.
- Q. -- and that's why you went onto the property?
- A. Correct.
- Q. Okay. And then you mentioned –
- A. And –
- Q. -- the word 'exigent' –
- A. Right.
- Q. -- circumstances, or something to that effect, and I'm asking you, is – is that one and the same ideas, that – the public duty, the exigent circumstances, [is] it all bound into one?
- A. It is – it's all bound into the urgency of the situation.
- Q. But clearly you knew that you required a Feeney warrant in this case, because you – you or somebody detailed somebody to become a Feeney officer, so to speak, and get a Feeney warrant?
- A. Okay, I don't recall whether we were going for a search warrant or a Feeney warrant. I'm not disagreeing that we were looking for judicial authorization, but we were putting police officers on the property perhaps, if required, in order to establish containment of the property, that's correct.

- Q. Right. But the point of the matter is, is that you knew that a Feeney warrant was required because – I take it that you turned your mind to that issue, did you not?
- A. To judicial authorization, yes.
- Q. Yes. And did you not say to yourself, well hey, we're going down to somebody's property, who might be in this house and we're going to seek to arrest him; that's – that's a Feeney warrant we need; did you not do that analysis?
- A. That – that's not the situation though. I – I suggest that this situation is much different, based upon the information that we had received –
- Q. Okay.
- A. -- and there were – sorry, go ahead.
- Q. No. I was going to say, well is your position then there was no need for a Feeney warrant?
- A. I – I don't recall. I – I – it – I just don't recall what the – if the question had been asked 'Do we need a Feeney warrant?', I would say 'Yes'. If the question is 'Are we going to stand on the side of the road with our hands in our pockets, doing nothing until we get the Feeney warrant?', I would say 'No –
- Q. Okay.
- A. -- we need to get on the property and ensure safe – by – by doing that as –
- Q. So –
- A. -- okay –
- Q. Sorry. So as I understand it, you understood the need for a Feeney warrant but you just weren't going to wait for one, is that true?
- A. If that had been the conversation, there was urgency to put officers on the perimeter, so yes.
- . . .
- Q. Well I appreciate that, but you're the one who is making the call to disregard the need for judicial authorization, correct? You're the one making that call?
- A. I'm the one who's putting people on the property prior to having judicial authorization, that's correct.
- Q. Right. Which you know that you need, but you're just not going to wait for it, true?
- A. The situation was serious. That's correct.
- Q. And what efforts did you make to say, hey, is somebody working on this thing? We should have somebody working on a judicial authorization. What efforts did you make?
- A. I had a conversation with Constable James.

[29] Insp. Jones assumed that James also had staff working on a warrant although she was uncertain whether that was at the detachment or elsewhere. Sgt. James testified that the Inspector was fully aware that "we were working on a Feeney warrant". Insp. Jones conceded that perhaps no Feeney warrant issued. The Inspector testified that she was at no time notified of any problem "with a judicial authorization". She was not concerned about her lack of information about the warrant process because she "was mostly concerned with Mr. N.M."

[30] TRU team member Const. B. Traves observed that the N.M. residence was located in a rural area where the homes were "a fair distance apart".

[31] Sgt. Penrose, a member of the TRU team, considered that a Feeney warrant was required to enter a dwelling to effect an arrest unless there were exigent circumstances. He was unaware of any exigent circumstances relating to the N.M. case. In his view, none existed to enter the residence to arrest Mr. N.M. without a warrant. Penrose assumed someone had obtained a Feeney warrant respecting Mr. N.M.' arrest as he understood reasonable grounds existed to arrest for assault. In the officer's view, where a suspect came out of his dwelling, no Feeney warrant was necessary.

[32] At the briefing held at about 8:00 p.m. on March 19th, Sgt. Penrose learned that Mr. N.M.' pick-up truck was in the driveway on his property which had pine trees all around. There was a bungalow set back about 150' from the roadway. Penrose understood that Mr. N.M. was suicidal, had access to weapons, and had made a statement to the effect that the police would never get him out of his residence. Sgt. Penrose agreed that it was not unusual for residents in the rural areas to have long guns and for police officers to have registered weapons in their residence.

[33] The officer considered that no judicial authority was necessary to go onto private property in the interests of "public safety" while the suspect was in the house. In his view, entry onto property was legally permissible, and necessary, while awaiting a Feeney warrant in order to contain an individual on his property – "Our entry onto the property was absolutely the safest way to effect this arrest". In the course of cross-examination about the probabilities of any flight or safety issues where no officer was on the N.M. property, Sgt. Penrose provided this evidence:

Q. I'm going to suggest to you [in] your para-military role, what you're trained to do, and what you do, you operate on a worst case scenario whether there's evidence or not?

A. I would say you're correct sir.

[34] A/Sgt. Manca would certainly have made a note had he been briefed that Mr. N.M. was suicidal and homicidal. He made no such note. The officer understood that a Feeney warrant was required to go on residential property to make an arrest. As he understood it, authority to enter onto private property existed in policies and "standard practices" – policies the TRU team followed in March of 2002. Such a warrant, in the officer's view, would not be required if, for example, the suspect "fired rounds off". He did not concern himself about the existence of a Feeney warrant – he was trained to follow orders. It was up to the TRU team commander at the command post to ensure "authority" existed for the team to be on the property. Manca knew that reasonable grounds existed to arrest Mr. N.M.. In respect to the entry onto the N.M.' property, the A/Sgt. believed there must have been exigent circumstances because the TRU team was there. He had no idea what those circumstances were.

[35] Over the course of the evening, Det. Sgt. McCormick received additional information as she prepared an information to obtain a Feeney warrant. There was no real discussion of coordinating her efforts with officers on the N.M. property – it was expected she would alert the Command Post when the telewarrant was obtained. McCormick continued to operate on the belief that OPP negotiators were in contact with Mr. N.M. who was refusing to exit his residence. The officer understood Mr. N.M.' firearms to be safely stored. The officer understood her affidavit must be accurate, honest and detailed. Questioned about the inclusion in her application material of a statement attributed to the accused relating to shooting any police officer who might try to get him out of his house, Det. Sgt. McCormick recalled that information coming from Const. Tardiff who had spoken with the complainant. However, she had no sense of the context of the utterance or when it had been made – “he’d made that comment to her at some point”.

[36] The further information received from Tardiff by Det. Sgt. McCormick, that Mr. N.M. was suicidal and homicidal and had referred to the Kirec incident, she considered to be “all one piece of information”. In her testimony, the witness sourced this information and the fact that Mr. N.M. was “depressed” to the complainant’s statement received from Tardiff. In cross-examination, Det. Sgt. McCormick acknowledged that neither reference appears in the complainant’s statement. The officer could not say whether the information obtained by Tardiff came from the complainant or some other source. She never asked Const. Tardiff to specify exactly what Mr. N.M. had said in this regard or when it was said. Det. Sgt. McCormick agreed that, with the complainant and her children at a location out of the house, the situation was on the face of it nothing like the Kirec scenario. The officer understood there had been a breakdown of the N.M. marriage. In these circumstances, she agreed that the complainant might not be the most objective source of information.

TRU Team Actions on the M... P...

[37] A/Sgt. Manca of the TRU team understood when he received the call to duty on March 19th that it related to a barricaded subject which he understood to mean a party in a home who was “refusing to come out” following an incident of some type.

[38] At the detachment briefing around 8:00 p.m., it was confirmed that a domestic incident caused Mr. N.M. to be barricaded and he had refused to exit his home. Const. Traves too recalled that he was deployed as part of the TRU team respecting a barricaded individual which he understood to be someone who had taken up a defensive position in a building. Insp. Jones considered a barricaded person to be someone “who refused to surrender”. The TRU team was tasked to arrest Mr. N.M..

[39] The TRU team is trained to enter a residence and to use lethal force if necessary. On March 19/20, 2002, the team arrived at the N.M. property with their faces camouflage-painted for safety, wearing heavy body armour, heavily armed with such items as MP5 machine guns or other military assault rifles, ARWEN (Anti-Riot Weapon ENfield) capable of firing munitions such as gas or rubber bullets, Browning high power 9 mm. sidearms, knives, pepper spray and expandable batons.

[40] Between 8:00 and 9:00 p.m., nine or ten officers of the TRU team were “on ground” at the N.M. residence having established an inner perimeter on the property.

[41] At 8:55 p.m., Insp. Jones gave authority to the TRU team to disable Mr. N.M.’ pick-up truck by flattening its tires. She expected that the task would be accomplished “by taking the valve stem off or with a knife”. The Inspector was asked whether she was of the view that it was unnecessary to “get judicial authorization before you start damaging a citizen’s property” to which she responded, “If we had time to do that, that would be great, but this was a situation that was serious and needed police response”.

[42] During the evening of March 19th, the police disabled Mr. N.M.’ residence phone in their effort to ensure that if the suspect called out he would only reach the crisis negotiators. A/Sgt. Manca described the action as, “the lines are cut”. Insp. Jones did not turn her mind to the issue of judicial authorization in taking this action. Because of technical issues, it took several hours for the technical hook-up with the command post to be established allowing a direct communication line with Mr. N.M.. At some point, prior to the hook-up, Mr. N.M. tried, unsuccessfully, because the line had been disconnected, to make an outgoing phonecall.

[43] According to Insp. Jones, prior to the containment of the N.M. residence, it was unknown whether the accused was at home. She expected that the TRU team officers “who established the inner perimeter would hopefully see some movement in the house”. The Inspector knew, from information provided to her, that the suspect had been “pretty well staying close to home”. As well, Mr. N.M.’ vehicle was the only vehicle on the property.

[44] Insp. Jones acknowledged that part of the function of the TRU team in going on the property was “to see if Mr. N.M. is in the house”. The TRU team had binoculars and night vision equipment and the snipers had 10-power rifle scopes.

[45] At 9:31 p.m., the TRU team reported to the command centre that lights were on at the rear of the residence.

[46] Mr. N.M. testified that during the evening of March 19th, 2002 he ate a meal, watched TV on the main floor, cleaned the kitchen and went to bed. There were lights on in the kitchen and livingroom and the curtains were not drawn.

[47] According to Insp. Jones, by 11:00 p.m., only one male had been observed in the house. Neighbours had been evacuated.

[48] Sgt. Penrose considered the 360° inner perimeter allowed the TRU team, in the darkness of night, to make observations of the interior of the dwelling. The sergeant understood the reconnaissance unit on the N.M. property would be permitted to get “very close” to the house perhaps within armslength. The aim is to get “as close as possible”. A/Sgt. Manca referred to the TRU sniper “observer” teams on the property “providing intelligence”. In his view, TRU reconnaissance team members could go “up to” the home to “make observations within the home” and to gather intelligence including visual observation of the subject and “specifics” as to the layout of the home. Prior to Mr. N.M.’ exit from the residence, the sniper and reconnaissance members made observations “in” the home. Const. Traves understood that the sniper teams’ optical equipment allowed them to make observations “through the windows” of Mr. N.M.’ residence. Observations were made into the home to locate Mr. N.M. and to see if anyone else was in the house. Manca’s arrest group of three including himself, Penrose and Traves, was within 35 to 40 metres of the residence.

Information-Gathering at the Command Post

[49] At 10:15 p.m., Insp. Jones received information from the chief crisis negotiator, Sgt. Bilton, that she had spoken to “the force psychiatrist”, Dr. Peter Collins. This is a routine step during an integrated response incident “so that negotiation strategies can be developed”. Insp. Jones did not know what information Dr. Collins was provided. The inspector learned that Dr. Collins believed Mr. N.M. “was a high risk for suicide” with the prospect of “a suicide by cop” scenario where the suspect would initiate a sequence of events resulting in the police shooting Mr. N.M.. Given this information, the Inspector considered that “we needed to be very cautious and careful and sure of what we were doing”.

[50] During the course of the evening, Sgt. James spoke to Const. Tardiff by phone. She learned from him that Mr. N.M. “wasn’t suicidal” and had made “no suicidal comments”. When Const. Tardiff arrived at the command post she received the statement taken from the complainant. The sergeant updated the Inspector with all the information she had.

[51] In cross-examination, Sgt. James agreed that since the complainant left the residence on March 18th without notice, it made sense that Mr. N.M. did not speak of shooting a police officer at his door in the context of his wife leaving the day before. Sgt. James acknowledged that the statement attributed to Mr. N.M. may well have been “historical” – “I don’t know when he made it”. In the complainant’s statement, she described her husband as “quiet”. Sgt. James gave this evidence:

Q. Mr. Benoit's statement in evidence was consistent with that of Ms. S.M., that he was in a quiet state?

A. Yes.

[52] Over the course of the evening, Insp. Jones received further information including:

- (1) Rick Benoit described one of Mr. N.M.' prescribed medications as Ephedrine. The inspector was advised that the drug could make Mr. N.M. anxious, have fears, agitated or restless.
- (2) The "crime team" reported that Mr. N.M. was not a drinker.
- (3) Mr. Benoit indicated that the suspect had two shotguns and a rifle.
- (4) TPS Superintendent Gotteschalk told Sgt. Bilton that Mr. N.M., who had been on sick leave for four months, had been informed that he was to be charged with perjury "in his notes and for court testimony when he returns to work".

[53] Insp. Jones did not know the sources for the information Sgt. Quinton gave her, for example regarding statements made by Mr. N.M.. It was suggested in cross-examination of Insp. Jones that as the night went on things did not in fact appear as urgent as she first thought:

- (1) it was known that the complainant and the couple's three children were at a shelter in Orangeville, a location unknown to Mr. N.M.
- (2) there was no information to suggest the suspect, a police officer, was not alone in his residence
- (3) information was received that Mr. N.M. did not drink alcohol
- (4) the freshest information regarding Mr. N.M.' condition came from a "reliable source", a trained TPS ETF officer, Benoit, who had seen him earlier in the day and indicated the suspect was calm and remorseful, not suicidal or homicidal
- (5) there was no concern about Mr. N.M. taking his prescription drugs
- (6) the last alleged assault of the complainant was over 2 weeks earlier and therefore not "a heat of the moment type situation"

- (7) the suspect had registered firearms and there was no suggestion they were involved in the commission of any offence or were illegally stored
- (8) Mr. N.M. was known not to have any police scanners
- (9) there was no information that any member of the public or any police officer was in danger on the N.M.' property
- (10) the Inspector never asked the source(s) of statements attributed to the suspect about Kirec and harming police officers coming to his house
- (11) it was night, the dwelling lights went out, and it was assumed Mr. N.M. had gone to bed.

[54] Inspector Jones agreed that there was not the urgency of a 9-1-1 call. She was nevertheless concerned for the safety of Mr. N.M., the public and the police.

[55] Sgt. Bilton was of the view that Rick Benoit should be interviewed as a possible third party intermediary to negotiate a surrender. At 10:45 p.m., Det. Sgt. Sills telephoned the command post to indicate that from his discussion with Benoit it was learned that Mr. N.M. was calm at 3:30 p.m. when Benoit left the N.M. residence, and that Mr. N.M. owned three long guns, a .22 calibre rifle and two shotguns.

Mr. N.M.'s Surrender

[56] According to Mr. N.M., he finished watching TV at 11:00 p.m., took some Tylenol 3 in order to sleep, and went to bed.

[57] At 11:50 p.m., phone communication between the command post and the N.M. residence was finally achieved. At 12:18 a.m., Det. Sgt. Sills was interviewing Rick Benoit. At 12:22 a.m. on March 20th, all of the lights in the house were turned out. Insp. Jones "hoped that it meant...that Mr. N.M. was following the normal routine of going to bed".

[58] By 12:23 to 12:25 a.m., over four hours after receiving the warrant assignment, Det. Sgt. McCormick had prepared her 11-page information to obtain a Feeney warrant and was in contact with the telewarrant centre to obtain a warrant. The officer's affidavit addressed the subject of night-time entry. Det. Sgt. McCormick was not told that Const. Benoit left the N.M. residence at 3:30 p.m. She was not informed by Sgt. James that information had been received that Mr.

N.M. was not suicidal. Had the officer known that, she would have included the information in her affidavit so that the justice of the peace would not be misled. As well, the affidavit described the N.M. residence as contained and surrounded without disclosure of the warrantless entry onto the property. McCormick did not know the TRU team had made a warrantless entry onto the N.M.' property. The application requested, as a special condition of execution of the arrest warrant, in order not to expose any peace officer or other person "to imminent bodily harm or death", that:

The accused is a police officer with the Toronto Police Service and has stated in the past that he will not leave the house if police come for him; that he has access to three handguns and at least three long guns; he is depressed and his family has left him; for these reasons it is incumbent to arrest him without prior announcement to preserve his safety and the safety of the officers responding.

...

Wherefore the Informant prays that an authorization be granted to permit entry of the said dwelling house without prior announcement, subject to the condition that prior announcement will only be dispensed with if the requisite grounds exist immediately prior to entry of the dwelling house.

...The Informant proposes that the authorization to enter the dwelling house for the purpose of arresting or apprehending the accused shall be carried out in accordance with the following terms and conditions...

A command post has been set up and is operational at this moment. The residence has been contained by officers surrounding the area and the Tactics and Rescue Unit is in position to enter and arrest N.M.. The Crisis Negotiators are in position and are attempting a peaceful surrender. Therefore for the safety of all concerned it is incumbent to enter and arrest N.M. without announcement and as soon as possible. The incident may last over night therefore the entry and arrest may occur during the late evening of the 19th of March 2002 and early hours of the 20th of March 2002.

[59] Insp. Jones directed the crisis negotiator to call Mr. N.M. at 12:25 a.m. on March 20th, 2002. When she did so, she knew that a Feeney warrant was not in existence. Asked why steps were taken without judicial authorization to arrest, the inspector gave this evidence:

Q. So the question that – that comes up is why not wait for the judi – any judicial authorization before taking those – the steps that you did?

A. Okay. It's hard to jump ahead. The decision to – with all of the information received during the evening, I had some serious concerns about Mr. N.M.. I had concerns of – of any other people who may have been around the property. I had concerns for the police. The initiation of the telephone call from the crisis negotiators ended with Mr. N.M. quickly coming out of the house. The – it's important in this sort of an incident to establish communication with whoever is in the house. We found out that it was Mr. N.M. when he picked up the phone. The officers re – re – reported that they saw some movement and they heard a voice, but up until Mr. N.M. picked up the phone, that's how we confirmed that it was him.

[60] Sgt. James understood that the existence of an issued Feeney warrant was "disregarded", in the sense of "not being waited for", because Insp. Jones believed exigent circumstances existed. The sergeant testified that she and the Inspector had the same information. While she accepted that the Inspector was the ultimate decision-maker, and had more relevant training and experience, she testified that:

I'm not going to say I wouldn't have waited for a Feeney warrant myself...

...

If it was me by myself, going to that residence, I would have got a Feeney warrant...

...

And, again, as I've said before, if it was by myself and I was going to Mr. N.M.' residence, I would have got a Feeney warrant.

[61] Once the TRU team members were alerted that the call was to be placed to Mr. N.M., the phonecall was made by a crisis negotiator who asked the accused to come outside to "talk" to the officers who were described as on the roadway. Mr. N.M. was instructed to leave his guns in the house.

[62] Mr. N.M. testified that he was in bed about to fall asleep when the police called him to come outside. On his evidence, this was shortly after 11:00 p.m. not after midnight. After, to his recall, telling the negotiator it was unnecessary and that the police could come in and have a coffee, he dressed and went outside as directed.

[63] Insp. Jones disagreed that Mr. N.M. was "ordered" out of the house but did not dispute that whatever was said to the suspect by the police negotiator would not leave Mr. N.M. thinking it was "optional". Indeed, in the phonecall, the negotiator stated "We're trying to do this as easy as we can". Mr. N.M. described his position in these words: "I was extremely concerned with what steps the police were about to take if I did not follow their orders and direction". In the inspector's understanding, following the call, Mr. N.M. emerged from his residence without delay – "very, very quickly".

[64] Prior to Mr. N.M.' exit from his house, the TRU team placed a spotlight on the driveway about one third of the way up from the roadway. When informed that Mr. N.M. was coming out, the light was turned on to illuminate the subject as he followed verbal commands of the TRU team to proceed down the driveway to the point where he was taken into custody at a point visible from the roadway.

[65] Mr. N.M. described himself as having two herniated discs in his back as well as a mending separated shoulder associated with workplace injury. In addition, on his evidence, he was suffering from untreated post traumatic stress disorder. In Mr. N.M.' words, although "I had no idea what this was about", he complied with instructions from the TRU team officers.

[66] Mr. N.M. describes himself as having respect for OPP officers but disdain for those who arrested him whom he characterizes as "clowns" and "yokels". According to the accused, his arrest was "comical" and "the entire thing was overkill". Although not detailed in the affidavit filed by the accused, he maintains that:

- (1) his arms were wrenched during the handcuffing exercise
- (2) as he was kneeling on the ground, an overweight officer came running at him from behind and “drill[ed] his knee” into the middle of his back knocking him to the ground
- (3) he was “reefed” up by the arms.

These actions, according to Mr. N.M., aggravated his pre-existing back and shoulder injuries. Mr. N.M. made no formal complaint of the treatment he alleges he received at the hands of the OPP.

[67] Although Mr. N.M. has maintained that 70 officers were on his property, he agreed in cross-examination that he derived that number from his interpretation of disclosure materials – he actually saw only five to seven officers.

[68] A/Sgt. Manca recalled that Mr. N.M. was cooperative and obeyed all instructions given by megaphone once he exited the house. One of the first things the suspect said was “Go easy, I have a back injury”. Sgt. Penrose and A/Sgt. Manca learned at a briefing earlier in the evening that Mr. N.M. had been off work with a back injury. Prior to being handcuffed, Mr. N.M. removed his jacket and dropped it to the driveway when directed. Subsequently, a small folding knife was discovered in a pocket of that jacket. Mr. N.M. testified that the knife is always in his jacket pocket – he had no concern about wearing that jacket outside as he knew he had “done nothing wrong”. A/Sgt. Manca and Const. Traves took hands-on control of Mr. N.M., cuffed him, and led him to a location off the driveway for a personal search. According to Sgt. Penrose, at no time was Mr. N.M. kned in the back and taken to the ground. Mr. N.M. made no complaint of any injuries to the sergeant or to anyone else.

[69] A/Sgt. Manca testified that there was no physical struggle – Mr. N.M. acted as directed. The officer could not recall whether the suspect was, as well, put prone on the ground although he felt it probable that that occurred. Sgt. Penrose recalled the suspect as always on his knees not prone on the ground and that the officers were “very delicate” with Mr. N.M.. Const. Traves considered that the arrest team dealt with Mr. N.M. “very lightly”.

Personal Search of the Arrestee

[70] According to Insp. Jones, the night of March 19/20, 2002 was “miserably cold” – “a very cold night”. Sgt. Penrose described conditions as below freezing. Insp. Jones and A/Sgt. Manca recalled snow on the ground.

[71] Insp. Jones gave no instructions relating to search of the arrestee. In her words, she expected members of the TRU team, “in accordance with our policy”, would conduct a methodical pat-down search of Mr. N.M. looking for anything which was evidence or which could be used as a weapon or to escape. Asked if the “policy” allows further steps to be taken after the initial pat-down, the inspector stated: “[t]he degree of the search is really left up to the arresting officer”. Insp. Jones’ recall was that the OPP Orders did not “really go...into a definition of a strip search”. Insp. Jones would, however, be “surprised” if a strip search, involving “removal of all of an individual’s clothing”, occurred in this case.

[72] Neither the OPP Orders today nor those published in February of 2002, contain precise definitions of pat-down or strip searches. The Orders, s. 2.43.4: METHOD, referred to a “frisk/field search” of a lawfully arrested and handcuffed person as a “lawful, systematic, safe and efficient quadrant search of the entire individual” to be conducted in as much privacy as circumstances permit and by a member of the same sex. The February, 2002 Orders indicated that “a strip/complete search” could be undertaken “when a member has reasonable grounds to believe that a frisk/field search is insufficient to secure evidence, prevent escape or ensure the safety of the police, public or the accused”. Such a search “shall be conducted”:

- (1) with the prior approval of a supervising member
- (2) in private
- (3) by a member of the same sex as the person being searched
- (4) in the presence of another member of the same sex
- (5) with no additional employees present unless safety requirements dictate otherwise.

The Order additionally states that whenever possible the person to be searched should be encouraged to remove their own clothing (unless safety requirements or destruction of evidence issues dictate otherwise), and, “[i]n all instances” unnecessary bodily contact is to be avoided.

[73] N.M. testified that he knew an arrested person in the field can expect a pat down search with the shirt lifted and the waistband area checked for weapons. He described to the court what he characterized as a strip search in the freezing conditions with the wind howling and lights trained on him. He was required to raise his t-shirt above his breast and the searchers took his sweat pants and underwear down past his knees exposing his genitals and buttocks. Mr. N.M. testified that:

My person shouldn’t have been exposed to anybody.

...

Toronto Police has policies and procedures against strip searches. They are not to be conducted out in the field regardless.

...

...they took quite a ... bit of time searching me. I was freezing. It took quite a long time... I was frozen.

[74] This search was conducted near trees at the front of the property with at least five officers present to Mr. N.M.' recall. The search, in his view, was "disgusting". Mr. N.M. explained the assertion in his affidavit that he "believe[d]" one female officer may have been present as an assumption based on the gender of the crisis negotiator who had called him. Crown counsel questioned the accused on the location of the search:

Q. I'm also going to suggest to you, sir, that when you were searched in the area of your waist and your clothing was removed, that you were off to the side and away from the vision of anybody who might be on the roadway?

A. No.

While the accused agreed he was searched at a point off his driveway, he considered he was still fully exposed to anyone on the roadway.

[75] Mr. N.M. testified that as he was searched one of the ERT officers who subsequently transported him to the station dropped his sub-machine gun "in [his] face". This event was not detailed in Mr. N.M.' filed affidavit and the witnesses who transported the accused were not asked about the allegation. Sgt. Penrose denied that any such incident occurred.

[76] Const. Traves searched Mr. N.M.. He considered the search, "a standard search" in his words, to have been conducted "within our policy" to search the arrestee for weapons. The officer was questioned further on the subject:

Q. My understanding also is that his pants were temporarily removed down past his knees, there was a check for weapons in that regard?

A. I don't – he may have. I don't recall.

Q. Okay. When you say you don't recall, that is not something that's never happened before in other cases, for example?

A. No. It happens.

Q. Okay. With regard to this case, because my understanding of it is, is that occurred, so you're not disagreeing with me?

A. I'm not disagreeing. I – I can't tell you 100 percent that it did or didn't.

...

Q. And then there was a further search in the sense that is it possible, 'cause I take it you're not recalling this, that the waist band of his boxer shorts were just checked briefly by pulling?

A. I know when I do a search I check thoroughly the – that area. It's typically where an item can be concealed.

[77] Although the search of the arrestee took place out of the direct beam of the stationary spotlight, there continued to be ambient light from that source and from rifle-mounted lights shining on Mr. N.M. as Const. Traves conducted the search.

[78] Sgt. Penrose disagreed that Mr. N.M. had been subjected to “a strip search of sorts”. He was positioned about eight to ten feet behind Mr. N.M. as the personal search unfolded. The sergeant recalled that only a frisk or pat-down search was conducted. The officer was asked if any of Mr. N.M.’ clothing was “moved”:

I believe it would have...not removed from his person but moved to facilitate seeing the waistband for instance.

[79] Sgt. Penrose observed the suspect, when directed to do so, pull his shirt up but could not recall the extent the garment was raised. He did not see the suspect’s underwear pulled down and up quickly or his pants pulled to his knees. The sergeant stated that the suspect’s pants may have been “opened”.

[80] A/Sgt. Manca testified that Mr. N.M.’ pants and underwear were not taken off with his genitals exposed. The search was conducted near some trees, a location not exposed to the house – they “always assume the worst” and therefore don’t expose themselves to the home. The officer has never performed a strip search as a member of the TRU team. He considers a strip search to involve “removal of all clothing” and “verification” of all body orifices while the arrestee is “fully naked”. Manca recalled that Traves searched Mr. N.M. in the light of the weapon-mounted lights.

[81] A/Sgt. Manca agreed that the suspect’s shirt would have been lifted up exposing his skin to verify no weapon was concealed. Mr. N.M.’ shoes were removed and searched. Any area the arrestee’s hands could have access to would have been searched including flipping and looking into the pants in order to check for a weapon or “things as small as handcuff keys”.

[82] In cross-examination, the officer testified that he could not recall whether Mr. N.M.’ pants were pulled down past his knees – it would depend on what he was wearing. Had Const. Traves pulled the arrestee’s pants down in this fashion, it would “not be unusual in these type of circumstances”. A/Sgt. Manca testified that if Const. Traves said such a search was standard procedure he would not disagree – it depends on the circumstances and the searching officer’s exercise of discretion. If briefs are taken down and back up, it is done “very, very quick”. It is the officer’s understanding that the OPP only have a search policy regarding strip searches. A/Sgt. Manca, an OPP training coordinator for tactical officers, was questioned regarding the definition of a pat-down search:

Q. And so when you use the term pat-down search, you include either the temporary removal of clothing or the lifting of clothing as part of that process?

- A. Absolutely. How can you...be 100% sure just patting someone down, you need to remove a belt, you need to lift clothing, remove jackets...

When asked whether it was the practice to “move” clothing on an arrestee, the officer gave this evidence:

- A. That would be in every circumstance definitely just as a practice for myself if I were to search someone in the waist area the belt would be removed, the pants would be unbuckled, the zipper would be brought down, and the pants would be flipped or the waist area would be flipped to make sure there was nothing within that area and ensure there was nothing hidden within the crotch area or the lower back area or between the buttocks...
- Q. And why do you do that every time?
- A. For officer safety and safety of the person being arrested.

[83] The command post was aware that Mr. N.M. exited his house at 12:28 a.m. The transport officers, Consts. Does and Anderson, were directed at 12:36 to proceed to the N.M. property to pick up an arrested party. A/Sgt. Manca’s best recall is that the personal search of Mr. N.M. took two to five minutes. Sgt. Penrose recalled a four to five-minute search. According to Does and Anderson, at 12:41 a.m., TRU team officers walked Mr. N.M. down the driveway to their location.

[84] Sgt. Penrose testified that the TRU arrest team arrested Mr. N.M. for assault at about 12:30 a.m. although they did not tell him the reason for his arrest. To his recall, the arrest team walked the arrestee to the road and turned him over to the custody of ERT officers Anderson and Does. At this time, the TRU reconnaissance team remained on the N.M. property.

[85] Const. Traves recalled that when Mr. N.M. asked what it was all about he told him that investigators would fill him in.

[86] ERT Consts. Does and Anderson understood that for some time there had been on and off again negotiations with Mr. N.M. who was barricaded in the sense of unwilling to come out of his residence. The constables noted that at 12:42 a.m. they took Mr. N.M. into their custody from the TRU team arresting officers. The hand-over occurred on the roadway. The officers found the arrestee to be cooperative. The officers recalled that Mr. N.M. thanked them for the way they treated him. Does and Anderson testified that Mr. N.M. was “re-arrested” for assault before placement in their cruiser and read his right to counsel and cautions as the nine to ten-minute ride to the detachment began.

[87] At 12:54 a.m., Det. Sgt. McCormick contacted the telewarrant centre by phone to withdraw her application for a Feeney warrant.

The “Stealth Clear”

[88] Insp. Jones authorized the TRU team to execute a “stealth clear” of the residence”:

Q. What in particular did you authorize?

A. I authorized the TRU team officers to enter the house and to do a ... systematic slow, safe search of the premises, looking for any other suspects, anybody who needed the police help, or any sort of weapons that could cause injuries to our officers.

...

Q. Okay. What kind of weapons are you talking about?

A. Any firearms or explosives or ammunition that could harm our officers who would be executing the warrant.

Q. What warrant?

A. The judicial authorization that – I – let me check that. I'm not sure whether we were going through with a search warrant or a Feeney warrant, so I'm not sure.

[89] Insp. Jones was asked whether a stealth clear would always follow “removal of a suspect from a house”:

It occurs frequently when we have this sort of an incident, because we have con – if we have not been on the – established an inner perimeter, it's difficult to know whether or not the subject was alone in the house or not. The – this is not looking for any evidence, it's looking – it's strictly a clear that is done of the residence, looking for things that would either interfere with public safety or the officers. So it's frequently done, but it is something that they – we turn our mind to on each occurrence.

[90] Asked in-chief the reasons for initiating a stealth clear in this case, Insp. Jones provided these reasons:

(1) Mr. N.M. was reported “to have a lot of weapons”, handguns and long guns, so there existed “the fear of weapons” when “the officers...or others would enter the building”.

(2) The TRU team never “called out” a description that would allow the belief that only Mr. N.M. was in the residence – “so it could easily have been that there were other people there”.

[91] In cross-examination, the Inspector was further questioned as to the existence of grounds specific to the circumstances of this case:

Q. So you believe Mr. N.M. may be on the property, but certainly no-one else, you have no evidence of that, true?

A. That – well we have no evidence that there's anybody else in the property, that's true.

Q. All right. So I take it then you have no evidence that anybody else is in immediate risk?

A. Well the – this – we're saying that there's no evidence. There's – there's no possible way to confirm what you're suggesting –

Q. Right.

A. -- but we have no information that there's anybody else on the property, I agree with that.

Q. Okay. And so then I take it you have no information that anybody else is in any kind of immediate danger –

A. I would –

Q. -- true?

A. -- agree with that –

Q. Right.

A. -- yes.

...

Q. And again you didn't receive any information about anybody else being present?

A. That's correct.

...

Q. We have no evidence at all that there's anybody else on that piece of property?

A. We have no information, correct.

Q. No information. And there's no police officers there; we have no evidence that there's a police officer who is in any – any type of harm, do we?

A. No, we don't.

...

Q. And once Mr. N.M. is brought out of the house, you'll agree with me that there is no evidence that there is anybody left in that house at all, is there?

A. We have – we made no observations of anybody arriving to the house while we were there. We didn't have any independent information that anybody was in the house, that's correct.

Q. So when I say that there is no evidence that there is anyone in the house, the answer is yes, I take it?

A. There's no information –

Q. All right.

A. -- we have – we hadn't confirmed it, but I agree with you we don't have any information by seeing a second person or hearing a ser – second party, but we'd only been on this – Mr. N.M.'s house establishing perimeter for a couple of hours. We were not sure.

...

Q. And so there's no evidence of anybody else being in the house, true? If there is, let me know.

A. Yes, we have not seen anybody separate – any – any – two people; we don't have any information for anybody that – that they are in there. It didn't – it – it doesn't mean it's absolute impossibility.

...

- Q. -- the only evidence that you have is that -- that there are some guns in the house, correct?
- A. Correct.
- Q. But nothing illegal?
- A. Not that we're aware of, that's correct.
- Q. And there's certainly no evidence that there are any booby traps or anything that can hurt anyone in that house, is there?
- A. There is no evidence of that...but as far as any evidence of Mr. N.M. having set any of those devices, no.
- . . .
- Q. And then Mr. N.M. gets ordered out and so your belief at the time would be that there was no-one in that house once Mr. N.M. leaves, correct?
- A. Well we -- we did not know that -- if there was anybody else in the house. I know we just walked through that we had no evidence to the contrary, but it's not outside the realm of possibility that there was somebody else in the house.
- Q. Sure. But that's just, you'll agree with me, speculation?
- A. Well it was -- it's not outside the realm of possibility, but there was no evidence to support it.
- . . .
- A. ...the decision was made at -- when I gave approval at around 0034.
- Q. Right. And at 0034, that's when the decision was made, you had no evidence of anybody in that house. You had no evidence of anybody in immediate danger. You had no evidence that there was anything that was going to cause harm to anybody. You had no evidence of anybody being injured in the house, and if -- if you do, I'd like you to be specific and say, Mr. Brauti, this is the piece of evidence I had to support those beliefs; do you understand the question?
- A. I understand the question.
- Q. Do you have any evidence to support those beliefs?
- A. I had no evidence to support those beliefs.

[92] In re-examination, Insp. Jones was asked further about the stealth clear actions:

- Q. Mr. Brauti was asking you a number of questions about the evidence that you had of anyone being -- anyone else being in the -- the residence, and one of your answers was 'Our experience doesn't mean there's not a second subject'?
- A. Correct.
- Q. Can you tell us what exper -- what your experience is in that regard?
- A. That the -- there have been several incidents similar to this that I have been involved in where the information is that there is the subject, or the subject and their partner, and end up being more people than that, although there's no evidence outside the house that would have provided us with that information.
- Q. And can you indicate whether or not, when they are then located, whether they have posed any risk to officers or whether they have been harmed themselves, if you recall?

A. With these other individuals?

Q. Yes.

A. I'm just trying to take my mind back, to answer that question. The potential for risk is always there, but our officers have not been harmed. By doing a stealth clear it's a – a slow procedural way and it's a safe way.

Q. Okay. Have they found persons who have been harmed?

A. I'm sure they have. On my watch they haven't.

[93] Insp. McKinnon did not consider a stealth clear action to be automatic but one of a series of options available to an incident commander. The witness noted that third party consent to enter is another option. The totality of the circumstances must be assessed. Insp. Jones testified that the stealth clear procedure is described in the OPP standard operating procedures and manuals. Nowhere in the OPP standard operating procedure manuals, Police Orders or training material are there written instructions regarding:

- (1) a stealth clear as discretionary as opposed to routine or automatic
- (2) the need for reasonable suspicion grounded in articulable facts before executing warrantless entry
- (3) those circumstances which might dictate the necessity for a stealth clear.

[94] Sgt. Penrose saw only Mr. N.M. at the property and only his vehicle there. After handing custody of Mr. N.M. to ERT officers off property, the officer was given command post authorization to enter back onto the N.M. property to perform a stealth clear of the residence. Five TRU team members entered the N.M. dwelling. According to the sergeant, there are only "rare instances" when a stealth clear, which can only be authorized by the incident commander, is not undertaken. He could not say the circumstances which dictate, one way or the other, whether a stealth clear will occur. The officer's position is that "we always assume that there could be someone else involved" and therefore, as a matter of "standard operating procedure, "enter a dwelling to "ensure 100% that the scene or location is safe". The officer considers a risk assessment to have been done at the point when the TRU team is first called in. In his testimony, Sgt. Penrose agreed there was "no evidence" of any immediate danger including no evidence of anyone else in the house or any other threat.

[95] A/Sgt. Manca described the stealth clear as a methodical search of the rooms of a dwelling in the interests of safety of the public. Any place a person could be hidden or any other "hazards" were searched. Then, once the TRU team leaves, the next people to enter “won’t be subject to harm”. According to A/Sgt Manca, although he had no information that there was anyone else in the N.M. residence or any booby traps, in his words, “we always assume the worst”.

[96] Const. S. O’Rourke held a similar view of the existing circumstances:

Q. ...there was no indication prior to your entry that there was any other person present, fair?

A. That’s fair, yes.

Q. And there was no indication that there was any threat to anybody else whatsoever?

A. No – no information on that, that’s correct.

...

Q. But there was nothing particular to this case that would suggest an immediate danger or threat?

A. Not – not anticipated or an expected one, no.

[97] TRU team officer Traves agreed that his team had no information that anyone other than Mr. N.M. was in the house or that anything illegal was occurring in the dwelling. Although the officer had no information of any threat existing in the residence after Mr. N.M. had been arrested outside his dwelling, the stealth clear is conducted:

Q. And in response to a question my friend asked you, you said that you had no information that anything in the house was a threat. And you responded, “We don’t know that, that’s why we moved into the second stage of the operation.” What do you mean by the second stage of the operation?

A. Once the first stage, we’ve gone in and have containment, we’ve made observations of the individual, he’s been contacted, and he’s been arrested and removed from the residence.

Q. Yes.

A. Then we move into the second stage would be the stealth clear of the residence.

[98] Although Insp. Jones characterized a stealth clear as not being “an evidence search” it was expected that the TRU team would “take note” of the location of any weapons and “pass that information on to investigators, that they saw a rifle or a shotgun” and perhaps follow-up with assisting investigators in unloading any weapons. The inspector was questioned further on the subject:

Q. Because the policy would be that they don’t speak to the criminal investigators... about any evidence, right?

A. ...as I’ve testified to, if they observed something –

Q. Yes.

A. -- then they would likely share that information with the detectives, that’s correct.

Q. Okay. So for example if these officers saw certain weapons inside, they would let other officers in the case know that there’s weapons there?

A. Yes.

Q. And that information may become part of the information for a warrant?

A. It might be, yes.

Q. All right. And as far as the policy and the way these things unfold, there is nothing wrong with that from the OPP perspective, true?

A. Correct.

Insp. Jones was unaware of whether the TRU team located any weapons in the N.M.' residence.

[99] Sgt. Penrose testified that during a stealth clear the TRU team notes any weaponry seen whether or not it constitutes a risk to anyone. This officer, who led the stealth clear of the N.M.' residence, does not look for small items and, for example, in searching a closet would not open a shoebox. If the sergeant had seen a hand-held cross-bow in plain view in a closet, he would have noted it. He saw no such item. If there were bankers boxes on a closet shelf it is unlikely they would be moved to look behind. Outfitted in his tactical gear, the officer is about 6'½" in height.

[100] In making a complete visual search of the master bedroom closet, together with Const. O'Rourke, Sgt. Penrose observed an unloaded shotgun leaning in one corner and a handgun with a magazine in it in a holster on one of the two closet shelves. He did not touch the firearms. To Penrose's recall, he relayed information about these weapons through the Tactical Operations Centre to the TRU team leader in the command post assuming the information would be passed to the incident commander and to others.

[101] A/Sgt. Manca considered it the responsibility of the officers conducting a stealth clear to identify "any type of items that could be used as evidence", including weapons, and to inform investigators where they were located.

[102] Sgt. Penrose and A/Sgt. Manca were unaware of any located weapons being removed from the N.M. residence by the TRU team.

[103] As to the duration of the stealth clear, Insp. Jones believed "it went very quickly". Sgt. Penrose believed that the search of the N.M. bungalow took about one and a quarter hours. A/Sgt. Manca recalled the search as lasting 30 to 45 minutes. Once the stealth clear concluded, the ERT team "secured" the scene.

[104] Insp. Jones' use of force report noted the grounds for use of force to be the alleged domestic assault not any threats toward police officers.

T... M... P... is Secured

[105] At 12:35 a.m., Sgt. James requested Sgt. Quinton have the scene at the N.M. property held until she could obtain a warrant. In her affidavit filed in this proceeding, Sgt. James states the warrant would be to seize “firearms not being stored safely”. In her testimony, the sergeant spoke of obtaining a “gun warrant” for the arrestee’s handguns and long guns. It was a “domestic investigation” and the police “would want to gather those firearms”. Sgt. James acknowledged that in domestic assault cases it is general practice to obtain firearms in the possession of the accused. She had never before used a s.117.04 warrant in such a situation. In her experience, the firearms are often seized by officers attending the incident, the firearms are turned over by the complainant, or the court orders them surrendered as a bail condition.

[106] At about 1:34 a.m., Sgt. James heard a communication at the command post indicating that the TRU team in the N.M. residence had located a shotgun and a handgun in a closet.

[107] Between 2:15 a.m. and 2:30 a.m., Sgt. James spoke to Const. O’Rourke. O’Rourke described his team’s discovery, in the southeast bedroom closet, of an unsecured shotgun as well as an unsecured handgun in a holster and shotgun shells on a shelf.

[108] It appears that in response to Sgt. James’ request, the OPP kept a cruiser with one or more officers in the N.M. driveway as a means of keeping a presence at the scene. When Const. Quinn attended the residence during the morning of March 20th, he found Consts. Lawson and Dudzinski in a cruiser in the driveway. Quinn found the front door of the N.M. residence not just unlocked but also open. There was a period of time on March 20th when no OPP officer was present at the property.

The Consent to Seize Four Firearms

execution of the consent

[109] Mr. N.M. was placed in an OPP Dufferin Detachment cell at about 1:00 a.m. on March 20th, 2002. He was not placed under a suicide watch. Const. Does tried to reach a friend of the accused, M. H. , at Mr. N.M.’ request. Det. Sgt. McCormick asked if the arrestee wished to contact duty counsel. Mr. N.M. expressed a desire to call a particular lawyer, H. Black. McCormick left a voice message at Mr. Black’s office and provided that information to Mr. N.M. at 1:13 a.m. When Mr. N.M. next asked to contact two TPS officers, Benoit and H., Det. Sgt. McCormick passed the request on to Insp. Jones. At 1:20 a.m., McCormick informed Mr. N.M. that the inspector had directed his outgoing calls be limited to counsel. At 1:45 a.m., at Mr. N.M.’ initiation, McCormick and he had a brief discussion in the cells area regarding the complainant. Det. Sgt. McCormick recalled that the arrestee made no complaint of soreness or injury.

[110] According to Mr. N.M., because of an absence of contemporaneous notes on his part, and the passage of time, he cannot recall all the details of his time at the OPP detachment on March 20th, 2002.

[111] Sgt. James testified that, at 4:40 a.m., Det. Sgt. Sills informed her that it might be necessary for an officer to go to the N.M.' residence to retrieve medication for Mr. N.M.. At that point, according to James, she raised the matter with Mr. N.M. who stated that he didn't want his medicine or for a police officer to go to his home. According to Mr. N.M.' testimony, he was in "extreme pain" from the circumstances of his arrest and as a result he did ask Sgt. James for his Tylenol 3. When Mr. N.M. again inquired about his counsel, Sgt. James told him that the message left for his lawyer in all probability would not be picked up until morning. At 4:46 a.m., according to the officer's notes, the accused summoned her back to the cells to indicate that he recalled Mr. Black might be away on vacation. Mr. N.M. wanted his police association representative called. That was done by leaving a message and Mr. N.M. was informed. At 5:13 a.m., in response to an inquiry from Mr. N.M., he was told that bail court in Orangeville was scheduled for 1:00 p.m.

[112] Const. Quinn photographed and fingerprinted Mr. N.M. finding him very cooperative. At 8:10 a.m., an incoming phonecall from defence counsel was transferred to Mr. N.M.. At 8:25 a.m., Joanne Mulcahy, a lawyer from Mr. Black's office, spoke to Sgt. James about bail conditions for the accused's release. Sgt. James directed Ms. Mulcahy to contact Crown counsel. The call was then transferred to Mr. N.M..

[113] According to Const. Quinn, at 9:03 a.m., Mr. N.M. requested the officer attend his residence to obtain his medication. The constable did not observe the arrestee to be in any pain. The constable had the accused sign his memo book below the following text:

Request is to enter res & go to kitchen cabinet on left side beside fridge, top shelf, & grab small cardboard package approx. 1½" x 3". Medication is called "Losec" & smaller pill bottle on same shelf called "Vioxx" & larger bottle "Tylenol 3".

The constable received the authority of a supervisor to obtain the accused's medication.

[114] At 9:15 a.m., Mr. N.M. requested a call to counsel's office and Ms. Mulcahy was contacted. During this call, Ms. Mulcahy indicated to Sgt. James that her client "was willing to consent to a search for his handguns". The call ended at 9:25 a.m. Mr. N.M. was not surprised that, in the context of a domestic violence allegation, the OPP would be interested in curtailing his access to firearms. He considered he was being cooperative knowing the OPP needed his firearms.

[115] According to Sgt. James, she then spoke to Mr. N.M. in the cells area and not on videotape in an interview room. The officer did not have notes of her full discussion with the accused. While Sgt. James has no recall of Mr. N.M. being adamant that some papers in his house not be touched, she conceded that she may have had such a discussion earlier with Ms. Mulcahy. The sergeant discussed with Mr. N.M. the location of the shotgun and three registered handguns. Mr. N.M. maintains that this pre-consent session was videotaped. To his recall, he discussed such matters as papers he wanted from a lock-box or safe for a future trial and the location of his long guns. Mr. N.M. testified that he was told a search warrant was being prepared. Mr. N.M. drew sketches of the exact location of the four firearms completing them at about 9:40 a.m. Sgt. James recalls the accused describing the shotgun and a handgun in the master bedroom closet, a handgun in a locked box in the same room, and the third handgun, in her words, “[a]t the bottom of the stairs there is French doors and above those French doors are joists of the ceiling and that’s where he’s showing that a firearm would be”. The sergeant recalled no discussion of long guns beyond the shotgun.

[116] In his 2005 affidavit, Mr. N.M. states that while on route to the OPP detachment he heard information that the police were in his home searching although he had not been shown a search or Feeney warrant and he had not been asked for permission to enter. In this proceeding, Mr. N.M. could not recall securing this information while in the cruiser – he could not remember whether it was from the “two officers talking or if [he] heard it in the station”.

[117] Mr. N.M. testified that he knew the police had seen the shotgun in the bedroom closet “that night”. In his affidavit, the accused deposed to being told by an unidentified male officer that the police had already “legally” searched his residence and seen the weapons and that the consent was simply to seize them. Mr. N.M. further deposed that he would not have signed a consent had he known the earlier entry to his home was without a warrant to arrest or search – “I certainly did not think that the consent was for an initial attempt at a lawful search of any part of my residence”. In this proceeding, Mr. N.M. maintained that he overheard a discussion in the detachment which led him to believe some of the firearms from the bedroom closet were in the detachment.

[118] Mr. N.M. testified here that prior to signing the consent he understood that the police had already entered his residence:

Q. Prior to signing the consent, what was your understanding regarding the police, whether or not they had been in your home?

A. I heard that they had been and I knew that they had been in from hearing what I heard.

...

Q. And what was discussed?

A. Locations of the guns, whether they were loaded or not. I asked her if they had conducted a search warrant the night before, whether they – whether they were preparing a warrant.

...

Q. What about the circumstances in this case with regard to the ERT [TRU] team coming in without a warrant or a Feeney warrant ordering you out of the house, is that something that you are agreeing to?

A. No, of course not.

...

Q. And finally, sir, when you signed the consent, what was your belief at the time as far as whether the police had come with a Feeney warrant or not, at the time you are signing the consent?

A. At the time I was signing the consent? I assumed that they had one.

Q. Okay. I'm sorry, go ahead.

A. I also assumed that they had a search warrant. I mean that's why I asked her why the guns weren't there.

[119] During Mr. N.M.'s March 26th, 2002 bail hearing, Ms. Mulcahy stated:

I can clarify this, what it was that he was never asked whether he consented. He learned that there will be a search warrant executed and he voluntarily told the police I will consent to turning over these firearms, that he understood from them that there were three firearms that they were interested in and he filled out the consent form for those. He advised them he had other weapons, but because he had personal property, personal papers in there, he indicated to the police that he wanted to go with them. They could seize it, but he wanted to insure that nobody touched his personal papers. This was also indicated on the record on Wednesday when it was adjourned to determine if there will be any further charges, so we would know where we are at. But this is it, that he was consenting to the police having anything and everything they wanted, but he was concerned about his personal papers.

In this proceeding, Mr. N.M. testified that at his bail hearing he was in pain and in "withdrawal from the pain medication". He is not sure he heard what Ms. Mulcahy said. His intention was turn over to the OPP only the things described in the consent.

[120] By 9:00 a.m., Mr. N.M. had been at the OPP detachment for eight to nine hours. Det. Sgt. McCormick described the police facility as "really small" and Sgt. James testified that it "wouldn't surprise" her if Mr. N.M. "could hear people talking about the investigation" during his period of custody.

[121] Sgt. James considered that Mr. N.M. understood, prior to giving any formal consent, that the police were preparing a warrant to search his home for weapons. He had asked to speak to his counsel about that subject. Sgt. James acknowledged that she may have told the accused's counsel which firearms they were preparing a warrant to seize. The officer gave this evidence:

Q. Had you at any time discussed the – those firearms with counsel named Joanne?

A. I'm unsure how – I – I'm not going to say I did not. I – I – I don't know how Mr. N.M. was aware that we were going to be doing a warrant in regards to the guns and I don't have any recollection of that. I – I'm not saying that I didn't tell Mr. N.M. or I didn't tell counsel. I very well could have. It could have been that Mr. N.M. overheard us in the – in the office, because it's such a small office. But I – I don't know how he obtained that information, not that it was incorrect, but...

Q. About getting the warrant?

A. About getting a warrant.

...

Q. You have already told him that these items are going to be seized for a criminal investigation?

A. I assume I would have told him that or his counsel.

[122] Further, Sgt. James believed that Mr. N.M., before giving a consent to seize firearms, understood that the police were aware of the shotgun and handgun in the bedroom closet as a result of an entry to his dwelling after his arrest:

Q. And so by the time he has said to you in the cells that, look, I'm – I'm consenting to this, it's his belief, as far as you're concerned, that the items have already been seized?

A. Like I said, I don't know what his belief was in the cells. It certainly was when we spoke on video and – and did the consent, that he felt we already had the shotgun and the handgun that was seen by the TRU Team, but he was obviously aware that we knew of that also.

...

Q. And just deducing from that, that people had obviously been in the house to make the seizure, fair?

A. Yes.

...

Q. He certainly hadn't indicated to you earlier that he was consenting to any type of general search of the residence?

A. My understanding from him and his counsel was, he was agreeing to the consent search of his handguns that were registered to him and the shotgun that we were in – that was in the closet and seen by TRU. That was my understanding.

...

Q. Now, there is no question in your mind in having dealt with Mr. N.M., that he certainly has become aware somehow that officers have been in the house and have seen these specific items and know their locations?

A. Yes.

[123] Sgt. James prepared what she described as a Wills consent for the shotgun and three registered handguns typing in information provided by Mr. N.M.. She was somewhat surprised that a consent was forthcoming as she considered that Mr. N.M., as a police officer, would be familiar with the necessity for the police to go through a number of steps to secure a warrant to search.

[124] Sgt. James told Mr. N.M., off-camera, that the consent procedure would be videotaped. Mr. N.M. agrees that he had legal advice prior to giving consent. The officer led the accused to an interview room at 10:15 a.m. where the consent document (Exhibit #9A) was explained and added to in terms of a more precise description of the location of the firearms. The form, signed by James and the accused, and initialled by Mr. N.M. where required, reads as follows:

CONSENT TO SEARCH

In order to assist in the investigation of Unsafe Storage of a Firearm, being conducted by the Ontario Provincial Police, Criminal Investigation Branch, I, N.M. do hereby give permission to the Ontario Provincial Police to enter and search my residence located at # 714345 1st Line EHS, Town of Mono, Ontario, which is owned and/or controlled by me, and to seize the following items;

Beretta handgun located in the joists of the basement By the French doors
Smith and Weston 357 handgun located in a lock box beside the bed in the Master bedroom – S/E side of the residence
Beretta handgun located in the bedroom closet located in the S/E side of the residence Shot gun located in the bedroom closet located in the S/E side of the residence which is (are) believed on reasonable grounds to be relevant to the said investigation.

I, N.M., hereby acknowledge that;

I expressly give my consent to the herein search; _____ (initials)

I have the authority to give the consent to the herein search; _____ (initials)

I have given my consent freely, voluntarily and without any influence whatsoever by any person in authority; _____ (initials)

I am aware of the nature and extent of the search to which I am consenting; _____ (initials)

I understand my right to refuse to consent to the police search herein; _____ (initials)

I understand that I may withdraw my consent at any time before or during the said search; _____ (initials)

I am aware that any item(s) seized as a result of this consent search may be used in evidence against me or any other person charged by the police for a criminal offence; _____ (initials)

Dated: Wednesday the 20th day of March 2002, in the Town of Shelburne, Ontario.
10:24 AM.

Signature: [signature]

Witness: [signature]
[italics denote handwriting]

[125] During the videotaped session lasting about ten minutes, to Sgt. James' observation, Mr. N.M. appeared to be experiencing some back pain. In the video, Mr. N.M. is seen rubbing his back and walking somewhat gingerly. The accused described himself as "limp[ing]" out of the interview room. During the session, Mr. N.M. appeared to be of the view that two of the firearms had already been seized. It appears that he believed those in the bedroom closet had been removed from his residence. James saw no firearms at the detachment and her information and that of others was to the contrary. At the point where Sgt. James read from the form that consent was being provided voluntarily and without influence from anyone in authority, Mr. N.M. stated while laughing:

N.M.: We won't talk about the torture.

James: Hmm?

N.M.: I'm joking.

[126] In cross-examination, Sgt. James agreed that prior to having Mr. N.M. sign the consent form she did not inform the accused that:

- (1) there had been no Feeney warrant issued for his arrest
- (2) the OPP TRU team entered and searched his residence without any judicial authorization
- (3) no judicial authorization to search his dwelling existed at the point of giving consent
- (4) if further items were located during the consent seizure of the four firearms they too were subject to being seized and used for criminal charges
- (5) she had an interest in seizing his other long guns by a search warrant.

[127] On the latter point, Sgt. James testified that:

A. As for the long guns, I have no real reason why we wouldn't have asked for those seizures, too. I – I don't have that information, except for that I would have thought they were in the gun – I don't know. I have no idea why I didn't ask for that.

...

Q. But you didn't mention that you would also be interested in investigating the long guns, as well?

A. No, I – I don't think we mentioned that at all.

Q. But that was the state of affairs, was it not, that you were interested in all of the weaponry?

A. It certainly would have been, in – as regards to a domestic situation. As for a criminal investigation, no. As in a safety issue, yes.

...

Q. In those situations, did that cause you a concern for firearms generally?

A. Like most domestics that we investigate, if there's firearms. And it's easier now, because long guns are supposed to be registered anyway. So – but any kind of concern in regards to a domestic situation, we – we worry about firearms and that's – that's our normal course of our investigation.

[128] At the conclusion of the execution of the consent at 10:24 a.m., Sgt. James said to Mr. N.M., "I guess they'll be right back with that medication".

consent seizure at the residence

[129] Sgt. James received a phonecall from the complainant who wanted to enter her residence to retrieve some personal belongings such as clothes. The officer, accompanied by Const. Dudzinski, arranged to meet the complainant at the N.M. residence.

[130] Sgt. James was at the N.M. residence from 11:20 a.m. until 12:02 p.m. on March 20th, 2002. After first speaking with the complainant, the sergeant and her partner proceeded to the master bedroom to the closet. There the officer observed the shotgun and handgun described in the information she had received from the TRU team. The shotgun, unloaded but not secured, propped up on its butt in the left corner of the closet, was seized. Shotgun shells were seized from the lowest of two shelves in the closet – a shelf the sergeant recalls as about 5'1" or 5'2" from the floor. In her shoes, she is about 5'4½". In her affidavit, Sgt. James states that she located two boxes of shotgun ammunition, three .40 calibre rounds, two loaded .40 calibre magazines and a box of .32 calibre automatic ammunition "[i]n the same closet".

[131] Also from the lower shelf, a loaded, unsecured Beretta handgun in a holster was seized.

[132] In her filed affidavit, Sgt. James swore that: "I also saw a small hand[-]held cross[-]bow on the top shelf of this same closet in the master bedroom". This was contrary to the officer's evidence in these proceedings that she could not see the contents of the top shelf. Sgt. James testified that Const. Dudzinski, who is 6'5" in height, reached onto the top shelf of the closet and pulled out a "small" cross-bow capable of being held and fired with one hand, saying, "Look at this". Sgt. James thought the item was a prohibited weapon. On her evidence, she directed the constable to put the cross-bow back because, in her words, "we had no consent for that". At the time, Sgt. James thought she would require a s.117.04 or s.487 Criminal Code warrant to seize the cross-bow. James could not say if any bankers boxes were on the top shelf. The Crown admitted in this proceeding that there was a bankers box on the top shelf of the closet. Const. Dudzinski has no recall at all as to whether he took a cross-bow off the closet shelf. Mr. N.M. testified that the cross-bow was out of sight on the top shelf of the closet behind one or two bankers boxes in order to keep the item away from his son. A videotape made the following day during the execution of a s.117.04 warrant to search shows a bankers box on the top shelf but no video or photograph was produced here showing the location of the cross-bow in the closet.

[133] Using the combination provided by Mr. N.M., a locked box, cabled to the bed in the master bedroom, was opened. In the receptacle, Sgt. James located a loaded .357 Smith and Wesson handgun and two speed loaders. Asked why she seized the additional items, the officer answered:

I can't specifically recall what my thought process was, just that it's...it would be part of the firearm. It's the ammunition for the firearm, I guess. I – I took the ammunition with it, the same as the ammunition that was in the closet.

[134] At 11:45 a.m., the two officers went to the basement and, with Const. Dudzinski standing on something and reaching into the rafters, an unloaded and unsecured .25 calibre Beretta handgun was seized along with two empty clips. As to the precise location of this seizure, Sgt. James gave this evidence:

A. We went to the basement and when – the stairs to the basement, my recollection is in the kitchen area. You go down the stairs and you enter into a room that is finished, a rec room area and right at the bottom of the stairs there's a set of French doors that goes into – to the right. It goes into an unfinished area of the basement.

...

Q. Can you tell from that diagram whether the – the doors he's referred – that are drawn there are to the right or to the left of the stairs as you come down?

A. No, it's – at the bottom of the stairs is – I don't know if – it's not three dimensional to indicate left or right of the stairs. I can advise it was my understanding that you went through to the unfinished part, because that's where the joists could be seen, not in the finished area of the basement, and that's what we did and that's – and we located the firearm that he had given us the map to, so....

...

Q. Are you able to assist us in reference to this diagram, where you actually went then to – when you went into the basement?

A. Yes. There's – you can see some line – lines going up and down the page, short lines and that's the stair steps. We went down those stairs and we went through the French doors into that hall area, what's described as a hall area. It's an unfinished area in the basement.

Q. Okay.

A. And there was – right at the French doors you could see the joists of – of the basement, on the ceiling and – and right to the right in that diagram of the French doors is where we located a Beretta handgun...

Q. Okay.

A. ...in – in the joists.

[135] Mr. N.M. considered the consent to be authority to seize specific items in the specific locations within his residence which he had described and not authority for a general search of his home.

[136] In his in-chief questioning by Mr. Brauti, Const. Dudzinski testified that he understood that while the consent permitted a search of the entire residence for weapons, he was limited to walking through the house quickly to observe any weapons lying around. The constable recalled that he and Sgt. James, though in the same room, searched independently. With leading questions in cross-examination by Crown counsel, Const. Dudzinski stated that he may have confused his searching conduct of March 21st pursuant to a public safety warrant in describing the events of March 20th.

[137] Sgt. James was examined as to the extent of her search activities in the house. Some of her responses reflected restraint:

Q. And in your mind, did that consent search allow you to – to look anywhere else in the residence, other than those areas specified in the form?

A. He – no, I – I would say not. I – I didn't go anywhere else in the residence and he was pretty specific in the locations of where his firearms were and what he wanted me to obtain.

...

Q. Did you search in any other rooms of the residence?

A. No, we did not.

...

Q. And if I was to tell you or suggest to you that what had been previously said to you was that the consent was very specific, to go to very specific locations for the sole purpose of seizing very specific items, would you agree with that?

A. Yes.

Other responses indicated that Sgt. James recalled telling Det. Const. Manser that “we had done a consent search” and that she probably told the complainant, “I’m going to the home to search it”. As well, in her testimony, the officer stated, “I conducted a consent search and I left the property”.

[138] In her affidavit, Sgt. James stated that, “When in the basement I noted a gun locker against the weight room wall”. Det. Const. Manser’s affidavit, sworn in support of the issuance of a s.117.04 public safety warrant, states that in Sgt. James’ consent attendance at the N.M. residence, “[t]he locked gun vault was located in the basement of the house” and, “The gun vault was locked”. That gun locker is in the exercise room on the opposite side of the hall and not apparently visible to the immediate area of the French doors and the location of the handgun seizure.

The Public Safety Warrant

background

[139] Sgt. James testified that McCormick forwarded to her electronically the start-up of a Criminal Code warrant regarding firearms in Mr. N.M.’ residence. Then, by 5:00 a.m. on March 20th, 2002, Sgt. James took over working on “a [s.] 487 warrant in regards to the guns observed by the TRU members”. She also spoke to Det. Sgt. Sills about a s. 117.04 search warrant, in her words, “because we...were kind of up in the air on what we were going to do”.

[140] After the consent search at the accused’s home, and attendance at court on March 20th, at about 4:00 p.m. at the OPP Dufferin detachment, Sgt. James passed the warrant assignment onto Det. Const. J. Manser. Sgt. James recalls providing to Manser the complainant’s and Benoit’s statements, probably a copy of her notes, and the information she had learned from the TRU team. She further told Manser that the consent search was done and that in that search a hand-held cross-bow, a prohibited weapon, had been discovered. According to James, she “directed” Manser “to get the guns” – “I don’t know if I gave her any specific direction on what warrant to fill out or anything". Sgt. James passed on the database draft of the information to obtain (ITO) a warrant which she had been preparing.

[141] Det. Const. Manser began her preparation of the public safety warrant at about 6:25 p.m. on March 20th. She had not before drafted such an application. During the evening, she had assistance from representatives of the Provincial Weapons Enforcement Unit (PWEU) who came to the detachment. She received information and material from James, Sills and the PWEU officials as primary sources for her drafting. Manser believed it important, in the context of the ongoing domestic violence investigation, that firearms be removed from the N.M. residence for the safety of the complainant and her children. The detective constable gave this evidence at the preliminary inquiry:

Q. Are you telling me that your understanding of a 117 warrant is that you go in there to seize items because somewhere down the line at some unknown time, unknown place, a member of the public may be in danger in the future? Is that your understanding of the warrant?

A. That's correct.

[142] The affidavit in support of the public safety warrant is 95 paragraphs in length. Included in Det. Const. Manser's grounds for believing it was in the interests of public safety to execute a s. 117.04 warrant at Mr. N.M.' residence was the following information reported from the complainant to Const. Tardiff to Sgt. James to Det. Const. Manser:

28) S.M. stated to P.C. Gord TARDIF, that the physical abuse has been going on for over 15 years. The abuse started prior to their marriage. S.M. advised that her husband, N.M. is a member of the Toronto Police Service since 1988 but is presently on injury leave due to an injury sustained on the job. S.M. stated that N.M. made comments to her that "I am a copy. I know what to do. They will never get me out of the house".

29) S.M. stated further that N.M. has made suicidal and homicidal comments in the recent past. He has made comments about the KIREC homicides in which the father murdered his four children, then his wife and subsequently committed suicide. These homicides occurred in the County of Dufferin. S.M. stated that N.M. has three (3) handguns locked in a safe in the basement, and that he spends all his time in the basement watching television.

...

53) Over the last two weeks N.M. has become more and more withdrawn and seems like a time bomb; N.N. is "holed up" in the basement.

As to the consent search of March 20th, the constable learned from Sgt. James:

34) The locked gun vault was located in the basement of the residence, but was not searched. A crossbow was found in a bedroom closet, but was not removed during the consent search as no consent had been granted by M. for the cross-bow.

From Benoit's statement, Manser included this information:

- 57) N.M. is in possession of several shotguns, a .22 calibre rifle and other long guns unknown; the rifles are securely stored in the residence.

[143] Det. Const. Manser acknowledged in cross-examination that the duties of an affiant in a search warrant information were to be fair, frank, accurate, honest, full and detailed. This includes disclosure of any relevant police misconduct of which she is aware. The constable agreed in cross-examination that it would be important in an affidavit or ITO to point out for the issuing justice previous warrantless entries and searches on the N.M. property as well as the process used to arrest the suspect. Det. Const. Manser knew, and did not disclose, that the TRU team had made a warrantless entry onto the N.M. property, that the TRU officers made observations of Mr. N.M. "within his house" from on the property, that the tires of the suspect's vehicle were slashed by the TRU team, that Mr. N.M. was arrested without a Feeney warrant, and that the TRU team made a warrantless entry into the residence making observations of firearms. As well, the officer did not include in her affidavit that a Feeney warrant "was being sought" during these OPP actions or what exigent circumstances were perceived to exist:

- Q. ...but none of that was information that you provided to the justice?
- A. That's correct.
- Q. Notwithstanding the fact that you knew that warrantless entries onto the property should be disclosed, fair?
- A. Fair, yes.

[144] Further questioned on the matter, the constable stated:

- Q. You also answered with respect to the same menu of items that that was not disclosed in the affidavit for your 117 warrant, that the entry on to private property was without warrant; the observations of N.M. on this property was without warrant; that there was no Feeney warrant in existence at the time and that the TRU Team's entry after the arrest was without warrant.
- A. That's correct. It's missing the words "without warrant".
- Q. Yes. I think the question you haven't been asked, unless I've missed it, is why you didn't include that in your affidavit.
- A. It was not included. I – I knew that someone had started a Feeney warrant that was not completed and I just did not include it in the warrant. There – I don't believe there's a real reason why I didn't include it in the warrant, sir But I did have that information, yes, sir.
- Q. Looking back, in retrospect, you think it should have been included?
- A. In retrospect, I guess where we are now, there may have been spots where I should have fine-tuned my affidavit. Yes, that's correct, but not to mislead the Justice who was reading the paper over did I not include it.

execution of the s.117.04 warrant

[145] The public safety warrant was executed on March 21st, 2002. A number of weapons were seized in the N.M. residence including the following which are relevant to the prosecution's proof of various counts in the indictment – an unregistered Glock handgun in a heating register in the master bedroom (count #'s 8, 12), a #25 Remington Model 12 gauge shotgun (count #11), and various prohibited weapon knives (count #13).

The s. 487 Code Warrant

the Special Task Force investigation

[146] The TPS Chief of Police, following allegations from the defence bar of police corruption within the ranks of the Central Field Command Team No. 1 drug squad, turned investigation of the matter over to the R.C.M.P. R.C.M.P. Chief Superintendent Neily assembled a joint forces task force, the Professional Standards Special Task Force (STF), composed of R.C.M.P. investigators and members of the TPS Professional Standards Unit (internal affairs). The alleged corruption involved theft, perjury, assaults, obstruction of justice, and extortion. N.M., for a period of time a member of the drug squad, was one of the officers subject to the STF investigation.

[147] The STF began operations in May of 2001. The STF was divided into five sub-units each identified by a colour designation with four teams of four officers and the blue team having six or seven members.

[148] In March of 2002, according to Det. Sgt. A. Scott of the STF red team, Mr. N.M. was "a person of interest" regarding three or four of the ongoing STF investigations.

[149] TPS officer memo books are the property of the police force and must be handed in at the end of a tour of duty unless permission is otherwise granted, i.e. to have the notes available for court. The STF was aware that several of Mr. N.M.' memo books had not been turned in as required. The STF was interested in the missing books as relevant to its investigation. In February of 2002, STF member Det. Hoover attended Mr. N.M.' residence to serve a letter requiring that all of his outstanding memo books be turned in for the period 1995 to 2000. The STF understood that Mr. N.M. was taking the position that his memo books were already seized by Internal Affairs or at TPS 14 Division. According to STF witnesses, that had been checked and proved not to be so.

[150] In March of 2002, TPS Det. J. Lowry had not yet been assigned a STF team colour designation. He was performing a central function of net worth determination respecting TPS subject officers. Det. Lowry had considerable experience in the preparation of search warrants. Det. Lowry testified that, prior to March 20th, STF investigators had no information about police property or notebooks within Mr. N.M.' residence.

[151] On March 20th, 2002 at about 10:00 a.m., Det. Lowry was present with other STF officers when Det. Sgt. Pipe announced that N.M., one of the objects of the STF investigation, had been arrested the night before for assault. Pipe's information incorrectly stated that N.M. had been drinking heavily and that he was involved in a domestic assault the evening before.

the STF approach to Det. Const. Manser

[152] While at the OPP Dufferin detachment during the evening of March 20th, 2002 drafting her affidavit in support of the issuance of the public safety warrant, Det. Const. Manser became aware that a number of STF officers had arrived at the detachment unannounced and uninvited. Amongst that group, as she originally recalled it, were three officers she had never met – RCMP Staff Sgt. G. Carlson, TPS Det. Sgt. B. Evans, and TPS Det. Sgt. M. Earle. She would later learn that Earle did not attend that evening and it was subsequent in the investigation that she first met Earle. Carlson and Evans were members of the STF blue team.

[153] Det. Const. Manser considered the attendance of these officers to be “a very unusual set of circumstances”. While she did not learn the details of the STF investigation, she understood generally from the visiting officers that their joint forces project related to internal investigations and allegations of N.M. falsifying notes or acting inappropriately in the line of duty. She considered that investigation to have nothing to do with her s. 117.04 warrant application.

[154] According to Det. Const. Manser, the STF officers stayed in the main detachment office for “an extended period of time”. The officer testified that later in the evening Det. Sgt. Evans and a second officer she cannot now identify, but whom she then believed to be Earle, came to speak to her in the detachment crime office where she was working on her own. Evans did most of the talking. He wanted her to agree that he, along with at least one other STF officer, could accompany Manser and the OPP search team into the N.M. home as they executed the public safety warrant without it being revealed that they were part of the process. Det. Const. Manser, believing that suggestion to be inappropriate, refused to agree. She thought she might need to contact her supervisor. According to the officer, although there were no raised voices, Evans would not take “no” for an answer. He continued to press coming back with other “let's do this”-options “again and again” in a bullying manner. A further option was the suggestion that if Manser located any TPS property the STF were interested in during her search of N.M.' home, she should remove it from the house, take it to the perimeter of the property and show it to the STF officers, and then replace the material in the residence. Manser recalls that she had to stand her ground and say “no several times” - “I didn't understand why I need to say ‘no’ more than once”.

[155] Det. Const. Manser considered that these approaches and pressure by officers of senior rank were entirely inappropriate. The STF investigation was not connected to her case. In her view, the STF officers “had crossed the line” and had committed an “unlawful act” offensive to Charter obligations through their behaviour. It was “serious misconduct” and the STF officers “needed to be stopped”.

[156] Det. Const. Manser left the detachment at 12:30 a.m. on March 21st. The next morning, between 6:00 and 7:38 a.m., Manser reported the events of the night before to her immediate supervisor, Det. Sgt. Sills. Sills agreed that the STF officers had acted inappropriately. Det. Const. Manser made no notes or other reports of the circumstances of the STF intervention. She understood Sills “would start to reach out and deal with this issue” by making some calls.

Det. Sgt. Scott's role

[157] Det. Sgt. Scott testified that during the evening of March 20th, 2002, he received a call at home from R.C.M.P. Staff Sgt. Carlson, supervisor of the blue team, informing him that Mr. N.M. had been arrested by the OPP who were preparing to do a search warrant for the arrestee's residence. Scott maintains that he has no knowledge as to how Carlson secured this information. Carlson assigned Scott to attend at the OPP detachment in Shelburne the following day with Det. C. Blake of the red team to “brief” an OPP officer, noted by Scott as “Jill Lanser”, regarding the STF investigation respecting Mr. N.M.. Scott recalls the phone conversation as short. He didn't ask Carlson why the briefing was to be done. Within ten minutes, according to Scott, he phoned A/Insp. M. Hamel, his immediate superior, to say he was not comfortable briefing the OPP about the STF investigation for fear that any future search warrant might be tainted by a perception that the STF had somehow piggy-backed on an earlier OPP warrant. Det. Sgt. Scott informed the court that Hamel voiced agreement with his views and it was decided to meet with Chief Super. Neily about the matter the following morning.

[158] Det. Sgt. Scott testified that he, Hamel and Neily agreed at their 6:55 a.m. meeting on March 21st that speaking to the OPP in advance of their search could prove problematic. A “debriefing” after the OPP search would not pose the same problems. Scott assumed there had already been some contact between Carlson and the OPP.

[159] According to Scott, after conferring with Blake and learning that he shared the same concerns regarding a pre-search approach to the OPP, he informed Hamel he would not contact the OPP and asked that that be related to Neily. Within a couple of minutes, on Scott's evidence, Neily phoned asking that he make “a courtesy call” to the OPP to let them know that the STF would not be attending their detachment.

[160] Det. Sgt. Scott made the phonecall as directed. He taperecorded the call because he felt even the fact of calling the OPP “would become an issue” and not because he understood Manser had already been spoken to by the STF. The taping of the call caused controversy subsequently. After this, the TPS enacted a rule prohibiting the taperecording of another police officer.

[161] According to Scott, he didn’t know if Carlson or someone else had actually made arrangements for him to brief the OPP such that the OPP were expecting STF officers. Scott testified that when he telephoned Manser he knew nothing of the STF approach to her the night before.

[162] Shortly after 7:30 a.m., to Det. Const. Manser’s recall, she received a phonecall from TPS Det. Sgt. Al Scott. As said, Scott surreptitiously recorded the conversation only disclosing to Manser late in the call that it was being recorded because it was “sort of a policy”. Manser was offended by Scott’s conduct. When Scott began to relate his discussions with Chief Super. Neily and A/Insp. Hamel about avoiding “any perception...”, Manser cut him off. She thought Scott was calling to apologize for the STF actions the night before. She stated, in the next minute or so:

Well that’s, I was just actually, it’s funny that you called because I was just speaking with my Detective Sergeant here saying if they sign the warrant, they can come on the property. If they don’t, I can’t have you guys come on the property because they’re gonna just say, okay you piggy-back too, and you know they’re gonna be all over us.

...

I was just speaking with Steve [Sills], my boss...saying you know what, it’s not gonna happen that way. We can’t have it happen that way because uh, well originally I was told, “Oh, I want you to go down there and then for everything you find, come up and show it to us.” I’m thinkin’ uh-uh...

In the taped call, Scott voiced no concern, follow-up inquiry or acknowledgement regarding Manser’s statements. From this, Det. Const. Manser understood that Scott was aware of the attempts by other STF officers to subvert the warrant process and was involved in damage control.

[163] Det. Sgt. Scott testified that he didn’t find these statements by Manser odd and therefore made no inquiries as to the context. To him it may simply have related to ongoing internal discussions between Manser and Sills – “it just means that they may have talked it over and decided that that isn’t a strategy”.

[164] In the phonecall, Det. Sgt. Scott stated that he was not going to give Manser any information about what his group was looking into and wanted to avoid any perception of “piggy-backing” on the OPP warrant. It was agreed that once the OPP warrant was executed, the parties would speak again after the search. Det. Const. Manser testified here that she made no commitment to Scott to look for TPS property during her search – if she stumbled on such property, she would notify the STF in a post-search debriefing.

[165] According to Manser, once she promptly reported the STF actions to her supervisor her role in documenting the matter was at an end. It was at the preliminary inquiry, during defence cross-examination, that Det. Const. Manser's account of the STF actions first came to light publicly. An internal TPS investigation was launched.

[166] As a witness, Scott struggled in cross-examination with hypothetical questions asked by Mr. Brauti premised on Det. Const. Manser's account of events of the evening of March 20th, 2002. The witness repeatedly stated that he did not know if the reported conversation had taken place. As well as not directly responding to a hypothetical question, the witness would editorialize with such comments as "the big thing is "if"", "I wasn't there", and, "I don't know if the conversation took place". Finally, the court was required to caution the witness to directly answer a hypothetical inquiry put by counsel. In addition, Scott considered if Det. Sgt. Evans conducted himself as described by Manser that was not dissimilar to "many, many things that are discussed in the course of an investigation"; "we did it all the time in our office"; "[p]eople would have certain opinions on how things should be done"; "[c]onversations between different investigators and their supervisors are not unusual...[t]hey happen all the time"; "sitting and talking about a different strategy, I don't know if that would be considered unlawful"; "[i]t could come up in a discussion of strategy"; "I don't know if it's improper to discuss it". As well, the witness observed:

I would say that it would be more of a case of maybe they don't [know] the – the law with regards to search warrants, maybe they're thinking off the top of their heads and maybe not looking down to the – down the road to the possible ramification of doing that.

[167] Still in cross-examination, Det. Sgt. Scott sought to make a distinction between encouraging inappropriate actions and the actual commission of the acts:

...if someone brought that up in conversation and no action was taken on it, I wouldn't see a problem with it.

...

...if it happened...then, yes, it would be a problem.

...

If they had done it, of course, it would be a problem.

...

If it occurred and if it had been followed through on, yes, it would have been a problem.

...

It wouldn't be unlawful to me until an action is taken.

[168] Eventually, Det. Sgt. Scott conceded that:

- (1) if he became aware that someone had attempted to con or co-opt the OPP into allowing secret and warrantless access to real property subject to an OPP warrant he would record the matter in his notebook and inform his supervisor

- (2) "if I had...information like that and as the sub-affiant...I would tell the affiant...in being full and frank"
- (3) bullying an OPP officer had "the potential to be discreditable conduct and it would have to be reported and investigated"
- (4) any attempt by STF officers to have Det. Const. Manser take things out of the N.M. residence during the execution of her warrant might be discreditable conduct – it would be "concerning" and "would warrant that questions be asked and answered" – in the absence of the STF having grounds for a search, "[h]aving them do our search for us would be a problem"
- (5) if STF officers had gone on the N.M. property unauthorized by Det. Const. Manser's search warrant, it would be "a concern" and "a serious matter that should be investigated" and brought to the attention of a search warrant affiant.

[169] It was Det. Sgt. Scott's understanding that an investigation by two TPS inspectors into Det. Const. Manser's allegations regarding Det. Sgt. Evans, himself an inspector by the time of the inquiry, concluded that a finding of discreditable conduct was not warranted. Scott could not say why the investigation was not referred to external or non-TPS investigators.

[170] In cross-examination, Det. Sgt. Scott was questioned about Evans' approach:

- Q. And, sir, I take it that you did not find it out of the ordinary that somebody would suggest that Inspector Evans was bullying them?
- A. At – at – at the end of the prelim?
- Q. At – sitting here today.
- A. Sitting here today? Sitting here today after my contact with Inspector Evans, in relation to the complaint, no.
- Q. That doesn't come as a surprise, does it?
- A. No.
- Q. And, in fact...
- A. That's if it happened.
- Q. Right. Because you had some experience with Inspector Evans and his attempts to bully, fair?
- A. Correct.

Q. And, in fact, he's threatened you?

A. Yes, he has.

Q. In an inappropriate fashion?

A. Yes, in an inappropriate fashion.

preparation for a warrant application

[171] Det. J. Lowry described a briefing of the "majority" of STF investigators by Det. Sgt. Evans at about 1:30 p.m. on March 21st. Evans did not give the source of his information. Lowry recalled Evans saying that the OPP were then executing a search warrant on Mr. N.M.' residence. Evans gave background to the domestic assault situation and informed those at the briefing that N.M. had told his wife he would shoot a cop coming to his door. Evans incorrectly stated that when Mr. N.M. exited his residence just after 12:24 a.m. on March 20th he gave permission for a consent search. Lowry further received the erroneous information that the OPP had discovered a .357 Magnum with speed loaders in the basement rafters of the N.M. residence.

[172] Det. Sgt. Scott testified that during the evening of March 21st he was notified by Sgt. Cook of the STF purple team that the OPP search had revealed the presence of TPS files, memo books and body-pack equipment in the N.M. residence. Det. Sgt. Scott assigned Dets. Schueder and Hoover to "secure" the N.M. residence until, in the officer's words, "we made the final determination whether we [were] actually doing a warrant or not the next day". In this way, no one would be allowed to go on or off the property until a decision was made about a warrant.

[173] The following morning, March 22nd, 2002, Det. Sgt. J. Lowry was selected to prepare the ITO a search warrant should the information from the OPP support such an application. Lowry had already been involved in a number of warrants on behalf of the STF. Det. Sgt. Scott believes that Lowry knew of his phonecall to OPP Det. Const. Manser the prior day.

[174] Det. Lowry was told by Det. Sgt. Scott shortly after 6:30 a.m. on March 22nd that he would "probably" be required to prepare a s. 487 Code search warrant application for the N.M. residence "contingent" on what might be learned later in the day from the OPP regarding the execution of their warrant. To Lowry's recall, it seemed important to Scott that the STF not be seen as piggy-backing on the OPP warrant. He had no idea of the cause of Scott's concern. Lowry had no information that Scott had himself been in contact with the OPP. At 7:27 a.m., in a short briefing from Det. Sgt. Scott, Lowry learned that two STF officers had been sent to secure the N.M. property.

[175] Det. Lowry understood that affiants and sub-affiants respecting an ITO must be full, fair and frank. In respect of his ongoing STF duties, Lowry had a s.487 financial institution search warrant “in its infancy”. As preparatory steps for a possible search of Mr. N.M.’ property, Lowry used his computer to cut and paste from that draft, along with investigative notes from his own notebook, into a new ITO structure.

[176] Scott, Lowry and Blake travelled to the OPP Dufferin detachment meeting with Manser at 10:40 a.m. on March 22nd. Det. Sgt. Scott recalls Det. Const. Manser reporting that during the execution of a s. 117.04 search warrant on March 21st she observed, in Mr. N.M.’ house, various property which she described with TPS stickers or identification markings including numerous memo books around the house. Det. Lowry noted Manser as describing her observations of a TPS evidence bag, a police body-pack for intercepting private communications, numerous TPS memo books “around the house”, numerous envelopes and police reports with TPS stamps, and numerous pornographic videos bearing TPS stickers.

[177] In the view of Scott and Lowry, Manser’s information provided a foundation for a s. 487 warrant application by the STF.

the decision to search out-buildings

[178] According to Scott and Lowry, Det. Const. Manser told them her warrant was limited to Mr. N.M.’ dwelling as she was unaware of the three out-buildings on the property.

[179] The complainant’s diagram provided to the OPP on March 19th describes a twelve-acre property (Ex. # 1A). The M. bungalow has an attached garage. Mr. N.M. estimated the largest of the three out-buildings, a 70’ x 30’ workshop to be about 70 feet from the house. He described the building contents as “just more or less storage”. Mr. N.M. locked the building when he was not home.

[180] At the preliminary inquiry, the complainant testified that the workshop was generally kept locked and that a key to the building was kept in a drawer in the house. The complainant indicated to the court that she “hardly ever” went in the workshop and, on those occasions when she did enter the shop, her husband was always there.

[181] Det. Sgt. Scott testified that, after discussion, “the final decision” was his to have the out-buildings on the N.M. property brought within the scope of the warrant to search. The witness provided the following information:

- (1) he knew the suspect resided on a rural property

- (2) his training in various courses suggested that “especially in the rural circumstances that the out-buildings should be included in...search warrants”
- (3) notebooks could be stored not just in the garage or basement but also in out-buildings
- (4) although he “had no direct evidence that there was property in the out-buildings”, given the “amount of property” observed by Manser in the residence, his “feeling” was that “by extension” there were reasonable grounds to believe property would be found in the out-buildings.

[182] Det. Lowry’s view was that after hearing Det. Const. Manser’s account of her observations, “we decided...police property could be located” in the N.M. out-buildings as well as the dwelling as he and Scott were “under the opinion it was a logical extension that memo books, given their size, could be in the out-buildings too”.

[183] After obtaining from Manser blank electronic versions of a Form 1 ITO and Form 5 warrant to search, not identical to the forms then being used by the TPS, Det. Lowry set about drafting an ITO to search N.M.’ “dwelling house and related out buildings”. Lowry made no reference to the out-buildings in the ITO in describing his grounds of belief. The officer was cross-examined at length on the issue:

Q. Why isn’t it in your information to obtain?

A. I considered it, it’s part of the property and a logical extension to where memorandum books, police property could be.

Q. Did you have any evidence that memorandum books would be in the out-buildings?

A. No.

. . .

Q. And in relation to the out-buildings, when you are discussing this with Detective Manser, you know that there’s three out-buildings?

A. Yes.

Q. They are described as two sheds and a work shop?

A. That’s correct.

Q. And I take it that that is all the information that you had about these out-buildings?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that they were on the property, correct?

A. Yes.

- Q. That they were sheds and a work shop?
- A. Two sheds and a work shop, you are correct.
- Q. And you weren't aware of their location on the property?
- A. I believe they were in proximity to the house, but that's it.
- Q. But you weren't given that information? The only information you were given is that they were on the property, fair?
- A. Fair.
- ...
- Q. And was it your understanding in your discussion that if you wanted to go into those buildings, they needed to be named?
- A. I believe so. I thought, and I could stand corrected at this point, I thought that it was within the curtil[a]ge but I wanted to err on the side of caution and include those in the affidavit, the actual information to obtain.
- Q. Well, obviously Detective Manser was of a different view, because if she believed that they were covered by her warrant, she could have gone in, fair?
- A. I can't say what was in her mind, but yes, that sounds fair.
- Q. Okay, because I take it that your discussion was along the lines of well, I didn't go into the out-buildings because they weren't part of my warrant and they weren't part of my warrant because I didn't know they existed?
- A. That's what she said, yes.
- Q. And I take it that you were of the view that you needed reasonable grounds in order to enter those buildings in addition to the house?
- A. No, I thought they'd – because of the extension, as I said earlier, in my mind I thought the extension that memo books, given their size, could be in the out-buildings. It was probable they could be there.
- Q. Okay, well, you had no evidence to support that though?
- A. That's what I said.

(emphasis added)

[184] In the text of the grounds of belief set out in the ITO, Det. Lowry made reference to “the property”, “his home”, “the premises”, “his residence”, and “the dwelling[-]house” without reference to the out-buildings.

non-disclosure to Det. Lowry

[185] In the s. 487 ITO, Det. Lowry stated in para. 49 that he learned the details of Mr. N.M.'s arrest from Det. Sgt. Evans. Up to, and including, para. 58, presents a summary of the assault allegations, the arrest, the consent search, the charges against N.M., and the execution of the s. 117.04 public safety warrant. Para. 59 then states a different source (Manser) and additional narrative. In the ten paragraphs apparently sourced to Evans (para. 49-58), there is reference to the OPP setting up “containment around the property” on March 19th.

[186] Det. Const. Manser accepted that, as a sub-affiant supplying information to another officer preparing an ITO a search warrant, she had a duty to be frank, honest, detailed and fair. The officer did not inform Det. Sgt. Lowry of Det. Sgt. Evans’ conduct. From her conversation with Det. Sgt. Scott she believed he was aware of Evans’ actions and since Scott was at the OPP detachment on March 22nd with Lowry, in her words:

I was under the impression since I had already spoken with Al Scott and I assumed he knew about that, they’re all part of the same unit.

[187] Det. Sgt. Scott recognized that an affiant for a search warrant ITO has an obligation to be full, fair and frank. He understood as well, in 2002, that a police officer acting as a sub-affiant had a similar duty. Det. Sgt. Scott acknowledged that he was a sub-affiant respecting Det. Lowry’s s. 487 Code search warrant.

[188] Det. Lowry considered Det. Const. Manser to be his sole OPP source, and therefore sub-affiant, relating to observations within the N.M. residence on March 21st. Manser did not provide Lowry a copy of her ITO and warrant materials relating to the public safety warrant because the court had ordered those materials sealed.

[189] Det. Lowry believed the OPP had a Feeney warrant to arrest Mr. N.M.. Lowry erroneously believed that N.M.’ consent to search occurred at the time of his arrest and related to the entire dwelling.

[190] Det. Lowry testified that he was not told by Evans or Manser that:

- (1) the OPP had conducted a warrantless entry onto the N.M. property
- (2) while positioned on the property, the OPP had made observations through the windows
- (3) the OPP went to the property without a warrant to arrest N.M.
- (4) the OPP entered the dwelling-house without a warrant
- (5) during the warrantless entry to the home, the OPP made observations leading to the issuance of a public safety warrant.

Had Lowry known these facts he would have included them in the ITO in the discharge of his duty to be full, frank and fair.

[191] Det. Lowry fully understood that in preparing a search warrant application, the police cannot simply turn a “blind eye to things that are problematic in the investigation” – “whether they’re unhelpful or extremely damaging, that information should be in the affidavit as well”.

[192] Det. Lowry testified respecting other unidentified officers that: “they had attempted to build a wall around me and not give me information as the affiant...to taint my process”. The sub-affiants, Evans, Manser and Scott, did not inform him that STF officers had attempted to persuade Manser to allow some of their number to accompany her in executing the public safety warrant relating to an entirely separate investigation without it being noted anywhere that they had been present. Lowry observed that the impropriety of such action was basic policing – “as an investigator you should know that”. Had Lowry been aware of this event, he would have included the information in his ITO:

...it would be the same as if your initial affidavit had been refused. You’ve got to put it in, anything like that...

Nor was Lowry told that the same STF officers, in a bullying fashion, sought to have Manser, as an alternative, take evidence of interest to the STF out of the N.M. residence during the execution of the s. 117.04 warrant to show it to STF officers present at the scene of the search. Had Lowry been aware of this fact, it also would have been disclosed in his affidavit.

[193] Det. Lowry further testified that had he known of the March 20th STF approach to Manser he would have reported the matter to his superiors. The detective considered the facts to be “serious”, a pre-existing “unlawful attempt to search”, probably amounting to a discreditable conduct offence under the Police Services Act as well as criminal conduct involving “[m]is-execution of process”.

the warrant issuance process

[194] By about 1:00 p.m., on March 22nd, Det. Lowry completed his ITO. He proceeded to the courthouse to present his warrant application. He felt his preparation and drafting had been under “time constraints” – “For entry in a dwelling-house, I’ve never done one this quickly”. The detective considered the time pressure to arise from the possibility that Mr. N.M. might secure bail that afternoon – he was “concerned with a confrontation happening if the accused and supporters showed up at his residence”.

[195] The presiding provincial court judge deliberated for about half an hour over the unsigned and unsworn ITO. When Det. Lowry was summoned to chambers, a date was corrected where the court found an error. Det. Lowry then signed and swore to the ITO. After stating he would issue the warrant, the judge signed the warrant. The issuing judge then asked Lowry what time he was going to search and when he would “be out of the residence” receiving the answer that the detective hoped to be out “before dark”. According to Lowry, the judge said that due to “the seriousness of the situation” he would “extend” the time for execution of the warrant to midnight. At that point, the judge made handwritten endorsements on the search warrant form:

THEREFORE, it is to authorize and require you, between the hours of 2:30 + 12:00 PM to enter into the said premises and to search for the above things...

...

*residence is vacant, situation is urgent and exigencies may require extended search (emphasis denotes handwriting)

[196] Although Det. Lowry’s ITO pleaded that reasonable grounds existed to believe the things to be searched for would afford evidence of an unlawful conspiracy between Sept. 1st, 1996 and May 31st, 1999, the Form 5 warrant to search described the search to be “in respect to the commission, suspected commission or intended commission” of an offence.

execution of the warrant

[197] At about 3:30 p.m. on March 22nd, the N.M.’ premises were videotaped prior to the search commencing under the authority of the warrant to search. Det. Sgt. Scott was the officer in charge of the search. Entry to the dwelling-house was gained through a rear window by Det. Blake. The search lasted until 7:02 p.m.

[198] In the dwelling, a quantity of TPS property was seized including 16 memo books and 77 steno pads.

[199] The search party located three out-buildings – an implement shed, a shed for livestock and a larger workshop. Det. Blake testified at the preliminary inquiry that the combined square footage of the out-buildings exceeded that of the dwelling.

[200] Det. Blake alone searched the three out-buildings in what he described as a “cursory” search. Blake found the workshop building locked. After locating a key in the kitchen of the home, he gained entry to this out-building. On his evidence, he was not searching for drugs but only the items listed in the warrant. The shop contained such things as shelving, boxes, a long work-bench with tools, plumbing supplies, a ladder, and a tractor engine block. On what Blake described as a “hunch” at the preliminary inquiry, he used the ladder to search an area above the door on top of a beam. This location was not visible from the floor of the shop. Det. Blake seized a baby formula can containing a Zehrs plastic grocery bag. The bag contained 3.5 g. of heroin, four tablets of MDMA, and 45.5 g. of cocaine. Empty Zehrs bags were stored in the kitchen of the residence. Subsequent testing revealed Mr. N.M.’ fingerprints on the bag seized from the shop. It appears that no items described in the s. 487 Code warrant were seized in the out-buildings.

ANALYSIS

General s. 8 Charter Principles

[201] Certain overarching principles, once stated, will set the backdrop for the s. 8 analysis in this case:

- (1) Individual privacy is the “essential value protected by s. 8 of the Charter”: R. v. Kokesch (1990), 1990 CanLII 55 \(SCC\), 61 C.C.C. (3d) 207 (S.C.C.) at 228. “Any expectations of privacy must be reasonable” to be afforded constitutional protection: R. v. Law (2002), 2002 SCC 10 \(CanLII\), 160 C.C.C. (3d) 449 (S.C.C.) at 459. A reasonable expectation of privacy is a personal right the existence of which is determined on the totality of the circumstances in each case having regard to the guidelines in R. v. Edwards (1996), 1996 CanLII 255 \(SCC\), 104 C.C.C. (3d) 136 (S.C.C.) at 148-152. Further, the purpose behind the right “is to protect the privacy of individuals from unjustified state intrusion”: R. v. Hape, 2007 SCC 26 \(CanLII\), [2007] S.C.J. No. 26 at para. 166 per Bastarache J. Therefore, “[t]he purpose of s. 8 of the Charter is to protect against unreasonable searches”: R. v. Alkins (2007), 2007 ONCA 264 \(CanLII\), 218 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (Ont. C.A.) at para. 44.
- (2) “[P]olice conduct interfering with a reasonable expectation of privacy is said to constitute a “search” within the meaning of” s. 8 of the Charter. Law, at 457.
- (3) The essence of a “seizure”, in constitutional terms, involves a non-consensual taking of something by agents of the state: R. v. Buhay (2003), 2003 SCC 30 \(CanLII\), 174 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (S.C.C.) at 113; R. v. Dymont, 1988 CanLII 10 \(SCC\), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 417 (S.C.C.) at 431.
- (4) To justify police actions interfering with a reasonable expectation of privacy, the state “must be able to point to a specific statute or common law rule that authorizes the search” – “[o]therwise, they [the police] are constrained by the same rules regarding trespass...as everyone else”: R. v. Caslake (1998), 1998 CanLII 838 \(SCC\), 121 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (S.C.C.) at 105.
- (5) Although the “scope of the constitutional guarantee under s. 8 must vary with the context” (R. v. Campanella (2005), 2005 CanLII 10880 \(ON CA\), 195 C.C.C. (3d) 353 (Ont. C.A.) at 361), prior judicial authorization, where feasible, is a pre-condition for a constitutionally valid search and seizure: R. v. Golden (2001), 2001 SCC 83 \(CanLII\), 159 C.C.C. (3d) 449 (S.C.C.) at 466; Hunter et al. v. Southam et al. (1984), 1984 CanLII 33 \(SCC\), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (S.C.C.) at 108; R. v. Price (2000), 2000 CanLII 5679 \(ON CA\), 144 C.C.C. (3d) 343 (Ont. C.A.) at 353.

- (6) “[T]he fact that there may not have been sufficient grounds to obtain a warrant does not justify a warrantless search” (Buhay, at 114) or “constitutionally impermissible investigative techniques”: Kokesch, at para. 45-6.
- (7) Warrantless searches are presumptively unreasonable unless the Crown demonstrates on a balance of probabilities their reasonableness in the context of s. 8 principles: R. v. Mann (2004), 2004 SCC 52 \(CanLII\), 185 C.C.C. (3d) 308 (S.C.C.) at 324; Buhay at 112, 114; R. v. Evans (1996), 1996 CanLII 248 \(SCC\), 104 C.C.C. (3d) 23 (S.C.C.) at 34; R. v. Peacock-McDonald (2007), 2007 ONCA 128 \(CanLII\), 218 C.C.C. (3d) 257 (Ont. C.A.) at para. 18.
- (8) A warrantless search may be found to be reasonable where it meets the test in R. v. Collins (1987), 1987 CanLII 84 \(SCC\), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (S.C.C.) at 14-15 – (a) the search is authorized by law, (b) the law itself is reasonable, and (c) the manner in which the search was carried out was also reasonable. That said, any exception to the prior authorization model ought to remain “exceedingly rare” in the face of “a strong common law rule against warrantless intrusions onto private property”: R. v. Grant (1993), 1993 CanLII 68 \(SCC\), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 173 (S.C.C.) at 187-8.
- (9) Common law authorization may emanate from conditions of urgency: “[w]arrantless searches are presumptively unreasonable, absent exigent circumstances” (R. v. Tessling (2004), 2004 SCC 67 \(CanLII\), 189 C.C.C. (3d) 129 (S.C.C.) at 142) making it impracticable to obtain a warrant: R. v. Plant (1993), 1993 CanLII 69 \(SCC\), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 161 (S.C.C.) at 169; Grant, at 189.
- (10) The Crown cannot rely on “ex post facto justifications” of searches by their results: Kokesch, at 227; R. v. Genest (1989), 1989 CanLII 109 \(SCC\), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 385 (S.C.C.) at 408.

- (11) A search, unlawful from the beginning, cannot be converted into a reasonable search because it is carried out in a reasonable manner: R. v. Moran (1987), 1987 CanLII 124 (ON CA), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 225 (Ont. C.A.) at 247 (leave to appeal refused [1988] 1 S.C.R. xi).
- (12) The police may act only to the extent empowered to do so by law: Mann, at 318. Where the authority to act does not emanate from statute, the common law may provide legal authority as described in a number of cases including the Mann decision at 320 – 324:

The test for whether a police officer has acted within his or her common law powers was first expressed by the English Court of Criminal Appeals in Waterfield, supra, at pp. 660-61. From the decision emerged a two-pronged analysis where the officer's conduct is prima facie unlawful interference with an individual's liberty or property. In those situations, courts must first consider whether the police conduct giving rise to the interference falls within the general scope of any duty imposed on the officer by statute or at common law. If this threshold is met, the analysis continues to consider secondly whether such conduct, albeit within the general scope of such a duty, involved an unjustifiable use of powers associated with the duty.

...

At the first stage of the Waterfield test, police powers are recognized as deriving from the nature and scope of police duties, including, at common law, "the preservation of the peace, the prevention of crime, and the protection of life and property" (Dedman, supra, at p. 32). The second stage of the test requires a balance between the competing interests of the police duty and of the liberty interests at stake. This aspect of the test requires a consideration of:

...whether an invasion of individual rights is necessary in order for the peace officers to perform their duty, and whether such invasion is reasonable in light of the public purposes served by effective control of criminal acts on the one hand and on the other respect for the liberty and fundamental dignity of individuals. [Cloutier, supra, at pp. 181-82.]

...

Police powers and police duties are not necessarily correlative. While the police have a common law duty to investigate crime, they are not empowered to undertake any and all action in the exercise of that duty. Individual liberty interests are fundamental to the Canadian Constitutional order.

...

To continue in the Waterfield analysis, the conduct giving rise to the interference must involve a justified use of a police power associated with a general duty to search in relation to the protection of life and property. Put differently, the search must be reasonably necessary. The relevant considerations here include the duty being performed, the extent to which some interference with individual liberty is necessary in the performance of that duty, the importance of the performance of the duty to the public good,

Warrantless Entry on P... P...

position of parties

[202] The Crown denies any breach of s. 8 of the Charter relating to the warrantless police entry on the N.M. property, the disabling of the suspect's vehicle and telephone, observations made into the home, and the absence of a Feeney warrant:

- (1) The police were presented with information relating to domestic violence and a suspect who might be suicidal and homicidal. Mr. N.M. had access to firearms.
- (2) On March 19/20, 2002, the police were discharging statutory and common law duties to preserve the peace, protect life and arrest a suspect.
- (3) The OPP's warrantless actions, which intruded upon the accused's reasonable expectation of privacy, were a reasonable and justifiable use of powers in circumstances of exigency having regard to the urgency of the situation and the risk presented to the safety of the police, the complainant and her children, and Mr. N.M..
- (4) A Feeney warrant was unnecessary given that Mr. N.M. voluntarily surrendered outside his dwelling.

[203] Mr. Brauti, on the other hand, submitted that the warrantless conduct of the police offended the prior judicial authorization model and was incapable of reasonable justification on an exigent circumstances analysis:

- (1) The police objective was to arrest Mr. N.M. for assault. The police recognized that a Feeney warrant was required to arrest the suspect in his dwelling. An application for a Feeney warrant was under preparation.
- (2) While the police act under general duties to arrest and preserve life, the purported exercise of warrantless police powers by a para-military operation on the N.M. property was intrusive, unauthorized, unnecessary for public safety, and in turn unreasonable.

- (3) From the outset, the police over-reacted in treating the suspect as a barricaded person, acted on ambiguous and partial information, and precipitated a false exigency by contacting N.M. rather than waiting for an endorsed Feeney warrant.
- (4) The actions of the police circumvented the warrant process leading to Mr. N.M. exiting his residence involuntarily.

findings/conclusions

[204] “The public places a great deal of power into the hands of its police forces to meet the heavy responsibility police forces take upon themselves everyday in protecting our safety and security”: R. v. Flintoff (1998), 1998 CanLII 632 \(ON CA\), 126 C.C.C. (3d) 321 (Ont. C.A.) at 332-3. Ordinarily, recognizing that the police often need to act on the spot under “the pressures and dangers” associated with criminal activity, the courts should avoid reasoning or review that involves “dictating police tactics and techniques in the context of investigations and arrests”: R. v. Silveira (1995), 1995 CanLII 89 \(SCC\), 97 C.C.C. (3d) 450 (S.C.C.) at para. 123 per L’Heureux-Dubé J. This is particularly so where quick operational decisions, at times in risky circumstances, must be made by police officers with their on-the-scene appreciation of the dynamics of an unfolding situation in the context of their police training and experience: R. v. Golub (1997), 1997 CanLII 6316 \(ON CA\), 117 C.C.C. (3d) 193 (Ont. C.A.) at 210, 212 (leave to appeal refused [1998] 1 S.C.R. ix); R. v. White, [2007] O.J. No. 1605 (C.A.) at para. 53-4; R. v. Asante-Mensah (2001), 2003 SCC 38 \(CanLII\), 157 C.C.C. (3d) 481 (Ont. C.A.) at 510 (aff’d (2003), 174 C.C.C. (3d) 481 (S.C.C.)); R. v. Polashek (1999), 1999 CanLII 3714 \(ON CA\), 134 C.C.C. (3d) 187 (Ont. C.A.) at 197-8. Certainly, immediate decisions of a police officer made in the course of duty are not generally assessed through “the lens of hindsight”: Crompton v. Walton (2005), 2005 ABCA 81 \(CanLII\), 194 C.C.C. (3d) 207 (Alta. C.A.) at 221.

[205] That said, a broad strike zone associated with public safety of “better safe than sorry” assigned to police discretion cannot be without limits. Police actions must be authorized by law. Discretion cannot be unreasonably exercised or at odds with statutory and common law limits: Caslake, at 110 (“The Charter requires that agents of the state act in accordance with the Rule of Law”); R. v. Harrer (1995), 1995 CanLII 70 \(SCC\), 101 C.C.C. (3d) 193 (S.C.C.) at para. 50 (“In Canada, every person has the right to expect that the authorities will comply with the Charter”); Flintoff, at 338 (“The Charter reflects the principle underlying criminal justice in Canada: when it comes to the imposition of the state’s coercive powers, it is obligatory that the police follow procedures mandated by law and not impose rules of their own making...”); R. v. Schedel (2003), 2003 BCCA 364 \(CanLII\), 175 C.C.C. (3d) 193 (B.C.C.A.) at 225 (“...the police have a duty to know the law and follow it”); R. v. Bohn (2000), 2000 BCCA 239 \(CanLII\), 145 C.C.C. (3d) 320

(B.C.C.A.) at 334 (“Police officers are expected to know and follow duties imposed on them” by law); Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469, 486 (1986) (“...law enforcement officers are expected to obey the law and ordinarily swear to do so when they take office. Where the controlling law places limits on their authority, they cannot be said to have the authority to make contrary policy”).

[206] I accept that in examining police conduct it is error to assess each fact or observation in isolation without a totality of circumstances perspective and that an objective assessment includes the dynamics within which the police acted including their experience: R. v. Lawes, 2007 ONCA 10 (CanLII), [2007] O.J. No. 50 (C.A.) at para. 4; R. v. Juan, 2007 BCCA 351 (CanLII), [2007] B.C.J. No. 1402 (C.A.) at para. 14-27; R. v. Rajarapnam, 2006 ABCA 333 (CanLII), [2006] A.J. No. 1373 (C.A.) at para. 25; R. v. Simpson (1993), 1993 CanLII 3379 (ON CA), 79 C.C.C. (3d) 482 (Ont. C.A.) at 501.

[207] There can be no dispute that the police act under a general common law duty to preserve life: R. v. Dedman (1985), 1985 CanLII 41 (SCC), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (S.C.C.) at 119; R. v. Godoy (1999), 1999 CanLII 709 (SCC), 131 C.C.C. (3d) 129 (S.C.C.) at 134, 136. In this case, all agree that the authorities were engaged in the discharge of such a duty, as well as the duty to arrest, on March 19/20, 2002.

[208] As observed in Eccles v. Bourque (1974), 1974 CanLII 191 (SCC), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 129 (S.C.C.) at 131, the question is whether the police “were required or authorized by law to commit a trespass” and whether, in the circumstances, the actions of the police, (entry onto Mr. N.M.’ property remaining for hours without warrant, conducting covert surveillance into the residence, destroying the suspect’s vehicle tires, and arresting the suspect without a Feeney warrant) amounted to a reasonably necessary and therefore justifiable use of police power. There is no dispute that these actions interfered with Mr. N.M.’ reasonable expectation of privacy. But were the actions of the police “reasonably responsive and tailored” to the circumstances known to the police “including its geographic and temporal scope”: R. v. Clayton and Farmer, 2007 SCC 32 (CanLII), [2007] S.C.J. No. 32 at para. 31.

[209] On the whole of the evidence I accept, I find that the real intention of the authorities was to arrest Mr. N.M. at his house for assault. This conclusion fairly flows from the totality of the circumstances including the testimony of Jones, James, and the TRU team officers, and the assignment of McCormick to prepare a Feeney warrant. Although the integrated response measure includes officers with special expertise such as negotiation, tactics and rescue, and technical matters, there was no expert in preparing warrant applications expeditiously under pressure. Det. Sgt. McCormick had previously prepared only one or two Feeney warrant applications. On the evidence, she was left on her own at the detachment with virtually no coordinated discussions with the command post receiving partial, incorrect and ambiguous information.

[210] It is not disputed that on March 19th, 2002 the police had reasonable grounds to arrest Mr. N.M. for assaulting his wife.

[211] Early on, prior to initiation of the OPP integrated response, Quinton and James, and in turn Jones, received second-hand information about N.M. from the family violence shelter employee. As is often the case with unverified hearsay, that information was wrong in several respects – Mr. N.M. did not have his service revolver at home, he was not an alcohol-consumer, and was not suicidal. As well, although Mr. N.M. was said to have threatened to shoot any police officer coming to his home, neither the exact words nor the context nor the timing of the alleged threat were known.

[212] Quite reasonably, a police officer, Const. Tardiff, was sent to interview the complainant directly. However, prior to any report back from the constable, Insp. Jones activated the OPP integrated response measures. This action was premised on the existence of a high-risk situation. It is apparent on the evidence of several witnesses that Mr. N.M. was assigned the status of a “barricaded” person – an individual who had assumed a defensible position refusing to immediately surrender. Equally evident is that no one in command or involved in the warrant application process ever acquired the specific and highly relevant details of any statements attributed to Mr. N.M. relating to violence to himself or third parties. The police acted on worst-case scenarios and inferences of current intention on N.M.’ part. Given that the apparent source for such information was the complainant, a person readily available to the authorities, it is difficult to determine why these inquiries, which no one in this hearing seems to have discounted as irrelevant, were not made.

[213] Prior to Insp. Jones’ authorization to the TRU team to execute containment actions at the N.M. property, the police had the following information as to the likely presence of N.M. in his home:

- (1) the suspect’s address was identified where he ordinarily resided with his wife and three children
- (2) Mr. N.M. was off work on an injury leave and taking prescribed medication
- (3) the complainant stated that her husband normally stayed at home and she believed him to be there
- (4) TPS Officer Benoit, only hours before, had left the suspect’s home after spending time with him at that location
- (5) it was evening and Mr. N.M.’ vehicle was parked in the driveway.

[214] These facts fully supported an application for a Feeney warrant on the basis that there were “reasonable grounds to believe that the person is or will be present in the dwelling”. It is evident from the text of s. 529(1) of the Code that an anticipatory warrant may issue in the sense of the affiant not being required to swear that the suspect is currently in the subject dwelling.

[215] The execution of a Feeney warrant is subject to the deemed statutory condition that no entry to the dwelling may be made “unless the peace officer has, immediately before entering the dwelling-house, reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested...is present in the dwelling-house” (s. 529(2)). Whether it is implicit that police armed with a signed Feeney warrant may go onto private property to acquire the grounds required by s. 529(2), or whether such actions can only be authorized by a judicially endorsed condition in the warrant pursuant to s. 529.2 or otherwise, need not be decided as, in any event, it is clear that either enabling option requires that a Feeney warrant first be in existence.

[216] While no final determination need be made on the point, I must say that the known circumstances appear to objectively suggest that Mr. N.M. was actually in his residence. On the evidence, it seems that the police either did not subjectively hold this belief or were applying an unnecessarily high standard of confirmation. This case is quite unlike the situation where the police attend a residence not intending to arrest a person but end up effecting an arrest (R. v. Petrie (2003), 2003 MBCA 1 \(CanLII\), 171 C.C.C. (3d) 553 (Man. C.A.)) or where the police are presented only with the possibility that a suspect may be at a third party’s premises: R. v. Guiboche (2004), 2004 MBCA 16 \(CanLII\), 183 C.C.C. (3d) 361 (Man. C.A.).

[217] The prosecution correctly accepts that the police entry onto private property without a warrant constituted a search: Silveira, at para. 140, per Cory J. As observed in Kokesch, at 228, trespassory conduct in the form of a warrantless perimeter search or “illegal intrusion onto private property must be seen as far from trivial or minimal” and:

Even before the enactment of the Charter, individuals were entitled to expect that their environs would be free of prowling government officials unless and until the conditions for the exercise of legal authority are met.

In R. v. Wise (1992), 1992 CanLII 125 \(SCC\), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 193 (S.C.C.) at 227, the court characterized the violation in Kokesch as the police searching “the yard surrounding the accused’s home without a warrant”.

[218] This is part of “the public’s interest in being left alone by government”: Hunter v. Southam, at 108. “The common law has long demonstrated a respect for freedom from trespass on private property by state authorities”: Grant, at 188. We adhere to the belief that people should be free to enjoy their privacy without fear of intrusion by government officials including on private land and certainly within the curtilage of a dwelling: R. v. Lauda (1996), 1999 CanLII 970 \(ON CA\), 136 C.C.C. (3d) 358 (Ont. C.A.) at 374, 381-2.

[219] The police did not have Mr. N.M.' consent to be on his property. Nor could consent be implied. While there exists, at common law, an implied consent to approach the door of a dwelling to knock and communicate with the occupant(s), that limited exception to trespassory presence is at odds with the conduct of the TRU team: see Evans, at 30-3; R. v. Tricker (1995), 96 C.C.C. (3d) 190 (Ont. C.A.) at 203-5 (leave to appeal refused [1996] 1 S.C.R. ix). As in Evans, here "the actions of the police went beyond the forms of conduct permitted by the implied license to knock" (at 31). Nor were the police actions limited to entry onto private property of such a minor nature as to be a forgivable trespass or not invasive of a reasonable expectation of privacy because the authorities' observations were equally available from off the property: R. v. Lotozky (2006), 2006 CanLII 21041 (ON CA), 210 C.C.C. (3d) 509 (Ont. C.A.) at para. 19, 21-2, 37; R. v. Neill, [1993] B.C.J. No. 1880 (C.A.) at para. 28; R. v. Lundgren and Seeber, [2004] B.C.J. No. 1498 (S.C.) at para. 5-19. For example, in Lotozky, at 517, Rosenberg J.A. stated, in words apposite here, that a minor intrusion on property does not violate a reasonable expectation of privacy - "there must be something more, as in the perimeter search cases, peering in windows of the home..." to attract s. 8 concerns.

[220] For everyone, a private dwelling holds a significant expectation of privacy: Silveira, at 463-4, 495-6 (the "historic inviolability of a dwelling-place"); R. v. Feeney (1997), 1997 CanLII 342 (SCC), 115 C.C.C. (3d) 129 (S.C.C.) at 153; Tessling, at 139. Indeed, "it may be presumed unless the contrary is shown in a particular case that information about what happens inside the house is regarded by the occupants as private": Tessling, at 144.

[221] "[S]urreptitious visual intrusions of a person's reasonable expectation of privacy may, in some circumstances, constitute an unreasonable search under s. 8 of the Charter": Moran, at 247; R. v. Wong (1987), 1990 CanLII 56 (SCC), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 460 (S.C.C.) at 465. The "consideration of whether an individual has a reasonable expectation of privacy can only be decided within the particular factual context of the surveillance": Wong, at 465. For example, observations made by the police as a result of a trespass may offend s. 8: Moran, at 247. Here, unlike the circumstances described in Tessling, at 146, 149, where the police surveillance could not "see" through a transparent window" or disclose "details of the home", the TRU team was able, and had as one of its objectives, to see into the N.M. home with the capacity to intrude on privacy in a highly private setting.

[222] Given that a warrantless arrest is prohibited in a dwelling-house in the absence of exigent circumstances (Feeney, at 154, 186-7), in the ordinary course, the police ought to have a Feeney warrant when going to the property of the suspect to effect an arrest: R. v. Nguyen, [2006] O.J. No. 4393 (S.C.J.) at para. 51. The court must be vigilant to avoid improper "circumvention of the warrant requirement": Law, at 461.

[223] The actions of the TRU team, on the authority of the incident commander, involved deployment onto private property without a warrant. The police covertly remained on the property for over three hours during which stealthy surveillance as to the dwelling and its occupant was conducted with the reconnaissance unit operating within the curtilage of the residence looking into the home and sniper units utilizing rifle scopes to see into the dwelling. There was ongoing information-gathering about the house and the suspect's presence and location within the dwelling. The tires of the suspect's vehicle were destroyed. O/Reg. 3/99 Adequacy and Effectiveness of Police Services, under the Police Services Act, requires the commander of any police force with a tactical unit to establish "procedures on preliminary perimeter control and containment" (ss. 21(1)1., 22, 23, 25(2)) and the procedures shall be "contained in a manual that is available to each member providing that service" (s. 25(3)). The relevant OPP standard operating procedures and manuals do not discuss or specify, as an option for high-risk situations, warrantless entry onto private property to conduct surveillance into a dwelling in advance of a Feeney warrant or in anticipation of attempting, without warrant, to persuade a suspect to surrender. Nor was any expert evidence led to justify the reasonableness and necessity of the tactical operation conducted in the circumstances extant in this case, as is sometimes the case, when the lawfulness of police behaviour is challenged: see, for example: Euteneier v. Lee (2005), 2005 CanLII 33024 \(ON CA\), 77 O.R. (3d) 621 (C.A.) at para. 24, 27-8, 36, 70. On any account, the police actions implicated territorial and informational privacy interests of the suspect.

[224] The warrantless entry and covert surveillance amounted to searches – government conduct intruding on N.M.' reasonable expectation of privacy. But were they authorized by law?

[225] Insp. Jones understood that the warrantless actions of the TRU team on the N.M. property, in pursuit of a common law duty of the police to preserve life and to enforce public safety, were justified on the basis of urgency or the existence of exigent circumstances. OPP materials filed in this hearing describe exigent circumstances as requiring action in the face of an imminent danger or risk – a "now or never" situation.

[226] In her testimony, however, Insp. Jones strained to explain the deployment of the TRU team at the N.M. property as motivated by urgency or exigent circumstances. She did not characterize the situation as at a 9-1-1 level of urgency, as in Godoy, or R. v. Nicholls (1999), 1999 CanLII 2750 \(ON CA\), 139 C.C.C. (3d) 253 (Ont. C.A.). Nor was it sufficiently urgent to straight away breach the residence to save the accused from harming himself or to arrest him without awaiting a warrant as authorized by s. 529.3 of the Code. The officer spoke of risk or danger to the police, the public and to Mr. N.M. himself. Objectively, there was little or no support for this position.

[227] As to the police, there was no evidence of any danger to a police officer off the property. Even accepting the most sinister, and time-present, interpretations of the statement attributed to the suspect about not being taken from his house, no risk would vest until the police knocked on the door of the dwelling.

[228] The complainant was in no danger. She was at a distant location unknown to Mr. N.M. and in the presence of Const. Tardiff.

[229] The belief that Mr. N.M. was suicidal requiring immediate protection from himself was not reasonable. Witnesses questioned about the Kirec matter agreed that the circumstances of March 19th, 2002 were dissimilar to that case. Benoit reported that N.M. was calm and remorseful. Sgt. James understood that there was no real case to be made for believing the suspect was suicidal. Dr. Collins' opinion of the potential for suicide by police is not only of little value on the immediacy of Mr. N.M. being a risk to himself given the apparent lack of foundational facts, but also because the context for this view involves police intersection with the suspect – a scenario which would only realistically emerge should the police try to apprehend the suspect.

[230] “[P]olice officers must be empowered to respond quickly, effectively, and flexibly to the diversity of encounters experienced daily on the front lines of policing”: Mann, at 318. “[I]t will take time to obtain a search warrant”: Silveira, at 501. The onus is on the Crown to establish exigent circumstances. Exigent circumstances involve real urgency where “immediate action is required for the safety of the police” (Feeney, at 159) or where there is “imminent danger” of an event occurring should the police delay to obtain a warrant: Grant, at 188-9. The existence of exigent circumstances engages both a subjective and objective dimension to the belief of the police: R. v. Duong (2002), 2002 BCCA 43 \(CanLII\), 162 C.C.C. (3d) 242 (B.C.C.A.) at 254; R. v. McCormack (2000), 2000 BCCA 57 \(CanLII\), 143 C.C.C. (3d) 260 (B.C.C.A.) at 268.

[231] Neither Insp. Jones nor counsel relied upon s. 529.3 of the Code, which authorizes warrantless entry of a dwelling to effect an arrest in the exigent circumstance of reasonable grounds to believe it is necessary to do so to prevent imminent bodily harm or death to any person, as justification for the actions of the TRU team. This is undoubtedly because the police did not enter the dwelling and presence on the property exceeding three hours tends to belie belief in imminent or immediate danger.

[232] As a general rule, the existence of exigent circumstances cannot be justified on the basis of the police operationally causing an emergency. In other words, as observed in R. v. Burlingham (1993), 1993 CanLII 6884 \(BC CA\), 85 C.C.C. (3d) 343 (S.C.C.) at 407, exigency cannot be justified where “the police created an artificial situation of urgency”. Similarly, in Silveira, at para. 69, 85, 91 and 94, La Forest (in dissent) noted that but for the way in which the police “chose to sequence their actions” leading to “police-created exigencies” the urgency would not have arisen and, in acting as they did, the officers “created their own exigent circumstances and should not be permitted to use them as a justification for circumventing the law”. Otherwise, observed La Forest J. at para. 84, this approach to exigent circumstances “would give the police little incentive to acquire a warrant in advance”. Other authorities too recognize that circumstances described as exigent, and therefore purportedly supportive of exceptional warrantless police activity, ought not to be contrived or unreasonably the product of police actions: R. v. Greffe (1990), 1990 CanLII 143 (SCC), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 161 (S.C.C.) at 192 (no “immediate necessity” to conduct search to prevent loss of evidence); Caslake, at 108 citing Doherty J., as he then was, in R. v. Lim (No. 2) (1990), 1 C.R.R. (2d) 136 (Ont. H.C.) at 146 (re considering the “police motives” for the timing of the search); Bohn, at 332 (“The reason to hurry the search along was created by the decision of the police to go ahead that night, rather than wait until the next day”.); R. v. Damianakus (1998), 1997 CanLII 4334 (MB CA), 121 C.C.C. (3d) 293 (Man. C.A.) at 304-5.

[233] As to the slashing of the tires of Mr. N.M.’ truck during the currency of the warrantless search, given the outer perimeter containment, the heavy police presence, the lack of reference to such an option in the relevant OPP standard operating procedures for containment, and the absence of articulable facts specific to this arrest situation reasonably requiring such destruction of private property, this conduct cannot be viewed as justifiably necessary in all the circumstances.

[234] When Insp. Jones authorized telephone communications with Mr. N.M., Det. Sgt. McCormick was in contact with the telewarrant centre. No one from the command post had called her to determine the status of her application. As well, at this point, with the lights turned out in the residence, the Inspector believed it meant that Mr. N.M. had gone to bed and, in her words, “I felt that it meant my officers in the inner perimeter were probably safe”. As is evident from the evidence excerpt at para. 59 above, Insp. Jones’ testimony does not responsively indicate why, in these circumstances, a Feeney warrant was not obtained prior to confronting the suspect in his home at night.

[235] As matters unfolded, Mr. N.M. was arrested outside his dwelling and, as observed by Doherty J.A. in Golub, at 204, “As the arrest occurred outside of the respondent’s house, I need not consider the effect of the recent judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in Feeney”. This is consistent with the subsequently enacted text of ss. 529 and 529.1 of the Code which refer to entry into a dwelling to effect an arrest. In arguing that Mr. N.M.’ exit from his residence was far from voluntary, Mr. Brauti seemed to be promoting a notion of constructive arrest of the suspect in his home by virtue of the armed police presence and what was described as the directory nature of the police phonecall. There is some support in the United States for this approach to ensure the police do not, without possessing a warrant to enter to arrest or in the absence of exigent circumstances, by trickery or show or threat of force have a prospective arrestee in a dwelling present him or herself: Fisher v. City of San Jose, 475 F.3d 1049, 1057 (9th Cir. 2007); U.S. v. Al-Azzawy, 784 F. 2d 890, 892-3 (9th Cir. 1985); U.S. v. Morgan, 743 F. 2d 115-8, 1164 (6th Cir. 1984); U.S. v. Johnson, 626 F. 2d 753, 757 (9th Cir. 1980) (aff’d on other grounds 457 U.S. 537 (1982)); U.S. v. Herrold, 772 F. Supp. 1483, 1489 (U.S. Dist. Penn. 1991). In Johnson, the court observed:

In these circumstances, it is the location of the arrested person, and not the arresting agents, that determines whether an arrest occurs within a home. Otherwise, arresting officers could avoid illegal “entry” into a home simply by remaining outside the doorway and controlling the movements of suspects within through the use of weapons that greatly extend the “reach” of the arresting officers.

On the facts of the present case, and in particular the contents of the negotiator’s call and Mr. N.M.’ own testimony, I am not prepared to consider the application of those authorities.

[236] Leaving aside the sufficiency of her grounds, Det. Sgt. McCormick’s ITO a Feeney warrant addressed the issue of a night-time execution of the arrest warrant as may be required on a combined reading of ss. 487, 488, 487.1 and 529.5 of the Code. A high degree of privacy is extended regarding a residence and the Code therefore “imposes special requirements where a search by night is contemplated” as night-time entry is meant to occur only “in exceptional circumstances”: R. v. Sutherland (2000), 2000 CanLII 17034 \(ON CA\), 150 C.C.C. (3d) 231 (Ont. C.A.) at 239-41; Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. 573, 616 (1980) per White J.

[237] The police “are answerable for [their] choices” – “The police need not demonstrate the correct decision was made, but that the decision was made on reasonable grounds based on the circumstances known at the time”: Crampton, at 220. In conclusion, the Crown has failed to discharge the burden of showing that the warrantless conduct of the TRU team was reasonably necessary in the circumstances. This was not an instance of a barricaded person or a hostage-taking where other considerations may become relevant. On the whole of the evidence, there was no objective justification for its prolonged warrantless conduct supportable on exigent circumstances relating to public safety. Had the TRU team waited for a Feeney warrant, properly applied for and endorsed with relevant, and perhaps extraordinary, conditions governing execution, the police would then have the flexibility to conduct the arrest operation safely on the N.M. property.

The Strip Search

position of parties

[238] Ms. Cullen submitted that the weight of credible evidence favours rejection of Mr. N.M.’ assertion that his pants were pulled down below his knees. The Crown argued that the accused is an unbelievable and unreliable witness on a number of fronts. The prosecution, however, accepts that with the arrestee’s shirt pulled up, his shoes removed, and a flip-out or partial pull-down search of his waistband area conducted, Mr. N.M. was subjected, not to a pat-down search, but to a strip search as defined in Golden. The Crown submitted that the police search was not conducted with the audience and lighting described by the accused. The officers were searching Mr. N.M. in the interests of protecting themselves, the prisoner and others from harm and to ensure the accused did not escape.

[239] The defence submitted that Mr. N.M. was subjected to a search with his pants pulled to his knees or alternatively to a search exposing his genitals and buttocks at least to one or more of the arrest team. Mr. Brauti argued that aspects of the police testimony tend to confirm the accused's account of events. The defence submitted that Mr. N.M. was not the object of a field or frisk search but to a standard or routine TRU team search of the person conducted without regard to any articulable facts justifying the degree of intrusion.

findings/conclusions

[240] Mr. N.M. presented as a difficult witness in cross-examination, argumentative and not always responsive to questions. It was manifestly obvious that just below the surface he is very angry about his circumstances. There could be any number of reasons for this whether legitimate or not. The accused's memory was unreliable on several points which he explained as the result of the passage of time and the absence of contemporaneous notes to refresh his memory.

[241] Where Mr. N.M.' testimony differed from police witnesses on certain, but not all, matters relating to the circumstances of his arrest, I accept the officers' evidence. For example, the police were aware of Mr. N.M.' back injury prior to the arrest. At the time of the arrest, the officers were heavily armed. Mr. N.M. was entirely compliant. There would be no reason for an officer to knock Mr. N.M. to the ground from behind as he was on his knees. This incident is not detailed in Mr. N.M.' affidavit. I am also satisfied that no firearm was dropped near Mr. N.M.' head during the arrest process.

[242] As with the other warrantless searches, the Crown bears the onus of establishing the reasonableness of the personal search of the accused.

[243] Certain matters are not in controversy:

- (1) it was night-time and the weather was freezing cold with snow on the ground
- (2) Mr. N.M. was ordered to lift his shirt up high in order that the arresting officers could ensure no weapon was concealed on his torso or tucked into his pants
- (3) at least three heavily armed officers (Penrose, Traves, Manca) were present at the immediate location where Mr. N.M. was taken into custody

- (4) the search of the accused, while he was handcuffed, occurred in the light of at least one rifle-mounted light as well as some of the light from the spot-light though not directly in the path of its beam
- (5) the location of the search can be seen from the roadway in front of the N.M. residence
- (6) Mr. N.M.' shoes were removed and searched
- (7) no supervisory officer authorized the method of the arrestee's search
- (8) the search lasted at least two minutes and perhaps longer.

[244] Before turning to the issue of the movement of the arrestee's pants, on these facts the search amounted to more than a brief pat-down or frisk search. There was no convincing evidence as to when the small knife in Mr. N.M.' jacket was discovered in relation to the timing of the personal search.

[245] Mr. N.M. was very clear in his testimony that the search he was subjected to was contrary to his own training regarding searches in the field. He maintained that his pants were pulled down so as to expose his genitals and buttocks. He found it disgusting. Sgt. Penrose, in the immediate vicinity of the search, was not as close to N.M. as Traves and Manca. Although this officer did not see the arrestee's pants pulled down, he felt the pants may have been "opened". Const. Traves, the actual searcher, was not in a position to say the search did not happen as described by N.M.. A/Sgt. Manca, also with no specific recall of the N.M. search, considered it would not be unusual "in these type of circumstances" to pull an arrestee's pants down in the manner described by the accused. On balance, on this record, the Crown has not shown that the search did not proceed as described by the accused.

[246] It is also important to note that Insp. Jones and A/Sgt. Manca both expressed the view in this hearing that a strip search involved removal of all of an arrestee's clothing. The OPP Orders in 2002 and 2007 equate a strip search with a "complete" search with all clothing removed. A/Sgt. Manca, a trainer for TRU members, considers that a pat-down search routinely involves inspection of the interior of an arrestee's pants to the point of seeing the crotch area and between the buttocks.

[247] At common law, incidental to a lawful arrest, an arresting police officer has a discretion to search the arrestee for evidence relating to the offence for which the arrest is made, for any weapon or implement that might be used to harm the police, the arrestee or anyone else, or for any item that could facilitate escape. A search incident to arrest is an established exception to the general rule that warrantless searches are prima facie unreasonable: Golden, at 488; Alkins, at para. 26.

[248] In R. v. Cloutier (1990), 1990 CanLII 122 \(SCC\), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 257 (S.C.C.) at 278, the court introduced these guidelines respecting search of the person incidental to arrest:

This power does not impose a duty. The police have some discretion in conducting the search. Where they are satisfied that the law can be effectively and safely applied without a search, the police may see fit not to conduct a search. They must be in a position to assess the circumstances of each case so as to determine whether a search meets the underlying objectives.

The search must be for a valid objective in pursuit of the ends of criminal justice, such as the discovery of an object that may be a threat to the safety of the police, the accused or the public, or that may facilitate escape or act as evidence against the accused. The purpose of the search must not be unrelated to the objectives of the proper administration of justice, which would be the case, for example, if the purpose of the search was to intimidate, ridicule or pressure the accused in order to obtain admissions.

The search must not be conducted in an abusive fashion, and, in particular, the use of physical or psychological constraint should be proportionate to the objectives sought and the other circumstances of the situation.

[249] In the same case, at pages 277-8, the court recognized that, incidental to an arrest, a pat-down search without reasonable grounds would not be unreasonable:

In this regard a “frisk” search is a relatively non-intrusive procedure: outside clothing is patted down to determine whether there is anything on the person of the arrested individual. Pockets may be examined but the clothing is not removed and no physical force is applied. The duration of the search is only a few seconds. Though the search, if conducted, is in addition to the arrest, which generally entails a considerably longer and more sustained loss of freedom and dignity, a brief search does not constitute, in view of the objectives sought, a disproportionate interference with the freedom of persons lawfully arrested. There exists no less intrusive means of attaining these objectives.

A “frisk” search incidental to a lawful arrest reconciles the public’s interest in the effective and safe enforcement of the law on the one hand, and on the other its interest in ensuring the freedom and dignity of individuals.

[250] This form of field search was subsequently described in Mann, at page 327, as a protective search of brief duration lasting a few seconds.

[251] In R. v. Stillman (1997), 1997 CanLII 384 \(SCC\), 113 C.C.C. (3d) 321 (S.C.C.) at 344, the court stated that the power to search incidental to arrest was predicated on pragmatic and exigent circumstances inherent to the circumstances of an arrest. Subsequently, in Caslake, at pages 107-8, the court observed:

...all of the limits on search incident to arrest are derived from the justification for the common law power itself: searches which derive their legal authority from the fact of arrest must be truly incidental to the arrest in question. The authority for the search does not arise as a result of a reduced expectation of privacy of the arrested individual. Rather, it arises out of a need for the law enforcement authorities to gain control of things or information which outweighs the individual’s interest in privacy.

[252] Also in 1998, about four years before the search in this case, judgment was released in Flintoff. In that case, it was learned that arrestees brought to the station were strip-searched as a matter of routine policy divorced from the circumstances of the particular arrest and arrestee. At page 333, the court described strip-searching as “one of the most intrusive manners of searching” and an extreme use of police power not justified or sanctioned by law except in limited circumstances.

[253] Then, in Golden, at page 467, the court determined that the common law power to search incident to arrest does not include the power to strip-search. The court held that the arrestee had been subjected to more than one strip search including (1) pulling back the pants and underwear and looking inside, and (2) pulling the pants below the knees fully exposing the genitalia and buttocks. At page 473, declaring that persons need to be free from unjustified, excessive and humiliating searches on arrest, the court further stated:

The appellant submits that the term “strip search” is properly defined as follows: the removal or rearrangement of some or all of the clothing of a person so as to permit a visual inspection of a person’s private areas, namely genitals, buttocks, breasts (in the case of a female), or undergarments. This definition in essence reflects the definition of a strip search that has been adopted in various statutory materials and policy manuals in Canada and other jurisdictions (see for example: Toronto Police Service, Policy & Procedure Manual: Search of Persons, Arrest & Release, at p. 3; Crimes Act 1914 (Austl.), Part 1AA, c. 3C, s. 1 “strip search”; Cal. Penal Code 4030 (West 1984); Col. Rev. Stat. Ann. 16-3-405 (West 1982); Wash. Rev. Code. Ann. 10.79.070(1) (West 1983). In our view, this definition accurately captures the meaning of the term “strip search” and we adopt it for the purpose of these reasons. This definition distinguishes strip searches from less intrusive “frisk” or “pat down” searches, which do not involve the removal of clothing, and from more intrusive body cavity searches, which involve a physical inspection of the detainee’s genital or anal regions.

(emphasis added)

The court further stated at pages 490-7:

As noted by Dickson C.J. in Simmons, supra, the different types of searches raise different constitutional considerations: the more intrusive the search, the greater the degree of justification and constitutional protection that is appropriate: Simmons, at p. 517. The party seeking to uphold the validity of a warrantless personal search will face a lower burden in the case of a quick pat or frisk search than in the case of a highly invasive body cavity search.

...

...strip searches can be humiliating, embarrassing and degrading for those who are subject to them, and any post facto remedies for unjustified strip searches cannot erase the arrestee’s experience of being strip searched.

...

Strip searches are thus inherently humiliating and degrading for detainees regardless of the manner in which they are carried out and for this reason they cannot be carried out simply as a matter of routine policy.

...a “frisk” or “pat down” search at the point of arrest will generally suffice for the purposes of determining if the accused has secreted weapons on his person. Only if the frisk search reveals a possible weapon secreted on the detainee’s person or if the particular circumstances of the case raise the risk that a weapon is concealed on the detainee’s person will a strip search be justified. Whether searching for evidence or for weapons, the mere possibility that an individual may be concealing evidence or weapons upon his person is not sufficient to justify a strip search.

The requirement that the strip search be for evidence related to the grounds for the arrest or for weapons reflects the twin rationales for the common law power of search incident to arrest. Strip searches cannot be carried out as a matter of routine police department policy applicable to all arrestees.

. . .

The fact that the police have reasonable and probable grounds to carry out an arrest does not confer upon them the automatic authority to carry out a strip search, even where the strip search meets the definition of being “incident to lawful arrest” as discussed above. Rather, additional grounds pertaining to the purpose of the strip search are required. In Cloutier, supra, this Court concluded that a common law search incident to arrest does not require additional grounds beyond the reasonable and probable grounds necessary to justify the lawfulness of the arrest itself: Cloutier, supra, at pp. 185-86. However, this conclusion was reached in the context of a “frisk” search, which involved a minimal invasion of the detainee’s privacy and personal integrity. In contrast, a strip search is a much more intrusive search and, accordingly, a higher degree of justification is required in order to support the higher degree of interference with individual freedom and dignity. In order to meet the constitutional standard of reasonableness that will justify a strip search, the police must establish that they have reasonable and probable grounds for concluding that a strip search is necessary in the particular circumstances of the arrest.

In light of the serious infringement of privacy and personal dignity that is an inevitable consequence of a strip search, such searches are only constitutionally valid at common law where they are conducted as an incident to a lawful arrest for the purpose of discovering weapons in the detainee’s possession or evidence related to the reason for the arrest. In addition, the police must establish reasonable and probable grounds justifying the strip search in addition to reasonable and probable grounds justifying the arrest. Where these preconditions to conducting a strip search incident to arrest are met, it is also necessary that the strip search be conducted in a manner that does not infringe s. 8 of the Charter.

Strip searches should generally only be conducted at the police station except where there are exigent circumstances requiring that the detainee be searched prior to being transported to the police station. Such exigent circumstances will only be established where the police have reasonable and probable grounds to believe that it is necessary to conduct the search in the field rather than at the police station. Strip searches conducted in the field could only be justified where there is a demonstrated necessity and urgency to search for weapons or objects that could be used to threaten the safety of the accused, the arresting officers or other individuals. The police would also have to show why it would have been unsafe to wait and conduct the strip search at the police station rather than in the field. Strip searches conducted in the field represent a much greater invasion of privacy and pose a greater threat to the detainee’s bodily integrity and, for this reason, field strip searches can only be justified in exigent circumstances. (emphasis added)

[254] At page 498, the court further concluded that there existed no reasonable and probable grounds to believe the search had to be conducted with urgency in light of the close proximity to the police station and “given the number of officers on the scene”. The court concluded that there was no exigency reasonably justifying a strip search in the field:

In this respect, it is critical to underscore that where the reasonableness of a strip search is challenged, it is the Crown that bears the onus of proving its legality. It thus must convince the court on a balance of probabilities that either (1) reasonable and probable grounds, as well as exigent circumstances existed, and therefore, a strip search “in the field” was warranted and was conducted in a reasonable manner; or (2) that reasonable grounds existed, that the strip search was carried out at a police station, and conducted in a reasonable manner. Because strip searches are of such an invasive character, they must be considered prima facie unreasonable. It is up to the state to rebut this presumption because it is in the best position to know and explain why the search took place, and why it was conducted in the manner and circumstances that it did. This onus rests upon the Crown in any case involving a strip search, as defined in these reasons.

In the present case, the Crown sought to distinguish the first part of the search in the stairwell from the subsequent efforts to seize the plastic wrap from the appellant's buttocks after he was brought back into the Subway shop. We are unwilling to accept such a distinction. The search in the stairwell, whereupon the police pulled back the appellant's pants and underwear in order to visually examine his buttock area, cannot be looked at in isolation. Rather, it must be assessed within the complete context of the events that took place after the appellant's arrest. According to the definition adopted in these reasons, the first part of the search in the stairwell was a strip search, although it was clearly of a less intrusive character than the subsequent search in the restaurant. This visual inspection of the appellant's buttocks, in and of itself, interfered with his privacy, dignity, and integrity.

[255] In the present case, Mr. N.M. exited his residence promptly after the negotiator's call. He never assumed the profile of a barricaded person. To the knowledge of the police, the accused had safely stored registered firearms. He was fully compliant with TRU team directions. Once his jacket was removed, he was restrained by handcuffs and reduced to wearing a t-shirt and sweatpants in the freezing cold. The location of his arrest was a nine to ten-minute cruiser ride from the OPP detachment. He was surrounded by highly trained tactical officers with awesome firepower. In these circumstances, it was entirely unreasonable to conduct a strip search as defined in Golden on the arrestee's front lawn.

Warrantless Entry of Dwelling-House

position of parties

[256] The prosecution sought to support the reasonableness of the warrantless dwelling search on the basis of the exercise of an ancillary police power incidental to the arrest of Mr. N.M.. It is said that a safety clear of the dwelling was undertaken respecting "dangerous conditions". While there was no evidence of anyone else in the residence, or injured inside, or of a booby-trap, in the interests of public safety including to protect the officers at the arrest scene, any officers who might subsequently enter with a warrant, or the returning N.M. family, the TRU team officers were entitled to assume the worst and to perform the stealth clear. The Crown's factum supports the constitutionality of the police action in these terms:

The circumstances of the Applicant's arrest and the reasons therefore gave legitimate concern for the safety of others at the scene, and for taking protective measures to ensure that no danger existed. They had just arrested someone who they believed to have a number of weapons and who had allegedly threatened never to be taken from his home. To that end, the "clearing" or protective sweep of the house subsequent to the arrest of the Applicant was consistent with the obligation of the police in relation to public safety. It would have been irresponsible for the police to have simply walked away from the residence at that time.

[257] The defence submitted that once Mr. N.M. was handcuffed and placed in the ERT officers' cruiser, there was no risk from the suspect to anyone else. Mr. Brauti pointed to the evidence of an absence of any information existing to suspect an accomplice or injured party in the N.M. dwelling or the existence of a trap of some kind. In effect, it was argued, the stealth clear was conducted on a routine, not a case-specific, basis. Without specific articulable facts, the police relied on generalized notions of risk to execute an unreasonable warrantless search in a dwelling-house.

findings/conclusions

[258] The exercise of a warrantless entry to a dwelling-house incidental to a lawful arrest, in the purported exercise of an ancillary police power premised upon public safety concerns, has been the subject of appellate review in Ontario: R. v. Collins (1989), 1989 CanLII 264 \(ON CA\), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 343 (Ont. C.A.); Golub; R. v. Bedard (1998), 1998 CanLII 4009 \(ON CA\), 125 C.C.C. (3d) 348 (Ont. C.A.).

[259] This common law power of warrantless entry and limited search, described in the present case as a stealth clear, and as a “protective sweep” in the United States, is necessarily a narrow justification for government departure from the prior judicial authorization model. Before turning to the circumstances of the present case, review of the treatment of this common law power in the two jurisdictions will be helpful.

Ontario authorities

Collins

[260] On October 14th, 1983 a suspect, subsequently identified as Peter Collins, shot a Nepean police officer at a shopping mall in Nepean, Ontario and stole his service revolver. He then fled to unit 55, 2949 Penny Drive in Nepean. Witnesses provided these facts to the police. The authorities’ information was that Collins had a history of violence and was an escapee from a local regional detention centre. Within about five hours, the police surrounded unit #55, the residence of a female companion of Collins. The police convinced Collins to surrender. He was arrested in the porch area when he exited unit #55. Police officers then entered the residence finding no one else present. During the warrantless entry, prior to the execution of a warrant respecting seizure of the deceased officer’s firearm, officers observed in plain view a loaded sawed-off shotgun, and fully loaded .32 calibre and .38 calibre handguns, as well as ammunition.

[261] On appeal of this pre-Feeney case, the Crown sought, in part, to support the police entry as the exercise of an ancillary police power flowing from the circumstances of Collin’s arrest akin to the American “protective sweep” jurisprudence. The actual arrest was in very close proximity to unit #55. It was unknown whether the escapee’s girlfriend was in the unit prepared to shoot at nearby officers or whether she herself was injured.

[262] The appeal court, at pages 364-5, decided the evidence admissibility issue on a s. 24(2) Charter analysis:

Accordingly, it is my opinion that the appellant has failed to show that the trial judge erred in failing to find that the police conducted an unreasonable search of the appellant's place of residence and in failing to exclude evidence discovered as a result of such search. In view of the conclusion I have reached with respect to the validity of the search warrant, I need not deal with submission of Crown counsel that the police had the power to enter and search the premises of the appellant without a warrant having regard to the circumstances of the case on the basis of search incidental to arrest or a plain-view seizure. In any event, even if the search or seizure was unreasonable and constituted a breach of the right of the appellant under s. 8 of the Charter to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure, it is my opinion that the seized evidence was presumptively admissible. In this regard it must be kept in mind that the offence alleged was the most serious crime provided for in the Code, viz., murder. It must further be kept in mind that the evidence seized was in the truest sense real evidence. There can be no doubt that the police had reasonable grounds to believe that the murderer, together with the deceased police officer's revolver and the murder weapon would be found at 2949 Penny Dr., Unit 55. The police had sought advice from the Crown before entering the premises. The matter was an urgent one. There can be no doubt but that the police were acting in good faith. Prior to entering Unit 55, the police were able to contact the appellant therein by telephone. He told them in a taped telephone conversation at 5:35 p.m. that he had four guns in the unit. They persuaded him to come out of the unit. It was only after he left the unit that the police entered the premises to make the search and found and seized the deceased officer's revolver and the gun believed to be the murder weapon.

Golub

[263] About eight hours after reports of Golub striking one person, threatening to "get even" with the staff of certain licensed premises, and showing a shortened rifle carried under his jacket believed by one witness to be a sub-machine gun, the police located Golub's rented basement apartment. With the landlord's assistance, the TPS ETF surrounded the building at about 7:30 a.m. and evacuated the other tenants. The police believed Golub to be intoxicated and distraught based on information from a witness who had spent time with him the prior evening.

[264] The officer-in-charge telephoned Golub telling him the apartment was surrounded and there was no point trying to escape. Golub was directed to come out the door of his apartment with nothing in his hands and to follow the instructions of the officers outside. Within a few minutes, Golub complied by opening his door and walking out backwards. The suspect was arrested.

[265] Four matters of significance transpired relevant to the police conduct which followed:

- (1) the suspect misidentified himself when asked his name in one of the phonecalls from the police
- (2) there was a delay on Golub's part in complying with the police request necessitating a second police phonecall

- (3) when directed to leave the apartment door open, Golub closed and locked the door
- (4) when asked by the ETF supervisor, Sgt. Curts, whether there was anyone else in the apartment, Golub replied, "I don't think so".

[266] Sgt. Curts immediately became concerned that another suspect or other occupants might be in the apartment. The officer's public safety concerns were the safety of officers effecting the arrest and the prospect of turning the scene over to investigators with the risk of a confrontation "with someone else wielding a weapon in the apartment". At this point, ETF officers entered the dwelling without a warrant to thoroughly search, not for evidence, but for any persons who might be inside.

[267] Searching for persons, and told to secure any firearm seen in the course of the entry, the ETF officers discovered a loaded, sawed-off semi-automatic rifle under a mattress together with boxes of ammunition. The ETF emptied the gun and completed their fifteen-minute search. Investigating officers then entered the apartment and seized the rifle.

[268] In support of the constitutionality of the police conduct, the Crown in part argued the application of the police common law power referred to in the American jurisprudence as a "protective sweep".

[269] On appeal, at pages 209-210, in holding that only "exceptional circumstances" will justify a warrantless search of a residence incident to arrest, the court considered whether there was a state interest so compelling "that it must override a person's right to privacy within the home". In the circumstances, the nature of the state interest justifying the warrantless entry was "the interest in protecting the safety of those at the scene" of the arrest – an interest "which must be addressed immediately". Doherty J.A. described such a state interest in this fashion at pages 209-210:

In my opinion, searches of a home as an incident of an arrest, like entries of a home to effect an arrest, are now generally prohibited subject to exceptional circumstances where the law enforcement interest is so compelling that it overrides the individual's right to privacy within the home.

...

What will amount to exceptional circumstances justifying a warrantless search of a residence as an incident of an arrest? I will not attempt an exhaustive answer. Exceptional circumstances do not, however, refer to circumstances which rarely arise, but rather to circumstances where a state interest is so compelling that it must override a person's right to privacy within the home.

Broadly stated, the state interest upon arrest is the effective administration of justice. There are various components to that interest including the need to secure the arrested person, protect those at the scene of the arrest, and preserve evidence. In determining whether exceptional circumstances exist justifying a warrantless search, the nature of the state interest must be identified. The state interest in collecting evidence may not justify a warrantless search, but the interest in protecting the safety of those at the scene may justify that same search.

...

I would hold that where immediate action is required to secure the safety of those at the scene of an arrest, a search conducted in a manner which is consistent with the preservation of the safety of those at the scene is justified. If, in order to secure the safety of those at the scene, entry into and search of a residence is necessary, I would hold that the risk of physical harm to those at the scene of the arrest constitutes exceptional circumstances justifying the warrantless entry and search of the residence. The search must be conducted for the purpose of protecting those at the scene and must be conducted in a reasonable manner which is consistent with that purpose.

[270] What then of the grounds for exercise of the warrantless power of entry into a dwelling to ensure the safety of those at the arrest scene? At pages 211 and 212, Doherty J.A. stated:

If the circumstances of an arrest give rise to a legitimate cause for concern with respect to the safety of those at the scene, reasonable steps to allay that concern may be taken. The nature of the apprehended risk, the potential consequences of not taking protective measures, the availability of alternative measures, and the likelihood of the contemplated danger actually existing, must all be considered. The officers making this assessment must, of course, do so on the spot with no time for careful reflection. In my opinion, a reasonable suspicion, based on the particular circumstances of the arrest, that someone is on the other side of a closed door with a loaded sub-machine gun, or that someone is lying injured on the other side of that door, creates a legitimate cause for concern justifying entry and search of the apartment for persons.

Sergeant Curts did not order entry based on some pre-set protocol which directed entry in all "gun call" situations, and he was not acting on an unsubstantiated hunch.

...

The American jurisprudence fortifies my view that reasonable grounds to believe someone else was in the apartment were not necessary to justify the protective measures taken by Sergeant Curts. The American cases recognize that, when making an arrest, the police may conduct a "protective sweep" of the place where the arrest occurs even if it is a dwelling-house. That sweep must be based on a reasonable belief of the presence of person or persons who would pose a demonstrable danger to the arresting officers. That belief must be based on specific and articulable facts, but need not amount to probable cause: Maryland v. Buie, 494 U.S. 325 (1990). In looking to the American cases to support my rejection of the probable cause standard, I do not intend any comment on the applicability of other aspects of the "protective sweep" doctrine. That standard was met here.

[271] For the purposes of the present case, important principles emerge from those statements in the Golub decision:

- (1) Reasonable suspicion, recast in Mann, at 323-4, as reasonable grounds to suspect, not the higher threshold of reasonable and probable grounds, must exist to believe a significant state interest is at stake justifying warrantless entry.
- (2) The grounds to suspect must be reasonable and therefore not only honestly held by the police but also such as to objectively justify the exceptional warrantless exercise of state power in a dwelling.

- (3) The reasonable grounds to suspect must be based on articulable facts particular to the circumstances of a specific arrest. In other words, the exercise of the ancillary police powers described here cannot be routine, automatic, based on an inflexible protocol, or based on merely theoretical notions of danger or risk.

[272] In Golub, in the result, with an arrest “right outside the door to [Golub’s] apartment”, risk to the police during their withdrawal from the scene, and with the existence of identifiable factors probative of imminent safety concerns such as the suspect’s delay in exiting his dwelling, closing of the door contrary to police direction, and an ambiguous response about the presence of anyone remaining in the apartment, the balance of interests justified the warrantless entry.

[273] Doherty J.A.’s analysis resonates with other relevant authority. Reasonable suspicion does not mean “acting solely on a hunch” but rather a “reasonable and specific inference drawn from the known facts of the situation”: Mann, at 326. While fears for safety of police officers and the possibility of violence may be reasons for departure from ordinary procedures, there must be a real factual foundation to support exceptional conduct: Genest, at 408; Schedel at 208; Crampton, at 216, 219-220.

Bedard

[274] Two assailants beat and pistol-whipped a man named Walker in his home causing him bodily harm. Before fleeing, Bedard, who was known to the victim, stated “This ain’t over yet” and further stated that they were next going to “get” an individual named Metcalfe who was known to Walker. A 9-1-1 call summoned the police to Walker’s home and other officers attended Metcalfe’s residence.

[275] As well, the police placed surveillance on Bedard’s farmhouse late at night. Soon, Bedard arrived in his vehicle and went inside. The police phoned the suspect shortly after midnight and asked that he “and any other occupants come outside”. Within minutes, Bedard exited his dwelling with his hands in the air. He was immediately handcuffed and, when asked where his friend was, stated, “What friend?” claiming to have been home all night. Asked for consent to search his home, Bedard agreed. That consent would not, it seems, meet the Wills criteria.

[276] The police entered and conducted a thorough search of the home discovering no one else present. The officers, however, discovered marihuana as well as ammunition, and several firearms including a loaded shotgun unsafely stored. The observations made during the warrantless entry supported the issuance of warrants to search.

[277] On appeal, in support of the warrantless actions of the police, the Crown argued authority “to enter the appellant’s residence pursuant to settled common law powers related to protective sweeps” conducted in exigent circumstances. The court, at pages 352-3, accepted this position applying the principles espoused in Golub. There was a reasonable basis or legitimate cause for concern for the safety of the officers at the scene of the arrest in circumstances of “articulable facts that raised a reasonable suspicion that further danger existed and that another individual, armed with a firearm might be in the appellant’s residence”. Reasonable steps were taken to allay that concern. The whereabouts of the armed accomplice with whom Bedard acted earlier in the evening was unknown and, at page 354, the court observed that, “when asked about the other suspect, the appellant denied any knowledge and lied about his whereabouts that evening giving rise to a concern that someone else was still in the premises”.

[278] The court further held (at pages 354-5) that while the police could not be criticized for their decision to retreat to obtain search warrants, they “could have seized the weapons, ammunition and narcotics, which were in plain view, had they chosen to do so”.

American authorities

Maryland v. Buie

[279] In Maryland v. Buie, 494 U.S. 325 (1990), referred to by Doherty J.A. in Golub, the court defined the contours of the protective sweep power of the police:

- (1) A search of a house is generally not reasonable without a warrant to search based upon probable cause. (p. 331)
- (2) Incidental to a lawful arrest, “as a precautionary matter and without probable cause or reasonable suspicion”, arresting officers may search “spaces immediately adjoining the place of arrest from which an attack could be immediately launched”. (p. 334)
- (3) Beyond that, the Fourth Amendment would permit a protective sweep of a broader area only if the police possess a reasonable belief based on specific and articulable facts which, taken together with the rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warranted the belief that the area swept harboured an individual posing a danger to the officer or others. (pp. 327, 333-4)
- (4) “A “protective sweep” is a quick and limited search of premises, incident to an arrest and conducted to protect the safety of police officers or others. It is narrowly confined to a cursory visual inspection of those places in which a person might be hiding”. (pp. 327, 335)

- (5) Reasonable, “individualized suspicion” is an essential feature of a legitimate protective sweep. There must be a level of “objective justification” arising from the particular circumstances in each case – “it is decidedly not “automatic”, but may be conducted only when justified by a reasonable, articulable suspicion that the house is harbouring a person posing a danger to those on the arrest scene”. (pp. 334-6)

additional American jurisprudence

[280] The substantial degree of American experience with the protective sweep, as a narrow specie of justifiable warrantless search, may be summarized as follows:

- (1) Warrantless entry into a home is presumptively unreasonable. A warrantless search of a dwelling, even though the authorities may have probable cause for a search, will withstand constitutional scrutiny only in an exceptional situation: Vale v. Louisiana, 399 U.S. 30, 34 (1970). There exists “no general security check exception to the warrant requirement” where an arrest is effected at a dwelling: U.S. v. Maldonado, 472 F.3d 388, 394 (5th Cir. 2006).
- (2) While a search incident to, and contemporaneous with, an arrest is generally confined to the immediate vicinity of the arrest (Vale v. Louisiana, at 33), exigent circumstances may reasonably justify entry and search of a dwelling. There is no set formula for determining when exigent circumstances justify a warrantless entry: U.S. v. Maldonado, at 393. “Exigent circumstances are those in which a substantial risk of harm to the persons involved or to the law enforcement process would arise if the police were to delay a search until a warrant could be obtained”: U.S. v. Reid, 226 F. 3d 1020, 1027 (9th Cir. 2000). The need for swift and immediate action in the context of the protective sweep described in Buie justifies warrantless intrusion into a dwelling – “[w]hat is missing in this record is any indication that the agents entered Thompson’s home because they believed that they were faced with a “now or never” situation”: U.S. v. Thompson, 700 F.2d 944, 948, 950 (5th Cir. 1983).

- (3) It is necessary to give due weight to the judgments of police officers at the scene and their experience and specialized training and deductions from the cumulative information that might elude an untrained person: U.S. v. Arvizu, 534 U.S. 266, 273 (2002). The courts should avoid using hindsight or second-guessing officers' actions in dangerous situations where reasonable minds may differ as to police decision-making: U.S. v. Winston, 444 F.3d 115, 119-121 (1st Cir. 2006); U.S. v. Maldonado, at 393; U.S. v. Gould, 364 F.3d 578, 590-1 (5th Cir. 2004); U.S. v. Castillo, 866 F.2d 1071, 1079 (9th Cir. 1988).
- (4) Recognizing that the opportunity to obtain a warrant to search is a significant factor in evaluating the constitutionality of warrantless conduct, the asserted existence of urgency and danger will ring hollow where the police themselves create the purported foundational exigency: "We distinguish between cases where exigent circumstances naturally arise during a delay in obtaining a warrant and those where officers have deliberately created the exigent circumstances": U.S. v. Maldonado, at 392-3. In effect, a police-created exigency is itself an exception to the Buie exception to the need to search by warrant. Abandonment of covert surveillance with a tactical decision to confront a suspect before acquiring warrant authority "is a classic example of a police-manufactured exigency": U.S. v. Rico, 51 F.3d 495, 502-3 (5th Cir. 1995). Even where there is no intent to create an emergency, and accepting it is the actions the police took "not the terminology they employed" which is "what is constitutionally determinative" (U.S. v. Mendez, 431 F.3d 420, 426 (5th Cir. 2005)), the question becomes whether the actions of the government agents creating the exigency were sufficiently unreasonable or improper as to preclude dispensation with the warrant requirement: U.S. v. Gould, at 590. For example, "without reason to believe a criminal suspect was aware of police surveillance, the mere presence of firearms or destructible, incriminating evidence does not create exigent circumstances": U.S. v. Munoz-Guerra, 788 F.2d 295, 298-9 (5th Cir. 1986).
- (5) It is apparent that police officers are, at times, compelled by circumstances to enter dangerous environments without an adequate opportunity to take effective prophylactic measures: U.S. v. Miller, 430 F.3d 93, 99 (2nd Cir. 2005). Danger or risk to a police officer is "particularly heightened" during an in-house arrest: U.S. v. Davis, 471 F.3d 938, 944 (8th Cir. 2006). Where an arrest is made outside a dwelling, the danger to the officers is lessened where the arrest is far removed from an open doorway: U.S. v. Castillo, at 1081. Although an arrest outside a residence cannot “provide its own exigent circumstance so as to justify a warrantless search of an arrestee’s home” (Vale v. Louisiana, at 34; U.S. v. Whitten, 706 F.2d 1000, 1016 (9th Cir. 1983)), there may, in some cases, arise specific danger to arresting officers making an arrest outside a dwelling justifying warrantless entry and search of the premises: U.S. v. Paopao, 469 F.3d 760, 766 (9th Cir. 2006); U.S. v. Lawlor, 406 F. 3d 37, 41 (1st Cir. 2005); U.S. v. Maldonado, at 393-4; U.S. v. Mendez, at 428; U.S. v. Hoyos, 892 F.2d 1387, 1397 (9th Cir. 1989); U.S. v. Colbert, 76 F.3d 773, 776-7 (6th Cir. 1996); Sharrar v. Felsing, 128 F.3d 810, 820 (3rd Cir. 1997).

- (6) Reasonable suspicion requires a police officer to act on “something more than an inchoate and unparticularized suspicion or hunch”: U.S. v. Sokolow, 490 U.S. 1, 7 (1989). The existence of reasonable suspicion requires examination of the totality of the circumstances: U.S. v. Maldonado, at 395; U.S. v. Hoyos, at 1393. “Reasonable suspicion is just that, it is not probable cause or a more likely than not standard, and it does not exclude other reasonable possibilities”: U.S. v. Gould, at 593; U.S. v. Hauk, 412 F.3d 1179, 1193 (10th Cir. 2005).
- (7) Offensive to the Constitution are protective sweeps conducted as a matter of “standard procedure”: U.S. v. Castillo, at 1078-9 (“the fourth amendment was adopted for the very purpose of protecting us from “routine” intrusions by governmental agents into the privacy of our homes”); U.S. v. Davis, 471 F.3d 938, 947 (8th Cir. 2006) (“Four officers testified that it is their department’s policy to conduct a sweep of a house during every home arrest as a matter of course... Buie does not allow for a sweep in all cases...future sweeps must be similarly justified in the individual cases, and may not be conducted as a matter of course”); Fishbein v. City of Glenwood Springs, 469 F.3d 957, 962 (10th Cir. 2006) (“Protective sweeps are not justified as a matter of course”); U.S. v. Gandia, 424 F.3d 255, 263-4 (2nd Cir. 2005) (“Officers must point to facts that give rise to an individualized suspicion and cannot rely solely on generalisations that suspects are usually accompanied by dangerous third parties”); U.S. v. Hauk (Kansas City Police policy to conduct protective sweep of arrestee’s home in every instance – “neither the 4th amendment nor the fact-intensive question of reasonable suspicion accommodate a policy of automatic protective sweeps”); U.S. v. Moran-Vargas, 376 F.3d 112, 116 (2nd Cir. 2004) (“...generalizations, without more, are insufficient to justify a protective sweep”).

- (8) Having “no information” or “no specific” basis for a belief that anyone remains in the dwelling from which the arrestee has emerged is the antithesis of reasonable suspicion based upon case-specific articulable facts: U.S. v. Gandia, at 264; U.S. v. Moran-Vargas, at 117; U.S. v. Carter, 360 F.3d 1235, 1242-3 (10th Cir. 2004); Sharrar v. Felsing, at 824-5. On this point, these authorities have adopted the reasoning in U.S. v. Colbert, at 778-9:

Finally, Officer Hawes testified that he “didn’t have any information at all” when asked whether he had information that anyone was inside the Lewis apartment prior to his decision to conduct the protective sweep. Lack of information cannot provide an articulable basis upon which to justify a protective sweep.

...

Indeed, this justification threatens to swallow the general rule requiring that police obtain a warrant as completely as does focusing on the dangerousness of the arrestee. In fact, allowing the police to conduct protective sweeps whenever they do not know whether anyone else is inside a home creates an incentive for the police to stay ignorant as to whether or not anyone else is inside a house in order to conduct a protective sweep. Finally, and perhaps most importantly, allowing the police to justify a protective sweep on the ground that they had no information at all is directly contrary to the Supreme Court’s explicit command in Buie that the police have an articulable basis on which to support their reasonable suspicion of danger from inside the home. “No information” cannot be an articulable basis for a sweep that requires information to justify it in the first place.

...

Finally, we recognize that police officers have an incredibly difficult and dangerous task and are placed in life threatening situations on a regular basis. It would perhaps reduce the danger inherent in the job if we allowed the police to do whatever they felt necessary, whenever they needed to do it, in whatever manner required, in every situation in which they must act. However, there is a Fourth Amendment to the Constitution which necessarily forecloses this possibility. As long as it is in existence, police must carry out their often dangerous duties according to certain prescribed procedures, one of which has been transgressed here.

- (9) The “mere possession of a gun...no matter how grievous a crime, does not necessarily show exigent circumstances” and an arrestee’s own dangerousness is irrelevant to a protective sweep analysis once the arrestee is in custody: Sharrar v. Felsing, at 825. The mere physical capacity of a structure to harbour unseen occupants does not amount to an articulable threat to officer safety: U.S. v. Wigg, 662 F.2d 1325, 1330 (9th Cir. 1981).

[281] On the evidence, by the time Mr. N.M. was handcuffed, searched and in the ERT officers' cruiser, the police, who were no longer positioned near the bungalow, were aware of the following:

- (1) the TRU team reconnaissance and sniper units had seen only one person in the dwelling
- (2) there was no evidence of anyone else's vehicle in the driveway
- (3) the complainant and the children were at a family shelter and no one else was known to reside in the N.M. dwelling to the knowledge of the OPP
- (4) Mr. N.M.' firearms were registered and, according to Benoit and the complainant, the guns were securely stored
- (5) N.M. quickly exited his residence following the phonecall from the police negotiator
- (6) the negotiators considered that in the phonecall Mr. N.M. sounded calm, much as he had been described by Benoit
- (7) Mr. N.M. was compliant and cooperative with the TRU team arrest unit.

[282] Although Insp. Jones and McKinnon expressed the view that the use of a stealth clear is not an automatic response in a high-risk arrest situation at a dwelling, there is no confirmation of the discretionary nature of the stealth clear in the Force's standard operating procedures materials.

[283] Sgt. Penrose's experience suggested it was "rare" that his team was not directed to execute a stealth clear. It is evident from the TRU team officers' testimony that they assume the worst, and without the need for case-specific factors, act to achieve 100% confirmation that the arrestee has no armed accomplice, that no harmed party remains within the dwelling and that no trap has been set creating a risk to anyone entering the residence subsequent to the arrest.

[284] None of the witnesses, including Insp. Jones, could point to any information, evidence or articulable facts to support a reasonable suspicion that any public safety danger lurked in the arrestee's residence or that any injured party was inside. The authorization to enter and search the residence, intrusion upon Mr. N.M.' reasonable expectations of privacy in his dwelling, was premised exclusively on theoretical notions of public safety concerns. This is exactly the type of reasoning which Golub, Bedard, Buie and the relevant American cases would find to be constitutionally offensive.

[285] In the specific circumstances of this case, there was no reasonably necessary justification for the TRU team's warrantless entry into the dwelling and its ensuing and lengthy search of the entire residence. On March 20th, 2002, prior to the stealth clear, the police were possessed of no reasonable grounds to obtain a warrant to seize Mr. N.M.' firearms on account of unsafe storage. It was by virtue of the unconstitutional warrantless search that the TRU team discovered, and passed on to criminal investigators, information as to two unsafely stored firearms in the N.M. dwelling.

Consent Search

position of parties

[286] Ms. Cullen submitted that the consent given by Mr. N.M. on March 20th, 2002 to the seizure of his three registered handguns and the shotgun in the master bedroom closet was a valid and informed waiver of the accused's s. 8 Charter right:

- (1) Mr. N.M. was provided a timely opportunity to speak to counsel prior to the consent and exercised that right through multiple conversations with counsel
- (2) The idea of consent seizures was initiated by Mr. N.M. and his counsel.
- (3) At this point, the OPP already knew of the existence of Mr. N.M.' three handguns through registration records and the complainant. Given the domestic violence context of the assault charge, the police had an interest in curtailing Mr. N.M.' access to firearms. Given the accused's consent to seize the handgun in the bedroom closet, those executing such a consent would inevitably see the unsafely stored shotgun in the same closet.
- (4) The accused had a pre-existing back injury. He was not physically mistreated during his arrest. Although Mr. N.M.' medicine had yet to be retrieved for him at the time of the consent, the terms of the Wills consent and the active and cooperative participation of the accused as seen in the videotaped proceedings at the detachment, for example fine-tuning the descriptions of the locations of the relevant firearms after drawing floor diagrams of his residence, evidences awareness and comprehension of his circumstances.

- (5) Sgt. James corrected Mr. N.M.' apparent misapprehension regarding the seizure and removal of two firearms from his residence. There was no further obligation on the officer to inform the accused of the lack of a Feeney warrant or of the warrantless nature of the OPP actions the night before. In all the circumstances, and knowing the unsecured condition of some of the firearms, Mr. N.M. provided his consent.

[287] The defence disagrees that the evidence supports discharge by the Crown of its onus to establish a valid and informed consent:

- (1) Although Mr. N.M. had access to counsel, he was acting under a misapprehension as to facts critical to an informed decision to give consent to seize the four firearms. He believed that the police were aware of the unsafe storage of the closet firearms, subject to any future defence regarding their unsecured condition, on account of a lawful OPP entry to his dwelling. Sgt. James, who conducted part of the consent process off-camera, failed to provide information critical to N.M.' decision-making – that no Feeney or other lawful warrant existed or legal warrantless searches had been made onto his property and into his dwelling.
- (2) The object of the police agreement to the consent process was an unsafe firearm storage investigation. Had the true focus been domestic violence and firearms, Sgt. James would have sought to include the accused's other long guns in the consent document. The unsafe storage information in the hands of the OPP was the direct result of the unconstitutional, warrantless entry and search of the dwelling by the TRU team. The "cat was out of the bag" and, knowing the police were preparing a warrant the accused believed to be based on legally attained observations of alleged unsafe storage, he consented.

[288] Ms. Cullen submitted that the OPP searchers, once in the N.M. residence, did not stray beyond the spatial limits of the consent provided by Mr. N.M.. Counsel submitted that the tallest police officer to look in the master bedroom closet, Const. Dudzinski, saw the cross-bow in plain view on the top shelf. The item was not searched for nor was it seized. Crown counsel expressed the view that perhaps Det. Const. Manser was confused when, in her s. 117.04 affidavit, she sourced observation of the accused's gun locker to a sighting by Sgt. James during execution of the consent seizures.

[289] Mr. Brauti submitted that James and Dudzinski did not feel restrained by the terms of the consent document and searched beyond the constraints described in the consent. Counsel argued that Const. Dudzinski would not likely confuse the officers' actions on a two-officer consent search with those of a large body of searchers acting under a s. 117.04 public safety warrant. Mr. Brauti relies on the in-house seizure of the cross-bow, while the consent was being executed, as indicative of mis-execution of the consent and not a legitimate plain view sighting. Mr. N.M. testified that the item was behind a banker's box or boxes on the shelf. Sgt. Penrose, who thoroughly searched the closet, did not note the weapon's existence. Const. Dudzinski professes no recall of seeing the cross-bow.

findings/conclusions

[290] The Crown has established on balance that Mr. N.M. was physically and mentally capable of understanding the consent process. It was the accused and his counsel who initiated the discussion of consent seizures. I do not accept that Sgt. James intentionally deprived Mr. N.M. of his medication. Assuming the accused made the request for medication, Sgt. James clearly misunderstood what he wanted. In any event, Mr. N.M. drew diagrams of the locations of the firearms, participated in fine-tuning the written descriptions of their location, read and signed the consent, and was confident, composed and alert in his on-video discussions with Sgt. James. Mr. N.M. had a pre-existing back injury and was on medical leave from his employment. Any signs of discomfort or lack of full mobility, I am satisfied, relate to that injury not the circumstances of the arrest or the absence of medication.

[291] Consent, where constitutionally valid, removes any reasonable expectation of privacy consistent with the terms of the consent or waiver. In other words, "an individual's expectation of privacy cannot be infringed by conduct that has been authorized by the individual in question": Evans, at para. 12.

[292] Sgt. James understood that in securing a consent to seize from Mr. N.M. she should strive to comply with the benchmark guidelines set out by Doherty J.A. in R. v. Wills (1992), 1992 CanLII 2780 \(ON CA\), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 529 (Ont. C.A.) at 546-7. She was right to do so as the Wills criteria have served as a useful yardstick in ensuring government action in circumstances of an informed and valid waiver of s. 8 Charter rights. The Wills decision has received widespread acceptance: R. v. Borden (1994), 1994 CanLII 63 \(SCC\), 92 C.C.C. (3d) 404 (S.C.C.) at 416-7; R. v. Backhouse (2005), 2005 CanLII 4937 \(ON CA\), 194 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.) at 50-3; R. v. Perello (2005), 2005 SKCA 8 \(CanLII\), 193 C.C.C. (3d) 151 (Sask. C.A.) at 157-8; R. v. Nicholas (2004), 2004 CanLII 13008 \(ON CA\), 182 C.C.C. (3d) 393 (Ont. C.A.) at 407-8; R. v. G.(M.C.), [2001] M.J. No. 482 (C.A.) at para. 12-4.

[293] In his testimony, Mr. N.M. acknowledged that he had not been subject to any inducements or pressures in the consent process. Mr. N.M. had full access to counsel. The consent was voluntary. He understood the consequences included use as evidence in a careless storage prosecution. As a police officer, the accused knew the condition in which he had left his firearms and whether there was compliance or not with the Storage, Display, Transportation and Handling of Firearms by Individuals Regulations under the Firearms Act. In addition, the Wills form made specific reference to the officer's "investigation of unsafe storage of a firearm".

[294] The question for determination then is whether the consent was informed. In Borden, at 417, the court stated:

In order for a waiver of the right to be secure against an unreasonable seizure to be effective, the person purporting to consent must be possessed of the requisite informational foundation for a true relinquishment of the right. A right to choose requires not only the volition to prefer one option over another, but also sufficient available information to make the preference meaningful. This is equally true whether the individual is choosing to forego consultation with counsel or choosing to relinquish to the police something which they otherwise have no right to take.

(emphasis added)

[295] In Wills, the A.L.E.R.T. "warn" test result was communicated to the accused by the police. Unbeknownst to the police, the testing device had not been properly calibrated and was giving an erroneous reading. The test result, not a "fail" reading, was relied upon by Wills in agreeing to a breathalyzer test which yielded an over .08 reading. At page 548, the court held that this amounted to "misinformation" which significantly impaired Wills' understanding of the consequences of taking the test.

[296] In the Backhouse case, the accused was asked by the police whether he would submit to a test for gunshot residue on his hands. The officer informed Backhouse that the test would tell whether he had recently fired a gun. The accused was not told that the test could be positive because of transference even if he had not fired or handled a gun. At pages 52-3, the court found that, although the "misinformation...provided by the officer was inadvertent and innocent", it sufficiently impaired the accused's understanding of the consequences of the test so as to "negative the consent".

[297] In R. v. O'Connor (2002), 2002 CanLII 3540 \(ON CA\), 170 C.C.C. (3d) 365 (Ont. C.A.), the court reviewed consent to the search of a truck in a murder investigation. The police, who had no grounds for an arrest or a search warrant, persuaded O'Connor to consent in part by telling him that they "could apply for a warrant". At pages 389-390, the court held that the police, having raised the subject of getting a warrant without telling O'Connor they had no grounds to do so at that point, "likely misled the appellant about the consequences of refusing to give his consent” and that he therefore gave a consent “not made on the basis of proper information”.

[298] In the present case, from provincial firearms registration records, the authorities were aware of the existence of the three handguns identified in the consent. From the complainant and Benoit, the police knew Mr. N.M. was as well in possession of long guns and understood that all weapons were securely stored. However, until the TRU team effected its unconstitutional entry and search of the dwelling, Sgt. James had no reason to believe that an unsafe storage issue existed.

[299] The exact particulars of the pre-video discussions are unclear on the evidence and unfortunately were not recorded. It is apparent that Mr. N.M. knew the TRU team had been in his residence and seen the “closet firearms”. He did not know the precise authority by which they entered but, on his evidence, which I am not prepared to reject, had been told they did so legally. He learned from Sgt. James that the police were going to obtain a warrant to search his residence. In the face of that eventuality, and the police having seen two of the firearms already, and perhaps to serve his own purposes in limiting any police search of his premises, Mr. N.M. decided to be cooperative and consent to seizure of the closet firearms as well as the other two registered firearms. James was drafting a s. 487 warrant application. Given that the consent form refers to an unsafe storage of firearms investigation and that the officer did not seek to acquire N.M.’ long guns in the consent, the accused would reasonably believe that the warrant to search related not to public safety in domestic assault cases but solely to a criminal unsafe storage investigation.

[300] Whether described as misinformation that the police had legally discovered the firearms in the closet or an omission to inform Mr. N.M. that the TRU team entry and search was not authorized by law, though unappreciated by Sgt. James, I am satisfied on balance that the accused did not have the requisite informational foundation to give an informed consent. Put differently, the Crown has not established, on balance, that the accused would have provided the consent had he been aware that the unsafe storage information had come to the attention of the authorities as a result of a s. 8 Charter breach. I am unable to interpret Ms. Mulchay’s in-court comments as foreclosing this conclusion.

[301] A consent search or seizure must be confined to the terms and limits of the authorizing consent: R. v. Smith (1998), 1998 ABCA 418 \(CanLII\), 126 C.C.C. (3d) 62 (Alta. C.A.) at 70-1. The Crown’s submission that Sgt. James and Const. Dudzinski obeyed the limits of the consent is not, on balance, made out on the evidence. Leaving aside Sgt. James’ testimonial use of language of having conducted a consent search as opposed to consent seizures, and leaving aside Dudzinski’s retracted evidence, Sgt. James’ evidence that execution of the consent involved no searching activity beyond that strictly incidental to finding and removing the identified firearms is contradicted in two respects.

[302] Mr. N.M. testified that the small cross-bow was concealed behind a bankers box on the top shelf of the closet. The Crown acknowledges such a box was on the shelf. Sgt. Penrose, conducting a methodical search including for weapons, made no note of seeing a cross-bow in the closet. Const. Dudzinski claims no memory of discovering a cross-bow. Finally, Sgt. James' affidavit and in-court evidence on the point are inconsistent as to whether she observed the item on the shelf. The totality of the evidence suggests that Const. Dudzinski was searching the top shelf and not encountering something in plain view.

[303] A person has no reasonable expectation of privacy in things exposed to plain view: R. v. Boersma (1994), 1994 CanLII 99 \(SCC\), 31 C.R. (4th) 386 (S.C.C.) at 387. A "central" feature of the plain view doctrine is "a prior justification for the intrusion into the place" where the plain view occurred: Buhay, at 114; R. v. Longtin (1983), 1983 CanLII 1746 \(ON CA\), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 12 (Ont. C.A.) at 16. Inevitably, in executing a lawful consent, the police will be in a position to make plain view observations. Sgt. James and Const. Dudzinski were lawfully positioned at the master bedroom closet in order to seize two of the firearms described in the consent. The plain view doctrine confers a seizure power not a search power. It does not permit "an exploratory search to find other evidence": R. v. Fawthrop (2002), 2002 CanLII 45004 \(ON CA\), 166 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (Ont. C.A.) at 115 (approving R. v. Spindloe (2001), 2001 SKCA 58 \(CanLII\), 154 C.C.C. (3d) 8 (Sask. C.A.) at 37).

[304] In other words, Const. Dudzinski was not at liberty to rummage on the top shelf or move the box – such conduct would be at odds with finding an item in plain view or "immediately obvious": Law, at 462.

[305] Given that the firearm to be seized in the basement was at the bottom of the stairs in the rafters, the Crown agreed that the searchers should not have been in a position to make observations of the gun locker in a separate room. Sgt. James' affidavit, however, states that she saw the gun locker during the attendance at the N.M. home pursuant to the consent authorization. Det. Const. Manser's public safety warrant application states that she learned from Sgt. James' attendance that "the gun vault was locked" – some evidence that James checked the locker on March 19th.

[306] These examples, illegitimate plain view observations, tend to confirm Dudzinski's retracted testimony of a broader search conducted on March 20th, 2002. On the whole of the evidence, I am not satisfied that the limits of the consent were honoured.

Public Safety Warrant

position of parties

[307] Mr. Brauti noted that s. 117.04 of the Code, the enabling legislation for Det. Const. Manser's public safety warrant, was declared unconstitutional about four months after the officer's search. Counsel accepted, however, that Det. Const. Manser's affidavit was drafted in such a way as to eliminate the constitutional defect in the Hurrell decision. Ms. Cullen concurred with this view.

[308] The defence submitted that Det. Const. Manser, as an affiant tendering an application for a warrant, was legally obliged to present a full, fair and frank account of the relevant narrative and circumstances integral to the statement of grounds of belief. Mr. Brauti argued that Det. Const. Manser, though aware of the warrantless actions and observations of the TRU team and the absence of a Feeney warrant, failed to disclose those facts in her affidavit. It is argued that this amounted to material non-disclosure denying the issuing justice the opportunity to critically review the warrant application by the same police force which had engaged in unreasonable warrantless searches at the identical premises sought to be searched with the public safety warrant. Counsel submitted that without the evidence of the TRU team observations in N.M.' dwelling, and Sgt. James' discovery of the cross-bow, the complainant's information would not alone satisfy the test for issuance of a public safety warrant – otherwise, every domestic assault case with (a) registered firearm(s) in the house would attract such warrants as opposed to the less intrusive and more common measure of an ordered surrender of firearms as a condition of bail. And here, it was argued, with two unconstitutional searches of the residence already, on March 20th (TRU team) and March 21st (consent), the court would likely exercise its discretion to decline the public safety warrant.

[309] In response, Ms. Cullen noted that Det. Const. Manser disclosed the stealth clear in her affidavit. It was argued that the evidence does not clearly establish that Manser recognized that the actions of the TRU team were unconstitutional. It is unlikely she did if Insp. Jones did not. Further, assuming the TRU team conduct to have been unconstitutional, it is argued that the case cannot be made for suggesting that Manser ought to have known its conduct to have been offensive to s. 8 of the Charter. Crown counsel submitted that there was no obligation on Manser's part to include in her affidavit reference to the lack of a Feeney warrant. Finally, Ms. Cullen submitted that redacting the information the defence alleges to have been unconstitutionally obtained, the facts learned from the complainant and Benoit would have supported issuance of the public safety warrant in this case.

[310] Mr. Brauti further submitted that Det. Const. Manser's affidavit contained ambiguity, improperly sourced grounds for suggesting N.M. posed a risk, and non-disclosure of information relevant to the existence of a real or urgent public safety issue. For example, para. 28 and 29 of the affidavit, respectively referring to Mr. N.M.' preparedness to shoot any officer coming to his door and to the Kirec situation, were presented as having time-present relevance although the affiant had no idea of the exact words spoken by N.M., or their context, or the timing of those statements. If Manser had no idea of the age of the statements by N.M. she ought to have said so. Further, the affidavit failed to disclose that as of the evening of March 19th the OPP knew Mr. N.M. was not suicidal and that at 3:30 p.m. that day, a TPS ETF officer, Benoit, considered N.M. to be calm just eight to nine hours before the accused cooperatively surrendered to the TRU team.

[311] Ms. Cullen submitted that a fair reading of Det. Const. Manser's affidavit does not reveal any representations of timelines for the utterances attributed to Mr. N.M..

[312] Mr. Brauti argued that in furtherance of her obligations as an affiant, Det. Const. Manser ought to have disclosed in her affidavit particulars of the approaches of the STF officers while she was drafting that affidavit. The Crown was not called upon to respond to this submission.

findings/conclusions

[313] Only a few months after the issuance of the public safety warrant, s. 117.04 was found to suffer from substantive constitutional defects: R. v. Hurrell (2002), 2002 CanLII 45007 \(ON CA\), 166 C.C.C. (3d) 343 (Ont. C.A.) (notice of discontinuance filed [2002] S.C.C.A. No. 370). Apart from the fact that the police were entitled to rely on the law as it was at the date of the warrant application (Kokesch, at 230-1), Det. Const. Manser's affidavit met the transitional standard set by Hurrell during the period of the suspended declaration of invalidity.

[314] Before turning to the sufficiency of the grounds of belief for the issuance of the public safety warrant, something should be said about the appropriate scope of review.

[315] With a challenge to a warranted search, the reviewing court is not entitled to substitute its decision for the issuing justice. Rather, the court is obliged to determine whether the decision of the judicial officer is one he or she could reasonably and judicially have reached in the exercise of discretion to issue the warrant: R. v. Garofoli (1990), 1990 CanLII 52 \(SCC\), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 161 (S.C.C.) at 188; Quebec (Attorney General) v. Laroche (2002), 2002 SCC 72 \(CanLII\), 169 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (S.C.C.) at 126-7; R. v. Le, [2006] B.C.J. No. 2698 (C.A.) at para. 8-9; R. v. Al-Maliki, 2005 BCCA 157 \(CanLII\), [2005] B.C.J. No. 568 (C.A.) at para. 19; R. v. Budd (2000), 2000 CanLII 17014 \(ON CA\), 150 C.C.C. (3d) 108 (Ont. C.A.) at 117 (leave to appeal refused [2001] 1 S.C.R. vii); R. v. Church of Scientology (No. 6) (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 449 (Ont. C.A.) at 494 (leave to appeal refused [1989] 1 S.C.R. vii); Re Print Three Inc. et al. and the Queen (1985), 1985 CanLII 2073 \(ON CA\), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 392 (Ont. C.A.) at 397-8.

[316] The appropriate approach for judicial review of the facial validity of a search warrant and related ITO is scrutiny of the whole of the document, not a limited focus upon an isolated passage or paragraph. Reference to all data within the four corners of the information, a common sense review not line-by-line word-by-word dissection, provides the fair and reasonable context for the assertions in question: R. v. Grant (1999), 1999 CanLII 3694 \(ON CA\), 132 C.C.C. (3d) 531 (Ont. C.A.) at 543 (leave to appeal refused [1999] S.C.C.A. No. 168); R. v. Chan, 1998 CanLII 5765 \(ON CA\), [1998] O.J. No. 4536 (C.A.) at para. 4; R. v. Melenchuk and Rahemtulla, [1993] B.C.J. No. 558 (C.A.) at para. 15-18; R. v. Sisimonyi Gindele et al. v. British Columbia (Attorney General) (1991), 1991 CanLII 984 \(BC CA\), 2 B.C.A.C. 73 at 79.

[317] I disagree with the Crown's submission that where text of grounds of belief in an ITO is sufficient to support issuance of the warrant, on the basis that the statutory prerequisites are met, that no discretion exists to decline to issue the warrant. In Descoteaux v. Mierzewski et al. (1982), 1982 CanLII 22 \(SCC\), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 385 (S.C.C.) at 410, the court stated:

Some say that the justice of the peace has no discretion to refuse to issue a search warrant or to impose terms of execution once the requirements of form and substance in s. 443 [487] have been met. They argue that in s. 443 the word "may" means "must" and does not confer any discretion. According to this interpretation, the justice of the peace may issue a warrant only if he is satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that one of the things provided for in s. 443(1) is to be found in the place sought to be searched, but must do so as soon as he is so satisfied, and the only condition of execution on the premises that he may impose is set out in s. 444 of the Code:

444. A warrant issued under section 443 shall be executed by day, unless the justice, by the warrant, authorizes execution of it by night.

Others, on the contrary, say that generally the justice of the peace has the discretion to refuse the warrant, so long as this discretion is exercised judicially and so long as the decision to refuse the warrant is not capricious or arbitrary: R. F. Carter, The Law Relating to Search Warrants (1939), p. 52; J. A. Fontana, The Law of Search Warrants in Canada (1974), pp. 7 and 51 et seq.; Re Pacific Press Ltd. and The Queen et al. (1977), 1977 CanLII 1922 \(BC SC\), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 487, 38 C.R.N.S. 295, [1977] 5 W.W.R. 507.

I come down on the side of the discretion, as it allows more effective judicial control of the police. Searches are an exception to the oldest and most fundamental principles of the common law, and as such the power to search should be strictly controlled.

[318] Similarly, in A.-G. Quebec v. C.B.C. (1991), 1991 CanLII 49 \(SCC\), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 517 (S.C.C.) at 533, the court observed that:

Even after the statutory conditions have been met it may still be a difficult and complex process to determine whether a search warrant should be issued.

See also C.B.C. v. A.-G. for New Brunswick et al. (1991), 1991 CanLII 50 \(SCC\), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 544 (S.C.C.) at 552, 554. The existence of "a residual discretion is a constitutional requirement": R. v. Baron (1993) 1993 CanLII 154 \(SCC\), 78 C.C.C. (3d) 510 (S.C.C.) at 522-8. Accordingly, in the balancing of interests, individual privacy interests and an effective investigatory function, the justice cannot act as a mere "rubberstamp": Araujo, at 464; Baron, at 526.

[319] In summary form, the principal requirements of a search warrant application are as follows:

- (1) The application must disclose reasonable grounds or credibly-based probability regarding the essential statutory prerequisites. This standard of reasonable probability does not equate to proof beyond a reasonable doubt or to a prima facie case: R. v. Debot (1989), 1989 CanLII 13 \(SCC\), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 193 (S.C.C.) at 213. Accordingly, reasonable grounds “are not proof absolute” though they must be more than mere suspicion: Smith, at 77.
- (2) In R. v. Durling (2006), 2006 NSCA 124 \(CanLII\), 214 C.C.C. (3d) 49 (N.S.C.A.) at 56-7, the court set out a non-exhaustive list of the key elements of what must be shown to establish credibly-based probability:
 - (i) The Information to obtain the warrant must set out sworn evidence sufficient to establish reasonable grounds for believing that an offence has been committed, that the things to be searched for will afford evidence and that the things in question will be found at a specified place: (R. v. Sanchez (1994), 1994 CanLII 5271 \(ON SC\), 93 C.C.C. (3d) 357 (Ont. Ct. Gen. Div.) at 365).
 - (ii) The Information to obtain as a whole must be considered and peace officers, who generally will prepare these documents without legal assistance, should not be held to the “specificity and legal precision expected of pleadings at the trial stage.” (Sanchez, supra, at 364)
 - (iii) The affiant’s reasonable belief does not have to be based on personal knowledge, but the Information to obtain must, in the totality of circumstances, disclose a substantial basis for the existence of the affiant’s belief: R. v. Yorke (1992), 1992 CanLII 2521 \(NS CA\), 115 N.S.R. (2d) 426 (C.A.); aff’d 1993 CanLII 83 \(SCC\), [1993] 3 S.C.R. 647.
 - (iv) Where the affiant relies on information obtained from a police informer, the reliability of the information must be apparent and is to be assessed in light of the totality of the circumstances. The relevant principles were stated by Sopinka, J. in R. v. Garofoli, 1990 CanLII 52 \(SCC\), [1990] 2 S.C.R. 1421 at pp. 1456-1457:
 - (i) Hearsay statements of an informant can provide reasonable and probable grounds to justify a search. However, evidence of a tip from an informer, by itself, is insufficient to establish reasonable and probable grounds.
 - (ii) The reliability of the tip is to be assessed by recourse to “the totality of the circumstances”. There is no formulaic test as to what this entails. Rather, the court must look to a variety of factors including:
 - (a) the degree of detail of the “tip”;
 - (b) the informer’s source of knowledge;

- (c) indicia of the informer's reliability such as past performance or confirmation from other investigative sources.
- (iii) The results of the search cannot, ex post facto, provide evidence of reliability of the information.

The fundamental point is that these specific propositions define the basic justification for the search: the existence of "credibly-based" probability that an offence has been committed and that there is evidence of it to be found in the place of search.

- (3) It is imperative that there exist a basis for issuance "founded on reliable information": Araujo, at 471.
- (4) The ITO ought to be clear and concise and "need not include every minute detail of the police investigation": C.B.C. v. A.-G. for New Brunswick et al., at 562; Araujo, at 470.

[320] Because a search warrant application is generally an ex parte application, there is a "legal obligation" to provide "full and frank disclosure of material facts" with the relevant facts set out "truthfully, fully and plainly": Araujo, at 469-470 (emphasis of original). A justice can only perform the judicial function of issuing a warrant if "provided with accurate and candid information": R. v. Hosie (1996), 1996 CanLII 450 \(ON CA\), 107 C.C.C. (3d) 385 (Ont. C.A.) at 399; R. v. Agensys International Inc. (2004), 2004 CanLII 17920 \(ON CA\), 187 C.C.C. (3d) 481 (Ont. C.A.) at 491. The "requirement of candour is not difficult to understand; there is nothing technical about it": R. v. Morris (1998), 1998 NSCA 229 \(CanLII\), 134 C.C.C. (3d) 539 (N.S.C.A.) at 551. An affiant for a warranted search is under a duty to avoid drafting which attempts to trick the reader, for example by the use of boiler-plate language, or which could mislead the court "by language used or strategic omissions": Araujo, at 470. Careless language in an ITO "deprives the judicial officer of the opportunity to fairly assess whether the requirements of a warrant have been met" and "strikes at the core of the administration of justice": Hosie, at 398-9.

[321] An aspect of an affiant's disclosure obligation is to reveal, not to conceal, any unconstitutional investigative step by which the authorities have secured information relevant to the ongoing investigation: Grant (S.C.C.), at 196-7; R. v. Creelman, [2007] N.S.J. No. 174 (C.A.) at para. 28-36. As a general rule, it does not lie with the police to not disclose on the basis that they are confident that the misconduct is irrelevant because of an independent source for the information, inevitable discovery or attenuation. The court considering the warrant application will itself make the determination of the relevance of the pre-application behaviour. The disclosure may be relevant not only to the discretion to issue/refuse a warrant but also to whether the justice asks for more information (Araujo, at 464) or considers the imposition of conditions relating to execution of the warrant: Baron, at 526.

[322] The existence of fraud, non-disclosure, misleading information, unconstitutionally obtained facts, new evidence, or the omission of facts material to the exercise of discretion to issue a warrant are all relevant to review of a warrant and relate to whether there continues to be any basis for the decision of the authorizing judge: Garofoli, at para. 56. Ordinarily, the reviewing court looks to the remaining grounds of belief in an ITO after redaction of the offensive text, or in the case of an omission with the addition of the relevant missing fact(s), in order to determine whether there is a basis upon which the court could have issued the warrant: R. v. Bisson (1994), 1994 CanLII 46 (SCC), 94 C.C.C. (3d) 94 (S.C.C.) at 95-6; Araujo, at 471-2; R. v. Wiley (1993), 1993 CanLII 69 (SCC), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 161 (S.C.C.) at 170-2; R. v. Kesselring (2000), 2000 CanLII 2457 (ON CA), 145 C.C.C. (3d) 119 (Ont. C.A.) at 123. “In this way, the state is prevented from benefitting from the illegal acts of the police officers, without being forced to sacrifice search warrants which would have been issued in any event”: Plant, at 215; Smith, at 76.

[323] That said, a reviewing judge is not foreclosed, in appropriate circumstances, “from concluding on the totality of the circumstances that the conduct of the police in seeking prior authorization was so subversive of that process that the resulting warrant must be set aside to protect the process and the preventive function it serves”: Morris, at 553 (passage approved in Araujo, at 473); Creelman, at para. 36; R. v. Colbourne (2001), 2001 CanLII 4711 (ON CA), 157 C.C.C. (3d) 273 (Ont. C.A.) at para. 40; Kesselring, at 127-8; R. v. Dellapenna (1995), 1995 CanLII 428 (BC CA), 62 B.C.A.C. 32 at para. 50; R. v. Donaldson (1990), 1990 CanLII 630 (BC CA), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 294 (B.C.C.A.) at 310-312.

[324] Det. Const. Manser presented as a credible witness. I did not understand either party to suggest otherwise. At one level, the officer understood that prior investigative steps, if warrantless, ought to be disclosed in a warrant application. The officer’s affidavit speaks of the police “surrounding the residence” and entering the N.M. home after the arrest for safety reasons. I have no sense that in drafting her affidavit, Manser considered that the actions of the TRU team or that Sgt. James’ consent seizures engaged any unconstitutional behaviour on the part of the police. In this sense, her omission of the warrantless character of the TRU team actions is entirely inadvertent and not an attempt to mislead the justice.

[325] I accept that Det. Const. Manser included in her affidavit the TRU team stealth clear sightings of the unsafely stored firearms in the closet, the sighting of the cross-bow “found” by Sgt. James, and the discovery of a locked gun cabinet at a location in the residence basement. All of this information, as already described, is the product of police actions infringing N.M.’ s. 8 Charter right. I note, however, that Manser disclosed that she learned independently of the locked gun locker in the basement from Sgt. James’ report of speaking with the complainant.

[326] In addition, Det. Const. Manser did not include the belief expressed by Sgt. James that Mr. N.M. was not suicidal. The reference to Benoit leaving the accused calm in the morning of March 19th, 2002 was incorrect as Benoit left the N.M. home at 3:30 p.m. that day. It is not apparent that this information had been passed on, or accurately reported, to Manser. The correct information would have been relevant to the case for issuance of a s. 117.04 warrant.

[327] Det. Const. Manser included in para. 28 of her affidavit, immediately after a sentence stating that Mr. N.M. was “presently” on injury leave, that the complainant stated that the accused “made comments to her that “I am a cop. I know what to do. They will never get me out of the house””. This is in the “Synopsis” or narrative overview part of the affidavit and is not otherwise sourced to the “Witnesses” section of the affidavit commencing at para. 35. It is therefore not apparent that Manser spoke to Const. Tardiff or the complainant herself. There is no context or timing of the statement attributed to N.M. except for the possible inference of recentness arising from the text of the prior sentence. The reference to N.M.’ statement is ambiguous, potentially stale, ambiguously sourced, and as such, of little probative value on the relevant safety concerns. I do not, however, find that Manser intended to mislead the issuing justice in this respect.

[328] Again, para. 29 in the Synopsis section and in particular its reference to the Kirec incident, is not directly sourced “to the Witnesses” section of the affidavit and is without context or precision of words spoken and ambiguous as to time of utterance. I find that this was not intended as misleading drafting.

[329] In light of these comments, it is first necessary, as submitted by Ms. Cullen, to consider whether the text of Det. Const. Manser’s grounds of belief backing out the references to the TRU team’s observations of the unsafely stored firearms and Sgt. James’ sighting of the cross-bow, and ignoring the above-described statements attributed to Mr. N.M., and adding Sgt. James’ information about the accused not being suicidal, and correcting the reference to Benoit leaving in the morning, would afford a sufficient basis for concluding that the public safety warrant, in any event, could have issued. I find the answer to this narrow inquiry to be in the affirmative considering the existence of additional long guns as disclosed by Benoit and the complainant, as well as the references in Manser’s affidavit sourced to the complainant of a long history of alleged physical abuse with an assault as recently as March 4th, 2002, and the accused’s withdrawn state in the prior two weeks “holed up” in the basement suggestive of potential mental health concerns, and the undated but stark threat that if the complainant tried to leave him he would kill her, the children and her family.

[330] The further question then becomes whether it would have been a reasonable exercise of discretion to issue the protective warrant as opposed to leaving the issue of the surrender of the additional long guns (believed securely stored in the locked gun vault) to the court considering judicial interim release. Factors to consider include that Mr. N.M. was in custody, that s. 117.04 warrants are rarely used in domestic violence cases (James and Manser had never before used the procedure), bail conditions are most commonly used to secure surrender of legally possessed firearms, and that the justice was unaware of the unconstitutional infringement of privacy over the prior two days. Excluding the unconstitutional sighting of the cross-bow, there were no grounds on March 21st to believe any other weapons beyond the long guns existed. As noted in Buhay, at page 113, just because privacy has been invaded once “does not mean that any subsequent violations will be permissible” unless reasonable in the circumstances. In these circumstances, even with the statutory prerequisites met for issuance of a public safety warrant, had the justice been aware of the unconstitutional entries on March 19th and 20th, he/she would not likely have exercised a discretion to issue the s. 117.04 warrant. In this case, because the answer to this question merges in many respects with the application of s. 24(2) of the Charter dealing with causative and temporally proximate Charter breaches, I intend to analyze the issue in the context of the s. 24(2) discussion.

Section 487 Code Warrant

Branton error

position of parties

[331] The defence relied upon the Branton error on the face of Det. Sgt. Lowry’s ITO and warrant with the ITO directed to a search for evidence regarding an alleged completed conspiracy while the warrant itself included in its scope a search respecting the suspected or intended commission of an offence.

[332] Mr. Coroza acknowledged the facial defect in the warrant materials but submitted that the severance doctrine could serve to save the warrant. Counsel emphasized that Det. Lowry, working under circumstances of urgency, did not deliberately use the defective forms – unlike the correct TPS forms, those provided by the OPP were invalid.

findings/conclusions

[333] In R. v. Branton (2001), 2001 CanLII 8535 \(ON CA\), 154 C.C.C. (3d) 139 (Ont. C.A.) at p. 156, the court stated:

An additional ground for quashing the warrants that was argued before the motions judge was whether the search warrants were invalid on their face for failure to comply with s. 487 of the Criminal Code. The search warrants purport to authorize the search and seizure of “things...that are being sought as evidence in respect of the commission, suspected commission or intended commission of an offence against the Radiocommunications Act...” [Emphasis added]. The warrant was issued pursuant to s. 487 \(1\)\(b\) of the Criminal Code. That section limits a search to “evidence with respect to the commission of an offence”. In authorizing a search for evidence of the “suspected or intended commission” of an offence, the warrants exceeded the authority prescribed in s. 487.

[334] The Crown accepts that Det. Lowry’s warrant suffers from the same facial defect.

[335] Mr. Coroza relied on R. v. Jacobson, [2004] O.J. No. 933 (S.C.J.) at para. 44-57 as authority for consideration of the warrant’s validity applying the severability doctrine to delete the words “suspected commission or intended commission”. I am not inclined to do so for the following reasons. The court in Branton did not raise the prospect of curing such a facial validity defect by severance. Authorized searchers read the Form 5 warrant not the ITO. Apparent conferral of searching and seizing authority exceeding what is properly supported by grounds in the ITO improperly risks overly broad conduct at the scene of the search thereby implicating Mr. N.M.’ s. 8 Charter right to be free from search by invalid court orders.

[336] How Det. Lowry came to use the defective warrant form, and whether its execution in fact resulted in over-seizure beyond the limits of s. 487 (1)(b), are matters properly considered on a s. 24(2) Charter analysis.

night search error

position of parties

[337] Mr. Brauti submitted that the s. 487 warrant to search was also facially deficient for its non-compliance with s. 488 of the Code. After the issuing justice signed the warrant, he endorsed authorization for a night search in the absence of sworn grounds of belief in the ITO justifying a night search.

[338] Mr. Coroza again seeks to invoke the severance principle arguing that the departure of the searchers from the N.M. property during the day means that no search by night, though authorized, ultimately occurred.

findings/conclusions

[339] Section 488 of the Code provides:

A warrant issued under s. 487 or 487.1 shall be executed by day, unless

- (a) the justice is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for it to be executed by night;
- (b) the reasonable grounds are included in the information; and
- (c) the warrant authorizes that it be executed by night.

[340] Contrary to paragraph 488(b), Det. Lowry’s ITO contained no grounds attempting to justify a search at night defined in s. 2 of the Code as between 9:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. In drafting his ITO, Lowry understood that his search for a discrete list of things to be searched for would, in short order, be undertaken by a party of searching officers. The lack of a request and stated grounds for a night search was not an oversight.

[341] A s. 487 Code warrant “normally must be executed during the day”: Genest, at 405. Here no reasonable grounds existed for a night search, authority considered appropriate only in “exceptional circumstances”: Sutherland at 241. The reasons advanced by the issuing justice of urgency, seriousness of the situation, search of a vacant dwelling, and possible exigencies, do not amount to justifications reasonably related to the duration of the pending search or to the facts of the case. Even if reasonable grounds existed for a night search, an endorsement of such authority on the Form 5 warrant must be accompanied by sworn grounds in support in the Form 1 ITO.

[342] The authorization of a night search in non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of s. 488, and indeed without any grounds supporting such a search, amounts to a substantive facial defect in the warrant. In my view, the doctrine of severability cannot operate to save the validity of the warrant. Improper conferral of warrant authority to search the accused’s dwelling at night, and entry onto the property with such an order, amounts to a serious s. 8 Charter breach. Whether the police exercised the night search power is properly a s. 24(2) Charter consideration.

non-disclosure in ITO

position of parties

[343] The defence, as in its submissions respecting the public safety warrant, argued that Manser, now a sub-affiant for the s. 487 warrant, failed in her duty to Lowry and in turn Lowry, as the affiant, failed in his duty to be full, fair and frank with the court through non-disclosure of the full circumstances of the warrantless actions of the OPP on March 19th to 21st, 2002. Mr. Brauti points to Det. Lowry’s testimony that, had he known of these matters, he would have included them in his ITO pursuant to his understanding of his duty to the court as an affiant.

[344] Mr. Coroza, adopting much of Ms. Cullen’s argument on this point respecting the public safety warrant, submitted that there was no reason for Det. Lowry to be alerted to any potentially unconstitutional behaviour on the part of the OPP based on the information he learned from Manser. Because his was an entirely separate investigation, it is argued, he could simply have commenced the narrative in his grounds of belief at the point of Manser’s report of her observations of TPS property during the execution of the presumptively valid s. 117.04 warrant at the N.M. residence.

[345] Mr. Brauti vigorously submitted that the failure of Det. Lowry’s ITO to disclose the prior attempt of STF agents to co-opt Manser into participation in a warrantless search of the N.M. residence amounted to material non-disclosure at the level of bad faith and fraudulent behaviour. Mr. Brauti described the earlier STF actions as both unlawful and unconstitutional. In this hearing, Lowry, recognizing the seriousness of Manser's allegations, full well knew the necessity for disclosure of significant investigative malfeasance. Counsel, however, accepts Lowry's credibility in terms of his lack of actual awareness or wilful blindness regarding the March 20th conduct of Evans and others. That said, the defence argued that Det. Const. Manser failed in her duty as a sub-affiant for the s. 487 warrant by not informing Lowry of the STF attempts to engage in a warrantless search. Mr. Brauti submitted that Evans, as a sub-affiant, certainly had a duty to disclose the STF approach to Lowry but, for self-serving reasons, failed to do so. Counsel challenges Det. Sgt. Scott's credibility as a witness arguing that he was knowledgeable of the STF interaction with Manser and, like Evans and others unknown, deliberately withheld disclosure of the unlawful conduct from Lowry. It is submitted that the STF, qua institution, must be held to account for the non-disclosure. Had the issuing justice been apprised of the full facts, he would have exercised his discretion not to issue the warrant.

[346] Mr. Coroza submitted that any non-disclosure by Lowry's sub-affiants did not add or detract from the existence of reasonable grounds for believing that Mr. N.M. was in possession of TPS property relevant to the alleged unlawful conspiracy. Accepting, as the defence does, that Manser did not mis-execute her public safety warrant in the sense of improperly using the authority conferred by that warrant to search for property in which the STF had an interest, and that Evans and others did not glean any investigative facts through their thwarted attempts at warrantless searches, then the actions of those STF agents are irrelevant to any statutory precondition for the issuance of the s. 487 warrant. Crown counsel maintained that Manser hid nothing – she reported the STF conduct to her supervisor and reasonably concluded from her phonecall with Scott and Scott's subsequent attendance at the detachment with Lowry, that Lowry was aware of the prior STF actions. Counsel pointed to Scott's evidence that he was unaware of the earlier STF conduct. Mr. Coroza alternatively argued that even if the Lowry ITO reflects improper, material non-disclosure, Lowry cannot be in a worse position than an affiant who has engaged in fraudulent conduct in an ITO. In other words, abuse of process arguments aside, the non-disclosure stands as one factor only in the assessment of whether the warrant could have issued.

findings/conclusions

[347] I agree with Mr. Coroza's submissions that there was nothing known to Det. Lowry about the warrantless searches/seizures by the OPP which ought to have alerted him to ask more questions about the lawfulness of that Force's evidence-gathering procedures. In terms of Manser's role as a sub-affiant, as already stated respecting the public safety warrant, she was unaware of the unconstitutional nature of any of any steps taken by other officers and accordingly engaged in no deliberate non-disclosure. Mr. Coroza is quite correct that Det. Lowry's narrative of grounds of belief could have simply commenced with Det. Const. Manser's report of her observations of TPS property during execution of the public safety warrant.

[348] Given that there are other serious problems with the s. 487 Code warrant, I do not intend at this point to deal further with any impact on the s. 8 Charter analysis of the impugned OPP conduct on the validity of Det. Lowry's warrant.

[349] The Crown did not dispute the credibility of Det. Const. Manser's account of events the evening of March 20th, 2002. Manser, as said, presented as a highly believable witness.

[350] Carlson, Evans and other STF officers arrived from Toronto unannounced and unexpectedly at the small Dufferin detachment of the OPP. It was in the evening. The reason for their presence was not apparent to Manser. Evans and a second officer came to the crime office where she was alone working on her affidavit. She was out-ranked and out-numbered. The STF had no grounds to conduct a search of the accused's home. Evans, who Det. Sgt. Scott knew to be capable of bullying and threatening, attempted to pressure Det. Const. Manser to use her warrant authority at the N.M. property to give the STF a warrantless opportunity to surreptitiously determine whether anything of interest to the STF investigation could be located in the N.M. dwelling. Evans was persistent and bullying. With Manser's steadfast resistance, the attempts to circumvent the warrant process proved unsuccessful.

[351] Det. Sgt. Scott was eager to characterize the approaches described by Manser as likely equivalent to nothing more than harmless chit-chat about investigative options or discussion of strategy by officers unversed in the law regarding search warrants. Det. Lowry, who everyone considered credible, quite accurately testified that "any investigator" would recognize the impropriety of the suggestions by Evans. Det. Const. Manser also correctly considered the actions of the STF officers to be over the line and unlawful.

[352] Manser reported the matter to her immediate supervisor. She explained to Det. Scott, in the March 21st, phonecall, the OPP opposition to using their warrant to provide the STF access to the N.M. home. As a result of that call, and Scott's presence the following day at her detachment with Lowry, Det. Const. Manser reasonably believed that Det. Lowry would be knowledgeable of the STF actions of March 20th. In these circumstances, Manser cannot be faulted for not reporting these matters to Lowry.

[353] On the totality of the evidence, I am in agreement with Mr. Brauti's submissions regarding Det. Sgt. Scott's credibility. The officer claimed to have no idea how St. Sgt. Carlson knew of the OPP preparing a warrant or whether firm arrangements had been made for a STF briefing of the OPP on March 21st. The witness was argumentative, unresponsive and consistently minimized any suggestion of misconduct attributed to the STF during questioning. Manser described her perception that Scott's phonecall was an apology of sorts. Mr. Brauti described it as a damage control manoeuvre with the taping designed in the aftermath of outrageous behaviour by STF officers to protectively record the STF as working to keep pre-search distance from the OPP. But, in the call, Det. Const. Manser raised the subject matter of the earlier STF approach. Scott sought no clarification despite his claims that he tape-recorded the call to have a permanent record of the STF keeping distance from the OPP search. The witness unconvincingly explained his reasons for not seeking clarification.

[354] Det. Sgt. Scott selected Det. Lowry to prepare the s. 487 warrant materials on behalf of the STF. Lowry testified, and I accept, that STF colleagues had built a “wall” around him in terms of keeping information from him. To some extent, on the evidentiary record here, Lowry was promoted as a “straw man” affiant apparently deliberately kept in the dark about the attempts of other STF officers to circumvent the warrant process. Scott accepted he was a sub-affiant for Lowry. So was Evans. Neither Scott, nor Evans, nor any other STF investigator involved in the attempt to have Manser participate in actions violating Mr. N.M.’ reasonable expectations of privacy in his dwelling told Lowry of the attempt to search without warrant. On the record here, I tend to agree with Lowry that the actions of Evans and his associate(s) may well have amounted to discreditable conduct and counselling mis-execution of process contrary to s. 128 of the Code.

[355] As noted earlier, as a general rule, an affiant has a duty to be forthright and honest in an ITO. In turn, a peace officer sub-affiant has a similar duty with respect to the ITO affiant including disclosure of material facts relevant to the investigative history insofar as they may be relevant to the pending search warrant application. Interestingly, Det. Const. Manser’s public safety warrant affidavit contained a clause, commonly seen in ITO’s:

I believe the information provided to me by my fellow officers to be accurate as it is part of their legal and moral obligations to convey accurate information as part of their duties.

Det. Lowry stated at para. 5 of his ITO:

I have personal information of the matters here-in-after deposed to as a result of... information provided to me by other police officers. Where the information has been received by me, from those people, I truly believe such information because those individuals were acting in the execution of their duties at the time they obtained the information.

In Debot, at page 215, in setting out guidelines respecting information received by the police, Wilson J. asked whether the information “originating from a source outside the police, was...credible”. We presume a trust level regarding sub-affiant investigators: “A police investigation is an example of teamwork and each member of the team is entitled to take the position other team members have performed their part properly”: R. v. Jensch, [1999] A.J. No. 1595 (Prov. Ct.) at para. 24 (aff’d [2000] A.J. No. 1573 (C.A.)); Agensys International Inc., at 493 (no requirement to independently verify information given affiant by other Revenue Canada employees).

[356] Relevant to the exercise of discretion to issue a warrant for a particular location are any improper attempts within the same investigation to participate in a warrantless and ungrounded search of the identical premises: see Hutchison and Bury, Search and Seizure Law in Canada, (2007) Release 3, 16-16.7. The unlawful perimeter searches are a prime example. However, where the unconstitutional pre-application conduct of which the affiant is unaware does not result in the gathering of any evidence or investigative information, then conceptually it is difficult to use the sub-affiant's misconduct, and deliberate withholding of its existence from the affiant, as a ground for invalidating the otherwise legally sufficient application of the affiant. As observed in Clayton and Farmer (S.C.C.), at para. 48, "Intention alone does not attract a finding of unconstitutionality. It is not until that subjective intent is accompanied by actual conduct that it becomes relevant".

[357] It is not a complete answer, however, to say that because Manser resisted the STF actions, and because Lowry did not deceive the issuing justice by a knowing omission to disclose the misconduct in his ITO, that the pre-search conduct of STF agents is irrelevant. Narrowly viewed, Det. Lowry was the direct or primary affiant. However, in the broader context, it was the STF which was the beneficiary of the issuance of the warrant. Insulating an affiant, building "a wall" around him or her, places a premium on lack of disclosure and in turn risks misleading the judicial officer.

[358] The defence did not suggest that Det. Lowry's ITO, with the non-disclosure of the STF conduct toward Manser aside, did not support issuance of the warrant for the N.M. dwelling. Although the non-disclosure may not have affected the discretion to issue the s. 487 Code warrant for the dwelling, disclosure would have been relevant to the issuance process as the judicial officer may, in the circumstances, have required notice of the warrant application to the incarcerated target, made further inquiries of the affiant, or endorsed conditions of execution, for example, excluding certain officers from participation in the execution of the warrant. I will return to the issue of the non-disclosure and the misconduct of the STF officers in the s. 24(2) Charter analysis.

out-buildings search

position of parties

[359] The defence submitted that Det. Lowry's ITO is facially invalid on account of the absence of any stated grounds for believing that any of the property to be searched for would be located in the out-buildings on the N.M. property. Unlike an attached garage or porch considered part of the dwelling's curtilage, the out-buildings were separate structures or buildings for which reasonable grounds must exist and be sworn to before warrant authority to search may validly issue. It is further argued that not only were no such grounds known to Lowry but also none existed in the present case.

[360] Mr. Coroza recognized the absence of any stated grounds of belief in the ITO respecting the probable existence in the out-buildings of any of the property to be searched for. To a degree, he took refuge in a curtilage argument that the out-buildings were a “logical extension” of the dwelling itself and therefore within the scope of the stated grounds for the search of the residence:

These buildings were clearly part of the Applicant's premises and a separate warrant was not needed for each of the three out[-]buildings.

(Crown Factum, para 133)

It was argued that, in any event, as a matter of logic, reasonable grounds existed for believing that the property sought, small in size, could reasonably be discovered in the out-buildings.

findings/conclusions

[361] The relevant, and undisputed, factual context for the out-buildings search is as follows:

- (1) The M. property is a rural property about twelve acres in size. There is a dwelling-house and three outbuildings including a workshop about 70' x 30' with varying estimates of the workshop as 35' to 70' distant from the house.
- (2) The workshop contained tools and storage. The structure was ordinarily locked with a key kept in the dwelling. The building was locked on March 22nd, 2002 when the STF officers executed their warrant.
- (3) Det. Const. Manser, unaware of the existence of out-buildings on the N.M. property, did not include them in her public safety warrant application which was limited to a search of the dwelling. During her March 21st attendance at the property, Manser did not enter the out-buildings apparently being of the view that they were not within the curtilage of the dwelling.
- (4) The entirety of Det. Lowry's information as to the existence of TPS property in Mr. N.M.' possession came from Det. Const. Manser who learned of its existence in the dwelling-house during the execution of her s. 117.04 warrant in the N.M. home.

- (5) Although Det. Sgt. Scott considered the “final” decision was his to include the out-buildings in the warrant materials, Det. Lowry drafted and swore the ITO and received the signed warrant from the justice.
- (6) Det. Lowry’s ITO and the Form 5 warrant include the non-specific language of “related out[-]buildings”. There are no grounds of belief in the ITO stating why the affiant reasonably believed that any of the things to be searched for might be located in the out-buildings. It appears on the evidence that the affiant did not know the dimensions of the out-buildings. As well, he was unaware of their proximity to the dwelling but made the assumption they “were in proximity to the house”.
- (7) Detective Lowry had no “evidence” that things to be searched for would likely be found in the out-buildings. He believed the out-buildings were within the curtilage of the dwelling, an “extension” of the house, and that it was therefore unnecessary to articulate separate reasonable grounds for believing the things to be searched for would be found in the out-buildings. He could have searched the out-buildings without including any reference to them in the ITO but, as a matter “of caution”, included reference to them in his ITO.

[362] Relevant Code provisions include:

- s. 2 “dwelling-house” means the whole or any part of a building or structure that is kept or occupied as a permanent or temporary residence, and includes
 - (a) a building within the curtilage of a dwelling-house that is connected to it by a doorway or by a covered and enclosed passage-way, and
 - (b) a unit that is designed to be mobile and to be used as a permanent or temporary residence and that is being used as such a residence;

...

487 - (1) A justice who is satisfied by information on oath in Form 1 that there are reasonable grounds to believe that there is in a building, a receptacle or place

- (a) anything on or in respect of which any offence against this Act or any other Act of Parliament has been or is suspected to have been committed,
- (b) anything that there are reasonable grounds to believe will afford evidence with respect to the commission of an offence, or will reveal the whereabouts of a person who is believed to have committed an offence, against this Act or any other Act of Parliament,
- (c) anything that there are reasonable grounds to believe is intended to be used for the purpose of committing any offence against the person for which a person may be arrested without warrant, or

(c.1) any offence-related property, may at any time issue a warrant authorizing a peace officer or a public officer who has been appointed or designated to administer or enforce a federal or provincial law and whose duties include the enforcement of this Act or any other Act of Parliament and who is named in the warrant

(d) to search the building, receptacle or place for any such thing and to seize it, and

(e) subject to any other Act of Parliament, to, as soon as practicable, bring the thing seized before, or make a report in respect thereof to, the justice or some other justice for the same territorial division in accordance with section 489.1.

(emphasis added)

[363] I agree with Mr. Coroza that a single warrant can issue authorizing a search of multiple buildings at one municipal location: Sleeth v. Hurlbert (1896), 1896 CanLII 70 \(SCC\), 25 S.C.R. 620 at 625-6.

[364] Ordinarily, as required by s. 487 of the Code, when a warrant issues describing buildings the police are authorized to search, the supporting ITO must establish reasonable grounds for believing the things to be searched for will likely be discovered within the described structures: C.B.C. v. A.-G. for New Brunswick et al., at 552; Morris, at 550. In Baron, at 534, Sopinka J. approved the following statement in Wiens v. The Queen (1973), 1973 CanLII 1634 \(MB QB\), 24 C.R.N.S. 341 (Man. Q.B.) at 347:

He [the justice] need only satisfy himself that there were reasonable grounds for believing that such documents could be of assistance in establishing the commission of the offence and that they were in the premises in respect of which the search warrant is sought. (emphasis added)

[365] In Det. Lowry's ITO there are no grounds of belief specific to the out-buildings and, subject to the curtilage argument, such omission would constitute a substantive and fatal facial defect in the warrant materials with the words, "and related out[-]buildings", amounting to a boiler-plate-like add on. I will return later to the issue of whether reasonable grounds did in fact exist to believe the things to be searched for would likely be discovered in a search of the out-buildings. Of course, the fact that the police had facts which could have formed a basis for issuance of a warrant does not validate the information or the warrant: R. v. Harris and Lighthouse Video Centres Ltd. (1987), 1987 CanLII 181 \(ON CA\), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.) at 15 (leave to appeal refused [1987] S.C.R. vii).

[366] Mr. Coroza of course did not suggest that Mr. N.M. did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the workshop and its contents because counsel and Lowry linked the workshop to a part of the dwelling itself. The structure was on private property far back from the roadway. It was a large building ordinarily locked. It contained property belonging to the accused. Like the individual with a reasonable expectation of privacy in a drive-shed (Moran, at 247), Mr. N.M. had a reasonable expectation of privacy in his workshop.

[367] The Crown submitted that the out-buildings were effectively an extension of the house and properly considered a part of its curtilage. The detached buildings fall outside the definitional scope of “dwelling-house” in s. 2 of the Code and accordingly, using that statutory measuring stick, the buildings would not be considered part of the dwelling. A break-in of one of the out-buildings would not amount to the offence of breaking and entering a dwelling-house.

[368] At common law, “the hoary concept of “curtilage”” (U.S. v. Arboleda, 633 F.2d 985, 992 (2nd Cir. 1980)) relates to property considered to be an integral part of the house. In Lauda, at 374, the court referred to “...the house, including the area immediately surrounding it (referred to as the “curtilage”)”. In U.S. v. Dunn, 480 U.S. 294, 300 (1987), in a discussion of the curtilage issue, the court cited 4 W. Blackstone Commentaries 225, “no distant barn, warehouse or the like are under the same privileges, nor looked upon as a man’s castle of defence.” Hutchinson, in Search and Seizure Law in Canada (Carswell) at page 16-31, states:

As the common law consistently recognized that authority to search must be strictly limited to the precise structure or place set out in the order (which would only include the “curtilage”), a search of a dwelling-house does not import authority to search any outbuildings, garages, sheds, barns, receptacles, lockers, etc., at the same location as the principal residence. Accordingly, if the police want to search such outbuildings, they should be expressly included in the warrant. (emphasis added)

[369] Although the American authorities must be read with caution because of the relationship in that jurisdiction between the subject of curtilage and the “open fields” doctrine, the U.S. cases are not uninformative. Curtilage has been described as the area “immediately” surrounding a private house: U.S. v. Dunn, at 300; Dow Chemical Co. v. U.S., 476 U.S. 227, 235, 237 (1986); Oliver v. U.S., 466 U.S. 170, 178, 180 (1984). At page 180 of the Oliver decision, the court stated:

At common law, the curtilage is the area to which extends activity associated with the sanctity of a man’s home and the privacies of life...

[370] Similarly, in California v. Ciraolo, 476 U.S. 207, 212 (1986), the court stated that the curtilage of a house is essentially:

...a protection of families and personal privacy in an area intimately linked to the house, both physically and psychologically, where privacy expectations are most heightened.

[371] What have come to be known as the Dunn factors in the U.S. arise from the dicta at 301 of that case:

Drawing upon the Court’s own cases and the cumulative experience of the lower courts that have grappled with the task of defining the extent of a home’s curtilage, we believe that curtilage questions should be resolved with particular reference to four factors: the proximity of the area claimed to be curtilage to the home, whether the area is included within an enclosure surrounding the home, the nature of the uses to which the area is put, and the steps taken by the resident to protect the area from observation by people passing by. See California v. Ciraolo, 476 U.S. 207, 221 (1986) (POWELL, J., dissenting) (citing Care v. United States, 231 F.2d 22, 25 (CA10), cert. denied, 351 U.S. 932 (1956); United States v. Van Dyke, 643 F.2d 992, 993-994 (CA4 1981)). N4 We do not suggest that combining these factors produces a finely tuned formula that, when mechanically applied, yields a “correct” answer to all extent-of-curtilage questions. Rather, these factors are useful analytical tools only to the degree that, in any given case, they bear upon the centrally relevant consideration - - whether the area in question is so intimately tied to the home itself that it should be placed under the home’s “umbrella” of Fourth Amendment protection. Applying these factors to respondent’s barn and to the area immediately surrounding it, we have little difficulty in concluding that this area lay outside the curtilage of the ranch house.

[372] In support of his argument, Mr. Coroza quite properly relied on R. v. Benz and Haley (1986), 1986 CanLII 4641 \(ON CA\), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 454 (Ont. C.A.) (notice of discontinuance, Haley, [1987] 1 S.C.R. ix). In that case, the police possessed a Code warrant to search the “premises” of Haley at “8 East 35th Street” in Hamilton. During the search, using car keys located in the dwelling, the police searched two vehicles associated with Haley. At page 465, the court stated:

Apparently at trial, Crown counsel “conceded” that the motor vehicle was “improperly searched”, although the trial judge found that the police acted without malice and with an honest but mistaken belief as to their right to search the car. The concession having been made, the Crown felt bound by that concession on the appeal. Although the concession cannot be directly disturbed now, I would not want to be taken as accepting it as necessarily legally correct. There was a valid warrant to search the premises at 8 East 35th St. The car belonging to the respondent containing the lease was out on the street in front of the house (within 100 ft.). The keys to that car were in the respondent’s residence which was being legally searched. Certainly if the car had been in the garage of the premises or even on the driveway there would be little doubt but that the search warrant would cover a search of the car. We do not have a description of the premises, so we do not know whether there was either a garage or a driveway attached to the premises. One might conclude there was neither, as neither car was on a driveway or in a garage, the unlicensed car being in an adjacent parking-lot.

[373] These points should be noted about the Haley decision: the warrant referred to “premises” not to a dwelling-house; and the obiter comments of the court relate to motor vehicles visible from the street.

[374] Apart from the Haley examples of a car in the garage or driveway, these examples consider instances of inclusion in the curtilage: R. v. LeClaire (2006), 2005 NSCA 165 \(CanLII\), 208 C.C.C. (3d) 559 (N.S.C.A.) at 572 (“the open garage was like an extension of the driveway, forming part of the approach to the door”); R. v. Tesfai, 1995 CanLII 4153 \(NS SC\), [1995] N.S.J. No. 559 (S.C.) at para. 19, 25 (patio physically touching the house equivalent to “an outdoor extension of the house”); U.S. v. Oaxaca, 233 F.3d 1154, 1157 (10th Cir. 2000) (attached garage part of curtilage); U.S. v. Karagozian, 715 F.Supp. 1160, 1164 (U.S. Dist. Conn. 1989) (rear deck of home within curtilage).

[375] Turning to decisions where the courts have considered the curtilage to not include places searched by the police: Dunn (barn 50’ from residence); R. v. LaPlante (1987), 1987 CanLII 209 \(SK CA\), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 63 (Sask. C.A.) (workshop 40’ from dwelling); Tesfai, at para. 20, 24-5 (retaining wall a few feet distant from home’s patio).

[376] In the present case, the factual circumstances do not reasonably support the workshop being within the curtilage of the N.M. dwelling considering:

- (1) The detached out-building was at least 35' distant on Det. Lowry's estimate. He did not search the building. I find the more accurate estimate to be that of the resident, N.M., that the separation was about 70'.
- (2) The building is itself a significant size at 70' x 30' perhaps larger than the dwelling. The building was used for storage and tools. There is no evidence of uses approaching the heightened expectations of privacy associated with a personal dwelling-house.

[377] Returning to the issue as to whether reasonable grounds did exist to search the out-buildings, I am unpersuaded that such was the case given the nature of the property to be searched for and the information from Manser as to where it was located. The belief of the police that the property might be located in the out-buildings was at the level of unfounded speculation, not credibly-based probability. To borrow the words of Rosenberg J.A. in a different context in Hosie, at 394, the inclusion of related out[-]buildings amounted to "reliance upon ritualistic phrases without regard to the facts of the particular case".

[378] Even had reasonable grounds existed to search the out-buildings, a further facial validity issue exists as a result of the non-specific language of their descriptions in the warrant. Search warrants are highly intrusive of privacy interests: Baron, at 530; CanadianOxy Chemicals Ltd. v. Canada (1999), 1999 CanLII 680 \(SCC\), 133 C.C.C. (3d) 426 (S.C.C.) at 434. As a result, there is an expectation that the "building, receptacle or place" to be searched will be described with some precision. Fontana, The Law of Search and Seizure in Canada (3d) (Butterworths – 1992) at page 66 notes:

Power to conduct an entry and search has by tradition and common law been limited to the place described in the instrument of search: hence the necessity for a very precise description. Many warrants have been struck down for lack of precision in the description of the place alone, since the search was to be limited to such place and the warrant gave no power to search outbuildings or conveyances at the place described unless specifically set out therein.

[379] In this case, the warrant issued for "related out-buildings". There is an ambiguity and lack of specificity about the places to be searched. Is it all out-buildings or is the warrant open to the interpretation that the police are to sort out a "related" out-building from an "unrelated" out-building once on scene – an impermissibly broad discretion departing from obedience to the prior authorization model: R. v. Noble (1984), 1984 CanLII 2156 \(ON CA\), 16 C.C.C. (3d) 146 (Ont. C.A.) at 155 (general warrants offensive to the common law because they "leave to the discretion of the officer...what premises to search").

Admission /Exclusion of Evidence

position of parties

[380] Mr. Brauti submitted that the evidence seized pursuant to the March 20th consent, the March 21st public safety warrant, and the March 22nd s. 487 Code warrant ought to be excluded as evidence in the pending prosecutions. Counsel relied principally upon the discretionary authority of s. 24(2) of the Charter and secondarily upon the court's common law exclusionary power and abuse of process.

[381] Although the consent engaged an element of conscription, the defence argued that the admission/exclusion analysis need not concern itself with the impact of the seized evidence on the fairness of the pending trials. Mr. Brauti's stated position is that while the third prong of the Collins test is in play, the real "battleground" relates to the seriousness of the Charter breaches. Counsel accepted that while some of the s. 8 violations do not involve a "but for" causation analysis, on this record there exists a fluid investigative sequence with individual components all having proximate temporal connection to one another.

[382] Mr. Brauti submitted that the evidence supports a pattern of s. 8 breaches serious enough to warrant exclusion of the evidence. Some are said to be glaring and intrusive violations including warrantless entry to a private dwelling and a strip search. It is said that there is evidence of institutional disregard for the s. 8 Charter right with no clear police policy in some instances and out-dated policies in others. It was argued that there was no urgency – the actions of the TRU team amounted to state-manufactured exigency similar to Det. Lowry's haste in attempting to complete his ITO on the basis of wanting to search before Mr. N.M. received bail. There was an absence of good faith. The authorities, at a minimum, ought to have known their actions conflicted with established Charter values.

[383] Apart from reliance on an ITO lacking any reasonable grounds to search out-buildings, the defence further submitted that while the STF application for a search warrant on its face honoured the prior judicial authorization model, this step is countered by two factors:

- (1) the STF resorted to a warrant only after unsuccessful efforts by its agents to participate in unconstitutional warrantless searches of the N.M. dwelling
- (2) Blake's "surprise" finding of the drugs in the workshop by searching only a very limited aspect of the above-floor part of the structure smacks of a tip or pre-search knowledge and, therefore, an illegitimate plain view seizure.

[384] While Mr. Brauti recognized that exclusion of evidence in the drug case would have the effect of terminating that prosecution, counsel noted the small quantity of seized substances and, with charges for simple possession only, given Mr. N.M.' prior good character and time spent in custody, no custodial sentence would be expected. Counsel pointed to the STF misconduct and the entire absence of grounds for searching the workshop.

[385] Mr. Brauti argued that with exclusion of seized evidence the case on the provincial indictment would still proceed although without the Crown's ability to prosecute the weapons charges leaving the disposition of the weapons to regulatory authorities. To admit the seized evidence in the provincial prosecution would associate the court with condoning continued laxness on the part of the OPP in their respect for the s. 8 Charter right.

[386] Ms. Cullen argued for admission of the seized evidence. It was submitted that the TRU team operated in a situation of urgency in its actions and that the motivation was public safety and as such there was no deliberate infringement of constitutional rights. Counsel submitted that the Feeney warrant process takes time, the containment exercise did not lead to any evidence collection, and that the law in Canada is as yet undeveloped respecting the stealth clear.

[387] While accepting that the personal search of Mr. N.M. met the Golden definition of a strip search, the search was more akin to a frisk search than the highly intrusive search in that case. Counsel noted that the accused expected his shirt would be lifted. As well, Ms. Cullen submitted that there was no bad faith and that the search in the present case occurred only about four months after the Golden case was decided.

[388] Crown counsel submitted that in the s. 24(2) analysis it is significant that Mr. N.M. gave consent knowing the unsafely stored condition of his firearms.

[389] As to the public safety warrant, Crown counsel emphasized that there was no mis-execution of that warrant alleged and that, redacting any offending text in the ITO relating to unsupported factual assertions and to unconstitutional warrantless searches, the remainder fully supported issuance of the s. 117.04 warrant. Ms. Cullen argued that while bail conditions are frequently used to effect surrender of firearms in domestic violence cases, such a court order does not lead to the voluntary handing over of illegally held weapons.

[390] Crown counsel emphasized that weapons matters are serious and may attract significant penalties. Exclusion of the seized evidence would impair the Crown's ability to prosecute all the weapons counts.

[391] Mr. Coroza submitted that if constitutional misconduct by the OPP preceded the STF search then, as in Lauda, the STF search would become the equivalent of "a warrantless search". Mr. Coroza submitted that if the court rejected the argument that the s. 487 Code warrant legally permitted a search of the workshop as part of the dwelling's curtilage, then the building would necessarily be considered as lower on the expectation of privacy scale than a residence.

[392] Crown counsel submitted that there was no pretextual search for the drugs – the police did apply for a warrant, the justice issued a warrant, and the discovery of the drugs at the N.M. property was unexpected. In other words, there was no attempt at a warrantless search. The discovery of the drugs amounted to an unexpected and valid plain view seizure. Mr. Coroza maintained that Det. Lowry was working under time pressure and, in the urgency, inadvertent mistakes may have been made but not in bad faith. The officer fully believed he possessed a valid warrant.

[393] Mr. Coroza submitted that Det. Const. Manser did not mis-execute the public safety warrant so as to search for property of interest to the STF. The STF officers obtained no evidence or investigative information as a result of the pressure brought to bear on Manser. It is said that there was, accordingly, no requirement for Lowry's ITO to recite the events of March 20th at the OPP detachment as that matter was irrelevant to issuance of the s. 487 warrant. Therefore, no evidence exclusion is possible under the Charter leaving only an abuse of process remedy or common law exclusion under Buhay/Harrer.

[394] Mr. Coroza argued that while the drug counts charge only simple possession, two of the courts involve hard drugs. Exclusion of the evidence would fatally impair prosecution.

findings/conclusions

[395] Before turning to the evaluative component of s. 24(2) of the Charter and applying the well-known three-part analysis of Collins, the accused must first establish as "a threshold requirement" that the relevant seized evidence, the weapons and drugs, were obtained "in a manner that infringed" a Charter right, here s. 8: R. v. Plaha (2004), 2004 CanLII 21043 \(ON CA\), 188 C.C.C. (3d) 289 (Ont. C.A.) at 300-1.

[396] At the level of direct causation or connection, s. 8 Charter breaches led to these relevant seizures:

- (1) .357 calibre handgun (consent)
- (2) Glock handgun, shotgun, knives (s. 117.04 public safety warrant)
- (3) prohibited drugs (s. 487 Code warrant).

[397] Section 24(2) Charter jurisprudence has rejected strict causal analysis as the sole touchstone in the determination as to whether evidence has been obtained by a s. 8 violation: R. v. Goldhart (1996), 1996 CanLII 214 \(SCC\), 107

C.C.C. (3d) 481 (S.C.C.) at 492-4. These considerations have emerged respecting the threshold requirement:

- (1) Because s. 24(2) is concerned with the “tainting” effect of a constitutional violation beyond “but for” causation, and in order to give adequate recognition of the intrinsic harm caused by a constitutional breach, the existence of a temporal link may, on a case-by-case basis, factor into the analysis: R. v. Strachan (1988), 1988 CanLII 25 (SCC), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 479 (S.C.C.) at 496-7. Even in the absence of a causal connection, the temporal link may be sufficient to justify a conclusion that the evidence was obtained as a result of the violation, i.e. Kokesch, Flintoff, Bohn, Schedel.
- (2) A causal connection and/or a temporal connection may, depending on the circumstances, establish that the evidence was obtained by the breach of the s. 8 Charter right. It is necessary to look at the totality of the relationship – the “entire chain of events”: Goldhart, at 494-6; Strachan, at 496, 498; Flintoff, at 335.
- (3) The happening of an event can be traced to a whole range of causes along a spectrum of diminishing connections to the event: Goldhart, at 493. The concepts of remoteness and relative proximity apply to both causal and temporal connections: Strachan, at 499; Goldhart, at 494, 496. If the connection is remote, the linkage is tenuous: Goldhart, at 494. In addition, s. 24(2) will not be triggered if the connection between the breach and the obtaining of the evidence is broken “by intervening events”: Kokesch, at 220 per Dickson C.J. C. (in dissent); Goldhart, at 496.
- (4) In looking at the constitutional violation and the evidence at issue, the cases have enunciated similar formulations as to when s. 24(2) is engaged: Silveira, at para. 140 (“...so intertwined in time and in their nature”); Plant, at 217 (“an integral part of the investigation”); Wiley, at 172 (“formed component parts of an ongoing investigation”); Strachan, at 498 (“in the course of a single transaction”); Grant (S.C.C.), at 198 (“an integral component in a series of investigative tactics which led to the unearthing of the evidence...”); Goldhart, at 494 (“an integral part of a single investigatory transaction”; “one link in the continuous chain of events involved in the investigation”). Put differently, would division or severance be unreasonable: Silveira, at para. 140 (“unreasonable to draw an artificial line”); Grant (S.C.C.), at 198 (“unrealistic to view the perimeter searches as severable from the total investigatory process which culminated in discovery of the impugned evidence”); Flintoff, at 336 (“not realistic to view the strip-search as severable from the total investigatory process”).

[398] In the present case, the perimeter search action (entry on the N.M. property, observations into the dwelling, destruction of private property) and the strip search, both violations of N.M.’ s. 8 Charter right, did not result in the seizure of evidence the Crown seeks to tender in the pending prosecutions. Nevertheless, and recognizing there may be “a time lag” between the breach and the gathering of evidence (Grant (S.C.C.), at 198), this warrantless conduct of the police is sufficiently temporally connected to the ongoing investigation of the OPP so as to be connected to the consent and the public safety warrant. It would be artificial to sever the law enforcement sequence. The police had a continuing interest in Mr. N.M.’ firearms March 19th through 21st, 2002.

[399] Similarly, the stealth clear, an unjustified warrantless entry to the dwelling, is sufficiently proximate, in a temporal sense, to engage s. 24(2) consideration. As well, the TRU team observation of the closet firearms was causally connected to Sgt. James’ consent seizures.

[400] The consent and its execution had a causal connection to the public safety warrant with the “sighting” of the cross-bow and the inclusion of that information in the s. 117.04 affidavit. The investigative step is also temporally connected to the warrant phase.

[401] In turn, although more temporally attenuated, execution of the public safety warrant became the exclusive source of information for the ITO of the STF. Although the attempt of certain STF officers to circumvent the warrant process resulted in no evidence-gathering, non-disclosure of the attempt to violate N.M.’ right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure was relevant to the warrant issuance process as described at para. 358 supra.

[402] A non-exhaustive catalogue of potentially relevant factors relevant to admitting unconstitutionally obtained evidence were broadly grouped in Collins (S.C.C.), at 19-20, as follows:

- (1) the nature of the evidence and the effect of its admission on the fairness of the trial
- (2) the relative seriousness of the constitutional violation
- (3) the effect of exclusion on the repute of the administration of justice.

[403] In R. v. Aguirre, [2006] O.J. No. 5071 (S.C.J.) at para. 226-7, I observed:

This “three-step inquiry”, with a “discretion...grounded in community values”, requires “a substantial amount of judgment” to determine the central question of whether admission of the evidence could bring the administration of justice into disrepute: R. v. Buhay (2003), 2003 SCC 30 (CanLII), 174 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (S.C.C.) at pp. 116-8. “Section 24(2) requires a balancing exercise on the facts of each particular case” (R. v. Fliss (2002), 2002 SCC 16 (CanLII), 161 C.C.C. (3d) 225 (S.C.C.) at p. 252) – an exercise reflecting “the interplay between the interests of the individual accused and the interests of the community”: R. v. Grant [(2006), 2006 CanLII 18347 (ON CA), 209 C.C.C. (3d) 250 (Ont. C.A.) (leave to appeal granted [2007] S.C.C.A. No. 99)] at p. 272. Because s. 24(2) determinations “turn entirely on the particular circumstances of each case”, “context is vital to the issue of admissibility”: R. v. Wong (1991), 1990 CanLII 56 (SCC), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 460 (S.C.C.) at p. 468 per Wilson J. (dissenting in the result).

The structure of s. 24(2), placing as it does the burden of persuasion upon the accused to establish that unconstitutionally obtained evidence ought to be excluded, in effect, as a matter of policy, promotes a presumptive model of admissibility for such evidence unless the court can be satisfied that admission of the evidence gathered in contravention of the Charter could bring the administration of justice into disrepute. Even the American exclusionary rule has evolved toward narrowing circumstances favouring exclusion – “Suppression of evidence, however, has always been our last resort, not our first impulse” as “[t]he exclusionary rule generates substantial social costs...which sometimes include setting the guilty free and the dangerous at large”: Hudson v. Michigan, 126 S. Ct. 2159, 2163 (2006).

[404] Apart from the conscriptive element of the consent provided by Mr. N.M., a matter affecting the fairness of trial, I am content to follow the approach of counsel in focusing upon the second and third prongs of the Collins test.

[405] I turn then to the central concern in this case, the seriousness of the s.8 Charter breaches. “The situation[s] in which police take evidence is complex”: Harrer, at para. 44. “Police conduct can run the gamut from blameless conduct, through negligent conduct, to conduct demonstrating a blatant disregard for Charter rights” – “What is important is the proper placement of the police conduct along that fault line, not the legal label attached to the conduct”: R. v. Kitaitchik (2002), 2002 CanLII 45000 (ON CA), 166 C.C.C. (3d) 14 (Ont. C.A.) at 26.

[406] The relative seriousness of the constitutional violation is generally assessed in light of this non-exhaustive list of factors:

- (1) whether the police action was in good faith in the sense of “inadvertent or of a merely technical nature” on the one hand or, on the other, “deliberate, wilful or flagrant”: Collins (S.C.C.), at 20; Kokesch, at 226; Buhay, at 119-121; R. v. Fliss (2002), 2002 SCC 16 (CanLII), 161 C.C.C. (3d) 225 (S.C.C.) at 250; Feeney, at para. 73; R. v. Groat (2006), 2006 BCCA 27 (CanLII), 205 C.C.C. (3d) 542 (B.C.C.A.) at paras. 18-9
- (2) the degree of departure from the relevant constitutional standard of behaviour: Fliss, at 250; R. v. Donnohue Grant (2006), 2006 CanLII 18347 (ON CA), 209 C.C.C. (3d) 250 (Ont.

C.A.) at 271 (leave to appeal granted [2007] S.C.C.A. No. 99); Kitaitchik, at p. 27

- (3) the availability of other investigatory techniques by which the evidence could have been obtained without violation of the Charter: Collins (S.C.C.), at 20; Kokesch, at 227, 229; Buhay, at 120
- (4) whether reasonable grounds existed supporting the conduct of the police: Buhay, at 120, 124-5; R. v. Mitchell (2006), 2005 NBCA 104 \(CanLII\), 36 C.R. (6th) 289 (N.B.C.A.) at 301
- (5) whether the police action which constituted the constitutional violation was motivated by urgency or necessity or imminent danger: Collins (S.C.C.), at 20; Buhay, at 120, 123
- (6) whether the constitutional violation was isolated or an aspect of a pattern of police misconduct: Genest at 406-7; Feeney, at 170; Grefe, at 192; Strachan, at 500; Hudson v. Michigan, at 2171
- (7) the “strength of the relationship between the violations and the discovery of the evidence”: R. v. Greaves (2004), 2004 BCCA 484 \(CanLII\), 189 C.C.C. (3d) 305 (B.C.C.A.) (leave to appeal refused [2004] S.C.C.A. No. 522), at 343; R. v. Church of Scientology (1997), 1997 CanLII 16226 \(ON CA\), 33 O.R. (3d) 65 (C.A.) at 100 (leave to appeal refused [1997] S.C.C.A. No. 683).

[407] Viewed individually, some of the s.8 violations in this case are extremely serious. Viewed cumulatively, the pattern of constitutional non-compliance by the police is disturbing.

[408] The police tactical team, a paramilitary group, covertly descended on the N.M. property without a warrant. The dominant objective was to arrest the suspect. The police had inadequate information about the immediacy of any threat posed by N.M. to himself or others. It was night. Viewing the known facts objectively, N.M. was at home, posed no danger to himself or others, and was unlikely to depart the property. The scope for arguing urgency, in these circumstances, is somewhat limited. A “one size fits all” response by a police tactical team is unacceptable. There was no barricaded suspect or hostage. Warrantless police actions on private property must be proportionate to the threat at hand. Deliberate trespass and the rejection of perimeter containment from outside the property was unnecessary and unreasonable. This was not a fast-paced situation resembling the circumstances of a traffic stop or a street investigative detention. Hours of surreptitious surveillance into the residence from positions on private property and police presence within the dwelling's curtilage, other than in circumstances of exigency, amounted to a prolonged intrusion into the occupant's reasonable expectation of privacy. The application for judicial authorization in the form of a Feeney warrant was relegated by the prime decision-maker to the level of an incidental task. Warrantless confrontation of the suspect, believed to be in bed asleep or nearly asleep, was patently unreasonable.

[409] Without supervisory officer authorization or reasonable grounds, the TRU arrest team conducted a strip search of Mr. N.M.. The search, of some minutes' duration in the freezing cold, departed from the frisk or field/pat-down search authorized by law incidental to a lawful arrest. In the circumstances, the search on the arrestee's front lawn was unnecessary and unreasonable. A strip search involves the humiliation of exposure and extreme violation of personal dignity. The search here was conducted on the basis of a routine, not case-specific, approach to personal search of an arrestee.

[410] The stealth clear, a serious intrusion into a dwelling-house, was conducted solely on the basis of theoretical notions of risk. Operationally assuming a worst case scenario effectively removes any case-specific discretion from the decision to undertake this extraordinary measure. The warrantless search was not cursory. No attempt was made to secure either Mr. N.M.' or the complainant's consent to enter and search.

[411] At one level, certain of the unconstitutional conduct of the police in this case appears to reflect good faith on the part of the authorities. I have in mind the testimony of the TRU team members who apparently followed direction, policy and historical protocol. Viewed in the context of the individual officer's behaviour, there may be no deliberate, flagrant or wilful violation of the s. 8 Charter right.

[412] However, a broader context remains to be examined – the existence of a police force's training, procedures or policy, or perhaps the absence of training or of an appropriate operational policy relevant to the actions of the individual investigator/employee. This systemic perspective may have the effect of eradicating what might otherwise appear to be a reasonable mistake or good faith decisions by particular officers.

[413] Although what is under "constitutional scrutiny is the police conduct" and not their training (Clayton and Farmer (S.C.C.), at para. 51), "[t]he nature of police conduct...on an institutional level, is an important consideration when calibrating the seriousness of the Charter breach": Kitaichik, at 26. In Clayton and Farmer (S.C.C.), at para. 52, Abella J. recognized that "police training is important" and, at para. 129, Binnie J. observed that, "A Charter violation caused by systemic failure would raise greater concerns for the administration of justice than an isolated act of a single misguided police officer". Similarly, as observed in Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 396-8 (1989), while "adequately trained officers occasionally make mistakes", an institution's failure to train its officers "concerning a clear constitutional duty implicated in recurrent situations” faced by its employees raises a serious issue of constitutional liability.

[414] In the present case, the warrantless night-time entry on private property with incorrect and incomplete information, the prolonged covert presence outside the dwelling, the surreptitious surveillance into the residence, and the destruction of private property demonstrate a fundamental failure to recognize that a tactical unit capable of high-risk enforcement responses must respect Charter values by tailoring its response to case-specific circumstances. Despite the dictates of O/Reg. 3/99, there is nothing in the OPP procedural manuals to suggest perimeter containment should routinely take place without warrant on private property. While such inner perimeter containment appears to conform with OPP training, it ignores the existence of less intrusive measures to reasonably achieve the same ends while creating no intolerable risk to public safety. The Force’s procedural manuals are silent, as described at para. 93 above, respecting important features of a stealth clear. Again, on the evidence here, the training suggests that theoretical possibilities, not fact-sensitive determinations, drove the decision to execute a protective sweep.

[415] Assuming for the moment that the police approach to public safety seen in this case, that is, a failure to reasonably balance competing interests and to apply a fact-sensitive check prior to intrusion on reasonable expectations of privacy, could itself be described as a policy or protocol, that does little to warrant a finding of good faith. In any number of instances, an institutional policy of the police has attracted judicial criticism for its lack of adherence to constitutional principles: Golden, at 485; Flintoff, at 328-9, 333, 337, 341; Caslake, at 34; Polashek, at 201; Schedel, at 201, 230; R. v. Lamy (1993), 1993 CanLII 3368 \(MB CA\), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 558 (Man. C.A.) at 571. In Flintoff, at page 341, in the face of an unconstitutional strip-search policy, the court noted that it was reviewing something other than “an isolated case where it could be said that an individual police officer was overzealous or inexperienced”. Similarly, in Lamy, at page 571, the court observed:

In my opinion, if the policy or procedure followed by the police is inappropriate because of its long-term consequences on the reputation of the justice system, it matters not that the individual police officers acted in good faith. It is not the motive of the individual police officers, but rather the impact of the erroneous policy which is of significance.

[416] The warrantless actions of the TRU team on the N.M. property, including the stealth clear, amounted to unreasonable mistakes as to the extent of police authority. This is so even though the primary objective of the officers was not information-gathering although that was a principal purpose in going on the property (to determine N.M.’ presence and location in the dwelling) and an incidental result of the protective sweep (sighting of the closet firearms). The law, including constitutional implications, respecting perimeter searches and trespass on private property and warrantless entry into a dwelling was extensively canvassed in Kokesch, Grant (S.C.C.), Wiley, Silveira and Golub several years before the police actions here. As such, to use the language in a number of the relevant cases, the police “ought to have known” and obeyed the constitutional limits on their authority: Kokesch, at 230; Feeney, at 167; Genest, at 400, 406. Put differently, “s. 24(2) of the Charter should not be used as a matter of course to excuse conduct which has in the past been found to be unlawful” (Silveira, at para. 162) and, “[t]he provisions of s. 24(2) are not intended to place a premium on remaining in ignorance of proper procedures”: Harris, at 27.

[417] Accordingly, it appears that largely unwritten incident commanders’ training, not the procedural manuals themselves, establishes the policy of deployment and the use of the stealth clear. While, as in the case of some of the OPP documentation, ““Official” statement of law enforcement policy almost inevitably will specifically condemn...unconstitutional conduct by police” (Spell v. McDaniel, 824 F. 2d 1380, 1388-9 (4th Cir. 1987)), untrained or mis-trained police officers amount to institutional deficiencies threatening Charter rights on a systemic and ongoing basis: Clayton and Farmer (2005), 2005 CanLII 16569 \(ON CA\), 194 C.C.C. (3d) 289 (Ont. C.A.) at 315-8 (rev’d 2007 SCC 32 \(CanLII\)), [2007] S.C.J. No. 32); Canton v. Harris, at 388-9.

[418] Although the police need not be versed in the “minutiae of the law”, they must be aware of the essential requirements for the constitutional discharge of their basic functions: Genest, at 406. The Golden judgment was released in December of 2001, about four months prior to the personal search of N.M. and about four years after Flintoff and twelve years after Cloutier. It was a critical decision for policing defining the limits of the power to search incident to arrest. Although the courts have generally refrained from “imposing upon the police a burden of instant interpretation of court decisions” (Kokesch, at 230-1), the police ought to have been aware of the circumscription of police power enunciated in Golden. Even with a February 2002 re-issue of the OPP Order respecting personal searches, the limitations of the Golden decision were not included in the policy and procedures materials. In 2007, the relevant OPP Order respecting the personal search of an arrestee remains uninformed by the Golden decision. As well, six years after that judgment, the incident commander and a TRU team trainer in this case continued to hold the view that a strip search occurs only where the arrestee is completely naked. The picture here is one of institutional indifference to the s.8 Charter right.

[419] The weapons, and their condition of storage, amounted to reliable and real unscripted evidence (excepting the consent seizure of the .357 Smith and Wesson) pre-existing the s. 8 the Charter violations. Nevertheless, in my view, considering the temporal connection, the actions of the TRU team in the relevant three to four-hour period were sufficiently intrusive, unnecessary and unreasonable to favour exclusion of the evidence seized under the consent and the public safety warrant even if I had found no s. 8 breaches in the obtaining of the consent and the issuance of the s. 117.04 warrant. In the circumstances, these steps could not fairly be viewed as severable or as fresh steps divorced from the significant taint of the prior constitutional misconduct. The mis-execution of the consent and the Force's continued use of Branton-deficient search warrant forms clearly contributes to the pattern of ongoing disregard for the need to limit police behaviour to that authorized by law. Given the issues addressed in para. 330 above, it is no answer to say that the police would in any event have obtained a public safety warrant to seize the weapons the Crown now seeks to tender into evidence. On the facts as found, with a series of proximately related unconstitutional searches preceding that warrant's issuance, the case for inevitable discovery or independent source discovery fails.

[420] Turning to the s. 487 Code warrant, it must be accepted that there is a degree of attenuation of the temporal connection of the unconstitutional actions of the OPP officers. That said, the causal relationship between those actions and Det. Lowry's grounds of belief is clear as the entirety of Lowry's information originated from the OPP entry into the N.M. dwelling.

[421] Because the searchers left the N.M. property before 9:00 p.m. on March 22nd, 2002, the s. 488 night-search error proved inconsequential. Det. Lowry's use of the OPP search warrant forms led him into error. It was an inadvertent transgression.

[422] Unlike the TPS warrant documentation, the OPP Form 5 warrant, nearly a year after the decision in Branton, still contained the Branton error. When Det. Lowry borrowed the OPP Dufferin detachment's computerized warrant form, he was provided an invalid Form 5. His error in using this form was entirely inadvertent. No evidence was led as to whether any of the searchers who read and acted on the authority of Det. Lowry's warrant seized evidence respecting the suspected or intended commission of a criminal offence.

[423] Det. Blake did not testify in this proceeding. On the record here, with only a transcript of examination of Blake, I am unable to determine that the discovery of the drugs in the workshop was a targetted search as opposed to an inadvertent and unexpected seizure.

[424] Leave was granted to the defence to cross-examine Det. Const. Manser as the affiant for the s. 117.04 warrant and as a sub-affiant for Det. Lowry's warrant. The cross-examination of the officer did not unduly prolong the hearing or, in my view, cast the s. 8 inquiry into irrelevancies. Properly, the focus was the issue of material non-disclosure and its impact on the discretion to issue the respective warrants. I do not read R. v. Pires (2005), 2005 SCC 66 \(CanLII\), 201 C.C.C. (3d) 449 (S.C.C.) as excluding the relevance of the type evidence possessed by Manser to the issue of discretion to issue a search order – whether the statutory pre-condition of the “best interests of the administration of justice” in the case of a wiretap order (s. 186(1)(a)) or the recognized overarching balancing discretion in the case of a search warrant as described at para. 317-8 above.

[425] Constitutional protections may be endangered by an “absence of effective supervision” by commanding officers (Clayton and Farmer (Ont. C.A.), at 316-7) or “deficient programs of police...supervision”: Spell v. McDaniel, at 2168. Assuming that the illegal actions of Evans and others on March 20th, 2002 were not directly or tacitly encouraged by the STF upper command structure, the conduct of these officers reflects an absence of appropriate supervision within the investigative entity which ultimately obtained a warrant to search through its “walled up” affiant and, in turn, the opportunity to effect a plain view seizure. This stands as contextual backdrop for the substantively invalid warrant obtained by Det. Lowry. As discussed at para. 358 above, non-disclosure of the misconduct of STF officers deprived the issuing justice of information which could have been relevant to the discretionary deliberation process. Because of my conclusion regarding the exclusion/admission of the drug evidence under the Charter, it is unnecessary to consider the application of common law exclusion of evidence or abuse of process as remedial admissibility options respecting the STF misconduct. Det. Lowry prepared his ITO in very short order. I question whether his drafting occurred in circumstances of justifiable or legally relevant urgency which, as he described it, was seen as essentially a race to the swiftest between the STF and N.M. should he obtain bail. In any event, there is no compelling evidence that the decision to search the out-buildings was other than a considered one. As discussed, despite the issuance of the s. 487 warrant by a judicial official, the warrant was overbroad and unsupported by any grounds in the ITO or otherwise for believing the things to be searched for by the STF would be located in the out-buildings. Effectively, the absence of grounds converts the search of the workshop to an unconstitutional warrantless search. This circumstance, in the aftermath of the earlier STF misconduct, favours exclusion of the drug seizure evidence despite its real, reliable and unscripted character and its discovery in a place with a lower expectation of privacy than a dwelling.

[426] On the third prong of the Collins model, recognizing that the court must dissociate itself from egregious police conduct (Kokesch, at para. 43), and that s. 24(2) is not a remedy “for police misconduct” (Buhay, at 126), factors favouring admission include:

- (1) the seriousness of the charge(s) – the more grave the offence, the greater the negative effect on the administration of justice should the evidence be excluded: Buhay, at 125; Wise, at 228
- (2) the impact on the prosecution case – whether the impugned evidence is crucial to proof of guilt: Law, at 466; Kitaitchik, at 28; R. v. Calder, [2006] A.J. No. 1303 (C.A.) at paras. 14-5
- (3) the greater the reliability of the evidence, the more the case for exclusion is diminished: Donnohue Grant, at 272; Kitaitchik, at 28.

[427] Ms. Cullen correctly submitted that firearms crimes are viewed as grave offences in contemporary Canadian society. Exclusion of the evidence would defeat the Crown's ability to prosecute all the weapons allegations. Possession of an unregistered loaded handgun by a police officer is a serious crime. That said, all but one of the firearms were lawfully possessed. The firearms were not involved in offences off the N.M. property. Three of the alleged offences involve careless storage. Exclusion of the weapons evidence will not impair the complainant's ability to testify as to the domestic violence alleged in several counts of the provincial indictment including the crime involving the .357 calibre firearm. Mr. N.M.' ownership of the .357 calibre handgun is provable through the provincial registry records.

[428] Apart from the nature of the crimes, and the effect of exclusion of the weapons evidence in the Crown's case, the repute of the administration of justice would be significantly adversely impacted by admission of the seized evidence. Given the pattern of s. 8 non-compliance, and the intrusiveness of the breaches, the court must be concerned with the long-term effects of the police conduct displayed in this case and the danger inherent in judicial condonation of constitutionally unacceptable behaviour by the police of the sort exhibited here. Balancing the interests of truth with the integrity of the judicial system, in the particular circumstances of this case, the exclusion of evidence would not exact too high a toll on the truth-seeking objective of the criminal trial process.

[429] Exclusion of the evidence relating to the seized drugs would fatally impair prosecution of the federal indictment. C.D.S.A. offences are generally regarded as serious instances of criminality and particularly so when the accused is a peace officer and some of the prohibited substances are hard drugs. The counts charge simple possession offences only. The accused, if convicted, may not be subject to additional custody, if incarceration is otherwise a fit disposition, on account of pre-sentence custody already served. Although the case is a close one, admission of the seized evidence in what was effectively a warrantless search in the absence of a valid warrant, in the context of the totality of the circumstances, would in the balance impact more negatively on the administration of justice than exclusion of the evidence.

[430] Having regard to the relative seriousness of the constitutional violations and the effect of admission of the evidence on the administration of justice, the accused has established the case for exclusion.

CONCLUSION

[431] The seized evidence is ordered excluded pursuant to s. 24(2) of the Charter.

HILL J.

Released: July 18, 2007

COURT FILE NOS.: CRIM J(P) 1329/03

CRIM J(F) 664/06

DATE: 20070718

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

B E T W E E N:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

- and -

N.M.

JUDGMENT

HILL J.

Released: July 18, 2007

TAB 51

R. v. Rajkovic, 2021 ONCA 11 (CanLII)

Source: Court of Appeal for Ontario
Date: 2021-01-11
File number: C66041
Citation: R. v. Rajkovic, 2021 ONCA 11 (CanLII), <<https://canlii.ca/t/jcjjj>>, retrieved on 2026-03-23

COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

CITATION: R. v. Rajkovic, 2021 ONCA 11
DATE: 20210111
DOCKET: C66041

MacPherson, Tulloch and Lauwers JJ.A.

BETWEEN

Her Majesty the Queen

Respondent

and

Boris Rajkovic

Appellant

Anthony Marchetti, for the appellant

Natalya Odorico, for the respondent

Heard: December 17, 2020 by video conference

On appeal from the sentence imposed by Justice Faye E. McWatt of the Superior Court of Justice on March 29, 2018, with reasons reported at 2018 ONSC 1501.

A. INTRODUCTION

[1] The appellant, Boris Rajkovic, pleaded guilty to six offences relating to a kidnapping of a bank employee and a failed bank robbery that ended in a shootout with police in which he was shot twice in the stomach.

[2] The sentencing judge imposed a global sentence of 13 years in jail. She gave the appellant credit for pre-sentence custody and onerous pre-trial lockdown conditions totalling three years and seven months, leaving a remaining sentence of nine years and five months.

[3] The appellant appeals the sentence. He challenges both the global sentence and the credit components of the sentence.

B. FACTS

(1) The parties and events

[4] The sentence hearing took six days. On the first day of the hearing, the following statement of facts was read into the record:

On Saturday, February 20th, 2016, at approximately 7:00 a.m. Justine King was leaving her residence to go to work. Ms. King at the time was employed as a customer service representative with the Toronto Dominion Bank located at 1315 the Queensway in the city of Toronto.

Upon getting into her vehicle an unidentified suspect approached Ms. King wearing a police hat and identified himself as a police officer. The unidentified suspect advised Ms. King that he was an undercover officer and that he was conducting an investigation in the area. As he did so the accused, Mr. Rajkovic, approached the passenger side and got into Ms. King's vehicle wearing a face mask in an attempt to conceal his identity.

He then produced a firearm and showed it to Ms. King and ordered her to drive to her place of employment. He further advised Ms. King that if she didn't comply with his demands, he would kill her and her family and burn her house down.

Ms. King complied with his demands and began driving to her place of employment followed by an unknown silver vehicle.

The entire incident was captured on a nearby surveillance video system from a residence.

While on route to the bank Ms. King was holding her cellular phone. The accused ripped the phone from her hand at which point she advised the accused that one of her co-workers would be expecting her call. She was then ordered by the accused to call her co-worker and advise them that she would be bringing a trainee with her to the bank.

Ms. King complied with the accused demand, called her co-worker, Ms. Carly Tullo, and advised her accordingly.

While travelling to the bank, the accused was in possession of a two-way radio in which he would keep contact – through which, pardon me, he would keep contact with an unknown male believed to be the unidentified suspect who had initially approached Ms. King in her vehicle.

At approximately 7:30 a.m. the accused and Ms. King arrived at the bank. Upon arriving they were met by Ms. Tullo. All three parties entered the bank where the accused ordered them to disarm the alarm and open the vault; he did so at gun point.

Upon doing so the duress code alarm was activated and police were notified. Dispatched police officers attended the scene. Prior to the police arriving the accused was advised by his accomplice via the two-way radio that the police were on their way.

The accused obtained a quantity of cash from the vault and exited the bank. Prior to exiting the bank he threatened to kill both Ms. King and Ms. Tullo for tripping the hold up alarm. Upon exiting the bank he observed police arriving on scene and as a result went back inside.

The attending officers subsequently contained the scene. Shortly thereafter the accused emerged from the southwest emergency exit of the bank holding both Ms. King and Ms. Tullo hostage. The accused held Ms. Tullo with his forearm around her throat and his gun pointed at her head. He then led both parties, Ms. King and Ms. Tullo, toward Ms. King's vehicle, where he had planned to make good his escape.

Upon arriving at the vehicle, the accused let go of Ms. King and Ms. Tullo at which point they both ran towards nearby officers. The accused then pointed his gun towards the officers and discharged his firearm. As he did so responding officers returned fire and Mr. Rajkovic was struck once.

[Defence counsel]: Twice.

[Crown counsel]: Pardon me, my friend says twice. We'll satisfy that fact. He was subsequently placed under arrest and transported to St. Michael's Hospital for treatment for what was determined to be a non-life threatening injury.

At the time of his arrest a black semi-automatic American arms .22-caliber handgun was recovered. The handgun was obviously loaded. Also recovered at the scene was a large canister of pepper spray and a folding knife. Those are the facts relied upon by the Crown.

[5] When the appellant was asked if he adopted this statement of facts, he quarrelled with only one point:

[The accused]: While ... exiting the bank with hostages, I didn't put a gun to anybody's head.

[Defence counsel]: You – I take it you used them as human shields while carrying a gun?

[The accused]: No, I didn't use them as a shield. I tried to escape while having them close to me. I knew I wasn't going to receive any fire from the police.

(2) The sentence

[6] The Crown position at the sentence hearing was 20 years' incarceration, reduced to 15 years based on the totality principle. The defence position was eight years' incarceration less enhanced credit for pre-trial custody. By the time he was sentenced, the appellant had been in custody for two years and one month. The parties agreed that the appellant should receive credit of three years and two months for this period of custody.

[7] The sentencing judge imposed a global custodial sentence of 13 years, broken down as follows:

- Kidnapping with a prohibited firearm – 8 years
- Robbery with a prohibited firearm – 8 years (concurrent)
- Discharge prohibited firearm with intent to resist arrest – 5 years (consecutive)
- Unauthorized possession of a loaded prohibited firearm – 3 years (concurrent)
- Possession of a prohibited firearm – 1 year (concurrent)
- Uttering death threats – 1 year (concurrent)

[8] The sentencing judge then deducted two periods of time from this global sentence. Pursuant to R. v. Summers, 2014 SCC 26, she applied a 1.5:1 ratio and reduced the sentence by three years and two months for pre-trial custody. Pursuant to R. v. Duncan, 2016 ONCA 754, she applied a 0.5:1 ratio and further reduced the sentence by five months for harsh lockdown conditions in pre-trial custody. These two reductions left a remaining sentence to serve of nine years and five months.

[9] The sentencing judge refused to give any credit for the appellant's allegation that he received poor medical care while he was in pre-trial custody.

[10] The appellant appeals the sentence.

C. ISSUES

[11] The appellant advances three grounds of appeal:

1. The sentencing judge imposed an unfit sentence outside the range for these offences;
2. The sentencing judge erred by imposing a consecutive sentence for the discharge firearm offence; and
3. The sentencing judge erred by not giving sufficient credit for the conditions of his pre-trial custody at Toronto South Detention Centre.

D. ANALYSIS

(1) The unfit sentence issue

[12] The appellant submits that a global sentence of 13 years for these offences was “crushing” and, therefore, unfit. He asserts that, based on comparable cases, the maximum sentence should have been ten years.

[13] I do not agree. The constellation of offences in this case is both numerous (six) and serious, involving exceptionally troubling criminal activity. The sentencing judge succinctly and accurately described the appellant's carefully planned, methodical and cruel criminal activity:

He kidnapped a member of the public at her home, continued on to her place of employment and kidnapped another civilian employee of the bank. He brandished a loaded firearm and threatened their lives and their family members. He stole $65,000 and used his hostages as human shields. He was then prepared to kill a policeman to make good his escape. It could not have got worse than these set of facts unless someone, indeed, died.

[14] I also observe that three of the offences the appellant committed have mandatory minimum sentences of five years.

[15] Finally, one of the offences the appellant committed – discharge firearm to resist arrest – warrants a very strong sanction. As Doherty J.A. said in R. v. McArthur (2004), 2004 CanLII 8759 \(ON CA\), 182 C.C.C. (3d) 230, at para 49:

[T]he maintenance of a just, peaceful and safe society is the fundamental purpose of sentencing. Police officers play a unique and crucial role in promoting and preserving a just, peaceful and safe society. We rely on the police to put themselves in harm's way to protect the community from the criminal element. At the same time, we rely on the police to act with restraint in the execution of their duties and to avoid the use of any force, much less deadly force, unless clearly necessary. Violent attacks upon police officers who are doing their duty are attacks on the rule of law and on the safety and well-being of the community as a whole. Sentences imposed for those attacks must reflect the vulnerability of the police officers, society's dependence on the police, and society's determination to avoid a policing mentality which invites easy resort to violence in the execution of the policing function. [Citation omitted.]

[16] For these reasons, I conclude that the global sentence of 13 years for the appellant's six serious criminal offences was fit.

(2) The consecutive v. concurrent issue

[17] The appellant contends that the sentencing judge erred by imposing a consecutive sentence of five years for the offence of discharging a firearm to resist arrest. He says that this offence formed part of a continuous chain of events with other offences; there was no significant break in time and place between the bank robbery and discharge firearm to resist arrest offences.

[18] For three reasons, I do not accept this submission.

[19] First, the sentencing judge's decision in the realm of imposing consecutive and concurrent sentences is entitled to considerable deference: R. v. McDonnell , 1997 CanLII 389 (SCC), [1997] 1 S.C.R. 948, at para. 46; R. v. Sadikov, 2018 ONCA 609, at para. 16.

[20] Second, on the merits, I can see no error in the sentencing judge's assignment of the discharge firearm to resist offence to a different category than the bank robbery offences. As I noted earlier, the discharge firearm to resist arrest warrants a very strong sanction. Moreover, at least arguably, the appellant may have caught a break when the sentencing judge did not impose a consecutive sentence for the kidnapping but assigned the kidnapping offence to the bank robbery offences.

[21] Third, the appellant's submission on this issue makes no practical difference. Since I have determined that a global sentence of 13 years for the six offences committed by the appellant is a fit sentence, the breakdown of the time assigned to each of the offences is of no moment.

(3) The enhanced credit for medical care in custody issue

[22] The appellant asserts that, although the sentencing judge properly gave Summers and Duncan credit for his pre-trial custody, she erred by not giving additional credit for poor medical treatment he received at Toronto South Detention Centre. Once again, as at the sentence hearing, the appellant relies only on his affidavit and viva voce testimony at the sentence hearing to support his claim.

[23] The sentencing judge carefully considered, and rejected, this component of the appellant's claim for credit for various aspects of his pre-sentence custody. She said:

The medical records from the detention centre were filed as exhibits and were put to Mr. Rajkovic by the Crown in cross-examination. The records did not support any inference that Mr. Rajkovic was transferred out of the medical unit because of space issues. In fact, the records disclosed that it was the opinion of the doctor in the unit that the defendant was fit for discharge and for transfer to the general prison population. The records also supported the fact that, after his transfer, the defendant was seen daily by medical staff to monitor his wound. The dressing was changed every day for two months after the transfer. He was operated on for the hernia in April of 2016. In a record from the surgeon, the doctor indicated that hernias after the type of surgery Mr. Rajkovic had undergone, were not uncommon. In other words, there is no medical evidence that an assault in the general population, although unfortunate, caused Mr. Rajkovic's hernia.

...

I am not prepared to give Mr. Rajkovic any presentence credit for any allegation of less than standard medical care at the detention centre. The medical records do not support it.

[24] I see no basis for interfering with this analysis and conclusion.

E. DISPOSITON

[25] I would dismiss the appeal.

Released: "JCM" JAN 11 2021

"J.C. MacPherson J.A."
"I agree. M. Tulloch J.A."
"I agree. P. Lauwers J.A."

TAB 52

R. v. Schertzer, 2015 ONCA 259 (CanLII)

Source: Court of Appeal for Ontario
Date: 2015-04-20
File number: C56396; C56397; C56398; C56399; C56400; C56558
Other citations: 333 OAC 308 — 20 CR (7th) 187 — 325 CCC (3d) 202 —
[2015] OJ No 2014 (QL)
Citation: R. v. Schertzer, 2015 ONCA 259 (CanLII), <<https://canlii.ca/t/gh86h>>, retrieved on 2026-03-23

COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

CITATION: R. v. Schertzer, 2015 ONCA 259

DATE: 20150420

DOCKET: C56396, C56397, C56398, C56399, C56400 & C56558

Watt, Tulloch and Benotto JJ.A

BETWEEN

Her Majesty the Queen

Respondent/Appellant
by way of cross-appeal

and

John Schertzer, Steven Correia, Ned Maodus, Joseph Miched Raymond Pollard

and

Appellants/Respondents
by way of cross-appeal

Alan Gold and Melanie Webb, for the appellant/respondent by way of cross-appeal
John Schertzer

Joanne Mulcahy, for the appellant/respondent by way of cross-appeal Steven Correia

Patrick Ducharme, for the appellant/respondent by way of cross-appeal Ned Maodus

Peter Brauti and Maureen Salama, for the appellant/respondent by way of cross-appeal Joseph Miched

Michael Lacy, for the appellant/respondent by way of cross-appeal Raymond Pollard

R. W. Hubbard and M. Lai, for the respondent/appellant by way of cross-appeal

Heard: November 4-7, 2014

On appeal from the conviction entered on June 27, 2012 and the sentence imposed on January 4, 2013 by Justice Gladys I. Pardu of the Superior Court of Justice, sitting with a jury.

Benotto J.A.:

OVERVIEW

[1] The five appellants were members of the drug squad of the Toronto Police Service (TPS) Central Field Command (CFC). All were convicted of attempting to obstruct justice. Three - Pollard, Maodus and Correia – were also convicted of perjury.

[2] The central issue at trial was the timing of the search of an apartment where Ho Bing Pang resided. The Crown alleged that the appellants searched the apartment before the search warrant physically arrived at the premises. The appellants maintained that they did not search the residence until after the warrant arrived.

[3] The attempt to obstruct justice count alleged that all of the appellants practised deception, including by falsifying their notes “and/or” by testifying falsely, in order to conceal that the search of Pang’s apartment had been done without a warrant. The perjury counts particularized that Pollard, Maodus and Correia gave false evidence at Pang’s preliminary inquiry. Miched was charged on a separate perjury count but was acquitted.

[4] The appellants were each sentenced to a 45-day conditional sentence.

[5] The appellants appeal the convictions and the respondent, the Crown, cross-appeals the sentences as unfit. The Crown submits that a three-year sentence was appropriate.

FACTS

The timing of the warrant

[6] On February 18, 1998, the CFC drug squad arrested Pang and Yin Leong Chui for possession of two ounces of heroin. The team was led by Schertzer and was composed of the other four appellants and additional officers.

[7] The team had been conducting surveillance on Chui, a suspected heroin dealer, that day. At around 6:40 p.m., Pang was observed meeting with Chiu in the parking lot of a plaza. After a brief conversation, Pang drove into the underground parking garage of an apartment building next door to the plaza. Chiu drove to the front of the same apartment building and waited with his engine running.

[8] Correia followed Pang into the underground parking and then joined him in the elevator going up. Pang got out at the 14th floor. Correia got out at the 15th floor, ran down the stairs and saw someone go into Unit 1404. Correia waited in the hallway and observed Pang carrying a white plastic bag. Both men went back down to the underground parking garage.

[9] Pang's vehicle left the underground parking garage and drove to the front of the apartment building. Pang exited his vehicle, carrying the white plastic bag. He got into Chui's car and handed him the bag. Schertzer ordered a take-down.

[10] Just before 7:00 p.m., Pang and Chui were arrested in front of Pang's apartment building. The white plastic bag, containing two ounces of heroin, was seized. On the drive to the police station, Pang told an officer that there was more heroin in a nightstand in his bedroom in Unit 1404.

[11] Schertzer decided not to search Pang's apartment based on exigency. Schertzer testified that anyone inside who saw the arrest would likely have destroyed the evidence by the time the team made it to the apartment. Accordingly, Schertzer decided to get a search warrant.

[12] It was generally accepted that the evidence at trial supported two different scenarios. The appellants either entered Pang's apartment around 7 p.m. without a warrant or around 10:45 p.m. with a warrant.

[13] Miched had been sent to the police station at 53 Division to apply for warrants for Chui's and Pang's residences. Miched submitted documents to a justice of the peace by fax at 10:00 p.m. He then received a transmission at 10:32 p.m. from the justice of the peace authorizing the search of Pang's apartment. The search warrant had to be photocopied before he left the station. Miched testified that he left the third floor of 53 Division, "skipped down the stairs", and drove to the apartment building as fast as he could. On cross-examination, Miched said that he ran red lights but admitted that he was not in a marked car and had no siren or flashing lights. He went to the fourteenth floor. Schertzer and Maodus used Pang's keys to open the apartment door. Miched served the warrant on an occupant inside the apartment. Miched then immediately left to return to 53 Division where, at 10:54 p.m. he faxed an acknowledgment that the Chui warrant had been refused.

[14] The Crown's theory was Miched could not have done all of the things he said that he did, including making the trip from 53 Division to the Pang residence and back, in the 22 minutes between 10:32 and 10:54 p.m. Therefore the appellants must have entered the premises before the search warrant arrived.

[15] The Crown relied on the testimony of another officer, Detective Kerry Watkins, who conducted two one-way "time trials" from 53 Division to Pang's apartment. The time trials were conducted more than 14 years after the search of Pang's apartment, the first starting at 10:03 p.m., with the second starting at 10:55 p.m.

[16] Watkins started timing himself on the third floor of 53 Division. He walked to the parking garage and then drove at the speed-limit, 50 or 60 kilometres per hour ("kph") on the various roads, to Pang's former apartment building. He walked to the building, entered through security, took the elevator to the 14th floor, and then walked to Unit 1404. The first one-way trip took 27 minutes; the second took 20 minutes 31 seconds. The driving distance one-way was about 12 kilometres.

[17] The Crown submitted to the jury in closing submissions that, at the very least, seven of the 22 minutes would have been taken up with non-driving activities, leaving 15 minutes to travel 24 kilometres. This would have required Miched to drive, accounting for some slowing down or stopping at intersections, in excess 100 kph through the city, including through residential neighbourhoods, without lights or siren. The Crown forcefully urged the jury to conclude that it was "nonsense" that Miched actually did something so "ridiculously dangerous", especially when getting the warrant to the rest of the squad was not an emergency situation.

[18] The Crown relied on the evidence of Pang's brother Ho Zhong Pang ("Zhong") and his former sister-in-law Miao Fen Lin ("Fen"). Zhong, Fen, and their seven-year-old daughter lived in Unit 1404 with Pang. Fen testified that officers first entered her apartment after she had prepared dinner but before she and her daughter had eaten. Upon refreshing her memory from the preliminary inquiry transcript, Fen said it was around “seven o’clockish”. Her daughter had not yet gone to bed; that usually happened around 10 p.m. Zhong was not home at the time. The officers did not present her with a search warrant. Both Fen and Zhong testified that after Zhong returned home, at some time between 11:00 p.m. and 11:45 p.m., one or two officers returned to Unit 1404 and gave Zhong a search warrant. The officer or officers took away a plastic bag that had been left near the front door of the apartment.

[19] The appellants’ memo book notes indicated that the search took place after the warrant arrived. Schertzer’s, Correia’s, and Moadus’ notes expressly stated that the search warrant was executed at 10:45 p.m. and that the officers left the apartment at 11:30 p.m. Pollard’s notes appeared to state that the search warrant was executed at 8:45 p.m., although he explained at trial that this was a mistake and he had meant to write 10:45 p.m. Pollard’s notes state that he left the apartment at 11:30 p.m. This meant that Schertzer, Pollard, Maodus and Correia waited outside of Unit 1404 for well over three hours after the arrest of Pang and Chui. The appellants’ notes are consistent in stating that only Fen and her daughter were home at the time of the search.

[20] The trial judge concluded in her sentencing reasons that the jury’s guilty verdicts indicated that it was found as fact that the appellants entered the apartment before the warrant arrived.

[21] The Crown alleged that there were other false documents produced by the appellants. Miched prepared a Supplementary Record of Arrest, dated February 18, 1998, at 11:34 p.m., which stated, “A CDSA search warrant was executed on the accused PANG’s residence...” Schertzer signed off on this document as the Officer in Charge. In her sentencing reasons, the trial judge found that with this document Miched and Schertzer intended to conceal from Pang's defence counsel the warrantless nature of the search. On February 20, 1998, Correia swore an information to obtain ("ITO") a search warrant for Fen's safety-deposit box, which the appellants learned of during their search of the apartment. Among other potentially untrue assertions, Correia's affidavit stated, "At the time the search warrant was executed..." In her sentencing reasons, the trial judge concluded that she was satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that this statement was deceptive as Correia knew that admitting the search was warrantless would make it unlikely that a further warrant would be granted.

[22] The basis for the obstruction of justice convictions was the misleading statements about the time of the search set out in the memo book notes, the Supplementary Record of Arrest, and the ITO for Fen's safety-deposit box. The basis for the perjury convictions against Correia, Maodus and Pollard was their testimony at the Pang preliminary inquiry that the search of the apartment occurred after the warrant arrived.

The TPS memo to employees

[23] On November 4, 2010, the TPS, at the request of Crown counsel, delivered a memo to its employees who were named as potential witnesses in the trial. The memo informed the TPS employees that defence counsel could only interview them if they were willing to be interviewed. It required the potential witnesses to advise TPS if they intended to submit to an interview or otherwise provide information to the defence so that arrangements could be made to have an officer from the Professional Standards Special Task Force present to "audio record and/or take notes of the interview".

[24] During the trial, the appellants requested a stay of the proceedings on the basis that this memo was an abuse of process. The trial judge dismissed the application.

THE CONVICTION APPEALS

[25] The appellants raise nine grounds of appeal:

- 1) The trial judge erred in leaving courtroom testimony as a possible mode of committing the attempt to obstruct justice charge in the relevant count, thereby violating s. 13 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms;
- 2) The trial judge erred in instructing the jury that they could convict the appellants of attempting to obstruct justice by “other means” not particularized in the indictment;
- 3) The admission of the “experiment” evidence of Detective Watkins rendered the trial unfair;
- 4) The trial judge erred in failing to adequately instruct the jury about the corroboration requirement on the perjury offences;
- 5) The Crown’s closing address resulted in a miscarriage of justice as it was unfair and invited the jury to engage in speculative reasoning;
- 6) The trial judge failed to provide the jury with a specific instruction on the law of exigency in relation to searches and seizures;
- 7) The trial judge’s “lost evidence” instruction was in error since it allowed the jury to use the fact of the “lost evidence” as evidence of guilt;
- 8) The guilty verdicts were not ones that a properly instructed jury, acting reasonably and judicially, could have returned; and
- 9) The TPS memo to potential witnesses irreparably compromised the integrity of the proceedings, prejudiced the appellants, and amounted to an abuse of process.

Issue No. 1: Did the trial judge err in leaving courtroom testimony as a possible mode of committing the count of attempt to obstruct justice?

[26] The obstruction of justice count charged all of the accused with attempting to obstruct justice by “making false or misleading entries in their memo books, and/or by lying to the court in their testimony” (emphasis added). All of the appellants, except for Schertzer, testified at the Pang preliminary inquiry.

Appellants’ Position

[27] The appellants submit that the trial judge erred when she told the jury they could use the preliminary inquiry testimony as a basis to convict on the attempt to obstruct justice charge. They argue that their testimony at Pang’s preliminary hearing was compelled and that they are therefore entitled to the protection of s. 13 of the Charter. Section 13 reads:

A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

[28] The offence of attempting to obstruct justice is not listed as an exception to the right against self-crimination in s. 13. The essential elements of perjury and of attempting to obstruct justice are not the same.

[29] The circumstances in which s. 13 was enacted and the legislative history of s. 5 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5 (“CEA”), confirm that the offences of perjury and giving contradictory evidence are the only exceptions to the exclusionary rule. Section 5 of the CEA is similar to, and predates, s. 13 of the Charter. In R. v. Chaperon (1979), 1979 CanLII 3001 \(ON CA\), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 85 (Ont. C.A.), this court held the offence of giving contradictory evidence was not contemplated by s. 5 of the CEA in force at the time, which made an exception for prosecutions for perjury only. Section 13 was enacted three years after Chaperon and specifically included the offences of perjury and of giving contradictory evidence in the listed exceptions to the exclusionary rule. No other offence was added. In 1997, s. 5 of the CEA was amended to include the offence of giving contradictory evidence as the sole additional exception. Therefore, it cannot be said that the offence of attempting to obstruct justice is excluded from the operation of s. 13. The prior testimony cannot be a basis for the obstruction of justice charges, as the evidence was tendered in violation of the appellants' Charter rights. This ground of appeal also applies to Schertzer even though he did not testify at the Pang preliminary inquiry. The appellants submit that the jury may have used the evidence against him since "all of the appellants were "joined at the hip" at trial."

Crown's Position

[30] The Crown submits that this ground of appeal cannot apply to Schertzer, as he did not testify at the preliminary inquiry. The other four appellants were also charged with perjury. (Miched was acquitted based on the wording of the indictment.) With respect to the other three appellants, their testimony at Pang's preliminary inquiry was properly before the jury in relation to the perjury charges against them.

[31] The instruction from the trial judge that their testimony could also be used with respect to the attempt to obstruct justice charges was harmless because they would have been convicted anyway—as was Schertzer—on the basis of their notes. As Schertzer did not perjure himself, his conviction for attempting to obstruct justice means that the jury concluded that his notes were false. Accordingly, since Schertzer's notes were falsified in the same manner as those of the four appellants who did testify, their convictions of attempting to obstruct justice were inevitable on the basis of their false notes. The instruction requested by the appellants would have unnecessarily complicated the already lengthy jury instruction. The attempt to obstruct justice and the perjury counts all relied on the same factual finding: the accused searched Pang's apartment without a warrant and covered this up.

[32] In any event, an obstruct justice conviction may be founded on proof of perjury: R. v. Simon (1979), 1979 CanLII 2997 \(ON CA\), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 510 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Moore (1980), 1980 CanLII 314 \(BC CA\), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 202 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Staranchuk (1983), 1983 CanLII 2402 \(SK CA\), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 150 (Sask. C.A.), aff'd 1985 CanLII 73 \(SCC\), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 439.

Analysis of Issue No. 1

[33] I would reject the appellants' submissions for two reasons. First, s. 13 is not engaged because the testimony itself was the actus reus of the offence. Since the evidence was not truthful there was no quid pro quo as envisaged by the s. 13 jurisprudence. Second, even if section 13 did apply, the result would not have been affected because, based on the jury's findings, the convictions were inevitable.

The Actus Reus/Quid Pro Quo

[34] In Staranchuk, the Supreme Court held that compelled testimony forming the actus reus of crimes should be admissible in the prosecution of those crimes. The court endorsed, at pp. 439-40, the following passage from the reasons of the Court of Appeal for Saskatchewan:

We believe that a distinction must be drawn between those occasions where a person in the course of providing evidence under oath is required, when answering truthfully, to disclose the commission by him, previously, of an offence (in which event, generally speaking, that evidence cannot subsequently be used against him) and those occasions where a person makes false statements, while under oath, as a result of which he is charged with giving false evidence. In the latter case the very essence of the offence, and its actus reus, is the giving of the false testimony. In this case the Crown sought to place the two exhibits into evidence to prove the actus reus of the offences charged and, if that evidence was otherwise admissible, it ought to have been received.

[35] In its reasons, the Court of Appeal for Saskatchewan stated further, at p. 153:

Even if ... the accused gave "incriminating evidence", within the meaning of s. 13 of the Charter... the section would still be of no avail to the accused ... because his allegedly false evidence forms the very substance of the offence with which he is now charged.

[36] That s. 13 is not available to an accused when false evidence forms the substance of the offence charged is consistent with the rationale for the s. 13 protection in the first place. This rationale has been referred to as the quid pro quo.

[37] In R. v. Henry, 2005 SCC 76, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 609, at para. 22, Binnie J. wrote for the court:

The consistent theme in the s. 13 jurisprudence is that "the purpose of s. 13 ... is to protect individuals from being indirectly compelled to incriminate themselves".... That same purpose was flagged in [R. v. Noël, 2002 SCC 67, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 433], the Court's most recent examination of s. 13, by Arbour J., at para. 21:

Section 13 reflects a long-standing form of statutory protection against compulsory self-incrimination in Canadian law, and is best understood by reference to s. 5 of the Canada Evidence Act. Like the statutory protection, the constitutional one represents what Fish J.A. called a quid pro quo: when a witness who is compelled to give evidence in a court proceeding is exposed to the risk of self-incrimination, the state offers protection against the subsequent use of that evidence against the witness in exchange for his or her full and frank testimony.

[Emphasis in original]

[38] Moldaver J. also discussed this principle in his majority reasons in R. v. Nedelcu, 2012 SCC 59, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 311, at paras. 3, 6, and 7:

[T]he Court in Henry outlined “a unified approach to s. 13, one based on the historical rationale underlying s. 13 - the quid pro quo”....

[T]he “quid” that forms the critical first branch of the historical rationale, refers to “incriminating evidence” the witness has given at a prior proceeding in which the witness could not refuse to answer. The section does not refer to all manner of evidence the witness has given at the prior proceeding. It refers to “incriminating evidence” the witness has given under compulsion.

The “quo” refers to the state’s side of the bargain. In return for having compelled the witness to testify, to the extent the witness has provided “incriminating evidence”, the state undertakes that it will not use that evidence to incriminate the witness in any other proceeding, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence. [Emphasis in original.]

[39] The quid pro quo is simple: the witness is offered protection in exchange for truthful incriminating testimony. This is not what happened here. The testimony of the four appellants at the Pang preliminary inquiry was not self-incriminatory. Rather, it was an attempt at self-exculpation. When it convicted them of perjury, the jury found that Pollard, Maodus, and Correia lied at the Pang preliminary inquiry. This finding, and any inference that Miched lied at the Pang preliminary inquiry in a manner that was not captured by the problematic wording of his perjury count on the indictment, was admissible evidence toward the question of whether these four appellants also attempted to obstruct justice.

[40] Section 13 reflects a quid pro quo where compelled testimony compels self-incrimination. In these circumstances, the state will not use the self-incriminating, compelled testimony to prosecute the offence revealed. The accused here were not compelled to give the testimony that was subsequently used to incriminate them for attempting to obstruct justice. They were not compelled to lie. In fact, they were required to do the opposite. There is no quid pro quo here.

[41] The appellants' interpretation of s. 13 that would render false testimony inadmissible on a charge of attempting to obstruct justice based on that false testimony would undermine the very purpose of the s. 13 protection. Simply put: a witness does not have immunity for lying under oath.

[42] I do not agree with the appellants' submission that attempting to obstruct justice does not fall within the exceptions to s. 13. The exceptions in s. 13 are not explicitly limited to the Criminal Code offences of perjury and giving contradictory evidence. "A prosecution for perjury" in the context of s. 13 refers to proceedings related to offences in the nature of giving a false statement under oath; it is not limited to any particular provision of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46. The prosecution of a particularized charge of attempting to obstruct justice by committing perjury is such a proceeding. Not only is this interpretation supported by the use of the word "proceedings", as opposed to "offences", in s. 13, this interpretation is the most reasonable. Although the Court of Appeal for Saskatchewan in Staranchuk was not required to deal with this issue, it nonetheless condoned this more flexible interpretation when it commented, at p. 153, "...and even if it could be argued that this prosecution is not one, in its nature, for 'perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence' within the meaning of s. 13 (another questionable proposition)". The drafters of the Charter could not have intended to immunize a person who lies under oath from criminal prosecution for that lie.

A conviction was inevitable

[43] Even if the trial judge had instructed the jury to ignore the preliminary inquiry testimony with respect to the attempt to obstruct justice count, in my view, the result would have been the same. The appellant Schertzer was not charged with perjury as he did not testify at the Pang preliminary inquiry. Yet he was convicted of attempting to obstruct justice. The jury must have convicted on the basis of his false notes. All of the appellants made the same assertion in their memo book notes that they waited until after the search warrant arrived to enter Pang's apartment. It was this assertion that the Crown focused its prosecution on.

[44] The trial judge did not err in leaving the appellants' courtroom testimony as a possible mode of committing the attempt to obstruct justice offence. I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

Issue No. 2: Did the trial judge err in instructing the jury that they could convict the accused of attempting to obstruct justice by "other means" not particularized in the indictment?

[45] Count 3 of the indictment read:

JOHN SCHERTZER, STEVEN CORREIA, NED MAODUS, JOSEPH MICHED and RAYMOND POLLARD stand charged that they ... did wilfully attempt to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice, by practicing deception, including by making a false or misleading account of events in their memo books, and/or by lying to the court...

[46] The jury instructions in relation to this count included the following:

If the Crown has not proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant practiced deception by making false or misleading entries in the memo book or by lying to the court or by other means, your final verdict is not guilty. If the Crown has proven that a defendant practiced deception by making false or misleading entries in a memo book or by lying to the court or by other means beyond a reasonable doubt, you go to the next box [in the decision tree]. [Emphasis added.]

Appellants' Position

[47] The appellants argue that where the Crown has particularized the mode of commission of the offence in the wording of the indictment, the Crown must prove those particulars unless the particulars can be regarded as “mere surplusage”: R. v. Sadeghi-Jebelli, 2013 ONCA 747, [2013] O.J. No. 5728 (C.A.), at paras. 23-24. The indictment particularized the attempt to obstruct justice charge as making false or misleading entries in their memo books, and/or by lying to the court in their testimony. The appellants defended themselves on this basis. The trial judge erroneously instructed the jury that the attempt to obstruct justice offence could be proven “by other means”, when this alternative was not particularized in count 3.

[48] Having given this instruction, the trial judge erred further in failing to instruct the jury as to what “other means” could be relied upon and in failing to relate the evidence to this legal instruction.

Crown's Position

[49] The indictment did not limit the scope of the attempt to obstruct justice charge. The use of the word “including” clarified that the charge was not limited to the particularized examples. The trial judge did not err by drafting jury instructions and a decision tree reflecting this language.

[50] It was not necessary for the trial judge to specify what such “other means” could be because the Crown's position was clear. The Crown's opening address referred to the memo book notes and other records “prepared for the Crown Brief in Pang”. The documents upon which the Crown relied at the appellants' trial were bound together and entered as exhibits. The Crown's closing address specifically referenced many falsified documents in addition to the memo book notes, including the Supplementary Record of Arrest and the ITO for Fen's safety deposit box. Viewed in this context, the trial judge's instructions were sufficient to ensure the jury understood what “other means” on which the Crown was relying.

Analysis of Issue No. 2

[51] The indictment, on its face, alleged in count 3 “including by making false or misleading account of events in their memo books...” The plain meaning of the word “including” indicates that the listed items do not stand alone. The Oxford Dictionary defines “including” as “containing part of the whole being considered.”

[52] In addition, the indictment goes on to articulate means in addition to the memo book notes and the false testimony. The jury would have understood that the issue was whether a single lie had been repeated by the appellants in various ways. The phrase in the indictment “by practising deception” is inclusive of the various ways the alleged lie was repeated.

[53] I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

Issue No. 3: Did the admission of the “experiment” evidence of Detective Watkins render the trial unfair?

[54] As discussed, Detective Kerry Watkins gave evidence about two “time trials” he conducted to recreate the travel time from 53 Division to the door of Pang’s apartment. The trials were both conducted on April 4th, 2012. His testimony was that it took 27 minutes on the first trial and 20 minutes 31 seconds on the second. The distance travelled was 12 kilometres, one-way.

Appellants’ Position

[55] Watkins’s experiment evidence was not properly admitted.

[56] The experiment evidence was not logically relevant because it did not have a “tendency as a matter of human experience and logic to make the existence or non-existence of a fact in issue more or less likely than it would be without that evidence”: R. v. Abbey, 2009 ONCA 624, 97 O.R. (3d) 330, at para. 82, leave to appeal refused, [2010] S.C.C.A. No. 125. It was therefore inadmissible.

[57] The experiment evidence was not legally relevant because its slight probative value was outweighed by its prejudicial effect. The experiment evidence lacked the necessary degree of similarity to the driving conditions in February 1998 to support any reasonable inference as to how long it would have taken Miched to drive from 53 Division to Pang's apartment. The experiment was conducted 14 years after the events it was intended to recreate. The population density, commercial development, and intersections along the route were very different. Also, Miched drove at a high speed and ran numerous yellow and red lights, whereas Watkins drove the speed limit and obeyed all signs and signals. Where Watkins and Miched parked their cars at 53 Division, how they gained access to the apartment building, and the timing of the elevator ride also differed. Finally, Watkins was involved in the investigation and prosecution of the appellants. He was not an independent, objective party.

[58] The probative value was so slight that its prejudicial effect warranted exclusion. The manner in which the evidence was presented gave it an unwarranted aura of accuracy, authenticity, and scientific validity. There was a real risk that the jury would give the evidence more weight than it deserved.

[59] Even if the evidence was admissible, the trial judge erred by not expressly cautioning the jury about the dangers of relying on the experiment evidence. A strong cautionary instruction was necessary because of the significant risk the jury might misuse the evidence. This risk was heightened because the Crown used the evidence together with other speculative inferences and the evidence was left with the jury as potentially corroborative on the perjury offence.

Crown's Position

[60] Watkins's experiment evidence was both logically and legally relevant. It was one of several pieces of evidence capable of establishing the timing of the search of Pang's apartment. The evidence overall established that the appellants could only have entered Pang's apartment with the warrant, at or after 10:45 pm, if Miched had completed a two-way trip between 53 Division and Pang's apartment in 22 minutes. Watkins's evidence established the distance between 53 Division and Pang's apartment, and approximated the driving time and total time to travel between the two locations.

Analysis on Issue No. 3

[61] Watkins's experiment evidence was relevant. It established distances and benchmark times that, as a matter of everyday experience and common sense, cast doubt on Miched's version of events and made it more likely that the appellants entered Pang's apartment without a search warrant before 10:45 p.m.

[62] There was no risk of reasoning prejudice. The jury knew of Watkins's limited involvement in the investigation and his objectivity was not at issue. The experiment evidence did not have an aura of expertise, scientific or otherwise. Watkins's observations were not complicated and he expressly declined to opine on whether the 12 kilometre drive could have been done in "about seven or eight minutes". Finally, the differences in driving conditions in 1998 and 2012 were made clear to the jury. These were everyday matters suited perfectly to the exercise of common sense and logic by the jury.

[63] One may also infer the lack of prejudice from the tactical decision by several very experienced defence counsel not to object to the admission of this evidence at trial. Rather, the defence chose to argue that it was representative of the prosecution's shoddy police investigation.

[64] The trial judge reviewed Watkins's experiment evidence and its flaws in detail with the jury. These flaws were also exposed by the defence and candidly acknowledged by the Crown during closing submissions. Accordingly, there was no real risk that the jury would misuse the evidence.

[65] I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

Issue No. 4: Did the trial judge err in failing to adequately instruct the jury about the corroboration requirement on the perjury offences?

[66] Section 133 of the Criminal Code requires that no person be convicted of perjury under s. 132 on the evidence of only one witness, unless that evidence is “corroborated in a material particular by evidence that implicates the accused.”

Appellants’ Position

[67] The trial judge made two legal errors. First, the trial judge failed to adequately distinguish the “corroboration” requirement under s. 133 from the “confirmatory” requirement for unsavoury witnesses, per R. v. Vetrovec, 1982 CanLII 20 \(SCC\), [1982] 1 S.C.R. 811. The trial judge used the word “confirmed” in relation to s. 133 without clarifying that corroboration requires more than restoring “faith” in the fact that the witness was telling the truth. The trial judge also told the jury that documentary evidence or admissions could be corroborative under s. 133. However, no attempt was made to relate such evidence to the legal requirement for corroboration. Indeed, there was no such evidence that could have been corroborative under s. 133.

[68] Second, it was wrong to leave Watkins’s experiment evidence with the jury as potentially corroborative of Fen’s testimony that the search was warrantless. Given the particularization of the perjury counts on the indictment, to amount to corroboration under s. 133, the purported corroborative evidence had to go to the falsity of the testimony that the appellants “did not enter the premises ... prior to the arrival of a search warrant”. Watkins’s experiment evidence did not speak directly to this testimony impugned on the indictment. At its highest, Watkins’s experiment evidence went to the truth or falsity of the claim that Miched drove the warrant to the apartment after it was issued or to the time the officers entered the residence with the warrant.

Crown's Position

[69] The jury instructions clearly distinguished between the Vetrovec instruction and the corroboration requirement under s. 133. The Vetrovec instruction was identified in the jury charge as a special instruction that applied to the testimony of complainants unrelated to the Pang investigation. The trial judge expressly stated that Fen's testimony was not subject to a Vetrovec warning. The s. 133 requirement was confined to perjury and the only perjury charges related to the Pang investigation. The s. 133 requirement was applied directly to Fen's evidence and the Crown's submission that Fen's evidence was confirmed by the impossibility of Miched travelling as he said he did between 53 Division and Pang's apartment. The trial judge later clarified that the requirement could be satisfied by oral evidence, documentary evidence, or admissions. In doing so, the judge used the word "confirm" rather than "corroborate". In the context, the word was not used as a term of art. On the whole, the trial judge's instructions informed the jury that perjury must be proved by more than one source of evidence.

Analysis on Issue No. 4

[70] There was extensive evidence regarding the timing of the events surrounding the warrant. There was oral evidence, documentary evidence, and there were formal admissions regarding the telewarrant procedure undertaken by Miched. Similarly, there was evidence about the window of time available for the trip to Pang's apartment. This evidence included Watkins' experiment evidence. Based on the instructions as a whole, the jurors would have understood that they could consider this evidence to corroborate Fen's testimony.

[71] This evidence was relevant to Miched's assertion that –having received the warrant at 10:32 p.m.- he had sufficient time to i) deliver the Pang search warrant by 10:45 p.m. and ii) return to 53 Division to sign and transmit a fax at 10:54 p.m.

[72] There is no dispute that the appellants' evidence at trial was that Miched delivered the warrant, and then they entered Unit 1404 around 10:45 p.m. If Miched did not deliver the warrant by 10:45 p.m., then based on the appellants' evidence at trial, Pollard, Maodus, and Correia lied when they testified at Pang's preliminary inquiry that they did not enter Unit 1404 prior to the arrival of the search warrant. This was the prior testimony impugned on the indictment. A lie about one was a lie about the other. It was therefore evidence from which the jury could infer perjury.

[73] I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

Issue No. 5: Did the Crown's closing address result in a miscarriage of justice as it was unfair and improperly invited the jury to engage in speculative reasoning?

[74] In closing submissions to the jury, the trial Crown referred to Miched's evidence and invited the jury to find that he could not possibly have done all of the things necessary, including driving, in the 22 minute window established by the undisputed telewarrant evidence.

[75] The Crown also made other suggestions, including that Pang's daughter would have been "in bed asleep" by 10:45 p.m., not "on the sofa" as the appellants had testified; that according to Zhong's testimony, and contrary to Correia's testimony, Fen was "frightened" by the search; and that Pang's charges carried a "maximum penalty of life in jail".

Appellants' Position

[76] Using Watkins's experiment evidence as a launch pad, the Crown's closing submissions offered speculative suggestions to the jury as to how long it would have taken Miched to do various things, in addition to driving, in the absence of an evidentiary foundation. For instance, the Crown speculated that it would have taken one minute to photocopy the search warrant. In this manner, the trial Crown improperly narrowed the driving time available to 14 minutes, necessitating average speeds of over 100 kph.

[77] The Crown also made other improper and inflammatory statements to the jury, including:

- There was no evidence that Fen's daughter slept in a bedroom, instead of on the sofa, in the two-bedroom apartment shared with Pang;
- There was no evidence that even a hurricane is not going to wake up a seven-year-old child;
- Fen testified that she was not frightened or worried during the search;
- It was irrelevant and inflammatory to state that Pang's charges carried a maximum sentence of life imprisonment;
- Erroneous suggestions that defence counsel misstated the evidence, particularly in relation to the timing of Miched's delivery of the warrant;
- Reliance on alleged fabrications in the ITOs authored by Miched and Correia, even though this was not a mode of attempting to obstruct justice particularized in the indictment;
- Misstating evidence in relation to other counts in the indictment for which the appellants were acquitted, which undermined their credibility in relation to the counts at issue;
- Using a tone and style that ridiculed the appellants and their defence; and
- Invoking prejudicial rhetoric suggesting that the victims were the administration of justice and the larger community, that the jury should avoid the tendency to be reluctant to convict police officers, and that acquittal would undermine the work of honest police officers.

Crown's Position

[78] The Crown asked the jury to find, using common sense and logic, that Miched could not realistically have completed the necessary tasks in 22 minutes. This submission fairly arises from the evidence and so did not invite speculation. The documentary evidence, the admissions, and the testimony of the justice of the peace, Watkins, and Miched established locations, distances, and times. Miched testified that he was driving as fast as he could on a major Toronto artery, running red lights as he went, in an unmarked rental car with neither lights nor sirens. From this testimony, common sense inferences could be drawn as to how fast Miched could have been driving. It is a matter of common sense and experience that Miched's non-driving tasks would have consumed time on the order of minutes. Miched was cross-examined on this proposition. His refusal to make reasonable concessions on the issue did not immunize his evidence from the application of the jury's common sense.

[79] The Crown's theory was that Miched's testimony made no sense and was fabricated. It reasonably suggested the evidence was "nonsense", "entirely incredible, and "a big lie". The Crown, like any other advocate, is entitled to advance his or her position forcefully and effectively: R. v. Daly (1992), 57 O.A.C. 70 (C.A.), at para. 32.

[80] It was not improper for the Crown to address the seriousness of the charges Pang faced. This was relevant to the Crown's submission that the appellants lied to protect an important drug investigation.

[81] Nor was it improper for the Crown to caution the jury against moral prejudice against the complainants, who were drug dealers, and in favour of the appellants, who were police officers. This was not prejudicial. The Crown did not ask the jury to send a message about police corruption. It merely asked the jury to disregard any extraneous sympathies or prejudices. The appellants' claim that the jury was inflamed is belied by the fact that the jury acquitted on the majority of counts.

Analysis on Issue No. 5

[82] The trial judge cautioned the jury not to speculate, and instructed them to “come to common sense conclusions based on the evidence”. She specifically instructed that the trial Crown’s “own opinions of the time required” by Miched to complete the “individual steps” of the non-driving tasks were not evidence.

[83] The trial judge also corrected misstatements made by the Crown. She told the jury there was no evidence that Fen’s daughter slept in a bedroom. The trial judge also told the jury that Correia’s testimony regarding Fen’s calm demeanour during the search was supported by Fen’s own testimony. Finally, the trial judge corrected the Crown’s allegations, where they were mistaken, that the defence misstated the evidence.

[84] I agree with the Crown that the rhetoric in the Crown’s closing submissions at trial was not inflammatory or otherwise improper.

[85] The trial judge’s corrective actions – which are entitled to deference – reflect no error. I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

Issue No. 6: Was the trial judge required to provide the jury with a specific instruction on the law of exigency in relation to searches and seizures?

[86] In closing submissions, the Crown suggested to the jury that the appellants had fabricated the time of the search of Pang’s apartment because otherwise the heroin seized in the apartment would likely be inadmissible against Pang at a subsequent trial. The Crown also suggested that it would be unlikely that the appellants’ could secure a search warrant for Fen’s safety-deposit box if the keys to this box had been seized during an illegal search.

Appellants’ Position

[87] The Crown's proposed motive required the trial judge to temper this submission with an instruction about exigency and s. 487.11 of the Criminal Code, under which the search could have been legal without a warrant. The trial judge should have also instructed the jury that absent exigent circumstances, evidence obtained without a search warrant may have been admissible under s. 24(2) of the Charter.

Crown's Position

[88] The trial judge was not required to provide such an instruction and the appellants did not request one at trial. Exigency did not play a significant role in the case. The Crown's theory was that the appellants obtained an ex post facto warrant to conceal their unconstitutional conduct. The appellants argued that there was no warrantless search because they had a warrant, not because the search was exigent. Nevertheless, Schertzer's assertion that warrantless entry might have been justified by exigency was included in the trial judge's review of the evidence. A further instruction would actually have exposed that Schertzer's understanding of exigency was dubious, and therefore would not have assisted the defence.

Analysis of Issue No. 6

[89] The very experienced defence counsel did not request that the trial judge give an instruction on exigency. This may be explained by the fact that such an instruction had the real potential to weaken the defence case.

[90] Schertzer testified that a warrantless search could have been justified by exigency. In order to establish exigency, Schertzer needed reasonable grounds to believe that: (i) evidence relating to the commission of an indictable offence is present; and (ii) entry is necessary to prevent the imminent loss or destruction of the evidence: Criminal Code s. 529.3. Schertzer had testified that if the occupants of the Pang apartment had seen the arrest, by the time they entered the apartment the drugs would have been gone. An instruction on exigency would have exposed this error. In these circumstances, in light of defence counsel's position, it would have been inappropriate for the trial judge to add an instruction on exigency her own initiative.

[91] I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

Issue No. 7: Did the trial judge err in the manner in which she instructed the jury concerning the “lost evidence”?

[92] The evidence at trial was that some of the relevant memo books, steno pad notes, search warrant notes, and surveillance notes were no longer in the CFC files. Under cross-examination by the Crown, the appellants denied that they destroyed records, including notes purportedly taken by Correia during the search of Pang's apartment. There was no direct evidence that the appellants had destroyed any records. The defence argued forcefully in closing submissions to the jury that the “lost evidence” created gaps in the Crown's case and raised questions about the Crown's integrity. This created a “fundamental failure to meet its burden”. The Crown suggested in response that the appellants destroyed the records to cover their tracks. In pre-charge discussions, the trial judge suggested a “Lost, Destroyed or Unpreserved Evidence” instruction be given.

Appellants' Position

[93] The trial judge instructed the jury that the Crown submitted “that the materials are missing because they would tend to support the Crown's allegations that the defendants are guilty of criminal offences.” This language turned what should have been a favourable instruction for the defence into an “after the fact conduct” instruction suggesting that lost evidence could be evidence of the appellants' guilt. There was no evidentiary foundation for such an inference.

Crown's Position

[94] The missing material was the cornerstone of the defence's attack on the quality of the investigation into the appellants' police work. In context, the impugned phrase in the jury instruction on "Lost, Destroyed or Unpreserved Evidence" was actually favourable for the appellants. The phrase was embedded in an instruction that highlighted the flaws in the Crown's evidence and tied those flaws to the Crown's ability to prove its case.

Analysis of Issue No. 7

[95] The trial judge reviewed the relevant evidence with the jury, instructed the jury on how "lost evidence" could raise a reasonable doubt about the appellants' guilt, and related this to the Crown's burden of proof. The trial judge was instructing the jury on the positions of the defence and the Crown on what inferences could be reasonably drawn from the fact that there was "lost evidence" with respect to the appellants' police work.

[96] The "lost evidence" instruction was not specific to the Pang investigation. The appellants were acquitted on all counts, except those related to the Pang investigation. Therefore, the only prejudice stemming from the "lost evidence" instruction that is relevant to this appeal is that related to the counts on the Pang investigation. The appellants have highlighted only one piece of "lost evidence" from that investigation, namely the notes purportedly made by Correia during the execution of the search warrant.

[97] There was no prejudice with respect to the Pang counts. The defence asked the jury to infer that the "lost evidence" meant that the Crown was hiding exculpatory evidence. The Crown asked the jury to consider whether the "lost evidence" was equally consistent with efforts by the appellants to cover their tracks. As I read the charge, the jury was not instructed that it could draw a positive inference of guilt from the fact that some of the records of the appellants' police work were missing. Rather, the jury was presented with the Crown's explanation for why it did not disclose all of the appellants' purported records.

[98] In any event, even if the trial judge erred in law by not instructing the jury that it should draw no positive inference in favour of the Crown from the fact of the "lost evidence", there was no substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice. The Crown assembled a strong case against the appellants with respect to misdeeds during the Pang investigation. There was evidence of a warrantless search. There was extensive circumstantial evidence related to the telewarrant process that the appellants could not have had a search warrant when they entered Pang's apartment. In short, the Crown's case did not turn on the jury drawing a positive inference with respect to any purportedly lost records. Such a pallid inference would add little to the potent evidentiary record asserted by the Crown.

[99] I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

Issue No. 8: Were the guilty verdicts ones that a reasonable jury, properly instructed and acting reasonably and judicially could have returned?

[100] The appellants present a series of facts and propositions to support the overall position that the verdicts were unreasonable. Some of these allegedly exculpatory facts and propositions have already been discussed in these reasons.

The appellants additionally submit:

- There was no motive for the appellants to enter Pang's apartment prior to the arrival of the warrant;
- If the appellants were determined to enter without prior judicial authorization, they could have maintained that exigent circumstances existed, which would have been difficult to review;
- The appellants would have known that the telewarrant process created an objective, independent, and permanent record of the timing of the warrant;

- If the appellants were at the time of their search unsure whether they would successfully obtain a warrant ex post facto, they would not have conducted such a disruptive search;
- Fen's evidence confirmed the search warrant was present at the time of the search. It was undisputed that Correia left behind a bag in Pang's apartment and retrieved the forgotten bag later that evening. Fen testified (and Zhong confirmed) that, before leaving for the second time, Correia took the warrant from the forgotten bag and handed it to Zhong;
- If the search started at 7:00 p.m. and lasted two hours, and the warrant drafting process started after the search was completed as suggested by the Crown, it would not have left sufficient time to draft the ITOs before they were sent to the justice of the peace;
- The evidence in relation to the searches conducted by the appellants in other investigations suggested a preference not to enter until the warrant arrived.

[101] The appellants submit further that, with respect to Correia, the jury could not reasonably find guilt of perjury because Correia was never directly asked at the Pang preliminary hearing whether he entered Pang's apartment prior to the arrival of the search warrant.

Analysis of Issue No. 8

[102] It is not necessary to review the Crown's position on this ground of appeal since the appellants' submissions do not come close to meeting the high bar necessary to support a claim that the jury verdict is unreasonable. The test for an appellant court to determine whether the verdict of a jury is unreasonable or cannot be supported by the evidence has been unequivocally expressed by the Supreme Court of Canada. In R. v. Yebe 1987 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1987] S.C.J. No. 51 at para 25 said this:

The Court must determine on the whole of the evidence whether the verdict is one that a properly instructed jury, acting judicially, could reasonably have rendered.

[103] Here, the evidence supported the convictions. This ground of appeal represents an attempt to re-try the entire case including credibility issues.

[104] With respect to Correia, although he was not directly asked whether he entered the apartment prior to the arrival of the search warrant, he testified that he “stayed out in the hallway with the other officers” “until the search warrant arrived”. Logically and semantically this is the same as the lie particularized in count 6 on the indictment, that “he did not enter the premises located at ... prior to the arrival of a search warrant”.

[105] I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

Issue No. 9: Did the trial judge err in dismissing the accused’s abuse of process application based on the TPS memo?

[106] The appellants’ abuse of process application at trial was based on the TPS memo, dated November 4, 2010, to employees identified as possible witnesses in the appellants’ trial. The memo advises the employees that it is their choice whether or not to speak with defence counsel. It also orders the employees to advise a TPS official if they intend to submit to an interview or otherwise provide information to defence counsel so that arrangements could be made to have an officer from the Professional Standards Special Task Force present.

[107] The trial judge dismissed the application.

[108] The trial judge found that there was no evidence that the ability of the appellants to prepare for trial was impaired by the memo. The charges were laid in 2002. The matter had been on the verge of trial in 2007. It was highly likely that any defence interviews with willing TPS employees would have already happened by November 4, 2010. There was no evidence that as a result of this memo, any TPS employee refused speak to defence counsel. Specifically, the trial judge stated, in her reasons:

I am not persuaded that if a TPS employee wished to participate in an interview with defence counsel, that this memo made such a course less likely, given that the oath of office prohibits such conduct unless authorized.

[109] The trial judge further concluded that the defence’s complaint was “entirely hypothetical”. It amounted, in her view, to an assertion that the “unfettered private access by defence counsel to members and employees” of the TPS is a “general principle of fundamental justice necessarily inherent in a fair trial”. She rejected this submission. Litigation privilege does not prevent a prospective witness from telling anyone else what they disclosed in a pre-trial interview. The TPS has the right to direct the work-related activities of its employees, including requiring that an interview be recorded in some fashion. The effect of the memo was to authorize officers to participate in an interview, notwithstanding their oath of secrecy with respect to information gathered in the course of their employment.

[110] The trial judge concluded that the memo would not prevent a fair trial or undermine the integrity of the justice system. She also concluded that the public interest in a trial on the merits was substantial.

Appellants’ Position

[111] The doctrine of abuse of process is broad and flexible in application. Even where the particular fair trial interests of an accused are not in jeopardy, the residual category, as subsumed by s. 7 of the Charter, “addresses the panoply of diverse and sometimes unforeseeable circumstances” where a prosecution is so unfair and vexatious that it “contravenes fundamental notions of justice and thus undermines the integrity of the judicial process”: R. v. O’Connor, 1995 CanLII 51 \(SCC\), [1995] 4 S.C.R. 411, at para. 73.

[112] The memo contravened the fundamental principle that there is “no property in a witness”. The Crown cannot dictate the manner in which a witness will be interviewed, the circumstances of the interview, or what type of record will be maintained of any such interview.

[113] The memo also contravened the fundamental principles that the accused has a right not to be forced to assist in his prosecution and to prepare for trial as he or she sees fit without disclosing his or her strategy to the Crown. The memo interfered with the defence’s litigation privilege. The accused is entitled to interview any willing witness without fear of being compelled to produce notes of any such meeting. The Crown is not entitled to know how the defence will meet its case until it unfolds at trial.

[114] The memo had a chilling effect on the defence’s ability to meet with potential witnesses who might otherwise have been inclined to meet with the defence by intimidating potential witnesses. This chilling effect interfered with the defence’s ability to make full answer and defence. It also explains why it is difficult to establish a direct correlation between the memo and the fairness of the proceeding on a witness-by-witness basis. Nevertheless, there was unfairness, which was compounded by the Crown urging the jury to draw an adverse inference from the defence’s failure to call witnesses.

[115] This irreparably compromised the integrity of the proceedings and amounted to an abuse of process.

Crown’s Position

[116] The trial judge correctly dismissed the appellants’ request for a stay of proceedings for abuse of process. Whether under the main category or the residual category, the test to determine if a stay is warranted is the same: R. v. Babos, 2014 SCC 16, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 309, at paras. 32-33. There are three requirements to grant a stay of proceedings:

- (1) there must be prejudice to the accused's right to a fair trial or the integrity of the justice system that will be manifested, perpetuated or aggravated through the conduct of the trial, or by its outcome;
- (2) there must be no alternative remedy capable of redressing the prejudice; and
- (3) when uncertainty remains over whether a stay is warranted, the court is to balance the interests in favour of granting a stay, such as denouncing misconduct and preserving the integrity of the justice system, against the interest that society has in having a final decision on the merits.

[117] These factors have not been satisfied in this case.

Analysis of Issue No. 9

[118] The trial judge did not err in dismissing the appellants' stay application. There was similarly no error in denying the alternative remedy sought, an adjournment and revocation of the memo. Although the doctrine of abuse of process may be broad and flexible in application, it is to be used sparingly – only in the “clearest of cases” – to justify a judicial stay of proceedings: Babos, at para. 31.

[119] The threshold for staying proceedings for an abuse of process is a high one. In Babos, writing for the majority of the Supreme Court, Moldaver J. reiterated these axioms, at para. 30:

A stay of proceedings is the most drastic remedy a criminal court can order.... It permanently halts the prosecution of an accused. In doing so, the truth-seeking function of the trial is frustrated and the public is deprived of the opportunity to see justice done on the merits. In many cases, alleged victims of crime are deprived of their day in court.

[120] Whether under the main category or the residual category, the test to determine if a stay is warranted for an abuse of process is the same: Babos, at paras. 31-33 set out above.

[121] The appellants did not meet this test. Even if I were to assume that there might have been prejudice caused by the memo, and that there might be no alternative remedy to a stay, the appellants' cannot satisfy the third step of the test set out above.

[122] Society had an interest in seeing justice done by having the guilt or innocence of the appellants determined through a full trial on the merits. The interests that would be served by granting a stay must be balanced against the interests society has in having the final decision determined on the merits. The police misconduct alleged was serious and goes to the core of the justice system. Accordingly, society's interest in a decision on the merits was substantial. A stay was not warranted

[123] The interests that would have been served by granting the stay (or, alternatively, an adjournment coupled with revocation of the memo) were minimal. As pointed out by the trial judge, the alleged prejudice to the appellants' right to make full answer and defence was entirely hypothetical. The memo was issued many years after the charges were laid and so any potential witnesses would already have been approached by the defence. There was also no evidence that the appellants' position would have been improved by rescinding the memo and granting an adjournment. A public decision on the merits was necessary to maintain the integrity of the justice system.

[124] The litigation privilege asserted by the appellants is hypothetical only. The trial judge found that there was no evidence that any employee was reluctant to speak to the defence as a result of the memo. She was "not persuaded that if a TPS employee wished to participate in an interview with the defence counsel, that this memo made such a course less likely."

[125] The trial judge did not misdirect herself in law, commit a reviewable error of fact, or render a decision so clearly wrong that it amounts to an injustice: Babos, at para 48. I would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

Disposition of the Conviction Appeals

[126] I would dismiss the appeals against the convictions.

THE SENTENCE CROSS-APPEALS

[127] The Crown seeks leave to appeal the sentences imposed on the respondents (to this cross-appeal). If leave is granted, the Crown seeks to set aside the 45-day conditional sentences imposed on each of the respondents and substitute 3-year custodial sentences.

[128] The sentencing judge agreed with the Crown that offences against the administration of justice are more serious when committed by a police officer because of their duty to uphold the law. She placed substantial weight on the objectives of deterrence and denunciation and concluded that a 45-day conditional sentence was sufficient to satisfy those objectives. She considered the significant deterrent effect of the lengthy and invasive investigation and the prolonged nature of the proceedings. She concluded that "No other police officer would willingly trade places with any of these accused." She also accepted that "incarceration would be exceptionally difficult for each of these accused" because their work "has resulted in the incarceration of hundreds of drug dealers."

[129] The sentencing judge considered mitigating factors relevant to the circumstances of the offence, such as the fact that the appellants had little to gain personally from the warrantless search. She also considered mitigating personal circumstances of each of the respondents. She noted the mitigating effect of delay, as is conceded by the Crown.

[130] In its cross-appeal, the Crown disputes that the reasonable manner in which the search - once initiated - was conducted was a mitigating feature. In addition, the Crown submits that the apparent lack of motive and the fact that the respondents' had requisite grounds to obtain a search warrant were aggravating, not mitigating, features. But, the Crown's principal argument is not with the factors considered by the sentencing judge, but rather with their weighing. The issue is this: does a 45-day conditional sentence reflect the seriousness of the offence when police officers attempt to obstruct justice and perjure themselves?

[131] While deference is owed to the sentencing judge, the objective of denunciation requires that this Court intervene as the sentences were demonstrably unfit.

[132] Public confidence in the honesty of the police is fundamental to the integrity of the criminal justice system. As Moldaver J.A. wrote in Schaeffer v. Wood, 2013 SCC 71 at para. 52, citing Sir Robert Peel:

“the police are the public and...the public are the police... The wisdom of this statement lies in its recognition that public trust in the police is, and always must be, of paramount concern.”

[133] Police officers are sworn to uphold the law. In R. v. Feeney, 2008 ONCA 756, 238 C.C.C. (3d) 49, at para. 8, this court endorsed the following passage from R. v. Cusack (1978), 1978 CanLII 2283 \(NS CA\), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 289 (N.S. S.C.(A.D.))::

[T]he paramount consideration in this case is the protection of the public from offences of this sort being committed by persons who are given special authority by our law to deal with individual members of society, and to deter such persons from acting in breach of their trust....

The commission of offences by police officers has been considered on numerous occasions by the Courts, and the unanimous finding has been that their sentence should be more severe than that of an ordinary person who commits the same crime, because of the position of public trust which they held at the time of the offence and their knowledge of the consequences of its perpetration..

[134] The convictions relate to the administration of justice. Civilian offenders who interfere with the proper investigation and prosecution of criminal offences have received significant sentences. As the British Columbia Court of Appeal noted in R. v. Hall, 2001 BCCA 74, [2001] B.C.J. No. 560, at para. 12:

Obstruction of justice or attempting to obstruct justice strikes at our system of a lawful society. The message must be clear that this type of interference with the community system for handling criminal offences will not be tolerated. It is for this reason that the courts must act firmly to express society's disapproval and denunciation of such conduct.

[135] Perjury convictions must attract similar deterrent sentences. Perjury strikes “at the very root of our system of justice.” (R. v. Glauser (1981), 16 C.C.C. (2d) (Ont. C.A.) Time and time again courts have referred to the fact that perjury undermines the very heart of the administration of justice. (see: R. v. Turner (1981), 65 C.C.C. (3d) 487; R. v. C.D. [2000] O.J. No. 1668 (C.A.) As stated in Glauser:

The administration of justice is based upon the truthful testimony of those persons who are called to give evidence under oath. The freedom, or on the other hand, the incarceration of accused persons in serious criminal offences depends totally upon the truthfulness of those witnesses. (para. 288)

[136] When the perpetrators of the crime are police officers sworn to uphold the law, the objective of denunciation has heightened significance. Police officers owe a special duty to be faithful to the justice system.

[137] The sentencing judge addressed the objective of general deterrence. However, the 45-day conditional sentences do not reflect society's condemnation of the conduct. Nor do they address the need to denounce the crimes and are thus demonstratively unfit.

[138] I would grant leave and allow the Crown's cross-appeal against the sentences. With respect to each respondent, I would set aside the 45-day conditional sentence and substitute a sentence of 3 years. However, in the light of all of the circumstances, particularly the passage of time since the sentences were first imposed and the fact that the sentences imposed have been served, I would order that the operation of the sentences be stayed.

SUMMARY

[139] I would dismiss the conviction appeals and allow the cross-appeals of sentence on the terms set out above.

Released: "D.W." April 20, 2015

"M.L. Benotto J.A."
"I agree David Watt J.A."
"I agree M. Tulloch J.A."

TAB 53

R. v. Hansen, 2018 ONCA 46 (CanLII)

Source: Court of Appeal for Ontario
Date: 2018-01-22
File number: C62143
Other citation: 140 OR (3d) 209
Citation: R. v. Hansen, 2018 ONCA 46 (CanLII),
<<https://canlii.ca/t/hpw77>>, retrieved on 2026-03-23

COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

CITATION: R. v. Hansen, 2018 ONCA 46

DATE: 20180122

DOCKET: C62143

Sharpe, Watt and Roberts JJ.A.

BETWEEN

Her Majesty the Queen

Respondent

and

Robert Hansen

Appellant

Gregory Lafontaine, for the appellant

Randy Schwartz, for the respondent

Heard: December 22, 2017

On appeal from the conviction entered on January 29, 2016 and the sentence imposed on May 19, 2016 by Justice Catrina D. Braid of the Superior Court of Justice, sitting without a jury.

REASONS FOR DECISION

[1] The appellant was convicted of one count of perjury and two counts of attempting to obstruct justice after a trial before a judge of the Superior Court of Justice sitting without a jury. The trial judge imposed a sentence of imprisonment for five years on each count and directed that the sentences be served concurrently.

[2] The appellant appeals both conviction and sentence.

[3] At the conclusion of argument, we dismissed both appeals. We promised to provide reasons for our decision. These reasons fulfill that promise.

THE BACKGROUND FACTS

[4] Essential to an understanding of the issues raised in this court is a description of the circumstances upon which the convictions are grounded.

The Principals

[5] During the events that provide the genesis of this prosecution, Robert Hansen was a detective constable in the Gangs and Weapons Unit of a police force. Among his duties were the investigation of drug, gang and firearms offences. Frequently these investigations involved contact with confidential informers (CIs).

[6] In May, 2012 the appellant received information from CIs designated as A, B and C. From these sources, he learned about the activities of a suspected local drug dealer. The appellant did not meet any of these CIs. He communicated with his primary source, C, by text message using a Blackberry smart phone supplied by the police force of which he was then a member.

The Case for the Crown

[7] The case of the Crown consisted mainly of text messages between the appellant and Source C during a two-week period in the latter half of May, 2012. It also included the information to obtain a search warrant (the ITO) under s. 11 of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (the CDSA) prepared by the appellant based principally on information received from the three CIs. The warrant authorized the search of the residence of Darren Mork for cocaine and related drug paraphernalia.

[8] The Crown alleged that the appellant participated in a plan according to which Source C would place a gun in Mork's residence, and advise the police that he had done so. The police would then obtain and execute a search warrant at Mork's home and seize the gun. Charges against Mork arising out of the execution of the CDSA warrant would ensure that Mork was "put away" for some time.

The Text Messages

[9] Around the middle of May, 2012 Source C sent a text message to the appellant about Mork. Source C claimed that Mork, a drug dealer, was "fucking around" with Source A, the girlfriend of Source C. To stop Mork's involvement with his girlfriend, Source C proposed to set Mork up. The appellant agreed that Mork could "use some jail time" and asked what Source C had in mind.

[10] Source C proposed that he would set Mork up by placing a gun, used in a previous shooting, in Mork's home. The appellant agreed with the proposal, which he said would lock up Mork for several years, but told Source C that it was best that he not know all the details of the plan.

[11] Source C also negotiated with the appellant for payment in return for setting up Mork. The appellant said that the amount would be difficult to determine without the plan being executed, but “guessed” that the payment could be $1,000 or $1,500.

[12] In several text messages exchanged over the next few days, Source C suggested informing on other drug dealers and negotiated for payments of several thousand dollars for “ratting” on them and setting up Mork. Source C reminded the appellant that police would get Mork with a gun. The appellant described Mork and another suspected drug dealer as “good” [targets].

[13] In a text on May 23, 2012, Source C said he was angry at his girlfriend and was reconsidering his plan to set up Mork and “rat” out the other alleged drug dealers. Source C had previously asked the appellant to help with his drug addiction and said he didn’t want to disappoint the appellant. In response, the appellant encouraged Source C to carry out the plan and pointed out that setting up Mork with a gun would be “especially” helpful. Source C made it clear that he would be setting up Mork with a gun that was not his (Source C’s) own gun, rather was one he would get from his girlfriend’s (Source A’s) father.

[14] On May 24, 2012 Source C told the appellant that he planned to pick up the gun from Source A’s father and go to Mork’s house to complete a drug deal. While there, Source C would plant the gun at Mork’s house and leave. The appellant asked Source C when the mission would be accomplished, explaining that he (the appellant) would need to wait until advised by Source C that “it went ok”. Later on May 24, 2012 Source C reported to the appellant that he (Source C) had suffered a drug-related seizure and was unable to plant the gun at Mork’s home as planned on that day.

[15] On May 25, 2012 Source C texted the appellant to advise him that he had the gun and would “get it done” that day. About an hour later, Source C advised the appellant that he had planted the gun in a secure place where Mork would not find it. Source C expressed concern about his fingerprints on the gun, but the appellant assured him that he would “take care of it”.

The ITO

[16] Less than an hour after Source C advised him that and where the gun had been planted at Mork’s house, the appellant submitted an ITO to a justice of the peace for a s. 11 CDSA search warrant for Mork’s residence. The justice of the peace issued the warrant, which authorized a search for cocaine and related drug paraphernalia. No warrant was sought to search for and seize the gun Source C claimed to have planted in a couch at Mork’s home.

[17] In the ITO the appellant recounted information he had received from Sources A, B and C.

[18] In connection with the handgun at Mork’s home, the appellant recounted several reports from Source C about having heard about, then later seen a handgun, of a specific manufacture and model, hidden in the cushions in a sofa in the basement of Mork’s house.

[19] Absent from the ITO was any mention of the origins of the gun at Mork’s home, more specifically, that it had been planted there by Source C with the express agreement, if not the urging, of the appellant, so that Mork could be taken out of circulation for a significant period of time.

[20] In the ITO, the appellant described Source C’s motivation for informing on Mork as being that he was “sick of drug dealers taking advantage of others”. The appellant omitted any reference to the nature of the relationship among Sources A and C and Mork. Further, the appellant made no mention of Source C’s specific animus towards Mork, his desire for revenge or his financial motivation for providing information.

[21] In connection with Source B, the appellant described his motivation as a desire to eliminate Mork as competition in the drug trafficking business. What the appellant failed to point out was that Source B's real motive was to provide information on those, such as Mork, who had ripped him off in prior drug transactions.

[22] The appellant also included in the ITO a claim that Source C had seen plastic wrap and scales at Mork's home, items commonplace in a drug trafficker's tool kit. But Source C said nothing about plastic wrap, nor about scales, apart from having left a set of his own scales behind at Mork's home.

The Execution of the Warrant

[23] The CDSA warrant authorized police to search for and seize cocaine and related drug paraphernalia. The warrant contained no mention of a handgun. Police found no handgun when they executed the warrant.

The Appellant's Explanation

[24] The appellant testified. He offered four principal explanations for the omissions and inconsistencies between the information provided by Source C and what he included in the ITO.

[25] First, innocent error. The appellant acknowledged that as the affiant in an ex parte application, he was required to make full, fair and frank disclosure of all material facts. He said his mistakes were innocent errors which he attributed to rushed preparation and the density and complexity of the text messages that he was required to quickly summarize in the ITO.

[26] Second, protecting the confidentiality of Source C. The omission of details about planting the gun was necessary, the appellant said, because their inclusion could have revealed the identity of Source C. But, as the appellant acknowledged in cross-examination at trial, various measures, such as sealing order and editing, were available and used here to ensure that Source C's identity was not revealed. The appellant also conceded that many of the details provided in the ITO would furnish a basis upon which Source C could be identified. He could not explain how omission of the agreement to plant the firearm would be any more likely to identify Source C than other details already provided.

[27] Third, irrelevance. The appellant claimed that reference to the firearm was "tangential" since he sought and obtained a CDSA warrant to search for and seize drugs and drug paraphernalia. Yet the ITO included repeated references to the handgun at Mork's place. Among the references was this in paragraph 42:

Disturbing information is included that a handgun is being is [sic] stored in the basement and there was a suggestion it has already been used at least once in a local shooting. Police may well be negligent not to attempt to enter and search when firearms are present.

[28] Fourth, uncertainty. The appellant explained that it was not clear to him whether Source C was reporting on a gun that Mork had at his house or on a plan to plant a gun at Mork's house. In cross-examination, however, he acknowledged that two days before he completed and swore the ITO he understood that the plan was to plant the gun, an understanding that became even more clear the next day.

[29] The trial judge rejected the appellant's explanations in their entirety.

THE APPEAL FROM CONVICTION

[30] The overarching submission advanced by the appellant is that the convictions entered by the trial judge are unreasonable. The unreasonableness is said to be the product of several flaws in the trial judge's reasoning. She made palpable and overriding errors in making adverse credibility findings in connection with the appellant's testimony. She erroneously rejected a reasonable interpretation of some events in favour of an interpretation adverse to the appellant that was not reasonable. She misinterpreted the evidence about the motivation of Source C and found guilt established on the third count in the complete absence of evidence of an essential element of that offence.

[31] In our view, as we will explain, each of these complaints fails when examined in the light of the trial judge's reasons as a whole and the overwhelming nature of the case for the Crown.

Ground # 1: Adverse Credibility Findings

[32] The appellant acknowledges that the trial judge properly approached her credibility findings by referring to the decision in R. v. W(D), 1991 CanLII 93 \(SCC\), [1991] 1 S.C.R. 742. Further, the appellant accepts that a trial judge's findings on credibility attract a significant degree of deference on appeal. On the other hand, the appellant says, appellate intervention is warranted, as here, where, on consideration of all the evidence adduced at trial, the trial judge's credibility determination cannot reasonably be supported by the evidence or where it depends on a misapprehension of evidence on a material issue.

[33] In our view this ground of appeal fails.

[34] After reciting the W(D) formula and reiterating the absence of any onus on the appellant to establish his innocence, the trial judge rejected the appellant's testimony as making no sense in light of the text messages and the ITO which constituted the case for the Crown. It is well settled that it is open to a trial judge to reject the testimony of an accused because of the cumulative force of the contrary evidence adduced by the Crown: R. v. D(J.J.R.), (2006) 2006 CanLII 40088 \(ON CA\), 215 C.C.C. (3d) 252 (Ont. C.A.), at para. 53.

[35] In her lengthy and thoughtful reasons, the trial judge identified ten aspects of the appellant's testimony that she found troubling and cumulatively warranted its rejection. Each of the reasons were firmly rooted in the evidence and did not involve speculation or invoke any prohibited chain of reasoning. The reasons are internally consistent and not contradicted by any findings of fact made by the trial judge.

Ground # 2: Unreasonableness of Conviction of Perjury

[36] The perjury count involved an allegation that the appellant swore falsely in the ITO that Source C had told him that he (Source C) had heard that Mork had a handgun used in a prior shooting hidden in his residence.

[37] The appellant says that the conviction on this count is unreasonable because the trial judge wrongly rejected a reasonable interpretation of the texts of May 16, 2012 offered by the appellant in his testimony at trial. That interpretation was that Source C's text supported the appellant's conclusion that the gun was already in Mork's house.

[38] It is a commonplace that, as the trier of fact, it was open to the trial judge to draw inferences from the evidence adduced at trial. Where an item of evidence may give rise to more than one reasonable inference, a trial judge does not act unreasonably by drawing one available inference rather than another. This is what trial judges do. That an appellant disagrees with an inference drawn by a trial judge from the field of reasonable inferences available on the evidence adduced at trial, does not, on its own, establish that the verdict is unreasonable.

[39] More to the point, however, is that irrespective of the inference drawn from the May 16, 2012 text sent by Source C, the appellant acknowledged that, at the very least on May 24, 2012, the day before completing, swearing and presenting the ITO to the justice of the peace, he knew that Source C was going to plant the gun at Mork's house. With this knowledge, the inference is irresistible that he intentionally provided false information in the ITO and that he did so with the intention of misleading the issuing justice of the peace.

Ground # 3: Unreasonableness of Conviction of Obstruct Justice

(Count 2)

[40] The second count of the indictment alleged that the appellant attempted to obstruct justice by causing the justice of the peace to issue the CDSA search warrant on the basis of the appellant's ITO that contained false statements, material omissions and misleading information.

[41] The appellant contends that the finding of guilt was coloured by the trial judge's flawed assessment of the appellant's credibility; her misapprehension of the evidence about the provenance of the gun said be in Mork's residence and her defective rejection of the appellant's explanation about the scales and plastic wrap at Mork's house.

[42] We reject this claim of unreasonableness.

[43] First, we have already repudiated the appellant's submission that the trial judge's credibility analysis was flawed, a conclusion that removes it as a factor in the unreasonable verdict complaint about count two.

[44] Second, a conviction on count two follows inevitably from our determination that the conviction of perjury on count one stands. Submission of knowingly false ITO a with intent to mislead a justice to issue a search warrant plainly amounts to a wilful attempt to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice under s. 139\(2\) of the Criminal Code.

[45] Third, evidence of additional false and misleading statements in the ITO established the appellant's guilt on count two. The trial judge focused on deliberately embellished and intentionally omitted and misleading facts about:

- i. planting the gun and setting up Mork;
- ii. the motivation of Source C;
- iii. the motivation of Source B; and

iv. the presence of scales and plastic wrap.

Her conclusions on these issues were not cumbered by legal error or misapprehension or failure to consider relevant evidence and are plainly reasonable.

Ground # 4: Unreasonableness of Conviction of Obstruct Justice
(Count 3)

[46] The third count of the indictment alleged that the appellant attempted to obstruct justice by encouraging Source C to place a gun in Mork's home with intent that it would be used as evidence in a judicial proceeding.

[47] The appellant says that the conviction on count three was unreasonable because it was made in the absence of any evidence that the appellant intended that the gun would be used as evidence in any subsequent proceedings; in the face of evidence that the appellant's purpose was not to charge Mork for possession of the gun, rather to get the gun off the street; and without considering two earlier text messages that tended to support the appellant's claim that he considered the assistance Source C provided about Mork separate from the assistance Source C gave in surrendering the gun.

[48] We declined to give effect to this ground of appeal.

[49] In our view, the text message exchange on May 23, 2012, two days before completion and submission of the ITO, provides incontrovertible proof of the appellant's guilt on this count. Source C was getting cold feet about planting the gun. His motive – to gain revenge on Mork for “fucking around” with Source A – was fading because of a falling out Source C had with Source A. The appellant pointed out that without Source C's help, Mork would not “get done”. The appellant explained that Source C's help would “help tons...especially the heat”. By encouraging Source C to carry out the plan, the appellant abetted Source C's proposed offence. Whether the appellant planned to use the gun as evidence in the prosecution of Mork would not seem an essential element of the offence, in light of the appellant's plan to "lock up" Mork "for several years".

[50] In the result, the appeal from conviction is dismissed.

THE APPEAL FROM SENTENCE

[51] The appellant also appeals the sentence of five years imposed by the trial judge on each count, sentences the trial judge directed were to be served concurrently, one with the others.

[52] At trial, the Crown sought a penitentiary sentence of six years, the defence a sentence of 14 months.

[53] In this court, the appellant contends that the trial judge erred in imposing a sentence that was unduly harsh, well in excess of any sentence justified by the limited sentencing precedents available. The trial judge's sentencing analysis, according to the appellant, was further flawed by inconsistent findings about aggravating factors and misapprehensions of relevant evidence.

[54] We are not persuaded that there is any basis upon which we are entitled to interfere with the sentence imposed at trial.

[55] The offence of perjury, for that matter, the crime of attempting to obstruct justice, strike at the very soul of the judicial system. Each rents the fibre of the intricate scheme that we as a society have designed to determine whether the guilt of one accused of crime has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Each offence is easy to commit. Both are hard to prove. Those found to have committed either must expect severe punishment.

[56] Police officers occupy a special position of trust in the community. It is all the more so in the criminal justice system. As justice system participants, they owe a duty to the public to uphold the values of the criminal justice system. They have a duty to investigate crime in accordance with the law.

[57] The paramount sentencing objectives in this case are denunciation and deterrence. Neither the jeopardy of the loss of employment nor the likelihood of and deterrence, much less accord appropriate weight to the aggravating factor of breach of trust.

[58] The sentence imposed in this case is substantial. This is as it should be. It represents an appropriate application of the governing objectives and principles of sentencing, including the fundamental principle that the sentence be proportionate to the gravity of the offence and the degree of responsibility of the offender.

[59] In the result, leave to appeal sentence is granted, but the appeal from sentence is dismissed.

“Robert J. Sharpe J.A.”

“David Watt J.A.”

“Lois B. Roberts J.A.”

TAB 54

Koukounakis v. Reid, 1995 CanLII 621 (ON CA)

Source:	Court of Appeal for Ontario
Date:	1995-05-12
File number:	c10137
Other citations:	23 OR (3d) 299 — 81 OAC 36 — [1995] OJ No 1369 (QL) — 12 MVR (3d) 78
Citation:	Koukounakis v. Reid, 1995 CanLII 621 (ON CA), < https://canlii.ca/t/6jhz >, retrieved on 2026-03-23

Koukounakis et al. v. Stainrod et al.
[Indexed as: Koukounakis v. Stainrod]

23 O.R. (3d) 299
[1995] O.J. No. 1369
No. C10137

Court of Appeal for Ontario,
Brooke, Doherty
and Laskin JJ.A.
May 12, 1995

Damages -- Personal injuries -- Pain and suffering -- Plaintiff suffering intense, continuous and disabling pain as result of temporomandibular joint dysfunction caused by 1983 car accident -- Jury in 1990 assessing plaintiff's non-pecuniary general damages at $180,000 -- Award affirmed on appeal -- Reasonableness and appropriateness of award -- Approach of using date of accident as operative date in pre- 1989 cases when awarding general non-pecuniary damages in order to avoid double credit for inflation rejected.

The plaintiff was seriously injured in a car accident in 1983. The trauma from the accident caused internal derangement of the right mandibular joint, which led to temporomandibular joint dysfunction (tmj dysfunction). The plaintiff's pain was intense, extreme and continuous. She could not work. sleep or eat properly, needed housekeeping assistance, and at the time of trial had developed a variety of problems including chronic stress, depression, headaches, codeine dependency and anorexia. The jury assessed the plaintiff's non-pecuniary general damages at $180,000. The defendants appealed that award. The plaintiff cross-appealed the award for cost of future care.

Held, the appeal and the cross-appeal should be dismissed.

Where a damage assessment was made by a jury, and there is no suggestion that the instructions to the jury were erroneous or deficient, the appellant must establish that the amount awarded is so inordinately high that it must be a wholly erroneous estimate of the damages. Appellate courts do not decide whether a jury made the correct award for general non-pecuniary damages, but only whether the award is beyond the scope of anything that could be accepted as reasonable. Review for reasonableness, as opposed to correctness, demands not only deference to the amount awarded, but also deference to the findings of fact underlying the award.

While the plaintiff suffered from a number of maladies prior to the accident, and manifested symptoms suggesting that she was predisposed to develop tmj dysfunction, it could not be said that the jury must have found as a fact that the plaintiff's pre-existing medical condition would have resulted in a significant diminution of the quality of her life had she not been injured in the accident. Accordingly, the appropriateness of the award for general non-pecuniary damages had to be considered on the assumption that the jury found as a fact that the plaintiff's pre-existing medical conditions would not have significantly impaired her ability to lead a normal life had she not been injured in the car accident.

While the upper limit on general non-pecuniary damages (which was $225,000 at the date of the trial) may provide some small assistance in assessing the propriety of an award in a case where the maximum award is inappropriate, any attempt to use the upper limit as more than a very rough guide for comparative purposes ignores the policy reasons underlying the creation of the upper limit. The appropriateness of an award cannot be determined by comparing the level of disability or pain and suffering suffered by a particular plaintiff to that of a person entitled to the maximum award. It was open to the jury to conclude that the plaintiff's capacity to lead a normal life had been virtually destroyed by the medical and dental problems arising out of the accident. Using the upper limit of $225,000 as a very rough guide, it could not be said that an award of $180,000 in this case was so excessive as to warrant appellate intervention.

While awards for general non-pecuniary damages in similar cases should achieve a degree of consistency and uniformity, comparative analysis offers limited assistance. The assessment of general non-pecuniary damages ultimately depends on a mix of factors, many of which are peculiar to a particular plaintiff. While the award in this case was high compared to similar cases, it was not so high as to necessitate appellate intervention.

Since the cause of action in this case arose before October 23, 1989, the award for general non-pecuniary damages was not subject to the 5 per cent prejudgment interest rate established by the amendments to the Courts of Justice Act, 1984, S.O. 1984, c. 11, proclaimed in force in December 1989. Instead, the award attracted prejudgment interest at the generally applicable rate of 12 per cent, the rate established by the terms of s. 138 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1984. There was some force to the argument of counsel for the defendants that, as prejudgment interest is paid in part to compensate for the effects of inflation between the date of the accident and the date of the judgment, and that as the maximum amount awardable for general non-pecuniary damages also has an inflationary component represented by the difference between the maximum as of the date of the accident ($165,000) and the maximum as of the date of judgment ($225,000), measuring the appropriateness of the award for general non-pecuniary damages as of the date of trial and in trial date dollars while at the same time allowing prejudgment interest at normal rates on that amount resulted in the plaintiff receiving a double credit for inflation between the date of the accident and the date of the trial. However, the solution proposed by counsel for the defendants of using the date of the accident as the operative date when awarding general non-pecuniary damages should not be adopted. Not only did the defendants' contention swim upstream against the judicial current in so far as the relevant date for assessment of non-pecuniary damages was concerned, it also had to traverse a legislative dam in the form of the 1989 amendments to the Courts of Justice Act, 1984.

The legislature chose to leave causes of action which arose before October 23, 1989 to be decided by the then-existing law. It would be contrary to the clear intention of the legislature for the court to revisit those cases and revise the applicable law, thus disturbing the legitimate expectations of plaintiffs whose cause of action arose before October 23, 1989.

The plaintiff's submission that the jury, having found that she would incur future care expenses, had no choice on the evidence but to award the full amount claimed by her, was unacceptable. The jury was not obligated to accept any one view of the evidence, and their assessment was not unreasonable. It was also not the case that, because the jury awarded the full amount claimed for past medical expenses, consistency demanded that the jury do the same with respect to a claim for future care costs. The two heads of damage are distinct and an award made under one head of damage does not necessarily bear any relationship to an award made under the other.

Appeal from an award of non-pecuniary general damages; cross- appeal from an award of costs of future care.

Borland v. Muttersbach (1985), 1985 CanLII 2134 \(ON CA\), 53 O.R. (2d) 129, 23 D.L.R. (4th) 664, [1986] I.L.R. 1-2003, 12 O.A.C. 84 (C.A.), affg (1984), 1984 CanLII 2142 \(ON SC\), 49 O.R. (2d) 165, 15 D.L.R. (4th) 486, [1985] I.L.R. 1-1851 (S.C.) [supp. reasons [1985] I.L.R. 1-1939 (Ont. S.C.)]; Graham v. Persyko (1984), 1986 CanLII 4049 \(ON CA\), 55 O.R. (2d) 12, 27 D.L.R. (4th) 699, 30 C.C.L.T. 85 (H.C.J.), vard (1986), 1986 CanLII 2711 \(ON CA\), 55 O.R. (2d) 10, 27 D.L.R. (4th) 699 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. dismissed (1986), 1986 CanLII 3963 \(SCC\), 34 D.L.R. (4th) 160, consd Other cases referred to Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 452, 3 C.C.L.T. 225, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 577, 19 N.R. 50, 8 A.R. 182; Birkett v. Hayes, [1982] 1 W.L.R. 816, [1982] 2 All E.R. 710 (C.A.); Bunce v. Flick, 1991 CanLII 7975 \(SK CA\), [1991] 5 W.W.R. 623, 93 Sask. R. 53 (C.A.); Consumers' Gas Co. v. Peterborough (City), 1981 CanLII 66 \(SCC\), [1981] 2 S.C.R. 613, 129 D.L.R. (3d) 507, 40 N.R. 425, 18 C.C.L.T. 258, affg (1979), 1979 CanLII 77 \(ON CA\), 25 O.R. (2d) 399, 104 D.L.R. (3d) 174, 9 C.C.L.T. 1 sub nom. Fenn v. Peterborough (City), Consumers' Gas Co. v. Fenn (C.A.); De Champlain v. Etobicoke General Hospital (1985), 34 C.C.L.T. 89 (Ont. H.C.J.); Graham v. Rourke (1990), 1990 CanLII 7005 \(ON CA\), 75 O.R. (2d) 622, 74 D.L.R. (4th) 1, 40 O.A.C. 301 (C.A.); Hatton v. Henderson, 1981 CanLII 514 \(BC CA\), [1981] 5 W.W.R. 624, 126 D.L.R. (3d) 50, 29 B.C.L.R. 317, 17 C.C.L.T. 252 (C.A.); Howes v. Crosby (1984), 1984 CanLII 2172 \(ON CA\), 45 O.R. (2d) 449, 6 D.L.R. (4th) 698, 29 C.C.L.T. 60, 2 O.A.C. 375 (C.A.); Leischner v. West Kootenay Power & Light Co. 1986 CanLII 889 \(BC CA\), [1986] 3 W.W.R. 97, 24 D.L.R. (4th) 641, 70 B.C.L.R. 145 (C.A.); Lindal v. Lindal, 1981 CanLII 35 \(SCC\), [1981] 2 S.C.R. 629, 129 D.L.R. (3d) 263, 34 B.C.L.R. 273, 39 N.R. 361, [1982] 1 W.W.R. 433, 19 C.C.L.T. 1; Mulroy v. Aqua Scene (1982), 36 O.R. (2d) 653 (C.A.); Nance v. British Columbia Electric Railway Co., 1951 CanLII 374 \(UK JCPC\), [1951] 3 D.L.R. 705, [1951] A.C. 601, 2 W.W.R. (N.S.) 665, 67 C.R.T.C. 340, [1951] 2 All E.R. 448 (P.C.); Pickett v. British Rail Engineering Ltd., [1978] 3 W.L.R. 955, [1979] 1 All E.R. 774, [1980] A.C. 136, 122 Sol. Jo. 778, [1979] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 519 (H.L.); Vieczorek v. Piersma (1987), 1987 CanLII 4403 \(ON CA\), 58 O.R. (2d) 583, 36 D.L.R. (4th) 136, 16 C.P.C. (2d) 62, 18 O.A.C. 308 (C.A.); Watkins v. Olafson, 1989 CanLII 36 \(SCC\), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 750, 61 D.L.R. (4th) 577, 39 B.C.L.R. (2d) 294, 61 Man. R. (2d) 81, 100 N.R. 161, [1989] 6 W.W.R. 481, 50 C.C.L.T. 101 sub nom. Watkins v. Manitoba; Woelk v. Halvorson, 1980 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1980] 2 S.C.R. 430, 114 D.L.R. (3d) 385, 33 N.R. 232, [1981] 1 W.W.R. 289, 14 C.C.L.T. 181; Wright v. British Railway Board, [1983] 3 W.L.R. 211, [1983] 2 All E.R. 698, [1983] 2 A.C. 773 (H.L.) Statutes referred to Courts of Justice Act, 1984, S.O. 1984, c. 11, s. 138 [am. 1989, c. 67, s. 6(1)] Courts of Justice Amendment Act, 1989 (No. 2), S.O. 1989, c. 67, ss. 4, 6(1), 8(1), (2) Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, ss. 118, 119 Rules and regulations referred to Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, rule 53.10 Authorities referred to Kerans, R.P., Standards of Review Employed by Appellate Courts (Edmonton: Juriliber, 1994), pp. 139-42 Ontario, Report of the Inquiry Into Motor Vehicle Accident Compensation in Ontario (1988), vol. 1, pp. 404-10 Ontario Law Reform Commission,

Report on Compensation for Personal Injury and Death (1987), pp. 208-12 Waddams, S., The Law of Damages, 2nd ed. (Aurora: Canada Law Book, 1994), para. 7.660ff

Earl A. Cherniak, Q.C., and Kirk Stevens, for appellants/respondents on cross-appeal.

Stanley M. Tick, Q.C., and Janis P. Criger, for respondents/appellants on cross-appeal.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

DOHERTY J.A.: --

I. THE APPEAL BY THE DEFENDANTS

A. Overview

In October 1983, a motor vehicle driven by the appellant Janet Stainrod struck the back of a vehicle driven by the respondent, Marion Koukounakis (Mrs. Koukounakis). Mrs. Koukounakis suffered significant injuries. In September 1990, a jury assessed Mrs. Koukounakis' damages as follows:

- i. non-pecuniary general damages: $180,000.00
- ii. loss of past income: $53,153.00
- iii. special damages: $45,490.00
- iv. loss of future income: $132,819.00
- v. future care costs: $161,648.00
- TOTAL: $573,110.00

After prejudgment interest at the statutory rate was added to the assessment and certain pre-trial payments were deducted, Mrs. Koukounakis received judgment in the amount of $586,757. The appellants challenge only the assessment of general non-pecuniary damages. They do not allege misdirection or non-direction by the trial judge, but maintain that an award of $180,000 is so high that it cannot stand and must be adjusted downward. The appellants submit that an award of $100,000 for general non-pecuniary damages should be substituted. At trial, neither counsel suggested that the jury should be given a range within which their assessment of the general non-pecuniary damages might fall [See Note 1 below].

B. The Facts

Most of the evidence led at trial concerned the injuries suffered by Mrs. Koukounakis, her prolonged course of treatment for those injuries, the effects of those injuries on her life, and her prognosis. There is no need to detail that evidence. The appellants, quite properly, concede that the injuries were significant and their effects on Mrs. Koukounakis profound. I will, however, summarize the more salient features of the evidence.

At the time of the accident, Mrs. Koukounakis was 31 years old and had four children. She worked part-time as a bartender and waitress in a restaurant. When Mrs. Koukounakis' vehicle was hit from behind, her head struck the steering wheel, snapped back, and struck the headrest of her seat. She testified that, at the same time, her teeth banged together. Mrs. Koukounakis was taken to hospital complaining of a sore neck. She was treated and released that day.

Within a few weeks, Mrs. Koukounakis was suffering from severe pain in the lower left part of the back of her neck. She was also experiencing backaches, shoulder pain, headaches, leg pains, and soreness in the jaw. She had difficulty opening her mouth, and developed an abscessed tooth, which was associated with the trauma suffered in the accident. Mrs. Koukounakis' condition worsened, and she saw a number of dentists and doctors. According to experts called on her behalf, the trauma from the accident caused internal derangement of the right mandibular joint, which rapidly led to degeneration of that joint. The condition is referred to as temporomandibular joint dysfunction (tmj dysfunction).

Prior to trial, Mrs. Koukounakis had undergone four surgical procedures and a number of non-surgical treatments. Unfortunately, none of them produced significant improvement. Dr. Pye, who operated on the right side of Mrs. Koukounakis' jaw in March of 1989, described this joint in these terms:

We got in there and there were no -- there was nothing normal in that joint that I could see at all. I could not find the temporomandibular joint disc. All I could see were adhesions, connective tissue remnants, repair processes that were trying to be made, a lot of blood vessels that were torturing around in different directions. There didn't seem to be any order at all, compared to joints that I had done before where everything just appears normal.

So what we had was a mass, like a hole. It looked like a grenade had gone off in there. There was just nothing normal in this space.

Dr. Pye was of the opinion that Mrs. Koukounakis' case was the worst example of tmj dysfunction he had seen in 20 years of practice. He said, "nothing comes close to this".

Virtually every aspect of Mrs. Koukounakis' life has been adversely affected by the injury to her jaw. Her pain is intense, extreme, and continuous. She cannot work, sleep, or eat properly, and needs housekeeping assistance. Her energy level is very low. By the time of trial, Mrs. Koukounakis had developed a wide variety of problems including chronic stress, depression, headaches, codeine dependency, and anorexia. Mrs. Koukounakis is described as "a dental cripple" who will need ongoing and substantial dental treatment for the rest of her life. She will always have pain and will be unable to work outside of the home. Her prognosis is guarded at best. While there is a chance for improvement, there is also the distinct possibility of further deterioration as she ages. There is also the possibility that Mrs. Koukounakis will require further surgery on the left side of her jaw.

C. The Scope of Appellate Review

This court's jurisdiction to review an assessment of damages made by a jury is found in s. 119 of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43:

119. On an appeal from an award for damages for personal injury, the court may, if it considers it just, substitute its own assessment of the damages [See Note 2 below].

It is agreed by counsel that pre-existing, judicially imposed limits on appellate review of damage assessments govern review under this section. Where, as here, the assessment was made by a jury, and there is no suggestion that the instructions to the jury were erroneous or deficient, the appellant must establish that the amount awarded is "so inordinately high that it must be a wholly erroneous estimate of the damages": Nance v. British Columbia Electric Railway Co., 1951 CanLII 374 \(UK JCPC\), [1951] 3 D.L.R. 705 at p. 713, [1951] A.C. 601 (P.C.); Woelk v. Halvorson, 1980 CanLII 17 \(SCC\), [1980] 2 S.C.R. 430 at pp. 435-36, 114 D.L.R. (3d) 385 at pp. 388-89. Appellate courts do not decide whether a jury made the "correct" award for general non-pecuniary damages, but only whether the award is "beyond the scope of anything that could be accepted as reasonable": Vieczorek v. Piersma (1987), 1987 CanLII 4403 \(ON CA\), 58 O.R. (2d) 583 at p. 589, 36 D.L.R.

(4th) 136 (C.A.); see also R.P. Kerans, Standards of Review Employed by Appellate Courts (Edmonton: Juriliber, 1994) at pp. 139-42.

MacKinnon A.C.J.O. in Howes v. Crosby (1984), 1984 CanLII 2172 \(ON CA\), 45 O.R. (2d) 449 at p. 459, 6 D.L.R. (4th) 698 (C.A.), quantified this limitation on appellate intervention when he said:

Normally this Court, depending on the amount of damages, takes the view that if it is of the opinion the award is too high or too low by 50 %, it concludes that the damages are inordinately high or low and varies it accordingly . . .

Review for reasonableness, as opposed to correctness, demands not only deference to the amount awarded, but also deference to the findings of fact underlying the award. Where a jury's award under other heads of damage reveals findings of fact relevant to the assessment of general non-pecuniary damages, those findings should be respected in assessing the reasonableness of the jury's award under that head. In so far as the verdict does not reveal findings of fact relevant to the assessment of general non-pecuniary damages, this court should assume that the jury made all findings of fact reasonably available to it and capable of supporting its assessment. Where, as here, the defendant claims that the award is too high, that claim must be judged by reference to the relevant factual findings, if any, implicit in the jury's verdict, combined with any other findings of fact reasonably available to the jury and capable of supporting the plaintiff's claim for general non-pecuniary damages.

D. The Arguments

Mr. Cherniak, with his usual consummate skill, advances two alternative arguments, either of which, he submits, demonstrates that the award was so excessive as to require downward adjustment. In the first argument, he relies on the combined effect of three factors. Mr. Cherniak contends that the award of $180,000 is inordinately high having regard to Mrs. Koukounakis' pre-accident medical conditions, the upper limit on general non-pecuniary damages ($225,000 as of the trial date), and contemporary awards in similar cases. I will consider each argument separately while bearing in mind that Mr. Cherniak relies on their cumulative effect.

Mrs. Koukounakis suffered from a number of maladies prior to the accident. Most were relatively minor and routine. She did, however, manifest symptoms, particularly in the year prior to the accident, suggesting that she was predisposed to develop tmj dysfunction. Pre-existing medical problems and a predisposition to develop the disability brought about by an accident should be considered in assessing general non-pecuniary damages. This is so because, in assessing the factors which combine to yield an award for general non-pecuniary damages, the jury must compare the individual plaintiff's anticipated lot in life after the accident with that which the plaintiff would have enjoyed but for the accident. As stated in Graham v. Rourke (1990), 1990 CanLII 7005 \(ON CA\), 75 O.R. (2d) 622 at p. 644, 74 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (C.A.):

In arriving at a global figure which represents the non-pecuniary loss to the plaintiff, a trial judge will consider real and substantial future possibilities, both positive and negative, which could impact on the plaintiff's quality of life. These considerations will be reflected in the figure which the trial judge arrives at in his assessment of general non-pecuniary damages.

Associate Chief Justice MacKinnon made the same point in Mulroy v. Aqua Scene (1982), 36 O.R. (2d) 653 (C.A.) at p. 657:

. . . compensation must bear a relationship to the evidence given as to the present realities and future possibilities.

There was evidence from which the jury could find that Mrs. Koukounakis' pre-existing medical condition would have had a significant negative impact on her quality of life had she not been injured in the accident. I cannot say, however, that a reasonable jury must inevitably have come to that conclusion. There was conflicting evidence on the point, some of which indicated that the pre-existing conditions would not have significantly affected Mrs. Koukounakis' ability to live and enjoy her life in a normal way. It was for the jury to choose between these competing views. Unless the jury's award under the other heads of damage reveals its findings of fact on this issue, this court, in reviewing the award for general non-pecuniary damages, should assume that the jury made the finding most favourable to Mrs. Koukounakis.

Mr. Cherniak submits that the jury's awards for loss of future earning capacity and future care indicate that the jury did conclude that Mrs. Koukounakis would have had significant future medical problems even if she had not been injured in the accident. He submits that the suitability of the award for general non-pecuniary damages must be judged in the light of that finding.

The jury's award for loss of future earning capacity and future care costs were considerably less than the amounts referred to in the evidence adduced on behalf of Mrs. Koukounakis. The amounts awarded are not necessarily explained, however, by a finding that Mrs. Koukounakis would have suffered significant future disabilities even if she had not been injured. The award for loss of future earning capacity may simply be a reflection of the jury's conclusion that Mrs. Koukounakis would have continued to work part-time, as she was doing at the time of the accident, and would not have gone back to work full-time. The award for future care costs is explainable by reference to the different opinions advanced as to the type, cost, and amount of future care that Mrs. Koukounakis would require. I cannot conclude that the jury must have found as a fact that Mrs. Koukounakis' pre-existing medical condition would have resulted in a significant diminution of the quality of her life had she not been injured in the accident. Accordingly, I consider the appropriateness of the award for general non-pecuniary damages on the assumption that the jury found as a fact that Mrs. Koukounakis' pre-existing medical conditions would not have significantly impaired her ability to lead a normal life had she not been injured in the car accident. The first factor relied on by the appellants does not advance their position.

I turn next to the contention that the award is inordinately high having regard to the upper limit on general non-pecuniary damages as of the date of trial ($225,000). The judicially imposed upper limit on general non-pecuniary damages offers some assistance in determining the appropriateness of a particular award. The appropriateness of an award, however, cannot be determined by comparing the level of disability or pain and suffering suffered by a particular plaintiff to that of a person entitled to the maximum award: Howes v. Crosby, supra, at p. 460. The upper limit serves to cap the potential award for general non-pecuniary damages. It is in large measure an arbitrary figure fixed in response to policy concerns, and on the assumption that awards made under other heads of damage will largely achieve the compensation goal: Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229 at pp. 260-61, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 452. While the upper limit may also provide some small assistance in assessing the propriety of an award in a case where the maximum award is inappropriate, any attempt to use the upper limit as more than a very rough guide for comparative purposes ignores the policy reasons underlying the creation of the upper limit.

It was open to the jury to conclude that Mrs. Koukounakis' capacity to lead a normal life had been virtually destroyed by the medical and dental problems arising out of the accident. On that view of the evidence, her life had become a constant battle against pain, marked by recurring and new medical problems, dominated by seemingly endless visits to various doctors and dentists, and clouded by the very real prospect of increased pain and further medical intervention in the future. Using the upper limit of $225,000 as a very rough guide, I am not prepared to say that an award of $180,000 in the circumstances of this case was so excessive as to warrant this court's intervention.

The third factor relied on by the appellants engages the court in a comparison of Mrs. Koukounakis' injuries and their effect on her, with injuries and effects suffered by other plaintiffs in similar cases. This comparative exercise is a valid one in that the fairness of the award is measured in part by comparing it to awards in similar cases. Awards for general non-pecuniary damages in similar cases should achieve a degree of consistency and uniformity: Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., supra, at pp. 261-64; Mulroy v. Aqua Scene, supra, at p. 656. Appellate review provides the opportunity to maintain that uniformity and consistency. Comparative analysis, however, offers only limited assistance. The assessment of general non-pecuniary damages ultimately depends on a mix of factors, many of which are peculiar to a particular plaintiff. When one examines other similar cases, one inevitably finds differences which distinguish those cases from the one under consideration. This is particularly so because the Canadian approach to general non-pecuniary damages does not emphasize the specific physical injury or disability suffered as much as it does the effect of that injury or disability on the particular plaintiff: Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., supra, at pp. 261-62; Lindal v. Lindal, 1981 CanLII 35 (SCC), [1981] 2 S.C.R. 629 at p. 637, 129 D.L.R. (3d) 263.

Counsel have provided the court with a number of cases, all of which have some similarity to the present case. These cases tell me that the award made here is considerably higher than awards made in other cases involving similar injuries. The cases also indicate, however, that the effect of this injury on Mrs. Koukounakis has been far more severe than those experienced by plaintiffs in the other cases. For example, in Dyke v. Ferguson[, an unreported decision of Van Camp J., released February 14, 1991 (Ont. Gen. Div.), the plaintiff suffered injuries which were similar to, and perhaps more severe than, those suffered by Mrs. Koukounakis. For whatever reason, however, the injuries did not have the same disastrous effect on Mrs. Dyke's ability to enjoy a normal life that this injury has had on Mrs. Koukounakis. Madam Justice Van Camp, a very experienced trial judge, assessed Mrs. Dyke's general non-pecuniary damages at $100,000.

I see no purpose in reviewing the other cases in detail. Suffice it to say that while they convince me that the award made here was high, I am not satisfied that it was so high as to necessitate appellate intervention.

Mr. Cherniak's alternative submission proceeds from a different premise. Whereas in his first submission he accepted that the upper limit for an award of general non-pecuniary damages should be taken as of the date of trial ($225,000), his alternative submission proceeds on the basis that the upper limit should be determined as of the date of the accident. He submits that if the maximum award calculated as of the date of the accident ($165,000) is accepted as the relevant figure, then the award of $180,000 for a non-catastrophic injury is patently excessive.

Mr. Cherniak points out that since the cause of action arose before October 23, 1989, the $180,000 awarded for general non-pecuniary damages was not subject to the 5 per cent prejudgment interest rate established by the amendments to the Courts of Justice Act proclaimed in force in December 1989. Instead, the award attracted prejudgment interest at 12 per cent, the generally applicable rate established by the terms of s. 138 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1984, S.O. 1984, c. 11 [See Note 3 below]. He submits that prejudgment interest is paid in part to compensate for the effects of inflation between the date of the accident and the date of the judgment. He further submits that the maximum amount awardable for general non-pecuniary damages also has an inflationary component represented by the difference between the maximum as of the date of the accident ($165,000) and the maximum as of the date of judgment ($225,000). Mr. Cherniak contends that measuring the appropriateness of the award for general non-pecuniary damages as of the date of trial and in trial date dollars, while at the same time allowing prejudgment interest at normal rates on that amount, results in the plaintiff receiving a double credit for inflation between the date of the accident and the date of the trial.

Counsel argues that the double credit for inflation could be avoided either by an appropriate reduction in the rate of prejudgment interest, or by using the date of the accident as the operative date when awarding general non-pecuniary damages. He submits that this court has rejected the former approach in Borland v. Muttersbach (1985), 1985 CanLII 2134 \(ON CA\), 53 O.R. (2d) 129 at pp. 146-48, 23 D.L.R. (4th) 664 (C.A.), affirming (1984), 1984 CanLII 2142 \(ON SC\), 49 O.R. (2d) 165, 15 D.L.R. (4th) 486 (H.C.J.), and Graham v. Persyko (1984), 1986 CanLII 4049 \(ON CA\), 55 O.R. (2d) 12, 30 C.C.L.T. 85 (H.C.J.), reversed on this point (1986), 1986 CanLII 2711 \(ON CA\), 55 O.R. (2d) 10, 27 D.L.R. (4th) 699 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused (1986), 1986 CanLII 3963 \(SCC\), 34 D.L.R. (4th) 160, but should now adopt the latter approach. He acknowledges that should this latter approach be adopted, it would apply only to causes of action arising before October 23, 1989.

The debate with respect to the combined effect of inflation and prejudgment interest on non-pecuniary damage awards is longstanding. While some courts have denied any connection between inflation and prejudgment interest [See Note 4 below], most have come to recognize the force of the double-compensation-for-inflation argument: Leischner v. West Kootenay Power & Light Co., 1986 CanLII 889 \(BC CA\), [1986] 3 W.W.R. 97 at pp. 134-37, 24 D.L.R. (4th) 641 (B.C.C.A.); S. Waddams, The Law of Damages, 2nd ed. (Aurora: Canada Law Book, 1994) at para. 7.660ff; Ontario Law Reform Commission, Report on Compensation for Personal Injury and Death (1987) at pp. 208-12; Ontario, Report of the Inquiry Into Motor Vehicle Accident Compensation in Ontario (1988) (Osborne Report), vol. 1, at pp. 404-10.

The logic of Mr. Cherniak's argument cannot be denied. Prejudgment interest is intended in part to compensate for the effects of inflation between the date of the event giving rise to the cause of action and the date of judgment: Watkins v. Olafson, 1989 CanLII 36 \(SCC\), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 750 at pp. 772-73, 61 D.L.R. (4th) 577. The maximum amount allowable for general non-pecuniary damages has also been adjusted upward since 1978 to take inflation into account: Lindal v. Lindal, supra, at p. 641. To the extent that awards below the maximum are fixed in part by reference to the maximum award, they also contain an inflationary component. Awards which factor inflation into the assessment of non-pecuniary damages and also provide prejudgment interest at the full rate do result in over-compensation for inflation. The exact degree of that over-compensation will vary and will be most pronounced when the award is at the maximum allowable amount.

Accepting the validity of the double-compensation-for-inflation argument, however, does not mean that the appellant's submission must prevail. The appellant must demonstrate that his solution to the double compensation problem is an appropriate one for this court to adopt at this time. In addressing that ultimate question, it must be recognized that the appellant's proposed solution constitutes a significant change in the way non-pecuniary damages are assessed. Non-pecuniary damages are calculated as of the trial date and in terms of trial date dollars: Consumers' Gas Co. v. Peterborough (City) (1979), 1979 CanLII 77 \(ON CA\), 25 O.R. (2d) 399 at p. 457, 104 D.L.R. (3d) 174 at p. 226 (C.A.), affirmed (without reference to this point) 1981 CanLII 66 \(SCC\), [1981] 2 S.C.R. 613, 129 D.L.R. (3d) 507; Lindal v. Lindal, supra, at p. 643; Hatton v. Henderson, 1981 CanLII 514 \(BC CA\), [1981] 5 W.W.R. 624 at pp. 636-37, 126 D.L.R. (3d) 50 (B.C.C.A.); Birkett v. Hayes, [1982] 1 W.L.R. 816 at p. 820, [1982] 2 All E.R. 710 (C.A.); Wright v. British Railway Board, supra. If the appellant's submission is adopted, such assessments would be made by reference to the dollar value of the damages as of the date of the accident [See Note 5 below]. This method of avoiding double recovery for inflation was considered and rejected in the Osborne Report, supra, at p. 407. The author referred to non-pecuniary damage assessments made in terms of dollar values as of the date of the event giving rise to the cause of action as:

... impracticable and unrealistic, especially in less serious cases. Judges and juries and, more importantly, those settling cases cannot be asked to roll back the clock in assessing non-pecuniary damages. 1988 assessments of non-pecuniary damages will be assessed in 1988 dollars regardless of the date of the accident.

Not only must the appellants' contention swim upstream against the judicial current in so far as the relevant date for assessment of non-pecuniary damages is concerned, it must also traverse a legislative dam in the form of the 1989 amendments to the Courts of Justice Act: see supra, note 3.

In the early 1980s, various trial judges in Ontario considered whether plaintiffs were being over-compensated for inflation in awards for general non-pecuniary damages. Different conclusions were reached and different solutions adopted: Borland v. Muttersbach, supra, at p. 187; De Champlain v. Etobicoke General Hospital (1985), 34 C.C.L.T. 89 at pp. 109-10 (Ont. H.C.J.); Graham v. Persyko, supra, at p. 25 O.R., p. 103 C.C.L.T. Trial judges who accepted that there was over-compensation for inflation responded by adjusting the statutorily prescribed prejudgment interest rate downward. In Borland, and again in Persyko, this court rejected that solution. In doing so, it accepted the conclusion of Barr J. in Borland where he said at p. 188 O.R.:

I conclude that the fact of inflation is not a proper ground to deprive the plaintiffs of their prima facie right to receive prejudgment interest at the prime rate.

The Ontario Law Reform Commission in its 1987 Report on Compensation for Personal Injury and Death, supra, and the Osborne Report of 1988 accepted that Borland expressed the current state of the law in Ontario. Both found that the Borland approach did result in overcompensation and both recommended that non-pecuniary damages attract prejudgment interest at a rate below that generally applicable to the assessment of prejudgment interest. The Law Reform Commission recommended that the rate be set at 2.5 per cent and the Osborne Report suggested a rate of 3.5 to 4 per cent. Neither report suggested that overcompensation for inflation should be avoided by calculating non-pecuniary damages by reference to their dollar value at the time of the incident giving rise to the cause of action.

The legislative response to these reports as found in the Courts of Justice Amendment Act, 1989 (No. 2) tells us two things. First, the legislature accepted the contention that non-pecuniary damages should be subject to a lower rate of prejudgment interest than is generally applied, in order to avoid overcompensation for inflation. Second, the legislature decided that causes of action arising prior to October 23, 1989 should continue to be governed by the law which existed prior to the amendments. That law is found in Borland and Persyko. In both cases, non-pecuniary damages were assessed as of the date of trial and, subject to variation for other reasons, earned prejudgment interest at the generally applicable statutory rate.

The appellants seek to escape the clutches of Borland and Persyko by taking aim not at the inflationary component of prejudgment interest, but at the inflationary component of the award itself. The appellants submit that this aspect of overcompensation for inflation was not addressed in either Borland or Persyko. Clearly, it was not. It is, however, difficult to see why this shift in the point of attack should make any difference in the result. In Borland, supra, at p. 187, Barr J. rejected the submission that prejudgment interest should be significantly reduced to avoid overcompensation for inflation because, in his view, that approach would unfairly advantage the defendant and discourage timely advance payments in appropriate cases. Barr J. was content to live with an element of double compensation in order to discourage unreasonable delays in settlement and refusals to make appropriate advance payments. To Barr J., the cure for overcompensation for inflation was worse than the problem. It must be taken, given the affirmation of the trial decision in Borland, and the reversal of the contrary position taken in Persyko, supra, that this court shared the policy assessment made by Barr J. The approach advocated by the appellants would have the same effect as would the approach rejected in Borland. I can see no reason why the policy concerns which prompted the rejection of the submissions made in Borland should not also compel the rejection of the submission made by the appellants.

In any event, whatever the fate of this argument may have been had it been made in Borland or Persyko, it cannot now be accepted given the legislature's informed response to the question of overcompensation for inflation. The legislature chose to leave causes of action which arose before October 23, 1989 to be decided by the then-existing law. It would be contrary to the clear intention of the legislature for this court to now revisit those cases and revise the applicable law. In proceeding as it did, the legislature accepted that plaintiffs whose cause of action arose before October 23, 1989 were entitled to rely on the law as declared in Borland and Persyko and to proceed with their claims on that basis. This court should not, some five years later, disturb those legitimate expectations.

E. Conclusion with Respect to the Defendants' Appeal

I would not give effect to the arguments advanced on behalf of the appellants and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

II. THE PLAINTIFFS' CROSS-APPEAL

Mr. Tick succinctly advanced Mrs. Koukounakis' position on the cross-appeal. He submitted that the jury, having found that Mrs. Koukounakis would incur future care expenses, had no choice on the evidence but to award the full amount claimed by Mrs. Koukounakis. The evidence adduced in support of that claim indicated that future care costs would be $379,000. The jury awarded $161,648.

I do not accept the contention that the evidence was reasonably capable of supporting only one view of Mrs. Koukounakis' future medical costs. As with any evaluation of future expenses, a number of variables were at play and different opinions were advanced by various witnesses depending on those variables. The jury was not obligated to accept any one view of that evidence. Their assessment is not unreasonable.

I also reject the submission that because the jury awarded the full amount claimed for past medical expenses, consistency demanded that the jury do the same with respect to a claim for future care costs. The two heads of damage are distinct and an award made under one head of damage does not necessarily bear any relationship to an award made under the other. Past expenses are usually subject to clear and definitive proof. Future care costs are necessarily more speculative. This jury accepted the evidence that all of the pre-trial medical expenses claimed were in fact incurred as a result of the injury suffered in the accident. Far from being determinative of the jury's assessment of the future care costs, that finding was largely irrelevant to the determination of the future care costs.

I see no basis for interfering with the jury's assessment of Mrs. Koukounakis' future care costs. I would dismiss the cross-appeal with costs.

Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed.

Note 1: Section 118 of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, proclaimed in force on December 14, 1989 as part of the Courts of Justice Amendment Act, 1989 (No. 2), S.O. 1989, c. 67, s. 4, s. 8(2), and applicable to these proceedings at trial provides in part: "the court may give guidance to the jury on the amount of damages". Section 118 is made applicable to this action by s. 8(2) of the Courts of Justice Amendment Act, 1989 (No. 2).

Note 2: Like s. 118 of the Courts of Justice Act, s. 119 came into force on December 14, 1989 and is also made applicable to these proceedings by the relevant transitional provision: Courts of Justice Amendment Act, 1989 (No. 2), S.O. 1989, c. 67, s. 4, s. 8(2).

Note 3: Under the terms of the Courts of Justice Act, 1984, S.O. 1984, c. 11, non-pecuniary damages were subject to the generally applicable provisions with respect to prejudgment interest. The Courts of Justice Amendment Act, 1989 (No. 2), S.O. 1989, c. 67, s. 6(1) [enacting s. 138(1a)] provided that non-pecuniary damages would attract prejudgment interest at the rate set out in the Rules of Civil Procedure. Rule 53.10 sets the rate at 5 per cent. Section 8(1) of the Courts of Justice Amendment Act, 1989 (No. 2), limits the application of these amendments to causes of action arising after October 23, 1989.

Note 4: In Pickett v. British Rail Engineering Ltd., [1978] 3 W.L.R. 955 at pp. 963, 975, 983-84, [1979] 1 All E.R. 774, the House of Lords rejected the claim that plaintiffs should not receive prejudgment interest on non-pecuniary damages. Lord Wilberforce, at p. 963, indicated that inflation was designed to preserve the real value of money and interest was designed as compensation for being kept out of that real value. Subsequently, the House of lord, without purporting to overrule Pickett, accepted the contention that prejudgment interest on non-pecuniary damages should be awarded at a substantially reduced rate to avoid over-compensation for inflation: Wight v. British Railway Board, [1983] 3 W.L.R. 211 at 218, [1983] 2 All E.R. 698.

Note 5: It would appear that in Saskatchewan, non-pecuniary damages are assessed as of the date of the accident giving rise to the cause of action and in date-of-the-accident dollars: Bunce v. Flick, 1991 CanLII 7975 \(SK CA\), [1991] 5 W.W.R. 623 at p. 630, 93 Sask. R. 53 (C.A.). The court cites no authority for its position and does not refer to the contrary authority. In particular, it makes no reference to the contrary position taken by the Supreme Court of Canada in Lindal v. Lindal.

TAB 55

McIntyre v. Grigg, 2006 CanLII 37326 (ON CA)

Source: Court of Appeal for Ontario
 Date: 2006-11-06
 File number: C41585
 Other citations: 83 OR (3d) 161 — 274 DLR (4th) 28 —
 152 ACWS (3d) 624 — 217 OAC 217 — 43 CCLT (3d) 209 —
 [2006] OJ No 4420 (QL) — 39 MVR (5th) 39
 Citation: McIntyre v. Grigg, 2006 CanLII 37326 (ON CA), <https://canlii.ca/t/1pxqx>, retrieved on 2026-03-23

McIntyre et al. v. Grigg et al.
[Indexed as: McIntyre v. Grigg]

83 O.R. (3d) 161

Court of Appeal for Ontario,
 McMurtry C.J.O., Weiler and Blair JJ.A.
 November 6, 2006

Damages -- Aggravated damages -- Trial judge erring in awarding aggravated damages in amount of $100,000 separately after awarding non-pecuniary general damages in amount of $250,000 -- Aggravated damages are not to be awarded separately from and in addition to general damages -- General damages are to be assessed after taking into account any aggravated features of defendant's conduct.

Damages -- Apportionment -- Plaintiff injured when struck by intoxicated driver -- Jury apportioning 70 per cent of damages to driver and 30 per cent to commercial host -- Apportionment reasonable -- Appeal from apportionment dismissed.

Damages -- Personal injuries -- General damages -- Young, athletic first-year university student suffering serious physical and psychological injuries after struck by car -- Non-pecuniary general damages in amount of $250,000 affirmed on appeal.

Damages -- Punitive damages -- Negligent conduct only attracting punitive damages if it was intentional and deliberate and if it was so extreme as to be deserving of full condemnation and punishment -- Defendant driving while his blood alcohol content was two to three times over legal limit -- Defendant striking pedestrian -- Defendant charged with criminal offences but pleading guilty to highway traffic offence and being fined $500 -- Defendant's conduct properly attracting punitive damages -- Trial judge's award of punitive damages in amount of $100,000 excessive -- Award reduced to $20,000.

Torts -- Commercial host liability -- Plaintiff struck and injured by impaired driver after driver left defendant pub -- Trial judge instructing jury correctly on commercial host liability -- Defendant's appeal from finding of liability dismissed.

The plaintiff A was seriously injured when she was struck by a motor vehicle driven by the defendant AG and owned by the defendant TG. AG's blood alcohol level was two to three times the legal limit. A, her parents and her sister brought an action against AG, TG and M. Inc., which operated the pub at which AG had been drinking just before the accident. A's parents and sister sought damages under s. 61 of the Family Law Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F.3. The trial judge awarded general damages in the amount of $250,000, payable 70 per cent by the Gs and 30 per cent by M Inc., aggravated damages in the amount of $100,000, payable solely by the Gs and punitive damages of $100,000, payable solely by the Gs. The Family Law Act claims were dismissed. All three defendants appealed the award of damages, and M Inc. appealed that portion of the judgment based upon the verdict of the jury that found it 30 per cent liable for the accident. A's parents and sister appealed the dismissal of the Family Law Act claims.

Held, the defendants' appeal should be allowed in part; the plaintiffs' appeal should be allowed. [page162]

In Ontario, commercial host liability may be imposed both at common law and by statute where a patron, who subsequently causes injury, has been served while intoxicated or over-served to the point of intoxication and where it is reasonably foreseeable that the patron will drive a motor vehicle upon leaving the establishment. A commercial host does not escape liability simply by not knowing that the patron became inebriated before driving; the commercial host is liable if it or its employees knew or ought reasonably to have known in the circumstances that the patron was in this condition. The trial judge properly charged the jury on the issue of M Inc.'s liability at common law and under the Liquor Licence Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.19. The trial judge did not instruct the jury that liability under s. 39 of the Liquor Licence Act is "absolute". The liability under s. 39 is more accurately characterized as a statutory liability arising once the factual preconditions provided for therein have been found to exist. That is what the trial judge instructed the jury. There was sufficient evidence to support the jury's finding that M Inc. was liable.

A jury award assessing the degree of apportionment of damages as between defendants is to be treated with deference. In the absence of material misdirection or non-direction, appellate courts will not interfere unless the verdict is so plainly unreasonable and unjust as to satisfy the court that no jury reviewing the evidence as a whole and acting judicially could have arrived at that conclusion. The 70-30 apportionment in this case was reasonable.

A was an active, athletic and intelligent young woman who suffered serious and permanent injuries as a result of the accident. Physically, she sustained a closed head injury, soft tissue injuries and various orthopaedic injuries. She was diagnosed as suffering from a major depressive disorder triggered by the accident, which led to two suicide attempts. The medical evidence attributed her depression to post-traumatic stress disorder and to her personal reaction to the losses in her function and self-image from her physical injuries. She would require medication and was likely to suffer from anxiety and fear on a long-term basis. The award of general damages in the amount of $250,000 was reasonable.

Aggravated damages are not awarded in addition to general damages. Rather, general non-pecuniary damages should be assessed after taking into account any aggravated features of the defendant's conduct. There was no legal basis for a separate award of aggravated damages in this case. Moreover, the medical evidence was insufficient to establish that A's psychological harm was increased because AG was impaired at the time of the accident. Given that the upper limit at the time of the trial was $299,000, the jury award of $250,000 for general non-pecuniary damages was generous and should not be increased even if there was an evidentiary basis for awarding aggravated damages.

Punitive damages should only be awarded in exceptional cases, where the defendant has engaged in extreme misconduct. Negligent conduct can only attract punitive damages if the misconduct in question was intentional and deliberate and was extreme in nature and such that by any reasonable standard it is deserving of full condemnation and punishment. AG's conduct was deliberate and intentional. His decision to drink excessively and drive, his intoxication, and his speed and erratic driving were key contributors to the accident. All of those factors demonstrated that on the night of the accident, AG showed a conscious and reckless disregard for the lives and safety of others. A factor of significant importance in assessing whether it would be appropriate to award punitive damages is whether punishment has already been imposed in a separate proceeding for the same misconduct. An award of punitive damages was justified. Given that AG's sole punishment for his conduct in the criminal proceedings was a $500 fine, [page163] punitive damages would not amount to double punishment. The quantum of the punitive damages awarded in this case was excessive. AG's lower level of moral blameworthiness given the isolated nature of the misconduct, the lack of a relationship between the parties (in comparison to a relationship of trust) and the fact that the misconduct was not specifically directed at the plaintiff, indicated that a lesser quantum of punitive damages would be rational. The quantum was reduced to $20,000.

The jury's verdict dismissing the Family Law Act claims was so plainly unreasonable and unjust that no jury, reviewing the evidence as a whole and acting judicially, could have refused to make any award. A's parents were each awarded $15,000 and her sister was awarded $5,000.

Per Blair J.A. (dissenting in part): The existence of egregious conduct worthy of condemnation by the court - - while the target of an award of punitive damages -- is not in itself sufficient to justify the granting of such an exceptional remedy. The court must have regard to all of the principles underpinning a punitive damages award in order to determine whether punitive damages serve a rational purpose in the circumstances. In particular, the court must be satisfied that the granting of punitive damages in a civil tort context -- a concept foreign to the primarily compensatory rationale of tort law -- advances the objectives of the remedy (punishment, deterrence and denunciation) and outweighs the general rule that these public-oriented objectives are principally addressed by the criminal law. Punitive damages did not serve a rational purpose in the circumstances of this case and, generally, they will not serve a rational purpose in cases of a similar nature. Punitive damages, in the milieu of motor vehicle negligence, do not materially advance the objectives of punitive damages. Moreover, awarding punitive damages in what will inevitably become less than the rare and exceptional case tips the criminal law/private law balance respecting the imposition of a public sanction too far in the direction of a private law tort remedy. This will result in windfall recoveries for a large number of claimants whose compensatory entitlement has no relationship whatever to the recovery they will receive.

APPEALS from the award of damages from the judgment of Fedak J. of the Superior Court of Justice, dated March 9, 2004. Court File No. C41585:

Cases referred to Gerula v. Flores, 1995 CanLII 1096 \(ON CA\), [1995] O.J. No. 2300, 126 D.L.R. (4th) 506, 83 O.A.C. 128, 56 A.C.W.S. (3d) 996 (C.A.); Kaytor v. Lion's Driving Range Ltd. (1962), 1962 CanLII 346 \(BC SC\), 35 D.L.R. (2d) 426, 40 W.W.R. 173 (B.C.S.C.); Nichols v. Guiel, 1983 CanLII 460 \(BC SC\), [1983] B.C.J. No. 1693, 44 B.C.L.R. 155, 145 D.L.R. (3d) 186, [1983] 4 W.W.R. 175 (S.C.); Norberg v. Wynrib, 1992 CanLII 65 \(SCC\), [1992] 2 S.C.R. 226, [1992] S.C.J. No. 60, 68 B.C.L.R. (2d) 29, 92 D.L.R. (4th) 449, 138 N.R. 81, [1992] 4 W.W.R. 577, 12 C.C.L.T. (2d) 1; Vlcek v. Koshel, 1988 CanLII 3116 \(BC SC\), [1988] B.C.J. No. 1062, 30 B.C.L.R. (2d) 97, 52 D.L.R. (4th) 371, [1989] 1 W.W.R. 469, 44 C.C.L.T. 314 (S.C.); Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., [2002] 1 S.C.R. 595, [2002] S.C.J. No. 19, 209 D.L.R. (4th) 257, 283 N.R. 1, [2002] I.L.R. ÂI-4048, 2002 SCC 18, 20 B.L.R. (3d) 165, consd Other cases referred to Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229, [1978] S.C.J. No. 6, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 452, 19 N.R. 50, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 577, 8 A.R. 182, 3 C.C.L.T. 225, [1978] 1 A.C.W.S. 218; Arnold v. Teno, 1978 CanLII 2 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287, [1978] S.C.J. No. 8, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 609, 19 N.R. 1, 3 C.C.L.T. 272, [1978] 1 A.C.W.S. 231; Cassell & Co. Ltd. v. Broome, [1972] A.C. 1027, [1972] 1 All E.R. 801, [1972] 2 W.L.R. 645 (H.L.); Childs v. Desormeaux, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 643, [2006] S.C.J. No. 18, 210 O.A.C. 315, 347 N.R. 328, 2006 SCC 18, 39 C.C.L.T. (3d) 163, 30 M.V.R. (5th) 1, affg (2004), 2004 CanLII 15701 \(ON CA\), 71 O.R. (3d) 195, [2004] O.J. No. 2065, 187 O.A.C. 111, 239 D.L.R. (4th) 61, 23 C.C.L.T. (3d) 216, 4 M.V.R. (5th) 1 (C.A.); Doobay (c.o.b. Venus Fashions) v. York Gate Mall Ltd., [2000] O.J. No. 2219 (C.A.); [page164] Dryden (Litigation Guardian of) v. Campbell Estate, [2001] O.J. No. 829, [2001] O.T.C. 143, 11 M.V.R. (4th) 247, 103 A.C.W.S. (3d) 1070 (S.C.J.); Ferenczy v. MCI Medical Clinics, 2005 CanLII 18186 \(ON CA\), [2005] O.J. No. 2076, 198 O.A.C. 254 (C.A.); Ferme Gérald Laplante & Fils Ltée v. Grenville Patron Mutual Fire Insurance Co. (2002), 2002 CanLII 45070 \(ON CA\), 61 O.R. (3d) 481, [2002] O.J. No. 3588, 217 D.L.R. (4th) 34, [2003] I.L.R. ÂI-4149, 24 C.P.C. (5th) 216 (C.A.); Fidler v. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 3, [2006] S.C.J. No. 30, [2006] 8 W.W.R. 1, [2006] I.L.R. ÂI- 4521, 2006 SCC 30, 53 C.C.E.L. (3d) 1, 57 B.C.L.R. (4th) 1, 39 C.C.L.I. (4th) 1; Fleury v. Fleury, 2001 CanLII 294 \(ON CA\), [2001] O.J. No. 1720, 144 O.A.C. 372, 9 C.P.C. (5th) 222, 105 A.C.W.S. (3d) 154 (C.A.); Francescucci v. Gilker, [1996] O.J. No. 474 (C.A.); Hague v. Billings (1993), 1993 CanLII 8581 \(ON CA\), 13 O.R. (3d) 298, [1993] O.J. No. 945, 102 D.L.R. (4th) 44, 15 C.C.L.T. (2d) 264, 46 M.V.R. (2d) 254 (C.A.); Hamilton v. Canadian National Railway Co., 1991 CanLII 8348 \(ON CA\), [1991] O.J. No. 614, 47 O.A.C. 329, 80 D.L.R. (4th) 470, 50 C.P.C. (2d) 271 (C.A.); Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 \(SCC\), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130, [1995] S.C.J. No. 64, 24 O.R. (3d) 865n, 126 D.L.R. (4th) 129, 184 N.R. 1, 30 C.R.R. (2d) 189, 25 C.C.L.T. (2d) 89; Howes v. Crosby (1984), 1984 CanLII 2172 \(ON CA\), 45 O.R. (2d) 449, [1984] O.J. No. 3127, 2 O.A.C. 375, 6 D.L.R. (4th) 698, 29 C.C.L.T. 60 (C.A.); Koukounakis v. Stainrod (1995), 1995 CanLII 621 \(ON CA\), 23 O.R. (3d) 299, [1995] O.J. No. 1369, 12 M.V.R. (3d) 78 (C.A.); Mason v. Peters (1982), 1982 CanLII 1969 \(ON CA\), 39 O.R. (2d) 27, [1982] O.J. No. 3486, 139 D.L.R. (3d) 104, 22 C.C.L.T. 21 (C.A.); McCannell v. McLean, 1937 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1937] S.C.R. 341, [1937] 2 D.L.R. 639; Menow v. Jordan House Ltd., 1973 CanLII 16 \(SCC\), [1974] S.C.R. 239, [1973] S.C.J. No. 80, 38 D.L.R. (3d) 105; Mizzi v. Hopkins (2003), 2003 CanLII 52145 \(ON CA\), 64 O.R. (3d) 365, [2003] O.J. No. 1671, 37 M.V.R. (4th) 50 (C.A.); Mortimer v. Cameron (1994), 1994 CanLII 10998 \(ON CA\), 17 O.R. (3d) 1, [1994] O.J. No. 277, 111 D.L.R. (4th) 428, 1 L.W.R. 57, 19 M.P.L.R. (2d) 286 (C.A.), revg in part [1992] O.J. No. 764, 9 M.P.L.R. (2d) 185 (Gen. Div.) [Leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused (1994)], 19 O.R. (3d) xvi, 178 N.R. 146n; Nelson v. Welsh, 1985 CanLII 5838 \(NS SC\), [1985] N.S.J. No. 412, 422 70 N.S.R. (2d) 422, 166 A.P.R. 422 (S.C.); Olmstead v. Vancouver- Fraser Park District, 1974 CanLII 196 \(SCC\), [1975] 2 S.C.R. 831, [1974] S.C.J. No. 129, 51 D.L.R. (3d) 416, 3 N.R. 326; R. v. Bernshaw, 1995 CanLII 150 \(SCC\), [1995] 1 S.C.R. 254, [1994] S.C.J. No. 87, 176 N.R. 81, [1995] 3 W.W.R. 457, 26 C.R.R. (2d) 132, 95 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 35 C.R. (4th) 201, 8 M.V.R. (3d) 75; R. v. Biancofiore (1997), 1997 CanLII 3420 \(ON CA\), 35 O.R. (3d) 782, [1997] O.J. No. 3865, 119 C.C.C. (3d) 344, 29 M.V.R. (3d) 90, 10 C.R. (5th) 200 (C.A.); R. v. Dharamdeo, 2000 CanLII 17018 \(ON CA\), [2000] O.J. No. 4546, 149 C.C.C. (3d) 489, 6 M.V.R. (4th) 175 (C.A.); R. v. Henry, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 609, [2005] S.C.J. No. 76, 2005 SCC 76; R. v. McVeigh, 1985 CanLII 115 \(ON CA\), [1985] O.J. No. 207, 11 O.A.C. 345, 22 C.C.C. (3d) 145 (C.A.); R. v. Orbanski, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 3, [2005] S.C.J. No. 37, 195 Man. R. (2d) 161, 253 D.L.R. (4th) 385, 335 N.R. 342, 351 W.A.C. 161, [2005] 9 W.W.R. 203, 132 C.R.R. (2d) 117, 196 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 2005 SCC 37, 29 C.R. (6th) 205, 19 M.V.R. (5th) 23; R. v. Proulx, 2000 SCC 5 \(CanLII\), [2000] 1 S.C.R. 61, [2000] S.C.J. No. 6, 142 Man. R. (2d) 161, 182 D.L.R. (4th) 1, 249 N.R. 201, 212 W.A.C. 161, [2000] 4 W.W.R. 21, 140 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 49 M.V.R. (3d) 163, 30 C.R. (5th) 1 (sub nom. R. v. P. (J.K.D.)); Reidy v. McLeod (1986), 1986 CanLII 2556 \(ON CA\), 54 O.R. (2d) 661, [1986] O.J. No. 415, 15 O.A.C. 200, 27 D.L.R. (4th) 317, 36 C.C.L.T. 307 (C.A.); Robitaille v. Vancouver Hockey Club Ltd., 1981 CanLII 532 \(BC CA\), [1981] B.C.J. No. 555, 30 B.C.L.R. 286, 124 D.L.R. (3d) 228, [1981] 3 W.W.R. 481, 16 C.C.L.T. 225, 20 C.P.C. 293 (C.A.); Roose v. Hollett, 1996 CanLII 5288 \(NS CA\), [1996] N.S.J. No. 345, 154 N.S.R. (2d) 161, 139 D.L.R. (4th) 260, 452 A.P.R. 161, 30 C.C.L.T. (2d) 215 (C.A.) [Leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused [1996] S.C.C.A. No. 541] (sub nom. R. (G.B.) v. Hollett); Sambell v. Hudago Enterprises Ltd., [1990] O.J. No. 2494 (Gen. Div.); Snushall v. Fulsang (2005), 2005 CanLII 34561 \(ON CA\), 78 O.R. (3d) 142, [2005] O.J. No. 4069, 202 O.A.C. 297, 258 D.L.R. (4th) 425, 36 C.C.L.T. (3d) 63, 25 M.V.R. (5th) 180 (C.A.); Starkman v. Delhi Court Ltd., 1961 CanLII 195 \(ON CA\), [1961] O.R. 467, [1961] O.J. No. 559, 28 D.L.R. (2d) 269 (C.A.); Stewart v. Pettie, 1995 CanLII 147 \(SCC\), [1995] 1 S.C.R. 131, [1995] S.C.J. No. 3, 25 Alta. L.R. (3d) 297, 121 D.L.R. (4th) 222, 177 N.R. 297, [1995] 3 W.W.R. 1, 23 C.C.L.T. (2d) 89, 8 M.V.R. (3d) 1; Thornborrow v. MacKinnon (1981), 1981 CanLII 1945 \(ON SC\), 32 O.R. (2d) 740, [1981] O.J. No. 3004, 123 D.L.R. (3d) 124, 16 C.C.L.T. 198 (S.C.) (sub nom. Schmidt (Re)); Thornton (Next friend of) v. Prince George School District 57, 1978 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 267, [1978] S.C.J. No. 7, 3 C.C.L.T. 257, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 480, 19 N.R. 552, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 607; [page165] Till v. Walker, [2000] O.J. No. 84, [2000] O.T.C. 51 (S.C.J.); To v. Toronto Board of Education (2001), 2001 CanLII 11304 \(ON CA\), 55 O.R. (3d) 641, [2001] O.J. No. 3490, 204 D.L.R. (4th) 704 (C.A.); T.W. v. Seo, 2005 CanLII 21356 \(ON CA\), [2005]

O.J. No. 2467, 256 D.L.R. (4th) 1, 199 O.A.C. 172, 140 A.C.W.S. (3d) 400 (C.A.); Van Oirschot v. Dow Chemical Canada Inc., 1995 ABCA 264 (CanLII), [1995] A.J. No. 611, 31 Alta. L.R. (3d) 212, 174 A.R. 157, 56 A.C.W.S. (3d) 300 (C.A.), affg 1993 CanLII 7088 (AB KB), [1993] A.J. No. 480, 10 Alta. L.R. (3d) 380, 142 A.R. 149, 41 A.C.W.S. (3d) 9 (Q.B.); Vorvis v. Insurance Corp. of British Columbia, 1989 CanLII 93 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1085, [1989] S.C.J. No. 46, 36 B.C.L.R. (2d) 273, 58 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 94 N.R. 321, [1989] 4 W.W.R. 218, 42 B.L.R. 111, 25 C.C.E.L. 81, 90 C.L.L.C. 14,035 Statutes referred to Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 119 Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46 Family Law Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F.3, s. 61 [as am.] Liquor Licence Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.19, s. 39 Authorities referred to Ontario, Financial Services Commission, Ontario Automobile Policy (OAP 1), Owner's Policy, online: Financial Services Commission of Ontario, . Ontario Law Reform Commission, Report on Exemplary Damages (Toronto: Ontario Law Reform Commission, 1991) Task Force on Sexual Abuse of Patients, Final Report of the Task Force on Sexual Abuse of Patients (Toronto: Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons, 1991) Traffic Injury Research Foundation of Canada, The Alcohol-Crash Problem in Canada: 2003 by D.R. Mayhew, S.W. Brown & H.M. Simpson (Ottawa: Transport Canada and the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators, 2005) Veilleux, D.R., "Intoxication of Automobile Driver as Basis for Awarding Punitive Damages" (1995) 33 A.L.R. (5th) 303

David F. Smye, Q.C. and Michael J. Winward, for respondent.

Patrick J. Monaghan, for appellant McMaster Student Union Incorporated.
Court File No. C41663:

David F. Smye, Q.C. and Michael J. Winward, for respondent.

Sheldon A. Gilbert, Q.C. and Shawn R. Stringer, for appellants Thomas Grigg and Andrew Grigg.
Court File No. C41674:

David F. Smye, Q.C. and Michael J. Winward, for appellants.
[page166]

Patrick J. Monaghan, for respondent McMaster Student Union Incorporated.

Sheldon A. Gilbert, Q.C. and Shawn R. Stringer, for respondents Thomas Grigg and Andrew Grigg.

BY THE COURT(BLAIR J.A. dissenting in part): --

A. Overview

[1] The reasons in these appeals are unanimous with the exception of a dissent by Blair J.A. with respect to the issue of punitive damages. The reasons in the By the Court section of this judgment regarding punitive damages are those of McMurtry C.J.O. and Weiler J.A.

[2] The appellants Thomas Grigg and Andrew Grigg and McMaster Student Union Incorporated, carrying on business as "The Downstairs John", appeal the awards of damages set out in the judgment of Justice Fedak dated March 9, 2004, at Hamilton pursuant to answers given by a jury, wherein the plaintiff respondent Andrea McIntyre was awarded the following amounts:

(a) General damages of $250,000 payable 70 per cent by the appellants Thomas Grigg and Andrew Grigg and 30 per cent by McMaster Student Union Incorporated;

(b) Aggravated damages of $100,000 payable solely by the appellants Grigg;

(c) Punitive damages of $100,000 payable solely by the appellants Grigg.

[3] The appellant McMaster Student Union Incorporated also appeals that portion of the judgment of the trial judge based upon the verdict of the jury that found it 30 per cent liable for the subject motor vehicle accident.

[4] The appellants Duncan McIntyre, Darlene McIntyre and Alexis McIntyre appeal the jury verdict which dismissed their claims for damages pursuant to s. 61 of the Family Law Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F.3, relative to the losses they claimed following the personal injuries sustained by Andrea McIntyre.

[5] These appeals involve a motor vehicle accident, which occurred on September 13, 1996, at approximately 2:15 a.m. in the City of Hamilton. Earlier that night Andrea McIntyre (hereafter referred to as "Andrea"), a first year student at McMaster University, had attended a campus bar operated by McMaster Student Union Incorporated (hereafter referred to as "McMaster") [page167] known as "The Downstairs John". Andrea was walking home with her friends when she was struck and injured by a motor vehicle owned by Thomas Grigg and operated by Andrew Grigg.

[6] Andrew Grigg had also consumed alcohol at "The Downstairs John" shortly before the accident. It was alleged in the action against McMaster that Andrew Grigg was either over-served by McMaster or served while apparently intoxicated.

B. The Facts

(a) The accident

[7] On September 13, 1996, Andrea and several of her friends were walking along the curb of Forsythe Avenue in Hamilton, Ontario after leaving the McMaster pub when the vehicle operated by an impaired driver, Andrew Grigg, struck her.

[8] At the time, Andrew Grigg was a Hamilton Tiger-Cat football player. After a football practice, he had attended at two drinking establishments, Kelsey's and the Crowbar, before ending up at the Downstairs John with some [of] his friends. After he left, one of his passengers realized that she had forgotten her purse, and so he began driving back to the pub. At the corner of King Street and Forsythe Avenue, Andrew Grigg failed to stop his vehicle at the stop sign and made a reckless wide right-hand turn to proceed northbound on Forsythe Avenue. The vehicle sheared off a lamp post and struck Andrea.

[9] Numerous witnesses testified at trial that Andrew Grigg was speeding and that he took no evasive measures such as braking or turning before hitting Andrea. He testified that he did not see Andrea or any of her friends before the accident and he admitted that even if Andrea had been on the sidewalk, instead of walking along the curb, his vehicle would still have collided with her.

[10] Andrew Grigg failed a breathalyzer test shortly after the accident. At trial, testimony indicated that his blood alcohol level was two to three times over the legal limit. He was initially charged with "operating a motor vehicle, having consumed alcohol in such a quantity that the concentration in the person's blood exceeds 80 milligrams of alcohol in 100 millilitres of blood" in contravention of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46. Later, counts of "impaired driving causing bodily harm" and the "operation of a motor vehicle in a manner dangerous to the public causing bodily harm" were added.

[11] Ultimately, the Crown Attorney decided to proceed only with a charge of careless driving and withdrew the other charges. The prosecution made this decision because before the breathalyzer test was administered, Andrew Grigg had not been [page168] informed of his right to counsel. The Crown Attorney testified at the trial that had Andrew Grigg been convicted, he would have asked for and would have expected that Andrew Grigg would have received a period of incarceration. Andrew Grigg pled guilty to careless driving and received a fine of $500. No licence suspension was imposed.

(b) The injuries sustained by Andrea McIntyre

[12] At the time of accident, Andrea was a first-year student at McMaster University and was an outstanding athlete. Among her many athletic interests, she was exceptionally passionate about rugby and played on the intercollegiate team. Andrea's former teachers and coaches described her as "very positive", "easy to coach", and "a very skilled athlete" with "a great disposition". She intended to pursue a post-secondary degree with the goal of becoming a chiropractor.

[13] As a result of the accident, Andrea suffered both physical and psychological injuries. Her physical injuries included a closed head injury, soft tissue and orthopaedic injuries. The primary orthopaedic injury was a comminuted fracture of her right femur.

[14] Six years after the accident, Andrea was still suffering from lower back pain, right lateral thigh numbness, numbness on the inner aspect of her thigh, right knee discomfort with locking, right ankle and lower shin discomfort and right large toe pain. At the time of the trial she also had a reduced range of motion in her right hip, her right hemi-pelvis is tipped down (potentially the cause of her back pain), and she has permanent scarring in two places on her right leg. She also has a very probable increased risk of arthritis in her hip, right knee, foot and ankle.

[15] Andrea's physical injuries are such that she will never be able to resume the level of athletic activity and competitive skill that she had demonstrated prior to the accident. She testified that this has had a "devastating" effect on her given the importance of athletics in her life.

[16] Furthermore, Andrea has also suffered serious psychological injury, which one medical expert testified was the result of mild brain trauma. As a result, she has had problems with depression, most notably two major depressive episodes during which she attempted suicide. During the first episode on October 21, 1996, Andrea became psychotic, delusional, and required hospitalization. She was diagnosed as having a major depressive episode and had become catatonic with severe psychomotor retardation. She also believed that her family was being [page169] hunted or persecuted in some manner. In the opinion of one psychiatrist, when Andrea's sister Jennifer had a motor vehicle accident, it led Andrea to attempt suicide so that the "hunt" would be over. All of the expert psychiatric evidence at the trial confirmed that Andrea's depression leading to the suicide attempt was accident-related.

[17] There was a second suicide attempt by Andrea in 2000, which medical testimony called on her behalf also attributed to the accident.

[18] Several of the medical experts expressed the opinion that there is a significant instance of recurrence for persons who have suffered major depressive episodes. One expert testified that individuals such as Andrea who have had two episodes have a 70 per cent chance of having a third episode and individuals who have had three episodes have a 90 per cent chance of having a fourth.

[19] In order to attempt to prevent a recurrence of serious depression, Andrea has been advised to remain on medication for the rest of her life and several of the medical experts testified that she should continue psychiatric counselling as well. Andrea testified that the thought of any recurrence of her depression is "just so terrifying" and that she fears her depression may affect her ability to get married and have a family. She also testified that she has ongoing battles with anxiety and as such, has had to limit her career choices to accommodate both her physical injuries and her inability to handle stress. A psychiatrist testified that he shared this concern and expressed the opinion that Andrea will have to tailor her lifestyle to minimize anxiety and stress, in an attempt to prevent her depression from recurring. An economist also testified that Andrea has suffered a reduction in lifetime earning potential as a result of the accident.

C. Issues on Appeal

[20] The parties brought three separate appeals from the proceeding below. In the interest of clarity, we have grouped similar issues together in our analysis below. The issues raised by the appeals are:

- (1) The liability and apportionment of liability regarding McMaster;
- (2) The apportionment of costs at trial;
- (3) The awards of damages, including:
 - (a) the award of general damages; [page170]
 - (b) the award of aggravated damages; and
 - (c) the award of punitive damages;
- (4) The Family Law Act claim.

D. Analysis

I. Liability and apportionment of liability regarding McMaster

[21] McMaster appeals the finding of liability, as well as the jury's 30 per cent apportionment of that liability, against it. For the reasons that follow, we would not interfere with either finding.

(a) Liability of McMaster

[22] McMaster submitted that the trial judge erred by instructing the jury that a taverner's liability was a matter of absolute liability rather than negligence and, further, he erred because there was no evidence Andrew Grigg was either over-served at the Pub or served while apparently intoxicated. In addition, McMaster argued that the trial judge failed to give a proper charge on the use of similar fact evidence and, in any event, unfairly admitted the similar fact evidence when it had not been disclosed to the appellants prior to trial. McMaster could therefore not be liable at law for the injuries to Andrea.

i. Commercial host liability

[23] In Ontario, commercial host liability may be imposed both at common law and by statute where a patron, who subsequently causes injury, has been served while intoxicated or over-served to the point of intoxication, and where it is reasonably foreseeable that the patron will drive a motor vehicle upon leaving the establishment. Commercial vendors of alcohol have an obligation to monitor a patron's consumption of alcohol and should have protocols in place to ensure that all reasonable precautions are taken to prevent such patrons who subsequently drive from becoming intoxicated to the point where they cannot safely operate a motor vehicle. Moreover, a commercial host does not escape liability simply by not knowing that the patron became inebriated before driving; the commercial host is liable if it or its employees knew or ought reasonably to have known in the circumstances that the patron was in such a condition. See Stewart v. Pettie, 1995 CanLII 147 (SCC), [1995] 1 S.C.R. 131, [1995] S.C.J. No. 3; Childs v. Desmoreaux (2004), 2004 CanLII 15701 (ON CA), 71 O.R. (3d) 195, [2004] O.J. No. 2065 (C.A.), at paras. 52, 55, 66 and 70; and the Liquor Licence Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.19, s. 39. [page171]

[24] The relevant portion of s. 39 of the Liquor Licence Act states:

39. The following rules apply if a person or an agent or employee of a person sells liquor to or for a person whose condition is such that the consumption of liquor would apparently intoxicate the person or increase the person's intoxication so that he or she would be in danger of causing injury to himself or herself or injury or damage to another person or the property of another person:

.....

2. If the person to or for whom the liquor is sold causes injury or damage to another person or the property of another person while so intoxicated, the other person is entitled to recover an amount as compensation for the injury or damage from the person who or whose employee or agent sold the liquor.

[25] McMaster alleges that the trial judge erred by instructing the jury that liability under s. 39 is "absolute" without telling them about the necessary "fault" or negligence component of such liability. We do not read the trial judge's charge in that fashion. In our view, the trial judge carefully and properly instructed the jury on the issue of the taverner's liability. In this regard, the trial judge said:

At common law commercial vendors of alcohol owe a general duty of care to persons who might reasonably be expected to come into contact with an intoxicated person and to whom the patron may pose some risk. That duty of care arises if there is some foreseeable risk of harm to the patron or to the third party.

Society has also provided guidelines for the standard of care in the provisions of the Ontario Liquor Licence Act [citation omitted]. Given that catastrophic injuries can result from operation of a motor vehicle by an inebriated person, a high standard is imposed on commercial establishments which supply alcohol. This is to ensure that they do not create a danger to users of the highway. The Ontario Liquor Licence Act imposes liability as a result of findings of fact in its relevant parts as follows:

[The trial judge then read to the jury the relevant portions of s. 39 of the Act as outlined above, and continued:]

Common law and statutory law therefore impose a duty on taverns to its patrons and others to ensure that the tavern does not serve alcohol which would either intoxicate or increase the patron's intoxication. They do not escape liability simply because a patron does not exhibit any visible signs of intoxication if in the circumstances the tavern knew or ought to have known that the patron was becoming intoxicated. Likewise, commercial vendors of alcohol cannot avoid liability where the establishment has intentionally structured the environment in such a way as to make it impossible to know whether intervention is necessary. This therefore imposes a very high or heavy responsibility upon owners and managers of drinking establishments.

A tavern's standards are too low if drinks are only refused if a patron exhibits signs of impairment such as being too loud, starting arguments, knocking [page 172] over drinks, falling down, creating problems for the staff, or upsetting other patrons. Taverns have a duty also to take affirmative action to prevent intoxicated patrons from driving. In circumstances where it is reasonable to expect that a patron has come by car, there is a heavier duty on the tavern staff to keep an eye on the patron when they depart to check to see if the patron is driving and to arrange safe transportation, if necessary.

[26] Having regard to the provisions of the Act and to the common law as established by the Supreme Court of Canada and in this court, we see no error in this direction. The trial judge does not use the term "absolute liability" (although he may have expressed the view during pre-charge submissions by counsel that the statutory provision involved absolute liability). While that expression has been used in conjunction with a predecessor to s. 39 in the context of the notion of causation -- see Hague v. Billings (1993), 1993 CanLII 8581 \(ON CA\), 13 O.R. (3d) 298, [1993] O.J. No. 945 (C.A.) -- it is more accurate to characterize the liability under s. 39 as a statutory liability arising once the factual pre-conditions provided for therein have been found to exist. That is what the trial judge instructed the jury was the case in this instance.

[27] In our view, the trial judge's instructions indicate that he properly charged the jury on the issue of McMaster's liability at common law and under the Liquor Licence Act. Read as a whole, the charge fairly put the position of the defence to the jury.

[28] The jury's answers to Questions 3 and 4 relevant to their verdict demonstrate that they understood and followed the trial judge's direction. Those questions, and the jury's answers to them, were as follows:

Question 3: Have the Plaintiffs or the Defendant Andrew Grigg satisfied you that there was negligence or breach of the statutory duty pursuant to the provisions of the Liquor Licence Act on the part of the Defendant McMaster Student Union Incorporated, carrying on business as "The Downstairs John", which caused or contributed to the accident in question?

Answer: Yes.

Question 4: If the answer to question 3 is yes, state fully of what the negligence or breach of the statutory duty of the Defendant McMaster Student Union Incorporated, carrying on business as "The Downstairs John" consisted.

Answer: Increased person's intoxication so that he was in danger of causing injury to himself and others.

Serving to point of intoxication.

Poor enforcement of Smart Serve protocol.

No changes to enforcement of Smart Serve protocol post- accident. [page173]

[29] We reject McMaster's submission that there was insufficient evidence to support these findings. In this respect, McMaster relies upon the evidence indicating that Andrew Grigg had an unusual capacity to display little sign of intoxication, in spite of significant blood alcohol levels and that there were no visible signals of intoxication on his part before or after the accident.

[30] Amongst other things, this evidence included the testimony of Susan Board, a McMaster employee, who said that she shook hands with Andrew Grigg when he entered the Pub at about 12:30 a.m., watched him walk down the stairs with no difficulty and did not notice a whisp of alcohol on his breath at the time. Ms. Board's evidence was that she observed Andrew Grigg before he left the Pub and had no concerns about signs of intoxication. Further, with the exception of the evidence of one witness, Gwen Farrell, no other witnesses were able to provide any indication that he was showing apparent signs of impairment, other than the smell of alcohol on his breath. These witnesses included the police officers who attended the scene and took Andrew Grigg into custody, as well as at least one witness who had seen him in the Pub and several persons who were accompanying Andrea at the time of the accident. In addition, the two expert witnesses who observed the video that was taken when the breathalyzer test was administered approximately two hours after the event acknowledged that Andrew Grigg displayed no outward signs of intoxication.

[31] In spite of the foregoing testimony, however, there was evidence upon which the members of the jury were entitled to make the findings they made. First, Gwen Farrell, who was herself admittedly quite intoxicated at the time and who observed Andrew Grigg just after the accident, thought he was intoxicated. Ms. Farrell testified that he was stumbling, he was weaving back and forth, he looked kind of "spacey", and he smelled of alcohol. Notwithstanding the obvious frailties of her testimony, it was open to the jury to accept it. Second, there was evidence that McMaster's "Smart Serve" protocols -- designed to minimize the risk of patrons becoming intoxicated -- were not followed. Finally, there was the evidence of Andrew Grigg's blood alcohol level and expert testimony to the effect that at those levels he would have shown visible signs of impairment before leaving the Pub.

[32] The breathalyzer results demonstrated that Andrew Grigg's blood alcohol level was 178 and 174 milligrams/100 millilitres of blood two hours after the accident. Significantly, the experts were all consistent in their testimony that at the time of the accident his blood alcohol level would have been around 218 milligrams of alcohol/100 millilitres of blood -- nearly three [page174] times the legal limit. In the opinion of the plaintiffs' expert, Professor Kalant, there was "no conceivable way" that Andrew Grigg had consumed only the six drinks over the entire night that he claimed to have consumed. Moreover, if the jury accepted that Andrew Grigg had consumed only the three beers he claimed to have had prior to arrival, and showed no signs of impairment on arrival (as Ms. Board testified), it is possible (given his tolerance and blood alcohol levels) that he was served up to 18 drinks at the Pub -- a rate of approximately eight one-ounce drinks per hour. Dr. Kalant testified that, if such were the case, Andrew Grigg would have been "very drunk" and he would have been "visibly impaired at the time of the accident". Dr. Kalant had "no doubt whatsoever" that, to someone trained to detect the effects of the consumption of alcohol on persons leaving a bar, the signs of whether the person leaving was capable of driving an automobile safely would have been apparent. It was his opinion that the employees of the Pub should have been able to observe Andrew Grigg for impairment. McMaster called no evidence from any employees other than Ms. Board, or from the companions of Andrew Grigg at the time, to refute the opinion of Dr. Kalant that he would have been showing signs of impairment when he left the Pub.

[33] All of the foregoing was sufficient to support the jury's findings on liability.

[34] McMaster complains that the trial was unfair because the plaintiffs called and relied upon "similar fact" evidence not disclosed prior to trial and that the trial judge failed to charge the jury on the proper use of that evidence. This evidence consisted of the testimony of a number of individuals who frequented the Pub and who testified that they occasionally had been served, and had observed others being served, to the point of intoxication in spite of the "Smart Serve" protocol. These instances were said to have occurred before, on, and after the night in question. We agree with the respondent that the evidence was not "similar fact" evidence called to buttress the claim for punitive damages, but rather evidence led to rebut McMaster's position that the Pub had policies and procedures in effect such that it would not over-serve alcohol to its patrons. There was therefore no need for the trial judge to instruct the jury on the limited use to which similar fact evidence may be put. We see no reason to interfere with the trial judge's decision to admit such evidence in the circumstances.

[35] Nor would we give effect to the argument that the trial was unfair because plaintiffs' counsel referred, in closing, to the fact that McMaster called no employees to establish the Pub was following its own procedures, in spite of the judge's ruling that no [page175] comments ought to be made in the addresses about adverse inferences. Counsel for the plaintiffs was entitled to comment on the submissions of counsel for McMaster that everything had been done properly, when no evidence was called to prove its policies and procedures were actually followed.

[36] For all of the foregoing reasons, we would not interfere with the jury's finding of liability on the part of McMaster.

(b) Apportionment of liability

[37] The jury apportioned liability 70 per cent to the Grigg appellants and 30 per cent to McMaster. McMaster contests this finding, arguing that the charge to the jury contained no instructions with respect to liability and that the trial judge should have told the jury -- as some other judges have done -- that in circumstances such as the case at bar "the lion's share of culpability, both morally and legally, should attach to the drinking driver": Dryden (Litigation Guardian of) v. Campbell Estate, [2001] O.J. No. 829, 11 M.V.R. (4th) 247 (S.C.J.), at para. 215. See also Hague v. Billings, supra, at p. 303 O.R. It also submits that the jury's finding was not in keeping with findings on proportionate liability as established in those cases. McMaster's counsel repeatedly requested a charge on apportionment, but to no avail.

[38] While it may have been preferable had the trial judge acceded to this request, we see no basis for interfering with the jury's findings respecting the apportionment of liability. Just as a jury award assessing the degree of contributory negligence is to be approached in the same way as a jury verdict respecting damages generally -- see Snushall v. Fulsang (2005), 2005 CanLII 34561 (ON CA), 78 O.R. (3d) 142, [2005] O.J. No. 4069 (C.A.), at paras. 19-22 -- so too is a jury award assessing the degree of apportionment of damages as between defendants. In the absence of material misdirection or non-direction, appellate courts will not interfere unless the verdict is so plainly unreasonable and unjust as to satisfy the court that no jury reviewing the evidence as a whole and acting judicially could have arrived at that conclusion: McCannell v. McLean, 1937 CanLII 1 (SCC), [1937] S.C.R. 341, [1937] 2 D.L.R. 639; Olmstead v. Vancouver-Fraser Park District, 1974 CanLII 196 (SCC), [1975] 2 S.C.R. 831, [1974] S.C.J. No. 129; Ferenczy v. MCI Medical Clinics, 2005 CanLII 18186 (ON CA), [2005] O.J. No. 2076, 198 O.A.C. 254 (C.A.); Snushall v. Fulsang, supra. See also Mizzi v. Hopkins (2003), 2003 CanLII 52145 (ON CA), 64 O.R. (3d) 365, [2003] O.J. No. 1671 (C.A.), at para. 52. Some courts have suggested that an appellate court may conclude the damages awarded are inordinately high or low if it takes the view that they are too high or too low by 50 per cent: Howes v. Crosby (1984), 1984 CanLII 2172 (ON CA), 45 O.R. (2d) 449, [1984] O.J. No. 3127 (C.A.); Koukounakis v. Stainrod (1995), 1995 CanLII 621 (ON CA), 23 O.R. (3d) 299, [1995] O.J. No. 1369 (C.A.). [page176]

[39] The jury's apportionment of damages as between the Grigg appellants (70 per cent) and McMaster (30 per cent) cannot be said to fall into that category. Although the trial judge did not charge the jury on apportionment, in fact the jury did attribute the "lion's share" of responsibility to Andrew Grigg, thus reflecting his significant moral blameworthiness for the accident. Moreover, the apportionment -- while perhaps at the high end -- is not out of the range of findings in other cases involving commercial host liability: see, for example, Hague v. Billings, supra (driver 85 per cent; tavern 15 per cent); Sambell v. Hudago Enterprises Ltd., [1990] O.J. No. 2494 (Gen. Div.) (driver 71.5 per cent; tavern 28.5 per cent); Francescucci v. Gilker, [1996] O.J. No. 474 (C.A.) (driver 22 per cent/tavern 78 per cent). In the seminal case involving commercial host liability for damages suffered by a patron who had been permitted to become intoxicated and then to leave the establishment to walk home on a busy roadway, the Supreme Court of Canada upheld an apportionment of 30 per cent as against the tavern: Menow v. Jordan House Ltd., 1973 CanLII 16 (SCC), [1974] S.C.R. 239, [1974] S.C.J. No. 80. Thus, the jury was entitled, on the record before it, to arrive at the verdict regarding apportionment that it did.

[40] We would not give effect to this ground of appeal.

II. Apportionment of costs at trial

[41] In its factum, McMaster submitted: "In the circumstances of this case, Andrew Grigg ought to have borne the great majority of the plaintiffs' legal costs." We do not read para. 12 of the trial judge's order as apportioning the costs at trial equally between McMaster and the Griggs so that McMaster was responsible for 50 per cent of the costs. Rather, our understanding of the order is that each of the appellants (Andrew Grigg, Thomas Grigg and McMaster) is responsible for 33 1/3 per cent of the costs. Inasmuch as we have not changed the apportionment of liability, we see no reason to alter the trial judge's award of costs.

III. Damages

(a) General damages

[42] McMaster and the Grigg appellants both appealed the award of general damages of $250,000. For the reasons that follow, we would not interfere with that award.

[43] An active, athletic and intelligent young woman, Andrea suffered serious and permanent injuries as a result of the accident. Physically, she sustained a closed head injury, soft tissue injuries and various orthopaedic injuries. She was diagnosed as suffering from a major depressive disorder triggered by the accident, which [page177] led to her attempts to commit suicide on two occasions several years apart. The medical evidence attributed her depression to post-traumatic stress disorder and to her personal reaction to the losses in her function and self-image from her physical injuries. She will require medication and she is likely to suffer from anxiety and fear on a long-term basis. In spite of the fact that she has been able to return to university and to perform well, as well as to travel and mix with her friends, most aspects of her life have been dramatically affected by the accident and, in one fashion or another, may continue to be for the rest of her life.

[44] In these circumstances, while the jury's award of general damages is perhaps generous and at the high end of the range -- given that the "cap" on personal injuries established by the Supreme Court of Canada in the trilogy of cases [See Note 1 below] (hereinafter referred to as the "Trilogy") stood at approximately $300,000 at the time -- it cannot be said to be so beyond the scope of anything that could be accepted as reasonable, or to be so inordinately high as to amount to a wholly erroneous estimate of general damages.

[45] Accordingly, we would not interfere with the jury's verdict of general damages.

(b) Aggravated damages

i. Overview

[46] The appellants Grigg brought motions at both the beginning and the end of the trial to dismiss the claim for aggravated and punitive damages. Fedak J. dismissed both motions, finding that aggravated damages could be founded on the fact that the respondent's post-traumatic stress disorder was related to Andrew Grigg's impaired driving, and punitive damages could be awarded by reason of the fact that when he embarked on his course of driving, he knew or should have known that his driving presented a very high risk of injury to others. In making his rulings, Fedak J. did not specifically refer to any reported cases. [See Note 2 below] [page178]

[47] On appeal, the appellants Grigg submit that the jury had no grounds upon which to award aggravated damages, and in the alternative, that the award of $100,000 for aggravated damages is excessive. Additionally, they argue that the quantum of aggravated damages must be reduced, as they are properly part of general non-pecuniary damages and subject to the upper limit in personal injury cases laid out by the Supreme Court of Canada in the Trilogy. They argue that there was insufficient evidence to ground an award of aggravated damages.

[48] For the reasons that follow, we agree with the appellants. The expert medical evidence was not sufficient to establish that Andrea's psychological harm was increased because Andrew Grigg was impaired at the time of the accident. Even if it could be said that aggravated damages were properly awarded as being supported by the evidence, such damages are part of the general non-pecuniary award and subject to the upper limit for personal injury set by the Trilogy. In our view, given that the upper limit at the time of the trial was $299,000, the jury award of $250,000 for general non-pecuniary damages was generous and should not be increased even if there is an evidentiary basis for awarding aggravated damages.

ii. The nature of aggravated damages

[49] Aggravated damages are awarded because of the nature of the defendant's conduct. They are designed to compensate the plaintiff specifically for the "additional harm caused to the plaintiff's feelings by reprehensible or outrageous conduct on the part of the defendant". Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., 2002 SCC 18 \(CanLII\), [2002] 1 S.C.R. 595, [2002] S.C.J. No. 19, at para. 116.

[50] Aggravated damages are awarded then when the reprehensible or outrageous nature of the defendant's conduct causes a loss of dignity, humiliation, additional psychological injury, or harm to the plaintiff's feelings. In Norberg v. Wynrib, 1992 CanLII 65 \(SCC\), [1992] 2 S.C.R. 226, [1992] S.C.J. No. 60, the Supreme Court of Canada awarded both aggravated and punitive damages against the defendant doctor who exchanged painkillers for sexual favours from the drug-addicted plaintiff. At p. 263 S.C.R., the majority found that aggravated damages are awarded if the tort, in that case a battery, occurred in humiliating or undignified circumstances. Aggravated damages are not awarded in addition to general damages, but the general damages are to be assessed "taking into account any aggravating features of the case and to that extent increasing the amount awarded". [page179]

[51] This court has taken the same view with respect to aggravated damage being part of general non-pecuniary damages. See T.W. v. Seo, 2005 CanLII 21356 \(ON CA\), [2005] O.J. No. 2467, 199 O.A.C. 172 (C.A.). At para. 69, Hennessy J. (ad hoc) held "[g]eneral non-pecuniary damage should be assessed after taking into account any aggravating features of the defendant's conduct. The court may separately identify the aggravated damages, however, in principle they are not to be assessed separately."

iii. Conclusion with respect to aggravated damages

[52] In our view, for the reasons stated above, there was no legal basis for a separate award of aggravated damages. We therefore allow the appeal on this issue.

(c) Punitive damages

[53] Blair J.A. dissents from this portion of the reasons dealing with punitive damages.

[54] The appellants Grigg also submit that the jury had no grounds on which to award punitive damages, and in the alternative, that the award of $100,000 for punitive damages is excessive.

[55] This is a novel case. The parties were unable to produce any Canadian case law in which punitive damages were awarded as a result of injuries sustained in a motor vehicle accident caused by an impaired driver nor were they able to produce any appellate authority that prohibited such damages in this context.

[See Note 3 below] This is in stark contrast to the United States, where punitive damages have been routinely awarded in a majority of the [page180] states for injuries caused by impaired drivers. [See Note 4 below] For this reason, we believe it necessary to conduct a careful analysis of the principles surrounding punitive damages in the context of negligence actions and the applicability of such principles to motor vehicle accidents involving impaired drivers. Subject to our further analysis it might be helpful if we state briefly, at the onset, a summary of our conclusions.

[56] The appellants Grigg argued that Andrew Grigg did not act in a high-handed, malicious or oppressive manner, and thus there is no basis upon which the jury could have properly awarded punitive damages. We disagree. In Norberg v. Wynrib, supra, La Forest J., writing for the majority, observed at p. 268 S.C.R. that the conduct of Dr. Wynrib, a doctor who prescribed drugs to Norberg in return for sexual favours, was not harsh, vindictive or malicious, to use the terms cited in Vorvis v. Insurance Corp. of British Columbia, 1989 CanLII 93 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1085, [1989] S.C.J. No. 46. Nevertheless, the doctor's conduct was reprehensible; it offended the ordinary standards of decent conduct in the community and La Forest J. was of the opinion that an award of punitive damages was appropriate. The type of conduct in which Dr. Wynrib engaged cried out for deterrence. In a separate opinion, [See Note 5 below] concurring on the issue of punitive damages, McLachlin J. also commented at p. 300 S.C.R. on the need for general deterrence of sexual exploitation, and the fact that punitive damages would signal the community's disapprobation.

[57] By making the deliberate choice to drink excessively and then drive, Andrew Grigg's misconduct was more than mere negligence. It demonstrated a conscious and reckless disregard for the lives and safety of others. There was evidence he was two to three times over the legal limit for alcohol consumption and was speeding and driving recklessly. In our view, this was sufficient evidence for the jury to find that an award of punitive damages was warranted. The appellants Grigg also argued an award of [page181] punitive damages would be inappropriate and unnecessary given that the driver Grigg had already been punished, i.e., a $500 fine for careless driving. In our view, analyzing the principles articulated by the Supreme Court of Canada in Whiten, and given the fact that the misconduct in question was much more serious than careless driving, it was open to the jury to find that punitive damages did not amount to double punishment, that others would not be deterred by the fine imposed on Andrew Grigg, and that punitive damages were appropriate.

[58] However, we agree with the appellant's submission that the quantum of punitive damages was too high to meet the rationality test. The quantum must be proportionate in relation to several dimensions, none of which would support the high award of $100,000 as being proportionate to the misconduct in this case. We would therefore reduce the quantum to $20,000.

i. General principles of punitive damages

[59] Punitive damages are awarded to meet the objective of punishment, deterrence and denunciation of the defendant's conduct and not to compensate the plaintiff. Whiten, supra, at paras. 43 and 68. Punitive damages should only be awarded in exceptional cases. They should be awarded with restraint. Whiten at para. 69; Gerula v. Flores, 1995 CanLII 1096 (ON CA), [1995] O.J. No. 2300, 83 O.A.C. 128 (C.A.), at paras. 57-58.

[60] An award of punitive damages therefore requires the defendant to have engaged in extreme misconduct. The type of conduct required to attract punitive damages has been described in many ways, such as: malicious, oppressive, arbitrary and high-handed that offends the court's sense of decency (Whiten at paras. 36 and 94; see also Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 (SCC), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130, [1995] S.C.J. No. 64, at para. 196); a marked departure from ordinary standards of decent behaviour (Whiten, ibid.); harsh, vindictive, reprehensible and malicious (Vorvis, supra, at para. 16); offends the ordinary standards of morality or decency (Norberg, supra, at paras. 57-58); arrogant and callous (ibid.); egregious (Hill at para. 196); high-handed and callous (Doobay (c.o.b. Venus Fashions) v. York Gate Mall Ltd., [2000] O.J. No. 2219 (C.A.), at para. 3; arrogant, callous of the plaintiff's rights and deliberate (Starkman v. Delhi Court Ltd., 1961 CanLII 195 (ON CA), [1961] O.R. 467, [1961] O.J. No. 559 (C.A.); harsh, reprehensible and malicious (Fleury v. Fleury, 2001 CanLII 294 (ON CA), [2001] O.J. No. 1720, 144 O.A.C. 372 (C.A.), at para. 11); outrageous or extreme (Ferme Gérald Laplante & Fils Ltée v. Grenville Patron Mutual Fire Insurance Co. (2002), 2002 CanLII 45070 (ON CA), 61 O.R. (3d) 481, [2002] O.J. No. 3588 (C.A.), at para. 86); highly unethical conduct which disregards the plaintiff's [page182] rights (Gerula, supra, at para. 72); and recklessly exposing a vulnerable plaintiff to substantial risk of harm without any justification (Roose v. Hollett, 1996 CanLII 5288 (NS CA), [1996] N.S.J. No. 345, 154 N.S.R. (2d) 161 (C.A.), at para. 237).

ii. Punitive damages in a negligence action

[61] The nature and character of the wide range of descriptors suggest that punitive damages would only be justified in the most extreme cases. Punitive damages are designed to express the repugnance of the public, which is represented by the jury, towards the outrageous and heinous conduct of the defendant. As Cory J. stated in Hill at para. 196, punitive damages are "the means by which the jury or judge expresses its outrage at the egregious conduct of the defendant".

[62] In our view, negligent conduct can only attract punitive damages if the misconduct in question was intentional and deliberate and was "extreme in nature and such that by any reasonable standard it is deserving of full condemnation and punishment". See Vorvis at p. 1108 S.C.R. This requirement for deliberate action or omission is clear from the relatively few cases in which courts have awarded punitive damages for negligent conduct.

[63] For example, in Gerula v. Flores, supra, this court found the trial judge erred in not awarding punitive damages against the defendant doctor who had operated on the plaintiff's wrong spinal disc. After the operation the doctor discovered the error, he failed to inform the defendant, altered his notes to cover up his error and persuaded the plaintiff to consent to further surgery to correct his mistake. At para. 72, Weiler J.A. found that the doctor's conduct was more than mere negligence because of his "deliberate non-disclosure" of his error (emphasis added).

[64] Weiler J.A. further found that this non-disclosure represented a misrepresentation by omission and that a reasonable person in the position of the appellant would not have chosen to have the same doctor perform the second surgery, had he known about the error and subsequent non-disclosure. Such conduct demonstrates a "deliberate and flagrant disregard" of the plaintiff's rights. Weiler J.A. also noted that the doctor's "highly unethical conduct and disregard" of the plaintiff's rights had gone unpunished. As such it was an appropriate case to make an award of punitive damages.

[65] In Canadian decisions outside of Ontario, the negligence actions in which punitive damages have been awarded have all required intentional or deliberate conduct. In Robitaille v. Vancouver Hockey Club Ltd., 1981 CanLII 532 (BC CA), [1981] B.C.J. No. 555, 124 D.L.R. (3d) 228 (C.A.), [page183] punitive damages were awarded against a professional hockey club that was negligent in failing to subject the plaintiff to thorough medical examinations after he sustained an injury, and then ordering him to play in subsequent games. This intentional conduct of the Club "showed a callous disregard for his feelings and his well-being - they ignored the dictates of common decency as well as common sense" (at p. 248 D.L.R.). The British Columbia Court of Appeal held that punitive damages were available in negligence cases where the "defendant has done more than inflict injury on others by his negligence or intentional acts" (at p. 250 D.L.R.). The court further held that the defendant must have acted with malice, or with recklessness that indicates an indifference to the safety of others, or alternatively engaged in conduct that is so socially reprehensible that it justifies the award of punitive damages.

[66] Several courts have rejected claims for punitive damages in negligence cases on the basis that the defendant's misconduct was not specifically directed at the plaintiff. For example, in Kaytor v. Lion's Driving Range Ltd. (1962), 1962 CanLII 346 (BC SC), 35 D.L.R. (2d) 426, 40 W.W.R. 173 (B.C.S.C.), the owners of a driving range kept an extremely vicious dog on site to prevent people from stealing golf balls at night. The dog became loose accidentally and injured the plaintiff. The trial judge found at p. 431 D.L.R. that the defendants were negligent but held that to award punitive damages, the act complained of must be intentionally directed to the person or property injured. Similarly, in Nichols v. Guel, 1983 CanLII 460 (BC SC), [1983] B.C.J. No. 1693, 145 D.L.R. (3d) 186 (S.C.), the trial judge refused to award punitive damages for a motor vehicle accident that had injured the plaintiff and killed her husband. The defendant was accused of racing on the wrong side of the highway at a speed of 100 m.p.h. or more. The trial judge, relying on Kaytor, supra, found that the conduct of the defendant, although deliberately reckless, was not specifically directed at the plaintiff or her late husband and that this precluded an award of punitive damages.

[67] At the end of the trial, during the motion to strike the claim for punitive damages, the appellants Grigg argued that an award of punitive damages required the defendant's conduct to be specifically directed at the plaintiff. We disagree with this submission and with the reasoning in both Kaytor, supra, and Nichols, supra, insofar as they would require the misconduct to be deliberately directed at the injured party.

[68] Such a requirement could well bar punitive damages in product liability cases, where punitive damages may be awarded depending on the level of indifference or recklessness of the [page184] defendant. See for example Van Oirschot v. Dow Chemical Canada Inc., 1993 CanLII 7088 (AB KB), [1993] A.J. No. 480, 142 A.R. 149 (Q.B.), aff'd 1995 ABCA 264 (CanLII), [1995] A.J. No. 611, 174 A.R. 157 (C.A.). In that case, the defendant was aware of the dangers with respect to the product and did not provide appropriate warnings to its customers. The trial judge found the defendant had acted in a high-handed and oppressive manner. The Court of Appeal found that the $10,000 awarded by the trial judge for "high-handed conduct" was an appropriate award for punitive damages.

[69] In Vlcek v. Koshel, 1988 CanLII 3116 (BC SC), [1988] B.C.J. No. 1062, 52 D.L.R. (4th) 371 (B.C.S.C.), at p. 375 D.L.R., Gallaghan J., in review of the holdings of previous British Columbia cases, including Kaytor and Nichols, concluded:

While negligence or an intentional act, can trigger an award of exemplary damages, it does not follow that the act must be directed towards a specific individual. But the act must be malicious or reckless to such a degree as to indicate complete indifference to the consequences that might flow therefrom, including the welfare and safety of others. In other words, intention to cause the injury need not be present; it will suffice if there was an intention to do the act which eventually caused the injury. The act alleged in this case was the manufacturing of inherently dangerous and unstable machines which were sold and used by the general public.

(Emphasis added)

[70] In Vlcek, supra, the British Columbia Supreme Court moved away from a strict application of the holding in Kaytor. We agree with this reasoning. It would, in our view, be inappropriate to narrow the scope of punitive damages by specifically requiring that the defendant's conduct be directed at the plaintiff. Rather, it is sufficient if there was an intention to do the act or combination of acts that eventually caused the injury.

iii. Punitive damages in this case

[71] We do not agree with the submission of the appellants Grigg that punitive damages are not available because Andrew Grigg's conduct was not high-handed, malicious or oppressive and that this was "no more than a motor vehicle accident resulting from excessive consumption of alcohol". In Norberg v. Wynrib, supra, at p. 268 S.C.R., La Forest J. held that while the misconduct of the defendant doctor was not "harsh, vindictive or malicious" it was reprehensible and that type of conduct which offends the "ordinary standards of decent conduct in the community". Further, La Forest J. held that punitive damages were appropriate because of the nature of the misconduct in question: "[T]he exchange of drugs for sex by a doctor in a position of power is conduct that cries out for deterrence", and as McLachlin J. [page185] stated at p. 300 S.C.R., "[it] is more widespread than it is comfortable to contemplate". [See Note 6 below]

[72] In our view, this is also such a case. The Supreme Court of Canada has described drinking and driving as a "social evil" in the context of screening provisions in the Criminal Code. See R. v. Orbanski, 2005 SCC 37 (CanLII), [2005] 2 S.C.R. 3, [2005] S.C.J. No. 37, 196 C.C.C. (3d) 481, at para. 3. As Justice Cory articulated in R. v. Bernshaw, 1995 CanLII 150 (SCC), [1995] 1 S.C.R. 254, [1994] S.C.J. No. 87, 95 C.C.C. (3d) 193, at para. 16:

Every year, drunk driving leaves a terrible trail of death, injury, heartbreak and destruction. From the point of view of numbers alone, it has a far greater impact on Canadian society than any other crime. In terms of the deaths and serious injuries resulting in hospitalizations, drunk driving is clearly the crime which causes the most significant social loss to the country.

[73] Lamer C.J.C. emphasized the need for general deterrence for impaired driving in R. v. Proulx, 2000 SCC 5 (CanLII), [2000] 1 S.C.R. 61, [2000] S.C.J. No. 6, 140 C.C.C. (3d) 449, at para. 129:

Moreover, dangerous driving and impaired driving may be offences for which harsh sentences plausibly provide general deterrence. These crimes are often committed by otherwise law-abiding persons with good employment records and families. Arguably such persons are the ones most likely to be deterred by the threat of severe penalties.

(Footnotes omitted)

[74] This court has repeatedly emphasized the need for general deterrence in impaired driving offences and the significant losses caused by impaired driving. See R. v. Dharamdeo, 2000 CanLII 17018 (ON CA), [2000] O.J. No. 4546, 149 C.C.C. (3d) 489 (C.A.), at paras. 23-26 citing R. v. McVeigh, 1985 CanLII 115 (ON CA), [1985] O.J. No. 207, 22 C.C.C. (3d) 145 (C.A.), at p. 150 C.C.C., and R. v. Biancofiore (1997), 1997 CanLII 3420 (ON CA), 35 O.R. (3d) 782, [1997] O.J. No. 3865, 119 C.C.C. (3d) 344 (C.A.), at paras. 22-24.

[75] In our view, the evidence before the jury was sufficient to meet the requirements that Andrew Grigg's conduct was deliberate and intentional. His decision to drink excessively and drive, his intoxication and the evidence that he was speeding and driving erratically were key contributors to the cause of the accident. All of these factors demonstrate that on that night, Andrew Grigg showed a conscious and reckless disregard for the lives and safety of others.

[76] Counsel for the appellants Grigg argued that punitive damages would be inappropriate in this case, as Andrew Grigg's conduct had already been punished by his conviction for careless [page186] driving and the imposition of a $500 fine. We agree that a factor of significant importance in assessing whether it would be appropriate to award punitive damages is whether punishment has already been imposed in a separate proceeding for the same misconduct. Binnie J. noted at para. 69 in Whiten, supra, that the Ontario Law Reform Commission, in its Report on Exemplary Damages (Toronto: The Commission, 1991) had recommended that the "court should be entitled to consider the fact and adequacy of any prior penalty imposed in any criminal or other similar proceeding brought against the defendant" (at p. 46). At para. 123 of Whiten, Binnie J. made the following comments:

In Canada, unlike some other common law jurisdictions, such "other" punishment is relevant but it is not necessarily a bar to the award of punitive damages. The prescribed fine, for example, may be disproportionately small to the level of outrage the jury wishes to express. The misconduct in question may be broader than the misconduct proven in evidence in the criminal or regulatory proceeding. The legislative judgment fixing the amount of the potential fine may be based on policy considerations other than pure punishment. The key point is that punitive damages are awarded "if, but only if" all other penalties have been taken into account and found to be inadequate to accomplish the objectives of retribution, deterrence, and denunciation.

(Emphasis added)

[77] While this statement of Binnie J. might appear to be obiter in the context of the issues to be determined in Whiten, we are of the view that we are bound [to] his observations. In R. v. Henry, 2005 SCC 76 (CanLII), [2005] 3 S.C.R. 609, [2005] S.C.J. No. 76, at paras. 53-57, the Supreme Court of Canada held that the closer the relationship between the obiter and the legal issue in question, the more likely the obiter is binding.

[78] For the purposes of this appeal we regard Binnie J.'s comments in Whiten, supra, as authoritative and binding. In Whiten, the entire case focused both on the circumstances in which punitive damages would be available, and more importantly the factors to be considered in assessing the proportionality of the damages. In both this appeal and in Whiten, the jury's assessment of punitive damages was a central issue. In Whiten, the intervenor, the Insurance Council of Canada, argued that discipline of insurance companies should be left to the regulator; Binnie J. rejected this argument at para. 123, noting that the regulator had not taken an interest in that case prior to the jury's award of punitive damages.

[79] While the driver Grigg pleaded guilty to, and received a fine for, careless driving, the evidence in the civil trial established that he was significantly impaired and that his conduct should normally warrant a serious punishment. Where a wrongdoer has [page187] already been punished for an offence and the same conduct is in question at a civil trial, punitive damages generally will not serve a rational purpose as the sentence imposed in the criminal or regulatory environment will have already met the necessary objectives of retribution, deterrence and denunciation. In our view, there are sound policy reasons for generally not attempting to re-try those proceedings in a civil action. As this court held in Fleury v. Fleury, supra, at para. 11:

Where tortious acts have already been sanctioned by the imposition of a criminal sentence, it is inappropriate to award punitive damages in a civil lawsuit. To do so is to punish twice for the same offence.... Where, however, the civil proceedings establish that ... the sentence does not fully sanction the tortfeasor's behaviour... punitive damages may be awarded.

(Footnotes omitted)

[80] In our view, a court in a civil proceeding should generally demonstrate deference to the decision of the other court. Otherwise, the review of the appropriateness of a penalty administered in a criminal court, for example, could be viewed as a collateral attack on that decision. In our opinion, the "disproportionality" test enunciated by Binnie J. in Whiten in relation to the wrongful conduct and the penalty imposed is one that should be approached with considerable caution.

[81] We believe that the facts in the present case present one of those rare instances where the disproportionality test applies. It was rational for the jury to conclude that punitive damages would denounce Andrew Grigg's conduct and signal the need for general deterrence of impaired driving. Given Andrew Grigg's fine of $500, punitive damages would not amount to double punishment and indeed would be more appropriate punishment.

iv. Was the quantum awarded by the jury proportionate?

[82] In comparison to compensatory damages, courts have a much greater scope and discretion in reviewing the quantum of punitive damages. See Hill v. Church of Scientology, supra, at para. 197 and Whiten, supra, at paras. 100-01. The "rationality test" asks whether the misconduct of the defendant was so outrageous that punitive damages were rationally required to act as deterrence. See Hill, ibid. Both the award of punitive damages and the quantum must be rational. As discussed above, we believe the jury's award of punitive damages was a rational response to the defendant's deliberate misconduct, which resulted in serious injury to the plaintiff and which had only been punished in part. [page188]

[83] In Whiten, the Supreme Court of Canada held that the proportionality of the quantum of damages must be examined in several dimensions. First, the quantum must be proportionate to the blameworthiness of the defendant's conduct. See paras. 112-13. While Andrew Grigg's misconduct was reprehensible and recklessly disregarded the plaintiff's rights, it was apparently an isolated event. Furthermore, he did not flee the scene of the accident or profit from his misconduct.

[84] Second, the quantum must be proportionate to the degree of vulnerability of the plaintiff. See Whiten at paras. 114-16. In this case, there had not been a relationship between the parties where it could be submitted that there was an abuse of power over a vulnerable plaintiff. The plaintiff was most regrettably in the wrong place at the wrong time. However, a person who chooses to drive while impaired takes on an increased risk of injuring others who have no ability to adjust their behaviour to account for this increased risk. In this respect, impaired drivers increase the vulnerability of all users of the road, especially pedestrians.

[85] Third, the quantum must be proportionate to the harm or potential harm directed specifically at the plaintiff. See Whiten at para. 117. In this case, the harm was not directed specifically at the plaintiff and in our view, this is an important factor that militates towards a lower award.

[86] Fourth, the quantum must be proportionate to the need for deterrence. See Whiten at paras. 118-22. While in Whiten this factor was considered in the context of a large and wealthy insurance company defendant profiting at the expense of a vulnerable plaintiff, there is also clearly a need for deterrence in impaired and reckless driving accidents. As La Forest J. stated at pp. 267-68 and McLachlin J. stated at pp. 300-01 S.C.R. in Norberg v. Wynrib, supra, egregiously blameworthy conduct that is prevalent in our society creates a consequent need for deterrence. The very fact that the conduct is prevalent merits a higher award of damages.

[87] Fifth, the quantum must be proportionate, after taking into account the other penalties, both civil and criminal, which have been inflicted on the defendant for the same misconduct. See Whiten at para. 123. As previously discussed, while Andrew Grigg had already been punished for his conduct, having pleaded guilty to careless driving, it was open to the jury to determine that the punishment was inadequate and that an award of punitive damages was necessary to meet the objectives of retribution, deterrence and denunciation.

[88] In our view, the jury award of $100,000 is not rational to meet the objectives of retribution, deterrence and denunciation. [page189] The lower level of moral blameworthiness given the isolated nature of the misconduct, the lack of a relationship between the parties (in comparison to a relationship of trust) and the fact that the misconduct was not specifically directed at the plaintiff, indicates that a lesser quantum of punitive damages would be rational. In light of this, as stated above, we would reduce the quantum awarded by the jury to $20,000.

v. Conclusion with respect to punitive damages

[89] We conclude that it was rational for the jury to determine that the circumstances of this case warranted an award of punitive damages in order to further the objectives of the law. However, for the reasons stated above, the assessment of punitive damages in this case was not the appropriate award to serve these objectives. We therefore reduce the amount of punitive damages to the amount of $20,000.

IV. Family Law Act claim

(a) Overview

[90] Pursuant to s. 61(1) of the Family Law Act, parents and siblings of a person who is injured and entitled to recover damages due to the fault or negligence of another may recover their pecuniary loss from the person causing the injury. In this case, Andrea was injured when a truck operated by Andrew Grigg struck her. At trial, Andrea's parents, Duncan McIntyre (hereafter "Duncan") and Darlene McIntyre (hereafter "Darlene"), and her younger sister, Alexis McIntyre (hereafter "Alexis"), claimed damages pursuant to s. 61(1). The jury dismissed their claim. Duncan, Darlene, and Alexis are appealing the dismissal of their claim. They do not allege any error in the judge's charge to the jury. Rather, they appeal the dismissal on the basis that the jury's verdict is contrary to all of the evidence and therefore ought to be set aside as being unreasonable.

[91] As noted in para. 38 above, courts accord great deference to a jury's findings in civil negligence proceedings. The verdict of a civil jury will not be set aside as against the weight of the evidence unless it is so plainly unreasonable and unjust as to satisfy the court that no jury, reviewing the evidence as a whole and acting judicially, could have reached it: McLean v. McCannell, supra; Olmstead v. Vancouver-Fraser Park District, supra; Ferenczy v. MCI Medical Clinics, supra; Snushall v. Fulsang, supra. See also Mizzi v. Hopkins (2003), 2003 CanLII 52145 (ON CA), 64 O.R. (3d) 365, [2003] O.J. No. 1671, at para. 52.

[92] For the reasons that follow, we are satisfied that these appellants have met this high standard of review. Consequently, [page190] we would allow their appeal, set aside the dismissal of their claim and award $15,000 to Darlene McIntyre, $15,000 to Duncan McIntyre and $5,000 to Alexis McIntyre.

(b) Additional facts

[93] A general review of the facts has already been provided. We propose to review and to supplement those facts where necessary having regard to the damages that may be included as part a claim for pecuniary loss pursuant to s. 61(2) of the Family Law Act. These include:

- (a) actual expenses reasonably incurred for the benefit of the person injured . . . ;
- (c) a reasonable allowance for travel expenses actually incurred in visiting the person during his or her treatment or recovery;
- (d) where, as a result of the injury, the claimant provides nursing, housekeeping or other services for the person, a reasonable allowance for loss of income or the value of the services; and
- (e) an amount to compensate for the loss of guidance, care and companionship that the claimant might reasonably have expected to receive from the person if the injury . . . had not occurred.

[94] After being hit by the Grigg vehicle, Andrea was taken to hospital on September 13, 1996, and released on September 18, after which she returned to live with her parents in Lindsay. At that time she was depressed and in a wheelchair because of her fractured leg. Her parents put a bed in the den for her and Darlene initially took time off work and helped her with her toileting. They eventually hired a nurse to stay with her.

[95] Andrea attempted suicide on October 21, 1996. She was rushed to the Ross Memorial Hospital in Lindsay, transferred to Oshawa General Hospital and then admitted to St. Joseph's Hospital in Hamilton. She stayed at St. Joseph's until January 15, 1997. [See Note 7 below] During this time Duncan travelled from Lindsay to Hamilton approximately four times a week to be with her. Darlene was in British Columbia visiting Andrea's older sister, Jennifer, who had fractured her back in a motor vehicle accident on October 17, 1996.

[96] After Andrea was discharged from St. Joseph's Hospital, she lived at home with her parents in Lindsay. In September 1997, she enrolled in Brock University. [page191]

[97] Duncan testified that during this time he was not able to enjoy Andrea's company. He was unable to think of a single episode of laughs or fun leading up to Andrea's commencement at Brock. The family dynamics had changed. Darlene and Alexis testified to the same effect and, at trial, their testimony was not challenged by either defence counsel.

[98] In 1999, Andrea transferred to the University of Manitoba. In the fall of 1999, Darlene, who had retired from teaching in Ontario in 1998, took a teaching position in Kuwait and brought Alexis to live with her. She returned to Kuwait for the next school year in the fall of 2000. Duncan, who had also retired from teaching in Ontario, took up a teaching position in Frankfurt, Germany in September 2000.

[99] Andrea travelled to Florida and Japan with her boyfriend in 2000. While at university, in December 2000, Andrea again became depressed and sought professional help. She was later admitted to the University of Manitoba Hospital for depression. Darlene flew home from Kuwait to be with her. When Andrea was discharged from hospital, they flew to Kuwait. Duncan flew to Kuwait and stayed for about a week before returning to Germany.

[100] While in Kuwait, Andrea attempted to take her life again by way of an overdose of medication. She was hospitalized in Kuwait until she was stabilized. She then flew with Darlene to Germany where Duncan joined them. They all flew back to Canada and Andrea was again admitted to St. Joseph's Hospital. Duncan quit his job in Germany in April and moved back to Lindsay. During this hospitalization he saw Andrea almost every day. Darlene returned to Kuwait because Alexis was still in school there. When discharged from St. Joseph's Hospital, Andrea moved to her aunt's house in Hamilton where she was seen as an out-patient for a period of time before briefly returning to live at her parents' home in Lindsay. She then moved to Toronto.

[101] In August of 2001, Andrea travelled with a friend to Portugal, Spain and Italy. She then returned to the University of Manitoba in September. She entered an easier academic program from which she graduated in 2002. She returned home then moved out to live with friends closer to her job at Angus Glen Golf Club. After travelling in Thailand and Laos in 2003, she moved to Winnipeg.

[102] Duncan advanced a claim for $53,920.52 for his pecuniary loss relating to the difference between what he could have earned working in Frankfurt, Germany and what he eventually earned working part-time in Ontario for the academic year 2001-2002. The respondents challenged this claim. Duncan testified [page192] that he could only teach one semester in Ontario without his pension being affected. However, he also testified that the kind of work he did at Sir Sanford Fleming College as a temporary replacement for an individual on sick leave did not affect his pension. Nevertheless, he took only one such placement.

(c) Analysis

i. Are the appellants entitled to damages pursuant to s. 61 of the Family Law Act?

[103] In relation to the first factor for which compensation may be awarded pursuant to s. 61 (expenses actually incurred for Andrea's benefit), no claim was made for the expenses paid for professional nursing services provided to Andrea. The second factor is a reasonable allowance for travel expenses. The jury has already awarded the appellants damages in the amount of $9,926.96 for out-of-pocket losses, which included itemized expenses for air travel and for their travel to and from various hospitals. As a result, it cannot be said that the jury did not consider the evidence regarding this factor in determining whether a claim for damages under s. 61 ought to be awarded.

[104] Compensation may also be awarded for loss of income. The respondents submit that it was open to the jury to reject Duncan McIntyre's claim for loss of income. We agree. The evidence indicates that he did not pursue employment similar to that which he had at Sandford Fleming, which would not have affected his pension.

[105] The third factor is compensation for housekeeping and care provided to Andrea by her parents. Neither parent was challenged in cross-examination with respect to the nursing and housekeeping services they provided to Andrea. It is clear that Darlene provided nursing and housekeeping services to her and that Duncan left his job in Germany, in April, prior to the end of the school year to be with her in Ontario. While this factor cannot be ignored in assessing the reasonableness of the jury's decision to dismiss the appellants' claim, the focus of their claim at trial and on appeal is for loss of Andrea's care, guidance and companionship to her family.

[106] Insofar as the claim for loss of care, guidance and companionship is concerned, we note that "companionship" has been defined as the loss of the rewards of association which flow from the family relationship: To v. Toronto Board of Education (2001), 2001 CanLII 11304 \(ON CA\), 55 O.R. (3d) 641, [2001] O.J. No. 3490 (C.A.), at para. 25, citing Mason v. Peters (1982), 1982 CanLII 1969 \(ON CA\), 39 O.R. (2d) 27, [1982] O.J. No. 3486 (C.A.), at p. 33 O.R. "Guidance" includes such things as education, [page193] training, discipline and moral teaching and usually goes from older members to younger members of the family: Thornborrow v. MacKinnon (1981), 1981 CanLII 1945 \(ON SC\), 32 O.R. (2d) 740, [1981]

O.J. No. 3004 (H.C.J.), at p. 747 O.R. "Care" includes such things as feeding, clothing, cleaning, transportation, helping and protecting another person: Thornborrow, supra.

[107] In each case, compensation for loss of guidance, care and companionship must be assessed in an objective and unemotional way: Hamilton v. Canadian National Railway Co., 1991 CanLII 8348 (ON CA), [1991] O.J. No. 614, 80 D.L.R. (4th) 470 (C.A.), at para. 11, citing Reidy v. McLeod (1986), 1986 CanLII 2556 (ON CA), 54 O.R. (2d) 661, [1986] O.J. No. 415 (C.A.), at p. 662 O.R. The cardinal factors in fixing the precise amount are the extent and duration of the claimant's loss: Mortimer v. Cameron, [1992] O.J. No. 764, 9 M.P.L.R. (2d) 185 (Gen Div.), at p. 310 M.P.L.R.

[108] Andrea's mother, father and sister all testified that following the accident Andrea was not the same person that she was prior to the accident. It was not contested at trial that her depression was causally linked to the accident and her resulting injuries. Andrea's relationship with her parents was negatively affected by the depressive episodes in which she tried to take her own life. Darlene testified that they watched her like a hawk; Duncan testified that they felt guilty because they couldn't seem to cure her; Alexis lost her role model. They all missed the fun times that they had together. The family felt they had to tread carefully with Andrea for fear of upsetting her. They were walking on eggshells around her.

[109] By the time of trial (March 2004), the family dynamics were returning to normal. The evidence was that Andrea talks sports with Duncan and bets on football pools with him. Andrea has engaged in some sporting activities with her family. Alexis believes that her relationship with her sister has improved and that she could now seek Andrea's advice and take it into consideration in making a decision. According to Alexis, the family seems to be having fun together again and is not afraid to say something or do something wrong. There was, however, evidence that there is a chance of Andrea going back into a depression.

[110] The respondents submit that any loss in the quality of the family relations was transitory rather than permanent. However, the wording of s. 61 and existing jurisprudence indicate that it does not require that the loss be permanent in order for an award to be made (see e.g.: Till v. Walker, [2000] O.J. No. 84, [2000] O.T.C. 51 (S.C.J.)). It is clear that the quality of the family relationship was affected in a way that was more than a fleeting or token loss. [page194]

[111] McMaster also submits that the physical separation of Andrea from her parents during the years following the accident precludes an award for loss of her companionship being made. For the same reason, it submits that no award for loss of guidance to her younger sister can be made. We disagree. Certainly Andrea lived at home for extended periods following the accident. In addition, companionship is not limited to physical presence. Because companionship involves sharing interests and ideas with another person, communication of interests and ideas by email and telephone is a form of companionship. The evidence is undisputed that such communication was frequent with Andrea. The jury also heard unchallenged evidence as to the change in the dynamics of the family relationships and how it affected their companionship with Andrea. Thus, the only reasonable conclusion that the jury could have come to was that the quality of the family's companionship with Andrea was significantly affected. In our opinion, the jury's verdict is so plainly unreasonable and unjust that we are satisfied that no jury, reviewing the evidence as a whole and acting judicially, could have refused to make any award.

ii. Who should assess the damages to be awarded?

[112] As we have concluded that the jury's verdict with respect to the s. 61 Family Law Act claim cannot stand, the issue becomes whether a new trial for the assessment of these damages should be ordered or whether we should substitute our own assessment as permitted by s. 119 of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43.

[113] In this case we consider it just to substitute our own assessment. All of the evidence relating to this claim is before the court. There is no suggestion that any of that evidence was improperly admitted and, as we have indicated, no issue is taken with the judge's charge. Thus, the fairness of the trial is not in issue. The appellants have asked us to substitute our own assessment. Having asked us to dismiss the claim, the respondents made no submission in this regard. In view of our decision respecting the other issues on this appeal, we are reluctant to force the parties to incur the expense and delay of a new trial on a corollary issue.

[114] Accordingly, having regard to the evidence, we would allow the appeal; set aside the jury's dismissal of the appellants' claim; and assess the amount of damages pursuant to s. 61 of the Family Law Act at $15,000 to Darlene McIntyre, $15,000 to Duncan McIntyre and $5,000 to Alexis McIntyre. [page195]

E. Conclusion

[115] To conclude, the results of these appeals are as follows:

- (1) On the issue of the liability and apportionment of liability regarding McMaster, the appeal is dismissed;
- (2) On the issue of the apportionment of costs at trial, the appeal is dismissed;
- (3) On the issue of the awards of damages:
 - (a) The appeal on the issue of general damages is dismissed;

(b) The appeal on the issue of aggravated damages is allowed;

(c) The appeal on the issue of punitive damages is allowed in part: the award of damages will stand, but the quantum is reduced to $20,000;

(4) On the issue of the Family Law Act claim, the appeal is allowed, the jury's dismissal of the appellant's claim is set aside, and damages are payable by the respondents, assessed at $15,000 payable to Duncan McIntyre, $15,000 payable to Darlene McIntyre, and $5,000 payable to Alexis McIntyre.

[116] BLAIR J.A. (dissenting in part): -- I agree with the foregoing reasons, including the proposed dispositions, in all respects except for that portion pertaining to the award of punitive damages. Respectfully, I am unable to agree that such damages are appropriate in this case.

A. General Principles Relating to Punitive Damages

[117] The principles underpinning an award of punitive damages in tort and in contract have been examined exhaustively by the Supreme Court of Canada in a number of cases over the past two decades: see Vorvis v. Insurance Corp. of British Columbia, 1989 CanLII 93 \(SCC\), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1085, [1989] S.C.J. No. 46; Norberg v. Wynrib, 1992 CanLII 65 \(SCC\), [1992] 2 S.C.R. 226, [1992] S.C.J. No. 60; Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 \(SCC\), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130, [1995] S.C.J. No. 64; Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., 2002 SCC 18 \(CanLII\), [2002] 1 S.C.R. 595, [2002] S.C.J. No. 19; and Fidler v. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 3, [2006] S.C.J. No. 30, 2006 SCC 30. It is unnecessary to re-examine these authorities in detail. [page196]

[118] In Hill, at paras. 196-97, Cory J. summarized the general principles as follows:

Punitive damages may be awarded in situations where the defendant's misconduct is so malicious, oppressive and high-handed that it offends the court's sense of decency. Punitive damages bear no relation to what the plaintiff should receive by way of compensation. Their aim is not to compensate the plaintiff, but rather to punish the defendant. It is the means by which the jury or judge expresses its outrage at the egregious conduct of the defendant. They are in the nature of a fine which is meant to act as a deterrent to the defendant and to others from acting in this manner. It is important to emphasize that punitive damages should only be awarded in those circumstances where the combined award of general and aggravated damages would be insufficient to achieve the goal of punishment and deterrence.

Unlike compensatory damages, punitive damages are not at large. Consequently, courts have a much greater scope and discretion on appeal. The appellate review should be based upon the court's estimation as to whether the punitive damages serve a rational purpose. In other words, was the misconduct of the defendant so outrageous that punitive damages were rationally required to act as deterrence?

(Emphasis added)

[119] In Whiten, supra, Justice Binnie conducted a comprehensive review of the jurisprudence in the United States and in the Commonwealth countries. From that review he drew a number of principles which he concluded were consistent with Canadian practice and precedent. Those pertinent to this appeal are found at paras. 67-71 and 101, and are reproduced below:

[T]he attempt to limit punitive damages by "categories" does not work and was rightly rejected in Canada The control mechanism lies not in restricting the category of case but in rationally determining circumstances that warrant the addition of punishment to compensation in a civil action

[T]he general objectives of punitive damages are punishment (in the sense of retribution), deterrence of the wrongdoer and others, and denunciation

[T]he primary vehicle of punishment is the criminal law (and regulatory offences) and . . . punitive damages should be resorted to only in exceptional cases and with restraint. Where punishment has actually been imposed by a criminal court for an offence arising out of substantially the same facts, some jurisdictions, such as Australia and New Zealand, bar punitive damages in certain contexts . . . but the dominant approach in other jurisdictions, including Canada, is to treat it as another factor, albeit a factor of potentially great importance

[T]he incantation of the time-honoured pejoratives ("high-handed", "oppressive", "vindictive", etc.) provides insufficient guidance (or discipline) to the judge or jury setting the amount. Lord Diplock in Cassell, supra, at p. 1129, called these the "whole gamut of dyslogistic judicial epithets". A more principled and less exhortatory approach is desirable

[A]ll jurisdictions seek to promote rationality. In directing itself to the punitive damages, the court should relate the facts of the particular case to the [page197] underlying purposes of punitive damages and ask itself how, in particular, an award would further one or other of the objectives of the law, and what is the lowest award that would serve the purpose, i.e., because any higher award would be irrational.

The "rationality" test applies both to the question of whether an award of punitive damages should be made at all, as well as to the question of its quantum.

(Emphasis added)

[120] I consider the following two principles, extracted from the foregoing review, to be particularly significant for the purposes of this case:

(a) The existence of egregious conduct worthy of condemnation by the court -- while the target of an award of punitive damages -- is not, in itself, sufficient to justify the granting of such an exceptional remedy; and

(b) The court must have regard to all of the principles underpinning a punitive damages award in order to determine whether punitive damages serve a rational purpose in the circumstances. In particular, the court must be satisfied that the granting of punitive damages in a civil tort context -- a concept foreign to the primarily compensatory rationale of tort law -- advances the objectives of the remedy (punishment, deterrence, and denunciation), and outweighs the general rule that these public-oriented objectives are principally addressed by the criminal law.

B. Analysis

[121] Cases of this nature -- which are, unfortunately, neither rare nor exceptional in our society -- pose a dilemma in the punitive damages context. On the one hand, the conduct of an intoxicated driver, whose actions cause death or serious injury, readily fits the rhetoric of punitive damages. On the other hand, visiting that conduct with punitive damages does not readily fit with the rationality underpinning of the punitive damages remedy and has significant implications for the compensatory foundation of the law of torts. In addition, as I shall outline below, punitive damages, in the milieu of motor vehicle negligence, do not materially advance the objectives of punitive damages. Moreover, awarding punitive damages in what will inevitably become less than the rare and exceptional case tips the criminal law/private law balance respecting the imposition of a public sanction too far in the direction of a private law tort remedy. This will result in [page198] windfall recoveries for a large number of claimants whose compensatory entitlement has no relationship whatever to the recovery they will receive.

[122] Respectfully, unlike my colleagues, I would resolve this dilemma by concluding that punitive damages do not serve a rational purpose in the circumstances of this case, and, generally, in cases of this particular nature.

(a) Impaired driving is unacceptable but, regrettably, not rare

[123] Here, Andrew Grigg's conduct is clearly deserving of condemnation. I agree with my colleagues that his decision to drive a motor vehicle after drinking excessively, and the manner of his driving (speeding and manoeuvring erratically) -- both resulting in serious personal injury to an innocent pedestrian -- support a finding that his conduct was deliberate and intentional, and that it showed a reckless disregard for the lives and safety of others on the road. However, these facts, while surely justifying criminal sanctions by the state, do not distinguish this case from many other similar factual situations.

[124] There is no question impaired driving is a phenomenon in our society that cannot be tolerated. Many authorities have expressed this sentiment, perhaps none more eloquently than Cory J. in R v. Bernshaw, 1995 CanLII 150 (SCC), [1995] 1 S.C.R. 254, [1994] S.C.J. No. 87, 95 C.C.C. (3d) 193, at p. 269 S.C.R., p. 204 C.C.C., cited above by the Chief Justice and Justice Weiler:

Every year drunk driving leaves a terrible trail of death, injury, heartbreak and destruction. From the point of view of numbers alone, it has a far greater impact on Canadian society than any other crime. In terms of the deaths and serious injuries resulting in hospitalization, drunk driving is clearly the crime which causes the most significant social loss to the country.

[125] For these very reasons, however, impaired driving cases readily lend themselves to the type of pejorative descriptors which courts frequently employ in awarding punitive damages: "wanton or reckless", "contumelious", "deserving of the court's censure", "offending the court's sense of decency", "malicious", "high-handed and heinous", "reckless disregard for the lives and safety of others", etc. Nonetheless, as I have said, the fact that the impugned conduct may attract such descriptors is not sufficient, in itself, to support an award of punitive damages.

[126] When conduct can be described with what Binnie J., in Whiten, supra, at para. 70, called "the incantation of the time-honoured pejoratives" and with what Lord Diplock, in Cassell & Co. Ltd. v. Broome, [1972] A.C. 1027, [1972] 1 All E.R. 801 (H.L.), [page199] at p. 1129 A.C., referred to as "the whole gamut of dyslogistic judicial epithets", it becomes all the more easy to lose sight of the important admonition that punitive damages are to be reserved for what is described in Whiten, at para. 105, as "[the] exceptional case that justifie[s] an exceptional remedy". In Whiten, and more recently in Fidler, the Supreme Court of Canada has reinforced this cautionary golden thread that runs through all of the jurisprudence surrounding punitive damages -- they are to be imposed in rare and exceptional cases and even then only with restraint. The admonition should not be thrown to the four winds.

[127] As deplorable as the reality is, personal injuries arising from impaired driving cases are far from exceptional in our society. Thousands die or are injured each year. In Canada in 2003, for example, approximately 2,939 drivers were involved in alcohol-related motor vehicle accidents in which someone was seriously injured and an estimated 902 people died in motor vehicle accidents in which at least one of the drivers had been drinking. [See Note 8 below] By resisting the application of punitive damages to the circumstances of this case, I do not for one moment seek to minimize or to dishonour the injuries suffered by Ms. McIntyre, or to condone the conduct of Mr. Grigg.

[128] However, there is simply nothing on the record to distinguish this case from hundreds, if not thousands, of other similar situations. If punitive damages can be awarded on the facts of this case, they can be awarded in a great number of others where alcohol-induced motor vehicle accidents lead to death or injury -- and, they will be. As I explain below, an award of punitive damages in this case, and others like it, will have significant implications for the law of torts, and for the relationship between the law of torts and the criminal law.

[129] I turn first, however, to a consideration of whether an award of punitive damages advances the underlying objectives of that remedy in the circumstances of this case.

(b) The objectives of punitive damages are not advanced

[130] I am not persuaded that an award of punitive damages in this case, and more generally, in the context of impaired driving and motor vehicle negligence, advances either the objectives of punishment or deterrence. [page200]

[131] Mr. Grigg is required by law in Ontario to be insured. Although the details of his insurance are not before the court, the Standard Automobile Owner's Policy provides that where the insured is legally responsible for the bodily injury to, or death, of others, or for damage to the property of others, as a result of owning, using or operating the insured automobile, the insurer "will make any payment [on the insured's behalf] that the law requires, up to the limits of the policy". [See Note 9 below] Nothing in the Standard Policy terms exclude punitive damages from this provision, and nothing negatives coverage vis-à-vis third parties as a result of intoxication. Thus, it is unlikely that Mr. Grigg -- or other impaired drivers in similar situations -- will have to pay the punitive damages awarded (subject to policy limits).

[132] What, then, is accomplished in the way of punishment or deterrence by such an award? An award of punitive damages in these circumstances does little to advance the objectives of punitive damages, in my opinion, particularly when weighed against the injunction that such awards are to be reserved for exceptional cases that justify an exceptional remedy: Whiten, para. 105.

[133] Moreover, if punitive damages are to be awarded in such circumstances, the social cost of such a development may be significant as well. Drivers in Ontario are insured. If insurers are to become exposed to an increasing risk of indemnifying for punitive damage awards, they will naturally be required to increase their reserves for losses accordingly. Even if coverage for punitive damages becomes optional, insurance premiums across the board will inevitably rise. In that sense, then, all automobile-owning members of society will effectively be "punished" for the conduct of Mr. Grigg and comparable drivers. Similar concerns underlie the "cap" on non-pecuniary damages imposed by the Supreme Court of Canada in the trilogy of cases referred to in the reasons of the Chief Justice and Justice Weiler: see, for example, Arnold v. Teno, 1978 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287, [1978] S.C.J. No. 8, at p. 333 S.C.R.

(c) The implications of eroding the "rarity" principle

[134] Erosion of the "rarity" principle drives other considerations that also militate against an award of punitive damages. Although he did acknowledge that such damages may be awarded in negligence in a proper case, Binnie J. noted, in Whiten, supra, at para. 67, [page201] that punitive damages by their very nature "will largely be restricted to intentional torts". I think there can be no doubt, however, that if punitive damages are found to be available in this case, they will be found to be available -- and will be awarded -- in many other personal injury or fatal accident cases arising out of alcohol-related motor vehicle accidents. In my opinion, such a development would distort the core rationale of tort law, namely, compensation, in fundamental ways.

[135] As the jurisprudence makes clear, punitive damages are not compensatory and have nothing to do with a plaintiff's injuries; they are designed to punish, to deter and to denounce a defendant's egregious conduct. Thus, an award of punitive damages is a complete windfall for the plaintiff. While this may be of marginal concern where the award is made in the isolated rare and exceptional case, it becomes more disquieting if the award is made in a broader range of "less exceptional" circumstances. What is the rational purpose served by encouraging judges and juries -- who may be emotionally "outraged" by the "impaired driving" aspect of a case -- to make damage awards that are completely divorced from any injuries sustained by the plaintiff and thus unrelated to the compensatory raison d'être of tort law, on a more frequent basis? In my opinion, there is none.

[136] There is another troubling way in which an award of punitive damages in circumstances such as these warps the compensatory rationale that undergirds the tort system. I question the wisdom of a legal policy which has the effect of engrafting the criminal law functions of punishment, deterrence and denunciation upon a compensatory tort system in anything but the truly shocking and exceptional case -- particularly in the negligence framework. As the Supreme Court of Canada has most recently noted, in Fidler, supra, at para. 62:

As stated in Whiten, at para. 36, "punitive damages straddle the frontier between civil law (compensation) and criminal law (punishment)". Criminal law and quasi-criminal regulatory schemes are recognized as the primary vehicles for punishment. It is important that punitive damages be resorted to only in exceptional cases, and with restraint.

(Emphasis added)

[137] Justice LeBel touched on this problem in Whiten, supra, albeit in dissent. [See Note 10 below] Stating that he agreed with Binnie J. on the [page202] core principles governing the award of punitive damages -- the rationality and proportionality of the award remaining the key considerations -- he noted, at para. 151, that,

[t]he concept of rationality remains grounded in the nature of tort law, its historical development and the functions it is now playing in modern society.

Later, at para. 158, he observed that,

[a]n overriding objective of general deterrence remains problematic, if punitive damages are to remain a useful incident of tort law. Otherwise, their use may turn some parts of the law of tort into a sort of private criminal law, devoid of all the procedural and evidentiary constraints which have come to be associated with the criminal justice system.

(Emphasis added)

[138] In their reasons, the Chief Justice and Justice Weiler recognize the danger of judges and juries in civil cases second-guessing what has transpired in parallel criminal proceedings. Indeed, I agree with the following opinion expressed by them at para. 79:

Where a wrongdoer has already been punished for an offence and the same conduct is in question at a civil trial, punitive damages will not generally serve a rational purpose as the sentence imposed in the criminal or regulatory environment will have already met the necessary objectives of retribution, deterrence and denunciation. In our view, there are sound policy reasons not to attempt to re-try those proceedings in a civil action.

[139] Unlike my colleagues, however, I am not persuaded that the circumstances of this case constitute an exception to those sound policy reasons.

[140] The factual foundation for their conclusion lies in Mr. Grigg's conviction for careless driving only, after a plea of guilty, and the $500 fine that was imposed on him. Other alcohol-related charges were withdrawn by the Crown, apparently because the police had omitted to advise Mr. Grigg of his right to counsel at the time of the accident, thereby, rendering inadmissible the breathalyser test results that would have demonstrated a high level of legal impairment on his part. The jury here, however, had the breathalyser results in evidence, as well as much expert and other testimony concerning Mr. Grigg's impaired condition.

[141] The legal foundation for my colleagues' conclusion rests on the "disproportionality" test, enunciated by Binnie J. in Whiten, supra, at para. 123, in relation to the wrongful conduct and the penalty imposed. For ease of reference, I reproduce the relevant portions of Binnie J.'s comments underlining the portion of his remarks on which my colleagues particularly rely: [page203]

Compensatory damages also punish. In many cases they will be all the "punishment" required. To the extent a defendant has suffered other retribution, denunciation or deterrence, either civil or criminal, for the misconduct in question, the need for additional punishment in the case before the court is lessened and may be eliminated. In Canada, unlike some other common law jurisdictions, such "other" punishment is relevant but it is not necessarily a bar to the award of punitive damages. The prescribed fine, for example, may be disproportionately small to the level of outrage the jury wishes to express. The misconduct in question may be broader than the misconduct proven in evidence in the criminal or regulatory proceeding. The legislative judgment fixing the amount of the potential fine may be based on policy considerations other than pure punishment. The key point is that punitive damages are awarded "if, but only if" all other penalties have been taken into account and found to be inadequate to accomplish the objectives of retributions, deterrence, and denunciation

(Italics in original, underlining added)

[142] I agree with the view of the Chief Justice and Justice Weiler that this "disproportionality" test -- which is expressed in obiter in Whiten -- should be approached with caution. Where I respectfully disagree is on the weight that should be attributed to the examples given by Binnie J. in the underlined portion of the above passage.

[143] I read those comments as providing general examples of the legal principle being enunciated, not as binding legal principles themselves. The legal principle is that in Canada, unlike in some other common law jurisdictions, "other" punishment in parallel criminal proceedings is relevant but is not necessarily a bar to the award of punitive damages. I do not understand Justice Binnie as intending to elevate to the level of binding legal principle the notion that it should be open to judges and juries, in the many alcohol-related negligence cases that come before them, to second-guess the punishment imposed in parallel criminal proceedings on the basis (a) that the fine imposed was not consistent with their "level of outrage" or (b) that they may feel the civil case encompassed more wrongful conduct than what was addressed in the criminal proceeding.

[144] "Outrage" is not a sound yardstick for measuring legal policy (although it may form a basis for applying it). In this case, for example, the jury's level of outrage led them to make a punitive damage award of $100,000. It is hard to conceive of an impaired driving offence where a fine of that dimension, or even a fine of $20,000 (the amount of punitive damages upheld by the majority here), would be imposed. Would it follow that judges or juries in civil cases such as this are entitled to superimpose their version of a "fine" on the defendant even though the defendant was required to pay a fine perfectly in keeping with the [page204] principles of sentencing in criminal law, and to do so just because the fine imposed does not accord with their "level of outrage"? Or, because they felt that the misconduct in question before them was broader than the misconduct proved in the criminal proceeding?

[145] A judge or jury in the civil proceeding cannot know the answer to this latter question -- or, indeed, to the question of whether the fine imposed in the criminal proceeding was appropriate for that proceeding -- without knowing all of the evidence and all of the factors underlying the disposition of the criminal proceeding. They cannot know these dynamics of the parallel criminal case without having tried it. There is a well-founded policy against the duplication of legal proceedings. I do not see how the preservation of public order and the tempering of harm done to the public good -- the objectives of punitive damages -- are advanced by allowing judges or juries in civil cases to override what they may perceive to be imperfections in the criminal proceedings, except in the truly rarest of cases.

C. Conclusion

[146] I recognize the wisdom of Binnie J.'s counsel in Whiten, that punitive damages are not to be limited by "categories" -- either to certain classes of cases, or by exclusion from certain classes of cases. However, there may be types of cases where, as a general rule, punitive damage awards are inappropriate for policy or other reasons. Accordingly, while I would not say that there can never be an award of punitive damages in impaired driving cases involving death or serious personal injury, I would put such cases in this latter category. Having regard to the factors outlined above, and the rationality principle that underlies an award of punitive damages, the circumstances of this case do not -- again, borrowing the words of Binnie J. in Whiten, at para. 67 -- "warrant the addition of punishment to compensation in a civil action".

[147] I would allow the appeal with respect to punitive damages and set aside the award in that regard.

[148] If I am wrong in this conclusion, I agree with the Chief Justice and Justice Weiler that the quantum of the punitive damages award should be reduced from $100,000 to $20,000. With respect to the other issues on the appeal, I agree with them and with the disposition of those issues in the manner set out in the reasons of the court. [page205]

D. Costs

[149] The parties can make written submissions on the appropriate disposition of costs in these appeals. Those submissions should be no more than 15 pages and should be filed within three weeks of the release of these reasons.

Notes

Note 1: Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229, [1978] S.C.J. No. 6; Thornton (Next friend of) v. Prince George School District 57, 1978 CanLII 12 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 267, [1978] S.C.J. No. 7; Arnold v. Teno, 1978 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287, [1978] S.C.J. No. 8.

Note 2: Counsel for McMaster also brought motions to strike the claim for aggravated and punitive damages at the beginning and end of the trial; the trial judge also dismissed those motions. However, the jury did not award aggravated or punitive damages against McMaster and as such, the issue of aggravated or punitive damages in relation to the conduct of McMaster is outside of the scope of this appeal.

Note 3: But see Nelson v. Welsh, 1985 CanLII 5838 (NS SC), [1985] N.S.J. No. 412, 70 N.S.R. (2d) 422 (S.C.), where Richard J. rejected a claim for punitive damages in an impaired driving case. Richard J. found that when the only factor that is beyond negligence is the driver's intoxication or impairment, punitive damages should not be awarded. In coming to this conclusion the trial judge relied on decisions refusing punitive damages in cases involving the negligence of a surgeon and the defective manufacture of a product. As noted elsewhere in our decision in this case, the law has evolved such that punitive damages have now been awarded in these types of cases. The trial judge was also of the opinion that the driver's insurance company pays the damage award and punitive damages would have no deterrent value. Our understanding is that the terms of the policy will dictate whether or not punitive damages would be included. Furthermore, while doctors are covered by insurance, punitive damages have nevertheless been awarded against them when they have breached the doctor-patient relationship. See Norberg v. Weinrib, supra and Gerula v. Flores, infra. The analysis in Nelson is therefore not helpful as it is not based on the current state of the law.

Note 4: For a summary of American case law see Danny R. Veilleux, "Intoxication of automobile driver as basis for awarding punitive damages" (1995) 33 A.L.R. (5th) 303.

Note 5: In Norberg, La Forest J. on behalf of himself, Gonthier and Cory JJ. founded liability on the unequal distribution of power in the doctor-patient relationship and exploitation or abuse of that power; McLachlin J., with whom L'Heureux Dubé J. agreed, grounded liability on breach of fiduciary duty. The five judges agreed that punitive damages should be awarded. Sopinka J. held that the sexual acts were causally connected to the doctor's failure to treat and were a breach of his professional duty, but held punitive damages should not be awarded. Stevenson J. took no part in the judgment.

Note 6: In this regard, both La Forest J. and McLachlin J. cited The Report of the Task Force of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Note 7: Andrea's release date is drawn from the appellants' compendium, at Tab 1, p. 24. It is the court's understanding that the release date mentioned in the appellants' factum at para. 25 is incorrect.

Note 8: The Traffic Injury Research Foundation of Canada, The Alcohol-Crash Problem in Canada: 2003 by D.R. Mayhew, S.W. Brown & H.M. Simpson (Ottawa: Transport Canada and the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators, 2005) at pp. 35, 40.

Note 9: Ontario, Financial Services Commission, Ontario Automobile Policy (OAP 1), Owner's Policy, online: Financial Services Commission of Ontario, (date viewed: September 29, 2006) at 16 (emphasis added).

Note 10: LeBel J. was in dissent, but not on the question of whether punitive damages should be awarded. At para. 143, he agreed such an award was justified in the circumstances, but felt that $1 million in punitive damages went far beyond the appropriate use of this kind of remedy.

TAB 56

Rizzi v. Marvos, 2008 ONCA 172 (CanLII)

Source: Court of Appeal for Ontario
Date: 2008-03-11
File number: C44688
Other citation: 236 OAC 4
Citation: Rizzi v. Marvos, 2008 ONCA 172 (CanLII), <<https://canlii.ca/t/1w17c>>, retrieved on 2026-03-23

CITATION: Rizzi v. Marvos, 2008 ONCA 172
DATE: 20080311
DOCKET: C44688

COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

LASKIN, LANG and JURIANSZ JJ.A.

BETWEEN:

DEBBIE RIZZI and DELIO RIZZI

Plaintiffs
(Appellant)

and

GEORGE MARVOS and THOMAS PARTALAS

Defendants
(Respondents)

Karl Arvai and Chris Nicolis for the appellant

Douglas A. Wallace for the respondents

Heard: October 30, 2007

On appeal from the judgment and order of Justice T. David Little of the Superior Court of Justice dated December 2, 2005 and January 6, 2006 respectively.

LANG J.A.:

OVERVIEW

[1] The appellant, Debbie Rizzi, appeals from the judgment of Little J. following a seventeen-day jury trial. The jury assessed damages against the respondents, George Mavros and Thomas Partalas, who were Ms. Rizzi's landlords, on the basis that their improper storage of construction materials in the storage/laundry room of the apartment building led to^[1] the appellant's accident and consequent injuries.

[2] The appellant was awarded damages of $236,494.91, including pre-judgment interest. The award included $41,000 for general or non-pecuniary damages, $17,400 for special damages, $660,500 for loss of past and future income and $160,000 for future care costs. The jury found the appellant seventy-five per cent contributorily negligent in attempting to move the materials and her award was reduced accordingly.

[3] The appellant challenges the trial judge's instructions to the jury on the law regarding non-pecuniary damages, contributory negligence and the apportionment of fault. Alternatively, the appellant argues that the jury's finding on each of these issues is unreasonable. The appellant also appeals the costs order. The respondents argue that the trial judge correctly instructed the jury regarding the relevant law, the jury awards were supported by the evidence and the trial judge made no error in exercising his discretion regarding costs.

[4] In my view and for the reasons that follow, I conclude that the trial judge erred in instructing the jury to assess the appellant's non-pecuniary damages on a scale using the upper limit or cap as a maximum. However, I would find no error in the charge regarding contributory negligence or apportionment.

[5] The erroneous instruction regarding the cap would ordinarily require a new trial. However, in this case, the jury award indicates the jury accepted the appellant's credibility. Since this makes possible an assessment of the extent of her pain and suffering, I would not order a new trial. Rather, I would substitute a damages assessment of $80,000 for non-pecuniary damages. I would reduce the challenged costs award by $5,500.

FACTS

[6] The appellant was a thirty-two-year old dental hygienist who alleged that a leg injury caused neuropathic pain that evolved first into complex regional pain syndrome and later into fibromyalgia. The appellant alleged that the fibromyalgia eventually prevented her from continuing any employment.

[7] The injury occurred on April 2, 1995. The appellant was attempting to store paint cans in her locker located in the storage room of the respondent's apartment building. When the appellant first entered the storage room, she observed the metal sheets, each the approximate size of an apartment door, as well as several boxes of construction materials that were lying on the floor between the two rows of lockers. Although there was no urgency, the appellant decided she could store the paint cans by moving the sheets away from the lockers.

[8] The appellant testified that she had some initial concern about cutting her fingers on the sharp, jagged edges of the sheets, but despite this concern, she decided that she could move them safely. Indeed, she succeeded in moving the first sheet easily, but had trouble with the remaining sheets because they were stacked tightly together. She tried to separate them by pulling the sheets towards her, but she was unable to control their weight. They forced her backwards until the heels of her feet came into contact with a surface. She mistakenly assumed this surface to be the second row of lockers. She leaned back for support. Since the surface was actually a box of construction materials, the appellant lost her balance and fell backwards. The metal sheets landed on her legs. She was able to remove her left leg without injury, but as she tried to extricate her right leg, the sharp-edged sheets scraped her shin, causing immediate pain.

[9] The appellant was taken to hospital, where she was treated for her injuries and instructed to take two days of rest. She subsequently consulted her family doctor. The appellant could not bear weight on her leg for about two weeks. She developed pain in her leg and an area of extreme sensitivity to touch, a condition known as allodynia.

[10] After two weeks, the appellant returned to work, but she found it necessary to bear much of her weight on her left leg, which led to low back pain. The appellant started to suffer from fatigue because she was unable to sleep properly. She pursued treatment, including consultations with physiatrists, an orthopaedic surgeon, physiotherapists, chiropractors, a shiatsu specialist, an acupuncturist and a naturopath.

[11] A year after the accident, Dr. Teasell, a physiatrist, diagnosed neuropathic pain in the appellant's leg, which resulted from damage to the appellant's peripheral nerves. This diagnosis was subsequently confirmed by a neurologist, but no treatment was available.

[12] The appellant testified that she eventually developed generalized pain throughout her entire body resulting in continued sleeplessness, fatigue and ultimately depression. By the end of 1997, the appellant had stopped working and has not resumed employment since, except for her unsuccessful efforts to do so on a part-time basis from 2000 to 2003.

[13] In 2003, Dr. Teasell diagnosed post-traumatic fibromyalgia, a diagnosis confirmed by other specialists. Dr. Chaiton, a rheumatologist, also diagnosed the appellant with complex regional pain syndrome. The medical evidence called by the appellant indicated that she was "quite significantly impaired" and that her condition would likely get worse with age.

[14] The respondents' expert physiatrist and rheumatologist, Dr. Gyenes, testified that, in her opinion, the appellant did not meet the criteria for a diagnosis of either complex regional pain syndrome or fibromyalgia. She pointed to inconsistencies in the appellant's presentation, including the unexplained absence of muscle atrophy in her right leg. It was

Dr. Gyenes' view that profound muscle atrophy would normally be evident in light of the appellant's clinical history and the severity of her reported symptoms. Dr. Gyenes also questioned the extent of the appellant's reported allodynia because the appellant was able to wear trousers and apply a depilatory cream to her leg.

[15] It was the appellant's position at trial that she had led a full and satisfying life before the accident, including active participation in sports. She attributed all her post-accident difficulties to the injury to her shin. However, evidence presented at trial indicated that the appellant suffered a pre-existing wrist injury. A week before the accident, she reported to her physiotherapist that she was experiencing "more pain" in her right arm and wrist and that the right wrist had become hypersensitive to touch. The physiotherapist made a treatment note querying whether the appellant was suffering from complex regional pain disorder. However, the evidence at trial indicated the appellant had sufficient use of her wrist around the time of the accident to paint her apartment.

[16] Although treatment for the leg injury was suspended some months after the incident, the appellant reported ongoing wrist pain that had spread to her right arm, shoulder and neck. Physiotherapy for her upper body complaints continued for a further year. After that, the appellant related her ongoing complaints exclusively to the shin injury.

JURY VERDICT

[17] At trial, the appellant urged the jury to award pecuniary damages in the amount of $1,484,862, plus an unspecified amount for non-pecuniary damages. The respondents argued that any ongoing injury was related to the wrist injury and damages for the leg injury should be assessed at $10,000 to $15,000. The jury assessed non-pecuniary damages at $41,000 and pecuniary damages at $837,900.

[18] The jury answered the questions put to them as follows:

1. Did the defendants take such care as in all the circumstances of the case was reasonable to see that the plaintiff was reasonably safe?

Answer: No

2. If the answer to Question 1 is "No" list clearly the particulars of the defendants' failure to care.

Answer:

- Failed to store the sheets where the tenants could not access them
- Failed to give tenants warning that the locker room will be closed for a certain length of time
- Failed to restrict the access of the locker area.

3. If your answer to Question 1 is "No" did the plaintiff use reasonable care on her own part for her own safety?

Answer: No

4. If your answer to Question 3 is “No” list clearly the particulars of her contributory negligence.

Answer:

- She was negligent by trying to move the panels
- She should have been aware of her own physical limitations – (received 20 treatments for physio for wrist) – prior
- She could of asked for help
- There was no urgency

5. If both plaintiff and defendants are at fault, how do you apportion the degree of fault between the parties?

Answer:

Plaintiff	75%
Defendant	25%
Total	100%

[19] In addition, the jury specifically found the incident caused or materially contributed to the appellant’s condition of fibromyalgia/diffuse pain.

ISSUES

[20] The appellant raises the following issues on this appeal:

1. Did the trial judge correctly charge the jury regarding the assessment of non-pecuniary damages and, if so, was the jury’s assessment so inordinately low as to be unreasonable?
2. Did the trial judge correctly charge the jury regarding contributory negligence and, if so, was the jury’s finding of contributory negligence unreasonable?
3. Did the trial judge correctly charge the jury regarding the apportionment of fault and, if so, was the jury’s apportionment unreasonable?
4. Did the trial judge fail to consider relevant factors or reach an unreasonable conclusion with respect to the costs award?

ANALYSIS

[21] Before examining each of these issues in turn, it is helpful to consider the standard of review.

[22] In this case, the appellants argue that the charge to the jury contained material misdirection or non-direction on the issues of non-pecuniary damages, contributory negligence and allocation of fault. Since the challenged directions involve points of law, the standard of review is one of correctness, bearing in mind that any misdirection or non-direction must be material to the jury's decision. Jury charges are not to be parsed to a standard of perfection; rather, the question is whether, at the end of the charge, the jury would have properly understood the law: Pereira v. Hamilton Township Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Co., 2006 CanLII 12284 (ON CA), [2006] O.J. No. 1508 at para. 51 (C.A.).

[23] If there is no error of law, the standard of review dictates that a jury verdict will only be set aside as against the weight of the evidence where it is so plainly unreasonable and unjust that no jury, reviewing the evidence as a whole and acting judicially could have reached it: Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33 (CanLII), [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235 at para. 30.

1. NON-PECUNIARY DAMAGES

[24] On the contentious issue of the cap, the trial judge instructed the jury:

She is only coming once. It has got to be decided. But you would also say when you look at that, the maximum awards in Canada for a young person who is made a quadriplegic for pain and suffering is just less than $300,000.00. So your range would be somewhere between zero and $300,000.00 for her pain on that item only. That is the maximum. You would have to scale it. [Emphasis added.]

[25] The Supreme Court of Canada has provided direction on the approach to a jury charge about the cap. In ter Neuzen v. Korn, 1995 CanLII 72 (SCC), [1995] 3 S.C.R. 674, Sopinka J., speaking for the majority, noted that the trial judge should not charge the jury on the cap where he or she is of the opinion that the injuries “will not likely produce an award approaching the rough upper limit.” (para. 113) However, the trial judge should instruct the jury about the cap, after considering counsels' submissions and the type of injury sustained, if he or she is of the opinion that damages may be assessed in a range exceeding that amount. In such circumstances, the instructions “may include an explanation of the reason for the cap.” (para. 112)

[26] David Griffiths, J.W. O'Brien & James D. Carnwath, “General Comments on Conduct of a Civil Jury Trial” in Civil Jury Charges: Draft [unpublished] at 24, distils the principles set out in ter Neuzen for a trial judge preparing a civil jury charge:

- i) If the trial judge is of the view that damages are of the type that may be assessed in the range of, or exceeding, the upper limit the jury should be advised of it and instructed that their assessment for non pecuniary damages should not exceed that amount.
- ii) If the charge is to instruct on the upper limit, it should include an explanation of why there is such a limit. He [Sopinka J.] suggests the jury be told the imposition of an upper limit may seem somewhat arbitrary, but it has been established by the courts to deal with those cases in which there will be full compensation for lost income, future care and future income loss the award for non pecuniary damages has been limited to include compensation for the misfortune suffered, loss of enjoyment of life and for the pain and suffering involved.

- iii) If the judge is of the view the injuries will not likely approach that upper limit, it is best that the judge not charge the jury on that matter.

[27] Accordingly, the first question is whether the damages in this case could have been assessed at or near the cap. This is somewhat difficult to answer contextually because this court was not provided with either a transcript of any pre-charge conference or with trial counsels' submissions to the jury.

[28] However, we do know that, although the appellant's counsel did not suggest any particular amount or range for non-pecuniary damages, he argued that the appellant's injuries included fibromyalgia that prevented her from working and precluded her from engaging in many of her normal physical and social activities. Further, in his objection to the charge about using the cap as a scale, the appellant's counsel argued that the jury could decide that the appellant's damages exceeded the cap.

[29] If the trial judge did not accept that damages could be awarded at or near the cap, the proper position would have been to refrain from charging the jury regarding that limit. However, in light of the evidence and the position of the appellant's trial counsel, I conclude that the trial judge was of the view that non-pecuniary damages could be awarded at or near the cap and, for this reason, decided to instruct the jury on that issue.

[30] In providing this instruction, the appellant argues that the trial judge erred in directing the jury to use the cap as a scale from which to measure damages. In support of this objection, he relies on the decision of this court in Koukounakis v. Stainrod (1995), 1995 CanLII 621 \(ON CA\), 23 O.R. (3d) 299. In that case, the appellants challenged a jury assessment of non-pecuniary damages arguing that it was so high as to be unreasonable. In explaining the reasons why non-pecuniary damages cannot be assessed on a scale using the cap as a maximum, Doherty J.A. said:

The judicially imposed upper limit on general non-pecuniary damages offers some assistance in determining the appropriateness of a particular award. The appropriateness of an award, however, cannot be determined by comparing the level of disability or pain and suffering suffered by a particular plaintiff to that of a person entitled to the maximum award: Howes v. Crosby, supra, at p. 460. The upper limit serves to cap the potential award for general non-pecuniary damages. It is in large measure an arbitrary figure fixed in response to policy concerns, and on the assumption that awards made under other heads of damage will largely achieve the compensation goal: Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229 at pp. 260-61, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 452. (at p. 308) [Emphasis added.]

[31] In Howes v. Crosby (1984), 1984 CanLII 2172 (ON CA), 45 O.R. (2d) 449 at 460 (C.A.), MacKinnon A.C.J.O., in concluding that the cap would have no relevance in the non-pecuniary damages assessment for most jury trials, emphasized that the cap “is not to be used as a scale against which all non-pecuniary claims for other injuries are to be measured.”

[32] Assuming that it is appropriate to instruct a jury on the cap, and recognizing that such an instruction runs the risk of a direct comparison between the damages in the particular case with those that merit an award at the cap, a trial judge must explain to the jury that such a comparison is not appropriate. In particular, the trial judge must explain that the cap is not to be seen as the upper end of a range of damages awards, but rather that the cap was established for the policy reasons discussed in Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229 at pp. 260-61^[2]. In that case, Dickson J. explained that a jury will not attempt to set a value on the loss of a plaintiff’s function, because that function cannot be restored. Nor, for the same reason, will the award be assessed on the basis of the value of lost happiness. Rather, an award will be determined that provides the plaintiff with the ability to make more general arrangements, beyond those relating directly to the injuries, so that his or her life will be more endurable. Those arrangements will aim to alleviate the plaintiff’s misfortune by allowing him or her to live as tolerably as possible.

[33] In quantifying non-pecuniary damages, the jury should understand that the rough upper limit reflects the reality that no amount of money can compensate for the plaintiff’s loss of quality of life or his or her pain and suffering. A cap on non-pecuniary damages was imposed for policy reasons relating to the heavy financial burden that otherwise would result from excessive awards. In these circumstances, it would be wrong to use the cap to compare a particular plaintiff’s injuries to that of a person entitled to the cap.

[34] Further, a jury told about the cap generally must also be told that its assessment of pecuniary damages is paramount, because it is those damages that give the plaintiff the funds to compensate for lost income and to provide for future care. The assessment of the plaintiff’s non-pecuniary damages differs because it is a philosophical and policy exercise that, although necessarily arbitrary, must be in an amount that is reasonable and fair both to the plaintiff and to society as a whole.

[35] In this case, the jury was not instructed on the policy reasons for the cap. Moreover, it was told to use the cap as a scale and to compare the appellant’s injuries to those of a young quadriplegic. This instruction was in error, as was the trial judge’s refusal to re-instruct the jury after the appellant’s objection to this aspect of the charge.

[36] I will consider the appropriate remedy after considering the other grounds of appeal.

2. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

[37] On the question of contributory negligence, the trial judge charged the jury as follows:

Now, you have to decide that she would be negligent in failing to take reasonable care for her own safety. This time the onus rests on the Defendants. Negligence here means doing something that a reasonably prudent person would not do, or the failure to do something that a reasonably prudent person would do; and you have to look at the circumstances of this case. The standard of care upon which you base that is the conduct of an average person. It is not an extraordinary conscientious person, it is not an excessively skilled person, but a reasonable person exercising average ordinary prudence. You must decide if – whether a reasonably prudent person would have exercised or taken care of her own safety in the circumstance – in that matter.

[38] The appellant’s counsel did not object to this part of the charge at trial. The absence of an objection suggests that the issue was not seen as central to the jury’s deliberations. However, on appeal, the appellant argues the trial judge ought to have instructed the jury to consider whether the appellant subjectively foresaw the consequences of her action, including the mechanism by which the accident would occur and the risk of the injury that she would suffer. The appellant argues that this was important because, while the appellant recognized the risk of cutting her fingers on the sheets, she did not foresee either the possibility of the sheets knocking her over or the injury to her shin.

[39] The appellant’s argument rests on Avco Financial Services Realty Ltd. v. Norman (2003), 2003 CanLII 47436 (ON CA), 64 O.R. (3d) 239 (C.A.). At para. 26 of that decision, Charron J. quotes Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Ltd. v. Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., 1997 CanLII 307 (SCC), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1210 at para. 76 regarding the foreseeability element for contributory negligence:

The test ... was summarized by Denning L.J. in Jones v. Livox Quarries Ltd., [1952] 2 Q.B. 608 (C.A.), at p. 615:

Although contributory negligence does not depend on a duty of care, it does depend on foreseeability. Just as actionable negligence requires the foreseeability of harm to others, so contributory negligence requires the foreseeability of harm to oneself. A person is guilty of contributory negligence if he ought reasonably to have foreseen that, if he did not act as a reasonable, prudent man, he might be hurt himself; and in his reckonings he must take into account the possibility of others being careless.
[Emphasis added.]

[40] The appellant relies on the emphasized sentence to argue that subjective foreseeability is an essential component of contributory negligence.

[41] The flaw in the appellant’s argument is that the reference to foreseeability of harm to oneself is immediately qualified by reference to the standard of a “reasonable, prudent” individual. Considered together, it is clear that the court endorses an objective and not a subjective analysis of foreseeability.

[42] Further, in Bow Valley, McLachlin J. specifically provides that foreseeability of the “precise type of damage or sequence of events” resulting from the negligence is not necessary (at para. 76).^[3] This point is reinforced in Avco, at paragraph 32, where the court notes that “the injured party will be guilty of contributory negligence if it ought to have foreseen that it may harm itself by failing to act reasonably and prudently”.

[43] Accordingly, a party is negligent (in this case, contributorily negligent) if she objectively ought to have foreseen that she might injure herself. The objective test is implicit in the trial judge’s charge, which included a number of references to the reasonable person and to reasonable care. A reasonably prudent person, by definition, considers whether a course of action might result in harm.

[44] Since the appellant specifically acknowledged that she subjectively appreciated there was a risk of cutting her fingers on the metal sheets while moving them, it was not necessary for the respondents to establish that she also foresaw either the mechanism by which the accident would occur or the nature of the injury that could result. Accordingly, I cannot accept this ground of appeal.

APPORTIONMENT OF FAULT

[45] The trial judge charged the jury regarding apportionment of fault in these words:

Then you get down to Question Number Five and you say, if both the plaintiff and the defendants are at fault, how do you apportion the degree of fault between the parties? That can go from zero to 100 in each case, and you would decide. You would say that this incident would not have occurred but for, and you would apportion it. The total has to come to 100. So you would total it right in there and it would total 100 and you would attribute it. [Emphasis added.]

Once you have done that, that is all for “who is responsible”. You forget about that now. The Court will deal with the apportionment of percentages that you find.

[46] The appellant argues that this “but for” reference imports a causation analysis into the instruction, rather than one based on the parties’ respective degrees of fault or blameworthiness.

[47] The Negligence Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. N.1, s. 3 provides:

In any action for damages that is founded upon the fault or negligence of the defendant if fault or negligence is found on the part of the plaintiff that contributed to the damages, the court shall apportion the damages in proportion to the degree of fault or negligence found against the parties respectively.

[48] A plain reading of this provision requires apportionment based on the “fault or negligence” of each party, rather than on the basis of causation. It would be in error to apportion liability on the degree to which the appellant or the respondents caused the damages.

[49] The appellant relies on Snushall v. Fulsang (2005), 2005 CanLII 34561 \(ON CA\), 78 O.R. (3d) 142 (C.A.), which discussed the distinct issue of the difference between active and passive faults. At paragraph 29 of his reasons, in distinguishing between fault and causation, Juriansz J.A. refers to Cempel v. Harrison Hot Springs Hotel Ltd. (1997), 1997 CanLII 2374 \(BC CA\), 43 B.C.L.R. (3d) 219 (B.C.C.A.) at para. 19, where Lambert J.A.

emphasized that the Negligence Act “does not say that the apportionment should be on the basis of degree to which each person’s fault caused the damage”. Lambert J.A. concluded “we are not assessing degrees of causation, we are assessing degrees of fault. In this context, “fault” means blameworthiness.”

[50] Since apportionment relates to fault or blameworthiness, it would have been preferable if the trial judge had avoided “but for” terminology, which evokes causation principles for those familiar with tort principles. However, a jury is not familiar with tort principles. Moreover, the challenged charge must be considered in its context and not subject to abundant parsing.

[51] Importantly, the trial judge specifically instructed the jury to “apportion the degree of fault.” He did not direct the jury about causation in respect of apportionment. Indeed, causation was a matter separately addressed in another part of the charge using the different language of material contribution. In this context, the jury would have taken the “but for” reference to refer to the negligence of the parties and not to the causation of the injuries.

[52] Further, after the “but for” terminology, the trial judge immediately told the jury to attribute “it” out of 100, referring back to his instruction about the parties’ relative degrees of fault.

[53] Moreover, the question put to the jury was both correctly phrased and specific: “If both plaintiff and defendants are at fault, how do you apportion the degree of fault between the parties?” Importantly, the jury had this precise question with it in written form in the jury room when it assessed the parties’ respective degrees of fault and determined that the moral blameworthiness of the appellant was greater than that of the respondents.

[54] Finally, I am not persuaded that the jury’s apportionment of seventy-five per cent of blame to the appellant indicates that it was misled by the trial judge’s charge. The appellant has submitted a number of cases where contributory negligence is assessed at twenty-five per cent. However, each of these cases involves circumstances in which the defendant was the “prime cause” of all the damage or “wholly responsible” for the negligent act and the injured plaintiff only “contributed” to the damages he or she suffered. This is consistent with Snushall v. Fulsang at para. 35, in which Juriansz J.A. concluded that, “contributory negligence, solely for failing to wear a seatbelt, should not exceed 25 per cent.” See also Heeney v. Best (1979), 1979 CanLII 2084 (ON CA), 28 O.R. (2d) 71 (C.A.).

[55] While high, seventy-five per cent is not outside the range available on the evidence. The same apportionment was allotted in Hunt (Litigation Guardian of) v. Sutton Group Incentive Realty Inc. (2001), 2001 CanLII 28027 (ON SC), 52 O.R. (3d) 425 (S.C.J.), on the basis that the plaintiff was largely the author of her or his own misfortune for drinking and driving, and in Kennedy v. Waterloo County Board of Education (1999), 1999 CanLII 3746 (ON CA), 45 O.R. (3d) 1 (C.A.), for the negligent operation of a motorcycle in a schoolyard. See also Rutherford v. Niekrawietz, [1994] O.J. No. 2439 (Gen Div.) and Brown v. Gravenhurst, [1995] O.J. No. 561 (Gen. Div.).

[56] Importantly in this case, the jury made specific findings about the negligence of both the appellant and the respondents. The jury determined that the respondents were negligent in failing to restrict access to the room in which the sheets were stored and in failing to warn the tenants that they would not have access to that room. However, the jury found that the appellant was negligent in trying to move the sheets when aware of her own limitations and in a situation where there was no urgency and where she could have asked for help. These findings support the jury's determination that the appellant was the author or her own misfortune and that her blameworthiness was greater than that of the respondents'.

[57] Accordingly, in my view, at the end of the charge the jury properly understood the law. Although another jury may have assessed the degrees of negligence differently, this jury's verdict is entitled to deference. I see no basis to interfere with its conclusion.

REMEDY

(a) Discretion to substitute damages award

[58] Since I have concluded that the award for non-pecuniary damages cannot stand based on an error of law, I must now determine the appropriate remedy. The appellant asks this court to substitute its own assessment of damages as permitted by the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 119, which provides that "[o]n an appeal from an award for damages for personal injury, the court may, if it considers it just, substitute its own assessment of the damages." In arguing that it is in the interests of justice for this court to substitute its own assessment of damages, the appellant emphasizes the amount of time that has passed since the date of the accident. In oral argument, the respondent took the position that a new trial is necessary.

[59] In Padfield v. Martin (2003), 2003 CanLII 36239 (ON CA), 64 O.R. (3d) 577 at para. 56 (C.A.), Borins J.A. observed that an appellate court may refuse to substitute its own assessment and instead order a new trial where there has been an error of law. He noted that an appellate court would likely substitute its own assessment of damages where the fairness of the trial is not an issue and the jury simply reached an inappropriate assessment. However, a new trial is likely where errors in the conduct of the trial may have affected the outcome. Often, he said, it would not be just for an appellate court to substitute its own assessment if the error constitutes a substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice that otherwise warrants a new trial. Finally, Borins J.A. concluded that "an appeal court ultimately maintains the wide discretion under ss. 119 and 134 to grant whatever relief is sought by the successful party."

[60] In my view, the error in this case, while an error of law, is not one that precludes our assessment of damages, particularly when balanced against the difficulties that would be posed by ordering a new trial so many years after the event.

[61] In Pilon v. Janveaux, [2005] O.J. No. 4672 at para. 31, a case regarding the apportionment of liability, this court observed: "[T]he interests of justice require that a new trial be avoided if possible. Memories will be stale, and the cost is prohibitive. Instead, this court should perform the apportionment task that the jury ought to have been instructed to and did not perform." (para. 31) Similarly in this case, where the incident occurred more than twelve years ago, memories will be stale and a new trial may well not be feasible. In addition to the difficulties inherent in assembling the lay witnesses, the medical witnesses or their records may no longer be available and their recollections of the appellant and her injuries will have faded. In addition, the costs of a new trial are simply not merited in the circumstances of this case.

[62] Moreover, the error in this case, while one of law, does not affect the fairness of the trial or its outcome. Rather, the error goes solely to the amount of the appellant's non-pecuniary damages. In addition, the jury's award of pecuniary damages, which is not tainted by any error, provides substantial guidance because it is apparent that the jury believed the appellant's evidence about the extent of her injuries. As well, it is apparent that the jury rejected the evidence of the respondents that attempted to undermine the appellant's testimony about her symptoms and condition. In all the circumstances of this case, since credibility is not an issue, a new trial is not necessary.

[63] The jury specifically found that the appellant's fibromyalgia was caused by the incident. The significant impact of the appellant's injury is reflected in the award of $660,500 for loss of past and future income and $160,000 for future care costs. Even though the jury did not award the full amount of the appellant's claim for either category of damages, the damages awarded are still substantial.

[64] In these circumstances, it is just for this court to exercise the wide discretion granted under s. 119 to determine the non-pecuniary damage award.

(b) Assessment of Non-Pecuniary Damage Award

[65] Regarding the amount of non-pecuniary damages, the appellant relies on appellate court authorities from British Columbia, Alberta and Nova Scotia, which upheld jury awards in the range of $100,000 to $200,000^[4]. However, those authorities represent unusually high trial awards to which an appellate court will accord deference.

[66] The respondents argue that the jury award of $41,000 falls within the general assessments of damages for fibromyalgia. For this proposition, they refer to Ontario cases where the awards ranged from $40,000 to $50,000^[5].

[67] However, other Ontario trial decisions have imposed higher damage awards for fibromyalgia. In Deschamps v. Chu, [1997] O.J. No. 2593 (Gen. Div.), the plaintiff was awarded $65,000 non-pecuniary damages following a motor vehicle accident that caused fibromyalgia and chronic pain. In Britt v. Zagjo Holdings Ltd., [1996] O.J. No. 1014 (Gen. Div.), the plaintiff developed fibromyalgia following a slip and fall accident. She was awarded $75,000 in non-pecuniary damages, subject to a twenty-five per cent reduction for her contributory negligence. The court identified the following factors in support of this award: "permanent work disability, constant pain, a disastrous loss of amenities of life, and the prospect of a future life in which she will have to fight to control and cope with her disabled condition." (para. 46)

[68] A review of more recent Ontario trial decisions indicates awards of non-pecuniary damages for fibromyalgia or chronic pain (a comparable affliction) in a wider range of $55,000 to $120,000. In Latta v. Ontario, [2004] O.J. No. 3751 (S.C.J.), the plaintiff, who was twenty-nine years old at the time of the accident, developed chronic pain syndrome after falling down a flight of stairs. As a result of the injury, he was in pain throughout the day and his activities were seriously restricted. He received an award of $120,000 in addition to his claim for loss of income. That award was upheld on appeal.^[6]

[69] In Peloso v. 778561 Ontario Inc. (c.o.b. J.L. Maintenance Services), 2005 CanLII 21543 (ON SC), [2005] O.J. No. 2489 (S.C.J.), the plaintiff was involved in a motor vehicle accident in which she suffered injuries creating pain and discomfort throughout her body, including a lack of sensation down her leg. General damages were globally assessed at $80,000, although they were reduced to $56,000 for reasons relating to a pre-existing condition and mitigation.

[70] In Hartwick v. Simser, [2004] O.J. No. 4315 (S.C.J.), the plaintiff was awarded general damages of $85,000, following a motor vehicle accident in which she claimed to have suffered permanent and disabling chronic pain in her spine.^[7] The award was subsequently reduced to $63,750 because of a pre-existing condition.

[71] In Nusinowitz v. Ontario (Superintendent of Financial Services), [2005] O.J. No. 2069 (S.C.J.), an eighty-six year old plaintiff was awarded $55,000 in general damages following a motor vehicle accident in which he developed chronic pain syndrome.

[72] Based on these awards, the evidence regarding the impact of the appellant's injuries, and in light of the guidance I take from the jury's determination about the appellant's credibility, I would assess the appellant's damages at $80,000. This award is consistent with the jury's credibility findings that the fibromyalgia was caused by the leg injury and that the appellant's description of her condition was credible. The award I propose is slightly above the mid-range of awards for debilitating conditions of this nature for a previously active young adult whose employment has been compromised and whose overall life has been seriously affected. This amount must be reduced by seventy-five percent, in accordance with the jury's findings regarding apportionment of fault. This leaves the appellant with a $20,000 award for non-pecuniary damages.

COSTS

[73] In the event that the costs appeal has not been rendered moot by the increased award for non-pecuniary damages, I turn to consider the appellant's appeal of the costs awarded to the respondents for the period subsequent to their offer of settlement.

[74] I begin by noting that a court will not interfere with a costs award unless there is an error in principle or the award is plainly wrong. See Hamilton v. Open Window Bakery Ltd., 2004 SCC 9 (CanLII), [2004] 1 S.C.R. 303 at para. 27. In this case, I see no basis upon which to interfere with the trial judge's costs award with one exception regarding a disbursement for an expert report. In my view, the $5,500 disbursement for the PriceWaterhouseCooper report must be disallowed because the report was not supplied to the appellant as contemplated by item 26 of Tariff A.

[75] I cannot accept the appellant's other challenges to the award. The appellant argues that the award effectively allowed costs on a substantial indemnity scale contrary to the decision of this court in Boucher v. Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario (2004), 2004 CanLII 14579 (ON CA), 71 O.R. (3d) 291. While there was not a significant difference between the substantial and partial indemnity rates put forward by counsel in this case, the situation is not akin to Boucher, where counsel charged the same rate for both scales of costs.

[76] Nor do I see any basis upon which to interfere with the trial judge's careful conclusion on the other issues raised by the appellant. In particular, I see no error in the trial judge's decision that the trial was not unnecessarily prolonged by the defence or that the voir dire regarding the causal link between the leg injury and fibromyalgia was necessary. Clearly the question about the connection between the injury and the appellant's complaints was the primary point of controversy at trial and it was entirely within the discretion of the trial judge to include costs for the voir dire and the defence expert witnesses in his award to the respondents.

RESULT

[77] In the result, I would allow the appeal and vary paragraph 1 of the judgment to accord with an assessment of non-pecuniary damages of $80,000. I would reduce the costs of the trial awarded to the respondents by $5,500. I would otherwise dismiss the appeal. The appellant, who was successful on the significant issue of the charge on non-pecuniary damages would be entitled to costs of the appeal, which I would fix at $15,000, inclusive of disbursements and Goods and Services Tax.

“S.E. Lang J.A.”

“I agree R.G. Juriansz J.A.”

LASKIN J.A. (dissenting in part)

A. OVERVIEW

[78] I agree with the judgment of Lang J.A. except on one issue: the trial judge’s charge to the jury on apportionment of fault. The jury found the respondents (the “landlord”) negligent and the appellant Debbie Rizzi contributorily negligent. The jury was therefore required to apportion their respective degrees of fault. In my opinion, the trial judge’s instruction on apportionment amounted to a legal error because he invited the jury to apportion fault on the basis of causation instead of blameworthiness. That error was material and thus warrants appellate intervention.

[79] The jury apportioned fault for the accident seventy-five per cent to Debbie Rizzi and twenty-five per cent to the landlord. I would reverse those percentages and apportion fault twenty-five per cent to Debbie Rizzi and seventy-five per cent to the landlord.

B. BACKGROUND

[80] Lang J.A. has thoroughly reviewed the facts, so I need not discuss them in detail here. In brief, the landlord left seven to ten thin, large metal sheets and some construction material lying on the floor in the storage area of its apartment building. The top edge of the sheets was sharp and jagged and the sheets themselves blocked access to Ms. Rizzi’s locker. Ms. Rizzi tried to move the metal sheets in order to return some paint supplies to her locker. However, the sheets proved too heavy for her to control. She fell backward against the construction material, and as she tried to extricate herself, the sharp edge of the sheets scraped her right shin. She suffered severe pain, which progressed into a regional pain in her right lower leg, and eventually into disabling fibromyalgia.

[81] On the question of liability, only Ms. Rizzi testified. The defence called no evidence. The jury found both the landlord and Ms. Rizzi negligent and particularized the negligence of each as follows:

(a) The Landlord

- Failed to store the sheets where the tenants could not access them;
- Failed to give tenants warning that the locker room will be closed for a certain length of time; and
- Failed to restrict the access of the locker area.

(b) Ms. Rizzi

- She was negligent by trying to move the panels;
- She should have been aware of her own prior physical limitations (received twenty treatments for physio for wrist);
- She could have asked for help; and
- There was no urgency.

C. THE TRIAL JUDGE’S CHARGE ON APPORTIONMENT

[82] Where both the plaintiff and the defendant are found negligent, s. 3 of the Negligence Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. N.1 requires the court to apportion fault:

In any action for damages that is founded upon the fault or negligence of the defendant if fault or negligence is found on the part of the plaintiff that contributed to the damages, the court shall apportion the damages in proportion to the degree of fault or negligence found against the parties respectively.

[83] The trial judge’s charge to the jury on how to apportion fault according to the Act was brief:

Then you get down to Question Number Five and you say, if both the plaintiff and the defendants are at fault, how do you apportion the degree of fault between the parties? That can go from zero to 100 in each case, and you would decide. You would say that this incident would not have occurred but for, and you would apportion it. The total has to come to 100. So you would total it right in there and it would total 100 and you would attribute it.

Once you have done that, that is all for “who is responsible”. You forget about that now. [Emphasis added.]

[84] Ms. Rizzi submits that the trial judge’s “but for” instruction was wrong because it told the jury to apportion fault on the basis of degrees of causation instead of degrees of blameworthiness. I agree with her submission.

[85] Lang J.A. agrees that fault should be apportioned on the basis of comparative blameworthiness, that is the degree to which each party fell short of the standard of care required of that party. And, she acknowledges, “it would have been preferable if the trial judge had avoided ‘but for’ terminology”. But then she excuses this reference by concluding that the jury would still have correctly understood its task. In my view, in the context of this charge, the “but for” instruction was a reversible legal error because it likely misled the jury on the proper approach to apportionment.

[86] The principle of apportioning fault on the basis of comparative blameworthiness, not comparative causation, has been approved by this court, by most academics, and by other provincial appellate courts in Canada. See for example Martin v. Listowel Memorial Hospital (2000), 2000 CanLII 16947 (ON CA), 51 O.R. (3d) 384 (C.A.); Mortimer v. Cameron (1994), 1994 CanLII 10998 (ON CA), 17 O.R. (3d) 1 (C.A.); Lewis N. Klar, Tort Law, 3d ed. (Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2003) at 467; John G. Fleming, The Law of Torts, 9th ed. (North Ryde, NSW: LBC Information Services, 1998) at 306-309; Alberta Wheat Pool v. Northwest Pile Driving Ltd. (2000), 2000 BCCA 505 (CanLII), 80 B.C.L.R. (3d) 153 (C.A.); Cempel v. Harrison Hot Springs Hotel Ltd. (1997), 1997 CanLII 2374 (BC CA), 43 B.C.L.R. (3d) 219 (C.A.); Heller v. Martens (2002), 2002 ABCA 122 (CanLII), 4 Alta. L.R. (4th) 51 (C.A.); Clyke v. Blenkhorn (1958), 1958 CanLII 347 (NS CA), 13 D.L.R. (2d) 293 (N.S.C.A.).

[87] Our court's most recent affirmation of this principle is found in the judgment of my colleague Juriansz J.A. in Snushall v. Fulsang (2005), 78 O.R. (3d) 412. There, at para. 29, he quotes with approval the following paragraph from the reasons of Lambert J.A. writing for the majority of the British Columbia Court of Appeal in Cempel:

I think that such an approach to apportionment [a comparative causation approach] is wrong in law. The Negligence Act requires that the apportionment must be made on the basis of "the degree to which each person was at fault". It does not say that the apportionment should be on the basis of the degree to which each person's fault caused the damage. So we are not assessing degrees of causation, we are assessing degrees of fault. In this context, "fault" means blameworthiness.

[88] Thus, Lang J.A. and I agree on the principle. What divides us is whether the trial judge accurately instructed the jury on it. For ease of reference, I repeat his brief charge on apportionment:

Then you get down to Question Number Five and you say, if both the plaintiff and the defendants are at fault, how do you apportion the degree of fault between the parties? That can go from zero to 100 in each case, and you would decide. You would say that this incident would not have occurred but for, and you would apportion it. The total has to come to 100. So you would total it right in there and it would total 100 and you would attribute it.

Once you have done that, that is all for "who is responsible". You forget about that now. [Emphasis added.]

[89] In explaining to the jury how to apportion fault, the trial judge posed the question: "[H]ow do you apportion the degree of fault between the parties?" One sentence later, he answered it: "You would say that this incident would not have occurred but for, and you apportion it."

[90] In finding no reversible error in the charge, my colleague says that the "but for" reference would not invite the jurors to apportion on the basis of causation because they are not familiar with tort principles; that the trial judge properly asked them to apportion the degrees of "fault"; and that the jury's apportionment of seventy-five per cent of the blame to Ms. Rizzi does not indicate it was misled as the evidence shows Ms. Rizzi was “the author of her own misfortune”.

[91] I take a different view for there reasons. First, “but for” is the classic and familiar language of causation, recognized as such not just by lawyers but by lay people too.

[92] Second, although the trial judge used the word “fault”, he did not tell the jurors what the word meant. He did not tell them to assess comparative blameworthiness, or explain what that term means. Instead, on the trial judge’s instructions, the jury’s sole focus would have been on apportioning the degrees of causation. The trial judge buttressed that focus with the concluding sentence of his charge on apportionment: “Once you have done that, that is all for who is ‘responsible’.” Directing the jurors to allocate responsibility invited them to consider who “caused” the accident.

[93] And finally, instructing the jury to answer whether the incident would have occurred but for each party’s fault improperly invites the jury to allocate the major share of fault to the party who had the “last chance” to avoid the accident – in this case to Ms. Rizzi because her actions occurred later in time. However, we have abolished the “last clear chance” doctrine: see Treaty Group Inc. v. Drake International Inc. (2007), 2007 ONCA 450 (CanLII), 86 O.R. (3d) 366 at para. 28 (C.A.). We should not resurrect it under the rubric of apportioning fault. Fruman J.A. made this very point in Heller at para. 25:

The doctrine of last clear chance can appear in many guises, often couched in the language of causation, or confused with remoteness. But it always fails to recognize that “each component of liability is only a facet of the whole, and judgment must be on the entirety, not piecemeal on refractions from each facet”: Abbott v. Kasza (1976), 1976 ALTASCAD 80 (CanLII), 71 D.L.R. (3d) 581 at 589 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.). In this case, for example, Martens argues that Heller’s injuries were entirely caused by his failure to wear a seat belt, and therefore his damages should be reduced by 100%. This approach ignores Martens’ failure to stop at a stop sign and instead penalizes Heller, who, by wearing a seat belt, might have had the last chance to avoid injury. Courts should not resurrect the last clear chance doctrine, abolished by legislative choice, by masquerading it as an apportionment theory.

[94] Here, because of the trial judge’s instruction, I think there was a real risk the jury approached the apportionment of fault by asking who had the last chance to avoid the accident. How else can the jury’s allocating seventy-five per cent of the fault to Ms. Rizzi be explained when the landlord created the hazard in the first place, and was best positioned to warn its tenants of the danger or eliminate the danger altogether? Even suggesting, as my colleague does, that Ms. Rizzi “was the author of her own misfortune”, respectfully, is simply another way of saying that Ms. Rizzi caused her own injuries because she had the last chance to avoid them by waiting until the landlord removed the metal sheets before returning the paint supplies to her locker: see Cempel at paras. 18, 20.

[95] For these reasons, in my view, the trial judge’s charge on apportionment constitutes a legal error calling for this court’s intervention.

D. REMEDY

(a) Apportionment

[96] Largely for the reasons given by Lang J.A., this court should reapportion fault rather than ordering a new trial. The error is an error of law; no real issue of credibility arises; and the accident occurred over twelve years ago.

[97] As I said at the outset, I would reapportion fault by reversing the percentages awarded by the jury. In my view, fault should be apportioned seventy-five per cent to the landlord and twenty-five per cent to Ms. Rizzi. The landlord should bear the greater share of fault because, as I have said, it created the danger and then failed to take steps either to eliminate or at least warn its tenants of it. Indeed, though Ms. Rizzi was negligent, it was understandable that she would want to use her locker when she did. Accordingly, the landlord ought to have appreciated the immediacy of the danger it created.

(b) Amount

[98] The jury assessed Ms. Rizzi's damages (including prejudgment interest) at $945,979.65. After the jury's apportionment, Ms. Rizzi would have recovered $236,494.91. Lang J.A. would increase the jury's award for general non-pecuniary damages from $41,000 to $80,000. On her assessment and leaving the jury's apportionment intact, Ms. Rizzi would receive an additional $9,750 (plus prejudgment interest on that amount). Her total recovery would therefore be $246,244.91 (plus prejudgment interest on the additional amount).

[99] On my apportionment Ms. Rizzi would recover seventy-five per cent of the damages ordered by Lang J.A., which would amount to $738,734.73, plus an additional adjustment for prejudgment interest.

RELEASED: March 11, 2008

"JL"
J.A."

"John Laskin

[1] I use the words "led to" because the trial judge charged the jury on the "material contribution" causation test rather than the "but for" test. After the subsequent release of Resurface Corp v. Hanke, 2007 SCC 7 (CanLII), [2007 1

S.C.R. 333 (confirming the “but for” test and concluding that the “material contribution” test applies only in exceptional circumstances), the respondents moved to extend the time to cross-appeal in order to challenge the causation test used by the trial judge. In the end, the extension was refused. Accordingly, the proper test for causation is not an issue in this appeal.

[2] See also the other two cases in the trilogy: Thornton (Next friend of) v. Prince George School District No. 57, 1978 CanLII 12 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 267 and Arnold v. Teno (Next friend of), 1978 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287 at 333. In the latter case, Spence J. explained the policy logic of the cap, including that there is a reason “to fear a situation where none but the very wealthy could own or drive automobiles because none but the very wealthy could afford to pay the enormous insurance premiums which would be required by insurers to meet such exorbitant awards.”

[3] The following decisions are cited in support of this principle: Hughes v. Lord Advocate, [1963] A.C. 837 (H.L.), and Overseas Tankship (U.K.) Ltd. v. Miller Steamship Co. Pty., [1967] 1 A.C. 617 (P.C.) (Wagon Mound No. 2).

[4] Binder v. Mardo Construction Ltd. (1994), 1994 CanLII 3953 (NS CA), 136 N.S.R. (2d) 20 (C.A.); Alden v. Spooner (200), 2002 BCCA 592 (CanLII), 6 B.C.L.R. (4th) 308 (C.A.); Courdin v. Meyers (2005), 2005 BCCA 91 (CanLII), 37 B.C.L.R. (4th) 222 (C.A.); Dushynski v. Rumsey (2003), 2003 ABCA 164 (CanLII), 327 A.R. 373 (C.A.).

[5] Westervelt v. Frappier Estate, [1998] O.J. No. 4830 (Gen. Div.); Hana-Harik v. Waters, [2001] O.J. No. 2303 (S.C.J.); Jones v. Mazolla, [2004] O.J. No. 366 (S.C.J.).

[6] See also Gorman v. Faladreau, 2005 CanLII 18837 (ON CA), [2005] O.J. No. 2213 (C.A.)

[7] Some experts had diagnosed the plaintiff in that case with fibromyalgia; however, this diagnosis was largely not substantiated by the other trial evidence.

Tab 57

Nissen v. Durham Regional Police Services Board, 2017 ONCA 10 (CanLII)

Source:	Court of Appeal for Ontario
Date:	2017-01-09
File number:	C60205
Other citation:	134 OR (3d) 81
Citation:	Nissen v. Durham Regional Police Services Board, 2017 ONCA 10 (CanLII), < https://canlii.ca/t/gwspc >, retrieved on 2026-03-23

Nissen et al. v. Durham Regional Police Services Board et al. [Indexed as: Nissen v. Durham Regional Police Services Board]

Ontario Reports

Court of Appeal for Ontario,
Sharpe, Pepall and van Rensburg JJ.A.
January 9, 2017

134 O.R. (3d) 81 | 2017 ONCA 10

Case Summary

Police — Liability — Plaintiff reporting criminal activity by neighbours' son to police — Police officer promising plaintiff confidentiality — Officer not telling plaintiff that her police interview was being videotaped — Neighbours' sons arrested — Plaintiff's identity and videotaped interview included in Crown disclosure — Neighbours harassing plaintiff to extent that she was diagnosed as having post-traumatic stress disorder — Trial judge not erring in finding that police were liable to plaintiff for breach of confidence — Plaintiff awarded general damages in amount of $345,000 — Damage award not excessive.

The plaintiff informed the police that her neighbours' teenaged son had broken into another neighbour's house and stolen guns. She claimed that she was promised that her report and her identity would be kept confidential. The police officer who took her report did not tell her that her interview was being videotaped. Her neighbours' two sons were arrested. The plaintiff's identity and her videotaped interview were included in the Crown disclosure provided to defence counsel. As a result, the plaintiff was harassed and threatened by her neighbours. She and her family were so distressed that they sold their home and moved to another community, and the plaintiff was diagnosed as having post-traumatic stress disorder. She sued the police for damages. The trial judge found as a fact that the plaintiff was given a promise of confidentiality and anonymity and that the police were liable in damages for breaching that promise. He awarded the plaintiff general damages for emotional and psychological injury. He found that the failure of the police to act after they learned of the neighbours' harassing behaviour was an aggravating factor. He fixed the general damages at $345,000. He also awarded Family Law Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F.3 damages to the plaintiff's husband in the amount of $65,000 and to her children in the amount of $25,000 each. The defendants appealed.

Held, the appeal should be dismissed.

The trial judge's finding that the plaintiff was promised confidentiality was supported by the evidence and was entitled to deference.

This case should be decided as a civil claim for damages for breach of confidence. The plaintiff was entitled to recover on the basis that the police officer made her a promise of confidentiality and anonymity in exchange for the information she provided, that the promise was breached, and that she suffered damages as a result. She was not required to establish that the information she provided was not readily available from other sources. Nor was it relevant that the police did not follow their own directive for confidential informants.

While the damages awarded by the trial judge were very generous, his reasons did not reveal any error of law or principle that would justify appellate intervention. It was open to the trial judge to find that the failure of the police to take any meaningful steps to protect the plaintiff and her family from the harm they suffered as a result of the wrongful disclosure of her identity aggravated her damages. [page82]

Cases referred to

Bisaillon v. Keable, 1983 CanLII 26 (SCC), [1983] 2 S.C.R. 60, [1983] S.C.J. No. 65, 2 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 51 N.R. 81, 4 Admin. L.R. 205, 7 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 37 C.R. (3d) 289, 10 W.C.B. 359; Cinar Corp. v. Robinson, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 1168, [2013] S.C.J. No. 73, 2013 SCC 73, 452 N.R. 123, 2014EXP-62, 118 C.P.R. (4th) 1, J.E. 2014-32, 366 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 8 C.C.L.T. (4th) 1, EYB 2013-230908, 235 A.C.W.S. (3d) 495; R. v. Basi, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 389, [2009] S.C.J. No. 52, 2009 SCC 52; R. v. Scott, 1990 CanLII 27 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 979, [1990] S.C.J. No. 132, 116 N.R. 361, J.E. 91-48, 43 O.A.C. 277, 61 C.C.C. (3d) 300, 2 C.R. (4th) 153, 1 C.R.R. (2d) 82, 11 W.C.B. (2d) 358; W. (T.) v. Seo, 2005 CanLII 21356 (ON CA), [2005] O.J. No. 2467, 256 D.L.R. (4th) 1, 199 O.A.C. 172, 140 A.C.W.S. (3d) 400 (C.A.); Young v. Bella, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 108, [2006] S.C.J. No. 2, 2006 SCC 3, 261 D.L.R. (4th) 516, 343 N.R. 360, J.E. 2006-290, 254 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 26, [2006] R.R.A. 1, 37 C.C.L.T. (3d) 161, 21 C.P.C. (6th) 1, EYB 2006-100404, 145 A.C.W.S. (3d) 343

Statutes referred to

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

Family Law Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F.3 [as am.]

Authorities referred to

Hubbard, Robert W., Susan Magotiaux and Suzanne M. Duncan, The Law of Privilege in Canada, looseleaf (Aurora, Ont.: Canada Law Book Inc., 2006)

APPEAL from the judgment of Gray J., [2015] O.J. No. 924, 2015 ONSC 1268 \(S.C.J.\) for the plaintiffs.

Roger Horst, Rafal Szymanski and Lisa Bruni, for appellants.

Margaret A. Hoy, for respondents.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

[1] SHARPE J.A.: — The central issue on this appeal is: what are the required elements for a claim for damages against the police for breach of a promise of confidentiality made to a citizen reporting criminal wrongdoing?

[2] Margaret Stack, respondent in this appeal, was awarded damages against the appellants, the Durham Regional Police Services Board and certain named officers (the "police"), for what was pleaded as breach of informer privilege. Ms. Stack went to the police to tell them that she had learned that P.E., the teenaged son of her neighbours, had broken into another neighbour's house and stolen some guns. Ms. Stack asserted that she had asked the police and been promised by them that her identity and the fact that she had reported the theft of the guns would be treated as confidential. Unbeknownst to Ms. Stack, the police videotaped her interview. P.E. and his brother S.E. were charged. A recording of Ms. Stack's interview was included in the disclosure provided to P.E. and S.E. in the criminal proceedings. Ms. Stack was subsequently subjected to threatening and harassing conduct by the parents of P.E. and S.E. Ms. Stack and her [page83]family were so distressed by this conduct that they sold their home and moved to another community. As a result of these events, Ms. Stack has felt hopeless, depressed, anxious and fearful. She has been diagnosed as having post-traumatic stress disorder.

[3] The police denied that Ms. Stack was promised confidentiality or that she enjoyed the status of a confidential informant.

[4] Following a ten-day trial, the trial judge gave detailed reasons in which he found that the police had promised Ms. Stack confidentiality and that Ms. Stack, her husband and her children were entitled to substantial damages.

[5] Before this court, the police argue that the trial judge erred in finding that they promised Ms. Stack confidentiality, that the elements necessary for a claim of damages for breach of informer privilege were not made out, and that the damages awarded were excessive.

[6] For the following reasons, I would dismiss the appeal.

Facts

[7] Ms. Stack lived with her husband, Chad Nissen, and their two children on a quiet street in Whitby. They had invested considerable time and money on improving their home, and they enjoyed good relationships with their neighbours.

[8] Ms. Stack sometimes asked P.E., the teenaged son of one of her neighbours, to babysit her children. One day, when Ms. Stack asked the child of another neighbour to babysit, P.E. became angry. Ms. Stack was disturbed by what she regarded as his irrational and frightening behaviour. Ms. Stack subsequently learned from another neighbour that P.E. had broken into the neighbour's home, stolen guns, and with his brother, S.E., taken the guns to school and threatened students.

[9] Ms. Stack decided that she should inform the police but she did not wish to have her name associated with any investigation. A friend offered to call a police officer he knew without identifying Ms. Stack. She subsequently received a call from Officer Liepsig of the Durham Regional Police, who wanted to talk to her immediately. She was upset that her friend had disclosed her name, but the friend explained that Officer Liepsig had insisted. She called Officer Liepsig, who offered to come to her home. She told him no, that she felt unsafe as the people they were going to talk about lived across the street. In her evidence, Ms. Stack insisted that she emphasized to Officer Liepsig that she did not wish to be identified, that she was frightened of P.E. and S.E., and that the officer promised her over the telephone that her identity would not be disclosed. She said that [page84]Officer Liepsig told her that if she came to the police station to discuss the matter he would keep her identity secret, and that she would remain totally anonymous.

[10] Ms. Stack testified that she was given further assurances of confidentiality when she attended at the station. Officer Liepsig asked her if he could take some notes but did not disclose to her that the interview was being recorded on videotape. At the end of the interview, Ms. Stack asked Officer Liepsig not to let anyone know about their conversation. The videotape confirms that he replied: "[T]his is between you and I. Of course, I have to keep records of this for ourselves. . . That stuff does not get disclosed. It is not made available to the public. You don't have to worry about that." Ms. Stack testified that before leaving the station she again asked to be reassured that no one would know she had made her report, and that again Officer Liepsig told her that it was impossible, even if a request was made under freedom of information legislation. Ms. Stack acknowledged in cross-examination that Officer Liepsig never used the term "confidential informer".

[11] Officer Liepsig testified that he did not recall Ms. Stack expressing any concerns about confidentiality or anonymity, and denied that he gave her any assurances. He stated that if there had been any assurances of confidentiality, he would not have met Ms. Stack at the police station and he would not have recorded her statement. Officer Liepsig explained the Durham Regional Police Criminal Informant and Agent Management Directive (the "directive"), and testified that he had not followed the steps required to make Ms. Stack a confidential informant within the meaning of the directive. Officer Liepsig testified that he considered Ms. Stack to be a regular witness, not a confidential informer.

[12] Within a few days of Ms. Stack's police interview, P.E. and S.E. were arrested. Soon after, Officer Liepsig was reassigned, and the task of preparing the Crown brief was assigned to other officers who were unaware that Ms. Stack had been given any assurance of confidentiality. Ms. Stack later learned that her identity and her videotaped interview were included in the Crown's disclosure to P.E. and S.E.'s defence counsel. This disclosure provoked an angry reaction from P.E. and S.E.'s parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. Ms. Stack testified that Mr. E. drove his truck at her causing her to leap from the sidewalk onto the grass behind a tree to avoid being hit by the truck. He then sped away, spinning his wheels so that gravel from the road was propelled towards her. [page85]

[13] Ms. Stack immediately called Officer Liepsig to report the incident and express her concern that a mistake had been made and her identity disclosed, but he did not return her call. Mr. Nissen spoke to Mr. E., who expressed his anger and intention to pay Ms. Stack back for having gone to the police. Mr. Nissen also complained to the police about Mr. E.'s conduct. A police officer, who had not himself spoken with Mr. Nissen, responded by calling Mr. E. to caution him not to contact or tamper with witnesses, and to not say anything that might be interpreted as a threat. The police did not report back to Mr. Nissen.

[14] Ms. Stack and Mr. Nissen testified that following the truck incident, Mr. and Mrs. E. subjected them to ongoing harassment. They would come to their living room window, driveway or to the front step of their house and glare over at the Stack-Nissen home in a threatening manner. There were also other incidents. P.E. arranged to have a young girl run through Ms. Stack's backyard, screaming and waving her arms. On other occasions, Mr. E. clucked and behaved like a chicken towards Mr. Nissen and Ms. Stack. The harassment became unbearable and, ultimately, Ms. Stack and Mr. Nissen decided to sell their home and move.

[15] Ms. Stack complained of feeling hopeless and depressed following these events, and she has been diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder. Evidence of the significant change in her behaviour and enjoyment of life was provided by her family, friends and Dr. Silver, a psychiatrist who had examined her for the purposes of this case.

Trial Judgment

[16] The trial judge found as a fact that Officer Liepsig had promised Ms. Stack anonymity and confidentiality. He noted that Officer Liepsig denied giving any such assurances, but observed that Officer Liepsig's notes about his interaction with Ms. Stack were sparse. The trial judge stated, at para. 289:

I think it is highly unlikely that the discussion about anonymity at the end of the interview was the first time the subject was raised. In context, I think it is unlikely that the issue would have been raised for the first time in such a casual way at the end of the interview. It is more likely, in my view, that that discussion was the culmination of an earlier discussion about anonymity. Otherwise, there was no context and the discussion, coming out of the blue, would be unusual. If anonymity was promised before Ms. Stack came to the police station, it is difficult to think of any reason for doing it except as a means to persuade her to come to the station and tell what she knew.

[17] The trial judge noted that Ms. Stack's concern for confidentiality was confirmed by her friend who had made the initial [page86]call to Officer Liepsig and by her complaint to Officer Liepsig immediately upon learning that her identity had been disclosed. He noted that Officer Liepsig did not deny receiving that message, nor having failed to respond. Mr. Nissen also corroborated Ms. Stack's concern about confidentiality. The police did not refute his evidence that he went to the station to complain about the disclosure, and that an officer had apologized to him and said that the disclosure was unacceptable.

[18] The trial judge noted that the fact that the police did not follow their policy regarding confidential informants suggested that Officer Liepsig had not intended to grant Ms. Stack informer status. However, Officer Liepsig had failed to make that clear to Ms. Stack. The trial judge concluded, at para. 298:

On a balance of probabilities, I hold that Officer Liepsig promised Ms. Stack that her identity would be preserved, and not disclosed, if she came to the police station and provided information about suspected criminal activity. He did not qualify that promise in any way. Thus, both expressly and by implication Ms. Stack became entitled to informer privilege, that is, she was entitled to have her anonymity preserved with respect to her involvement in conveying information to the police.

[19] The trial judge found that the police owed a common law duty not to disclose the identity of an informer, and that even if the duty was not absolute, reasonable care had not been taken in the circumstances of this case.

[20] He reviewed the law relating to informer privilege in detail and concluded, at para. 280:

[I]nformer privilege arises if information is provided to the police in exchange for a promise of confidentiality. Mere expectation of confidentiality is not enough. There must be a promise, either express or implied, that confidentiality will be maintained. Where the privilege properly arises, anonymity must be observed absolutely, save only where innocence is at stake. The purpose of the privilege is two-fold: to encourage citizens to report suspected criminal activity; and to protect informers from retribution. Formality is not required. All that is required is a promise of confidentiality in exchange for information. While policies and procedures exist with respect to informer privilege, they do not themselves create it.

[21] The trial judge rejected the claim for damages arising from the sale of the Whitby home and purchase of the new home, as no expert evidence was called as to loss of value. He also rejected a claim for Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedom ("Charter") damages, and the claims Ms. Stack and Mr. Nissen had asserted for lost income or lost opportunity.

[22] The trial judge did, however, award Ms. Stack general damages for emotional and psychological injury. That claim was supported by her own evidence, that of her family and friends, and that of Dr. Silver, who had diagnosed her with [page87]post-traumatic stress disorder, an opinion that was not contradicted by the expert retained by the police. The trial judge found that the psychological injury Ms. Stack had suffered rose above the level of ordinary upset or anxiety, and was therefore compensable at law. The trial judge found that the failure of the police to act after they learned of Mr. E.'s harassing behaviour, other than the one brief telephone conversation, was an aggravating factor. He rejected the claim for punitive damages and fixed the general damages in the amount of $345,000. The trial judge also awarded Family Law Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F.3 damages for loss of guidance, care and companionship, in the amount of $65,000 to Mr. Nissen and $25,000 to each child.

Issues

[23] The appellants raise the following issues on appeal:

- (1) Did the trial judge err in finding that Ms. Stack was promised confidentiality?
- (2) Did the trial judge err in finding that Ms. Stack established the necessary elements for a claim for damages?
- (3) Were the damages awarded excessive?

Analysis

1. Did the trial judge err in finding that the Ms. Stack was promised confidentiality?

[24] The police argue that the trial judge made a palpable and overriding error in finding that Ms. Stack was promised confidentiality. They argue that it would make no sense for Officer Liepsig to ask Ms. Stack to come to the police station for an interview if she were being treated as a confidential informant.

[25] We did not call upon counsel for the respondent to address this submission in oral argument, as it is without merit. The trial judge thoroughly reviewed the evidence of Ms. Stack, Officer Liepsig and other witnesses and clearly explained the basis for his finding. He considered and rejected the very point raised by the police on this appeal, namely, that Officer Liepsig would not have conducted the interview at the police station if he considered Ms. Stack to be a confidential informant. The trial judge's finding that Officer Liepsig did promise Ms. Stack confidentiality and anonymity was based upon his assessment of her credibility and reliability as a witness. His finding was supported by the conversation between Ms. Stack and Officer Liepsig at the conclusion of the videotaped statement and by [page88]other evidence, including that given by other police officers. It attracts deference in this court, and I see no basis upon which we could interfere.

2. Did the trial judge err in finding that Ms. Stack established the necessary elements for a claim for damages?

[26] We were not referred to any case in which damages for breach of informer privilege had been awarded. However, in Bisaillon v. Keable, 1983 CanLII 26 \(SCC\), [1983] 2 S.C.R. 60, [1983] S.C.J. No. 65, Beetz J. stated, at p. 96 S.C.R., that although there was no precedent on the point, he would have no difficulty in finding that an action for damages for such a breach would lie. On this appeal, the police do not dispute that proposition.

[27] However, the police do argue that the trial judge erred by finding that a plaintiff only need prove that the police made a promise of confidentiality in exchange for information in order to establish the privilege. They submit that the elements for a civil claim for damages for breach of a promise of confidentiality by the police will not lie without proof of two other elements, namely, (1) that the information provided must be difficult or impossible to obtain; and (2) that the informer must be likely to suffer harm or danger if his or her identity is disclosed. They also submit that the claim cannot be sustained as the directive relating to confidential informers was not followed.

[28] In support of the first proposition, the police rely on the following passage from the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Basi, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 389, [2009] S.C.J. No. 52, 2009 SCC 52, at para. 36:

The privilege arises where a police officer, in the course of an investigation, guarantees protection and confidentiality to a prospective informer in exchange for useful information that would otherwise be difficult or impossible to obtain. In appropriate circumstances, a bargain of this sort has long been accepted as an indispensable tool in the detection, prevention and prosecution of crime.

[29] In support of the second proposition, they rely on R. v. Scott, 1990 CanLII 27 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 979, [1990] S.C.J. No. 132, at para. 31, where Cory J. stated: "Whatever their motives, the position of informers is always precarious and their role is fraught with danger."

[30] The police submit that as the information Ms. Stack provided was readily available to the police from other sources, that as they had no reason to suspect that she would be in any danger should her identity be revealed and that as they did not follow policy and procedures for creating confidential informer [page89]privilege, Ms. Stack has failed to make out the necessary elements for her claim.

[31] I disagree with the police submission that the trial judge erred with respect to the necessary elements for this claim.

[32] In my view, this case can and should be decided as a civil claim for damages for breach of confidence. The fundamental point is that, on the findings of the trial judge, Officer Liepsig made a promise of confidentiality and anonymity to Ms. Stack in exchange for the information she provided. The trial judge found that the promise was breached and Ms. Stack suffered damages as a result. Those findings bring this case squarely within the long-recognized cause of action for breach of confidence, and Ms. Stack is accordingly entitled to recover on that basis.

[33] While other considerations may come into play in a criminal case where the prosecution is resisting disclosure of the identity of a confidential informer to an accused, this is a civil case between the police and an individual who was promised confidentiality. That promise gave rise to a common law and equitable right entitling Ms. Stack to have her identity kept confidential. Her right was not contingent upon other ways the police may have had to get the information she provided, or on what the police thought about the danger she faced.

[34] Difficulty in obtaining the information and fear of harm to the witness may well be the rationales underlying the doctrine of informer privilege in criminal law, but I am not persuaded that they are necessary elements to sustain the privilege, even in a criminal case. There is no suggestion to that effect in the lengthy discussion of the doctrine in Hubbard, Magotiaux and Duncan, The Law of Privilege in Canada, loose-leaf (Aurora, Ont.: Canada Law Book, 2006). For the purposes of this appeal, I need go no further than saying that there is no reason to qualify the right to sue for breach of confidence by adding additional elements necessary to establish a civil claim for damages. To do so would put the citizen interacting with the police in an impossible situation. Ms. Stack had no way of determining whether the police could obtain from another source the information she was offering. Nor did she have any way of gauging what the police considered to be the risk of harm she faced should her identity be disclosed. She explained her fear of harm to Officer Liepsig, and that fear ultimately proved to be well founded. She was entitled to rely on Officer Liepsig's promise of confidentiality in exchange for her co-operation in giving him the information she had.

[35] It is, of course, for the police to decide whether or not to make a promise of confidentiality. In making that decision, they [page90]will no doubt make an assessment of the value of the information the witness may have to offer, whether they can get the information through other means, and the danger the witness may face if his or her identity is revealed. If the police tell the witness that they will not reveal his or her identity or involvement in order to get information, they should keep their promise, or face the ordinary consequences of violating the assurance they have given. If the police decide that the witness does not deserve or warrant the requested assurance of confidentiality and anonymity, they should clearly say so and refuse to give the witness the requested assurance. That would allow the witness to decide whether to nonetheless give the information and accept the risk of disclosure. Simply put, a citizen in Ms. Stack's situation should be able to rely upon what the police tell her.

[36] Nor do I accept the submission that because the police did not follow their own directive for confidential informers, Ms. Stack's civil claim for damages is defeated. While I accept that Officer Liepsig may have thought that Ms. Stack was not a confidential informer within the meaning of the directive, I fail to see how that can affect her right to claim for breach of confidence. Her claim rests upon the promise of confidentiality that Officer Liepsig made, and the exchange of information that followed as a result. She had no way of determining whether she fit within the terms of the directive, and it would be obviously unfair to deny her claim on the basis of a directive that had never been explained or brought to her attention.

3. Were the damages awarded excessive?

[37] The police submit that the damages awarded by the trial judge were excessive. They submit that the trial judge made three errors: (1) he assessed Ms. Stack's damages with reference to awards made in cases that are not analogous; (2) he failed to consider the fact that Ms. Stack had already suffered psychological harm before her identity was disclosed; and (3) he erred in awarding aggravated damages.

Analogous cases

[38] The trial judge observed, at para. 368, that it was difficult to fix a reasonable amount for the damages Ms. Stack and her family had suffered. He found that the effect on Ms. Stack had been "severe", that her life had been "irretrievably altered" and he was satisfied by the evidence of Dr. Silver "that it is unlikely that she will ever be the same as she was before these incidents".

[39] In argument, the trial judge raised the issue of whether the "cap" on personal injury damages applied to damages for [page91] psychological injury. Ms. Stack's counsel cited two Supreme Court of Canada decisions in which damages for psychological injury were claimed: Cinar Corp. v. Robinson, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 1168, [2013] S.C.J. No. 73, 2013 SCC 73 and Young v. Bella, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 108, [2006] S.C.J. No. 2, 2006 SCC 3. In both those cases, the Supreme Court held that the "cap" did not apply and awarded damages for psychological injury of $400,000 in Cinar and $430,000 in Young. The trial judge stated that the damages in this case were not as severe as the damages in these two decisions, that something less would be appropriate, and awarded $345,000. As that amount was below the cap, the issue of whether the cap applies did not have to be decided.

[40] The police submit that the trial judge placed too much reliance on Cinar and Young, as the harm suffered by the plaintiffs in both Cinar and Young involved more than just psychological injury. Cinar involved a violation of copyright, and Young was a defamation case involving injury to reputation.

[41] I am not persuaded by this submission.

[42] First, the trial judge explicitly recognized that the harm suffered in this case was less than that suffered in Cinar and Young.

[43] Second, in Cinar, the damage award consisted of several components, including a compensatory award of over $600,000 for pecuniary loss and over $1.7 million in disgorgement of profits, both awards for the copyright infringement, and $500,000 in punitive damages. An additional $400,000 was awarded for psychological injury. The award for psychological injury was a discrete award in addition to the damages awarded for the breach of copyright. While the Supreme Court agreed that the damages for psychological injury were analogous to those claimed by the victim of defamation, it is clear that the award was not for loss of reputation. See para. 108: "The product of Robinson's artistic exertions was taken from him and the integrity of his personal creative process was violated, causing deep psychological suffering." I do not see why an award for psychological harm resulting from a copyright infringement could not shed some light on an award for a similar harm arising under a different cause of action.

[44] Third, while Young was pleaded as both a defamation and negligence action, the claim for defamation was struck and the action proceeded as one for negligence. The psychological injury complained of was not unlike that suffered by Ms. Stack. I do not agree that the fact that a similar harm was caused by a different wrongful act makes Young so different in quality that the [page92] trial judge erred in using it as a reference point when assessing damages in this case.

[45] The trial judge was faced with what he properly recognized to be a difficult task. On the evidence, he found that Ms. Stack had suffered a severe psychological injury that had radically affected her outlook and enjoyment of life. Her friends and her family testified that she was a different person since the injury, and she presented unchallenged expert evidence that she had suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder that was difficult to treat and likely to be permanent. While I view the damages awarded by the trial judge to be very generous, I am not persuaded that his reasons reveal any error of law or principle that would justify appellate intervention.

Pre-existing condition

[46] Dr. Silver testified that Ms. Stack's post-traumatic stress disorder was the product of a series of events, including being upset over P.E.'s anger concerning the babysitting assignment, the breakdown of her relationship with P.E., learning that P.E. and his brother had stolen guns and taken them to school to threaten fellow students, and finally the disclosure of her identity as the person who had gone to the police and the resulting threatening and harassing behaviour of Mr. and Mrs. E. The police submit that the trial judge failed to consider the evidence that Ms. Stack's post-traumatic stress disorder was the product of a series of events. They submit that this shows that Ms. Stack is a "crumbling skull" plaintiff, and that the general and Family Law Act damages should be reduced by 10 per cent to 20 per cent on account of the fact that she had already experienced some anxiety and distress before her identity was revealed, and before Mr. and Mrs. E. started their campaign of threats and harassment.

[47] I am not persuaded by this submission.

[48] In her closing submissions at trial, counsel for the police made brief reference to the fact that Ms. Stack was upset by earlier events, but did not advance the submission made before us that Ms. Stack should be treated as a "crumbling skull" plaintiff.

[49] In any event, at para. 255 of his reasons, the trial judge asked himself the following question:

In a case such as this, where psychological injuries are alleged, the question is, as a result of pre-existing conditions, was there a material risk that the plaintiff would have developed her current problems notwithstanding the defendants' conduct? [page93]

[50] At para. 341, he made the following finding in answer to that question:

Had Ms. Stack's identity not been disclosed, she and her family, in all likelihood, would still be living in their dream home on their quiet street in Whitby. Retribution at the hands of the [E.'s] would not have occurred. Ms. Stack would not have suffered post-traumatic stress disorder, the symptoms of which still plague her today. She and her family would not have sold their home and moved to a strange community. Her family would not have suffered along with her.

[51] In my view, it was open to the trial judge to conclude that the psychological harm Ms. Stack suffered could fairly be entirely attributed to the disclosure of her identity, which in turn led to the retributive conduct of Mr. and Mrs. E. The disclosure and the threats and harassment that followed were the key events that pushed Ms. Stack and her family to the point where they felt they had to move from the neighbourhood, and that caused her severe mental distress. The trial judge was entitled to award damages accordingly.

Aggravated damages

[52] The police submit that the trial judge erred in awarding aggravated damages without making a finding of "reprehensible or outrageous conduct".

[53] The trial judge rejected the claim for punitive damages. He found, at para. 374:

[T]his is not one of those exceptional cases that requires an award of punitive damages for malicious, oppressive and high-handed misconduct that offends the court's sense of decency . . . The conduct of the defendants does not remotely approach that standard.

(Citation omitted)

[54] He did, however, note that a damages award must take into account aggravating features, which he described, at para. 367:

First, as noted, the police did nothing whatsoever to preserve Ms. Stack's anonymity. Second, once they became aware of the harassing behaviour by [Mr. E.] they did almost nothing about it. Apart from one brief conversation with [Mr. E.], in which it is doubtful that the importance of the problem was impressed on [Mr. E.], the police did nothing. There was no evidence of any follow-up with [Mr. E.]. Indeed, somewhat inexplicably, no one even followed up with Mr. Nissen or Ms. Stack to advise them that [Mr. E.] had been spoken to.

[55] I am not persuaded by the police argument that this passage reveals an error of law. Aggravated damages aim not at punishing wrongful behaviour, but at compensating the injured plaintiff for the full extent of the plaintiff's loss. Very often, [page94] aggravation of the plaintiff's loss will be caused by outrageous or reprehensible conduct, as it is that quality of the defendant's conduct that causes additional distress or humiliation that calls for compensation not captured by a purely conventional award. I am not persuaded, however, that a trial judge can only take aggravating features into account where there has been outrageous or reprehensible conduct. I agree with the observation made by this court in W. (T.) v. Seo, 2005 CanLII 21356 (ON CA), [2005] O.J. No. 2467, 256 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (C.A.), at para. 70, that "post-incident conduct which aggravates the harm to the victim" may also be taken into account.

[56] I agree with the police that the first factor mentioned by the trial judge, failure to protect Ms. Stack's anonymity, was not aggravating. However, I agree with the respondents that it was open to the trial judge to find that the failure of the police to take any meaningful steps to protect Ms. Stack and her family from the harm they were suffering as a result of the wrongful disclosure of her identity did aggravate the damages she suffered. The police had promised Ms. Stack confidentiality in order to gain her co-operation. Their duty to her did not cease once they broke that promise. The promise they made as police officers included a duty to protect Ms. Stack from the consequences of wrongful disclosure.

[57] The police failed to carry out that duty. When Mr. Nissen complained to the police that Mr. E. had driven his truck at Ms. Stack and that Mr. and Mrs. E. were leering at them in a threatening manner, the response of the police was to have an officer who had not himself spoken with Ms. Stack or Mr. Nissen call Mr. E. to tell him that he should not communicate or interfere with witnesses. The officer charged with calling Mr. E. was not told about the truck incident or the threatening behaviour, and did not caution Mr. E. in that regard. Following this brief conversation, the police did not call Ms. Stack or her husband to reassure them that they had spoken to Mr. E. In my view, the trial judge did not err by taking this conduct into account when determining the damages to which Ms. Stack and her family were entitled.

Disposition

[58] For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal with costs to the respondents fixed in the amount agreed to by the parties, namely, $40,000, inclusive of disbursements and taxes.

Appeal dismissed.

[page95]

End of Document

TAB 58

Nissen v. Durham Regional Police, 2015 ONSC 1268 (CanLII)

Source: Superior Court of Justice
 Date: 2015-02-26
 File number: 2602/02
 Other citation: [2015] OJ No 924 (QL)
 Citation: Nissen v. Durham Regional Police, 2015 ONSC 1268 (CanLII), <<https://canlii.ca/t/ggh2b>>, retrieved on 2026-03-23

CITATION: Nissen v. Durham Regional Police, 2015 ONSC 1268
COURT FILE NO.: 2602/02
DATE: 2015-02-26

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

CHAD NISSEN, MARGARET STACK, both personally and as litigation guardians of CHRISTIAN NISSEN and MORGAN NISSEN

Plaintiffs

Margaret A. Hoy, for the Plaintiffs

– and –

DURHAM REGIONAL POLICE SERVICES BOARD, JAMES LIEPSIG, MARK PRICE, AL SIRIZZOTTI, SEAN FITZGERALD, JOHN DOE OR JANE DOE, BRENDA COWIE, ISABEL PARGANA, HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT OF ONTARIO

Defendants

Andra Maxwell-Baker and Nadia Marotta, for the Defendants Durham Regional Police Services Board, James Liepsig, Mark Price, Al Sirizzotti, and Sean Fitzgerald.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

GRAY J.

[1] In a criminal law context, “informer” privilege is almost absolute. What this means is that a person who provides information to police about actual or suspected criminal activity, in exchange for a promise of anonymity, is guaranteed that anonymity will be preserved. It is only where innocence is at stake that the privilege must give way. In any litigation, whether civil or criminal, the police, the Crown and the courts must protect the privilege. Even the right to full disclosure, which is part of the constitutional right to make full answer and defence, will not override the privilege.

[2] In this case, the court is confronted with the civil consequences of a breach of the privilege. Where the privilege is not observed, is the now-disclosed informer entitled to civil damages? That is the issue confronting the court in this case.

[3] The action was originally against the Crown and certain Crown attorneys as well as the Durham Regional Police Services Board and certain police officers. The action as against the Crown and the Crown attorneys was resolved before trial.

Background

[4] Margaret Stack, and her husband, Chad Nissen, together with their children, lived on a quiet street in Whitby. Life was good. Mr. Nissen had a good job. They lived in a small house, but for them it was more than satisfactory. Indeed, it was exactly what they wanted. They spent considerable sums of money making it their ideal home.

[5] The street on which they lived had amiable neighbours. They got along with all of them and, as is often the case, they became good friends with some of them.

[6] The street on which they lived was Warden Wilson Avenue in Whitby. They lived at number 220. Next door, at 222 Warden Wilson were the Eckers, John and Helen. They had become good friends.

[7] Across the road, at number 215 Warden Wilson, were the Whitneys, Byron and Cathy. They were not close friends, but were good neighbours.

[8] Next door to the Whitneys were the Ellisons, Jim and Aline. They had twin boys, Sean and Patrick. The Ellisons were not friends, but they were cordial neighbours.

[9] Ms. Stack is a professional engineer, but has not worked for many years. She left the workforce in 1996 when her mother died, and she began trying to have children. Once she had children, it was her intention to return to the workforce in 2010 or 2011. She has not done so.

[10] Mr. Nissen is also a professional engineer. He works for a company called Stonecore as a salesperson. He has been very successful and earns a good income.

[11] Both Ms. Stack and Mr. Nissen described their time living on Warden Wilson as one of immense satisfaction. They had a normal, everyday life. Ms. Stack would spend her days walking, going to the library, engaged in crafts, church activities, the local hockey league and volunteering at school.

[12] As noted earlier, they loved their house. They invested time and money on improvements, including a finished basement, and a terraced walkout. They estimate that they spent approximately $85,000 in doing so.

[13] When their own children were young, they would sometimes ask the Ellison boys to babysit. Once, in February, 2002, Ms. Stack asked Patrick to babysit but he was not interested. Accordingly, Ms. Stack asked another girl in the neighbourhood. For some reason, Patrick became angry.

[14] Ms. Stack asked Patrick's brother Sean why Patrick was angry. Sean recommended that Ms. Stack not discuss it with Patrick.

[15] Notwithstanding Sean's advice, Ms. Stack called Patrick and asked him to drop over. He did so.

[16] Ms. Stack testified that she found Patrick's behaviour startling and disturbing. When asked what was the matter, Patrick said "I've been lied to." Discussion did not change Patrick's approach. He was angry and could not be consoled. He seemed irrational and entrenched. Ms. Stack testified that Patrick gave her a cold stare, which was frightening.

[17] Ms. Stack thanked Patrick for coming over and escorted him out. She decided that Patrick could not babysit again.

[18] Ms. Stack testified that after this encounter with Patrick, she recalled a conversation that she had had with Cathy Whitney, during which Ms. Whitney asked her how babysitting was going with Patrick and Sean. Ms. Stack went across the road to talk to Ms. Whitney, and she asked Ms. Whitney about their earlier conversation. She told Ms. Whitney that she would not be using Patrick as a babysitter anymore.

[19] Ms. Stack testified that Ms. Whitney was upset, and stated "It's so much more than that – the police have to be called." Ms. Whitney was crying and speaking rapidly. Ms. Whitney said she was frightened. She was tearful and she was not composed. She said Patrick had broken into her home and stolen guns that were in her house, and took them to the school and threatened students.

[20] Ms. Stack testified that she urged Ms. Whitney to call the police. Ms. Whitney said she would call the police as soon as her husband got home.

[21] Ms. Stack testified that she returned to her own home and called her husband. She asked her husband to go to Ms. Whitney's home.

[22] Mr. Nissen went to Ms. Whitney's home. When he returned he said Ms. Whitney had relayed the same story to him.

[23] Ms. Stack testified that she called a friend, Jackie Rooks, and asked her if she knew anyone in the police force that she could trust. She said she did not want to be associated with any investigation. She told Ms. Rooks that she knew the people involved and that there were guns. She called her husband, who was by then on a business trip, and said she had spoken to Ms. Rooks.

[24] The next day, Ms. Stack noticed that there had been no police who had attended at the Whitneys' home. She said Ms. Rooks called her and said she did not have the name of a police contact.

[25] Ms. Stack testified that she then called another friend, Ken Rumak. She told him she was trying to find a police officer to whom some information could be conveyed, but she did not want to be involved or be identified. She said the matter was terrifying and her safety was at risk.

[26] Mr. Rumak told her that he had the name of a police officer. He said he would call the officer and would not identify Ms. Stack.

[27] Shortly after her discussion with Mr. Rumak, Ms. Stack was shocked to receive a message on her answering machine from an Officer Liepsig with the Durham Police. She realized that Mr. Rumak had disclosed her name, contrary to his promise not to do so. The message from Officer Liepsig was to the effect that he had to talk to her right away.

[28] Ms. Stack testified that she called Mr. Rumak who said he had called the officer and the officer had become "heavy" with him. Mr. Rumak he said he felt he had no option but to give the officer Ms. Stack's name and telephone number. Mr. Rumak told her that he had told the officer that he would not identify Ms. Stack, but the officer insisted.

[29] Ms. Stack testified that she called Officer Liepsig. He said he wanted to come to Ms. Stack's home to talk to her. Ms. Stack said no, he could not come. She told him that she was at risk. The people involved live across the street. Officer Liepsig said he would come in an unmarked car. Ms. Stack testified that she told him that would not be appropriate. She did not want to be involved. She testified that she told Officer Liepsig that he had all the information he needed, and that she could add nothing. He offered to meet in a coffee shop, to which Ms. Stack said no.

[30] Finally, Officer Liepsig said Ms. Stack should come to the police station. Ms. Stack testified that Officer Liepsig said that if she came to the police station and talked to him, he would keep her identity secret. He said he would protect her and she would be totally anonymous.

[31] Ms. Stack testified that she emphasised to Officer Liepsig that she could not be identified. She said she was vulnerable and that there were two kids with guns who lived across the street. She said Officer Liepsig made her an absolute promise that she would never be identified. Based on that promise, she agreed to go to the police station to talk to Officer Liepsig.

[32] Ms. Stack testified that she asked Mr. Rumak if he would take her to the police station. He agreed to do so.

[33] On February 8, 2002, Ms. Stack and Mr. Rumak arrived at the police station. Ms. Stack asked for Officer Liepsig. Ms. Stack testified that when he came out, she said to him "No one can ever know I've been here", to which Officer Liepsig said "Yes". They went into a small room.

[34] At the outset of the interview, Officer Liepsig asked if it was all right that he take some notes, to which Ms. Stack assented. In fact, the interview was recorded on videotape. Ms. Stack was not told that the interview would be videotaped, or asked if that would be acceptable. Apparently there are signs in the lobby of the police station that state that videotaping may occur within the police station. I will not go through the interview in detail. It is sufficient to say that Ms. Stack went through what she had been told by Ms. Whitney about Patrick Ellison and the guns.

[35] At the end of the interview, there was some discussion about confidentiality. I have viewed and listened to the videotape several times. What follows is my best reproduction of that discussion. I have put in brackets portions that are unclear.

Police Officer:	Alrighty. If I need anything else I will give you a call (inaudible).
Ms. Stack:	(try not to) or (don't) let anybody know please
Police Officer:	This is between you and I. Of course, I have to keep records of this for ourselves.
Ms. Stack:	No, I understand that but...
Police Officer:	That stuff does not get disclosed. It is not made available to the public. You don't have to worry about that.
Ms. Stack:	O.K.
Ms. Stack:	My only concern is that I have two little boys.
Police Officer:	That is everybody's concern.
Ms. Stack:	That is why I am here because I have two little boys. I really hope that somebody would make a responsible decision if my kids got into that kind of behaviour.

[36] Ms. Stack testified that after the interview, she and Officer Liepsig left the interview room. Before leaving the station, she stopped and again asked Officer Liepsig whether there was any way anyone could find out that she had done this. Ms. Stack testified that Officer Liepsig said it was impossible, even if a request was made under Freedom of Information legislation.

[37] Ms. Stack testified that she believed that her identity would never be released. She testified that Officer Liepsig never suggested that her identity would be revealed. She was afraid that the Ellison family might retaliate against her and could cause her harm.

[38] Ms. Stack testified that after the interview things seemed to be all right. She said a few days later, Ms. Whitney told her that Patrick and Sean had been arrested, and Ms. Whitney anticipated that she and her husband Byron would be charged.

[39] Ms. Stack testified that sometime later, she began to notice some changes in the behaviour of the Ellisons. She testified that when she was walking on the street, Aline Ellison would look the other way or glare at her. At some point, she thought Jim Ellison swore at her.

[40] Ms. Stack testified that on April 3, 2002, she was walking home and she saw Jim Ellison come out the side door of his house and get in his truck. He said something loud.

[41] Ms. Stack testified that she increased her walking speed. She heard Mr. Ellison rev the engine of his truck. She continued walking on the sidewalk.

[42] Ms. Stack testified that Mr. Ellison's truck came at her up the street, straight towards her. She ran. She leapt from the sidewalk onto the grass behind a tree. The truck came onto the sidewalk, and would have hit her if she had been on the sidewalk. She was terrified. She testified that Mr. Ellison reversed the truck, and backed onto the road. The truck turned south and the tires spun. She testified that she was hit by a number of stones that were thrown up by the tires.

[43] Ms. Stack testified that she felt weak. She ran to her house and collapsed on the landing. She was in shock. She told her husband "Jim tried to kill me." "They must know". She told her husband what had happened.

[44] Ms. Stack testified that she telephoned Officer Liepsig and left a message. She said something terrible had happened and she believed her identity had been released. She testified that the call was never returned.

[45] Ms. Stack testified that her husband called Jim Ellison. She could hear her husband's side of the conversation. Mr. Nissen recited the full contents of the conversation in his evidence, and I will not relate it in detail here. It is sufficient to say that Ms. Stack understood from the conversation that Mr. Ellison knew that Ms. Stack had gone to the police, and that as a result, Mr. Ellison's son had been arrested. Mr. Ellison said he would escalate the matter and would cause

Ms. Stack pain. Mr. Ellison said he had seen a videotape of the interview Ms. Stack had had with the police, because Mr. Ellison's lawyer had given it to him.

[46] Ms. Stack testified that after this exchange with Mr. Ellison, their lives changed dramatically. She testified that the Ellisons started to watch them constantly. The Ellisons would come to their living room window or onto the front step of their house or onto their driveway, and glare at them. She said the watching was relentless.

[47] Ms. Stack testified that the watching would occur every time she came to or went from her house. She said that they closed the blinds on their windows, and never opened them. She said they closed the gaps in the fence around their house. She testified that she could not eat or sleep properly and she felt she was being watched constantly. She was sick and terrified.

[48] Ms. Stack testified that her husband called the police about the harassment. The police did not speak to her, and nothing happened. In order to get a meeting with the police, her husband had to speak to the office of her local MPP. Finally, a meeting was set up for her husband to talk to the police.

[49] Ms. Stack testified that she was not aware of any steps the police took to protect her, and Officer Liepsig, with whom she had left a message, never got back to her.

[50] Ms. Stack testified that the harassment became unbearable, to the point that they did not want to go in and out of the house through the front door. She said they made an arrangement with the neighbour to the rear that they could use their backyard and go through their property.

[51] She testified that if she saw Jim Ellison outside his home, he would make chicken sounds, clucking and flapping his arms.

[52] In the middle of April, 2002, they decided they could no longer live in their home. They listed their property for $240,000, and accepted an offer for $235,000. The deal closed in August, 2002.

[53] They looked for a new home, and found one in Seagrave, Ontario, and paid $227,000. They moved in in July, 2002.

[54] Ms. Stack testified the new home in Seagrave was a "fixer-upper". She does not like the home, even though it is somewhat larger than the home they sold in Whitby.

[55] Ms. Stack testified that since these events she feels hopeless, and depressed. She saw Dr. Silver, a psychiatrist, who diagnosed her as having post-traumatic stress disorder.

[56] Ms. Stack testified that there are "triggers" that increase her symptoms of terror and cause her to recall the events. The revving of a motor vehicle is one. If she sees a teenager with a hoodie, it causes nightmares. She is paralysed with fear. She has extreme anxiety. She wakes up terrified, at least weekly. If she hears a gun fired on television, it acts as a trigger.

[57] Ms. Stack testified that she tried counselling in 2005. She has taken courses to increase her skills. She had done volunteer work. She became a school trustee, as a replacement for a trustee who did not finish out his or her term. She was not re-elected.

[58] She testified that there was one committee on which she sat as a school trustee that particularly affected her. It is a committee that deals with vulnerable students. Students appear before the committee and talk about why they are at risk. She heard about violence and abuse, which acted as a trigger. She took days to recover after committee meetings.

[59] Ms. Stack testified that it had been her intention to return to work in 2010 or 2011 as a professional engineer. She said that at this point, she hopes she can still do so but that it would be difficult.

[60] She testified that when they sold their home, they lost the benefit of all of the upgrades they had done to the house. They also had to spend a considerable amount on the new home to bring it up to some level of comfort.

[61] On cross-examination, Ms. Stack acknowledged that they had not retained an expert to provide an opinion as to the value of their Whitby home with or without the improvements, or the value of their new Seagrave home. She confirmed that the last time she worked was in 1996, and that she has not applied for any positions other than the position as a school trustee. When she sought re-election as a trustee, she had a website and a Twitter account. As a trustee she had contact with ratepayers and communicated with them.

[62] Ms. Stack acknowledged, on cross-examination, that she had not produced any records from her family physician or records as to her counselling. She agreed that she had never been provided with anti-depressants, nor had she sought psychiatric treatment.

[63] Ms. Stack acknowledged that she did not call Crimestoppers or leave an anonymous tip.

[64] She acknowledged that Officer Liepsig had never used the term “confidential informer” or “confidential informant”. He never said that Ms. Stack had a “handler”.

[65] Chad Nissen testified.

[66] Mr. Nissen testified that before these events, his wife was happy, outgoing, confident and well-liked. This changed dramatically after these events.

[67] Mr. Nissen has been employed by Stonecore since 1990. He is still employed there. He is what is called a “Territory Manager”. For three years, he was a District Manager, but since these events he has lost that position. As District Manager he had an expense allowance of $400 per month, and he earned a small percentage of the sales of one person who reported to him.

[68] Before these events, his income had been declining, from $191,000 in 1998, to $130,000 in 2002. He earns straight commission.

[69] Mr. Nissen testified that before these events, life had been very satisfactory. He and his wife were involved in the church, and they had a great marriage.

[70] Mr. Nissen testified as to the discussion with Patrick about babysitting. He said the next day, his wife told him about the conversation she had had with Ms. Whitney, and said that he needed to talk to her. As a result, he went across the road and talked to Ms. Whitney.

[71] Ms. Whitney was very upset. She said she thought Patrick had taken guns from her home, and took them to school to scare other children.

[72] Mr. Nissen testified that he told Ms. Whitney that she had to call the police. She said she was scared to do so, because it might get Byron in trouble. She said there might be trouble with Patrick and Sean, and their parents don't react well. Notwithstanding, she said she would call the police. She said she had gone to a creek and found one of the guns.

[73] Mr. Nissen testified that he went home and told his wife about the conversation. He said he was sure Ms. Whitney would call the police.

[74] Mr. Nissen testified that he noticed a change in the behaviour of the Ellisons. On April 3rd, Ms. Stack came home in hysterics. She was crying and beside herself. She said Mr. Ellison had driven a truck at her and she jumped behind a tree. She figured that somehow the police had let her identity slip. He said his wife had called the officer and left a message but received no response.

[75] Mr. Nissen testified that he called Mr. Ellison and had a conversation with him. The conversation was very upsetting. He wrote it down immediately. Rather than paraphrase, I will simply reproduce his written account of the conversation:

C – Jim, What's going on?

J – You tell me what's going on?

C – you swore at my wife this morning

J – no I did not, I would not stoop to her level

C – you know what you said

J – what did I say

C – you called her a f'n bitch

J – I did not, I called her Judis, that's her new nick name

C – what's going on

J – your wife took certain information and went to certain people with it

C – what are talking about

J – I have a signed deposition and it's on video tape

C – that's not true and I don't believe it
 J – I think your name is mentioned in here some place
 J – well you better talk to your wife, you mean to tell me you don't know what's going on J – I'll be real short with you
 J – my son has five charges against him, Cathy and Byron have numerous charges against them, people I talked to have said my son is guaranteed some jail time for one of them
 j – I'm really mad
 J – I'm going to watch you and your family under a microscope and when you screw up I will return the courtesey.
 J – I will pay her back ten fold
 C – Jim watch what you say
 J – Cathy and Byron don't know yet, and he's nuts, you picked the wrong people to piss off.
 J – I'm going to do certain things until it's time to escalate it.
 J – you'd better talk to your wife

[76] Mr. Nissen decided that he would go to the police. He had difficulty arranging a meeting. Ultimately, he called the office of James Flaherty, who was their MPP at the time. Mr. Flaherty's office arranged a meeting with the police. Mr. Nissen testified he went to the station and met with an officer, Mr. Sirizzotti. He took the note of his conversation with Mr. Ellison and showed it to the officer. He told him the whole story.

[77] Mr. Nissen testified that he was taken into another room and spoke to Detective Price. He went through the same story. He said his wife had been assured that her identity would be preserved. He wanted to know if a videotape of the interview had been given to Mr. Ellison. He also wanted to know what the police were going to do about it.

[78] Mr. Nissen testified that the officers said they would talk to Mr. Ellison. They would check into the making of a videotape and the reported release of it.

[79] Mr. Nissen testified that Officer Price called the next day. Officer Price told him that there had been a videotape of the interview and that her name was in a report. Officer Price apologized and said it was unacceptable. He said he would speak to Mr. Ellison. Mr. Nissen did not hear from the police again. Specifically he never heard from anyone about any protection from Mr. Ellison or that the police did anything.

[80] Mr. Nissen testified that the Ellisons watched their every move. Mr. Ellison would make noises like a chicken clucking when he saw them.

[81] Mr. Nissen testified that they had to board up their fence, close the shutters in the kitchen, and close the curtains in the living room. They arranged to go through the backyard of their neighbour in the rear. He said they did not feel safe.

[82] Mr. Nissen testified that they decided they had to move. They sold their house quietly. The only people who knew were John and Helen Ecker. They rented a B&B outside Port Perry while they waited to move into their new home, which they bought in Seagrave. That house needed a lot of work. His commute to and from work is now much longer.

[83] Mr. Nissen testified that his wife is not the same person as she was. She is scared all the time. She is not happy. She is depressed. She is not outgoing or confident.

[84] Mr. Nissen testified that his wife's situation affects their children. They do not have their mother's full attention, or her drive.

[85] Mr. Nissen testified that his wife's sleep is affected. It is hard for her to fall asleep, and when she does she does not sleep soundly. Sometimes she panics if he comes into the room. Socially, she does not want to go anywhere in Whitby. She does not want to meet new people, including her neighbours.

[86] There are triggers that set off a reaction for Ms. Stack. They include loud noises, a ticking motor or the backfire of a car.

[87] Mr. Nissen testified that his own life has been affected. There is a great strain on him. He is afraid for the safety of his family. He is depressed. There has been the loss of his home and his neighbourhood. There is stress in their relationship.

[88] On cross-examination, Mr. Nissen acknowledged that he could not say how much time he has lost from work as a result of the events, or that he has lost any income. At most, he has lost $400 per month as an expense allowance, and an undefined amount as a result of losing the override from the sales of another employee.

[89] Ken Rumak testified. He said he was contacted by Ms. Stack on or about February 8, 2002. She asked him if he knew anybody on the law enforcement side. She said some neighbour's kids had some guns and they were taking them to school. He told her he knew someone on the police force.

[90] Mr. Rumak testified that Ms. Stack said "Look, I don't wanna get my name out; I don't wanna get involved in, in that, but if you can find out and get some advice then, you know, that would be great."

[91] Mr. Rumak testified that he called Officer Liepsig, who was someone on the force that he had some dealings with. He told the officer that a friend of his had come across a situation where there were two kids that had guns and they were going to school with the guns. He told the officer that this person had said "Don't tell anybody my name. I don't want to get involved and have my name going around."

[92] Mr. Rumak testified that Officer Liepsig said he had to talk to Mr. Rumak's friend. He said "Well, she doesn't want to be known. She doesn't, you know, want her name to get around." The officer said when you're dealing with guns, this is a serious matter, and he said Mr. Rumak had to tell him her name. Mr. Rumak felt that he was betraying Ms. Stack but felt he had no choice and so he gave the officer her name.

[93] Mr. Rumak called Ms. Stack and told her about the conversation. Ms. Stack was upset that Mr. Rumak had given out her name but she understood that he was in a situation where he had no choice.

[94] Mr. Rumak testified that Ms. Stack asked him to drive her to the police station, which he did. Mr. Rumak confirmed that he was not privy to any conversations between Officer Liepsig and Ms. Stack.

[95] John Ecker testified. He used to live next door to the plaintiffs, at 222 Warden Wilson Avenue. He testified that they became good friends, and still are. He testified that he knew the Ellisons, but not well.

[96] Mr. Ecker testified that Ms. Stack's personality, before these events, was engaging and friendly. She was involved in her church. She was trusting, helpful, happy, and outgoing. After the incidents in question, Mr. Ecker noticed a difference in the behaviour of the Ellisons. He noticed an unusual, constant presence of the Ellisons on the street. He testified that they would stand in front of their home and look in the direction of the plaintiffs' home. He said it was overly frequent and not friendly. He said they were making a point and wanted to be seen. He did not know to what it should be attributed. He testified that the activity included standing and staring, at the front step of their home, or they would walk out to the end of their driveway, fold their arms and stare.

[97] Mr. Ecker testified that after the plaintiffs moved away, he and his wife lied to their children about where the plaintiffs had moved. He said this had to be kept secret. The plaintiffs harboured a fear that the Ellisons would seek reprisals against them.

[98] Mr. Ecker testified that Ms. Stack was much different after these events. It was noticeable. She was under stress, she was guarded, and she was not happy. She was less inclined to take things at face value.

[99] Mr. Ecker testified that after the plaintiffs moved out of the neighbourhood, there was a loss. Before these incidents, there was no suggestion that the plaintiffs would move out of the neighbourhood.

[100] On cross-examination, Mr. Ecker confirmed that he did not report the staring by the Ellisons to the police. He also testified that the police did not contact him or his wife for a statement. He reiterated that the long term effect on Ms. Stack has been marked. She is not happy. She does not trust people. This has left a strong impression on her character.

[101] Helen Ecker testified. Because of her work requirements, Ms. Ecker was not living at home when the events involving Mr. Ellison occurred. Later, after she had moved home, she learned that the plaintiffs would be moving. She said she was devastated. It was only many months later that she learned where they had moved to.

[102] Ms. Ecker testified that before these events, Ms. Stack was warm, trusting, caring, friendly and gregarious. She was welcoming and she was the heart and soul of the community.

[103] After these events, Ms. Stack became fearful and anxious. Her faith in humanity had been damaged. She was down and depressed. She still suffers. She is depressed, anxious and cannot enjoy daily activities such as cooking, cleaning, and communicating with friends.

[104] On cross-examination, she confirmed that she has not observed the effect on Ms. Stack on a daily basis, because she does not see her on a daily basis.

[105] Cathy Whitney testified. She currently lives in Campbellford, but at the time of the events in question she lived at 215 Warden Wilson Avenue, across the road from the plaintiffs and next door to the Ellisons.

[106] Ms. Whitney testified that in February, 2002, some guns were stolen from her home. She said her son told her that the guns had been taken by Patrick Ellison. She was frightened and beside herself.

[107] Ms. Whitney testified that she did not recall talking to Ms. Stack, although she said she could have. She said the police became involved. The Whitneys had not called the police. They were charged and ultimately pled guilty.

[108] Ms. Whitney testified that as a result of disclosure made to her lawyer she found out that Ms. Stack had disclosed the theft of the guns by Patrick Ellison. She said she was relieved. She said she was shocked that Ms. Stack's name had been revealed. She never harboured any ill-will towards Ms. Stack.

[109] She testified that Mr. Ellison never spoke to her again after these events.

[110] On cross-examination, Ms. Whitney testified that the police came within a couple of days. She said she already had retrieved one of the guns, but the other one was in a creek. She said she did not know how the police got the information. She assumed that her husband had gone to the police. She said she did not see the Ellisons threatening the plaintiffs, or leering at them or driving a truck at Ms. Stack.

[111] Christian Nissen testified. He is the son of the two adult plaintiffs. He is now 19 years of age, and is in university.

[112] Christian was about seven years old when the events giving rise to this action occurred. His memory of the events themselves is understandably hazy, but he does recall that there was an incident regarding a boy who had guns that did not belong to him. He recalls the Ellisons watching their home and that it was unnerving.

[113] Christian testified that his mother became very different after the events. She became distant and distraught. She did not want to leave her house, and she does not want to go to Whitby, even now. She becomes quiet when she goes near Whitby. She has sudden adverse reactions if certain triggering events occur, such as loud noises or seemingly innocent events.

[114] Christian testified that his mother goes through depression regularly. She becomes distant and she is not talkative. She is not open and she is not motivated. She goes through periods where she does not sleep well.

[115] Christian testified that his mother is nervous in public. She overreacts to events. She is difficult in crowds and is not relaxed. She has diminished confidence. She is suspicious of strangers although she is friendly towards them. She does not go out often. When she does she is nervous. She does not want to answer the door and she would prefer that one of her family members do so.

[116] Christian testified that his mother's situation has affected him detrimentally. He is reluctant to bring things up with his mother. He does not know how she will take certain subjects. There is a strain on their relationship. There is not as much openness as there should be. As a result, Christian tries to deal with matters alone or discuss them with his father.

[117] Christian testified that his mother is not able to do normal housekeeping tasks such as cleaning, washing dishes and things of a similar nature. He testified that if someone gives his mother bad news, it produces an excessive reaction.

[118] On cross-examination, Christian acknowledged that when the events in question occurred he only knows what his mother was like in general terms. He is not able to give details. He recalls that she was generally active and talkative, and was not depressed all the time. He recalls that she volunteered, and she still does. She was involved in church, and she still is.

[119] Morgan Nissen testified. He is currently in grade 10 and is 15 years old. He was two years old when the events in question occurred.

[120] Morgan testified that his mother is often depressed and in despair. Ordinary events can produce much stress. For example, if she is late for church she becomes frantic and in a panic.

[121] Morgan testified that on one occasion he slipped on the stairs causing a loud noise. His mother went into a panic, she was crying and hyperventilating. Morgan had to sit her down to recover. In fact, Morgan was fine.

[122] Morgan testified that his mother has a deep fear of being followed or watched, and is subject to much suspicion. She always thinks she is in danger.

[123] Morgan testified that his mother has adverse reactions to loud noises, such as screeching tires. Stressful situations can produce adverse reactions.

[124] Morgan testified that his mother does not sleep well. She appears to get only about four hours or less per night.

[125] Morgan testified that his mother seldom does things by herself. She does not go out alone and engage in social events. She could not campaign for re-election as a trustee by herself.

[126] Morgan testified that his life would be better if his mother was not affected by depression and insomnia. He testified that his father's life would also be better. His father works very hard, and then must do chores outside the home and laundry and prepare dinner if his mother is depressed.

[127] Morgan testified that his mother is never happy for extended periods. He is afraid that she will overreact to ordinary events. He is careful to not do things that might set her off, and he is careful about what he says to her. He generally does not tell her about problems he may be having at school.

[128] On cross-examination, Morgan confirmed that he is unable to say how his mother was before the events in question.

[129] Dr. Daniel Silver testified. He is a psychiatrist, and for more than three decades was head of both the in-patient and out-patient departments of psychiatry affiliated with McGill University and the University of Toronto. Currently, he is a consultant to the Department of Psychiatry of Mount Sinai Hospital. He has an extensive curriculum vitae. There was no challenge to his qualifications to give opinion evidence.

[130] Dr. Silver examined Ms. Stack on August 4, 2013. He provided a report, and he testified at this trial. His opinion was based on his interview with Ms. Stack and he also reviewed the pleadings in this action. His opinion is also based on his experience with patients having similar experiences to those of Ms. Stack.

[131] Dr. Silver is of the opinion that Ms. Stack demonstrates symptoms of high anxiety. She has signs of post-traumatic stress syndrome or disorder. She is subject to intrusive thoughts arising from traumatic events. She has a high degree of suspicion and a low degree of trust. She has an increased arousal system arising from noises and somewhat ordinary events.

[132] Dr. Silver testified as to the symptoms of post-traumatic stress syndrome or disorder. He testified that traumatic experiences can give rise to those symptoms. They include depressive episodes, anxiety, flashbacks, intrusive thoughts, and a high degree of suspicion without good reason. He testified that other events can trigger these symptoms. The disorder or syndrome does not easily go away. The subject can appear to be all right, but any trauma can trigger the symptoms. He testified that even his examination of Ms. Stack triggered symptoms. It appeared to cause a re-traumatization of her.

[133] Dr. Silver testified that the disorder or syndrome is difficult to treat. Some techniques have been developed, but none are extraordinarily effective. None of the treatments attempted so far have met with very high success. The issue is how reasonably a person can achieve a normal life without re-traumatization.

[134] Dr. Silver described the specific symptoms for Ms. Stack. She has a high degree of anxiety. She has a high degree of suspicion and distrust. There are repeated flashbacks, particularly with respect to issues of young boys causing threats. She is concerned that people may be talking about her. She thinks she is being watched. This borders on a paranoid state. Ms. Stack's experience of being watched by her neighbours has spread to a suspicion of being watched by others. When out of her home in town, she is afraid that people are watching her or talking about her.

[135] Dr. Silver testified that Ms. Stack is distrustful of police. She is reluctant to go to them when it might be necessary. Her experience of being identified when she did not want to be identified was very traumatic and led to a dissociated episode. In such a state, the subject appears to be outside himself or herself, and the situation appears unreal. Dr. Silver testified that the incident involving being chased by a neighbour's truck also produced a dissociated state and a feeling of being unreal.

[136] Dr. Silver testified that it is difficult to know what prognosis is reasonable for Ms. Stack. It is hard to know whether her symptoms will disappear or perhaps go underground. He testified that it is not something that a person can simply put away and assume it is gone.

[137] Dr. Silver testified that he reviewed the report of Dr. Jeffries, the expert retained by the defendants. He testified that Dr. Jeffries is highly respected. He noted that there is no real difference of opinion between himself and Dr. Jeffries, and both he and Dr. Jeffries are concerned about potential re-traumatization of Ms. Stack.

[138] On cross-examination, Dr. Silver acknowledged that his opinion is based on one interview with Ms. Stack. He did not review any of her medical records and is not aware of whether she has had counselling or therapy. He acknowledged it would have been preferable to have assessed her closer to the events in question. He also acknowledged that his assessment was based on what Ms. Stack had told him, and obviously it is dependent on the accuracy of what she told him.

[139] Jackie Rooks testified. She has been a friend of Ms. Stack for a long time.

[140] Ms. Rooks testified that on February 7, 2002, she received a call from Ms. Stack, who described the incident during which she discovered that two neighbourhood boys apparently had guns. Ms. Rooks encouraged Ms. Stack to speak to the police. Ms. Stack asked her if she knew anyone in the police force that Ms. Rooks could speak to. Ms. Rooks did not know anyone. She understood that Ms. Stack ultimately went to another friend for a police contact and then spoke to the police.

[141] Ms. Rooks testified that subsequently things were not good. Ms. Rooks testified that Ms. Stack was afraid of a neighbour, Mr. Ellison.

[142] Ms. Rooks testified that she herself observed one particular incident involving the Ellisons. She drove to Ms. Stack's residence and when she arrived she herself was watched by the Ellisons. They were at the end of their driveway watching Ms. Stack's house. Ms. Rooks looked out the window and could see them. She said they were there watching the Stacks' residence for about two or three hours.

[143] Ms. Rooks testified that Ms. Stack's personality before these events was outgoing. She was well-liked by the neighbours, and she participated in school and church activities.

[144] After the events, Ms. Stack became fearful and had low self-esteem. Ms. Rooks testified that she has observed Ms. Stack for over 12 years since the events. She has never seen her get back the "spark" she once had.

[145] Ms. Rooks testified that Ms. Stack and her family had to move away, and Ms. Stack hates her new home even now.

[146] Ms. Rooks testified that there are things that set Ms. Stack off. She becomes anxious if she comes near to her old area. She is afraid she is being followed. If she sees a police officer she freezes and takes deep breaths. She does not trust strangers. She is often anxious and quiet.

[147] Alan Brooks testified. He is the President of Stonecore Group, and has been for 35 years. It is now a company with $90 million in sales annually.

[148] Mr. Brooks testified that Chad Nissen joined Stonecore 22 or 23 years ago as an engineer. He is now a salesperson with a territory that runs approximately from Barrie to the Durham region. The company has about 90 salespeople, and Mr. Nissen is one of the top five or ten.

[149] Mr. Brooks testified that in the spring of 2002, Mr. Nissen came to his home, visibly upset. He described an incident involving children in the neighbourhood and stolen guns. He testified that Mr. Nissen told him his wife was very upset because she had had a discussion with the police on the understanding that she would be anonymous. The affected neighbours discovered that she had spoken to the police and began to intimidate her by verbal means and staring at the house. The neighbour had run at her with a truck. They did not feel safe in their home and were thinking of moving away.

[150] Mr. Brooks testified that they had a long conversation. He suggested Mr. Nissen not move from Whitby and that it would be more difficult for him if he moved to Seagrave. He was more valuable where he was.

[151] Mr. Brooks testified that ultimately the plaintiffs moved. Mr. Brooks had made Mr. Nissen a District Manager but after the move it did not work out. Thus, he changed him back to his old job in 2003. He testified that it is possible that he might become a District Manager again if Mr. Nissen is ready.

[152] Mr. Brooks testified that there are differences in Ms. Stack since these incidents. Before they occurred, she was successful, outgoing, friendly and confident. After, she has become insecure.

[153] On cross-examination, Mr. Brooks acknowledged that Mr. Nissen has done well with the company since these incidents occurred. Since he has moved to Seagrave, he remains in the top five salespeople. He earns straight commission, so the more he sells, the more he earns.

[154] Isabel Pargana testified. She has been an Assistant Crown Attorney since January, 2000.

[155] Ms. Pargana testified that she vetted the Crown brief that gave rise to the prosecution of Patrick Ellison in March, 2002. There was nothing in the Crown brief respecting any promises made by the police regarding confidentiality for Ms. Stack. She testified that no police officer brought to her attention the fact that Ms. Stack had said the police should not let anyone know, or that a police officer said that the matter was between him and Ms. Stack. No one told her that the police officer said that stuff does not get disclosed and the public does not get to see it.

[156] Ms. Pargana testified that if she had known that any such statements had been made, she would have consulted someone for advice. However, no one pointed this out to her. She testified that it is the police who decide what is in the brief.

[157] Ms. Pargana testified that with respect to video statements, the police deal with them through a video unit. She testified that the police never told her that Ms. Stack did not want anyone to know about the discussion with the police. She said it was impractical for the Crown to review the videotape before disclosure.

[158] On cross-examination, Ms. Pargana testified that there was nothing in the Crown brief that would have suggested that there was any issue about Ms. Stack's safety nor was there anything that would have suggested that she had any concern about her neighbours. There was nothing that would have indicated that there was an issue about confidentiality. She testified that it is the obligation of the police to disclose all information to the Crown.

[159] Ms. Pargana testified that members of the public cannot get copies of the Crown brief, though she acknowledged that she does not know whether it can be obtained through Freedom of Information legislation. She is not familiar with the practice of the police regarding confidential informant status. She agreed that it is not unusual to have witnesses that are reluctant to testify.

[160] Brenda Cowie testified. She was an Assistant Crown Attorney in Durham from 2001 to 2006. She was involved in the case involving Sean and Patrick Ellison and reviewed the Crown worksheet and screening brief. She testified that there was no note in the brief regarding any issue as to confidentiality of Ms. Stack.

[161] Ms. Cowie testified that she did not review Ms. Stack's video statement. Nothing was drawn to her attention as to Officer Liepsig making any promises to Ms. Stack. There was nothing to indicate that Ms. Stack wanted to remain anonymous. She testified that any such issue would be dealt with by the police.

[162] On cross-examination, Ms. Cowie testified that there were no concerns as to Ms. Stack's safety, and there was nothing in the brief about it. She testified that the fact that some neighbours were involved in the suspected crime did not change anything, as this is not unusual. She testified that she has vetted many Crown briefs, and the existence of formal confidential informants is rare.

[163] The evidence for the defendants commenced with the testimony of Officer James Liepsig. He has been with Durham Police since June, 1986. He became a detective in 2003, and in February of 2002 he was a detective constable.

[164] On February 8, 2002, Officer Liepsig spoke to Ms. Stack. He had had a call from Ken Rumak at 12:45 p.m. Officer Liepsig had had some previous dealings with Mr. Rumak.

[165] Officer Liepsig testified that Mr. Rumak told him he knows a person who has a very upset friend, who had had some handguns stolen from her home and that a 15 year old child was involved. He said Mr. Rumak told him that this person would not be available until later in the afternoon. Mr. Rumak gave him Ms. Stack's telephone number.

[166] Officer Liepsig testified he did a reverse telephone look-up and discovered Ms. Stack's address. He said he called her number at 1:22 p.m. and left a message asking her to call him.

[167] Officer Liepsig testified that Ms. Stack called at 1:30 p.m., as a result of which she agreed to come to the police station to talk to him. Officer Liepsig did not recall that Ms. Stack raised any concerns. He testified he gave her no assurances and did not recall that there were any requests from her. He said it was her decision to come.

[168] Ms. Stack came to the front desk at the police station and from there she and Officer Liepsig walked to an interview room. Officer Liepsig did not recall any conversation during that period and particularly did not recall any conversation regarding confidentiality or anonymity. He testified that he gave Ms. Stack no assurances.

[169] Officer Liepsig testified that there are signs in the police station that indicate that people are subject to video recording.

[170] Officer Liepsig testified that if any assurances of confidentiality or anonymity had been given, he would not have met Ms. Stack at the police station and she would not have been videotaped. He testified that if Ms. Stack had not come to the station to speak to him, he would have got other officers to do door knocking and speak to others.

[171] Officer Liepsig testified that Ms. Stack's demeanour was fine when they met. He testified that she told him that guns had gone missing and that Sean and Patrick Ellison may be responsible. She said they were nice boys but there had been issues about babysitting. She said she liked the Ellisons, and there was nothing negative to say about them. She understood the guns were from the Whitneys' gun safe. They had been taken out of the house and disposed of in a creek.

[172] Officer Liepsig testified that there was no discussion about informant status for Ms. Stack or confidentiality. He testified she asked for no assurances in exchange for giving the interview.

[173] Officer Liepsig testified that at the end of the interview Ms. Stack raised a concern about her husband finding out about the interview, and some information becoming public. He testified that because a young offender was involved the only people who would know would be the people directly involved, that is, the Ellisons and the Whitneys. He said the public could conceivably find out through freedom of information legislation.

[174] Officer Liepsig testified that that Ms. Stack appeared to be concerned about information going outside her neighbourhood. Officer Liepsig testified that he conveyed to her that any information beyond the people involved would not be "out there". He testified that there was no other discussion regarding confidentiality. In any event, confidentiality did not appear to be an issue because Ms. Stack had spoken to Mr. Rumak already.

[175] Officer Liepsig testified that he has been involved in cases involving confidential informants. That involves getting information from a person regarding criminal activities. He said that there are certain ground rules regarding a confidential informant that must be spelled out ahead of time. That includes that the fact that a confidential informant must not tell anyone else that he or she is a confidential informant. Secondly, such a person cannot be a witness in any proceedings.

[176] Officer Liepsig testified that the Durham Regional Police have a formal policy regarding confidential informants. He testified that the policy spells out different types of informants, and

Ms. Stack does not fit any of them. Typically, an informant is a person who provides information in exchange for money or for consideration in dealing with outstanding charges against that person.

[177] Officer Liepsig testified that there is a pre-approval process for someone to become a confidential informant. It includes signing a contract. The police Intelligence Branch is involved. The informant is assigned a specific number.

[178] Officer Liepsig testified that he interviewed Patrick Ellison at 8:47 p.m. on the same day he had interviewed Ms. Stack. Ultimately, Patrick gave a statement and he was released on a Promise to Appear. One gun had been recovered from the creek, and the next day he and Officer Price picked Patrick up so that he could show them where the other gun was.

[179] Officer Liepsig testified that he was subsequently reassigned, so Officer Price or Officer Fitzgerald prepared a synopsis of Ms. Stack's interview. The synopsis did not convey any concerns about Ms. Stack or confidentiality.

[180] Officer Liepsig testified that sometime later, either Officer Price or Officer Fitzgerald told him that Mr. Ellison had to be spoken to regarding an issue that had come up involving Ms. Stack. Officer Liepsig testified that he had no involvement in this. He had no further contact with respect to this matter.

[181] I should note that Office Liepsig did not dispute the fact that he had not told Ms. Stack that she was being videotaped. His notes are very sketchy, and contain no reference to the discussion that was held with Ms. Stack, that was captured on videotape, about some level of confidentiality. Nor do his notes contain any details about his telephone conversation with Ms. Stack, nor do they mention anything about any conversation he may have had with Ms. Stack when she arrived at the police station. His evidence as to what was discussed with Ms. Stack about confidentiality, and why, does not accord with what is on the videotape.

[182] On cross-examination, Officer Liepsig acknowledged that his notes are not detailed, and he does not have a very good recollection of the details. He had no recollection of the conversation with Ms. Stack when she telephoned, nor does he have any recollection of the conversation with her after she arrived at the police station.

[183] Officer Liepsig was questioned about his evidence in chief that Ms. Stack was concerned about her husband finding out about the interview, and being concerned about the information getting out in the community. He agreed that none of this was in his notes. He testified that he recalled this from the interview. He did not recall some of the statements that were recorded on the video. He did not recall Ms. Stack saying anything about not letting anyone know. He acknowledged that when it was recorded on the video that he said "This is between you and I", there was no indication that he said the information would only go to people involved in the case. He did not recall saying "This stuff doesn't get disclosed." He said he understood that Ms. Stack was concerned about information being out in the media. He acknowledged, however, that Ms. Stack never said anything about that.

[184] Officer Liepsig testified that he did not see the disclosure that was furnished to the Ellisons. He acknowledged that Ms. Stack's name was in the disclosure, and he assumes that the videotape was disclosed.

[185] Officer Liepsig acknowledged that he took no steps to protect the identity of Ms. Stack, or to ensure that the information remained between Officer Liepsig and Ms. Stack, or that it would not be disclosed. He acknowledged that he did not keep his promise that the information would be maintained between himself and Ms. Stack, and that it would not be disclosed.

[186] Officer Liepsig acknowledged that while the police have specific regulations about confidential informants, he would not expect ordinary people to know what those regulations are. He would not expect Ms. Stack to use the word "informant" in discussing confidentiality.

[187] Officer Liepsig insisted that there could be no confidentiality for Ms. Stack because she had already told Ken Rumak about the matter.

[188] Officer Liepsig acknowledged that he did not tell Officer Price or Officer Fitzgerald about the promise that he had made that was captured on videotape. Nor did he tell the Crown Attorneys or the videotape unit in the police station.

[189] Officer Liepsig insisted that he understood that Ms. Stack had a concern that she did not want her husband to know that she had come to the police station, although there was nothing on the videotape about the matter.

[190] Officer Liepsig testified that there were incidents involving Ms. Stack and Mr. Ellison, that he heard about subsequently. One of them involved Ms. Stack and a vehicle operated by Mr. Ellison.

[191] Officer Liepsig testified that this would have been a serious matter and there should have been a thorough investigation. He said he would have interviewed the complainant and would have spoken to the driver. He understood that one of the officers spoke to the person involved. He acknowledged that he never got back to Ms. Stack after he heard about the matter.

[192] Officer Sean Fitzgerald testified. He has been with Durham Police for 25 years. He is a staff sergeant, and in 2002 was a detective.

[193] Before 2002, he was with the Intelligence Branch. While there, he dealt with confidential informants. He testified that a confidential informant provides confidential information to the police in exchange for cash or for consideration regarding outstanding charges. A confidential informant will not testify.

[194] Officer Fitzgerald testified that there are specific policies regarding confidential informants that must be followed in order for a person to become one. Approval must be given by the Intelligence Branch for a person to become a confidential informant. Information is submitted to the Intelligence Branch, who will do an assessment. Ultimately, there will be a specific manager for a confidential informant.

[195] Officer Fitzgerald was involved in the case at hand. He testified that on February 11, 2002, he was assisting Officers Liepsig and Price investigating handguns. He drafted the warrant involved in the case.

[196] Officer Fitzgerald reviewed the witness statements, including the videotape. He made summaries of the witness statements.

[197] They ultimately appeared in the Information to Obtain that was used for the warrant. He had no concerns about Ms. Stack's safety, as it appeared to be an issue between neighbours.

[198] Officer Fitzgerald was involved in preparing the Crown brief and the checklist for it. He said the videotaped statements were run through the disclosure unit. No consideration was given to redacting or not disclosing the video statement involving Ms. Stack. He said if he had known that Ms. Stack wanted anonymity, he could have sealed the Information to Obtain.

[199] Officer Fitzgerald testified that he was involved in talking to Mr. Ellison after hearing about the concern raised by Ms. Stack and her husband. He said he called Mr. Ellison, who said Mr. Nissen had already called him. He said he told Mr. Ellison that he should not be talking to potential witnesses and should not be saying anything that might be interpreted as a threat. He said Mr. Ellison understood, and it did not seem to be an issue. He said Mr. Ellison was cooperative.

[200] On cross-examination, Officer Fitzgerald said he never himself spoke to Mr. Nissen about the issue involving Mr. Ellison. He said he got the relevant information from Officer Price.

[201] Officer Fitzgerald could not recall if he had been told the Ellisons had been constantly watching Ms. Stack's home. He said he had never heard of a threat given by Mr. Ellison. He said it would have been of concern. He said he was not told that Mr. Ellison was really angry at the plaintiffs. It would have been important to know that. He said that if he had known these details, he would have had Officer Price follow up or he would have seen Mr. Ellison personally as well as Ms. Stack. He did not do this because he did not know the details.

[202] Officer Fitzgerald acknowledged that Ms. Stack's name and address were provided as part of the disclosure. He acknowledged that he did not tell the Crown that Ms. Stack had asked for no disclosure. If he had known it had been asked for he would have spoken to Officer Liepsig about it.

[203] Officer Fitzgerald was shown the typewritten notes of the conversation between Mr. Nissen and Mr. Ellison, that occurred on April 3, 2002. He testified that Officer Price did not show him this document. He testified that Officer Price did not tell him that there had been any threat made by Mr. Ellison.

[204] Officer Fitzgerald acknowledged that he prepared a written incident report regarding his conversation with Mr. Ellison. He agreed that his report contained the statement "Mr. Nissen indicated that Mr. Ellison was leering at Mr. Nissen's wife and he felt intimidated by Mr. Ellison's presence." He said he got the information about Mr. Ellison "leering" from Officer Price.

[205] Officer Fitzgerald also acknowledged that his report contains the statement "During my conversation with Mr. Ellison he indicated that Mr. Nissen had called him on April 3, 2002, and Mr. Nissen accused him of a number of things related to Mrs. Stack providing the police with information relating to an ongoing investigation." Officer Fitzgerald did not recall what that related to.

[206] Officer Fitzgerald did not recall if he had told Mr. Ellison to stop leering. He testified that he did not know that the Ellisons were watching on a daily basis, nor did he know the extent of any leering. He did not know that Mr. Ellison had driven his vehicle at Ms. Stack. No one had told him. He said he relied on Officer Price for the information.

[207] On re-examination, Officer Fitzgerald stated that he found it noteworthy that Mr. Nissen had called Mr. Ellison before calling the police. He said that if Mr. Nissen was really concerned, it was surprising that he did not contact the police first.

[208] Officer Mark Price testified. He has been with the Durham Police for 27 years, and he became a detective in March, 2000.

[209] Officer Price testified that he attended the police station on February 8, 2002 and was told there was an issue about stolen guns and Patrick Ellison. He and Officer Liepsig attended at Warden Wilson Avenue. While there, he saw two boys coming from the Ellison's residence. At the rear of the school, he saw them smoking marijuana. He apprehended them. Ultimately, they gave statements.

[210] Officer Price prepared an incident report dated February 11, 2002. No consideration was given to redacting any of it.

[211] Officer Price prepared the checklist for the Crown brief. A check mark appears beside the video statement as something to be included.

[212] Officer Price testified that he met Mr. Nissen on April 4, 2002. Mr. Nissen came into the station. He said he was having a problem with Mr. Ellison. He wanted to record the interview, but Officer Price declined to allow it. Mr. Nissen said his wife was concerned about intimidation on the street, and Mr. Nissen wanted someone to speak to Mr. Ellison. Officer Price testified that he arranged for Officer Fitzgerald to do. He said Mr. Nissen did not give him anything to look at.

[213] Officer Price testified that he told Mr. Nissen he would take care of it. He contacted Officer Fitzgerald and explained the “rules of engagement” regarding any discussion with Mr. Ellison.

[214] On cross-examination, Officer Price acknowledged that Mr. Nissen was upset when he spoke to him. He said he did not make notes of the conversation. He said he understood that Mr. Ellison was driving up and down the street and living his life and looking intimidating. He made scanty notes. He said he did not recall any allegations of threats. He did not recall any allegations that the Ellisons were watching. He made no notes about it. He made no notes about any allegations that Mr. Ellison had driven his truck, that gravel had been thrown at Ms. Stack when the truck’s tires spun.

[215] Officer Price acknowledged that he did not speak to Mr. Nissen about his conversation with Mr. Ellison to tell him what happened, nor did he direct anyone else to do so.

[216] Officer Price acknowledged that he did not review the videotaped statement given by Ms. Stack. He was not aware that Officer Liepsig had said that it would not be disclosed or that it was between him and Ms. Stack. He was not aware of any promises.

[217] Before leaving the defendants’ evidence, I should note that during the trial, counsel for the plaintiffs told me that she had been advised by counsel for the defendants that Mr. Ellison might be called as a witness for the defendants. This was not contradicted by counsel for the defendants. Mr. Ellison was not, in fact, called as a witness.

[218] I also note that Dr. Jeffries, the expert retained by the defendants, was not called as a witness. Dr. Silver’s evidence that there is no real difference of opinion between himself and Dr. Jeffries was not refuted.

Submissions

[219] Ms. Hoy, counsel for the plaintiffs, submits that the defendants should be found liable to the plaintiffs, and should be required to pay substantial damages.

[220] Ms. Hoy submits that Ms. Stack was promised confidentiality by the police, and it was not observed.

[221] Ms. Stack had become aware, from Cathy Whitney, that one of the Ellison boys may have stolen guns from the Whitneys and may be threatening students at school. Because the suspected criminal activity involved a close neighbour, Ms. Stack did not want to be involved and did not want her name to be out there as the source of any information.

[222] For this reason, Ms. Stack approached a friend, Ken Rumak, and asked if he knew anyone in the police force. She specifically told him that she did not want her name known. Mr. Rumak said he would talk to a contact at the police force.

[223] Ms. Stack was shocked to receive a message from Officer Liepsig, because it meant that Mr. Rumak had disclosed her name.

[224] When Ms. Stack talked to Officer Liepsig on the phone, she made it clear that she did not want to be involved or her name to be known. It was only on the basis of a promise of confidentiality that she agreed to go to the police station and talk to Officer Liepsig.

[225] Unbeknownst to Ms. Stack, her interview with Officer Liepsig was videotaped. It is clear from the videotape and a transcript of the interview that the promise of confidentiality was repeated at the end of the interview. Officer Liepsig stated “This is between you and I”, and “That stuff doesn’t get disclosed. It’s not made available to the public so you don’t have to worry about that.”

[226] Ms. Stack testified that the promise of confidentiality had been repeated by Officer Liepsig when she arrived at the police station, and was repeated again when she left the police station.

[227] Ms. Hoy submits that to the extent that there are any differences between the evidence given by Ms. Stack and the evidence given by Officer Liepsig, the evidence of Ms. Stack should be preferred.

[228] It makes no sense, Ms. Hoy submits, that any discussion of confidentiality would have occurred in a casual way only at the end of the interview. In context, it is clear that that discussion was part of a more extensive discussion of confidentiality that had occurred earlier.

[229] Furthermore, Officer Liepsig’s explanation for what he said during the interview is not credible. His evidence that Ms. Stack was concerned about her husband finding out about the interview and being concerned about the information getting out in the community is not reflected on the videotape or in the transcript. Nor is it in his notes. His explanation that “This is between you and I” meant that the information would only go to people involved in the case is also not reflected in the videotape or in the transcript. His evidence that he understood that Ms. Stack was concerned about information being out in the media was not the subject of any discussion by Ms. Stack in the interview.

[230] Ms. Hoy submits that it is far more logical to conclude that what was captured on the videotape reflects exactly what it appears to be – a promise of confidentiality. Ms. Stack testified that she would not have gone to the police station to be interviewed unless such a promise had been made.

[231] Ms. Stack's desire for confidentiality has been manifested throughout, from the point at which she discovered the possibility of criminal activity until the day she discovered that her confidentiality had not been observed. After her name and involvement were disclosed, her worst fears were realized.

[232] On a balance of probabilities, Ms. Hoy submits that a promise of confidentiality was given to Ms. Stack in exchange for her providing information about suspected criminal activity by a neighbour.

[233] Ms. Hoy submits that no particular formalities are required in order to create informer privilege. All that is required is a promise of confidentiality in exchange for information. The fact that police forces have detailed policies and procedures regarding confidential informants is not relevant. Ordinary citizens, such as Ms. Stack, cannot be expected to know about such policies and procedures. Neither is it relevant that Ms. Stack does not fit the normal profile of a confidential informant, who is often a criminal who provides information in exchange for cash or consideration regarding outstanding charges.

[234] Ms. Hoy submits that the purpose of the privilege is two-fold: to encourage people to come forward with information about criminal activity, and thus further society's interest in combating crime; and to protect the informer from retribution.

[235] Ms. Stack was not protected from retribution. She was intimidated and harassed by the very people she was afraid might cause her harm if her identity was disclosed. Jim Ellison drove at her with his truck, causing her serious emotional harm. Furthermore, the Ellisons intimidated and harassed Ms. Stack and her family by leering and staring at them relentlessly. Ultimately, the situation became so bad that Ms. Stack and her family had to move away. They sold their dream home and moved to another home in Seagrave that, while larger, was not what they wanted. They lost the benefit of all of the improvements in their dream home and had to spend money to make the new home liveable. Ms. Hoy submits that Ms. Stack suffered serious emotional and psychological harm as a result of the disclosure of her identity. In addition, she lost opportunities for employment, and her husband's employment was adversely affected.

[236] Ms. Hoy submits that Ms. Stack and her husband have suffered a loss on the sale of their home in Whitby, and have been required to expend money in the course of purchasing their new home and in upgrading it. She submits that Ms. Stack has lost money as a result of lost opportunities for employment, and Mr. Nissen has lost money in his employment.

[237] Ms. Hoy submits that as a result of the emotional and psychological harm to Ms. Stack, there should be significant general damages awarded, including aggravated damages. Furthermore, Mr. Nissen and the parties' two children, Christian and Morgan, have suffered a loss of guidance, care and companionship and are entitled to damages pursuant to the Family Law Act. Ms. Hoy submits that in the circumstances, there is a breach of s.7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and damages for that breach are appropriate. Furthermore, punitive damages are appropriate.

[238] Ms. Maxwell-Baker, counsel for the defendants, submits that the action should be dismissed.

[239] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that to become a confidential informant, the informant must request the privilege and receive an assurance of confidentiality from a police officer. She submits that the promise of confidentiality is, essentially, a condition precedent to the informant agreeing to provide information to the police.

[240] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that the only concrete evidence of any assurances is on the videotape of the interview. There is conflicting evidence as to whether any other assurances were given. Officer Liepsig testified that no such assurances were given. He testified that if Ms. Stack wanted informant status he would not have met her at the police station or videotaped the interview. Furthermore, he would have had to obtain approval from the Intelligence Branch to grant informant status.

[241] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that the mere fact that a person wishes to remain anonymous does not create a duty on the part of the police to treat the person as a confidential informant. That status arises only where the police agree to maintain confidentiality in exchange for information.

[242] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that at no point during the interview did Officer Liepsig expressly tell Ms. Stack that she would be a confidential informant. Furthermore, the assurances he gave were not designed to elicit information. Ms. Stack had already told him what she had to disclose.

[243] Officer Liepsig testified that because Ms. Stack had already spoken to Mr. Rumak and Ms. Whitney, the information was no longer confidential.

[244] Ms. Maxwell-Baker acknowledges that confidential informant status may arise by implication. However, that is not the case here. One must examine all the circumstances, including the actions of all parties and their respective perceptions. In this case, having regard to Ms. Stack's subsequent interactions with others, including her neighbours, she was not behaving as if she had a subjective belief that her identity was confidential.

[245] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that confidential informant status is rarely granted. A specific protocol must be followed, including performing a CPIC search, the assignment of a code, the assignment of a handler, and the signing of a contract. None of these steps were taken. The fact that they were not taken suggests that the police did not intend to regard Ms. Stack as a confidential informant, and did not promise her confidentiality in exchange for information.

[246] None of the police or Crown attorneys had any concerns about Ms. Stack's safety.

[247] In the circumstances, a reasonable person in the position of Ms. Stack could not have believed that she was a confidential informant. The police did not believe she was. Thus, there is no basis for a finding of implied privilege.

[248] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that even if Ms. Stack was entitled to confidential informant privilege, a breach of the privilege does not give rise to an action at common law. She points out that there is no reported decision in which monetary damages have been awarded. The only authority is an obiter comment in one Supreme Court of Canada decision.

[249] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that in these circumstances there is no private law duty of care. In order to succeed, in a case where such a duty of care has not been previously recognized, a plaintiff must satisfy both prongs of the two-stage Anns/Cooper test:

(a) is there a sufficiently close relationship between the parties such that it was reasonably foreseeable that negligence on the part of the police would cause harm to Ms. Stack?

(b) if the answer to (a) is in the affirmative, are there any residual policy considerations that ought to negate or limit the prima facie duty of care?

[250] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that there was no sufficiently close relationship between the parties. Officer Liepsig had one interaction with Ms. Stack. There was nothing unique about his dealings with Ms. Stack. There was nothing more than a general relationship between the police and Ms. Stack. This is not sufficiently proximate to give rise to a private law duty of care.

[251] Furthermore, there is no evidence that the defendants were aware that if Ms. Stack's identity was not protected, she would be exposed to harm. The police and the Crown attorneys did not think this situation was unusual, and did not think any harm might result.

[252] Even if the parties are sufficiently proximate, broader policy considerations would negate the imposition of a duty. This is particularly so given that confidential informer privilege can arise by implication. The task of the police will be undermined if the police fear lawsuits and, before receiving information from a complainant, feel compelled to explain the privilege and explain that providing information may place the person at risk if their identity is disclosed. This would inevitably deter people from reporting crimes and providing police with information. It would also lead more people to insist on a guarantee of confidentiality. This would obstruct the free flow of information between the public and the police, thereby jeopardizing efforts to encourage investigation of crime and the public interest in preventing crime.

[253] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits, in any event, that there is no evidence as to the appropriate standard of care in a case such as this. There must be evidence to show what a reasonable police officer would be expected to do in similar circumstances. None was called.

[254] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that even if there is a private law duty of care, and the standard of care was breached, there must be evidence that any damages and losses were caused by the breach. A plaintiff must show on a balance of probabilities that “but for” the defendants’ breach of duty, the injury would not have occurred.

[255] In a case such as this, where psychological injuries are alleged, the question is, as a result of pre-existing conditions, was there a material risk that the plaintiff would have developed her current problems notwithstanding the defendants’ conduct? There is an issue as to whether Ms. Stack’s condition was caused by the Ellisons as opposed to any conduct by the police. Finally, the plaintiffs must show that the damage suffered was not too remote. In other words, it must be shown that the harm suffered was reasonably foreseeable in the circumstances. It must be the kind of harm that would be suffered by a reasonable person in the position of the plaintiff. Where psychological injuries are alleged, the plaintiff must show that it was foreseeable that a person of ordinary fortitude would suffer psychological injury in the circumstances.

[256] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that the damages alleged in this case are too remote.

[257] In any event, Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that the plaintiffs have not proven their damages.

[258] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that the only evidence as to the claimed psychological damages, arising from post-traumatic stress disorder, was the evidence of Dr. Silver. Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that his evidence and opinions should be given limited weight. His opinion was based on a single interview, and he did not obtain any medical records. Nor is there any evidence that Ms. Stack received treatment for her psychological injuries. No medical records or counselling records were produced.

[259] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that the plaintiffs have not proven that they lost anything as a result of their decision to move from 220 Warden Wilson Avenue. The plaintiffs called no expert evidence to establish that the price they obtained for that property did not include the value of the improvements, nor have they produced sufficient evidence to show that they actually spent $83,300 on the improvements. Furthermore, there is no evidence that they overpaid for the house that they bought in Seagrave. No expert evidence has been called. Furthermore, they have had the use and enjoyment of any upgrades they have made.

[260] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that there is no evidence that Ms. Stack was unable to pursue career opportunities. She had not been employed outside the home since 1996, and she did not intend to re-enter the workforce until at least 2010. It is highly speculative to say that she could have obtained a job as a professional engineer. She would have been at a competitive disadvantage due to her choice to withdraw from the profession of engineering so long ago.

[261] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that Ms. Stack’s tenure as a school board trustee in 2013, and a candidate for the position in 2014, belies her inability to obtain work and interact with others.

[262] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that Mr. Nissen has simply not proven that he lost any income. He could not say how much time he lost from work in 2002, nor could he say how much money he lost by not remaining District Manager. He is a highly successful salesperson who derives his income based on performance. He has not disclosed his relevant income information since these events occurred.

[263] Ms. Maxwell-Baker submits that this is not the type of case that warrants punitive damages. Among other things, there is no evidence of bad faith or high-handed conduct. For the same reason, even assuming a breach of s.7 of the Charter (and she submits there was not), no damages are appropriate.

[264] I requested written submissions from counsel as to whether the “cap” on general damages that is in place for personal injury cases applies in cases such as this. Ms. Hoy submitted that the cap does not apply. Ms. Maxwell-Baker submitted that it does.

[265] Relevant authorities referred to by the parties and independently considered by me include MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson, 1995 CanLII 57 (SCC), [1995] 4 S.C.R. 725; P.(D.) v. Wagg (2002), 2002 CanLII 23611 (ON SCDC), 61 O.R. (3d) 746 (Div. Ct.); varied 71 O.R. (3d) 299 (C.A.); R. v. Blain (1960), 1960 CanLII 218 (SK CA), 127 C.C.C. 267 (Sask. C.A.); Worthington v. Scribner (1872), 109 Mass. 487; Bisaillon v. Keable, 1983 CanLII 26 (SCC), [1983] 2 S.C.R. 60; R. v. Hunter (1987), 1987 CanLII 123 (ON CA), 59 O.R. (2d) 364 (C.A.); R. v. Scott, 1990 CanLII 27 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 979; R. v. Leipert, 1997 CanLII 367 (SCC), [1997] 1 S.C.R. 281; Canada (Solicitor General) v. Ontario (Royal Commission of Inquiry into the Confidentiality of Health Records), 1981 CanLII 33 (SCC), [1981] 2 S.C.R. 494; R. v. Garofoli, 1990 CanLII 52 (SCC), [1990] 2 S.C.R. 1421; R. v. Parmar (1987), 1987 CanLII 6867 (ON SC), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 260 (Ont. H.C.J.); R. v. Nguyen, [2001] O.J. No.1578 (S.C.J.); Named Person v. Vancouver Sun, 2007 SCC 43 (CanLII), [2007] 3 S.C. R. 253; R. v. Named Person B, 2013 SCC 9 (CanLII), [2013] 1 S.C.R. 405; R. v. Barros, 2011 SCC 51 (CanLII), [2011] 3 S.C.R. 368; Snell v. Farrell, 1990 CanLII 70 (SCC), [1990] 2 S.C.R. 311; K.T. v. Vranich, 2011 ONSC 683 (CanLII), [2011] O.J. No. 361 (S.C.J.); Felix v. Hearne, [2011] B.C.J. No. 1734 (B.C.S.C.); Chowdhry v. Burnaby (City), [2008] B.C.J. No. 1920 (B.C.S.C.); James v. Harper, [2010 O.J. No. 4373 (S.C.J.); St. Prix-Alexander v. Home Depot of Canada Inc., [2008] O.J. No. 25 (S.C.J.); R. v. Brown, [1990] O.J. No. 4870 (S.C.J.); R. v. Basi, 2009 SCC 52 (CanLII), [2009] 3 S.C.R. 389; R. v. Kaboni, [2010] O.J. No. 1163 (O.C.J.); Hill v. Hamilton-Wentworth Regional Police Services Board, 2007 SCC 41 (CanLII), [2007] 3 S.C.R. 129; Wellington v. Ontario (2011), 2011 ONCA 274 (CanLII), 105 O.R. (3d) 81 (C.A.); Anns v. Merton London Borough Council, [1978] A.C. 728 (H.L.); Cooper v. Hobart, 2001 SCC 79 (CanLII), [2001] 3 S.C.R. 537; Norris v. Gatien (2001), 2001 CanLII 2486 (ON CA), 56 O.R. (3d) 441 (C.A.); Project 360 Investments Ltd. (c.o.b. Sound Emporium Nightclub) v. Toronto Police Services Board, 2009 CanLII 36380 (ON SC), [2009] O.J. No. 2473 (S.C.J.); Garratt v. Orillia Power Distribution Corp. (2008), 2008 ONCA 422 (CanLII), 90 O.R. (3d) 161 (C.A.); Jane Doe v. Toronto (Metropolitan) Commissioners of Police (1998), 1998 CanLII 14826 \(ON SC\), 39 O.R. (3d) 487 (Gen. Div.); Patrong v. Banks (2013), 5 C.C.L.T. (4th) 126 (Ont. S.C.J.); Wong v. Kyriacou, 2009 CanLII 66385 \(ON SC\), [2009] O.J. No. 5067 (S.C.J.); Meady v. Greyhound Canada Transportation Corp. (2010), 14 C.P.C. (7th) 361 (Ont. S.C.J.); Burbank v. R.T.B. (2007), 2007 BCCA 215 \(CanLII\), 279 D.L.R. (4th) 573 (B.C.C.A.); Clements v. Clements, 2012 SCC 32 \(CanLII\), [2012] 2 S.C.R. 181; M.B. v. 2014052 Ontario Ltd. (c.o.b. Deluxe Windows of Canada) (2012), 2012 ONCA 135 \(CanLII\), 109 O.R. (3d) 351 (C.A.); Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27 \(CanLII\), [2008] 2 S.C.R. 114; Vancouver (City) v. Ward, 2010 SCC 27 \(CanLII\), [2010] 2 S.C.R. 28; Janiak v. Ippolito, 1985 CanLII 62 \(SCC\), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 146; Chaudhry v. Falconer Charney LLP, [2014] O.J. No. 2502 (C.A.); Levesque v. Comeau, 1970 CanLII 4 \(SCC\), [1970] S.C.R. 1010; Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., 2002 SCC 18 \(CanLII\), [2002] 1 S.C.R. 595; McIntyre v. Grigg (2006), 2006 CanLII 37326 \(ON CA\), 83 O.R. (3d) 161 (C.A.); Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., 1978 CanLII 1 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229; Thornton v. School District No. 57 (Prince George), 1978 CanLII 12 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 267; Arnold v. Teno, 1978 CanLII 2 \(SCC\), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287; ter Neuzen v. Korn, 1995 CanLII 72 \(SCC\), [1995] 3 S.C.R. 674; Cinar Corporation v. Robinson, 2013 SCC 73 \(CanLII\), [2013] 3 S.C.R. 1168; Young v. Bella, 2006 SCC 3 \(CanLII\), [2006] 1 S.C.R. 108; S.Y. v. F.G.C. (1996), 1996 CanLII 6597 \(BC CA\), 30 C.C.L.T. (2d) 82 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Y.(X.) (2011), 2011 ONCA 259 \(CanLII\), 105 O.R. (3d) 433 (C.A.); Fiddler v. Chiavetti (2010), 2010 ONCA 210 \(CanLII\), 317 D.L.R. (4th) 385 (Ont. C.A.); Ashby v. White (1790), 2 Ld. Raym. 938; 92 E.R. 126; Simmons v. Consolidated Brokers Ltd., 1948 CanLII 250 \(BC CA\), [1948] 2 D.L.R. 458 (B.C.C.A.); Freeman-Maloy v. Marsden (2006), 2006 CanLII 9693 \(ON CA\), 79 O.R. (3d) 401 (C.A.); Degennaro v. Oakville Trafalgar Memorial Hospital (2011), 81 C.C.L.T. (3d) 165 (Ont. C.A.); and Hanke v. Resurface Corp., 2007 SCC 7 \(CanLII\), [2007] 1 S.C.R. 333.

Analysis

[266] Legally, this case is not one that is easy to resolve. It raises issues that are somewhat fundamental in tort law. Assuming Ms. Stack is an informer, and is entitled to informer privilege, does she have a civil cause of action against the police if the privilege is breached? Is there any duty owed to her personally that can give rise to a civil cause of action? Or, is the duty one that is owed to the public and to the administration of justice only, in order to encourage people to disclose criminal activity?

[267] I will consider the issues in dispute under the following headings:

- a) What is the nature of informer privilege and how does it arise?
- b) Was Ms. Stack entitled to informer privilege?
- c) Does informer privilege give rise to a private law duty to the informer?
- d) Do the Anns/Cooper tests require that a private law duty be negated on policy grounds?

e) What damages, if any, are appropriate?

[268] I will consider each of these issues in turn.

a) What is the nature of informer privilege and how does it arise?

[269] Informer privilege is of ancient origin. In Bisaillon v. Keable, supra, the principle was described by Beetz J. for the Supreme Court of Canada, at p.105, as follows:

The rule gives a peace officer the power to promise his informers secrecy expressly or by implication, with a guarantee sanctioned by the law that this promise will be kept even in court, and to receive in exchange for this promise information without which it would be extremely difficult for him to carry out his duties and ensure that the criminal law is obeyed.

[270] In R. v. Leipert, supra, McLachlin J., as she then was, stated at para. 9:

A court considering this issue must begin from the proposition that informer privilege is an ancient and hallowed protection which plays a vital role in law enforcement. It is premised on the duty of all citizens to aid in enforcing the law. The discharge of this duty carries with it the risk of retribution from those involved in crime. The rule of informer privilege was developed to protect citizens who assist in law enforcement and to encourage others to do the same.

[271] In Vancouver Sun, supra, at para. 4, Bastarache J. stated:

In my view, informer privilege must remain absolute. Information which might tend to identify a confidential informant cannot be revealed, except where the innocence of a criminal accused is at stake.

[272] The privilege applies in both criminal and civil proceedings. In Bisaillon v. Keable, at p.93, Beetz J. stated:

The rule was developed in criminal proceedings apparently in trials for high treason, but it also applies in civil matters, and in both cases it has been established for reasons which relate to the essential effectiveness of the criminal law.

[273] It is clear from Named Person B, supra, that informer privilege can arise both expressly and by implication. In that case, an informer was granted privilege by one police force expressly. The responsibility for that person was subsequently transferred to another police force. That other police force did not specifically grant or recognize any privilege. However, that force continued to deal with the person as if the privilege was in place. The person had no reason to believe it was not in place.

[274] The Supreme Court of Canada held that in these circumstances, privilege existed with respect to the second police force by implication.

[275] The relevant principles as to when privilege can be said to exist were summarized by Justice Trafford in R. v. Brown, supra. A number of passages from his reasons are helpful.

[276] At para. 2, Trafford J. stated:

Where a person discloses to a peace officer acting in the course of duty any information about criminal activity and is given an assurance of confidentiality by the officer, the person is a confidential informant. The identity of a confidential informant is privileged as a matter of law – the name of the person and/or any information tending to identify the person may not be disclosed by anyone absent a waiver or other legal dissolution of the privilege. The disclosure of the identity of a confidential informant is not a matter of judicial discretion. Nor is it a matter of prosecutorial or investigative discretion. It is only where the disclosure of the identity of the person is necessary to demonstrate the innocence of a defendant that an exception to the rule exists.

[277] At para. 3, he stated:

It is worth emphasizing the two aspects of the purpose of the privilege – the need to protect confidential informants and like individuals at risk in the community because they gave information to the police and the need to promote the effective prevention and detection of crime.

[278] At para. 4, he stated:

Not everyone who gives information to the police is a confidential informant. It is one thing to be an informant – it is another thing to be a confidential informant. To be a confidential informant an informant must request the privilege, expressly or by necessary implication, and receive an assurance of confidentiality, expressly or by necessary implication, from the officer. Regard must be had for all the circumstances of the case. A would be confidential informant does not begin with a right of confidentiality but does have a right to silence. One need not give information to the police. But, if the privilege attaches to the relationship, a right of confidentiality in the confidential informant is created and must be recognized by everyone.

[279] At paras. 5 and 6, he stated:

One must distinguish the privilege of a confidential informant, and the right of confidentiality attendant to it, from the practice of a police officer treating all information received in the course of duty as confidential information. Such practices are not in all cases to be equated with an assurance of confidentiality necessary to constitute the privilege. Absent such an assurance, all information collected during an investigation that is not clearly irrelevant must be disclosed by the Crown to the defence. [Citation of caselaw omitted.]

Accordingly, in determining the existence of the privilege all of the circumstances of the delivery of the information must be considered. The perception of the informant who is giving information to the police is a significant factor. The status and motivation of the person at the material time as a complainant, suspect, arrestee, accomplice or otherwise are also relevant. See Tipene v. Apperley, [1978] 1 N.Z.L.R. 761 at 768 (C.A.). Regard must also be had for the conduct of the officer receiving the information and the history of their relationship with one another, if any.

[280] To summarize, it is clear that informer privilege arises if information is provided to the police in exchange for a promise of confidentiality. Mere expectation of confidentiality is not enough. There must be a promise, either express or implied, that confidentiality will be maintained. Where the privilege properly arises, anonymity must be observed absolutely, save only where innocence is at stake. The purpose of the privilege is two-fold: to encourage citizens to report suspected criminal activity; and to protect informers from retribution. Formality is not required. All that is required is a promise of confidentiality in exchange for information. While policies and procedures exist with respect to informer privilege, they do not themselves create it.

b. Was Ms. Stack entitled to informer privilege?

[281] Ms. Stack says she provided information in exchange for a promise of confidentiality. She must establish this on a balance of probabilities.

[282] In essence, this is a factual issue: was Ms. Stack promised anonymity in exchange for information? Ms. Stack says she was, and the defendants say she was not.

[283] In order to resolve this factual dispute, I must consider all the relevant evidence and decide whether, on a balance of probabilities, it is more likely than not that Ms. Stack was promised anonymity in exchange for information.

[284] If a promise of anonymity was given, it was given by Officer Liepsig. He was the only police officer who spoke to Ms. Stack before she gave her interview.

[285] Ms. Stack was very clear in her evidence that she did not want to be involved. She had only hearsay evidence of any crime. She had no direct evidence. She was also very clear that had a promise of anonymity not been given, she would not have gone to the police station and provided the information she did to Officer Liepsig.

[286] Ms. Stack's desire for anonymity was confirmed by Ken Rumak. He testified that Ms. Stack made it clear to him that she did not want her name to be known and she did not want to be involved. Consistent with this understanding, Mr. Rumak testified that he conveyed Ms. Stack's desire for anonymity to Officer Liepsig.

[287] Officer Liepsig's notes were sketchy at best. He had virtually no notes about his conversation with Mr. Rumak. All he said about that conversation was that Mr. Rumak said he had a friend who could give information about stolen handguns, and a 15 year old was involved, and he gave the friend's phone number. He did not specifically deny that Mr. Rumak said the friend did not want to be involved or known. Officer Liepsig's notes of his conversations with Ms. Stack were sparse.

[288] Officer Liepsig testified that he gave no assurances of confidentiality to Ms. Stack, apart from the brief discussion at the end of the interview. He testified that that discussion was primarily concerned with Ms. Stack not wanting her husband to find out about the interview, and her concern about the information getting out in the community. He agreed, however, that none of this was in his notes. He did not recall Ms. Stack saying anything about not letting anyone know.

[289] I think it is highly unlikely that the discussion about anonymity at the end of the interview was the first time the subject was raised. In context, I think it is unlikely that the issue would have been raised for the first time in such a casual way at the end of the interview. It is more likely, in my view, that that discussion was the culmination of an earlier discussion about anonymity. Otherwise, there was no context and the discussion, coming out of the blue, would be unusual. If anonymity was promised before Ms. Stack came to the police station, it is difficult to think of any reason for doing it except as a means to persuade her to come to the station and tell what she knew.

[290] I think Ms. Stack's conduct after her identity was disclosed is consistent with her belief that anonymity had been guaranteed. As soon as the incident involving Mr. Ellison occurred, she telephoned Officer Liepsig and left a message to the effect that a mistake had been made, and her identity had somehow been disclosed. Officer Liepsig did not deny receiving that message. He did not return the call.

[291] Mr. Nissen attended at the police station and spoke to Officer Sirizzotti and Officer Price. He showed Officer Sirizzotti the note of his conversation with Mr. Ellison, and told him the whole story. He was ushered into another room where he told Officer Price the same story.

[292] Mr. Nissen testified that he told Officer Price that Ms. Stack had been promised her identity would be preserved, and wanted to know what the police were going to do about it. Officer Price said he would look into it.

[293] Mr. Nissen testified that Officer Price called him the next day and told him that there had been a videotape of the interview with Ms. Stack, and her name had appeared in a report. Mr. Nissen testified that Officer Price apologized and said it was unacceptable.

[294] Officer Sirizzotti was not called as a witness to contradict Mr. Nissen. Officer Price made no notes of the conversation. He did not specifically deny it.

[295] The surrounding circumstances would appear to support Ms. Stack's subjective recollection that she was promised anonymity in exchange for the provision of information.

[296] Supporting Officer's Liepsig's subjective recollection, to some extent, is the fact that the police force has a specific, detailed policy regarding confidential informants. In order to be granted informer status, according to the policy, certain practices consistent with secrecy must be followed. The fact that they were not followed in this case could suggest that the police, through Officer Liepsig, did not intend to grant informer status.

[297] It may be that Officer Liepsig intended to convey to Ms. Stack only that the police would try to keep her out of it, without guaranteeing that her involvement might have to be disclosed. If that was the case, Officer Liepsig did not make that clear. He certainly did not make that clear in the conversation captured on videotape. He said “This is between you and I.” and “That stuff does not get disclosed. It is not made available to the public. You don’t have to worry about that.” With those statements, which I find were made in the context of a broader discussion that started before Ms. Stack went to the police station, there are no qualifiers. There is nothing to suggest that Ms. Stack’s identity might have to be disclosed.

[298] On a balance of probabilities, I hold that Officer Liepsig promised Ms. Stack that her identity would be preserved, and not disclosed, if she came to the police station and provided information about suspected criminal activity. He did not qualify that promise in any way. Thus, both expressly and by implication Ms. Stack became entitled to informer privilege, that is, she was entitled to have her anonymity preserved with respect to her involvement in conveying information to the police.

[299] It is clear, and this is not disputed, that Ms. Stack’s anonymity was not preserved. The videotape of the conversation between Ms. Stack and Officer Liepsig was furnished to counsel for the Ellisons. Reports were prepared in which her name appears. No attempt was made to redact or edit the videotape or the reports. The conversation between Ms. Stack and Officer Liepsig was disclosed in the Information to Obtain that was prepared for a search warrant. No attempt was made to redact any part of it. Officer Liepsig did not advise any of the other police officers that he had made a promise of anonymity. As it happens, he did not even advise them of the statements he made that were captured on videotape. No one told the assistant Crown attorneys who were responsible for prosecuting Patrick Ellison of any promises of anonymity.

[300] I reject the argument that just because Ms. Stack told Mr. Rumak, and perhaps others, about the suspected criminal activity, that this somehow constitutes a waiver of privilege or that the privilege never came into effect. A similar argument was rejected by Archibald J. in Nguyen, supra. He held that any waiver must be clear and unequivocal, and merely telling others about the criminal activity does not constitute a waiver. In principle, I do not see how consulting with a friend to seek advice about conveying information to the police anonymously can constitute waiver of a privilege that has not yet come into existence.

[301] For these reasons, I hold that Ms. Stack was entitled to informer privilege.

c) Does informer privilege give rise to a private law duty to the informer?

[302] To some extent, this issue plumbs the depths of tort law theory. Is there a private law duty at all, or is it a duty owed to the public and the administration of justice? If there is a private law duty to the informer, what is it? Is it an absolute duty, the breach of which gives rise to a right to damages? Or is it a duty to take reasonable care to ensure that anonymity is preserved?

[303] As noted earlier, in a criminal law context informer privilege has been held to have two purposes: to encourage citizens to provide information to the police; and to protect the informer from reprisal.

[304] On its face, the privilege gives rise to a duty to the informer. The duty is to protect his or her identity from disclosure. He or she is to be protected from reprisal. In a criminal law context, this purpose goes hand in hand with the other purpose of the privilege, that is, to encourage people to provide information to the police. If informers are not protected from reprisal, people will be less willing to provide information to the police. Society's interest in combating crime could be adversely affected.

[305] While the privilege is clearly grounded in a criminal law context, I see no reason in principle, subject to Anns/Cooper considerations, why the privilege cannot give rise to a private law duty to the informer. If the informer is harmed by a failure to observe the privilege, prima facie the informer should have a remedy.

[306] To return to the question I posed earlier, what is the duty? Is it absolute, or is it a duty to take reasonable care?

[307] In a criminal law context, the duty to preserve the privilege is said to be almost absolute. Only innocence at stake will require that the privilege give way. Thus, an argument can be made that in a civil context a breach of the duty to maintain the privilege, however it arises, can result in a valid claim.

[308] Liability on that basis can be supported by the seminal case of Ashby v. White, supra. It was ultimately held in that case that the deprivation of the right to vote in an election to serve in Parliament gave rise to a right to sue for damages. Chief Justice Holt was in dissent in the Court of King's Bench, but his view ultimately prevailed in the House of Lords.

[309] Chief Justice Holt, at p. 950 Ld. Raym., p.134 E.R., stated:

The single question in this case is, whether, if a free burgess of a corporation, who has an undoubted right to give his vote in the election of a burgess to serve in Parliament, be refused and hindered to give it by the officer, if an action on the case will lie against such officer.

But to proceed, I will do these two things: first, I will maintain that the plaintiff has a right and privilege to give his vote; secondly, in consequence therefore, that if he be hindered in the enjoyment or exercise of that right, the law gives him an action against the disturber, and that this is the proper action given by the law.

[310] At p. 953 Ld. Raym., p. 135 E.R. he stated:

But from hence it appears that every man, that is to give his vote on the election of members to serve in Parliament, has a several and particular right in his private capacity, as a citizen or burgess. And surely it cannot be said, that this is so inconsiderable a right, as to apply that maxim to it, di minimus non curat lex. A right that a man has to give his vote at the election of a person to represent him in Parliament, there to concur to the making of laws, which are to bind his liberty and property, is a most transcendent thing, and of such an high nature, and the law takes notice of it such in diverse statutes.

[311] On the same page, in a passage that has been quoted with approval dozens of times, he stated:

If the plaintiff has a right, he must of necessity have a means to vindicate and maintain it, and a remedy if he is injured in the exercise or enjoyment of it; and indeed it is a vain thing to imagine a right without a remedy; for want of right and want of remedy are reciprocal.

[312] Based on this reasoning, if the informer has a right to have his or her anonymity preserved, and that right is infringed, there must be a means to vindicate and maintain it.

[313] In my view, if the reasoning of Chief Justice Holt prevailed in 1790 to uphold a right to damages for being deprived of the right to vote, it prevails equally to provide a right to damages where an informer's right to anonymity is not preserved. The right to vote has an overarching public dimension, but to be deprived of it gives rise to a private right of action. Similarly, informer privilege has an overarching public purpose, but breach of it, resulting in harm, gives rise to a private right of action. The only qualifier, in my view, is whether it must prevail after an analysis based on Anns/Cooper. While the Anns/Cooper analysis has been conducted where a novel duty of care is asserted in a negligence context, I see no reason why a similar analysis should not be conducted where a novel cause of action in tort based on Ashby v. White is being considered. I will conduct that analysis after I have considered the alternative basis of liability in negligence.

[314] Even if liability is not absolute, at the very least there must be a duty to take reasonable care to preserve anonymity. In this case, it is clear that reasonable care was not taken.

[315] I do not accept Ms. Maxwell-Baker's argument that there must be evidence of what a reasonable police officer would do in these circumstances. Expert evidence is not required, at least in this case, as to the appropriate standard of care. Whatever the standard of care may be, the police did not meet it. No steps whatsoever were taken to preserve anonymity. Indeed, the videotaped interview was released to the Ellisons deliberately. Officer Liepsig took no steps to advise other police officers or the Crown that he had given promises of anonymity.

[316] Thus, subject only to an analysis based on Anns/Cooper, informer privilege gives rise to a private law duty to Ms. Stack, and a breach of that duty gives rise to a claim for damages.

d) Do the Anns/Cooper tests require that a private law duty be negated on policy grounds?

[317] In Canada, the analysis in Anns v. Merton London Borough Council, supra, is subsumed in the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in Cooper v. Hobart, supra. That case involved an allegation of negligence against the Registrar of Mortgage Brokers in British Columbia for failing to oversee the conduct of an investment company which was licenced by the Registrar.

[318] As I indicated earlier, the Anns/Cooper analysis has been applied in a negligence context. I think it is also appropriate to apply it where any novel cause of action in tort is considered, and I will apply it here to both theories of liability as I have discussed them above.

[319] The Supreme Court of Canada held that there are two stages of the Anns/Cooper analysis: first, whether there is sufficient proximity to give rise to a duty of care; and second, whether there are any residual policy considerations that should negative that duty of care. The Supreme Court of Canada held that policy considerations play a role in resolving both questions.

[320] At para. 30, McLachlin C.J.C. and Major J. for the court, stated:

In brief compass, we suggest that at this stage in the evolution of the law, both in Canada and abroad, the Anns analysis is best understood as follows. At the first stage of the Anns test, two questions arise: (1) was the harm that occurred the reasonably foreseeable consequence of the defendant's act? and (2) are there reasons, notwithstanding the proximity between the parties established in the first part of this test, that tort liability should not be recognized here? The proximity analysis involved at the first stage of the Anns test focuses on factors arising from the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant. These factors include questions of policy, in the broad sense of that word. If foreseeability and proximity are established at the first stage, a prima facie duty of care arises. At the second stage of the Anns test, the question still remains whether there are residual policy considerations outside the relationship of the parties that may negative the imposition of a duty of care.

[321] Ultimately, the court held that the plaintiff failed both aspects of the Anns/Cooper test. The court held that there was insufficient proximity to give rise to a prima facie duty of care, and held that in any event there were residual policy considerations that would negative such a duty.

[322] In defining "proximity", the court, at para.33, found assistance in the judgment of La Forest J. in Hercules Management Ltd. v. Ernst & Young, 1997 CanLII 345 \(SCC\), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 165, at para. 24:

The label "proximity", as it was used by Lord Wilburforce in Anns, supra, was clearly intended to connote that the circumstances of the relationship inhering between the plaintiff and the defendant are of such a nature that the defendant may be said to be under an obligation to be mindful of the plaintiff's legitimate interests in conducting his or her affairs.

[323] At para. 34 of Cooper, McLachlin C.J.C. and Major J. stated:

Defining the relationship may involve looking at expectations, representations, reliance and the property or other interests involved. Essentially, these are factors that allow us to evaluate the closeness of the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant and to determine whether it is just and fair having regard to that relationship to impose a duty of care in law upon the defendant.

[324] In discussing the second stage of the Anns test, they stated, at para. 37:

This brings us to the second stage of the Anns test. As the majority of this court held in Norsk, at p. 1155, residual policy considerations fall to be considered here. These are not concerned with the relationship between the parties, but with the effect of recognizing a duty of care on other legal obligations, the legal system and society more generally. Does the law already provide a remedy? Would recognition of the duty of care create the spectre of unlimited liability to an unlimited class? Are there other reasons of broad policy that suggest that the duty of care should not be recognized?

[325] At para. 39, they stated:

The second step of Anns generally arises only in cases where the duty of care asserted does not fall within a recognized category of recovery. Where it does we may be satisfied that there are not overriding policy considerations that would negative the duty of care. ...However, where a duty of care in a novel situation is alleged, as here, we believe it necessary to consider both steps of the Anns test as discussed above. This ensures that before a duty of care is imposed in a new situation, not only are foreseeability and relational proximity present, but there are no broader considerations that would make imposition of a duty of care unwise.

[326] After setting out the tests, the court ultimately concluded that there was insufficient proximity to recognize a new duty of care. At para. 44, the court noted that the statute did not impose a duty of care on the Registrar to investors; the Registrar's duty was to the public as a whole rather than individual investors; and a duty to individual investors would potentially conflict with the Registrar's overarching duty to the public.

[327] The court held that having found insufficient proximity to support a duty of care, strictly speaking it was not necessary to proceed to the second branch of the Anns test. However, the court held that residual policy considerations in that case would negate a duty of care in any event. At para. 52, the court noted that the Registrar must act fairly to a broker, which is inconsistent with a duty of care to investors. At para. 53, the court noted that the Registrar must make difficult discretionary decisions in the area of public policy, decisions which would command deference. At para. 54, the court noted that the spectre of indeterminate liability would loom large if a duty of care was recognized. At para. 55, the court stated that to impose a duty of care would be to effectively create an insurance scheme for investors at great cost to the tax-paying public.

[328] In this case, I must consider whether there is sufficient proximity between the parties to recognize a private law duty to the plaintiff, taking into account any relevant policy considerations. In my view, there is.

[329] The privilege is not simply in place to advance the public's interest in combating crime. One of its purposes is to protect the informer from retribution. While that purpose itself has a policy dimension, nevertheless the informer has a private interest in being protected from retribution which is furthered by the privilege. If the privilege is breached and the informer suffers harm, the informer has a private interest in recompense. In my view, there are no policy considerations that would suggest that the parties are not sufficiently proximate so as to give rise to a private law duty at the first stage of the Anns test.

[330] The question, then, is whether there are residual policy considerations that should negative a private law duty. In my view, there are not.

[331] None of the specific policy considerations examined by the court in Cooper are applicable here. The police are not required to balance public and private interests. Where the privilege exists, it is almost absolute. There is no spectre of indeterminate liability. In the annals of the jurisprudence, this case is unique. Counsel were unable to furnish me with any other case of a similar nature. There is no spectre of indeterminate liability that could result in great cost to the tax-paying public.

[332] I do not agree with Ms. Maxwell-Baker's submission that there will be a chilling effect if liability for damages is recognized. While the police may be required to be more careful in what they promise to potential informers, I do not see that as a reason to not recognize a private law duty to the informer. Indeed, I think the policy considerations are in the other direction. In Ashby v. White itself, Chief Justice Holt, at p. 956 Ld. Raym., p. 137 E.R., stated:

To allow this action will make public officers more careful to observe the constitution of cities and boroughs, and not to be so partial as they commonly are in all elections, which is indeed a great and growing mischief, and tends to the prejudice of the peace of the nation.

This passage was cited with approval by the Court of Appeal in Freeman-Maloy, supra, at para. 22.

[333] I am not persuaded by any floodgates considerations. As noted, I am not aware of any case similar to this one. Furthermore, Chief Justice Holt rejected a floodgates argument in Ashby v. White. At p. 955 Ld. Raym., p. 137 E.R., he stated:

So here in the principal case, the plaintiff is obstructed of his right, and shall therefore have his action. And it is no objection to say, that it will occasion multiplicity of actions; for if men will multiply injuries, actions must be multiplied too; for every man that is injured ought to have his recompense.

[334] For these reasons, I am not persuaded that the Anns/Cooper tests require that a private law duty be negated on policy grounds.

[335] Before leaving the issue of liability, I should add that I have placed no reliance on the obiter statement by Beetz J. in Bisaillon v. Keable, supra, at p.96:

I would accordingly have no difficulty in finding, although I know of no precedent on the point, that a peace officer who for example gave the media a list of his informers would be liable to severe disciplinary action and could be liable to pay damages.

[336] This statement was clearly obiter, and was made without any legal analysis.

[337] I should also mention that I have found only one case in which informer privilege was actually breached, and where there is discussion of what consequence, in a criminal context, should follow: R. v. Y. (X), supra. In that case, an accused, during an interview with the police, disclosed his activities as an informer. Unknown to him the interview was recorded. A full transcript of the interview was disclosed to several defence counsel. While in detention, another inmate learned that the accused was a “rat”, and attacked him and threatened future harm. The trial judge dismissed an application to stay the proceedings, holding that the conduct of the police and the prosecutor was inadvertent and unintentional.

[338] The Court of Appeal disagreed, and ordered that the proceedings be stayed. The Court characterized the conduct of the police and the Crown as “gross negligence” (para. 18). At para. 22, the Court stated:

Informer privilege is a class privilege. The ban on revealing an informer’s identity protects not only an individual informer from possible retribution, but also signals to potential informers that their identity too will be protected. Courts have emphasized the general protection afforded by the rule to all informers, past and present.

[339] While a criminal case, the case emphasizes, in my view, that the privilege is in place to protect informers from retribution, and that the courts must take very seriously any breach of the privilege.

e) What damages, if any, are appropriate?

[340] The plaintiffs claim damages under the following heads:

- a) General damages for Ms. Stack;
- b) Losses and expenses on the sale of the Whitby home;
- c) Expenses on the purchase and upgrading of the Seagrave home;
- d) Employment losses for Ms. Stack and Mr. Nissen; and
- e) Damages under the Family Law Act for Mr. Nissen and the children.

[341] It is not disputed that the “but for” test applies to any claim for damages in tort: the plaintiff must show that but for the defendants’ breach of duty, the damages would not have occurred: see Hanke v. Resurfice Corp., supra, at paras. 19-23. In my view, subject to proof of actual damages, the plaintiffs’ damages would not have occurred but for the defendants’ breach of duty. Had Ms. Stack’s identity not been disclosed, she and her family, in all likelihood, would still be living in their dream home on their quiet street in Whitby. Retribution at the hands of the Ellisons would not have occurred. Ms. Stack would not have suffered post-traumatic stress disorder, the symptoms of which still plague her today. She and her family would not have sold their home and moved to a strange community. Her family would not have suffered along with her.

[342] Thus, subject to proof of actual damages, the “but for” test has been met.

[343] I am not persuaded that the plaintiffs are entitled to damages arising from the sale of their Whitby home. Of importance, the plaintiffs called no expert evidence to show that they did not receive market value for their home. I have heard no evidence that the price they received for their home did not include compensation for the improvements they made to it.

[344] Nor am I persuaded that the plaintiffs are entitled to any damages arising out of their purchase of their new home in Seagrave. Once again, they called no expert evidence to show that they overpaid for that home. They have had the use and enjoyment of any improvements they made.

[345] In the final analysis, the plaintiffs have simply called insufficient evidence to show that they have suffered any loss arising out of the sale of their Whitby home or the purchase of their Seagrave home.

[346] Nor am I persuaded that either Ms. Stack or Mr. Nissen are entitled to any damages for lost income or loss of opportunity.

[347] Mr. Nissen’s income is derived entirely through commission. The only difference in his job as a salesperson and the job as a District Manager was a $400 per month expense allowance and a small override on the sales effected by a subordinate. Mr. Nissen is still one of the top salespeople in the company. He has not shown that he lost any income as a result of what happened to Ms. Stack.

[348] Ms. Stack was not working at the time of the events complained of in 2002, and it was not her intention to work until at least 2010. There is no reasonable ground for concluding that she has lost any income or suffered any lost opportunity.

[349] Accordingly, the claims for losses on the real estate and for employment losses are dismissed.

[350] In terms of Ms. Stack’s claim for general damages, it is a claim for emotional and psychological injury. Her evidence in support of such a claim is substantial.

[351] Ms. Stack herself described the effect on her of the disclosure of her identity and the harassment that she and her family suffered at the hands of the Ellisons. She said the harassment was unbearable, to the point that the family could no longer go in and out of the house through the front door, and ultimately they had to sell their home. Since these events, she feels hopeless and depressed. There are triggers that increase her symptoms of terror. She is paralyzed with fear. She has extreme anxiety. She wakes up terrified, at least weekly.

[352] These effects were testified to by many other witnesses. Mr. Nissen testified that his wife is not the same person. She is scared all the time, she is not happy, she is depressed, and she is not outgoing or confident. Her sleep is affected. She panics easily. He testified that his own life has been affected. There is a strain on him and he is afraid for the safety of his family. He is depressed, and there is a strain on their relationship.

[353] John Ecker testified that Ms. Stack, before these events, was engaging and friendly. She was trusting, helpful, happy and outgoing. She is now much different. She is guarded and she is not happy. Helen Ecker testified that Ms. Stack was warm, trusting, caring, friendly and gregarious. After these events, she became fearful and anxious. She has been down and depressed. She cannot enjoy daily activities.

[354] Christian and Morgan Nissen testified that since these events their mother has been distant and distraught. She has adverse reactions if certain triggering events occur, such as loud noises. Their mother goes through depression. She becomes distant and is not talkative. She does not sleep well. She is nervous in public. She is difficult in crowds. She has diminished confidence. She is suspicious of strangers. They both testified that their mother's situation has affected them adversely.

[355] Allan Brooks testified that before these events, Ms. Stack was successful, outgoing, friendly and confident. Since they occurred, she has become insecure.

[356] Of significance, Dr. Silver testified that Ms. Stack has signs of post-traumatic stress disorder. She demonstrates symptoms of high anxiety. She has a high degree of suspicion and a low degree of trust. She has an increased arousal system arising from noises and ordinary events. There are repeated flash backs. She is concerned that people may be talking about her, and she thinks she is being watched. This borders on a paranoid state.

[357] Dr. Silver testified that post-traumatic stress disorder is difficult to treat. Techniques of treatment are not extraordinarily effective. No treatments so far have met with very high success.

[358] Dr. Silver testified that Dr. Jeffries, the expert retained by the defendants, is of the same opinion as he is. Both he and Dr. Jeffries are concerned about potential re-traumatization of Ms. Stack.

[359] Ms. Maxwell-Baker complains that Ms. Stack's medical records were not produced, nor were her counselling records. I accept that it would have been preferable that they be produced and I will discount the evidence called by the plaintiffs to some extent. However, the evidence of the effect on Ms. Stack is substantial, and the psychiatric evidence called was un-contradicted.

[360] In order to claim for psychological injury, it must rise above ordinary upset or anxiety. As stated by McLachlin C.J.C. in Mustapha, supra, at para. 9:

This said, psychological disturbance that rises to the level of personal injury must be distinguished from psychological upset. Personal injury at law connotes serious trauma or illness: see Hinz v. Berry, [1970] 2 Q.B. 40 (C.A.), at p. 42; Page v.

Smith, at p.189; Linden and Feldthusen at pp. 425-427. The law does not recognize upset, disgust, anxiety, agitation or other mental states that fall short of injury. I would not purport to define compensable injury exhaustively, except to say that it must be serious and prolonged and rise above the ordinary annoyances, anxieties and fears that people living in society routinely, if sometimes reluctantly, accept.

[361] Based on the evidence called in this case, I have no hesitation in concluding that the psychological injury caused to Ms. Stack meets this test. It is serious and prolonged and rises above the ordinary annoyances, anxieties and fears that people living in society routinely accept. The injury is severe and debilitating and has had a significant impact on Ms. Stack's life. It is compensable at law.

[362] What must next be considered is whether the injuries suffered by Ms. Stack were too remote, in the sense that it was not reasonably foreseeable that they might occur in a person of ordinary fortitude.

[363] In Mustapha, the plaintiff developed a major depressive disorder with associated phobia and anxiety as a result of seeing flies in a bottle of water. The Supreme Court of Canada held that a person of ordinary fortitude would not suffer serious injury from seeing flies in a bottle of water, and that such a consequence would not reasonably be foreseen by a defendant.

[364] This case is not analogous to seeing flies in a bottle of water. This case has to do with a breach of a privilege, which is said to be almost absolute, one purpose of which is to prevent retribution to an informer. If retribution occurs, psychological injury might well occur. Where the privilege is breached and retribution occurs, I have no difficulty concluding that a defendant would reasonably foresee that a person of ordinary fortitude could suffer psychological damage. Once that is established, the defendant must take the plaintiff as it finds him or her for purposes of the extent of damage. As stated by McLachlin C.J.C. in Mustapha at para. 16:

Once a plaintiff establishes the foreseeability that a mental injury would occur in a person of ordinary fortitude, by contrast, the defendant must take the plaintiff as it finds him for purposes of damage. As stated in White, at p. 1512, focusing on the person of ordinary fortitude for the purposes of determining foreseeability is "not to be confused with the 'eggshell skull' situation where as a result of breach of duty the damage inflicted proves to be more serious than expected". Rather, it is a threshold test for establishing compensability of damages at law.

[365] As stated by Rouleau J.A. in Degennaro v. Oakville Trafalgar Memorial Hospital, supra, at para. 27, "The defendant needs to reasonably foresee damages suffered by a person of reasonable fortitude. Where, as here, the damages suffered are more extensive because the plaintiff was "thin-skulled", the defendant is nonetheless liable."

[366] It is difficult to fix a reasonable amount for the damages suffered in this case. Any damages awarded must take into account any aggravating features. There is no separate head of "aggravated" damages; rather any aggravating features are taken into account in fixing an amount for general damages: see McIntyre v. Grigg, supra, at para. 50.

[367] There are certain aggravating features here. First, as noted, the police did nothing whatsoever to preserve Ms. Stack's anonymity. Second, once they became aware of the harassing behaviour by Mr. Ellison, they did almost nothing about it. Apart from one brief conversation with Mr. Ellison, in which it is doubtful that the importance of the problem was impressed on Mr. Ellison, the police did nothing. There was no evidence of any follow-up with Mr. Ellison. Indeed, somewhat inexplicably, no one even followed up with Mr. Nissen or Ms. Stack to advise them that Mr. Ellison had been spoken to.

[368] The effect on Ms. Stack has been severe. Her life has been irretrievably altered. On a balance of probabilities, I am satisfied, based on the evidence of Dr. Silver, that it is unlikely that she will ever be the same as she was before these incidents.

[369] General damages for psychological injury were upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada, in the amount of $400,000 in Cinar Corporation, supra, and in the amount of $430,000 in Young v. Bella, supra. In both cases, the court held that damages in those amounts were not barred by the "cap" on general damages in personal injury cases. That cap is approximately $350,000 at present, having regard to inflation.

[370] In my view, the psychological injury in this case is not as severe as those in issue in Cinar and Young v. Bella. I think something less in this case would be appropriate. The issue of whether the cap applies is moot because I do not intend to award damages that would exceed the cap.

[371] In the final analysis, I think the amount of $345,000 is an appropriate amount for general damages for Ms. Stack, and I so award.

[372] I am not persuaded that damages for an alleged breach of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, or punitive damages, are appropriate.

[373] As for damages under the Charter, assuming a breach (a point I do not decide), it is clear that any damages would simply duplicate tort damages, and are thus not separately awardable: see Vancouver (City) v. Ward, supra, at para. 55.

[374] As for punitive damages, this is not one of those exceptional cases that requires an award of punitive damages for malicious, oppressive and high-handed misconduct that offends the court's sense of decency: see Whiten, supra, at para. 36. The conduct of the defendants does not remotely approach that standard.

[375] That leaves the claims of Mr. Nissen and the children for loss of guidance, care and companionship. Each of them has clearly lost a measure of guidance, care and companionship as a result of what happened to Ms. Stack. In Fiddler v. Chiavetti, supra, the Court of Appeal reduced an award of $200,000 for loss of guidance, care and companionship to $125,000. Generally speaking, awards of this nature tend to be somewhat modest.

[376] I will award Mr. Nissen $65,000 for loss of guidance, care and companionship and I will award $25,000 to each child.

Disposition

[377] For the foregoing reasons, I award damages as follows:

a) Margaret Stack	$345,000;
b) Chad Nissen	$ 65,000;
c) Christian Nissen	$ 25,000;
d) Morgan Nissen	$ 25,000;
TOTAL	$460,000

[378] This action was started almost 13 years ago. There may be reasons why the ordinary rule as to the calculation of pre-judgment interest ought to be modified. If necessary, I will entertain written submissions, both as to the method of calculation and the calculation itself.

[379] If the parties cannot agree, I will entertain written submissions with respect to pre-judgment interest and costs, not to exceed ten pages, together with a bill of costs and any caselaw. Ms. Hoy will have 15 days to file her submissions, and Ms. Maxwell-Baker will have 15 days to respond. Ms. Hoy will have five days to reply.

Gray J.

Released: February 26, 2015

CITATION: Nissen v. Durham Regional Police, 2015 ONSC 1268
COURT FILE NO.: 2602/02
DATE: 2015-02-26

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

CHAD NISSEN, MARGARET STACK, both personally and as litigation guardians of CHRISTIAN NISSEN and MORGAN NISSEN

Plaintiffs

– and –

DURHAM REGIONAL POLICE SERVICES BOARD,
JAMES LIEPSIG, MARK PRICE, AL SIRIZZOTTI, S

EAN FITZGERALD, JOHN DOE OR JANE DOE, BR
ENDA COWIE, ISABEL PARGANA, HER MAJESTY
THE QUEEN IN RIGHT OF ONTARIO

Defendants

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

GRAY J.

Released: February 26, 2015

TAB 59

The Constitution Act, 1982, Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (UK), 1982, c 11

Notice Regarding the French Version: The Constitution Act, 1982 provides that « A French version of the portions of the Constitution of Canada referred to in the schedule shall be prepared by the Minister of Justice of Canada as expeditiously as possible [...] ». The French Constitutional Drafting Committee was established in 1984 to assist the Minister in this task. The Committee submitted its final report, which includes forty-two constitutional enactments, to Parliament in December 1990. The English version of the final report is available on the Department of Justice website at <https://canada.justice.gc.ca/eng/rp-pr/csj-sjc/constitution/lawreg-loireg/index.html>.

Current version: in force since 1993-03-12

Link to this version: <https://canlii.ca/t/ldsx>

Citation to this version: The Constitution Act, 1982, Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (UK), 1982, c 11, <<https://canlii.ca/t/ldsx>> retrieved on 2026-03-23

Currency: Last updated from the Justice Laws Web Site on 2026-03-19

CANADA ACT 1982⁽⁸⁰⁾

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1 The Constitution Act, 1982 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

2 No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1982 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

3 So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

4 This Act may be cited as the Canada Act 1982.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982⁽⁸¹⁾

PART I

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

Rights and freedoms in Canada

1 The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

Fundamental freedoms

2 Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

Democratic rights of citizens

3 Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Maximum duration of legislative bodies

4 (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs of a general election of its members.⁽⁸²⁾

Continuation in special circumstances

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.⁽⁸³⁾

Annual sitting of legislative bodies

5 There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.⁽⁸⁴⁾

Mobility Rights

Mobility of citizens

6 (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Legal Rights

Life, liberty and security of person

7 Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Search or seizure

8 Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

Detention or imprisonment

9 Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Arrest or detention

10 Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11 Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

- (c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;
- (d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;
- (e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;
- (f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;
- (g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;
- (h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and
- (i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Treatment or punishment

12 Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

Self-crimination

13 A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

Interpreter

14 A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

Equality Rights

Equality before and under law and equal protection and benefit of law

15 (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

Affirmative action programs

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.⁽⁸⁵⁾

Official Languages of Canada

Official languages of Canada

16 (1) English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada.

Official languages of New Brunswick

(2) English and French are the official languages of New Brunswick and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the legislature and government of New Brunswick.

Advancement of status and use

(3) Nothing in this Charter limits the authority of Parliament or a legislature to advance the equality of status or use of English and French.

English and French linguistic communities in New Brunswick

16.1 (1) The English linguistic community and the French linguistic community in New Brunswick have equality of status and equal rights and privileges, including the right to distinct educational institutions and such distinct cultural institutions as are necessary for the preservation and promotion of those communities.

Role of the legislature and government of New Brunswick

(2) The role of the legislature and government of New Brunswick to preserve and promote the status, rights and privileges referred to in subsection (1) is affirmed.⁽⁸⁶⁾

Proceedings of Parliament

17 (1) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of Parliament.⁽⁸⁷⁾

Proceedings of New Brunswick legislature

(2) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of the legislature of New Brunswick.⁽⁸⁸⁾

Parliamentary statutes and records

18 (1) The statutes, records and journals of Parliament shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.⁽⁸⁹⁾

New Brunswick statutes and records

(2) The statutes, records and journals of the legislature of New Brunswick shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.⁽⁹⁰⁾

Proceedings in courts established by Parliament

19 (1) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court established by Parliament.⁽⁹¹⁾

Proceedings in New Brunswick courts

(2) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court of New Brunswick.⁽⁹²⁾

Communications by public with federal institutions

20 (1) Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language; or

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Communications by public with New Brunswick institutions

(2) Any member of the public in New Brunswick has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any office of an institution of the legislature or government of New Brunswick in English or French.

Continuation of existing constitutional provisions

21 Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any right, privilege or obligation with respect to the English and French languages, or either of them, that exists or is continued by virtue of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada.⁽⁹³⁾

Rights and privileges preserved

22 Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

Minority Language Educational Rights

Language of instruction

23 (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province, have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.⁽⁹⁴⁾

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Enforcement

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24 (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

General

Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

25 The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.⁽⁹⁵⁾

Other rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

26 The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada.

Multicultural heritage

27 This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

Rights guaranteed equally to both sexes

28 Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

Rights respecting certain schools preserved

29 Nothing in this Charter abrogates or derogates from any rights or privileges guaranteed by or under the Constitution of Canada in respect of denominational, separate or dissentient schools.⁽⁹⁶⁾

Application to territories and territorial authorities

30 A reference in this Charter to a province or to the legislative assembly or legislature of a province shall be deemed to include a reference to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, or to the appropriate legislative authority thereof, as the case may be.

Legislative powers not extended

31 Nothing in this Charter extends the legislative powers of any body or authority.

Application of Charter

Application of Charter

32 (1) This Charter applies

(a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and

(b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province.

Exception

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15 shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

Exception where express declaration

33 (1) Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

Operation of exception

(2) An Act or a provision of an Act in respect of which a declaration made under this section is in effect shall have such operation as it would have but for the provision of this Charter referred to in the declaration.

Five year limitation

(3) A declaration made under subsection (1) shall cease to have effect five years after it comes into force or on such earlier date as may be specified in the declaration.

Re-enactment

(4) Parliament or the legislature of a province may re-enact a declaration made under subsection (1).

Five year limitation

(5) Subsection (3) applies in respect of a re-enactment made under subsection (4).

Citation

Citation

34 This Part may be cited as the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

PART II

Rights of the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada

Recognition of existing aboriginal and treaty rights

35 (1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

Definition of aboriginal peoples of Canada

(2) In this Act, aboriginal peoples of Canada includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

Land claims agreements

(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) treaty rights includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

Aboriginal and treaty rights are guaranteed equally to both sexes

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.⁽⁹⁷⁾

Commitment to participation in constitutional conference

35.1 The government of Canada and the provincial governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to section 25 of this Act or to this Part,

- (a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and
- (b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on that item.⁽⁹⁸⁾

PART III

Equalization and Regional Disparities

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

36 (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

- (a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;
- (b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and
- (c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.⁽⁹⁹⁾

PART IV

Constitutional Conference

37 Repealed.⁽¹⁰⁰⁾

PART IV.I

Constitutional Conferences

37.1 Repealed.⁽¹⁰¹⁾

PART V

Procedure for Amending Constitution of Canada⁽¹⁰²⁾

General procedure for amending Constitution of Canada

38 (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by

- (a) resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons; and
- (b) resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces that have, in the aggregate, according to the then latest general census, at least fifty per cent of the population of all the provinces.

Majority of members

(2) An amendment made under subsection (1) that derogates from the legislative powers, the proprietary rights or any other rights or privileges of the legislature or government of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

Restriction on proclamation

39 (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

Compensation

40 Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

Amendment by unanimous consent

41 An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

- (a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;
- (b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;
- (c) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;
- (d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and
- (e) an amendment to this Part.

Amendment by general procedure

42 (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

- (a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;
- (b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;
- (c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;
- (d) subject to paragraph 41(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;
- (e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and
- (f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

43 An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province, may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

Amendments by Parliament

44 Subject to sections 41 and 42, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

Amendments by provincial legislatures

45 Subject to section 41, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

Initiation of amendment procedures

46 (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41, 42 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

Amendments without Senate resolution

47 (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41, 42 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

Advice to issue proclamation

48 The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

Constitutional conference

49 A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.⁽¹⁰³⁾

PART VI

Amendment to the Constitution Act, 1867

50 ⁽¹⁰⁴⁾

51 ⁽¹⁰⁵⁾

PART VII

General

Primacy of Constitution of Canada

52 (1) The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

Constitution of Canada

(2) The Constitution of Canada includes

- (a) the Canada Act 1982, including this Act;
- (b) the Acts and orders referred to in the schedule; and

(c) any amendment to any Act or order referred to in paragraph (a) or (b).

Amendments to Constitution of Canada

(3) Amendments to the Constitution of Canada shall be made only in accordance with the authority contained in the Constitution of Canada.

Repeals and new names

53 (1) The enactments referred to in Column I of the schedule are hereby repealed or amended to the extent indicated in Column II thereof and, unless repealed, shall continue as law in Canada under the names set out in Column III thereof.

Consequential amendments

(2) Every enactment, except the Canada Act 1982, that refers to an enactment referred to in the schedule by the name in Column I thereof is hereby amended by substituting for that name the corresponding name in Column III thereof, and any British North America Act not referred to in the schedule may be cited as the Constitution Act followed by the year and number, if any, of its enactment.

Repeal and consequential amendments

54 Part IV is repealed on the day that is one year after this Part comes into force and this section may be repealed and this Act renumbered, consequentially upon the repeal of Part IV and this section, by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾

54.1 Repealed.⁽¹⁰⁷⁾

French version of Constitution of Canada

55 A French version of the portions of the Constitution of Canada referred to in the schedule shall be prepared by the Minister of Justice of Canada as expeditiously as possible and, when any portion thereof sufficient to warrant action being taken has been so prepared, it shall be put forward for enactment by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada pursuant to the procedure then applicable to an amendment of the same provisions of the Constitution of Canada.⁽¹⁰⁸⁾

English and French versions of certain constitutional texts

56 Where any portion of the Constitution of Canada has been or is enacted in English and French or where a French version of any portion of the Constitution is enacted pursuant to section 55, the English and French versions of that portion of the Constitution are equally authoritative.

English and French versions of this Act

57 The English and French versions of this Act are equally authoritative.

Commencement

58 Subject to section 59, this Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.⁽¹⁰⁹⁾

Commencement of paragraph 23(1)(a) in respect of Quebec

59 (1) Paragraph 23(1)(a) shall come into force in respect of Quebec on a day to be fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Authorization of Quebec

(2) A proclamation under subsection (1) shall be issued only where authorized by the legislative assembly or government of Quebec.⁽¹¹⁰⁾

Repeal of this section

(3) This section may be repealed on the day paragraph 23(1)(a) comes into force in respect of Quebec and this Act amended and renumbered, consequentially upon the repeal of this section, by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Short title and citations

60 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1982, and the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1975 (No. 2) and this Act may be cited together as the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982.

References

61 A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.⁽¹¹¹⁾

Schedule to the Constitution Act, 1982

(Section 53)

MODERNIZATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

Column I		Column II	Column III
Item	Act Affected	Amendment	New Name
1.	British North America Act, 1867, 30-31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.)	(1) Section 1 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “1 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1867.” (2) Section 20 is repealed. (3) Class 1 of section 91 is repealed. (4) Class 1 of section 92 is repealed.	Constitution Act, 1867
2.	An Act to amend and continue the Act 32-33 Victoria chapter 3; and to establish and provide for the Government of the Province of Manitoba, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (Can.)	(1) The long title is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “Manitoba Act, 1870.” (2) Section 20 is repealed.	Manitoba Act, 1870
3.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Rupert’s Land and the North-Western Territory into the Union, dated the 23rd day of June, 1870		Rupert’s Land and North-Western Territory Order
4.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting British Columbia into the Union, dated the 16th day of May, 1871.		British Columbia Terms of Union
5.	British North America Act, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)	Section 1 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “1 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1871.”	Constitution Act, 1871

	Column I	Column II	Column III
Item	Act Affected	Amendment	New Name
6.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Prince Edward Island into the Union, dated the 26th day of June, 1873.		Prince Edward Island Terms of Union
7.	Parliament of Canada Act, 1875, 38-39 Vict., c. 38 (U.K.)		Parliament of Canada Act, 1875
8.	Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting all British possessions and Territories in North America and islands adjacent thereto into the Union, dated the 31st day of July, 1880.		Adjacent Territories Order
9.	British North America Act, 1886, 49-50 Vict., c. 35 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “3 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1886.”	Constitution Act, 1886
10.	Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889, 52-53 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)		Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889
11.	Canadian Speaker (Appointment of Deputy) Act, 1895, 2nd Sess., 59 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
12.	The Alberta Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 3 (Can.)		Alberta Act
13.	The Saskatchewan Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 42 (Can.)		Saskatchewan Act
14.	British North America Act, 1907, 7 Edw. VII, c. 11 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “2 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1907.”	Constitution Act, 1907

	Column I	Column II	Column III
Item	Act Affected	Amendment	New Name
15.	British North America Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “3 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1915.”	Constitution Act, 1915
16.	British North America Act, 1930, 20-21, Geo. V, c. 26 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “3 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1930.”	Constitution Act, 1930
17.	Statute of Westminster, 1931, 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (U.K.)	In so far as they apply to Canada, (a) section 4 is repealed; and (b) subsection 7(1) is repealed.	Statute of Westminster, 1931
18.	British North America Act, 1940, 3-4 Geo. VI, c. 36 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “2 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1940.”	Constitution Act, 1940
19.	British North America Act, 1943, 6-7 Geo. VI, c. 30 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
20.	British North America Act, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.

	Column I	Column II	Column III
Item	Act Affected	Amendment	New Name
21.	British North America Act, 1949, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “ 3 This Act may be cited as the Newfoundland Act .”	Newfoundland Act
22.	British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
23.	British North America Act, 1951, 14-15 Geo. VI, c. 32 (U.K.)	The Act is repealed.
24.	British North America Act, 1952, 1 Eliz. II, c. 15 (Can.)	The Act is repealed.
25.	British North America Act, 1960, 9 Eliz. II, c. 2 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “ 2 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1960 .”	Constitution Act, 1960
26.	British North America Act, 1964, 12-13 Eliz. II, c. 73 (U.K.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “ 2 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1964 .”	Constitution Act, 1964
27.	British North America Act, 1965, 14 Eliz. II, c. 4, Part I (Can.)	Section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “ 2 This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1965 .”	Constitution Act, 1965

	Column I	Column II	Column III
Item	Act Affected	Amendment	New Name
28.	British North America Act, 1974, 23 Eliz. II, c. 13, Part I (Can.) ⁽¹¹²⁾	Section 3, as amended by 25-26 Eliz. II, c. 28, s. 38(1) (Can.), is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “3 This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act , 1974.”	Constitution Act, 1974
29.	British North America Act, 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 28, Part I (Can.)	Section 3, as amended by 25-26 Eliz. II, c. 28, s. 31 (Can.), is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “3 This Part may be cited as the Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975.”	Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975
30.	British North America Act (No. 2), 1975, 23-24 Eliz. II, c. 53 (Can.)	Section 3 is repealed and the following substituted therefor: “3 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975.”	Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975

ENDNOTES

(80)	French version enacted as Schedule A to the Canada Act 1982 , 1982, c. 11 (U.K.).
(81)	Enacted as Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 , 1982, c. 11 (U.K.), which came into force on April 17, 1982.
(82)	See section 50, and endnotes (40) and (42) to sections 85 and 88, of the Constitution Act, 1867 .
(83)	Replaces part of Class 1 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867 , which was repealed as set out in subitem 1(3) of the Schedule to the Constitution Act, 1982 .
(84)	See endnotes (10), (41) and (42) to sections 20, 86 and 88 of the Constitution Act, 1867 .

-
- (85) Subsection 32(2) provides that section 15 shall not have effect until three years after section 32 comes into force. Section 32 came into force on April 17, 1982; therefore, section 15 had effect on April 17, 1985.
-
- (86) Section 16.1 was added by the Constitution Amendment, 1993 (New Brunswick) (see SI/93-54).
-
- (87) See section 133 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and endnote (67).
-
- (88) Ibid.
-
- (89) Ibid.
-
- (90) Ibid.
-
- (91) Ibid.
-
- (92) Ibid.
-
- (93) See, for example, section 133 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and the reference to the Manitoba Act, 1870, in endnote (67) to that section.
-
- (94) Paragraph 23(1)(a) is not in force in respect of Quebec. See section 59 of the Constitution Act, 1982.
-
- (95) Paragraph 25(b) was repealed and re-enacted by the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (see SI/84-102). Paragraph 25(b) originally read as follows:
- (b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.
-
- (96) See section 93 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and endnote (50).
-
- (97) Subsections 35(3) and (4) were added by the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (see SI/84-102).
-
- (98) Section 35.1 was added by the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (see SI/84-102).
-
- (99) See endnotes (58) and (59) to sections 114 and 118 of the Constitution Act, 1867.
-

(100)

Section 54 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provided for the repeal of Part IV (section 37) one year after Part VII came into force. Part VII came into force on April 17, 1982 thereby repealing Part IV on April 17, 1983. Section 37 read as follows:

37 (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(101)

Part IV.1 (section 37.1), which was added by the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (see SI/84-102), was repealed on April 18, 1987 by section 54.1 of the Constitution Act, 1982. Section 37.1 read as follows:

37.1 (1) In addition to the conference convened in March 1983, at least two constitutional conferences composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada, the first within three years after April 17, 1982 and the second within five years after that date.

(2) Each conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on those matters.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1).

-
- (102) Prior to the enactment of Part V, certain provisions of the Constitution of Canada and the provincial constitutions could be amended pursuant to the Constitution Act, 1867. See endnotes (44) and (48) to section 91, Class 1 and section 92, Class 1 of that Act, respectively. Other amendments to the Constitution could only be made by enactment of the Parliament of the United Kingdom.
-
- (103) A First Ministers Meeting was held June 20-21, 1996.
-
- (104) The text of this amendment is set out in the Constitution Act, 1867, as section 92A.
-
- (105) The text of this amendment is set out in the Constitution Act, 1867, as the Sixth Schedule.
-
- (106) Part VII came into force on April 17, 1982 (see SI/82-97).
-
- (107) Section 54.1, which was added by the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (see SI/84-102), provided for the repeal of Part IV.1 and section 54.1 on April 18, 1987. Section 54.1 read as follows:
- 54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987.
-
- (108) The French Constitutional Drafting Committee was established in 1984 with a mandate to assist the Minister of Justice in that task. The Committee's Final Report was tabled in Parliament in December 1990.
-
- (109) The Act, with the exception of paragraph 23(1)(a) in respect of Quebec, came into force on April 17, 1982 by proclamation issued by the Queen (see SI/82-97).
-
- (110) No proclamation has been issued under section 59.
-
- (111) Section 61 was added by the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (see SI/84-102). See also section 3 of the Constitution Act, 1985 (Representation), S.C. 1986, c. 8, Part I and the Constitution Amendment, 1987 (Newfoundland Act) (see SI/88-11).
-
- (112) See subsection 38(1) of the Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Act, 1977, L.C. 1976-77, c. 28.

Tab 60

The Constitution Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict, c 3

Current version: in force since 2023-09-15

Link to this version: <https://canlii.ca/t/56g8v>

Citation to this version: The Constitution Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict, c 3, <<https://canlii.ca/t/56g8v>> retrieved on 2026-03-23

Currency: Last updated from the Justice Laws Web Site on 2026-03-19

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

30 & 31 Victoria, c. 3 (U.K.)

An Act for the Union of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the Government thereof; and for Purposes connected therewith

(29th March 1867)

WHEREAS the Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick have expressed their Desire to be federally united into One Dominion under the Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, with a Constitution similar in Principle to that of the United Kingdom:

And whereas such a Union would conduce to the Welfare of the Provinces and promote the Interests of the British Empire:

And whereas on the Establishment of the Union by Authority of Parliament it is expedient, not only that the Constitution of the Legislative Authority in the Dominion be provided for, but also that the Nature of the Executive Government therein be declared:

And whereas it is expedient that Provision be made for the eventual Admission into the Union of other Parts of British North America:⁽¹⁾

I. Preliminary

Short title

1 This Act may be cited as the Constitution Act, 1867.⁽²⁾

2 Repealed.⁽³⁾

II. Union

Declaration of Union

3 It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the Advice of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, to declare by Proclamation that, on and after a Day therein appointed, not being more than Six Months after the passing of this Act, the Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick shall form and be One Dominion under the Name of Canada; and on and after that Day those Three Provinces shall form and be One Dominion under that Name accordingly.⁽⁴⁾

Construction of subsequent Provisions of Act

4 Unless it is otherwise expressed or implied, the Name Canada shall be taken to mean Canada as constituted under this Act.⁽⁵⁾

Four Provinces

5 Canada shall be divided into Four Provinces, named Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick.⁽⁶⁾

Provinces of Ontario and Quebec

6 The Parts of the Province of Canada (as it exists at the passing of this Act) which formerly constituted respectively the Provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada shall be deemed to be severed, and shall form Two separate Provinces. The Part which formerly constituted the Province of Upper Canada shall constitute the Province of Ontario; and the Part which formerly constituted the Province of Lower Canada shall constitute the Province of Quebec.

Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick

7 The Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shall have the same Limits as at the passing of this Act.

Decennial Census

8 In the general Census of the Population of Canada which is hereby required to be taken in the Year One thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and in every Tenth Year thereafter, the respective Populations of the Four Provinces shall be distinguished.

III. Executive Power

Declaration of Executive Power in the Queen

9 The Executive Government and Authority of and over Canada is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

Application of Provisions referring to Governor General

10 The Provisions of this Act referring to the Governor General extend and apply to the Governor General for the Time being of Canada, or other the Chief Executive Officer or Administrator for the Time being carrying on the Government of Canada on behalf and in the Name of the Queen, by whatever Title he is designated.

Constitution of Privy Council for Canada

11 There shall be a Council to aid and advise in the Government of Canada, to be styled the Queen's Privy Council for Canada; and the Persons who are to be Members of that Council shall be from Time to Time chosen and summoned by the Governor General and sworn in as Privy Councillors, and Members thereof may be from Time to Time removed by the Governor General.

All Powers under Acts to be exercised by Governor General with Advice of Privy Council, or alone

12 All Powers, Authorities, and Functions which under any Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or of the Legislature of Upper Canada, Lower Canada, Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick, are at the Union vested in or exerciseable by the respective Governors or Lieutenant Governors of those Provinces, with the Advice, or with the Advice and Consent, of the respective Executive Councils thereof, or in conjunction with those Councils, or with any Number of Members thereof, or by those Governors or Lieutenant Governors individually, shall, as far as the same continue in existence and capable of being exercised after the Union in relation to the Government of Canada, be vested in and exerciseable by the Governor General, with the Advice or with the Advice and Consent of or in conjunction with the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, or any Members thereof, or by the Governor General individually, as the Case requires, subject nevertheless (except with respect to such as exist under Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland) to be abolished or altered by the Parliament of Canada.⁽⁷⁾

Application of Provisions referring to Governor General in Council

13 The Provisions of this Act referring to the Governor General in Council shall be construed as referring to the Governor General acting by and with the Advice of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

Power to Her Majesty to authorize Governor General to appoint Deputies 14 It shall be lawful for the Queen, if Her Majesty thinks fit, to authorize the Governor General from Time to Time to appoint any Person or any Persons jointly or severally to be his Deputy or Deputies within any Part or Parts of Canada, and in that Capacity to exercise during the Pleasure of the Governor General such of the Powers, Authorities, and Functions of the Governor General as the Governor General deems it necessary or expedient to assign to him or them, subject to any Limitations or Directions expressed or given by the Queen; but the Appointment of such a Deputy or Deputies shall not affect the Exercise by the Governor General himself of any Power, Authority, or Function.

Command of Armed Forces to continue to be vested in the Queen

15 The Command-in-Chief of the Land and Naval Militia, and of all Naval and Military Forces, of and in Canada, is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

Seat of Government of Canada

16 Until the Queen otherwise directs, the Seat of Government of Canada shall be Ottawa.

IV. Legislative Power

Constitution of Parliament of Canada

17 There shall be One Parliament for Canada, consisting of the Queen, an Upper House styled the Senate, and the House of Commons.

Privileges, etc., of Houses

18 The privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members thereof respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that any Act of the Parliament of Canada defining such privileges, immunities, and powers shall not confer any privileges, immunities, or powers exceeding those at the passing of such Act held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the members thereof.⁽⁸⁾

First Session of the Parliament of Canada

19 The Parliament of Canada shall be called together not later than Six Months after the Union.⁽⁹⁾

20 Repealed.⁽¹⁰⁾

The Senate

Number of Senators

21 The Senate shall, subject to the Provisions of this Act, consist of One Hundred and five Members, who shall be styled Senators.⁽¹¹⁾

Representation of Provinces in Senate

22 In relation to the Constitution of the Senate Canada shall be deemed to consist of Four Divisions:

1. Ontario;
2. Quebec;
3. The Maritime Provinces, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island;
4. The Western Provinces of Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Alberta; which Four Divisions shall (subject to the Provisions of this Act) be equally represented in the Senate as follows: Ontario by twenty-four senators; Quebec by twenty-four senators; the Maritime Provinces and Prince Edward Island by twenty-four senators, ten thereof representing Nova Scotia, ten thereof representing New Brunswick, and four thereof representing Prince Edward Island; the Western Provinces by twenty-four senators, six thereof representing Manitoba, six thereof representing British Columbia, six thereof representing Saskatchewan, and six thereof representing Alberta; Newfoundland shall be entitled to be represented in the Senate by six members; the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut shall be entitled to be represented in the Senate by one member each.

In the Case of Quebec each of the Twenty-four Senators representing that Province shall be appointed for One of the Twenty-four Electoral Divisions of Lower Canada specified in Schedule A. to Chapter One of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada.⁽¹²⁾

Qualifications of Senator

23 The Qualifications of a Senator shall be as follows:

1. He shall be of the full age of Thirty Years;
 2. He shall be either a natural-born Subject of the Queen, or a Subject of the Queen naturalized by an Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or of the Legislature of One of the Provinces of Upper Canada, Lower Canada, Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick, before the Union, or of the Parliament of Canada after the Union;
 3. He shall be legally or equitably seised as of Freehold for his own Use and Benefit of Lands or Tenements held in Free and Common Socage, or seised or possessed for his own Use and Benefit of Lands or Tenements held in Franc-alieu or in Roture, within the Province for which he is appointed, of the Value of Four thousand Dollars, over and above all Rents, Dues, Debts, Charges, Mortgages, and Incumbrances due or payable out of or charged on or affecting the same;
 4. His Real and Personal Property shall be together worth Four thousand Dollars over and above his Debts and Liabilities;
 5. He shall be resident in the Province for which he is appointed;
 6. In the Case of Quebec he shall have his Real Property Qualification in the Electoral Division for which he is appointed, or shall be resident in that Division.
- (13)

Summons of Senator

24 The Governor General shall from Time to Time, in the Queen's Name, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, summon qualified Persons to the Senate; and, subject to the Provisions of this Act, every Person so summoned shall become and be a Member of the Senate and a Senator.

25 Repealed.⁽¹⁴⁾

Addition of Senators in certain cases

26 If at any Time on the Recommendation of the Governor General the Queen thinks fit to direct that Four or Eight Members be added to the Senate, the Governor General may by Summons to Four or Eight qualified Persons (as the Case may be), representing equally the Four Divisions of Canada, add to the Senate accordingly.⁽¹⁵⁾

Reduction of Senate to normal Number

27 In case of such Addition being at any Time made, the Governor General shall not summon any Person to the Senate, except on a further like Direction by the Queen on the like Recommendation, to represent one of the Four Divisions until such Division is represented by Twenty-four Senators and no more.⁽¹⁶⁾

Maximum Number of Senators

28 The Number of Senators shall not at any Time exceed One Hundred and thirteen.⁽¹⁷⁾

Tenure of Place in Senate

29 (1) Subject to subsection (2), a Senator shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, hold his place in the Senate for life.

Retirement upon attaining age of seventy-five years

(2) A Senator who is summoned to the Senate after the coming into force of this subsection shall, subject to this Act, hold his place in the Senate until he attains the age of seventy-five years.⁽¹⁸⁾

Resignation of Place in Senate

30 A Senator may by Writing under his Hand addressed to the Governor General resign his Place in the Senate, and thereupon the same shall be vacant.

Disqualification of Senators

31 The Place of a Senator shall become vacant in any of the following Cases:

- 1. If for Two consecutive Sessions of the Parliament he fails to give his Attendance in the Senate;
- 2. If he takes an Oath or makes a Declaration or Acknowledgment of Allegiance, Obedience, or Adherence to a Foreign Power, or does an Act whereby he becomes a Subject or Citizen, or entitled to the Rights or Privileges of a Subject or Citizen, of a Foreign Power;
- 3. If he is adjudged Bankrupt or Insolvent, or applies for the Benefit of any Law relating to Insolvent Debtors, or becomes a public Defaulter;
- 4. If he is attainted of Treason or convicted of Felony or of any infamous Crime;
- 5. If he ceases to be qualified in respect of Property or of Residence; provided, that a Senator shall not be deemed to have ceased to be qualified in respect of Residence by reason only of his residing at the Seat of the Government of Canada while holding an Office under that Government requiring his Presence there.

Summons on Vacancy in Senate

32 When a Vacancy happens in the Senate by Resignation, Death, or otherwise, the Governor General shall by Summons to a fit and qualified Person fill the Vacancy.

Questions as to Qualifications and Vacancies in Senate

33 If any Question arises respecting the Qualification of a Senator or a Vacancy in the Senate the same shall be heard and determined by the Senate.

Appointment of Speaker of Senate

34 The Governor General may from Time to Time, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, appoint a Senator to be Speaker of the Senate, and may remove him and appoint another in his Stead.⁽¹⁹⁾

Quorum of Senate

35 Until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides, the Presence of at least Fifteen Senators, including the Speaker, shall be necessary to constitute a Meeting of the Senate for the Exercise of its Powers.

Voting in Senate

36 Questions arising in the Senate shall be decided by a Majority of Voices, and the Speaker shall in all Cases have a Vote, and when the Voices are equal the Decision shall be deemed to be in the Negative.

The House of Commons

Constitution of House of Commons in Canada

37 The House of Commons shall, subject to the Provisions of this Act, consist of three hundred and eight members of whom one hundred and six shall be elected for Ontario, seventy-five for Quebec, eleven for Nova Scotia, ten for New Brunswick, fourteen for Manitoba, thirty-six for British Columbia, four for Prince Edward Island, twenty-eight for Alberta, fourteen for Saskatchewan, seven for Newfoundland, one for the Yukon Territory, two for the Northwest Territories and one for Nunavut.⁽²⁰⁾

Summoning of House of Commons

38 The Governor General shall from Time to Time, in the Queen's Name, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, summon and call together the House of Commons.

Senators not to sit in House of Commons

39 A Senator shall not be capable of being elected or of sitting or voting as a Member of the House of Commons.

Electoral districts of the four Provinces

40 Until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides, Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick shall, for the Purposes of the Election of Members to serve in the House of Commons, be divided into Electoral Districts as follows:

1. ONTARIO

Ontario shall be divided into the Counties, Ridings of Counties, Cities, Parts of Cities, and Towns enumerated in the First Schedule to this Act, each whereof shall be an Electoral District, each such District as numbered in that Schedule being entitled to return One Member.

2. QUEBEC

Quebec shall be divided into Sixty-five Electoral Districts, composed of the Sixty-five Electoral Divisions into which Lower Canada is at the passing of this Act divided under Chapter Two of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, Chapter Seventy-five of the Consolidated Statutes for Lower Canada, and the Act of the Province of Canada of the Twenty-third Year of the Queen, Chapter One, or any other Act amending the same in force at the Union, so that each such Electoral Division shall be for the Purposes of this Act an Electoral District entitled to return One Member.

3. NOVA SCOTIA

Each of the Eighteen Counties of Nova Scotia shall be an Electoral District. The County of Halifax shall be entitled to return Two Members, and each of the other Counties One Member.

4. NEW BRUNSWICK

Each of the Fourteen Counties into which New Brunswick is divided, including the City and County of St. John, shall be an Electoral District. The City of St. John shall also be a separate Electoral District. Each of those Fifteen Electoral Districts shall be entitled to return One Member.⁽²¹⁾

Continuance of existing Election Laws until Parliament of Canada otherwise provides

41 Until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides, all Laws in force in the several Provinces at the Union relative to the following Matters or any of them, namely, — the Qualifications and Disqualifications of Persons to be elected or to sit or vote as Members of the House of Assembly or Legislative Assembly in the several Provinces, the Voters at Elections of such Members, the Oaths to be taken by Voters, the Returning Officers, their Powers and Duties, the Proceedings at Elections, the Periods during which Elections may be continued, the Trial of controverted Elections, and Proceedings incident thereto, the vacating of Seats of Members, and the Execution of new Writs in case of Seats vacated otherwise than by Dissolution, — shall respectively apply to Elections of Members to serve in the House of Commons for the same several Provinces.

Provided that, until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides, at any Election for a Member of the House of Commons for the District of Algoma, in addition to Persons qualified by the Law of the Province of Canada to vote, every Male British Subject, aged Twenty-one Years or upwards, being a Householder, shall have a Vote.⁽²²⁾

42 Repealed.⁽²³⁾

43 Repealed.⁽²⁴⁾

As to Election of Speaker of House of Commons

44 The House of Commons on its first assembling after a General Election shall proceed with all practicable Speed to elect One of its Members to be Speaker.

As to filling up Vacancy in Office of Speaker

45 In case of a Vacancy happening in the Office of Speaker by Death, Resignation, or otherwise, the House of Commons shall with all practicable Speed proceed to elect another of its Members to be Speaker.

Speaker to preside

46 The Speaker shall preside at all Meetings of the House of Commons.

Provision in case of Absence of Speaker

47 Until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides, in case of the Absence for any Reason of the Speaker from the Chair of the House of Commons for a Period of Forty-eight consecutive Hours, the House may elect another of its Members to act as Speaker, and the Member so elected shall during the Continuance of such Absence of the Speaker have and execute all the Powers, Privileges, and Duties of Speaker.⁽²⁵⁾

Quorum of House of Commons

48 The Presence of at least Twenty Members of the House of Commons shall be necessary to constitute a Meeting of the House for the Exercise of its Powers, and for that Purpose the Speaker shall be reckoned as a Member.

Voting in House of Commons

49 Questions arising in the House of Commons shall be decided by a Majority of Voices other than that of the Speaker, and when the Voices are equal, but not otherwise, the Speaker shall have a Vote.

Duration of House of Commons

50 Every House of Commons shall continue for Five Years from the Day of the Return of the Writs for choosing the House (subject to be sooner dissolved by the Governor General), and no longer.⁽²⁶⁾

Readjustment of representation in Commons

51 (1) The number of members of the House of Commons and the representation of the provinces therein shall, on the completion of each decennial census, be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada provides from time to time, subject and according to the following rules:

Rules

- 1. There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing the population of the province by the electoral quotient and rounding up any fractional remainder to one.
- 2. If the number of members assigned to a province by the application of rule 1 and section 51A is less than the total number assigned to that province during the 43rd Parliament, there shall be added to the number of members so assigned the number of members that will result in the province having the same number of members as were assigned during that Parliament.⁽²⁷⁾
- 3. After the application of rules 1 and 2 and section 51A, there shall, in respect of each province that meets the condition set out in rule 4, be added, if necessary, a number of members such that, on the completion of the readjustment, the number obtained by dividing the number of members assigned to that province by the total number of members assigned to all the provinces is as close as possible to, without being below, the number obtained by dividing the population of that province by the total population of all the provinces.
- 4. Rule 3 applies to a province if, on the completion of the preceding readjustment, the number obtained by dividing the number of members assigned to that province by the total number of members assigned to all the provinces was equal to or greater than the number obtained by dividing the population of that province by the total population of all the provinces, the population of each province being its population as at July 1 of the year of the decennial census that preceded that readjustment according to the estimates prepared for the purpose of that readjustment.

5. Unless the context indicates otherwise, in these rules, the population of a province is the estimate of its population as at July 1 of the year of the most recent decennial census.
6. In these rules, electoral quotient means
 - (a) 111,166, in relation to the readjustment following the completion of the 2011 decennial census, and
 - (b) in relation to the readjustment following the completion of any subsequent decennial census, the number obtained by multiplying the electoral quotient that was applied in the preceding readjustment by the number that is the average of the numbers obtained by dividing the population of each province by the population of the province as at July 1 of the year of the preceding decennial census according to the estimates prepared for the purpose of the preceding readjustment, and rounding up any fractional remainder of that multiplication to one.

Population estimates

(1.1) For the purpose of the rules in subsection (1), there is required to be prepared an estimate of the population of Canada and of each province as at July 1, 2001 and July 1, 2011 — and, in each year following the 2011 decennial census in which a decennial census is taken, as at July 1 of that year — by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada provides from time to time.⁽²⁷⁾

Yukon Territory, Northwest Territories and Nunavut

(2) The Yukon Territory as bounded and described in the schedule to chapter Y-2 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, shall be entitled to one member, the Northwest Territories as bounded and described in section 2 of chapter N-27 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, as amended by section 77 of chapter 28 of the Statutes of Canada, 1993, shall be entitled to one member, and Nunavut as bounded and described in section 3 of chapter 28 of the Statutes of Canada, 1993, shall be entitled to one member.⁽²⁸⁾

Constitution of House of Commons

51A Notwithstanding anything in this Act a province shall always be entitled to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of senators representing such province.⁽²⁹⁾

Increase of Number of House of Commons

52 The Number of Members of the House of Commons may be from Time to Time increased by the Parliament of Canada, provided the proportionate Representation of the Provinces prescribed by this Act is not thereby disturbed.

Money Votes; Royal Assent

Appropriation and Tax Bills

53 Bills for appropriating any Part of the Public Revenue, or for imposing any Tax or Impost, shall originate in the House of Commons.

Recommendation of Money Votes

54 It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue, or of any Tax or Impost, to any Purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General in the Session in which such Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill is proposed.

Royal Assent to Bills, etc.

55 Where a Bill passed by the Houses of the Parliament is presented to the Governor General for the Queen's Assent, he shall declare, according to his Discretion, but subject to the Provisions of this Act and to Her Majesty's Instructions, either that he assents thereto in the Queen's Name, or that he withholds the Queen's Assent, or that he reserves the Bill for the Signification of the Queen's Pleasure.

Disallowance by Order in Council of Act assented to by Governor General

56 Where the Governor General assents to a Bill in the Queen's Name, he shall by the first convenient Opportunity send an authentic Copy of the Act to One of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and if the Queen in Council within Two Years after Receipt thereof by the Secretary of State thinks fit to disallow the Act, such Disallowance (with a Certificate of the Secretary of State of the Day on which the Act was received by him) being signified by the Governor General, by Speech or Message to each of the Houses of the Parliament or by Proclamation, shall annul the Act from and after the Day of such Signification.

Signification of Queen's Pleasure on Bill reserved

57 A Bill reserved for the Signification of the Queen's Pleasure shall not have any Force unless and until, within Two Years from the Day on which it was presented to the Governor General for the Queen's Assent, the Governor General signifies, by Speech or Message to each of the Houses of the Parliament or by Proclamation, that it has received the Assent of the Queen in Council.

An Entry of every such Speech, Message, or Proclamation shall be made in the Journal of each House, and a Duplicate thereof duly attested shall be delivered to the proper Officer to be kept among the Records of Canada.

V. Provincial Constitutions

Executive Power

Appointment of Lieutenant Governors of Provinces

58 For each Province there shall be an Officer, styled the Lieutenant Governor, appointed by the Governor General in Council by Instrument under the Great Seal of Canada.

Tenure of Office of Lieutenant Governor

59 A Lieutenant Governor shall hold Office during the Pleasure of the Governor General; but any Lieutenant Governor appointed after the Commencement of the First Session of the Parliament of Canada shall not be removeable within Five Years from his Appointment, except for Cause assigned, which shall be communicated to him in Writing within One Month after the Order for his Removal is made, and shall be communicated by Message to the Senate and to the House of Commons within One Week thereafter if the Parliament is then sitting, and if not then within One Week after the Commencement of the next Session of the Parliament.

Salaries of Lieutenant Governors

60 The Salaries of the Lieutenant Governors shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada.⁽³⁰⁾

Oaths, etc., of Lieutenant Governor

61 Every Lieutenant Governor shall, before assuming the Duties of his Office, make and subscribe before the Governor General or some Person authorized by him Oaths of Allegiance and Office similar to those taken by the Governor General.

Application of Provisions referring to Lieutenant Governor

62 The Provisions of this Act referring to the Lieutenant Governor extend and apply to the Lieutenant Governor for the Time being of each Province, or other the Chief Executive Officer or Administrator for the Time being carrying on the Government of the Province, by whatever Title he is designated.

Appointment of Executive Officers for Ontario and Quebec

63 The Executive Council of Ontario and of Quebec shall be composed of such Persons as the Lieutenant Governor from Time to Time thinks fit, and in the first instance of the following Officers, namely, — the Attorney General, the Secretary and Registrar of the Province, the Treasurer of the Province, the Commissioner of Crown Lands, and the Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works, with in Quebec the Speaker of the Legislative Council and the Solicitor General.⁽³¹⁾

Executive Government of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick

64 The Constitution of the Executive Authority in each of the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shall, subject to the Provisions of this Act, continue as it exists at the Union until altered under the Authority of this Act.⁽³²⁾

Powers to be exercised by Lieutenant Governor of Ontario or Quebec with Advice, or alone

65 All Powers, Authorities, and Functions which under any Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or of the Legislature of Upper Canada, Lower Canada, or Canada, were or are before or at the Union vested in or exerciseable by the respective Governors or Lieutenant Governors of those Provinces, with the Advice or with the Advice and Consent of the respective Executive Councils thereof, or in conjunction with those Councils, or with any Number of Members thereof, or by those Governors or Lieutenant Governors individually, shall, as far as the same are capable of being exercised after the Union in relation to the Government of Ontario and Quebec respectively, be vested in and shall or may be exercised by the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario and Quebec respectively, with the Advice or with the Advice and Consent of or in conjunction with the respective Executive Councils, or any Members thereof, or by the Lieutenant Governor individually, as the Case requires, subject nevertheless (except with respect to such as exist under Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain, or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland,) to be abolished or altered by the respective Legislatures of Ontario and Quebec.⁽³³⁾

Application of Provisions referring to Lieutenant Governor in Council

66 The Provisions of this Act referring to the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall be construed as referring to the Lieutenant Governor of the Province acting by and with the Advice of the Executive Council thereof.

Administration in Absence, etc., of Lieutenant Governor

67 The Governor General in Council may from Time to Time appoint an Administrator to execute the Office and Functions of Lieutenant Governor during his Absence, Illness, or other Inability.

Seats of Provincial Governments

68 Unless and until the Executive Government of any Province otherwise directs with respect to that Province, the Seats of Government of the Provinces shall be as follows, namely, — of Ontario, the City of Toronto; of Quebec, the City of Quebec; of Nova Scotia, the City of Halifax; and of New Brunswick, the City of Fredericton.

Legislative Power

1. Ontario

Legislature for Ontario

69 There shall be a Legislature for Ontario consisting of the Lieutenant Governor and of One House, styled the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Electoral districts

70 The Legislative Assembly of Ontario shall be composed of Eighty-two Members, to be elected to represent the Eighty-two Electoral Districts set forth in the First Schedule to this Act.⁽³⁴⁾

2. Quebec

Legislature for Quebec

71 There shall be a Legislature for Quebec consisting of the Lieutenant Governor and of Two Houses, styled the Legislative Council of Quebec and the Legislative Assembly of Quebec.⁽³⁵⁾

Constitution of Legislative Council

72 The Legislative Council of Quebec shall be composed of Twenty-four Members, to be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor, in the Queen's Name, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Quebec, one being appointed to represent each of the Twenty-four Electoral Divisions of Lower Canada in this Act referred to, and each holding Office for the Term of his Life, unless the Legislature of Quebec otherwise provides under the Provisions of this Act.

Qualification of Legislative Councillors

73 The Qualifications of the Legislative Councillors of Quebec shall be the same as those of the Senators for Quebec.

Resignation, Disqualification, etc.

74 The Place of a Legislative Councillor of Quebec shall become vacant in the Cases, mutatis mutandis, in which the Place of Senator becomes vacant.

Vacancies

75 When a Vacancy happens in the Legislative Council of Quebec by Resignation, Death, or otherwise, the Lieutenant Governor, in the Queen's Name, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Quebec, shall appoint a fit and qualified Person to fill the Vacancy.

Questions as to Vacancies, etc.

76 If any Question arises respecting the Qualification of a Legislative Councillor of Quebec, or a Vacancy in the Legislative Council of Quebec, the same shall be heard and determined by the Legislative Council.

Speaker of Legislative Council

77 The Lieutenant Governor may from Time to Time, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Quebec, appoint a Member of the Legislative Council of Quebec to be Speaker thereof, and may remove him and appoint another in his Stead.

Quorum of Legislative Council

78 Until the Legislature of Quebec otherwise provides, the Presence of at least Ten Members of the Legislative Council, including the Speaker, shall be necessary to constitute a Meeting for the Exercise of its Powers.

Voting in Legislative Council

79 Questions arising in the Legislative Council of Quebec shall be decided by a Majority of Voices, and the Speaker shall in all Cases have a Vote, and when the Voices are equal the Decision shall be deemed to be in the Negative.

Constitution of Legislative Assembly of Quebec

80 The Legislative Assembly of Quebec shall be composed of Sixty-five Members, to be elected to represent the Sixty-five Electoral Divisions or Districts of Lower Canada in this Act referred to, subject to Alteration thereof by the Legislature of Quebec: Provided that it shall not be lawful to present to the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec for Assent any Bill for altering the Limits of any of the Electoral Divisions or Districts mentioned in the Second Schedule to this Act, unless the Second and Third Readings of such Bill have been passed in the Legislative Assembly with the Concurrence of the Majority of the Members representing all those Electoral Divisions or Districts, and the Assent shall not be given to such Bill unless an Address has been presented by the Legislative Assembly to the Lieutenant Governor stating that it has been so passed.⁽³⁶⁾

3. Ontario and Quebec

81 Repealed.⁽³⁷⁾

Summoning of Legislative Assemblies

82 The Lieutenant Governor of Ontario and of Quebec shall from Time to Time, in the Queen's Name, by Instrument under the Great Seal of the Province, summon and call together the Legislative Assembly of the Province.

Restriction on election of Holders of offices

83 Until the Legislature of Ontario or of Quebec otherwise provides, a Person accepting or holding in Ontario or in Quebec any Office, Commission, or Employment, permanent or temporary, at the Nomination of the Lieutenant Governor, to which an annual Salary, or any Fee, Allowance, Emolument, or Profit of any Kind or Amount whatever from the Province is attached, shall not be eligible as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of the respective Province, nor shall he sit or vote as such; but nothing in this Section shall make ineligible any Person being a Member of the Executive Council of the respective Province, or holding any of the following Offices, that is to say, the Offices of Attorney General, Secretary and Registrar of the Province, Treasurer of the Province, Commissioner of Crown Lands, and Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works, and in Quebec Solicitor General, or shall disqualify him to sit or vote in the House for which he is elected, provided he is elected while holding such Office.⁽³⁸⁾

Continuance of existing Election Laws

84 Until the legislatures of Ontario and Quebec respectively otherwise provide, all Laws which at the Union are in force in those Provinces respectively, relative to the following Matters, or any of them, namely, — the Qualifications and Disqualifications of Persons to be elected or to sit or vote as Members of the Assembly of Canada, the Qualifications or Disqualifications of Voters, the Oaths to be taken by Voters, the Returning Officers, their Powers and Duties, the Proceedings at Elections, the Periods during which such Elections may be continued, and the Trial of controverted Elections and the Proceedings incident thereto, the vacating of the Seats of Members and the issuing and execution of new Writs in case of Seats vacated otherwise than by Dissolution, — shall respectively apply to Elections of Members to serve in the respective Legislative Assemblies of Ontario and Quebec.

Provided that, until the Legislature of Ontario otherwise provides, at any Election for a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario for the District of Algoma, in addition to Persons qualified by the Law of the Province of Canada to vote, every Male British Subject, aged Twenty-one Years or upwards, being a Householder, shall have a Vote.⁽³⁹⁾

Duration of Legislative Assemblies

85 Every Legislative Assembly of Ontario and every Legislative Assembly of Quebec shall continue for Four Years from the Day of the Return of the Writs for choosing the same (subject nevertheless to either the Legislative Assembly of Ontario or the Legislative Assembly of Quebec being sooner dissolved by the Lieutenant Governor of the Province), and no longer.⁽⁴⁰⁾

Yearly Session of Legislature

86 There shall be a Session of the Legislature of Ontario and of that of Quebec once at least in every Year, so that Twelve Months shall not intervene between the last Sitting of the Legislature in each Province in one Session and its first Sitting in the next Session.⁽⁴¹⁾

Speaker, Quorum, etc.

87 The following Provisions of this Act respecting the House of Commons of Canada shall extend and apply to the Legislative Assemblies of Ontario and Quebec, that is to say, — the Provisions relating to the Election of a Speaker originally and on Vacancies, the Duties of the Speaker, the Absence of the Speaker, the Quorum, and the Mode of voting, as if those Provisions were here re-enacted and made applicable in Terms to each such Legislative Assembly.

4. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick

Constitutions of Legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick

88 The Constitution of the Legislature of each of the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shall, subject to the Provisions of this Act, continue as it exists at the Union until altered under the Authority of this Act.⁽⁴²⁾

5. Ontario, Quebec, and Nova Scotia

89 Repealed.⁽⁴³⁾

6. The Four Provinces

Application to Legislatures of Provisions respecting Money Votes, etc.

90 The following Provisions of this Act respecting the Parliament of Canada, namely, — the Provisions relating to Appropriation and Tax Bills, the Recommendation of Money Votes, the Assent to Bills, the Disallowance of Acts, and the Signification of Pleasure on Bills reserved, — shall extend and apply to the Legislatures of the several Provinces as if those Provisions were here re-enacted and made applicable in Terms to the respective Provinces and the Legislatures thereof, with the Substitution of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province for the Governor General, of the Governor General for the Queen and for a Secretary of State, of One Year for Two Years, and of the Province for Canada.

Fundamental Characteristics of Quebec

Quebec

90Q.1 Quebecers form a nation.

Quebec

90Q.2 French shall be the only official language of Quebec. It is also the common language of the Quebec nation.⁽¹¹³⁾

7. Saskatchewan

Saskatchewan

90S.1 (1) Saskatchewan has autonomy with respect to all of the matters falling under its exclusive legislative jurisdiction pursuant to this Act.

(2) Saskatchewan is and always has been dependent on agriculture, and on the development of its non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy generation and production.

(3) Saskatchewan's ability to control the development of its non-renewable natural resources, its forestry resources and its electrical energy generation and production is critical to the future well-being and prosperity of Saskatchewan and its people.⁽¹¹⁴⁾

VI. Distribution of Legislative Powers

Powers of the Parliament

Legislative Authority of Parliament of Canada

91 It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make Laws for the Peace, Order, and good Government of Canada, in relation to all Matters not coming within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces; and for greater Certainty, but not so as to restrict the Generality of the foregoing Terms of this Section, it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive Legislative Authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say,

- 1. Repealed.⁽⁴⁴⁾
- 1A. The Public Debt and Property.⁽⁴⁵⁾
- 2. The Regulation of Trade and Commerce.

- 2A. Unemployment insurance.⁽⁴⁶⁾
- 3. The raising of Money by any Mode or System of Taxation.
- 4. The borrowing of Money on the Public Credit.
- 5. Postal Service.
- 6. The Census and Statistics.
- 7. Militia, Military and Naval Service, and Defence.
- 8. The fixing of and providing for the Salaries and Allowances of Civil and other Officers of the Government of Canada.
- 9. Beacons, Buoys, Lighthouses, and Sable Island.
- 10. Navigation and Shipping.
- 11. Quarantine and the Establishment and Maintenance of Marine Hospitals.
- 12. Sea Coast and Inland Fisheries.
- 13. Ferries between a Province and any British or Foreign Country or between Two Provinces.
- 14. Currency and Coinage.
- 15. Banking, Incorporation of Banks, and the Issue of Paper Money.
- 16. Savings Banks.
- 17. Weights and Measures.
- 18. Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes.
- 19. Interest.
- 20. Legal Tender.
- 21. Bankruptcy and Insolvency.
- 22. Patents of Invention and Discovery.
- 23. Copyrights.
- 24. Indians, and Lands reserved for the Indians.
- 25. Naturalization and Aliens.
- 26. Marriage and Divorce.
- 27. The Criminal Law, except the Constitution of Courts of Criminal Jurisdiction, but including the Procedure in Criminal Matters.
- 28. The Establishment, Maintenance, and Management of Penitentiaries.

- 29. Such Classes of Subjects as are expressly excepted in the Enumeration of the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces.

And any Matter coming within any of the Classes of Subjects enumerated in this Section shall not be deemed to come within the Class of Matters of a local or private Nature comprised in the Enumeration of the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces.⁽⁴⁷⁾

Exclusive Powers of Provincial Legislatures

Subjects of exclusive Provincial Legislation

92 In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say,

- 1. Repealed.⁽⁴⁸⁾
- 2. Direct Taxation within the Province in order to the raising of a Revenue for Provincial Purposes.
- 3. The borrowing of Money on the sole Credit of the Province.
- 4. The Establishment and Tenure of Provincial Offices and the Appointment and Payment of Provincial Officers.
- 5. The Management and Sale of the Public Lands belonging to the Province and of the Timber and Wood thereon.
- 6. The Establishment, Maintenance, and Management of Public and Reformatory Prisons in and for the Province.
- 7. The Establishment, Maintenance, and Management of Hospitals, Asylums, Charities, and Eleemosynary Institutions in and for the Province, other than Marine Hospitals.
- 8. Municipal Institutions in the Province.
- 9. Shop, Saloon, Tavern, Auctioneer, and other Licences in order to the raising of a Revenue for Provincial, Local, or Municipal Purposes.
- 10. Local Works and Undertakings other than such as are of the following Classes:
 - (a) Lines of Steam or other Ships, Railways, Canals, Telegraphs, and other Works and Undertakings connecting the Province with any other or others of the Provinces, or extending beyond the Limits of the Province:
 - (b) Lines of Steam Ships between the Province and any British or Foreign Country:

(c) Such Works as, although wholly situate within the Province, are before or after their Execution declared by the Parliament of Canada to be for the general Advantage of Canada or for the Advantage of Two or more of the Provinces.

11. The Incorporation of Companies with Provincial Objects.
12. The Solemnization of Marriage in the Province.
13. Property and Civil Rights in the Province.
14. The Administration of Justice in the Province, including the Constitution, Maintenance, and Organization of Provincial Courts, both of Civil and of Criminal Jurisdiction, and including Procedure in Civil Matters in those Courts.
15. The Imposition of Punishment by Fine, Penalty, or Imprisonment for enforcing any Law of the Province made in relation to any Matter coming within any of the Classes of Subjects enumerated in this Section.
16. Generally all Matters of a merely local or private Nature in the Province.

Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

- (a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;
- (b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and
- (c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

Primary production

(5) The expression primary production has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section.

(49)

Education

Legislation respecting Education

93 In and for each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Education, subject and according to the following Provisions:

1. Nothing in any such Law shall prejudicially affect any Right or Privilege with respect to Denominational Schools which any Class of Persons have by Law in the Province at the Union;
2. All the Powers, Privileges, and Duties at the Union by Law conferred and imposed in Upper Canada on the Separate Schools and School Trustees of the Queen's Roman Catholic Subjects shall be and the same are hereby extended to the Dissident Schools of the Queen's Protestant and Roman Catholic Subjects in Quebec;

3. Where in any Province a System of Separate or Dissident Schools exists by Law at the Union or is thereafter established by the Legislature of the Province, an Appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any Act or Decision of any Provincial Authority affecting any Right or Privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic Minority of the Queen's Subjects in relation to Education;
4. In case any such Provincial Law as from Time to Time seems to the Governor General in Council requisite for the due Execution of the Provisions of this Section is not made, or in case any Decision of the Governor General in Council on any Appeal under this Section is not duly executed by the proper Provincial Authority in that Behalf, then and in every such Case, and as far only as the Circumstances of each Case require, the Parliament of Canada may make remedial Laws for the due Execution of the Provisions of this Section and of any Decision of the Governor General in Council under this Section.⁽⁵⁰⁾

Quebec

93A Paragraphs (1) to (4) of section 93 do not apply to Quebec.⁽⁵¹⁾

Uniformity of Laws in Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick

Legislation for Uniformity of Laws in Three Provinces

94 Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the Parliament of Canada may make Provision for the Uniformity of all or any of the Laws relative to Property and Civil Rights in Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and of the Procedure of all or any of the Courts in those Three Provinces, and from and after the passing of any Act in that Behalf the Power of the Parliament of Canada to make Laws in relation to any Matter comprised in any such Act shall, notwithstanding anything in this Act, be unrestricted; but any Act of the Parliament of Canada making Provision for such Uniformity shall not have effect in any Province unless and until it is adopted and enacted as Law by the Legislature thereof.

Old Age Pensions

Legislation respecting old age pensions and supplementary benefits

94A The Parliament of Canada may make laws in relation to old age pensions and supplementary benefits, including survivors' and disability benefits irrespective of age, but no such law shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to any such matter.⁽⁵²⁾

Agriculture and Immigration

Concurrent Powers of Legislation respecting Agriculture, etc.

95 In each Province the Legislature may make Laws in relation to Agriculture in the Province, and to Immigration into the Province; and it is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from Time to Time make Laws in relation to Agriculture in all or any of the Provinces, and to Immigration into all or any of the Provinces; and any Law of the Legislature of a Province relative to Agriculture or to Immigration shall have effect in and for the Province as long and as far only as it is not repugnant to any Act of the Parliament of Canada.

VII. Judicature

Appointment of Judges

96 The Governor General shall appoint the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts in each Province, except those of the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Selection of Judges in Ontario, etc.

97 Until the Laws relative to Property and Civil Rights in Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the Procedure of the Courts in those Provinces, are made uniform, the Judges of the Courts of those Provinces appointed by the Governor General shall be selected from the respective Bars of those Provinces.

Selection of Judges in Quebec

98 The Judges of the Courts of Quebec shall be selected from the Bar of that Province.

Tenure of office of Judges

99 (1) Subject to subsection (2) of this section, the judges of the superior courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Termination at age 75

(2) A judge of a superior court, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this section, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of seventy-five years, or upon the coming into force of this section if at that time he has already attained that age.

(53)

Salaries, etc., of Judges

100 The Salaries, Allowances, and Pensions of the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts (except the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick), and of the Admiralty Courts in Cases where the Judges thereof are for the Time being paid by Salary, shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada.⁽⁵⁴⁾

General Court of Appeal, etc.

101 The Parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from Time to Time provide for the Constitution, Maintenance, and Organization of a General Court of Appeal for Canada, and for the Establishment of any additional Courts for the better Administration of the Laws of Canada.⁽⁵⁵⁾

VIII. Revenues; Debts; Assets; Taxation

Creation of Consolidated Revenue Fund

102 All Duties and Revenues over which the respective Legislatures of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick before and at the Union had and have Power of Appropriation, except such Portions thereof as are by this Act reserved to the respective Legislatures of the Provinces, or are raised by them in accordance with the special Powers conferred on them by this Act, shall form One Consolidated Revenue Fund, to be appropriated for the Public Service of Canada in the Manner and subject to the Charges in this Act provided.

Expenses of Collection, etc.

103 The Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada shall be permanently charged with the Costs, Charges, and Expenses incident to the Collection, Management, and Receipt thereof, and the same shall form the First Charge thereon, subject to be reviewed and audited in such Manner as shall be ordered by the Governor General in Council until the Parliament otherwise provides.

Interest of Provincial Public Debts

104 The annual Interest of the Public Debts of the several Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick at the Union shall form the Second Charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Salary of Governor General

105 Unless altered by the Parliament of Canada, the Salary of the Governor General shall be Ten thousand Pounds Sterling Money of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and the same shall form the Third Charge thereon.⁽⁵⁶⁾

Appropriation from Time to Time

106 Subject to the several Payments by this Act charged on the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, the same shall be appropriated by the Parliament of Canada for the Public Service.

Transfer of Stocks, etc.

107 All Stocks, Cash, Banker's Balances, and Securities for Money belonging to each Province at the Time of the Union, except as in this Act mentioned, shall be the Property of Canada, and shall be taken in Reduction of the Amount of the respective Debts of the Provinces at the Union.

Transfer of Property in Schedule

108 The Public Works and Property of each Province, enumerated in the Third Schedule to this Act, shall be the Property of Canada.

Property in Lands, Mines, etc.

109 All Lands, Mines, Minerals, and Royalties belonging to the several Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick at the Union, and all Sums then due or payable for such Lands, Mines, Minerals, or Royalties, shall belong to the several Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick in which the same are situate or arise, subject to any Trusts existing in respect thereof, and to any Interest other than that of the Province in the same.⁽⁵⁷⁾

Assets connected with Provincial Debts

110 All Assets connected with such Portions of the Public Debt of each Province as are assumed by that Province shall belong to that Province.

Canada to be liable for Provincial Debts

111 Canada shall be liable for the Debts and Liabilities of each Province existing at the Union.

Debts of Ontario and Quebec

112 Ontario and Quebec conjointly shall be liable to Canada for the Amount (if any) by which the Debt of the Province of Canada exceeds at the Union Sixty-two million five hundred thousand Dollars, and shall be charged with Interest at the Rate of Five per Centum per Annum thereon.

Assets of Ontario and Quebec

113 The Assets enumerated in the Fourth Schedule to this Act belonging at the Union to the Province of Canada shall be the Property of Ontario and Quebec conjointly.

Debt of Nova Scotia

114 Nova Scotia shall be liable to Canada for the Amount (if any) by which its Public Debt exceeds at the Union Eight million Dollars, and shall be charged with Interest at the Rate of Five per Centum per Annum thereon.⁽⁵⁸⁾

Debt of New Brunswick

115 New Brunswick shall be liable to Canada for the Amount (if any) by which its Public Debt exceeds at the Union Seven million Dollars, and shall be charged with Interest at the Rate of Five per Centum per Annum thereon.

Payment of interest to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick

116 In case the Public Debts of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick do not at the Union amount to Eight million and Seven million Dollars respectively, they shall respectively receive by half-yearly Payments in advance from the Government of Canada Interest at Five per Centum per Annum on the Difference between the actual Amounts of their respective Debts and such stipulated Amounts.

Provincial Public Property

117 The several Provinces shall retain all their respective Public Property not otherwise disposed of in this Act, subject to the Right of Canada to assume any Lands or Public Property required for Fortifications or for the Defence of the Country.

118 Repealed.⁽⁵⁹⁾

Further Grant to New Brunswick

119 New Brunswick shall receive by half-yearly Payments in advance from Canada for the Period of Ten Years from the Union an additional Allowance of Sixty-three thousand Dollars per Annum; but as long as the Public Debt of that Province remains under Seven million Dollars, a Deduction equal to the Interest at Five per Centum per Annum on such Deficiency shall be made from that Allowance of Sixty-three thousand Dollars.⁽⁶⁰⁾

Form of Payments

120 All Payments to be made under this Act, or in discharge of Liabilities created under any Act of the Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick respectively, and assumed by Canada, shall, until the Parliament of Canada otherwise directs, be made in such Form and Manner as may from Time to Time be ordered by the Governor General in Council.

Canadian Manufactures, etc.

121 All Articles of the Growth, Produce, or Manufacture of any one of the Provinces shall, from and after the Union, be admitted free into each of the other Provinces.

Continuance of Customs and Excise Laws

122 The Customs and Excise Laws of each Province shall, subject to the Provisions of this Act, continue in force until altered by the Parliament of Canada.⁽⁶¹⁾

Exportation and Importation as between Two Provinces

123 Where Customs Duties are, at the Union, leviable on any Goods, Wares, or Merchandises in any Two Provinces, those Goods, Wares, and Merchandises may, from and after the Union, be imported from one of those Provinces into the other of them on Proof of Payment of the Customs Duty leviable thereon in the Province of Exportation, and on Payment of such further Amount (if any) of Customs Duty as is leviable thereon in the Province of Importation.⁽⁶²⁾

Lumber Dues in New Brunswick

124 Nothing in this Act shall affect the Right of New Brunswick to levy the Lumber Dues provided in Chapter Fifteen of Title Three of the Revised Statutes of New Brunswick, or in any Act amending that Act before or after the Union, and not increasing the Amount of such Dues; but the Lumber of any of the Provinces other than New Brunswick shall not be subject to such Dues.⁽⁶³⁾

Exemption of Public Lands, etc.

125 No Lands or Property belonging to Canada or any Province shall be liable to Taxation.

Provincial Consolidated Revenue Fund

126 Such Portions of the Duties and Revenues over which the respective Legislatures of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick had before the Union Power of Appropriation as are by this Act reserved to the respective Governments or Legislatures of the Provinces, and all Duties and Revenues raised by them in accordance with the special Powers conferred upon them by this Act, shall in each Province form One Consolidated Revenue Fund to be appropriated for the Public Service of the Province.

IX. Miscellaneous Provisions

General

127 Repealed.⁽⁶⁴⁾

Oath of Allegiance, etc.

128 Every Member of the Senate or House of Commons of Canada shall before taking his Seat therein take and subscribe before the Governor General or some Person authorized by him, and every Member of a Legislative Council or Legislative Assembly of any Province shall before taking his Seat therein take and subscribe before the Lieutenant Governor of the Province or some Person authorized by him, the Oath of Allegiance contained in the Fifth Schedule to this Act; and every Member of the Senate of Canada and every Member of the Legislative Council of Quebec shall also, before taking his Seat therein, take and subscribe before the Governor General, or some Person authorized by him, the Declaration of Qualification contained in the same Schedule.

Quebec

128Q.1 Section 128 does not apply to Quebec.⁽¹¹⁵⁾

Continuance of existing Laws, Courts, Officers, etc.

129 Except as otherwise provided by this Act, all Laws in force in Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick at the Union, and all Courts of Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction, and all legal Commissions, Powers, and Authorities, and all Officers, Judicial, Administrative, and Ministerial, existing therein at the Union, shall continue in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick respectively, as if the Union had not been made; subject nevertheless (except with respect to such as are enacted by or exist under Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland,) to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the Parliament of Canada, or by the Legislature of the respective Province, according to the Authority of the Parliament or of that Legislature under this Act.⁽⁶⁵⁾

Transfer of Officers to Canada

130 Until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides, all Officers of the several Provinces having Duties to discharge in relation to Matters other than those coming within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces shall be Officers of Canada, and shall continue to discharge the Duties of their respective Offices under the same Liabilities, Responsibilities, and Penalties as if the Union had not been made.⁽⁶⁶⁾

Appointment of new Officers

131 Until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides, the Governor General in Council may from Time to Time appoint such Officers as the Governor General in Council deems necessary or proper for the effectual Execution of this Act.

Treaty Obligations

132 The Parliament and Government of Canada shall have all Powers necessary or proper for performing the Obligations of Canada or of any Province thereof, as Part of the British Empire, towards Foreign Countries, arising under Treaties between the Empire and such Foreign Countries.

Use of English and French Languages

133 Either the English or the French Language may be used by any Person in the Debates of the Houses of the Parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the Legislature of Quebec; and both those Languages shall be used in the respective Records and Journals of those Houses; and either of those Languages may be used by any Person or in any Pleading or Process in or issuing from any Court of Canada established under this Act, and in or from all or any of the Courts of Quebec.

The Acts of the Parliament of Canada and of the Legislature of Quebec shall be printed and published in both those Languages.⁽⁶⁷⁾

Ontario and Quebec

Appointment of Executive Officers for Ontario and Quebec

134 Until the Legislature of Ontario or of Quebec otherwise provides, the Lieutenant Governors of Ontario and Quebec may each appoint under the Great Seal of the Province the following Officers, to hold Office during Pleasure, that is to say, — the Attorney General, the Secretary and Registrar of the Province, the Treasurer of the Province, the Commissioner of Crown Lands, and the Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works, and in the Case of Quebec the Solicitor General, and may, by Order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, from Time to Time prescribe the Duties of those Officers, and of the several Departments over which they shall preside or to which they shall belong, and of the Officers and Clerks thereof, and may also appoint other and additional Officers to hold Office during Pleasure, and may from Time to Time prescribe the Duties of those Officers, and of the several Departments over which they shall preside or to which they shall belong, and of the Officers and Clerks thereof.⁽⁶⁸⁾

Powers, Duties, etc. of Executive Officers

135 Until the Legislature of Ontario or Quebec otherwise provides, all Rights, Powers, Duties, Functions, Responsibilities, or Authorities at the passing of this Act vested in or imposed on the Attorney General, Solicitor General, Secretary and Registrar of the Province of Canada, Minister of Finance, Commissioner of Crown Lands, Commissioner of Public Works, and Minister of Agriculture and Receiver General, by any Law, Statute, or Ordinance of Upper Canada, Lower Canada, or Canada, and not repugnant to this Act, shall be vested in or imposed on any Officer to be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor for the Discharge of the same or any of them; and the Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works shall perform the Duties and Functions of the Office of Minister of Agriculture at the passing of this Act imposed by the Law of the Province of Canada, as well as those of the Commissioner of Public Works.⁽⁶⁹⁾

Great Seals

136 Until altered by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the Great Seals of Ontario and Quebec respectively shall be the same, or of the same Design, as those used in the Provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada respectively before their Union as the Province of Canada.

Construction of temporary Acts

137 The words and from thence to the End of the then next ensuing Session of the Legislature, or Words to the same Effect, used in any temporary Act of the Province of Canada not expired before the Union, shall be construed to extend and apply to the next Session of the Parliament of Canada if the Subject Matter of the Act is within the Powers of the same as defined by this Act, or to the next Sessions of the Legislatures of Ontario and Quebec respectively if the Subject Matter of the Act is within the Powers of the same as defined by this Act.

As to Errors in Names

138 From and after the Union the Use of the Words Upper Canada instead of Ontario, or Lower Canada instead of Quebec, in any Deed, Writ, Process, Pleading, Document, Matter, or Thing shall not invalidate the same.

As to issue of Proclamations before Union, to commence after Union

139 Any Proclamation under the Great Seal of the Province of Canada issued before the Union to take effect at a Time which is subsequent to the Union, whether relating to that Province, or to Upper Canada, or to Lower Canada, and the several Matters and Things therein proclaimed, shall be and continue of like Force and Effect as if the Union had not been made.⁽⁷⁰⁾

As to issue of Proclamations after Union

140 Any Proclamation which is authorized by any Act of the Legislature of the Province of Canada to be issued under the Great Seal of the Province of Canada, whether relating to that Province, or to Upper Canada, or to Lower Canada, and which is not issued before the Union, may be issued by the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario or of Quebec, as its Subject Matter requires, under the Great Seal thereof; and from and after the Issue of such Proclamation the same and the several Matters and Things therein proclaimed shall be and continue of the like Force and Effect in Ontario or Quebec as if the Union had not been made.⁽⁷¹⁾

Penitentiary

141 The Penitentiary of the Province of Canada shall, until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides, be and continue the Penitentiary of Ontario and of Quebec.⁽⁷²⁾

Arbitration respecting Debts, etc.

142 The Division and Adjustment of the Debts, Credits, Liabilities, Properties, and Assets of Upper Canada and Lower Canada shall be referred to the Arbitrament of Three Arbitrators, One chosen by the Government of Ontario, One by the Government of Quebec, and One by the Government of Canada; and the Selection of the Arbitrators shall not be made until the Parliament of Canada and the Legislatures of Ontario and Quebec have met; and the Arbitrator chosen by the Government of Canada shall not be a Resident either in Ontario or in Quebec.⁽⁷³⁾

Division of Records

143 The Governor General in Council may from Time to Time order that such and so many of the Records, Books, and Documents of the Province of Canada as he thinks fit shall be appropriated and delivered either to Ontario or to Quebec, and the same shall thenceforth be the Property of that Province; and any Copy thereof or Extract therefrom, duly certified by the Officer having charge of the Original thereof, shall be admitted as Evidence.⁽⁷⁴⁾

Constitution of Townships in Quebec

144 The Lieutenant Governor of Quebec may from Time to Time, by Proclamation under the Great Seal of the Province, to take effect from a Day to be appointed therein, constitute Townships in those Parts of the Province of Quebec in which Townships are not then already constituted, and fix the Metes and Bounds thereof.

X. Intercolonial Railway

145 Repealed.⁽⁷⁵⁾

XI. Admission of Other Colonies

Power to admit Newfoundland, etc., into the Union

146 It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the Advice of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, on Addresses from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, and from the Houses of the respective Legislatures of the Colonies or Provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, and British Columbia, to admit those Colonies or Provinces, or any of them, into the Union, and on Address from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada to admit Rupert's Land and the North-western Territory, or either of them, into the Union, on such Terms and Conditions in each Case as are in the Addresses expressed and as the Queen thinks fit to approve, subject to the Provisions of this Act; and the Provisions of any Order in Council in that Behalf shall have effect as if they had been enacted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.⁽⁷⁶⁾

As to Representation of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island in Senate

147 In case of the Admission of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, or either of them, each shall be entitled to a Representation in the Senate of Canada of Four Members, and (notwithstanding anything in this Act) in case of the Admission of Newfoundland the normal Number of Senators shall be Seventy-six and their maximum Number shall be Eighty-two; but Prince Edward Island when admitted shall be deemed to be comprised in the third of the Three Divisions into which Canada is, in relation to the Constitution of the Senate, divided by this Act, and accordingly, after the Admission of Prince Edward Island, whether Newfoundland is admitted or not, the Representation of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the Senate shall, as Vacancies occur, be reduced from Twelve to Ten Members respectively, and the Representation of each of those Provinces shall not be increased at any Time beyond Ten, except under the Provisions of this Act for the Appointment of Three or Six additional Senators under the Direction of the Queen.⁽⁷⁷⁾

THE FIRST SCHEDULE⁽⁷⁸⁾

Electoral Districts of Ontario

A. EXISTING ELECTORAL DIVISIONS.

Counties

- 1. Prescott.
- 2. Glengarry.

3. Stormont.
4. Dundas.
5. Russell.
6. Carleton.
7. Prince Edward.
8. Halton.
9. Essex.

Ridings of Counties

10. North Riding of Lanark.
11. South Riding of Lanark.
12. North Riding of Leeds and North Riding of Grenville.
13. South Riding of Leeds.
14. South Riding of Grenville.
15. East Riding of Northumberland.
16. West Riding of Northumberland (excepting therefrom the Township of South Monaghan).
17. East Riding of Durham.
18. West Riding of Durham.
19. North Riding of Ontario.
20. South Riding of Ontario.
21. East Riding of York.
22. West Riding of York.
23. North Riding of York.
24. North Riding of Wentworth.
25. South Riding of Wentworth.
26. East Riding of Elgin.
27. West Riding of Elgin.
28. North Riding of Waterloo.
29. South Riding of Waterloo.
30. North Riding of Brant.

- 31. South Riding of Brant.
- 32. North Riding of Oxford.
- 33. South Riding of Oxford.
- 34. East Riding of Middlesex.

Cities, Parts of Cities, and Towns

- 35. West Toronto.
- 36. East Toronto.
- 37. Hamilton.
- 38. Ottawa.
- 39. Kingston.
- 40. London.
- 41. Town of Brockville, with the Township of Elizabethtown thereto attached.
- 42. Town of Niagara, with the Township of Niagara thereto attached.
- 43. Town of Cornwall, with the Township of Cornwall thereto attached.

B. NEW ELECTORAL DIVISIONS

- 44. The Provisional Judicial District of Algoma.

The County of BRUCE, divided into Two Ridings, to be called respectively the North and South Ridings:

- 45. The North Riding of Bruce to consist of the Townships of Bury, Lindsay, Eastnor, Albermarle, Amable, Arran, Bruce, Elderslie, and Saugeen, and the Village of Southampton.
- 46. The South Riding of Bruce to consist of the Townships of Kincardine (including the Village of Kincardine), Greenock, Brant, Huron, Kinloss, Culross, and Carrick.

The County of HURON, divided into Two Ridings, to be called respectively the North and South Ridings:

- 47. The North Riding to consist of the Townships of Ashfield, Wawanosh, Turnberry, Howick, Morris, Grey, Colborne, Hullett, including the Village of Clinton, and McKillop.
- 48. The South Riding to consist of the Town of Goderich and the Townships of Goderich, Tuckersmith, Stanley, Hay, Usborne, and Stephen.

The County of MIDDLESEX, divided into three Ridings, to be called respectively the North, West, and East Ridings:

- 49. The North Riding to consist of the Townships of McGillivray and Biddulph (taken from the County of Huron), and Williams East, Williams West, Adelaide, and Lobo.
- 50. The West Riding to consist of the Townships of Delaware, Carradoc, Metcalfe, Mosa and Ekfrid, and the Village of Strathroy.

[The East Riding to consist of the Townships now embraced therein, and be bounded as it is at present.]
- 51. The County of LAMBTON to consist of the Townships of Bosanquet, Warwick, Plympton, Sarnia, Moore, Enniskillen, and Brooke, and the Town of Sarnia.
- 52. The County of KENT to consist of the Townships of Chatham, Dover, East Tilbury, Romney, Raleigh, and Harwich, and the Town of Chatham.
- 53. The County of BOTHWELL to consist of the Townships of Sombra, Dawn, and Euphemia (taken from the County of Lambton), and the Townships of Zone, Camden with the Gore thereof, Orford, and Howard (taken from the County of Kent).

The County of GREY divided into Two Ridings to be called respectively the South and North Ridings:

- 54. The South Riding to consist of the Townships of Bentinck, Glenelg, Artemesia, Osprey, Normanby, Egremont, Proton, and Melancthon.
- 55. The North Riding to consist of the Townships of Collingwood, Euphrasia, Holland, Saint-Vincent, Sydenham, Sullivan, Derby, and Keppel, Sarawak and Brooke, and the Town of Owen Sound.

The County of PERTH divided into Two Ridings, to be called respectively the South and North Ridings:

- 56. The North Riding to consist of the Townships of Wallace, Elma, Logan, Ellice, Mornington, and North Easthope, and the Town of Stratford.
- 57. The South Riding to consist of the Townships of Blanchard, Downie, South Easthope, Fullarton, Hibbert, and the Villages of Mitchell and Ste. Marys.

The County of WELLINGTON divided into Three Ridings to be called respectively North, South and Centre Ridings:

- 58. The North Riding to consist of the Townships of Amaranth, Arthur, Luther, Minto, Maryborough, Peel, and the Village of Mount Forest.

- 59. The Centre Riding to consist of the Townships of Garafraxa, Erin, Eramosa, Nichol, and Pilkington, and the Villages of Fergus and Elora.
- 60. The South Riding to consist of the Town of Guelph, and the Townships of Guelph and Puslinch.

The County of NORFOLK, divided into Two Ridings, to be called respectively the South and North Ridings:

- 61. The South Riding to consist of the Townships of Charlotteville, Houghton, Walsingham, and Woodhouse, and with the Gore thereof.
- 62. The North Riding to consist of the Townships of Middleton, Townsend, and Windham, and the Town of Simcoe.
- 63. The County of HALDIMAND to consist of the Townships of Oneida, Seneca, Cayuga North, Cayuga South, Raynham, Walpole, and Dunn.
- 64. The County of MONCK to consist of the Townships of Canborough and Moulton, and Sherbrooke, and the Village of Dunnville (taken from the County of Haldimand), the Townships of Caister and Gainsborough (taken from the County of Lincoln), and the Townships of Pelham and Wainfleet (taken from the County of Welland).
- 65. The County of LINCOLN to consist of the Townships of Clinton, Grantham, Grimsby, and Louth, and the Town of St. Catherines.
- 66. The County of WELLAND to consist of the Townships of Bertie, Crowland, Humberstone, Stamford, Thorold, and Willoughby, and the Villages of Chippewa, Clifton, Fort Erie, Thorold, and Welland.
- 67. The County of PEEL to consist of the Townships of Chinguacousy, Toronto, and the Gore of Toronto, and the Villages of Brampton and Streetsville.
- 68. The County of CARDWELL to consist of the Townships of Albion and Caledon (taken from the County of Peel), and the Townships of Adjala and Mono (taken from the County of Simcoe).

The County of SIMCOE, divided into Two Ridings, to be called respectively the South and North Ridings:

- 69. The South Riding to consist of the Townships of West Gwillimbury, Tecumseth, Innisfil, Essa, Tosorontio, Mulmur, and the Village of Bradford.
- 70. The North Riding to consist of the Townships of Nottawasaga, Sunnidale, Vespra, Flos, Oro, Medonte, Orillia and Matchedash, Tiny and Tay, Balaklava and Robinson, and the Towns of Barrie and Collingwood.

The County of VICTORIA, divided into Two Ridings, to be called respectively the South and North Ridings:

- 71. The South Riding to consist of the Townships of Ops, Mariposa, Emily, Verulam, and the Town of Lindsay.
- 72. The North Riding to consist of the Townships of Anson, Bexley, Carden, Dalton, Digby, Eldon, Fenelon, Hindon, Laxton, Lutterworth, Macaulay and Draper, Sommerville, and Morrison, Muskoka, Monck and Watt (taken from the County of Simcoe), and any other surveyed Townships lying to the North of the said North Riding.

The County of PETERBOROUGH, divided into Two Ridings, to be called respectively the West and East Ridings:

- 73. The West Riding to consist of the Townships of South Monaghan (taken from the County of Northumberland), North Monaghan, Smith, and Ennismore, and the Town of Peterborough.
- 74. The East Riding to consist of the Townships of Asphodel, Belmont and Methuen, Douro, Dummer, Galway, Harvey, Minden, Stanhope and Dysart, Otonabee, and Snowden, and the Village of Ashburnham, and any other surveyed Townships lying to the North of the said East Riding.

The County of HASTINGS, divided into Three Ridings, to be called respectively the West, East, and North Ridings:

- 75. The West Riding to consist of the Town of Belleville, the Township of Sydney, and the Village of Trenton.
- 76. The East Riding to consist of the Townships of Thurlow, Tyendinaga, and Hungerford.
- 77. The North Riding to consist of the Townships of Rawdon, Huntingdon, Madoc, Elzevir, Tudor, Marmora, and Lake, and the Village of Stirling, and any other surveyed Townships lying to the North of the said North Riding.
- 78. The County of LENNOX to consist of the Townships of Richmond, Adolphustown, North Fredericksburg, South Fredericksburg, Ernest Town, and Amherst Island, and the Village of Napanee.
- 79. The County of ADDINGTON to consist of the Townships of Camden, Portland, Sheffield, Hinchinbrooke, Kaladar, Kennebec, Olden, Oso, Anglesea, Barrie, Clarendon, Palmerston, Effingham, Abinger, Miller, Canonto, Denbigh, Loughborough, and Bedford.
- 80. The County of FRONTENAC to consist of the Townships of Kingston, Wolfe Island, Pittsburg and Howe Island, and Storrington.

The County of RENFREW, divided into Two Ridings, to be called respectively the South and North Ridings:

81. The South Riding to consist of the Townships of McNab, Bagot, Blithfield, Brougham, Horton, Admaston, Grattan, Matawatchan, Griffith, Lyndoch, Raglan, Radcliffe, Brudenell, Sebastopol, and the Villages of Arnprior and Renfrew.
82. The North Riding to consist of the Townships of Ross, Bromley, Westmeath, Stafford, Pembroke, Wilberforce, Alice, Petawawa, Buchanan, South Algona, North Algona, Fraser, McKay, Wylie, Rolph, Head, Maria, Clara, Haggerty, Sherwood, Burns, and Richards, and any other surveyed Townships lying North-westerly of the said North Riding.

Every Town and incorporated Village existing at the Union, not especially mentioned in this Schedule, is to be taken as Part of the County or Riding within which it is locally situate.

THE SECOND SCHEDULE

Electoral Districts of Quebec specially fixed

COUNTIES OF — Pontiac.

Ottawa.

Argenteuil.

Huntingdon.

Missisquoi.

Brome.

Shefford.

Stanstead.

Compton.

Wolfe and Richmond.

Megantic.

Town of Sherbrooke.

THE THIRD SCHEDULE

Provincial Public Works and Property to be the Property of Canada

1. Canals, with Lands and Water Power connected therewith.
2. Public Harbours.
3. Lighthouses and Piers, and Sable Island.
4. Steamboats, Dredges, and public Vessels.
5. Rivers and Lake Improvements.
6. Railways and Railway Stocks, Mortgages, and other Debts due by Railway Companies.
7. Military Roads.
8. Custom Houses, Post Offices, and all other Public Buildings, except such as the Government of Canada appropriate for the Use of the Provincial Legislatures and Governments.
9. Property transferred by the Imperial Government, and known as Ordnance Property.
10. Armouries, Drill Sheds, Military Clothing, and Munitions of War, and Lands set apart for general Public Purposes.

THE FOURTH SCHEDULE

Assets to be the Property of Ontario and Quebec conjointly

Upper Canada Building Fund.

Lunatic Asylums.

Normal School.

Court Houses in Aylmer, Montreal, Kamouraska, } Lower Canada.

Law Society, Upper Canada.

Montreal Turnpike Trust.

University Permanent Fund.

Royal Institution.

Consolidated Municipal Loan Fund, Upper Canada.

Consolidated Municipal Loan Fund, Lower Canada.

Agricultural Society, Upper Canada.

Lower Canada Legislative Grant.

Quebec Fire Loan.

Temiscouata Advance Account.

Quebec Turnpike Trust.

Education — East.

Building and Jury Fund, Lower Canada.

Municipalities Fund.

Lower Canada Superior Education Income Fund.

THE FIFTH SCHEDULE

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

I A.B. do swear, That I will be faithful and bear true Allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

Note. — The Name of the King or Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the Time being is to be substituted from Time to Time, with proper Terms of Reference thereto.

DECLARATION OF QUALIFICATION

I A.B. do declare and testify, That I am by Law duly qualified to be appointed a Member of the Senate of Canada [or as the Case may be], and that I am legally or equitably seised as of Freehold for my own Use and Benefit of Lands or Tenements held in Free and Common Socage [or seised or possessed for my own Use and Benefit of Lands or Tenements held in Franc-alieu or in Roture (as the Case may be),] in the Province of Nova Scotia [or as the Case may be] of the Value of Four thousand Dollars over and above all Rents, Dues, Debts, Mortgages, Charges, and Incumbrances due or payable out of or charged on or affecting the same, and that I have not collusively or colourably obtained a Title to or become possessed of the said Lands and Tenements or any Part thereof for the Purpose of enabling me to become a Member of the Senate of Canada [or as the Case may be], and that my Real and Personal Property are together worth Four thousand Dollars over and above my Debts and Liabilities.

THE SIXTH SCHEDULE⁽⁷⁹⁾

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

1 For the purposes of section 92A of this Act,

(a) production from a non-renewable natural resource is primary production therefrom if

(i) it is in the form in which it exists upon its recovery or severance from its natural state, or

(ii) it is a product resulting from processing or refining the resource, and is not a manufactured product or a product resulting from refining crude oil, refining upgraded heavy crude oil, refining gases or liquids derived from coal or refining a synthetic equivalent of crude oil; and

(b) production from a forestry resource is primary production therefrom if it consists of sawlogs, poles, lumber, wood chips, sawdust or any other primary wood product, or wood pulp, and is not a product manufactured from wood.

ENDNOTES

(1) The enacting clause was repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.). It read as follows:

Be it therefore enacted and declared by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, as follows:

(2) As amended by the Constitution Act, 1982, which came into force on April 17, 1982. The section originally read as follows:

1 This Act may be cited as The British North America Act, 1867.

(3) Section 2, repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.), read as follows:

2 The Provisions of this Act referring to Her Majesty the Queen extend also to the Heirs and Successors of Her Majesty, Kings and Queens of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

(4) The first day of July, 1867, was fixed by proclamation dated May 22, 1867.

(5)

Partially repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14
(U.K.). The section originally read as follows:

4 The subsequent Provisions of this Act shall, unless it is otherwise expressed or implied, commence and have effect on and after the Union, that is to say, on and after the Day appointed for the Union taking effect in the Queen's Proclamation; and in the same Provisions, unless it is otherwise expressed or implied, the Name Canada shall be taken to mean Canada as constituted under this Act.

(6)

Canada now consists of ten provinces (Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland and Labrador) and three territories (Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut).

The first territories added to the Union were Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory, (subsequently designated the Northwest Territories), which were admitted pursuant to section 146 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Rupert's Land Act, 1868, 31-32 Vict., c. 105 (U.K.), by the Rupert's Land and North-Western Territory Order of June 23, 1870, effective July 15, 1870. Prior to the admission of those territories, the Parliament of Canada enacted An Act for the temporary Government of Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory when united with Canada (32-33 Vict., c. 3), and the Manitoba Act, 1870, (33 Vict., c. 3), which provided for the formation of the Province of Manitoba.

British Columbia was admitted into the Union pursuant to section 146 of the Constitution Act, 1867, by the British Columbia Terms of Union, being Order in Council of May 16, 1871, effective July 20, 1871.

Prince Edward Island was admitted pursuant to section 146 of the Constitution Act, 1867, by the Prince Edward Island Terms of Union, being Order in Council of June 26, 1873, effective July 1, 1873.

On June 29, 1871, the United Kingdom Parliament enacted the Constitution Act, 1871 (34-35 Vict., c. 28) authorizing the creation of additional provinces out of territories not included in any province. Pursuant to this statute, the Parliament of Canada enacted the Alberta Act, (July 20, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 3) and the Saskatchewan Act, (July 20, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 42), providing for the creation of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, respectively. Both of these Acts came into force on September 1, 1905.

Meanwhile, all remaining British possessions and territories in North America and the islands adjacent thereto, except the colony of Newfoundland and its dependencies, were admitted into the Canadian Confederation by the Adjacent Territories Order, dated July 31, 1880.

The Parliament of Canada added portions of the Northwest Territories to the adjoining provinces in 1912 by The Ontario Boundaries Extension Act, S.C. 1912, 2 Geo. V, c. 40, The Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, 1912, 2 Geo. V, c. 45 and The Manitoba Boundaries Extension Act, 1912, 2 Geo. V, c. 32, and further additions were made to Manitoba by The Manitoba Boundaries Extension Act, 1930, 20-21 Geo. V, c. 28.

The Yukon Territory was created out of the Northwest Territories in 1898 by The Yukon Territory Act, 61 Vict., c. 6 (Can.).

Newfoundland was added on March 31, 1949, by the Newfoundland Act, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.), which ratified the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada.

Nunavut was created out of the Northwest Territories in 1999 by the Nunavut Act, S.C. 1993, c. 28.

(7) See endnote (65) to section 129, below.

(8) Repealed and re-enacted by the Parliament of Canada Act, 1875, 38-39 Vict., c. 38 (U.K.). The original section read as follows:

18 The Privileges, Immunities, and Powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons and by the Members thereof respectively shall be such as are from Time to Time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that the same shall never exceed those at the passing of this Act held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and by the Members thereof.

(9) Spent. The first session of the first Parliament began on November 6, 1867.

(10) Section 20, repealed by the Constitution Act, 1982, read as follows:

20 There shall be a Session of the Parliament of Canada once at least in every Year, so that Twelve Months shall not intervene between the last Sitting of the Parliament in one Session and its first sitting in the next Session.

Section 20 has been replaced by section 5 of the Constitution Act, 1982, which provides that there shall be a sitting of Parliament at least once every twelve months.

(11) As amended by the Constitution Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.) and modified by the Newfoundland Act, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.), the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 53, and the Constitution Act, 1999 (Nunavut), S.C. 1998, c. 15, Part 2. The original section read as follows:

21 The Senate shall, subject to the Provisions of this Act, consist of Seventy-two Members, who shall be styled Senators.

The Manitoba Act, 1870, added two senators for Manitoba; the British Columbia Terms of Union added three; upon admission of Prince Edward Island four more were provided by section 147 of the Constitution Act, 1867; the Alberta Act and the Saskatchewan Act each added four. The Senate was reconstituted at 96 by the Constitution Act, 1915. Six more senators were added upon union with Newfoundland, and one senator each was added for the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories by the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975. One senator was added for Nunavut by the Constitution Act, 1999 (Nunavut).

(12) As amended by the Constitution Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.), the Newfoundland Act, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.), the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 53 and the Constitution Act, 1999 (Nunavut), S.C. 1998, c. 15, Part 2. The original section read as follows:

22 In relation to the Constitution of the Senate, Canada shall be deemed to consist of Three Divisions:

1. Ontario;
2. Quebec;
3. The Maritime Provinces, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick; which Three Divisions shall (subject to the Provisions of this Act) be equally represented in the Senate as follows: Ontario by Twenty-four Senators; Quebec by Twenty-four Senators; and the Maritime Provinces by Twenty-four Senators, Twelve thereof representing Nova Scotia, and Twelve thereof representing New Brunswick.

In the case of Quebec each of the Twenty-four Senators representing that Province shall be appointed for One of the Twenty-four Electoral Divisions of Lower Canada specified in Schedule A. to Chapter One of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada.

The reference in section 22 to the Consolidated Statutes of Canada is a reference to the Consolidated Statutes of 1859.

(13) Section 44 of the Constitution Act, 1999 (Nunavut), S.C. 1998, c. 15, Part 2, provided that, for the purposes of that Part (which added one senator for Nunavut), the word “Province” in section 23 of the Constitution Act, 1867 has the same meaning as is assigned to the word “province” by section 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, as amended, which provides that the term “province” means “a province of Canada, and includes Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut”.

Section 2 of the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 53, provided that for the purposes of that Act (which added one senator each for the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories) the term “Province” in section 23 of the Constitution Act, 1867 has the same meaning as is assigned to the term “province” by section 28 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. I-23, which provides that the term “province” means “a province of Canada, and includes the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories”.

(14) Repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.). The section read as follows:

25 Such Persons shall be first summoned to the Senate as the Queen by Warrant under Her Majesty’s Royal Sign Manual thinks fit to approve, and their Names shall be inserted in the Queen’s Proclamation of Union.

(15) As amended by the Constitution Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.). The original section read as follows:

26 If at any Time on the Recommendation of the Governor General the Queen thinks fit to direct that Three or Six Members be added to the Senate, the Governor General may by Summons to Three or Six qualified Persons (as the Case may be), representing equally the Three Divisions of Canada, add to the Senate accordingly.

(16) As amended by the Constitution Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.). The original section read as follows:

27 In case of such Addition being at any Time made the Governor General shall not summon any Person to the Senate except on a further like Direction by the Queen on the like Recommendation, until each of the Three Divisions of Canada is represented by Twenty-four Senators and no more.

(17) As amended by the Constitution Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.), the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 53, and the Constitution Act, 1999 (Nunavut), S.C. 1998, c. 15, Part 2. The original section read as follows:

28 The Number of Senators shall not at any Time exceed Seventy-eight.

(18) As enacted by the Constitution Act, 1965, S.C. 1965, c. 4, which came into force on June 2, 1965. The original section read as follows:

29 A Senator shall, subject to the Provisions of this Act, hold his Place in the Senate for Life.

(19) Provision for exercising the functions of Speaker during his or her absence is made by Part II of the Parliament of Canada Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-1 (formerly the Speaker of the Senate Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. S-14). Doubts as to the power of Parliament to enact the Speaker of the Senate Act were removed by the Canadian Speaker (Appointment of Deputy) Act, 1895, 2nd Sess., 59 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.), which was repealed by the Constitution Act, 1982.

(20) The figures given here result from the application of section 51, as enacted by the Constitution Act, 1985 (Representation), S.C. 1986, c. 8, Part I, and amended by the Constitution Act, 1999 (Nunavut), S.C. 1998, c. 15, Part 2, and readjustments made pursuant to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-3. The original section (which was altered from time to time as the result of the addition of new provinces and changes in population) read as follows:

37 The House of Commons shall, subject to the Provisions of this Act, consist of one hundred and eighty-one members, of whom Eighty-two shall be elected for Ontario, Sixty-five for Quebec, Nineteen for Nova Scotia, and Fifteen for New Brunswick.

-
- (21) Spent. The electoral districts are now established by proclamations issued from time to time under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. E-3, as amended for particular districts by Acts of Parliament (see the most recent Table of Public Statutes and Responsible Ministers).
-
- (22) Spent. Elections are now provided for by the Canada Elections Act, S.C. 2000, c. 9; qualifications and disqualifications of members by the Parliament of Canada Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-1. The right of citizens to vote and hold office is provided for in section 3 of the Constitution Act, 1982.
-
- (23) Repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.). The section read as follows:
- 42 For the First Election of Members to serve in the House of Commons the Governor General shall cause Writs to be issued by such Person, in such Form, and addressed to such Returning Officers as he thinks fit.
- The Person issuing Writs under this Section shall have the like Powers as are possessed at the Union by the Officers charged with the issuing of Writs for the Election of Members to serve in the respective House of Assembly or Legislative Assembly of the Province of Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick; and the Returning Officers to whom Writs are directed under this Section shall have the like Powers as are possessed at the Union by the Officers charged with the returning of Writs for the Election of Members to serve in the same respective House of Assembly or Legislative Assembly.
-
- (24) Repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.). The section read as follows:
- 43 In case a Vacancy in the Representation in the House of Commons of any Electoral District happens before the Meeting of the Parliament, or after the Meeting of the Parliament before Provision is made by the Parliament in this Behalf, the Provisions of the last foregoing Section of this Act shall extend and apply to the issuing and returning of a Writ in respect of such Vacant District.
-
- (25) Provision for exercising the functions of Speaker during his or her absence is now made by Part III of the Parliament of Canada Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-1.
-
- (26) The term of the twelfth Parliament was extended by the British North America Act, 1916, 6-7 Geo. V., c. 19 (U.K.), which Act was repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1927, 17-18 Geo. V, c. 42 (U.K.). See also the Constitution Act, 1982, subsection 4(1), which provides that no House of Commons shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members, and subsection 4(2), which provides for continuation of the House of Commons in special circumstances.
-

(27)

As enacted by An Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (electoral representation), S.C. 2022, c. 6, which came into force on royal assent on June 23, 2022. This amendment replaces rule 2 of subsection 51(1) of the Constitution Act, 1867. Section 1 of the amending Act provides an alternative title, Preserving Provincial Representation in the House of Commons Act. The Act provides rules for the readjustment of the number of members and the representation of provinces in the House of Commons. It also sets out transitional measures at sections 4 and 5, providing for the application of the amendment to the readjustment of electoral boundaries under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (R.S.C. 1985, c. E-3).

Rule 2 of subsection 51(1) of the Constitution Act, 1867 as amended by s. 2 of the Fair Representation Act (S.C. 2011, c. 26) read as follows:

If the number of members assigned to a province by the application of rule 1 and section 51A is less than the total number assigned to that province on the date of the coming into force of the Constitution Act, 1985 (Representation), there shall be added to the number of members so assigned such number of members as will result in the province having the same number of members as were assigned on that date.

The section, as originally enacted, read as follows:

51 On the Completion of the Census in the Year One Thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and of each subsequent decennial Census, the Representation of the Four Provinces shall be readjusted by such Authority, in such Manner, and from such Time, as the Parliament of Canada from Time to Time provides, subject and according to the following Rules:

1. Quebec shall have the fixed Number of Sixty-five Members:
2. There shall be assigned to each of the other Provinces such a Number of Members as will bear the same Proportion to the Number of its Population (ascertained at such Census) as the Number Sixty-five bears to the Number of the Population of Quebec (so ascertained):
3. In the Computation of the Number of Members for a Province a fractional Part not exceeding One Half of the whole Number requisite for entitling the Province to a Member shall be disregarded; but a fractional Part exceeding One Half of that Number shall be equivalent to the whole Number:
4. On any such Re-adjustment the Number of Members for a Province shall not be reduced unless the Proportion which the Number of the Population of the Province bore to the Number of the aggregate Population of Canada at the then last preceding Re-adjustment of the Number of Members for the Province is ascertained at the then latest Census to be diminished by One Twentieth Part or upwards:
5. Such Re-adjustment shall not take effect until the Termination of the then existing Parliament.

Section 51 was amended by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.) by repealing the words after “of the census” to “seventy-one and” and the word “subsequent”.

By the British North America Act, 1943, 6-7 Geo. VI, c. 30 (U.K.), which Act was repealed by the Constitution Act, 1982, redistribution of seats following the 1941 census was postponed until the first session of Parliament after the war. The section was re-enacted by the British North America Act, 1946, 9-10 Geo. VI, c. 63 (U.K.), which Act was also repealed by the Constitution Act, 1982, to read as follows:

51(1) The number of members of the House of Commons shall be two hundred and fifty-five and the representation of the provinces therein shall forthwith upon the coming into force of this section and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

1. Subject as hereinafter provided, there shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members computed by dividing the total population of the provinces by two hundred and fifty-four and by dividing the population of each province by the quotient so obtained, disregarding, except as hereinafter in this section provided, the remainder, if any, after the said process of division.
2. If the total number of members assigned to all the provinces pursuant to rule one is less than two hundred and fifty-four, additional members shall be assigned to the provinces (one to a province) having remainders in the computation under rule one commencing with the province having the largest remainder and continuing with the other provinces in the order of the magnitude of their respective remainders until the total number of members assigned is two hundred and fifty-four.
3. Notwithstanding anything in this section, if upon completion of a computation under rules one and two, the number of members to be assigned to a province is less than the number of senators representing the said province, rules one and two shall cease to apply in respect of the said province, and there shall be assigned to the said province a number of members equal to the said number of senators.
4. In the event that rules one and two cease to apply in respect of a province then, for the purpose of computing the number of members to be assigned to the provinces in respect of which rules one and two continue to apply, the total population of the provinces shall be reduced by the number of the population of the province in respect of which rules one and two have ceased to apply and the number two hundred and fifty-four shall be reduced by the number of members assigned to such province pursuant to rule three.
5. Such readjustment shall not take effect until the termination of the then existing Parliament.

(2) The Yukon Territory as constituted by Chapter forty-one of the Statutes of Canada, 1901, together with any Part of Canada not comprised within a province which may from time to time be included therein by the Parliament of Canada for the purposes of representation in Parliament, shall be entitled to one member.

The section was re-enacted as follows by the British North America Act, 1952, S.C. 1952, c. 15 (which Act was also repealed by the Constitution Act, 1982):

51(1) Subject as hereinafter provided, the number of members of the House of Commons shall be two hundred and sixty-three and the representation of the provinces therein shall forthwith upon the coming into force of this section and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

1. There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members computed by dividing the total population of the provinces by two hundred and sixty-one and by dividing the population of each province by the quotient so obtained, disregarding, except as hereinafter in this section provided, the remainder, if any, after the said process of division.
2. If the total number of members assigned to all the provinces pursuant to rule one is less than two hundred and sixty-one, additional members shall be assigned to the provinces (one to a province) having remainders in the computation under rule one commencing with the province having the largest remainder and continuing with the other provinces in the order of the magnitude of their respective remainders until the total number of members assigned is two hundred and sixty-one.
3. Notwithstanding anything in this section, if upon completion of a computation under rules one and two the number of members to be assigned to a province is less than the number of senators representing the said province, rules one and two shall cease to apply in respect of the said province, and there shall be assigned to the said province a number of members equal to the said number of senators.
4. In the event that rules one and two cease to apply in respect of a province then, for the purposes of computing the number of members to be assigned to the provinces in respect of which rules one and two continue to apply, the total population of the provinces shall be reduced by the number of the population of the province in respect of which rules one and two have ceased to apply and the number two hundred and sixty-one shall be reduced by the number of members assigned to such province pursuant to rule three.
5. On any such readjustment the number of members for any province shall not be reduced by more than fifteen per cent below the representation to which such province was entitled under rules one to four of this subsection at the last preceding readjustment of the representation of that province, and there shall be no reduction in the representation of any province as a result of which that province would have a smaller number of members than any other province that according to the results of the then last decennial census did not have a larger population; but for the purposes of any subsequent readjustment of representation under this section any increase in the number of members of the House of Commons resulting from the application of this rule shall not be included in the divisor mentioned in rules one to four of this subsection.

6. Such readjustment shall not take effect until the termination of the then existing Parliament.

(2) The Yukon Territory as constituted by chapter forty-one of the statutes of Canada, 1901, shall be entitled to one member, and such other part of Canada not comprised within a province as may from time to time be defined by the Parliament of Canada shall be entitled to one member.

Subsection 51(1) was re-enacted by the Constitution Act, 1974, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 13, to read as follows:

51(1) The number of members of the House of Commons and the representation of the provinces therein shall upon the coming into force of this subsection and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following Rules:

1. There shall be assigned to Quebec seventy-five members in the readjustment following the completion of the decennial census taken in the year 1971, and thereafter four additional members in each subsequent readjustment.

2. Subject to Rules 5(2) and (3), there shall be assigned to a large province a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing the population of the large province by the electoral quotient of Quebec.

3. Subject to Rules 5(2) and (3), there shall be assigned to a small province a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing

(a) the sum of the populations, determined according to the results of the penultimate decennial census, of the provinces (other than Quebec) having populations of less than one and a half million, determined according to the results of that census, by the sum of the numbers of members assigned to those provinces in the readjustment following the completion of that census; and

(b) the population of the small province by the quotient obtained under paragraph (a).

4. Subject to Rules 5(1)(a), (2) and (3), there shall be assigned to an intermediate province a number of members equal to the number obtained

(a) by dividing the sum of the populations of the provinces (other than Quebec) having populations of less than one and a half million by the sum of the number of members assigned to those provinces under any of Rules

3, 5(1)(b), (2) and (3);

(b) by dividing the population of the intermediate province by the quotient obtained under paragraph (a); and

(c) by adding to the number of members assigned to the intermediate province in the readjustment following the completion of the penultimate decennial census one-half of the difference resulting from the subtraction of that number from the quotient obtained under paragraph (b).

5.(1) On any readjustment,

(a) if no province (other than Quebec) has a population of less than one and a half million, Rule 4 shall not be applied and, subject to Rules 5(2) and (3), there shall be assigned to an intermediate province a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing

(i) the sum of the populations, determined according to the results of the penultimate decennial census, of the provinces, (other than Quebec) having populations of not less than one and a half million and not more than two and a half million, determined according to the results of that census, by the sum of the numbers of members assigned to those provinces in the readjustment following the completion of that census, and

(ii) the population of the intermediate province by the quotient obtained under subparagraph (i);

(b) if a province (other than Quebec) having a population of

(i) less than one and a half million, or

(ii) not less than one and a half million and not more than two and a half million does not have a population greater than its population determined according to the results of the penultimate decennial census, it shall, subject to Rules 5(2) and (3), be assigned the number of members assigned to it in the readjustment following the completion of that census.

(2) On any readjustment,

(a) if, under any of Rules 2 to 5(1), the number of members to be assigned to a province (in this paragraph referred to as “the first province”) is smaller than the number of members to be assigned to any other province not having a population greater than that of the first province, those Rules shall not be applied to the first province and it shall be assigned a number of members equal to the largest number of members to be assigned to any other province not having a population greater than that of the first province;

(b) if, under any of Rules 2 to 5(1)(a), the number of members to be assigned to a province is smaller than the number of members assigned to it in the readjustment following the completion of the penultimate decennial census, those Rules shall not be applied to it and it shall be assigned the latter number of members;

(c) if both paragraphs (a) and (b) apply to a province, it shall be assigned a number of members equal to the greater of the numbers produced under those paragraphs.

(3) On any readjustment,

(a) if the electoral quotient of a province (in this paragraph referred to as “the first province”) obtained by dividing its population by the number of members to be assigned to it under any of Rules 2 to 5(2) is greater than the electoral quotient of Quebec, those Rules shall not be applied to the first province and it shall be assigned a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing its population by the electoral quotient of Quebec;

(b) if, as a result of the application of Rule 6(2)(a), the number of members assigned to a province under paragraph (a) equals the number of members to be assigned to it under any of Rules 2 to 5(2), it shall be assigned that number of members and paragraph (a) shall cease to apply to that province.

6. (1) In these Rules, electoral quotient means, in respect of a province, the quotient obtained by dividing its population, determined according to the results of the then most recent decennial census, by the number of members to be assigned to it under any of Rules 1 to 5(3) in the readjustment following the completion of that census;

intermediate province means a province (other than Quebec) having a population greater than its population determined according to the results of the penultimate decennial census but not more than two and a half million and not less than one and a half million;

large province means a province (other than Quebec) having a population greater than two and a half million; penultimate decennial census means the decennial census that preceded the then most recent decennial census; population means, except where otherwise specified, the population determined according to the results of the then most recent decennial census; small province means a province (other than Quebec) having a population greater than its population determined according to the results of the penultimate decennial census and less than one and half million.

(2) For the purposes of these Rules,

(a) if any fraction less than one remains upon completion of the final calculation that produces the number of members to be assigned to a province, that number of members shall equal the number so produced disregarding the fraction;

(b) if more than one readjustment follows the completion of a decennial census, the most recent of those readjustments shall, upon taking effect, be deemed to be the only readjustment following the completion of that census;

(c) a readjustment shall not take effect until the termination of the then existing Parliament.

Subsection 51(1) was re-enacted by the Constitution Act, 1985 (Representation), S.C. 1986, c. 8, Part I, as follows:

51(1) The number of members of the House of Commons and the representation of the provinces therein shall, on the coming into force of this subsection and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census, be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

1. There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing the total population of the provinces by two hundred and seventy-nine and by dividing the population of each province by the quotient so obtained, counting any remainder in excess of 0.50 as one after the said process of division.

2. If the total number of members that would be assigned to a province by the application of rule 1 is less than the total number assigned to that province on the date of coming into force of this subsection, there shall be added to the number of members so assigned such number of members as will result in the province having the same number of members as were assigned on that date.

Subsection 51(1) was re-enacted by the Fair Representation Act, S.C. 2011, c. 26, s. 2, as follows:

51(1) The number of members of the House of Commons and the representation of the provinces therein shall, on the completion of each decennial census, be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada provides from time to time, subject and according to the following rules:

1. There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing the population of the province by the electoral quotient and rounding up any fractional remainder to one.

2. If the number of members assigned to a province by the application of rule 1 and section 51A is less than the total number assigned to that province on the date of the coming into force of the Constitution Act, 1985

(Representation), there shall be added to the number of members so assigned such number of members as will result in the province having the same number of members as were assigned on that date.

3. After the application of rules 1 and 2 and section 51A, there shall, in respect of each province that meets the condition set out in rule 4, be added, if necessary, a number of members such that, on the completion of the readjustment, the number obtained by dividing the number of members assigned to that province by the total number of members assigned to all the provinces is as close as possible to, without being below, the number obtained by dividing the population of that province by the total population of all the provinces.

4. Rule 3 applies to a province if, on the completion of the preceding readjustment, the number obtained by dividing the number of members assigned to that province by the total number of members assigned to all the provinces was equal to or greater than the number obtained by dividing the population of that province by the total population of all the provinces, the population of each province being its population as at July 1 of the year of the decennial census that preceded that readjustment according to the estimates prepared for the purpose of that readjustment.

5. Unless the context indicates otherwise, in these rules, the population of a province is the estimate of its population as at July 1 of the year of the most recent decennial census.

6. In these rules, electoral quotient means

(a) 111,166, in relation to the readjustment following the completion of the 2011 decennial census, and

(b) in relation to the readjustment following the completion of any subsequent decennial census, the number obtained by multiplying the electoral quotient that was applied in the preceding readjustment by the number that is the average of the numbers obtained by dividing the population of each province by the population of the province as at July 1 of the year of the preceding decennial census according to the estimates prepared for the purpose of the preceding readjustment, and rounding up any fractional remainder of that multiplication to one.

(1.1) For the purpose of the rules in subsection (1), there is required to be prepared an estimate of the population of Canada and of each province as at July 1, 2001 and July 1, 2011 — and, in each year following the 2011 decennial census in which a decennial census is taken, as at July 1 of that year — by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada provides from time to time.

-
- (28) As enacted by the Constitution Act, 1999 (Nunavut), S.C. 1998, c. 15, Part 2. Note that the description of the territory of Yukon is now set out in Schedule 1 to the Yukon Act, S.C. 2002, c. 7, which replaced R.S.C. 1985, c. Y-2. Subsection 51(2) was previously amended by the Constitution Act (No. 1), 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 28, and read as follows:
- (2) The Yukon Territory as bounded and described in the schedule to chapter Y-2 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, shall be entitled to one member, and the Northwest Territories as bounded and described in section 2 of chapter N-22 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, shall be entitled to two members.
-
- (29) As enacted by the Constitution Act, 1915, 5-6 Geo. V, c. 45 (U.K.).
-
- (30) Provided for by the Salaries Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-3.
-
- (31) Now provided for in Ontario by the Executive Council Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. E.25, and in Quebec by the Executive Power Act, R.S.Q. c. E-18.
-
- (32) A similar provision was included in each of the instruments admitting British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland. The Executive Authorities for Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan were established by the statutes creating those provinces. See endnote (6) to section 5, above.
-
- (33) See endnote (65) to section 129, below.
-
- (34) Spent. Now covered by the Representation Act, 2005, S.O. 2005, c. 35, Schedule 1.
-
- (35) An Act respecting the Legislative Council of Quebec, S.Q. 1968, c. 9, provided that the Legislature for Quebec shall consist of the Lieutenant Governor and the National Assembly of Quebec, and repealed the provisions of the Legislature Act, R.S.Q. 1964, c. 6, relating to the Legislative Council of Quebec. Now covered by the National Assembly Act, R.S.Q. c. A-23.1. Sections 72 to 79 following are therefore completely spent.
-
- (36) An Act respecting the electoral districts, S.Q. 1970, c. 7, provides that this section no longer has effect.
-
- (37) Repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.). The section read as follows:
- 81 The Legislatures of Ontario and Quebec respectively shall be called together not later than Six Months after the Union.
-
- (38) Probably spent. The subject-matter of this section is now covered in Ontario by the Legislative Assembly Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.10, and in Quebec by the National Assembly Act, R.S.Q. c. A-23.1.
-
- (39) Probably spent. The subject-matter of this section is now covered in Ontario by the Election Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. E.6, and the Legislative Assembly Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.10, and in Quebec by the Elections Act, R.S.Q. 1977, c. E-3.3 and the National Assembly Act, R.S.Q. 1977, c. A-23.1.
-

(40) The maximum duration of the Legislative Assembly of Quebec has been changed to five years. See the National Assembly Act, R.S.Q. 1977, c. A-23.1. See also section 4 of the Constitution Act, 1982, which provides a maximum duration for a legislative assembly of five years but also authorizes continuation in special circumstances.

(41) See also section 5 of the Constitution Act, 1982, which provides that there shall be a sitting of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

(42) Partially repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.), which deleted the following concluding words of the original enactment:

and the House of Assembly of New Brunswick existing at the passing of this Act shall, unless sooner dissolved, continue for the Period for which it was elected.

A similar provision was included in each of the instruments admitting British Columbia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. The Legislatures of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan were established by the statutes creating those provinces. See endnote (6) to section 5, above.

See also sections 3 to 5 of the Constitution Act, 1982, which prescribe democratic rights applicable to all provinces, and subitem 2(2) of the Schedule to that Act, which sets out the repeal of section 20 of the Manitoba Act, 1870. Section 20 of the Manitoba Act, 1870 has been replaced by section 5 of the Constitution Act, 1982. Section 20 reads as follows:

20 There shall be a Session of the Legislature once at least in every year, so that twelve months shall not intervene between the last sitting of the Legislature in one Session and its first sitting in the next Session.

(43) Repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.). The section read as follows:

89 Each of the Lieutenant Governors of Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia shall cause Writs to be issued for the First Election of Members of the Legislative Assembly thereof in such Form and by such Person as he thinks fit, and at such Time and addressed to such Returning Officer as the Governor General directs, and so that the First Election of Member of Assembly for any Electoral District or any Subdivision thereof shall be held at the same Time and at the same Places as the Election for a Member to serve in the House of Commons of Canada for that Electoral District.

(44) A new class 1 was added by the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (U.K.). That Act and class 1 were repealed by the Constitution Act, 1982. The matters referred to in class 1 are provided for in subsection 4(2) and Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982. As enacted, class 1 read as follows:

1. The amendment from time to time of the Constitution of Canada, except as regards matters coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the provinces, or as regards rights or privileges by this or any other Constitutional Act granted or secured to the Legislature or the Government of a province, or to any class of persons with respect to schools or as regards the use of the English or the French language or as regards the requirements that there shall be a session of the Parliament of Canada at least once each year, and that no House of Commons shall continue for more than five years from the day of the return of the Writs for choosing the House: provided, however, that a House of Commons may in time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection be continued by the Parliament of Canada if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of such House.

(45) The original class 1 was re-numbered by the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, 13 Geo. VI, c. 81 (U.K.), as class 1A.

(46) Added by the Constitution Act, 1940, 3-4 Geo. VI, c. 36 (U.K.).

Legislative authority has been conferred on Parliament by other Acts as follows:

1. The Constitution Act, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.):

2 The Parliament of Canada may from time to time establish new Provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada, but not included in any Province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provision for the constitution and administration of any such Province, and for the passing of laws for the peace, order, and good government of such Province, and for its representation in the said Parliament.

3 The Parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the Legislature of any province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such Province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said Legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any Province affected thereby.

4 The Parliament of Canada may from time to time make provision for the administration, peace, order, and good government of any territory not for the time being included in any Province.

5 The following Acts passed by the said Parliament of Canada, and intitled respectively, — “An Act for the temporary government of Rupert’s Land and the North Western Territory when united with Canada”; and “An Act to amend and continue the Act thirty-two and thirty-three Victoria, chapter three, and to establish and provide for the government of “the Province of Manitoba”, shall be and be deemed to have been valid and effectual for all purposes whatsoever from the date at which they respectively received the assent, in the Queen’s name, of the Governor General of the said Dominion of Canada.

6 Except as provided by the third section of this Act, it shall not be competent for the Parliament of Canada to alter the provisions of the last-mentioned Act of the said Parliament in so far as it relates to the Province of Manitoba, or of any other Act hereafter establishing new Provinces in the said Dominion, subject always to the right of the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba to alter from time to time the provisions of any law respecting the qualification of electors and members of the Legislative Assembly, and to make laws respecting elections in the said Province.

The Rupert’s Land Act, 1868, 31-32 Vict., c. 105 (U.K.) (repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.)) had previously conferred similar authority in relation to Rupert’s Land and the North–Western Territory upon admission of those areas.

2. The Constitution Act, 1886, 49-50 Vict., c. 35 (U.K.):

1 The Parliament of Canada may from time to time make provision for the representation in the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, or in either of them, of any territories which for the time being form part of the Dominion of Canada, but are not included in any province thereof.

3. The Statute of Westminster, 1931, 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (U.K.):

3 It is hereby declared and enacted that the Parliament of a Dominion has full power to make laws having extra-territorial operation.

4. Under section 44 of the Constitution Act, 1982, Parliament has exclusive authority to amend the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons. Sections 38, 41, 42 and 43 of that Act authorize the Senate and House of Commons to give their approval to certain other constitutional amendments by resolution.

(48)

Class 1 was repealed by the Constitution Act, 1982. As enacted, it read as follows:

1. The Amendment from Time to Time, notwithstanding anything in this Act, of the Constitution of the Province, except as regards the Office of Lieutenant Governor.

Section 45 of the Constitution Act, 1982 now authorizes legislatures to make laws amending the constitution of the province. Sections 38, 41, 42 and 43 of that Act authorize legislative assemblies to give their approval by resolution to certain other amendments to the Constitution of Canada.

(49)

Added by section 50 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

(50)

Alternative provisions have been enacted for four provinces. An alternative was provided for Manitoba by section 22 of the Manitoba Act, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (confirmed by the Constitution Act, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)), which section reads as follows:

22 In and for the Province, the said Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Education, subject and according to the following provisions:

(1) Nothing in any such Law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to Denominational Schools which any class of persons have by Law or practice in the Province at the Union:

(2) An appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any Act or decision of the Legislature of the Province, or of any Provincial Authority, affecting any right or privilege, of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to Education:

(3) In case any such Provincial Law, as from time to time seems to the Governor General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section, is not made, or in case any decision of the Governor General in Council on any appeal under this section is not duly executed by the proper Provincial Authority in that behalf, then, and in every such case, and as far only as the circumstances of each case require, the Parliament of Canada may make remedial Laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section, and of any decision of the Governor General in Council under this section.

An alternative was provided for Alberta by section 17 of the Alberta Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 3, which section reads as follows:

17 Section 93 of the Constitution Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province, with the substitution for paragraph (1) of the said section 93 of the following paragraph:

“(1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the Ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901, or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in the said ordinances.”

(2) In the appropriation by the Legislature or distribution by the Government of the province of any moneys for the support of schools organized and carried on in accordance with the said chapter 29 or any Act passed in amendment thereof, or in substitution therefor, there shall be no discrimination against schools of any class described in the said chapter 29.

(3) Where the expression by law is employed in paragraph 3 of the said section 93, it shall be held to mean the law as set out in the said chapters 29 and 30, and where the expression at the Union is employed, in the said paragraph 3, it shall be held to mean the date at which this Act comes into force.

An alternative was provided for Saskatchewan by section 17 of the Saskatchewan Act, 1905, 4-5 Edw. VII, c. 42, which section reads as follows:

17 Section 93 of the Constitution Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province, with the substitution for paragraph (1) of the said section 93, of the following paragraph:

“(1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the Ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901, or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in the said ordinances.”

(2) In the appropriation by the Legislature or distribution by the Government of the province of any moneys for the support of schools organized and carried on in accordance with the said chapter 29, or any Act passed in amendment thereof or in substitution therefor, there shall be no discrimination against schools of any class described in the said chapter 29.

(3) Where the expression by law is employed in paragraph (3) of the said section 93, it shall be held to mean the law as set out in the said chapters 29 and 30; and where the expression at the Union is employed in the said paragraph (3), it shall be held to mean the date at which this Act comes into force.

An alternative was provided for Newfoundland by Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada (confirmed by the Newfoundland Act, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.)). Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada, set out in the penultimate paragraph of this note, was amended by the Constitution Amendment, 1998 (Newfoundland Act), (see SI/98-25) and the Constitution Amendment, 2001 (Newfoundland and Labrador) (see SI/2001-117), and now reads as follows:

17 (1) In lieu of section ninety-three of the Constitution Act, 1867, this term shall apply in respect of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

(2) In and for the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, the Legislature shall have exclusive authority to make laws in relation to education, but shall provide for courses in religion that are not specific to a religious denomination.

(3) Religious observances shall be permitted in a school where requested by parents.

Prior to the Constitution Amendment, 1998 (Newfoundland Act), Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada had been amended by the Constitution Amendment, 1997 (Newfoundland Act) (see SI/97-55) to read as follows:

17 In lieu of section ninety-three of the Constitution Act, 1867, the following shall apply in respect of the Province of Newfoundland:

In and for the Province of Newfoundland, the Legislature shall have exclusive authority to make laws in relation to education but

(a) except as provided in paragraphs (b) and (c), schools established, maintained and operated with public funds shall be denominational schools, and any class of persons having rights under this Term as it read on January 1, 1995 shall continue to have the right to provide for religious education, activities and observances for the children of that class in those schools, and the group of classes that formed one integrated school system by agreement in 1969 may exercise the same rights under this Term as a single class of persons;

(b) subject to provincial legislation that is uniformly applicable to all schools specifying conditions for the establishment or continued operation of schools,

(i) any class of persons referred to in paragraph (a) shall have the right to have a publicly funded denominational school established, maintained and operated especially for that class, and

(ii) the Legislature may approve the establishment, maintenance and operation of a publicly funded school, whether denominational or non-denominational;

(c) where a school is established, maintained and operated pursuant to subparagraph (b) (i), the class of persons referred to in that subparagraph shall continue to have the right to provide for religious education, activities and observances and to direct the teaching of aspects of curriculum affecting religious beliefs, student admission policy and the assignment and dismissal of teachers in that school;

(d) all schools referred to in paragraphs (a) and (b) shall receive their share of public funds in accordance with scales determined on a non-discriminatory basis from time to time by the Legislature; and

(e) if the classes of persons having rights under this Term so desire, they shall have the right to elect in total not less than two thirds of the members of a school board, and any class so desiring shall have the right to elect the portion of that total that is proportionate to the population of that class in the area under the board's jurisdiction.

Prior to the Constitution Amendment, 1997 (Newfoundland Act), Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada had been amended by the Constitution Amendment, 1987 (Newfoundland Act) (see SI/88-11) to read as follows:

17(1) In lieu of section ninety-three of the Constitution Act, 1867, the following term shall apply in respect of the Province of Newfoundland:

In and for the Province of Newfoundland the Legislature shall have exclusive authority to make laws in relation to education, but the Legislature will not have authority to make laws prejudicially affecting any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools, common (amalgamated) schools, or denominational colleges, that any class or classes of persons have by law in Newfoundland at the date of Union, and out of public funds of the Province of Newfoundland, provided for education,

(a) all such schools shall receive their share of such funds in accordance with scales determined on a non-discriminatory basis from time to time by the Legislature for all schools then being conducted under authority of the Legislature; and

(b) all such colleges shall receive their share of any grant from time to time voted for all colleges then being conducted under authority of the Legislature, such grant being distributed on a non-discriminatory basis.

(2) For the purposes of paragraph one of this Term, the Pentecostal Assemblies of Newfoundland have in Newfoundland all the same rights and privileges with respect to denominational schools and denominational colleges as any other class or classes of persons had by law in Newfoundland at the date of Union, and the words all such schools in paragraph (a) of paragraph one of this Term and the words all such colleges in paragraph (b) of paragraph one of this Term include, respectively, the schools and the colleges of the Pentecostal Assemblies of Newfoundland.

Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada (confirmed by the Newfoundland Act, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.)), which Term provided an alternative for Newfoundland, originally read as follows:

17 In lieu of section ninety-three of the Constitution Act, 1867, the following term shall apply in respect of the Province of Newfoundland:

In and for the Province of Newfoundland the Legislature shall have exclusive authority to make laws in relation to education, but the Legislature will not have authority to make laws prejudicially affecting any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools, common (amalgamated) schools, or denominational colleges, that any class or classes of persons have by law in Newfoundland at the date of Union, and out of public funds of the Province of Newfoundland, provided for education,

(a) all such schools shall receive their share of such funds in accordance with scales determined on a non-discriminatory basis from time to time by the Legislature for all schools then being conducted under authority of the Legislature; and

(b) all such colleges shall receive their share of any grant from time to time voted for all colleges then being conducted under authority of the Legislature, such grant being distributed on a non-discriminatory basis.

See also sections 23, 29 and 59 of the Constitution Act, 1982. Section 23 provides for new minority language educational rights and section 59 permits a delay in respect of the coming into force in Quebec of one aspect of those rights. Section 29 provides that nothing in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms abrogates or derogates from any rights or privileges guaranteed by or under the Constitution of Canada in respect of denominational, separate or dissentient schools.

-
- (51) Added by the Constitution Amendment, 1997 (Quebec) (see SI/97-141).
-
- (52) Amended by the Constitution Act, 1964, 12-13 Eliz. II, c. 73 (U.K.). As originally enacted by the British North America Act, 1951, 14-15 Geo. VI, c. 32 (U.K.), which was repealed by the Constitution Act, 1982, section 94A read as follows:
- 94A It is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the Parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a Provincial Legislature in relation to old age pensions.
-
- (53) Amended by the Constitution Act, 1960, 9 Eliz. II, c. 2 (U.K.), which came into force on March 1, 1961. The original section read as follows:
- 99 The Judges of the Superior Courts shall hold Office during good Behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.
-
- (54) Now provided for in the Judges Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. J-1.
-
- (55) See the Supreme Court Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-26, the Federal Court Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7 and the Tax Court of Canada Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-2.
-
- (56) Now covered by the Governor General's Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. G-9.
-
- (57) Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan were placed in the same position as the original provinces by the Constitution Act, 1930, 20-21 Geo. V, c. 26 (U.K.).
- These matters were dealt with in respect of British Columbia by the British Columbia Terms of Union and also in part by the Constitution Act, 1930.
- Newfoundland was also placed in the same position by the Newfoundland Act, 12-13 Geo. VI, c. 22 (U.K.).
- With respect to Prince Edward Island, see the Schedule to the Prince Edward Island Terms of Union.
-
- (58) The obligations imposed by sections 114, 115 and 116, and similar obligations under the instruments creating or admitting other provinces, are now to be found in the Provincial Subsidies Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-26.
-

The section originally read as follows:

118 The following Sums shall be paid yearly by Canada to the several Provinces for the Support of their Governments and Legislatures:

	Dollars.
Ontario	Eighty thousand.
.....
Quebec	Seventy thousand.
.....
Nova Scotia	Sixty thousand.
.....
New Brunswick	Fifty thousand.
.....
	Two hundred and sixty thousand;

and an annual Grant in aid of each Province shall be made, equal to Eighty Cents per Head of the Population as ascertained by the Census of One thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, and in the Case of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, by each subsequent Decennial Census until the Population of each of those two Provinces amounts to Four hundred thousand Souls, at which Rate such Grant shall thereafter remain. Such Grants shall be in full Settlement of all future Demands on Canada, and shall be paid half-yearly in advance to each Province; but the Government of Canada shall deduct from such Grants, as against any Province, all Sums chargeable as Interest on the Public Debt of that Province in excess of the several Amounts stipulated in this Act.

The section was made obsolete by the Constitution Act, 1907, 7 Edw. VII, c. 11 (U.K.), which provided:

1. (1) The following grants shall be made yearly by Canada to every province, which at the commencement of this Act is a province of the Dominion, for its local purposes and the support of its Government and Legislature:

(a) A fixed grant

where the population of the province is under one hundred and fifty thousand, of one hundred thousand dollars; where the population of the province is one hundred and fifty thousand, but does not exceed two hundred thousand, of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars;

where the population of the province is two hundred thousand, but does not exceed four hundred thousand, of one hundred and eighty thousand dollars; where the population of the province is four hundred thousand, but does not exceed eight hundred thousand, of one hundred and ninety thousand dollars; where the population of the province is eight hundred thousand, but does not exceed one million five hundred thousand, of two hundred and twenty thousand dollars;

where the population of the province exceeds one million five hundred thousand, of two hundred and forty thousand dollars; and

(b) Subject to the special provisions of this Act as to the provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, a grant at the rate of eighty cents per head of the population of the province up to the number of two million five hundred thousand, and at the rate of sixty cents per head of so much of the population as exceeds that number.

(2) An additional grant of one hundred thousand dollars shall be made yearly to the province of British Columbia for a period of ten years from the commencement of this Act.

(3) The population of a province shall be ascertained from time to time in the case of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta respectively by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate of population made under the Acts establishing those provinces or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada making provision for the purpose, and in the case of any other province by the last decennial census for the time being.

(4) The grants payable under this Act shall be paid half-yearly in advance to each province.

(5) The grants payable under this Act shall be substituted for the grants or subsidies (in this Act referred to as existing grants) payable for the like purposes at the commencement of this Act to the several provinces of the Dominion under the provisions of section one hundred and eighteen of the Constitution Act, 1867, or of any Order in Council establishing a province, or of any Act of the Parliament of Canada containing directions for the payment of any such grant or subsidy, and those provisions shall cease to have effect.

(6) The Government of Canada shall have the same power of deducting sums charged against a province on account of the interest on public debt in the case of the grant payable under this Act to the province as they have in the case of the existing grant.

(7) Nothing in this Act shall affect the obligation of the Government of Canada to pay to any province any grant which is payable to that province, other than the existing grant for which the grant under this Act is substituted.

(8) In the case of the provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, the amount paid on account of the grant payable per head of the population to the provinces under this Act shall not at any time be less than the amount of the corresponding grant payable at the commencement of this Act, and if it is found on any decennial census that the population of the province has decreased since the last decennial census, the amount paid on account of the grant shall not be decreased below the amount then payable, notwithstanding the decrease of the population.

See the Provincial Subsidies Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-26, and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-8.

See also Part III of the Constitution Act, 1982, which sets out commitments by Parliament and the provincial legislatures respecting equal opportunities, economic development and the provision of essential public services and a commitment by Parliament and the government of Canada to the principle of making equalization payments.

-
(60)	Spent.
-
(61)	Spent. Now covered by the Customs Act , R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (2nd Supp.), the Customs Tariff , S.C. 1997, c. 36, the Excise Act , R.S.C. 1985, c. E-14, the Excise Act, 2001 , S.C. 2002, c. 22 and the Excise Tax Act , R.S.C. 1985, c. E-15.
-
(62)	Spent.
-
(63)	These dues were repealed in 1873 by 36 Vict., c. 16 (N.B.). Also, see An Act respecting the Export Duties imposed on Lumber , etc. (1873) 36 Vict., c. 41 (Canada), and section 2 of the Provincial Subsidies Act , R.S.C. 1985, c. P-26.
-
(64)	Repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14 (U.K.). The section read as follows: 127 If any Person being at the passing of this Act a Member of the Legislative Council of Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick, to whom a Place in the Senate is offered, does not within Thirty Days thereafter, by Writing under his Hand addressed to the Governor General of the Province of Canada or to the Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick (as the Case may be), accept the same, he shall be deemed to have declined the same; and any Person who, being at the passing of this Act a Member of the Legislative Council of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, accepts a Place in the Senate shall thereby vacate his Seat in such Legislative Council.
-
(65)	The restriction against altering or repealing laws enacted by or existing under statutes of the United Kingdom was removed by the Statute of Westminster, 1931 , 22 Geo. V, c. 4 (U.K.), except in respect of certain constitutional documents. Comprehensive procedures for amending enactments forming part of the Constitution of Canada were provided by Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982 .
-
(66)	Spent.
-

(67) A similar provision was enacted for Manitoba by section 23 of the Manitoba Act, 1870, 33 Vict., c. 3 (confirmed by the Constitution Act, 1871, 34-35 Vict., c. 28 (U.K.)). Section 23 read as follows:

23 Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of the Legislature, and both these languages shall be used in the respective Records and Journals of those Houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person, or in any Pleading or Process, in or issuing from any Court of Canada established under the British North America Act, 1867, or in or from all or any of the Courts of the Province. The Acts of the Legislature shall be printed and published in both those languages.

Sections 17 to 19 of the Constitution Act, 1982 restate the language rights set out in section 133 in respect of Parliament and the courts established under the Constitution Act, 1867, and also guarantee those rights in respect of the legislature of New Brunswick and the courts of that province.

Sections 16, 20, 21 and 23 of the Constitution Act, 1982 recognize additional language rights in respect of the English and French languages. Section 22 preserves language rights and privileges of languages other than English and French.

(68) Spent. Now covered in Ontario by the Executive Council Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. E.25 and in Quebec by the Executive Power Act, R.S.Q. c. E-18.

(69) Probably spent.

(70) Probably spent.

(71) Probably spent.

(72) Spent. Penitentiaries are now provided for by the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, S.C. 1992, c. 20.

(73) Spent. See pages (xi) and (xii) of the Public Accounts, 1902-1903.

(74) Probably spent. Two orders were made under this section on January 24, 1868.

(75) Repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, 56-57 Vict., c. 14, (U.K.). The section read as follows:

145 Inasmuch as the Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick have joined in a Declaration that the Construction of the Intercolonial Railway is essential to the Consolidation of the Union of British North America, and to the Assent thereto of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and have consequently agreed that Provision should be made for its immediate Construction by the Government of Canada; Therefore, in order to give effect to that Agreement, it shall be the Duty of the Government and Parliament of Canada to provide for the Commencement, within Six Months after the Union, of a Railway connecting the River St. Lawrence with the City of Halifax in Nova Scotia, and for the Construction thereof without Intermission, and the Completion thereof with all practicable Speed.

(76)	All territories mentioned in section 146 are now part of Canada. See endnote (6) to section 5, above.
(77)	Spent. See endnotes (11), (12), (15), (16) and (17) to sections 21, 22, 26, 27 and 28, above.
(78)	Spent. See Representation Act , R.S.O. 1990, c. R.26.
(79)	As enacted by section 51 of the Constitution Act, 1982 .
(113)	Added by An Act respecting French, the official and common language of Québec , S.Q. 2022, c. 14. These provisions aim to amend the constitution of the province under the unilateral amending procedure set out in section 45 of the Constitution Act, 1982 .
(114)	Added by The Saskatchewan First Act , S.S. 2023, c. 9. This provision aims to amend the constitution of the province under the unilateral amending procedure set out in section 45 of the Constitution Act, 1982 .
(115)	Added by An Act to recognize the oath provided in the Act respecting the National Assembly as the sole oath required in order to sit in the Assembly , S.Q. 2022, c. 30. This provision aims to amend the constitution of the province under the unilateral amending procedure set out in section 45 of the Constitution Act, 1982 .

Tab 61

Courts of Justice Act, RSO 1990, c C.43

An amendment made by SO 2021, c 34 and enacted on 2021-12-02 came into force retroactively on 2021-09-01. This may affect one or more past versions of this Act.

Current version: in force since 2025-12-11

Link to this version: <https://canlii.ca/t/56mjs>

Citation to this version: Courts of Justice Act, RSO 1990, c C.43, <<https://canlii.ca/t/56mjs>> retrieved on 2026-03-23

Currency: Last updated from the e-Laws site on 2026-03-16

Courts of Justice Act

R.S.O. 1990, CHAPTER C.43

Consolidation Period: From December 11, 2025 to the e-Laws currency date.

Last amendment: 2025, c. 24, Sched. 7.

Definitions

1 (1) In this Act,

“action” means a civil proceeding that is not an application and includes a proceeding commenced by,

(a) claim,

(b) statement of claim,

- (c) notice of action,
- (d) counterclaim,
- (e) crossclaim,
- (f) third or subsequent party claim, or
- (g) divorce petition or counterpetition; (“action”)

“application” means a civil proceeding that is commenced by notice of application or by application; (“requête”)

“defendant” means a person against whom an action is commenced; (“défendeur”)

“hearing” includes a trial; (“audience”)

“motion” means a motion in a proceeding or an intended proceeding; (“motion”)

“order” includes a judgment or decree; (“ordonnance”)

“plaintiff” means a person who commences an action; (“demandeur”)

“region” means a region prescribed under section 79.1. (“région”) R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 1; 1993, c. 27, Sched.; 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 1.

Interpretation, judge not to include associate judge

(1.1) A reference made to a judge under this Act does not include a reference to an associate judge. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 1.

Application to other Acts

(2) This section applies to all other Acts affecting or relating to the courts and the administration of justice. 2006, c. 21, Sched. F, s. 106.

References to former names of courts

In English

1.1 (1) A reference in the English version of an Act, rule or regulation to a court or official by the former name of that court or the former title of that official set out in Column 1 of the following table or by a shortened version of that name or title is deemed, unless a contrary intention appears, to be a reference to the new name of that court or the new title of that official set out in Column 2.

TABLE

Column 1 Former names and titles	Column 2 New names and titles
Ontario Court of Justice	Court of Ontario
Ontario Court (General Division)	Superior Court of Justice
Ontario Court (Provincial Division)	Ontario Court of Justice
Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice	Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice
Associate Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice	Associate Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice
Associate Chief Justice (Family Court) of the Ontario Court of Justice	Associate Chief Justice (Family Court) of the Superior Court of Justice
Chief Judge of the Ontario Court (Provincial Division)	Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice
Associate Chief Judge of the Ontario Court (Provincial Division)	Associate Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice
Associate Chief Judge-Co-ordinator of Justices of the Peace	Associate Chief Justice Co-ordinator of Justices of the Peace
Accountant of the Ontario Court	Accountant of the Superior Court of Justice

2017, c. 20, Sched. 11, s. 7.

In French

(2) A reference in the French version of an Act, rule or regulation to a court or official by the former name of that court or the former title of that official set out in Column 1 of the following table or by a shortened version of that name or title is deemed, unless a contrary intention appears, to be a reference to the new name of that court or the new title of that official set out in Column 2.

TABLE

Column 1 Former names and titles	Column 2 New names and titles
Cour de justice de l'Ontario	Cour de l'Ontario
Cour de l'Ontario (Division générale)	Cour supérieure de justice
Cour de l'Ontario (Division provinciale)	Cour de justice de l'Ontario
Juge en chef de la Cour de justice de l'Ontario	Juge en chef de la Cour supérieure de justice
Juge en chef adjoint de la Cour de justice de l'Ontario	Juge en chef adjoint de la Cour supérieure de justice
Juge en chef adjoint (Cour de la famille) de la Cour de justice de l'Ontario	Juge en chef adjoint (Cour de la famille) de la Cour supérieure de justice
Juge en chef de la Cour de l'Ontario (Division provinciale)	Juge en chef de la Cour de justice de l'Ontario
Juge en chef adjoint de la Cour de l'Ontario (Division provinciale)	Juge en chef adjoint de la Cour de justice de l'Ontario
Juge en chef adjoint-coordonnateur des juges de paix	Juge en chef adjoint et coordonnateur des juges de paix
Comptable de la Cour de l'Ontario	Comptable de la Cour supérieure de justice

2017, c. 20, Sched. 11, s. 7.

Newer references to Ontario Court of Justice

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) do not apply to references to the Ontario Court of Justice enacted or made on or after April 19, 1999. 2017, c. 20, Sched. 11, s. 7.

PART I
COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

Court of Appeal

2 (1) The Court of Appeal for Ontario is continued as a superior court of record under the name Court of Appeal for Ontario in English and Cour d'appel de l'Ontario in French.

Same

(2) The Court of Appeal has the jurisdiction conferred on it by this or any other Act, and in the exercise of its jurisdiction has all the powers historically exercised by the Court of Appeal for Ontario. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 2.

Composition of court

3 (1) The Court of Appeal shall consist of,

- (a) the Chief Justice of Ontario, who shall be president of the court;
- (b) the Associate Chief Justice of Ontario; and
- (c) fourteen other judges.

Same

(2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may by regulation increase the number of judges of the Court of Appeal who are in addition to the Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice.

Additional judges

(3) There shall be such additional offices of judge of the Court of Appeal as are from time to time required, to be held by Chief Justices of Ontario and Associate Chief Justices of Ontario who have elected under the Judges Act (Canada) to perform only the duties of a judge of the Court of Appeal.

Supernumerary judges

(4) There shall be such additional offices of supernumerary judge of the Court of Appeal as are from time to time required, to be held by judges of the Court of Appeal who have elected under the Judges Act (Canada) to hold office only as a supernumerary judge of the court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 3.

Assignment of judges from Superior Court of Justice

4 (1) The Chief Justice of Ontario, with the concurrence of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, may assign a judge of the Superior Court of Justice to perform the work of a judge of the Court of Appeal. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 4 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14, 17).

Superior Court of Justice judges

(2) A judge of the Superior Court of Justice is, by virtue of his or her office, a judge of the Court of Appeal and has all the jurisdiction, power and authority of a judge of the Court of Appeal. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 4 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Powers and duties of Chief Justice

5 (1) The Chief Justice of Ontario has general supervision and direction over the sittings of the Court of Appeal and the assignment of the judicial duties of the court.

Absence of Chief Justice

(2) If the Chief Justice of Ontario is absent from Ontario or is for any reason unable to act, his or her powers and duties shall be exercised and performed by the Associate Chief Justice of Ontario.

Absence of Associate Chief Justice

(3) If the Chief Justice of Ontario and the Associate Chief Justice of Ontario are both absent from Ontario or for any reason unable to act, the powers and duties of the Chief Justice shall be exercised and performed by a judge of the Court of Appeal designated by the Chief Justice or Associate Chief Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 5.

Court of Appeal jurisdiction

6 (1) An appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from,

(a) an order of the Divisional Court, on a question that is not a question of fact alone, with leave of the Court of Appeal as provided in the rules of court;

(b) a final order of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice, except,

(i) an order referred to in clause 19 \(1\) (a) or \(a.1\), or

- (ii) an order from which an appeal lies to the Divisional Court under another Act;
- (c) a certificate of assessment of costs issued in a proceeding in the Court of Appeal, on an issue in respect of which an objection was served under the rules of court;
- (d) an order made under section 137.1. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 6 (1); 1994, c. 12, s. 1; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17); 2015, c. 23, s. 1; 2020, c. 25, Sched. 2, s. 1 (1).

Leave not required for second appeal

(1.0.1) Despite clause (1) (a), leave of the Court of Appeal is not required in the case of an order of the Divisional Court on an appeal under Part V or VIII of the Child, Youth and Family Services Act, 2017. 2020, c. 25, Sched. 2, s. 1 (2); 2021, c. 34, Sched. 4, s. 1.

Leave required for second appeal

(1.1) Despite clause (1) (b), a final order of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice made on a first appeal from an order described in subsection (1.2) may be appealed to the Court of Appeal only with leave from the Court of Appeal, as provided in the rules of court. 2020, c. 25, Sched. 2, s. 1 (3).

Same

(1.2) The orders mentioned in subsection (1.1) are orders of the Ontario Court of Justice under any of the following statutes or statutory provisions:

1. The Change of Name Act.
2. The Children's Law Reform Act, except sections 59 and 60.
3. Section 6 of the Marriage Act. 2020, c. 25, Sched. 2, s. 1 (3).

Combining of appeals from other courts

(2) The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear and determine an appeal that lies to the Divisional Court or the Superior Court of Justice if an appeal in the same proceeding lies to and is taken to the Court of Appeal. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 6 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Same

(3) The Court of Appeal may, on motion, transfer an appeal that has already been commenced in the Divisional Court or the Superior Court of Justice to the Court of Appeal for the purpose of subsection (2). R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 6 (3); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Transition

(4) This section, as it read immediately before the day subsection 1 (1) of Schedule 2 to the Moving Ontario Family Law Forward Act, 2020 came into force, continues to apply to,

- (a) any case in which a notice of appeal was filed before that day; and
- (b) any further appeals or proceedings arising from a case described in clause (a). 2020, c. 25, Sched. 2, s. 1 (4).

Composition of court

Hearings

7 (1) A proceeding in the Court of Appeal shall be heard and determined by not fewer than three judges sitting together, and always by an uneven number of judges.

Motions

(2) A motion in the Court of Appeal and an appeal under clause 6 \(1\) (c) shall be heard and determined by one judge.

Same

(3) Subsection (2) does not apply to a motion for leave to appeal, a motion to quash an appeal or any other motion that is specified by the rules of court.

Same

(4) A judge assigned to hear and determine a motion may adjourn the motion to a panel of the Court of Appeal.

Same

(5) A panel of the Court of Appeal may, on motion, set aside or vary the decision of a judge who hears and determines a motion. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 7.

References to Court of Appeal

8 (1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may refer any question to the Court of Appeal for hearing and consideration. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 8 (1).

Opinion of court

(2) The court shall certify its opinion to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, accompanied by a statement of the reasons for it, and any judge who differs from the opinion may certify his or her opinion and reasons in the same manner. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 8 (2).

Submissions by Attorney General

(3) On the hearing of the question, the Attorney General of Ontario is entitled to make submissions to the court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 8 (3).

Same

(4) The Attorney General of Canada shall be notified and is entitled to make submissions to the court if the question relates to the constitutional validity or constitutional applicability of an Act, or of a regulation or by-law made under an Act, of the Parliament of Canada or the Legislature. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 8 (4).

Notice

(5) The court may direct that any person interested, or any one or more persons as representatives of a class of persons interested, be notified of the hearing and be entitled to make submissions to the court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 8 (5).

Appointment of counsel

(6) If an interest affected is not represented by counsel, the court may request counsel to argue on behalf of the interest and the reasonable expenses of counsel shall be paid by the Minister of Finance. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 8 (6); 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 2.

Appeal

(7) The opinion of the court shall be deemed to be a judgment of the court and an appeal lies from it as from a judgment in an action. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 8 (7).

Meeting of judges

9 (1) The judges of the Court of Appeal shall meet at least once in each year, on a day fixed by the Chief Justice of Ontario, in order to consider this Act, the rules of court and the administration of justice generally. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 9 (1).

(2) REPEALED: 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (1).

PART II

COURT OF ONTARIO

Court of Ontario

10 (1) The Ontario Court of Justice is continued under the name Court of Ontario in English and Cour de l'Ontario in French.

Divisions

(2) The Court of Ontario shall consist of two divisions, the Superior Court of Justice (formerly the Ontario Court (General Division)) and the Ontario Court of Justice (formerly the Ontario Court (Provincial Division)).

President

(3) The person who is the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice shall also be the president of the Court of Ontario. 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (2).

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

Superior Court of Justice

11 (1) The Ontario Court (General Division) is continued as a superior court of record under the name Superior Court of Justice in English and Cour supérieure de justice in French. 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (3).

Same

(2) The Superior Court of Justice has all the jurisdiction, power and authority historically exercised by courts of common law and equity in England and Ontario. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 11 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Composition of Superior Court of Justice

12 (1) The Superior Court of Justice consists of,

- (a) the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, who shall be president of the Superior Court of Justice;
- (b) the Associate Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice;
- (c) a regional senior judge of the Superior Court of Justice for each region;
- (d) the Senior Judge of the Family Court; and

(e) such number of judges of the Superior Court of Justice as is fixed under clause 53 \(1\) (a). 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (2).

(1.1) Repealed: 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 1 (2).

(1.2) Repealed: 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 1 (2).

(1.3) Repealed: 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 1 (2).

Additional judges

(2) There shall be such additional offices of judge of the Superior Court of Justice as are from time to time required, to be held by Chief Justices of the Superior Court of Justice, Associate Chief Justices of the Superior Court of Justice and regional senior judges of the Superior Court of Justice who have elected under the Judges Act (Canada) to perform only the duties of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 12 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14, 17).

Supernumerary judges

(3) There shall be such additional offices of supernumerary judge of the Superior Court of Justice as are from time to time required, to be held by judges of the Superior Court of Justice who have elected under the Judges Act (Canada) to hold office only as a supernumerary judge of that court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 12 (3); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (15, 17).

Assignment of judges from Court of Appeal

13 (1) The Chief Justice of Ontario, with the concurrence of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, may assign a judge of the Court of Appeal to perform the work of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 13 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14, 17).

Court of Appeal judges

(2) A judge of the Court of Appeal is, by virtue of his or her office, a judge of the Superior Court of Justice and has all the jurisdiction, power and authority of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 13 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Chief Justice, Associate Chief Justice and regional senior judges of Superior Court of Justice; Senior Judge of Family Court

Powers and duties of Chief Justice

14 (1) The Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice shall direct and supervise the sittings of the Superior Court of Justice and the assignment of its judicial duties. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (3).

Regional senior judges

(2) A regional senior judge of the Superior Court of Justice shall, subject to the authority of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, exercise the powers and perform the duties of the Chief Justice in respect of the Superior Court of Justice in his or her region. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (3).

Delegation

(3) A regional senior judge of the Superior Court of Justice may delegate to a judge of the Superior Court of Justice in his or her region the authority to exercise specified functions. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (3).

Absence of Chief Justice

(4) If the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice is absent from Ontario or is for any reason unable to act, his or her powers and duties shall be exercised and performed by the Associate Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (3).

Senior Judge of Family Court

(5) The Senior Judge of the Family Court shall,

(a) advise the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice with regard to,

(i) the education of judges sitting in the Family Court,

(ii) practice and procedure, including mediation, in the Family Court,

(iii) the expansion of the Family Court, and

(iv) the expenditure of funds budgeted for the Family Court;

(b) meet from time to time with the community liaison committees and community resources committees established under sections 21.13 and

21.14; and

(c) perform other duties relating to the Family Court assigned to the Senior Judge of the Family Court by the Chief Justice. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (3).

Small Claims Court Administrative Judge

(5.1) The Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice may delegate to the Small Claims Court Administrative Judge appointed under section 87.2 his or her powers and duties under subsection (1) in respect of the Small Claims Court, subject to such conditions or restrictions as he or she may specify. 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 1.

Absence of regional senior judge or Senior Judge of Family Court

(6) The powers and duties of a regional senior judge of the Superior Court of Justice and the Senior Judge of the Family Court when he or she is absent from Ontario or is for any reason unable to act shall be exercised and performed by a judge of the Superior Court of Justice designated by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (3).

Meetings with Associate Chief Justice, regional senior judges and Senior Judge of Family Court

(7) The Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice may hold meetings with the Associate Chief Justice, the regional senior judges and the Senior Judge of the Family Court in order to consider any matters concerning sittings of the Superior Court of Justice and the assignment of its judicial duties. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (3); 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (1).

Judges assigned to regions

15 (1) The Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice shall assign every judge of the Superior Court of Justice to a region and may re-assign a judge from one region to another. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 15 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14, 17).

At least one judge in each county

(2) There shall be at least one judge of the Superior Court of Justice assigned to each county and district. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 15 (2); 1996, c. 25,

s. 9 (17).

High Court and District Court judges

(3) No judge of the Superior Court of Justice who was a judge of the High Court of Justice or the District Court of Ontario before the 1st day of September, 1990 shall be assigned without his or her consent to a region other than the region in which he or she resided immediately before that day. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 15 (3); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Same

(4) Subsections (1) to (3) do not prevent the temporary assignment of a judge to a location anywhere in Ontario. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 15 (4).

Composition of court for hearings

16 A proceeding in the Superior Court of Justice shall be heard and determined by one judge of the Superior Court of Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 16; 1994, c. 12, s. 4; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (16, 17).

Appeals to Superior Court of Justice

17 An appeal lies to the Superior Court of Justice from,

(a) an interlocutory order of a master, case management master or associate judge;

Note: On a day to be named by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor, clause 17 (a) of the Act is amended by striking out “a master, case management master or associate judge” at the end and substituting “an associate judge”. (See: 2021, c. 34, Sched. 4, s. 3 (2))

(b) a certificate of assessment of costs issued in a proceeding in the Superior Court of Justice, on an issue in respect of which an objection was served under the rules of court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 17; 1996, c. 25, ss. 1 (1), 9 (17); 2021, c. 34, Sched. 4, s. 3 (1).

DIVISIONAL COURT

Divisional Court

18 (1) The branch of the Superior Court of Justice known as the Divisional Court is continued under the name Divisional Court in English and Cour divisionnaire in French. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 18 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Same

(2) The Divisional Court consists of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, who is president of the Divisional Court, the associate chief justice and such other judges as the Chief Justice designates from time to time. 1994, c. 12, s. 5; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14); 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 3.

Jurisdiction of judges

(3) Every judge of the Superior Court of Justice is also a judge of the Divisional Court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 18 (3); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Divisional Court jurisdiction

19 (1) An appeal lies to the Divisional Court from,

(a) a final order of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice, as described in subsections (1.1) and (1.2);

(a.1) a final order of a judge of the Family Court made only under a provision of an Act or regulation of Ontario;

(b) an interlocutory order of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice, with leave as provided in the rules of court;

(c) a final order of a master, case management master or associate judge. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 3; 2020, c. 25, Sched. 2, s. 2 (1); 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 2 (1).

Note: On a day to be named by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor, clause 19 \(1\) (c) of the Act, as amended by subsection (1), is amended by striking out “a master, case management master or associate judge” and substituting “an associate judge”. (See: 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 2 \(2\))

Same

(1.0.1) Clauses (1) (a) and (b) do not apply to orders made under section 137.1. 2015, c. 23, s. 2.

Same

(1.1) If the notice of appeal is filed before October 1, 2007, clause (1) (a) applies in respect of a final order,

(a) for a single payment of not more than $25,000, exclusive of costs;

(b) for periodic payments that amount to not more than $25,000, exclusive of costs, in the 12 months commencing on the date the first payment is due under the order;

(c) dismissing a claim for an amount that is not more than the amount set out in clause (a) or (b); or

(d) dismissing a claim for an amount that is more than the amount set out in clause (a) or (b) and in respect of which the judge or jury indicates that if the claim had been allowed the amount awarded would have been not more than the amount set out in clause (a) or (b). 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 3; 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (2).

Same

(1.2) If the notice of appeal is filed on or after October 1, 2007, clause (1) (a) applies in respect of a final order,

(a) for a single payment of not more than $50,000, exclusive of costs;

(b) for periodic payments that amount to not more than $50,000, exclusive of costs, in the 12 months commencing on the date the first payment is due under the order;

(c) dismissing a claim for an amount that is not more than the amount set out in clause (a) or (b); or

(d) dismissing a claim for an amount that is more than the amount set out in clause (a) or (b) and in respect of which the judge or jury indicates that if the claim had been allowed the amount awarded would have been not more than the amount set out in clause (a) or (b). 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 3; 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (3).

Combining of appeals from Superior Court of Justice

(2) The Divisional Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine an appeal that lies to the Superior Court of Justice if an appeal in the same proceeding lies to and is taken to the Divisional Court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 19 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Same

(3) The Divisional Court may, on motion, transfer an appeal that has already been commenced in the Superior Court of Justice to the Divisional Court for the purpose of subsection (2). R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 19 (3); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Appeal from interlocutory orders

(4) No appeal lies from an interlocutory order of a judge of the Superior Court of Justice made on an appeal from an interlocutory order of the Ontario Court of Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 19 (4); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17, 18).

Transition

(5) This section, as it read immediately before the day subsection 2 (1) of Schedule 2 to the Moving Ontario Family Law Forward Act, 2020 came into force, continues to apply to,

- (a) any case in which a notice of appeal was filed before that day; and
- (b) any further appeals or proceedings arising from a case described in clause (a). 2020, c. 25, Sched. 2, s. 2 (2).

Place for hearing

Appeals

20 (1) An appeal to the Divisional Court shall be heard in the region where the hearing or other process that led to the decision appealed from took place, unless the parties agree otherwise or the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice orders otherwise because it is necessary to do so in the interests of justice. 1994, c. 12, s. 7; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14).

Other proceedings

(2) Any other proceeding in the Divisional Court may be brought in any region. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 20 (2).

Composition of court for hearings

21 (1) A proceeding in the Divisional Court shall be heard and determined by three judges sitting together. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 21 (1).

Same

(2) A proceeding in the Divisional Court may be heard and determined by one judge where the proceeding,

- (a) is an appeal under clause 19 \(1\) \(c\);
- (b) is an appeal under section 31 from a person referred to in subsection 24 \(2\) presiding over the Small Claims Court; or

(c) is in a matter or class of matters that the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice or a judge designated by the Chief Justice is satisfied, from the nature of the issues involved or the necessity for expedition, can and ought to be heard and determined by one judge. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 21 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14); 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 2; 2025, c. 24, Sched. 7, s. 1.

Same, motions

(3) A motion in the Divisional Court shall be heard and determined by one judge, unless otherwise provided by the rules of court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 21 (3).

Same

(4) A judge assigned to hear and determine a motion may adjourn it to a panel of the Divisional Court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 21 (4).

Same

(5) A panel of the Divisional Court may, on motion, set aside or vary the decision of a judge who hears and determines a motion. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 21 (5).

FAMILY COURT

Family Court

21.1 (1) There shall be a branch of the Superior Court of Justice known as the Family Court in English and Cour de la famille in French. 1994, c. 12, s. 8; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Unified Family Court

(2) The Unified Family Court is amalgamated with and continued as part of the Family Court. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Same

(3) The Family Court has the jurisdiction conferred on it by this or any other Act. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Jurisdiction

(4) The Family Court has jurisdiction in the City of Hamilton and in the additional areas named in accordance with subsection (5). 1994, c. 12, s. 8; 2002, c. 17, Sched. F, Table.

Proclamation

(5) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may, by proclamation, name additional areas in which the Family Court has jurisdiction. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Composition of Family Court

21.2 (1) The Family Court consists of,

- (a) the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, who shall be president of the Family Court;
- (b) the Associate Chief Justice;
- (c) the Senior Judge of the Family Court;
- (d) the five judges and one supernumerary judge of the Superior Court of Justice assigned to the Unified Family Court on June 30, 1993;
- (e) the judges of the Superior Court of Justice appointed to be members of the Family Court, the number of whom is fixed by regulation under clause 53 \(1\) \(a.1\);
- (f) the judges of the Superior Court of Justice assigned to the Family Court by the Chief Justice from time to time. 1994, c. 12, s. 8; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14, 17); 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 4 (1).

Supernumerary judges

(2) There shall be such additional offices of supernumerary judge of the Superior Court of Justice and member of the Family Court as are from time to time required, to be held by judges referred to in clauses (1) (d) and (e) who have elected under the Judges Act (Canada) to hold office only as supernumerary judges. 1994, c. 12, s. 8; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Jurisdiction of judges

(3) Every judge of the Superior Court of Justice is also a judge of the Family Court. 1994, c. 12, s. 8; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Temporary assignments

(4) The Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice may, from time to time, temporarily assign a judge referred to in clause (1) (d) or (e) to hear matters outside the jurisdiction of the Family Court. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (4).

(5) Repealed: 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 4 (2).

(6) Repealed: 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 4 (2).

Transitional measure

21.3 (1) All proceedings referred to in the Schedule to section 21.8 or in section 21.12 that are pending in the Superior Court of Justice or the Ontario Court of Justice in an area named under subsection 21.1 \(5\) as an area in which the Family Court has jurisdiction shall be transferred to and continued in the Family Court.

Same

(2) If a judge sitting in the Ontario Court of Justice is seized of a matter in a proceeding that is the subject of a transfer under subsection (1), the judge may complete that matter. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (5).

21.4 Repealed: 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 5.

21.5 Repealed: 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 5.

21.6 Repealed: 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 5.

Composition of court for hearings

21.7 A proceeding in the Family Court shall be heard and determined by one judge. 1994, c. 12, s. 8; 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (4).

Proceedings in Family Court

21.8 (1) In the parts of Ontario where the Family Court has jurisdiction, proceedings referred to in the Schedule to this section, except appeals and prosecutions, shall be commenced, heard and determined in the Family Court. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Motions for interlocutory relief

(2) A motion for interim or other interlocutory relief in a proceeding referred to in the Schedule that is required or permitted by the rules or an order of a court to be heard and determined in a part of Ontario where the Family Court has jurisdiction shall be heard and determined in the Family Court. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Same

(3) A motion for interim or other interlocutory relief in a proceeding referred to in the Schedule that is required or permitted by the rules or an order of the Family Court to be heard and determined in a part of Ontario where the Family Court does not have jurisdiction shall be heard and determined in the court that would have had jurisdiction if the proceeding had been commenced in that part of Ontario. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

SCHEDULE

1. Proceedings under the following statutory provisions:

Change of Name Act

Child, Youth and Family Services Act, 2017, Parts V, VII and VIII

Children's Law Reform Act, except sections 59 and 60

Civil Marriage Act (Canada)

Divorce Act (Canada)

Family Homes on Reserves and Matrimonial Interests or Rights Act (Canada)

Family Law Act, except Part V

Family Responsibility and Support Arrears Enforcement Act, 1996

International Recovery of Child Support and Family Maintenance Convention Act, 2023

Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, 2002

Marriage Act, section 6.

2. Proceedings for the interpretation, enforcement or variation of a marriage contract, cohabitation agreement, separation agreement, paternity agreement, family arbitration agreement or family arbitration award.

3. Proceedings for relief by way of constructive or resulting trust or a monetary award as compensation for unjust enrichment between persons who have cohabited.

4. Proceedings for annulment of a marriage or for a declaration of validity or invalidity of a marriage.

5. Appeals of family arbitration awards under the Arbitration Act, 1991.

6. Proceedings under First Nation laws made under,

i. the Family Homes on Reserves and Matrimonial Interests or Rights Act (Canada), or

ii. the First Nations Land Management Act (Canada), with respect to the effect of relationship breakdown on matrimonial real property.

7. Any other family law proceedings that may be prescribed by the regulations.

1994, c. 12, s. 8; 1996, c. 31, s. 65; 1999, c. 6, s. 18 (1); 2002, c. 13, s. 56; 2002, c. 14, Sched., s. 9; 2005, c. 5, s. 17 \(1\); 2006, c. 1, s. 4; 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (2, 3); 2017, c. 14, Sched. 4, s. 10 (1); 2023, c. 9, Sched. 16, s. 23.

Other jurisdiction

21.9 Where a proceeding referred to in the Schedule to section 21.8 is commenced in the Family Court and is combined with a related matter that is in the judge's jurisdiction but is not referred to in the Schedule, the court may, with leave of the judge, hear and determine the combined matters. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

21.9.1 REPEALED: 2020, c. 25, Sched. 2, s. 3.

Orders of predecessor court

21.10 (1) The Family Court may hear and determine an application under an Act to discharge, vary or suspend an order made by the Provincial Court (Family Division), the Ontario Court of Justice, the Superior Court of Justice or the Unified Family Court. 1994, c. 12, s. 8; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17, 18).

Same

(2) The Family Court may enforce orders made by the Provincial Court (Family Division), the Ontario Court of Justice, the Superior Court of Justice or the Unified Family Court. 1994, c. 12, s. 8; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17, 18).

Place where proceeding commenced

21.11 (1) Proceedings referred to in the Schedule to section 21.8 may be commenced in the Family Court if the applicant or the respondent resides in a part of Ontario where the Family Court has jurisdiction. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Part III, Children's Law Reform Act application

(2) An application under Part III of the Children's Law Reform Act in respect of a child who habitually resides in a part of Ontario where the Family Court has jurisdiction may be commenced in the Family Court in that part of Ontario. 1994, c. 12, s. 8; 2020, c. 25, Sched. 1, s. 27 (1).

Transfer to other court

(3) A judge presiding over the Family Court may, on motion, order that a proceeding commenced in the Family Court be transferred to the appropriate court in a place where the Family Court does not have jurisdiction if, in the judge's opinion, the preponderance of convenience favours having the matter dealt with by that court in that place. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Transfer from other court

(4) A judge of a court having jurisdiction in a proceeding referred to in the Schedule to section 21.8 in an area where the Family Court does not have jurisdiction may, on motion, order that the proceeding be transferred to the Family Court in a particular place if, in the judge's opinion, the preponderance of convenience favours having the matter dealt with by that court in that place. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Directions

(5) A judge making an order under subsection (3) or (4) may give such directions for the transfer as are considered just. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Enforcement of orders

21.12 (1) A judge presiding over the Family Court shall be deemed to be a judge of the Ontario Court of Justice for the purpose of prosecutions under Part V (Child Protection) and Part VIII (Adoption and Adoption Licensing) of the Child, Youth and Family Services Act, 2017, the Children's Law Reform Act, the Family Law Act and the Family Responsibility and Support Arrears Enforcement Act, 1996. 2017, c. 14, Sched. 4, s. 10 (2).

(2), (3) REPEALED: 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (5).

Community liaison committee

21.13 (1) There shall be one or more community liaison committees, as determined by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, or by a person he or she designates for the purpose, for each area in which the Family Court has jurisdiction. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (7); 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (6).

Composition

(2) A community liaison committee consists of judges, lawyers, persons employed in court administration and other residents of the community, appointed by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice or by a person he or she designates for the purpose. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (7).

Function

(3) A community liaison committee shall consider matters affecting the general operations of the court in the municipality and make recommendations to the appropriate authorities. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Community resources committee

21.14 (1) There shall be one or more community resources committees, as determined by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, or by a person he or she designates for the purpose, for each area in which the Family Court has jurisdiction. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (8); 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (7).

Composition

(2) A community resources committee consists of judges, lawyers, members of social service agencies, persons employed in court administration and other residents of the community, appointed by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice or by a person whom he or she designates for the purpose. 1998, c. 20, Sched. A, s. 22 (8).

Function

(3) A community resources committee shall develop links between the court and social service resources available in the community, identify needed resources and develop strategies for putting them in place. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

Dispute resolution service

21.15 A service for the resolution of disputes by alternatives to litigation may be established, maintained and operated as part of the Family Court. 1994, c. 12, s. 8.

SMALL CLAIMS COURT

Small Claims Court

22 (1) The Small Claims Court is continued as a branch of the Superior Court of Justice under the name Small Claims Court in English and Cour des petites créances in French. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 22 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Same

(2) The Small Claims Court consists of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice who shall be president of the court and such other judges of the Superior Court of Justice as the Chief Justice designates from time to time. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 22 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14, 17).

Jurisdiction of judges

(3) Every judge of the Superior Court of Justice is also a judge of the Small Claims Court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 22 (3); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Jurisdiction

23 (1) The Small Claims Court,

(a) has jurisdiction in any action for the payment of money where the amount claimed does not exceed the prescribed amount exclusive of interest and costs; and

(b) has jurisdiction in any action for the recovery of possession of personal property where the value of the property does not exceed the prescribed amount. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 23 (1).

Commencement of actions in Small Claims Court

(1.1) An action that is within the Small Claims Court's jurisdiction shall not, despite subsection 11 \(2\), be commenced in the Superior Court of Justice except with leave of the Superior Court of Justice as provided in the rules of court. 2023, c. 12, Sched. 3, s. 1.

Same

(1.2) Subsection (1.1) does not apply with respect to a counterclaim, crossclaim or third or subsequent party claim, where the main action was commenced in the Superior Court of Justice. 2023, c. 12, Sched. 3, s. 1.

Transfer from Superior Court of Justice

(2) An action in the Superior Court of Justice may be transferred to the Small Claims Court by the local registrar of the Superior Court of Justice on requisition with the consent of all parties filed before the trial commences if,

(a) the only claim is for the payment of money or the recovery of possession of personal property; and

(b) the claim is within the jurisdiction of the Small Claims Court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 23 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Same

(3) An action transferred to the Small Claims Court shall be titled and continued as if it had been commenced in that court. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 23 (3).

Composition of court for hearings

24 (1) A proceeding in the Small Claims Court shall be heard and determined by one judge of the Superior Court of Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 24 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Other judicial officials who may preside

(2) Despite subsection (1), a proceeding in the Small Claims Court may also be heard and determined by,

- (a) REPEALED: 2023, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 1.
- (b) a deputy judge appointed under section 32; or
- (c) the Small Claims Court Administrative Judge appointed under section 87.2. 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 3; 2023, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 1.

Where deputy judge not to preside

(3) A deputy judge shall not hear and determine an action,

- (a) for the payment of money in excess of the prescribed amount; or
- (b) for the recovery of possession of personal property exceeding the prescribed amount in value. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 24 (3).

Summary hearings

25 The Small Claims Court shall hear and determine in a summary way all questions of law and fact and may make such order as is considered just and agreeable to good conscience. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 25.

Representation

26 A party may be represented in a proceeding in the Small Claims Court by a person authorized under the Law Society Act to represent the party, but the court may exclude from a hearing anyone, other than a person licensed under the Law Society Act, appearing on behalf of the party if it finds that such person is not competent properly to represent the party, or does not understand and comply at the hearing with the duties and responsibilities of an advocate. 2006, c. 21, Sched. C, s. 105 (1).

Evidence

27 (1) Subject to subsections (3) and (4), the Small Claims Court may admit as evidence at a hearing and act upon any oral testimony and any document or other thing so long as the evidence is relevant to the subject-matter of the proceeding, but the court may exclude anything unduly repetitious.

Same

(2) Subsection (1) applies whether or not the evidence is given or proven under oath or affirmation or admissible as evidence in any other court.

Same

- (3) Nothing is admissible in evidence at a hearing,
- (a) that would be inadmissible by reason of any privilege under the law of evidence; or
 - (b) that is inadmissible by any Act.

Conflicts

(4) Nothing in subsection (1) overrides the provisions of any Act expressly limiting the extent to or purposes for which any oral testimony, documents or things may be admitted or used in evidence in any proceeding.

Copies

(5) A copy of a document or any other thing may be admitted as evidence at a hearing if the presiding judge is satisfied as to its authenticity. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 27.

Instalment orders

28 The Small Claims Court may order the times and the proportions in which money payable under an order of the court shall be paid. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 28.

Limit on costs

29 An award of costs in the Small Claims Court, other than disbursements, shall not exceed 15 per cent of the amount claimed or the value of the property sought to be recovered unless the court considers it necessary in the interests of justice to penalize a party or a party's representative for unreasonable behaviour in the proceeding. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 29; 2006, c. 21, Sched. C, s. 105 (2).

Contempt hearing for failure to attend examination

30 (1) The Small Claims Court may, in accordance with the rules of court, order a debtor or other person who is required to and fails to attend an examination respecting a default by the debtor under an order of the court for the payment or recovery of money, to attend before the court for a contempt hearing. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (8).

Finding of contempt

(2) The Small Claims Court may find a person to be in contempt of court at a hearing referred to in subsection (1), if the court is satisfied that,

- (a) the person was required to attend the examination;
- (b) the person was served, in accordance with the rules of court, with a notice to attend the examination;
- (c) the person failed to attend the examination; and
- (d) the failure to attend was wilful. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (8).

Power conferred

(3) For greater certainty, the power of the Small Claims Court to order, hear and determine a contempt hearing under this section is conferred on and may be exercised by the persons referred to in clauses 24 \(2\) (a) and (b). 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (8).

Limit on imprisonment in certain cases

(4) If a contempt hearing under subsection (1) is heard and determined by a person referred to in clause 24 \(2\) (a) or (b), the court may make such orders respecting the person in contempt as are specified by the rules of court, but the court shall not make an order that the person be imprisoned for a period of more than five days. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (8).

Authority unaffected

(5) Nothing in this section affects the authority of the Small Claims Court to order, hear and determine contempt hearings where it is otherwise authorized by law. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (8).

Appeals

31 An appeal lies to the Divisional Court from a final order of the Small Claims Court in an action,

- (a) for the payment of money in excess of the prescribed amount, excluding costs; or
- (b) for the recovery of possession of personal property exceeding the prescribed amount in value. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 31; 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (9, 10).

Deputy judges

32 (1) A regional senior judge of the Superior Court of Justice may, with the approval of the Attorney General, appoint a lawyer to act as a deputy judge of the Small Claims Court. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (11).

Term of appointment

(2) The appointment of a deputy judge is for a term of three years, subject to subsections (3) and (7). 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (11).

Annual appointment if 65 or older

(3) If the deputy judge is 65 years of age or older and under 75 years of age, the appointment shall be for a term of one year, subject to subsection (8). 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (11).

Renewal before age 65

(4) The appointment of a deputy judge who is under 65 years of age may be renewed by a regional senior judge of the Superior Court of Justice for a term of three years, subject to subsection (7). 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (11).

Annual renewal if 65 or older

(5) The appointment of a deputy judge who is 65 years of age or older and under 75 years of age may be renewed by a regional senior judge of the Superior Court of Justice for a term of one year, subject to subsection (8). 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (11).

No limit, renewals

(6) Subject to subsections (7) to (9), there is no limit to the number of times the appointment of a deputy judge can be renewed under subsection (4) or (5). 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (11).

Expiry of term at age 65

(7) If the deputy judge is 63 years of age or older and under 65 years of age, an appointment under subsection (2) or a renewal under subsection (4) shall provide for a term that expires when he or she reaches 65 years of age. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (11).

Expiry of term at age 75

(8) If the deputy judge is 74 years of age, an appointment under subsection (3) or a renewal under subsection (5) shall provide for a term that expires when he or she reaches 75 years of age. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (11).

Age limit

(9) No person shall be appointed as a deputy judge, or have an appointment renewed, once he or she reaches 75 years of age. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (11).

Current appointments

(10) For greater certainty, nothing in this section shortens or otherwise affects an appointment or renewed appointment that is in effect immediately before December 15, 2009, but any renewals of the appointment on and after that day are subject to this section. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 2, s. 20 (11); 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (4).

Deputy Judges Council

33 (1) A council known as the Deputy Judges Council in English and as Conseil des juges suppléants in French is established. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Composition

(2) The Deputy Judges Council is composed of,

- (a) the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, or another judge of the Superior Court of Justice designated by the Chief Justice;
- (b) a regional senior judge of the Superior Court of Justice, appointed by the Chief Justice;
- (c) a judge of the Superior Court of Justice, appointed by the Chief Justice;
- (d) the Small Claims Court Administrative Judge appointed under section 87.2 or a deputy judge, as appointed by the Chief Justice; and;

(e) three persons who are neither judges nor lawyers, appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the Attorney General's recommendation. 1994, c. 12, s. 13; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14, 17); 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 4.

Criteria

(3) In the appointment of members under clause (2) (e), the importance of reflecting, in the composition of the Council as a whole, Ontario's linguistic duality and the diversity of its population and ensuring overall gender balance shall be recognized. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Chair

(4) The Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, or his or her designate, shall chair the meetings of the Deputy Judges Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 13; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (14).

Same

(5) The chair is entitled to vote, and may cast a second deciding vote if there is a tie. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Functions

- (6) The functions of the Deputy Judges Council are,
- (a) to review and approve standards of conduct for deputy judges as established by the Chief Justice;
 - (b) to review and approve a plan for the continuing education of deputy judges as established by the Chief Justice; and
 - (c) to make recommendations on matters affecting deputy judges. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Duty of Chief Justice

(7) The Chief Justice shall ensure that any standards of conduct are made available to the public, in English and French, when they have been approved by the Deputy Judges Council. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 4.

Complaint

33.1 (1) Any person may make a complaint alleging misconduct by a deputy judge, by writing to the judge of the Superior Court of Justice designated by the regional senior judge in the region where the deputy judge sits. 1994, c. 12, s. 13; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Dismissal

(2) The judge shall review the complaint and may dismiss it without further investigation if, in his or her opinion, it falls outside the jurisdiction of the regional senior judge, is frivolous or an abuse of process, or concerns a minor matter to which an appropriate response has already been given. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Notice of dismissal

(3) The judge shall notify the regional senior judge, the complainant and the deputy judge in writing of a dismissal under subsection (2), giving brief reasons for it. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Committee

(4) If the complaint is not dismissed, the judge shall refer it to a committee consisting of three persons chosen by the regional senior judge. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Same

(5) The three persons shall be a judge of the Superior Court of Justice, a deputy judge and a person who is neither a judge nor a lawyer, all of whom reside or work in the region where the deputy judge who is the subject of the complaint sits. 1994, c. 12, s. 13; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17).

Investigation

(6) The committee shall investigate the complaint in the manner it considers appropriate, and the complainant and deputy judge shall be given an opportunity to make representations to the committee, in writing or, at the committee's option, orally. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Recommendation

(7) The committee shall make a report to the regional senior judge, recommending a disposition in accordance with subsections (8), (9) and (10). 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Disposition

(8) The regional senior judge may dismiss the complaint, with or without a finding that it is unfounded, or, if he or she concludes that the deputy judge's conduct presents grounds for imposing a sanction, may,

- (a) warn the deputy judge;
- (b) reprimand the deputy judge;
- (c) order the deputy judge to apologize to the complainant or to any other person;
- (d) order that the deputy judge take specified measures, such as receiving education or treatment, as a condition of continuing to sit as a deputy judge;
- (e) suspend the deputy judge for a period of up to 30 days;
- (f) inform the deputy judge that his or her appointment will not be renewed under subsection 32 \(2\);
- (g) direct that no judicial duties or only specified judicial duties be assigned to the deputy judge; or
- (h) remove the deputy judge from office. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Same

(9) The regional senior judge may adopt any combination of the dispositions set out in clauses (8) (a) to (g). 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Disability

(10) If the regional senior judge finds that the deputy judge is unable, because of a disability, to perform the essential duties of the office, but would be able to perform them if his or her needs were accommodated, the regional senior judge shall order that the deputy judge's needs be accommodated to the extent necessary to enable him or her to perform those duties. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Application of subs. (10)

- (11) Subsection (10) applies if,
- (a) the effect of the disability on the deputy judge's performance of the essential duties of the office was a factor in the complaint; and
 - (b) the regional senior judge dismisses the complaint or makes a disposition under clauses (8) (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) or (g). 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Undue hardship

(12) Subsection (10) does not apply if the regional senior judge is satisfied that making an order would impose undue hardship on the person responsible for accommodating the judge's needs, considering the cost, outside sources of funding, if any, and health and safety requirements, if any. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Opportunity to participate

(13) The regional senior judge shall not make an order under subsection (10) against a person without ensuring that the person has had an opportunity to participate and make submissions. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Crown bound

(14) An order made under subsection (10) binds the Crown. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Compensation

(15) The regional senior judge shall consider whether the deputy judge should be compensated for all or part of his or her costs for legal services incurred in connection with all the steps taken under this section in relation to the complaint. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Recommendation

(16) If the regional senior judge is of the opinion that the deputy judge should be compensated, he or she shall make a recommendation to the Attorney General to that effect, indicating the amount of compensation. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Same

(17) If the complaint is dismissed with a finding that it is unfounded, the regional senior judge shall recommend to the Attorney General that the deputy judge be compensated for his or her costs for legal services and shall indicate the amount of compensation. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Exception

(17.1) If the regional senior judge makes a disposition under clause (8) (h) in relation to a complaint made on or after the day section 1 of Schedule 5 to the Smarter and Stronger Justice Act, 2020 comes into force, subsection (15) does not apply and compensation shall not be recommended under subsection (16). 2020, c. 11, Sched. 5, s. 1.

Maximum

(18) The amount of compensation recommended under subsection (16) or (17) shall be based on a rate for legal services that does not exceed the maximum rate normally paid by the Government of Ontario for similar legal services. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Payment

(19) The Attorney General shall pay compensation to the judge in accordance with the recommendation. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Non-application of SPPA

(20) The Statutory Powers Procedure Act does not apply to a judge, regional senior judge or member of a committee acting under this section. 1994, c. 12, s. 13.

Personal liability

(21) No action or other proceeding for damages shall be instituted against a judge, regional senior judge or member of a committee for any act done in good faith in the execution or intended execution of any power or duty of the person, or for any neglect or default in the exercise or performance in good faith of such power or duty. 1994, c. 12, s. 13; 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 5.

ONTARIO COURT OF JUSTICE

Ontario Court of Justice

34 The Ontario Court (Provincial Division) is continued as a court of record under the name Ontario Court of Justice in English and Cour de justice de l'Ontario in French. 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (5).

Composition of Ontario Court of Justice

35 The Ontario Court of Justice shall consist of,

(a) the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice appointed under subsection 42 \(3\), who shall be president of the Ontario Court of Justice;

(a.1) the Associate Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice-Coordinator of Justices of the Peace of the Ontario Court of Justice appointed under subsections 42 \(4\) and \(5\);

(b) a regional senior judge of the Ontario Court of Justice appointed under subsection 42 \(6\) for each region;

(b.1) the Senior Advisory Family Judge of the Ontario Court of Justice appointed under subsection 42 \(6.2\);

(c) such provincial judges as are appointed under subsection 42 \(1\); and

(d) such provincial judges as were assigned to the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) or the Provincial Court (Family Division) on the 31st day of December, 1989. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 35; 1994, c. 12, s. 14; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20); 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (5).

Chief Justice, Associate Chief Justice and regional senior judges of Ontario Court of Justice

Powers and duties of Chief Justice

36 (1) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice shall direct and supervise the sittings of the Ontario Court of Justice and the assignment of its judicial duties. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 36 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (16, 18, 20).

Regional senior judges

(2) A regional senior judge of the Ontario Court of Justice shall, subject to the authority of the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice, exercise the powers and perform the duties of the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice in his or her region. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 36 (2); 1993, c. 27, Sched.; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20).

Delegation

(3) A regional senior judge of the Ontario Court of Justice may delegate to a judge of the Ontario Court of Justice in his or her region the authority to exercise specified functions. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 36 (3); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18).

Absence of Chief Justice

(4) If the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice is absent from Ontario or is for any reason unable to act, his or her powers and duties shall be exercised and performed by an associate chief justice of the Ontario Court of Justice designated by the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 36 (4); 1994, c. 12, s. 15; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20).

Senior Advisory Family Judge

- (5) The Senior Advisory Family Judge of the Ontario Court of Justice shall,
- (a) advise the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice with regard to,
 - (i) the education of judges with respect to family law matters, and
 - (ii) practices, procedures and programs relating to family law matters;
 - (b) preside over the Ontario Court of Justice Advisory Committee on Family Law;
 - (c) attend such meetings as the Chief Justice directs; and
 - (d) perform other duties respecting family law matters assigned to the Senior Advisory Family Judge by the Chief Justice. 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (6).

Absence of regional senior judge or Senior Advisory Family Judge

- (6) The powers and duties of a regional senior judge of the Ontario Court of Justice or of the Senior Advisory Family Judge when he or she is absent from Ontario or is for any reason unable to act shall be exercised and performed by a judge of the Ontario Court of Justice designated by the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice. 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (6).

Meetings

- (7) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice may hold meetings with the associate chief justices, the regional senior judges of the Ontario Court of Justice and the Senior Advisory Family Judge in order to consider any matters concerning sittings of the Ontario Court of Justice and the assignment of its judicial duties. 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (6).

Judges assigned to regions

- 37 (1) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice shall assign every provincial judge to a region and may re-assign a judge from one region to another. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 37 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20).

Same

- (2) Subsection (1) does not prevent the temporary assignment of a provincial judge to a location anywhere in Ontario. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 37 (2).

Jurisdiction of Ontario Court of Justice

Criminal matters

38 (1) A provincial judge has the power and authority of two or more justices of the peace when sitting in the Ontario Court of Justice and shall exercise the powers and perform the duties that any Act of the Parliament of Canada confers on a provincial court judge when sitting in the Ontario Court of Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 38 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18).

Provincial offences and family matters

(2) The Ontario Court of Justice shall perform any function assigned to it by or under the Provincial Offences Act, the Family Law Act, the Children's Law Reform Act, the Child, Youth and Family Services Act, 2017 or any other Act. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 38 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18); 2017, c. 14, Sched. 4, s. 10 (3).

Youth court and youth justice court

(3) The Ontario Court of Justice is a youth court for the purposes of the Young Offenders Act (Canada) and a youth justice court for the purposes of the Youth Criminal Justice Act (Canada). 2006, c. 19, Sched. D, s. 5 (1).

Judge to preside

39 (1) A proceeding in the Ontario Court of Justice shall be heard and determined by one judge of the Ontario Court of Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 39 (1); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18).

Justice of the peace may preside

(2) A justice of the peace may preside over the Ontario Court of Justice in a proceeding under the Provincial Offences Act. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 39 (2); 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18).

Appeals

40 (1) If no provision is made concerning an appeal from an order of the Ontario Court of Justice, an appeal lies to the Superior Court of Justice. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 40 (1); 1993, c. 27, Sched.; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (17, 18).

Exception

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a proceeding under the Criminal Code (Canada) or the Provincial Offences Act. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 40 (2).

Penalty for disturbance outside courtroom

41 Any person who knowingly disturbs or interferes with a proceeding in the Ontario Court of Justice without reasonable justification while outside the courtroom is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than thirty days, or to both. R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 41; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18).

PROVINCIAL JUDGES

Appointment of provincial judges

42 (1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Attorney General, may appoint such provincial judges as are considered necessary. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Qualification

(2) No person shall be appointed as a provincial judge unless the person satisfies the following criteria:

1. The person has,
 - i. been a member of the bar of one of the provinces or territories of Canada for at least 10 years, or
 - ii. for an aggregate of at least 10 years, been a member of a bar mentioned in subparagraph i and, after becoming a member of such a bar, exercised powers and performed duties of a judicial nature on a full-time basis in respect of a position held under a law of Canada or of one of its provinces or territories.
2. The person undertakes to participate in such courses as may be designated for newly appointed judges by the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice under subsection 51.10.1 \(3\).
3. The person undertakes to not request a transfer to a different court location during the first five years following appointment unless extenuating circumstances apply. 2023, c. 12, Sched. 3, s. 2; 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 1.

Chief Justice

(3) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Attorney General, appoint a provincial judge as Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20); 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 5 (2).

Associate chief justices

(4) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Attorney General, appoint two provincial judges as associate chief justices of the Ontario Court of Justice. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 5 (3).

Same

(5) One of the associate chief justices shall be appointed to the office of Associate Chief Justice-Co-ordinator of Justices of the Peace, which is created for the purposes of the Justices of the Peace Act. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Regional senior judges

(6) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Attorney General, appoint a provincial judge to be the regional senior judge of the Ontario Court of Justice for each region. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 5 (4).

Same

(6.1) Before making a recommendation referred to in subsection (4) or (6), the Attorney General shall consult with the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice. 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 5 (4).

Senior Advisory Family Judge

(6.2) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice may appoint a provincial judge to be the Senior Advisory Family Judge of the Ontario Court of Justice. 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (7).

Terms of office

(7) The associate chief justices each hold office for six years, and regional senior judges each hold office for three years. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, ss. 1 (5), 9 (20).

Same

(7.1) The Chief Justice holds office for eight years from the time of his or her appointment. If a successor has not yet been appointed on the day the term expires, the Chief Justice continues in office until a successor is appointed, but shall not hold office for more than nine years in any event. 1996, c. 25, ss. 1 (6), 9 (20).

Same

(7.2) The Senior Advisory Family Judge holds office for three years. 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (7).

Reappointment

(8) The Chief Justice and associate chief justices shall not be reappointed. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Same

(9) A regional senior judge may be reappointed once, for a further three years, on the Chief Justice's recommendation; if the Chief Justice so recommends, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall reappoint the regional senior judge. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Same

(9.1) The Senior Advisory Family Judge may be reappointed once, for a term of three years. 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (7).

Transitional salary

(9.2) Until and subject to the determination of his or her salary by the Provincial Judges Remuneration Commission, the Senior Advisory Family Judge is entitled to receive as an annual salary the annual salary of a regional senior judge appointed on or after November 12, 2013. 2015, c. 27, Sched. 1, s. 1 (7).

Status at end of term

(10) A Chief Justice, associate chief justice, Senior Advisory Family Judge or regional senior judge whose term expires continues to be a provincial judge. 2016, c. 5, Sched. 7, s. 1.

Information to be maintained in confidence

(11) Any records or other information collected, prepared, maintained or used by the Attorney General in relation to the appointment or consideration of an individual as a provincial judge, including any such records or other information provided to the Attorney General by the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee, shall be maintained in confidence and shall not be disclosed except as authorized by the Attorney General. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 3.

Prevails over FIPPA

(12) Subsection (11) prevails over the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 3.

Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee

43 (1) The committee known as the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee in English and Comité consultatif sur les nominations à la magistrature in French is continued. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Composition

(2) The Committee is composed of,

(a) two provincial judges, appointed by the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice;

(b) three lawyers appointed by the Attorney General, one appointed from a list of three names submitted by the Law Society of Ontario, one appointed from a list of three names submitted by the Ontario Bar Association and one appointed from a list of three names submitted by the Federation of Ontario Law Associations;

(c) seven persons who are not judges, appointed by the Attorney General; and

(d) a member of the Judicial Council, appointed by it. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4; 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 2.

Criteria

(3) In the appointment of members under clauses (2) (b) and (c), the importance of reflecting, in the composition of the Committee as a whole, Ontario's linguistic duality and the diversity of its population and ensuring overall gender balance shall be recognized. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Term of office

(4) The members hold office for three-year terms and may be reappointed. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Chair

(5) The Attorney General shall designate one of the members to chair the Committee for a term of up to three years. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Term of office

(6) The same person may serve as chair for two or more terms. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Meetings

(7) The Committee may hold its meetings and conduct interviews in person or through electronic means, including telephone conferencing and video conferencing. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Annual report

(8) The Committee shall prepare an annual report, provide it to the Attorney General and make it available to the public. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Same

(9) The annual report must include,

(a) statistics about the sex, gender, gender identity, sexual orientation, race, ethnicity, disability status and ability to speak French of candidates who volunteer that information, including whether the candidates identify as Indigenous or as a member of a Francophone community, at each stage of the process, as specified by the Attorney General; and

(b) such other content as the Attorney General may require. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4; 2024, c. 2, Sched. 6, s. 1.

Tabling of annual report

(10) The Attorney General shall table the Committee's annual report in the Assembly. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Personal liability

(11) No action or other proceeding for damages shall be instituted against any member or former member of the Committee for any act done in good faith in the execution or intended execution of any power or duty that he or she has or had as a member of the Committee, or for any neglect or default in the exercise or performance in good faith of such power or duty. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Crown liability

(12) Subsection (11) does not, by reason of subsection 8 \(3\) of the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, 2019, relieve the Crown of liability in respect of a tort committed by a person mentioned in subsection (11) to which it would otherwise be subject. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Transition

(13) Despite subsection (2), the appointment of every person who was a member of the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee on the day before the day section 4 of Schedule 3 to the Accelerating Access to Justice Act, 2021 came into force is continued. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Candidate recommendation process

Definition

43.1 (0.1) In this section,

“classification period” means, in respect of a candidate, the period beginning on the day the candidate submits an application for candidacy to be appointed as a provincial judge and ending on the third anniversary of that day. 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (1).

Committee functions

- (1) The functions of the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee are to,
- (a) recommend candidates to the Attorney General for the appointment of provincial judges; and
 - (b) provide advice to the Attorney General respecting the process for appointing provincial judges in accordance with this Act. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Manner of operating

- (2) The Committee shall perform its functions in the following manner:
1. It shall, on the Attorney General’s request, advertise for applications for candidacy to be appointed as a provincial judge.

2. It shall review and evaluate all applications received in response to the advertisement.

3. REPEALED: 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (2).

4. It may interview any of the candidates in conducting its review and evaluation.

5. It shall conduct the advertising, review and evaluation process in accordance with criteria it establishes, which must,

i. provide for an assessment that, at minimum,

A. assesses the candidates' professional excellence, community awareness and personal characteristics, and

B. recognizes the desirability of reflecting the diversity of Ontario society in judicial appointments, and

ii. include any criteria specified to the Committee by the Attorney General for the purposes of this paragraph.

6. It shall make the criteria it established under paragraph 5 available to the public.

7. For each candidate, it shall classify the candidate as "not recommended", "recommended" or "highly recommended".

8. It shall provide a list of the candidates classified as "recommended" or "highly recommended" to the Attorney General, with brief supporting reasons and the following information respecting each candidate:

i. Whether the classification applies to the candidate's qualification to preside over bilingual proceedings.

ii. The court locations in which the candidate is willing to sit. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4; 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (2-4).

Majority required

(2.1) The Committee shall determine matters under subsection (2) by a majority vote of the members present. 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (5).

Chair may vote

(2.2) For the purposes of subsection (2.1), the chair is entitled to vote and may cast a second, deciding vote if there is a tie. 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (5).

Qualifications

- (3) The Committee shall not consider an application by a candidate,
- (a) who does not meet the qualifications set out in subsection 42 \(2\);
 - (b) who is or was a member of the Committee within the previous three years; or
 - (c) who previously applied for candidacy, if more than six months remain in the candidate's classification period under that application. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4; 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 \(6\).

Information to be provided to Attorney

General on request

- (4) The Committee shall provide the Attorney General with any information about the application, review and evaluation process that the Attorney General requests, other than,
- (a) the names or identifying information of candidates who are classified as "not recommended";
 - (b) the names or identifying information of candidates who are being assessed but have not yet been classified; and
 - (c) information collected or prepared by the Committee through a discreet inquiry. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4; 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 \(7\).

Same

- (5) The Committee shall provide any information requested by the Attorney General under subsection (4) within 30 days of the request unless otherwise directed by the Attorney General. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Meaning of discreet inquiry

- (6) For the purposes of clause (4) (c), a discreet inquiry is a confidential inquiry conducted by the Committee into the views or opinions of individuals with knowledge of a candidate's suitability for appointment. 2021, c. 4, Sched. 3, s. 4.

Recommendation by Attorney General

- (7) The Attorney General may only recommend a candidate to the Lieutenant Governor in Council for appointment to fill a judicial vacancy if,

- (a) the candidate was classified by the Committee as “recommended” or “highly recommended”;
- (b) the classification applies to the candidate’s qualification to preside over bilingual proceedings, if the vacancy is for a bilingual judicial position;
- (c) the information provided under subparagraph 8 ii of subsection (2) with respect to the candidate indicates that the candidate is willing to sit in the court location to which the vacancy relates; and
- (d) the candidate’s classification period has not expired. 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (8).

Reclassification

(8) If, during the classification period of a candidate who was classified as “not recommended”, the Committee receives or becomes aware of information respecting the candidate that the Committee believes may affect the candidate’s classification, the Committee may re-evaluate and reclassify the candidate. 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (8).

Same, notification

(9) The Committee shall promptly notify the Attorney General in writing of the reclassification of a candidate under subsection (8), with brief supporting reasons. 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (8).

Same, no effect on classification period

(10) The reclassification of a candidate has no effect on the candidate’s classification period. 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (8).

Other information

(11) If, during the classification period of a candidate who was classified as “recommended” or “highly recommended”, the Committee receives or becomes aware of information respecting the candidate that the Committee believes may be material to whether the Attorney General recommends the candidate to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the Committee shall promptly notify the Attorney General in writing respecting the information. 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (8).

Transition

(12) This section, as it read immediately before the day the Protect Ontario Through Safer Streets and Stronger Communities Act, 2025 received Royal Assent, continues to apply with respect to a judicial vacancy that was advertised by the Committee before that day. 2025, c. 6, Sched. 5, s. 3 (8).

Full and part-time service

44 (1) A provincial judge may, at his or her option and with the Chief Justice's consent, change from full-time to part-time service or the reverse, or increase or decrease the amount of part-time service. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Part-time judges

(2) The Chief Justice, with the Attorney General's consent, may designate a former provincial judge who has retired from office to serve as a provincial judge on a part-time basis, not to exceed the limits specified by the regulations made under this Act. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20); 2023, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 2; 2024, c. 27, Sched. 7, s. 1.

Same

(3) A person designated under subsection (2) is a provincial judge and a member of the Ontario Court of Justice. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18).

Same

(4) A judge who is serving on a part-time basis under subsection (1) or (2) shall not engage in any other remunerative occupation. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Application for order that needs be accommodated

45 (1) A provincial judge who believes that he or she is unable, because of a disability, to perform the essential duties of the office unless his or her needs are accommodated may apply to the Judicial Council for an order under subsection (2).

Duty of Judicial Council

(2) If the Judicial Council finds that the judge is unable, because of a disability, to perform the essential duties of the office unless his or her needs are accommodated, it shall order that the judge's needs be accommodated to the extent necessary to enable him or her to perform those duties.

Undue hardship

(3) Subsection (2) does not apply if the Judicial Council is satisfied that making an order would impose undue hardship on the person responsible for accommodating the judge's needs, considering the cost, outside sources of funding, if any, and health and safety requirements, if any.

Guidelines and rules of procedure

(4) In dealing with applications under this section, the Judicial Council shall follow its guidelines and rules of procedure established under subsection 51.1 \(1\).

Opportunity to participate

(5) The Judicial Council shall not make an order under subsection (2) against a person without ensuring that the person has had an opportunity to participate and make submissions.

Crown bound

(6) The order binds the Crown. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Outside activities

46 (1) A provincial judge may act as commissioner, arbitrator, adjudicator, referee, conciliator or mediator only if expressly authorized by an Act of the Parliament of Canada or the Legislature or appointed or authorized by the Governor in Council or Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Same

(2) A judge who, before January 1, 1985, had the consent of the Attorney General to act as an arbitrator or conciliator may continue to do so.

Remuneration

(3) A judge acting under subsection (1) shall not receive remuneration but shall be reimbursed for reasonable travelling and other expenses incurred while so acting. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Retirement

47 (1) Every provincial judge shall retire upon attaining the age of sixty-five years. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(2) Despite subsection (1), a judge appointed as a full-time magistrate, judge of a juvenile and family court or master before December 2, 1968 shall retire upon attaining the age of seventy years. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Continuation of judges in office

(3) A judge who has attained retirement age may, subject to the annual approval of the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice, continue in office as a full-time or part-time judge until he or she attains the age of seventy-five years. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20).

Same, regional senior judges

(4) A regional senior judge of the Ontario Court of Justice who is in office at the time of attaining retirement age may, subject to the annual approval of the Chief Justice, continue in that office until his or her term (including any renewal under subsection 42 \(9\)) expires, or until he or she attains the age of seventy-five years, whichever comes first. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20).

Same, Chief Justice and associate chief justices

(5) A Chief Justice or associate chief justice of the Ontario Court of Justice who is in office at the time of attaining retirement age may, subject to the annual approval of the Judicial Council, continue in that office until his or her term expires, or until he or she attains the age of seventy-five years, whichever comes first. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20).

Same

(6) If the Judicial Council does not approve a Chief Justice's or associate chief justice's continuation in that office under subsection (5), his or her continuation in the office of provincial judge is subject to the approval of the Judicial Council and not as set out in subsection (3). 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Criteria

(7) Decisions under subsections (3), (4), (5) and (6) shall be made in accordance with criteria developed by the Chief Justice and approved by the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Appointment after reaching 65 years

(8) This section applies, with necessary modifications, to a person appointed as a provincial judge, or as a Chief Justice, associate chief justice or regional senior judge, after reaching 65 years of age. 2017, c. 20, Sched. 2, s. 3.

Resignation and election

Resignation

48. (1) A provincial judge may at any time resign from his or her office by delivering a signed letter of resignation to the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice or, in the case of the Chief Justice, to the Attorney General. 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 8 (1).

Election

(2) A Chief Justice, an associate chief justice or a regional senior judge may, before the expiry of his or her term of office under section 42, elect to hold the office of a provincial judge only, by delivering a signed letter to that effect to the Attorney General in the case of a Chief Justice, or to the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice in any other case. 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 8 (1).

(3) REPEALED: 2016, c. 5, Sched. 7, s. 2.

Effective date

(4) A resignation or election under this section takes effect on the day the letter is delivered to the Chief Justice or the Attorney General, as the case may be or, if the letter specifies a later day, on that day. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 8 (2).

(5) SPENT: 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

ONTARIO JUDICIAL COUNCIL

Judicial Council

49 (1) The Ontario Judicial Council is continued under the name Ontario Judicial Council in English and Conseil de la magistrature de l'Ontario in French. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Composition

(2) The Judicial Council is composed of,

- (a) the Chief Justice of Ontario, or another judge of the Court of Appeal designated by the Chief Justice;

(b) the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice, or another judge of that court designated by the Chief Justice, and the Associate Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice;

(c) a regional senior judge of the Ontario Court of Justice, appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the Attorney General's recommendation;

(d) two judges of the Ontario Court of Justice, appointed by the Chief Justice;

(e) the Treasurer of the Law Society of Ontario, or another bencher of the Law Society who is a lawyer, designated by the Treasurer;

(f) a lawyer who is not a bencher of the Law Society of Ontario, appointed by the Law Society;

(g) four persons who are neither judges nor lawyers, appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the Attorney General's recommendation. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (15, 18, 20); 2018, c. 8, Sched. 15, s. 8 (1).

Temporary members

(3) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice may appoint a judge of that court to be a temporary member of the Judicial Council in the place of another provincial judge, for the purposes of dealing with a complaint, if the requirements of subsections (13), (15), (17), (19) and (20) cannot otherwise be met. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (15, 18, 20).

Criteria

(4) In the appointment of members under clauses (2) (d), (f) and (g), the importance of reflecting, in the composition of the Judicial Council as a whole, Ontario's linguistic duality and the diversity of its population and ensuring overall gender balance shall be recognized. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Term of office

(5) The regional senior judge who is appointed under clause (2) (c) remains a member of the Judicial Council until he or she ceases to hold office as a regional senior judge. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(6) The members who are appointed under clauses (2) (d), (f) and (g) hold office for four-year terms and shall not be reappointed. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

(7) REPEALED: 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 9 (1).

Chair

(8) The Chief Justice of Ontario, or another judge of the Court of Appeal designated by the Chief Justice, shall chair the meetings and hearings of the Judicial Council that deal with complaints against particular judges and its meetings held for the purposes of section 45 and subsection 47 \(5\). 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(9) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice, or another judge of that court designated by the Chief Justice, shall chair all other meetings and hearings of the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (15, 18, 20).

Same

(10) The chair is entitled to vote, and may cast a second deciding vote if there is a tie. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Open and closed hearings and meetings

(11) The Judicial Council's hearings and meetings under sections 51.6 and 51.7 shall be open to the public, unless subsection 51.6 \(7\) applies; its other hearings and meetings may be conducted in private, unless this Act provides otherwise. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Vacancies

(12) Where a vacancy occurs among the members appointed under clause (2) (d), (f) or (g), a new member similarly qualified may be appointed for the remainder of the term. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Quorum

(13) The following quorum rules apply, subject to subsections (15) and (17):

1. Eight members, including the chair, constitute a quorum.
2. At least half the members present must be judges and at least four must be persons who are not judges. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Review panels

(14) The Judicial Council may establish a panel for the purpose of dealing with a complaint under subsection 51.4 \(17\) or \(18\) or subsection 51.5 \(8\) or \(10\) and considering the question of compensation under section 51.7, and the panel has all the powers of the Judicial Council for that purpose. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(15) The following rules apply to a panel established under subsection (14):

1. The panel shall consist of two provincial judges other than the Chief Justice, a lawyer and a person who is neither a judge nor a lawyer.
2. One of the judges, as designated by the Judicial Council, shall chair the panel.
3. Four members constitute a quorum. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Hearing panels

(16) The Judicial Council may establish a panel for the purpose of holding a hearing under section 51.6 and considering the question of compensation under section 51.7, and the panel has all the powers of the Judicial Council for that purpose. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(17) The following rules apply to a panel established under subsection (16):

1. Half the members of the panel, including the chair, must be judges, and half must be persons who are not judges.
2. At least one member must be a person who is neither a judge nor a lawyer.
3. The Chief Justice of Ontario, or another judge of the Court of Appeal designated by the Chief Justice, shall chair the panel.
4. Subject to paragraphs 1, 2 and 3, the Judicial Council may determine the size and composition of the panel.
5. All the members of the panel constitute a quorum. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Chair

(18) The chair of a panel established under subsection (14) or (16) is entitled to vote, and may cast a second deciding vote if there is a tie. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Participation in stages of process

(19) The members of the subcommittee that investigated a complaint shall not,

(a) deal with the complaint under subsection 51.4 \(17\) or \(18\) or subsection 51.5 \(8\) or \(10\); or

(b) participate in a hearing of the complaint under section 51.6. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(20) The members of the Judicial Council who dealt with a complaint under subsection 51.4 \(17\) or \(18\) or subsection 51.5 \(8\) or \(10\) shall not participate in a hearing of the complaint under section 51.6. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Expert assistance

(21) The Judicial Council may engage persons, including counsel, to assist it. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Support services

(22) The Judicial Council shall provide support services, including initial orientation and continuing education, to enable its members to participate effectively, devoting particular attention to the needs of the members who are neither judges nor lawyers and administering a part of its budget for support services separately for that purpose. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(23) The Judicial Council shall administer a part of its budget for support services separately for the purpose of accommodating the needs of any members who have disabilities. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Confidential records

(24) The Judicial Council or a subcommittee may order that any information or documents relating to a mediation or a Council meeting or hearing that was not held in public are confidential and shall not be disclosed or made public. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(25) Subsection (24) applies whether the information or documents are in the possession of the Judicial Council, the Attorney General or any other person. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Exceptions

(26) Subsection (24) does not apply to information and documents,

(a) that this Act requires the Judicial Council to disclose; or

(b) that have not been treated as confidential and were not prepared exclusively for the purposes of the mediation or Council meeting or hearing. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Personal liability

(27) No action or other proceeding for damages shall be instituted against the Judicial Council, any of its members or employees or any person acting under its authority for any act done in good faith in the execution or intended execution of any power or duty of the Council or person, or for any neglect or default in the exercise or performance in good faith of such power or duty. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 9 (2).

Remuneration

(28) The members who are appointed under clause (2) (g) are entitled to receive the daily remuneration that is fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Complaint against Chief Justice, Associate Chief Justice or regional senior judge of the Ontario Court of Justice

Complaint against Chief Justice

50 (1) If the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice is the subject of a complaint,

(a) the Chief Justice of Ontario shall appoint another judge of the Ontario Court of Justice to be a member of the Judicial Council instead of the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice, until the complaint is finally disposed of;

(b) the Associate Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice shall chair meetings and hearings of the Council instead of the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice, and make appointments under subsection 49 \(3\) instead of the Chief Justice, until the complaint is finally disposed of; and

(c) any reference of the complaint that would otherwise be made to the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice under clause 51.4 \(13\) \(b\) or 51.4 \(18\) \(c\), subclause 51.5 \(8\) \(b\) \(ii\) or clause 51.5 (10) (b) shall be made to the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice instead of to the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice.

Suspension of Chief Justice

(2) If the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice is suspended under subsection 51.4 \(12\),

(a) complaints that would otherwise be referred to the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice under clauses 51.4 \(13\) \(b\) and 51.4 \(18\) \(c\), subclause 51.5 \(8\) \(b\) \(ii\) and clause 51.5 (10) (b) shall be referred to the Associate Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice, until the complaint is finally disposed of; and

(b) annual approvals that would otherwise be granted or refused by the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice shall be granted or refused by the Associate Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice, until the complaint is finally disposed of.

Complaint against Associate Chief Justice or regional senior judge

(3) If the Associate Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice or the regional senior judge appointed under clause 49 \(2\) \(c\) is the subject of a complaint, the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice shall appoint another judge of the Ontario Court of Justice to be a member of the Judicial Council instead of the Associate Chief Justice or regional senior judge, as the case may be, until the complaint is finally disposed of. 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (6).

Other duties of Judicial Council

Provision of information to public

51 (1) The Judicial Council shall provide, in courthouses and elsewhere, information about itself and about the justice system, including information about how members of the public may obtain assistance in making complaints.

Same

(2) In providing information, the Judicial Council shall emphasize the elimination of cultural and linguistic barriers and the accommodation of the needs of persons with disabilities.

Assistance to public

(3) Where necessary, the Judicial Council shall arrange for the provision of assistance to members of the public in the preparation of documents for making complaints.

Telephone access

(4) The Judicial Council shall provide province-wide free telephone access, including telephone access for the deaf, to information about itself and its role in the justice system.

Persons with disabilities

(5) To enable persons with disabilities to participate effectively in the complaints process, the Judicial Council shall ensure that their needs are accommodated, at the Council's expense, unless it would impose undue hardship on the Council to do so, considering the cost, outside sources of funding, if any, and health and safety requirements, if any.

Annual report

(6) After the end of each year, the Judicial Council shall make an annual report to the Attorney General on its affairs, in English and French, including, with respect to all complaints received or dealt with during the year, a summary of the complaint, the findings and a statement of the disposition, but the report shall not include information that might identify the judge or the complainant.

Same, publication

(7) The Judicial Council shall, no earlier than 15 but no later than 30 days after making the report, publish it in English and French on its website. 2019, c. 7, Sched. 15, s. 1.

Rules

51.1 (1) The Judicial Council shall establish and make public rules governing its own procedures, including the following:

1. Guidelines and rules of procedure for the purpose of section 45.
2. Guidelines and rules of procedure for the purpose of subsection 51.4 \(21\).
3. Guidelines and rules of procedure for the purpose of subsection 51.4 \(22\).
4. If applicable, criteria for the purpose of subsection 51.5 \(2\).
5. If applicable, guidelines and rules of procedure for the purpose of subsection 51.5 \(13\).
6. Rules of procedure for the purpose of subsection 51.6 \(3\).
7. Criteria for the purpose of subsection 51.6 \(7\).
8. Criteria for the purpose of subsection 51.6 \(8\).
9. Criteria for the purpose of subsection 51.6 \(10\). 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Legislation Act, 2006, Part III

(2) Part III (Regulations) of the Legislation Act, 2006 does not apply to rules, guidelines or criteria established by the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 2006, c. 21, Sched. F, s. 136 (1).

Sections 28, 29 and 33 of SPPA

(3) Sections 28, 29 and 33 of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act do not apply to the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Use of official languages of courts

51.2 (1) The information provided under subsections 51 \(1\), \(3\) and \(4\) and the matters made public under subsection 51.1 \(1\) shall be made available in English and French.

Same

(2) Complaints against provincial judges may be made in English or French.

Same

(3) A hearing under section 51.6 shall be conducted in English, but a complainant or witness who speaks French or a judge who is the subject of a complaint and who speaks French is entitled, on request,

- (a) to be given, before the hearing, French translations of documents that are written in English and are to be considered at the hearing;

(b) to be provided with the assistance of an interpreter at the hearing;
and

(c) to be provided with simultaneous interpretation into French of the English portions of the hearing.

Same

(4) Subsection (3) also applies to mediations conducted under section 51.5 and to the Judicial Council's consideration of the question of compensation under section 51.7, if subsection 51.7 \(2\) applies.

Bilingual hearing or mediation

(5) The Judicial Council may direct that a hearing or mediation to which subsection (3) applies be conducted bilingually, if the Council is of the opinion that it can be properly conducted in that manner.

Part of hearing or mediation

(6) A directive under subsection (5) may apply to a part of the hearing or mediation, and in that case subsections (7) and (8) apply with necessary modifications.

Same

(7) In a bilingual hearing or mediation,

(a) oral evidence and submissions may be given or made in English or French, and shall be recorded in the language in which they are given or made;

(b) documents may be filed in either language;

(c) in the case of a mediation, discussions may take place in either language;

(d) the reasons for a decision or the mediator's report, as the case may be, may be written in either language.

Same

(8) In a bilingual hearing or mediation, if the complainant or the judge who is the subject of the complaint does not speak both languages, he or she is entitled, on request, to have simultaneous interpretation of any evidence, submissions or discussions spoken in the other language and translation of any document filed or reasons or report written in the other language. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Complaint re provincial judge

51.3 (1) Any person may make a complaint to the Judicial Council alleging misconduct by a provincial judge.

Same

(2) If an allegation of misconduct against a provincial judge is made to a member of the Judicial Council, it shall be treated as a complaint made to the Judicial Council.

Same

(3) If an allegation of misconduct against a provincial judge is made to any other judge or to the Attorney General, the other judge, or the Attorney General, as the case may be, shall provide the person making the allegation with information about the Judicial Council's role in the justice system and about how a complaint may be made, and shall refer the person to the Judicial Council.

Carriage of matter

(4) Once a complaint has been made to the Judicial Council, the Council has carriage of the matter.

Information re complaint

(5) At any person's request, the Judicial Council may confirm or deny that a particular complaint has been made to it. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Role of subcommittee

Review

51.4 (1) A complaint received by the Judicial Council shall be reviewed by a subcommittee of the Council consisting of a provincial judge other than the Chief Justice and a person who is neither a judge nor a lawyer. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Rotation of members

(2) The eligible members of the Judicial Council shall all serve on the subcommittee on a rotating basis.

Dismissal

(3) The subcommittee shall dismiss the complaint without further investigation if, in the subcommittee's opinion, it falls outside the Judicial Council's jurisdiction or is frivolous or an abuse of process.

Investigation

(4) If the complaint is not dismissed under subsection (3), the subcommittee shall conduct such investigation as it considers appropriate.

Expert assistance

(5) The subcommittee may engage persons, including counsel, to assist it in its investigation.

Investigation private

(6) The investigation shall be conducted in private.

Non-application of SPPA

(7) The Statutory Powers Procedure Act does not apply to the subcommittee's activities.

Interim recommendations

(8) The subcommittee may recommend to a regional senior judge the suspension, with pay, of the judge who is the subject of the complaint, or the judge's reassignment to a different location, until the complaint is finally disposed of.

Same

(9) The recommendation shall be made to the regional senior judge appointed for the region to which the judge is assigned, unless that regional senior judge is a member of the Judicial Council, in which case the recommendation shall be made to another regional senior judge.

Power of regional senior judge

(10) The regional senior judge may suspend or reassign the judge as the subcommittee recommends. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Discretion

(11) The regional senior judge's discretion to accept or reject the subcommittee's recommendation is not subject to the direction and supervision of the Chief Justice. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Exception: complaints against certain judges

(12) If the complaint is against the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice, an associate chief justice of the Ontario Court of Justice or the regional senior judge who is a member of the Judicial Council, any recommendation under subsection (8) in connection with the complaint shall be made to the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, who may suspend or reassign the judge as the subcommittee recommends. 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (7).

Subcommittee's decision

(13) When its investigation is complete, the subcommittee shall,

- (a) dismiss the complaint;
- (b) refer the complaint to the Chief Justice;
- (c) refer the complaint to a mediator in accordance with section 51.5; or
- (d) refer the complaint to the Judicial Council, with or without recommending that it hold a hearing under section 51.6. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Same

(14) The subcommittee may dismiss the complaint or refer it to the Chief Justice or to a mediator only if both members agree; otherwise, the complaint shall be referred to the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Conditions, reference to Chief Justice

(15) The subcommittee may, if the judge who is the subject of the complaint agrees, impose conditions on a decision to refer the complaint to the Chief Justice. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Report

(16) The subcommittee shall report to the Judicial Council, without identifying the complainant or the judge who is the subject of the complaint, its disposition of any complaint that is dismissed or referred to the Chief Justice or to a mediator. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Power of Judicial Council

(17) The Judicial Council shall consider the report, in private, and may approve the subcommittee's disposition or may require the subcommittee to refer the complaint to the Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(18) The Judicial Council shall consider, in private, every complaint referred to it by the subcommittee, and may,

- (a) hold a hearing under section 51.6;
- (b) dismiss the complaint;
- (c) refer the complaint to the Chief Justice, with or without imposing conditions as referred to in subsection (15); or
- (d) refer the complaint to a mediator in accordance with section 51.5. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Non-application of SPPA

(19) The Statutory Powers Procedure Act does not apply to the Judicial Council's activities under subsections (17) and (18).

Notice to judge and complainant

(20) After making its decision under subsection (17) or (18), the Judicial Council shall communicate it to the judge and the complainant, giving brief reasons in the case of a dismissal.

Guidelines and rules of procedure

(21) In conducting investigations, in making recommendations under subsection (8) and in making decisions under subsections (13) and (15), the subcommittee shall follow the Judicial Council's guidelines and rules of procedure established under subsection 51.1 \(1\).

Same

(22) In considering reports and complaints and making decisions under subsections (17) and (18), the Judicial Council shall follow its guidelines and rules of procedure established under subsection 51.1 \(1\). 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Mediation

51.5 (1) The Judicial Council may establish a mediation process for complainants and for judges who are the subject of complaints.

Criteria

(2) If the Judicial Council establishes a mediation process, it must also establish criteria to exclude from the process complaints that are inappropriate for mediation.

Same

(3) Without limiting the generality of subsection (2), the criteria must ensure that complaints are excluded from the mediation process in the following circumstances:

1. There is a significant power imbalance between the complainant and the judge, or there is such a significant disparity between the complainant's and the judge's accounts of the event with which the complaint is concerned that mediation would be unworkable.
2. The complaint involves an allegation of sexual misconduct or an allegation of discrimination or harassment because of a prohibited ground of discrimination or harassment referred to in any provision of the Human Rights Code.
3. The public interest requires a hearing of the complaint.

Legal advice

(4) A complaint may be referred to a mediator only if the complainant and the judge consent to the referral, are able to obtain independent legal advice and have had an opportunity to do so.

Trained mediator

(5) The mediator shall be a person who has been trained in mediation and who is not a judge, and if the mediation is conducted by two or more persons acting together, at least one of them must meet those requirements.

Impartiality

(6) The mediator shall be impartial.

Exclusion

(7) No member of the subcommittee that investigated the complaint and no member of the Judicial Council who dealt with the complaint under subsection 51.4 \(17\) or \(18\) shall participate in the mediation. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Review by Council

(8) The mediator shall report the results of the mediation, without identifying the complainant or the judge who is the subject of the complaint, to the Judicial Council, which shall review the report, in private, and may,

- (a) approve the disposition of the complaint; or
- (b) if the mediation does not result in a disposition or if the Council is of the opinion that the disposition is not in the public interest,
 - (i) dismiss the complaint,
 - (ii) refer the complaint to the Chief Justice, with or without imposing conditions as referred to in subsection 51.4 \(15\), or
 - (iii) hold a hearing under section 51.6. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Report

(9) If the Judicial Council approves the disposition of the complaint, it may make the results of the mediation public, providing a summary of the complaint but not identifying the complainant or the judge. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Referral to Council

(10) At any time during or after the mediation, the complainant or the judge may refer the complaint to the Judicial Council, which shall consider the matter, in private, and may,

- (a) dismiss the complaint;
- (b) refer the complaint to the Chief Justice, with or without imposing conditions as referred to in subsection 51.4 \(15\); or
- (c) hold a hearing under section 51.6. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Non-application of SPPA

(11) The Statutory Powers Procedure Act does not apply to the Judicial Council's activities under subsections (8) and (10).

Notice to judge and complainant

(12) After making its decision under subsection (8) or (10), the Judicial Council shall communicate it to the judge and the complainant, giving brief reasons in the case of a dismissal.

Guidelines and rules of procedure

(13) In reviewing reports, considering matters and making decisions under subsections (8) and (10), the Judicial Council shall follow its guidelines and rules of procedure established under subsection 51.1 \(1\). 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Adjudication by Council

51.6 (1) When the Judicial Council decides to hold a hearing, it shall do so in accordance with this section. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Application of SPPA

(2) The Statutory Powers Procedure Act, except section 4 and subsection 9 \(1\), applies to the hearing. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Rules of procedure

(3) The Judicial Council's rules of procedure established under subsection 51.1 \(1\) apply to the hearing. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Communication re subject-matter of hearing

(4) The members of the Judicial Council participating in the hearing shall not communicate directly or indirectly in relation to the subject-matter of the hearing with any person, unless all the parties and the persons representing the parties under the authority of the Law Society Act receive notice and have an opportunity to participate. 2006, c. 21, Sched. C, s. 105 (3).

Exception

(5) Subsection (4) does not preclude the Judicial Council from engaging counsel to assist it in accordance with subsection 49 \(21\), and in that case the nature of the advice given by counsel shall be communicated to the parties so that they may make submissions as to the law. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Parties

(6) The Judicial Council shall determine who are the parties to the hearing. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Exception, closed hearing

(7) In exceptional circumstances, if the Judicial Council determines, in accordance with the criteria established under subsection 51.1 \(1\), that the desirability of holding open hearings is outweighed by the desirability of maintaining confidentiality, it may hold all or part of the hearing in private. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Disclosure in exceptional circumstances

(8) If the hearing was held in private, the Judicial Council shall, unless it determines in accordance with the criteria established under subsection 51.1 \(1\) that there are exceptional circumstances, order that the judge's name not be disclosed or made public. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Orders prohibiting publication

(9) If the complaint involves allegations of sexual misconduct or sexual harassment, the Judicial Council shall, at the request of a complainant or of another witness who testifies to having been the victim of similar conduct by the judge, prohibit the publication of information that might identify the complainant or witness, as the case may be. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Publication ban

(10) In exceptional circumstances and in accordance with the criteria established under subsection 51.1 \(1\), the Judicial Council may make an order prohibiting, pending the disposition of a complaint, the publication of information that might identify the judge who is the subject of the complaint. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Dispositions

(11) After completing the hearing, the Judicial Council may dismiss the complaint, with or without a finding that it is unfounded or, if it finds that there has been misconduct by the judge, may,

- (a) warn the judge;
- (b) reprimand the judge;

- (c) order the judge to apologize to the complainant or to any other person;
- (d) order that the judge take specified measures, such as receiving education or treatment, as a condition of continuing to sit as a judge;
- (e) suspend the judge with pay, for any period;
- (f) suspend the judge without pay, but with benefits, for a period up to thirty days; or
- (g) recommend to the Attorney General that the judge be removed from office in accordance with section 51.8. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(12) The Judicial Council may adopt any combination of the dispositions set out in clauses (11) (a) to (f). 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Disability

(13) If the Judicial Council finds that the judge is unable, because of a disability, to perform the essential duties of the office, but would be able to perform them if his or her needs were accommodated, the Council shall order that the judge's needs be accommodated to the extent necessary to enable him or her to perform those duties. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Application of subs. (13)

(14) Subsection (13) applies if,

- (a) the effect of the disability on the judge's performance of the essential duties of the office was a factor in the complaint; and
- (b) the Judicial Council dismisses the complaint or makes a disposition under clauses (11) (a) to (f). 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Undue hardship

(15) Subsection (13) does not apply if the Judicial Council is satisfied that making an order would impose undue hardship on the person responsible for accommodating the judge's needs, considering the cost, outside sources of funding, if any, and health and safety requirements, if any. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Opportunity to participate

(16) The Judicial Council shall not make an order under subsection (13) against a person without ensuring that the person has had an opportunity to participate and make submissions. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Crown bound

(17) An order made under subsection (13) binds the Crown. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Report to Attorney General

(18) The Judicial Council may make a report to the Attorney General about the complaint, investigation, hearing and disposition, subject to any order made under subsection 49 \(24\), and the Attorney General may make the report public if of the opinion that this would be in the public interest. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Non-identification of persons

(19) The following persons shall not be identified in the report:

1. A complainant or witness at whose request an order was made under subsection (9).
2. The judge, if the hearing was conducted in private, unless the Judicial Council orders that the judge's name be disclosed. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Continuing publication ban

(20) If an order was made under subsection (10) and the Judicial Council dismisses the complaint with a finding that it was unfounded, the judge shall not be identified in the report without his or her consent and the Council shall order that information that relates to the complaint and might identify the judge shall never be made public without his or her consent. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Compensation

51.7 (1) When the Judicial Council has dealt with a complaint against a provincial judge, it shall consider whether the judge should be compensated for his or her costs for legal services incurred in connection with all the steps taken under sections 51.4, 51.5 and 51.6 and this section in relation to the complaint. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Consideration of question combined with hearing

(2) If the Judicial Council holds a hearing into the complaint, its consideration of the question of compensation shall be combined with the hearing. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Public or private consideration of question

(3) The Judicial Council's consideration of the question of compensation shall take place in public if there was a public hearing into the complaint, and otherwise shall take place in private. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Recommendation

(4) If the Judicial Council is of the opinion that the judge should be compensated, it shall make a recommendation to the Attorney General to that effect, indicating the amount of compensation. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Same

(5) If the complaint is dismissed after a hearing, the Judicial Council shall recommend to the Attorney General that the judge be compensated for his or her costs for legal services and shall indicate the amount. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Exception

(5.1) If the Judicial Council makes a recommendation under clause 51.6 \(11\) (g) in relation to a complaint made on or after the day section 2 of Schedule 5 to the Smarter and Stronger Justice Act, 2020 comes into force, subsections (1) to (3) do not apply and compensation shall not be recommended under subsection (4). 2020, c. 11, Sched. 5, s. 2.

Disclosure of name

(6) The Judicial Council's recommendation to the Attorney General shall name the judge, but the Attorney General shall not disclose the name unless there was a public hearing into the complaint or the Council has otherwise made the judge's name public. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Amount of compensation

(7) The amount of compensation recommended under subsection (4) or (5) may relate to all or part of the judge's costs for legal services, and shall be based on a rate for legal services that does not exceed the maximum rate normally paid by the Government of Ontario for similar services. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Payment

(8) The Attorney General shall pay compensation to the judge in accordance with the recommendation. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Removal for cause

51.8 (1) A provincial judge may be removed from office only if,

(a) a complaint about the judge has been made to the Judicial Council; and

(b) the Judicial Council, after a hearing under section 51.6, recommends to the Attorney General that the judge be removed on the ground that he or she has become incapacitated or disabled from the due execution of his or her office by reason of,

(i) inability, because of a disability, to perform the essential duties of his or her office (if an order to accommodate the judge's needs would not remedy the inability, or could not be made because it would impose undue hardship on the person responsible for meeting those needs, or was made but did not remedy the inability),

(ii) conduct that is incompatible with the due execution of his or her office, or

(iii) failure to perform the duties of his or her office. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Tabling of recommendation

(2) The Attorney General shall table the recommendation in the Assembly if it is in session or, if not, within fifteen days after the commencement of the next session. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Order for removal

(3) An order removing a provincial judge from office under this section may be made by the Lieutenant Governor on the address of the Assembly. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Application

(4) This section applies to provincial judges who have not yet attained retirement age and to provincial judges whose continuation in office after attaining retirement age has been approved under subsection 47 \(3\), \(4\) or \(5\). 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

(5) REPEALED: 2017, c. 2, Sched. 2, s. 10.

Standards of conduct

51.9 (1) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice may establish standards of conduct for provincial judges, including a plan for bringing the standards into effect, and may implement the standards and plan when they have been reviewed and approved by the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20).

Duty of Chief Justice

(2) The Chief Justice shall ensure that any standards of conduct are made available to the public, in English and French, when they have been approved by the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20); 2006, c. 21, Sched. A, s. 6.

Goals

(3) The following are among the goals that the Chief Justice may seek to achieve by implementing standards of conduct for judges:

1. Recognizing the independence of the judiciary.
2. Maintaining the high quality of the justice system and ensuring the efficient administration of justice.
3. Enhancing equality and a sense of inclusiveness in the justice system.
4. Ensuring that judges' conduct is consistent with the respect accorded to them.
5. Emphasizing the need to ensure the professional and personal development of judges and the growth of their social awareness through continuing education. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Continuing education

51.10 (1) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice shall establish a plan for the continuing education of provincial judges, and shall implement the plan when it has been reviewed and approved by the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20).

Duty of Chief Justice

(2) The Chief Justice shall ensure that the plan for continuing education is made available to the public, in English and French, when it has been approved by the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Goals

(3) Continuing education of judges has the following goals:

1. Maintaining and developing professional competence.
2. Maintaining and developing social awareness.
3. Encouraging personal growth. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Establishment of courses

51.10.1 (1) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice may establish courses for newly appointed judges and for the continuing education of judges, which may include courses respecting,

- (a) sexual assault law;
- (b) intimate partner violence;
- (c) coercive control in intimate partner and family relationships; and
- (d) social context, which includes systemic racism and systemic discrimination. 2023, c. 12, Sched. 3, s. 3.

Courses re sexual assault and intimate partner violence, consultation

(2) The Chief Justice may, in establishing courses respecting matters mentioned in clauses (1) (a) to (d), consult with such persons, groups and organizations as the Chief Justice considers appropriate, which may include survivors of sexual assault, survivors of intimate partner violence and persons, groups and organizations that support these survivors, including Indigenous leaders and representatives of Indigenous communities. 2023, c. 12, Sched. 3, s. 3.

Designated courses

(3) The Chief Justice may designate courses, including courses established under subsection (1), for newly appointed judges. 2023, c. 12, Sched. 3, s. 3.

Report

(4) No later than February 28 in each year, the Chief Justice shall submit to the Attorney General a report setting out the following information:

1. The title, duration and dates of each course established by the Chief Justice respecting matters mentioned in clauses (1) (a) to (d) that was offered to judges during the previous calendar year.

2. A description of the topics covered in each course.
3. The number of judges who attended each course. 2023, c. 12, Sched. 3, s. 3.

Tabling of report

(5) The Attorney General shall cause a copy of a report submitted under subsection (4) to be tabled in the Legislative Assembly on any of the first 10 days on which that House is sitting after the Attorney General receives the report. 2023, c. 12, Sched. 3, s. 3.

Performance evaluation

51.11 (1) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice may establish a program of performance evaluation for provincial judges, and may implement the program when it has been reviewed and approved by the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (18, 20).

Duty of Chief Justice

(2) The Chief Justice shall make the existence of the program of performance evaluation public when it has been approved by the Judicial Council. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Goals

(3) The following are among the goals that the Chief Justice may seek to achieve by establishing a program of performance evaluation for judges:

1. Enhancing the performance of individual judges and of judges in general.
2. Identifying continuing education needs.
3. Assisting in the assignment of judges.
4. Identifying potential for professional development. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (20).

Scope of evaluation

(4) In a judge's performance evaluation, a decision made in a particular case shall not be considered.

Confidentiality

(5) A judge's performance evaluation is confidential and shall be disclosed only to the judge, his or her regional senior judge, and the person or persons conducting the evaluation.

Inadmissibility, exception

(6) A judge's performance evaluation shall not be admitted in evidence before the Judicial Council or any court or other tribunal unless the judge consents.

Application of subss. (5), (6)

(7) Subsections (5) and (6) apply to everything contained in a judge's performance evaluation and to all information collected in connection with the evaluation. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Consultation

51.12 In establishing standards of conduct under section 51.9, a plan for continuing education under section 51.10 and a program of performance evaluation under section 51.11, the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice shall consult with judges of that court and with such other persons as he or she considers appropriate. 1994, c. 12, s. 16; 1996, c. 25, s. 9 (15, 18, 20).

PROVINCIAL JUDGES' REMUNERATION

Remuneration and framework agreement

Provincial Judges Remuneration Commission

51.13 (1) The committee known as the Provincial Judges Remuneration Commission in English and as Commission de rémunération des juges provinciaux in French is continued. 1994, c. 12, s. 16.

Composition and functions

