"It should be noted that there are other doctrines which might provide relief from the consequences of the invalidity of Manitoba's laws. ... The doctrine of mistake of law might, in some circumstances, preclude recovery of moneys paid under invalid laws ..."

From this it can be inferred that the Supreme Court was of the view that the principles relating to recovery of money paid under a mistake of law govern even where the mistake of law in question is the constitutional validity of the particular legislation in issue.

[21] Finally, it should be noted that leave has been granted by the Supreme Court in the Air Canada case: [1987] 1 W.W.R. lxviii.

[22] Consequently, the fact that Section 238\(3\) of the Criminal Code was declared to be unconstitutional does not by itself entitle the Appellant to the return of his fine. Reference must be made to the principles governing recovery of money paid under mistake of law. What, then, are these principles? The Supreme Court of Canada recently had the opportunity to examine this subject in Nepean, supra. In Nepean, the plaintiff municipality (Nepean) had commenced an action for the repayment of certain surcharges which it argued were beyond the legislative jurisdiction of Ontario Hydro to levy. The Supreme Court concluded that Ontario Hydro did exceed its jurisdiction, therefore the payments were made by Nepean under a mutual mistake of law. As a result, the recovery by Nepean of those payments was governed by the principles relating to recovery of money paid under mistake of law.

[23] After thoroughly canvassing the authorities and tracing the historical development of the doctrine of payment under mistake of law, Estey, J., writing for the majority, summarized the present state of the law in the following terms (at p. 242):

“Mistake of law ‘without more’ and without ‘something more in addition’ (in the words of Lord Denning in Kiriri, supra, at p. 204) may be an allusion to the need to find compulsion or illegality to introduce a right of recovery on the happening of mutual mistake of law. In compulsion, recovery is allowed as the payment is not made voluntarily and there is no reason to suppose, only because of the fact of payment, that the plaintiff had surrendered his right to recover his moneys paid under practical compulsion. In the case of illegal transactions, the concept of in pari delicto is introduced to determine entitlement to recovery. In the absence of either of these elements, the ‘something more in addition to a mistake of law’ is missing, and the rule applicable on mutual mistake of law operates to deny recovery.”

The following principles regarding recovery of monies paid under mistake of law can be extracted from the majority judgment in Nepean:

1. The general rule is that “without more”, money paid under a mistake of law is not recoverable.
2. “Something more” has been found to exist where:
 - i. the money was paid under compulsion; or
 - ii. the money was paid in the context of an illegal transaction and the parties were not in pari delicto.

Under either of these two branches, the money is recoverable notwithstanding that it may in addition have been paid under a mistake of law.

3. Under the first branch of recovery, the compulsion need only be “practical” compulsion. Estey, J. refers to Eadie v. Township of Brantford (1967) 1967 CanLII 13 (SCC), 63 D.L.R. (2d) 561 (S.C.C.), where at p. 571 Mr. Justice Spence discussed the concept of “practical” compulsion:

“It was submitted by counsel for the respondent that in order to justify the plaintiff demanding repayment of money paid under mutual mistake in law upon the basis that he was under compulsion to do so, the plaintiff must have been faced with a situation where there was no other alternative available to him. I am of the opinion that the bar to the plaintiff’s recovery is not so stringent and that a practical compulsion is alone necessary. In each of the three cases in this Court approving Haskell v. Horner, which I have cited above, there were other courses available to the plaintiffs but those other courses were time consuming and impractical.”

To establish compulsion, payment need not be the only choice; recovery is permitted where payment was compelled by practical considerations.

4. With respect to the second branch of recovery, Estey, J. held that it does not extend to situations where the illegality in question was an excess of jurisdiction by a statutory entity. The transaction must be one that is “contrary to public policy or prohibited by statute” (at p. 239) if entitlement to recovery is to be established under this branch of recovery.

[24] It is appropriate to note at this juncture that what the Appellant was essentially arguing for in respect to his reliance on the Amax Potash and Air Canada decisions was the establishment of a third branch of recovery. In other words, “something more” than the mistake of law exists where the payment was made to a government entity in pursuance of unconstitutional legislation. For the reasons set out above, I reject this line of argument.

[25] Applying these principles to the case at bar, the Appellant cannot recover his fine paid as a result of the mistake as to the constitutional validity of Section 238(3) unless he is able to establish entitlement under either of the two branches of recovery mentioned above. Clearly the second branch of recovery is inapplicable. The transaction with which we are concerned is not contrary to public policy or prohibited by statute. It is illegal only in the sense that the criminal court exceeded its jurisdiction by convicting the Appellant under a section of the Criminal Code that was unconstitutional. Consequently, the nature of illegality required by the second branch of recovery is not present in this case.

[26] However, in my view the Appellant is not barred from recovering the fine on the basis of the first branch of recovery. There is no doubt in my mind that the Appellant was under practical compulsion to pay the fine. Why? Because the consequence of not paying the fine was imprisonment. Therefore, while payment may not have been the only option open to the Appellant, it was the only practical choice. After all, what can be more compelling than the threat of imprisonment if the fine is not paid? Consequently, I have no difficulty in finding that the Appellant paid the fine under practical compulsion.

[27] In the result, the mistake of law hurdle has been cleared. I now turn to the second hurdle, that being the doctrine of res judicata.

2. Res Judicata

[28] The Respondent Crown submits that the Appellant is barred from recovering the fine by the doctrine of res judicata:

“It is respectfully submitted that as between the Crown and the Appellant the matter is res judicata. In a court proceeding between the same parties (the Crown and the Appellant), Turigan was judicially required to pay. He did not appeal. The matter as between Turigan and the Crown is now final and conclusive.

Res judicata applies when an issue is decided, expressly or implicitly, in court proceedings between the same parties (that is, the issue is either argued or could have been argued in earlier proceedings).

...

In the case at bar, Turigan either (i) could have, but did not, raise the defence of ultra vires at his trial or (ii) raised the defence unsuccessfully, but failed to appeal. His conviction could not have followed but for section 238(3) having been recognized as valid by the Court; therefore res judicata applies.”

[29] The Crown’s argument is essentially that as between the Appellant and the Crown, the Appellant is bound by the decision of the criminal court that Section 238(3) is constitutional. As a consequence, the Appellant is prohibited from coming to court to seek relief from the Crown on a claim which for its viability is dependent upon a result contrary to that decided by the criminal court.

[30] Technically speaking, this plea would more accurately be described as issue estoppel. As noted in Halsbury’s Laws of England (4th ed.), vol. 16, para. 1528 and 1529, res judicata relates to situations where the second suit is based on essentially the same cause of action as the first suit. In the case at bar the cause of action in the proceedings now before this Court cannot be said to have also been before the criminal court. In fact it is difficult to conceptualize a criminal proceeding as having a distinct cause of action, other than I suppose the guilt or innocence of the accused, and in that regard the pleas of autrefois acquit and autrefois convict stem from the doctrine of res judicata. Consequently, the plea of res judicata is not strictly appropriate.

[31] In my view, the proper plea is issue estoppel which evolved from res judicata. The vires of Section 238(3) was at issue in the prior criminal proceedings, and is again at issue in the present proceedings. Halsbury’s, op. cit. at para 1530, describes this form of estoppel in the following terms:

“A party is precluded from contending the contrary of any precise point which, having once been distinctly put in issue, has been solemnly and with certainty determined against him. Even if the objects of the first and second actions are different, the finding on a matter which came directly (not collaterally or incidentally) in issue in the first action, provided it is embodied in a judicial decision that is final, is conclusive in a second action between the same parties and their privies. This principle applies whether the point involved in the earlier decision, and as to which the parties are estopped, is one of fact or one of law, or one of mixed fact and law. The conditions for the application of the doctrine have been stated as being that (1) the same question was decided in both proceedings; (2) the judicial decision said to create the estoppel was final; and (3) the parties to the judicial decision or their privies were the same persons as the parties to the proceedings in which the estoppel is raised or their privies.”

This Court had the opportunity to examine the doctrine of issue estoppel in R. v. Duhamel (No. 2) (1981) 1981 ABCA 295 (CanLII), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 538. At issue in Duhamel (No. 2) was whether a finding by one trial judge as to the voluntariness of a confession was binding on a second trial judge before whom the confession was again sought to be admitted. Mr. Justice Moir, writing for the Court, acknowledged (at p. 541) that issue estoppel originated from the principle of “estoppel per rem judicatam”. His Lordship proceeded to accept and apply the six probanda set out by Spencer Bower and Turner in their text, Res Judicata, (2nd ed., 1969), at para. 19 as the “constituent elements of estoppel per rem judicatam” (at p. 542). The party attempting to set up the estoppel has the burden of establishing:

- “(i) that the alleged judicial decision was what in law is deemed such;
- (ii) that the particular judicial decision relied upon was in fact pronounced, as alleged;
- (iii) that the judicial tribunal pronouncing the decision had competent jurisdiction in that behalf;
- (iv) that the judicial decision was final;
- (v) that the judicial decision was, or involved, a determination of the same question as that sought to be controverted in the litigation in which the estoppel is raised;
- (vi) that the parties to the judicial decision, or their privies, were the same persons as the parties to the proceeding in which the estoppel is raised, or their privies, or that the decision was conclusive in rem”.

[32] Can the Crown Respondent in the case at bar establish all six probanda? The first, second and fourth requirements are not at issue in this case. Furthermore, the sixth requirement, namely that the same parties must be involved, cannot be disputed. That leaves us with the third and fifth requirements for consideration.

[33] Dealing first with the fifth requirement, that the judicial decision was, or involved, a determination of the same question as that sought to be controverted in the litigation in which the estoppel is raised;

The question with which we are concerned is the constitutionality of Section 238\(3\) of the Criminal Code. The Crown Respondent argues that the Appellant’s claim is dependent upon a determination that the Appellant paid the fine pursuant to conviction for an offence that was ultra vires Parliament. There can be no argument that Section 238(3) is ultra vires. However, what is argued by the Respondent is that as between it and the Appellant, Section 238(3) must be considered to be intra vires, because the criminal court could not have convicted without first deciding, either expressly or by necessary implication, that Section 238(3) was intra vires. Therefore, the Respondent continues, the Appellant’s claim must fail, because it depends on an opposite determination to a question that was fundamental to the earlier criminal proceedings.

[34] In my view, the two proceedings do involve the same question. We were not told whether the Appellant raised the issue of constitutionality in the criminal proceedings. However, this is not critical. It is settled law that to establish an issue estoppel, it is not necessary to show that the issue was one that was expressly determined in the previous judicial proceedings, so long as the issue must necessarily have been determined and determined in a particular way by the court to have reached the decision it pronounced. This principle of issue estoppel by implication is formulated by Spencer Bower and Turner in the following terms (at para. 193):

“Where the decision set up as a res judicata necessarily involves a judicial determination of some question of law or issue of fact, in the sense that the decision could not have been legitimately or rationally pronounced by the tribunal without at the same time, and in the same breath, so to speak, determining that question or issue in a particular way, such determination, even though not declared on the face of the recorded decision, is deemed to constitute an integral part of it as effectively as if it had been made so in express terms: but, beyond these limits, there can be no such thing as a res judicata by implication.”

This same principle has been formulated in a slightly different context in the leading case of Hoystead v. Taxation Commissioner 1925 CanLII 607 \(UK JCPC\), [1926] A.C. 155 (P.C.):

“... the same principle - namely, that of setting to rest rights of litigants, applies to the case where a point, fundamental to the decision, taken or assumed by the plaintiff and traversable by the defendant, has not been traversed. In that case also a defendant is bound by the judgment, although it may be true enough that subsequent light or ingenuity might suggest some traverse which had not been taken. The same principle of setting parties' rights to rest applies and estoppel occurs.”

These principles apply even where the previous judgment was given by default: Spencer Bower and Turner, para. 196; Halsbury's, vol. 16, para. 1533. Presumably, then, they should also apply where the defendant in the previous criminal proceeding entered a guilty plea.

[35] In the case at bar, the question of constitutionality was clearly an issue fundamental to the decision by the criminal court to convict the accused. Regardless of whether or not the constitutionality of Section 238(3) was actually raised by the Appellant in the criminal proceedings, the criminal court must have either expressly or impliedly (perhaps through reliance on the presumption of constitutionality) ruled that Section 238(3) was constitutional, otherwise it would not have had the jurisdiction to convict the Appellant. Consequently, the same issue of constitutionality which is now before this Court, was decided against the Appellant in the previous criminal proceedings. In the result, the fifth requirement for issue estoppel is established.

[36] That leaves us with only the third of the six probanda for consideration. To recall, the third requirement is “that the judicial tribunal pronouncing had jurisdiction in that behalf”. As noted by Spencer Bower and Turner, at paras. 113 and 114:

“113 Competent jurisdiction is an essential condition of every valid res judicata, which means that, in order that a judicial decision relied upon, whether as a bar, or as the foundation of an action, may conclusively bind the parties, or (in the case of in rem decisions) the world, it must appear that the judicial tribunal pronouncing the decision had jurisdiction over the cause or matter, and over the parties, sufficient to warrant it in so doing.

114 A tribunal may exceed its jurisdiction either by embarking upon an inquiry outside its province, or, while confining its inquiry within the proper limits, by making an order in excess of its powers. In either case the result will be to nullify the decision as a res judicata: in the former case, by the effect of the events we have mentioned upon the declaratory part of the decision, and, in the second, by their effect upon its jussive or prohibitory provisions.”

See also Halsbury’s, op. cit., para. 1554, where it is stated that:

“1554. Lack of jurisdiction. In order that estoppel by record may arise out of a judgment the court which pronounced the judgment must have had jurisdiction to do so: the lack of jurisdiction deprives the judgment of any effect, whether by estoppel or otherwise.”

The lack or excess of jurisdiction is said to deprive the decision of the court of any “conclusive effect”.

[37] It is for this reason that the Respondent’s plea of issue estoppel must fail. The section under which the Appellant was convicted and ordered to pay the fine was subsequently declared to be ultra vires Parliament. As a result, the section was void ab initio, and not merely voidable. The section never had any force or effect. Consequently, the criminal court exceeded its jurisdiction by convicting the Appellant under that section. Canadian courts have no inherent jurisdiction, apart from their contempt jurisdiction, to order criminal sanction. Our courts can only convict for those offences validly created by statute. In the result, the decision by the criminal court to convict the Appellant for an offence that never existed is a nullity. Consequently, the conviction cannot form the basis for res judicata.

[38] However, it may be argued that even though the criminal court had no jurisdiction to convict under s. 238(3), it nevertheless had jurisdiction to enter into a determination as to the constitutionality of that section; therefore, while the conviction may be a nullity, the Court’s decision that the section was constitutional is not and may still form the basis for a plea of issue estoppel. The flaw in this argument is that the constitutionality of a provision under the Criminal Code is a jurisdictional question. Although I have not been referred to any authority directly on point, the constitutionality of the charging section must be an issue going to the criminal court’s jurisdiction, for if that Court finds that the section is unconstitutional, the proceedings are terminated; the Court has no jurisdiction to proceed any further. In my view, this is a clear indication that the constitutionality of a charging section is a jurisdictional question.

[39] It is a well-established principle of law that a tribunal cannot give itself jurisdiction by a wrong decision on a question of law. In short, a court only has jurisdiction to decide a jurisdictional question correctly; it exceeds its jurisdiction by deciding the question incorrectly.

[40] Consequently, while the criminal Court in the case at bar did have jurisdiction to enter into a determination as to the constitutionality of s. 238(3), it exceeded its jurisdiction by incorrectly deciding the issue. In the result, its decision on that issue cannot raise an issue estoppel.

[41] The requirement that the court whose decision is relied upon as forming the res judicata have jurisdiction to make that decision has long been recognized. For instance, in Toronto Railway Company v. Corporation of the City of Toronto [1904] A.C. 809 (P.C.), the plaintiff railway had decided to challenge the defendant municipality's decision to tax its railway cars as realty. Both the Court of Revision (the court of first instance), and the Court of Appeal of Ontario held against the plaintiff. The following year, the plaintiff decided to challenge the assessment again and met with the same results in the Court of Revision and Court of Appeal. However, on appeal to the Privy Council, the decision was reversed. The City argued res judicata. The Privy Council rejected their plea, holding that both lower courts exceeded their jurisdiction by deciding that the railway cars were realty. Like the criminal Court in the case at bar, both of the lower Courts' jurisdictions were statutorily defined; their jurisdictions did not include the power to determine whether railway cars were assessable as realty. The Supreme Court of Canada applied the same reasoning in Pong v. Quong 1927 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1927] S.C.R. 271 in rejecting a plea of res judicata, as did the High Court of Australia in O'Keefe v. Williams (1907) 5 C.L.R. 217.

[42] Normally it would not be necessary to cite strong authority to support a principle as basic as the requirement that a court whose decision is relied upon for the plea of res judicata have jurisdiction to make that decision. However, in my view, such recitation is made necessary in this case by the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference case referred to earlier. The Court, in order to preserve legal rights, obligations and other effects that had arisen pursuant to Manitoba legislation which had been declared to be ultra vires, turned to the doctrine of res judicata (at p. 29):

"It should be noted that there are other doctrines which might provide relief from the consequences of the invalidity of Manitoba's laws. For example, res judicata would preclude the reopening of cases decided by the courts on the basis of invalid laws."

The Supreme Court cited no authority for this proposition. In my view, the Supreme Court did not intend to effect a fundamental change in the law of res judicata. This is evidenced by the complete absence of analysis and precedent in their judgment in respect to res judicata. Furthermore, it is possible to reconcile the Supreme Court's statement with the above mentioned authorities. This is accomplished by recognizing that not all laws upon which a court bases its decision relate to that court's jurisdiction over the matter in question. In some cases the court will have had jurisdiction to decide the matter, even though legislation (not pertaining to the court's jurisdiction) which affected the outcome is subsequently declared to be ultra vires. In my view, it is this type of situation to which the Supreme Court is referring in its statement quoted above. In such cases, even though the court decided the matter on the basis of an invalid law, res judicata applies to prevent the reopening of the court's decision because the court did not exceed its jurisdiction by deciding the matter. This must be contrasted with those situations where the impugned legislation relates to the very jurisdiction of the court to decide the matter. The Supreme Court, in my view, did not intend to extend their above quoted comment to this latter situation. Consequently, the Manitoba Language Reference case has not obviated the requirement that the decision upon which the plea of res judicata is based must have been decided by a court with jurisdiction to make that decision.

[43] It should be pointed out that the Supreme Court in Wigman v. The Queen (1987) 1985 CanLII 1 (SCC), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 97 refers to the comments it made in the Manitoba Language Reference concerning the scope of the doctrine of res judicata. The accused in Wigman had been charged with attempted murder. The trial judge's charge to the jury in regard to the requisite intent for attempted murder was based on Lajoie v. The Queen (1973) 1973 CanLII 146 (SCC), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 313 (S.C.C.) which expressed the applicable law as of the date of the trial. The accused was convicted. An appeal to the British Columbia Court of Appeal proved unsuccessful. However, the accused was granted leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. Subsequent to granting leave, the Supreme Court in R. v. Ancio (1984) 1984 CanLII 69 (SCC), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 385 held that Lajoie should no longer be followed. As a consequence, one of the issues facing the Supreme Court in Wigman was whether the accused could rely on the overruling of Lajoie subsequent to his trial and conviction. At p. 104 the Supreme Court states:

"The appropriate test is whether or not the accused is still in the judicial system. As expressed in the Crown's factum, this test affords a means of striking a balance between the 'wholly impractical dream of providing perfect justice to all those convicted under the overruled authority and the practical necessity of having some finality in the criminal process'. Finality in criminal proceedings is of the utmost importance but the need for finality is adequately served by the normal operation of res judicata: a matter once finally judicially decided cannot be relitigated. Thus a person convicted under Lajoie will not be able to reopen his or her case, unless, of course, the conviction is not final. In the Reference re Language Rights under Manitoba Act, 1870 (1985), 1985 CanLII 33 (SCC), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 1 at pp. 28-9, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 721 at p. 757, [1985] 4 W.W.R. 385 at pp. 414-5, the court observed that res judicata would even preclude the reopening of cases decided by the courts on the basis of constitutionally invalid laws. The res judicata principle would apply with at least as much force to cases decided on the basis of subsequently overruled case-law."

In my view, this pronouncement does not add to what was stated by the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference regarding the scope of res judicata. The subsequent overruling of Lajoie by the Supreme Court did not vitiate the jurisdiction of the trial judge in Wigman. As was the case in the Manitoba Language Reference, the Supreme Court in Wigman does not purport to extend the scope of res judicata to situations where the judge exceeded his jurisdiction by deciding the matter in issue.

[44] In the result, the Respondent's plea of issue estoppel cannot succeed. The criminal Court exceeded its jurisdiction by deciding (either expressly or implicitly) that s.

238(3) was intra vires, and had no jurisdiction to convict under that section. Consequently, there is nothing upon which the Respondent Crown can base its plea of issue estoppel.

[45] This leaves us with the final hurdle for consideration.

3. The De Facto Doctrine

[46] It is argued on behalf of the Respondent Crown that both the conviction and fine paid by the Appellant, although arising under unconstitutional legislation, are protected from collateral attack by the de facto doctrine. The premise underlying this argument is that although the criminal Court had no de jure authority to convict and order the payment of a fine pursuant thereto, it nevertheless had de facto authority by reason of the colour of authority imparted upon the criminal Court by s. 238(3). The Manitoba Language Reference, supra, and Bilodeau v. A.-G. Manitoba (1986) 1986 CanLII 64 (SCC), 27 D.L.R. (4th) 39 (S.C.C.) are cited in support of this argument.

[47] In my view, the Supreme Court has extended the scope of the de facto doctrine through its decisions in the Manitoba Language Reference and Bilodeau. Therefore, it may prove illuminative to set out the state of the law prior to the rendering of those two decisions before examining how the doctrine has been extended.

[48] The de facto doctrine has been defined in the following terms by Judge Albert Constantineau in his treatise entitled The De Facto Doctrine (1910) at p. 3:

“The de facto doctrine is a rule or principle of law which, in the first place, justifies the recognition of the authority of governments established and maintained by persons who have usurped the sovereign authority of the State, and assert themselves by force and arms against the lawful government; secondly, which recognizes the existence of, and protects from collateral attack, public or private bodies corporate, which, though irregularly or illegally organized, yet, under color of law, openly exercise the powers and functions of regularly created bodies; and thirdly, which imparts validity to the official acts of persons who, under color of right or authority, hold office under the aforementioned governments or bodies, or exercise lawfully existing offices of whatever nature, in which the public or third persons are interested, where the performance of such official acts is for the benefit of the public or third persons, and not for their own personal advantage. The doctrine is grounded upon considerations of public policy, justice, and necessity, and is designed to protect and shield from injury the community at large or private individuals, who, innocently or through coercion, submit to, acknowledge, or invoke the authority assumed by the governments, corporate bodies, or officers, above mentioned.”

This definition was quoted with approval by the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference (at p. 27). It is the third branch of this definition with which we are concerned, namely, the imparting of “validity to the official acts of persons who, under colour of right or authority ... exercise lawfully existing offices of whatever nature ...”. Professor Wade, in his text Administrative Law (4th ed., 1977), at p. 287, describes this branch of the de facto doctrine in similar terms:

“In one class of cases there is a long-standing doctrine that collateral challenge is not to be allowed: where there is some unknown flaw in the appointment or authority of some officer or judge. The acts of the officer or judge may be held to be valid in law even though his own appointment is invalid and in truth he has no legal power at all. The logic of annulling all his acts has to yield to the desirability of upholding them where he has acted in the office under a general supposition of his competence to do so. In such a case he is called an officer or judge de facto, as opposed to an officer or judge de jure.”

A similar definition can be found in de Smith's Judicial Review of Administrative Action (4th ed., 1980) at p. 153:

“In a few cases [the courts] have gone so far as to accord full legal recognition, in the public interest, to decisions by de facto officers, who because of the informality of their appointment, were not strictly entitled to exercise any jurisdiction at all.”

The de facto doctrine has experienced its most widespread usage in the United States. Corpus Juris Secundum defines the doctrine in the following terms (48A C.J.S., s. 2, Judges):

“A judge de facto is one acting with color of right and who is regarded as, and has the reputation of, exercising the judicial function he assumes. He differs, on the one hand, from a mere usurper of an office who undertakes to act without any color of right; and, on the other, from an officer de jure who is in all respects legally appointed and qualified to exercise the office.”

[49] What should be discerned from the above quoted definitions is that the de facto doctrine was originally intended to prevent the decisions and actions of public officials from being collaterally attacked on the ground that the official did not have proper legal title to the office he purported to hold and exercise. The scope of the doctrine was limited to preventing collateral attack on the basis of irregularity of appointment to office. As will be illustrated infra, the case law prior to the Manitoba Language Reference supports this characterization of the de facto doctrine.

[50] As acknowledged by the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference (at p. 27), the rationale underlying the de facto doctrine is premised on the preservation of the rule of law. The House of Lords attributed the doctrine to the same theoretical underpinnings:

“With regard to the competence of the vestrymen, who were vestrymen de facto, but not vestrymen de jure, to make the rate, your Lordships will see at once the importance of that objection, when you consider how many public officers and persons there are who are charged with very important duties, and whose title to the office on the part of the public cannot be ascertained at the time. You will at once see to what it would lead if the validity of their acts, when in such office, depended upon the propriety of their election. It might tend, if doubts were cast upon them, to consequences of the most destructive kind. It would create uncertainty with respect to the obedience to public officers, and it might also lead to persons, instead of resorting to the ordinary legal remedies to set right anything done by the officers, taking the law into their own hands.”

Scadding v. Lorant (1851) 3 H.L.C. 418 at 447, 10 E.R. 164 at 175.

[51] Constantineau, op. cit., sets out three prerequisites that must be established to constitute one a de facto officer:

“Three things are essential to constitute one an officer de facto, viz: -

1. The office held by him must have a de jure existence, or at least one recognized by law;
2. He must be in the actual possession thereof; and
3. His holding must be under color of title or authority.

Without the existence and concurrence of these three elements, no person can be regarded as an officer de facto. Indeed, whatever color of title one may have, and whatever may be his possession, if the office be one not recognized by law, he can never acquire the status of an officer. On the other hand, however strong and well founded may be a person’s claim to a lawfully existing office, yet if he be deprived of the actual possession thereof, he may be an officer de jure, but he cannot be an officer de facto. Finally, the bare possession of a de jure office, without color of title or authority, will only constitute the occupant a usurper.”

The same three prerequisites exist in American jurisprudence: see Corpus Juris Secundum, op. cit.

[52] The rationale underlying the prerequisite that the office have a de jure existence before the possessor of that office can be given de facto recognition was succinctly stated by Mr. Justice Field of the United States Supreme Court in Norton v. Shelby County (1886) 118 U.S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L.Ed. 178 as follows:

“The idea of an officer implies the existence of an office which he holds. It would be a misapplication of terms to call one an officer who holds no office, and a public office can only exist by force of law.”

It follows from this requirement that the office cannot be one created by unconstitutional legislation in that an office established under an unconstitutional statute cannot be said to enjoy a de jure existence. This proposition is well supported by the authorities: see Constantineau, op. cit., pp. 51 et seq. However, it should not be confused with appointment under unconstitutional legislation to a de jure office; in this case the officer may possess de facto authority. In other words, although unconstitutional legislation cannot create a de jure office, it does not prevent an officer who has been appointed to a de jure office under unconstitutional legislation from being an officer de facto. This stems from the fact that the de facto doctrine was originally designed to prevent collateral attacks based on a defect in appointment or title, and not defects as to the constitution of the office itself.

[53] The de facto doctrine has long been recognized by Canadian courts. A case typical of situations where the doctrine has traditionally been applied is O’Neil v. A.-G. Canada (1896) 1896 CanLII 58 (SCC), 26 S.C.R. 122. The Criminal Code had authorized “the chief constable or deputy chief constable” to apply for a warrant to seize gaming equipment. In O’Neil, the warrant had been applied for by the son of the chief constable, the chief constable having appointed his son to act as his deputy in his absence. A police magistrate declared that the money that had been seized pursuant to the warrant forfeited to the Crown. The plaintiff sought the return of this money, inter alia, on the ground that the son had not been duly sworn into office as deputy chief constable thereby invalidating the search warrant. The Supreme Court of Canada held that even if the son had not been properly sworn in as deputy, he held the office de facto, given that he had performed the functions of a deputy constable for several years. The Supreme Court described the de facto doctrine in the following terms (at p. 130):

“The rule of law is that the acts of a person assuming to exercise the functions of an office to which he has no legal title are, as regards third persons, that is to say, with reference to all persons but the holder of the legal title to the office, legal and binding. Especially is this so in the case of officers holding over and continuing to perform official duties after their term has expired. Further, this rule has been held to apply to a delegate of a delegate whose appointment would be manifestly without legal authority. Further, it has been held to apply even to judicial officers and a fortiori to those appointed for the performance of mere ministerial duties such as a head constable. And particularly it has been held to apply to officers who have failed to qualify themselves by taking an oath of office prescribed by law.”

[54] Further illustration of the classic application of the de facto doctrine can be seen in the case of R. v. Cyr [1917] 2 W.W.R. 1185 (Alta. S.C.T.D.). In Cyr, the defendant sought to quash her conviction on the ground that the convicting magistrate was a woman. Women, it was argued, were not capable of holding judicial office. Scott, J. (as he then was) held that (at p. 1187):

“While I entertain serious doubt whether a woman is qualified to be appointed to that office, I am of opinion that the legality of such an appointment cannot be questioned or inquired into on this application.”

His Lordship proceeded to examine the authorities regarding the de facto doctrine, and concluded that the conviction could not be collaterally attacked on the regularity of the magistrate’s appointment.

[55] It is readily apparent that the de facto doctrine as explained and illustrated above would not serve to preclude the Appellant from recovering his fine. The defect with which we are concerned is not one going to the validity of title or regularity of appointment to office. The convicting judge was presumably properly appointed to that office; he was an officer de jure. The defect which had been subjected to challenge in these proceedings is that the convicting judge exercised powers which went beyond the jurisdiction of his office. In other words, what we are faced with is an exercise of power in excess of jurisdiction by a de jure officer. Traditionally, the de facto doctrine did not prevent collateral attacks on this basis. This limitation on the de facto doctrine is recognized by the authors of Corpus Juris Secundum, op. cit., where at s. 63 they state:

“The rule that the official acts of de facto judges are valid as against third persons cannot be applied to an attempted exercise of judicial power by an officer de jure who claims the right so to act by virtue of his office, when in fact no such power is vested therein.”

This is precisely the situation we face in the case at bar: the de jure convicting judge, in convicting the Appellant and ordering him to pay a fine pursuant to s. 238(3) of the Criminal Code, exercised a power that was not vested within his judicial office, given that s. 238(3) was declared to be of no force or effect ab initio by the Supreme Court in Boggs. The de facto doctrine did not preclude a collateral challenge on this basis.

[56] This limitation on the scope of the de facto doctrine can be viewed in a slightly different context. It is possible to conceptualize the power to convict under s. 238(3) as an office separate and apart from the office of the convicting judge. It can then be argued that although the convicting judge was never legally appointed to hold that “s. 238(3) office”, he was nevertheless a de facto possessor of that office. Under this reasoning, the actions of the convicting judge in performing his duties as a de facto officer of the s. 238(3) office would not be subject to collateral challenge. However, it should be recalled that one of the prerequisites for application of the de facto doctrine was that the office have a de jure existence, and that an office could not have a de jure existence if attempted to be created under unconstitutional legislation. Given that the “s. 238(3) office” was created under unconstitutional legislation, it had no de jure existence. In the result, this reasoning collapses; the convicting judge cannot be said to be a de facto officer of the s. 238(3) office.

[57] Therefore, the de facto doctrine, as traditionally understood and applied, would not preclude the Appellant from challenging the validity of his conviction under s. 238(3) and hence recovering his fine. However, the de facto doctrine has undergone a significant revision in light of the Supreme Court’s recent decisions in the Manitoba Language Reference, supra and Bilodeau, supra. As a result of this revision, I am bound to conclude that while the convicting judge did not possess de jure authority to convict, he nevertheless had de facto authority, thereby prohibiting collateral attack on this basis.

[58] The Manitoba Language Reference was referred to earlier in these Reasons. One should recall that the Supreme Court in that case was faced with the task of preventing legal chaos from erupting as a result of their finding that all of Manitoba’s laws were invalid ab initio. The Supreme Court examined the de facto doctrine in this context. After reviewing some of the authorities on this subject, the Supreme Court (at p. 28) stated that:

“There is only one true condition precedent to the application of the doctrine: the de facto officer must occupy his or her office under colour of authority. This is consistent with the rationale for the doctrine, viz., that the members of the public with whom the officer dealt relied upon his ostensible status.”

No mention is made of the first of Constantineau’s three prerequisites, namely that the office have a de jure existence. Perhaps one could argue that an official has no colour of authority if the office he occupies has no de jure existence. However, as is subsequently made clear by the Supreme Court, the office need no longer have a de jure existence for the de facto doctrine to apply: it is sufficient that the office enjoy de facto recognition. The Supreme Court summarized the effect of the de facto doctrine in the following terms (at p. 28):

“Thus, the de facto doctrine will save those rights, obligations and other effects which have arisen out of actions performed pursuant to invalid Acts of the Manitoba Legislature by public and private bodies corporate, courts, judges, persons exercising statutory powers and public officials. Such rights, obligations and other effects are, and will always be, enforceable and unassailable.”

[59] The conclusion that one is forced to draw from the statements of the Supreme Court above quoted is that a public official can be given colour of authority by unconstitutional legislation, even though such legislation is said to have had no force or effect ab initio. This colour of authority can relate to both the existence of the office, as well as the powers associated with that office. Consequently, in the Manitoba Language Reference, even though the office and powers which the public officials purported to hold and exercise arose under unconstitutional legislation, the actions of the public officials were enforceable and unassailable because the unconstitutional legislation imparted colour of authority, not only to the official's actions, but also to the existence of the office itself.

[60] It is clear that the de facto doctrine, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, now applies to preclude collateral challenge to the actions of public officials on the basis that the power which the official purported to exercise was unconstitutional. I confess to difficulty in rationalizing this decision with the approach taken by the Supreme Court in Amax Potash v. Saskatchewan, supra. It should be recalled that the Supreme Court in Amax Potash found offensive any attempt by a government to legislatively immunize itself from the effects of unconstitutional legislation. It would now appear that the de facto doctrine immunizes all acts done pursuant to unconstitutional legislation from collateral attack. Nevertheless, this extension of the de facto doctrine is confirmed by the Supreme Court's judgment in Bilodeau supra.

[61] Bilodeau arose out of the aftermath that followed the Supreme Court's decision in the Manitoba Language Reference. Bilodeau had been charged with speeding contrary to the Highway Traffic Act, R.S.M. 1970, c. H-60 and was issued a court summons under the Summary Convictions Act, R.S.M. 1970, c. S-230. Bilodeau had raised the invalidity of the two statutes as a defence at his trial, but did not succeed in persuading the trial judge. As a result, he was convicted. His conviction was confirmed on appeal to the Manitoba Court of Appeal. Subsequent to the Court of Appeal's decision, the Supreme Court rendered judgment in the Manitoba Language Reference, which in effect ruled that the two above mentioned statutes were invalid because they were not enacted in both English and French. Therefore, when Bilodeau appealed his conviction to the Supreme Court, that Court was faced with the question of whether his conviction could be upheld in light of the invalidity of the laws under which he was convicted.

[62] The conviction was challenged on three grounds: first, that the summons was invalid because it was issued under the Summary Convictions Act, which was itself invalid; secondly, that the summons itself was printed in English only and for that reason was invalid; and thirdly, that the conviction under the Highway Traffic Act was invalid because that Act was enacted in English only. The first and third grounds are of interest in the case at bar.

[63] With respect to the validity of the summons, the Supreme Court held that even though the Act under which the summons was issued was invalid, the summons itself was protected from challenge by the de facto doctrine. The operation of the de facto doctrine was summarized as follows (at p. 43):

“... the rights, obligations and other effects which have arisen under this Act will be forever enforceable if they arose out of, inter alia, reliance ‘upon the acts of those administering the invalid laws’ under colour of authority. Actions performed pursuant to invalid Acts by courts and judges, acting upon colour of authority, will be saved by the de facto doctrine. Thus in the present case, the de facto doctrine will preclude any challenge to the effectiveness or enforceability of the summons on the ground that it was issued pursuant to an invalid Act, since the summons was clearly issued under colour of the authority of the Summary Convictions Act.”

[64] As for the validity of the conviction under the Highway Traffic Act, the Supreme Court held that the de facto doctrine would not preserve the conviction because the de facto doctrine only prohibited collateral attacks against the acts of public officials acting under de facto authority. Whereas the challenge to the validity of the issuance of the summons was collateral, the attack on the conviction was direct; Bilodeau had raised the validity of the Highway Traffic Act both at trial and on appeal from his conviction. As stated by Dickson, C.J.C., for the majority (at p. 45):

“I do not believe that a trial judge can be said to be acting under colour of authority when the very ground for the defence is the invalidity of his authority and when his or her decision on this point is appealed. If a person is convicted under a statute which, on appeal from conviction, is deemed invalid, the conviction cannot be saved by invoking de facto authority on the part of the judge.”

Although the de facto doctrine did not protect the conviction, the Supreme Court held that the declaration made by the Supreme Court in the Manitoba Language Reference temporarily validating all rights, obligations and other effects arising under Manitoba’s invalid laws (to uphold the rule of law) preserved the conviction entered against Bilodeau under the invalid Highway Traffic Act.

[65] From the foregoing analysis, the following can be concluded:

1. The de facto doctrine is no longer restricted to situations involving defects in the public official’s title to office or regularity of appointment. The de facto doctrine may apply to preserve the acts of de jure officials acting outside their jurisdiction as well as the acts of persons whose office has no de jure existence where those acts are done with colour of authority.

2. Unconstitutional legislation, although it is said to be of no force or effect ab initio, has sufficient force and effect to impart colour of authority to public officials holding office or exercising powers created under that legislation.

3. The de facto doctrine does not apply to direct challenges to an official's authority. It only precludes collateral challenges where the official acted under colour of authority.

[66] In the result, the Appellant's claim cannot succeed. Although the Appellant was convicted and paid a fine pursuant thereto under an unconstitutional law, that law nevertheless gave the convicting judge sufficient colour of authority to protect his decision from collateral impeachment. To rephrase, although the convicting judge had no de jure authority to convict, s. 238(3) gave him de facto authority. Consequently, the Appellant's claim, which amounts to a collateral attack on the conviction, must fail.

4. Conclusion

"As a Matter of Law, is Turiaan Entitled to Have His Fine Refunded by the Defendant?"

[67] This preliminary question of law must be answered in the negative. Although the mistake of law and res judicata doctrines do not bar the recovery proceedings, the Appellant is barred from collaterally challenging the authority of the convicting judge by virtue of the de facto doctrine.

[68] Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed. Given the uniqueness and importance of the legal principles herein discussed, I would not award costs.

DATED at Edmonton, Alberta
this 3rd day of October, 1988.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT OF THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE STEVENSON

[69] I have read the draft judgment of my brother Harradence and agree that the appellant is not entitled, as a matter of law, to the refund of his fine. However, I do so on the basis that the original conviction is not open to collateral impeachment in these proceedings and is a bar to the recovery.

[70] The original conviction constitutes an estoppel per rem judicatem. The elements of such an estoppel were adopted by Moir, J.A. in Duhamel (No. 2) (1981), 1981 ABCA 295 \(CanLII\), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 538 from Spencer-Bower and Turner, Res Judicata, (second ed., 1969), para. 19. In my opinion all of the necessary elements are present.

[71] The argument is advanced that the convicting judge lacked jurisdiction because he convicted under a law that was later held to be ultra vires. The validity of that law was impliedly in issue in that original proceeding and the court in pronouncing its judgment necessarily concluded that the law was valid even if the issue was not expressly raised. A party cannot re-litigate a claim which might have been raised in an earlier proceeding: 17 Halsbury (4th) para. 1533.

[72] As Spencer-Bower and Turner note, at pp.14 and 15, the correctness of a decision does not, of itself, go to jurisdiction: a competent tribunal has "... jurisdiction to decide wrongly, as well as rightly." The convicting judge made an error in the exercise of his jurisdiction in accepting the validity of the impugned section of the Code.

[73] In the Manitoba Language Reference, 1985 CanLII 33 (SCC), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 721 at 757 the court noted that "... res judicata would preclude the re-opening of cases decided by the courts on the basis of invalid laws." That proposition is affirmed in Wigman (1987), 1985 CanLII 1 (SCC), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 97 where the court, at 104, says the earlier case "... observed that res judicata would even preclude the reopening of cases decided by the courts on the basis of constitutionally invalid laws." The point is also made in Bilodeau v. A.G. Manitoba, 1986 CanLII 64 (SCC), [1986] 1 S.C.R. 449.

[74] I derive no assistance from Toronto Railway v. Corporation of City of Toronto, [1904] A.C. 809 (P.C.); Pong v. Quong, 1927 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1927] S.C.R. 271, or O'Keefe v. Williams (1907), 5 C.L.R. 217. In Toronto Railway, the Privy Council held that an earlier decision, apparently deciding an issue and thus said to be res judicata, was not a bar because the tribunal, and the court which exercised a statutory appeal from it, lacked jurisdiction to decide that issue. In Pong it was argued that an earlier judgment decided an issue, but the Supreme Court held that the judge in the earlier case lacked jurisdiction to decide the issue. Similarly, in O'Keefe, the court held that the first tribunal lacked jurisdiction to decide the question in issue. The issue here is the constitutionality of the charging section, which the convicting judge unquestionably had jurisdiction to decide.

[75] I disagree with, and know no authority, for the proposition that the constitutionality of a provision of the Criminal Code is a jurisdictional question. Indeed, the proposition is contrary to the well recognized principle I quoted from Spencer-Bower and Turner that a competent tribunal has jurisdiction to decide wrongly as well as rightly.

[76] Reference was made to Neely v. U.S.A. (1976), 41 A.L.R. Fed. 331. That was an action for the return of fines paid under unconstitutional convictions. The decision that such an action lies is based on U.S. legislation, the Tucker Act, which (quoting from the headnote) "... provides authority for a district court to order the return of fines and costs based upon unconstitutional convictions." Moreover, the action there sought to "vacate, annul and set aside judgments and sentences of conviction" (p.340). That relief, which I doubt is available in civil proceedings in Canada, is not, in any event, sought. The conviction at bar has not been impeached by any proper proceedings to that end.

[77] The appellant is seeking to re-litigate an issue open to him in the earlier proceedings and is precluded from so doing as long as that conviction stands. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal, with costs.

DATED at EDMONTON, Alberta,
this 3rd DAY OF October,
1988.

Tab 150

- Use of an imitation firearm while committing an indictable offence (sexual assault) contrary to s. 85(2)(a) of the Criminal Code;
- Robbery contrary to s. 343 of the Criminal Code;
- Forcible confinement contrary to s. 279(2) of the Criminal Code;
- Sexual assault with a weapon contrary to s. 272(1)(a) of the Criminal Code;
- Sexual assault with a weapon contrary to s. 272(1)(a) of the Criminal Code; and
- Sexual assault with Jevor Brown contrary to s. 272(1)(d) of the Criminal Code.

[2] He now stands to be sentenced.

Background Facts

[3] The complainant, C, was 23 years old at the time of the offence. She was resident in Montréal. On 10 July 2019, she came to Toronto with two male friends, hereinafter referred to as D and G, along with D's girlfriend, hereinafter referred to as A.

[4] They rented an Airbnb paid for by G. The Airbnb was located on the 14th floor of 111 Bathurst Street in Toronto.

[5] At some point during their first night in the city, D and G went outside the building to smoke a cigarette. C had fallen asleep but was woken by A who asked her to go downstairs to let G and D back into the building. The only key to the apartment was an electronic fob which was needed to access their floor when using the elevator. G and D had left the key with the two women.

[6] C agreed to go down to the building's lobby to let her friends in. When she approached the 14th floor elevators, she noticed two men waiting nearby. C became uneasy because the two men did not look like residents of the building. When the elevator arrived, she got in. The two men followed.

[7] A security camera from inside the elevator captured the events that followed.

[8] C began to look at her mobile phone. She was approached by one of the men who was wearing sunglasses and a Toronto FC baseball cap. This was Mr. Codrington. The second man, Jevor Brown, stood in the corner watching.

[9] Mr. Codrington asked C, "do you want to have fun". When she said "no", she was told to "shut the fuck up". Mr. Codrington took her phone and began to pull down the straps of her dress. She was afraid and tried to resist. Mr. Codrington pointed a gun at her and yelled, "shut up".

[10] The elevator stopped at the ground floor, but Mr. Codrington stood directly in front of C preventing her from leaving. He pressed the eighth-floor button. When the elevator doors opened, Mr. Codrington grabbed C's hair and forcibly dragged her from the elevator. Mr. Brown exited with them.

[11] C testified she was taken to a nearby stairwell and forced down a flight of stairs. Mr. Codrington began to choke her before demanding she perform fellatio on him. When doing so, he pointed a gun at her head. He also wanted the password to her phone. Mr. Codrington told C to "suck it" whilst he held her head in place. Scared for her safety, C did as she was told. Mr. Brown moved behind her and had vaginal and anal sex with her without her consent whilst she continued to perform oral sex on Mr. Codrington. Throughout, Mr. Codrington continued to hold a gun to C's head and told her to "shut the fuck up".

[12] The two men swapped positions and Mr. Codrington anally and vaginally raped C from behind whilst Mr. Brown inserted his penis into her mouth. Mr. Codrington made demands as he kept the gun pointed at her head. Mr. Brown remained silent. C could not tell how long the event lasted but remembered that it ended just after she heard a noise from outside the stairwell.

[13] Just before the two men left the scene, Mr. Codrington turned to C and told her “we are going to be looking for you”.

[14] C ran up the stairs to the 14th floor where she found her friends. She saw G standing next to the lift. She was crying. G asked her what had happened, and C told him.

[15] The police were called the next day. She was also seen by a doctor who prescribed medication. The sexual assault nurse who examined C said that she saw swelling and redness on C’s labia and anus. She was unable to examine C’s vaginal area using a speculum because C told her that she would be unable to bear the pain that would result. Even a routine medical swabbing proved to be impossible because of C’s extreme discomfort. Ultimately, it was left to C to take her own swab sample, which the nurse testified to as being very rare.

[16] The nurse also said C’s neck was tender to the touch and there was redness. She also observed a bruise on the right side of her leg. This injury was captured by a photograph taken by police.

Position of the Parties

[17] Ms. Verboom, on behalf of the Crown, submits this offence is of such a serious nature that a sentence of 12 years is appropriate as a global sentence. She also asks for the following ancillary orders:

- a DNA order;
- an order pursuant to the Sexual Offender Information Registration Act for a period of 20 years; and
- an order under s. 109 of the Criminal Code prohibiting Mr. Codrington from possessing any weapons for life.

[18] Ms. Brown, on the other hand, submits that Mr. Codrington has served the equivalent of five- and one-half years and asks for a sentence of time served. She argues that this is sufficient when considering Mr. Codrington’s personal circumstances.

Personal Circumstances

[19] Mr. Codrington is now 28 years old. He was born in Toronto to an American mother, Mary Codrington. He also has a sister. He informed the author of his pre-sentence report that he was unsure where his biological father was born and has limited contact with him.

[20] Mr. Codrington indicated that his mother and grandmother have an history of Indigenous descent. This was confirmed by his mother. He described his relationship with his mother as being “fair”. However, it appears that their relationship is volatile and that they have “fallouts”.

[21] Apparently, Mary Codrington has health issues and indicates that Mr. Codrington would be required to care for her youngest son, if anything would happen to her.

[22] Mr. Codrington grew up in Toronto with his maternal grandparents, his aunt, and his sister. His grandfather was a role model for him and taught him how to respect people. Mr. Codrington indicated that in his past, there was some Children Aid Society (CAS) involvement but was unable to recall the details. At age 15, the CAS removed Mr. Codrington and his sister from the family home and placed them into the care of his grandparents.

[23] Mr. Codrington indicated that he had a "bad upbringing" and missed out on his childhood. He never went on a trip or played any sport. He said that he suffered physical, spiritual, and mental abuse from his grandmother. Mr. Codrington also said he was subjected to corporal punishment. He indicated that he would have preferred to have lived with his mother.

[24] Mr. Codrington also spoke of his feelings towards his grandmother who identified him to the police after the offences. He indicated that he feels "betrayed" and cannot understand why she did so. His grandmother told the author of the pre-sentence report that she wanted "what is best for him".

[25] It would appear that Mr. Codrington had a learning disability and needed support throughout high school.

[26] Mr. Codrington is currently single with no children, although he had been in a relationship with a woman for 10 years residing together for a year and a half. He indicated there was domestic violence in the relationship but denied being the perpetrator. He could not explain as to why the relationship ended.

[27] Mr. Codrington recalled attending two elementary schools and multiple high schools. He did not complete his high school education and left school at the age of 17. He told the author of the pre-sentence report that he had anger issues in elementary school and got into fights with other students. In elementary school, he was diagnosed with intellectual delay. Thereafter, he was given an individual education plan which placed him in a special-needs classroom accompanied by an educational assistant. He said that his behaviour changed for the better after this development. His mother has also confirmed that Mr. Codrington has been diagnosed with an intellectual impairment which caused problems for him at school and in everyday life. His mother added that Mr. Codrington has a hearing impairment and lower than average memorisation skills relative to others his age.

[28] Mr. Codrington told the author of the pre-sentence report that he had been diagnosed with schizophrenia as a child but could not provide any details. Mary Codrington confirmed the existence of mental health issues when Mr. Codrington was a small child, but also failed to provide any dates or details. He told the author of the pre-sentence report that he had never seen a psychiatrist, but later changed that claim saying that he did. He was on medication for four years but would stop taking it. Much of Mr. Codrington's claims about his mental health could not be supported with details or specifics. It does appear, however, that whilst in detention, Mr. Codrington has been seeing a psychiatrist at the Toronto South Detention Centre and taking medication. He has been diagnosed as having schizophrenia and is taking psychotropic medication as prescribed.

[29] Mr. Codrington has been steadily employed throughout his life. Prior to his current incarceration, he was employed at a call centre for two months and previous to that as a security guard. He said that he was fired from his security guard position because he was unable to renew his licence due to the criminal charges. In his pre-sentence report, Mr. Codrington said that he had worked in numerous positions in factories, call centres, and retail stores. More recently, he was financially supported through the Ontario Works program because he was unable to find employment due to court-imposed restrictions.

[30] Mr. Codrington has no drug or alcohol related issues.

Aggravating and Mitigating Features

[31] There is no doubt that this was an opportunistic assault on an unsuspecting and vulnerable victim visiting Toronto.

[32] Ms. Verboom suggests that there was evidence of a planned assault in this case. After taking C's phone, Mr. Codrington immediately pressed the eighth floor of the elevator as if both parties had previously decided that they would be going to that floor. Upon reviewing the video evidence, I found beyond a reasonable doubt that when they followed C into the elevator, they had already formed their plan to sexually assault her and had chosen the floor where they would commit their attack.

[33] There is no doubt that this was a very serious, violent offence. However, much of the seriousness is reflected in the nature of the charges and cannot be considered as aggravating features.

[34] Mr. Codrington continues to maintain his innocence and protests his "wrongful conviction". This is not an aggravating feature as this is his right. However, an offender who continues to proclaim that he is not guilty is not entitled to the significant discount in sentencing they would otherwise receive. Mr. Codrington's repeated assertions that he is not responsible for the offences also speaks to his poor prospects for rehabilitation.

[35] In mitigation, it is clear that Mr. Codrington does have mental health challenges with his mental health and learning difficulties. He has provided letters of support from his family including his mother who is suffering from terminal cancer, his grandfather, his aunt, and his older brother who has spoken with Mr. Codrington in pursuing a career in trades.

[36] Mr. Codrington does not have a criminal record. Ms. Brown filed records from the Toronto South Detention Centre and the Toronto East Detention Centre which appear to indicate that Mr. Codrington was subject to lockdown conditions which were exacerbated during the pandemic. Mr. Codrington was also on very restrictive house arrest conditions when released from 22 November 2022 to 15 June 2023. Accordingly, he is entitled to credit under the principles set out in R. v. Downes (2006), 2006 CanLII 3957 \(ON CA\), 79 O.R. (3d) 321.

[37] On the other hand, the records also show that Mr. Codrington was guilty of three acts of misconduct in May, June, and July 2023. One of these acts involved Mr. Codrington being violent towards a cell mate and grappling with institutional officers as they attempted to restrain him.

The Sentencing Precedents

[38] In seeking a sentence of 12 years imprisonment, the Crown relies upon several cases.

[39] In R. v. Myers, [2000] O.J. No. 1787, aff'd [2002] O.J. No. 965 (C.A.), the offender pleaded guilty to sexual assault on a woman that he dragged off the street as she was walking home. He attempted to rape her, removing her clothes and pushing her onto the ground, which was covered with ice. It was not clear whether there was penetration, but the victim suffered several injuries including bruises and hypothermia from the attack. The offender was a 26-year-old alcoholic with limited education. He also had a criminal record that included convictions for assault upon previous girlfriends. He expressed remorse and apologised to the victim. He was sentenced to the maximum sentence of nine years imprisonment. This sentence was upheld by the Court of Appeal who commented that whilst the sentence was a "substantial one", the brutality of the attack and the duration of the assault made it fit: at para. 1.

[40] In R. v. Sousa, 2023 ONCA 100, 165 O.R. (3d) 641, the offender was convicted of sexual assault on a victim who had passed out at a house party. The offender took her to an isolated area and forced her to perform oral sex before penetrating her twice vaginally and once anally. After he had finished, he drove the victim back into town and left her on an unfamiliar street, where she found assistance and the police were called. He was given a ten-year jail sentence. The Court of Appeal found the sentence to be excessive and reduced it to eight years. The Court found that the assault took place on a vulnerable victim and could be characterised as opportunistic. However, the offender had no criminal record.

[41] In R. v. Kavanagh, 2009 ONCA 759, 255 O.A.C. 285, the offender was convicted of sexual assault with a weapon, unlawful confinement, and robbery. The Court of Appeal described this as a "brutal, sexual assault on a vulnerable woman working at night in a convenience store": at para. 7. The offender, who was unknown to the victim, entered the store, locked the door, and threatened the complainant with a knife that he claimed to have in his back pocket. He took her into a back room of the store and made her perform oral sex on him before raping her. The offence was found to be a premeditated one on a vulnerable victim who suffered long-term consequences in her personal life. The offender had a criminal record that included domestic assault. The Court of Appeal held that a ten-year sentence was appropriate.

[42] In R. v. R.M., 2020 ONCA 231, 150 O.R. (3d) 369, the offender was convicted of a sexual assault on a sex trade worker who was violently and repeatedly raped at knife point by the offender and another male in 1990. In 2016, a DNA profile identified the offender as the perpetrator. The Court of Appeal upheld a global sentence of eight years for the youthful first-time offender.

[43] In R. v. Assing, 2008 CanLII 58607 \(ON SC\), [2008] O.J. No. 4527 (Ont. S.C.), the first-time offender was convicted of sexual assault whilst using a knife, robbery, and unlawful confinement. The victim was walking home from a shopping excursion. She was grabbed by the offender, a stranger, who wielded a knife with a blade of approximately one foot in length. After taking her money and personal objects, the offender dragged the woman into a nearby park and into a townhouse in a residential development. She was forced into the basement, tied up, and raped repeatedly. She was punched about the head and body when she tried to resist. The judge took the view that the offender was a "predator". The attack was pre-planned on a vulnerable victim and a weapon was used. The judge held that public safety, denunciation, and deterrence were paramount and imposed a sentence of nine years.

[44] In R. v. Broekaert, 2003 MBCA 10, 170 Man. R. (2d) 229, the offender was convicted of aggravated sexual assault and sentenced to 11 1/2 years imprisonment. He had been drinking at a bar. He followed the victim, dragging her into a construction site before removing her clothing. He then inserted an object into her vagina and anus. After he struck her in the face, he dragged her to a second location, where he continued a similar attack. The victim suffered serious injuries, including lacerations to her vagina and anus. She was required to undergo emergency surgery to close the wounds. As a result of her injuries, she required long-term attention and additional surgeries to recover. She required the continuing attention of a home care nurse and undertook a continuous course of medication to cope with the emotional and physical scarring of the attack. The offender had a minor, dated, and unrelated criminal record.

[45] In support of its position of time served, the defence relies on several cases.

[46] In R. v. Alexander, 2013 ABCA 231, [2013] A.J. No. 655, the offender pleaded guilty to sexual assault. He contacted a sex trade worker and enticed her to the parking garage of an apartment building. When she arrived, the offender attacked her, holding a knife to her throat. He then stole money from her and took her mobile phone. The offender received a six-year sentence which was reduced to five years on appeal.

[47] In R. v. Sutherland, 2016 ONCA 674, 342 C.C.C. (3d) 309, the offender was convicted of sexual assault of a woman whom he had met whilst trafficking crack cocaine. Both the offender and the victim were drug addicts. On the day in question, the victim went to the offender's house to smoke cigarettes and purchase some crack cocaine. The offender attacked the victim. He threw her to the ground and raped her with a knife pointed at her throat. After she fled, the offender chased her with a broken beer bottle. The offender received a sentence of six years.

[48] In R. v. Richards, 2016 ONSC 2940, the offender was convicted of a sexual assault on a sex trade worker whom he approached as he was driving his vehicle. He drove the victim to a cemetery, punched her in the face and the head, and then produced a knife, threatening her with it. With the knife held at her neck, the offender sexually assaulted her by digitally penetrating her vaginal and anal areas. He then forced her to perform oral sex on him whilst continuing to hold the knife over her head. Afterwards, he raped her vaginally and anally. He received a global sentence of seven years.

The Appropriate Sentence

[49] Section 718 of the Criminal Code sets out the factors that a judge must consider when imposing a sentence. These principles emphasise balancing denunciation and deterrence with rehabilitation and promoting a sense of responsibility.

[50] The fundamental principle of sentencing is contained in s. 718.1 of the Criminal Code. This principle mandates that any sentence must be proportionate to the gravity of the offence and degree of the responsibility of the offender.

[51] I find the cases advanced by the defence to be of limited assistance. For example, in Alexander – the low point in these sentencing cases – the offender pleaded guilty and received the benefit of a significant discount. Moreover, none of the cases involve a gang sexual assault, a significant feature of seriousness in this case.

[52] There is no doubt that this was an horrific assault on a vulnerable complainant who was a stranger to the city of Toronto. I have already found beyond a reasonable doubt that there was planning involved before Mr. Codrington and Mr. Brown entered the elevator. In their choice of the eighth floor, the offenders clearly knew of the stairwell – which might provide some seclusion – as they took C there directly and forced her down a flight of stairs. The use of the gun, both in the elevator and the stairwell, when Mr. Codrington and Mr. Brown carried out their attack on C would have been terrifying in its impact. It is telling that C could not bring herself to write a Victim Impact Statement for the sentencing hearing because she was too emotionally scarred.

[53] Accordingly, denunciation and deterrence must take precedence in a case with facts such as these.

[54] In light of these factors, the Crown's position of 12 years is not unreasonable. However, I must also take into account the mitigation that I have described. This includes Mr. Codrington's incarceration during the COVID-19 pandemic as well as the lockdowns at the institution during the pandemic. I also take into account his house arrest conditions which would entitle him to a credit pursuant to Downes.

[55] I conclude that a global sentence of ten years is appropriate in this case. That shall be marked on the indictment. From that, I deduct 5 years and 5 months pursuant to the credit Mr. Codrington is entitled to under R. v. Summers, 2014 SCC 26, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 575. The sentence left to be served is 4 years and 7 months.

[56] I also make the following ancillary orders:

- An order that he provide a DNA sample pursuant to s. 487.051(1) of the Criminal Code. With the exception of the offences pursuant to s. 85, the offences are all primary designated offences;
- a section 109 order prohibiting Mr. Codrington from possessing weapons for life. This order is mandatory for all of the offences;
- a registration on the Sexual Offender Information Registration Act for a period of 20 years; and

- a non-communication order with C and her family pursuant to s. 743.21 of the Criminal Code.

The Kienapple Principle

[57] Although Mr. Codrington originally faced eight counts on the indictment, one count (Count 7) was not proceeded with by the Crown. Ms. Verboom also concedes that Count 1 on the indictment should be stayed pursuant to the principle in R. v. Kienapple, 1974 CanLII 14 \(SCC\), [1975] 1 S.C.R. 729, as it duplicates Count 3 on the indictment (Robbery). I would also find that Count 2 on the indictment is also captured by Kienapple as the essential elements of s. 85 contains the same legal elements as Counts 5 and 6 (Committing a Sexual Assault Using a Weapon). For these reasons, Counts 1 and 2 are stayed in accordance with the Kienapple principle.

Allocation of the Sentence

[58] The global sentence of 10 years shall be allocated across the counts as follows:

- Count 6 – Sexual assault with a weapon in the stairwell of 111 Bathurst Street – 10 years imprisonment;
- Count 8 – Sexual assault committed with Jevor Brown – 10 years concurrent to Count 6;
- Count 3 – Robbery – 3 years concurrent to Count 6;
- Count 4 – Forcible confinement – 3 years concurrent to Count 6; and
- Count 5 – Sexual assault with a weapon in the elevator – 5 years concurrent to Count 6.

S.A.Q. Akhtar J.

Released: 10 November 2023

CITATION: R. v. Codrington, 2023 ONSC 6352

COURT FILE NO.: CR 20-10000157

CR-20-10000158

CR 23-10000372

DATE: 20231110

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

HIS MAJESTY THE KING

– and –

SHANE CODRINGTON

REASONS FOR SENTENCE

S.A.Q. Akhtar J.

Tab 151

Evans v. Sproule, 2008 CanLII 58428 (ON SC)

Source: Superior Court of Justice

Date: 2008-11-12

File number: 02-CV-238550CM2

Other citations: 176 ACWS (3d) 895 — [2008] CarswellOnt 8753 — [2008] OJ No 4518 (QL)

Citation: Evans v. Sproule, 2008 CanLII 58428 (ON SC), <<https://canlii.ca/t/21j05>>, retrieved on 2026-03-24

INDEX

	Page
INTRODUCTION	1
THE EVIDENCE	2
1. The Plaintiff & Her Witnesses
(a) The incident of Sexual Assault	2
(b) Her Family and Personal Life prior to the Incident	4
(c) Her Life after the Incident	5
(d) The Realization	7
2. Dr. Caridad Cruz	8
3. Dr. Hy Bloom	9
4. Rhonda Hearn	11
5. Sergeant Madigan	13
THE ISSUES	12
ANALYSIS
1. Fiduciary Duty and Trust	13
2. Negligence	15
3. Vicarious Liability	17
4. Limitations and Laches	19
5. Damages
(a) Non-Pecuniary Damages	24
(b) Loss of Earning Capacity	25
(c) Future Therapy and OHIP Subrogation	26
(d) Punitive Damages	26
6. Costs	26

DATE: 20081112

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

HEARD: September 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 18, 2008

Reasons for Judgment

It is tragic but true that people working with the vulnerable sometimes abuse their positions and commit wrongs against the very people they are engaged to help.

Bazley v. Curry, 1999 CanLII 692 (SCC), [1999] 2 S.C.R.

534, per McLachlin J.

[1] In the wee hours of January 7, 1979, the plaintiff, Marian Evans, a 24-year-old single female, was subject to an admittedly outrageous and despicable sexual assault at the hands of Police Constable John David Sproule (Sproule), a member of the Toronto Police Services Board (the Board) or its predecessor. The assault took place in the officer's police cruiser while he was on duty and in full police uniform.

[2] Following an investigation, Sproule was charged with a criminal offence under the Criminal Code of Canada. He resigned from the police force in August 1979, prior to charges being laid, under the Police Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 351. In October 1979, after the preliminary hearing and as a result of a guilty plea, he was convicted of indecent assault and fined $1,000.00.

[3] The plaintiff has been diagnosed as suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), anxiety and depression. Shortly after the assault, she moved out of her Irish Catholic home and has not re-integrated with her family members since that time. She avoids people, suffers from panic attacks and displays paranoid tendencies, all of which are well-documented. According to the expert psychiatrists, Ms. Evans requires focused mental health treatment for her condition, but will, nonetheless, suffer some symptoms for the remainder of her life.

[4] The plaintiff commenced these civil proceedings against Sproule and the Toronto Police Services Board (the Board) in October 2002. When Sproule failed to attend the trial, his pleadings were struck and judgment was awarded against him; the Board's crossclaim against Sproule for contribution and indemnity was allowed, and the trial essentially proceeded against the Board.

[5] The case before me revolves around issues of trust and fiduciary duty, negligence, vicarious liability, limitations and laches, and damages.

THE EVIDENCE

1. The Plaintiff and Her Witnesses

(a) The Incident of Sexual Assault

[6] On Saturday, January 6, 1979, Marian Evans, at 24 years of age, attended a party with her boyfriend, Raymond Feeney. As Raymond had been drinking and she had not, Ms. Evans drove Raymond home and was driving Raymond's car back to her home at about 3:30 a.m. when she was stopped by Sproule who was in full police uniform with his police badge and gun visible in its holster, and driving a marked police vehicle.

[7] Sproule directed her to get out of her vehicle and to sit in the front passenger seat of his police car. When asked for identification, she said she had none with her, and identified herself as Kathleen Evans, the name of her older sister. After searching her vehicle Sproule returned and began to write a ticket for a traffic-related violation. At this time, the plaintiff disclosed her true name and that her licence had been suspended a week ago, for an unpaid traffic ticket.

[8] The plaintiff described the ensuing events, as follows:

- a) The officer retorted, "With me writing this summons, you just made yourself liable to 14 years in prison." He then asked "so what do you think we should do?" In response, the plaintiff who by this time, was "nervous, upset and shaking," answered that she didn't know. Sproule told her to stay in the police car while he drove her vehicle to a nearby parking lot.
- b) Sproule then drove her in his vehicle to the parking lot in which he had parked her boyfriend's car, directed her to sit in the passenger seat of that car and told her to wait there until he returned, which she did. The plaintiff described the weather as "freezing" and when she went to turn on the heat in the car, she realized that the officer had taken the keys to the car. She was wearing a black dress with lace at the neck, no bras, a corduroy coat, high heels and no boots. Frightened and "out of control", she could not stop shaking as she contemplated the trouble she was in and the prospect of going to jail for 14 years.

- c) After 10 to 15 minutes, Sproule returned in an unmarked police car and had Ms. Evans get into the front passenger side. He then drove the car through an alleyway into the corner of an empty parking lot, and turned off both the lights and the car. In the plaintiff's words:

He turned off the car. He took off his cap and put it on the window sill. He said, 'Well, Marian, what made you lie like that? I mean, making yourself liable for 14 years?' He was holding up the summons when he said that.

- d) Sproule then pulled the plaintiff toward his face with both hands, rubbed his face on hers and tried to kiss her. Though she kept "twisting and turning [her] face away from him," he kept turning her face with his hands towards his face and touched his lips to her face and lips.
- e) He then pushed her right shoulder towards him and reached inside her coat, pressing hard with his hand over her right breast. He kept trying to kiss her, leaned his chest against hers and put his head close to her breast. He then put his hand on her leg and started to rub her leg. She continued to struggle while asking him to take her to the police station.
- f) The officer then began to push her down, making her lie on the seat on her back. In her words, "he was on top of me smothering me with his body." When asked by counsel what was going through her mind at the time, she replied, through tears,

I was just frightened. I was scared. I was thinking of my life. I was thinking of rape.... I kept thinking of being raped and being killed. I didn't know what was going to happen to me. I didn't know how to get out of this situation other than taking me to the station.

- g) When Ms. Evans reached for the car radio and threatened to scream, the officer "jumped" off her, lit a cigarette and apologized. After a short conversation, he began again. In her words,

...he started pulling my face towards his again. He grabbed my hands. He was trying to put them on his shoulders, and I kept pulling away, and he wouldn't stop, and he kept pulling them, and he asked me to kiss him, and he was rubbing his face on me again. And I kept saying, don't, please don't, just take me to the station. And he wouldn't do that.

- h) The officer then asked, "What if I told you that I wanted it right now? Indicating that she would be "an emotional disaster," she gave him a peck on the cheek, thinking that would make him leave her alone. The officer then pulled her towards him while complaining that he was not getting along with his wife. The plaintiff explained that she was raised in a "very strict" home and that her parents would be worried about her.
- i) Sproule then told her to lie down on the seat of the car as he did not want his Sergeant to see her in the car with him, which she did. According to the plaintiff, she was weeping and kept wiping her face with her coat while the officer stared down at her. He finally started the cruiser and drove her to Raymond's car. He did not give her a summons.

[9] Sproule followed the plaintiff's vehicle for a distance, pulled up beside it, looked at her and then drove away. She reached her home at about 6:00 a.m. Shortly after she arrived home she called her boyfriend Raymond who was staying with his brother, Robert Feeney, and told him about the incident.

[10] The plaintiff's account of the events has been remarkably consistent in its detail since the incident and throughout these proceedings. As to her feelings at the time, she stated,

I was so frightened for my life. I thought I was going to be..... I thought of my parents, all my life. I thought if I was going to be dead or alive the next day. I thought of my friends ... I was so afraid.... I've never been so scared in my life before or after.

[11] Later that day, the plaintiff went to Robert's place and he convinced her to call the Rape Crisis Centre and to attend at police headquarters, which she did, along with Robert and Raymond. At the trial Robert described the plaintiff on the day in question, as being "visibly upset" when recounting the story of the molestation; more specifically, she was crying, shaking and trembling, and did not know what to do. Sergeant Donald Madigan took Ms. Evans' statement, investigated the incident and as previously noted, criminal charges were laid against Sproule as a result.

(b) Her Family and Personal Life Prior to the Incident

[12] The plaintiff was born in Dublin, Ireland, as the second oldest in a line of five siblings. The family moved to Canada in 1960, when the plaintiff was 6 or 7 years old. She is closest to her eldest sibling, Kathleen, who is two years older than her, is a single mother with a 27-year-old daughter and presently, serves as their mother's caregiver.

[13] According to the plaintiff and her sister Kathleen, their father, who owned a successful contracting company, was a quiet, gentle soul who passed away suddenly in 2006 at the age of 79. Their mother whom they described as a thoughtful, kind and hardworking person with a sense of humour, worked for many years as a seamstress.

[14] By all accounts, the plaintiff enjoyed a happy, normal family life in a typically religious Irish Roman Catholic family. After high school, she entered a two-year early childhood education program at Centennial College and completed the course but did not write her final exams as she had lost interest in working in a daycare centre.

[15] Kathleen described the plaintiff as kind-hearted, talented, charming, witty, very beautiful and charismatic. According to her, "she lit up the room — family, friends and strangers, all loved her." She frequently lent a helping hand to others, had aspirations, self-esteem and confidence. She was stable and focused; she had intelligence, ability and was proud of her accomplishments. In Kathleen's words, "She had it all." One summer, for example, she turned the house and backyard into a daycare with lunch, games and parties for neighbourhood children. She and her sister were extremely close — they spent summers together, travelled, shopped, talked and "did everything" together.

[16] The plaintiff's boyfriend at the time, Raymond Feeney, also came from an Irish Catholic family who had known the Evans' family for many years. He was described as quiet, respectful and, according to Kathleen, he treated the plaintiff "like gold."

(c) Her Life After the Incident

[17] The plaintiff observed the expression of shock on her mother's face when Sergeant Madigan told her parents about the incident and the fact that she had been driving while under suspension. Though she continued to live at home, the incident was never mentioned again and she felt the tension, shame and embarrassment caused to her family because of it. This led her to flee her home environment a few months later in the middle of the night. To this date she has not re-established family relationships, other than occasional meetings with Kathleen or sporadic attendances at family celebrations. She has not communicated with her other siblings or family members from the date of this incident. In Kathleen's words, "She totally disappeared. It's so sad."

[18] The plaintiff's relationship with Raymond continued, on and off, for about two years, but they lived in low-income accommodation in "run down areas", and their relationship was never the same. When asked if she discussed the assault with him after the initial disclosure, she replied, "No, I was too ashamed to bring it up." Raymond's brother, Robert, noted that in those days, this was not unusual.

[19] In the mid to late 1980's, the plaintiff took the real estate brokers course but could not afford to take the additional courses necessary to maintain her license. Since that time, she has worked at various jobs, mainly in contract positions as this affords her more freedom and less intrusiveness. After her son was born in 1985, she stayed home with him for various periods of time between jobs.

[20] She is presently residing with a friend in an apartment and works for a book company as a freelance permissions coordinator, a position she quite enjoys. Her wage is $30.00 per hour and she does the bulk of her work from home, so she does not have to socialize with others.

[21] When asked about the impact the sexual assault had on her life, she stated,

I am – I hate to admit things like this, but I feel depressed. I feel frustrated. I feel emotional all the time. I am always crying. If I laugh, I cry. If I cry, I laugh. I am confused about my feelings. I can't make them out sometimes. I can't accept – it is hard for me to accept kindness from people because I don't trust them. I have such an issue trusting people. It is like what did they mean behind that. Do they really mean this kindness or is it just a facade? I don't know what to believe. I – and then I question myself. I don't know how – if I'm thinking the right thing or if I'm doing the right thing. I question my ability. I question my shame. My self-doubt. I blame myself. I feel guilty. I question my – if I went on an interview, I questioned everything about the interview. I always came out thinking, 'well, there goes another one; I didn't get that.'

I always feel people can see through me so I tried to stay away from people. I tried not to get involved. People that I know now or people I know over my life, new people that try to befriend me, it is very difficult for me to take that friendship and keep it close. So I tend to walk away from anyone who tries to take me into their life. I keep my – I keep my distance from people. I have no ambition. I am 54. I am only figuring things out now. Sorry [wiping away tears]. I am only figuring things out now and it is – I'm really angry about it, angry and saddened by it. I wish it had been a long time ago that I could have pieced it together, and I mean I'm trying to stay optimistic. It is not like I'm, you know, dead or anything, but it is hard. It is just hard for me to put my life in an optimistic way and think positive about my future.

[22] As to her sleeping pattern, she reported:

I sleep very poorly. I wake up a lot. I have nightmares. If I think about it in the middle of the night, I pace the floor. I've been known to go for drives and just do some work at a coffee shop and just do some work just so I can get tired, so I can come back and sleep.....

I have – I am very isolated in my nightmares. And I feel like I’m in an enclosed – I feel enclosed. Even in an open area, I have dreams of fields and they’re dark, and I mean I am enclosed in that field even though it is open. I feel – I dream of people, their faces. They don’t have a face but I know that they’re authority figures and it – and I’m trying to escape from them. I feel like I’m caged and I can’t move, and I feel very alone in my nightmares. I’m very alone and I have nowhere to reach out in the crowd.

[23] After the incident, at various times, both Kathleen and Robert observed her panicking when seeing police cars in the community. It was only after a chance meeting with Sergeant Madigan some years later that she learned about the disposition of the criminal proceedings against Sproule.

[24] The plaintiff’s only stabilizing force has been her son, Adam, who is now self-employed and with whom she has a close and loving relationship.

[25] The last family event she attended was her father’s funeral in 2006. She tearfully articulated feelings of guilt at not having ever discussed this matter with him before he passed away.

(d) The Realization

[26] It was Kathleen who referred the plaintiff to Dr. Caridad M. Cruz, psychiatrist, in early 2001. She did so in response to the plaintiff’s worsening condition and her perception that the plaintiff was living in fear and thinking she was “mental.”

[27] This is consistent with the plaintiff’s own evidence that she was feeling anxious, fearful and panic stricken at the time, and she needed to talk to someone professional about it. In her words,

After the break-up with Neil Folkard, just trying to piece together what I had done wrong in the relationship and what caused him to leave me, and I started going – when I healed from the break-up, I started reflecting back on my life and I thought there’s got to be something I’m doing wrong. And I reflected back on my relationships and my relationships with boyfriends and with my siblings and with my parents, and I – it brought me all the way back to the assault. When that happened, everything tended to fall apart in my life. My self-doubt, my shame, my blame, my fears, everything just started from that day. And I hadn’t put everything together in my head. I just felt that I was confused about it. So I thought I had to go and see someone to straighten my thoughts out, to help me organize my thoughts and my feelings.

[28] The plaintiff’s first meeting with Dr. Cruz took place on March 23, 2001. She continues to see her “about once a month,” and is on anti-depressants. Prior to seeing Dr. Cruz, the plaintiff’s family physician, Dr. Masson, had counselled her regarding her anxiety, depression and failed relationships, from 1992 to about 2000. However, the plaintiff did not at any time mention the sexual assault to Dr. Masson throughout that entire period of time.

[29] The plaintiff contends that she only began to really understand the root of her problems through her therapeutic interventions with Dr. Cruz. In her words, “It was only through Dr. Cruz piecing things together that I admitted I had problems”. When asked directly why she did not start the civil action until many years after the sexual assault incident, the plaintiff stated,

I – I didn't realize what was wrong with me. I didn't think about the assault. I didn't realize it had so many harms in my life. I trusted Sergeant Madigan at one point. I trusted him as looking after me. He told me that the Crown would look after me. He told me I'd be taken care of. He told me all these things. He told me that I didn't need a lawyer, that the Crown was going to act as my lawyer. And I felt that he was looking after my best interests. I just – it was because of the break-up with Neil that I had to look in my past and see what I had done wrong to have this relationship fail, and then looked at my other relationships and had to question why they failed, and each of them failed because I was messed up, and I can't fix those now. All I can do is apologize for them.

2. Dr. Caridad Cruz

[30] Dr. Cruz obtained a fellowship in psychiatry from the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1977, worked as a staff psychiatrist at Whitby Psychiatric Hospital from 1975 to 1981, and at the Rouge Valley Health System, Centenary Site, from 1981 to the present. Due to her qualifications and extensive experience with patients suffering from trauma-induced psychological disorders, Dr. Cruz was qualified as an expert to give opinion evidence in general psychiatry, with specialized expertise in the area of trauma arising from sexual assault and post-traumatic stress disorder.

[31] Dr. Cruz first saw the plaintiff on March 23, 2001, on referral from her family physician, and has seen her consistently since then, on average once per month and often more frequently. Her clinical notes and records were filed with the court.

[32] She described the patient's presenting problems as confusion, poor concentration, feeling unwell, moodiness, depression and insomnia. A mental health examination as to the plaintiff's psychological functions indicated depressive symptoms, irregular appetite, low energy, guilt feelings, nightmares and insomnia, among other things.

[33] Psychological testing results under the DSM-IV, Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorder, led to a diagnosis of Axis I, post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) with depressive symptoms. The mental illness known as PTSD is commonly characterized by:

- intrusive symptoms such as memories, nightmares and physical sensations
- avoidance of people, places or situations that remind the individual of the traumatic incident
- diminished responsiveness to the outside world, such as detachment or estrangement, loss of interest in previously enjoyed activities, or an ability to experience emotions or intimacy
- symptoms of increased arousal such as difficulty sleeping or concentrating, intense fear or irritability and mood fluctuations

(See Exhibit 8)

See also Schedule A for the complete list of Diagnostic DSM-IV Evaluation Criteria.

[34] Ms. Evans' level of functioning under the Global Assessment of Functioning (GAF) scale was 70%, indicating a level of functioning under stress; and with triggers such as seeing police vehicles on the road, she displays a 60% impaired level of functioning. Testing showed avoidance and paranoid features in her personality which, according to the doctor, were utilized as “defence mechanisms to protect her ego from harm.”

[35] Since there had not been any other trauma in the plaintiff’s life, her symptoms, the PTSD and the guilt, fear and shame she experienced were attributed to the initial trauma resulting from her sexual molestation in 1979. The patient was prescribed medication for depressive symptoms and a tranquilizer to help her sleep at night.

[36] It was the doctor’s evidence that following the assault, the onset of the plaintiff’s PTSD was immediate and then prolonged. The plaintiff was aware that she had problems in her life, but she did not know why this was so or the root of the problems. She did not connect the problems to the assault which had occurred 22 years earlier. Moreover, she internalized the guilt, shame and fear associated with the event such that it affected her own self-image, and in the doctor’s words, “numbed” her understanding. It was only through the process of “exploratory psychotherapy” that the plaintiff became aware in any meaningful or consistent way, that her problems and poor relationships were connected to the sexual assault; and that she began to shift the blame from herself.

[37] A further psychological assessment was conducted in August 2002 when the plaintiff “was trying to make up her mind whether to pursue a lawsuit” with similar results. It was the doctor’s evidence that it was through the process of psychotherapy that the plaintiff began to develop substantial insight into the root cause of her psychological, familial and interpersonal problems.

[38] Dr. Cruz also opined that, without treatment, Ms. Evans’ condition will remain the same. She has suggested an in-patient treatment plan at Homewood Health Centre which has a specialized program for Traumatic Stress Recovery. Apparently, that is the only in-patient program of its kind in Canada, helping people to recover from the after-effects of trauma.

3. Dr. Hy Bloom

[39] Dr. Bloom has had a diverse career in both psychiatry and law. He obtained a fellowship in Forensic Psychiatry from the Royal College of Physicians of Canada in 1989 and a Bachelor of Laws degree from the Law Society of Upper Canada in 1980. Among other things, he works on a part-time basis as a staff psychiatrist at the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health, Clarke Branch, in Toronto and as coordinator for Psychiatric Resources at the Ontario Review Board. His curriculum vitae and statement of qualifications sets out his training, teaching positions, publications and forensic experience in the courts, as an expert witness. He was accepted by the court to give evidence as an expert in psychiatry.

[40] At the request of the defence, Dr. Bloom saw the plaintiff for a total of approximately 5 hours over a two-day period in July 2008. He also referred her to Dr. Mini Mamak, psychologist, for psychological testing, and incorporated much of the test results into his reports and testimony. His diagnosis based on the test results and what he described as “limited collateral corroboration,” was that the plaintiff is suffering from the mental health disorder PTSD with delayed onset. In his testimony, he adopted the following test results from Dr. Mamak’s report.

- 1) The plaintiff is functioning at an average range of intelligence.
- 2) She is experiencing moderate symptoms of depression and is quite pessimistic about her future.
- 3) Her overall profile is suggestive of post-traumatic stress disorder and autonomic arousal, depressive symptoms, indicating marked distress and severe impairment in functioning. The profile suggests that her symptoms of anxiety and tension “may be related to the experience of a traumatic event.” Her symptoms were marked by cognitive features of depression such as negative expectancies and low self-esteem.

- 4) Paranoid and avoidance personality traits appear in her profile. She has a “rather harsh opinion of herself” and her working relationships may be strained.
- 5) She has seemingly not embellished the nature of the psychological, emotional and social harm the behaviour has caused her.

[41] The test results are consistent with those taken by Dr. Cruz. Where Dr. Bloom’s opinion evidence appears to differ from that of Dr. Cruz is in his assertion that the plaintiff’s condition of PTSD only reached sufficient severity to cross the diagnostic threshold after her breakup with Neil Folkard in 1999, and that she had the capacity to instruct counsel and commence an action prior to that time.

[42] Moreover, in his reports and testimony, he opined that Ms. Evans “always had some awareness of having been damaged by the incident in 1979.” Specifically, he reported that she had “some notion in her mind, even if it was not at her fingertips,” that her emotional responses to police vehicles, and her leaving the family home, were the result of the incident of sexual assault. He then stated that, based on this “it would not be reaching too far to at least wonder whether she had, at any point prior to 2001, hypothesized a relationship between the incident and any other aspects of her life that she felt were not going well for her.”

[43] At the same time, the doctor agreed in his cross-examination that a common sequelae experienced by sexual assault victims is shame and guilt, elements that were present here; that these often become integrated into the victim’s self-image, especially when the assault includes a power/dependency factor as it did here; and that the shame and guilt can become a barrier to the victims reaching an understanding that the sexual assault was not their fault. Indeed, in the doctor’s report, he noted that the plaintiff “felt riddled with guilt” when she “slinked” out of the family home in the middle of the night as, in his words, “she couldn’t take the pressure, guilt, shame and sense of failure the incident caused her and then reverberated into her family life.” Dr. Bloom also agreed that, in general, psychotherapy can help people to really understand how potentially robust the original assault has been in affecting a number of features of their life, and that it is common for victims of sexual assault to remain silent for many years, especially when the assault involves power and authority, as they would rather suppress the thoughts of the sexual assault, than relive the experience.

[44] According to Dr. Bloom, though the plaintiff has developed some supportive relationships that may serve as a buffer against the effects of stress, she suffers from marked distress and impairment in function, shows little insight into her problem areas and is likely to experience notable stress and turmoil in a number of major life areas in the future.

4. Rhonda Hearn

[45] As the Executive Assistant to the Director of Legal Services for the Board, Rhonda Hearn opened and managed the police file on behalf of the Board and disclosed documents that have some relevance to the issues in this case.

[46] It was noted that Sproule’s personnel file described him as “a large young man” whose physical characteristics at the time of his application for employment in 1974 were: 27 years of age, 6 feet 3-¾ inches tall and weighing 207 pounds.

[47] More importantly, Ms. Hearn produced evidence in Sproule's file that documented an unrelated incident of somewhat similar nature to that in this matter. In summary, Police Constable Kershasp Mulla was on uniformed patrol duty with Sproule on December 22, 1978, when they stopped a vehicle driven by 19 year old Brenda Zegil, at about 1:20 a.m. due to a noisy muffler. In the course of searching Ms. Zegil's purse, Sproule located a small quantity of marijuana wrapped in a plastic bag. When Sproule drove her car away and left her in the police vehicle, Ms. Zegil swallowed the marijuana. Upon discovering this, the officers told Ms. Zegil she would be facing an additional charge of obstruct police.

[48] Sproule then drove around the area of 41 Division with Officer Mulla in the front passenger seat and Ms. Zegil in the rear of the police scout car. He then stopped the car in an empty parking lot, asking Ms. Zegil what she intended to do. She answered, "Go home, I guess. I'm tired." According to Officer Mulla, who later provided a written statement to investigators:

Then Sproule told her that he was going to search her. P.C. Sproule turned around and searched Brenda P.C. Sproule asked Brenda if she was agreeable to him frisking her body. Brenda replied, "No." P.C. Sproule asked Brenda if she was going to show him her body. Brenda replied, "No." P.C. Sproule then stated, "Well, then, you will be going to (the) station if that's what you want." At this point, Brenda stated, "Okay, I'll show you, what part you want to see, top or bottom." Sproule stated, "Both." Brenda refused to show him both parts of her body and stated, "The next thing you are going to demand is sex. I don't want any part of that, just let me go." P.C. Sproule stated, "Okay, show me one part of your body and then I get to touch it." Brenda replied, "No. You don't touch me. How come you are so determined?"

[49] When Officer Mulla suggested that Sproule take Ms. Zegil to her car or to the station, Sproule said, "Wait" and again asked her to show him her body. She said, "Okay, one part, I'll show you." When Officer Mulla went to leave the car, Ms. Zegil grabbed him, begging him not to leave. He cautioned her not to touch him and Sproule, referring to Officer Mulla, said to Ms. Zegil, "He does not want anything. How about a blow job for me?" Officer Mulla left the vehicle and upon his return, Ms. Zegil was dropped off near her vehicle at approximately 2:10 a.m. and served with 3 summonses written by P.C. Mulla.

[50] On January 9, 1979, after learning about the charge of indecent assault laid against Sproule in respect of Ms. Evans, Officer Mulla disclosed the prior incident to his supervisor.

[51] On February 26, 1979, a charge of discreditable conduct under the Police Act was laid against Sproule in the Zegil matter, but it failed to proceed due to Sproule's resignation from the police force, as at August 17, 1979.

[52] The final aspect of Ms. Hearn's testimony that is worthy of some note involves the removal of the investigative file by Sergeant Madigan who kept it in his personal possession for many years and only disclosed its contents recently. According to Ms. Hearn, though this has occurred on occasion, it is not the normal course. Further, protocols were in place at the time to ensure police files, both investigative and personnel files, were maintained in the custody and control of the Board in order to guarantee their integrity.

5. Sergeant Madigan

[53] As noted, Sergeant Madigan was the investigating officer in the case. I have not separately summarized his evidence. Though he was called by the defendant as a witness, much of his testimony underlined and confirmed that of the plaintiff – his observations of her demeanour and so on. He mentioned in passing, that the plaintiff’s father believed Sproule was perhaps being dealt with “too harshly”, thus underscoring the shame and embarrassment the family felt related to what they may have perceived as fault on the plaintiff’s part.

THE ISSUES

[54] The issues before me are as follows:

- 1) Did Sproule stand in a position of trust vis-à-vis Ms. Evans, and if so, did he breach his fiduciary obligation to her?
- 2) In the alternative, was the Board negligent based on the failure of Officer Mulla to report the unrelated incident of sexual abuse that had occurred on December 22, 1978?
- 3) Is the Board vicariously liable for the misconduct of Sproule?
- 4) Is the plaintiff’s civil action statute-barred, having been commenced 23 years after the incident; or if Sproule is found to have breached a fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, (in which case there is no limitation period) does the principle of laches act as an equitable bar to the plaintiff’s action?
- 5) What are the damages, if any, sustained by the plaintiff as a result of the sexual assault?

ANALYSIS

1. FIDUCIARY DUTY AND TRUST

[55] The plaintiff contends that, as a police officer charged with protecting the community to which he belonged, and vested with significant police authority over individuals, including the plaintiff, Sproule stood in a fiduciary relationship with Ms. Evans. As such, he owed her a duty of loyalty to act in her best interests and not to abuse his fiduciary power over her for his own personal benefit.

[56] The three-step analysis for identifying a fiduciary relationship was enunciated by Wilson J. in her dissent in Frame v. Smith, 1987 CanLII 74 \(SCC\), [1987] 2 S.C.R. 99 at 136 (S.C.C.), adopted by the Supreme Court of Canada in Norberg v. Wynrib, 1992 CanLII 65 \(SCC\), [1992] 2 S.C.R. 226, and restated by that court in Hodgkinson v. Simms, 1994 CanLII 70 \(SCC\), [1994] 3 S.C.R. 377, where, at p. 408, the characteristics of a fiduciary relationship that might give rise to a fiduciary duty are set out as follows:

- 1) the fiduciary has scope for the exercise of some discretion or power;
- 2) the fiduciary can unilaterally exercise that power or discretion so as to affect the beneficiary’s legal or practical interests;
- 3) the beneficiary is particularly vulnerable to or at the mercy of the fiduciary holding the discretion or power.

[57] In order to determine whether the relationship is a fiduciary one the court must assess the characteristics of the relationship and not simply the category in which it falls. As noted by

McLachlin C.J.C. in Norberg at p. 272, “the essence of a fiduciary relationship is that one party exercises power on behalf of another and pledges himself or herself to act in the best interests of the other.”

[58] The plaintiff argues that all of the indicia giving rise to a fiduciary duty exist in this case. In particular, the trust relationship was created due to the power and authority given to Sproule as a police officer and his use of that power.

[59] It was established in evidence that Sproule had the power and discretion to detain the plaintiff, charge her with an offence and even arrest her and place her in custody. This was confirmed by Sergeant Madigan at trial and Sergeant John Knaap in his discovery evidence given on the Board’s behalf (and read in as part of the plaintiff’s case). Moreover, Sproule was expected to comply with his obligations with honesty and integrity.

[60] Clearly, on the evidence, a motorist is not at liberty to leave the scene while in the process of being questioned by an officer. When asked about this, Sergeant Knaap stated (at Q. 630):

Q. And a motorist is not at liberty to leave until the officer says “you may go.”

A. That’s correct.

Q. So the motorist who, in those circumstances, is told to go sit in the cruiser, that motorist is effectively in custody at least for that period of time?

A. Correct.

[61] Accordingly, Sproule had ample scope for the exercise of discretion and power.

[62] In these circumstances, the plaintiff argues, where Sproule, in full uniform and on duty, threatened the plaintiff with criminal charges, he unilaterally exercised his power so as to affect the plaintiff’s legal and practical interests.

[63] The final test, the plaintiff’s vulnerability, is self-evident, the power/dependency relationship having been enhanced by the uniform (cap, gun and handcuffs) visible on the officer’s person, the police cruiser and the fact he was on duty at the time. The plaintiff, being a young 24-year old female whose upbringing in a religious Catholic environment taught her respect for authority figures, increased her vulnerability.

[64] The essence of Sproule’s obligation was not to place his personal interests above that of the plaintiff in the exercise of his police powers. Given that the police generally have a duty to garner trust and confidence and the respect of the citizens in the community, Sproule’s wrongful actions were in breach of those duties.

[65] The defendant contends that there was no fiduciary relationship established in these circumstances. Further, for the Board to be vicariously liable for Sproule’s alleged breach of fiduciary duty, there must be a pre-existing fiduciary relationship established between the parties, such as occurred in the case of a police informer or a family in the witness protection program. In the alternative, breach of fiduciary duty was not properly pleaded in this case. Moreover, s. 24 of the Police Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 351 (the Police Act) that renders the chief of police a joint tortfeasor in respect of torts committed by members of the police force under his direction and control, references torts as opposed to equitable wrongs.

[66] This is indeed a difficult area of the law. In general, the courts treat fiduciary duty separate from vicarious liability. As noted by the Supreme Court of Canada in E.D.G. v. Hammer, 2003 SCC 52 \(CanLII\), [2003] 2 S.C.R. 459 at p. 471,

The fact that a breach of fiduciary duty requires fault is one of the features that distinguishes this type of claim both from claims based upon statutory non-delegable duties and from claims based upon vicarious liability. The latter two types of claim are no-fault claims, breaches of fiduciary duty, however, require fault.

[67] Indeed, this reasoning led the court in Romagnuolo v. York (Regional Municipality) Police (2001), 108 A.C.W.S. (3d) 57, [2001] O.J. No. 3537 (Sup. Ct. J.) to strike allegations of breach of fiduciary duty in the pleadings against police officers and vicariously the relevant police services boards and police chiefs, as disclosing no reasonable cause of action. In that case, the police had knocked down the plaintiff's door, and shot two of the occupants. The court found that certain hallmarks of a fiduciary relationship including trust, confidence, and loyalty were "completely absent" from that scenario.

[68] I share the comment of Keenan J. at para. 36 of that case that "it is the very nature of the duties owed to society as a whole that makes it impossible to define the limits of the powers and duties of police officers in relation to private citizens."

[69] Clearly, the duties imposed on police officers are a matter of public law, and they owe their duties to the public at large, rather than to the Board or to individual members of the public. See, for example, Doe v. Metropolitan Toronto (Municipality) Commissioners of Police (1989), 1998 CanLII 18876 (ON SC), 39 O.R. (3d) 47 (Gen. Div.), aff'd (1990) 1990 CanLII 6611 (ON SC), 74 O.R. (2d) 225 (Div. Ct.).

[70] The plaintiff trusted Sproule's authority. She followed his orders while pleading with him, at the very least, to properly take her to the station. The very language of the fiduciary implies a trust relationship and a beneficiary of that trust. In a similar situation, had the plaintiff, for example, approached or asked Sproule for advice or assistance in some way, the trust relationship may well have been established.

[71] This is a close call but in all the circumstances, I find that the plaintiff has not proven that Sproule stood in a fiduciary relationship with her at the relevant time, such that he breached his trust obligations by reason of his wrongful conduct towards her.

[72] In doing so, I note as well that the claim for breach of trust and fiduciary duty was not properly pleaded in this case and the appropriate section of the Police Act references torts as opposed to equitable remedies (though I leave the full import of this latter observation for another day and another court).

2. NEGLIGENCE

[73] The plaintiff asserts an alternative claim in negligence.

[74] The principles underlying such an action were succinctly stated by Moldaver J. (as he then was) in the Doe case (Div. Ct.), supra, at 230:

To establish a private law duty of care, foreseeability of risk must coexist with a special relationship of proximity.

[75] In the Doe case, the plaintiff was held to be in the category of identifiable females likely to be a target of rapists. In the instant case, the relevant identifying category would be a female motorist caught in the commission of an offence in the territory of 41 Division who is fearful of the consequences of her infraction.

[76] A few weeks prior to the incident with Ms. Evans, Officer Mulla overheard the inappropriate sexually-charged exchanges between Ms. Zegil and Sproule; and not only did he not extend a helping hand, but he left the scene and took a walk, leaving Ms. Zegil vulnerable to the advances of Sproule. He did not report the incident to his supervisors.

[77] The plaintiff argues that it was reasonably foreseeable, based on the December 22, 1978 incident with Brenda Zegil, that the failure of Officer Mulla to discharge his duty to report Sproule's actions would place other females at risk of being subject to inappropriate sexual advances by Sproule.

[78] Moreover, according to Sergeant Madigan, had Mulla reported the incident promptly, an investigation would likely have been commenced immediately, as it was here, and the offending officer (Sproule) would have been removed from communication with the public in timely fashion. As it was, the 1978 incident was reported only after the case involving Ms. Evans came to light.

[79] However, the issue before me, as I perceive it, is not whether Sproule would have been on patrol in the early hours of January 7, 1979, if the prior incident had been reported in timely fashion. The real issue is whether the private law duty of care extended to the Board in these circumstances, and I find it did not.

[80] The plaintiff in the Doe case comprised one of a discreet group of potential victims. Not only did the police fail in their duty to warn Doe of her vulnerability, they decided not to do so in order to use her as bait to apprehend the perpetrator.

[81] In this case, as at January 7, 1979, the Board had received no complaints about inappropriate or improper conduct on the part of Sproule. Thus, the harm was not reasonably foreseeable. Had the Board, or a member of it (other than Officer Mulla), been advised of the incident or suspected wrongdoing and done nothing, then the duty of care may well have arisen. As it was, Sproule committed an intentional tort. He was the person who committed the criminal and improper acts against the plaintiff.

[82] In my view, in the present circumstances, the Board did not stand in a sufficient relationship of proximity to the plaintiff so that it was reasonably foreseeable that similarly situated female motorists, would be placed at risk by Sproule. The plaintiff's claim against the Board based on negligence, therefore, fails.

3. VICARIOUS LIABILITY

[83] The plaintiff alleges that the Board is vicariously liable for the wrongful conduct of Sproule as his tortious act was committed in the course of his employment with the Board. The opportunity to do what he did was directly attributable to his employment position and the power and authority conferred on him as a police constable.

[84] The defendant takes the position that Sproule was acting independently at the time and for his own gratification, that his actions were unrelated to his duties as a police officer and thus, vicarious liability cannot be established against the Board.

[85] The seminal case in this area of law, Bazley v. Curry, 1999 CanLII 692 \(SCC\), [1999] 2 S.C.R. 534 (S.C.C.) established the test for vicarious liability in cases of sexual assault. In Bazley, the employer operated a residential care facility for troubled children, and an employee abused a young child in his care. The case raised the question of whether the organization that employed the offender should be held liable for the wrong, though there was an absence of any fault on the part of the employer.

[86] In its decision, the Supreme Court confirmed the scope of employment or Salmond test, taken from Salmond and Heuston on the Law of Torts, 19th ed. (London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1987). The Court stated, at p. 543:

Both parties agree that the answer to this question is governed by the Salmond test, which posits that employers are vicariously liable for (1) employee acts authorized by the employer; or (2) unauthorized acts so connected with authorized acts that they may be regarded as modes (albeit improper modes) of doing an authorized act.

[87] The court in Bazley found the employer vicariously liable for the intentional and unauthorized wrong committed by the employee.

[88] Both parties agree that it is the second branch of the Salmond test that applies in this case. The applicable criteria underlying the test are summarized in Bazley, at p. 563:

In summary, the test for vicarious liability for an employee's sexual abuse of a client should focus on whether the employer's enterprise and empowerment of the employee materially increased the risk of the sexual assault and hence the harm. The test must not be applied mechanically, but with a sensitive view to the policy considerations that justify the imposition of vicarious liability – fair and efficient compensation for wrong, and deterrence. This requires trial judges to investigate the employee's specific duties and determine whether they gave rise to special opportunities for wrongdoing. Because of the peculiar exercises of power and trust that pervade cases such as child abuse, special attention should be paid to the existence of a power or dependency relationship, which on its own often creates a considerable risk of wrongdoing [Emphasis added].

[89] These principles are, in my view, broad in nature and not restricted to cases involving young children or to those engaged in a pre-existing fiduciary relationship. Since no binding precedent exists in this case that is persuasive, a contextual and policy analysis considering the twin goals of fair compensation and deterrence under the "enterprise risk" theory is required.

[90] Did the employer's enterprise and its empowerment of Sproule materially increase the risk of sexual assault with its resulting harm, in the circumstances of this case?

[91] Sproule, a first class constable, was vested with power and authority to detain motorists in certain circumstances. The evidence of Sergeant Madigan and Sergeant Knaap (in discovery) clearly established the inability of a motorist to leave the scene when stopped and detained by a police officer. They also confirmed that a motorist would, in effect, be held in custody once asked to enter a police vehicle. In this context, the plaintiff's belief that she had no choice but to obey the requests of the officer is entirely reasonable.

[92] On the evening in question, Sproule was assigned to patrol the streets in 41 Division without a partner in a marked police cruiser. The vehicle, as well as his gun and other police paraphernalia were furnished to him by the defendant.

[93] In these circumstances, the power/dependency relationship developed the moment Sproule pulled over the plaintiff. She was trapped for a time in a police cruiser in a parking lot in the middle of the night. The fact that she had committed an infraction made her particularly vulnerable to intimidation by the officer.

[94] In Bazley, it is noted at para. 44 that the more an enterprise requires the exercise of power and authority for its successful operation, the more materially likely it is that an abuse of that power relationship can be fairly ascribed to the employer. Society has granted police officers extraordinary power and authority. An officer who detains an individual acts as the official representative of the state with all its coercive power. As visible symbols of that power, an officer is given a distinctively marked car, a uniform, handcuffs, a badge and gun.

[95] In Jacobi v. Griffiths 1999 CanLII 693 (SCC), [1999] 2 S.C.R. 570, the Supreme Court of Canada reviewed cases consistent with the application of vicarious liability, one of them being Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles, 814 P.2d 1341 (1991). In that case, the Supreme Court of California found the City of Los Angeles liable for the rape of a motorist by a police officer in circumstances where a police officer, in uniform, found a motorist impaired, and instead of taking her to the police station, took her to her home and raped her. The majority of the court held that, in view of the significant power and authority granted to the officer by the City, “it is neither startling nor unexpected that, on occasion, an officer will misuse that authority by engaging in assaultive conduct.”

[96] The evidence in this case established that the Board attempts to foster an environment that encourages its residents to obey and trust police officers in the course of executing their duties. Moreover, the defendant Board is in the most propitious position to regulate the conduct of its employees.

[97] I appreciate the high bar created in the jurisprudence for imposing no-fault liability on an employer. Nevertheless, in the particular circumstances of this case, Sproule’s actions were so connected with matters authorized by the Board that they may be properly linked with them so as to justify the imposition of vicarious liability on the Board. It was the Board that provided Sproule with the opportunity for Sproule to abuse the considerable power and authority granted to him. At the same time, its objectives fostered obedience and trust on the part of the part of the victim whose vulnerability, in this situation, was manifest.

[98] Fairness dictates that the enterprise that introduces or enhances the risk to the community bear the cost of the resulting harm. As for deterrence, the imposition of liability on the employer Board may well serve to prevent a recurrence of the wrongful conduct. It may, for example, provide an incentive for vigilance and the imposition of preventative measures, such as ensuring that no police officer be on night patrol without a partner and that vigilant reporting measures are in place for suspicious circumstances or infractions involving one of them. In any event, the imposition of liability upon the Board might well provide an incentive to initiate measures designed to minimize the risk of harm to citizens. Thus, the finding of vicarious liability in this case also meets the policy objectives set out in Bazley, being fair and sufficient compensation for wrong and deterrence of future harm.

[99] Section 24(1) of the Police Act, states that the chief of police (or his designate) is liable in respect of torts committed by members of the police force under his or her direction and control in the performance or purported performance of their duties and they shall, in respect of any such torts, be treated for all purposes as a joint tortfeasors.

[100] In this case, I have no difficulty in finding the Board, both under the statute and the common law, vicariously liable for the wrong and resulting harm occasioned to the plaintiff by Sproule, on January 7, 1979.

4. LIMITATIONS AND LACHES

[101] Pursuant to section 45(1)(j) of the Limitations Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 246 (the Limitations Act) an action for assault and battery is subject to a limitation period of four years after the cause of action arose. Though the provisions of the new Limitations Act, S.O. 2002, c. 24 abolish the limitations where sexual assault involving a power/dependency relationship exists (see section 16(1)

(h)) and this has retroactive application even where the applicable time period has expired (section 24(7), the parties agreed that in this case, it is the four-year limitation period that applies to the plaintiff's case against the Board.

[102] The issue then requires a determination as to when the cause of action arose, which brings us to the concept of "reasonable discovery."

[103] The evolution of the concept of "reasonable discovery" in cases involving sexual assault commences with the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in M.(K.) v. M.(H.) 1992 CanLII 31 (SCC), [1992] 3 S.C.R. 6. In that case, the court thoroughly reviewed the interrelationship between limitation periods and the reasonable discoverability of tortious actions within the context of incest. The court found that the usual policy rationale underlying the establishment of limitation periods had little bearing in sexual abuse, in particular, incest cases. It concluded that the tort of assault and battery in that context does not accrue until the plaintiff is reasonably capable of discovering the wrongful nature of the defendant's acts and the nexus between those acts and the plaintiff's injuries." (emphasis added)

[104] Noting that the instant action was commenced many years "out of time," the defendant takes the position that all elements of the plaintiff's cause of action were discoverable and discovered at the time of the assault or shortly thereafter. In support of this position, the Board makes particular reference to a number of matters. First, that the plaintiff came forward to tell her boyfriend and his brother about the assault the following day, reported it to the police, was present when the police told her parents about the incident, gave a statement, attended at the preliminary hearing, and so on. Second, that feelings of shame and guilt around the incident which caused the plaintiff to leave the family home, and her experience of having panic attacks when seeing police cars, indicate an awareness of a connection between the incident and her injuries. This was also suggested by Dr. Bloom. Third, that her conscious suppression of the unpleasant memories, and decision to get on with life, to acquiesce and accept the status quo, allowed her to have a series of committed relationships for a time, raise her son and work at various jobs. Fourth, prior to her first visit with Dr. Cruz in 2001, she consulted a lawyer and told her sister she was contemplating a lawsuit to "get her life back." Then, on her first visit to the psychiatrist, she told Dr. Cruz about the sexual assault. Fifth, there were other reasons to explain why her relationship with Neil Folkard may have failed that did not relate back to the assault. Sixth, there was no evidence that the therapy sessions or any insight gleaned from them led to an abatement of her symptoms.

[105] The doctrine of reasonable discovery for victims of sexual assault means that the victim has a "substantial awareness of the harm and its likely cause before the limitations period begins to toll," see M.(K.) supra, at p. 35. The jurisprudence has established four elements that must be satisfied before the substantial awareness test is met: Not only must the plaintiff recognize the wrongful nature of the impugned behaviour, but she must shift the blame from herself to the defendant, identify the harms she has suffered and continues to suffer, and gain a substantial awareness that those harms were caused by the defendant's abuse. See, for example, S.L. v. S.A. (1999), 87 A.C.W.S. (3d) 563, [1999] O.J. No. 1267 (Gen. Div.); and T.R. v. Alberta (Criminal Injuries Review Board), 2006 ABCA 306, [2006] A.J. No. 1302 (Alta. C.A.).

[106] Certainly, the plaintiff recognized the wrongful nature of the assault: she did go to the police, sign a statement, attend at the preliminary, etc.; but that does not necessarily meet the test of substantial awareness nor is it determinative that she was at the time reasonably capable of discovering the nexus between the sexual assault and her injuries.

[107] The plaintiff consistently stated that the linkage between her victimization and her ensuing familial, social, and interpersonal difficulties and symptoms was not apparent to her prior to 2001. Indeed, the evidence indicates that the plaintiff's own feelings of shame and guilt impaired her ability to realize and appreciate the nexus between the abuse and the harm resulting from it.

[108] When asked at trial why she did not start the lawsuit sooner, the plaintiff replied “I never really felt there was anything wrong with me. I put the assault at the back of my head and tried to remove it from my memory.” This is consistent with the preponderance of evidence, indicating that the required connection was not made in any meaningful way prior to her therapy sessions with Dr. Cruz which commenced in March 2001. Some of that evidence can be summarized as follows:

- 1) the clinical notes and records of Dr. Masson, her family physician, commencing in 1991 reveal that over a 10-year period, the plaintiff never raised the sexual assault with her, despite having counselling sessions with the doctor around her anxiety, depression and failed relationships. Indeed, prior to March 23, 2001, no health care professional diagnosed her with any psychiatric disorder or treated her with anti-depressants for her anxiety symptoms.
- 2) Kathleen, Robert and Sergeant Madigan each independently observed her feelings of shame and guilt around the issue of the sexual assault and her reluctance to raise the topic. Indeed, prior to 2001, there were no disclosures to third parties of the sexual assault beyond the initial disclosure in 1979. Kathleen confirmed, as well, that the topic was never raised in a family context with her parents or siblings, nor did anyone speak about it in the presence of the plaintiff or otherwise.
- 3) According to Dr. Cruz, who has engaged her in approximately 100 hours of psychotherapy, it was only in the course of therapy that the plaintiff began to transfer blame for her problems in life from herself to Sproule and to gain some meaningful understanding of the nexus between her relationship problems and the assault.
- 4) Though Dr. Bloom postulated an awareness or some “notion in her mind” of a connection between the assault and her family problems and the panic she experienced when seeing the police, he also made several observations consistent with those of Dr. Cruz, indicating that no sustained connection was ever made. He stated, for example,
 - (a) that the breakup with Neil served “a catalytic role” in bringing a number of existential issues to the fore; but that the plaintiff, failed to connect the sexual assault to her “potentially most weighty failed relationship with Neil”
 - (b) that the plaintiff’s personality style is “to suffer in silence” and she would rather suppress thoughts of the sexual assault than relive the experience;
 - (c) that Ms. Evans is an emotionally vulnerable individual, prone for many years to employing the psychological defence mechanisms of suppression and denial in order to maintain her psychological integrity;
 - (d) that the psychological test results suggested among other things that the plaintiff lacked substantial insight into her issues and problems;
 - (e) that she felt “riddled with guilt” and has “little or no insight into what went wrong” in her family relationships.

[109] In summary, Dr. Bloom as late as July 2008 noted the plaintiff’s marked distress and severe impairment in functioning, that she was “riddled with guilt” and “showed little insight” into her problem areas. Moreover, referring to her “unique family dynamic,” Dr. Bloom opined that:

The familial, cultural and religious background she comes from probably have significantly contributed to her shame-proneness and made it difficult for her to seek help from others by disclosing the shameful event that caused her distress.

[110] This makes his suggestions in the area of substantial awareness somewhat suspect – suggestions which were not unequivocal by any means. Given this, combined with the brief time he spent with the plaintiff, I prefer the conclusions of the plaintiff’s treating psychiatrist, Dr. Cruz where their opinions differ in the matter of reasonable discovery.

[111] It may well be that, prior to 2001, a tenuous or fleeting understanding of the root of her problems emerged in the plaintiff’s psyche. However, Dr. Masson’s records show a marked deterioration in Ms. Evans’ mental health and emotional stress in 2000. Her sister Kathleen confirmed the plaintiff’s own testimony that she thought she was “going crazy” around that time. This appears to have forced her to seek help, resulting in her first appointment with Dr. Cruz on March 23, 2001. Interestingly, it was in 2001 that she finally disclosed the assault to three people — her earlier boyfriend, a longstanding friend, and her son, Adam. At this time she also disclosed the assault to Drs. Masson and Cruz, revisited it with Kathleen, raised it with Dr. Adelstein (when requesting a referral to the psychiatrist) and saw a lawyer.

[112] In the circumstances of this case, the mere fact that she consulted a lawyer in early 2001, prior to her first visit with Dr. Cruz, does not, in my view, mean that the plaintiff was at the time, able to make the connection between the assault and the harm caused to her. The overwhelming body of evidence in this case is to the contrary.

[113] Clearly, many years elapsed between the assault in 1979 and the commencement of the civil action in November 2002. However, I am satisfied that it was only through the therapeutic psychological process focusing on the sexual assault in 2001 and following, that the plaintiff was able to shift the shame and guilt from herself, to gain an understanding of the harm caused to her by the assault, and to make the required linkage. Prior to this, she internalized the guilt, and her particular circumstances and mental health condition impaired her ability to make the connection.

[114] This is, in my view, the exact type of scenario envisaged by the Supreme Court of Canada in M.(K.) and the doctrine of reasonable discovery. As noted in N.C. v. Blank [1998] O.J. No. 2544 (Gen.Div.) at para 103, a case that involved the sexual abuse of a patient by a psychotherapist:

“It is patently unreasonable to require a plaintiff to commence an action before the plaintiff realizes he or she has a cause of action. That lack of realization can result from many factors, such as a lack of knowledge of who was responsible for the damages suffered or a lack of appreciation that injuries of the magnitude justifying legal recourse were suffered. (See Peixeiro v. Haberman, 1997 CanLII 325 (SCC), [1997] S.C.J. 31.)”
[Emphasis added]

[115] I find on the evidence, that the limitation period did not accrue until the year 2001, when the plaintiff was reasonably capable of discovering, not only the wrongful nature of the defendant’s acts, but the nexus between the sexual assault and her injuries, through the therapeutic process. Accordingly, she commenced her action well within the four-year limitation period established in the Limitations Act.

[116] Needless to say, I reject the defendant’s assertions that the ratio in M.(K.) and the “substantial awareness test” is limited to cases of sexual assault involving young children, incest or established fiduciary or therapeutic relationships gone bad. Nor will this case “open the floodgates” to others, given its rather unique circumstances and the strict criteria established in the case law. Finally, the specific concerns articulated by the defendant were either minor in nature or overtaken by other evidence. For example, the defendant asserted that there were reasons unrelated to the assault for the plaintiff’s breakup with Neil Folkard. This ignores the evidence of its own specialist, Dr. Bloom, who suggested that the plaintiff’s post-traumatic mistrust, anxiety, volatility and emotional instability “may have played a significant role in the demise of her relationship with Neil.”

[117] Some confusion arose as to the exact dates surrounding the breakup with Neil. I am satisfied, however, that whether the actual breakup took place in early 1999 or early 2000 or even shortly before this, it was not until the plaintiff starting seeing Dr. Cruz in early 2001, that the connection was made to the assault.

[118] The peculiar underlying facts such as the officer's threats and the internalizing of guilt and shame ignited by the fact that the plaintiff was driving under suspension and had initially lied about her identity, her strict upbringing and the family's silence, as well as her serious mental health diagnosis, make this case distinguishable on its facts from those in Smith v. Toronto (City) (2005), 2005 CanLII 13038 \(ON SCDC\), 197 O.A.C. 136, 8 M.P.L.R. (4th) 90, Scaglione v. McLean (1998), 1998 CanLII 14667 \(ON SC\), 38 O.R. (3d) 464, and similar cases cited by the defendant.

[119] The defendant asserts, alternatively, that the doctrine of laches acts as an equitable bar to the plaintiff's action, i.e. the plaintiff's delay in pursuing the claim has been so great that the action must be barred. Upon reviewing the authorities in this area, LaForest J. in M.(K.), at p. 39, concluded that mere delay is insufficient to trigger laches. The doctrine considers whether the delay of the plaintiff constitutes acquiescence or results in circumstances that make the prosecution of the action unreasonable.

[120] In this case, there was no prejudice to the Board such that it altered its position due to the plaintiff's delay and no circumstances that make the prosecution of the action difficult or "unreasonable." As in most such cases, there were no eyewitnesses to the event and, hence, no loss of corroborative evidence or essential documents. The criminal conviction against Sproule is not challenged. In these circumstances, one cannot infer acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff. To be fair, the defendant did not vigorously raise the issue of laches in argument. In any event, I find that it would be precluded on the facts from relying on this equitable defence.

5. DAMAGES

(a) Non-Pecuniary Damages

[121] The plaintiff claims $100,000 for non-pecuniary damages and an additional $50,000 based on the aggravating factors related to the assault.

[122] Both Dr. Cruz and Dr. Bloom found no embellishment or exaggeration in the plaintiff's responses. Indeed, her test scores indicated that she answered questions "in a reasonably forthright manner" and did not attempt to paint an "unrealistic or inaccurate impression" of her circumstances. Clearly, she has suffered and continues to suffer from post-traumatic stress disorder with manifestations such as intrusive thoughts, sleep disorder, nightmares, difficulties with trust, impaired family relationships, a series of unsuccessful intimate relationships, low self-esteem, anxiety and depressive episodes as well as panic attacks related to chance encounters with police cruisers. Her impaired level of functioning compared with the norm fluctuates between 60 and 70 on a scale of 100.

[123] The Supreme Court of Canada in Young v. Bella, 2006 SCC 3, [2006] S.C.J. No. 2, in the face of a jury award of $430,000 for non-pecuniary damages, refused to extend the cap placed on damages in catastrophic physical personal injury cases to cases such as this.

[124] In a recent review of the authorities as to damages, the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal in B.M.G. v. Nova Scotia (Attorney General), 2007 NSCA 120, [2007] N.S.J. No. 506, set out the functions of such an award in sexual battery cases, at para. 132, as being to provide solace for the victim's pain and suffering and loss of enjoyment of life, to vindicate the victim's dignity and personal autonomy, and to recognize the humiliating and degrading nature of the wrongful acts. See also Norberg v. Wynrib, 1992 CanLII 65 \(SCC\), [1992] 2 S.C.R. 226 at 265; R. v. McCraw, 1991

CanLII 29 \(SCC\), [1991] 3 S.C.R. 72; and R. v. Osolin 1993 CanLII 54 \(SCC\), [1993], 4 S.C.R. 595 at 669.

[125] The element of aggravated damages takes into account the entire conduct of the defendant, and may also be awarded against a party who is vicariously liable for the wrong-doer's conduct. See Doe v. O'Dell (2003), 2003 CanLII 64220 \(ON SC\), 230 D.L.R. (4th) 383, [2003] O.J. No. 3546 (Sup. Ct. J.) at para. 279.

[126] Some of the factors to consider in the award are the circumstances of the victim at the time, including his or her age and vulnerability, the nature of the assault or assaults, the circumstances of the defendant, and the consequences for the victim.

[127] The Court in B.M.G., supra, came to the conclusion that the level of damages in such cases ranges between $125,000 and $250,000. In O'Dell, supra, Swinton J. perceived awards in cases of ongoing sexual abuse as ranging from $85,000 to $200,000 in the years 2001 to 2003. In J.R.S. v. Glendenning (2004), 2004 CanLII 5011 \(ON SC\), 237 D.L.R. (4th) 304, [2004] O.J. No. 285, Kerr J. reviewed a number of authorities and concluded that in 2004, the range was between $125,000 and $250,000. Those amounts would have increased by 2008 fiscal standards. Notably, some of the cases cited involved a number of sexual assaults on young children in progressive years, and others were accompanied by acts of violence. Clearly, each case turns on its own peculiar facts.

[128] In the particular circumstances of this case, relevant factors include the relatively young age of the victim (though not a child), her vulnerability, the power and authority exercised by the perpetrator, the threats made and fear engendered in the victim over a period of 1-½ hours to 2 hours, as well as the specific injury to her, the impairment to her family and other relationships, and the depth of psychological injury and its effect on her daily existence. By all accounts, she will require psychotherapeutic treatment for many years in the future. This provides a very different scenario than that present in cases cited by the defendant, such as T.W. v. Seo (2005), 2005 CanLII 21356 \(ON CA\), 199 O.A.C. 172, [2005] O.J. No. 2467 (C.A.) in which a significant jury damage award was set aside by the court and damages in the sum of $25,000 were awarded for the injury and humiliation of being surreptitiously videotaped by a health care worker while dressing and undressing for a stressful and intimate ultrasound procedure.

[129] In my view, the plaintiff's claim for $100,000 in non-pecuniary general damages lies at the low end of the acceptable range.

[130] As for her claim for aggravated damages, Sproule used his power and authority to detain Ms. Evans. He left her in the cold for a period of time without recourse. He forced her to remain in his police vehicle while sexually assaulting her. The humiliation and emotional stress this caused her is well-documented. As such, an award of $50,000 in aggravated damages is warranted. Nothing less would, in my view, constitute fair compensation and go some way towards making the plaintiff "whole."

(b) Loss of earning capacity

[131] The next level of damages claimed is loss of earning capacity and economic opportunity. In this case, as in others like it, it is difficult to prove definitively a person's past or future loss of income as there is not a sufficient prior employment history. Therefore, in recognition of one's earning capacity as an asset, the courts have imposed a global assessment of loss where there is an impairment of earning ability due to sexual abuse. In doing so, some of the considerations are whether the plaintiff is less capable of earning income from all types of employment, less marketable as an employee, cannot take advantage of job opportunities or is "less valuable to himself as a person capable of earning income in a competitive labour market." P.B. v. R.V.E., 2007 BCSC 1568, [2007] B.C.J. No. 2305 at para. 316.

[132] In this case, the plaintiff has, over the years, tended to withdraw socially both at home and in the workplace. She prefers to work at home and has low self-esteem and lacks confidence in herself and her future prospects. Dr. Bloom documented “avoidance and paranoid personality features.” This would likely have made her a less marketable or attractive candidate to potential employers. Further, it has led her to take contract positions rather than permanent ones. Given these factors and the fact that the incident that occurred on January 7, 1979 was the only trauma she has experienced in her life, her earning capacity has clearly been impaired as a result of the sexual assault.

[133] Dr. Cruz, noting that the plaintiff has been engulfed in shame, guilt and anger “all these many years of her existence,” postulated that without the disturbing event, she would have achieved a higher university-level course. Her sister Kathleen opined that her prior sense of humour and confidence would have served her well in deciding on a career path. The plaintiff’s school records reveal that she was an average student in high school, and it is difficult to definitively assess her economic or career potential, absent the assault. However, on the evidence, I am satisfied that the sum of $40,000 adequately reflects her loss of earning capacity, and I award her that sum under this category.

(c) Future Therapy and OHIP Subrogation

[134] For future treatment, Dr. Cruz has suggested closed sessions of 6 to 12 weeks “or longer” at Homewood Health Centre which has a particular program to assist people suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder. The residential program, in a semi-private environment would cost $12,432 for 8 weeks of treatment. The plaintiff has agreed to take this Traumatic Stress-Recovery program, and Dr. Bloom also agreed that such treatment is indicated. Indeed, the plaintiff’s prognosis, without treatment, is chronic in nature and she may well suffer some residual effects of the assault, in any event.

[135] In the circumstances, I have no difficulty in making the award of $12,432 for the specialized treatment program at Homewood, and an additional sum of $12,978.30 to cover her previous sessions for supportive counselling with Dr. Masson and for psychiatric counselling with Dr. Cruz.

(d) Punitive Damages

[136] The plaintiff claims $25,000 in punitive damages against Sproule only. Section 4\(1\) of the Victims' Bill of Rights, 1995, S.O. 1995, c. 6, (the Bill), provides redress for victims of crime for harm suffered as a result of the commission of the crime. In this case, Sproule received a fine of $1,000 on a guilty plea to the charge of indecent assault.

[137] In his statement of defence, now struck, Sproule took the position that he operated under the “honest but mistaken belief” of consent. He showed no remorse for his outrageous and reprehensible actions even after the conviction. In my view, the punishment imposed was not sufficient to satisfy deterrence, or any of the other principles of sentencing. In the circumstances, I award the plaintiff the sum of $25,000 in addition to the other amounts, as punitive damages against Sproule.

6. COSTS

[138] The Victims' Bill of Rights, supra, section 4(6) mandates that a judge who makes an order for costs in favour of a victim of crime “shall make the order on a solicitor and client basis, unless the judge considers that to do so would not be in the interests of justice.” Since this provision applies in generic terms to a “civil proceeding” in which a victim seeks redress from a person convicted of a crime (s. 4(1)), this provision as to costs would, in my view, prima facie apply to both Sproule and the Board. See also, Stevens v. Robson [1999] O.J. No. 1626 (Sup. Ct. J.) at para. 8.

[139] As to the question of retroactivity of the Bill's various provisions, the Court of Appeal in the case of Pilon v. Janveaux (2006), 2006 CanLII 6190 \(ON CA\), 211 O.A.C. 19, [2006] O.J. No. 887 distinguished between aspects of a case that are procedural or substantive in nature, and indicated at para. 21 that it may be that the procedural aspects such as those dealing with costs, would apply retroactively.

[140] In the preamble to the Bill, it is stated that victims of crime who have suffered harm and whose rights and security have been violated by crime, should be treated with compassion and fairness.

[141] In my view, in the particular circumstances before me, justice and fairness demand that the plaintiff not bear costs associated with this proceeding. As such, she is awarded costs to be assessed on a substantial indemnity basis against both Sproule and the Board, as well as prejudgment interest on the award of non-pecuniary damages at the rate of 5% per annum from the commencement of the action.

CONCLUSION

[142] In summary, I have found the Board vicariously liable for the tortious conduct of Sproule. Accordingly, both defendants are jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff in damages, as follows:

a) Non-pecuniary - General and Aggravated Damages:	$ 150,000.00
b) Loss of Earning Capacity:	40,000.00
c) Future Therapy Costs	12,432.00
d) OHIP Subrogated Claim	12,978.30

And, as against Sproule only $25,000 in punitive damages.

[143] Costs to the plaintiff on a substantial indemnity scale to be assessed, or agreed upon, and pre-judgment interest as described above.

[144] I wish to thank all counsel for their able and efficient conduct of the trial and their invaluable assistance to the court in this case.

CHAPNIK J.

Released: November 12, 2008

Diagnostic criteria for 309.81 Posttraumatic Stress Disorder

- A. The person has been exposed to a traumatic event in which both of the following were present:
- (1) the person experienced, witnessed, or was confronted with an event or events that involved actual or threatened death or serious injury, or a threat to the physical integrity of self or others
 - (2) the person's response involved intense fear, helplessness, or horror.
- B. The traumatic event is persistently reexperienced in one (or more) of the following ways:
- (1) recurrent and intrusive distressing recollections of the event, including images, thoughts, or perceptions.
 - (2) recurrent distressing dreams of the event.
 - (3) acting or feeling as if the traumatic event were recurring (includes a sense of reliving the experience, illusions, hallucinations, and dissociative flashback episodes, including those that occur on awakening or when intoxicated).
 - (4) intense psychological distress at exposure to internal or external cues that symbolize or resemble an aspect of the traumatic event.
 - (5) physiological reactivity on exposure to internal or external cues that symbolize or resemble an aspect of the traumatic event.
- C. Persistent avoidance of stimuli associated with the trauma and numbing of general responsiveness (not present before the trauma), as indicated by three (or more) of the following:
- (1) efforts to avoid thoughts, feelings, or conversations associated with the trauma
 - (2) efforts to avoid activities, places, or people that arouse recollections of the trauma
 - (3) inability to recall an important aspect of the trauma
 - (4) markedly diminished interest or participation in significant activities
 - (5) feeling of detachment or estrangement from others
 - (6) restricted range of affect (e.g. unable to have loving feelings)
 - (7) sense of foreshortened future (e.g., does not expect to have a career, marriage, children, or a normal life span)
- D. Persistent symptoms of increased arousal (not present before the trauma), as indicated by two (or more) of the following:
- (1) difficulty falling or staying asleep
 - (2) irritability or outbursts of anger
 - (3) difficulty concentrating
 - (4) hypervigilance

(5) exaggerated startle response

- E. Duration of the disturbance (symptoms of Criteria B, C, and D) is more than 1 month.
- F. The disturbance causes clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning.

Specify if:

Acute: if duration of symptoms is less than 3 months

Chronic: if duration of symptoms is 3 months or more

COURT FILE NO.:02-CV-238550CM2

DATE: 20081112

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

B E T W E E N:

MARIAN EVANS

Plaintiff

- and -

JOHN DAVID SPROULE and TORONTO POLICE SERVICES BOARD

Defendants

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

CHAPNIK J.

Released: November 12, 2008

Tab 152

Shaw v. Staples, 2013 ONSC 3290 (CanLII)

Source: Superior Court of Justice
 Date: 2013-06-06
 File number: 337/07
 Citation: Shaw v. Staples, 2013 ONSC 3290 (CanLII),
 <<https://canlii.ca/t/fzd37>>, retrieved on 2026-03-24

CITATION: Shaw v. Staples, 2013 ONSC 3290
COURT FILE NO.: 337/07
DATE: 20130606

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

Cassandra Shaw

Plaintiff

)
)
)
) Jeff Lancot and Catharine Blastorah, for the ) Plaintiff

– and –

Jason Staples

Defendant

)
)
)
) Jason Staples noted in default and not presen ) t;

)
)
) HEARD: May 15, 16, 17, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29 and 30, 2013, in conjunction with related cas e, File No. 16/11.

GUNSOLUS, J.

- [1] The plaintiff, Cassandra Shaw was a 25 year old university student, in the midst of pursuing her education at Trent University. She was enrolled in a Bachelor of Science programme and had a special interest in Biology. The defendant, Jason Staples, was a store clerk in an independent health food store, located in what is popularly known as “East City” in Peterborough, Ontario.

- [2] On November 7th, 2005, Ms. Shaw was studying for her final exams. She was suffering from a headache and decided to visit the health food store in order to purchase mint tea, which she found sometimes helped to alleviate the effects of her headaches. The innocent retail excursion quickly became an unforgiveable tragedy.
- [3] Jason Staples restrained her at knifepoint, bound her with duct tape, forcibly confining her and committing sexual assault and physical assault upon her. The attack was without warning and most brutal. Ms. Shaw continues to suffer in the result.
- [4] Jason Staples was noted in default in this action. He pled guilty on December 20th, 2007 to the following, amongst other, charges in relation to Cassandra Shaw: kidnapping with intent to confine Ms. Shaw against her will; aggravated sexual assault; rendering the plaintiff unconscious by choking; carrying a weapon for the purpose of committing a criminal offence; verbally and knowingly uttered a threat to the plaintiff to cause her death.
- [5] On February 28, 2008, Jason Staples was found guilty of those charges in the Ontario Superior Court of Justice by Mr. Justice Barry MacDougall.
- [6] On May 15th, 2008, Mr. Justice MacDougall designated Jason Staples a dangerous offender and sentenced him to an indeterminate sentence in penitentiary based upon these and other charges before him.

Issues Before This Court

- [7] Ms. Shaw's claim includes a request for damages for assault and battery, for the intentional infliction of mental suffering together with aggravated and punitive or exemplary damages.
- [8] Ms. Shaw also claims non-pecuniary economic loss, including loss of past income and loss of future earning capacity.

Cassandra Shaw

- [9] Cassandra Shaw was born November 9th, 1979, and although she is not married, has maintained a long-term relationship with her boyfriend, Curtis Self. She currently resides in the City of Peterborough with her mother and her one sister.
- [10] On November 7th, 2005, she was studying for examinations in relation to the Bachelor of Science she was pursuing at Trent University. She was then 25 years of age.
- [11] Because she was feeling headachy, she left the apartment that she then shared with her boyfriend in order to walk the couple of blocks to Kelcey's Nutrition Centre in order to purchase mint tea, which she found sometimes helped her headaches. She had visited the store before, which she described as being "high-end" and welcoming and located amongst a number of other stores and eateries. The time of day was approximately 5pm.
- [12] After finding the tea which she wished to purchase, she approached the cash, where she encountered the sole employee working at the time, whom she later learned to be Jason Staples. He began asking her a number of questions which she found to be rather forward, and eventually he asked her if she could help him. Being an outgoing person, she agreed, set down her tea and held a broom handle against a vent for Mr. Staples.
- [13] At that juncture, Mr. Staples absented himself in order to retrieve a hammer. Moments later, he came up behind Ms. Shaw, brandishing a knife and ordering her to descend stairs into the basement of the retail establishment. She reacted by grabbing his arm, which resulted in a serious cut between her thumb and first finger on her right hand. Although she began screaming and yelling for help, she soon realized that she could not overtake Staples, and he was able to easily pull her down the stairs despite her struggling and resistance.

- [14] Once Mr. Staples had her in the basement, he threw her to the ground and straddled her, choking her while she pleaded with him, trying to understand what was happening and why it was happening.
- [15] Ms. Shaw described Mr. Staples as being extremely large such that he easily overwhelmed her. She next recalls hitting her head on the basement floor while she groped for objects she saw around her, hoping to be able to retrieve one in order to hit him and hopefully knock him out.
- [16] All the while, Jason Staples was telling her “shut up you bitch, stop screaming. I don’t want to kill you, I just want to rape you. Don’t make me hurt you more.” She recalls passing out and when she began to revive, she realized that Jason Staples was taping her hands, arms and legs together, eventually putting duct tape over her eyes and mouth.
- [17] Staples repeatedly touched her sexually. She recalls fearing that she would vomit and choke, the duct tape having been placed over her mouth. Ms. Shaw recalls the horrendous events and realization that her fate was completely within Jason Staples’ control.
- [18] Jason Staples left her from time to time in order to attend to matters in the retail establishment above, only to return in order to grab and shake and rub her breasts.
- [19] Ms. Shaw recalled that many things were going through her head during Mr. Staples’ assault and torment of her, including thoughts about her own family, prisoners of war and the awful realization that Jason Staples had complete control over her.
- [20] At some point, Ms. Shaw became aware that there was another person in the basement with her, who had also been overcome and restrained by Staples.
- [21] Over time, he covered them both in garbage bags, top and bottom, duct taping the bags together, leaving holes, which again left her fearing she was going to suffocate and die.
- [22] At some point, Staples took them, one by one, and dropped them into a van where she felt the cold metal of the van floor as her head hit the bottom of it.
- [23] Staples then took his captives to what Ms. Shaw later learned to be his home and again recalls being dropped on a cement floor, once again hitting her head. Staples continued to physically and sexually assault her. She described her fear, not knowing her ultimate fate at Staples’ hands.
- [24] Based on comments Staples made, she began to fear that he would kill himself and that they would be left alone in the basement, and she feared how long it would be before they were discovered.
- [25] At one point, Staples left, saying “I’m going to do it”, which left her with the initial thought that he was going to kill himself. As events unfolded, and as it turned out, Staples had gone to a telephone booth and called police in order to turn himself in.
- [26] Rather than feeling immediate relief upon the arrival of the police, Ms. Shaw recalled the police officers as being large and “in full gear, with large rifles”. To her, they were scary, and yet they were supposed to be “the good guys”.

- [27] Ultimately, Ms. Shaw was taken, along with her fellow victim, to the Peterborough Regional Health Centre, where she received treatment to her hand and where she was treated for her injuries to her neck, throat and back by a doctor and a sexual assault nurse.
- [28] Ms. Shaw described her physical injuries, which included the cut to her hand and the bruising to her throat, head, neck and back. She also described the emotional exhaustion and disappointment she felt, as she had always trusted people and thought that people were “generally good”. As she said, she was “crushed” and she felt that her heart was “broken”, as was her faith in humanity. She described feeling at the time, and for many months thereafter, that her “heart had been weakened”. She began suffering headaches as well as discomfort in her throat and back. She began suffering light sensitivity, tinnitus, and often finds herself unable to focus during conversations.
- [29] As a result of these horrendous events, she suffers from anxiety to the extent that she has begun to question the purpose of her life. She explained that she now feels the need to do something “amazing in her life” and often feels that what she is doing at any given time is “not good enough”.
- [30] Ms. Shaw suffers flashbacks and has gone through periods of extreme heightened vigilance and is distrustful of all male strangers. Her sleep pattern has become disrupted; her relationships have suffered from her mood swings. Overall, she has lost her optimistic, happy view of life. Her energy levels have diminished and she is no longer the independent, strong, capable individual that she once was.
- [31] She described, and some of this was clear from her evidence, that she has lost confidence in herself; she is not confident in putting words together and sometimes finds it hard to stay focussed in the moment. Although she was able to successfully complete her academic career, she has been unable to pursue post-graduate studies that she once thought she would, and she has been unable to achieve the full employment status that she once envisioned for herself.
- [32] Ms. Shaw also described the counselling that she initially pursued. She found most helpful the pursuit of yoga and speech-language pathology. She would like to pursue physiotherapy in order to see if there are exercises that would help her deal with the stress in her neck and back, however, has no funds with which to do so.

Lynn Shaw and Candace Shaw

- [33] Lynn Shaw is Cassandra Shaw’s mother. Candace Shaw is her sister. As a result of the terrible assault that the plaintiff suffered at the hands of Mr. Staples, these witnesses described Cassandra as not being as open or fun-loving as she once was. They described her as “having no hope for the future” and as sometimes coming across as “flaky and unmotivated” with no definite plans.

Curtis Self

- [34] Curtis Self has been Ms. Shaw’s boyfriend for a number of years. He described Ms. Shaw, post-incident, as being traumatised and “emotionally in shambles”, lacking in passion for activities she once pursued and lacking in focus and often left with the ability to only look upon things in a negative light.
- [35] Their plans to have a family are pretty much now out of the question, as “she sees no point in bringing another person into a world that she does not see as a happy place anymore”. She now often exhibits an attitude that things “just are not worth it” and she easily becomes angered, flustered and suffers from “high anxiety”.

Joanna Sinclair

- [36] Ms. Sinclair, was the owner of “Dreams of Beans” and, at one time, employed Ms. Shaw. She described Ms. Shaw as a caring, reliable and gentle person with a great sense of humour who did not let much “faze her”. Post-incident, she described her as being less able to concentrate and very defensive, especially if a male customer should come too close to her.
- [37] She valued Ms. Shaw as an employee so much that she paid Ms. Shaw’s wages for approximately four months post-incident until she was able to return to work again on a part-time basis.

Dr. Joanna Hamilton

- [38] Dr. Joanna Hamilton was qualified as a neuropsychologist and gave evidence in relation to Ms. Shaw’s cognitive diagnosis, prognosis and disabilities and provided evidence in relation to the relative permanency of her condition and as to her possible future care needs.
- [39] Dr. Hamilton is well-respected in her area of expertise and was of great assistance to the court in understanding the effects that this matter has had on Cassandra Shaw.
- [40] She described Ms. Shaw as an individual with superior intellectual functioning, who demonstrates significant strengths in respect to perceptual organization skills, but who also shows significant weaknesses with respect to her ability to process information. When Dr. Hamilton saw Ms. Shaw, she was not showing signs of post-traumatic stress, however, she was exhibiting moderate depression (dysthymi). Dr. Hamilton believed that this will present a barrier in relation to her academic progress and attaining employment.
- [41] Dr. Hamilton recommended, amongst other things, that she undergo a vocational assessment and undertake ongoing psychological counselling in order to deal with the ongoing impact of the incident upon her.

Stephanie Zawalicz-Mowinski

- [42] Stephanie Zawalicz-Mowinski is a speech-language pathologist and provided evidence in relation to her assessment of Ms. Shaw’s speech and language functioning, along with treatment and recommendations concerning the future speech-language needs of Ms. Shaw.
- [43] Ms. Shaw was initially seen by this witness and a colleague from June, 2010 until January, 2011 on a weekly basis, when sessions were then reduced to bi-weekly. After April, 2011, Ms. Shaw had completed her undergraduate university degree and had obtained a summer job that would take her out of the area, so that speech-language sessions were put “on hold”.
- [44] It was clear from the evidence of this witness that, as a result of the speech-language sessions, Ms. Shaw was able to acquire a greater ability to focus on and to organize, her academic career. In the result, Ms. Shaw excelled in the final stretch of her academic career, achieving standing on the President’s Honour Role as well as other academic awards.
- [45] This witness opined that Ms. Shaw will probably require speech-language intervention throughout her life, specifically in relation to life-changing events that will result in stress. She gave, as examples of such major changes, as a decision to again attend school on a full-time basis, to change employment; to marry; to have children and so on.

[46] Ms. Zawalicz-Mowinski believes that although Ms. Shaw has made significant gains with respect to planning, goal-setting, organization, time management and self-monitoring, she will continue to have some difficulty in these “executive functions”, and this will likely have a negative impact on her vocational success.

[47] Ms. Zawalicz-Mowinski recommended that Ms. Shaw continue speech-language pathology intervention as needed and that she consult a psychiatrist regarding her anxiety issues, specifically in respect to planning her own future.

Robert Lychenko

[48] Mr. Lychenko was qualified as a vocational consultant in order to provide evidence as to Cassandra Shaw’s vocational aptitudes, interests, ambitions and in relation to her employability and skills as they relate to the labour market and how these have been affected by her injuries and disabilities and provided an opinion as to her future ability to maintain work on a full-time basis.

[49] Mr. Lychenko advised that testing results revealed that Ms. Shaw is a very bright individual who had the capacity to pursue graduate level studies at both the masters and doctoral levels. In his opinion, Ms. Shaw’s vocational potential has become drastically altered as a result of the events surrounding the sexual assault she suffered. He was of the view that she had become marginalized from an employment perspective. To quote him: “Ms. Shaw suffers disability related to her emotional functioning, and to a lesser degree, her cognitive functioning. Thus, she can be considered multiply handicapped.” In short, he believes that she will be less than competitive in the job market.

[50] This witness confirmed that Ms. Shaw will need ongoing assistance in order to achieve her full potential, either in the academic world or in relation to employment.

Dr. vanReekum

[51] Dr. Robert vanReekum is a psychiatric expert qualified to provide the court with a diagnosis and prognosis as to the psychiatric condition of Cassandra Shaw, including an opinion as to the impairment and handicaps that Ms. Shaw suffers from and to provide areas of consideration for her future treatment. He felt that Ms. Shaw was subjected to acceleration-deceleration forces directed towards her head and neck when her abductor slammed her head on flooring of both the retail establishment and his van. He suggested that such forces would have potentially put her at risk for suffering a mild Traumatic Brain Injury (mTBI). He also noted that she was at risk for a hypoxic insult to her brain, which could have occurred during Staples’ choking of her. He opined that Cassandra may have suffered either an mTBI, hypoxic brain insult or both.

[52] He also noted that the incident has produced a number of stresses for Cassandra, including her acute fear of death during the incident itself, and ongoing stresses related to legal issues and the need for assessments that caused a “reliving” of the incident, as well as a number of perceived losses such as reduced quality of life, loss of self-confidence and loss of self-esteem.

[53] Dr. vanReekum suggested that Cassandra had probably developed the following sequelae:

- (1) Common post-concussion symptoms of photosensitivity and tinnitus.
- (2) Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, which when he saw her, was at least in partial remission.

- (3) Sleep disturbance.
- (4) Greatly reduced energy levels.
- (5) Probable Major Depressive Episodes or Adjustment Disorder with Depressed Mood.
- (6) Generalized Anxiety Disorder
- (7) Cognitive impairments which are multi-factorial in origin, with potential contribution from the concussion and/or hypoxic brain insult, sleep disturbance, Major Depressive Episodes and Generalized Anxiety Disorder.
- (8) Significant loss of general interest and motivation.

[54] As a result, he described her as being handicapped such that she is probably significantly disadvantaged in the maintenance and pursuit of her usual, expected social roles, such as her academic career; her employment career; relationships; social and leisure functions; and independent living. Finally, he opined that Cassandra's future role functioning (for example, parenting or contributing to her community generally) may also be adversely affected. As he noted: "I can't tell the future and no one can, when it comes to mental health." However, he pointed out that this was his opinion based upon his examination of Cassandra, his experience, education and research.

[55] Going forward, Dr. vanReekum feels that Cassandra remains at risk for permanent suffering, impairment and handicap. These include, but are not limited to suicidal behaviours; apathy and cognitive impairments.

[56] In the result, Dr. vanReekum suggested that Cassandra's treatment should include consideration of the following:

- (1) A full medical/medical metabolic workup as related to her lack of energy as this may relate to blood sugar levels, iron levels or other causes;
- (2) A sleep study in relation to her complaints of sleep disturbances, lack of restful sleep and interruptions in her sleep pattern;
- (3) An assessment in relation to her complaint of tinnitus;
- (4) Consideration of a rehabilitation case manager who, over time, could assist Cassandra in pursuing rehabilitation by way of "ongoing periodic involvement" of a rehabilitation case manager;
- (5) A trial of an anti-depressant medication;
- (6) Psychotherapeutic interventions which should probably not, at least initially, focus on the incident itself, but rather on her symptoms and/or her future.

[57] Dr. vanReekum felt that Ms. Shaw may benefit from, at various points in her life, supportive therapy, cognitive behavioural therapy, educational interventions and family therapy.

[58] From Dr. vanReekum's evidence, it became clear that Cassandra Shaw will likely require treatment in the future that may include many of the six components that he felt caregivers should consider.

Future Care and Loss of Past and Future Income

- [59] The court also received and reviewed the reports of an economist, Douglas Welland and future care consultant, Mary Ellen Meyers, in relation to future care costs.

Applicable Law and Analysis

Liability of Jason Staples

- [60] Jason Staples committed the intentional tort of sexual assault on Cassandra Shaw, amongst other things. Such a tort is known as battery, which is the intentional infliction of unlawful force on another person. It is actionable without proof of damage and the consequential liability is not limited to foreseeable damage.^[1]
- [61] Staples is also liable as a result of the provisions of the Victim's Bill of Rights^[2] since he was convicted of the crime and is therefore liable in damages to Ms. Shaw for emotional distress, bodily harm resulting from the stress and arising from the actual commission of the crimes that he committed against Ms. Shaw. Further, by section 3.2, as a victim of sexual assault, Ms. Shaw is presumed to have suffered emotional distress.
- [62] Jason Staples pled guilty to sexual assault amongst other crimes in relation to Ms. Shaw before Mr. Justice Barry MacDougall on December 20th, 2007 and he was found in the result to be a dangerous offender by Justice MacDougall on May 15th, 2008.
- [63] Rules 19.02 and 19.06 of the Rules of Civil Procedure^[3] apply such that Jason Staples, being a defendant noted in default, is deemed to admit the truth of all allegations of fact made in the statement of claim filed in this matter as against him.
- [64] Paragraphs 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30 of the Statement of Claim set out the facts upon which Ms. Shaw is entitled to judgment as against Jason Staples. The evidence that the court heard also entitles Cassandra Shaw to judgment against Jason Staples.

Damages

- [65] In B.M.G. v. Nova Scotia (Attorney General), 2007 NSCA 120 (CanLII), [2007] N.S.J. No. 506 (NSCA), Justice Cromwell suggested taking a functional approach to the assessment of non-pecuniary damages in cases of sexual battery. The objectives of providing solace for the victim, to vindicate the victim's physical autonomy and dignity, through an award of aggravated damages, account for the humiliation and degradation caused by the defendant's conduct.
- [66] Using this functional approach, damages are intended to cover a single loss, that being the plaintiff's overall psychological condition and the consequent need for solace. These non-pecuniary damages are typically covered by a global sum.^[4] Such damages now include distress from psychological illness and common feelings such as anxiety, frustration and so on. Such anxiety and depression are at the core of such suffering, whether it is due to cancer or trauma.^[5]
- [67] In determining damages to reflect the victim's dignity, personal autonomy and pain and suffering, a number of factors must be considered, including but not limited to:
- (a) The age and vulnerability of the victim;

- (b) The frequency, level of violence, invasiveness and degradation of the assault;
- (c) The consequences for the victim of the wrongful behaviour, including ongoing psychological injuries.^[6]

- [68] Ms. Shaw was abducted, physically and sexually assaulted and held by Mr. Staples for at least 7 hours. He repeatedly groped her. He inserted his penis in her mouth. She was bound and gagged, believing that her fate was completely and utterly at Mr. Staples' mercy. She had innocently entered the retail establishment that Mr. Staples worked in and was attacked on a completely unprovoked basis.
- [69] Ms. Shaw continues to suffer anxiety and depression and her cognitive abilities have been compromised such that she is currently unable to pursue a full-time academic or employment career. Her relationship with her sisters and mother and boyfriend of long-term standing have been negatively affected. She and her boyfriend are no longer looking forward to raising a family.
- [70] Ms. Shaw remains overly vigilant and is far-less outgoing and no longer pursues social activity or the art that she once loved.
- [71] Witnesses have diagnosed her as suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder, depression, mild brain injury, all of which have negatively impacted her social and family relationships; the intimate relationship she attempts to enjoy with her boyfriend of longstanding; the ability to pursue and obtain employment and to achieve the level of academic education that she once thought she would. She has benefitted from speech-language intervention and will continue to need such intervention throughout her life. Although reluctant to do so, she clearly could benefit from psychological counselling. It would appear that it is to be expected that the effects of the assault committed by Jason Staples upon her, will be with her for the rest of her life.
- [72] A review of the case law indicates a range of anywhere from as low as $25,000 to an amount above $300,000 for damages applicable to a case such as this one.
- [73] It is open to the court to consider, in addition to a general award of damages, aggravated damages, which are meant to augment the assessment of general damages, by taking into account any aggravating features.^[7]

Determination of General Damages including Aggravated Damages

- [74] This is a case of abduction and sexual abuse that occurred over a period of time in excess of seven hours. The plaintiff innocently entered a retail establishment and was viciously physically and sexually attacked. The evidence indicates that she will never be as she was pre-incident. The prognosis is such that her attempts to re-enter the academic world and the world of employment will be adversely affected in that she may only be able to achieve work on a part-time status and will require ongoing intervention. Her family relationships and her relationship with her long-time boyfriend are no longer the close, loving relationships that she once enjoyed. She continues to have a negative outlook on life and suffers ongoing depression. She did nothing to attract the attention of Jason Staples and continues to have, hanging over her, the question of why this happened to her.
- [75] I order General Damages in the amount of $225,000, which includes $75,000 representing Aggravated Damages, arising out of Ms. Shaw's personal violation, distress and humiliation as appropriate in this case.

Punitive Damages

- [76] While punitive damages are only ordered in exceptional cases, they are intended to go beyond compensatory damages with the intention to punish the wrongdoer.
- [77] Justice Binney, in Whitten v. Pilot Insurance Company^[8] describes punitive damages as designed to meet the objectives of punishment, deterrence and denunciation outside the realm of compensation.
- [78] Punitive damages are generally imposed only if there has been high-handed, malicious, arbitrary or highly reprehensible conduct that departs, from a marked degree, from the ordinary standards of behaviour. A quantum of punitive damages should be awarded in an amount reasonably proportionate to such factors as the harm caused, the degree of misconduct, the relative vulnerability of the plaintiff and any advantage or profit gained by the defendant. Punitive damages should generally be given only where the misconduct would otherwise be unpunished, or other penalties are or are likely to be, inadequate to achieve the objections of retribution, deterrence and denunciation. While they are not intended to compensate the plaintiff, they are intended to deter the defendant or others from similar misconduct in the future and to reflect the community's collective denunciation of such activity.
- [79] Considering these and in particular the eleven criteria set out by Justice Binney in Whitten at paragraph 94^[9], I believe in this case, punitive damages should be ordered. Jason Staples' behaviour was vicious, cruel and inflicted upon the plaintiff, who was a total stranger. The attack was unprovoked. In the circumstances of a young student innocently entering into a retail establishment in order to buy a small item, to be viciously physically and sexually assaulted, is conduct that markedly departs from ordinary standards of decent behaviour and that society, not only collectively condemns but expects to be responded to in such a way by our courts, to deter a defendant such as Jason Staples and others from similar conduct in the future.
- [80] Jason Staples' actions were reprehensible. Cassandra Shaw's person and self-worth reflect compensatory damages insufficient to accomplish the objective of punishment in this case. The sum of $75,000 shall be so ordered.

Past Loss of Income and Future Loss of Income

- [81] In considering the awards under this category, the award may cover not only all injuries actually suffered and disabilities proved as of the date of this trial, but also the "risk or likely" future developments attributable to such injuries. A plaintiff is not required to prove on a balance of probabilities, the probability of future damage, but rather may be compensated, if they prove in accordance with the degree of proof required in civil matters, that there is a possibility or a danger of some adverse future development.^[10]
- [82] The evidence of Dr. Joanna Hamilton, Stephanie Zawalicz-Mowinski, Robert Lychenko and Dr. vanReekum, have satisfied me that Cassandra Shaw's ability to earn future income will, in all likelihood, suffer as a result of the injuries that she sustained at the hands of Jason Staples.
- [83] I also had the report of Douglas Welland with his best estimates as to the past lost income and future loss of income that Ms. Shaw will in all likelihood suffer. Having regard to the evidence provided to me, I find an award of $27,957.00 for past lost income and $800,000 for future lost income would be appropriate in the circumstances of this case.

[84] The evidence is such that it is doubtful that Ms. Shaw will ever be in a position to achieve, on a regular basis, full-time income. Her academic career was interrupted such that she has not pursued the post-graduate education that she was not only capable of, but which she had expected to pursue, before the incident. It is clear that her pursuit of continuing education and full-time employment have not only been delayed, but her ability to earn the income that she might have, has been reduced, probably for her entire productive lifetime.

Future Therapy and Care Costs

[85] The evidence of Dr. vanReekum, Dr. Joanna Hamilton, Stephanie Zawalicz-Mowinski, Robert Lychenko and Mary Ellen Meyers prescribed a number of therapies, including but not limited to: speech-language pathology, individual counselling, assessments and re-assessments, as well as specific counselling to assist Ms. Shaw through major changes in her life that will cause high anxiety that she will need to address. It is very difficult, based on the evidence, to conclude which of these therapies Cassandra Shaw is likely to pursue. However, having considered the evidence and the present values of the costs of such future care items as provided to me by the Welland report, I fix these costs in the amount of $125,000.

Costs

[86] In matters of this nature, I believe that the appropriate level of cost indemnification would be on a substantial indemnity basis. Ms. Shaw is the victim of the intentional acts of Jason Staples, and the costs of the litigation should be borne by Jason Staples. I have reviewed the bill of costs presented to me to reflect an hourly rate for counsel over the life of this litigation to vary between $275 to $375. Counsel for Ms. Shaw indicated that when the action started, his billing rate was $275 per hour and is now at the rate of $375. As suggested by counsel, I am going to provide substantial indemnity compensation in the amount of $128,000, (which reflects the change in hourly rates) together with disbursements of $25,000, plus applicable GST.

Summary

[87] Judgment shall issue requiring that Jason Staples pay to the plaintiff damages for:

- (a) Non-pecuniary, general and aggravated damages in the amount of $225,000;
- (b) Punitive damages in the amount of $75,000;
- (c) Past Loss of Income of $27,957;
- (d) Future Loss of Income in the amount of $800,000;
- (e) Future Care and Therapy Costs in the amount of $125,000
- (f) Costs in the amount of $128,000, plus applicable GST;
- (g) Disbursements of $25,000, plus applicable GST;

[88] Pre-judgment interest shall be payable at a rate of 5% per annum on the general damages. Pre-judgment interest on the past-income loss shall be payable at the rate of 4.8%, commencing the 5th of November, 2007. Post-judgment interest will also apply.

Conclusion

[89] It is to be hoped that this judgment will allow Cassandra Shaw to move on with her life. I think it is important that Ms. Shaw understand that the court heard her and the suffering that she was subjected to at the hands of Jason Staples. It is difficult to believe that good can come from such an evil event, however, Ms. Shaw presented herself as being an articulate and intelligent person, but whose self-esteem and very “self” have been damaged. She, with the assistance of counselling, and in particular, speech-language pathology, has begun to shake off the effects of this terrible event upon her life. She clearly can accomplish much as she proved, by making the President’s Honour Roll when she graduated from Trent University with her Bachelor of Science degree. Having watched Ms. Shaw as she bravely provided her evidence in difficult circumstances, there is no doubt in my mind that Cassandra Shaw has the ability to continue an academic career and/or to attain much success in the working world. She is a strong and resilient person, who can and will rise above the awful events of November 7, 2005.

[90] Counsel who undertake this type of action on behalf of victims, are to be commended. These matters are emotionally charged and, ultimately, may be undertaken without actual compensation. This matter initially involved other defendants; however, that aspect of this litigation was resolved either before the commencement of trial or mid-trial. The plaintiff in this case was indeed fortunate to have counsel who was prepared to pursue this matter on her behalf with much zeal, professionalism and compassion.

“Mr. Justice D.S. Gunsolus”

Released: June 6th, 2013

CITATION: Shaw v. Staples, 2013 ONSC 3290

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

Cassandra Shaw

Plaintiff

– and –

Jason Staples

Defendant

JUDGMENT

GUNSOLUS, J.

- [1] See: Norberg v. Wynrib, 1992 CanLII 65 (SCC), [1992] 2 S.C.R.226, at para. 26; and K.T. v. Vranich, 2011 ONSC 683, at para. 66
- [2] See: Victim's Bill of Rights, 1995, S.O. 1995 c.6. section 3.1
- [3] See: Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194
- [4] See: Cooper-Stephenson, K. D., & Saunders, I. B. (1996). Personal injury damages in Canada. Scarborough, Ont: Carswell, 1996, at page 489
- [5] See: Personal injury damages in Canada, supra, at page 485; also see: Theodore I. Koskoff, Essays on Advocacy. Washington West Group, 1988, at page 52
- [6] See: B.M.G., supra, at para 134
- [7] See: Norbert, supra, at para 53 and T.W. v. Seo [2005] O.J. No. 2647 and see K.T. v. Vranich, 2011 ONSC 683 at para 110.
- [8] See: Whitten v. Pilot Insurance Company, 2002 SCC 18 (CanLII), [2002] 1 SCR 595
- [9] See Whitten, supra
- [10] See: Schrump et al v. Koot et al, (1977) 1977 CanLII 1332 (ON CA), 18 O.R.(2d) 337 (Ont.CA),

Tab 153

Snowball v. Ornge, 2017 ONSC 4601 (CanLII)

Source: Superior Court of Justice
 Date: 2017-07-28
 File number: CV-16-556972
 Citation: Snowball v. Ornge, 2017 ONSC 4601 (CanLII),
 <<https://canlii.ca/t/h53fq>>, retrieved on 2026-03-24

CITATION: Snowball v. Ornge, 2017 ONSC 4601
COURT FILE NO.: CV-16-556972
DATE: 20170728

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

BROOK-LYNNE SNOWBALL, JOHN SNO
 WBALL, and DEBBORAH SNOWBALL

Plaintiffs

– and –

ORNGE, 7506406 CANADA INC. o/a ORN
 GE ROTOR-WING, THE ATTORNEY GEN
 ERAL OF CANADA, TRANSPORT CANA
 DA INSPECTOR #1, AND TRANSPORT C
 ANADA INSPECTOR #2

Defendants

Christopher Du Vernet and C. McGoogan, for the Plaintiffs

Timothy Trembley and L. Kittmer, for the Defendants Ornge and 7506406 Canada In c.

HEARD: July 20, 2017

M. D. FAIETA, J.

REASONS FOR DECISION

INTRODUCTION

[1] This action arises from the crash of an air ambulance helicopter that took the life of Christopher Snowball (“Snowball”). The plaintiffs, being Snowball’s immediate family, have commenced an action against the defendants in negligence for damages for mental distress and damages under s. 61 of the Family Law Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F.3 (“FLA”), as a result of his death.

[2] The family of another paramedic, Dustin Dagenais, who died in the same helicopter accident, also commenced an action against the defendants seeking the same relief. See Dagenais v. Ornge, Court File No. CV-16-558377.

[3] The defendant Ornge and 7506406 Canada Inc. (hereafter collectively referred to as “Ornge”), the operator of the air ambulance service, bring this motion pursuant to r. 21 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194 in respect of both actions. Ornge submits that no right of action exists at common law for mental distress resulting from the negligently caused death of a human being unless the plaintiffs witnessed the accident or its aftermath. Ornge submits that the plaintiffs’ only right to claim is under s. 61 of the FLA.

[4] Given the similarity of their allegations, the parties have agreed that the outcome of this motion in relation to the Snowball action shall bind the parties to the Dagenais action.

[5] For the reasons given below, I find that it is not plain and obvious that the plaintiffs’ negligence action seeking damages for mental distress as a result of the death of Snowball has no reasonable prospect of success.

BACKGROUND

[6] The Statement of Claim in the Snowball action advances a claim in negligence for mental distress as well as a claim pursuant to s. 61 of the FLA.

[7] The Statement of Claim includes the following allegations:

1. Each Plaintiff claims against the Defendants, jointly and severally, for:

(a) general damages in the amount of ... ($500,000.00) per Plaintiff, for negligence;

(b) general damages in the amount of ... ($250,000.00) per Plaintiff, for loss of care, companionship and guidance;

(c) special damages in an amount to be particularized ... for loss of income and support, and out-of-pocket expenses incurred by each Plaintiff;

(d) punitive and exemplary damages in the amount of ... ($500,000.00);

...

2. During the night of May 31st, 2013, Christopher Snowball (“Christopher”), a paramedic, perished when a medical helicopter operated by the Defendant Ornge in Moosonee, Ontario, crashed and burned. He was 38 years old.

3. Christopher Snowball left behind a close-knit family, including his then 16-year old daughter Brook-Lynne Snowball, and his parents, John Snowball and Deborah Snowball. The loss was utterly devastating to his family members.

4. The crash and Christopher’s ensuing death was completely avoidable, and occurred only because of the gross negligence of the Defendants herein.

...

Negligence

30. The Plaintiffs state and the fact is that the negligent acts or omissions of the Defendants caused or contributed to the crash which killed Christopher Snowball.

31. Particulars of the negligent acts and omissions of Ornge are as follows:

- a) Ornge failed to ensure that the pilots had sufficient training and experience to safely complete the flight, including, without limitation, night- and instrument-flying proficiency;

...

33. Full particulars of the negligent acts and omissions committed by the Defendants are set out in the Transportation Safety Board of Canada's Aviation Investigation Report....

34. In the circumstances described hereinabove, the Defendants owed the Plaintiff a duty of care.

35. Previous decisions of this Court and other Courts in Canada have established that a duty of care is owed to family members of persons who die in aviation crashes by Transport Canada, its inspectors, and the operators of such flights. The Plaintiffs therefore state that there is a presumptive duty of care owed by the Defendants to the Plaintiff in the circumstances of this case.

36. A presumptive duty of care arises in this case and has been previously recognized in factually analogous cases precisely because (1) the harm which occurred was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of the Defendants acts and omissions, and (2) there is sufficient proximity between the parties that it would not be unjust to impose a duty of care on the Defendants.

37. In the alternative, if a presumptive duty of care does not arise in this case, ... , a duty of care ought to be recognized in the circumstances of this case.

38. The Defendants were all well aware that [Ornge] were operating dangerous machinery and that the slightest dereliction of duty could have catastrophic consequences.

...

40. The Defendants knew or ought to have known that persons such as Christopher Snowball who were on board their flights were likely to have family members and other persons close to them who were likely to experience significant mental and emotional distress if persons such as Christopher Snowball were to die.

...

50. In these circumstances, the Plaintiffs state that the Defendants owed a private-law duty of care to the Plaintiffs, which they breached in the manner set out hereinabove.

...

Mental Distress

52. The Plaintiffs had a tight-knit family, and in particular maintained a very close relationship with Christopher throughout his entire life. The news of Christopher's death hit the Plaintiffs like a freight train.

53. As a direct and foreseeable consequence of the Defendants' negligence in causing or contributing to Christopher's death, as particularized hereinabove, the Plaintiffs suffered and continue to suffer extreme mental and emotional distress.

...

55. Particulars of the mental distress experienced by the Plaintiffs are as follows:

- a. Recurrent, involuntary, intrusive, and distressing memories, and dreams related to Christopher Snowball's death;
- b. Dissociative reactions;
- c. Intense and prolonged physical distress at exposure to cues that remind them of Christopher Snowball.
- d. Avoidance of external reminders that arouse distressing memories ... ;
- e. Persistent negative emotional states;
- f. Markedly diminished interest or participation in significant activities;
- g. Feelings of detachment and estrangement from others;
- h. Persistent inability to experience positive emotions;
- i. Irritable behaviour and angry outbursts;
- j. Hypervigilance;
- k. Problems with concentration;
- l. Significant sleep disturbance and recurring nightmares;
- m. Recurring ruminations over the horrible manner in which the late Christopher Snowball met his death, the terrible agony he endured before perishing ... ;
- n. Unresolved anger at the Defendants neglect....

56. The mental distress suffered by the Plaintiffs was caused by the negligent acts of the Defendants particularized hereinabove.

57. The Defendants were well aware that the helicopter at issue was staffed by people such as the late Christopher Snowball, and that those people could be killed if it crashed. Moreover, the Defendants were also aware that those people on board the helicopter had families and loved ones, who were likely to suffer significant emotional trauma if their family member was killed.

58. It was accordingly reasonably foreseeable that if Christopher Snowball was killed, the Plaintiffs would suffer significant mental distress, and the Plaintiffs did in fact suffer significant mental distress.

59. The Plaintiffs all had one of the closest relationships possible to the deceased – that of parent and child. The Plaintiffs therefore state and the fact is that they were within the direct contemplation of the Defendants as persons who would suffer damages as a consequence of the Defendants' negligence.
60. The Plaintiffs accordingly seek damages of $500,000.00 each for the mental distress which they have suffered as a direct and foreseeable consequence of the Defendants' negligence, particularized hereinabove.

Care, Companionship and Guidance

61. The Plaintiff Brook-Lynne Snowball was 16 years old at the time of her father's death. As a child, she was especially dependent upon her father to provide her with care, companionship and guidance in all aspects of her life.
62. Brook-Lynne Snowball had a very close emotional bond with her father. She would routinely look to him for guidance and support with all aspects of her life, from her school work to her personal relationships.
63. Brook-Lynne Snowball and her father would frequently engage in recreational activities such as fishing, camping, and horseback riding. Through these activities, Brook-Lynne Snowball developed and deepened her emotional bond with her father.
64. As a minor, Brook-Lynne Snowball was also financially dependent on her father.
65. Brook-Lynne Snowball had spoken with her father about attending university, and planned to do so. However, after his death, she was left utterly adrift. Previously a successful and motivated student, after her father's demise she barely managed to finish high school. Now lacking the guidance and support of her father, and struggling with the trauma of his death, she has been unable to pursue any further education.
66. Brook-Lynne Snowball's future earning capacity has been significantly diminished as a consequence of the loss of care, companionship and guidance and by the mental distress she has experienced arising out of her father's death.
67. The Plaintiff states and the fact is that she is entitled to compensation from the Defendants for her loss and her injury.

...

70. The Plaintiffs John Snowball and Deborah Snowball have also suffered a grievous loss of care, companionship and guidance. ...

...

76. The Plaintiffs state and the fact is that they have suffered a significant loss of care, companionship and guidance as a consequence of their son's death, to which they are entitled to compensation, and seek $250,000.00 each for the loss of care, companionship, and guidance which they have all suffered as a consequence of the Defendants' negligence.

77. The Plaintiffs plead and rely upon section 61 of the Family Law Act, R.S.O. 1990,c . F.3, as amended.

Punitive and Exemplary Damages

78. The Plaintiffs state that the acts and omissions of the Defendants set out hereinabove constitute such oppressive, high-handed misconduct as to warrant an award of punitive damages.

...

ANALYSIS

The Test under r. 21 of the Rules of Civil Procedure

[8] Ornge's brings this motion under r. 21 of the Rules of Civil Procedure for "[a]n order for a determination of a question of law raised by a pleading". Ornge's motion raises two issues:

- (1) Do the plaintiffs have a right to advance a claim at common law for mental injury resulting from the death of Christopher Snowball? [Notice of Motion, page 2, paragraphs (d), (e) and (f)]
- (2) Are the plaintiffs' claims under s. 61 of the FLA governed by the limitation period under s. 38 of the Trustee Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. T.23 or by the limitation period under s. 4 of the Limitations Act, 2002, S.O. 2002, c. 24, Sched. B? [Notice of Motion, page 2, paragraphs (g) and (h)]

[9] Rule 21.01\(1\)-\(2\) of the Rules of Civil Procedure provides that:

- (1) A party may move before a judge,
 - (a) for the determination, before trial, of a question of law raised by a pleading in an action where the determination of the question may dispose of all or part of the action, substantially shorten the trial or result in a substantial saving of costs; or
 - (b) to strike out a pleading on the ground that it discloses no reasonable cause of action or defence, and the judge may make an order or grant judgment accordingly.

- (2) No evidence is admissible on a motion,
 - (a) under clause (1) (a), except with leave of a judge or on consent of the parties;
 - (b) under clause (1) (b).

[10] At the hearing of this motion, the plaintiffs noted that Ornge's Notice of Motion does not specify which specific provision of r. 21 is being relied upon by Ornge in respect of the determination of the first issue. In my view, r. 21.01(1)(b) governs the analysis of whether the plaintiffs' claim in negligence is tenable.

[11] In R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45, at paras. 17, 19, 21, the Supreme Court of Canada provided the following guidance on when a claim should be struck:

... A claim will only be struck if it is plain and obvious, assuming the facts pleaded to be true, that the pleading discloses no reasonable cause of action. Another way of putting the test is that the claim has no reasonable prospect of success. Where a reasonable prospect of success exists, the matter should be allowed to proceed to trial.

...

The power to strike out claims that have no reasonable prospect of success is a valuable housekeeping measure essential to effective and fair litigation. It unclutters the proceedings, weeding out the hopeless claims and ensuring that those that have some chance of success go on to trial.

...

Valuable as it is, the motion to strike is a tool that must be used with care. The law is not static and unchanging. Actions that yesterday were deemed hopeless may tomorrow succeed. Before Donoghue v. Stevenson, 1932 CanLII 536 \(FOREP\), [1932] A.C. 562 (H.L.) introduced a general duty of care to one's neighbour premised on foreseeability, few would have predicted that, absent a contractual relationship, a bottling company could be held liable for physical injury and emotional trauma resulting from a snail in a bottle of ginger beer. Before Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd., [1963] 2 All E.R. 575 (H.L.), a tort action for negligent misstatement would have been regarded as incapable of success. The history of our law reveals that often new developments in the law first surface on motions to strike or similar preliminary motions, like the one at issue in Donoghue v. Stevenson. Therefore, on a motion to strike, it is not determinative that the law has not yet recognized the particular claim. The court must rather ask whether, assuming the facts pleaded are true, there is a reasonable prospect that the claim will succeed. The approach must be generous and err on the side of permitting a novel but arguable claim to proceed to trial. [Emphasis added; citations omitted.]

Do the Plaintiffs' Claims in Negligence for Mental Injury have no Reasonable Prospect of Success?

[12] For more than 200 years, the common law has provided that the right to bring an action in tort does not survive the death of a person. Neither the estate of the victim nor the victim's relatives have a right to sue for their losses: Baker v. Bolton (1808), 1 Camp. 493, 170 E.R. 1033. In that case, the plaintiff brought an action against the proprietor of a stage-coach, in which the plaintiff and his wife were travelling, that overturned and led to the death of the plaintiff's wife about one month later. The court, at p. 1033, found that the plaintiff was not entitled to any damages for the loss of her "society", or for "distress of mind he had suffered on her account" in the form of "great grief, vexation and anguish of mind" after the moment of her death. Lord Ellenborough stated that "[i]n a civil Court, the death of a human being could not be complained of as an injury".

[13] If there was a principled basis for this rule it was not described in Baker. Courts have been left to speculate as to why a person should be barred from seeking compensation for losses resulting from the death of a family member, but not when it results from an injury to a family member: Ferraiuolo v. Olson, 2004 ABCA 281, 246 D.L.R. (4th) 225, at paras. 19-30, 68; and Monahan Estate v. Nelson, 2000 BCCA 297, 76 B.C.L.R. (3d) 109, at paras. 5-6.

One commentator has noted that a strict application of Baker has "the astonishingly absurd result that a parent could recover for mental disorder caused by negligent injury to their child but not where the negligence has killed their child": Dr. Norman Katter, "Reining in the Rule in Baker v Bolton", online: (July 2015), 73 Hearsay, The Journal of the Bar Association of [14] Despite its dubious principled basis, Baker has generally continued to apply in Canada, Australia and England: Mason v. Peters (1982), 1982 CanLII 1969 \(ON CA\), 139 D.L.R. (3d) 104 (Ont. C.A.), at pp. 30-32, leave to appeal refused, [1982] S.C.C.A. No. 51; Lord (Litigation Guardian of) v. Downer (1999), 1999 CanLII 1875 \(ON CA\), 179 D.L.R. (4th) 430 (Ont. C.A.), at para. 4, leave to appeal refused, [1999] S.C.C.A. No. 571; Ordon Estate v. Grail, 1998 CanLII 771 \(SCC\), [1998] 3 S.C.R. 437, at paras. 98, 105; Admiralty Commissioners v. S.S. Amerika, [1917] A.C. 38 (H.L.); and Barclay v. Penberthy, [2012] HCA 40, 246 C.L.R. 258 (Austl. H.C.), at paras. 26-27. However, no such limitation exists under the Civil Code of Québec: Augustus v. Gosset, 1996 CanLII 173 \(SCC\), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 268, at para. 27.

[15] The harshness of Baker led to statutory reform in England in 1846, in Ontario and Quebec in 1847 and in other provinces and common law jurisdictions. In Ontario, the impact of Baker is somewhat muted given that s. 61 of the FLA permits the family of the deceased to maintain an action for pecuniary damages including damages for loss of guidance, care and companionship. However, there is no basis under s. 61 of the FLA to recover for grief, sorrow or mental anguish suffered by reason of the death of a family member: Mason, at pp. 32, 39; or punitive and aggravated damages: Latimer v. Canadian National Railway Company, 2007 CanLII 5689 \(ON SC\), at paras. 7-10. Damages for grief following the death of a family member are authorized by statute in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Quebec: see Government of Alberta, Justice and Solicitor General, Review of Damage Amounts under Section 8 of the Fatal Accidents Act (A Discussion Paper) (Edmonton: Fatal Accidents Act Review, May 2012), at p. 6. In the United Kingdom, damages for bereavement following the death of a family member is also authorized by statute: Fatal Accidents Act 1976 (UK), 1976, c. 30, s. 1A.

[16] The plaintiffs submit that claims in negligence for damages for mental injury suffered by a family member following the injury or death of another family member are allowed. Some cases arise from witnessing the bodily injury or death suffered by a family member: Logan v. Lovesy, [1983] O.J. No. 262 (H.C.). Other cases arise from seeing the aftermath of the accident involving a family member: McCartney v. Andrews, [1987] O.J. No. 1092 (H.C.); and McLoughlin v. O'Brian, [1983] 1 A.C. 410 (H.L.); or witnessing the injury or death of a stranger that the claimant tried to save following an accident: Bechard v. Haliburton Estate (1991), 1991 CanLII 7362 \(ON CA\), 5 O.R. (3d) 512 (C.A.). However, none of the cases provided by the plaintiffs involve a situation where damages for mental injury have been awarded to a person who has not suffered bodily injury or who has not witnessed the injury or death of another person or its immediate aftermath. Courts have refused to award damages for mental injury to a person who is merely informed of an accident: Abramzik et al. v. Brenner et al. (1967), 1967 CanLII 415 \(SK CA\), 65 D.L.R. (2d) 651 (Sask. C.A.); Rhodes Estate v. C.N.R., 1990 CanLII 5401 \(BC CA\), 50 B.C.L.R. (2d) 273 (C.A.), leave to appeal refused, [1991] S.C.C.A. No. 1 and Latimer, at paras. 12, 14.

[17] The plaintiffs submit that the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Saadati v. Moorhead, 2017 SCC 28, is a "game changer" in that it rejected the use of various considerations, such as geographical and temporal proximity, as absolute bars to the recovery of damages for mental injury in negligence.

[18] The ratio of the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Saadati is that a claimant in negligence is not required to prove a recognised psychiatric illness in order to establish that he or she has suffered a mental injury so long as "the disturbance suffered by the claimant is 'serious and prolonged and rise[s] above the ordinary annoyances, anxieties and fears' that come with living in civil society" (citations omitted): Saadati, at para. 37.

[19] In arriving at the above conclusion, the court considered the legal principles governing a claim for the recovery of damages for mental injury caused by negligence. It ruled that the elements of the cause of action in negligence described in Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 114, at para. 3, (namely, findings that: (a) the defendant owed the plaintiff a duty of care; (b) the defendant's behaviour breached the standard of care; (c) the plaintiff sustained damage; and (d) the damage was caused, in fact and law, by the defendant's breach) furnish a sufficiently robust array of protections against unworthy claims for negligently caused mental injury without the need for satisfying arbitrary, absolute proximity criteria: Saadati, at paras. 19-22.

[20] Moreover, the Supreme Court of Canada in Saadati, at paras. 14-16, 18-24, stated the following:

14 The early common law's posture towards claims for negligently caused mental harm was one of suspicion and sometimes outright hostility. ... Mental injury was seen as "not derived through the senses, but [as] a product of the imagination". This scepticism persisted into the last century, such that mental injury was not compensable unless accompanied by physical injury.

15 While the absolute bar to recovery for mental injury absent physical injury was eventually lifted, the suspicion which originally impelled that bar persisted, and common law courts continued to impose conditions upon recovery beyond those applied to claims for negligently caused physical injury. While, therefore, in England liability for negligently caused mental injury was first recognized as early as 1901, it was conditional upon "a shock which arises from a reasonable fear of immediate personal injury to oneself", or, "a reasonable fear of immediate personal injury either to [the claimant, or the claimant's children]". While recovery for mental injury in Canada remained parasitic to recovery for compensable physical injury well into the 20th century, by mid-century Canadian courts had also begun to permit recovery on similar conditions as English law — typically, on claimants having had at the material time a reasonable fear of physical injury to themselves or to their family.

16 Further obstacles to recovery for mental injury arose in English law. In McLoughlin v. O'Brian, at pp. 419-21, Lord Wilberforce posited three considerations that could limit the boundaries of compensable "nervous shock": the class of persons whose claims should be recognized (often referred to as relational proximity), the proximity of such persons to the accident (locational, or geographical proximity), and the means by which the "shock" is caused (temporal proximity). Where claimants alleged mental injury arising out of a sudden traumatic event, later judgments further distinguished between a "primary" victim (who was directly involved as a participant) and a "secondary" victim (who witnessed physical injuries caused to others). ...

...

18 Like the English courts, Canadian courts have occasionally struggled, as Professor Klar has described, "to find words which can clearly explain why, on the basis of arbitrary policy choices, certain types of claims seem to be too remote and uncompensable". ...

19 This Court has not, however, adopted either the primary/secondary victim distinction, or McLoughlin v. O'Brian's disaggregated proximity analysis. Rather, in Mustapha, recoverability of mental injury was viewed (at para. 3) as depending upon the claimant satisfying the criteria applicable to any successful action in negligence — that is, upon the claimant proving a duty of care, a breach, damage, and a legal and factual causal relationship between the breach and the damage. Each of these elements can pose a significant hurdle: not all claimants alleging mental injury will be in a relationship of proximity with defendants necessary to ground a duty of care; not all conduct resulting in mental harm will breach the standard of care; not all mental disturbances will amount to true “damage” [qualifying] as mental injury, which is “serious and prolonged” and rises above the ordinary emotional disturbances that will occasionally afflict any member of civil society without violating his or her right to be free of negligently caused mental injury (Mustapha, at para. 9); and not all mental injury is caused, in fact or in law, by the defendant’s negligent conduct.

20 Indeed, the claim in Mustapha failed on that last element: the claimant’s damage was not caused in law by (that is, it was too remote from) the defendant’s breach. Mustapha thus serves as a salutary reminder that, even where a duty of care, a breach, damage and factual causation are established, there remains the pertinent threshold question of legal causation, or remoteness — that is, whether the occurrence of mental harm in a person of ordinary fortitude was the reasonably foreseeable result of the defendant’s negligent conduct (Mustapha, at paras. 14-16). And, just as recovery for physical injury will not be possible where injury of that kind was not the foreseeable result of the defendant’s negligence, so too will claimants be denied recovery (as the claimant in Mustapha was denied recovery) where mental injury could not have been foreseen to result from the defendant’s negligence.

21 It follows that this Court sees the elements of the cause of action of negligence as furnishing principled and sufficient barriers to unmeritorious or trivial claims for negligently caused mental injury. The view that courts should require something more is founded not on legal principle, but on policy — more particularly, on a collection of concerns regarding claims for mental injury (including those advanced in this appeal by the intervener Insurance Bureau of Canada) founded upon dubious perceptions of, and postures towards, psychiatry and mental illness in general: that mental illness is “subjective” or otherwise easily feigned or exaggerated; and that the law should not provide compensation for “trivial matters” but should foster the growth of “tough hides not easily pierced by emotional responses”. The stigma faced by people with mental illness, including that caused by mental injury, is notorious, often unjustly and unnecessarily impeding their participation, so far as possible, in civil society. While tort law does not exist to abolish misguided prejudices, it should not seek to perpetuate them.

22 Where, therefore, genuine factual uncertainty arises regarding the worthiness of a claim, this can and should be addressed by robust application of those elements by a trier of fact, rather than by tipping the scales via arbitrary mechanisms. ...

23 I add this. As to that first necessary element for recovery (establishing that the defendant owed the claimant a duty of care), it is implicit in the Court’s decision in Mustapha that Canadian negligence law recognizes that a duty exists at common law to take reasonable care to avoid causing foreseeable mental injury, and that this cause of action protects a right to be free from negligent interference with one’s mental health. That right is grounded in the simple truth that a person’s mental health — like a person’s physical integrity or property, injury to which is also compensable in negligence law — is an essential means by which that person chooses to live life and pursue goals. ...

24 It is also implicit in Mustapha that the ordinary duty of care analysis is to be applied to claims for negligently caused mental injury. With great respect to courts that have expressed contrary views, it is in my view unnecessary and indeed futile to re-structure that analysis so as to mandate formal, separate consideration of certain dimensions of proximity, as was done in McLoughlin v. O'Brian. Certainly, “temporal”, “geographic” and “relational” considerations might well inform the proximity analysis to be performed in some cases. But the proximity analysis as formulated by this Court is, and is intended to be, sufficiently flexible to capture all relevant circumstances that might in any given case go to seeking out the “close and direct” relationship which is the hallmark of the common law duty of care. ... [Emphasis added; citations omitted.]

[21] Given that courts have apparently disregarded Baker by allowing claims in negligence for mental injury so long as the claimant witnesses a person’s injury, death or the aftermath of such injury or death (see the cases described above at paragraph 16 of these reasons), and given that the court in Saadati rejected the “primary/secondary victim” distinction, as well as the view that there are geographic, temporal and relational proximity restrictions that are an absolute limitation on the duty to take reasonable care to avoid causing foreseeable mental injury, it is my view that the plaintiffs’ claims for mental distress following Snowball’s death might succeed even though they are secondary victims who did not witness this sudden, traumatic event. As directed by the Supreme Court of Canada in Saadati, the outcome of the Snowball action should turn on the robust application of the elements of an action in negligence by the trier of fact rather than on the separate application of geographic, temporal, and relational considerations or a distinction between “primary” and “secondary” victims.

[22] Ornge further submits that the allegations in the Statement of Claim reflect a claim for the death of the deceased rather than a claim for mental injury suffered by the plaintiffs themselves as a result of a breach of duty of care owed by the defendants to them. There is no merit to this submission as the Statement of Claim, particularly paragraphs 34-40 and 50, alleges that a duty of care was owed by the defendants to the plaintiffs to prevent the mental distress that they suffered as a result of Snowball’s death and that such distress was a direct and foreseeable consequence of the defendants’ negligence in causing or contributing to Snowball’s death.

CONCLUSIONS

[23] I dismiss Ornge’s motion under r. 21.01(1)(b) in respect of both the Snowball action and the Dagenais action. It is not plain and obvious that the plaintiffs’ claim in negligence for mental distress has no reasonable prospect of success.

[24] The second issue raised by Ornge on this motion, related to whether a claim under s. 61 of the FLA is governed by the limitation period under s. 38(3) of the Trustee Act, was not addressed at the hearing of this motion. Should the parties wish to submit additional written submissions on the question of the applicable limitation period, then they may provide no more than ten pages of submissions by August 3, 2017, and five pages in reply by August 9, 2017. I will dispense with oral submissions on this second issue and shall rely on the written submissions provided by the parties.

Mr. Justice M. D. Faieta

CITATION: Snowball v. Ornge, 2017 ONSC 4601
COURT FILE NO.: CV-16-556972
DATE: 20170728

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

BROOK-LYNNE SNOWBALL, JOHN SNOWBALL, and D
EBBORAH SNOWBALL

Plaintiffs

– and –

ORNGE, 7506406 CANADA INC. o/a ORNGE ROTOR-WI
NG, THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, TRANSP
ORT CANADA INSPECTOR #1, AND TRANSPORT CAN ADA INSPECTOR #2

Defendant

REASONS FOR DECISION

Mr. Justice M. D. Faieta

Released: July 28, 2017

Tab 154

Merrifield v The Attorney General, 2017 ONSC 1333 (CanLII)

Source:	Superior Court of Justice
Date:	2017-02-28
File number:	CV-13-00333733-00OT; 2005-1117
Other citations:	42 CCLT (4th) 4 — [2017] OJ No 1009 (QL)
Citation:	Merrifield v The Attorney General, 2017 ONSC 1333 (CanLII), < https://canlii.ca/t/h03q8 >, retrieved on 2026-03-24
Most recent unfavourable mention	Moore v. Habib-Allah , 2022 ONSC 5290 (CanLII) [...] [20] 2019 ONCA 205 , 145 O.R. (3d) 494, rev'g 2017 ONSC 1333 . [...]

CITATION: Merrifield v. The Attorney General, 2017 ONSC 1333
COURT FILE NO.: CV-13-00333733-00OT
DATE: 20170228

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

PETER MERRIFIELD

Plaintiff

– and –

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, INSPECTOR JAMES JAGOE, SUPERINTENDENT
 MARC PROULX

Defendant

Ms. L. Young and Mr. J. Phillips, Counsel for the Plaintiff

Mr. S. Gaudet, Mr. J. Gorham, Mr. A. Law, Counsel for the Defendant

)
)
) HEARD: November 17 to 21, 24-28, Decem ) ber 1 to 4, 2014, May 19, 20, 21, 22, 25, 26, ) 27, 29, June 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, November 16, 17, 1 ) 8, 19, 20, 30, December 1, 2, 3, 4, 2015, Mar ) ch 30, 31, April 1, 2016

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

Table of Contents

Introduction.....	7
Issues.....	7
Leave Without Pay.....	9
INSET/TAG 2004.....	16
Operation Bridgeout.....	20
Barrie Nomination Meeting - May 14, 2005.....	21
Stronach Investigation - May 19, 2005.....	30
London Meeting - May 27, 2005.....	34
Criminal Intelligence - June 2005.....	41
The Bob Pritchard Radio Show - July 9, 2005.....	41
The Secret File 2005-1117.....	49
The Special Operations Center - October 23, 2005.....	57
The Promotion Process.....	64
Loss of Income Due to Delayed Promotional Opportunities.....	65
Transfer to Customs and Excise - January 2006.....	67

Mr. Merrifield’s American Express Card.....	68
Code of Conduct Part IV Investigation – Preceding Events.....	76
The Investigation.....	79
The Administrative Review - Ottawa Citizen Article January 17, 2006.....	86
Mr. Merrifield’s Work at Customs & Excise.....	89
Meeting with CO Seguin - The October 3, 2006.....	92
Mr. Merrifield’s Email to C.O. Seguin – January 19, 2007.....	98
Mr. Merrifield’s Email to D/Commr. Bourduas – May 11, 2007.....	103
The RCMP’s Internal Grievance Procedure.....	105
Waterloo Police Speaking Event.....	107
Witness ‘X’.....	107
Mr. Merrifield’s Email to Senior Management.....	109
Follow Up Regarding Mr. Merrifield’s Email.....	114
Serious and Organized Crime.....	115
Senate Standing Committee - May 27, 2013.....	118
RCMP Media Release - May 28, 2013.....	120
Harassment Complaint - July 7, 2015.....	121
Should the Statement of Defence be Struck for Late Disclosure.....	125
The Test.....	125
The Plaintiff’s Position.....	128
The Defendants’ Position.....	133
Analysis.....	134
Conclusion.....	136
Mr. Merrifield’s Credibility and the Reliability of his Evidence.....	136
Failure to Call a Witness.....	138
Failure to Call Medical Evidence.....	138

Unreasonable Perceptions of Harassment.....	139
In Ontario, is harassment recognized as a tort upon which a civil cause of action may be based.....	139
The Plaintiff's Position.....	139
The Defendant's Position.....	140
Analysis.....	141
Test for Harassment.....	142
What constitutes outrageous behaviour in the context of harassment.....	143
What constitutes causing emotional stress or having a reckless disregard for causing a plaintiff to suffer from emotional stress.....	144
What constitutes severe or extreme emotional distress.....	145
Do the defendants' actions toward the plaintiff constitute harassment.....	146
Leave Without Pay.....	146
The Barrie Nomination Meeting.....	147
Special Operations Center.....	150
The Part IV Investigation.....	152
The Ottawa Citizen Article.....	155
Mr. Merrifield's Communication with C.O. Seguin and D/Commr. Bourduas.....	155
Serious and Organized Crime.....	156
Senate Committee.....	157
Ktabi Harassment Complaint.....	158
Conclusion.....	159
Do the actions of the RCMP constitute a breach of Mr. Merrifield's Charter rights.....	159
The Plaintiff's Position.....	159
The Defendants' Position.....	159
Analysis.....	160

Conclusion.....	160
Has the RCMP breached its contract of employment with Mr. Merrifield.....	160
The Plaintiff's Position.....	160
The Defendants' Position.....	160
The Plaintiff's Position.....	161
Analysis and Conclusion.....	161
Do the actions of the RCMP regarding Mr. Merrifield constitute abuse of/misfeasance in public office.....	161
The Plaintiff's Position.....	163
Analysis.....	163
Do the actions of the RCMP regarding Mr. Merrifield constitute intentional infliction of mental suffering.....	165
Was the defendants' conduct flagrant.....	165
Was that conduct calculated to cause harm.....	165
Is medical evidence required.....	166
Conclusion.....	166
Does the RCMP have a fiduciary duty to Mr. Merrifield? If so, do its actions constitute a breach of fiduciary duty.....	167
The Plaintiff's Position.....	167
The Defendants' Position.....	169
The Plaintiff's Position.....	169
Analysis and Conclusion.....	169
Has Mr. Merrifield suffered a loss of income related to the actions taken by the RCMP.....	170
The Defendants' Position.....	170
Analysis.....	170
Conclusion.....	171

What amount should be awarded to Mr. Merrifield for general damages.....	171
Analysis.....	171
Conclusion	173
Is Mr. Merrifield entitled to punitive and or aggravated damages.....	173
Analysis.....	173
Conclusion.....	174
Summary.....	174
Costs.....	174

REASONS FOR DECISION

VALLEE J.

Introduction

[1] Peter Merrifield^[i] joined the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in 1998 and continues to serve as a member. He alleges that after he participated in a Barrie nomination meeting for the Progressive Conservative Party in 2005, his superiors made certain unjustified and unwarranted decisions about him based on allegations that had no merit. He was investigated and punitively transferred. His reputation was tarnished. He was not permitted to work during a national security emergency because his superior officers believed he was “not the appropriate resource.” Mr. Merrifield states that he was accused of committing criminal offences and subjected to an internal investigation which was groundless. He states that his superiors harassed and bullied him. They damaged his reputation, impaired his career advancement, and caused him to suffer severe emotional distress including depression. As a result, he was off work for significant periods of time. Mr. Merrifield states that his superiors intentionally caused him emotional distress or had a reckless disregard for causing him to suffer emotional distress. Mr. Merrifield claims damages for harassment, intentional infliction of mental suffering, loss of income and general damages, among other things.

[2] The Attorney General, on behalf of the RCMP, states that Mr. Merrifield violated the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Regulations 1988, SOR/88-361; however, he was never formally disciplined for any of the matters raised in this action. None of the decisions made by his superiors nor their actions taken constitute harassment or intentional infliction of mental suffering. Mr. Merrifield is a well-respected member of the RCMP. He is regarded as a very skilled officer and an asset to the organization. His superiors were entitled to make their decisions. He was not treated inappropriately. Mr. Merrifield’s career has not been impacted. He has been promoted twice and is now a Sergeant. His compensation has increased. He is a valued and respected member of the Force.

Issues

1. Should the statement of defence be struck for late disclosure?
2. In Ontario, is harassment recognized as a tort upon which a civil cause of action may be based?
3. If it is, do the actions taken by the RCMP regarding Mr. Merrifield constitute harassment?
4. Do the actions of the RCMP constitute a breach of Mr. Merrifield's rights under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?
5. Has the RCMP breached a contract of employment with Mr. Merrifield?
6. Do the actions of the RCMP regarding Mr. Merrifield constitute abuse of public office?
7. Do the actions of the RCMP regarding Mr. Merrifield constitute intentional infliction of mental suffering?
8. Does the RCMP have a fiduciary duty to Mr. Merrifield? If so, do its actions constitute a breach of fiduciary duty?
9. Has Mr. Merrifield suffered a loss of income related to the actions taken by the RCMP? If so, what amount should be awarded to Mr. Merrifield for his loss of income?
10. If Mr. Merrifield is entitled to general damages, what amount should be awarded to him?
11. Is Mr. Merrifield entitled to punitive and or aggravated damages? If so, what amount should be awarded?

[3] To properly consider these issues, a review of Mr. Merrifield's career with the RCMP and the various decisions made by his superiors is required. ^[ii]

[4] Mr. Merrifield's first posting was the Wynyard Detachment in central Saskatchewan. In January 2002, he was transferred to Ontario. He successfully applied to the Air Marshall program in April, 2002. The program was set up in response to the terrorist attacks in the United States on September 11, 2001. As an Air Marshall, Mr. Merrifield's duties were to operate covertly as a passenger on aircraft in order to provide security and respond to any potential terrorist situations. In the same year, Mr. Merrifield joined the Mounted Police Association (MPA). It provides representation to members experiencing issues with management.

[5] In November 2003, Mr. Merrifield had a performance evaluation. It covered the time from his arrival in the Air Marshall unit up to November 2003. The evaluation was very positive. It stated:

Constable Merrifield has designed and prepared lectures on CACPP [Canadian Air Carrier Protection Program] and presented to outside agencies, and has been involved in designing and presenting APO [Aircraft Protective Officers] training program of tactical skills to seconded members, he planned and prepared in-service training terrorism lectures for APO Unit.

Cst Merrifield is a highly motivated, confident member who is an asset to this program. Cst. Merrifield is a team player and is a value added member to the program. His enthusiasm, dedication, commitment to duty has [sic] a positive influence on others and this along with his positive attitude, out going [sic] personality will serve him well in his future endeavours. A pleasure to have this member in the program.

- [6] Mr. Merrifield enjoyed public speaking. His superior, Insp. Josey supported his speaking engagements and interest in national security work.

Leave Without Pay.

- [7] Mr. Merrifield had been interested in politics since the 1980s. At that time, he was the co-founder of a Liberal youth riding association. He became involved in politics again in 2004. No member of the RCMP had ever run for political office; however, the RCMP had applicable rules and policies if a member wanted to do so.

- [8] Early in 2004, Mr. Merrifield explored running in a nomination meeting ^[iii] to be held in the York-Simcoe riding. He downloaded the paperwork two weeks before the application deadline.

- [9] Mr. Merrifield requested guidance and direction regarding the RCMP's policies and process from the Policy Center. On February 3, 2004, he exchanged emails with Sgt. Wendy Verecchia, (Advisor, Harassment, Human Rights, Conflicts of Issue, Central Region). She advised him that she thought he would need to be placed on leave without pay ("LWOP") and that she would contact Policy Center to confirm.

- [10] Section 58.4(1) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Regulations SOR/88 – 361 states that:

A member who is a peace officer may, only while on leave without pay granted for that purpose, (a) run for nomination or stand as a candidate in a federal...election"

- [11] The March 19, 1999 Administrative Manual states in section F.4 that:

LWOP ensures separation between the member and the RCMP: consequently, annual leave, RTO [regular time off] and LTO [lieu time off] cannot be used for political activities when LWOP is warranted.

- [12] Mr. Merrifield sent a memo to Insp. Josey, requesting LWOP to participate in political activities on February 11, 2004 and March 31, 2004. March 31, 2004 was the date for another nomination meeting to be held in Richmond Hill. Mr. Merrifield stated that this memo was actually back-dated. It was prepared after the first nomination meeting because Sgt. Verecchia's memo dated February 11, 2004 was attached to it.

- [13] Cpl. DuPuy, who was an operations support officer, filled out the forms for Mr. Merrifield to apply for LWOP. A transfer authorization, form A-22A, was required to change his status to LWOP.

- [14] Mr. Merrifield requested one day of LWOP. The completed forms indicated only LWOP, not any particular type. Mr. Merrifield was directed to put "personal needs" LWOP on the form. He did not know at the time when he completed the forms that he could take only two personal needs LWOPs in his career. Due to time constraints, the LWOP for Mr. Merrifield to participate as a candidate in the York-Simcoe nomination meeting was actually requested and granted after the nomination was held.
- [15] Sgt. Verecchia received a formal response from the Policy Center. She sent an email to Mr. Merrifield dated February 11, 2004 which stated, "while running for nomination, a member must be on LWOP but once the nomination process is completed and the electoral campaigning has not begun, the member may return to his usual employment. When the member stands as a candidate in an election, LWOP would have to be taken again." Mr. Merrifield interpreted "while running for nomination" to mean the date of the nomination meeting.
- [16] After February 11, 2004, Mr. Merrifield prepared paperwork to run in a number of other ridings, which included York-Simcoe, Richmond Hill and Mississauga-Brampton-South. He stated that all of his paperwork was submitted between February 11, 2004 and March 31, 2004. After that, the PC Regional Co-ordinator approached him and advised against using this shot gun approach to secure a nomination.
- [17] Mr. Merrifield participated as a candidate in the nomination meeting for York-Simcoe on February 11, 2004. He did not make any efforts in advance to be nominated. He simply attended the meeting. Accordingly, he was not successful in obtaining the nomination. Mr. Merrifield participated in this nomination meeting without proper approval (which came after the fact) because he decided to run on short notice; however, he stated that he did so but with full knowledge of the RCMP. He stated that he obtained informal approval from Insp. Josey to attend.
- [18] At the end of the meeting, he was approached to run as a candidate at the Richmond Hill's riding's nomination meeting.
- [19] Mr. Merrifield then attempted to withdraw his papers relating to the other nomination meetings; however, it was too late to withdraw from the Mississauga-Brampton-South nomination meeting. He did not request LWOP to attend this meeting. He stated that he spoke with Cpl. DuPuy who advised that he should submit the paperwork for two nomination meetings, being York-Simcoe and Richmond Hill, even though he had attended more than two, and that would be enough.
- [20] On March 13, 2004, Mr. Merrifield attended the nomination meeting for Mississauga-Brampton-South. He stated that he attended as a courtesy. The ballots had been printed and he did not want to be a "no show".
- [21] Mr. Merrifield requested LWOP for the Richmond Hill nomination meeting and the related election period at the same time that he requested LWOP for the York-Simcoe nomination meeting. No election date had been set yet. Mr. Merrifield's application for these LWOPs was granted.
- [22] On March 31, 2004, Mr. Merrifield participated as a candidate in the nomination meeting for Richmond Hill and was successful. He sent a memo to Insp. Josey dated May 5, 2004 requesting LWOP to run in the upcoming election. He included a partially completed form A-22A because the election date had not yet been set.
- [23] On the same day, Insp. Josey sent a memo to the Assistant Commissioner for "O" Division, Bradley Holman, stating that the request for LWOP was not processed in timely fashion because of time constraints. He stated, "I am submitting it to you for review and favourable consideration."

- [24] On May 13, 2004, Sgt. Steven Boos, Advisor to the Career Development and Resourcing Unit (CDR), called Mr. Merrifield to discuss the rules for fundraising. He advised that LWOP would be required for active campaigning and attending meetings as a candidate. Two days later, Mr. Merrifield received LWOP approval for the election.
- [25] Sgt. Boos sent an email to Insp. Josey on May 18, 2004 discussing the two LWOP dates, February 11, 2004 (for the York-Simcoe nomination meeting) and March 31, 2004 (for the Richmond Hill nomination meeting). The email states that transfer authorizations were issued for these dates and it requests transfer authorizations be prepared showing Mr. Merrifield going on "personal needs" LWOP for these dates. The two transfer authorizations showing just "leave without pay" were attached.
- [26] Mr. Merrifield stated that from May to June 2004, he campaigned for the election. He had a campaign manager, a support team and campaign materials. They set out his rank and work experience which was permitted according to s. 57(2) of the RCMP Regulations, as set out in X.2 of the Administrative Manual. It states that a member who is running for nomination or standing as a candidate in a federal election, may for identification purposes, disclose his or her rank, level and work experience in the force. He ran in the federal election which was held on June 28, 2004 but he was not elected. None of his superiors had any concerns regarding his campaign materials.
- [27] After the election, Mr. Merrifield returned to work as an Air Marshall. He was very interested in terrorism. As a result, he developed other areas of work in addition to just doing his job as an Air Marshall. He gathered open source intelligence on terrorism and did some restricted outside speaking engagements which he enjoyed.
- [28] Subsequently, there was a lot of confusion regarding Mr. Merrifield's LWOPs. On June 30 2004, Sgt. Sergeant, RCMP Policy Analyst Human Resources, sent an email directing Cathy Jenion, District Manager for London, Central Region Compensation Services, to re-identify the three "personal needs" LWOP to "special leave without pay." Sgt. Verecchia had stated that Mr. Merrifield's leaves were to be shown as regular LWOP but no such type of leave was identified in the HRMIS program for members. ^[iv]
- [29] Mr. Merrifield stated that he did not know why the three personal needs LWOPs were shown or why they were re-coded to special LWOP. These decisions were made at the policy level. He never received a copy of this email during the course of his employment. In July 2004, he understood from a conversation with Sgt. Boos that he was entitled to only two personal needs LWOPs in his career. He thought he had used both of them.
- [30] Mr. Merrifield stated that sometime between July and the end of September, Sgt. Boos called him and said that he had good news. Only one LWOP was being used for the election so he could run again because he still had one LWOP remaining. Mr. Merrifield stated that, at this point, he understood that LWOPs had not been used and were not required for nomination meetings.
- [31] Cpl. DuPuy recalled that between January and June 2004, Mr. Merrifield approached him and Insp. Josey about needing LWOP because he had political ambitions. He recalled that they contacted Sgt. Verecchia and Sgt. Boos and sought their guidance as to what to do and how the process worked. Cpl. DuPuy stated that all of this was new to him. Insp. Josey directed him to look into it, see what was required and make sure it was done. He stated that he knew Mr. Merrifield was attempting to get a nomination for the PC party.

- [32] Cpl. DuPuy knew that Mr. Merrifield needed LWOP to run for a nomination. He contacted Sgt. Verecchia prior to preparing the documents. He knew that Mr. Merrifield had run at another nomination meeting but could not recall which riding.
- [33] Cpl. DuPuy was familiar with transfer reports. If a person's duties changed, these had to be filled out. He had never prepared a LWOP application for political reasons. He completed one for Mr. Merrifield which stated "LWOP – Personal Needs". He signed the document dated January 11, 2004 because at that time he was acting for Insp. Josey.
- [34] Later, Cpl. DuPuy learned that an Inspector could not sign the form. LWOP had to be requested from the Commanding Officer (C.O.). This meant that the forms had to be redone, backdated and resubmitted.
- [35] Cpl. DuPuy stated that Mr. Merrifield was quite helpful. He did not conceal his political activities and in fact was very open about them. He wanted to do everything properly. He still wanted to be employed by the RCMP if he was not elected. It was in his interest to make sure everything was done right.
- [36] Sgt. Verecchia was responsible for coordinating harassment complaints and providing human resource advice to the members in 2004. On February 3, 2004, she received an email from Mr. Merrifield requesting conflict of interest advice. He wanted to run for political office and was seeking clarification on exactly what the regulations and policies stated.
- [37] Sgt. Verecchia stated that ss. 56 to 58(7) of the RCMP Regulations cover political activities, when members need LWOP and how they are to act. She looked up the regulations and responded to Mr. Merrifield with her interpretation. She sent him an email stating that because he was presenting himself for nomination to eventually run in a federal election, the policy stated that he must be on LWOP to run for the nomination. A member could not be on annual leave or regular time off for this purpose. The LWOP would be continuous and without pay. In the case of the nomination process, it would begin on the day he entered the process and end on the day he withdrew or the process was concluded. Sgt. Verecchia sent a request to the Policy Branch, for their interpretation. The Policy Branch's interpretation was the same as hers. A member cannot voice his or her political opinion or solicit support while working for the RCMP. There has to be a separation.
- [38] Part of Sgt. Boos' responsibilities was the administration of LWOP policies. As part of the protocol, he would interview a member requesting LWOP to ensure that the member was fully aware of the conditions. He stated that LWOP is a separation of the member's employment from RCMP. Even though the member is separated, the member still has obligations with respect to conduct. A member had to be fully advised of conditions regarding other employment.
- [39] Sgt. Boos' general understanding of LWOP with respect to political activities was that LWOP was required for nomination, soliciting funds, the actual period of campaigning and running in the election. Sgt. Boos explained that in 2004, there were six kinds of LWOP. Two were potentially applicable to Mr. Merrifield. Personal needs LWOP could be granted for two periods during a member's career for a specific cumulative length. Special LWOP required exceptional circumstances and it had to be in the best interests of the RCMP. There were no conditions regarding the number of times that special LWOP could be taken. The C.O. of a division was the person who had authority to approve LWOP.
- [40] Sgt. Boos explained that his responsibility was to identify the type of leave that Mr. Merrifield required and then to make a recommendation to the C.O. for approval. If a member wanted LWOP, he would submit a request through his Line Officer (immediate superior) setting out the need for it. It would come to Sgt. Boos' department. A staffing interview would be conducted to advise the member of the LWOP conditions followed by a recommendation to the Officer in Charge (OIC) of CDR, who was his superior. The OIC would then forward the recommendations to the C.O. for approval or denial of LWOP. If it was approved, the recommendation would come back. The OIC of CDR could authorize a transfer notice. Once it was issued, it would be distributed to various sections involved. One would be the Compensation Branch so that they could stop payment of the member's salary and physically separate the member from the organization. The transfer notice would also be sent to the member's Line Officer.

- [41] Sgt. Boos stated that he had a telephone discussion with Insp. Josey. They discussed that there had been a previous occasion when Mr. Merrifield had stood for nomination as a federal election candidate. Sgt. Verecchia had provided direction with respect to LWOP on the same day as the nomination meeting. There was not enough time to go through the full LWOP application process.
- [42] Sgt. Boos noted that Sgt. Verecchia said that "regular" LWOP was required. In fact there is no such thing as regular LWOP.
- [43] Sgt. Boos looked through the six types of LWOP. He stated that only two potentially applied to Mr. Merrifield, being personal needs LWOP and special LWOP. He explained that special LWOP is for exceptional circumstances. He did not consider Mr. Merrifield's running as a candidate to be an exceptional circumstance. He thought exceptional circumstances would be a death in the family or something beyond the member's control. Special LWOP had to be in the best interests of the RCMP. Sgt. Boos acknowledged that he did not have training regarding interpretation of policy. He had no previous experience with personal needs or special LWOP. This was the one and only political leave that he ever had to deal with.
- [44] Sgt. Boos stated that he had a formal interview with Mr. Merrifield to explain LWOP to him. Prior to this time, Mr. Merrifield did not know that personal needs LWOP was limited to two terms. Mr. Merrifield provided information as to what constituted campaigning and what did not. He described what he thought he could do without LWOP. Sgt. Boos described when LWOP was required. He described the nature of personal needs LWOP. A member could take it two times in his career up to a period of 15 months cumulative. Mr. Merrifield said he would need 35 to 40 days of leave for the election. They discussed some possible start dates. The election call was expected in the very near future. Since LWOP was subject to approval by the C.O., Sgt. Boos told Mr. Merrifield that he would make the recommendation to go forward with LWOP. Sgt. Boos stated that he went through the policy line by line with Mr. Merrifield. He said the election could be called on Sunday May 23, 2004. Monday May 24th was a holiday. The party wanted him to start campaigning on May 25th. Mr. Merrifield agreed to call and let Sgt. Boos know as soon as he learned that the election had been called. Mr. Merrifield would also call his OIC. A system would be put in place where theoretical approval would be obtained and then Mr. Merrifield could be on LWOP before the documents were actually signed.
- [45] Sgt. Boos made a note of this discussion and spoke to Insp. Josey the next day. They discussed the first two occasions when Mr. Merrifield sought nomination without LWOP. Insp. Josey was going to deal directly with the C.O. They decided that the two days when Mr. Merrifield should have had LWOP would be considered one day.
- [46] On May 18, 2004 when he had the approval from the C.O., Sgt. Boos sent an email to Insp. Josey with a copy to Mr. Merrifield. He provided his work cell and personal home number. He was working diligently to make LWOP in two periods work. Sgt. Boos' strategy was to consider the earlier two days to be one first request for LWOP, even though they were not continuous, and the election period to be the second request for LWOP. He prepared the transfer authorizations and submitted them.

- [47] One of the transfer documents shows Mr. Merrifield's transfer from the Air Marshalls to LWOP. At the bottom of the form it says, "personal needs without pay – no relocation expenses." The implementation date was to be May 22, 2004. Sgt. Boos learned that the first two requests, being the request to consider two non-consecutive days as one request for LWOP, had been approved by C.O. Holman on May 17, 2004. Sgt Boos advised Mr. Merrifield that the LWOP for the electoral period had also been approved by the C.O.
- [48] Sgt. Boos explained that when Mr. Merrifield did not have LWOP, steps were taken to retroactively approve LWOP for the two dates, February 11 and March 30, 2004, and to stop Mr. Merrifield's pay for them. The LWOP was put into effect.
- [49] After the two personal needs LWOPs were granted, Sgt. Boos reflected on the situation and began to wonder whether personal needs LWOP was the right type of LWOP to use. He did not share this concern with Mr. Merrifield. Upon making an inquiry on June 23, 2004, he learned that the compensation department was having some difficulty with the fact that there were three time periods that had to be coded to personal needs but the system only allowed for two. This issue was addressed by re-coding the two personal needs LWOPs to three special LWOPs. Since a special LWOP had no restrictions with respect to the cumulative length or number of approved requests, it appeared to be a better fit when LWOP was required for three dates. Sgt. Boos learned about this re-coding in an email but he did not forward it to Mr. Merrifield.
- [50] Sgt. Boos recalled that he had a conversation with Mr. Merrifield following the election, after Mr. Merrifield returned to work. He could not recall where the conversation occurred and whether it was in person or over the phone. He advised Mr. Merrifield that the LWOPS were re-coded to special LWOPs so the two personal needs LWOPs remained for future use. He stated that this was the only conversation that he had with Mr. Merrifield about the re-coding. He could not find any notes or documents with respect to this conversation.
- [51] Mr. Seguin was the C.O. of "O" Division. He retired from the RCMP on March 31, 2008. He testified that he became the C.O. of "O" Division beginning on October 12, 2004. He was aware of the regulations governing participation in political activities. He understood that members could participate but they had to apply for a leave during campaigns. Requirements with respect to running for nomination in a party were also included in the regulations. Mr. Seguin was familiar with the Administrative Manual and appendix 12.12 regarding the leave requirements. The C.O. had to approve requests for LWOP.
- [52] The Administrative Manual states that LWOP can be approved for education, spousal relocation, care of pre-school children and personal needs. With respect to special LWOP, in contrast to personal needs LWOP, it was granted for exceptional circumstances. Furthermore, the Division had to be in a position to allow someone to go on leave without impact on its operations. Mr. Seguin did not receive an application from Mr. Merrifield for LWOP to run for a political party, either for special LWOP or personal needs LWOP. In his term as C.O., he never received a request by a member for LWOP for political activities.
- [53] Mr. Seguin became aware at some point that Mr. Merrifield had run in the 2004 election for the Conservative Party. He understood that Mr. Merrifield had applied for LWOP and had received it for the election.

- [54] Mr. Merrifield had another performance evaluation for the period February 2004 to October 2004. This covered the time when he was participating in political activities. Some excerpts are as follows:

As a member of this unit who is particularly passionate about counter-terrorism, Cst. Merrifield took the initiative to provide instructional lectures to the Peel Regional Police Airport Division via their training section. These lectures included topics such as The History of Aviation and Airport Terrorism and an authorized explanation of the Canadian Air Carrier Protection Program...

Cst. Merrifield recognizes the importance of keeping abreast of terrorist trends, profiles and recent intelligence. He is very passionate about this issue and in addition to reviewing all of the intelligence information that is forwarded to our office from various agencies, he researches and seeks out materials related to terrorism. He also readily shares this information with other members of the unit and applies it to his work on a daily basis...

Cst. Merrifield is a highly motivated, dedicated, productive member of this unit. Cst Merrifield has the respect of his peers and supervisors and his positive attitude influences others to perform at higher levels. Cst. Merrifield's input is value added, demonstrating many of the qualities necessary for a supervisor role. Cst. Merrifield is an asset and credit to the force and will do well in his future endeavours. A pleasure to have on the unit.

INSET/TAG 2004

- [55] In addition to the Air Marshalls unit, the Integrated National Security Enforcement Team (INSET) was also established after the terrorist attack that occurred in the United States on September 11, 2001. It was responsible for all criminal investigations in Ontario relating to people who posed a threat to Canada. There were two sides to INSET: investigations and intelligence information gathering. It carried out long-term investigations and had a quick response team for day-to-day investigations. It also had an intelligence component comprised of analysts.
- [56] During his time as an Air Marshall, Mr. Merrifield expressed an interest in working at INSET.
- [57] Mr. Merrifield was transferred to INSET on October 17, 2004. He then reported to S/Sgt. King and Insp. Jagoe. On October 19, 2004, after being at INSET for two days, he participated in a radio talk show hosted by Michael Coren. The topic was "What is terrorism?" Apparently, someone made a complaint to INSET about Mr. Merrifield's participation on the show.
- [58] Two days later, S/Sgt. King learned that Mr. Merrifield had been on the show. S/Sgt. King asked him about comments that he provided on the radio show. Subsequently, S/Sgt. King asked him to review a security information sheet and sign it, which he did. S/Sgt. King asked Mr. Merrifield not to make any more appearances while he was working at INSET. Mr. Merrifield stated that he respected this direction and agreed to it.
- [59] Mr. Merrifield stated that early in 2005, he was doing open source work with the Jewish community. Speaking at events was considered community outreach. He did this approximately six times in the course of his duties. He never requested permission to attend these speaking engagements. The Indo-Canadian Community in Mississauga recognized him at an awards dinner and named him Police Officer of the Year.

- [60] Mr. Merrifield explained that within INSET was a small unit known as the Threat Assessment Group (TAG). The members of TAG carried out threat assessments on international people who came to visit Canada including heads of state and special dignitaries. Mr. Merrifield explained that in addition to investigators, TAG also had analysts. They did tactical analysis on active investigations. The analysts looked at trends, predictors and human intelligence.
- [61] Mr. Merrifield expressed an interest in working in TAG. On January 20, 2005, Sgt. Rick Cousins carried out a "file review" at Headquarters to consider whether Mr. Merrifield would be suitable for TAG. Mr. Merrifield did not meet with Sgt. Cousins. In the written review, Sgt. Cousins' point form notes state: "able to handle any type of investigation; very intelligent person, learns and comprehends quicker than most; Commanding Officers Certificate of Appreciation for apprehending dangerous offender in trying circumstances; ability to express himself verbally/written are [sic] exceptional; well rounded police officer with unlimited potential." He concluded, "It is recommended Cst Merrifield be planned to INSET TAG"
- [62] On February 2, 2005, Mr. Merrifield was invited to and attended an event at B'nai Brith, a Jewish organization, where he gave a short speech as a member of the RCMP. Julian Fantino, (then Chief of Police for Toronto Police Service), among others, gave a speech as well.
- [63] On February 10, 2005, Mr. Merrifield was permanently posted to TAG. His work consisted of monitoring criminal extremist and terrorist groups. He gathered open source information, carried out community outreach and worked to recruit confidential informants. He investigated threats to national security and Very Important Persons (VIPs) such as the Prime Minister. He also looked after threat assessments of official visitors like the Royal Family and Members of Parliament. At times, he travelled with the Prime Minister's protective detail when the Prime Minister made visits to various places. For example, he travelled with the Prime Minister to four or five media outlets in the Greater Toronto Area (GTA) where the Prime Minister was addressing issues arising from the sponsorship scandal.
- [64] Mr. Merrifield was required to have top secret security clearance to perform this job. He was also a top level marksman. His work at TAG was an achievement of a career goal. It was his dream job.
- [65] In February or early March, 2005, a threat was made against then Liberal Prime Minister Paul Martin and U.S. President George W. Bush. Mr. Merrifield was the lead investigator for the team that investigated this threat. They successfully located the person who made the threat. As a result of Mr. Merrifield's work, that person was arrested, tried and convicted of a criminal offence.
- [66] Up until May 2005, Mr. Merrifield got along well with everyone at TAG. He was asked to train others. He loved the work. An incident occurred when a person penetrated the U.S. Oval Office's electronic inbox and bombarded it with emails. Mr. Merrifield carried out an extensive internet tracing operation through numerous countries. He and TAG located the person who was subsequently convicted.
- [67] No concerns were ever raised about Mr. Merrifield's earlier political activities, involvement with the Conservative Party and any impact they might have on his ability to do his job at TAG, which included providing protection for a Liberal Prime Minister.

- [68] In June or July 2004, Supt. Proulx became the “O” Division Intelligence Officer (DIO) for the Criminal Intelligence branch. He held that position until June 2006 and was the Superintendent responsible for TAG. As DIO, he reported to C/Supt. Mazerolle whose superior officer was the C.O. Supt. Proulx retired on May 15, 2009.
- [69] Mr. Proulx explained that TAG was an anomaly. TAG reported in a straight line directly to him but Insp. Jagoe, who was in charge of INSET, had authority over TAG’s day-to-day operations. TAG took their day-to-day tasks from INSET. Mr. Proulx described his role in TAG as primarily administrative.
- [70] Mr. Proulx learned of Mr. Merrifield in January 2005. There was a vacancy in TAG. He was approached by someone who stated that there was a member who wanted to come to TAG. He received a staffing note about Mr. Merrifield. He came highly praised. The transfer was subsequently authorized. Supt. Proulx agreed to the transfer. He stated that anyone would want to take on Mr. Merrifield, given the contents of the staffing note.
- [71] Prior to May 2005, Supt. Proulx did not know anything about Mr. Merrifield’s political activities. He did not learn about them until May 16, 2005.
- [72] In December 2002, Insp. Jagoe was promoted to run INSET and was its OIC until 2007. Insp. Jagoe was promoted to Superintendent in December 2007. Insp. Jagoe reported to C/Supt. Mazerolle. Subsequently, he reported to Insp. Van Doren whose portfolio included national security and border integrity.
- [73] All employees at INSET reported to Insp. Jagoe except for the people in TAG who reported to Supt. Proulx. Insp. Jagoe received regular briefings from A/Sgt. Crane who worked in TAG. Insp. Penny was Insp. Jagoe’s second in command.
- [74] Supt. Jagoe recalled that shortly after Mr. Merrifield arrived at INSET, S/Sgt. King spoke to him about his participation in a radio interview. Supt. Jagoe understood that S/Sgt. King told Mr. Merrifield that speaking about national security matters was not appropriate and he agreed that he would discontinue it. Insp. Jagoe did not hear the interview. He briefed Insp. Van Doren about Mr. Merrifield’s participation in the radio show.
- [75] A/Sgt. Crane explained that he was acting as Sgt. with respect to TAG. It had existed since at least 2000 when he joined it. In January 2005, it had seven members although they were not at the office all the time. In addition, there were two TAG members who provided personal protection to VIPs when they visited. TAG was the intelligence side to the VIP visits. A/Sgt. Crane reported to Supt. Proulx who was his Line Officer. A/Sgt. Crane also reported to Insp. Jagoe daily so that he had an operational awareness of TAG’s activities.
- [76] TAG members would monitor known subjects of interest with potential to cause any danger or embarrassment to any VIPs coming to the area. They would also perform Order in Council checks which were requests from the government to carry out background checks on certain people with respect to criminal activity. A check could be requested with respect to anyone who was going to be appointed to do something. TAG also did risk assessments for the criminal intelligence branch and the federal government.
- [77] When Mr. Merrifield joined INSET, TAG was understaffed and had a vacancy. A/Sgt. Crane spoke to Mr. Merrifield about joining TAG and suggested that he apply. At the time, A/Sgt. Crane knew that Mr. Merrifield had offered himself for political candidacy previously but he did not know the details of his political background. He was aware that Mr. Merrifield had run in an election in 2004 but he did not recall the party that he represented. The fact that Mr. Merrifield had run for office previously did not cause A/Sgt. Crane any concerns whatsoever.

[78] A/Sgt. Crane stated that initially, he did not know much about LWOP. He just knew that a member could not participate in politics without it.

[79] In April 2005, A/Sgt. Crane had a conversation with Mr. Merrifield about his future participation in politics because there was another upcoming federal election. A/Sgt. Crane asked Mr. Merrifield, out of curiosity, whether he had any ambition to run in the next federal election. A/Sgt. Crane thought that if Mr. Merrifield did have ambitions, he could have a conflict of interest because the RCMP's primary duty was to serve the elected Liberal party. The RCMP had duties to the other parties but to a lesser degree. A/Sgt. Crane said Mr. Merrifield's answer was "none whatsoever. It was too expensive." He did not differentiate between running at a nomination meeting and running as a candidate in a Federal election.

[80] In spring 2005, there were a lot of high level VIP visits. Mr. Merrifield had no limits on the work that he could do. A/Sgt. Crane stated that he had an excellent working relationship with Mr. Merrifield. He was a good member and who showed a lot of promise. In fact, on May 3, 2005, he asked Mr. Merrifield to mentor another member and help raise his standard of performance.

[81] Supt. Jagoe stated that he was aware that Mr. Merrifield had investigated death threats against Prime Minister Martin and U.S. President George Bush. He read somewhere that Mr. Merrifield had done a good job. Nobody was concerned about his investigating these threats. Nobody was concerned about Mr. Merrifield's working in TAG after running in an election.

[82] Mr. Merrifield had another performance evaluation covering the period August 1 2004 to August 1, 2005. On the evaluation, A/Sgt. Crane stated that "his educational background and expertise in world politics are well suited for the TAG environment." Mr. Merrifield's role as lead investigator with respect to the threat against the Prime Minister and the U.S. President, which concluded with charges being laid, was also noted.

Operation Bridgeout

[83] Sgt. Park worked at INSET from 2003 to 2007. He was in charge of Operation Bridgeout, a complex tactical exercise held in May 2005. Mr. Merrifield helped to organize it which required several months of intensive planning. He did this in addition to his regular duties.

[84] Sgt. Park had a lot of interaction with Mr. Merrifield during the planning for the exercise. They drove back and forth to Sault Ste. Marie, London and Sarnia to attend meetings so that they could keep abreast of the project.

[85] Sgt. Park recalled that Mr. Merrifield had mentioned running for a Conservative seat in either Newmarket or Barrie. This came up during a trip to Sault Ste. Marie. Sgt. Park could not recall exactly when this occurred. There was not much conversation about it. Sgt. Park knew that Mr. Merrifield had run for a seat a year earlier.

[86] Mr. Merrifield had worked a minimum of twenty hours of voluntary overtime on the Operation Bridgeout. He was not paid for these hours nor did he receive any additional time off. Sgt. Park stated that Mr. Merrifield was enthusiastic about national security work and he put more time and effort into Operation Bridgeout than even Sgt. Park did.

[87] At the conclusion of the project, Sgt. Park signed a performance log dated May 17, 2005 with respect to Mr. Merrifield. He described Operation Bridgeout as follows:

Operation bridge out was a multi-agency/bi-national exercise that took place between Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan and Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario. It was the largest exercises between Ontario and the State of Michigan and possibly the largest in Canadian and US history of its kind. Three separate exercises were occurring simultaneously, Detroit/Windsor, Sarnia and Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario and Michigan. The operation commenced May 9 and terminated in the evening of May 11, 2005. The exercise was designed to challenge agencies on both sides of the border to react to a national, state and local emergency, namely a terrorist incident. Canadian, U.S. federal, state and local agencies would be participating in Operation Bridgeout, more than 70 agencies in the U.S. and Canada in the Sault Ste. Marie region.

...

During the scenario Constable Merrifield wore many hats. He acted as a referee/marshal along with Sergeant Park. He assisted in coordinating and controlling the scenario to ensure the script and timelines were on track. He was diligent in his duties and along with Sergeant Park worked 16 hour days back-to-back. Although Constable Merrifield came down with flu-like symptoms, he pushed forward and at the end of the day the scenario proved to be a big success. Sergeant Park received comments from several personnel involved in the exercise stating that this had been the best planned scenario that they had been involved in, in recent times and for some it was the best ever. Much of the success is attributed to the hard work and dedication of Constable Merrifield.

During the actual exercise and the months of planning leading to the exercise I was very impressed with the above average abilities and strong work ethic displayed by Constable Merrifield. He presented himself professionally throughout the exercise and was a good ambassador for the force. In my opinion, Constable Merrifield was the best selection I could have made in planning and preparing a scenario of this magnitude. Should something of this nature arise in the future he would no doubt be my number one selection. Outstanding job!!

[88] Sgt. Park stated that there was general talk on the floor that Mr. Merrifield was going to run for a seat for the Conservative Party; however, he did not pay much attention to it.

[89] Supt. Jagoe stated that he did not have any concerns about Mr. Merrifield's entering TAG. The first significant conversation he had with Mr. Merrifield was in Sault Ste. Marie during Operation Bridgeout. Mr. Merrifield sat next to him when a large group of people went out for dinner at the end of the exercise. At that point, he and Mr. Merrifield got into a discussion about Mr. Merrifield's interest in politics. They discussed Mr. Merrifield's previous run for the Conservative Party and that when he did this, he had to take a leave of absence from the Force. There was some conversation about the upcoming election. Mr. Merrifield said it was very expensive to be involved in campaigns and running for politics. Insp. Jagoe did not ask Mr. Merrifield whether he was going to be running in the upcoming election.

Barrie Nomination Meeting - May 14, 2005

- [90] Mr. Merrifield stated that after he ran unsuccessfully for the Richmond Hill seat, he was still interested in politics but mostly from a policy, criminal justice reform and national security perspective. He wanted to contribute to the direction of the Party in a non-partisan way.
- [91] He had been to events as the candidate of record for Richmond Hill. They were hosted by Belinda Stronach and Peter Van Loan. It was public knowledge that he had stood for election as a Conservative in 2004. Mr. Merrifield's personal friendship with Belinda Stronach was also well known. He would openly attend a lunch or breakfast with her and her staff.
- [92] Mr. Merrifield recalled that before May 12, 2005, at the end of Operation Bridgeout, all the participants went out for dinner. He was sitting near Insp. Jagoe, Sgt. Park and A/Sgt. Crane. He received a call and left the table to take it. The Richmond Hill riding association was offering him a candidacy. He returned to the table and mentioned the call. He was asked if he would run again in election and said he would not do that "anytime soon." It was too expensive and he had issues with the process.
- [93] Mr. Merrifield stated that some things were happening in the Barrie riding that he did not think were proper. The riding association was not following the rules. He was told that the only way he could speak to the riding association was by being a candidate at a nomination meeting. He had to renew his party membership. He stated that he did not want to pursue candidacy in another election.
- [94] Mr. Merrifield stated that he mentioned to Sgt. Park, during one of their many car trips that he would participate in another nomination meeting. The nomination meeting was not discussed at the Bridgeout dinner. He did not tell Insp. Jagoe that he would be running at a nomination meeting.
- [95] Based on his earlier conversation with Sgt. Boos, when he learned his LWOPs were re-coded such that only one had been used for the Richmond Hill nomination meeting and the election, Mr. Merrifield concluded that he did not need LWOP to participate in a nomination meeting. Furthermore, s. 3.2 of the Administrative Manual, part XII.12, entitled Political Activities stated, "If LWOP is not required to participate in political activities, a member must conduct any politically related activities on his/her own time." At the end of April 2005, just prior to the deadline, Mr. Merrifield put in his name for the Barrie riding nomination meeting which was to be held on Saturday, May 14, 2005.
- [96] On May 2, 2005, Mr. Merrifield sent a letter to members of Conservative Party National Council regarding his concerns, specifically that the nomination process was being abused. He asked the Council to take control of the nomination selection.
- [97] While he was away at Operation Bridgeout, Mr. Merrifield's wife and his former Richmond Hill campaign manager sent out three hundred campaign cards. They were recycled from the Richmond Hill election.
- [98] On May 6, 2005, Mr. Merrifield was part of Prime Minister Paul Martin's protective detail for his visit to Hamilton and Brantford. Around the same time, he spoke to Cpl. Frith, who worked at INSET, about his running at the nomination meeting. Cpl. Frith was a member of the Conservative Party and had received a campaign card.
- [99] On Friday May 13, 2005, the day before the Barrie nomination meeting, Mr. Merrifield had the flu and took the day off. He stated that several RCMP members were fully aware in advance of the date that he intended to run at the Barrie nomination meeting. They included C/Supt. Mazerolle, Sgt. Gilchrist, S/Sgt. Smith and Insp. Jagoe. None of them expressed any concerns to him about it prior to the event.

- [100] Mr. Merrifield stated that on Saturday May 14 2005, which was a day off for him, he ran at the Barrie nomination meeting. He stated that mathematically, he could not have won the nomination. It was all about selling memberships. The only point to his attending was to try and draw votes away from the leading candidate and throw the election in favour of the second candidate.
- [101] When Mr. Merrifield returned to work on Monday, May 16, 2005, A/Sgt. Crane said that Insp. Jagoe was upset. A co-worker said he was in trouble. He understood that there were three issues: first, he had run in the meeting without LWOP, second, he had identified himself as working in national security, and third, the campaign literature mentioned defending the traditional concept of marriage and challenging the gun registry.
- [102] A/Sgt. Crane stated that he first learned of Mr. Merrifield's running at the Barrie nomination meeting on Friday May 13, 2005, the day before the meeting, when Cpl. Frith came into his office and said, "Did you hear Merrifield is running for nomination?" A/Sgt. Crane said that Cpl. Frith told him about the campaign literature. He had joined the party so he had received it. A/Sgt. Crane stated that he scoffed at this suggestion because he had already spoken to Mr. Merrifield about it. Cpl. Frith had the literature with him. A/Sgt. Crane stated that he had a look at it for a couple of minutes and asked if he could keep it. Cpl. Frith said no. He wanted it back. A/Sgt. Crane returned it. Cpl. Frith also advised him that the nomination meeting was being held the next day, on Saturday, May 14, 2005.
- [103] A/Sgt. Crane said that he was shocked by the campaign literature. Mr. Merrifield had said that he was not going to run in an election but now he was doing so. He felt that Mr. Merrifield had lied to him.
- [104] A/Sgt. Crane then had a brief conversation with Insp. Jagoe in his office. A/Sgt. Crane said, "Are you aware that Cst. Merrifield is running for nomination in the Barrie riding?" Insp. Jagoe was not pleased. He told A/Sgt. Crane to contact Supt. Proulx.
- [105] Supt. Proulx was not in the office that day so A/Sgt. Crane spoke to Sgt. Gilchrist on the phone. He was acting for Supt. Proulx. Mr. Merrifield was not on duty that day either so A/Sgt. Crane did not have an opportunity to speak with him at the office. A/Sgt. Crane did not recall whether he attempted to call Mr. Merrifield at home. He stated that he had Mr. Merrifield's phone number and could have called him.
- [106] A/Sgt. Crane discussed the matter at length with Sgt. Gilchrist. They both agreed that they should review the provisions of the RCMP Regulations so that they would have the information when they had an opportunity to speak to Supt. Proulx.
- [107] A/Sgt. Crane stated that he had not received from Mr. Merrifield a request for LWOP for the nomination meeting. If Mr. Merrifield had obtained LWOP for the nomination meeting, he would have known about it.
- [108] A/Sgt. Crane stated that he was shocked, hurt and annoyed when he learned that Mr. Merrifield was running for the nomination. He felt that Mr. Merrifield had told him one thing and then had done the opposite. He thought Mr. Merrifield had lied to him. He testified that he still believes that Mr. Merrifield lied to him.
- [109] A/Sgt. Crane agreed that if he was aware that a member was going to act contrary to policy, he should stop the member. Section 37(e) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act

R.S.C. 1985 c. R-10R states, "It is incumbent on every member...to ensure that any improper or unlawful conduct or of any member is not concealed or permitted to continue." A/Sgt. Crane stated that he did not know where Mr. Merrifield was in the process with respect to the nomination meeting. He had not attended it yet. A/Sgt. Crane felt he had to update himself on the rules. He believed he did not have all of the facts.

- [110] A/Sgt. Crane stated that after the nomination meeting, a lot of members in INSET were upset and dismayed that Mr. Merrifield had referred to himself as an RCMP officer in his political materials. There were approximately eighty-five people at the office. They understood that he was promoting himself an expert. A/Sgt. Crane stated that he would never say that he, himself, was an expert on anything. It seemed that Mr. Merrifield had taken an air of authority. A/Sgt. Crane acknowledged that the term "expert" was not used in any of Mr. Merrifield's campaign materials.
- [111] C/Supt. Mazerolle was the Criminal Operations (CROPS) officer for "O" Division from 2004 until the end of the April 2012. From August 2010 until the end of May 2011 he was acting C.O. Both Supt. Proulx and Insp. Van Doren reported directly to him. All three of them, as well as C.O. Seguin, had offices on the same floor near each other in London.
- [112] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that on May 13, 2005, Insp. Van Doren told him that there was a concern with respect to a nomination pamphlet relating to Mr. Merrifield. Insp. Van Doren said that he had directed Insp. Jagoe to address the matter with Supt. Proulx.
- [113] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he did not know that Mr. Merrifield had run in an election in 2004 when he spoke to Insp. Van Doren on Friday, May 13. He learned about it after the brochure came to his attention. The 2004 election did not present any issues because policies and procedures were followed at that time.
- [114] C/Supt. Mazerolle said that he did not see the pamphlet prior to the nomination meeting. On Sunday, May 15, 2005 he first spoke to Supt. Proulx about it. He was shopping and ran into Supt. Proulx. He took him aside and asked him if he was aware of the pamphlet and that Mr. Merrifield had been seeking a nomination. Supt. Proulx was not aware of it and said that he would look into when he got back to the office.
- [115] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that if Mr. Merrifield had gone through the right procedure, there would have been no concern about his running at the Barrie nomination meeting. C/Supt. Mazerolle said that he did not have all of the information but believed there was no need to intervene because matter had been sent to a competent Superintendent, being Supt. Proulx.
- [116] A/Sgt. Crane stated that he spoke to Mr. Merrifield when he returned to work on Monday, May 16, 2005. Mr. Merrifield said that he had concerns about the Conservative party and had issues with people who were standing for the nomination. The only way that he could speak out about it was to put his name forward at the nomination. Mr. Merrifield said it was not going any further. He said his campaign manager had sent out literature without his knowledge while he was working on Operation Bridgeout. A/Sgt. Crane reviewed the provisions of the RCMP Regulations with Mr. Merrifield and told him that he still had to meet the requirements, which included being on LWOP or resigning from the Force. Mr. Merrifield felt that he had done nothing wrong. A/Sgt. Crane described the tone of the meeting as cordial. He stated that after he reported the matter, it was out of his mind. He was on holidays for the following week and did not have any further involvement in the matter until he returned on May 24, 2005.
- [117] Supt. Jagoe stated that he was aware that Mr. Merrifield had previously run for political office and had obtained the approvals. It was general knowledge that Mr. Merrifield had run as a Conservative. Supt. Jagoe stated that on Friday, May 13, 2005, he was not aware that the Barrie nomination meeting was happening the next day. If Cpl. Frith gave a statement saying that he told him about the upcoming nomination meeting, it would be wrong. If A/Sgt. Crane stated that he told him about the upcoming nomination meeting, he would also be wrong. Supt. Jagoe stated that he had no information as to the date of the nomination meeting. If he was aware that Mr. Merrifield's conduct was potentially improper, he would have been required to take steps to prevent it in accordance with Part IV, s. 37(e) of the RCMP Act. He understood that if a person were to participate in a full campaign, some special leave would be required. He had to obtain approval from his Line Officer.

- [118] Supt. Jagoe stated that a few days after the Operation Bridgeout dinner, Cpl. Frith, an INSET employee, came into his office. Cpl. Frith showed him Mr. Merrifield's pamphlet. Supt. Jagoe stated that he was busy at the time and asked Cpl. Frith if he could have the pamphlet. Cpl. Frith declined but offered to get one for him. Supt. Jagoe stated that he did not order Cpl. Frith to get it.
- [119] Insp. Jagoe asked Cpl. Frith for the pamphlet because was interested in looking at the content. He knew that the Assistant Commissioner had to approve investigations into sensitive sectors such as politics. Supt. Jagoe stated that he did not know that the pamphlet was going to be used at a private political function. He also stated that he did not know that the pamphlet had been distributed for a campaign
- [120] A couple of days later, Cpl. Frith brought him the pamphlet and then he took the time to read it. He stated that he was surprised by the content. Mr. Merrifield had identified himself as a member of the RCMP. There was information in the pamphlet that was critical of the sitting government and the gun registry. Supt. Jagoe stated that this concerned him because Mr. Merrifield's duties in TAG included conducting threat assessments on internationally protected people including the Prime Minister. Supt. Jagoe questioned whether this was appropriate. If the Force had a member conducting a threat assessment and if that member was very critical of the government and if something happened to an internationally protected person such as the Prime Minister, this would be a conflict. It would result in an inquiry.
- [121] Insp. Jagoe wanted to ensure that Mr. Merrifield had sought the appropriate authority. He called Supt. Proulx and asked him if he was aware of Mr. Merrifield's interest in politics. Supt. Proulx stated that he was not. Insp. Jagoe said that he would send the pamphlet to him.
- [122] Supt. Jagoe stated that he was not familiar with section 57(2) of the Regulations which states that a member who is running for nomination may disclose his rank, level, position and work experience. He stated that he was more concerned about whether Mr. Merrifield had approval to attend the meeting. He stated that he did not know whether Mr. Merrifield needed approval with respect to the platform he was advancing because he did not have that level of detail. Nevertheless, he was concerned about the platform. He drew that concern without looking at the Administration Manual.
- [123] Supt. Jagoe recalled that within a few days of receiving the pamphlet, A/Sgt. Crane and Sgt. Gilchrist came into his office and told him that they were aware that Mr. Merrifield was interested in running for politics. Supt. Jagoe stated that he told them that the information they had should be shared with Supt. Proulx and that it was a matter between A/Sgt. Crane, Mr. Merrifield and Supt. Proulx.
- [124] On Wednesday May 18, Insp. Jagoe sent a memo to Supt. Proulx. The email begins with, "further to our discussions and emails..." (None of the emails that preceded this one were produced.) Supt. Jagoe stated that he kept all the emails related to making decisions of substantive value. There may have been previous emails that he deleted. Supt. Jagoe stated the archival system at the RCMP keeps documents for ninety days. He searched for other emails but did not find any in his deleted box. He did not obtain archived tapes or take any other steps to look for them.

- [125] In addition to sending the email to Supt. Proulx, Insp. Jagoe also briefed his superior, Insp. Van Doren who was happy with the steps he had taken. Supt. Jagoe said he had two or three phone conversations with Insp. Van Doren specifically regarding the pamphlet and that Mr. Merrifield might be considering running. Supt. Jagoe stated that he did not take any notes of these conversations.
- [126] Mr. Van Doren retired from the RCMP as a Superintendent. He was the Assistant Criminal Operations Officer (CROPS) for border integrity and national security. In May of 2005 he was an Inspector acting as a Superintendent. He oversaw responses to national security for Ontario. Insp. Van Doren was the Line Officer for INSET. He stated that Insp. Jagoe reported to him. His own superior was C/Supt. Mazerolle. He would speak to Insp. Jagoe daily in briefings on operational issues and sometimes on human resources issues.
- [127] Mr. Van Doren had a vague recollection of a conversation with Insp. Jagoe on Friday May 13, 2005. Insp. Van Doren took notes dated Friday May 13, 2015. At 11:30 a.m. there is a reference to Insp. Jagoe. In his point form notes, Insp. Van Doren stated, "Re: Peter Merrifield - ran in the last election as a conservative - lost - proper authorities previously sought - pamphlet identifies RCMP's role - NS team - INSET- background in NS. Threat Assessment group - Marc Proulx - OIC CROPS advised." Insp. Van Doren spoke to Insp. Jagoe about Mr. Merrifield. He was seeking a nomination for a political position. Mr. Van Doren recalled there was a pamphlet. Mr. Merrifield was part of TAG under the authority of Supt. Proulx. Mr. Van Doren recalled that he told Insp. Jagoe to deal with Supt. Proulx regarding any concerns relating to Mr. Merrifield. He stated that he briefed C/Supt. Mazerolle about the telephone call and then took no further steps. He left Insp. Jagoe and Supt. Proulx to deal with the matter.
- [128] Supt. Jagoe stated that he was familiar with the Ministerial direction regarding investigations into sensitive sectors dated November 4, 2003. It was issued after the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001. Insp. Jagoe knew about the policy when he spoke to Cpl. Frith about the pamphlet. Investigations into political parties required Ministerial approval. Supt. Jagoe was aware that allegations had been made that he violated the policy and that he ordered Cpl. Frith to attend a political meeting. He stated that he never ordered Cpl. Frith to attend any meeting. The allegation was not true.
- [129] Mr. Frith retired from the RCMP in 2010 as a Corporal. He worked in the National Security section from 2002 to 2008. He worked in the same building and on the same floor as Mr. Merrifield did when he was in TAG. In 2005, he lived in the Barrie riding.
- [130] Mr. Frith stated that he became a member of the Conservative Party to support Mr. Merrifield at the nomination meeting. Since Mr. Merrifield was in his riding, Mr. Frith volunteered to vote for him. Mr. Merrifield did not ask him to do it. Mr. Frith stated that he received Mr. Merrifield's nomination meeting campaign brochure. He brought it to the office before the election and showed it to several people. He was impressed by it because there was a good picture of Mr. Merrifield's family on it. He stated that he thought it was sharp. He was proud of the brochure which is why he brought it to the office. Mr. Frith stated that he was not sure whether he showed the brochure to A/Sgt. Crane. They all worked in the same area.
- [131] Insp. Jagoe had an open door policy. Mr. Frith stated that he showed the brochure to Insp. Jagoe on Thursday, May 12 or Friday, May 13 2005. Mr. Frith said that he told Insp. Jagoe about the nomination meeting to be held on Saturday, May 14 2005.

- [132] Mr. Frith said that Insp. Jagoe wanted the brochure for his personal use. Mr. Frith did not give it to him. It was his property. They discussed the upcoming nomination meeting. Insp. Jagoe knew that Cpl. Frith was going to the nomination meeting. Cpl. Frith told him that the only place he could get a brochure for Insp. Jagoe was the nomination meeting location. Mr. Frith stated that he was comfortable getting a brochure for Insp. Jagoe if it was only for his personal use and not for any other use. Insp. Jagoe stated that it would be for his personal use only. Mr. Frith stated that his understanding of personal use was whatever a person might want to do with the brochure in his own house, such as displaying it. Sending the brochure to headquarters for scrutiny would not be personal use. Mr. Frith testified that if Insp. Jagoe had wanted it for any other purpose beyond personal use, he would not have obtained a campaign brochure for him. He would have had to get his own if he wanted it for other reasons.
- [133] There were three candidates at the nomination meeting: Mr. Merrifield, Mr. Brian Broley and Mr. Patrick Brown. Mr. Frith stated that he attended the nomination meeting with his wife and went for the sole purpose of voting for Mr. Merrifield. He obtained a brochure for Insp. Jagoe, took it home and gave it to Insp. Jagoe on the following Monday. He told Insp. Jagoe that the brochure was only for his personal use.
- [134] Cpl. Frith did not know anything about the rules regarding participation in political events. He did not know whether Mr. Merrifield had applied to participate. Mr. Frith stated that he went to vote because he thought Mr. Merrifield might win. He did not want the other candidate to win. He was not ordered by Insp. Jagoe to attend. He stated he had always planned to attend.
- [135] Supt. Proulx stated that prior to the Barrie nomination meeting, no one mentioned to him that Mr. Merrifield had investigated a threat made against President Bush and Prime Minister Martin. He did not recall discussing this with anyone after Mr. Merrifield ran in the 2004 election. It never came up.
- [136] On Monday, May 16 2005, A/Sgt. Crane called Supt. Proulx and told him that Mr. Merrifield had run in a nomination meeting over the weekend. A/Sgt. Crane told him that Mr. Merrifield had a previous career as a politician. Supt. Proulx asked A/Sgt. Crane if Mr. Merrifield had followed the correct process. A/Sgt. Crane said that Mr. Merrifield had told him that he did not need leave because the nomination meeting occurred on a Saturday and he did not want to win. He just wanted to make a speech. Supt. Proulx asked A/Sgt. Crane whether Mr. Merrifield had permission to attend the nomination meeting and A/Sgt. Crane stated that he did not think so.
- [137] Right after he spoke with A/Sgt. Crane, Supt. Proulx called Insp. Jagoe and asked him to send the campaign materials to him so that he could review them.
- [138] Mr. Proulx recalled that Insp. Jagoe did not express any concerns prior to the nomination meeting. He received Insp. Jagoe's comments on May 18 or 19, 2005. Supt. Proulx was not concerned about what happened in 2004 because it was approved. He was concerned about Mr. Merrifield's attendance at the 2005 nomination meeting, possibly without LWOP.
- [139] Mr. Proulx stated that on Monday, May 16 2005, he reviewed the Operations Manual and determined that members were allowed to run in politics but they had to have approved leave. At that time he did not quite understand the various types of leave. He stated that he still does not really understand them. He just knew that Mr. Merrifield needed permission.

- [140] Mr. Proulx stated that he also either looked in the HRMIS system or asked his assistant to look into it. He stated that all of the holidays, leave and sick days are recorded in this system for all of the members. He did not find anything in the HRMIS system that indicated that Mr. Merrifield had been granted leave. Then he made a call to Sgt. Cousins in Career Resource Development.
- [141] Sgt. Cousins told him that the coding for Mr. Merrifield's leave in the previous year was done improperly. It would have to be re-done. Sgt. Cousins also told him that Mr. Merrifield would have to ask permission for the recent nomination meeting after it occurred and this would have to be approved by the C.O.
- [142] Mr. Proulx stated that at some point in the same week, he spoke to Sgt. Verecchia. She was very familiar with Mr. Merrifield and believed that he had been granted leave in 2004. Sgt. Verecchia told him she had outlined the process to Mr. Merrifield in 2004. Mr. Proulx testified that at some point in the same week, Insp. Jagoe sent him the campaign brochure. He read it and had a conversation on the Thursday or Friday with Mr. Merrifield. He told Mr. Merrifield that he had run without authority and that he would have to ask for retroactive permission. He should write a memo to explain the fact that his name had been in the nomination. Mr. Proulx stated that he told Mr. Merrifield that Sgt. Cousins had explained to him that there were errors in the coding of his leave in 2004. Sgt. Cousins had said that Mr. Merrifield's two opportunities for elections had been used. Mr. Proulx stated that he told Mr. Merrifield that if he wanted to run again, he should not bypass the policy. Rather, he should write a memo to him. They would then visit the C.O. Supt. Proulx thought that this would be the end of the matter, and that Mr. Merrifield would write the memo.
- [143] Supt. Proulx attended a briefing meeting with C/Supt. Mazerolle and C.O. Seguin in C.O. Seguin's office on May 26, 2005. He discussed his concerns about Mr. Merrifield's involvement in the Barrie nomination meeting without LWOP. He did not tell them that he was planning to have a meeting with Mr. Merrifield on the 27th.
- [144] Mr. Seguin stated that his earliest recollection of Mr. Merrifield was in May 2005. The nomination meeting in Barrie came to his attention. Mr. Merrifield had put his name forward for the riding nomination. He first heard of this from Supt. Proulx. He did not make any notes of the discussion. He did not know that Mr. Merrifield had previously run in an election. Mr. Seguin stated that when Mr. Merrifield ran for office in 2004, he was not the C.O.
- [145] Mr. Seguin stated that he was not aware of any concern about Mr. Merrifield's working in TAG and, in the previous year, having run as a Conservative candidate in a federal election. He stated that he subsequently learned that other officers knew about the nomination meeting before it occurred. He learned this from Supt. Proulx and by reading statements. Mr. Seguin stated that he was not aware that anybody took any steps to prevent Mr. Merrifield from attending the Barrie nomination meeting. He would have expected someone to take action if that person knew of Mr. Merrifield's involvement.
- [146] Mr. Seguin stated that he asked Supt. Proulx whether Mr. Merrifield had submitted a request for leave and he told him to make sure the policy was being followed. He left the issue with Supt. Proulx to follow up and report to C/Supt. Mazerolle.
- [147] Mr. Seguin stated that he was unsure of whether he knew, at the time, that Mr. Merrifield attended the nomination meeting. Mr. Seguin stated that he did not discuss these activities with Insp. Jagoe then. It was probably a year or two afterwards when they discussed it. He recalled that he was at INSET one day and Insp. Jagoe still had the brochure regarding Mr.

Merrifield's nomination meeting attendance. Mr. Seguin stated that he glanced at it but did not read it. He had not seen it previously.

- [148] Mr. Seguin stated that in the end, a review was done. Mr. Merrifield was given a memo dated September 28, 2005, was advised of policy and was reminded of his obligations. The memo resulted in no discipline. Mr. Seguin stated that the memo satisfied him. The issue was resolved. Mr. Seguin testified, "I wasn't concerned that Mr. Merrifield attended the nomination without my consent."

Stronach Investigation - May 19, 2005

- [149] Mr. Merrifield stated that after the nomination meeting, he returned to work on either May 18 or 19, 2005. TAG received a request for an Order in Council check on Belinda Stronach because she was going to be a Liberal cabinet minister. Mr. Merrifield stated that he declined to do the check because he was friends with her.
- [150] Shortly afterwards, Ms. Stronach received a death threat. She had received a number of threatening emails after she crossed the floor and became a Liberal. One of the threats was, "You just signed your death sentence, you German whore." This was taken seriously. A/Sgt. Crane stated that after he returned from holidays, he learned about the death threat. The investigation was assigned to Mr. Merrifield.
- [151] Mr. Merrifield stated that on May 19, 2005, A/Sgt. Crane called him at home. The protective unit was going to extend security to Ms. Stronach and A/Sgt. Crane needed to find her. Mr. Merrifield had Ms. Stronach's cell number. He gave it to A/Sgt. Crane.
- [152] A/Sgt. Crane was the officer who assigned the investigation to Mr. Merrifield. Mr. Merrifield stated that he worked on it for six days. On the first day, he went to Ms. Stronach's constituency office and reviewed many emails. Mr. Merrifield stated that he contacted Ms. Stronach directly on that day to ask her if she was comfortable with his doing the investigation. Mr. Merrifield said that she stated that she had no concerns. She said that she would prefer that he do the investigation because she knew that he would take care of her and her children. Mr. Merrifield said he was going above and beyond expectations. It was about the victim.
- [153] Mr. Merrifield stated that he received information regarding the location of the phone where the death threat had been made. It was a payphone. He went to the area to see if there was any video surveillance. He went to Ms. Stronach's home, spoke to the person responsible for security and made arrangements to install a panic button. He organized a special level response for this. He worked many hours on the investigation. He stated that everyone in TAG was aware that he was handling the investigation. His information was turned into briefing notes that were sent up to his superiors.
- [154] A/Sgt. Crane wondered whether Mr. Merrifield should be working on the file as he had just run for the Conservative nomination in Barrie. A/Sgt. Crane stated that he was concerned about it. His specific concern was that there was a potential for a conflict of interest as Ms. Stronach had gone from being a Conservative to a Liberal. A/Sgt. Crane stated, "You can't have a Conservative candidate guarding a Liberal MP." Furthermore, A/Sgt. Crane stated that he learned that Mr. Merrifield had called Ms. Stronach. Mr. Merrifield said that he called her and that she had no problem with his conducting the investigation. This call raised a red flag with A/Sgt. Crane. The issue was that Mr. Merrifield was seeking the opinion of the complainant. This did not sit well with him. A/Sgt. Crane stated that he told Supt. Proulx about the situation. Supt. Proulx had the same concerns. Therefore, Mr. Merrifield was removed from the Stronach file. It was re-assigned. A/Sgt. Crane said that his instructions were that Mr. Merrifield was not to deal with any VIP visits. All of the files were taken away from him, not just those relating to politics.

- [155] Mr. Merrifield testified that on May 24, 2005 he met with A/Sgt. Crane who told him that he was being removed from the Stronach investigation on Supt. Proulx's instructions. A/Sgt. Crane may have said that this was due to a conflict of interest. The next day he was actually removed from the investigation. Mr. Merrifield stated that he had also been doing a threat assessment for the Royal Family. He was removed from this assessment as well as a Prime Minister's visit.
- [156] Mr. Merrifield testified that he was upset that he had been removed from the investigation and that other work was taken away from him. There was certainly no conflict regarding the Royal Family. Everyone knew that he had been removed from the Stronach death threat investigation. It was unusual. There was an appearance that he had done something wrong.
- [157] Mr. Merrifield stated that Insp. Jagoe alleged he had broken a policy by having direct communication with a victim, Ms. Stronach. He spoke to Sgt. Boos who referred him to the local MPA representative, Sgt. Nicota.
- [158] Supt. Jagoe stated he was concerned that a junior Constable would be phoning a Member of Parliament and having a conversation. He did not feel that this was appropriate. He believed that officers must remain an arm's length from victims. Otherwise, it would appear that Ms. Stronach was deciding who was doing the investigation and this could be viewed as a conflict. Supt. Jagoe stated that he was not aware of any policy that would have prevented Mr. Merrifield from contacting Ms. Stronach.
- [159] Mr. Proulx stated that in February 2005, he was not aware of Mr. Merrifield's past political activities. When he was in charge of TAG, he could not recall deaths threats being made against Prime Minister Martin and President Bush. Later on he became aware that Mr. Merrifield had investigated the threats. He learned that Mr. Merrifield had received a related commendation. He agreed that Mr. Merrifield's 2004 election activities were probably well known. Nobody at that time suggested that there was a conflict. Mr. Proulx stated that if he had known about the 2004 election activities back then, he would have seen them as a conflict. Mr. Proulx said that Mr. Merrifield's running against Prime Minister Martin in 2004 and then at a nomination meeting in 2005 meant that he could not investigate a death threat. He did not know that a nomination meeting takes place at a private party event. He did not see the distinction between this and running in an election.
- [160] Mr. Proulx stated that when he discussed the Stronach matter with A/Sgt. Crane, A/Sgt. Crane said that he felt there was a conflict of interest. Mr. Proulx shared his concern, specifically that Mr. Merrifield was a member of the Conservative party. Most members of the Conservative party were upset with Ms. Stronach. If something were to happen to her, the RCMP's threat assessment would be reviewed. If Mr. Merrifield's name was attached to it, the RCMP would be blamed regardless of whether Mr. Merrifield had done a perfect job. Someone might think he was happy that something happened to her. (Mr. Proulx was confused. He thought Mr. Merrifield was doing a threat assessment. As noted above, he was investigating a death threat.) Mr. Proulx stated that he instructed A/Sgt. Crane to take the file away from Mr. Merrifield. He then asked A/Sgt. Crane what kind of work could be assigned to Mr. Merrifield if he could not work on a political file because of his past. A/Sgt. Crane said "not much". Anyone could make a point of it. They agreed to schedule a meeting on Friday morning in London to discuss the matter. Mr. Proulx stated that prior to the meeting in London, he did not know that Mr. Merrifield had spoken with Ms. Stronach. He said that this heightened the conflict and it was not acceptable.

- [161] Mr. Proulx stated that he had a second conversation with Sgt. Verecchia on May 24, 2005. He wanted to ask her about the Stronach issue and whether he was wrong to think that there was a conflict. Sgt. Verecchia told him that he was correct and that she would send him the policies. She said the conflict could be real, apparent or potential. She sent him a copy of the email that she had received from Mr. Merrifield on February 3, 2004 and the response from Professional Standards.
- [162] Mr. Merrifield said that he explained to Supt. Proulx that he had already spoken to Ms. Stronach and that she had no issue with him carrying out the investigation. Mr. Proulx stated that this was also a conflict. One is not supposed to talk with a Member of Parliament. He stated that if the RCMP does a threat assessment on a U.S. President, the RCMP does not speak to him.
- [163] In his testimony, Mr. Proulx subsequently agreed that Mr. Merrifield was assigned to investigate a death threat against Ms. Stronach. It was not a threat assessment. A threat assessment is about gathering information and determining a threat. He stated that A/Sgt. Crane described it as a threat and risk assessment. Mr. Proulx stated that even if it was only a death threat, he would still have seen a conflict. A/Sgt. Crane said there was a conflict.
- [164] Mr. Proulx agreed that there was no policy that would prohibit a member from speaking to a Minister. Mr. Proulx then changed his testimony and stated that he did not see anything wrong with an officer's contacting a victim of a potential death threat.
- [165] Mr. Proulx stated that his concern was not about Mr. Merrifield's integrity or the quality of his work. It was about what would be perceived if something happened. Mr. Proulx stated that he told Mr. Merrifield that he had asked A/Sgt. Crane to remove him from the Stronach investigation.
- [166] C/Supt. Mazerolle recalled that there was one meeting with Insp. Proulx and C.O. Seguin close to the end of May in C.O. Seguin's office about the issues relating to the Stronach investigation. After the meeting in the C.O.'s office, C/Supt. Mazerolle recalled that Insp. Proulx told him that he intended to remove Mr. Merrifield from TAG and assign him to Criminal Investigations North.
- [167] Mr. Seguin stated that the Stronach investigation was an operational matter and that C/Supt. Mazerolle was taking care of it. He was not sure if there was a policy would prevent Mr. Merrifield from contacting Ms. Stronach. There was perception of conflict and a decision was made to remove Mr. Merrifield from the investigation. He agreed with the decision. He stated that the actions taken were within the authority of the officers who made the decisions. He was not aware that Mr. Merrifield had been taken off a 2005 Royal Family visit. He agreed that this visit was not a political matter.
- [168] Sgt. Verecchia stated that on May 26, 2005, Supt. Proulx sent her a request for guidance regarding the conflict of interest policy and whether Mr. Merrifield had contravened the policy on this issue. He provided Mr. Merrifield's brochure for the Barrie nomination event. Sgt. Verecchia stated that it was not just a coincidence that Supt. Proulx contacted her. He contacted her because he already knew that she had provided advice to Mr. Merrifield in 2004.
- [169] Sgt. Verecchia explained that Supt. Proulx had asked her for the information that she had given to Mr. Merrifield earlier regarding LWOP and political activities. She sent it to him. She understood Supt. Proulx wanted an opinion as to whether Mr. Merrifield had contravened the conflict of interest policy and whether his campaign material was contrary to the requirements in the RCMP Regulations.

[170] Supt. Proulx then sent her an email with respect to Mr. Merrifield's website and information about the Stronach investigation. She told Supt. Proulx that Mr. Merrifield's investigation of Ms. Stronach's death threat was a conflict. He was partisan and his objectivity might be questioned. The RCMP had to be objective especially with respect to political investigations. Sgt. Verecchia stated she believed that objectively, it was an apparent conflict for Mr. Merrifield and the RCMP. If something had happened, Mr. Merrifield's integrity could be questioned and the Force's objectivity could be questioned as well. His involvement in the Stronach investigation created both perceived and apparent conflicts.

[171] Sgt. Verecchia stated that she had some concerns about the material that Supt. Proulx sent her. Mr. Merrifield was not on LWOP at this time and was still working for the RCMP. She was concerned that the pamphlet had been distributed. Mr. Merrifield was speaking against some of the laws of the day, including the gun registry, while not on LWOP. The gun registry was a law of Canada and it had to be enforced. Mr. Merrifield was voicing political opinions and undertaking political activities contrary to the RCMP Regulations and the conflict policy. She discussed four specific concerns with Supt. Proulx:

- (a) speaking about the gun registry;
- (b) the distribution of the campaign material;
- (c) an active website in which it appeared that Mr. Merrifield was campaigning; and
- (d) his involvement in a political investigation with respect to Ms. Stronach.

[172] She stated that he should not be involved in any of them. She stated that she felt Mr. Merrifield had crossed a line, that he was using the RCMP to further his political activities and to sell himself as a nominee. While working as an RCMP officer, he should not have taken a public stance against the government and its existing laws. He had an obligation to enforce the laws and remain objective. Mr. Merrifield was proceeding contrary to the advice that she had given him in 2004.

[173] Sgt. Verecchia stated that section 12.12 F of the Conflict of Interest Policy states that once a member returns from LWOP, the officer is to determine a suitable assignment taking into account political opinions expressed, political impact that may result from the posting and investigations with political overtones being conducted by the proposed unit. Sgt. Verecchia stated that she advised Supt. Proulx that Mr. Merrifield should not be doing any political investigations as it was a conflict.

London Meeting - May 27, 2005

[174] Mr. Merrifield stated that he and A/Sgt. Crane were summoned to a meeting on May 27, 2005 at the London office. He was led to believe that Supt. Proulx wanted to discipline him for his participation in the Barrie nomination meeting and deal with his removal from the Stronach investigation. Two days before the meeting, he contacted Sgt. Nicota, who was a part-time Staff Relations Representative (SRR) because he wanted a SRR with him at the meeting. Mr. Merrifield explained that SRRs help to guide members through policy issues and provide advice regarding grievance matters, among other things.

[175] Mr. Merrifield stated that he met with Sgt. Nicota for an hour. He in turn contacted Sgt. Bohus who had a full-time SRR position. Sgt. Nicota wanted Sgt. Bohus to be at the meeting.

- [176] The meeting was held on May 27, 2005. Mr. Merrifield recalled that he, Supt. Proulx, Sgt. Smith, Sgt. Bohus and Sgt. Nicota attended. The meeting was approximately two hours long and centered around Mr. Merrifield's participation in politics, the Barrie nomination meeting, the Stronach matter and the alleged conflict in TAG. Supt. Proulx asked him if he had obtained LWOP. The meeting started out in a professional manner but deteriorated after Sgt. Bohus excused himself to attend another matter.
- [177] Mr. Merrifield stated that he showed Supt. Proulx s. 3.2 of the Administration Manual, XII.12, the same section that he had shown to A/Sgt. Crane. He said he believed that LWOP was not required for nomination meetings based on his discussion with Sgt. Boos.
- [178] Mr. Merrifield stated that Supt. Proulx became condescending and belligerent as he made a series of allegations: that he was using the Force to advance his political career; that a Conservative policy was in contravention of the Force policy, being the position on the firearms registry; and that the Conservative position on the traditional definition of marriage was hate literature. Mr. Merrifield stated that the views on the traditional definition of marriage were his own. The conversation went in circles. Supt. Proulx attacked his personal integrity. He did not understand or would not accept the difference between running in a nomination meeting which was a private event open to only members of the Conservative Party in contrast to running in a public election. Mr. Merrifield stated that he explained the difference at least twice.
- [179] Mr. Merrifield stated that Supt. Proulx asked him why he had run in the nomination meeting. He explained that it was to protest. Supt. Proulx did not believe that he would be involved only for reasons of ethics and integrity. Supt. Proulx stated that he would have to choose between politics and the RCMP.
- [180] Mr. Merrifield said that he was very upset by Supt. Proulx's accusation that he was using the Force to further his political career. He stated that in his seven years as a police officer, he had been shot at, attacked with a knife and steel bar, run off the road and left for dead. He had a strong commitment to the RCMP.
- [181] At one point, Supt. Proulx stood up and leaned across the table, balancing himself on his fingers. He then went into the partisan aspect of politics and stated that Ms. Stronach was a Liberal and Mr. Merrifield was a Conservative. If anything happened when he was investigating a threat, there would be a big problem. Mr. Merrifield stated that he reminded Supt. Proulx that he had investigated the threat related to Prime Minister Martin who was a Liberal and there was no issue. He disclosed his political views before he became part of TAG. Supt. Proulx stated that he would forward the campaign literature to headquarters for review and he would be looking into it. Mr. Merrifield had the impression that he would be under investigation.
- [182] Mr. Merrifield stated that Supt. Proulx had already made a decision before the meeting started. He told him to clean up his things at TAG and report to Toronto. Mr. Merrifield stated that he felt intimidated. He had worked in the private sector before he became a member of the RCMP. He had not been on the Force long enough to qualify for a pension. He had three young children. The prospect of being unemployed was very stressful.
- [183] Mr. Nicota retired from the Force in August 2009 as a Sergeant. He recalled attending the meeting on May 27, 2005 and said it was two hours long. Going into the meeting, he believed that Mr. Merrifield had followed all of the relevant policies. He was aware that Mr. Merrifield had run as a candidate in Richmond Hill during the 2004 election.
- [184] Mr. Nicota's recollection of the meeting was that it started with a discussion of the Stronach situation. Mr. Merrifield had been investigating a threat to her life. After Sgt.

Bohus left, the meeting turned into an attack on Mr. Merrifield by Supt. Proulx. He started looking at Mr. Merrifield's resume and questioned its validity. It was a trenchant attack on Mr. Merrifield's character, on everything that he had done prior to joining the Force and during his career with the Force. Mr. Nicota recalled that Sgt. Smith quietly took notes. A/Sgt. Crane looked flushed and upset. Supt. Proulx was agitated, his voice was elevated and his tone was sarcastic.

- [185] Mr. Nicota stated that it was the most unusual meeting that he had ever seen in the Force. He said it was like watching a totally unforeseen, bad train wreck. After Sgt. Bohus left, the atmosphere completely changed and the meeting became out of hand. The tone went from professional and collegial to disrespectful. Supt. Proulx stated that he did not believe anything that Mr. Merrifield said about his previous work. He questioned Mr. Merrifield's political motives and asked what he was doing in the Force. Supt. Proulx could not seem to understand the difference between Mr. Merrifield's putting forward his name as candidate at a nomination meeting and actually running for office. Mr. Nicota understood that Mr. Merrifield did not intend to win the nomination meeting. He attended because he had a problem with one of the other candidates.
- [186] Mr. Nicota stated that other people will say that Sgt. Bohus never left the meeting. Mr. Nicota said that they are incorrect and that Sgt. Bohus did leave half way through. He noted this in an email one year later because he found it was suspicious and interesting that Supt. Proulx would change his tone after Sgt. Bohus left. It was as if he waited for Sgt. Bohus to leave and then went into attack mode.
- [187] Mr. Nicota stated that Supt. Proulx's demeanor and questioning was intrusive, inappropriate and unprofessional. He was questioning Mr. Merrifield's campaign literature and waving his hands. He was not behaving the way a Superintendent should behave.
- [188] At the meeting, an issue regarding Cpl. Frith was discussed. Mr. Merrifield believed that Cpl. Frith had been directed to attend the political meeting where Mr. Merrifield was standing as candidate. He was directed to bring back materials and report on the meeting. Mr. Nicota stated that this was a gross violation of RCMP Policy and the law.
- [189] Prior to the meeting, Mr. Nicota thought that the issues between A/Sgt. Crane, Supt. Proulx and Mr. Merrifield could be resolved; however, Supt. Proulx said Mr. Merrifield should choose between politics or the RCMP. Mr. Nicota stated that based on his own experience with the RCMP and how it works, he believed that Supt. Proulx had commenced an investigation. Mr. Nicota stated, "You have a feeling when something just doesn't add up." He stated that after he left the meeting, he wondered where the matter would be going. To him, it seemed like it was heading toward disciplinary action rather than an informal resolution. He stated that Supt. Proulx's manner of dealing with the issues at the meeting came right out of left field and was totally unexpected.
- [190] Mr. Nicota stated that after the May 27, 2005 meeting, he called C.O. Seguin, who was a troop mate and personal friend. He asked C.O. Seguin to contact an officer from outside of the Division to come in and conduct an investigation, to try to unravel what other issues might be at hand. He wanted to make sure C.O. Seguin had all of the information from an independent investigator.
- [191] Sgt. Nicota sent an email later on to SRR Ford and Mr. Merrifield. It states:
- ...in my 32 years, I never witnessed an "Accused" (let alone a serving member of the RCMP) confronted in the manner as Peter MERRIFIELD was subjected to by Supt. PROULX....Mr. PROULX'S manner of questioning was the epitome of harassment and could be used for classic textbook lecture material example.

Supt. PROULX'S questions ridiculed, demeaned and embarrassed
MERRIFIELD.

- [192] Mr. Proulx's recollection of May 27, 2005 was that prior to the meeting, he spoke to Sgt. Bohus. Sgt. Bohus told him, "Be careful with this member. You're treading on thin ice." Sgt. Bohus said that he would support Supt. Proulx at the meeting arranged for May 27, 2005. Mr. Proulx stated he believed that Mr. Merrifield's work on the Stronach investigation was a clear conflict.
- [193] Mr. Proulx stated that he called the May 27, 2005 meeting because he wanted to personally explain to Mr. Merrifield why he had removed him from the Stronach file and also to get his side of the story. Mr. Proulx said that he was considering transferring Mr. Merrifield from TAG and wanted to hear from him. He also wanted to discuss the nomination meeting, the fact that Mr. Merrifield had run without LWOP and the contents of the pamphlet.
- [194] Mr. Proulx stated that at the outset of the meeting, he initiated the discussion and said that he wanted to address three things: running in the election without approval, the Stronach investigation and what to do with Mr. Merrifield with respect to TAG. Mr. Proulx had a very different recollection of the tone of the meeting in contrast to that of Mr. Merrifield and SRR Nicota. He stated that overall the tone of the meeting was very good. There was no shouting or finger pointing. It was a civilized meeting.
- [195] Mr. Proulx stated that he told Mr. Merrifield that he should have had permission from the C.O. to attend the "election". Mr. Merrifield replied that he had no intention to win the nomination. He was just there to speak. The nomination meeting was not an election. Mr. Merrifield stated that A/Sgt. Crane had only asked him whether he would be running in another election. Mr. Proulx said that he told Mr. Merrifield that he was playing on words and that A/Sgt. Crane would not know the difference between a "nomination election" and a federal election. Mr. Merrifield stated that he wanted to speak at the nomination meeting because he had a concern about one of the candidates. He did not want to win the nomination meeting. Mr. Proulx conceded that the tone of the meeting was raised at this point. Mr. Merrifield stated that he had distributed only 300 pamphlets whereas in the previous year, when he was running in the Federal election, he distributed 50,000. Mr. Merrifield stated that he understood he did not need LWOP because the nomination meeting was on a Saturday. Mr. Proulx commented that Mr. Merrifield had invested money in the pamphlets but said he did not want to win. This did not make sense to Mr. Proulx.
- [196] Mr. Proulx told Mr. Merrifield that his website was open and that he was running for election. There was a lot of discussion between the difference between running at a nomination meeting and in an election. Mr. Proulx told Mr. Merrifield he was splitting hairs and that regardless of which it was, he had to be on LWOP. At the same time, Sgt. Nicota was saying that the nomination meeting was not an election. Mr. Proulx stated that voices were raised at this point as three people were trying to talk over each other. Mr. Merrifield was not seeing things the way he did.
- [197] With respect to the pamphlet and the website, Mr. Proulx said he asked Mr. Merrifield about the contents. He stated, "Don't you think you're criticizing the Commissioner if you say you're going scrap the gun registry? You're a member, you can't do it." Mr. Proulx stated that he was not a politician and that he did not follow politics at all. He had no idea of what the Conservative platform was for the upcoming election. In the pamphlet, Mr. Merrifield stated that he had received numerous awards. Mr. Proulx stated that he asked Mr. Merrifield about his awards and that they discussed a couple of them. The pamphlet said that Mr. Merrifield had worked across North America. Mr. Merrifield told him that he had travelled as an Air Marshall to numerous locations. Mr. Proulx said, "Don't you think you're misleading your constituents?" Mr. Merrifield said no.

- [198] On the last page of the pamphlet, there was a statement that the traditional definition of marriage would be defended. Mr. Proulx stated he was concerned about this because an RCMP officer has to treat everybody equally. He stated to Mr. Merrifield, "Doesn't this show your views against gay marriage?" He also asked Mr. Merrifield, "Didn't you think that this was in conflict with your position?" Mr. Merrifield was not on LWOP. Mr. Proulx stated that Mr. Merrifield did not see a conflict in any of these issues. Mr. Proulx stated that as far as he was concerned, nominations and elections were all in the same group. They were the same thing. Mr. Merrifield had different definitions.
- [199] Mr. Proulx stated that he may have questioned Mr. Merrifield about his objectivity. At the end of the meeting, he stated that he was going to forward the campaign materials to headquarters for review.
- [200] Mr. Proulx stated that he subsequently had a telephone conversation with Supt. Dubeau. Mr. Dubeau told him to be careful about issues relating to political activity and human rights. Politics was a touchy issue in the Force.
- [201] Mr. Proulx said that he stated to Mr. Merrifield that ninety-five percent of TAG's work dealt with politicians. TAG members have to interview them. It was important to get the best information available from the subject of a threat. Mr. Proulx stated that they might be reluctant to give information to Mr. Merrifield. He was recognizable because he was a candidate for three nomination meetings and one election.
- [202] Mr. Proulx stated that Mr. Merrifield told him that he wanted to continue to work at INSET. Mr. Proulx said that INSET was not in line of command. He told Mr. Merrifield that TAG was an issue and that he did not see Mr. Merrifield staying there. Mr. Proulx said the meeting did not provide him with any evidence that he could leave Mr. Merrifield at TAG. Mr. Proulx stated that at the end of the meeting, he told Mr. Merrifield that he would make a decision about it and get back to him. He did not threaten Mr. Merrifield's employment. He said, "You've chosen a hobby that comes in conflict with TAG duties. You can't be on TAG." He stated that he never said that Mr. Merrifield would have to choose between the RCMP and politics.
- [203] Mr. Proulx stated that he returned to his office and made some notes of the meeting. Neither Sgt. Bohus nor Sgt. Nicota came to him on that day to raise any concerns about the meeting.
- [204] Mr. Smith retired from the RCMP in April, 2008 as a Staff Sergeant. He now provides contract services to the RCMP.
- [205] Mr. Smith stated that, prior to retirement, when he was in charge of Criminal Analysis, he worked at London headquarters. His line officer was Supt. Proulx.
- [206] Mr. Smith stated that he did not know Mr. Merrifield until spring 2005. He did not know that Mr. Merrifield had been involved in politics, that he had attended a political event without LWOP or that he was involved in the Stronach investigation.
- [207] He first met Mr. Merrifield at the May 27, 2005 meeting. Supt. Proulx asked him to attend in absence of another member, Sgt. Gilchrist. He recalled that copies of pages from Mr. Merrifield's website and a pamphlet were at the meeting.

- [208] Mr. Smith recalled that Mr. Merrifield responded to Supt. Proulx's concerns. He said emphatically that it was not his intention to run for nomination. He was there just to speak publicly to members of the Conservative party. He had concerns about one particular candidate that was running and wanted to speak about him.
- [209] Mr. Smith stated that the exchange between Supt. Proulx and Mr. Merrifield went on for some time and became heated. The tone was argumentative on both sides. Mr. Merrifield may have felt that his integrity was being challenged. He did not recall Supt. Proulx's standing up and leaning over the table during the meeting. There was a perception that Mr. Merrifield was not being honest and forthright.
- [210] Mr. Smith stated that Supt. Proulx was concerned about Mr. Merrifield's exercising poor judgment. Supt. Proulx said that Mr. Merrifield would have to make a choice between his career or politics. Mr. Smith testified that Supt. Proulx did not say Mr. Merrifield could not work at TAG, only that he was considering it. He said he would consult with various policy centers in Ottawa. The meeting lasted approximately two and a half hours and ended at this point.
- [211] Mr. Smith stated that he would expect steps to be taken against an officer who was not forthright with a superior officer. No Code of Conduct proceedings were initiated against Mr. Merrifield, nor was he disciplined in any way regarding the issues discussed at the meeting.
- [212] Mr. Smith stated that Sgt. Nicota's comments in his email to SRR Ford were false.
- [213] Mr. Smith stated that Supt. Proulx was on leave in August 2005 and previously had assigned to him full acting duties as Superintendent in charge of the Criminal Intelligence branch. He prepared an email dated August 12, 2005 to Cpl. Dunn, the OIC of the Conflict Resolution Team. He had obtained a cassette video regarding Mr. Merrifield's appearance on the Michael Coran radio show ten months earlier, on October 19, 2004. Mr. Smith stated that Supt. Proulx had asked him to send the tape to Cpl. Dunn for review because Supt. Proulx wanted her comments.
- [214] Mr. Merrifield had another performance review for the period August 1, 2004 to August 1, 2005 which included the time period when he participated on the Coren show, when he ran in the Barrie nomination meeting, and when he was at TAG. Mr. Smith noted that in the review, Supt. Proulx stated, "Cst. Merrifield is a great asset to the RCMP. His leadership skills and overall communication abilities were quite apparent during his stay with TAG." A/Sgt. Crane stated:

[Cst. Merrifield's] personable character, dedicated work ethic and tireless ambition are several of the notable qualities of this member...Though only in the Force for a limited number of years, he has continually stepped to the forefront and exhibited a willingness to apply himself to the tasks presented to him. He assimilated into the TAG quickly and was tasked to become a team leader and develop a program to establish a balanced reporting of the seven Strategic Criminal Extremist Groups...He was also the lead investigator involving an individual who was sending threatening letters to the Prime Minister Canada/President of the U.S. This file involved several local Police Services and a foreign agency. Cst. Merrifield directed the file and mentored several other members who had less experience in criminal code investigations. The file was concluded with charges and the unit benefited by his professionalism and mentoring. Cst. Merrifield is a forward thinking individual who seeks innovation and solutions to resolve operational requirements.

- [215] Regarding the questions that Supt. Proulx asked Mr. Merrifield in the London meeting, Mr. Seguin agreed that if Supt. Proulx had questioned Mr. Merrifield about the pamphlet's contents, this would amount to a sensitive sector investigation because the questions would be about a private political event. Mr. Seguin stated that questions should have been asked about policy compliance. Mr. Merrifield should not have been asked about the contents of the pamphlet.
- [216] Mr. Seguin stated that his direction to Supt. Proulx was to follow up with respect to the Administrative Manual, as to whether Mr. Merrifield sought authority to attend the nomination meeting. He was not aware that an Internal Complaint file had been opened nor was he aware of the actions that Supt. Proulx was taking. He knew that no actions were ultimately taken with respect to Mr. Merrifield's failure to obtain LWOP to attend the nomination meeting. Mr. Seguin said that there was no Code of Conduct investigation with respect to the LWOP issue because it was not a big deal. Mr. Merrifield's comments on the Coran radio show were also not a big deal. He expected that there would be follow up on the LWOP issue and that it would be addressed.
- [217] Mr. Merrifield stated that after the May 27, 2005 meeting, he had a lot of medical issues. He had headaches and dizziness. He was nauseous and felt very stressed and intimidated. He was fearful for his employment. He felt that Supt. Proulx was targeting him. He felt isolated from his peers and most members of the Force. He stated that there is a perception of two tiered justice in the Force: one for Commissioned ranks and one for the others. Those who are not commissioned officers fear reprisal for stepping out of line.
- [218] Mr. Merrifield stated that his colleagues perceived that he had done something wrong. He was stripped of his investigative role in TAG. A/Sgt. Crane had told people that he was in trouble. After that, he was transferred. It was an embarrassing, stressful situation. It left him in doubt about his future with the Force.

Criminal Intelligence - June 2005

- [219] Mr. Merrifield stated that in June 2005, Supt. Proulx transferred him from TAG to Toronto North Criminal Intelligence. It had no vacancies. He was considered "surplus to establishment." This unit was under Supt. Proulx's line of command. Mr. Merrifield stated that he had no choice in the transfer. He discussed it with Sgt. Nicota. He asked Insp. Jagoe if he could stay on the investigative side of INSET where there were vacancies. Nobody had said that the conflict concern extended beyond TAG's work. Even though INSET was under Insp. Jagoe's command, not Supt. Proulx's command, Insp. Jagoe said that it was Supt. Proulx's decision.
- [220] Mr. Merrifield stated that the other members in Criminal Intelligence were gracious and supportive. He became a recruiter of confidential informants and a source handler. The investigations were restricted to criminal enterprise, organized crime, biker gangs, immigration and passports. He obtained approval to probe intelligence in areas of his interest. This included criminal organizations and firearms, and to identify high risk gangs using smuggled firearms.
- [221] Mr. Merrifield stated that there was a homicide at the Phoenix night club in Toronto. He had obtained related confidential information about firearms smuggling. Some individuals were stopped at the border and were arrested. Mr. Merrifield stated that while he was travelling to Niagara Falls to interview them, INSET asked him to return. Mr. Merrifield believed that this was an interference with the performance of his duties. He had top level security clearance. He was never told the reason why he was called off the interview.

The Bob Pritchard Radio Show - July 9, 2005

- [222] Mr. Merrifield stated that in the summer of 2005, he had knee surgery and was off work. Shortly after the terrorist attacks in London, England, he was contacted by an acquaintance to participate in a talk show regarding the history of terrorism. He agreed to do it but said clearly that he could not be identified as a member of the RCMP nor would he speak in any official capacity. He spoke on the radio as a private citizen.
- [223] Mr. Merrifield stated that he was not aware of s. 1.1, Part 27 of the Operations Manual which stated that all media contacts were to be reported to the detachment or unit commander and to a Division Media Relations non-commissioned officer as soon as possible.
- [224] Mr. Merrifield recalled commenting on the talk show that Al Qaeda indicated that Canada was a potential target for terrorism. This was not a secret. It was widely reported.
- [225] Mr. Merrifield stated that Supt. Proulx called him at home the next week. He accused him of disclosing top secret information. Mr. Merrifield stated that he tried to reason with Supt. Proulx. He said that the information that he had provided was about the historical development of terrorism which he had learned from self-study. Mr. Merrifield said that he had not disclosed any RCMP information. Supt. Proulx was not satisfied. He said several times that C.O. Seguin and C/Supt. Mazerolle were very upset. He recited several complaints that Insp. Jagoe had made and said that Insp. Jagoe was making calls about him. Mr. Merrifield said that the conversation was direct, terse and accusatory. Supt. Proulx said that there would be an investigation and disciplinary proceedings.
- [226] Mr. Merrifield stated that disclosing top secret information would be a violation of the Security of Information Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. O-5 (SOIA). The penalty for this offence was up to 14 years of imprisonment. The only person who could investigate this was the officer in charge of INSET, being Insp. Jagoe. This represented a glaring conflict because he had made the complaint and he would be investigating it.
- [227] Regarding the Pritchard show, Supt. Jagoe testified that he was on his way to work one morning in July 2005, after Mr. Merrifield had been transferred to Criminal Intelligence, when he received a phone call from Cpl. Oliver asking him if he was listening to the radio. He said that Mr. Merrifield was doing an interview on the radio and that he was talking about national security. Supt. Jagoe said that when he got to the office he called Supt. Proulx to ask him if he was aware of it. He was not. Supt. Jagoe stated that his immediate concern was national security. There are clear protocols and processes that have to be followed to do media interviews. National Headquarters was very concerned about providing a message in a consistent manner. It wanted only certain people to speak on behalf of the RCMP. Supt. Jagoe said he thought that Mr. Merrifield should have obtained the approvals to do an interview. He knew that Mr. Merrifield had not sought approval through him.
- [228] Supt. Jagoe received a recording of the show from Supt. Proulx. He listened to the entire interview. Mr. Merrifield was described as a consultant, someone who works within the field. He was not identified as an RCMP member but his name was clearly mentioned. Supt. Jagoe stated he was concerned because the discussion was about the history of terrorism. There were questions about Toronto and Canada as targets for terrorists. He believed that this information was getting into some very sensitive areas. The fact that Mr.

Merrifield was not identified as member of the Force did not allay his concerns. He was readily identifiable as a member and therefore his comments would be viewed as credible.

- [229] Supt. Jagoe stated that shortly after listening to the CD, he wrote a memo dated July 20, 2005 to Supt. Proulx in which he outlined his concerns. He stated he believed that Mr. Merrifield was aware that approval was required to do media interviews because S/Sgt. King had spoken to him about this shortly after his arrival at INSET. He believed that Mr. Merrifield had spoken about sensitive topics. Even if the information was available in the public domain, having a member validate it was potentially harmful to the Force's ability to collect information in the future.
- [230] Supt. Jagoe stated that people who work in the intelligence field at the RCMP are bound by SOIA. They are required to sign documents stating that they will not talk about secret information in the public domain. Supt. Jagoe stated that after he listened to the CD, he concluded that Mr. Merrifield had not violated the legislation. Nevertheless, he had concerns.
- [231] Supt. Jagoe stated that the information that Mr. Merrifield had provided on the radio show was widely known but in the circumstances, Mr. Merrifield, as a member of the RCMP, was validating the information for the public. Supt. Jagoe stated that he was not aware of any investigation that had been done to determine whether Mr. Merrifield had violated SOIA. He was not aware of any steps taken by Supt. Proulx after their conversation. He was not involved in this matter after he spoke to Supt. Proulx. He agreed that in the briefing note from Supt. Proulx to the Commissioner dated January 17, 2006, Supt. Proulx stated, "Merrifield didn't reveal any classified information." Supt. Jagoe stated that he did not know that Supt. Proulx had made this determination.
- [232] Mr. Merrifield stated that while he was at Criminal Intelligence, Supt. Proulx attended at the unit to give a briefing about an upcoming restructuring. The meeting took place in a small boardroom. All the members of the unit were there. Supt. Proulx said, "All of you have a job, except for you Peter." His expectation was that everyone would toe the line. Then he said, "You know what toeing the line is like eh Peter?" Mr. Merrifield stated that he took this as a reference to his adhering to the Conservative platform. He said that Supt. Proulx told a story about when he was a non-commissioned officer and how a commissioned officer was rude to him. Supt. Proulx stated that he was subsequently promoted and got even. Mr. Merrifield stated that this sense of retaliation bothered him. Supt. Proulx did not spend any time with him personally and did not say anything about the disciplinary investigation that he had threatened earlier.
- [233] A/Sgt. Crane stated he had no involvement in Mr. Merrifield's reassignment out of TAG. He was not consulted about where Mr. Merrifield should go. He stated he did not talk with anyone about it and had nothing to do with it. He said it was up to Insp. Jagoe to determine whether Mr. Merrifield could go to the investigative side of INSET. A/Sgt. Crane stated that he was not prepared to continue to work with Mr. Merrifield after he misrepresented his intentions. He had asked Mr. Merrifield if he would be running in an election and Mr. Merrifield said no. He put his name up for the nomination. At that point the trust was broken. He stated that Mr. Merrifield had to work somewhere else, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Merrifield told him that he was just at the meeting to make a speech. A/Sgt. Crane said that Mr. Merrifield was transferred because he participated in the nomination meeting. He did not recall asking for Mr. Merrifield to be removed from TAG. It was not within his purview to do this. A/Sgt. Crane stated that he had nothing to do with the transfer and that it was Supt. Proulx's decision based on the information that he collected.

- [234] Supt. Jagoe stated that even though he did not know how Supt. Proulx was going to deal with his concerns and even though there was no discussion with Mr. Merrifield about the information provided on the radio show, he decided that Mr. Merrifield was not coming back to INSET. In addition, there was the situation with Ms. Stronach. Supt. Jagoe believed that Mr. Merrifield's contacting her directly and asking her if it was okay to conduct the investigation was inappropriate. In Supt. Jagoe's opinion, Mr. Merrifield showed very poor judgment.
- [235] Supt. Jagoe stated that he did not discuss his concerns about Mr. Merrifield with the officers who administered Criminal Intelligence because he did not want to tarnish Mr. Merrifield's reputation. Regardless of whether a Code of Conduct proceeding had been initiated, it did not alter his belief that Mr. Merrifield had poor judgment.
- [236] C/Supt. Mazerolle took some notes regarding Mr. Merrifield's remaining in TAG or potentially being transferred to INSET. His note dated June 2, 2005 states "Jagoe called to say he tried to accommodate Merrifield at INSET." C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he took this to mean that Mr. Merrifield was seeking a position at INSET. The note went on to say, "he was concerned about the review and hoped the C.O. in CROPS knew what they were doing." C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that this was about the pamphlet. He knew that Mr. Merrifield wanted to be in INSET. He did not recall having any concerns about Mr. Merrifield's working at INSET.
- [237] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that several months later, Insp. Jagoe told him that he would not have Mr. Merrifield at INSET. He said that Mr. Merrifield has not been truthful with him. Insp. Jagoe did not tell him whether he or Supt. Proulx had asked Mr. Merrifield for an explanation.
- [238] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated from June 2, 2005, Mr. Merrifield wanted to return to INSET and that INSET probably had vacancies. C/Supt. Mazerolle was asked whether there was any reason why Mr. Merrifield could not return to INSET. He stated it was not his call. There were no findings against Mr. Merrifield. By this time, Insp. Jagoe said that Mr. Merrifield could not go to INSET. He would not support it. Insp. Jagoe would not support it then or even in 2006.
- [239] Mr. Proulx stated that on May 30, he was not sure whether he had authority to remove Cst. Merrifield from TAG. He met with Insp. Brine, who was in charge of Human Resources in London, to ask him what he could do and what the best approach would be. Mr. Proulx stated that he learned that he could transfer Mr. Merrifield to another one of his units as long as it did not involve a lot of extra travel for Mr. Merrifield. He knew that Mr. Merrifield lived in Barrie at that time and that the drive to Criminal Intelligence in Newmarket was less than the drive to Steeles where TAG was located. Mr. Proulx stated that he could not transfer Mr. Merrifield to INSET because it was not one of his units. That would require full staffing transfer. Mr. Proulx stated that he decided to transfer Mr. Merrifield to Criminal Intelligence. He was still being paid through TAG. It was a temporary, good solution. It allowed him to properly assess the matter before making a final or radical decision. Mr. Proulx stated that he also spoke to C.O. Seguin and C/Supt. Mazerolle on May 30.
- [240] Mr. Proulx stated that on June 1, he travelled to Toronto and met with Mr. Merrifield and A/Sgt. Crane. He confirmed that he was transferring Mr. Merrifield to Criminal Intelligence temporarily. He explained that the reason for this was because there were hardly any duties for Mr. Merrifield in TAG. Mr. Merrifield was concerned about the optics of the transfer and what others would think. Mr. Proulx stated that he met with the other people in TAG to advise them that he was transferring Mr. Merrifield to Newmarket temporarily and that he had done nothing wrong. He was not under investigation.

[241] Mr. Proulx stated that Mr. Merrifield was in fact not under investigation. He had not interviewed anyone and had all of the information he needed. He knew that Criminal Intelligence in Newmarket was busy but there were no Constable vacancies there.

[242] Mr. Proulx stated that he sent an email to A/Sgt. Crane to ask him some questions. A/Sgt. Crane answered the questions in his email to Supt. Proulx. Mr. Proulx stated that he wanted to be precise in the memo that he would be sending to C/Supt. Brown, head of Human Resources for Central Region.

[243] Mr. Proulx stated that on June 6, he received another email from A/Sgt. Crane. Mr. Proulx stated that his writing is at the bottom of this email. It was a summary of the information that he had. It states:

Early March 2005 not running, May 13 NCO found out, PMRTO
[regular time off] 14 NOM (lost) no intention of winning a seat 300 pamphlets delegate, website open April 29, no LWOP as per last year's running from NCPC [National Compensation Policy Centre]
SGT Boos not of opinion that AM [administrative manual] 2.5.H.3
special leave applied.

[244] Mr. Proulx stated that on June 7, 2005, he sent his email to C/Supt. Brown. He did not fully understand the various types of leave without pay. He set out the issue in his memo and figured Human Resources could make a ruling. Making this type of decision was not his job. Mr. Proulx set out four questions:

1. By his actions has Constable Peter Merrifield contravened the RCMP regulation 58.4(1) taking into the account the policy ruling from 2004? This includes reactivating its website and distributing pamphlets.
2. By his "public" views on certain topics as outlined in his campaign platform, has he placed himself in a conflict of interest situation?
3. Should the special leave of 2004 be modified to reflect two (2) periods of LWOP personal leave as per AM.II.5.S.5? Meaning, Constable Merrifield's entitlement for two periods of LWOP in his career has been expanded. [sic expended]
4. By his actions, has Constable Merrifield contravened the RCMP regulation 56.1 and impaired his ability to be impartial with a view to work within national security investigations within the RCMP (INSET)?

[245] This memo shows that Supt. Proulx thought that Mr. Merrifield originally had special LWOP and wondered if it should be classified as personal needs. This is the opposite of what happened.

[246] Mr. Proulx said that he did not initiate a Code of Conduct investigation regarding the fact that Mr. Merrifield attended a nomination meeting without LWOP. He stated that he felt it was a misinterpretation of policy. It was not a conduct matter. He saw it as an administrative issue.

[247] Mr. Proulx stated that he made a decision to transfer Mr. Merrifield out of TAG. Mr. Merrifield was concerned about how this would be perceived. Mr. Proulx stated that he wanted to make sure it was not perceived negatively. He recalled making an announcement. He could not recall who was there. He thought there were five members in TAG.

- [248] Mr. Proulx was asked whether he could have seconded Mr. Merrifield to INSET with Insp. Jagoe's concurrence. He stated that Insp. Brine told him that he could transfer Mr. Merrifield within only his unit. He agreed that Mr. Merrifield had asked to go to INSET but he did not ask Insp. Brine about it. He did not recall asking Insp. Jagoe whether he would accommodate it.
- [249] Mr. Proulx stated that in June 2005, he did not think that the 2004 LWOP coding issue had been fixed. He did not know whether it would be re-coded to the kind of leave that a member could take only two times. He did not really understand LWOP.
- [250] Sgt. Sim is a serving member of the RCMP. He has worked in the Criminal Intelligence section since 2003. He worked with Mr. Merrifield when he was there in 2005 along with Cst. Brown. He recalled that Mr. Merrifield first came into the section in the summer of 2005. At that time, Sgt. Penny was the OIC of the Criminal Intelligence section. When Mr. Merrifield was transferred to the Criminal Intelligence section he was "surplus to establishment" meaning that there was no vacancy in the section.
- [251] Sgt. Sim knew that Mr. Merrifield had previously been at TAG. Sgt. Sim recalled that he and Cst. Brown were told to take over a file relating to threats against Belinda Stronach. Mr. Merrifield had been the previous investigator. Sgt. Sim understood that there was some conflict of interest with Mr. Merrifield and the file.
- [252] Sgt. Sim stated that he and Cst. Brown were handling human sources and getting information from them. They introduced Mr. Merrifield to their sources. Sgt. Sim said that Mr. Merrifield had a knack for intelligence work. He was one of the best. His work was exemplary. He was invaluable to the section, especially with respect to intelligence probes regarding criminal groups. Sgt. Sim stated that they never had to explain anything to him.
- [253] Mr. Brown retired from the RCMP as a Constable. He first met Mr. Merrifield when he and Sgt. Sim were assigned the Stronach file. He stated that he did not know why Mr. Merrifield was transferred from TAG to Criminal Intelligence. He thought that something was going on between Mr. Merrifield and his superiors.
- [254] Mr. Brown stated that at Criminal Intelligence, he, Sgt. Sim and Mr. Merrifield were developing sources and they were working on issues relating to guns. Mr. Brown stated that Mr. Merrifield was innovative and sharp. He was good at getting information out of people who did not want to provide it.
- [255] Supt. Proulx stated that he received a phone call from Insp. Jagoe on July 11, 2005. Mr. Merrifield had been on the Bob Pritchard show on Saturday July 9, 2005. He understood that Mr. Merrifield had talked for a few hours on counter-terrorism and Insp. Jagoe had some concerns about it. He did not know why Mr. Merrifield would do this. He told Insp. Jagoe that he would look into it, get a copy of the tape and listen to it and then speak to Mr. Merrifield.
- [256] Mr. Proulx stated that the RCMP is sensitive about public speaking. Members were not allowed to go out and speak on their own initiative. Public speaking on local issues had to be authorized by a line officer or him. Public speaking on national issues had to be authorized by the C.O. The C.O. should have authorized this interview.
- [257] Mr. Proulx stated that he researched the show on the internet. He was able to listen to the first part of it and recognized Mr. Merrifield's voice. He had identified himself as a consultant in terrorism. The whole interview was not available on the website.

- [258] Mr. Proulx then called Sgt. Penny, the officer in charge of Criminal Intelligence where Mr. Merrifield was working. He wanted to know whether Sgt. Penny was aware of the interview. Sgt. Penny told him that it was not the first time that Mr. Merrifield had spoken. He said that Supt. Proulx only needed to Google Mr. Merrifield's name and he would find other occasions. Sgt. Penny told Supt. Proulx that he had not authorized it.
- [259] Mr. Proulx then called Mr. Merrifield at home where he was recovering from knee surgery. Mr. Merrifield said that Bob Pritchard was a friend of his and he had spoken on the show on Saturday. He stated that Bob Pritchard had called him 45 minutes in advance. Mr. Proulx told Mr. Merrifield he should not have done it because terrorism is a sensitive issue and public speaking on the issue had to be pre-approved. Mr. Proulx stated that he told Mr. Merrifield that Insp. Jagoe was very concerned and that he would have to listen to the tape and determine whether Mr. Merrifield's comments were from open sources. His concern was that people who listened to the show would want to identify Mr. Merrifield. They would Google him and they would find out that he was an RCMP officer. They would think his comments were coming from the RCMP. Mr. Merrifield had to refrain from doing this without proper authorization.
- [260] Mr. Proulx stated that the next morning he sent an email about the interview to Insp. Schmidt (because C/Supt. Mazerolle was on holidays) and to C.O. Seguin to give them some notice. Mr. Proulx stated that he copied the email to Insp. Jagoe keep him updated.
- [261] Mr. Proulx stated that on July 13, 2005, Mr. Merrifield called him and wanted a clarification of their discussion. He asked if he was under investigation. Mr. Proulx stated that he was not but he had to ascertain that Mr. Merrifield had not divulged any secrets in the interview.
- [262] On July 18, 2005, Supt. Proulx received the DVD of the show. A copy of it was made and sent to Insp. Jagoe so that he could listen to it and determine whether Mr. Merrifield said anything that was top secret. Mr. Proulx testified that in his view, it was a huge conflict of interest for a member to speak about national security in the media. He was concerned that Mr. Merrifield might have released top secret information to the public.
- [263] On the same day, Supt. Proulx sent an email to Sgt. Paradis. He wanted a transcript of the show and wanted to know if a search could be done to see if Mr. Merrifield had participated in other shows. In addition, Supt. Proulx wanted to know if Mr. Merrifield had permission to speak on these shows and whether he did this regularly.
- [264] On July 18 or 20, 2005, Supt. Proulx received an email from Sgt. Paradis. She advised him that she had requested a transcript and could not identify any other shows in her search through the media system. Mr. Proulx stated that he received the transcript and read it before July 27, 2005.
- [265] Mr. Proulx stated that by July 21, 2005 he had not received an answer from C/Supt. Brown regarding his email dated June 7, 2005 setting out the four questions. He sent a follow up email. Mr. Proulx testified that he was in the process of cataloguing the other shows and they would be forwarded to C/Supt. Brown. The tape was being analyzed to determine if there was a Code of Conduct breach. He did not know if anything on the tape was outside of public knowledge. Mr. Proulx stated that regardless of whether Mr. Merrifield had released information that was not public, he was still considering whether Mr. Merrifield had breached the Code of Conduct.

[266] Mr. Proulx stated that he did not order an investigation under Part IV of the Code of Conduct at that time. He believed that the matter could be resolved at the lowest level and that this was preferable because Code investigations “make people uneasy.” At that point, he had not made a final decision yet as to whether a Code of Conduct investigation was warranted and was still waiting for an answer from C/Supt. Brown. He thought that talking about national security publicly without authorization might have been a breach of the Code.

[267] Mr. Proulx stated that on July 26, 2005, he received a copy of two emails between from Supt. Trueman and Sgt. Davis of Professional Standards and Employee Relations. He did not know who Sgt. Davis was. It appears that Sgt. Davis was providing advice to Supt. Trueman regarding the relevant policy sections to consider.

[268] On July 27, 2005, Supt. Proulx sent a memo to Supt. Trueman in Ottawa. It states, “As per my discussion with Cpl. Dunn of your unit last week, here is a summary of the preliminary research I have conducted on the parallel activities of Cst. Peter Merrifield as a “panelist” or as a “host” of a radio/TV show.” Supt. Proulx provided details regarding Mr. Merrifield’s speaking on the Coran show, on the Pritchard show and at a B’nai Brith event. He stated:

I strongly believe that Mr. Merrifield has placed himself in a conflict of interest situation by appearing on those shows and may cause some embarrassment for the RCMP as a result of his views, actions or comments. However, I am seeking your view on this from a National Policy Center’s perspective regarding the “Conflict of Interest” policy/guidelines.” Transcripts and media articles were attached to the memo.

[269] Supt. Trueman was located at the National Policy Center and was an expert on conflict issues. Mr. Proulx stated that he wanted his advice before making a harsh decision. Mr. Proulx stated that he sent an email to Supt. Trueman dated July 27, 2005 with a number of attachments. One was the end of the transcript of the Pritchard show. He was seeking review from the National Policy Centre with respect to conflict issues. The fourth paragraph in the memo noted the B’nai Brith panel discussion on February 2, 2005. Supt. Proulx stated in the memo to Supt. Trueman that Mr. Merrifield had attended a panel with police chiefs and was referred to as a security expert with RCMP’s INSET. Mr. Proulx said that he was seeking advice from Supt. Trueman because Mr. Merrifield had appeared on other shows. Mr. Proulx stated, “I’m not a Code of Conduct guy. I wanted to take a different approach with other actions.”

The Secret File 2005-1117

[270] On July 26 2005, Supt. Proulx opened a file marked “Secret”. It was coded as a Professional Standards matter, “XX82”. The word “Secret” was written on the file jacket. Mr. Merrifield stated that he was never served with notice of a Professional Standards investigation relating to this file. He obtained this file jacket in 2014 on the eve of trial from the Professional Standards unit, (which investigates allegations of misconduct made against members), only because he made an access to information request after several years of litigation. This document was not produced by the Attorney General. There were no contents in the file jacket.

[271] Mr. Proulx stated that he had a number of documents regarding the inquiries that he was making with respect to Mr. Merrifield. On July 25 or 26, 2005, he gave all of the documents to his assistant, Ms. Robson, and asked her to open an official file. He was going away on holidays and wanted all of the documents to be accessible to others while he was away. He explained that an Occurrence Report (form 2500) is the first page of any file that is opened. An Occurrence Report was prepared for this file. In the upper right hand corner there is a file number, 2005-1117. In the left hand corner, there is a reported date which is July 26, 2005. An "OSR" classification is noted on the document. Mr. Proulx did not know what OSR stood for. He stated that he reviewed a code cheat sheet with Ms. Robson and decided that the file would be coded XX82 which indicates an internal complaint against a RCMP member. He chose this classification because Insp. Jagoe had brought some concerns to him regarding Mr. Merrifield's participation in the radio talk show. The form shows that the complaint was "taken by Supt. Marc Proulx". In the details section, two allegations are set out being, "S-1 alleged to seek federal election nomination seat without prior authorization" and "S-1 alleged to have appeared on TV and radio talk shows discussing national security terrorism without prior authorization". Mr. Proulx stated that he provided this information to Ms. Robson. At the bottom of the form on the left is a due date, September 14, 2005. This is a diary date for the file to come up for review.

- [272] Mr. Proulx stated that his initials are on the file jacket. In the middle at the bottom it says "05-10-05" and there is a slash across it. Mr. Proulx stated that this shows the date that the file was concluded. This was the day after Supt. Proulx had given Mr. Merrifield the administrative memo setting out his expectations.
- [273] "Secret" is written in the centre of the file jacket. Mr. Proulx stated that secret files can be accessed by only certain people. He did not know why this file was considered secret. He stated that he did not write this word on the file. He was not aware of any special coding for a Code of Conduct investigation. There were no Occurrence Reports (16-24) in the file because it was not an investigation file. Mr. Proulx explained that this was an administrative file and was used to hold documents in order to keep track of them.
- [274] Mr. Proulx stated that he did not know why the file was marked secret. Mr. Proulx then stated that he did know why the file was marked secret. A security classification on a file is related to the highest document in the file. If there was a top secret document in a file, even if it was only one out of five documents, then the file has to be classified as top secret. Mr. Proulx then stated that there were a few pages in this file that were classified as secret and this is why the notation Secret was placed on the file.
- [275] Although Mr. Proulx initially testified that the Secret file was simply a file to hold documents and that he had advised Mr. Merrifield that he was not under investigation, he subsequently stated that he had carried out a fact-finding investigation. He denied that he interviewed Mr. Merrifield at the London meeting on May 27, 2005. He described it as a discussion between a boss and an employee.
- [276] Mr. Proulx did not know that the Secret file was not produced until 2014, on the eve of trial. He had no explanation for this. He never indicated to Mr. Smith, the person in charge of gathering the documents for this action, that a document might be missing.
- [277] Sgt. Verecchia examined file XX82 and the related occurrence report. She stated that XX82 means there was an internal complaint made by Supt. Proulx and that one of the allegations was "alleged to seek federal election and nomination seat without prior authorization". In her view, this meant that a Code of Conduct investigation was underway.
- [278] Sgt. Nicota reviewed the Occurrence Report with respect to the Secret file. He recognized it and stated that it is a form that commences an investigation. It shows that there was an internal complaint against a member. Supt. Proulx had opened the file and Mr. Merrifield was the subject of the investigation. Mr. Nicota also reviewed the file jacket. He stated that he was familiar with it. He said that it was curious that the file had an access restriction. Sgt. Nicota was familiar with the classification of documents for the RCMP. He testified that a secret file denotes a national security investigation. An investigation against a member should fall within the administrative or criminal side. An "A" file is a confidential file, a "B" File is a secret file and a "C" file is a threat to life file. Sgt. Nicota stated that the fact that "Secret" was written on the file folder shows that someone believed the allegations were a threat to national security. It indicates a very sensitive investigation. Sgt. Nicota stated that he would expect to see occurrence reports, exhibit reports, surveillance, investigators' comments and evidence in a file like this. An investigative report (Form 16-24) outlines every action taken by an investigator. It is a mandatory form. Without it, one does not know what has occurred in the investigation.

- [279] Supt. Jagoe stated that he would expect to find investigative reports and exhibit reports (Form 16-24) in this type of file. These types of allegations are investigated by the Professional Standards unit. They maintain the documents and hold them separately.
- [280] C.O. Seguin testified that he was not familiar with the Secret file and did not recall if Supt. Proulx had told him that he had opened such a file. C.O. Seguin stated that he had never previously seen the related Occurrence Report. The purpose of such a report was to collect data for the opening of an operational file. He had no involvement in the opening of this file and did not know to what it related. He did not know whether Supt. Proulx had initiated a Code of Conduct investigation. If Supt. Proulx had done so, it would not have come to C.O. Seguin's office because Supt. Proulx would be within his authority to order it. If a Code of Conduct investigation was referred to a disciplinary hearing it, would come to his office. He stated that he was not aware of the action that Supt. Proulx was taking.
- [281] Commr. Paulson stated that if he saw a document like the Occurrence Report in a file, it would suggest that a Code of Conduct investigation was underway. He said a member should be notified as soon as possible of a Code of Conduct investigation. Commr. Paulson stated that the allegations on the Occurrence Report were poorly written explanations. They seemed to be significant suggestions of misconduct. He stated if an individual ordered a Code of Conduct investigation, he would expect that it would be appropriately documented.
- [282] Commr. Paulson testified that a person could use a document such as an Occurrence Report and assign a file number to it without having an issue move forward as a Code of Conduct matter. This could happen because, in an early assessment, there might be a determination that it is no longer a Code of Conduct matter or it might be informally resolved. He stated he would expect that the person who was making these determinations would document them in the file. Subject to canvassing alternative explanations for where some documented analysis and accounting considerations were placed, Commr. Paulson said he would be concerned if there were no Occurrence Reports or evidence lists in file 2005-1117. He would still expect to see a record of the investigation maintained in some form. This would include detailed notes as to statements or investigative steps taken and the provenance of exhibits.
- [283] Mr. Smith stated that in 2008, he started requesting documents for production in this action. He generated a document list in 2010. The first supplementary document list was provided on June 16, 2010 in advance of examinations for discovery. The second supplementary document list was provided on February 21, 2014. The third supplementary document list was provided on September 30, 2014. The fourth supplementary document list was provided on October 31, 2014. From June 2010 up to the pre-trial conference in June 2014, the AG produced no additional documents. No additional documents were produced until the trial began.

- [284] Mr. Smith stated that he received the Secret file between 2008 and 2010. Access to it was restricted to himself as S/Sgt., C.O. Seguin, Supt. Proulx, Sgt. Gilchrist and the office manager Ms. Robson.
- [285] Mr. Smith stated that he was not privy to the contents of the file. When he received it, he skimmed through the file to see if any information should be redacted before disclosure. He stated that hand writing on the file jacket states, "conclude file" Oct 12, 2005.
- [286] Mr. Smith then referred to a different copy of the file jacket that has a further notation on it. It shows a further entry in 2010, under the 2005 "conclude file" entry. The day and month next to 2010 are illegible. The writing next to this date appears to be "Annual Review by civ lit" although the entry has a line through it and is difficult to read. The word "Secret" is not on this copy of the file jacket with the 2010 entry.
- [287] The copy of the file jacket with the word "Secret" written on it predates the copy of the file jacket with the 2010 entry and without the word "Secret" on it. "Secret" could not have been easily removed later on because there is a background pattern on the document that is intact. No explanation was provided for the fact that the word "Secret" is not on the copy of the file jacket that contains the 2010 notation "Annual Review by civ lit".
- [288] Mr. Smith stated that the copy of the file jacket with the word "Secret" was made prior to 2010. He provided it to the Department of Justice prior to 2010. It was not produced in this action until 2014.
- [289] Mr. Smith reviewed the related Occurrence Report. He said that it could have been attached to the inside cover of the file. He did not recall when it was produced. He did recall that Mr. Merrifield's counsel requested the documents in file jacket. The Occurrence Report was provided only after that request was received. Mr. Smith stated that he did not see the Occurrence Report on his initial review because it was produced by someone else. He assumed the contents of the file had been produced to the Department of Justice.
- [290] Mr. Smith stated that by looking only at "occurrence 2005-1117" on the file jacket, he could not determine the nature of the file. He stated that prior to becoming the file manager, he was not aware of the details of allegation S1 (alleged – seeking election without authorization, on TV). Between 2008 and 2010, before the commencement of the trial, he was aware that Supt. Proulx had made these allegations against Mr. Merrifield and that there was an internal investigation. Mr. Smith stated that someone identified that there was a "wallet", which was like an accordion file that would contain the contents of the file 2005 – 1117. He became aware of the wallet in 2010. He stated that he went through it briefly and sent it to the Criminal Intelligence branch. He asked them to review it prior to disclosure to determine if any redactions were required. Criminal Intelligence returned the wallet. He then provided the wallet and its contents to the Department of Justice. Mr. Smith could not recall whether he thought that the wallet, its contents and a cassette were produced before November 2014.
- [291] Mr. Smith stated that file 2005 – 1117 was reviewed in 2014 because it related to Mr. Merrifield's political activities and speaking to the media on several occasion. It was relevant to this action. He did not know that the file number was provided in response to an access to information request made by Mr. Merrifield.
- [292] Mr. Proulx stated that he received an email from Cpl. Dunn on September 22, 2005, which contained references to policy. He stated that he thought that this email was in response to his June 7, 2005 memo to C/Supt. Brown in which he set out the four specific questions. Mr. Proulx stated he assumed that the issue regarding the appropriate type of leave had been resolved internally. He was not privy to it. With respect to the question of whether

Mr. Merrifield had contravened RCMP Regulation 58.4(1), the answer was not clear. There was no answer regarding whether Mr. Merrifield had placed himself in a conflict by stating his public views on topics outlined in his campaign brochure. There was no response as to whether Mr. Merrifield had contravened the Regulation. There was no ruling on anything. Mr. Proulx stated that he still wanted to resolve this “for Mr. Merrifield”. There were new chapters regarding the policy. He had not made a final decision.

[293] Mr. Proulx testified that he received an email from Mr. Merrifield dated September 23, 2005, in which he had stated that 19 weeks had passed without any resolution as to whether he had violated the RCMP Act. Supt. Proulx took offence to this follow up email from Mr. Merrifield because he was Mr. Merrifield’s superior. His view was that superior officers do not respond to diary date inquiries from junior officers. Mr. Merrifield asked whether he was the “subject of an internal investigation”. Supt. Proulx responded and advised Mr. Merrifield that he was not under investigation. He had not interviewed anyone. He said, “I sent some documents to HQ in Ottawa (as I told you) because the “conflict of interest” is not in the manual as of yet and wanted to get guidance from the policy center.” Mr. Proulx stated that in his mind he was not investigating. He just wanted direction so he could he could make the right decision.

[294] Although Mr. Proulx stated that he was not “investigating”, at a minimum, he was doing research regarding Mr. Merrifield’s public speaking. The Coran show and the B’nai Brith event preceded the Barrie nomination meeting. The Pritchard show occurred after Mr. Merrifield had been transferred to Criminal Intelligence.

[295] Mr. Proulx stated that Mr. Merrifield sent him a response dated September 23, 2005 indicating that he meant no offence by his follow up email. He said he was operating under a cloud with the stress of not knowing the result of a serious allegation. He had been suffering from symptoms that he believed were stress related. Mr. Proulx stated that he was not aware of Mr. Merrifield’s stress before he received the email. He thought he acted as quickly as he could and was waiting for Ottawa to respond.

[296] SRR Nicota sent an email to Supt. Proulx in which he stated:

Five months is a long time to wait living under the gun or a very dark cloud. He [Cst. Merrifield] was the subject of rumour and inuendo [sic] despite your trip to INSET-TAG to deal with his situation. When his investigations were turned over to another Unit, further questions arose as to his character and work ethic. I am suggesting your reaction to his message was an overreaction.

[297] Sgt. Nicota said that he was under the impression that Mr. Merrifield was being investigated.

[298] Mr. Proulx stated that he did not respond to Sgt. Nicota’s email.

[299] On September 23, 2005 at 11:30 a.m., right after he had sent his email to Mr. Merrifield, Supt. Proulx spoke to Supt. Trueman about how to close the matter. Supt. Trueman said that the policies were not clear in the past. The best way to close out the matter was to write an administrative memo to go into Mr. Merrifield’s file which would set out Supt. Proulx’s expectations as to media relations, conflict of interest and how not to get into a conflict. Supt. Trueman did not state that Mr. Merrifield had any conflict.

[300] Supt. Proulx took Supt. Trueman’s advice and provided a memo to Mr. Merrifield dated September 28, 2005. It is entitled “Potential Conflict of Interest relevant to Political Activities/Outside Activities”. It states:

This memorandum is prepared in order to address certain concerns I have with your “outside activities”. More specifically, I am concerned you may have unwittingly placed yourself in a conflict of interest position relevant to your political activities. Your participation at various TV/Radio shows as a guest speaker or panelist when dealing with sensitive issues, such as terrorism, clearly has the potential to place you in contravention of existing policy.

Sections 56 to 58.7, RCMP regulations outline your rights and obligations when contemplating engaging or participating in political activities. I encourage you to carefully read those sections prior to engaging in any further activities. Prior approval must be sought by the appropriate officer before engaging in a “political campaign”.

In so far as your participation at various TV/Radio talk shows or discussion panel, I would refer you to A.M. XII.12 Secondary employment/Outside activities published 2005-08-12. Furthermore, all media releases, media interviews or press conferences which are likely to be controversial and are of National Interest must be pre-approved by the Commanding Officer of the Division (O.M. – Divisional policy, 27.1).

While you are conducting those activities, concerns for conflict of interest will ensure:

1. that the member is not representing himself as an RCMP member to the public while doing the activity
2. that he is not providing a service that competes with the RCMP
3. that it is the member’s responsibility to ensure that he avoids any actual, apparent or potential conflict of interest

While this serves only as a reminder of your obligations and rights as a member of the RCMP, I am confident that if you keep those guidelines in sight while conducting outside activities, you will continue to be a valuable member of the RCMP and contribute to our organizational goals and mission.

Be assured of my continued support with your future career endeavors, and I remain available to further discuss these issues should you wish.

[301] It should be noted that A.M. XII.12 was published on August 12, 2005, a month after Mr. Merrifield’s appearance on the Pritchard show. C.O. Seguin said it was actually a new administrative chapter.

[302] Mr. Seguin stated that he did not order anything to be done regarding Mr. Merrifield’s participation in the radio show on terrorism. Insp. Schmidt had already directed Supt. Proulx to follow up and get the details. Mr. Seguin stated that when something was in the media, normally a briefing note would be provided to Ottawa. As of July 12, 2005, he was not aware of any other media appearances. He never listened to the radio interview or read a transcript of it. He said that the radio address was not a big deal.

- [303] C.O. Seguin stated that he reviewed the memo dated September 28, 2005 from Supt. Proulx to Mr. Merrifield. C.O. Seguin stated that Supt. Proulx was within his authority to prepare this. He did not provide any direction to Supt. Proulx regarding the specific steps that he was to take.
- [304] Mr. Brown stated that on December 12, 2005, he and Sgt. Sim met in a boardroom with Supt. Proulx. He and Sgt. Sim were trying to make a bid to have Mr. Merrifield stay in Criminal Intelligence. He was fun to work with and they were getting things done. They questioned why Mr. Merrifield was leaving Criminal Intelligence. Mr. Brown recalled that Supt. Proulx said that someone had it out for Mr. Merrifield but it was not him. Mr. Brown said that he prepared a statement setting this out. Supt. Proulx said that Mr. Merrifield's transfer from Criminal Intelligence was out of his hands.
- [305] Mr. Proulx's recollection of the meeting confirmed Mr. Brown's testimony.
- [306] Mr. Proulx stated that he had no involvement in the ultimate staffing process for Mr. Merrifield once he determined that Mr. Merrifield could no longer be in TAG. Mr. Proulx stated he did not have any positions available in Newmarket.
- [307] A/Sgt. Crane stated that honesty is a core value in the RCMP and that a breach of it is reportable. He told Supt. Proulx that Mr. Merrifield lied to him and that he did not believe Mr. Merrifield. This was not reflected in Mr. Merrifield's performance report dated October 11, 2005. There are no comments in the report that say Mr. Merrifield was dishonest and a liar.
- [308] Commr. Paulson reviewed Mr. Merrifield's performance evaluation for the period August 1, 2004 to August 1, 2005. He understood that the document was signed by A/Sgt. Crane, Insp. Jagoe and Supt. Proulx. Commr. Paulson stated that if a line officer thought that a junior that he was evaluating had lied to him about the use of leave without pay or unauthorized public speaking, he would expect it to be set out in the performance review. He stated that appraisals are supposed to be evidence-based, accurate and actionable. They were to help people improve rather than to criticize and punish them. If the writer of a performance evaluation felt that someone was not truthful, the reference in the performance review should be linked to some work related issue that might have some consequences for the work.
- [309] Mr. Proulx stated that by the time the performance report was written, the issues were concluded. He had given Mr. Merrifield the memo dated September 28, 2005. Mr. Proulx felt that the issues were dealt with on October 4, 2005 when he gave Mr. Merrifield the memo.
- [310] Mr. Merrifield stated that after the summer of 2005, he submitted multiple search warrants, production orders, one-party consents and 540 affidavits containing evidence with respect to nuclear proliferation prosecutions. The Public Prosecution Service elected to proceed based on his 540 sworn submissions. He was the chief witness in this prosecution.
- [311] In January 2006, Mr. Merrifield was transferred to a permanent position in the Customs and Excise section at the airport.
- [312] Mr. Proulx said that he could not keep Mr. Merrifield in TAG "because he was a candidate in a federal election".
- [313] Mr. Seguin stated that Supt. Proulx prepared a Briefing Note to the Commissioner dated January 17, 2006. It was written on the recommendation of C/Supt. Mazerolle in order to provide a review of Mr. Merrifield's transfers from INSET to TAG and then to the Criminal Intelligence Branch. C.O. Seguin approved the Briefing Note. It states:

During the summer, while this review was ongoing, Cst. Merrifield participated in a radio talk show where he identified himself as a "Security and Counter-terrorism consultant". Although Cst. Merrifield did not reveal any classified information or his affiliation with the RCMP, his line officer once more brought the issue of a potential conflict of interest to his attention. The review of this matter revealed that the new conflict of interest policy came into effect in September 2005. It was therefore determined by Supt. Proulx that an administrative memorandum would resolve any ambiguity regarding this issue with Sgt. Merrifield, specifically regarding his behaviour and demeanour. In October 2005, he was given an administrative memo outlining clearly the expectation of his line officer and a copy of the appropriate related policies.

[314] Mr. Seguin noted that the recommendation section of the Briefing Note to the Commissioner states:

It is clear that the member has placed himself in a position of at least a perceived conflict of interest which jeopardizes the effectiveness and reputation of both the RCMP and the member. As a result, measured and reasonable steps have been taken to minimize the conflict and ensure the effectiveness of the RCMP.

[315] Supt. Proulx concluded that Mr. Merrifield had a conflict issue even though Supt. Trueman, who was an expert on these issues, did not concur. He said the policy was unclear.

[316] Mr. Seguin signed the Briefing Note. It was forwarded to Ottawa. He did not recall receiving any response from the Commissioner's office to the briefing note. He knew that Mr. Merrifield had been removed from TAG and had been transferred to Toronto North Customs and Excise. He did not make the decision. Rather he was briefed on it. The decision was made by the Criminal Intelligence branch.

[317] Mr. Proulx stated that Mr. Merrifield was not disciplined regarding his participation at the Barrie nomination meeting without LWOP or his participation on the radio show.

[318] Mr. Proulx's evidence that he had nothing to do with Mr. Merrifield's transfer is contradicted by Mr. Seguin's evidence. The Criminal Intelligence branch was under Supt. Proulx's command.

The Special Operations Center - October 23, 2005

[319] Mr. Merrifield testified that on September 11, 2005, he received a call from Sgt. Sim. A terrorist threat had been made against Toronto. Accordingly, the Special Operations Center (SOC) was "stood up." The SOC was a large room with a number of TV screens and twenty desks for use by various police agencies across Toronto. Each agency would have one or two desks to use during national security events. The purpose of the SOC was to facilitate information sharing. The situation required "all hands on deck". Mr. Merrifield was directed to report to the SOC. While he was en route, Sgt. Sim called him and told him to turn around and go home.

[320] Mr. Merrifield stated that he was the only member in the Division ordered to not attend the national emergency. He testified that this meant he was not trusted by the organization and his days were numbered. He could not comprehend why, in the middle of efforts to thwart a national terrorist attack, Insp. Van Doren, the incident commander, would have the presence of mind to direct that he be ordered to not attend the SOC. This would mean that two other members would have to work twelve hour shifts rather than eight hour shifts. Mr. Merrifield contacted SSR Bohus about this. Mr. Merrifield had the highest of security clearance.

- [321] Mr. Merrifield requested an explanation from Supt. Proulx. The response was that Insp. Van Doren believed that he was “not the appropriate resource.” He said this response was essentially “none of your business.”
- [322] Mr. Merrifield stated that he felt destroyed after he was called back from the SOC and was told that he was not the appropriate asset when “all hands on deck” were required for a national emergency.
- [323] Sgt. Sim was in charge of the SOC investigators. Sgt. Penny told him to stand up the unit and staff the desks. He contacted Mr. Merrifield and Cst. Brown to tell them that he was doing this. Subsequently, Sgt. Penny told him that Mr. Merrifield was not allowed to go to the SOC and be part of the team. Sgt. Sim believed that Mr. Merrifield was not allowed to go because of perceived conflicts with politics. He was a black sheep among the higher ups. He had been blackballed. Sgt. Sim stated that when this type of thing happens, you are not going anywhere in the force. He recalled that Mr. Merrifield was extremely upset when he was told he could not work at the SOC.
- [324] C/Supt. Mazerolle was overall commander of a project known as Obolt. It concerned the bomb threats to various locations in the Greater Toronto Area. This was the reason why the SOC was stood up. C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that on one day, during the evening, Insp. Van Doren came into his office and said he had dealt with a minor issue. He said that Mr. Merrifield had been called into work in the SOC and Insp. Van Doren had decided to stand him down. C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he had no reason to question Insp. Van Doren. It was his call to make these decisions.
- [325] Mr. Van Doren is retired. He explained that the RCMP was responding to what appeared to be a serious threat to the country. They had information that there were two stashes of explosives and that the first people on the scene would be subject to car bombs. This required a multi-jurisdictional response involving chiefs of police from various police forces. Insp. Van Doren stated he was second in command and was looking after the national security part. He was in the London headquarters when all of this was happening.
- [326] Insp. Van Doren’s notes show that on October 23, 2005, Sgt. McIntyre contacted him for relief for the overnight shift. Sgt. Penny, Mr. Merrifield’s supervisor, had recommended him. Insp. Van Doren requested that someone else be selected instead of Mr. Merrifield. He knew that Mr. Merrifield had been removed from INSET and felt that it was not fair to him or to the organization that he be at the SOC. He believed that if something bad happened and if Mr. Merrifield had been responsible for it by either doing something or not doing something, the RCMP would be blamed for it. Insp. Van Doren agreed that a decision to not allow someone to work at the SOC was significant. He stated that this was a critical situation and he did not think that Mr. Merrifield should be put in the situation because he had recently been removed from INSET.
- [327] On the next day, October 24, 2005, SRR Bohus, came to his office and wanted to talk about Mr. Merrifield. Insp. Van Doren stated that he took time to speak to SRR Bohus because he felt that Mr. Merrifield deserved an explanation as to why he had been stood down. He told SRR Bohus that his decision was based on the fact that it was a national security incident. He was aware that Mr. Merrifield had been removed from INSET and did not feel it was appropriate for Mr. Merrifield or the RCMP to “force him back into the situation.” He believed that Mr. Merrifield “was not the appropriate resource”.

[328] Insp. Van Doren recalled a conversation with Supt. Proulx on the same day. Supt. Proulx came into his office and stated that Sgt. Penny had told him the previous night that Mr. Merrifield believed that the decision to exclude him from the SOC was workplace harassment. Insp. Van Doren stated that his discussions with Insp. Jagoe did not have any bearing on his decision that Mr. Merrifield should not report to the SOC.

[329] The inquiry about Mr. Merrifield’s working at the SOC would not normally have come to Insp. Van Doren’s attention. Generally, he did not make decisions as to who manned the SOC but Sgt. McIntyre had called him. It was unusual for someone to request staffing advice from him. Insp. Van Doren said he knew that Mr. Merrifield had been removed from INSET but he did not know how that information had come to him. He stated that probably Insp. Jagoe or Supt. Proulx told him.

[330] Mr. Van Doren stated that he received an email from SRR Bohus on December 14, 2005 in which he requested a meeting with Supt. Proulx, the C.O. and himself to clear the air. In the email, SRR Bohus stated:

I also believe it prudent at this time to request a meeting between yourself, Supt. Proulx, the C.O. and the SR/OPS officer with myself and my client to clear up once and for all any misinformation that might be floating about in regards to my client’s past political activities. In my view, there has been a great deal of innuendo that is circulating about and I strongly believe we have to have a roundtable discussion to clear the air once and for all.

[331] Insp. Van Doren sent an email to SRR Bohus in response on December 19, 2005. He stated:

I was managing an “O” Division response to a N.S. incident that had the potential for serious consequences for Canada and her citizens.

As a line officer O INSET, I was aware the Constable Merrifield was recently transferred from the O INSET (TAG) site. That decision was based on concerns about his suitability to carry out O INSET work. Supt. Proulx as the line officer for CID was dealing with that aspect.

Further to my responsibility to manage the O INSET response to the above noted N.S. incident, I directed that Constable Merrifield be advised not to report for duty at the SOC. My decision was based on the need to select the most appropriate resources for that assignment. I concluded, based on the information available at the time, the Constable Merrifield was not the most appropriate resource.

As regards your request to arrange a meeting with division senior management, that request should be directed to Supt. Proulx, as Constable Merrifield’s line officer, for his consideration and response.

[332] Insp. Van Doren stated that he was not asked to attend a meeting with Mr. Merrifield after this.

- [333] Even though Supt. Proulx's memo to Mr. Merrifield dated September 28, 2005 resolved all outstanding issues, no one ever told Insp. Van Doren that there were no concerns about Mr. Merrifield.
- [334] Mr. Proulx stated that he had a conversation with Mr. Merrifield about his being stood down from the SOC. Mr. Merrifield was concerned and wanted a reason for why this had happened. Mr. Proulx stated that he had spoken with Insp. Van Doren about it. Insp. Van Doren told him that he was aware that Mr. Merrifield had been pulled from TAG and had said that he would wait until that was resolved before he put him back in the SOC.
- [335] Mr. Proulx stated that he did not tell Insp. Van Doren that the election and radio program issues were resolved because he did not know whether Insp. Van Doren was aware of them. Insp. Van Doren never asked him about Mr. Merrifield's working at INSET or at the SOC. Supt. Proulx only learned of Mr. Merrifield's callback from the SOC after it happened. Mr. Proulx said that he did not tell Insp. Van Doren that the matter was resolved because there was still a Human Resources question as to where Mr. Merrifield was going to be posted. Insp. Van Doren thought the matter was not resolved and Supt. Proulx did not correct him.
- [336] C/Supt. Mazerolle recalled Insp. Van Doren's briefing him about standing down Mr. Merrifield from the SOC. The reason was something about a conflict of interest. By that time, C/Supt. Mazerolle had read Supt. Proulx's September 28, 2005 memo to Mr. Merrifield. He did not tell Insp. Van Doren that Mr. Merrifield had done nothing wrong. He did not make inquiries as to what the conflict was. He did not want to know why Mr. Merrifield was stood down from the SOC. Insp. Van Doren had made the decision. C/Supt. Mazerolle did not question it. He was not aware of the information Insp. Van Doren had when he made the decision.
- [337] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that a couple of days later, Insp. Van Doren told him that he had been questioned about his decision by SSR Bohus and he gave him the reason for it. C/Supt. Mazerolle did not ask about the reason. The issue had been addressed by Insp. Van Doren and he had confidence in his abilities. C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that even though the SRR had spoken to him about concerns with respect to Mr. Merrifield and he knew that Mr. Merrifield had been stood down from the SOC, he was not concerned. He stated he had no contact with Mr. Merrifield. The decision had been made by others. Even though he knew that Mr. Merrifield had been cleared, he did not inform Insp. Van Doren.
- [338] C/Supt. Mazerolle had the authority to intervene in a decision made by a Superintendent who reported to him, when that Superintendent was within his authority to make the decision. He could have told Insp. Van Doren that Mr. Merrifield was cleared of conflict issues.
- [339] There is no logical explanation for the fact that both Supt. Proulx and C/Supt. Mazerolle neglected to tell Insp. Van Doren that all concerns about Mr. Merrifield had been resolved a month earlier. Mr. Proulx said that a decision still had to be made about Mr. Merrifield's transfer. This was an excuse. The transfer was an administrative matter resulting from Supt. Proulx's decision that Mr. Merrifield could not work in TAG. It had no bearing on whether Mr. Merrifield was suitable to work in the SOC. C/Supt. Mazerolle chose to ignore the matter. He knew that Supt. Van Doren had made a decision based on incorrect information. C/Supt. Mazerolle was indifferent. Both Supt. Proulx and C/Supt. Mazerolle had opportunities to set the matter straight but they neglected to do so. They allowed the perception of Mr. Merrifield's tarnished reputation to continue.
- [340] Supt. Jagoe stated that in the early fall of 2005, SRR Bohus called him one day. He asked him whether he would accept Mr. Merrifield as a transfer to INSET from TAG. Supt. Jagoe stated that he could not accept Mr. Merrifield as a transfer because of his involvement in the media. He stated that INSET had to be able to investigate all threats to national security. It was clear to him that he needed people to follow procedures and protocols in everything they did. At that time, he was thinking only about the radio interview that Mr. Merrifield had done. Supt. Jagoe stated that this was Supt. Proulx's decision to make as he was Mr. Merrifield's line officer.

[341] Supt. Jagoe stated that he did not typically use words such as "Merrifield had burned his bridges"; however, SRR Bohus could have understood him to say that. Mr. Merrifield's public speaking and political activities caused him to have this view; however, he did not consider his refusal to have Mr. Merrifield at INSET as discipline. When he spoke to SRR Bohus in the fall of 2005, he did not know what had become of his concerns with respect to the nomination meeting. He assumed that they had been dealt with. He also assumed that the matter regarding the Pritchard radio show interview was concluded. Nevertheless, he remained concerned enough to tell SRR Bohus that he was not going to have Mr. Merrifield back at INSET.

[342] Supt. Jagoe stated, "he did not demonstrate to me that it was appropriate for him to come back." Supt. Jagoe stated that he made this determination without knowing the outcome of any steps that Supt. Proulx might have taken. Even as of the date of his testimony, Supt. Jagoe's view of Mr. Merrifield's appearance on the Pritchard show was that he went too far and disclosed sensitive issues. He knew that Supt. Proulx's memo to Mr. Merrifield dated September 28, 2005 did not result in any discipline.

[343] Supt. Jagoe stated that he knew Mr. Merrifield had been temporarily transferred to Criminal Investigations and ultimately, about six months later, that he was formally transferred to Customs and Excise under the command of Insp. Johnson. He was aware [v] that the Customs and Excise unit did some counter proliferation work. He knew that Mr. Merrifield had been the lead on one case that had an excellent result. This did not surprise Supt. Jagoe. Mr. Merrifield was a talented investigator. Supt. Jagoe stated that he knew that this type of work would require access to sensitive information. He was not aware that Mr. Merrifield's security clearance was ever reduced nor did he ask for it to be. He knew that the work in Customs and Excise touched on international security. The unit would prepare affidavits for search warrants and mutual legal assistance treaties. Members, including Mr. Merrifield, would give evidence give at preliminary inquiries, trials and before administrative tribunals. He was not concerned about Mr. Merrifield's believability. Counter proliferation investigations fell under Border Integrity which was under the command of Insp. Van Doren. Supt. Jagoe stated that he never advised Insp. Johnson about his concerns regarding Mr. Merrifield's judgment. He never advised Insp. Andy White, who was in charge of Serious Organized Crime, of his concerns about Mr. Merrifield's judgment. He knew that Insp. White ran counter proliferation investigations.

[344] C/Supt. Mazerolle recalled that SRR Bohus had approached him about Mr. Merrifield. He said that senior management was missing an opportunity because Mr. Merrifield was a good member and should be moving up the ranks. C/Supt. Mazerolle recalled that SRR Bohus mentioned this a number of times while Mr. Merrifield was still at TAG. When he went to Customs and Excise, SRR Bohus mentioned it. He was a strong supporter of Mr. Merrifield. SRR Bohus said that Mr. Merrifield was not happy with how he was being treated.

[345] In October, 2005, Supt. Proulx sent an email to Insp. Brine in Human Resources to request a staffing interview so that Mr. Merrifield could be re-posted. He stated, "I am convinced at this moment that Cst. Merrifield cannot work within the TAG...it would be in the best interest of the RCMP and of Cst. Merrifield if he was assigned to other duties not related to “politics”.”

- [346] Mr. Merrifield stated that staffing interviews are usually conducted to determine a member’s interests and abilities and to provide an opportunity for the member to learn about vacancies. A recommendation is made. Everyone knew about his participation in the 2004 federal election. He had been posted to TAG less than three months after he stood for election. He believed that his work relating to Liberal Prime Minister Martin after he had stood for the election showed that he did not have a conflict.
- [347] Mr. Merrifield had a personnel interview with Sgt. McCann on November 7, 2005. He stated that he wanted to work on the investigative side of INSET which had vacancies. In fact, a workshop was held on October 18, 2005, the topic of which was how to attract and retain qualified members to work in national security because there were many vacancies. There were retention issues. Working on the investigative side of INSET would involve investigating terrorists. Mr. Merrifield’s previous political activities would have been irrelevant because the work did not involve VIPs with political affiliations. Mr. Merrifield would not consider a posting that required moving because he had a young family. Sgt. McCann told him that he would make an inquiry “through the back door” about the possibility of Mr. Merrifield’s working at INSET.
- [348] When Supt. McCann began the staffing interview, he knew that Supt. Proulx had decided that Mr. Merrifield could not work in TAG. He could not recall whether he contacted Insp. Jagoe to see if Mr. Merrifield could be transferred to INSET. His notes dated November 23, 2005 show that he had a conversation with Insp. Jagoe and that Insp. Jagoe was familiar with Mr. Merrifield. His notes also state, “INSET inquiry.” Based on this, Supt. McCann stated that he likely made the inquiry.
- [349] Mr. Merrifield stated that he believed he was well qualified to do investigative work at INSET. His performance evaluation that covered the period from August 1, 2004 to August 1, 2005 was drafted by A/Sgt. Crane. Insp. Jagoe and Supt. Proulx added comments. They were extremely positive. He had been doing community outreach because he thought that the RCMP was relying on dated information. Mr. Merrifield explained that doing community outreach was essential if you wanted people to provide information. He attended various events outside of his shifts. He went to communities that he thought could provide the most useful information. He recruited sources. Some of this was an extension of the relationships that he had through politics. It allowed him to collect information from a wider spectrum of human sources. His performance evaluation noted that his planning and organization skills were good and that he had worked a lot of voluntary overtime on Operation Bridgeout to the disadvantage of his family. Regarding his interpersonal skills, he was noted to be a popular and respected member of INSET. A/Sgt. Crane signed this evaluation on September 12, 2005.
- [350] Mr. Merrifield stated that he was told Insp. Jagoe would not have him back at INSET, given the security level required for their work. This made no sense because Mr. Merrifield had the top secret security level which was required to work at INSET. No additional security level would have been required to do the work.
- [351] Mr. Merrifield said that “unofficially, the wall had gone up.” He stated that Sgt. McCann made every effort for him. He was candid. A transfer to Customs and Excise, which had a vacancy, was going to happen whether Mr. Merrifield wanted it or not. There was nothing else.
- [352] Supt. McCann disagreed that if Insp. Jagoe had agreed to have Mr. Merrifield at INSET, he likely would not have been transferred to Customs and Excise. He stated that Customs and Excise was an appropriate fit for Mr. Merrifield.

- [353] This is completely illogical. Supt. McCann knew that Mr. Merrifield's interest was in national security work. He had received high praise for the work that he had done at TAG. The fact that Supt. McCann contacted Insp. Jagoe shows that Supt. McCann thought that transferring Mr. Merrifield to the investigative side of INSET made sense. It had a number of vacancies.

The Promotion Process

- [354] Insp. MacKinnon was the Promotion Co-ordinator. He introduced a new promotion system in 2006. The new promotion system had five stages: 1) a job simulation exercise exam (JSE exam), 2) line officer/supervisor support, 3) advertisement, 4) validation/competency and 5) line officer selection. Insp. MacKinnon explained that the job simulation exercise JSE exam would typically be held in February. Usually in November of each year, there would be a publication alerting members interested in promotion regarding when the next JSE exam would be held. It was a voluntary system. Members had to identify their interest to Insp. MacKinnon's office regarding which exam they wanted to write and state how many years of service they had within the RCMP.
- [355] Sometime in 2005, a notice went out entitled "NCO Promotion Exams Job Simulation 2006." Insp. MacKinnon stated that this would alert members that they had to register to write an exam. Members had to have seven years of service by April 1, 2008 before they could write the JSE exam in 2006. This was because the RCMP adopted a two year cycle for writing the exam. Members were allowed to write the exam without having to wait for the two years if they would have the amount of service before the expiry of the two year period.
- [356] Mr. Merrifield expressed an interest in writing the Corporal exam. He sent an email to Insp. MacKinnon's office dated December 8, 2005 to register to write the JSE exam in February 2006.
- [357] Insp. MacKinnon explained that a member who was interested in writing the JSE exam would submit a competency resume. For example, a position might require the ability to develop resources and obtain judicial authorizations. Candidates would have to supply examples of their work in that area. If appropriate, these examples would be validated as sufficient for the requirements of a promotion.
- [358] Various job vacancies with required ranks and relevant criteria were listed on the Force's intranet. If Mr. Merrifield wanted to apply for one of these jobs, he would have to pass the JSE exam and submit a package outlining his various competencies to show that he had the ability to do the job. Then, the application would be forwarded to the line officer for selection. Insp. MacKinnon stated that initially, only three validated candidates were forwarded. The line officer would determine which one was the best for the position.
- [359] Under the new promotion system, the line officer who had the vacancy would be the person to select the best candidate for it. If the line officer felt that there was any conflict, he could ask another line officer to make the selection. That would be up to him or her.
- [360] If Mr. Merrifield had wanted to move into a promotion in INSET in 2006, he would have had to go to the line officer of INSET to be selected. This was Insp. Jagoe. If Mr. Merrifield was in one position and wanted to go into another, there was a way to do it without a staffing interview but it was not the correct process. A secondment could have accomplished this back in 2005 and 2006.

Loss of Income due to Delayed Promotional Opportunities

- [361] Mr. Merrifield stated that he wanted to write the JSE exam as soon as possible. He obtained some practice exams to help him prepare. He explained that once he passed the JSE exam, he would receive a four percent pay raise to the level of a senior Constable even if he was not yet promoted.
- [362] Mr. Merrifield explained that he was not eligible to write the exam until his seventh year of service. He had to write it to be promotable in his eighth year. Mr. Merrifield provided a list of his competencies up to December 2013. Effective April 30, 2009, he had the following competencies: “prepare/present testimony; develop/manage human sources; obtain judicial authorizations; conduct invest-general; concern for safety; and records/information management”. As of December 16, 2013, he had additional competencies: “legis-no specific context and legis-border integrity-IBET”. Competencies are rated on a scale from 1 to 4. Mr. Merrifield’s rating for prepare/present testimony was rated two. All of the rest were rated three. In addition, Mr. Merrifield had firearms training. He was a top level marksman.
- [363] Mr. Merrifield was unable to write the JSE exam in 2006 because he was off duty sick. He claims that as a result, he has suffered a loss of income. If he had been able to write the exam, he should have been promoted to Corporal effective July 1, 2006. Instead, he was actually promoted to Corporal on July 1, 2009. Similarly, if he had been promoted to Corporal on July 1, 2009, he should have been promoted to Sergeant effective July 1, 2008. Instead, he was actually promoted to Sergeant on March 1, 2014.
- [364] Stephen Raine was the chair of the National Staffing Committee for the RCMP. He is now retired. He was qualified as an expert in the RCMP’s hiring process, including the means by which potential candidates demonstrate their credentials and methods by which potential candidates are identified and qualified in relation to promotions. A Statement of his Expert Opinion dated May 8, 2014 was filed.
- [365] Mr. Raine was provided with a list of twelve job postings for Corporal positions for the period April 2007 to January 2013. He was also provided with a list of nine job postings for Sergeant positions for the period April 2007 and January 2013. These are found in Appendix 1 of his Statement of Expert Opinion.
- [366] Mr. Raine was asked to make the following assumptions:
- a. Mr. Merrifield would have applied for these positions had he been able to;
 - b. Mr. Merrifield would have had the qualifications set out in his NCO application dated November 2013 with the exception of rank when he applied for the Corporal positions;
 - c. Mr. Merrifield would have had the qualifications including the rank of Corporal when applying for Sergeant positions;
 - d. Mr. Merrifield would have applied for each of the positions identified;
 - e. The job summary, job requirements and competency profile for each position were as set out in each of the Corporal and Sergeant postings; and,
 - f. Mr. Merrifield was not subject to any Code of Conduct investigations.

[367] Mr. Raine was asked to provide his opinion regarding whether Mr. Merrifield would have been qualified for the above noted positions. He was not asked to provide an opinion as to whether Mr. Merrifield “would have been awarded the position but simply whether, all else being equal, he would not have been disqualified.”

[368] Mr. Raine’s expert opinion, set out on page 4 of his Statement of Expert Opinion, is:

Based on the items I received, I am satisfied that Peter Merrifield had all the necessary qualifications and Competencies required to perform the positions as set out in Appendix 1 and that, providing his [sic] submitted his application on time, and to the right location and with the assumption that he was not under any discipline investigation or formal sanction, he would have been able to compete for the positions noted.

[369] Mr. Raine noted that he could not make an assessment of whether Mr. Merrifield would have been successful in his application for any particular position because he did not have access to the packages of other applicants who applied for those positions. Nevertheless, he stated that Mr. Merrifield’s application would have been competitive.

[370] Ian Wollach is a member of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and is designated as a specialist in forensic and investigative accounting. He was qualified as an expert in quantifying damages. His Income Loss Report regarding Mr. Merrifield dated March 24, 2014 was filed.

[371] Mr. Wollach stated that initially, he was provided with certain documents including a series of Mr. Merrifield’s T4 slips, the RCMP pay scale and Mr. Merrifield’s pension statement. He was asked to determine Mr. Merrifield’s income losses due to delayed promotional opportunities. In doing so, he made certain assumptions that are set out on pages two and three of his report. They are the following:

- a. Mr. Merrifield’s income losses commence effective July 1, 2006 (when he should have been promoted to a Corporal), and cease as of March 1, 2015 (the projected date he will reach the top pay step on the salary scale for Sergeants);
- b. The difference between his post-incident earnings (per his T4 slips) and his annual salary (per salary scales provided) is assumed to be additional income earned primarily through overtime opportunities;
- c. his pre-incident earnings should be determined as the sum of his annual salary and estimated overtime income; and,
- d. His pre-incident overtime income was estimated assuming he would have worked the same amount of overtime as he did in the past (for example, in 2011, his overtime income as a Corporal was estimated at approximately 11.7% of his salary, and therefore, we assume his pre-incident earnings as a Sergeant in 2011 should be 11.7% greater than his applicable salary).

[372] Mr. Wollach compared Mr. Merrifield’s pre-incident earnings (the amount he would have earned had he been promoted to Corporal on July 1, 2006 and to Sergeant on July 1, 2008) to his post-incident earnings (the amount he actually earned given his promotion to Corporal on July 1, 2009 and to Sergeant on March 1, 2014). A number of charts are contained in Mr. Wollach’s report showing how he considered the amounts set out in Mr. Merrifield’s T4 slips, the RCMP pay scale and Mr. Merrifield’s pension statement and how he applied the above noted assumptions to calculate Mr. Merrifield's loss of income due to delayed promotional opportunities. His opinion is that Mr. Merrifield's loss is $71,913.

Transfer to Customs and Excise - January 2006

- [373] Mr. Merrifield left Supt. Proulx's chain of command on January 16, 2006 when he was transferred to Customs and Excise.
- [374] Mr. Merrifield stated that from January to July 2006, he was on sick leave supported by his family doctor. He was suffering from stress, dizziness, nausea. He was angry and frustrated. He inappropriately lashed out at his family. He feared that he would lose his job. He was ill, depressed and scared. It was a very dark spot in his life. He turned in his service pistol. The RCMP Health Services unit did not challenge his need for sick leave.
- [375] Mr. Merrifield could not write the JSE examination.
-

Mr. Merrifield's American Express Card

- [376] In January 2006, Supt. Proulx ordered a Part IV Code of Conduct investigation against Mr. Merrifield alleging disgraceful conduct regarding the use of his American Express (Amex) credit card. To understand the very serious allegations that Supt. Proulx made against Mr. Merrifield, a detailed review of the communications and events leading up to the investigation is necessary.
- [377] Mr. Merrifield explained that he was issued a RCMP covert Amex credit card in 2002 or 2003 when he was in the Air Marshalls program. These cards were "covertly backstopped" meaning that they could not be linked to the RCMP. If someone had possession of the card, he would not know that the user was an RCMP officer. Mr. Merrifield stated that as an Air Marshall, he would use the Amex card to purchase clothes if his luggage was delayed.
- [378] When Mr. Merrifield was seconded to INSET, he had to move to Ontario. Nevertheless, the statement for the Amex card continued to be sent to his former address in Saskatchewan. Accordingly, he was receiving delayed statements.
- [379] Mr. Merrifield stated that he had an outstanding balance on his card of approximately $1,200. He acknowledged that ultimately, he was personally responsible for all the expenses incurred on the card. At that time, he had significant expenses on the card for travel and various items for Operation Bridgeout. Nevertheless, he was owed reimbursement for expenses and payment for overtime work. At one point, the gas card for police vehicles was not working. He used his Amex for gas. He had to use it once for gas for his personal vehicle when no police vehicles were available. Mr. Merrifield explained that he would fill out an expense report based on his receipts. It would be submitted to his supervisor for review and approval. Then the line officer would sign off. Then it would go to the pay office where a cheque would be issued for reimbursement.
- [380] Mr. Merrifield stated that he completed all of his expense claims and left them with A/Sgt. Crane before he was temporarily transferred to Criminal Investigations.
- [381] On November 7, 2005, Mr. Merrifield received an email from John Steeves, Manager of Accounting Services, stating that he had been sent a duplicate payment for certain expenses that he had submitted for a trip to Ottawa in the spring of 2005. Mr. Steeves described the manner in which the administrative error had been made and said an account receivable would be issued to cover the overpayment.

- [382] Mr. Merrifield replied to Mr. Steeves on the same day, advising him that would be on two RTOs (Regular Time Offs) and would address the matter when he returned. He pointed out that he had not received payment for overtime claims submitted in June, 2005 exceeding $1,400. He stated that the amount identified by Mr. Steeves was part of a claim that had not been paid in a reasonable time.
- [383] Mr. Merrifield stated that he spoke to a public servant in the RCMP and said that he would pay the balance if the card was going into default but he did not want to pay the amount from his personal funds when he was owed money.
- [384] Supt. Proulx sent an email to Mr. Merrifield on November 8, 2005. It referred to an earlier conversation between them on October 24, 2005. Supt. Proulx wrote:

In our first conversation, you made reference to two things that struct [sic] my attention:

1. You said that the "missing money" were [sic] from the expenses claims [sic] related to your trips to SSM regarding the training exercise "Rouge [sic] Tanker. You submitted two expense claims related to this. The first one was submitted on the 19 April for $713.13. A cheque was issued on June 9. The second claim was submitted on May 18 and a cheque was issued on June 10 for $722.30. So I take from this that by June 13th or 14th you had received both payment [sic] and should have cleared your Amex.
2. The second fact was that during our conversation of Oct. 24th when I brought to your attention the present mater, you stated that this was "all" resolved and that you had made payment two weks[sic] ago and that the cheque had cleared your bank account. When I dealt with Corporate on this issue the next day, they had your cheque in hand, which they had received a few days prior and it wasn't cashed as of yet.
3. Now, it appears corporate claims you have been inadvertently paid twice for the same claim in the amount of $838.35. As you say, it is bizarre. I will ask Corporate to conduct a complete review/reconciliation of your Amex - 1393 accounts for the past two years in order to ascertain that you are treated fairly and that you do not over pay the RCMP.

- [385] Mr. Merrifield sent an email response to Supt. Proulx on November 10, 2005. It stated:

The claims were from Rogue Tanker (2) and TA Course Ottawa (1) so there should [be] a total of three cheques payable to me in addition to the OT.

As I stated previously two cheques were issued to Amex by my wife both in excess of $1100.00 in order to clear the bill. The second cheque was ordered not to be issued by London and was reissued to the Receiver General and forwarded to John Steeves as per his request. The first cheque had indeed cleared and the second was sent to John Steeves on the 13th of October by interoffice mail. At that point I believed the matter [was] resolved. You and I spoke on the 24th and I informed you of these details. As of the 24th I believed that I had no balance owing to Amex or the Receiver General and believed that both cheques had cleared. Upon arriving home [on] the 24th my wife checked on internet banking and the second cheque to the RG had not cleared some 11 days after being forwarded to London. I would have gladly informed you of this had you called me back...I appreciate that you are very busy and I am also aware that you were off sick but I believe that these details should clarify the issues that "struck your attention" and were available by the morning of the 25th.

I also believe that much of the confusion was caused by claims that were forwarded to the incorrect offices for signing by INSET. The TA claim went to London then back to INSET instead of to Ottawa causing a delay. The Rogue Tanker claim was sent by INSET to CSIS attn: the facilitator of the TA course who contacted me regarding the confusion and advising that he had not received the correct claim. The third claim which was a Rogue Tanker claim was the only one paid in a timely fashion. These three claims total nearly $2,400.00 which was the amount owing on Amex.

I will complete a review from my end as well which should provide a clearer picture of what the status of payments is. At the end of the day the Amex should be clear and the expense issue is being resolved.

[386] Supt. Proulx sent another email to Mr. Merrifield dated November 10, 2005. It stated:

You are absolutely right, there were three claims (2 for Rouge [sic] Tanker and one for a course in Ottawa) totalling over $2300. I also noticed that one claim took over 52 days to be resolved, however all those payments were made from the RCMP to you prior to mid-June 2005. Therefore, your Amex should have been cleared around the end of June 2005, not in October 2005. It appears [sic] that you have had an outstanding balance with Amex prior to those claims, hence the reason I asked for an audit of your expenses/Amex card payments. Once corporate have [sic] completed this review, I will bring the finding to your attention and we can discuss then what happened.

[387] Mr. Merrifield replied on November 10, 2005 as follows:

One other factor to mention was that when I was transferred to INSET from CACPP my AMEX bill did not follow for a couple of months, the same thing happened in June when I was transferred from TAG to TNDICIS and despite changing the address it still goes to the INSET building to date.

[388] Mr. Merrifield stated that he understood that Supt. Proulx was going to have a two year audit done. He was waiting for Supt. Proulx's response.

[389] On January 4, 2006, Mr. Merrifield received an email from Mr. Steeves which said, "the A/R issued to you for the duplicate payment you received is now 30 days past due. Please advise of your intentions."

[390] On January 5, 2006, Mr. Merrifield responded, "I was advised that a two year audit/review was under-way of my 1393's and Amex as ordered by Supt. Proulx. Awaiting results." Mr. Steeves responded on the same day and said:

The review was completed and Supt. Proulx was advised. I suspect that if you have not heard any different then things were fine. Supt. Proulx is aware of the duplicate payment.

I have also CCd him on this message.

It was during this review that the duplicate payment was discovered. I have a copy of the RG cheques and the claims involved if you wish to see then. It would appear that the same claim was faxed twice to Ottawa in error but this was not caught by the DBA unit and payment was issued to you on both occasions.

The invoice issued to you is for the exact amount of the second payment. [Emphasis added]

[391] On January 5, 2006, at 12:07 pm, Mr. Merrifield sent an email to Mr. Steeves requesting the date that the audit was ordered and the date when it was completed. On January 5, 2006 at 12:10 pm, Mr. Steeves sent an email to Supt. Proulx stating, "How do you wish me to handle this?"

[392] On January 5 at 3:33 pm, Supt. Proulx sent an email to Mr. Merrifield stating:

I sent you an email on November 8th and informed you I was requesting a review of your Amex...I sent the request to John Steeves the same day...He gave me a reply at the end of November...it did not provide the information I wanted and asked John Steeves this morning for further clarification. As a manager, I have to be certain that your Amex is used in relation to your work and not for personal expenses. In a nut shell, if you take a cash advance, there should be an expense account submitted shortly thereafter to offset the use of the money. If not then why was the cash advance used for...Once John Steeves completes this review I will address his findings with you accordingly.

[393] On January 5, 2006 at 5:07 pm, Mr. Merrifield sent Supt. Proulx an email which stated:

My request of John Steeves which has gone unanswered by him and now responded to by you is in relation to the following details.

Mr. Steeves stated in his e-mail to me that the audit he conducted revealed an overpayment. This overpayment was brought to my attention in writing on November 07 by Mr. Steeves. Your e-mail to me stating your intention to order an audit was not issued until Nov. 08. I am therefore confused as to how this audit found an overpayment before it had been ordered.

In your e-mail to me of Nov. 08, you stated that you ordered the audit to “ensure that I was treated fairly by the RMCP” and not overpay the RCMP. You also stated at that time that you would contact me with the results to discuss. It would appear that the audit was completed at the end of November. Your attached message today states a completely different reason for the audit.

My request today of Mr. Steeves was for Mr. Steeves. It was not “regarding your actions” sir it was to clarify dates of request and actions by Mr. Steeves office which I believe I am entitled to.

With regards to your message today I believe that you are already in possession of the information you are seeking. My AMEX balance at the time of the expense submissions was approximately $2300.00. The amount of expenses submitted was approximately $2300.00 I am now confused as to your reasoning explained today for the audit. It is an accusation of improper use of AMEX/Expenses? Is there reason to believe that my AMEX was used for anything other than RCMP business?

I will treat the lack of response by Mr. Steeves and his decision to involve you as the choice by him not to respond to my request. I must state for the record that I am very concerned by the actions of “O” division HQ personnel in my treatment over the last year. I have responded quickly and honestly to every request made of me. I have provided responses to every person who made requests of me in this matter and other more serious matters. I am more than disappointed with the treatment I have received, the lack of answers to my requests and the clandestine like investigation of my activities in and outside the RCMP. These investigations have been intrusive, harassing and stressful. They impacted negatively on my home life as well as my professional life.

I have until now attempted to deal with matters informally and at the lowest level.

- [394] Supt. Proulx replied on January 6, 2006 and stated, “If you have any concerns, you know where I am and I have never refused to meet with you and whoever you wanted to bring along.”
- [395] Supt. Proulx did not tell Mr. Merrifield that he had in fact prepared a memorandum to order a Part IV investigation to be carried out by Professional Standards.
- [396] Mr. Proulx stated that the first time he became aware of any issues regarding Mr. Merrifield’s credit card was on October 24, 2005. Claude Caron, Director General of Finance, sent a letter dated October 13, 2005 to Mr. Merrifield advising him that the outstanding balance on his Amex card had been paid by the RCMP pursuant to its agreement with Amex. Supt. Proulx received a copy of it. He understood from that letter that Mr. Merrifield had failed to make a payment on his Amex corporate card in the amount of $1,223.74 and that the RCMP had cancelled his card. The RCMP had paid the Amex balance and now Mr. Merrifield was supposed to reimburse the RCMP by way of a certified cheque to the Receiver General. Mr. Proulx understood that the Amex balance was 90 days past due.

[397] Mr. Proulx stated that he called Mr. Merrifield to speak to him about it. His response was that everything had been resolved two weeks ago. His cheque had been cashed. His explanation was that the Amex account was not paid on time because the RCMP had not paid him some expenses on time.

[398] Mr. Proulx stated that the next day, he went to see John Steeves because he figured that if the RCMP was late in paying Mr. Merrifield and there was a mix-up in the payment of the credit card, maybe the Amex card should not have been cancelled. Mr. Steeves advised Mr. Proulx that he had just received Mr. Merrifield's cheque the previous day. Mr. Proulx stated that he was surprised by this because when he spoke to Mr. Merrifield, he said that the cheque had been cashed. There was an obvious inconsistency. Mr. Proulx asked Mr. Steeves to check to see if the RCMP had been late in paying Mr. Merrifield and if so exactly how late the payment was.

[399] Mr. Proulx recalled receiving a copy of an email that Mr. Merrifield had sent to Mr. Steeves. It stated:

Following up on our dealings regarding Amex. I had spoken with Bev Scott in Ottawa prior to the RCMP paying the AMEX. When the period of time had expired and the Force paid Bev was not working on that Monday and I had directed my wife to pay Amex on that date before the Force would have to.

You then forwarded me an e-mail to Not pay Amex but instead forward a cheque to your office. I did that on the week of October 10-14 on the 13th to ensure it would leave Newmarket by interoffice mail. It was sent to your attention. I received a phone call from Supt. Proulx on October 24 advising that he had been contacted by Ottawa to look into this. A review at my bank on the 24th October did not show the cheque clearing. Have you received it and is this matter concluded?

[400] Mr. Proulx received a copy of an email dated October 28, 2005, which was Mr. Steeves' reply to Mr. Merrifield that the cheque had been received.

[401] Mr. Proulx recalled that he next saw Mr. Steeves on November 2. Mr. Steeves stated that he had sent an email to Mr. Proulx which showed that Mr. Merrifield had no outstanding expense account and that everything had been paid for. Then Mr. Steeves sent Supt. Proulx an email dated November 2 and stated that Cst. Merrifield had been paid a double payment of an expense account and that the amount was $800. (The actual amount of the double payment was $838.35.) Mr. Proulx stated that Mr. Merrifield had not submitted any expense accounts after the May 8 to 12 period, for Operation Rogue Tanker. Mr. Merrifield had submitted a claim in May for the week of April 11 to 15 but the RCMP took 52 days to pay this amount. Mr. Proulx stated that this was unusually long. It was paid in June. He called Mr. Merrifield and told him he had received some information from Mr. Steeves who had uncovered double payment for an expense account. Mr. Merrifield stated that he did not recall receiving two cheques for the same expense and said he would look into it.

[402] Mr. Proulx stated that he thought all of a sudden there were a lot of inconsistencies in Mr. Merrifield's story regarding whether the cheques had been cashed and about the fact that the RCMP had paid him late. Mr. Steeves had sent Mr. Merrifield an email dated November 7 notifying him about the duplicate payment. Mr. Merrifield responded to Mr. Steeves stating that he had not received payment for an overtime claim that he had submitted in June which exceeded $1400. Mr. Proulx stated that there was no relationship between overtime and payment of expense accounts. They come from different pockets of the RCMP. Mr. Proulx responded to Mr. Merrifield by email dated November 8, 2005. In that email, he said that he was going to ask the corporate department to conduct a complete review reconciliation of Merrifield's Amex account for the past two years in order to ascertain that Merrifield was treated fairly and that he did not overpay the RCMP. Mr. Proulx stated that there were a lot of inconsistencies with respect to Mr. Merrifield's account. He believed that Mr. Merrifield had not recognized the fact that he had received double payment even though Mr. Steeves had been clear with both cheque numbers. Mr. Proulx stated that his only purpose at that time in requesting the complete review reconciliation for the past two years was to make sure that Mr. Merrifield was not being overcharged and that he received the money that he was entitled to receive. Mr. Proulx forwarded the email to Mr. Steeves asking him to do the review.

- [403] Mr. Proulx said that Mr. Steeves replied to him on November 28 and said everything was fine. Mr. Proulx sent an email to Mr. Steeves dated December 1, 2005 in which he stated that Insp. Josey (Mr. Merrifield's supervisor when he was in the Air Marshall program) had authorized a payment from relocation funds. Accordingly, the issue was fully resolved as of December 1, 2005. As of November 2, 2005, he knew that it was not an account receivable. In his email to Mr. Steeves, Mr. Proulx said if Mr. Steeves had not uncovered any irregularities, then he was satisfied.
- [404] Mr. Proulx stated that subsequently, Mr. Steeves came into his office and said that there was something else that he did not want to put in writing. There were two back-to-back $500 cash advances and a gas purchase. He was concerned that there was no matching expense for it. Mr. Proulx stated that this might be indicative of kiting or fraud, serious criminal offences. He thought Mr. Merrifield had deceived him about the duplicate payment. He told Mr. Steeves to stop the work that he was doing and that this would be a matter for a formal Part IV Code of Conduct investigation.
- [405] He described the internal investigation as simply a method for getting to the bottom of the issues and to give both parties an opportunity to set out in writing their sides of the story. Mr. Proulx recalled speaking to S/Sgt. Babinko who was in charge of internal investigations. In December, Mr. Proulx started to prepare a memo to order the Part IV investigation. If a cash advance had been taken, there should be an expense account to offset the use of the money. Mr. Proulx stated that prior to that, Mr. Merrifield had not been informed that there was a concern regarding potential cash advances without proper expense claims.
- [406] Mr. Proulx stated that he was not prepared to tell Mr. Merrifield about it because he was just finalizing the memorandum to order the Part IV investigation. Mr. Proulx stated that he was hinting to Mr. Merrifield that some cash advances were uncovered.
- [407] Mr. Proulx had no notes of the date that Mr. Steeves came to see him or of any details of the conversation with Mr. Steeves.
- [408] Mr. Proulx agreed that the information that he obtained later with respect to the cash withdrawals showed that they were not taken back-to-back. In fact the dates were September 22, November 23 and November 30, 2005. Mr. Proulx did not recall the purpose of September 22 cash advance. He did not receive any other dates regarding the cash withdrawals.
- [409] His note dated 2006-01-06 states:

Cash adv Sept 22nd

SW 2004
SW Nov 23th
Nov 30th
?
A/R
$3637.66

- [410] Mr. Proulx stated that he did not investigate the matter himself because he might have been required to make a decision on discipline and he had to stay independent.
- [411] Mr. Proulx stated that at no time did he ask Mr. Merrifield for an explanation regarding the cash withdrawals. He did not know that expense claims had been submitted for two cash withdrawals relating to Mr. Merrifield's eye surgery and that the surgery was required for an injury on the job.
- [412] Mr. Steeves sent an email to Cpl. DuPuy dated January 9, 2006 requesting copies of documents supporting payment requests. It states, "the issue I am dealing with is somewhat urgent." Mr. Proulx stated that he told Mr. Steeves to do nothing further after January 5, 2006 because he had already sent the memorandum ordering the Part IV investigation. (The memorandum was dated January 6, 2006 but he did not sign it until January 13, 2006.) Mr. Proulx had no explanation for why Mr. Steeves would be contacting Cpl. DuPuy on January 9, 2006. Mr. Steeves had completed his review by January 5, 2006. Mr. Proulx had told Mr. Merrifield that he would get back to him after the review was completed. He did not do this.

Code of Conduct Part IV Investigation – Preceding Events

- [413] Mr. Proulx sent a memorandum to S/Sgt. Wally Babinko dated January 6, 2006 ordering the Part IV investigation. He acknowledged that in the memorandum, he raised the issue that the Amex account was over 90 days due but it had already been paid. He did not identify two cash withdrawals without offsetting expense claims. In the memorandum, he stated that several cash advances were suspected to be for personal reasons. He stated:

Cst. Merrifield is suspected of having contravened administrative policy concerning the use and payment of his Corporate American Express Card. As a result of his non payment [sic] and misuse of Corporate American Express Card he may have engaged in disgraceful conduct that could bring discredit to the Force contrary to Section 39(1) of the RCMP Act.

- [414] Mr. Proulx stated that he was reporting Mr. Merrifield for disgraceful conduct that could bring discredit to the force.
- [415] Mr. Proulx said that he had earlier told Mr. Merrifield to hold off paying the $837 until he had a chance to investigate. A mistake had been made in an account receivable showing that it was outstanding but Insp. Josey had authorized payment. When he sent the memorandum, he knew that this was cleared up. Mr. Proulx stated that he was concerned that Mr. Merrifield's activities might constitute kiting and fraud. Cashing the second cheque was deceitful. He wanted the matter investigated. He felt Mr. Merrifield was deceiving him about the payments. Mr. Proulx did not ask Mr. Merrifield for a written explanation before he ordered the Part IV investigation. He stated that this was not a requirement in 2006. Mr. Proulx stated that he was not concerned that he had inaccurate information when he ordered the investigation. Mr. Steeves had given it to him.

- [416] Mr. Proulx had no explanation as to why Mr. Steeves was communicating with Cpl. DuPuy urgently on January 9, 2006. He said he did not know about it.
- [417] Mr. Proulx received an email from Mr. Merrifield on January 5 at 3:30, one day before the date of the memorandum. He knew that Mr. Merrifield had made a complaint about him.
- [418] Mr. Steeves explained that an Amex card would be issued to anyone in the Force who wanted one. No credit application was required because the card was protected against loss. The RCMP guaranteed payment.
- [419] Mr. Steeves stated that Mr. Merrifield sent an email to Lynn Huard dated August 3, 2005 with respect to his Amex account. In that email, he stated that he was not getting his Amex statements in time because he had moved to a different section. This was causing a lag of two to three months before he received the statements. There was an issue about his balance on the card. In the email he stated that he had paid $1,000 a short time ago and that the balance was now around $1,200.
- [420] Mr. Steeves stated that this did not resolve the issue because Amex does not allow outstanding balances. When you receive a statement, the entire amount is due. Mr. Steeves stated that the corporate Amex card could be used to pay for expenses related to travel, hotels, airfare, and car rentals. Cash advances could be taken for small amounts such as taxi fares. A member was required to keep the receipts and submit them with an expense claim. The card could not be used for anything else.
- [421] On September 16, 2005, the RCMP had issued an invoice to Mr. Merrifield indicating that his Amex account was 138 days past due in the amount of $1,223.74. The copy of the invoice shows Mr. Merrifield's handwriting and states "cheque attached 2005/10/11" along with his signature. Mr. Steeves stated he did not know when Mr. Merrifield had received the invoice. On October 28, 2005, Mr. Steeves sent an email to Merrifield which stated, "cheque received." Mr. Steeves stated that he sent a copy of this email to Supt. Proulx.
- [422] Mr. Steeves stated that he carried out that review requested by Supt. Proulx and sent it to him along with an email dated November 2, 2005. In that email, he stated that his review showed that Mr. Merrifield had received a duplicate payment of $838.35. An account receivable would be issued in the next few days to recover that amount. Mr. Steeves stated that two claims had been submitted by two different authorities for the same cost. This resulted in two payments of $838.35 made on June 6, 2005 and June 21, 2005.
- [423] Mr. Steeves stated that he had never previously dealt with a situation where the entire balance on an Amex card was paid by the RCMP. He stated that late submission of expense claims and late processing of the claims can result in a card's going into arrears. Mr. Steeves said that there was no relationship between outstanding pay for overtime and a balance owing on an Amex card except that the card holder would have funds to pay the amount.
- [424] Mr. Steeves stated that he was not copied on the email that Supt. Proulx sent to Mr. Merrifield on November 8, 2005 which said that Supt. Proulx was going to ask Corporate to conduct a review.
- [425] Mr. Steeves sent an email to Mr. Merrifield dated January 4, 2006 commenting that the account receivable issued to him regarding the duplicate payment was thirty days past due and asking him to advise of his intentions. Mr. Merrifield responded on January 5, 2006 stating that he was awaiting the results of the two year review as ordered by Supt. Proulx. Mr. Merrifield stated he was not aware of the results or the outcome of the audit. He commented that if the amount was paid twice then he had no problem paying that amount to the Receiver General. He requested some time to receive the outstanding overtime payment which would more than provide him with funds to cover the amount owed for the duplicate payment. Mr. Steeves did not have any concerns about this.

- [426] Mr. Steeves sent an email to Mr. Merrifield on the same day and said, "The review was completed and Supt. Proulx was advised. I suspect that if you have not heard any different then things were fine."
- [427] On January 9, 2006, Mr. Steeves sent an email to Cpl. DuPuy asking for copies of the supporting documentation for specific payment requests made by Mr. Merrifield. The email concluded as follows: "The issue I am dealing with is somewhat urgent so I am soliciting your earliest response." Mr. Steeves stated that he was not sure why he determined the issue to be urgent or why he was contacting Cpl. DuPuy after Supt. Proulx told him to hold off on pursuing the matter. He received the documents. They were placed in the file.
- [428] Mr. Steeves stated he received an email from S/Sgt. Babinko on January 19, 2006, about a Part IV investigation. Mr. Steeves said that this was the first time that he knew that a Part IV investigation had been ordered regarding Mr. Merrifield's use of his Amex card.
- [429] S/Sgt. Babinko requested Mr. Merrifield's Amex statements from January 2005 to January 2006, his expense statements for that time, any documents signed by Mr. Merrifield for the use of the card, and any related policy. Mr. Steeves provided all of this.
- [430] Six months later, Mr. Steeves received an email from Insp. Block dated July 31, 2006 regarding the duplicate payment. Supt. Proulx was being transferred and was discussing some outstanding issues with Insp. Block before he left his position. Mr. Steeves himself was also leaving the Division. Mr. Steeves replied the same day and stated, "There were some internal activities (code) being conducted and I was advised not to aggressively pursue this until that had been settled."
- [431] Mr. Steeves stated that he would not have told Mr. Merrifield that "things were fine" in his email dated January 5, 2006 if he had thought that there was a problem. If Supt. Proulx had told him that there was a problem, he would not have said this. He simply wanted the duplicate payment to be repaid. His review showed just some late payments. Everything was fine. Mr. Steeves pointed out that misuse and tardiness are two different things.
- [432] Mr. Merrifield sent an email to Mr. Proulx dated January 5, 2006, and asked whether there was an "accusation of improper use of AMEX/Expenses? Is there reason to believe that my AMEX was used for anything other than RCMP business?" Mr. Proulx responded by inviting Mr. Merrifield to meet with him if Mr. Merrifield had any concerns.
- [433] On January 6, 2006, Supt. Proulx finalized the memorandum and spoke to Supt. Trueman before sending it. This was the first Part IV investigation that he had ordered. He understood that it would be a fact-finding mission so that he could make an appropriate decision as to whether there should be discipline or whether Mr. Merrifield should simply be cautioned about how he should manage his matters. Mr. Proulx stated at that time that he was not certain that Mr. Merrifield had improperly used his credit card. He had doubts. He stated that this is what the investigation was all about.
- [434] Mr. Proulx stated that around this time, Mr. Merrifield was about to be transferred to a different unit. He did not know the date when this would occur. He had no further involvement in the credit card issue after he ordered the investigation.

- [435] Mr. Proulx stated he sent a briefing note to the Commissioner dated January 17, 2006. On page 2 under current status it states: "On 2006-01-13, after a review of Cst. Merrifield's use and mis-payment of his AMEX card, his line officer directed a Part IV investigation alleging that Cst. Merrifield has repeatedly used his Corporate Amex for personal reasons."
- [436] Mr. Proulx could not say why he stated January 13, 2006 in the briefing note when the memorandum to S/Sgt. Babinko was dated January 6, 2006. He thought maybe he had missed it. He believed he had signed the memorandum on January 13, 2006. Mr. Proulx agreed that his notes contained material errors regarding the dates of the withdrawals and the payments. He thought they were back-to-back withdrawals at the time. Now he knows that they were not. He agreed that Mr. Steeves had sent an email to Cpl DuPuy in which he said he required information on an urgent basis regarding Mr. Merrifield. This email is dated January 9, 2006. The briefing note dated January 17 states that the Part IV investigation was ordered on January 13, 2006. He agreed that the memo to S/Sgt Babinko ordering the investigation shows a receipt stamp date of January 18, 2006.
- [437] Mr. Proulx testified that shortly after ordering the Part IV investigation of Mr. Merrifield, he himself was engaging in disgraceful conduct that could have brought discredit to the Force.

The Investigation

- [438] Sgt. Dickinson testified that he was in the Complaints and Internal Investigation Section (CIIS), now called the Professional Standards Unit, in 2006. His duties at CIIS included carrying out Part IV investigations and occasionally doing an administrative review.
- [439] Sgt. Dickinson stated that a Part IV proceeding is initiated by a mandate letter. CIIS was asked to conduct a Part IV investigation into Mr. Merrifield's conduct. He was suspected to have contravened administrative policy with respect to the use and payment of his Amex card. Sgt. Dickinson was assigned to carry out the investigation on January 24, 2006.
- [440] He received a file that had been opened by S/Sgt. Babinko. It contained a few documents including a form 1624 that detailed the steps that had already been taken. S/Sgt. Babinko had made inquiries of John Steeves and Bev Scott in Ottawa, regarding the Amex user agreement. No agreement existed. The file also contained the policy regarding use of corporate credit cards, the mandate memorandum and a letter to Mr. Merrifield advising him that the RCMP had paid the outstanding balance on his Amex card.
- [441] The file was coded "XX82 Intern COM-RCMP Member". The occurrence date set out was October 13, 2005. Sgt. Dickinson stated that when the investigation started, there was nothing payable on the Amex card. Mr. Merrifield was hoping that Ms. Scott would alert him before the RCMP paid off the amount owing on card. The RCMP had paid the account before they alerted him. At no point did Mr. Merrifield say he would not pay the account. Mr. Merrifield was waiting for documents to confirm that he had received a double payment. This did not form part of the Part IV investigation.
- [442] Sgt. Dickinson stated that in the mandate memorandum, Supt. Proulx did not identify any specific transactions of concern nor did he set out a date range or a timeframe. From Sgt. Dickinson's perspective, when he conducted the review, regardless of whether there was a $1 item or a $10,000 item, it was within his purview to investigate it. In fact, Sgt. Dickinson reviewed Mr. Merrifield's expenditures and reimbursements back to 2004, one of which was $6.00 for parking when Mr. Merrifield was in the Air Carriers program.
- [443] Sgt. Dickinson stated that a number of people could have known that this Part IV investigation had been ordered. They would include the line officer, likely the Conduct Advisor, the C.O. through monthly reports and members in the CIIS. He stated that this group would be advised of the investigation. When he would go out to interview other people they would learn some of the details. Anyone he spoke to would know that he was from CIIS. He spoke to more than ten people in the course of the investigation.

- [444] Sgt. Dickinson's first step in the investigation was to contact Mr. Steeves and obtain copies of the Amex bills and the expense claims. When he met with Mr. Steeves, Sgt. Dickinson took notes on a scratch pad. They state, "While on travel status can use card for almost anything."
- [445] Sgt. Dickinson testified that he did not know that Mr. Merrifield's card was a covert American Express card. The statements showed that they were being sent to the INSET office after Mr. Merrifield had left there. The statement for February 14, 2005 is addressed to 345 Harry Walker Drive which is the Toronto North detachment. This was not Mr. Merrifield's address either. Sgt. Dickinson was aware that Mr. Merrifield's transfer from TAG was in progress. He agreed that if Mr. Merrifield had moved in May 2005 he would not be receiving the statements on time. There would be some delay. Mr. Merrifield told him that this had occurred.
- [446] Sgt. Dickinson stated that a version of s. 5.1.1 of the Financial Management Manual would have been in effect from January 2005 to 2006. It states that, "If suspected misuse of the DTC [Designated Travel Card] is identified, ask the employee to provide a written explanation for the transaction in question." The file that S/Sgt. Babinko had opened did not contain a written explanation for the cash withdrawals.
- [447] Mr. Merrifield stated that he contacted Sgt. Dickinson in May 2006. Sgt. Dickinson told him that there were concerns about cash withdrawals and expenses on the card that were not within the authorized use. There were ten cash advances totalling $3,000. At this point, Mr. Merrifield did not have any information as to which cash withdrawals were in issue. He was off work on sick leave at the time. He said that he thought the cash advances were taken out to make human source payments.
- [448] Sgt. Dickinson followed up on the issue of human source payments by contacting Supt. Proulx and Sgt. Christiansen in London. He could not substantiate Mr. Merrifield's statement that he had taken money out to pay sources.
- [449] With respect to the cash withdrawals, Mr. Merrifield stated that RCMP members are not covered for health insurance by OHIP. Rather, they are covered by Blue Cross. On July 19, 2006, Mr. Merrifield sent a detailed, two page email to Supt. Dickinson setting out explanations for entries on his Amex account. For example, Mr. Merrifield explained that on July 3, 2005, he took a $500 cash advance from Amex to attend a walk in clinic after complications from knee surgery. He did not believe that the clinic would accept Blue Cross. He needed an X-ray, crutches and a prescription. When he arrived at the clinic, it accepted his Blue Cross coverage so he returned the cash advance to his Amex account on July 29, 2005. On April 29, 2005, he took a $300 cash advance to purchase supplies and props for Operation Bridgeout. On March 3, 2005, he took a $300 advance for a TA course in Ottawa. He was not required to use it so he put it back into his Amex account. On October 5, 2004, he took a cash advance of $400 which he paid to Bell Mobility because the RCMP had agreed to pay for three months of his plan. It was submitted and approved as an expense.
- [450] Mr. Merrifield stated that on September 22 and 23, 2004, he took a cash advance of $500 on each day to pay for eye surgery which had been approved by the RCMP. The surgeon would not accept Blue Cross, only cash or a cheque. Mr. Merrifield stated that when he received a call the day prior to the surgery to confirm the time, he was advised that payment had not been received from the RCMP. He spoke to Health Services. They said it was an oversight and that he should cover it. He would be reimbursed quickly. Mr. Merrifield stated that he could not cover the amount. He advised Health Services that he would use RCMP funds. They said that he should complete a 1393 expense report with the surgeon's receipt and he would be reimbursed as soon as possible. Mr. Merrifield stated that he took these steps. These amounts were submitted and approved by Health Services. He was reimbursed by Blue Cross and he applied the funds to his Amex account.

[451] In his July 19, 2006 email to Sgt. Dickinson, Mr. Merrifield stated:

I must state at this time that on at least two occasions in writing prior to the ordering of a Code of Conduct, Supt. Proulx stated clearly that he would meet with me to discuss the outcome of the audit. Had he done as he stated, you may have indeed been spared your valuable time in an agency which seems continually short staffed. As I have mentioned from the beginning, I have never used the RCMP Amex card for non-RCMP business. I maintain at least two or three personal credit cards and a personal line of credit for a total available credit limit to me exceeding $40,000.

I wish to go on the record as very concerned about the actions of Supt. Proulx and Mr. John Steeves in relation to this audit and Code of Conduct. One day prior to the ordering of the Part IV by Supt. Proulx, I questioned Mr. Steeves about details relating to the audit. When a clear contradiction of the timing and reason surrounding the audit appeared between the facts claimed by Supt. Proulx and those of Mr. Steeves, this process went to Part IV. The inconsistencies between the facts presented in writing by Mr. Steeves and Supt. Proulx can only be described as "suspect" of Discreditable Conduct on behalf of the two aforementioned individuals. Mr. Steeves refused to answer my queries on January 05, 2006 and forwarded my e-mail addressed only to him on to Supt. Proulx for a response. Supt. Proulx responded on January 06, 2006 by ordering a Part IV investigation against me contrary to his twice written statement that he wished to discuss the findings of the audit with me first.

Please advise me of further requirements in this matter as I will continue to assist in any way that I can.

[452] Sgt. Dickinson stated that he contacted Crystal Cane at O Division Health Services to ask whether Mr. Merrifield had submitted a claim for the eye surgery medical expense. She confirmed that Mr. Merrifield had submitted an expense claim for $900. Nevertheless, Sgt. Dickinson believed that this was not an authorized use of the Amex card.

[453] With respect to some other cash advances, Mr. Merrifield had stated that they were used to purchase gas. Sgt. Dickinson concluded that this was not an authorized use of the card.

[454] The expense claim for Mr. Merrifield's phone shows an amount of $525 and that it was approved. Sgt. Dickinson agreed that if Mr. Merrifield took out $400 to pay the account, he did not take out enough. It was definitely a business expense.

[455] Sgt. Dickinson stated that he requested a credit report on May 18. There was nothing remarkable on the credit report. It showed some short-term debt but payments were being made.

- [456] Mr. Merrifield stated that he met with Sgt. Dickinson on September 11, 2006. He could not provide an interview any earlier because he was off sick. In the interview, he provided emails to Sgt. Dickinson showing that he had been told to hold off on making Amex payments. Sgt. Dickinson commented that it was already overdue and had been paid by the RCMP.
- [457] Mr. Merrifield voluntarily provided personal financial information to show that he had significant credit available. He stated that it would be impossible to kite payments on an Amex card. Based on his professional experience, he believed that only credit cards that permit minimum payments can be kited.
- [458] Sgt. Dickinson confirmed that when he met with Mr. Merrifield, he produced his personal credit card statements which he was under no obligation to do. He was forthright and cooperative.
- [459] During the September 11, 2006 meeting, Mr. Merrifield provided a recorded statement. He listed the names of 11 officers because they would be able to support his explanation for certain expenses. Sgt. Dickinson stated that he did not speak with them. There was nothing preventing him from doing so. Sgt. Dickinson said there were unresolved issues in his mind but he did not see the point of making further inquiries.
- [460] With respect to the two $500 cash withdrawals, Sgt. Dickinson did not make an inquiry past the Health Services document. He stated he did not obtain the document. The people at Health Services said it showed that the amount was paid in full. He did not make inquiries to see if it had been submitted to the insurer. Nothing prevented him from doing this except that he needed Mr. Merrifield's consent. He did not request it.
- [461] Sgt. Dickinson stated that he could not recall whether Mr. Merrifield told him that no one ever asked him for an explanation with respect to the cash withdrawals. He recalled Mr. Merrifield said that Supt. Proulx told him there would be meetings and discussions about it. It never happened to his knowledge. He saw nothing to document that a meeting had ever taken place.
- [462] When he had finished his investigation, Sgt. Dickinson prepared a final report. He stated that Mr. Merrifield's failure to pay the balance due on the Amex card had contravened the administrative policy regarding the use of the card. Mr. Merrifield said that he had not read the agreement and did not know that the balance had to be paid immediately.
- [463] Sgt. Dickinson suspected that Mr. Merrifield was kiting payments. His understanding of kiting was that a person would take cash from one card to make a payment on another. When a suggestion was made to him that a person could not kite an Amex card which required the full balance to be paid at the end of each month, Sgt. Dickinson stated that he did not fully understand the concept of kiting. On the last page of his report, he stated that Mr. Merrifield "allowed me to view the monthly statements from one of his two personal credit cards. This was done to address any suspicion that he was "kiting" money from one card to the next in order to make his payments. Sgt. Dickinson stated at the end of this report, "I noted that regular monthly payments were being made and there was no apparent correlation between the dates of the payments and any cash withdrawals take out against his AMEX card."
- [464] Sgt. Dickinson did not make any recommendation as to discipline as this was not his role. This was within the line officer's authority.
- [465] On September 20, 2006, Mr. Merrifield received a Performance Log from Sgt. Brown (who was acting officer in charge because Insp. Johnson was ill) with respect to the Part IV investigation. It states:

1. Use of RCMP issued Designated Travel Card (DTC). I understand that at present you do not have a DTC, but should one be issued to you in the future, you are to comply with Admin Manual VII.11, which deals with Travel Credit Cards and Accounts. That the DTC will only be used for "Authorized Business Travel". That prior to your using a DTC, you will also read and sign the Agreement between you and the Government of Canada" card that comes with it. That you will pay the DTC account on time.
2. That you will maintain an up-to-date police notebook while you are in Customs and Excise.
3. That you will not use your personal motor vehicle for any RCMP business unless you have prior approval from your supervisor as per RCMP policy. That you will then forward an expense claim for mileage as per policy.
4. That you will promptly forward any expense claims and/or over time. That as with all members of the GTA, C&E, you require prior approval from your supervisor for overtime. That without this prior approval you risk not being paid for it.

Peter having had an opportunity to read one of your performance appraisals on another matter, I am sure you are an extremely capable member. Our section will only benefit from your transfer to it. I look forward to working with you in moving ahead from this point.

A copy of this 1004 will be forwarded to CIIS to be placed on file so that it may be concluded.

- [466] Mr. Merrifield referred to the Financial Management Manual that sets out policy regarding travel credit cards and accounts. Section 5.1.1 under the heading "Misuse of Designated Travel Cards" states "If suspected misuse of the DTC [designated travel card] is identified, ask the employee to provide a written explanation for the transaction in question."
- [467] Mr. Merrifield stated that he was never asked to provide a written explanation with respect to the transactions that formed the basis of the Part IV investigation ordered by Supt. Proulx. Mr. Merrifield said the action taken by Supt. Proulx was retaliatory. There was no reason for it. The cash withdrawals were legitimate and easily explained. The Part IV investigation was ordered 14 hours after Mr. Merrifield had said that he would be seeking process for harassment.
- [468] Mr. Merrifield testified that the investigation took 11 months. The Performance Log was served on him. The outcome was that the allegations were unfounded.
- [469] After he finished his report dated September 15, 2006, Sgt. Dickinson sent an email on October 19, 2006 to Supt. Hebert. He was responsible for the CIIS units. Sgt. Dickinson could not explain why he was communicating with Supt. Hebert with respect to the investigation. It appeared that he had read the file and was asking some questions. The initial email refers to, "Our phone conversation from a couple of weeks ago..." Sgt. Dickinson stated that there was nothing in his notebook about this phone conversation. It was undocumented. He agreed that it would be out of the ordinary for him to be communicating with Supt. Hebert because Mr. Merrifield was not in his chain of command. Supt. Hebert would have been aware of the inquiry because Sgt. Dickinson had asked him questions about payments to human sources. Supt. Hebert was a senior officer to him.

[470] Sgt. Dickinson's email to Supt. Hebert dated October 19, 2006, reported on the outcome of the investigation. It states:

1. All AMEX expenses and cash withdrawals of consequence were confirmed as being work and/or medical related. For some minor expenses ($20 – 25 range – meals, parking etc), there was no documentation or notes to support but the member did have a credible explanation.

2. Cst. Merrifield said that he had always been advised by supervisors (and believed them) that any expense that could be claimed on a 1393 could be charged on the AMEX card.

[471] Sgt. Dickinson stated that his final report was never produced to Mr. Merrifield until this action was commenced. In the ordinary course he would not have received it or seen it unless he accessed it through an Access to Information and Privacy (ATIP) request.

[472] In June 2006, in the middle of the investigation, Supt. Proulx was transferred to a different position at the police college in Aylmer.

[473] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he was aware of the Amex issue in late fall of 2005 because Supt. Proulx had told him about his concerns. He would meet with someone from corporate finance every four to six weeks to discuss any issues as his budget was 93% of the entire division budget. John Steeves had brought the Amex issue to his attention.

[474] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he did not take any action or provide any directions to Supt. Proulx, who he thought had things under control. He stated that Part IV investigations were not a regular occurrence. If any officer under his authority requested one, he would usually be advised of it. He could not override it. He agreed that a Part IV investigation is a more formal step against a member. Ordinarily, he would learn of approximately two Part IV investigations per year.

[475] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he believed that the allegations regarding the Part IV investigation relating to Mr. Merrifield's use of the Amex card were substantiated but not the allegations that Mr. Merrifield had failed to follow the related policy. He did not receive a copy of Sgt. Dickinson's concluding report regarding the investigation. He never spoke to Sgt. Dickinson. He was not aware of the outcome.

The Administrative Review - Ottawa Citizen Article January 17, 2006

[476] On January 17, 2006, one week before Sgt. Dickinson was assigned to the Part IV investigation, the Ottawa Citizen Newspaper published an article written by Gary Dimmock entitled, "RCMP Demotes Officer over Political Bid". The article quoted from Mr. Merrifield's performance evaluations. Mr. Merrifield stated that he did not know about the article before it was published.

[477] On January 19, 2006, Mr. Merrifield's lawyer at the time, Raj Anand of Weir Foulds, wrote a letter to Commissioner Zaccardelli stating that Mr. Merrifield had not provided any documents to the Ottawa Citizen. Mr. Anand also stated:

...Constable Merrifield is very concerned about the reprisals and harassment that he has suffered and continues to experience as a result of exercising his employment, statutory and Charter rights to engage in political activity...

- [478] C.O. Seguin wrote a letter to Mr. Anand dated February 24, 2006, in response to his letter dated January 19, 2006. He stated:

The RCMP is committed to providing a safe and respectful work environment, free of discrimination, offensive behaviour and harassment. In support of its commitment, it has several internal mechanisms that deal with any form of reprisals and harassment in the work place. These mechanisms are at Constable Merrifield's disposal and they can be accessed by him or, if he requires advice, counseling or assistance, through his Staff Relations Representative.

- [479] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he was familiar with the Ottawa Citizen article. He received an email from Insp. Petit, of the National Security Branch in Ottawa, before 9:00 a.m. on January 17, 2006 regarding a media summary. C/Supt. Mazerolle explained that senior executives within the RCMP received one of these every Monday about anything of concern in the media. He stated that Insp. Petit asked him to prepare a briefing note to the Commissioner regarding some of the statements in the article. Chief Supt. Mazerolle stated that he asked Supt. Proulx and others to prepare the response for the Commissioner. He received a draft and edited it. It is dated January 17, 2006. Among other things, it states:

All reasonable steps were taken to ensure that Cst. Merrifield was allowed to participate in the political process. However, it is clear that the Member has placed himself in a position of at least a perceived conflict of interest which jeopardizes the effectiveness and reputation of both the RCMP and the Member. As a result, measured and reasonable steps have been taken to minimize that conflict and ensure the effectiveness of the RCMP.

The media reports are fundamentally flawed in that they erroneously report that Cst. Merrifield has been demoted. In addition it must be noted that a Part IV investigation has recently been commenced and this may be a contributing factor.

- [480] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he spoke to District Commander Davis in the GTA district. Customs and Excise reported to him. C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he sent him a copy of the article and discussed the requirement for an administrative review to determine how the information got the Ottawa Citizen.

- [481] Mr. Proulx stated that on January 17, 2006 C/Supt. Mazerolle called him. He wanted an explanation as to what had happened and where the information had come from. Paragraph two of the article stated, "Const. Peter Merrifield, who unsuccessfully sought the Conservative nomination in Barrie, Ont., in May 2005, was told months later that it would be in the best interests of the RCMP... if he was assigned to other duties not related to politics."

- [482] Mr. Proulx stated that he was concerned that someone had released an email. The comment was almost the same as the comment he had made in the email to Insp. Brine. That was a protected document and should not have been disclosed. Mr. Proulx stated that on January 17, 2006, he wrote a briefing note to C/Supt. Mazerolle on the topic. By this time, he had already requested the Part IV investigation. He sent the first draft of the briefing note to C/Supt. Mazerolle. He and the C.O. made some changes to it.

- [483] C.O. Seguin stated that he had read the article in the paper. The statement that Mr. Merrifield was demoted was inaccurate. His rank was not lowered. Rather he received a lateral transfer. C.O. Seguin was aware that the transfer was going to happen.
- [484] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he signed off on the briefing note. He agreed that the policy that had been brought to Mr. Merrifield's attention was a new policy in September of 2006. When he prepared the briefing note, he was aware that Supt. Proulx had ordered a Part IV investigation.
- [485] After the briefing note went out, C/Supt. Mazerolle's next step was to discuss the matter with C.O. Seguin. He wanted to know how the information was leaked. C/Supt. Mazerolle stated he contacted District Commissioner Davis. They concluded that in an administrative review would be appropriate to determine the details. This was communicated to Insp. Johnson.
- [486] On January 25, 2006, Insp. Johnson sent a memorandum to CIIS requesting the administrative review into the "unauthorized release of Protected and Classified Information and/or documents relating to Cst. Peter Merrifield" which were quoted in the Ottawa Citizen article.
- [487] Sgt. Dickinson was assigned to conduct the administrative review in addition to the Part IV investigation. He explained that an administrative review involves a wide range of people and is an investigation of a situation to obtain the facts whereas a Part IV investigation is an investigation of an allegation against a member. An administrative investigation is not a disciplinary process.
- [488] The administrative review consisted of interviewing eight witnesses including Mr. Merrifield. He advised Sgt. Dickinson that he had given certain documents to four or five lawyers that he had consulted with respect to a civil suit. Sgt. Dickinson stated that these types of documents cannot be disclosed without going through RCMP policies. Mr. Merrifield stated to him that he was not aware of the policy and felt he had the right to do what he wanted with any documents relating to him.
- [489] Mr. Merrifield testified that this comment was taken out of context. It was related to something that he had said to his lawyer.
- [490] Mr. Merrifield stated that the administrative review was concluded in October 2006. He received a document stamped "Received Oct 25, 2006" which stated, among other things, the following:

A review of this investigation indicates that he [Sgt. Dickinson] was unable to determine who had released the information to Mr. DIMMOCK. However in your interview you indicate that you gave copies of documents, that the quotes in question come from, to several lawyers and/or law firms. That you also stated that you were unaware of the policy concerning the release of information. You went on to further state "but I believe as an employee of the RCMP I'm fully entitled to use reports of my performance however I see fit".

Documents that are protected and/or classified are property the RCMP and must be treated as such.

You are to review Informatics Manual IV.1.C.8^[vi] and A.T.I.P. procedures. In the future please comply with these regulations and procedures prior to releasing any Protected and/or Classified RCMP materials.

A copy of this 1004 will be forwarded to “O” Division CIIs to be placed on file so that it may be concluded.

- [491] Regarding the comments set out in the Performance Log, Mr. Merrifield stated that he did not have a DTC at the relevant time. Members in the Air Marshalls Unit had been instructed not to keep notes. They travelled with covert Amex cards. They were not to have anything that might identify them with the RCMP.
- [492] With regard to the direction that personal vehicles were not to be used for RCMP business, Mr. Merrifield recalled that while he was at INSET, TAG had contacted him regarding death threats that had been made against a notable Canadian. They were the same as threats that had been made against the citizens of the Netherlands. They came from a similar address and had similar language. A person had been murdered in the street by an Islamic terrorist. Mr. Merrifield stated that he believed this to be a “risk to persons”. He and his partner were armed. INSET had 15 police vehicles. He stated that he requested keys but none could be found. Neither Supt. Jagoe nor S/Sgt. King were in the office. Mr. Merrifield felt that the matter was urgent. He and his partner took his personal vehicle and drove to the residence of the person to conduct business.
- [493] C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he recalled receiving Insp. Johnson’s report with the findings. No disciplinary step was taken against Mr. Merrifield but he thought that there was something about unlawfully disclosing documents to his lawyer that he did not have authority to do.
- [494] C/Supt. Mazerolle also thought the allegations in the Part IV investigation and in the administrative review had been substantiated. He did not recall who told him this but thought it was the C.O. He still believes this to be true. In other words, he still believes that Mr. Merrifield leaked confidential information to the media and committed fraud in dealing with his Amex account, activities that constituted disgraceful conduct that could bring discredit to the Force.
- [495] Sgt. Dickinson stated that at the end of the review, he could not substantiate who released the documents to the Ottawa Citizen.

Mr. Merrifield’s work at Customs & Excise

- [496] In July 2006, Mr. Merrifield returned to work. At that time, there was one other officer in Customs & Excise, Cpl. McEachern. Subsequently, another officer, Cst. Schuliakewich joined the department. Mr. Merrifield stated that he and Cst. Schuliakewich wanted to do significant investigations. They started with responding to Crime Stoppers tips about variety stores selling tobacco. Subsequently, they investigated importing of counterfeit tobacco and illegal sales of native tobacco. This led them to the Outlaw motorcycle gang. They undertook a significant investigation regarding cross-border weapons smuggling including assault rifles with armour piercing ammunition and grenade launchers. Mr. Merrifield stated that he continued to recruit human sources.
- [497] Cpl. McEachern prepared a performance evaluation for Mr. Merrifield that covered the period January 16, 2006 to August 17, 2007. The following are some excerpts from Cpl.

McEachern's comments:

Cst. Merrifield brought with him a number of years' experience within General Duty policing, Canadian Air Carrier Protection Section and intelligence work with INSET and CIS. He is also a trained Range Officer & Basic Firearms Instructor. The skills he brought to the Unit in the area of intelligence led policing, source handling, and tactical operation have proven to be a valuable asset...

His strong work ethic was most evident in Project OSPENCELY, and ongoing weapons investigation where he is the lead investigator. In this matter there was little information, however he utilized several different sources of information and enlisted others to assist in the investigation has expanded into a major u/c operation...

Constable Merrifield is capable of effectively adopting his behaviour to changing circumstances in order to reach a goal. He demonstrates perseverance and takes the initiative. He shows enthusiasm to doing an outstanding job and will adjust his work and personal schedule in order to achieve same...

Cst. Merrifield since arriving in the Toronto North C & E Unit has displayed an eagerness to learn everything he can to allow him to properly fulfil his role within the C & E Unit... He is motivated to gain the expertise and has reached out to our partner agencies such as the CBSA, Department of Homeland Security to gain this knowledge. He is not hesitant to seek advice from any senior experienced members to assist him in his work...

Cst. Merrifield initially found he had a sharp learning curve relating to many of the Operational, Administrative and Court documents used in the Federal Policing environment...His written work...can now be described as complete, concise and presented in a timely manner. This is very evident in the recent files where he has prepared numerous documents such as C – 237 Reports, Form 2350 Operational Plans, Search Warrants, Production Orders and briefings for fellow members. These documents have been processed through the chain of command, courts and found to be clear, concise and easily understood.

Cst. Merrifield has expertise in the area of Weapons & Gangs and developed a presentation in this regard to present to law enforcement personnel. In this past year he has given the presentation at an Ontario National Gang Investigators Conference, a Gang & Weapons Conference for Municipal and Regional Police Forces in southwestern Ontario and also to a GTA Customs & Excise Workshop. Comments from officers attending have stated that the information provided was very timely, knowledgeable and appropriate for the personnel given to...

Cst. Merrifield interacts with all individuals in a respectful manner. He gets along well with other members and is respectful of the chain of command. Since his arrival to the Unit he has undertaken to develop contacts within the regional police services, Toronto Police Service, CBSA, OPP National Firearms Centre, Chief Provincial Firearms Office and foreign agencies such as ATF and Department of Homeland Security. He has also been active in developing Human sources and this is a strong aspect of his abilities. He has worked with both as a Primary and Secondary handler of several Human sources.

[498] Sgt. Pettipas, Mr. Merrifield's intermediate supervisor, made the following comments on the performance evaluation:

He has expertise in firearms that no one else possesses. He is enthusiastic in the performance of his duties and is extremely successful in recruiting human sources which is the backbone of police work. I consider Cst. Merrifield to be an asset to the unit. He is respected by his coworkers and readily assists whenever needed.

[499] Insp. Johnson stated: "Cst. Merrifield has developed into a tremendous asset for this unit. Keep up the great work!"

[500] Mr. Merrifield explained that subsequently, the RCMP changed its reporting period for performance reports to the fiscal year from the date that a member joined the Force. Another performance report was completed which covered the period April 28, 2007 to April 28, 2008. Sgt. Pettipas made the following comment:

Cst. Merrifield has encountered numerous incidents involving the RCMP which would weigh heavily on anyone. In spite of this he approaches his job with honesty and integrity and a commitment to do the best job he is able. Constable Merrifield is well respected by his peers. They look to him for advice as well as observing how he handles challenging situations. They learned by his example and follow his lead.

[501] Insp. Johnson stated:

Cst. Merrifield has been instrumental in national security/counter proliferation files. He is quickly establishing himself as an expert and is a critical resource for GTA CES. He is fully capable of assuming greater responsibility at the supervisory/mgmt level and expect him to be a strong candidate for the OCDP [officer candidate development program]. This mbr [member] is a truly exceptional performer!

[502] Through the relationships he built with other agencies, Mr. Merrifield carried out an intelligence probe with respect to the procurement of dual use, controlled items regarding Iran's advancement of its nuclear program. He described this as national security, counter-espionage work. Items were sought by enemy states for advancement of weapons of mass destruction including biological weapons. He stated that he learned from another enforcement agency that there was an opportunity to stop, in transit, items required for uranium enrichment that were going from the U.S. and Canada to Iran via the United Arab Emirates.

[503] A subsequent performance report covering the period April 28, 2008 to April 28, 2009, notes that, "In Nov 08, Cst. Merrifield conducted a Powerpoint presentation on topics surrounding Counter Proliferation to the participants from across Canada. This was the first course on Counter Proliferation conducted in Canada.”

Meeting with C.O. Seguin – October 3, 2006

[504] On August 15 2006, Mr. Merrifield sent a two page email to C.O. Seguin, It states the following:

Sir,

I respectfully request your consideration in reviewing this message. I respect that it is perhaps unorthodox to make direct contact with the Division C.O. but I believe that the circumstances warrant a clear line of communication to avoid any misrepresentation of the information contained within.

There is a misconception that I am “constantly” in the media. Nothing could be further from the truth. In the last 10 months I have been inundated with media requests and contacts. I have never once cooperated, gone on the record or willingly provided comment regarding my involvement in politics and possible sanctions by the RCMP or any issue that would reflect negatively upon the RCMP. Any involvement that I have had with the media has been in my capacity with the Mounted Police Association of Ontario. My involvement there was born out of the unfair treatment that I received for my political involvement by certain officers in this Division.

I have been a loyal and hard-working member since joining the RCMP and serving in “F” Div. in 1997. My service/personnel records clearly show a consistent pattern of hard work and of being a team player. Since transferring to “O” Div. my annual assessments continue to show that willingness to go the extra distance, attain results, and be a team player. While I appreciate that my decision to become involved in Politics makes certain individuals in the RCMP uncomfortable it is my right both legally and by RCMP policy. I have been cautious and prudent to never mix my career in the RCMP in my outside interest or activities in politics. This worked very successfully in 2004 when I participated in a number of nominations and the Federal election.

In 2005 while working in a different section with different management I again exercised my rights in accordance to policy which I had received in writing. I was truthful and forthright in answering questions to managers regarding my intentions and involvement. While intrusive and none of their business I firmly went on the record with Cpl. Crane and Insp. Jagoe prior to the May 2005 nomination informing them both that I would not be participating in the election of 2005. My involvement in a nomination for personal reasons followed guidelines provided to me by NHQ. Insp. Jagoe’s response and subsequent repeated false allegations have far surpassed harassment guidelines and have effectively destroyed my reputation and career. Superintendent Proulx’s handling of the situation only served to mitigate the circumstances, was unprofessional and abusive. The actions of both officers broke constitutional rights and practices as well as the RCMP Act.

When I attempted to bring these issues to the attention of the Commissioner, the CHRO and yourself you were the only one to respond. Unfortunately you only responded to the mention of harassment and did not reply to the constitutional violations. As a result I had legal representatives research and prepare an opinion based the materials and evidence I had gathered. Much of the statements and documents collected reflect poorly on certain officers involved in this situation. I am now in the possession of a legal opinion which recommends a course of action which would be favourable to me but perhaps reflect poorly on the reputation and image of the RCMP. To this point I am writing to you for intervention in resolving the situation in the best interest of all parties. In the legal opinion it is a recommended course of action to request a Ministerial Investigation of the circumstances by the Office of the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Planning followed by Constitutional challenges and Statements of claim.

Beginning in the autumn of 2005 I have received repeated requests from a National Newspaper and a City newspaper regarding my situation and the possibility of Political interference by the RCMP. I have refused comment. This past Friday I received a phone call from a National television news magazine requesting my cooperation for a news story. They informed me of a second RCMP member suspended for political involvement as well as actions/statements by the former Commissioner of Public complaints for the RCMP and the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association. Mention was made last December by reporters who contacted me about my situation in reference to the McDonald Royal Commission of Inquiry into certain actions of the RCMP. At no time have I ever gone on the record or cooperated with the media in any capacity that would harm the reputation of the RCMP.

At this point my level of frustration and the lack of forward momentum to resolve the situation leaves me in the position of acting in my own best interest as the RCMP seems uninterested in resolving the situation.

I would request Sir that an attempt be made to clearly communicate with me to review and resolve the outstanding issues. I am and hope to continue to be a proud member of the RCMP however I hold my values and reputation highly. I am not one to shy away from a fight or accept undo discredit to my character and reputation. I am certain that if you were presented with all of the facts from day one you would form a much different opinion than you currently hold of the situation.

I extend this offer against the advice of my lawyers in the hope of saving undue negative attention to the RCMP from Inquiries and lawsuits. It is my hope that common sense and a shared interest in the reputation of our organization will prevail over preconceived and incorrect opinions.

Very Best regards
Cst. Peter Merrifield

- [505] Mr. Seguin stated that he was brought in to the Commanding Officer position to bring RCMP values into O. Division which included maintaining a respectful workplace. Mr. Seguin wrote a “commanding officers communique” dated December 13, 2005 which announced mandatory harassment course online which all RCMP employees were required to do. The third paragraph of the communique states:

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police is committed to a harassment free workplace for all employees. Within O. Division, we will be undertaking the initiatives over the next year to ensure all managers and supervisors have the training they need to be effective leaders. Managers and supervisors are expected to be respectful in their dealings with all employees and to provide appropriate and developmental directions and feedback. At the same time, employees are expected to accept direction that is provided in a respectful manner and to treat their managers/supervisors and co-workers with respect.

- [506] The email that C.O. Seguin received from Mr. Merrifield dated August 15, 2006, resulted in a meeting that took place on October 3, 2006. Mr. Seguin stated that Mr. Merrifield’s decision to become involved in politics did not make him uncomfortable at all. In his position as Ethics Advisor he had dealt with this previously. Mr. Seguin understood from the email that Mr. Merrifield was making it clear that he was going to be proceeding with legal action.
- [507] Mr. Seguin’s point in meeting with Mr. Merrifield was to listen to his concerns. Mr. Seguin stated that at the meeting, Mr. Merrifield took him through his experience at INSET, the 2004 election and talked about a second attempt for nomination in 2005. He spoke of the Barrie nomination meeting, Cpl. Frith’s attendance and the backlash that happened afterwards. He said that Insp. Jagoe knew Mr. Merrifield would be seeking a nomination ahead of time and said nothing. Now, Insp. Jagoe was raising an issue after the fact which constituted entrapment. Mr. Merrifield felt that if something was not right, it should have been raised earlier. He thought Cpl. Frith had been ordered by Insp. Jagoe to attend the meeting and that was not right. He then spoke about the Stronach investigation, his transfer from TAG to Customs and Excise and that he was upset that he had been taken off the Stronach investigation. He felt he could do the job effectively and did not feel there was a conflict. He stated that Supt. Proulx had spoken to him disrespectfully and in a harsh manner. He said he had statements from other members to this effect. Mr. Merrifield said that Supt. Proulx told him he would never work in Criminal Intelligence again. Mr. Merrifield provided to C.O. Seguin some emails he had received from Supt. Proulx.
- [508] Mr. Seguin read these emails. He did not find anything disrespectful in them. Supt. Proulx used a very businesslike tone. Mr. Merrifield reviewed the SOC incident and was upset that his participation had been denied. This was tied to TAG. Mr. Merrifield said he felt he had been singled out by an audit of his Amex card and the Part IV investigation which had been completed. Mr. Seguin told Mr. Merrifield that if Cpl. Frith had done something illegal, it would be looked into and dealt with. He made this commitment to Mr. Merrifield. Mr. Seguin stated that he was going to look into the issue of why Cpl. Frith had been at the nomination meeting. There was nothing more for him to do.

- [509] According to Mr. Merrifield, C.O. Seguin said to him at the end of the meeting, “Based upon some of the things you’ve told me, I may be left with no choice but to call a code of conduct investigation [with respect to Insp. Jagoe and Supt. Proulx].”
- [510] A week after the meeting with Mr. Merrifield, on approximately October 10, 2006, C.O. Seguin met with C/Supt. Mazerolle. He asked C/Supt. Mazerolle to follow up on the Cpl. Frith issue and specifically whether he had been ordered to attend the nomination meeting. He wanted to get to the bottom of the matter. Supt. Panchuk was asked to do an administrative review to determine the facts behind the situation.
- [511] Mr. Seguin reviewed a memorandum dated January 17, 2007. Attached to it were statements provided by Sgt. Park and Cpl. Frith which Supt. Panchuk had obtained. In addition, there was a statement from Insp. Jagoe that had been provided on January 18, 2007. In it, he stated:
- I drew the conclusion that when we spoke [at the dinner] he [Mr. Merrifield] would have known that he was running as a candidate and not just ‘considering running.’ I base this conclusion on the timing of the pamphlet and upon reflection when I read the pamphlet I recalled Constable Merrifield had told me it was expensive to run a campaign as it required a lot of money. I believed that he would not commit finances to the publishing of a pamphlet unless he was serious about running.
- [512] On October 25, 2006, Mr. Merrifield sent a follow up email to C.O. Seguin. He reiterated one of his concerns, that Cpl. Frith had attended a political nomination meeting to obtain campaign literature at the direction of Insp. Jagoe. He referred to a Ministerial Directive regarding sensitive sector operations, one of which is legitimate political functions. He stated, “please accept my deepest appreciation for your attention in these matters, it has been my hope to address these issues in a satisfactory manner resulting in the best possible outcome for both the RCMP and my own personal interests.”
- [513] During the October meeting, Mr. Merrifield showed C.O. Seguin two statements from regular members in which they said that Supt. Proulx had commented that Mr. Merrifield would never work in Criminal Intelligence again. Mr. Seguin stated that he did not assign anyone to investigate Mr. Merrifield’s allegations against Supt. Proulx. He said that when he met with Mr. Merrifield, he already had management’s perspective regarding everything that Mr. Merrifield told him. He did not perceive at that point that there was harassment. Mr. Merrifield was complaining about how management did their job and he presented emails in support of his complaints. Mr. Seguin said he read the emails and did not see anything confrontational in them. He agreed that Mr. Merrifield told him that the meeting with Supt. Proulx was confrontational and aggressive. Nevertheless, the emails were businesslike. He did not make any inquiries of third parties about the meeting. He did not read Cst. Brown and Sgt. Sim’s statements nor did he take their names or follow up on the statements, even though he agreed that the best people to ask about an issue would be third parties with no interest. Despite the diametrically opposed views, he was satisfied that Mr. Merrifield had been treated fairly. Aside from looking into the Cpl. Frith issue, he did not request that anything else be investigated.
- [514] Mr. Seguin stated that he could not recall specific conversations about any further investigations or fact finding arising from the October 3, 2007 meeting but if complaints were made against officers, he would have “looked around and got a feel for it.” He probably would have had a conversation with C/Supt. Mazerolle as he was closer to operations. Mr. Seguin stated that he felt he had both sides of the story. He had Mr.

Merrifield's view and he also had the perspective from the chain of command. He had officers saying that a Member was not following policy and an officer saying that other officers were treating him badly. His expectation was that if Mr. Merrifield felt that he was being harassed, there was an appropriate mechanism within the organization to deal with it, being the internal grievance procedure. Mr. Merrifield could have made a harassment complaint. It would have been fully investigated and all of the facts would have been brought forward. If a complaint had been made, C.O. Seguin would have reviewed it and would have been the decision maker. He would not have been the investigator.

- [515] Mr. Seguin stated that he had received Supt. Proulx's memo to Mr. Merrifield dated September 28, 2005. He had no concerns that Mr. Merrifield had not been inappropriately dealt with by his line officer. He could not recall why Mr. Merrifield had not been transferred to the investigative side of INSET.
- [516] Supt. Davis was working out of the Newmarket building and was responsible for a number of departments including Customs and Excise. Mr. Merrifield was under his command then.
- [517] He attended the meeting on October 3, 2006. He stated that he was not advised of the purpose of the meeting. The C.O. was simply looking for someone to be present.
- [518] It appears that Supt. Davis did have some involvement in the issue prior to the meeting. Initially, he stated that he said he had never previously seen an email from Ms. Robson to Supt. Hebert stating that she had received a call from Supt. Davis about a meeting to take place at 2:00 p.m. and that she had sent a two page letter to him. Supt. Davis asked her to fax the references in the letter, which she had done. Supt. Davis stated that he had no recollection of that transaction and felt that there was a chance that the C.O.'s secretary may have asked for something. He stated he had no reason to doubt the accuracy of the email and stated he must have made the call. He did not recall making the phone call or receiving any of the documents. He agreed that it did look like he had requested the material and received it.
- [519] Supt. Davis stated that prior to the meeting, he was aware that Mr. Merrifield was involved in politics. He did not have any of details. He would receive media summaries on his desk regularly and recalled that Mr. Merrifield had been interviewed by a variety of media outlets. He stated that he did not know about any difficulties between Mr. Merrifield, Insp. Jagoe and Supt. Proulx.
- [520] Supt. Davis recalled that at the meeting Mr. Merrifield spoke first, initially about the reason for the meeting which was to explain the context of events that had occurred so that the C.O. would understand them. He referred to the frequency of media communications and the meeting after the nomination meeting. He spoke about Supt. Proulx and the response of the officers that he reported to regarding the events. Mr. Merrifield's message was that he valued his role in the RCMP. He did not act outside of the scope of policy. He believed that the officers could have handled matters better. He stated Supt. Proulx's reaction was unnecessarily harsh. Mr. Merrifield stated he did not intend to do anything outside of the organization's expectations.
- [521] Supt. Davis recalled that C.O. Seguin asked Mr. Merrifield what he wanted done or solved. Mr. Merrifield said he wanted to inform Supt. Davis and the C.O. of the context around the nomination meeting so that the C.O. would have a favourable impression of him as a member.
- [522] Supt. Davis stated that this single meeting was his only involvement with Mr. Merrifield regarding the issues.

- [523] Mr. Ford retired from the RCMP as a Staff Sergeant. He first encountered Mr. Merrifield in the Air Marshalls Program where he was the watch commander. In February 2006, he was elected to be an SRR. In this position, he met with C.O. Seguin from time to time.
- [524] Mr. Ford stated that his initial contact with Mr. Merrifield was at the request of C/Supt. Mazerolle regarding the duplicate cheque issue. During their discussions, he and Mr. Merrifield discussed what was going on in his life, beginning with Cpl. Frith's speaking to Supt. Jagoe about the Barrie nomination meeting pamphlet.

Mr. Merrifield's Email to C.O. Seguin – January 19, 2007

- [525] Mr. Ford stated that Mr. Merrifield sent him a lengthy email dated January 19, 2007, the subject of which was "Issues of Concern". Mr. Ford could not recall whether Mr. Merrifield offered to write it or whether he asked Mr. Merrifield to send it so that he would have it as a reference in his next meeting with the C.O. The email stated:

Hi Doug,

The following is some information for your discussions regarding my concerns.

Cpl. FRITH attended two political functions in 2005 at which I saw or spoke to him. The Barrie nomination in May 2005 where the campaign literature was present, and a barbecue in Barrie with Stephen HARPER in August 2005 were Frith introduced me to his neighbour.

If Sgt. PARK conducted the interview there may be a conflict as prior to the nomination I worked with Sgt. PARK extensively on Operation Bridge Out up to and including the days before the nomination. He was fully aware of my pending participation as were many members at INSET. No effort was made to conceal my involvement as I was led to believe that I was acting in accordance fully with policy as it had been articulated to me. Sgt. PARK is a close associate of Insp. JAGOE and they socialize outside of the workplace motorcycle riding. Following the scandal post nomination Sgt. PARK provided a very positive 1004 for outstanding efforts on my work during Operation Bridgeout. Sgt. PARK at no point leading up to the nomination expressed any concerns about my activity.

During my discussions regarding the nomination with Cpl. FRITH he advised me that he "may have gotten me in trouble". He stated that Insp. JAGOE and Cpl. CRANE had questioned him about campaign literature which he was in possession of. JAGOE demanded copies from FRITH and FRITH advised that he stated to JAGOE that those copies were his own private belongings. FRITH then advised [that] JAGOE requested campaign material from the nomination meeting which is an order from a superior officer to subordinate. This means that when FRITH attended the nomination he was for all intents and purposes on Duty acting on the Direction of the Inspector.

FRITH provided a statement to me in which he states clearly that JAGOE stated to FRITH after the fact to "not worry, I will protect your identity". This raises questions as [to] JAGOE'S belief regarding the legality of what he had ordered.

JAGOE, CRANE and a number of "O" Div HQ personnel were all aware of my participation in the nomination on Friday, May 13. JAGOE and CRANE reported it to "O" HQ as a policy violation and RCMP Act offence. JAGOE reported several perceived offences but did not bother to check policy which clearly would have mitigated the perception of wrongdoing. At no time did any member of the RCMP attempt to contact me prior to my participation on Saturday May 14 to clarify the situation.

On Friday, May 13 CRANE stated to Cst.s PAOR and OTT that "Peter is in a lot of trouble, he has overstepped his bounds and won't be with us much longer". This was one day prior to my nomination appearance.

On Monday, May 16 I was confronted by CRANE and asked to meet privately in a closed office. CRANE presented a number of allegations toward me for my participation most of which I dispelled by showing CRANE the appropriate RCMP policy. CRANE stated that allegations/concerns were presented to him by Insp. JAGOE.

During the period May 19-25 Insp. JAGOE again contacted "O" HQ to provide false allegations against me for my activity in an investigation regarding death threats against member of Parliament Belinda STRONACH. JAGOE alleged that I had broken policy by having direct communications with the victim. I took extraordinary measures to avoid any conflict of interest in the file due to my personal relationship with the intended victim. This was twisted and presented to "O" HQ as some kind of policy breach. No section was ever quoted to me. Subsequently I was stripped of all investigation and Intelligence files and removed from INSET TAG.

Following the May 16 meeting with CRANE I was summoned to "O" HQ for a meeting with Supt. PROULX. At this meeting PROULX indicated that I was a liar, that I was using the RCMP, that I must make a decision to have a career in Politics or the RCMP. He made inappropriate comments regarding material in the campaign literature, challenged the truthfulness of my personal resume which had been scrutinized during my application to the RCMP as part of my background investigation. This was a very unpleasant interaction with Supt. Marc PROULX and was witnessed by a number of members present in the room.

In July 2005 while off-duty sick recovering from surgery I participated on a Radio Talk show providing historical information regarding Terrorism, Counterterrorism and National Security efforts globally during the past 60 years. JAGOE reported this activity to "O" HQ as having Disclosed Top Secret Information regarding INSET investigations. This was completely false. JAGOE never even heard the show and acted on information from a third party which he has protected the identity of. He alleged Official Secrets Act offences which carry a serious term of imprisonment. PROULX contacted me at home and advised that he would be proceeding with formal discipline and that he would obtain a copy of the Radio Show.

MERRIFIELD makes Access to Information Request to begin legal proceedings against the RCMP for Constitutional Rights Violations. JAGOE receives ATI request and contacts S/Sgt. BOHUS who is representing MERRIFIELD. JAGOE states to BOHUS "to tell MERRIFIELD not to burn any bridges".

Members BROWN and SIMM provided statements from a conversation they have with PROULX where PROULX clearly states that "someone has it for Peter" and that it is personal.

From this point on Doug it is a steady pattern of harassment, threats, and at one point I am ordered not to report for duty during a National Security crisis. My reputation has been destroyed based on rumours, false allegations, personal vendettas, harassment, abuse of policy, and repeated transfers. I have missed two opportunities for promotion, expended considerable monies on legal work and suffered significant medical concerns. I have bent over backwards to resolve this without going to court and the media once it becomes public. There are a myriad of instances and actions taken against me during that period that will not stand the test of harassment suit. I appreciate that my activities caused discomfort among some Management personnel of the RCMP but I worked hand-in-hand with the Force in 2004 when I was a full-fledged Candidate in a Federal Election without this type of harassment. I always put the reputation of the force first in anything that I did and was careful to protect it at all cost. There are clear constitutional violations in current RCMP policy which I have offered to address in a constructive manner.

If this was about one isolated incident or one single misunderstanding I would not be pursuing the issue with such vigour. However it was much greater than that and with severe consequences to my reputation and career path. My service file clearly indicates the type of member I have been and wish to continue to be.

Of note is some information that was obtained via my Access to Information request which shows cautions were provided to Supt. PROULX from HQ not to cross constitutional lines and an email between JAGOE and PROULX which refer to "a source, a member" in cryptic fashion. Not much about this situation was above board or founded in fact. It is my strong belief that this was mishandled from the beginning and spun into a tall tale without any concern for the truth. If I was in the C.O.'s shoes and had been told tall tales about a member's activity in the manner he was informed about me I would also have concerns. However because he was not given the facts, improper opinions and actions may have been formed or taken.

The concern I have is over the implications of the perception by the media, government and public of the RCMP in its handling of issues relating to Politics. I wish to correct the damage done over the past two years internally if possible. I have not ruled out legal action and still retain my law firm and original filings which were prepared.

Hopefully we can get to the truth quickly and correct the situation in a satisfactory manner as quickly as possible.

Thanks again for help Doug,
Very Best regards,
Pete

- [526] SRR Ford stated that the C.O. and others were basing their opinions on distorted facts. He asked Mr. Merrifield if he could share the email with the C.O. Mr. Merrifield agreed to that.
- [527] SRR Ford stated that he was concerned about the last five paragraphs regarding what Mr. Merrifield said had been done to him. He was not sure if any of this information was getting to the C.O. SRR Ford forwarded the email to the C.O. SRR Ford stated that he knew that Mr. Merrifield had met with C.O. Seguin earlier on. When Mr. Merrifield sent him the lengthy email, it was obvious that nothing had been resolved.
- [528] Mr. Merrifield also sent the January 19, 2007 email to Sgt. Nicota who was present at the meeting in London with Supt. Proulx. He asked Sgt. Nicota to provide comments regarding the meeting so that SRR Ford would have them when he was dealing with the situation.
- [529] On January 22, 2007, SRR Nicota sent the following email to S/Sgt. Ford:

Hi Doug, as per Peter MERRIFIELD'S message please be advised of the following: in my 32 years as a member of the RCMP I have never witnessed an "Accused" (let alone a serving member of the RCMP) confronted in the manner as Peter MERRIFIELD was subjected to by Supt. PROULX. This unexpected behaviour by Mr. PROULX was only displayed after then SRR Rick BOHUS had to leave the meeting to deal with another matter. Mr. PROULX made it clear that this examination of MERRIFIELD was at the behest of the CROPS officer Mr. MAZEROLLE and the "C.O." (Asst/Commissioner SEGUIN). Mr. PROULX'S manner of questioning was the epitome of harassment and could be used for classic textbook lecture material example. Supt. PROULX'S questions ridiculed, demeaned and embarrassed MERRIFIELD.

I was angered and dismayed by what I observed and allowed it to continue only because it strengthened MERRIFIELD'S case. MERRIFIELD repeatedly had to explain how a legitimate political nomination process worked and yet Mr. PROULX still failed to comprehend process. All of MERRIFIELD'S campaign material was examined and he was questioned in detail. Regardless of the answers provided to Mr. PROULX, he remained sarcastic, accusatory and made it very clear that MERRIFIELD had to choose between a "political career" or the Force. At no time was there acknowledgement of MERRIFIELD'S Charter rights to allow his name for nomination in the Political office. This meeting only served to exacerbate the problems and failed to resolve the issues under discussion. It was my conclusion there was no desire to resolve the issues but only to find an excuse to administratively exit MERRIFIELD out of the RCMP.

[530] C.O. Seguin sent a short email to SRR Ford on January 23, 2007 referring only to the issues relating to Cpl. Frith. On February 15, 2007, SRR Ford asked C.O. Seguin whether the investigation covered the harassment issues raised by Mr. Merrifield relating to Supt. Proulx and Insp. Jagoe or whether it covered only the issue regarding Cpl. Frith. C.O. Seguin replied that it only applied to Cpl. Frith and that he was satisfied that Cpl. Frith had attended the meeting on his own.

[531] Mr. Merrifield stated he did not receive any satisfaction from C.O. Seguin. There was no feedback, email or written decision. There was nothing.

Mr. Merrifield's Email to D/Commr. Bourduas – May 11, 2007

[532] Mr. Merrifield decided to send an email dated May 11, 2007 to Pierre-Yves Bourduas, Deputy Commissioner for the Region, to request his assistance with the issues. The email stated:

Sir,

Please excuse me for writing to you directly, however I believe it is incumbent upon myself to share with you some concerns with very serious repercussions to "O" Division and the RCMP. The past several months have been difficult times for our organization. Criticism of certain actions of the RCMP and the actions of some of its personnel have been portrayed in a manner which disrespects the greater membership. I am trying to avoid any further embarrassment or tarnish to our organization but have been presented with repeated obstacles in my efforts to resolve a serious situation at the lowest possible level.

During the past two years I have utilized the DSRR program, personal involvement with several officers in "O" Division and a meeting with the Commanding Officer of "O" Division. All efforts have met with a lack of resolution or understanding of the gravity of the circumstances.

This particular situation arose from my involvement as a candidate in a past Federal election of political involvement in 2004/2005 which was conducted in accordance with the RCMP policy. The two years following that involvement have been filled with repeated and ongoing harassment, the abuse of authority by a number of commissioned officers in O division, abuse of process, constitutional violations by commissioned officers, constitutional conflicts and RCMP policy, conduct unbecoming an officer, possible violation of a ministerial directive in relation to National Security Operations in Sensitive Sectors, possible dereliction of duty. I have written to the former Commissioner, former Deputy Commissioner of Human Resources and current Commanding Officer of "O" Division to this capacity. I have offered evidence and the willingness to resolve this matter in a means agreeable to all concerned. These efforts have yielded no results and have left me with little options other than formal legal proceedings which would be public and perhaps embarrassing for our organization. I am hopeful that you can intervene in your capacity as Deputy Commissioner for Central Region. I have utilized a law firm to research and provide opinion on my behalf in these matters. It is their position supported by recent court decisions in Ontario and New Brunswick which state that the RCMP is ill equipped to resolve certain issues within its own internal processes. I on the other hand have faith that this can be resolved internally.

All material in my possession in support of this circumstance are at your disposal. I would be willing to provide greater detail of the circumstances to you or your delegate at the Regional level as efforts at the highest level of Division to correct this have failed. Statements made by subject Officers during this ongoing conflict indicated that they were acting at the direction of the Commanding Officer of "O" Division. I questioned A/Commr. SEGUIN to this regard and he denied having provided the questionable direction. I have no cause to take challenge to the remarks of either Officer, however there exists a conflict in resolving this matter at the Division level as the C.O. is named as a possible instigator of questionable actions.

Due to the existence of possible conflict of interest at the Division level I am requesting your involvement from Region to facilitate review and possible resolution of the situation. Attached above you will find some previous correspondence relating to this matter.

Please understand that I am not writing to you in order to "cover my bases" for future legal action. I am not going through processes for the sake of future claim or gain. I truly wish to resolve a situation that does not reflect the Values, Ethics or Integrity of our valued members. I believe in all of the good that that we do as an organization coast to coast and proud of my membership in the RCMP. I take great pride in my work and membership and conduct myself in accordance with Ethics and Integrity in all that I do inside and out of the RCMP.

I wish to take this opportunity to thank you for your attention in this circumstance and express my appreciation for the demands that must be made upon your time as Deputy Commissioner of Central region. Please understand that I would not have burdened you with the situation if I did not believe that the best interest of the RCMP and the members involved could be served under your direction. I look forward to speaking with you or your delegate to reach resolution.

[533] On May 28, 2007, Mr. Merrifield issued the Notice of Action in this matter. On June 27, 2007, the Statement of Claim was issued to protect limitation period.

[534] On June 29, 2007, D/Commr. Bourduas responded to Mr. Merrifield's email and stated, "I have thoroughly reviewed the materials and concluded that your complaints and grievances have been handled appropriately by the C.O. "O" Division. As such it would not be appropriate for me to intervene at this time."

The RCMP's Internal Grievance Procedure

[535] In 2008, an issue arose as to whether Mr. Merrifield ought to have used the RCMP internal grievance procedure for adjudication of his claims. The Attorney General brought a motion to strike the claim which was dismissed. In Merrifield v. Canada (Attorney General), 2009 ONCA 127, the court agreed with the motion judge's decision and stated in paras 9 and 10:

Importantly, the motion judge correctly noted that the RCMP grievance procedure does not have the necessary means to make findings of credibility, as it does not provide for oral hearings, and the factual findings of an investigator need not be followed by the adjudicator. Nor does the grievance procedure allow for independent third party adjudication.

...the grievance procedure mechanism cannot provide the remedies requested, namely, declarations and damages.

[536] Mr. Merrifield stated that his health was good until August 2008. He developed a heart problem, atrial fibrillation, and was off duty sick for a period of time. He had committed to the development of a training program for counter proliferation in Canada so while he was at home, he worked with other agencies to develop the program. In November 2008, he returned to light duties at work and attended the implementation of the training program.

[537] On March 30, 2009, Mr. Merrifield had heart surgery and recuperated at home for two weeks. In April, he returned to work to conduct a raid and arrest on a nuclear proliferation case. He obtained ten pressure transducers configured to be used in nuclear centrifuges for enrichment of uranium. This resulted in the first prosecution and conviction under the United Nations Act R.S.C., 1985, c. U-2 for proliferation to Iran.

[538] A Performance Evaluation was prepared for Mr. Merrifield covering the period April 28, 2008 to April 28 2009. It states:

[Cst. Merrifield] has conducted demonstrations and presentations for agencies both within and outside of the RCMP. In autumn of 08, Cst. Merrifield conducted a Powerpoint demonstration on Canadian legislation to the participants of the Strategic Investigation Training seminar in Georgia. In Nov 08, Cst. Merrifield conducted a Powerpoint presentation on topics surrounding Counter Proliferation to the participants from across Canada. This was the first course on Counter Proliferation conducted in Canada. For both presentations, Cst. Merrifield was well-organized and relayed the information in a level that was clearly understood by the audience. Cst. Merrifield is very comfortable in front of an audience and this easy manner comes across with humour and professionalism. Cst. Merrifield has also conducted a demonstration of tight placement, close quarters battle tactics for the Ontario Tactical Association. He has acted as BFI on several occasions. CST Merrifield has been requested by several agencies, both within and outside of the RCMP to provide presentations.

[539] Insp. Johnson's comment on the Performance Evaluation is, "Cst. Merrifield is an operational member thru and thru. He is knowledgeable, competent and a leader. An excellent assessment and well deserved."

[540] In June 2009, Supt. Jagoe became concerned again about Mr. Merrifield's public speaking. He had been the keynote speaker for the Ontario National Gang Investigators Association in 2006. He spoke as Vice President of the MPA. He did a TV appearance on a show called The Verdict. Supt. Jagoe was concerned about “national security public speaking”. This set off a chain of inquiries. He reported it to C/Supt. Mazerolle who spoke to Dist. Comm. Davis who spoke to Insp. Johnson, who then spoke to Mr. Merrifield. Mr. Merrifield obtained a document from the RCMP website which showed that National Security was within the mandate of Customs & Excise.

[541] On June 30, 2009, Mr. Merrifield was promoted to the rank of Corporal.

[542] In January 2010, Mr. Merrifield was the lead investigator on a project called Owatch regarding nuclear proliferation. It resulted in an arrest and a trial. Mr. Merrifield gave all of the evidence for prosecution. The accused was convicted.

[543] Also, in January 2010, Mr. Merrifield was seconded to the G8 and G20 summits.

Waterloo Police Speaking Event

[544] Supt. Jagoe stated that at some point, he received an email from Sgt. Crol in Kitchener, for his information, to advise him of a presentation that was being hosted by the Waterloo Regional Police. Mr. Merrifield was identified as the key note speaker on terrorism.

[545] Supt. Jagoe stated that he then spoke to Insp. Johnson and told him that he might want to look at the materials because the new RCMP policy required CROPS officer’s approval for presentations.

[546] Section 12.5 of the Operations Manual Ex 223 is entitled Presentation, Conference. It shows a print date of 8/22/2008 and deals with presentations with respect to national security. Section 1.2 deals with the approval for presentations of an operational nature or intended for an international audience. Supt. Jagoe stated that he was involved in policy development in this area. He did not specifically refer to it when he spoke to Insp. Johnson about Mr. Merrifield’s being a key note speaker at the Waterloo Police event. Supt. Jagoe stated that he had the impression that Insp. Johnson was not familiar with it. This document was not produced in this action until May 2015; six months after the trial began. Supt. Jagoe had no explanation for this.

[547] Mr. Merrifield stated that a culmination of events made him feel that he was not being treated fairly. Receiving inquiries stemming from Supt. Jagoe’s further concerns about his public speaking was like being “poked” again. He was frustrated, angry and depressed. From February to May 2010, he was off duty sick. He submitted monthly reports to the Health Services unit to support his status.

[548] Mr. Merrifield returned to work in May 2010. In the following month, he did protective duties for the Queen’s visit.

[549] In the fall of 2010, Mr. Merrifield was assigned to project Overlord. This was the intelligence probe that he had started in 2009 regarding firearms smuggling. In 2011, there were a number of people working on Overlord. Between January and October 2011, Mr. Merrifield travelled extensively and obtained confidential information. He obtained an AK 47 fully automated firearm, hundreds of which had been imported as BB guns. They could be converted in fifteen minutes to a fully functioning AK 47.

Witness X

[550] As noted above, one of Mr. Merrifield’s duties was to cultivate human sources. In his performance logs, his superiors noted that he was extremely good at this.

- [551] Mr. Merrifield was a primary handler for several confidential human sources, one of whom I will refer to as Witness X.
- [552] Witness X stated that s/he had been a social friend of Mr. Merrifield. S/he then became an informant for Mr. Merrifield in 2006/2007. S/he also worked with other RCMP officers. S/he had several conversations with these other officers in which they discussed Mr. Merrifield. One of them said that Mr. Merrifield was not a team player, he had issues and could not be trusted. This officer stated to Witness X that Witness X should not be working with Mr. Merrifield. The officer said that Mr. Merrifield was suing the RCMP. His career was not going anywhere. It was finished. Witness X stated that in 2011, s/he told Mr. Merrifield that he did not have many friends in the RCMP and informed him of the other officers' comments.
- [553] Mr. Merrifield said that there is a sacred trust between an informant and a handler. Telling an informant not to work with a police officer during the course of an investigation was completely inappropriate. It was not in the administration of justice.
- [554] A Performance Evaluation of Mr. Merrifield was carried out for the period September 9, 2010 to March 31, 2011. It states:

... Cpl. Merrifield worked alongside with the crown prosecutor during the trial phase of a national priority investigation that he (Cpl. MERRIFIELD) had been involved with. The crown prosecutor had commented on Cpl. Merrifield [sic] leadership and encyclopedic knowledge of the evidence. As well he was required to attend an International POWPOM on Counter Proliferation Investigations held in New Zealand, representing the RCMP on behalf of HQ C & E Branch...

Cpl. Merrifield is considered a subject matter expert on counter proliferation (CP) investigations. As a result, he often lectures on CP investigations and training seminars held both within and outside Canada. During this reporting period he has lectured at training seminars in "D" Division as well as at the annual CP training seminar held in Ottawa this year. In addition, he was required to travel to New Zealand where he presented a case study based on a successful CP investigation (Project OWATCH). That investigation had been conducted during the previous reporting period by this unit. He maintains recency in CP investigations by regularly conducting research on proliferation activities. These combined efforts speak to Cpl.'s MERRIFIELD [sic] ability to forge ahead with learning and development needs for himself and others. That said, Cpl. MERRIFIELD continues to show flexibility towards re-arranging his personal time with family to facilitate his commitment to CP investigations...

[His immediate supervisor, S/Sgt. Wayne Pupik stated] Cpl. Merrifield has recently taken on the Role of Primary Investigator for Project Overlord. Through his presentation skills, his knowledge with CP investigation and desire to take this project to high levels, I see great things happening in his future.

[Insp. Johnson stated that] Cpl. Merrifield is a high performing knowledgeable member who is more than capable of assuming career responsibility at the senior NCO level.

- [555] Mr. Merrifield stated that in the fall of 2011, Customs & Excise underwent a number of personnel changes. It became dysfunctional and was falling apart. Given what Witness X had told him, he felt that the damage to his reputation resulting from the harassment had spread significantly within the RCMP. He went off duty sick in November 2011.

Mr. Merrifield's Email to Senior Management

- [556] Mr. Merrifield stated that November 2011 to January 2012 was the worst part of his life. He disengaged from family, stayed on the couch, got bed sores and did not bathe. He started seeing another psychologist.
- [557] While he was at home and in the middle of a deep depression, Mr. Merrifield made another attempt to reach out to senior members of the RCMP. He sent a lengthy email dated January 5, 2012 to a number of people including Commr. Paulson, D/Commr. Graham, Asst/Commr. White, SRR Niebudek, SRR Reed and S/Sgt. Townsend who was on the National executive of the SRR program. The email stated:

Sirs,

I respectfully submit this message with the knowledge that it circumvents the usual chain of Command and for that I apologize.

For nearly seven years I have been engaged in an effort to address unwanted harassment, bullying, abuse of authority and process. This began with the dislike of my standing as a candidate to become a Member of Parliament. I have been [the] subject of false Criminal allegations, subject to punitive transfers, false code of conduct investigations and subjected to threats by Senior Officers of "O" Division. Throughout this period my health has suffered, I [have] been away from duty periodically to deal with serious depression issues as a result of the harassment, I also required surgery for a stress related heart ailment.

I have exhausted every reasonable method to appeal to the common sense of the RCMP to review the evidence in the matter, but to date there has been no in depth review of the [sic] my claims or evidence. I believe that DOJ is not acting in a manner which has the best interest of the RCMP at heart.

Throughout this same time period I have dismantled weapon smuggling rings along the Canadian/US border, identified and began recovery of more than 250 fully automatic AK 47 receivers improperly imported and distributed throughout Canada, and provided the first ever conviction in Counter Proliferation of the Canadian Nuclear Safety Act and the United Nations - Iran Regulations.

My service file prior to the run in with the Officers named in my lawsuit was exemplary, my service record since the run in has also been exemplary.

It baffles me that when I send C237's about Iranian Procurement and Espionage I am believable. I have been asked in the middle of the night to help prepare a Prime Minister's briefing note on Iranian Nuclear Proliferation investigation and was believable. I was asked to address the World Nuclear Suppliers Group conference in New Zealand in 2010 and brief the combined Enforcement and Diplomatic core on Counter Proliferation Investigations and strategies and was believable. The courts accept my warrants, production orders and one party consents as credible.

Why is it that when I claim that certain Officers bullied me, harassed me and lied I am no longer believable?

I joined the RCMP to catch criminals and work in National Security. I have spent 30 years of my life studying Global Security Issues, International Affairs and Terrorism. I left a comfortable Senior corporate career at age 30 to join the RCMP. I have done everything the RCMP has ever asked of me. I have made my sacrifices in service and posting without question. I have investigated, arrested and prosecuted murderers, rapists, arsonists and just about every other type of criminal you wish to name. I have been assaulted, shot at, stabbed at, and subject of death threats in the performance of my duties. Throughout all of that I believe that the RCMP had by [sic] back, I trusted that we were an organization of truth and values.

As my lawyers are about to file all of our documents with the court and set the matter down for trial the issue will become public. Knowing this and having repeatedly attempted to negotiate settlement in the matter I want to put a couple of things on the table that have been danced around but never dealt with directly because of process.

I name Supt. Marc PROULX (ret) as the primary abuser/bully, my investigation into his history and background require that I ask the following questions:

1. Supt. PROULX was named in retaliation complaint related to sexual harassment in C Division. The matter was settled out of court just short of appearing before the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal. Supt. PROULX was promoted and transferred to "O" Division as DIO to which he joked with us in the program that he knew nothing about. Was he ever disciplined inside the RCMP for this harassment/retaliation incident in "C" Division?

2. In 2006 I advised Supt. PROULX in writing that I intended to file a formal complaint about his harassment and bullying of me, his response within hours was to lodge a false Code of Conduct Investigation against me alleging Criminal Code Offences. When these claims were later proved without merit, was Supt. PROULX investigated or disciplined for abusing process?

3. I have received allegations that during this time period in 2006 when PROULX was abusing me he may have been arrested by London Police Service attempting to procure a prostitute which was an undercover police officer in a "John Sting" operation. There is no criminal conviction of PROULX, he did not attend the diversion program (John School) in London and the RCMP has no record in the adjudication branch of PROULX being dealt with. He was transferred that year to Canadian Police College after serving only a short period here in "O" Division as DIO. Was PROULX arrested, was he disciplined internally? Lacking criminal conviction if he was arrested then he was the only person of the 59 "johns" arrested in that sting that was not prosecuted.

4. PROULX'S line officers would have been C/Supt Mazerolle and A/Commr Seguin, if PROULX did act in a manner which warranted proper discipline and did not receive it, would the line officers responsible be subject of a Code of Conduct Investigation? It should be noted that DOJ formally requested SEGUIN and MAZEROLLE be removed by name from my Statement of Claim. A few weeks after that request they were nominated as Officer and Member respectively of the Police Order of Merit. Did they request DOJ to make this removal request in order to receive an award? If they did cover up for PROULX in 2006, should they have received an Order of Merit in 2007?

5. In reviewing the CACP rules for nomination it refers to "subject of formal discipline" as grounds to withhold the nomination. Supt. JAGOE was nominated and received the OOM in 2011 while still named formally in my Statement of Claim for his actions as an officer of the RCMP. Should his nomination have been approved at that time? Who approved it?

I wish to apologize again, I hope this is not perceived as confrontational, it is not meant to be. I am frustrated, I have loved my career in the RCMP, there is nothing else as rewarding. I enjoy a 100% conviction rate, I pride myself in being thorough, fair and detailed in my investigations. I try to act in a manner which affords respect to everyone, and I am well aware that I am not perfect. When I find myself off track, I will make the necessary corrections and when required include admitting that I made [a] mistake and apologizing. I have not been afforded the same courtesy, and forcing the truth to be recognized it has affected my health, it has affected my family, it has affected my faith in the RCMP ...

I believe that in my case one officer made errors of judgment in making allegations to his higher-ups before checking policy. Instead of backing up he pushed forward with more false allegations in an attempt to discredit me. My line officer took those fabricated concerns and as a bully he pushed the issue in the only way he knew how, and for which he has a bad track record. Their offences then went ignored or covered up. Which is worse? The crime or the cover up?

I do not expect a response from any of you, as it has been practice to ignore me and cite the "legal process" as grounds. I just wanted you to know the character of those you are standing behind in this matter.

Seven years is a long time, and I am sure for you and your careers and rank many wonderful things have happened. I have worked as hard as possible to be the best member that I can in accordance with our core values. I just can't do it anymore. These seven years have taken a toll on [me]. I am not the same member I use [sic] to be. Anything that I do now is in the best interest of my family and myself. I can no longer worry about the reputation of the RCMP or individuals involved.

If I had my choice I would be back at work leading Project Overlord, a large proliferation investigation with direct links to foreign governments. I would pursue the source I began to recruit who is linked to the Egyptian protest movements and travels between Canada and Egypt. I would like to do these things because they are police work, because they have value.

I did not join to fight liars and bullies inside the RCMP, I hope the RCMP weathers this current trial in the public eye, but from where I sit we have a long way to go to fix it.

I wish you the best in your efforts to lead and correct the RCMP, I know that none of you were personally responsible in my circumstance. Please do not perceive this message in any other way than respectful. I am demoralized, I believe this has dragged out due to "process paralysis" and a lack of ownership of the issue internally.

Very Best Regards
Cpl. Peter Merrifield

- [558] S/Sgt. Reed stated that he became a full time SRR in 2008. He represented members on typical labour relations issues including conflict management, harassment grievances, complaints and behaviour issues. Regarding harassment issues, he endeavoured to help members find resources and tools to build better relationships between themselves or in a unit. Harassment included demeaning behaviour toward lower ranking members. Some examples included situations where members were spoken down to or disrespected. The effects of harassment included isolation of members from the rest of their group, not being selected for courses and not being selected for overtime work. Sometimes members faced disciplinary proceedings. SRR Reed's goal was always to resolve issues at the lowest possible level to keep officers operating in a friendly, positive environment. He carried out a significant amount of mediation and conflict resolution.
- [559] Mr. Merrifield approached SRR Reed in 2010 and requested assistance. He set up a meeting between Mr. Merrifield and Employee Management Relations Officer, Supt. Boulet to discuss Mr. Merrifield's issues. He recalled that they met and spoke for some time. His impression was that Supt. Boulet had a general concern for Mr. Merrifield's well-being.
- [560] SRR Reed stated that he wanted to meet with Asst/Commr. White. He believed that Asst/Commr. White was an honest, progressive man who was interested in the betterment of people in the RCMP. He requested that Asst/Commr. White meet with him and Mr. Merrifield to try to fix Mr. Merrifield's problems and get him back into the workplace. Asst/Commr. White was somewhat receptive but the meeting never happened.
- [561] SRR Reed recalled receiving Mr. Merrifield's email dated January 5, 2012, which was sent to him and the Commissioner among others. He stated that Mr. Merrifield wrote it because he was frustrated that he was not being dealt with. It was written from an emotional perspective. It was valuable, strong and clearly written. SRR Reed waited to see what the outcome of the email would be.

- [562] On March 13, 2012, SRR Reed wrote a lengthy email to Commr. Paulson, D/Commr. Graham and Asst/Commr. White. SRR Reed stated that his email to the Commissioner showed his level of frustration. SRR Reed had been dealing with the case for over two years and was very frustrated that Mr. Merrifield was being left in limbo all this time without a clear direction. In his email, SRR Reed stated:

Peter is a very intelligent, productive member who from most people's perspective has potential to be a good leader, commissioned officer and very productive and innovative member of the organization. He leads the way here in "O" Division and perhaps even in the country in the Counter Proliferation world having conducted investigations and been sought and relied upon by US agencies to provide expert evidence and numerous presentations to the US Homeland Security group. They have specifically requested him on numerous occasions.

- [563] SRR Reed stated that the issues that had been brought forward had not been resolved. His purpose was to stimulate interaction between the Force and the member to find a reasonable solution. There had been no response to Mr. Merrifield's email dated January 5, 2012. SRR Reed stated that when he made inquiries, he received only vague answers such as, "We're working on it." The matter had sat in the laps of the Commanding Officer and the Commissioner for two years. In his view, the Force had to either lay a charge, do an investigation and impose sanctions if necessary or put it behind them and move on. Ongoing conflict was not healthy for anyone. If the Force believed that Mr. Merrifield had done something wrong, they should have charged him. Mr. Merrifield was not formally disciplined for participating in the Barrie nomination meeting, for appearing on the Pritchard show or for his political involvement. SRR Reed said that there were "other types" of discipline and that dealing with them was a major aspect of his job as a SRR. He believed that a series of events had occurred that were moving against Mr. Merrifield and upsetting his ability to come to work and perform his job. SRR Reed wanted to put those to rest and move forward.

Follow Up Regarding Mr. Merrifield's Email

- [564] Asst/Commr. Stephen is currently the commander of O Division and has been since 2011. He oversees all RCMP activities in Ontario including civil lawsuits.
- [565] He received the email from Mr. Merrifield dated January 5, 2012. In paragraph three of his email, Mr. Merrifield stated:

I have received allegations that during this time period in 2006 when PROULX was abusing me, he may have been arrested by London Police Service attempting to procure a prostitute which was an undercover police officer in a "John Sting" operation...

- [566] Asst/Commr. White stated that he asked C/Supt. Mazerolle to follow up on this. C/Supt. Mazerolle returned with a document and they had a brief discussion. No action was taken on the issue because Supt. Proulx had retired by then. The RCMP had no jurisdiction to carry out a Code of Conduct investigation.

- [567] C/Supt. Mazerolle saw Mr. Merrifield's email dated January 5, 2012. He knew that Mr. Merrifield's allegations with respect to Supt. Proulx were substantiated because he received a related document. C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he was not aware that anyone had looked into the various issues and reconsidered what happened to Mr. Merrifield. He turned the document over to Asst/Commr. White and did not know what happened after that. He was training to leave for Afghanistan.
- [568] Commr. Paulson became aware of Mr. Merrifield within the RCMP when he received Mr. Merrifield's email dated January 5, 2012. Commr. Paulson found the depth and breadth of the information in the email unusual and concerning. He was concerned about it. He recalled that he forwarded it to Asst/Commr. White and a Human Resources officer. He expected that the issues would be addressed. He did not recall receiving any response and/or follow up.
- [569] Commr. Paulson stated that occasionally SRRs would communicate with him but it was not a regular occurrence. In SRR Reed's email, he asked that Mr. Merrifield's case be made a priority. Commr. Paulson believed he had a conversation with Asst/Commr. White in which they discussed following up. He stated that he was concerned about the matter but that he was reassured that Asst/Commr. White was on top of it.
- [570] In his email dated January 5, 2012, Mr. Merrifield made an allegation that Supt. Proulx had attempted to procure a prostitute. Commr. Paulson stated that he did not know whether an investigation had been conducted with respect to this allegation. He had not seen a police document. No one had ever discussed the contents of such a document with him. No one suggested to him that those allegations may have had some foundation.

Serious and Organized Crime

- [571] In September 2012, Mr. Merrifield told SRR Reed that he wanted to return to work. He had been off for 16 months. He stated that he had suffered severely. He had post-traumatic stress disorder as a result of past events.
- [572] Mr. Merrifield said that he had an opportunity to go to the Source Development Unit. After he obtained medical permission, he applied and passed the first level of screening. He was interviewed for the second level but was subsequently notified that his application was unsuccessful. Mr. Merrifield stated that people with lower marks were selected. Later, he understood that he was not selected because he was engaged in litigation with the RCMP.
- [573] The RCMP took eight months to facilitate Mr. Merrifield's return to work. He was told that his security clearance level had expired after the usual five year period. If he had applied to renew it before the expiry, the approval would have been a routine matter. Mr. Merrifield had to make a fresh application which took considerable time to process, even though he held the top level of security clearance before he went on sick leave.
- [574] While he was on sick leave, Mr. Merrifield was required to submit certain forms. When he came into the office to do this, he attempted to speak with his former co-workers. Mr. Merrifield believed that they had been instructed to not speak to him.
- [575] On April 1, 2013, the RCMP underwent a substantial re-organization. Customs & Excise was combined with several other units. It became Serious and Organized Crime, under Insp. A. White. The objective of the new combined unit was to investigate the highest priorities regardless of the commodity, such as Customs & Excise. Asst/Commr. S. White stated that counter proliferation could have been a priority. It would depend on the group involved.

- [576] Insp. Johnson, Mr. Merrifield's former superior, wanted Mr. Merrifield to return to counter proliferation investigation because he had previously led the force in that new area.
- [577] SRR Reed had a role in Mr. Merrifield's return to work. He wanted to return to counter proliferation work in a leadership role. SRR Reed made efforts with Insp. A. White as he was the OIC of the new unit. SRR Reed understood Insp. A. White's position to be that Mr. Merrifield would not be returning to counter proliferation work and that "he was not the expert he thought he was". Although the decision regarding the type of work that Mr. Merrifield would do in the new unit was up to Insp. A. White, SRR Reed disagreed with his decision and told him so. He did not know why Insp. A. White refused to have Mr. Merrifield return to counter proliferation work. He challenged the decision because he felt it was punitive. Mr. Merrifield's expertise was in counter proliferation. SRR Reed stated that a member would not be removed from a spot when he was the lone expert on the subject unless there was another reason.
- [578] In May 2013, Mr. Merrifield returned to work. He believed that Insp. A. White did not want someone returning from sick leave to take on a role in counter proliferation work. Mr. Merrifield was assigned to be the file manager for a drug investigation. He worked in this role for three months, from May to July, 2013. He never returned to counter proliferation work.
- [579] Insp. A. White stated that after the units were re-organized, he inherited Project Overlord, which had been handled by staff under Insp. Johnson's command. Mr. Merrifield had worked on this project before he was off duty sick.
- [580] While Mr. Merrifield was on sick leave, a decision had been made in Project Overlord to focus on supporting the prosecution of charges in the U.S. Insp. Johnson knew that Mr. Merrifield had ideas for charges that could be laid in Canada. He sent Insp. A. White an email asking him to hear out Mr. Merrifield on this issue. Mr. Merrifield was also eager to discuss another project proposal.
- [581] Insp. A. White stated that while Project Overlord was not closed, there was minimal activity on it. The resources of the department were focused on two significant drug trafficking investigations. Project Overlord had the staffing that it required so there was no counter proliferation file to which Mr. Merrifield could be assigned. This was the reason why he did not go back into counter proliferation work. Insp. A. White denied stating that he did not want someone returning from sick leave to take a major role in an investigation. The project that Mr. Merrifield had proposed did not go anywhere.
- [582] Insp. A. White stated that he had concerns that Mr. Merrifield was not a competent investigator. A 43 page directed review was done with respect to Project Overlord. There were many concerns about him. A lot of things were found wanting on the investigation. Insp. A. White had concerns about the direction of the file. He believed that statements made by Mr. Merrifield to Insp. Johnson and him were misleading. Project Overlord was the last counter proliferation file that came across his desk. The peer review was done at the end of July 2013. The final report was received in January 2014.
- [583] Insp. A. White stated that there had been conflict in the unit and this was the reason for the directed review. Mr. Merrifield was not subject to any discipline although others were. There were no notes from Mr. Merrifield on the Project Overlord file although he had been the primary investigator for two years. Some interviews had been conducted but they had not been recorded. Some documents had been seized that were not reported to the Justice Department. They were not tracked. There was a continuity problem. Many emails had been received from U.S. authorities. These showed that the investigation was an intelligence probe. No evidence had been obtained. No Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty had been sent so that the American emails could be used. Financial material had been gathered but no accurate analysis of it was done by Proceeds of Crime. They had determined that there was no action to take.

- [584] Insp. A. White met with Mr. Merrifield only three or four times and in total spent just a few hours with him. Mr. Merrifield worked in Serious and Organized Crime for only a few months because he was then elected as a SRR and left Insp. A. White's command on July 7, 20013. Insp. A. White received the report on Project Overlord in 2014. He never gave a copy of it to Mr. Merrifield. He never sat down with him to discuss the contents. The reason for this was that Mr. Merrifield left his command before the report was received. Nevertheless, Insp. A. White believed that a collective meeting was held, that Mr. Merrifield attended, and that the issues were discussed. Insp. A. White did not attend the meeting.
- [585] Insp. A. White stated that Mr. Merrifield was not disciplined or performance managed as a result of the review. Insp. A. White never actually assessed Mr. Merrifield.
- [586] Cpl. Low-Fowler was the file manager for Project Overlord from August 2009 to May 2013 when Mr. Merrifield was the lead investigator. She worked in Serious and Organized Crime after the units were reorganized, under Insp. A. White.
- [587] Cpl. Low-Fowler stated that she was part of the peer review for the project in August 2013. She was asked to sit with key players in a private meeting room for one day. They were reviewing the file to identify successes, short comings and areas for improvement. No individual's shortcomings were discussed at the meeting. She was not aware that a report was generated but assumed that there would be one. She was never briefed on the outcome of the peer review process and was not aware if others were briefed.
- [588] Cpl. Low-Fowler stated that she did not receive notes from Mr. Merrifield for Project Overlord and was concerned about that. She knew that he had a lot of emails that were logged. She did not see any audio/video for witness interviews. Witness will-say statements had been obtained.
- [589] Cpl. Low-Fowler stated that the speed, flow and direction of the file were good when Mr. Merrifield was the lead investigator. There were regular meetings, people knew what needed to be done and there was follow up. The direction and goal was clear. After Mr. Merrifield left, this was not the case. Things were not being assigned or done.

Senate Standing Committee - May 27, 2013

- [590] As noted above, Mr. Merrifield joined the MPA shortly after he was hired. He was elected to be Vice-President and subsequently President in 2011.
- [591] In 2013, the Senate Standing Committee of Defence and National Security were conducting hearings to explore harassment in the RCMP. Commr. Paulson appeared before the Committee and provided testimony.
- [592] As President of the Mounted Police Association, Mr. Merrifield was invited to appear. In his testimony, he used his own situation as an example of harassment.
- [593] Afterwards, he had lunch with Evan Solomon, the host of a TV show called Power and Politics. He agreed to participate on the show that same day and be interviewed as the President of the MPA. In the interview, Mr. Merrifield spoke about the fact that other officers had told a human source (Witness X) that s/he should not work with Mr. Merrifield.

- [594] Asst/Commr. White learned of Mr. Merrifield's interview on the Solomon show the day after it happened. He sent an email to Commr. Paulson dated May 28 2013, and then had a telephone conversation with him about it. Commr. Paulson wanted to know why Mr. Merrifield had appeared on the Solomon show and made the various statements. Asst/Commr. White testified that he might have told Commr. Paulson that Mr. Merrifield was bitter and frustrated with the organization. He might have told him that the managers were trying to deal with the issue as best as they could. Asst/Commr. White stated that he mentioned C/Supt. Mazerolle's investigation into Supt. Proulx. He said the Commissioner knew that inquiries had been made. He did not know that Mr. Merrifield's statement about Supt. Proulx's involvement with prostitutes had been substantiated to some degree.
- [595] Commr. Paulson recalled the conversation with Asst/Commr. White about the interview. Asst/Commr. White told him that Mr. Merrifield was a very smart, accomplished officer, "who had become solidly and almost irretrievably embittered with the organization...and we were just going to have to let...[the proceedings] play out." Commr. Paulson stated that Asst/Commr. White is a very patient and personable man. He believed that Asst/Commr. White had made every effort to resolve the matter. His assessment was that Mr. Merrifield's performance on the Solomon show was an example of what could be expected until the claim was resolved. There was not much that could be done about it. Commr. Paulson said Asst/Commr. White told him that Mr. Merrifield was locked into a view that the officers he had referred to had harassed him. He was not going to back away from that position. Mr. Merrifield was very determined to have that validated. Commr. Paulson understood that those officers had been trying to respond to Mr. Merrifield but he was recalcitrant and was unresponsive to any direction. Asst/Commr. White told him that that those officers had tried to respond to the circumstances as best they could in the moment and that there was no malfeasance in bringing the Part IV investigation. Commr. Paulson believed that Mr. Merrifield's statement that "Supt. Proulx [was]...attempting to procure a prostitute" was unsubstantiated and unestablished.
- [596] Regarding the actions of the officers toward Mr. Merrifield, Commr. Paulson stated, "their efforts at discipline, failed though they were, were in essence blameless in terms of having to do the right thing to get Mr. Merrifield to ... stay the course as it were." He understood that Asst/Commr. White had tried to speak to Mr. Merrifield but he was not interested.
- [597] Commr. Paulson read the transcript of Mr. Merrifield's TV interview shortly after it occurred. After he read the transcript, he became concerned about whether he was receiving sufficient information about harassment from the officers who were informing him about the case. Commr. Paulson said that he was very concerned after he read the section where Mr. Merrifield spoke of the disparaging comments that had been made to a confidential informant. He said that if the allegation was true, interfering with the handling of an informant is a very serious matter. Commr. Paulson stated that he did not know whether there was any investigation into this issue. He did not order one.
- [598] SRR Reed stated that after Mr. Merrifield's attendance before the Senate Committee, Sgt. Dickinson asked Mr. Merrifield to come in for an interview. This concerned him because Sgt. Dickinson led the Part IV investigation. In SRR Reed's view, it was very unusual for the Professional Standards Unit (formerly the CIIS) to investigate a member without the SRR's involvement. Any officer could have followed up on the matter. Clearly the C.O. asked Sgt. Dickinson to carry out the interview.
- [599] Asst/Commr. White requested Mr. Merrifield's files from the PSU because Mr. Merrifield had raised some issues and no follow up had been done. One issue related to what he described as false Code of Conduct allegations.

- [600] S/Sgt. Dickinson interviewed Mr. Merrifield about the statements he made to the Senate Committee and the press. He said he did not have a mandate to take a statement. He was just asked to take a witness statement and obtain the names of the members that Mr. Merrifield had referred to and the related alleged activity. He was then to check the RCMP records to determine what the RCMP knew. In the meeting for the statement, Mr. Merrifield provided names regarding the allegations as well as additional details. S/Sgt. Dickinson stated that he asked his office administrator to review the records and also to look for criminal records. He did not do any follow up.
- [601] S/Sgt. Dickinson was also asked to provide information with respect to the PSU allegations which Mr. Merrifield raised when he had appeared before the Senate Committee. In an email from S/Sgt. Dickinson to Supt. MacDonald dated May 28, 2013, he stated that he found four PSU files and that Mr. Merrifield had not received any discipline. The second one was the Part IV investigation ordered by Supt. Proulx. The third one was the administrative review. S/Sgt. Dickinson described the fourth one "as an assistance provided to the London Police handled by myself." He described the first one as file 2005-117 (the Secret file). In the email, he stated, "Does not appear to be a PSU handled file." Dickinson stated that although a PSU scoring for a Part IV investigation, XX82, was used on this file, it had not been handled by the PSU. Sgt. Dickinson stated that the XX82 code has been used by others but he believed it should only be used by the PSU for a mandated Code investigation. Once it is used, a member is to be notified unless there is a concern that a member might destroy evidence.
- [602] After Mr. Merrifield's interview with Sgt. Dickinson, Asst/Commr. White received a memo setting out a summary of it. Of the five issues listed, one related to a sexual assault matter involving A/Sgt. Crane and another related to Supt. Proulx. The purpose of the interview had been to identify outstanding issues regarding Mr. Merrifield. He received a document from Sgt. Dickinson, indicating that the PSU located four files. All of them were closed without any discipline. Supt. Proulx had retired.
- [603] A/Sgt. Crane was acquitted of the sexual assault charge. Asst/Comm. White was satisfied that everything had been followed up.
- [604] Commr. Paulson was not aware that Mr. Merrifield had been interviewed. He knew that all of the PSU files involving Mr. Merrifield resulted in no discipline. The only information that he received in response to his request that the matter be looked into was from Asst/Commr. White, on whom he relied entirely.

RCMP Media Release - May 28, 2013

- [605] Commr. Paulson explained that at RCMP headquarters, there is a parliamentary affairs office that co-ordinates appearances at the Senate Committees and House Committees. People from that office sit in on hearings which are relevant to the RCMP and produce documents such as the RCMP Parliamentary Business Bulletin. The Bulletin is not classified and has an unrestricted circulation.
- [606] The Bulletin for the period June 3 to 7, 2013, states, "Amongst other things, Commr. Paulson alluded to disagreements that the Force has had with Cpl. Merrifield in the past, including what Commr. Paulson characterized as him having commented out of turn on national security matters."
- [607] Commr. Paulson stated that the information he received relating to Mr. Merrifield's having commented out of turn on national security matters came from Asst/Commr. White.
- [608] The Parliamentary Business Bulletin goes on to state:

In July 2005, while Merrifield was off duty recovering from surgery, he was asked to speak to Talk 640 Radio about the history of terrorism. During the interview, he did not identify himself as a member of the RCMP or purport to be interviewed as a member of the RCMP. Following the radio program Jagoe alleged that Merrifield had disclosed top secret information regarding RCMP investigations contrary to the Official Secrets Act. Jagoe prompted Proulx to take action against Merrifield. Two days after the radio interview, Proulx contacted Merrifield at his home and accused him of violating RCMP policy. He also advised that formal disciplinary proceedings would follow.

- [609] Commr. Paulson stated he would conclude from this portion of the Bulletin that Supt. Proulx had accused Mr. Merrifield of having done this radio talk show without authority and Mr. Merrifield would have been subject to an investigation. The Parliamentary Business Bulletin did not give the impression that the matter was concluded with no discipline.
- [610] In June 2013, Mr. Merrifield stood for election as an SRR and was successful. He served a term which expired in June 2015. At that time he was re-elected.
- [611] On March 6, 2014, Mr. Merrifield was promoted to Sergeant.

Harassment Complaint - July 7, 2015

- [612] On June 24, 2015, Mr. Merrifield attended a mandatory course entitled “Insider Threat and Security Risk Manager”. Cst. Ktabi, one of Mr. Merrifield’s junior officers, also attended the course. Mr. Merrifield had previously dealt with him regarding a performance issue. Part of the discussion in the course was about psychopaths. The instructor asked if anyone could identify psychopaths. Several people stated names. Mr. Merrifield, who is apparently known for his wry sense of humour, stated, “The Commissioner. Just joking. Just a joke.” Cst. Ktabi took offence to this, completed a form known as an A5 on July 7, 2015, and sent it to Insp. Crouch, OIC of INSET. He stated in the form that he considered Mr. Merrifield’s comment to be a form of harassment. The complaint went to the Office for Co-ordination of Harassment Complaints. (OCHC).
- [613] Section 2.8 of the RCMP’s harassment policy defines harassment as follows:

2.8 Harassment means any improper conduct by an individual that is directed at, and is offensive to, another individual in the workplace, including at any event or any location related to work, and that the individual knew, or ought reasonably to have known, would cause offence or harm. It comprises an objectionable act, comment, or display that demeans, belittles, or causes personal humiliation or embarrassment, and any act of intimidation or threat. It also includes harassment within the meaning of the Canadian Human Rights Act, i.e. based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, sexual orientation, marital status, family status, disability, and pardon conviction.

2.8.1 Harassment is normally a series of incidents but can be one severe incident which has a lasting impact on the individual.

- [614] The information on the A5 did not meet the requirements of a harassment complaint. There is no provision in the policy for a third party complaint. The person alleging that he has been harassed must make the complaint. He can authorize another person to do so on his behalf if he is unable to make the complaint himself due to medical reasons and if he provides written authorization to the other person.
- [615] Despite the fact that the requirements for a harassment complaint had not been met, staff at OCHC treated the A5 as a harassment complaint.
- [616] Harassment reviewer civilian Ms. O'Neil, of the OCHC, opened ACMT File #2015336749 on July 27, 2015. Mr. Merrifield was the only subject listed on the file and was identified as the "Respondent".
- [617] Ms. O'Neil carried out a review and prepared a "report", OCHC Review – Case #2015336749, in which she set out a synopsis of the allegation.
- [618] S/Sgt. Floyd, an SRR who had extensive involvement in the development of the harassment policy, explained that the complaints policy regarding harassment was modified and came into force on November 28, 2014.
- [619] S/Sgt. Floyd described the process. He explained that a written complaint would usually be prepared on form 3919. A complaint can be written on another document as long as it contains the necessary criteria. It would be submitted to the OCHC intake office where it is reviewed. Within seven days, the complainant will receive an acknowledgment that the complaint has been received. After that, the complaint is processed and forwarded to the Division where the complaint was received. At the OCHC, the complaint goes to a harassment advisor who works with a decision-maker. The decision-maker is usually the C.O. of the Division. In this instance, Cst. Brunet was the advisor, civilian Ms. Paquet was her assistant and Asst/Commr. White was the C.O.
- [620] S/Sgt. Floyd explained a respondent is not notified until the complaint comes to the Division. Typically, the decision-maker notifies the respondent within 14 days. Upon receipt of the complaint, the decision-maker reviews it to ensure compliance with submission deadlines and policy criteria for harassment.
- [621] In this matter, the complaint was made in mid-July. Mr. Merrifield was not notified of it until October. S/Sgt. Floyd stated that this is not his understanding of how the policy is supposed to work. He stated that in his view, the A5 document does not commence a harassment complaint. A third party complainant cannot make a complaint that someone else has been harassed. The essence of the allegation in the A5 was that Mr. Merrifield may have acted inappropriately at a training event. S/Sgt. Floyd stated that this complaint went to the Inspector. There is a process for a supervisor to follow when a matter is not a formal harassment complaint. If steps need to be taken, the subject of the complaint could be considered a performance issue or a Part IV investigation could be initiated.
- [622] S/Sgt. Floyd stated that if a complaint is going to proceed, it is imperative that the respondent knows what the allegations are so that s/he can respond. The respondent is to receive the 3919 form as well as the allegations. This is mandated under the policy. The respondent typically receives the documents after the decision-maker reviews it and considers it to be a formal harassment complaint.
- [623] In s. 5.2.3, the Policy states that if the complaint is determined to not be a harassment complaint but rather a work performance issue, the supervisor or manager must take appropriate steps to determine if a response, consistent with the workplace relations services, would be appropriate. S/Sgt. Floyd stated that on Friday, November 13, 2015, two days before they were to testify, he and C/Supt. O'Reilly, who was the highest ranking officer responsible for the OCHC, had a conversation. They agreed that this was the process that should have been followed regarding Cst. Ktabi's A5. They agreed that the matter had been handled inappropriately.

[624] In 2015, C/Supt. O'Reilly was the director general of the Workplace Responsibility branch. He was also directly involved in the development of the new policy for harassment complaints and is now responsible as an overseer and policy expert regarding harassment, among other issues, within the RCMP. He is ultimately responsible for the OCHC. He manages and oversees the superintendent who is responsible for conduct and employee relations who in turn oversees the Staff Sergeant for the OCHC. C/Supt. O'Reilly explained the OCHC is responsible for several things including operating the policy centre for oversight of the harassment policy, carrying out investigations and managing the resolution process. It is the central intake for complaints.

[625] C/Supt. O'Reilly testified that he first became aware of the complaint involving Mr. Merrifield on July 23, 2015. It came up during a morning briefing that takes place every day which is held by the Professional Responsibility officer, Asst/Commr. McMillan and attended by three director generals including himself. Asst/Commr. McMillan told him that Asst/Commr. White was looking for advice with respect to the report that he had received. C/Supt. O'Reilly stated that the next day he contacted Asst/Commr. White and told him to forward the A5. C/Supt. O'Reilly received it on July 24, 2015. His next step was to contact the Professional Responsibility officer and provide some recommendations. He stated that Asst/Commr. White did not have a role at that point because the A5 did not initiate a harassment complaint.

[626] On July 27, 2015, C/Supt O'Reilly reported to the Professional Responsibility officer that he had received the A5 and that his recommendation was that it should be treated as a "third party non-complainant process". On July 27, 2015, he sent an email to Supt. MacDonald and Ms. O'Neil which stated that "a third party harassment complaint" was attached. C/Supt. O'Reilly stated that it was very unfortunate that he used this term as a "third party harassment complaint" does not exist in the new policy. In the next paragraph of his email, he directed Ms. O'Neil to open a file and to proceed with "the third party non-complainant process". This was the correct process that should have been initiated. C/Supt. O'Reilly then sent an email to Asst/Commr. White on July 27, 2015 to advise that a file had been opened and that the matter would be addressed through a third party non-complainant process.

[627] C/Supt. O'Reilly stated that he had quite a few concerns with respect to how the OCHC case review was prepared by Ms. O'Neil. It purported to make Cst. Ktabi's document into a harassment complaint. It stated that a complaint had been received and that it would proceed in accordance with the harassment policy process. C/Supt. O'Reilly stated that this occurred because he had referred to the complaint as a "third party harassment complaint" in his email dated July 27, 2015 to Supt. MacDonald and Ms. O'Neil. He stated that he had misrepresented Cst. Ktabi's document when he called it a third party harassment complaint and this led to the analysis of it as a harassment complaint. He stated that the A5 document did not constitute a formal harassment complaint because, pursuant to the policy, Cst. Ktabi did not have the ability to initiate such a complaint on someone else's behalf.

[628] He said he believed that the OCHC had reverted to their standard operating procedure when they contacted the SRR. Rather than treating the complaint as an informal resolution outside of the harassment complaint process, they treated it as a harassment complaint and informal resolution within that process. C/Supt. O'Reilly thought that Mr. Merrifield was not informed that there was an error in the interpretation of the policy and that the matter should not have been characterized as a harassment complaint. He said that he did not advise Mr. Merrifield of this and he thought that “O” Division also had not advised him. The first cause of the delay in notifying Mr. Merrifield was that the Commissioner was away on holidays until the end of August and was not available to advise as to how he wanted to be engaged. During September, the matter was overlooked. It was not a priority for case reviewers until it was raised by the Professional Responsibility officer.

[629] Even though the A5 was dated July 7, 2015, Mr. Merrifield was not served with it until October 22, 2015. He was asked if he wished to engage in informal resolution. He agreed. When the Commissioner returned from holidays, his stance was that he required a written apology. A copy of it was to be sent to all the other officers who attended the course.

[630] As a result of all of this, Mr. Merrifield’s name was entered into the OCHC’s database which exists to keep track of harassers and identify patterns. Entries into the database are not removed. They can only be revised to show that a matter has been resolved.

[631] On November 23, 2015, C/Supt. O’Reilly directed Ms. O’Neil to change the identification in the Administrative Case Management Tool (AMCT) for Mr. Merrifield from “Respondent” to “Subject of Consultation.”

[632] Since November 23, 2015, access to ACMT File #2015336749 has been restricted to C/Supt. O’Reilly, Supt. MacDonald and Ms. O’Neil.

[633] With respect to the status of the matter, as of November 18, 2015, C/Supt. O’Reilly stated that despite the miscommunication, the matter was still in the “third party complaint process and informal resolution”. He confirmed that there is no harassment complaint at this time.

[634] As a result of the A5 filed by Cst. Ktabi and its mishandling by the RCMP, Mr. Merrifield did not know that a complaint had been made against him until October 22, 2015 when he was served with the A5. He first learned that the RCMP conceded that the matter was handled inappropriately during the testimony of S/Sgt. Floyd and C/Supt. O’Reilly on Tuesday, November 17 and Wednesday, November 18, 2015. In the interval, Mr. Merrifield lived under the shadow of a harassment complaint involving himself and the Commissioner.

[635] No explanation was provided as to why Mr. Merrifield was not advised of this between Friday, November 13, 2015 and the dates of the testimony.

[636] I will now turn to the motion brought by the plaintiff.

Should the statement of defence be struck for late disclosure?

[637] During the trial, plaintiff’s counsel stated their intention to bring this motion. I determined that I could not decide the motion until the end of trial when all of the evidence had been called. Accordingly, this motion was heard on June 2, 2016.

[638] Most of the examinations for discovery in this action were conducted in 2010. This trial proceeded over three trial sittings in November 2015, May 2016 and November 2016. The defendants provided additional documents on 13 different dates during the trial, 9 of which were after the plaintiff testified. Some of the documents provided evidence of the decisions and actions of certain witnesses after they had already testified. The plaintiff conducted examinations for discovery relating to some of the late produced documents on May 28, 2015, during the trial. Several significant documents came into the plaintiff’s possession only because he made an Access to Information request. The plaintiff states that he was substantially prejudiced by the late production of documents. This prejudice cannot be overcome by an adjournment or costs. Accordingly, the plaintiff requests an order striking the defence.

- [639] The defendants state that the remedy requested by the plaintiff is the most extreme and punitive relief available. The plaintiff has not demonstrated any actual prejudice arising from the late disclosure. Even if there was prejudice, the relief sought is vastly disproportionate to the prejudice.

The Test

- [640] The Rules of Civil Procedure: R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, set out requirements for production of documents. A party to litigation is required to provide every document relevant to the issues in the action that is in its possession. This is an ongoing obligation throughout the course of the action. According to Rule 53.08, when the issue of late disclosure or production arises at trial, if the evidence is admissible only with leave, leave shall be granted on such terms as are just and with an adjournment if necessary, unless to do so will cause prejudice to the opposite party or will cause undue delay to the conduct of the trial.
- [641] Rule 2 addresses the consequences for non-compliance. Ordinarily, non-compliance is an irregularity which does not render a proceeding a nullity. The court may set aside the proceeding in whole only where necessary and when it is in the interests of justice.
- [642] The plaintiff acknowledges that he seeks a rare and drastic order to strike the defendants' pleading based on non-compliance with their obligation to disclose and produce. The plaintiff relies on Iannarella v. Corbett, 2015 ONCA 110, 124 O.R. (3d) 523, Blatherwick v. Blatherwick, 2015 ONSC 2606, 8 E.T.R. (4th) 30, Bishop-Gittens v. Lim 2015 ONSC 3553, 127 O.R. (3d) 74, Newlove v. Moderco Inc., 2002 CanLII 34748 (ON SC), McAvan Holdings v. BDO Dunwoody Ltd., (2003), 2003 CanLII 64222 (ON SC), 65 O.R. (3d) 247 (Sup. Ct.), and Leone's Music World v. Jam Industries, 2008 CanLII 87580 (ON SC).
- [643] In Iannarella, surveillance evidence was disclosed and produced for the first time during the cross-examination of the plaintiff at trial. The respondents did not serve an affidavit of documents and did not provide particulars of the surveillance either before or after the appellants set the matter down for trial. The court quoted Howden J. from Beland v. Hill, 2012 ONSC 4855, at para. 50, in which he stated, "the discovery rules are to be read in a manner to discourage tactics and encourage full and timely disclosure in order to encourage early settlement and reduce court costs." The court stated in para. 46 of Iannarella that "given the interests of fairness and the objectives of efficiency and settlement, the court expects the parties to comply fully and rigorously with the disclosure and production obligations under the Rules." The Court of Appeal stated that because the respondent failed to serve an affidavit of documents, the trial judge ought to have considered how the case would have developed if the respondents had complied with the Rules: Iannarella, at paras 66 – 67. The court found at para. 33 that the prejudice was "baked in" when the trial was underway. The court ordered a new trial for a variety of reasons including the fact that the surveillance had not been disclosed.
- [644] Bishop-Gittens v. Lim also concerned the defendant's failure to notify the plaintiff that it had conducted surveillance. The court held that the defendant could rely on the surveillance evidence for purposes of impeachment and that any potential prejudice to the plaintiff could be addressed through the imposition of appropriate terms. The prejudicial effect of the surveillance did not outweigh its probative value. The main difference between this case and Iannarella is that the trial was not yet underway when the surveillance issue arose.

The court stated at para. 17 that, “neither party has taken any steps at trial which could result in prejudice by not knowing that this evidence might be referred to at trial.”

- [645] Blatherwick is a family law matter. The husband produced documents during trial that would have affected the valuations of certain assets. The court found that the late disclosure resulted in prejudice. It excluded relevant evidence on the basis that there would be no time to investigate, prepare or respond to new documents that were produced not on the eve of trial but at trial. An adjournment would have been prejudicial to the wife. The court held that the documents that the husband produced during trial were not admissible.
- [646] In Newlove, a plaintiff failed to produce financial information and then sought to have it admitted at trial to bolster his claim for damages. The trial judge heard a motion before trial brought by the defendant to dismiss the action or for an order preventing the plaintiff from introducing the evidence. The court held that the proper approach was to proceed with the trial without the previous undisclosed documents. The trial judge quoted from Bascur v. Fernandino, [1997] O.J. No. 1136 and stated, “the extreme remedy of dismissal of the action with respect to damages may be granted, in a case where no acceptable excuse for the failure to comply is offered, and the documents cannot be produced in time for proper trial preparation.”
- [647] McAvan concerned a company’s failure to obtain files from Canada Customs and Revenue Agency (CRA) in an action where it alleged professional negligence against its accountants. The defendant accountants brought a motion to compel production of documents. Master Albert directed the plaintiff’s to obtain their files from CCRA and deliver a further affidavit of documents, failing which the defendant could bring a motion to stay or dismiss the claim.
- [648] In Leone’s Music World, the court considered a motion prior to trial to dismiss the plaintiff’s claim for failure to comply with two interlocutory court orders that set out documents that the plaintiff was required to produce. Master Pope determined that the defendant would be severely prejudiced if it was required to go to trial and defend a claim for economic loss without complete documentation to test what the plaintiff’s purchases, sales, inventory, revenue and profits were during the relevant periods. There had been extensive delays in the proceeding of nine years. The court dismissed the plaintiff’s action.
- [649] In the above-noted cases, with the exception of Leone’s Music World, the court has dealt with failure to produce documents or producing documents at the last minute by either ordering a new trial or finding that the documents were not admissible at trial.
- [650] The defendants rely on Glass v. 618717 Ontario Inc., 2011 ONSC 2810 and Eloro Resources Ltd. v. Sovereign Capital Group (Ont.) Ltd., 2004 CanLII 14047 \(ON SC\). They also rely on Newlove set out above.
- [651] In Glass, the plaintiffs brought a motion during trial to strike the defendants’ pleadings. They alleged that the defendants failed to produce material documents in a timely fashion. Production of documents was the subject of an earlier motion in which the court ordered the defendants to request certain files from a law firm and provide the plaintiffs with copies of their contents. The defendants reviewed those documents at the law firm and then invited the plaintiffs to review them, which they did. They obtained copies of certain documents from the files. On the motion to strike, the plaintiffs took the position that the defendants had not actually produced the files from the law firm. The court stated that the seriousness of any breach and the related prejudice to the innocent party’s right to a fair hearing had to be considered. At para. 36 of Glass, the court considered the principles set out in Newlove and Breslin v. Breslin, 2006 CarswellOnt 6372 at para. 9 where the court stated that the “interlocutory dismissal of an action is a remedy of last resort, to be invoked when the litigant has shown a cavalier disregard of his obligations.” The defendants had not failed to produce the documents ordered by the Master. Furthermore, the plaintiffs had not demonstrated any prejudice resulting from their late inspection of the law firm’s files. The court did not accept the plaintiff’s argument that the failure to produce the files deprived them of the opportunity to obtain favourable evidence or admissions on examinations for discovery. The plaintiffs decided not to proceed with the continued examination of the defendant.

[652] In Eloro, the defendant had not provided an affidavit of documents and had failed to attend at examinations for discovery, despite the fact that a timetable order had been made. The motion was adjourned several times because the defendant’s solicitor of record had been removed and the principal of the corporation was out of the country. The court stated at para. 6 that “... striking a defence is an extreme remedy and a last resort. It should only be ordered when the defence of the action is no longer viable and appropriate because the defendant has by its failure or refusal to be bound by the rules and orders of the court effectively abandoned its right to participate in the court process or when the breaches have become contemptuous such as to demonstrate an utter disregard by the defaulting party for the court’s orders or when the moving party can demonstrate prejudice.” The court found that the breaches occurred during a brief period when the defendant was without counsel. Therefore, the plaintiff’s motion was denied.

[653] The cases relied upon by the parties fall into three broad categories:

- (a) requests by a party to admit evidence at trial that is helpful to that party (Blatherwick and Newlove);
- (b) motions brought prior to trial (Bishop-Gittens, McAvan and Eloro); and
- (c) failure to comply with production orders (Leone’s Music World).

[654] All of these cases can be distinguished on their facts. Here, the plaintiff requests an order to strike the defence because the defendants failed to locate documents prior to trial and instead produced them during trial. These documents might have been helpful to the plaintiff.

[655] The principles that emerge from these cases indicate that on this motion to strike, the court must consider the seriousness of the failure to produce documents and whether this resulted in prejudice to the plaintiff’s right to a fair hearing. Striking a statement of defence is a remedy of last resort to be used when the defendant has shown a cavalier disregard of its production obligations.

The Plaintiff’s Position

[656] The plaintiff provided two helpful charts. The first one sets out the dates when the defendant provided certain documents and a description of those documents. It also includes the date when the trial began, the two dates when it reconvened and the date when the parties conducted a mid-trial examination for discovery on some of the new productions. In addition, the plaintiff provided a second chart showing the dates when various witnesses testified. Both charts are reproduced below.

REFERENCE NUMBER	WHAT	WHEN PROVIDED	WHAT DOCS
	Original list of documents	April 9/10	Tabs 1-302

	First supplementary list of documents	June 16/10	Tabs 303-311
	Second supplementary list of documents	Feb. 24/14	Tabs 312-331 – Boos, Van Doren and Frank Smith Notes
1	Request for file and reply re file jacket 20015-1117	June 24/14 July 16/14	Enclosing file jacket and list of file contents
	Third supplementary list of documents	Sept. 30/14	Tabs 332-334 enclosing 2005-1117
			Occurrence Report and file jacket (file jacket previously supplied via email July 16/14)
	Fourth supplementary list of documents	Oct. 31/14	Tabs 335-341 (Promotion Exam 2006 registration documents)
	Discovery of Peter Merrifield	Nov. 10/14
	TRIAL COMMENT	NOV. 17, 2014
2	Elections Canada Results	Nov. 21/14	Nomination results presented during cross-examination (Exhibits 62,64,66,68)
3	Van Doren Note	Nov. 28/14	1 page
4	2005-1117 file documents	Nov. 30/14	6 documents
5	Boos notes	Nov. 30/14	16 pages (mostly redacted)
6	Continuation reports and Andy White notes	May 13/15	14 pages
7	Crane note and policy	May 14/15	1 page Crane note with printout of policy and regulation
8	Continuation report re BB gun case	May 15/15	4 pages
9	OP manual page	May 18/15	1 page
10	Seguin Notes	May 25/15	2 pgs. re October 2006
11	Proulx Notes	May 25/15	5 new pages plus redacted parts of existing notes – new note for Jan. 6/05 with Trueman reference
12	McCann Notes	Nov. 6/15	6 pages notes redacted (appears to show discussion with J. Jago)

	TRIAL RECONVENES	Nov. 16/15
13	Personnel report with Proulx comments	Nov. 18/15	Proulx comments added to end of report, handwritten date on front
14	Mazerolle Notes	Nov. 18/15	2 pages (entries for May 13/05 and June 2/05 referencing Jagoe)

DATE(S)	WITNESS
November 17 to November 21, 2014	Peter Merrifield
November 24, 2014	Peter Merrifield, Michael Nicota
November 25, 2014	Peter Merrifield
November 26, 2014	Peter Merrifield, Stephen Raine
November 27 & 28, 2014	Peter Merrifield
December 1, 2014	Peter Merrifield, Jim Brown, Greg Sims
December 2, 2014	Stephen Frith, Mark DuPuy, Tim Petit, Doug Ford
December 3, 2014	Joseph Robert Paulson, Ian Wallach
May 19, 2015	Sealed testimony – Stephen White
May 20 & 21, 2015	Brian John Reed
May 22, 2015	Frank Phillip Smith, Wendy Verecchia
May 26, 2015	Joseph Donat, Michel Seguin
May 27, 2015	Joseph Donat, Michel Seguin John Steeves
May 29, 2015	John Roy Steeves, Stephen Boos
June 1, 2015	Stephen Boos, Don Crane, Jamie Raymond Jagoe
June 2, 2015	Jamie Jagoe
June 3, 2015	Jamie Jagoe, Marc Proulx
June 4 & 5, 2015	Marc Proulx
November 16, 2015	Marc Proulx

November 17, 2015	Kim Floyd, Michael O'Reilly
November 18, 2015	Michael O'Reilly
November 19, 2015	Martien Van Doren, Rod McCann
November 20, 2015	Rod McCann, Norman Mazerolle

[657] The plaintiff states that he has suffered irremediable prejudice in the trial of this action. He takes issue with the production of all of the documents during trial; however, four items are particularly concerning.

[658] Number one on the first chart, being the file jacket and list of file contents for 2005-117, (which has been referred to as the Secret file) were provided on June 24, 2014 and July 16, 2014, four months before the trial began. The plaintiff states that he received these documents pursuant to an ATIP request that he made. They show that the file was coded as an internal investigation with restricted access. Had these documents been provided prior to examinations in 2010, the defendants could have been questioned about them.

[659] Number 11 on the first chart, being five new pages as well as un-redacted parts of Supt. Proulx's notes produced on May 25, 2015 contain a new note dated January 6, 2005 with a reference to Supt. Trueman. This note states as follows:

Tom Trueman

- when misuse of credit card -

code of conduct?

what policy?

which offence

Fact finding in order to [illegible word] the appropriate action based on the actions of Cst. M.

[660] The plaintiff states that this note refers to the Amex inquiry. Mr. Proulx testified after these notes were produced; however, as part of the examination for discovery in 2010, inquiries were made of Supt. Trueman regarding his recollection of events. An inquiry was not made on this specific point because the plaintiff was not aware of it until the notes were produced five years after examinations. An inquiry was made in 2015 after the notes were produced; however, Supt. Trueman had no recollection of a conversation with or contact from Supt. Proulx on January 6, 2006. The plaintiff states that had this note been produced prior to examinations, an inquiry of Supt. Trueman could have been made through examinations, four years after the note was made. Supt. Trueman may well have had a recollection in 2010 of Supt. Proulx's contacting him in 2006 but he had no recollection of it in 2015, nine years later. If Supt. Trueman had told Supt. Proulx that a Part IV investigation was not warranted, this evidence would have been helpful to the plaintiff.

[661] Number 12 on the first chart, being six pages of redacted notes of Supt. McCann, produced November 6, 2015, appear to show a discussion with Insp. Jagoe on November 23, 2005. A significant portion of the notes is redacted. The part that is not redacted states:

very familiar with Merrifield member situation.

- work hard
- good work ethic
- stay under the radar
- similar advice from NCO's
- media interview day after 717
- ATIP request on all correspondence Proulx, CROPS office, Jamie
- media interview (not good)

- [662] Supt. Jagoe testified that he never had a discussion with Supt. McCann regarding the possibility of Mr. Merrifield's returning to work on the investigative side of INSET. Supt. McCann's notes were disclosed after Supt. Jagoe gave evidence in June 2015. The plaintiff states that had these notes been disclosed prior to examinations, Supt. Jagoe could have been questioned on this issue. Had these notes been disclosed prior to trial, Supt. Jagoe could have been cross-examined on the point.
- [663] Number 14 on the first chart, being C/Supt. Mazerolle's notes with entries for May 13, 2005 and June 2, 2005, which refer to Insp. Jagoe, were produced on November 18, 2015. A portion of the notes state, "Jamie called to advise of the Peter Merrifield. Try to advise that he would try to accommodate him in Inset. He stated he was concerned about the review from a policy perspective and that he hoped the C.O. & CROPS knew what they were doing."
- [664] The plaintiff states that these notes were produced five months after Supt. Jagoe had already testified. His evidence was that he would not have Mr. Merrifield at INSET because he lacked judgment.
- [665] The plaintiff states that had these notes been produced prior to examinations, Supt. Jagoe could have been questioned about this conversation. Had the notes been produced prior to trial or even prior to Supt. Jagoe's testimony, he could have been cross-examined on this point.
- [666] In addition to the above, the plaintiff states that had there been proper and timely disclosure, he would have given his evidence at trial informed by an appropriate and complete universe of relevant documents, rather than having documents that included references to him and other incidents unknown to him at the time of his trial testimony being introduced into the trial through later witnesses. The plaintiff states that had there been proper and timely disclosure, both parties would have had informed settlement negotiations based on a fully informed understanding of the case. This would have included an assessment of the problems associated with Supt. Proulx's decision to order a Part IV investigation against the plaintiff in January 2006, which would have been informed by the timely recollections of Supt. Trueman. Further, the parties would have been able to make a fully informed assessment of the risks associated with the existence of a formal investigative file, 2005-1117, notice of which was not given to the plaintiff at the time. The parties also would have been able to make a fully informed assessment of the implications of the reference to the June 2, 2005 communication between Insp. Jagoe, C.O. Seguin and C/Supt. Mazerolle.
- [667] The plaintiff argues that Iannarella sets out the court's expectations concerning disclosure and the critical role of discovery. It avoids trial by ambush, encourages early settlement and enhances trial efficiency.
- [668] The plaintiff states that the prejudice arising from the late disclosure cannot be overcome by an adjournment or costs. Given that the evidence in the trial proceeded intermittently from November 17, 2014 until December 4, 2015, multiple adjournments to investigate, prepare or respond to new documents that were produced in November 2014, May 2015 and November 2015 would not have been feasible. The trial was already lengthy. The plaintiff is an individual bringing an action against well-resourced defendants. No order that could be made now to put the plaintiff back in a position that would approximate how this litigation and trial should have proceeded if the defendants had complied with their disclosure obligations. As a result, the only appropriate remedy is to strike the defendants' pleading.

The Defendants' Position

- [669] Regarding the Secret file 2005 - 1117, the defendants state that the file was the subject of a Privacy Act R.S.C. 1985 c. P-21 request made by the plaintiff in 2005. As a result, many of the documents contained in the file were disclosed to the plaintiff in the defendants' initial production of documents in 2010. File 2005 – 1117 is referred to in several other documents in the productions of both parties including Supt. Proulx's email to Supt. Trueman dated July 27, 2005. At discoveries, the plaintiff questioned Supt. Proulx about his memo to Supt. Trueman. Four years later, the plaintiff requested production of file 2005 – 1117. The defendants replied that all of the documents in that file had already been disclosed except for three. Two of them were national security policy documents that could not be disclosed. The third one was an excerpt from the RCMP career management manual relating to the position of Investigator for National Security investigations. The defendants state that a description of this position as well as a copy of the file cover, were provided to the plaintiff four months in advance of trial.
- [670] The defendants state that during the trial, their counsel learned that there was an internal folder/wallet with sixteen additional documents. The defendants had produced ten of them in 2010. Three of them, although not disclosed by the defendants, were listed in the plaintiff's affidavit of documents. The remaining three documents were provided on November 30, 2014, two weeks after the trial began.
- [671] The wallet is listed on a transmittal acknowledgement dated January 17, 2006, attached to Exhibit Q of the affidavit of Diane Dyke, sworn March 7, 2016 and filed by the defendants on this motion.

Analysis

- [672] The case law provided by the parties is helpful only with respect to statements of legal principles. None of the cases concerned a situation where the defendant failed to make timely production of documents that might have been helpful to the plaintiff's case.
- [673] The reason why the plaintiff's counsel requested production of file 2005 – 1117 is because the plaintiff received the file jacket in 2014 pursuant to an ATIP request. The defendants have no basis for saying that because the file was referred to in documents that the plaintiff had in 2010, the plaintiff should have made a specific inquiry for the file jacket and the contents and this somehow lessens the seriousness of the defendants' failure to produce the documents. These documents were relevant to the action.
- [674] Regarding the defendants' obligation to produce documents, the onus is not on the plaintiff to analyse the defendants' productions, look for references to other documents which may not have been produced and then request that they be produced. A plaintiff has no knowledge of the undisclosed documents in a defendant's possession. The defendants should have disclosed all of the documents from the folder/wallet in a timely fashion, not after the trial began.

- [675] Regarding the additional notes of various officers in items three, five, six, seven, ten, eleven, thirteen and fourteen on the first chart, the explanations provided for their late production were dubious. Some of them were produced late because they were misfiled. Some of them were in boxes and envelopes with other unrelated documents at the officers' homes. These officers happened to be looking in those boxes and envelopes during trial and found the notes.
- [676] Police officers take notes on a daily basis. These notes are sometimes used to refresh their memories when they are testifying. Through their training, police officers have a heightened appreciation of the importance of accurate note taking and retention. The authors of most of these notes were Commissioned Officers. The fact that these notes could not be located earlier shows a surprising failure on the part of these officers and/or the RCMP to ensure that the notes were properly filed and retained, and to conduct a thorough search for relevant documents. The court does not condone these failings.
- [677] The plaintiff conducted a mid-trial examination for discovery of Mr. Proulx and Mr. Smith on May 28, 2015. Regarding the late disclosed notes of Supt. McCann and C/Supt. Mazerolle, the plaintiff was put in a difficult position. They were disclosed after the mid-trial examination. The plaintiff could have requested that Supt. Jagoe be recalled for cross-examination on the references to him in these notes; however, a party takes a significant risk in cross-examining on a point when the witness' answer is uncertain. Another mid-trial examination would have been required. The defendants suggest that the solution to any prejudice caused by the late production of notes was to hold further examinations. This is not the way that a trial ought to proceed. A plaintiff should not have to scramble mid-trial to conduct multiple examinations. A plaintiff should not have to forego trial days in order to fit in examinations.
- [678] The reference in Supt. McCann's notes to a conversation with Insp. Jagoe, which Insp. Jagoe said did not occur, calls into question Insp. Jagoe's credibility. While the late disclosure of these notes was proved inconvenient to the plaintiff and this court, I find that the information contained in them is not of sufficient importance that their late production resulted in irremediable prejudice to the plaintiff's right to a fair trial.
- [679] The late production of Supt. Proulx's note dated January 6, 2006, which refers to Supt. Trueman, is a larger issue. Supt. Proulx consulted with Supt. Trueman regarding his concerns that Mr. Merrifield had a conflict of interest and should not continue to work in TAG. The note dated January 6, 2006 appears to show that he consulted Supt. Trueman again before he ordered the Part IV investigation. The only evidence of that contact is Supt. Proulx's note. We will never have Supt. Trueman's evidence regarding that conversation and any recommendations that he made because, due to the late production of the note, Supt. Trueman was unable to recall the event, 10 years after it occurred. Had the note been produced and included in the defendants' productions in 2010, it is reasonable to assume that four years after the event, Supt. Trueman might have been able to recall the conversation. If Supt. Trueman had not concurred with Supt. Proulx's plan to order a Part IV investigation, this evidence would have been quite helpful to the plaintiff; however, Supt. Trueman's advice might have been that investigation was warranted, which would have been helpful to the defendants. We can only speculate.
- [680] It is difficult to conclude that the unavailability of this evidence resulted in irremediable prejudice to the plaintiff's right to a fair trial. The evidence showed that the allegations that formed the basis for the Part IV investigation were unsubstantiated. No wrongdoing was discovered regarding Mr. Merrifield's use of his Amex card. In the plaintiff's best case, if Supt. Trueman's advice to Supt. Proulx was that investigation was not warranted, this would have been one more fact to consider on this issue in assessing Supt. Proulx's actions.

[681] The defendants' failure to locate and produce earlier the documents that were produced during the trial falls below what is expected of a party to an action, especially considering that the defendants employed a file manager, Frank Smith, whose job was to look for relevant documents and provide them to counsel for production. Despite this, I cannot conclude that the seriousness of the failure to produce these documents in a timely fashion detracted significantly from informed settlement negotiations, meaningfully impaired the plaintiff's proper trial preparation or prejudiced a full adjudication of the merits of the action.

Conclusion

[682] The plaintiff notes that striking a statement of defence is a remedy reserved for rare cases where material prejudice is established. Based on the record before me, I conclude that this is not one of those rare cases. The plaintiff has not established material prejudice sufficient to warrant an order striking the statement of defence.

[683] The parties may make submissions regarding the costs of this motion in their trial costs submissions.

Mr. Merrifield's Credibility and the Reliability of his Evidence

[684] The defendants state that Mr. Merrifield is not a credible or reliable witness. His evidence should be approached with caution and given a reduced weight, particularly where there are conflicts with basic facts and/or the testimony of other witnesses.

[685] They say that one of the central issues in this case, which is relevant to both Mr. Merrifield's credibility and to his claims that he was not required to be on LWOP when he "ran for political office in May 2005" (the Barrie nomination meeting on Saturday, May 14, 2005) is whether Mr. Merrifield actually intended not to win the nomination when he stood as candidate. His evidence was that he did not want to win and ran only to have an opportunity to speak to members of the local riding association about his concerns regarding another candidate.

[686] The defendants state that this is inconsistent with the steps of an active campaign that he took or others took on his behalf to ensure that he would win the nomination. For example, he retained a campaign manager, obtained a list of local party members, made audio recorded telephone calls, created a website, campaign cards and pamphlets for distribution, none of which stated that he was not interested in winning the nomination. At the event, he directed party members to place his name first on the preferential ballot. Cpl. Frith testified that he voted for Mr. Merrifield so that he would be the party's candidate.

[687] The defendants state that Mr. Merrifield ran at the nomination event with the intention of being elected to be the party's candidate. His subsequent statements that he did not intend to win the nomination are disingenuous. This shows that Mr. Merrifield's evidence is unreliable. It also undermines Mr. Merrifield's testimony that he believed that he did not require LWOP for the nomination meeting because he did not intend to win.

[688] I do not accept the defendants' position on this issue. Mr. Merrifield testified that he sold no Conservative Party memberships in contrast to the other two candidates. He testified that selling memberships was critical to success at a nomination meeting. During the time leading up to the nomination meeting, Mr. Merrifield was away, organizing and participating in operation Bridgeout. He was not soliciting votes. He explained that any votes that he obtained would result in support for Mr. Broley, Mr. Merrifield candidate of choice, once Mr. Merrifield was eliminated. They would not go to Mr. Brown who was the subject of Mr. Merrifield's concerns. Furthermore, Mr. Merrifield stated that he was offered an opportunity to run in the Richmond Hill riding in 2005 and could have run in the federal election for that riding if he wished. If he had wanted to be elected, this would have been an easier path than opposing Mr. Brown, in the Barrie nomination meeting, who had sold a lot of memberships.

[689] The defendants state that Mr. Merrifield gave inconsistent evidence at trial in contrast to examinations for discovery. At examinations, he stated that he put his name forth as a candidate in just two ridings prior to the 2004 federal election, being York-Simcoe and Richmond Hill. On cross-examination, he conceded that he put his name forth in five ridings including Mississauga-Brampton South. He attended that nomination meeting and gave a speech. Despite this, Mr. Merrifield still denies that he ran for this nomination.

[690] The various nomination meetings which Mr. Merrifield attended prior to the Barrie nomination meeting in May 14, 2005, are relatively insignificant details, given the lengthy factual matrix of events between 2005 and 2016. It is incorrect to say that “Mr. Merrifield still denies that he ran for this [Brampton-Mississauga South] nomination. In cross-examination, he was asked:

Q: “so in fact the next writing for which you presented yourself as a candidate for nomination was not Richmond Hill, Ontario. It was this Mississauga Brampton riding.”

A: “Correct.”

[691] The defendants state that Mr. Merrifield testified on discovery that he was ineligible to participate in the 2006 promotional process due to the codes of conduct and administrative reviews that had been called against him. He also stated that as a result, he did not submit a written expression of intention to write the February 2006 RCMP promotional exam. At trial, he stated that he did register to write the 2006 promotional exam but has no recollection of it, despite the fact that this alleged ineligibility to write this exam is the central part of his claim for loss of promotional opportunity.

[692] Mr. Merrifield’s evidence is inconsistent with his evidence at examinations on this point; however, a significant part of his testimony regarding this issue is the fact that he was off-duty sick on the examination date, which he stated in his testimony. He believed that he was not eligible to write the exam and participate in the promotional process in 2006 for a number of reasons including the Part IV investigation and the administrative review. Mr. Merrifield may be mistaken in believing that he was not eligible, however; I accept his testimony that he was ill at the time and was unable to write the exam. He was off-duty sick. This was medically supported.

[693] Neither of the two examples offered by the defendants regarding Mr. Merrifield’s inconsistent testimony cause me any concern with respect to Mr. Merrifield’s credibility. His performance review for the period September 9, 2010 to March 31, 2011 stated that Mr. Merrifield had worked with a Crown prosecutor during a trial and that the prosecutor had commented on Mr. Merrifield’s “encyclopedic knowledge of the evidence”. I find that this comment is equally applicable to Mr. Merrifield’s evidence at trial. He testified for three weeks, which included two weeks of cross-examination. He had a remarkable recall of events that happened between 2004 and 2016, the dates of documents and their contents. He testified in an earnest manner. He was quick to point out where he had made errors in the past and stated that he “owned them.” I find that Mr. Merrifield was a credible witness.

Failure to Call a Material Witness

[694] The defendants state that Mr. Merrifield refused to call a material witness to corroborate his testimony that he did not intend to win the Barrie nomination event. He stated that he told only one person within the local riding association, Lois Brown, that he did not intend to win. The defendants' state that this court should draw an adverse inference that Ms. Brown would be unsupportive of Mr. Merrifield's case because he did not call her as a witness.

[695] As noted above, the issue of whether Mr. Merrifield intended to win the nomination meeting or whether he was simply there to address the party members is not a significant issue. The fact that he did not have LWOP when he attended the Barrie nomination event and whether he reasonably believed that he did not require LWOP is the main issue.

Failure to Call Medical Evidence

[696] The defendants state that Mr. Merrifield testified that he received treatment from various medical professionals; however, he declined to call any of his treating physicians to corroborate his claims that he either suffered from the alleged psychiatric and/or physical harms or to testify that the harms are medically and causally linked to the alleged instances of harassment that comprise his claim.

[697] The test for harassment, as set out below, requires the plaintiff to prove that he suffered severe or emotional distress. A plaintiff is not required to provide medical evidence. Mr. Merrifield was off work for significant periods of time in which he suffered from depression among other things. His "off-duty status" was supported by his family physician. The RCMP health services never challenged this.

Unreasonable Perceptions of Harassment

[698] The defendants state that Mr. Merrifield has made sweeping allegations of harassment involving nearly every officer within his chain of command. He even attributes his alleged harassment to people that he never met including Insp. Van Doran. He has unreasonable perceptions of harassment where none exists.

[699] While Mr. Merrifield's emails to various people in positions of authority do state that a number of people have harassed him, in this action, the RCMP, Insp. Jagoe and Supt. Proulx are defendants. One of the tasks of this court is to determine whether Insp. Jagoe and Supt. Proulx harassed plaintiff. The other officers are not defendants in this action.

In Ontario, is harassment recognized as a tort upon which a civil cause of action may be based?

The Plaintiff's Position

[700] The plaintiff and the defendant disagree regarding whether the tort of harassment has been recognized as a cause of action. The plaintiff submits that the tort of harassment does exist and is recognized as a cause of action. The plaintiff relies on several cases to support his position.

[701] Mainland Sawmills Ltd. v. IWA-Canada, Local 1-3567 Society, 2006 BCSC 1195, 41 C.C.L.T. (3d) 52, concerned a trespass to property. A number of union members came to the plaintiff's property and forcibly shut down the sawmill operations. Property damage resulted and some employees were assaulted. The plaintiffs made a claim for harassment. The court began its analysis by assuming that the tort of harassment does exist or should exist in Canada. It stated at para. 17 that the elements of the tort of harassment are:

- (a) Outrageous conduct by the defendant;

- (b) Intention on the part of the defendant to cause emotional distress or the defendant's reckless disregard for causing emotional distress;
- (c) The plaintiff's suffering severe or extreme emotional distress; and,
- (d) The defendant's outrageous conduct to be the actual and proximate cause of the emotional distress.

- [702] Regarding the claim, the court found that the plaintiffs had not proved the third element of the tort.
- [703] Savino v. Shelestowsky, 2013 ONSC 4394, 4 C.C.L.T. (4th) 94, involved neighbours who had been feuding for years. The plaintiffs brought a claim for damages for harassment and malicious prosecution. The defendants brought a motion to strike the claim. The court noted at para. 15 that the debate as to whether the tort of harassment existed as a civil cause of action and stated, "While it is not largely accepted, the door does not appear to be entirely closed on the possibility of this tort's existence." The court refused to strike the claim.
- [704] McHale v. Ontario, 2014 ONSC 5179, concerned a counter-protest of residents against a native protest in Caledonia. The plaintiff brought a motion to amend his claim. The defendant brought a motion to strike portions of the claim. The plaintiff attended court as a Crown witness in criminal proceedings. In his civil claim, he alleged that members of the native community had harassed him and his wife both before and after the appearance. He alleged that the police took no steps to prevent this. In para 44, the court adopted the elements that must be established in an action for harassment as set out in Mainland Sawmills. Ultimately, the court struck the plaintiff's claim for harassment because the plaintiff had not "set out with sufficient particularity the elements of the tort." (para 49)
- [705] McIntomney v. Evangelista Estate 2015 ONSC 1419 is a trial decision. The case involved a woman who did bookkeeping and prepared taxes. She assisted her 80 year old neighbour with his tax returns. She alleged that the neighbour had sexually assaulted her when she went to his house to assist him. He then came to her house, banged on doors and looked in windows. At para. 35, the court set out the elements of harassment, as listed in Mainland Sawmills, and described harassment as a "still-developing tort". It found that the neighbour's subsequent actions constituted harassment and awarded the plaintiff damages for harassment.

The Defendants' Position

- [706] The defendants state that there is no free-standing tort of harassment. They rely on Desjardins v. Society of Obstetricians and Gynecologists of Canada et al. 2012 ONSC 7294; in which the court stated at para. 47:

[The plaintiff pleaded that] Lalonde engaged in sexual harassment in the workplace contrary to the Ontario Human Rights Code. Section 46.1(2) states that the Code "does not permit a person to commence an action based solely on an infringement of a right under Part 1." ...there is no freestanding tort of harassment. Even accepting that the conduct alleged in the Statement of Claim is true, that does not give rise to a claim against Lalonde based in harassment.

- [707] The defendants state that this court should decline to recognize a new tort of civil harassment. The proposed elements of this putative tort conflict with clear and established authority on the scope of compensable tort damages. In particular, because the third element of the putative tort of harassment requires only proof of emotional distress, such a tort would permit recovery for emotional upset, including that which is neither objectively visible nor provable. There is thus a clear and material distinction between the putative tort of harassment and intentional infliction of mental suffering with regard to the degree and subjectivity of compensable injury.

- [708] The expansion of compensable injury into the realm of subjectively assessed emotional upset runs contrary to authority. In Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27 at para 9, the Supreme Court of Canada held that, “[t]he law does not recognize upset, disgust, anxiety or agitation or other mental states that fall short of injury.” In Healey v. Lakeridge Health Corp., 2011 ONCA 55 at para 65, the Ontario Court of Appeal ruled that because of the multifactorial and highly subjective nature of emotional distress, “[t]he law quite properly insists upon an objective threshold to screen such claims and to refuse compensation unless the injury is serious and prolonged.”
- [709] Because the putative tort of harassment does not insist upon an objective threshold for limiting compensable injury, its existence is at odds with this clear line of authority. Moreover, pinning tort compensation to a subjective experience of injury that is not objectively verifiable create serious evidentiary issues that could expose defendants to unforeseen liability. The better view is to link tort liability to objective determinations of injury including that which is verified by the testimony of medical professionals.
- [710] The defendants acknowledge that in John v. Cusak, 2015 ONSC 5004 at para 38, the court characterized the existence of the tort as a “live legal issue”.

Analysis

- [711] In Desjardins, the plaintiff pleaded four different torts, being intentionally interfering with contractual relations, inducing breach of contract, engaging in sexual harassment in the workplace and deceit. The court considered the motion to strike the claim based on the defendant’s position that it disclosed no reasonable cause of action. Regarding the claims for deceit, intentionally interfering with contractual relations and inducing breach of contract, the court found, among other things, that the statement of claim was not sufficiently pleaded to address the required elements of each tort. This left the tort of sexual harassment to be considered on its own.
- [712] The plaintiff’s pleading regarding sexual harassment appears to have been based specifically on a contravention of the Ontario Human Rights Code, R.S.O. c. H.19. Part 1 deals with harassment in employment. The court noted that s. 46.1(2) of the Code did not permit the plaintiff to bring an action based solely on an infringement of Part 1. Because of its rulings on the other three torts, it held that the plaintiff could not assert a claim of sexual harassment.
- [713] This case can be distinguished from the case at hand because Mr. Merrifield does not allege a violation of the Human Rights Code. He does not claim that he was harassed in employment on any of the grounds set out in s.5(2) of the Code (race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences, marital status, family status or disability). Accordingly, Desjardins does not assist the defendants.
- [714] In Mustapha, the plaintiff brought an action for psychiatric injury sustained when he saw dead flies in a Culligan bottle of water. The court stated in para 1 that, “he became obsessed with this and the implications for the health of his family which had been consuming water supplied by Culligan for the previous 15 years. The plaintiff developed a major depressive disorder with associated phobia and anxiety.” The court went on to say in para 9 that for an injury to be compensable, “it must be serious and prolonged and rise above the ordinary annoyances, anxieties and fears that people living in society routinely if sometimes reluctantly accept.” The court further stated in para 10 that, “On the findings of the trial judge, supported by medical evidence, Mr. Mustapha developed a major depressive disorder associated with phobia and anxiety. This psychiatric illness was debilitating and had a significant impact on his life; it qualifies as a personal injury at law. It follows that Mr. Mustapha has established that he sustained damage.”

- [715] Mustapha may be distinguished from the present case. The court dismissed Mr. Mustapha’s appeal because he had not shown that it was foreseeable that a person of ordinary fortitude would suffer serious injury from seeing flies in the bottle of water that he was about to install. Medical experts described his reactions as “highly unusual” and “very individual”. The corollary of this is that if a plaintiff suffers from a serious and prolonged injury which rises above the ordinary annoyances, anxieties and fears that people living in society routinely if sometimes reluctantly accept, it may qualify as a personal injury at law for which compensation might be awarded. The question of whether medical evidence is required to support Mr. Merrifield’s claim will be discussed below.
- [716] The four cases relied upon by the plaintiff show that the tort of harassment was considered as early as 2006 (Mainland Sawmills) in which the British Columbia Superior Court defined the elements of the tort. Subsequently, in 2013 (Savino), the Ontario Superior Court of Justice allowed for the possibility that the tort did exist. In both 2014 (McHale) and 2015 (McIntomney) the Ontario Superior Court of Justice adopted the elements of harassment as set out in Sawmills. In McIntomney, the plaintiff was awarded damages for harassment.
- [717] Mustapha (2008) and Healey (2011), relied upon by the defendants, were decided after Sawmills (2006) and before Savino (2013). The law has evolved since 2011 as shown in McHale (2014), McIntomney (2015) and John v. Cusack (2015).
- [718] Based on the jurisprudence before me, I am satisfied that the tort of harassment does exist, that it has been recognized as a cause of action in Ontario and that its elements are those set out in McHale and McIntomney.

Test for Harassment

- [719] The test for harassment is set out in McHale and McIntomney above. In this case, there are four questions to be answered.
- (a) Was the conduct of the defendants toward Mr. Merrifield outrageous?
 - (b) Did the defendants intend to cause emotional stress or did they have a reckless disregard for causing Mr. Merrifield to suffer from emotional stress?
 - (c) Did Mr. Merrifield suffer from severe or extreme emotional distress?
 - (d) Was the outrageous conduct of the defendants the actual and proximate cause of the emotional distress?

What constitutes outrageous behaviour in the context of harassment?

- [720] The Canadian Oxford Dictionary defines outrageous as follows: 1. Deeply shocking and unacceptable; 2. grossly cruel; 3. immoral, offensive; and 4. highly unusual or unconventional.^[vii]

- [721] Of the four harassment cases set out above, McIntomney is the only trial decision. The court held that the defendant's conduct constituted sexual battery and found that the plaintiff had proved all the elements of the tort, including outrageous behaviour. The plaintiff was awarded damages.
- [722] The tort of intentional infliction of mental suffering has some overlap with the tort of harassment. It requires that a plaintiff prove that the defendant's conduct was outrageous and also flagrant. In Boucher v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp., 2014 ONCA 419, 120 O.R. (3d) 431, para 50, the court found that the plaintiff's supervisor, "... belittled, humiliated and demeaned [Boucher] the plaintiff continuously and unrelentingly, often in front of co-workers, for nearly six months." This constituted flagrant and outrageous conduct.
- [723] The defendants state that the plaintiff has to meet a high threshold to prove outrageous conduct. An objective assessment is required. The term outrageous indicates that the conduct must be grossly offensive.
- [724] In Prinzo v. Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care, (2002), 2002 CanLII 45005 (ON CA), 60 O.R. (3d) 474 (C.A.), Ms. Prinzo worked for the defendant for 17 years and was the manager of the beauty shop. Her management duties occupied approximately 40 percent of her time. The other 60 percent involved hairstyling. Ms. Prinzo was a model employee until a new person, Gates, became her immediate supervisor. In the next year, Ms. Prinzo fell and hurt herself in Baycrest's parking lot. She suffered musculoskeletal injuries and was unable to use her right arm. She was off work and receiving physiotherapy treatment. Her treating physician stated that she was medically unfit for any form of work. Subsequently, Frost, an occupational nurse began calling Ms. Prinzo and asking about her return to work. Gates also called her. The trial judge found that the calls were harassing and suggested that she was malingering. Frost told the treating physician that it was necessary for Ms. Prinzo to return to work so that she could be let go.
- [725] Ms. Prinzo received a letter from Gates which implied that Ms. Prinzo's own physician had agreed that she could return to work. This was false. Ms. Prinzo confirmed that her treating physician had indicated that she was totally disabled. Although Ms. Prinzo's counsel had written a letter to Baycrest requesting that all communication be directed to him, the calls to her continued. Ms. Prinzo later agreed to return to work; however, she was requested to and did attend a meeting in which Baycrest stated that it wanted to talk about her termination. She stated that she was not in a condition to do so. Baycrest said it was concerned that her conduct not cause harm to the residents. The statement was very hurtful and upsetting to her. She subsequently received a letter from Baycrest setting out her last day of employment.
- [726] The trial judge held that the "acts of harassment by the employees of the defendant [Baycrest] were so extreme and insensitive that they constituted a reckless and wanton disregard for the health of the plaintiff". The court commented in para. 60 that the conduct. "may fairly be described as flagrant and outrageous, meeting the first element of the tort."
- [727] These cases inform my interpretation of outrageous conduct.

What constitutes causing emotional stress or having a reckless disregard for causing a plaintiff to suffer from emotional stress?

- [728] In Prinzo, the court stated at para. 61 that, "for the conduct to be calculated to produce harm either the actor must desire to produce the consequences that follow, or the consequences must be known by the actor to be substantially certain to follow.” The court stated that Baycrest employees “were well aware of the physical and emotional health of the plaintiff and would realize the detrimental effect their harassment would have had on the plaintiff and yet they persisted [in] such harassment with almost sadistic resolve.”

- [729] The plaintiff relies on Piresferreira v. Ayotte, (2008), 2008 CanLII 67418 (ON SC), 72 C.C.E.L. (3d) 23. Ms. Piresferreira’s supervisor assaulted her. Then, he issued a performance improvement plan (PIP) for the plaintiff. She reported him to the human resources department after which he received a minor disciplinary reproach. The supervisor and the employer immediately attempted to impose the performance improvement plan on the plaintiff which included an onerous schedule of frequent meetings with the supervisor. The plaintiff went on sick leave and then long-term disability due to the depression and anxiety that she subsequently experienced. She did not return to work. The court found in para. 170 that, “Ayotte’s threat of placing Piresferreira on probation or on a PIP immediately after he had assaulted her and then delivering the plan to her the first time she returned to the office – without first having assumed responsibility for his abusive behaviour – was flagrant and outrageous.” The court went on to state that, “conduct will be considered “calculated to produce harm” where the actor desires to produce the consequences that follow from the act or the consequences are known to be substantially certain to follow. It is also been held to include conduct amounting to reckless disregard as to whether or not shock would ensue as a result of the conduct.” The court further stated:

I am satisfied that Ayotte showed reckless disregard for Piresferreira’s emotional well-being when he yelled and swore at her, assaulted her, immediately threatened probation or a PIP, refused to apologize for his conduct, delivered the PIP to her at the first opportunity misled Sylvestre and Shiu [his superiors] as to his conduct on May 12 and attempted to bias them against Piresferreira in advance of her filing a complaint against him. I am satisfied that, in this sense, Ayotte’s conduct was “calculated to produce harm” even though he did not actually intend for her to suffer the injury that she did.

- [730] The court stated in para. 177 that, “it was reasonably foreseeable to Ayotte that every aspect of this behaviour was likely to cause Piresferreira anxiety, stress and emotional upset.

- [731] The plaintiff did not alert me to the fact that Piresferreira was overturned in 2010^[viii]; however, I will briefly discuss points that I consider important to my analysis of the issues at hand. The Court of Appeal set aside the trial judge’s ruling that the tort of intentional infliction of mental suffering was established because she erroneously concluded that the impact of Ayotte’s behaviour on Ms. Piresferreira was reasonably foreseeable. The court describes recklessness at stated at para. 75 as “proceeding in the face of subjective awareness that harm of the kind that resulted was substantially certain to follow...[the] consequences must be known by the actor to be substantially certain to follow”. At para. 79, the court stated, “foreseeability, which indicates only that a result may follow, is much less than knowledge that a result is substantially certain to follow”. These definitions affirm that intention does not necessarily stem from or follow foreseeability. Further, the court relied on Kedia International Inc. v. Royal Bank of Canada, 2008 BCSC 122 at para. 196 to reiterate the high threshold for constructive intention.

What constitutes severe or extreme emotional distress?

[732] In Sawmills, the court stated that although the tort of harassment does not require proof of a visible and provable illness, it does require proof of “severe or extreme emotional distress”. The court quoted from Graves, “[s]evere emotional distress means...emotional distress of such substantial quantity or enduring quality that no reasonable person in a civilized society should be expected to endure it”. At para. 20, the court stated:

The requirement of extreme or severe emotional distress is in keeping with the objective of this tort. That is, it is intended to provide a remedy to a plaintiff who is intentionally subjected to outrageous conduct by a defendant. Presumably that a plaintiff prove that he/she has suffered severe or extreme emotional distress as a result of the conduct of a defendant (albeit not to the extent of physical harm or psychiatric illness) is required because it demonstrates a defendant’s conduct as being sufficiently outrageous as to found a cause of action.

[733] In McIntomney, the plaintiff experienced anxiety, suffered from nightmares, and had trouble sleeping. She became nauseous when she saw the defendant in the neighbourhood. She had previously coached a team but had to stop doing that. After the defendant sexually assaulted her, she was unable to work. She did not sleep well and therefore could not concentrate on her work.

[734] In Prinzo, the plaintiff suffered from stress and anxiety, increased blood pressure, significant weight gain and increased diabetic symptoms.

[735] In Piresferreira, the plaintiff suffered from posttraumatic stress disorder and a major depressive order with symptoms of anxiety.

Do the defendants’ actions toward the plaintiff constitute harassment?

Leave Without Pay.

[736] Mr. Merrifield ran in a federal election for political office in the Richmond Hill riding. He was the first RCMP officer to do this. Even though the RCMP Regulations provide that a member must obtain LWOP for this purpose, there was significant confusion among various officers regarding the process and the correct type of LWOP to be applied.

[737] Three of Mr. Merrifield’s superiors made errors when they gave him advice and or completed the related forms. Sgt. Verecchia determined that Mr. Merrifield required regular LWOP. This was incorrect because regular LWOP did not exist. It was not one of the six categories. Cpl. DuPuy signed the transfer forms in place of Insp. Josey. This was incorrect because LWOP had to be approved by the C.O.

[738] Sgt. Boos was responsible for administering LWOP. He had the best knowledge of it. He interviewed Mr. Merrifield and recommended personal needs LWOP, even though a member could take only two personal needs LWOPs in his career. Mr. Merrifield required LWOP for three different events. Sgt Boos tried to fit three events into two personal needs LWOPS. He decided to include the nomination meetings for York-Simcoe and Richmond Hill as one LWOP period, even though the dates were not continuous. He decided that the Richmond Hill election would be the second LWOP period. The transfer forms were submitted requesting two personal needs LWOPs for the three dates and were approved by the C.O.

[739] Subsequently, Sgt. Boos learned that his approach was not accepted by the compensation department because there were three different event dates but the system allowed for only two. After Mr. Merrifield had finished his political activities in 2004, the personal needs LWOPs were re-coded to special LWOPs which were not limited in number.

- [740] Sgt. Boos stated that he told Mr. Merrifield about the re-coding and the fact that his two personal needs LWOPs were still available to him. Mr. Merrifield stated that Sgt. Boos told him that LWOP was being used for only the election and not the nomination meetings. There was obviously confusion and a misunderstanding. Three of Mr. Merrifield's superiors reached incorrect conclusions about the process. Mr. Merrifield did not receive the document that set out the specifics of the re-coding when it occurred. His understanding was based on a conversation. Given the general level of misunderstanding about the matter among his superiors, it is not surprising that Mr. Merrifield also reached an incorrect conclusion after he received information from Sgt. Boos.
- [741] Mr. Merrifield was unsuccessful in the federal election and subsequently returned to work as an Air Marshall. Nobody was concerned about his campaign materials, public perception about an RCMP officer's running in an election or that his activities affected his ability to do his job.
- [742] Mr. Merrifield was transferred to INSET in October, 2004. This was a realization of his goal to work in National Security. Four months later, in February 2005, he was permanently posted to TAG. He had top secret security clearance. He travelled with Liberal Prime Minister Paul Martin's protective detail when he made visits to various places. Nobody was concerned about the fact that Mr. Merrifield had run in a federal election in the previous year as a Conservative candidate. Nobody raised any issue that if something went wrong, there might be a perceived conflict of interest because a former Conservative candidate was providing protection to a Liberal Prime Minister.
- [743] Sgt. Verecchia stated that this would not be a concern because Mr. Merrifield's LWOP status separated him from the RCMP. Accordingly, there would be no real or perceived conflict of interest. Mr. Merrifield investigated death threats against the Prime Minister and U.S. President George W. Bush which resulted in a conviction. He carried out international internet tracing to locate a person who had penetrated the Oval Office internet. This also resulted in a conviction. He demonstrated that his political views did not influence his work. He was bound by his oath that he would, "faithfully, diligently and impartially execute and perform the duties required of [him]".

The Barrie Nomination Meeting

- [744] A/Sgt. Crane said he had an excellent working relationship with Mr. Merrifield. In fact, three months after Mr. Merrifield had been transferred to TAG, A/Sgt. Crane asked him to mentor another member.
- [745] During the dinner at the end of Operation Bridgeout, A/Sgt. Crane asked Mr. Merrifield if he had any ambition to run in another federal election. He was curious. According to A/Sgt. Crane, Mr. Merrifield said, "none whatsoever. It was too expensive."
- [746] Mr. Merrifield participated in the Barrie nomination meeting. A nomination meeting is a private event, open only to members of the related political party. Prior to the meeting, Mr. Merrifield did send out some of the campaign flyers similar to those from his federal election campaign with necessary revisions; however, they were sent only to party members who could vote at the meeting. There was no wide-spread public knowledge of Mr. Merrifield's participation at the meeting.
- [747] Mr. Merrifield stated that winning the nomination would have been a mathematical impossibility. He had not sold many memberships and therefore did not have the required support. He participated only as a form of protest against the incumbent. He did not obtain LWOP for the nomination meeting because he thought he did not need it based on his conversation with Sgt. Boos and his understanding of how the earlier LWOPs were re-categorized.

- [748] On Friday May 13, 2005, A/Sgt. Crane knew about the nomination meeting to be held the next day and the fact that Mr. Merrifield would be participating. Mr. Merrifield was off work on Friday. A/Sgt. Crane made no effort to contact Mr. Merrifield to express any concerns. He knew that Mr. Merrifield had not applied for LWOP. He had Mr. Merrifield's home phone number.
- [749] When Mr. Merrifield returned to work the following Monday, A/Sgt. Crane and Insp. Jagoe were highly offended. They thought Mr. Merrifield had lied to them. They had an emotional reaction to the situation. A logical explanation of the difference between a nomination meeting and an election fell on deaf ears. Surely, these two higher ranking officers who had management responsibilities were capable of understanding the difference. I find that they chose not to understand it. They adopted a rigid view. In their minds, Mr. Merrifield was dishonest and was not to be trusted. Insp. Jagoe believed that Mr. Merrifield could not continue to work in national security for that reason.
- [750] Mr. Merrifield was taken off the Stronach death threat investigation. Since Ms. Stronach had crossed the floor to become a Liberal, they determined that Mr. Merrifield, a Conservative, should not carry out the investigation. There was a conflict of interest. What if he missed something and there was a negative result? Their view was that it would reflect badly on the RCMP. Mr. Merrifield was also removed from other VIP assignments such as a Royal Family visit. This made no sense whatsoever.
- [751] The stated concern about a perceived conflict was completely at odds with the fact that there was no concern about it after Mr. Merrifield ran in various nomination meetings and had not obtained LWOP for some of them. Granted, he was not doing the type of national security work then as he was doing in TAG. He was an Air Marshall but the nature of his work involved investigating and diffusing potential acts of terrorism. This was covert work done to protect national security.
- [752] Insp. Jagoe took his concerns to Supt. Proulx, who by his own admission, did not follow politics and did not know the difference between a nomination meeting and an election. To him it was all the same thing. In the meeting on May 27, 2005, he was not receptive to Mr. Merrifield's explanation. I find that Supt. Proulx aggressively challenged Mr. Merrifield on his political platform and his campaign materials, which was completely inappropriate. Mr. Merrifield's political views were irrelevant. Mr. Seguin testified that the only question he should have asked was whether Mr. Merrifield obtained LWOP for the Barrie nomination meeting and if not, why not. I accept the evidence of Sgt. Nicota regarding Supt. Proulx's conduct at the May 27, 2005 meeting. Mr. Smith, who was a Staff Sergeant at the time, confirmed that there was an argumentative tone and the discussion became heated. Supt. Davis stated that Supt. Proulx was unduly harsh. A commissioned officer should have sufficient management skills to avoid having a heated, argumentative encounter with a Constable. I find that Supt. Proulx's conduct went beyond all standards of what is right and decent. It was outrageous.
- [753] Within a few weeks, in June 2005, Supt. Proulx temporarily transferred Mr. Merrifield into another unit, Criminal Investigations, while he did some investigating into the alleged conflict issue and whether he had the authority to transfer Mr. Merrifield out of TAG. This took six months. He consulted Sgt. Verecchia who believed that there could be problem with perceived conflict. He consulted the Policy Branch. It took a long time to respond and when it did, the reply was not responsive to the issue. I find that if there was a significant concern that Mr. Merrifield's attendance at the Barrie nomination meeting had compromised his ability to work in national security, the Policy Branch would have provided Supt. Proulx with direction in a timely manner.

- [754] I find that the potential for a perceived conflict of interest was remote at best; however, Insp. Jagoe and A/Sgt. Crane had decided that they would not work with Mr. Merrifield anymore. They did not want him in TAG. Insp. Jagoe did not want Mr. Merrifield in INSET. Supt. Proulx adopted a view that supported their position. The possibility of a perceived conflict was not a bona fide reason to transfer Mr. Merrifield out of TAG. It was the excuse for it.
- [755] When Mr. Merrifield was transferred out of TAG, there were vacancies on the investigative side of INSET. Mr. Merrifield's skills and knowledge would have been an asset in that area. Investigating terrorists did not involve VIPs with political affiliations. Even if a perceived conflict was a real concern, it would not have precluded Mr. Merrifield from working in this side of INSET. He had been doing community outreach and had recruited sources. He had worked a lot of voluntary overtime. He was dedicated to his job.
- [756] Supt. Jagoe agreed that Mr. Merrifield would not have been in a conflict doing this type of work. Supt. McCann stated that his notes reflected that he made an inquiry of Supt. Jagoe on November 23, 2005, two weeks after he had conducted Mr. Merrifield's staffing interview for future placement. Insp. Jagoe did not waiver in his position that he would not have Mr. Merrifield working in national security. He believed that Mr. Merrifield was untrustworthy. I find that this is the real reason why Mr. Merrifield was transferred to Customs & Excise. A/Sgt. Crane said he had "nothing to do with the transfer." This was disingenuous. While he may not have had a role in determining where Mr. Merrifield would be posted, his refusal to have Mr. Merrifield work in TAG had everything to do with the reason why Mr. Merrifield was transferred.
- [757] Even though Insp. Jagoe thought Mr. Merrifield was untrustworthy and lacked judgment, he took no steps to inform the supervisory officers of Criminal Investigations or Customs & Excise of his concerns. Both of those units carried out national security work. Insp. Jagoe's concerns were not noted on Mr. Merrifield's performance evaluations. He said that while Mr. Merrifield was unsuited to do national security work, he could have been well suited to work in another unit. I find that this is incredulous. Being trustworthy is a core requirement for an RCMP officer to do his job. The fact that Insp. Jagoe did not alert his colleagues in other units shows that his decision that Mr. Merrifield could not continue to do national security work was based on his personal view that Mr. Merrifield had lied to him rather than a genuine concern about a political conflict or Mr. Merrifield's ability to do his job.
- [758] Supt. Proulx's stated reason for transferring Mr. Merrifield was because he had a political conflict. Supt. Proulx carried out his own investigation while telling Mr. Merrifield that he was not under investigation. He delved into Mr. Merrifield's activities when he was at INSET, which was not under his command. If there were any issues with these activities, they should have been addressed at the time. Mr. Proulx testified that, initially, he thought that retroactive approval of LWOP would be satisfactory. It was not until he started his investigation into the earlier activities that he concluded that Mr. Merrifield had a conflict.
- [759] In Mr. Merrifield's performance evaluation, which included his work in TAG, both Supt. Proulx and Insp. Jagoe wrote very positive remarks. This was hypocritical, especially on the part of Insp. Jagoe who thought that Mr. Merrifield was a liar and lacked judgment.

- [760] Supt. Proulx knew that other officers would think that Mr. Merrifield was transferred out of TAG because he had done something wrong. Accordingly, Supt. Proulx met with the TAG group, which consisted of approximately ten people, to explain that Mr. Merrifield had not done anything wrong. This was woefully inadequate to address the situation. TAG was imbedded in INSET. A large number of people worked there.
- [761] Sgt. Reed stated that there were “other types” of discipline in the RCMP aside from formal discipline. A major aspect of his job as a SRR was to deal with the “other types” of discipline.
- [762] I find that Supt. Proulx’s decision to transfer Mr. Merrifield out of TAG constituted an “other type” of discipline. It was unjustified and punitive. It resulted in a permanent stain on Mr. Merrifield’s reputation and career. The stain did not fade with time. Rather, it spread. Because of the transfer, other officers took a predictably negative view of Mr. Merrifield based on incorrect assumptions. The repercussions of this transfer followed Mr. Merrifield for years to come.
- [763] I find that this unjustified and punitive transfer would not have occurred if Mr. Merrifield’s failure to obtain LWOP for the Barrie nomination meeting had been considered rationally. C.O. Seguin, who had an objective view of the situation, knew that no action was taken was against Mr. Merrifield for his failure to obtain LWOP. He stated that it was not a big deal. It was just an administrative issue.

Special Operations Center

- [764] After Mr. Merrifield was temporarily assigned to Criminal Intelligence, word got out that he was considered unsuitable to do national security work. When the SOC was stood up in response to a significant terrorist threat against Toronto, Mr. Merrifield was told, en route, to turn around and go home, even though all available personnel were required. I accept his evidence that he was the only member in the Division who was ordered not to attend.
- [765] Sgt. Sim was in charge of the investigators at the SOC. He knew that Mr. Merrifield had been stood down. He believed that this occurred because of perceived conflicts with politics. The commissioned officers’ actions showed that Mr. Merrifield was a “black sheep.” The fact that Mr. Merrifield was stood down showed that that he had been blackballed. He believed that Mr. Merrifield’s career opportunities would be limited as a result of this.
- [766] Insp. Van Doren was the incident commander at the SOC. He was aware that Mr. Merrifield had been removed from TAG. He could not recall how he learned this. He thought that probably Supt. Proulx or Insp. Jagoe had told him.
- [767] It is curious that Mr. Merrifield’s employment status would be at the forefront of Insp. Van Doren’s mind in the middle of a national emergency. Sgt. McIntyre had contacted Insp. Van Doren about relief for an overnight shift. Sgt. Penny, Mr. Merrifield’s supervisor, had recommended him. Insp. Van Doren requested someone else because he thought that since Mr. Merrifield had been removed from TAG, he was not the “appropriate resource” to have at the SOC. Insp. Van Doren believed that there was an issue as to whether Mr. Merrifield was suitable for national security work. Insp. Van Doren stated that he did not know the reason for Mr. Merrifield’s removal from TAG. I find that in order for Insp. Van Doren to have come to his conclusion, he likely assumed that Mr. Merrifield had been removed from TAG as a result of some wrong-doing. If he had made a different assumption, for example that Mr. Merrifield had been removed for an administrative reason, then he would have had no reason to conclude that Mr. Merrifield was not the appropriate resource for the SOC.

Mr. Merrifield's performance reviews noted that he had considerable knowledge and expertise regarding terrorism. The SOC was stood up to respond to a terrorist threat.

- [768] I do not accept Insp. Van Doren's explanation that "it was not fair to Mr. Merrifield or the organization" that he work at the SOC. I find that Insp. Van Doren stood down Mr. Merrifield because he believed that Mr. Merrifield had an unresolved issue that resulted in his removal from TAG. As a result, his trustworthiness was questionable. Insp. Van Doren agreed that standing down Mr. Merrifield was a significant action to take in the context of a terrorist threat.
- [769] What Insp. Van Doren did not know was that all of the issues had already been addressed by the memorandum dated September 28, 2005 from Supt. Proulx to Mr. Merrifield, a month before the SOC was stood up. There was no wrong-doing. There was no formal discipline. Supt. Proulx had a conversation later with Insp. Van Doren about his decision to stand down Mr. Merrifield. Insp. Van Doren told Supt. Proulx that he was aware that Mr. Merrifield had been removed from TAG and wanted to wait until that issue was resolved. Supt. Proulx did not tell Insp. Van Doren that the issue had already been resolved prior to standing up the SOC. He had an opportunity to set the record straight about Mr. Merrifield but he did not do it. Mr. Proulx stated that his reason was because there was still a Human Resources question regarding where Mr. Merrifield would be posted. I do not accept Mr. Proulx's evidence on this point. It was not a legitimate reason. It was illogical. I find that it was an excuse. The issue of where Mr. Merrifield would be posted had nothing to do with Insp. Van Doren's belief that Mr. Merrifield was not the appropriate resource for a very important emergency situation.
- [770] This scenario was repeated when Insp. Van Doren briefed C/Supt. Mazerolle about his decision to stand down Mr. Merrifield from the SOC. C/Supt. Mazerolle recalled that Insp. Van Doren had said something about a conflict of interest. C/Supt. Mazerolle had already read the September 28, 2005 memo from Supt. Proulx to Mr. Merrifield that had concluded all of the issues. Like Supt. Proulx, C/Supt. Mazerolle also had an opportunity to set the record straight. He did not tell Insp. Van Doren that Mr. Merrifield had been cleared. He did not ask why Insp. Van Doren thought there was a conflict or what he thought it was. He did not want to know why Mr. Merrifield had been stood down from the SOC. As far as he was concerned, Insp. Van Doren had made a decision within his authority and that was the end of it.
- [771] Being stood down from the SOC was devastating to Mr. Merrifield. This was evident when he testified about the matter in 2014, nine years later. It showed that the stain on his reputation had spread. It showed that a commissioned officer who had no management responsibility for INSET/TAG knew that he had been removed from national security work. Not surprisingly, this officer assumed the worst of him. As a result of the removal and its negative implication, Mr. Merrifield was not trusted to work in a high-stakes emergency situation.
- [772] The effect that this had on Mr. Merrifield was extreme. He was on sick leave for six months from January to July 2006, which was supported by his family doctor. He was under the care of a psychologist. I accept his evidence regarding his medical condition. He was depressed. He suffered from stress, dizziness and nausea. He was scared that he would lose his job. He took out his emotions on his family. He turned in his service pistol. This period was a very dark period in his life. The RCMP Health Services did not challenge his need for sick leave. I find that Mr. Merrifield was unable to write the Corporal JSE examination. He was suffering from severe or extreme emotional distress.

[773] I find that the failure of Supt. Proulx and C/Supt. Mazerolle to set the record straight when they had the opportunity to do so, with minimal effort, shows a disregard for the detrimental impact of decisions, based on misinformation and the spread of negative impressions and assumptions, on Mr. Merrifield's career. They were recklessly indifferent to the effect of the kind of harm that Mr. Merrifield suffered, which they knew was substantially certain to follow.

The Part IV Investigation

[774] Mr. Merrifield had been back to work for only a few months when he received an email from John Steeves dated October 4, 2005 regarding the outstanding amount on his Amex. Supt. Proulx appears to have become involved on October 24, 2005. Mr. Merrifield sent several lengthy emails to Supt. Proulx to explain the situation.

[775] Supt. Proulx sent an email to Mr. Merrifield in which he stated that he was going to ask for a review of Mr. Merrifield's statements for the past two years. A later email from Mr. Steeves suggested that a review had been done before November 8, 2005 which disclosed the duplicate payment.

[776] Mr. Steeves sent an email to Supt. Proulx on November 28, 2005, advising him that everything was fine. Mr. Steeves sent an email to Mr. Merrifield on January 5, 2006 stating that Supt. Proulx had already been advised of the review and commenting that if Mr. Merrifield had "not heard any different then things were fine." Mr. Steeves stated that he would not have told Mr. Merrifield that things were fine if he had thought that there was a problem. Nevertheless, Mr. Proulx stated that Mr. Steeves personally approached him and told him that there were some issues that he did not want to put in writing. There was evidence that Mr. Merrifield had taken back to back cash advances on his Amex card.

[777] Mr. Proulx's evidence of the conversation that he had with Mr. Steeves about the cash advances is not credible. The memorandum ordering the Part IV investigation is dated January 6, 2006. In it, Supt. Proulx states that he was informed on that same day about the cash advances. If there were any issues with cash advances, Mr. Steeves would have known about them before January 6, 2006. He had already completed his review before then. Mr. Steeves had no reason to withhold this type of information from Mr. Merrifield. He had no reason to not want to put something in writing for Supt. Proulx regarding the Amex account. Mr. Steeves stated that he would not have told Mr. Merrifield that everything was fine on January 5, 2006 if he had known that there was a problem. He said that he first learned of the Part IV investigation when S/Sgt. Babinko contacted him on January 19, 2006.

[778] Mr. Steeves could not recall why he contacted Cpl. DuPuy on January 9, 2006, saying it was an urgent matter. Mr. Proulx said that he signed the memorandum on January 13, 2006. He had no explanation for the delay between January 6, 2006, the date of the memorandum, and the date that he signed it, seven days later. The only explanation for these events is that Supt. Proulx needed more information to substantiate the memorandum, he asked Mr. Steeves to get it and he received it between January 6 and 13, 2006.

[779] Supt. Proulx's note dated January 6, 2006 was produced during the trial, on May 25, 2015, before Mr. Proulx testified. It is curious that this note has the same date as the date on the memorandum ordering the Part IV investigation; yet, none of the dates for the cash withdrawals are back to back. If Mr. Steeves did in fact tell Supt. Proulx that they were back to back cash withdrawals, the note dated January 6, 2006 is inconsistent with this information.

- [780] Supt. Proulx's memorandum ordering the Part IV investigation sets out an issue that had already been addressed. Supt. Proulx raised the issue of the double payment and the fact that an account receivable to recuperate the double payment was still outstanding. When he wrote this memorandum, Supt. Proulx knew that this issue had been resolved. Mr. Steeves stated that he had allowed Mr. Merrifield some additional time to repay the amount. Therefore, the only remaining issue was that Mr. Merrifield's Amex statements showed several cash advances which Supt. Proulx stated were suspected to have been for personal reasons. The memorandum did not provide any information as to when these cash advances might have been taken or which particular advances were in issue, despite the fact that Supt. Proulx's note dated January 6, 2006 sets out some dates.
- [781] Supt. Proulx did not ask Mr. Merrifield to explain the cash advances. In fact, the evidence shows that Mr. Merrifield made a specific inquiry as to whether there was anything to suggest that his Amex card had been used for reasons other than RCMP business. Rather than responding to this, Supt. Proulx proceeded in a clandestine manner and ordered the Part IV investigation. In his testimony, he stated specifically that he did not tell Mr. Merrifield about any concerns regarding these cash advances. Rather, he was "hinting" about them.
- [782] The cash advances were easily explained. Supporting documentation was available. The entire Part IV investigation and its effect on Mr. Merrifield could have been avoided had Supt. Proulx simply asked Mr. Merrifield about the advances. He ought to have done this. By September 2005, Supt. Proulx was aware that when Mr. Merrifield was temporarily transferred to Criminal Investigations pending the outcome of the conflict issue, he was living "under the gun or a very dark cloud," knowing that his conduct was being "subjected to very senior levels of the RCMP for scrutiny and possible disciplinary action." SRR Nicota informed Supt. Proulx of this in his email dated September 27, 2005.
- [783] Mr. Merrifield received the memo from Supt. Proulx on October 4, 2005, clearing him of all of the earlier issues. Nevertheless, Mr. Merrifield was deemed to be unsuitable for national security work. Some of his colleagues took a dim view of him. Within three months, he was off work suffering from severe emotional distress. He had only been back to work for approximately six months before Supt. Proulx ordered the Part IV investigation, alleging that Mr. Merrifield "may have engaged in disgraceful conduct that could bring discredit to the Force." Making an allegation that Mr. Merrifield was essentially taking RCMP funds for his personal use was equivalent to accusing Mr. Merrifield of theft and kiting, criminal offenses. The implications were dire. Mr. Merrifield lived under these allegations for eleven months until he learned the outcome of Sgt. Dickinson's investigation. In the end, there was no evidence that Mr. Merrifield had taken RCMP money for his personal use or that he was kiting payments. Despite this, C/Supt. Mazerolle still believes that the allegations in the Part IV investigation were substantiated and that Mr. Merrifield committed fraud in dealing with his Amex account.
- [784] I find that the actions of Supt. Proulx were the actual and proximate cause of Mr. Merrifield's severe emotional distress.
- [785] I find that when Supt. Proulx ordered the Part IV investigation, he had a reckless disregard of causing Mr. Merrifield emotional distress. He knew that Mr. Merrifield's being subjected to these very serious allegations would cause him significant further emotional distress. Supt. Proulx knew that the kind of harm that Mr. Merrifield suffered was substantially certain to follow. In fact it did. Mr. Merrifield was off work again for 11 months until he was ready to return.

[786] I find that Supt. Proulx's concern that Mr. Merrifield had engaged in disgraceful conduct was disingenuous because he admitted that at approximately the same time that he ordered the Part IV investigation, he himself was engaging in disgraceful conduct that could bring discredit to the Force.

The Ottawa Citizen Article

[787] Sgt. Dickinson was ordered to carry out an administrative review into the "unauthorized release of protected and classified information and/or documents relating to Cst. Peter Merrifield." Mr. Merrifield stated that this was an appropriate step to take in the circumstances. At the end of the review, Sgt. Dickinson could not substantiate who released the documents to the Ottawa Citizen. Despite this, C/Supt. Mazerolle still believes that Mr. Merrifield leaked confidential information to the media.

Mr. Merrifield's Communication with C.O. Seguin and D/Commr. Bourduas

[788] On August 15, 2006, while the Part IV investigation was still underway, Mr. Merrifield sent a lengthy email to C.O. Seguin setting out what had previously happened to him and politely requesting communication to resolve outstanding issues. C.O. Seguin met with Mr. Merrifield on October 3, 2006; however, C.O. Seguin had already obtained management's perspective. Although Mr. Merrifield provided two witness statements to C.O. Seguin to substantiate his views, C.O. Seguin did not find anything disrespectful in the various emails between Supt. Proulx and Mr. Merrifield. He chose not to follow up with the officers who provided the statements and instead preferred the information that he had received from management. In his view, the only issue that required any action was the allegation that Cpl. Frith had been ordered to attend the Barrie nomination meeting. C.O. Seguin had an opportunity to look into the matter further. If he had spoken to the two officers who provided the statements, he might have concluded that Mr. Merrifield's complaints were substantiated to some degree.

[789] Seven months later, Mr. Merrifield sent a lengthy email to D/Commr. Bourduas, who was responsible for the region. This email was similar to the one that Mr. Merrifield had sent to C.O. Seguin. He asked to speak to D/Commr. Bourduas because he "truly wish[ed] to resolve the situation..." Unfortunately, on June 29, 2007, D/Commr. Bourduas declined to become involved because he believed that the issues had been handled appropriately by C.O. Seguin.

[790] Mr. Merrifield's depression returned. In February 2010, he was off duty sick again for approximately eight months. When he returned to work, in the fall of 2010, Mr. Merrifield was assigned to project Overlord. He worked on Overlord for most of 2011. In 2011, Witness X told Mr. Merrifield that two other officers had said to him that Mr. Merrifield could not be trusted and that Witness X should not be working with Mr. Merrifield. Because he was pursuing a civil action against the RCMP, there was a perception that he could not be trusted. Nevertheless, Mr. Merrifield's performance evaluations continued to be extremely positive.

[791] Based on the information that Witness X had provided, I find that Mr. Merrifield justifiably believed that the stain on his reputation resulting from the harassment had spread significantly within the RCMP. His depression returned and he went off duty sick in November 2011.

[792] At that time, which he described as the worst part of his life, Mr. Merrifield sent out a third lengthy email to the highest level of command. He stated, "I am trying to avoid any further embarrassment or tarnish to our organization but have been presented with repeated obstacles in my efforts to resolve a serious situation at the lowest possible level.” This email goes on to show the depths of Mr. Merrifield’s pain and frustration regarding the fact that nobody in management was prepared to look objectively at the events beginning in 2005 and the impact of decisions that had been made regarding Mr. Merrifield. C.O. Seguin had brushed off his concerns, preferring management’s view of the events when he could have followed up on two statements that Mr. Merrifield provided to him. D/Commr. Bourduas concluded that C.O. Seguin had handled the matter appropriately.

- [793] I find that in his emails to C.O. Seguin, D/Commr. Bourduas and Commr. Paulson, as well as others, Mr. Merrifield was taking extraordinary steps to contact upper management with the hope of resolving his concerns. He was clear about the fact that throughout the period, his health had suffered and that he had been away from duty periodically, “to deal with serious depression issues as a result of the harassment...” Commr. Paulson stated that after he received the email, he referred it to Asst/Commr. White who in addition to being the commanding officer of O division (C.O. Seguin had retired) was also in charge of Human Resources. He expected that the issues would be addressed. He was assured that Asst/Commr. White “was on top of it.”
- [794] Mr. Merrifield received no response to this email. His depression continued. He stated that he suffered severely and had post-traumatic stress disorder resulting from the events that had transpired. Even though Asst/Commr. White and C/Supt. Mazerolle knew that Mr. Merrifield’s statement about Supt. Proulx was substantiated, they took no steps to respond to this email nor did they delegate this task to anyone else. I find that the RCMP’s conduct in ignoring this email went beyond all standards of what is right or decent. I find that it was one of the actual and proximate causes of Mr. Merrifield’s severe emotional distress.
- [795] Ten months later, Mr. Merrifield told SRR Reed that he wanted to return to work. The RCMP took a further eight months to facilitate this. His security clearance level had expired. Even though he held the top level of security clearance before he went on sick leave, there was a significant delay in processing his application.

Serious and Organized Crime

- [796] As a result of a structural reorganization within the RCMP, when Mr. Merrifield returned to work, he was placed in Serious and Organized Crime. Although he was a national expert on counter proliferation, he was not assigned to do this type of work. Insp. White testified that there was minimal activity on project Overlord. The staffing was adequate. The unit was focused on two significant drug trafficking investigations. Mr. Merrifield was assigned to work on one of them.
- [797] Insp. White had some harsh words regarding Mr. Merrifield’s performance. He testified that he was concerned that Mr. Merrifield was not a competent investigator. He believed that Mr. Merrifield had made misleading statements to him and Insp. Johnson. Nevertheless, Insp. White stated that in total he spent just a few hours with Mr. Merrifield when he worked in the unit. Insp. White never assessed Mr. Merrifield’s performance. He was certain that Mr. Merrifield attended a meeting in which issues in project Overlord were reviewed, even though Insp. White himself did not attend that meeting. The issues resulted in a report which Insp. White never provided to Mr. Merrifield. He never discussed the contents of it with Mr. Merrifield because Mr. Merrifield left the unit before Insp. White received the report.
- [798] Cpl. Low-Fowler was the file manager for project Overlord when Mr. Merrifield was the lead investigator. She stated that Mr. Merrifield did not provide her with his notes or other documentation for the project. It appears that he was not good with paperwork.

Nevertheless, her evidence contradicted that of Insp. White. She stated that within the project, there were regular meetings, people knew what needed to be done and it was followed-up. The direction and the goal were clear.

- [799] Insp. White spent only a few hours with Mr. Merrifield during his time at Serious and Organized Crime. I accept Cpl. Lowe-Fowler's evidence where it conflicts with that of Insp. White regarding Mr. Merrifield's work performance. Cpl. Low-Fowler worked directly with Mr. Merrifield, day-to-day, on project Overlord.

Senate Committee

- [800] Commr. Paulson testified that after Mr. Merrifield's appearance before the Senate committee, Asst/Commr. White told him that Mr. Merrifield had become "solidly and almost irretrievably embittered with the organization." He was "recalcitrant and not responsive to any direction." I find that Mr. Merrifield's actions show that he was the exact opposite of this. He contacted a number of commissioned officers to try resolve the issues. In his email to D/Commr. Bourduas, he stated, "I have offered evidence and the willingness to resolve this matter in a means agreeable to all concerned these efforts have yielded no results ...". The various SRRs wrote emails on his behalf requesting that the issues be addressed.
- [801] Commr. Paulson stated that Asst/Commr. White told him that Mr. Merrifield had commented out of turn on national security matters. The June 2013 Parliamentary Business Bulletin, written after Mr. Merrifield's attendance before the Senate committee, referred to Mr. Merrifield's participation in the Pritchard show in July 2005. It stated that Insp. Jagoe alleged that Mr. Merrifield had disclosed top-secret information and that subsequently Supt. Proulx contacted Mr. Merrifield and accused him of violating RCMP policy. The Bulletin went on to state that Supt. Proulx advised Mr. Merrifield that formal disciplinary proceedings would follow. I find that the information in this Bulletin was seriously misleading. The question of whether Mr. Merrifield had disclosed top-secret information when he participated in the Pritchard show was resolved in 2005 with a conclusion that he had not done so. Commr. Paulson stated that this portion of the Bulletin suggests that that Mr. Merrifield would have been subject to an investigation. It did not indicate that the matter had been resolved.
- [802] No explanation was provided for the fact that the 2013 Parliamentary Business Bulletin set out misleading information about Mr. Merrifield relating to an incident that had taken place eight years earlier. The Bulletin was unclassified and had an unrestricted circulation. It perpetuated Mr. Merrifield's tarnished reputation.
- [803] It is clear that the information provided to Commr. Paulson by his subordinates about Mr. Merrifield was wrong and deficient. Commr. Paulson rightly relied on them. He understood that Asst/Commr. White had tried to speak to Mr. Merrifield but he was not interested in having a discussion. All of this resulted in Commr. Paulson's having a negative view of Mr. Merrifield. He understood that Mr. Merrifield was not interested in discussing his issues but rather was focused on proceeding with this action. Commr. Paulson stated that he was never advised that Mr. Merrifield's statement in paragraph number three of his email (that Supt. Proulx had attempted to procure a prostitute at approximately the same time that he had ordered the Part IV investigation) may have had some foundation. Asst/Commr. White confirmed that Commr. Paulson was never advised of this. Both C/Supt. Mazerolle and Asst/Commr. White knew that Mr. Merrifield's statement about Supt. Proulx had been substantiated. C/Supt. Mazerolle stated that he received a related document. Although Mr. Merrifield and the defendants disagree on the date when the defendants knew about this (both dates are after Supt. Proulx retired), the fact that there was an allegation, which on a first reading seems preposterous but was later substantiated, ought to have alerted management to the possibility that the other statements made in the rest of Mr. Merrifield's email might have been credible.

- [804] In considering the actions that officers had taken regarding Mr. Merrifield, Commr. Paulson stated that they had made efforts to discipline him. Commr. Paulson believed that these efforts were blameless because the officers were trying to get Mr. Merrifield to do the right thing.

Ktabi Harassment Complaint

- [805] The RCMP's handling of Cst. Ktabi's harassment complaint can best be described as an administrative bungle. The complaint was made in July 2015, eight months after a new policy was implemented, but Mr. Merrifield was not notified of it until October 2015. Under the previous policy, a third party could make a harassment complaint on behalf of the person who was the subject of the alleged harassment. This was not retained in the new policy. Under the new policy, Cst. Ktabi's complaint should not have proceeded; however, C\Supt. O'Reilly made the mistake of recommending that the complaint be treated as a "third-party non-complainant process". Mr. Merrifield's name was entered into the database which exists to keep track of harassers and to identify patterns. C\Supt. O'Reilly's mistake set in motion a series of events that should not have occurred. I find that this was an innocent mistake on the part of C\Supt. O'Reilly. It does not meet the test for harassment as set out above. Nevertheless, I find that the RCMP handled this matter poorly. The complaint was dated July 7, 2015. Mr. Merrifield was not notified of it until October 22, 2015. The delay until the end of August can be explained because Commr. Paulson was away on holidays. After that, the matter was overlooked.
- [806] S/Sgt. Floyd and C\Supt. O'Reilly had a discussion on Friday, November 13, 2015, two business days before they were to testify. They agreed that the matter had been handled inappropriately and that it was not actually a harassment complaint. At this point, the matter had been hanging over Mr. Merrifield's head for almost a month. Quite surprisingly, Mr. Merrifield did not learn of the mistake and that management had determined that it was not a harassment complaint until Tuesday November 17, 2015 during S/Sgt. Floyd and C\Supt. O'Reilly's testimony. No explanation was offered as to why Mr. Merrifield was not notified of this earlier.

Conclusion

- [807] For the reasons set out above, I find that the defendants' conduct toward the plaintiff was outrageous. The defendants had a reckless disregard of causing the plaintiff to suffer emotional distress. His emotional distress was severe. The defendants' outrageous conduct was the actual and proximate cause of the plaintiff's emotional distress. The plaintiff has proven the tort of harassment.

Do the actions of the RCMP constitute a breach of Mr. Merrifield's Charter rights?

The Plaintiff's Position

- [808] The plaintiff does not take the position that s. 58.4(1) of the RCMP Regulation requiring a member to be on LWOP if s/he wished to participate in the political process is invalid. No decision was made to deny the plaintiff LWOP for this purpose. Instead, the plaintiff states that the conduct of the individual defendants infringed his rights set out in ss. 2 and 3 of the Charter, being freedom of expression and association and the right to vote and be qualified for membership of a legislative assembly.

[809] The plaintiff's position is that Supt. Proulx's examination of his political literature and criticism of his opinions at the May 27, 2005 meeting conveyed a message that his political views were incompatible with the RCMP's accepted positions. Supt. Proulx told the plaintiff that he would have to choose between his career in the Force or politics. Supt. Proulx then carried out an investigation into whether engaging in political activities without LWOP created a conflict. Subsequently, the plaintiff was punitively removed from TAG for expressing his political views. The punishment constitutes a Charter infringement.

The Defendants' Position

[810] The defendants state that the facts of this case do not establish any infringement of the plaintiff's ss. 2 and 3 Charter rights. He published his campaign materials and distributed them. He ran in the Barrie nomination meeting on May 14, 2005. There is no evidence that he wanted to run for political office again and was denied LWOP. The plaintiff did not challenge s. 58.4(1) of the RCMP Regulation.

-

Analysis

[811] I disagree with the plaintiff's submission that steps were taken to punish him for expressing his political views. Any conflict was within management's discretion to resolve simply by a retroactive LWOP approval, which had been granted in the past. Punitive steps were taken against the plaintiff because Insp. Jagoe and A/Sgt. Crane believed the plaintiff had lied to them when he said he would not be running in an election anytime soon. A/Sgt. Crane stated that at this point, "the trust was broken." He refused to continue to work with the plaintiff. Insp. Jagoe refused to have the plaintiff transferred to the investigative side INSET, even though it had vacancies.

Conclusion

[812] The evidence does not support the plaintiff's position that he was punitively transferred for expressing his political views. Accordingly, I find that his Charter rights were not breached.

Has the RCMP breached its contract of employment with Mr. Merrifield?

The Plaintiff's Position

[813] The plaintiff states that the RCMP breached its contract of employment with him by failing to provide him with a safe and harassment free work environment. The RCMP has an explicit policy against harassment which includes a Mission, Vision and Values statement. The section entitled "Commitment to the Employees of the RCMP" states:

In the spirit of shared leadership and recognizing all employees as our greatest asset, we commit to: open, honest and bilateral communication; demonstrating leadership through accountability and responsibility at all levels; treating all employees with equal respect and consideration...[and] Ensuring a safe and harassment free work environment" among other things.

[814] The parties disagree as to whether there is an employment relationship between the Crown and regular members of the RCMP.

The Defendants' Position

[815] The defendants rely on several cases in which plaintiffs were terminated and subsequently made claims for wrongful and constructive dismissal. In Flanagan v. Canada (Attorney General), 2013 BCSC 1205 (CanLII), 2013 B.C.S.C. 1205, 55 B.C.L.R. (5th) 139, the trial judge dismissed a constructive dismissal action by a former member of the RCMP on the grounds that the plaintiff's employment relationship was defined solely by statute, concluding in para. 64 that, "the weight of authority is against the existence of a contract law-based employment relationship between the RCMP and its members." The British Columbia Court of Appeal affirmed the decision.

[816] In Davidson v. Canada (Attorney General), 2015 ONSC 8008, 2016 C.L.L.C. 220 – 027, the court struck a proposed class proceeding brought on behalf of all female members of the RCMP alleging breach of contract for sexual discrimination, harassment and bullying. In para. 37, the court stated:

A series of cases from across the country, in which RCMP officers have brought wrongful dismissal claims, are authority that there is no contract of employment between the Crown or the RCMP with RCMP members and that the employment relationship with members of the RCMP is fashioned by statute not contract.

The Plaintiff's Position

[817] The plaintiff states that if the court were to accept the defendants' position that there is no employment contract, based on law that recognizes the primacy of the statutory regime, this would mean that the Court of Appeal's decision, which held that the grievance procedure was inadequate to address this plaintiff's claims, would be meaningless.

Analysis and Conclusion

[818] I disagree. In this action, the plaintiff makes three tort claims, among others, that are properly before the court. In Flanagan at para. 76, the court stated:

Indeed, virtually all of the cases I have before me in which the Courts have taken jurisdiction to hear a dispute between a member and the RCMP involve a tort rather than what has been described as a simple "garden-variety" labour dispute over such things as benefits or promotion. It has been said that the Courts are better equipped to deal with that sort of claim than is a grievance scheme, such as that of the RCMP, which, as noted, lacks independent adjudication.

[819] The plaintiff argues that the RCMP was required to act in accordance with its own policy; however, I am not aware of any legislative requirement for compliance with the policy and, therefore, cannot interpret the RCMP's actions as a breach of contract in this respect.

[820] Considering the above, I find that Mr. Merrifield's claim for breach of contract is not supported at law because his relationship with the RCMP is governed by statute, not contract.

Do the actions of the RCMP regarding Mr. Merrifield constitute abuse of/misfeasance in public office?

[821] The requirements for the tort of abuse of/misfeasance in public office are set out in Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, 2003 SCC 69, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263 at para. 32 as follows:

- (a) the public officer must have engaged in deliberate and unlawful conduct in his or her capacity as a public officer (in the exercise of public functions generally);
- (b) the public officer must have been aware both that his or her conduct was unlawful and that it was likely to harm the plaintiff;
- (c) the unlawful conduct must be the cause of the plaintiff's injuries; and,
- (d) the injuries suffered must be compensable in tort law.

[822] In Odhavji, the plaintiffs alleged that police officers, who had fatally shot an individual, had failed to cooperate with the Special Investigations Unit during its investigation. Cooperation is a statutory requirement under the Police Services Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P.15. The plaintiffs also alleged that the Chief of Police failed to ensure that the officers cooperated. The defendant brought a motion to strike the claim.

[823] The court stated in para. 23 that, "the tort involves deliberate disregard of official duty coupled with knowledge that the misconduct is likely to injure the plaintiff." In para. 28, the court stated, "the officer must deliberately engage in conduct that he or she knows to be inconsistent with the obligations of the office." Furthermore, the court commented in para. 30 that, "the underlying purpose of the tort is to protect each citizen's reasonable expectation that a public officer will not intentionally injure a member of the public through deliberate and unlawful conduct in the exercise of public functions." The court allowed the appeal on this point because it was not plain and obvious that the actions for misfeasance in a public office against the officers and the Chief would fail.

[824] In O'Dwyer v. Ontario Racing Commission, 2008 ONCA 446, 293 D.L.R. (4th) 559, a starter at a racetrack was under investigation. The Commission decided that he would not be approved to work in the next racing season. Accordingly, he was not re-hired and suffered damages. The plaintiff had a statutory right to have the Commission's decision reviewed under s. 11(7) of the Racing Commission Act, 2000, S.O. 2000 c.20.

[825] The court found that the Commission's conduct frustrated the plaintiff's right to have the decision reviewed. The Commission acted with reckless indifference as to the legality of its acts or the probable consequences to the plaintiff. At para. 42, the court stated:

The state of mind required to establish liability depends on which category the tort [misfeasance in public office] falls into. Category A involves "targeted malice", whereas the requirement of intentional misconduct for Category B may be satisfied by "reckless indifference" as to the legality of the act or its probable consequences. As established in Odhavji at para 38, "[a]t the very least.... the defendant must have been subjectively reckless or wilfully blind as to the possibility that harm was a likely consequence of the alleged misconduct".

[826] I interpret these cases to mean that, in the context of misfeasance in public office, any action or inaction that fails to comply with a statutory requirement constitutes unlawful conduct. Where a plaintiff establishes that the defendant failed to comply with a statutory requirement and did so with reckless indifference, wilful blindness or disregard for the legality of such unlawful conduct, s/he has laid the foundation for a claim of abuse of public office.

The Plaintiff's Position

[827] The plaintiff states that Supt. Proulx and Insp. Jagoe were public officials. They deliberately engaged in a course of abusive and harassing conduct knowing that it would cause harm to the plaintiff. Some examples include Supt. Proulx's punitive transfer of Mr. Merrifield from TAG to Criminal Intelligence and his ordering a Part IV investigation. The plaintiff states that Supt. Proulx exercised his powers for an improper purpose and in bad faith. These incidents constitute unlawful conduct. Both Supt. Proulx and Insp. Jagoe were aware that their conduct was unlawful and contrary to the legal obligation to provide a safe and harassment free work environment.

[828] The plaintiff further states that A/Sgt. Crane and Insp. Jagoe were aware that he was going to participate in the Barrie nomination meeting and did not take any steps to stop him, contrary to their responsibility set out in s. 37(e) of the RCMP Act. A/Sgt. Crane stated that he did not take any steps because he did not have all of the facts. He then falsely advised Supt. Proulx in his email dated June 3, 2005, that as of May 13, 2005, he did not know the nomination meeting was to be held the following day. The plaintiff states that the defendants' failure to comply with their Code of Conduct obligations constitutes unlawful conduct.

[829] The plaintiff also states that Supt. Proulx and Insp. Jagoe engaged in an unlawful sensitive sector investigation when they took issue with the contents of Mr. Merrifield's political pamphlet and when Supt. Proulx questioned Mr. Merrifield about it. Supt. Proulx exercised his powers for an improper purpose. Supt. Proulx and Insp. Jagoe were aware that their conduct was unlawful and that it was likely to harm the plaintiff.

Analysis

[830] I have already found that Supt. Proulx's conduct was tortious; however, this alone does not make it unlawful. The plaintiff's transfer does not constitute an action or inaction that fails to comply with a statute nor does Supt. Proulx's ordering the Part IV investigation. As noted above, there is no legislative requirement that the RCMP must comply with its harassment policy.

[831] The plaintiff points to s. 37(e) of the RCMP Act which states, "It is the responsibility of every member...to ensure that any improper or unlawful conduct of any member is not concealed or permitted to continue." A/Sgt. Crane and Insp. Jagoe testified that they were aware of this statutory obligation. A/Sgt. Crane stated that he did not take any action because he believed that he did not have all of the facts. Supt. Jagoe stated that he was aware of the nomination meeting but did not know the exact date. Both officers decided to take no action. Neither of these reasons prevented the officers from contacting the plaintiff before the nomination meeting to ask if he had LWOP. I find that their failure to contact the plaintiff was deliberate and unlawful.

[832] The next question is whether the officers were aware that their unlawful conduct was likely to harm the plaintiff or whether they were recklessly indifferent to the probable consequences of their conduct. The plaintiff suffered harm, being depression and post-traumatic stress disorder because he was punitively transferred and was subsequently the subject of an unfounded Part IV investigation.

[833] I find that the officers could not have been aware that their failure to contact the plaintiff would likely harm the plaintiff. They could not have foreseen the actions that Supt. Proulx would take which subsequently caused the plaintiff to suffer. For the same reason, I find that they were not recklessly indifferent to the probable consequences of their inaction.

The plaintiff's suffering from depression and post-traumatic stress disorder was not a probable consequence of their failure to act.

- [834] The plaintiff submits that Supt. Proulx and Insp. Jagoe carried out an unlawful sensitive sector investigation when they acquired and reviewed Mr. Merrifield's political brochure and when Supt. Proulx questioned him regarding its contents, I note that sensitive sector investigations are governed by a Ministerial Direction on National Security, found in OPS. Manual Appendix IV-10. It states, "This direction will guide the investigations of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), with respect to matters that fall under subsection 6\(1\) of the Security Offences Act and investigations related to a terrorist offence or terrorist activity as defined in section 2 of the Criminal Code of Canada, as they relate to sensitive sectors of Canadian society." Section 2 of the Security Offences Act R.S.C., 1985, c. S-7, states generally that the Attorney General of Canada may conduct proceedings with respect to an offence under any law of Canada where (a) the alleged offence arises out of conduct constituting a threat to the security of Canada within the meaning of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-33 or (b) the victim of the alleged offence is an internationally protected person within the meaning of s. 2 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-46.
- [835] Section 6\(1\) of the Security Offences Act states, "Members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who are peace officers have the primary responsibility to perform the duties that are assigned to peace officers in relation to any offence referred to in section 2 or the apprehension of the commission of such an offence."
- [836] Supt. Proulx and Insp. Jagoe's actions did not constitute an investigation into a threat to the security of Canada or an investigation related to a terrorist offence or terrorist activity. Mr. Merrifield was not an internationally protected person. I find that the above-noted activities of Supt. Proulx and Insp. Jagoe did not constitute an investigation into a sensitive sector.
- [837] I find that the plaintiff has not proven the tort of abuse of/misfeasance in public office.

Do the actions of the RCMP regarding Mr. Merrifield constitute intentional infliction of mental suffering?

- [838] According to Boucher v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp., 2014 ONCA 419, 120 O.R. (3d) 481, the test for intentional infliction of mental suffering has three elements. The defendants' conduct must have been (a) flagrant and outrageous, (b) calculated to harm the plaintiff and (c) it must have caused the plaintiff to suffer a visible and provable illness.
- [839] The test for intentional infliction of mental suffering is similar to the test for harassment. One difference is that in addition to being outrageous, the conduct resulting in intentional infliction of mental suffering must also be flagrant. Another difference is that the plaintiff must show that he suffered a visible and provable illness.

Was the defendants' conduct flagrant

- [840] The defendants state that in order for conduct to be flagrant, its offensiveness must be palpable. The Oxford English Dictionary defines palpable as "conspicuously or obviously offensive".
- [841] As discussed earlier, Supt. Proulx ordered the Part IV investigation without asking Mr. Merrifield for an explanation for the cash withdrawals. Before he ordered the investigation, Mr. Merrifield specifically asked him if there was any reason to believe that his Amex card was being used for anything other than RCMP purposes. Supt. Proulx did not reply to this question. Instead, he ordered the investigation. In his mandate letter, he provided no particulars of the transactions that concerned him nor did he provide a date range in which the investigation was to be conducted. He ordered the investigation alleging discreditable conduct at a time that was contemporaneous to his own discreditable conduct. I find that Supt. Proulx's actions were obviously offensive. Therefore, I find that in addition to being outrageous, his conduct was also flagrant.

Was the defendants' conduct calculated to cause harm?

[842] In Zoran-Smith v. Bank of Montreal (2003), 2003 CanLII 28775 \(ON SC\), 31 C.C.E.L. (3d) 267, the court stated in para. 167 that:

In terms of establishing that the conduct was calculated to produce harm, it suffices if there is a reckless disregard as to whether or not harm would ensue from the conduct. Furthermore, the requirement that the conduct be calculated to produce harm is met where the actor decides to produce the consequences that follow from the act, or if the consequences are known to be substantially certain to follow. There is no requirement of malicious purpose to cause the harm or any motive of spite.

[843] I have already determined that the defendants had a reckless disregard of causing the plaintiff's emotional distress. The plaintiff had already been off work for significant periods of time, suffering from stress and depression because Supt. Proulx and Insp. Jagoe determined he was no longer suitable to work in national security. As a result of Supt. Proulx's ordering the Part IV investigation, Mr. Merrifield again suffered from stress, depression and post-traumatic stress disorder. Given Mr. Merrifield's medical history and the fact that Supt. Proulx made unfounded allegations that Mr. Merrifield's conduct was disgraceful, I find that Mr. Merrifield's suffering from emotional distress, was a consequence that was known to be substantially certain to follow.

Is medical evidence required to prove that a plaintiff suffered from a visible and provable illness?

[844] The plaintiff states that he was off duty sick, suffering from depression and post-traumatic stress disorder, among other things, which was supported by his family doctor. The RCMP health services never challenged this. The plaintiff states that he is not required to call medical evidence to prove that he was suffering from an illness.

[845] The plaintiff relies on Rahemtulla v. Vanfred Credit Union (1984), 1984 CanLII 689 \(BC SC\), 4 C.C.E.L. 170 (BCSC). The court did not require medical evidence to support a finding that the plaintiff suffered a visible and provable illness.

[846] Ms. Rahemtulla was a bank teller who was accused of theft and was fired. The allegation was not proved and the court found that she was entitled to reasonable notice or pay in lieu of notice. The plaintiff had suffered from severe depression and was unable to leave her house or participate in any of her normal activities. She stopped eating. She had blackouts and headaches. She was hospitalized twice. Ms. Rahemtulla had some pre-incident medical issues; however, the court found that the most significant cause of her depression was the manner in which she was terminated and the impact that it had on her prospects for employment. Notwithstanding the absence of medical evidence, the court was, "... satisfied that the plaintiff suffered depression accompanied by symptoms of physical illness as a result of [her supervisor] Mr. Flack's accusations."

[847] The defendants state that a plaintiff must provide medical evidence to show that he suffered a visible and provable illness. They rely on Prinzo where the plaintiff provided medical evidence of her injury and was awarded damages for intentional infliction of mental suffering. On appeal, the court confirmed this aspect of the judgment; however, the court referred to Rahemtulla and at para. 46 stated, “concerning the requirement of a ‘visible and provable illness’ it appears that the absence of a medical expert will not necessarily be fatal.”

Conclusion

[848] I have already found that the plaintiff suffered severe or emotional distress. Notwithstanding the absence of medical evidence, I am satisfied that the plaintiff suffered from depression and post-traumatic stress disorder as a result of the RCMP’s actions. I find that the plaintiff has proven the tort of intentional infliction of mental suffering.

Does the RCMP have a fiduciary duty to Mr. Merrifield? If so, do its actions constitute a breach of fiduciary duty?

The Plaintiff’s Position

[849] The plaintiff relies on Frame v. Smith, 1987 CanLII 74 (SCC), [1987] 2 S.C.R. 99 for its description of certain characteristics in relationships where fiduciary obligations have been imposed.

[850] In this case, the father brought a civil action against the mother of his children on the basis of a tort for breach of a statutorily authorized order for access on the basis that it was a breach of a fiduciary duty.

[851] When considering whether the mother had breached a fiduciary duty, Wilson J. stated in her dissenting decision at par. 24 that,

[852] Relationships in which a fiduciary obligation have been imposed seem to possess three general characteristics:

1. The fiduciary has scope for the exercise of some discretion or power.
2. The fiduciary can unilaterally exercise that power or discretion so as to affect the beneficiary’s legal or practical interests.
3. The beneficiary is peculiarly vulnerable to or at the mercy of the fiduciary holding the discretion or power.

[853] Ultimately, the court concluded that...“the statute shows a clear disposition not to permit recourse to the courts for civil actions of this nature.”

[854] For this and other reasons, the court determined that there was no possible basis for the cause of action.

[855] Twenty-four years later, the court considered the issue of an ad hoc fiduciary duty in Elder Advocates of Alberta Society v. Alberta, 2011 SCC 24, [2011] 2 S.C.R. 261. This concerned a motion to strike the plaintiffs’ claim on the basis that the causes of action pleaded were not supportable at law.

[856] Approximately 12,500 residents of Alberta's long-term care facilities sued as a class alleging that the government had unjustifiably raised the amount of their required monetary contribution to subsidize medical expenses, which they alleged was the government's responsibility. The plaintiffs stated that this constituted a breach of fiduciary duty.

[857] The court held that the claim for breach of fiduciary duty disclosed no cause of action. It was struck. In considering whether the government had a fiduciary duty to the plaintiffs in the circumstances, the court stated at para. 36:

In summary, for an ad hoc fiduciary duty to arise, the claimant must show, in addition to the vulnerability arising from the relationship as described by Wilson J. in Frame: (1) an undertaking by the alleged fiduciary to act in the best interests of the alleged beneficiary or beneficiaries; (2) a defined person or class of persons vulnerable to a fiduciary's control (the beneficiary or beneficiaries); and (3) a legal or substantial practical interest of the beneficiary or beneficiaries that stands to be adversely affected by the alleged fiduciary's exercise of discretion or control.

[858] In para. 37, the court referred to Guerin v. R. [19034] 2 S.C.R. 335, at p. 385 in which the court stated:

It should be noted that fiduciary duties generally arise only with regard to obligations originating in a private law context. Public law duties, the performance of which requires the exercise of discretion, do not typically give rise to a fiduciary relationship.

-

[Emphasis added by SCC.]

[859] The plaintiff acknowledges that an employer-employee relationship is presumptively not a fiduciary relationship. The imposition of a fiduciary duty in this type of relationship should be rare.

[860] In Nadolny v. Peel (Region), 2009 CanLII 51194 (ON SC), the plaintiff was a retired employee of the Region of Peel. In order to address an administrative error, the Region decided to increase the premiums payable by its retired non-unionized employees who had received early retirement health benefits. The plaintiff stated that she and the other retirees were vulnerable to the Region because after they had retired, they were no longer employed and were no longer in a position to bargain.

[861] The court considered the indicia of a fiduciary relationship. At para. 40, it stated:

In order for a fiduciary relationship to exist, there must be scope for the exercise of some discretion or power, the ability of that power or discretion to be exercised unilaterally so as to affect the beneficiary's legal or practical interests and a peculiar vulnerability on the part of the claimant to the exercise of that power or discretion. Outside of the established categories of fiduciaries, the case law suggests that there must either be evidence of a mutual understanding that one party has relinquished its own self-interest and agreed to act solely on behalf of the other party, or evidence of a power dependency.

[862] The plaintiff alleged a power dependency relationship. The court held that her pleadings were sufficient to establish the existence of a fiduciary relationship between herself and the Region.

The Defendants' Position

[863] The defendants state that in Elder Advocates, the court commented on the requirements for the imposition of a fiduciary burden on the Crown. Some of those requirements are set out as follows:

[44] Imposing such a burden on the Crown is inherently at odds with its duty to act in the best interests of society as a whole....

[47] Generally speaking, a strong correspondence with one of the traditional categories of fiduciary relationship – trustee-cestui qui trust, executor-beneficiary, solicitor-client, agent-principle, director-corporation, and guardian-ward or parent-child - is a precondition to finding an implied fiduciary duty on the government.

[51] It is not enough that the alleged fiduciary's acts impact generally on a person's well-being, property or security. The interest affected must be a specific private law interest to which the person has a pre-existing distinct and complete legal entitlement.

[864] The plaintiff states that the question of whether the employer relinquished its self-interest is the real issue. It makes the imposition of fiduciary duty on an employer an exception to the usual employer-employee obligations.

The Plaintiff's Position

[865] The plaintiff states that the RCMP unilaterally adopted the harassment policy which represents a commitment made by the RCMP as an employer to its employees/members. The employees/members, including Mr. Merrifield, were the beneficiaries of this policy. Management and senior officers had discretion regarding enforcement of the policy. The RCMP explicitly and voluntarily relinquished its self-interest in relationship to the employee/members with respect to harassment in the workplace. It made a unilateral commitment to act in the best interests of its employees/members. The plaintiff states that the RCMP had a fiduciary duty to protect him from harassment in the workplace.

Analysis and Conclusion

[866] The RCMP did adopt a policy to provide a safe and harassment free workplace; however, I find that the policy did not arise from an undertaking by the RCMP to act in the best interests of its employees/members. The RCMP did not have a private law duty to do so. Mr. Merrifield's affected interest was not a specific private law interest to which he had a pre-existing distinct and complete legal entitlement. Accordingly, I find that the RCMP did not have a fiduciary duty to the plaintiff.

Has Mr. Merrifield suffered a loss of income related to the actions taken by the RCMP?

The Defendants' Position

[867] The defendants challenge Mr. Merrifield's evidence that he could not write the Cpl. JSE exam on February 4, 2006. He provided no medical evidence to support this. Mr. Merrifield's evidence was that he was too ill to write the exam on that date. February 25, 2006 was the alternative date for candidates to write the exam. The defendants state that Mr. Merrifield gave no explanation as to why he did not write the exam on the alternative date.

- [868] The defendants state that although Mr. Merrifield claims that he was too sick to write the exam in February, on January 17, 2006, the day that the Ottawa Citizen article was published, Mr. Merrifield was well enough to travel to “O” Division headquarters in London for a meeting with C/Supt. Mazerolle and SRR Bohus. He kept in contact with his colleagues while he was off duty sick. The defendants state that Mr. Merrifield has not met the burden of proving that he was too sick to write the exam and that the cause of that sickness was the direct result of actions taken by the defendants.
- [869] The defendants state, in the alternative, that if Mr. Merrifield is entitled to lost wages, the calculation should not take into account any assumptions with respect to overtime. Because the amount of overtime earned by members varies depending on the position and nature of the duties performed, it is not reasonable to assume that Mr. Merrifield would earn overtime at the same rate as was earned in his previous postings. The defendants state that any and all calculations should rely on base salary.
- [870] The defendants also state that Mr. Wollach’s assumption that Mr. Merrifield would have been promoted to Corporal within six months of successfully completing the exam is unreasonable. After Mr. Merrifield did complete the exam, he was promoted to Corporal eighteen months later. This is a more reasonable assumption for both promotions.

Analysis

- [871] I find that Mr. Merrifield’s testimony that he was able to travel to London on January 17, 2006 and that he maintained contact with his work colleagues while on medical leave is not inconsistent with his testimony that he was too sick to write the Cpl. JSE exam on February 4, 2006. I accept his evidence that he was too sick to write the exam. He was on approved medical leave at that time and did not return to work until July, 2006. The RCMP never challenged Mr. Merrifield’s approved medical leave.
- [872] I have already found that the plaintiff has proven the torts of harassment and intentional infliction of mental suffering. I find that the mental distress suffered by the plaintiff in February, 2006 resulted in his inability to write the exam.
- [873] I accept the defendants’ position that the amount of overtime earned by a member varies depending on the position and nature of the duties performed. There was no evidence of an average amount of overtime earned by either a Corporal or a Sergeant across a variety of positions and duties performed. The defendants’ assertion that only a base salary for a Corporal and Sergeant should be used to calculate Mr. Merrifield’s loss assumes that Mr. Merrifield would work no overtime as a Corporal and Sergeant. This is unrealistic. A calculation assuming no overtime would under-compensate Mr. Merrifield.
- [874] Given the lack of evidence regarding a different percentage to be applied, I am satisfied that Mr. Wollach’s use of Mr. Merrifield’s post-event average overtime is appropriate in calculating his loss.
- [875] The defendants’ state that eighteen months is an appropriate interval to use to determine when Mr. Merrifield would have been promoted to Corporal and then Sergeant. In fact, Mr. Merrifield waited considerably longer to be promoted to Sergeant. I accept the defendants’ position on this issue.

Conclusion

[876] If Mr. Merrifield wrote the Cpl. JSE exam in February 2006, and using an eighteen month interval, I assume he would have been promoted to Corporal in August 2007. If Mr. Merrifield wrote the Sgt. JSE exam in February 2008, I assume that he would have been promotable in August 2009 because he had to serve as a Corporal for two years. Using the eighteen month interval, I assume that he would have been promoted to Sergeant in February 2011. Because he would have received these promotions later than the dates shown in Mr. Wollach's report, Mr. Merrifield's loss of income would be less than the amount calculated by Mr. Wollach. Given the promotion dates that I have assumed, I find that Mr. Merrifield's income loss is properly assessed at $41,000. ^[ix]

What amount should be awarded to Mr. Merrifield for general damages?

Analysis

[877] Amounts awarded for damages for intentional infliction of mental suffering and harassment have increased significantly since the 1990s.

[878] In Clark v. Canada, 1994 CanLII 3479 (FC), [1994] 3 F.C. 323, 3 C.C.E.L. (2d) 172, a female member of the RCMP was harassed by her male co-workers. She was told to be a "real woman" and go home and have children. Her co-workers watched pornographic movies while she was in the office. Plastic breasts were left on her desk. When her body armour was delivered, it was set up with a mocking note attached to it. These are a few examples of what the plaintiff endured. When she complained to her supervisors, they were dismissive. These events caused her to have a documented mental health crisis. She resigned her position.

[879] The court reviewed awards for intentional infliction of nervous shock prior to 1994, considered a "reasonable measure of consolation" for her particular mental condition and awarded the plaintiff $5,000. The defendants' state that based on this decision, if Mr. Merrifield is entitled to damages, the amount should be nominal.

[880] The plaintiff relies on four cases decided between 1997 and 2014. They are Wallace v. United Grain Growers Ltd., 1997 CanLII 332 (SCC), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 701, Tipple v. Canada (Attorney General), 2012 FCA 158, 431 N.R. 257, 158, Joseph v. Tl'azt'en First Nation, 2013 F.C. 767, 9 C.C.E.L. (4th) 173 and Boucher v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp. The defendants state that these cases are not applicable because the plaintiffs were either terminated or constructively dismissed.

[881] I disagree with the defendants' position. In all of these cases, the court considered the events leading up to the termination or constructive dismissal. The defendants' actions caused the plaintiffs to suffer from mental health conditions. Damages were awarded to the plaintiffs for mental suffering. I find that these cases are relevant and helpful on this issue.

[882] In Wallace, the Supreme Court of Canada determined that the trial judge had discretion to extend the notice period with respect to the termination. The possibility of recovery for mental health damages remained. It noted that a tort for breach of good faith and fair dealing regarding a dismissal was not yet recognized.

[883] In Tipple, the employer alleged that the plaintiff's actions were a form of misconduct. The matter attracted a considerable amount of media attention. The court found that the allegations were unfounded. In the interval, the plaintiff had suffered a significant loss of reputation. He was awarded $250,000 for the loss of reputation and $125,000 for the psychological injury that he sustained as a result of the manner of his termination.

- [884] In Joseph, an employer made vile and serious allegations of fraud upon the employee's termination. This resulted in significant damage to the employee's reputation. The employee had considerable difficulty in finding other employment. Prospective employers stated that the plaintiff had to be vindicated before they would consider hiring him. The court awarded $85,000 for damage to the employee's physical health, well-being, integrity, dignity and personal and professional reputation.
- [885] In Boucher, the plaintiff was a cheerful and productive employee. When the personal defendant became her supervisor, he belittled, humiliated and demeaned the plaintiff in front of others continuously and relentlessly for approximately six months. She complained of her supervisors actions to management who determined that her complaints were unfounded and told her that she would be held responsible for making them. The plaintiff became broken and defeated. She suffered from a number illnesses including depression. A jury awarded the plaintiff $100,000 for intentional infliction of mental suffering. The award was upheld on appeal.
- [886] Mr. Merrifield suffered from significant depression and post-traumatic stress disorder as a result of the actions taken by the RCMP. He was unable to work for various periods of time. At one point, he disengaged from his family and spent his days lying on a sofa. He did not bathe and developed bed sores. His depression during these periods deprived him of meaningful interaction with his wife and young children. It deprived him of successful performance in a job that he loved and for which he was acknowledged to be a national expert. It also deprived him of the gratification of positive interaction and collaboration with his colleagues.
- [887] Not only did Mr. Merrifield suffer from significant mental health issues as a result of the actions taken by the RCMP, those actions also stained his reputation. A number of people knew that he had been removed from national security work. They assumed that he had done something wrong. Even Insp. Van Doren, who was not Mr. Merrifield's supervisor, knew that he had been removed from national security work. As a result of this, he considered Mr. Merrifield to be unsuitable to work at the SOC during a national security emergency.
- [888] Supt. Proulx accused Mr. Merrifield of using his Amex card for personal reasons, in other words stealing money from the RCMP. Sgt. Dickinson interviewed a number of people during the Part IV investigation. All of them knew the serious allegations against Mr. Merrifield which were tantamount to criminal conduct. The allegations were insidious. For example, Supt. Jagoe still believes that the allegations were substantiated. Just as the news of Mr. Merrifield's removal from national security work spread among the RCMP management and other members, so too would the allegations of disgraceful conduct. Sgt. Dickinson stated that the members that he interviewed would not have known of the outcome of the Part IV investigation or that the allegations were unfounded.

Conclusion

- [889] Taking all of this into account, I award Mr. Merrifield general damages against the defendants for harassment and intentional infliction of mental suffering in the amount of $100,000.

Is Mr. Merrifield entitled to punitive and or aggravated damages?

Analysis

[890] Mr. Merrifield's award of general damages is meant to compensate him for the harm he suffered because of the RCMP's conduct. Punitive damages are not compensatory. In Boucher at paras. 59 and 60, the court stated:

Punitive damage awards are not compensatory. They are meant to punish the defendant in exceptional cases where the defendant's conduct has been "malicious, oppressive and high-handed" and "represents a marked departure from the ordinary standards of decent behaviour", see Whiten, at para 36.

In other words, punitive damages focus on the defendant's conduct, not on the plaintiff's loss. Here, for reasons I have already outlined, Pinnock's misconduct met this exceptional standard of malicious and oppressive conduct. Pinnock deliberately targeted Boucher. He wanted her to resign. He persisted with his mistreatment of her over the course of five months. He forced her to leave a job that meant a great deal to her. His conduct did indeed amount to a marked departure from the ordinary standards of decent human behaviour.

[891] Punitive damages must be rationally required to punish the defendants' misconduct. I find that punitive damages are not required in this matter. The general damages award is sufficient to denounce and deter the defendant's misconduct.

[892] With respect to aggravated damages, in Boucher at para. 66, the court stated:

Aggravated damages are compensatory damages. They are part of breach of contract damages. They compensate a plaintiff for the additional harm suffered because of the way the contract was breached. In a wrongful dismissal claim, aggravated damages may be awarded against the employer where "the employer engages in conduct during the course of dismissal that is 'unfair or is in bad faith'". [citation omitted]

[893] The plaintiff states that he was functionally in a contractual relationship with the RCMP. The RCMP breached the conditions of his employment when they allowed him to suffer from harassment.

Conclusion

[894] I have found that Mr. Merrifield's claim for breach of contract is not supported at law because his relationship with the RCMP is governed by statute, not contract. He is not entitled to aggravated damages which flow from a breach of contract.

Summary

[895] The plaintiff is awarded general damages in the amount of $100,000 and special damages in the amount of $41,000.

Costs

[896] If the parties cannot agree on costs, they shall contact the trial coordinator to arrange an attendance date. If they cannot agree on a schedule for serving and filing materials, a conference call may be arranged. All materials shall be filed with the Barrie trial coordinator.

Released: February 28, 2017

ENDNOTES

[i] Most of the witnesses in this trial were serving or retired RCMP members. I will refer to a retired member as Mr. regarding his testimony. I will refer to him in the narrative by the rank that he held at the relevant time. The plaintiff was a Constable, Corporal and is now a Sergeant. I will refer to him as Mr. Merrifield for consistency.

[ii] Attached as Schedule 'A' is an organizational chart prepared by the plaintiff.

[iii] At a nomination meeting, a person is selected by other members of the same political party to run as a candidate in the next election.

[iv] HRMIS is the acronym for a computer program that contained information regarding RCMP member's employment and other details

[v] Counter proliferation work includes interrupting shipments to foreign countries of materials that can be used to make nuclear weapons

[vi] This manual was dated 2010. A similar manual for 2006 was not provided

[vii] Katherin Barber, ed. The Canadian Oxford Dictionary 2d ed, (Toronto: Oxford University Press Canada, 2004)

[viii] Piresferriera v. Ayotte, 2010 ONCA 384

[ix] If my assumptions are incorrect, counsel may address me on this issue

Tab 155

Galea v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp., 2017 ONSC 245 (CanLII)

Source: Superior Court of Justice
Date: 2017-12-07
File number: CV-11-0901-00
Other citations: 44 CCEL (4th) 251 — [2017] OJ No 6444 (QL)
Citation: Galea v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp., 2017 ONSC 245 (CanLII), <<https://canlii.ca/t/hp7lm>>, retrieved on 2026-03-24

CITATION: Galea v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp., 2017 ONSC 245
COURT FILE NO.: CV-11-0901-00
DATE: 2017 12 07

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE – ONTARIO

RE: GAIL GALEA, Plaintiff

v.

WAL-MART CANADA CORP., Defendant

BEFORE: EMERY J.

COUNSEL: Natalie C. MacDonald and Cody Yorke, for the Plaintiff

Jonathan L. Dye, for the Defendant

HEARD: January 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 25, 26, 27, 29, 2016
February 12, 2016
June 14, 15, 16, 17, 2016
August 30, 31, 2016
September 28, 29, 30, 2016
December 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 19, 20, 21, 2016
March 14, 2017

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

TABLE OF CONTENTS

OVERVIEW

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

- Incentive Programs in 2010
- January 29, 2010 and after
- The PAR Grid as a Measure
- Ms. Galea goes to Harvard
- Events in November, 2010
- Payments received after Termination

ANALYSIS

INTERPRETATION OF EMPLOYMENT CONTRACTS

- Covenant not to Compete (The “NCA”)
- Principles of Interpretation
- Surrounding circumstances
- Plaintiff’s position on the evidence
- Defendant’s position on the evidence
- Relevance of Surrounding Circumstances

DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT

- Base Salary
- Benefit Plan Premiums
- What Incentive Plan does the NCA apply to?
- MIP – Management Incentive (Bonus) Program
- DPSP – Deferred Profit Sharing Plan
- ERP – Executive Retirement Plan
- LTIP/PSP – Long Term Incentive Plan / Performance Shares

MORAL DAMAGES

- Governing principles

Test for Moral Damages

Manner of dismissal

Pre-termination Conduct

Post-termination Conduct

Litigation Conduct

If medical evidence is required

Application of the facts

PUNITIVE DAMAGES

Proportionality

The Relationship Between Punitive Damages and Compensatory Damages

Using the Same Factors Twice

The Award is Not Out of Line With the Case Law on Punitive Damages

SUMMARY

OVERVIEW

[1] To Gail Galea, her career at Wal-Mart Canada Corp. was taken away from her long before she was terminated from her job as an Associate.

[2] In August, 2002, Ms. Galea was hired by Wal-Mart Canada Corp. (“Wal-Mart”, as distinct from Wal-Mart International, Walmart Corporation or Wal-Mart U.S., or any Wal-Mart corporation or business operating in another country). From the time she started working at Wal-Mart on September 3, 2002, Ms. Galea proved herself to be a rising star in the Wal-Mart firmament. Unfortunately, Ms. Galea’s star was not placed as high, or burned as bright in Wal-Mart’s eyes by January 29, 2010. Her employment was terminated ten months later, on November 19, 2010.

[3] Ms. Galea brings this action to recover damages for all amounts she claims she is owed by virtue of her employment, and resulting from the manner of her termination. She makes her claim for contractual damages under a Covenant Not to Compete Agreement (the “NCA”) she entered with Wal-Mart in 2005 which she considers to be an employment contract. She also seeks moral damages for the manner of how Wal-Mart has dismissed her, and punitive damages.

[4] In its Amended Statement of Defence, Wal-Mart admits that Ms. Galea was terminated from employment without cause, effective November 19, 2010. The case for trial was therefore about damages. However, the trial took much longer than the initial estimate of seven days as a result of further documents that were produced by Wal-Mart voluntarily or compelled by court order. Those further documents added to the complexity of the claims and defences before the court.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

[5] The factual background necessary to provide a contextual setting for the issues is based in large part on Ms. Galea's evidence. It is only logical that the context be given through her evidence because she is the only witness to the chronology of facts. Where facts involve a discrepancy with the evidence of Mr. Cheesewright, President and Chief Executive Officer ("CFO") of Wal-Mart or of Bob Hakeem, Vice President, People Division, I shall address those credibility questions when resolving that part of the decision.

[6] Ms. Galea was President and Global Chief Executive Officer for Muffins Canada before she was hired by Wal-Mart. In late 2001 or in early 2002, Ms. Galea was recruited by Wal-Mart. Over the course of 12 months, Ms. Galea negotiated the terms of her employment.

[7] On August 23, 2002, Ms. Galea accepted Wal-Mart's offer of employment for the position of District Manager-in-Training, commencing September 3, 2002. Ms. Galea testified that she agreed to join Wal-Mart to work under the leadership of Mario Piloizzi, President and CEO of Wal-Mart, whom she greatly admired.

[8] The compensation that Wal-Mart agreed to pay Ms. Galea at the time of hire was set out in a letter dated August 14, 2002 (the "employment letter"), and included the following:

1. An annual base salary of $120,000.
2. Eligibility to participate in the full-range of Wal-Mart's employment benefits as described in the enclosed materials, as they may be amended by Wal-Mart from time to time, and subject to terms of qualification and/or waiting periods. Those benefits included the following:
3. Management incentive bonus program, plan number 7. This incentive bonus would be effective for fiscal year ending January 31, 2003, on a prorated basis.
4. Associate/spouse discount card.

5. Participation in Wal-Mart's deferred profit sharing plan.
6. Three weeks annual vacation.
7. Coverage under Wal-Mart's comprehensive benefits program as those benefits may be amended from time to time.
8. Participation in Wal-Mart's registered retirement plan.
9. A leased company car and mileage reimbursement, pursuant to company policy.

[9] The employment letter stated that Ms. Galea would be a member of management. The employment letter was signed by Paul Ratzlaff, Vice President – People Division.

[10] Wal-Mart recognized Ms. Galea's skills and her long term development potential. Shortly after she was hired, Ms. Galea was promoted to District Manager for District 9. In a letter from Mr. Ratzlaff dated February 19, 2003, Wal-Mart increased her annual base salary to $125,000 commencing March 3, 2003. She would continue to have a leased company car provided to her. She would continue to be eligible to receive the management incentive bonus (plan number 7) up to 30% of her base salary. So began the long climb.

[11] On October 2, 2003, Ms. Galea was promoted yet again to Regional Manager for Region 2. In a letter dated October 10, 2003, Wal-Mart recognized her 16 years of retail experience, and assigned her seven stores that would report directly to her.

[12] On May 1, 2004, Ms. Galea was promoted to Regional Vice-President, and moved from an M7 to an M8 pay band. She was also eligible for the management incentive bonus that would entitle her to up to 40% of her base annual salary as an annual incentive. All other benefits to which she was entitled as a member of management were carried forward.

[13] Ms. Galea received further accolades for job performance that year. On June 17, 2004, she was selected to join a select group of associates for the Targeted Management Accelerated Program (TMAP). In a letter from John Mensner, then President and CEO of Wal-Mart International, TMAP was described as a high potential program that targets female associates with the capacity and desire for a senior executive role in three to five years. The letter went on to advise

Ms. Galea that selection into TMAP came with great responsibility and high expectations. She was expected to work with the President of Wal-Mart in her country, and with its People Director in order to:

- Create a development plan based on her specific needs to be monitored by her People Director
- Take on a more visible leadership role within her organization
- Prepare to take on the next role within Wal-Mart International

[14] By September 2005, Ms. Galea was considered a high value employee. Wal-Mart transferred Ms. Galea to the position of General Merchandise Manager, on a mutually agreed upon date. In a letter from Mary Alice Vuicic, Vice President – People Division at Wal-Mart dated September 9, 2005, the terms of Ms. Galea's new position of General Merchandise Manager were spelled out as follows:

- (a) She would report to the Senior Vice President, Merchandise and Sales.
- (b) Her annual base salary would be $215,000, inclusive of a $15,000 car allowance.
- (c) The annual incentive plan would allow her to earn up to a maximum of 40% of her base salary for the fiscal year ending January 31, 2006.
- (d) Wal-Mart's management would recommend to the stock incentive plan committee under the Wal-Mart Canada Stock Incentive Plan of 1998 (as amended or replaced by Wal-Mart in its sole, absolute and unfettered discretion from time to time) that she be awarded stock options at such committee's discretion under and subject to the terms of the stock option plan.
- (e) She would be required to execute and deliver to Wal-Mart three copies of a covenant not to compete agreement together with one copy of the statement of ethics policy appended to the letter.
- (f) The letter dated September 9, 2005 from Ms. Vuicic provided that the contents of the offer and its attachments must be kept strictly confidential and could not be disclosed to anyone other than Ms. Galea's immediate family, legal advisor and financial advisor.

[15] Ms. Galea accepted the position of General Merchandise Manager by signing a copy of the letter from Ms. Vuicic on September 9, 2005, and by signing the NCA which she delivered back to Wal-Mart.

[16] Ms. Galea's elevation to General Merchandise Manager was a defining event in Ms. Galea's career at Wal-Mart. It was significant to Ms. Galea not only because it moved her to the next echelon in the management structure, but also because Wal-Mart required her to sign the NCA to receive the promotion and related benefits. The NCA restricted Ms. Galea from other employment with mass retailers other than Wal-Mart for a period of two years should her employment at Wal-Mart end, regardless of the cause or the reason for termination. The NCA required Ms. Galea to preserve and keep confidential information she learned during her employment with Wal-Mart.

[17] The terms of the NCA are of central importance to this action because Section 2 provides for "transition payments" that Wal-Mart would be required to pay to Ms. Galea in the event Wal-Mart terminated her employment without cause. Wal-Marts' obligations to make transition payments are therefore set out in their entirety:

2. TRANSITION PAYMENTS. In the event Wal-Mart terminates the Associate's employment without cause, Wal-Mart will, for a period of two (2) years from the effective date of such termination continue to pay the Associate his or her base salary and any incentive payable in accordance with the Annual Incentive Plan in effect on the date of termination, and its portion of health and dental benefits premiums in accordance with such plans as are in effect on the date of termination. The payments described above are referred to in this Agreement as "Transition Payments." The period of time during which Transition Payments are made are referred to in this Agreement as the "Transition Period." The Transition Payments shall be subject to such withholding and/or deductions as may be required by law and subject to the following conditions and offsets:

(A) Transition Payments will not be payable if the Associate's employment is terminated by Wal-Mart for cause.

(B) In the event that the Associate is demoted or reassigned so that he or she ceases to be a key employee, the Associate will no longer be bound by the covenant not to compete set forth in Paragraph 3 below and will cease to be eligible for any of the benefits or payments (e.g., Termination Payments) provided by this Agreement;

(C) No Transition Payments will be payable if the Associate voluntarily resigns or retires from his or her employment with Wal-Mart;

(D) Given the availability of other programs designed to provide financial protection in such circumstances, Transition Payments will not be payable under this Agreement in the event of the Associate's death or disability. If the Associate should die during the Transition Period, Transition Payments will cease at that time, and his or her heirs will have no entitlement to the continuation of such payments. Transition Payments will not be affected by the disability of the Associate during the Transition Period;

(E) Violation by the Associate of his or her obligations under Paragraph 3 or Paragraph 4 below, or any other act that is materially harmful to Wal-Mart's business interests, during the Transition Period will result in the immediate termination of Transition Payments in addition to any other remedies that may be available to Wal-Mart.

(F) Transition Payments will be payable on such regularly scheduled paydays as may be adopted and instituted by Wal-Mart for its other salaried associates;

(G) Receipt of Transition Payments will not entitle the Associate to participate during the Transition Period in any benefit plans or programs maintained by Wal-Mart which are not specifically mentioned in this paragraph 2.

(H) The Associate acknowledges and agrees that the receipt by the Associate of Transition Payments shall fully satisfy any and all claims of the Associate with respect to his or her employment with Wal-Mart or the termination thereof, including but not limited to notice, pay in lieu of notice, wrongful dismissal, severance pay, termination pay, bonus, overtime pay, incentive compensation, interest, vacation pay, or any claims under applicable employment standards, workers compensation, and human rights legislation, and the Associate hereby releases and forever discharges Wal-Mart with respect to any and all claims relative to same effective upon the Associate's initial receipt of any Transition Payment.

(I) Despite the foregoing, in no event shall the Associate receive less than his or her minimum entitlements, if any, to notice or pay in lieu of notice under applicable employment standards legislation if his or her employment is terminated without cause.

[18] Ms. Galea understood the NCA would operate in absolute terms. Section 3 would make her unemployable because it would virtually shut her out of working at any mass merchandising retailer in Canada or the United States. This was the only business she knew. Although remedies for any breach of the NCA by either party were listed under Section 5, she knew that Wal-Mart was powerful and she would not have the means to fight back.

[19] Ms. Galea also testified that she understood that the term "Transition Payments" under Section 2 under the NCA was a promise that Wal-Mart was making to take care of her if she was ever terminated and required to wait out the two years. Ms. Galea understood from conversations with Ms. Vuicic and Mr. Pillozzi around the time the NCA was signed that if she was ever terminated from her employment without cause, she would receive the full extent of her compensation package at the time for the two years she did not compete. Ms. Galea stated that this was her understanding of what was intended by the parties when she signed the NCA.

[20] Wal-Mart did not call any evidence about any of the circumstances surrounding the making of the NCA.

[21] Ms. Galea's career trajectory continued upwards after she was appointed as General Merchandise Manager. By spring 2006, she had attracted the attention of the Bentonville executive team and head office of Wal-Mart International. Wal-Mart International is the executive arm of the Wal-Mart organization that oversees all Wal-Mart companies and business worldwide, except for Wal-Mart U.S. Wal-Mart Canada Corp. reports to Wal-Mart International when required. All head office operations for the Wal-Mart organization are generally based in Bentonville, Arkansas.

[22] In a letter dated May 18, 2006, from Craig Herkert, President and CEO of the Americas for Wal-Mart, Ms. Galea was told that she had been selected by Mr. Pillozzi in Canada and the Bentonville executive team to continue her participation in the Accelerated International Management (AIM) program. The AIM program targeted high potential Associates who aspired to senior management roles for development. Ms. Galea was advised that she could expect to receive communications from Mary Alice Vuicic to participate in her development plan. Once the development plan was finalized, it would be shared with Bentonville and communicated to Mike Duke's executive team. Mike Duke was CEO of Wal-Mart International at the time.

[23] Ms. Galea felt honoured by this recognition. She felt her career path was moving in the direction according to her plans. She believed that her inclusion in the AIM program was consistent with her development towards a key management role at Wal-Mart.

[24] To further to her goals, Ms. Galea applied in 2007 for membership in the Leadership Foundation, a division of the International Women's Forum. The Leadership Foundation was composed of women in leadership positions from government and business across the world. It included Hilary Clinton, Condoleezza Rice and Roberta Bondar as faculty members. At trial, Ms. Galea described the application process as intense, quite rigorous and challenging. She was interviewed by a panel as part of the application process. Ms. Galea was accepted by the Leadership Foundation, which was the first time anyone from Wal-Mart had been recognized in this forum. Ms. Galea believes that it reflected well on Wal-Mart for her to be selected.

[25] Ms. Galea made specific reference to pages 6 and 7 of the application to the Leadership Foundation in her evidence, which were pages completed by Mario Pillozzi, then President and CEO of Wal-Mart Canada. In answer to question 2 on page 7 of the leadership application, Mr. Pillozzi gave the following answer to the reference question:

2. The Leadership Foundation Fellows program is an initiative to help prepare women for top level leadership. Where do you see the applicant in her profession five years from now? What is her potential?

ANSWER: Gail is now the Vice President and General Merchandise Manager over home and seasonal. She is responsible for approximately 25% of the company's business (from a merchandising point of view).

Gail has the potential to move at least two levels (of management) up – Senior Vice President and Chief Merchandising Officer, and with education, experience and coaching, could someday run a Wal-Mart country operation.

[26] On March 20, 2008, Ms. Galea received a note from Mike Huffaker, Chief Operating Officer (“COO”) of Wal-Mart Canada to show his appreciation of her contribution towards the last two and a half years. In that note, he states as follows:

Don't ever forget you are one of the Top Talents not only in Canada but the entire World! I wish you continued success in your WMT career and its truly been great working with you. Take care,

Best regards,

Mike

[27] David Cheesewright became the President and CEO of Wal-Mart Canada in November or December 2007. By the summer of 2008, Ms. Galea was reporting to Sylvain Prud'homme, Senior Vice-President Merchandising, who in turn reported directly to Mr. Cheesewright.

[28] On August 6, 2008, Ms. Galea received a letter from Wal-Mart Canada Corp. signed by Mr. Prud'homme, SVP Merchandising, and David Cheesewright, President and CEO. This letter read:

Dear Gail:

You are a valued part of our leadership team. In your role leading the General Merchandise Team, we have been very pleased with the depth of experience and sound business acumen that you have brought to bear. In recognition of your leadership and your continued contributions, we are pleased to offer you the opportunity as Vice President of General Merchandising for a position upgrade to M9. Effective August 1, 2008, you will be eligible for a lump sum bonus of $30,000. Additionally, your position at your current salary of $272,000 will be upgraded to an M9 with improved short-term and performance share program potential. Please see the attached salary worksheet for your consideration.

Gail, we are thrilled to be offering you this upgraded position. We believe that you will find this action that we are taking as an indication of the confidence that we have in your abilities and in the successful contributions that you will make in the future as part of the senior leadership team.

[29] The letter from Wal-Mart Canada dated August 6, 2008 offered Ms. Galea a promotion to Vice-President, General Merchandise, and attached a salary worksheet for her consideration. This worksheet showed that her base salary increased from $237,000 as General Merchandising Manager to $272,000 as Vice President, General Merchandise at the M9 level effective August 2, 2008. Together with the addition of a lump sum bonus of $30,000, the increase to her potential incentive rewards under Wal-Mart's management incentive program and performance share program, her maximum compensation range increased from $474,000 to $642,000 if Wal-Mart met specified targets.

[30] Ms. Galea was responsible for general merchandising at Wal-Mart Canada in her new position as Vice President, General Merchandise. She was responsible for sales, financial performance and profit and loss at Wal-Mart Canada. She was responsible for 40% of the sales, and 42% of the total profit for Wal-Mart Canada in the speciality parts of its business. This included pharmacy, electronics, and the home side of the business. She had 16 people reporting directly to her, and 400 people reporting indirectly through them.

[31] Ms. Galea was also responsible for global sourcing for Wal-Mart Canada to purchase products from around the world to sell.

[32] Wal-Mart Canada was part of a global strategy to restructure Wal-Mart over all. The McKinsey Group was a consulting firm hired by head office in Bentonville to develop a merchandising project. Mr. Cheesewright as President and CEO of Wal-Mart Canada made the decision to have the project implemented in Canada first. He therefore struck an internal group to study this restructuring initiative, and to determine how to get higher efficiencies out of Wal-Mart's stores in Canada.

[33] Wal-Mart International continued to recognize Ms. Galea's performance and her leadership potential. On April 9, 2009, Mike Duke sent an email to 14 women across the entire Wal-Mart organization to announce the formation of the President's Global Council of Women Leaders, and to invite those 14 people to be a member of the Council. The email was copied to a number of other people in senior management positions, including David Cheesewright. The email read, in part, as follows:

You were selected to participate in this group of 14 senior women leaders from around the world based on your performance and abilities. As a member of the council, you will advise senior leadership and act as a catalyst in the identification, development, advancement and retention of women to more global, senior leadership roles within our company. We'll also look to you to provide perspectives on critical business and customer issues.

[34] No member of this Council was appointed from Canada other than Gail Galea.

[35] Ms. Galea took this appointment to the President's Global Council as recognition of her abilities by the highest levels of management within Wal-Mart International and Wal-Mart U.S.

[36] Wal-Mart International further recognized Ms. Galea's skills and contribution to Wal-Mart in September 2009, when Doug McMillon created an executive development program for Wal-Mart International. Mr. McMillon had succeeded Mike Duke as CEO of Wal-Mart International. Mr. Cheesewright reported to Mr. McMillon.

[37] Gail Galea and another employee, Sean Clarke were the only two people appointed from Wal-Mart Canada to participate in the new executive development program.

[38] On September 14, 2009, Jim Thompson, Senior Vice-President, Operations and Merchandising made an announcement that the Global Procurement team for Wal-Mart worldwide would report directly into Canada. This meant that the procurement team would be reporting directly to Ms. Galea. This was the first step in the process of realigning the sourcing function for Wal-Mart globally. Ms. Galea was to report directly to Jim Thompson with respect to developing skills for global procurement.

[39] For the year ending January 31, 2008, Ms. Galea received a performance appraisal that was completed by Jim Thompson. She was given a score of 3.8 overall on this performance appraisal, which falls into the category “exceeds expectations” according to the grading system shown on this document.

[40] Mr. Prud’homme was her immediate supervisor to whom she reported directly at year end on January 31, 2009. The performance appraisal for FYE09 graded her again overall at 3.8 out of 5. The overall grade of 3.8 again fell within the “exceeds expectations” category under the Wal-Mart grading system.

[41] Mr. Cheesewright wrote a letter dated March 6, 2009 to Ms. Galea to thank her for her contribution to the company’s overall performance in FYE09. He advised her that she had made the Management Incentive Bonus plan for the first time in five years and that the home office bonus plan reached a payout level of 83%. The letter continued by advising her that her bonus for FYE09 would be $113,189.26. Her total bonus, including $9,055.14 for vacation, pay, would be $122,244.40, and that payment would be deposited directly to her account.

[42] On October 28 and 29, 2009, Ms. Galea attended a global Chief Merchandising Summit in Tokyo. This summit was attended by Chief Merchandising Officers of Wal-Mart companies in other countries.

[43] Ms. Galea exchanged emails with Doug McMillon of Wal-Mart International on November 2, 2009 after she had returned home from the CMO summit in Japan. Around that time, she met with Duncan McNaughton, who had been hired as Chief Merchandising Officer to replace Mr. Prud’homme. Mr. McNaughton had a background in the food industry and therefore had the insight to assist Wal-Mart in developing its food and grocery lines.

[44] Ms. Galea was assigned to work with Mr. McNaughton for twelve months. She had met Mr. McNaughton in Tokyo. Mr. McNaughton was to groom her to take on the role of Chief Merchandising Officer as his successor.

[45] Upon her appointment to work with Mr. McNaughton, she would report directly to him. Mr. Cheesewright told her that this was part of her “professional development”.

[46] In the second quarter of 2000, Doug McMillon asked Ms. Galea to participate in Wal-Mart’s first Executive MBA (EMBA) program. The EMBA program would take place for eight weeks at Harvard University in the summer of 2010.

Incentive Programs in 2010

[47] In order to follow the metrics for any entitlement under a Wal-Mart incentive plan, it is important to understand that Wal-Mart’s financial performance is measured at the end of each fiscal year. The fiscal year end for Wal-Mart Canada is January 31. A particular year is identified by the year in which the fiscal year ends. For instance, the 12 month period between February 1, 2010 and January 31, 2011 would be known as FYE 2011.

[48] Heading into January, 2010, Ms. Galea was entitled to receive compensation in addition to her base salary from four different incentive programs offered by Wal-Mart:

1. The Management Incentive Program (MIP)
2. The Deferred Profit Sharing Program (DPSP)
3. The Executive Retirement Plan (ERP)
4. The 1998 Stock Option Program, later replaced by the 2008 Long Term Incentive Program (2008 LTIP) that contained terms for the operation of the Performance Share Program (2008 PSP).

[49] The Management Incentive Bonus, or MIP, was part of Ms. Galea’s compensation from the date she was hired. This bonus was described as a benefit that shall be finally determined by Wal-Mart in its sole, absolute and unfettered discretion, for the fiscal year ending January 31, 2003. If the program were to pay out at its maximum, Ms. Galea’s entitlement would be 30 percent of her annual base salary in 2003 based on the measurement criteria which could be amended from time to time.

[50] Ms. Galea gave uncontradicted evidence that she was entitled to an annual contribution towards the DPSP equal to 4 percent of her annual salary, bonus and vacation pay. Will Wilson, Director, Associate rewards at Wal-Mart admitted at trial that Ms. Galea was entitled to this annual contribution towards the DPSP on her behalf. Mr. Wilson further admitted that Wal-Mart did not pay out the balance of Ms. Galea's DPSP account within 90 days, as required by the plan.

[51] The ERP came into effect on February 1, 2005. Although the ERP did not exist when she was hired in 2002, Ms. Galea gave uncontradicted evidence at trial that Wal-Mart made contributions into the ERP on her behalf annually. Ms. Galea received an ERP statement each year. The statement advises the employee that she will receive the closing balance of her ERP account when her employment with Wal-Mart ends for reasons other than gross misconduct, or total and permanent disability, within 90 days of the date on which her employment ended.

[52] When Ms. Galea was hired in August 2002, she became eligible for the full range of Wal-Mart's employment benefits under the terms of the employment letter. One of those benefits consisted of participation in Wal-Mart's stock option plan. This plan gave Ms. Galea the opportunity to purchase Wal-Mart stock at a reduced price. The Stock Incentive Plan of 1998 clearly provided the opportunity as an incentive to certain Wal-Mart employees. Paragraph 1.1 of the 1998 Stock Option Plan set out its purpose in the following recital:

1.1 Purpose. Wal-Mart Canada, Inc. ("Wal-Mart") believes it is important to provide incentives to Wal-Mart's Associates through participation in the ownership of Wal-Mart Stores Inc. This Wal-Mart Canada Inc. Stock Incentive Plan of 1998 (the "Plan") is established to provide incentives in the form of Stock Options, Restricted Stock Awards to certain Associates of Wal-Mart to enhance their job performance, to motivate them to remain or become associated with Wal-Mart and to increase the success of Wal-Mart by fostering executive ownership in Shares in order to align their interest with those of the Shareholders of Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. The Plan is not limited to executive officers or directors of Wal-Mart, but will be available to provide incentives to any Associate that the Committee believes has made or may make a significant contribution to Wal-Mart.

[53] Mr. Cheesewright wrote to Ms. Galea on July 4, 2008, as the Chief Executive Officer to inform her that Wal-Mart Canada was proposing a new plan, the Wal-Mart Canada Long Term Incentive Plan 2008 (the "2008 LTIP") to replace the 1998 Stock Option Plan. In this letter, Mr. Cheesewright described the benefits which key employees including Ms. Galea would receive:

In place of the stock options previously awarded to you under the Old Plan, as a member of the M8 pay band, you will now be eligible under the Proposed Plan to an annual award of performance shares ("PSPs") in an amount equivalent to 40% of your annual base salary, assuming all performance thresholds are met. In simple terms, this means that rather than simply benefiting from any increase in the market value of shares for which you hold stock options (as under the Old Plan), under the Proposed Plan you will be granted actual shares that vest within specified periods (less any required statutory deductions), provided that certain pre-determined corporate performance targets are achieved.

[54] Ms. Galea understood this letter to mean that under the 2008 LTIP, she would receive actual shares in Wal-Mart Canada under the Performance Share Plan ("PSP") within the 2008 LTIP instead of the options which required her to actually purchase shares. She further understood from Mr. Cheesewright's letter that she would retain the options she had already been granted, and that she would receive shares issued by Wal-Mart Canada from the time the 2008 LTIP took effect.

[55] According to Mr. Cheesewright's letter dated July 4, 2008, and under the actual terms of the 2008 PSP Plan that came into effect on February 1, 2008, the PSP award for 2008 would be "triple loaded". This meant that Ms. Galea as a Wal-Mart Associate would receive a one-time award that would be the equivalent to three standard awards. The actual shares issued to pay this triple load was contingent upon her continued status as an Associate, and Wal-Mart Canada's achievement of required performance measures over the following three years. Each "load" or "award" would vest respectively at Wal-Mart Canada's year-end on each January 31, 2009, 2010 and 2011 respectively. Mr. Cheesewright's letter provided an example of an award made in February 2009 that would, assuming continued employment and Wal-Mart's achievement of required performance measures, vest in February 2012.

[56] Wal-Mart Canada issued a notice of plan award to Ms. Galea under the 2008 LTIP, which she accepted on November 6, 2008. This notice of plan award granted Ms. Galea a target number of 1,758 PSPs as of September 9, 2008. This grant was subject to the performance measurement for the period February 1, 2008, to January 31, 2009, and was subject to the terms of the 2008 LTIP and the notice of plan award. The notice of plan award also contained paragraph 2.4 that governed how an Associate's continued employment would be determined for the purpose of the plan, and what would occur in the event that an Associate's continued employment status was terminated:

In the event that the Recipient's Continuous Status as an Associate terminates:

As a result of the Recipient's death, a prorated number of PSPs granted hereunder shall become vested as at the Recipient's date of death and the Recipient's beneficiary shall be entitled to receive payment as soon as practicable thereafter. The prorated number of PSPs to vest under this paragraph shall be calculated by dividing by 365 the number of days in the Performance Period prior to the Recipient's date of death and applying the resulting percentage to the Target Number of PSPs.

For any reason other than the Recipient's death, all PSPs granted hereunder that have not vested on or before the date on which the Recipient's Continuous Status as an Associate ceases and all rights with respect to such PSPs shall be forfeited by the Recipient and shall terminate.

[57] Wal-Mart Canada also issued notice of plan awards for 439 performance shares granted on September 9, 2008; 2,194 performance shares granted on April 9, 2009; and 2,456 performance shares granted on March 30, 2010.

[58] Ms. Galea takes the position that at the end of the triple load, she was entitled to receive 5,274 shares (1,758 shares x 3), and 1,317 shares (439 shares x 3). In addition, Ms. Galea claims entitlement to the shares granted on April 9, 2009 and March 30, 2010.

[59] On January 26, 2010, Ms. Galea received a letter from Will Wilson dated January 26, 2010, regarding the Executive Retirement Plan (ERP) at Wal-Mart Canada. This plan was important to her, and she considered it to be part of her salary package. She considered it a source of funding for her retirement. In this letter, Wal-Mart Canada showed that her balance within the ERP as at November 30, 2009, totalled $158,872, with a deemed investment in three different investment funds. Deemed earnings from those deemed investments would be credited to her notional ERP account at the end of each month.

January 29, 2010 and after

[60] Anticipating the year ahead, Ms. Galea expected that she would eventually be appointed as Chief Merchandising Officer for Wal-Mart Canada. However, a meeting with Mr. Cheesewright on January 29, 2010 would change those expectations forever.

[61] At around 12:00 noon on January 29, 2010, Ms. Galea was asked to meet with Mr. Cheesewright. As she also reported to Mr. Cheesewright at the time, she thought this was to be a routine meeting. Instead, Mr. Cheesewright informed Ms. Galea that he was removing her from her role as Vice President, General Merchandising, and relieving her of responsibilities associated with that role. Ms. Galea recalls that he told her that he did not know what to do with her. He told her he was considering an ex patriate assignment for her as one option. This would mean that she could be assigned to a Wal-Mart subsidiary in another country.

[62] Ms. Galea was shocked by this decision. She understood from what Mr. Cheesewright said to her at that meeting that her role did not exist at Wal-Mart Canada any longer. However, she also understood from him that she was still valued by the company..

[63] Mr. Cheesewright discussed how Ms. Galea might be reassigned to the Wal-Mart subsidiary in India, which was a small market for Wal-Mart International at the time. He also discussed how she might be assigned to a Wal-Mart subsidiary in Brazil. This reassignment could take place six to nine months later.

[64] From this meeting, Ms. Galea understood that Wal-Mart Canada was in the process of reorganizing. She understood that Mr. Cheesewright was eliminating her role, and that Wal-Mart was hiring younger talent. Wal-Mart would have to figure out what job she was best suited for, and wanted to do things in sequence. Mr. Cheesewright also advised Ms. Galea that Doug McMillon at Wal-Mart International, Duncan McNaughton and Bob Hakeem all knew about the meeting they were having.

[65] To Ms. Galea, this decision meant that there was no space for her in merchandising at Wal-Mart Canada, as Mr. Cheesewright was making room for younger people to fill merchandising positions.

[66] Ms. Galea began to take notes of meetings she would have with Mr. Cheesewright from that day forward.

[67] Ms. Galea went home and met with her family about her meeting with Mr. Cheesewright. She understood that a huge cultural change was taking place at Wal-Mart Canada. She decided that she would consider a lateral transfer to the Wal-Mart subsidiary in Brazil.

[68] On February 1, 2010, Ms. Galea met with Mr. Cheesewright once again. She informed Mr. Cheesewright that India would not be an appropriate assignment for her family or herself as the culture there was very different and distinct. However, she advised Mr. Cheesewright that she would be interested in pursuing the opportunity in Brazil, and requested a better understanding about the job.

[69] Mr. Cheesewright told her at the meeting on February 1 that he was sorry for making her feel the way she was made to feel, and that the conversation had not gone well on January 29th. He told her that they would have had a different conversation that day if Wal-Mart did not value her performance and abilities. He told her that Doug McMillon had sent him an email stating that he did not want to lose her.

[70] Ms. Galea spoke with Mr. McMillon over the telephone on February 3, 2010. He told her that Wal-Mart International had an international shortage of merchandising talent. He told her that the Wal-Mart associate in Brazil was struggling and he suggested that she reach out to Eduardo Solorzano.

[71] Ms. Galea acted on Mr. McMillon's recommendation and spoke with Mr. Solorzano by telephone. Mr. Solorzano told Ms. Galea that any role she might play would just be a consultant role. Subsequently, Ms. Galea spoke with Hector Nunez, CEO of Wal-Mart's operations in Brazil. He told her that the role would not be progressive. It would have no people reporting directly to her and no responsibility for profit and loss. The position would have her assisting Marcelo Vienna, Chief Merchandising Officer for Wal-Mart Brazil.

[72] On February 3, 2010, Ms. Galea also met with Bob Hakeem. At that time Mr. Hakeem was the Manager of Human Resources of Wal-Mart Canada. Mr. Hakeem asked Ms. Galea what countries she would like to work in if he could arrange an ex patriate assignment for her.

[73] Ms. Galea met again with Mr. Cheesewright on February 4, 2010. He informed her that he intended to continue developing her career. He mentioned there might be an opportunity for her in Chile. In the meantime, she was to continue developing her skills at Wal-Mart Canada.

[74] By this time, Ms. Galea felt like she was floundering because she had the distinct impression Wal-Mart Canada was trying to decide what they were going to do with her.

[75] On February 5, 2010, Mr. Cheesewright advised Ms. Galea that she was being assigned to work with Ed Kolachynski, head of Global Procurement services at Wal-Mart U.S. to support her transition. This would involve working part time with Wal-Mart's head office in Bentonville, Arkansas. This position involved no actual defined duties or responsibilities.

[76] On February 7, 2010, Ms. Galea spoke with Duncan McNaughton, to whom she had reported directly to before she began reporting directly to Mr. Cheesewright. Ms. Galea understood from her discussion with Mr. McNaughton that she was to be appointed as Senior Vice-President Merchandising-Strategic Initiatives, and would resume reporting directly to him. She understood from Mr. McNaughton that the organization was being flattened. She understood from her conversation with Mr. McNaughton that she was still a valued resource and talent at Wal-Mart Canada, and that this was the best way for her to advance in the company.

[77] On February 8, 2010, Mr. Cheesewright announced Ms. Galea's new position at a general meeting for all Associates at head office for Wal-Mart Canada. At the same time, Wal-Mart released an internal memo to all Associates, including those who had not attended the meeting. The announcement described Ms. Galea's new role as Senior Vice-President Merchandising-Strategic Initiatives, and that she would report to Mr. McNaughton. The announcement described how in addition to this new role, Ms. Galea had been offered an opportunity to work with Wal-Mart International in the months to come as part of her career plan to gain global experience. In that role, Ms. Galea would be working with Ed Kolachynski, head of Global Procurement. In addition, Ms. Galea would utilize her operations and merchandising experience in supporting Sean Clarke with new format development.

[78] Ms. Galea testified that she was embarrassed by this announcement in front of five or six hundred people who worked at Wal-Mart Canada. The announcement signified that she had gone from a member of the senior executive team to a supporting position. The five or six hundred people present at the meeting when the announcement was made were members of head office staff. All of the people who had reported directly to Ms. Galea were present, as well as those who reported indirectly to her.

[79] Ms. Galea attended the year beginning meeting ("YBM") and met with Mr. McNaughton to gain clarity about her current role in the Wal-Mart organization. At that meeting, she was asked to spend some time with Mr. McMillon and through him, to develop relationships through global sourcing.

[80] On February 17, 2010, Ms. Galea met again with Mr. Cheesewright. Mr. Cheesewright told her at that time that hers was a complicated situation. He told her that “her case is so unique it was a Harvard case study in the making”. Ms. Galea did not know what Mr. Cheesewright meant by that comment.

[81] By February 19, 2010, Ms. Galea had not been assigned any further role or responsibilities. Mr. McNaughton told her that he really did not know what her role was to be. He recommended that it was better for her to meet with Mr. McMillon of Wal-Mart International. It was still Wal-Mart Canada’s intention to develop her, although by this time she had no idea what “development” meant.

[82] Between the YBM in February 2010 and mid-June 2010, Ms. Galea had several meetings where she discussed possible opportunities with Wal-Mart affiliates in Brazil, Chile and with Asda, the Wal-Mart affiliate in the United Kingdom. She also travelled to Bentonville to work on global sourcing strategies with Mr. Kolachynski.

[83] In order to expand her horizons in the event that she secured the role in Chile, Ms. Galea took Spanish lessons as she had been informed that the Wal-Mart affiliate would only be interested in someone who spoke fluent Spanish.

[84] Ms. Galea went so far as to visit Chile in June 2010. This showed her interest and commitment to taking the assignment in Chile if it was offered.

[85] In June, the head of resourcing for Asda stores in the United Kingdom reached out to Ms. Galea. Ms. Galea corresponded with Andy Clarke of Asda about the prospects available for her as Chief Merchandising Officer across all lines of business, or a split CMO role for either food or non-food sales.

[86] By the end of June, Ms. Galea was communicating with Mr. William (Bill) Simon, who had just been promoted to President and CEO of Wal-Mart U.S. Ms. Galea informed Mr. Simon that she was interested in working with Asda in the UK. She was interested in the Chief Merchandising Officer role. She told Mr. Simon on June 29, 2010, that she was travelling to the United Kingdom the following week to meet with Andy Clarke, the President and CEO of Asda. She also told Mr. Simon that she had already spent a week with Enrique Ostale in Chile with the hope of acquiring the role of Chief Merchandising Officer there.

[87] Throughout Ms. Galea’s exploration of international opportunities, Mr. Cheesewright was passive in assisting her to find a role. In the meantime, Ms. Galea took the opportunity to develop international contacts when she was in Bentonville from time to time to work with Ed Kolachynski. On one occasion, she spoke with Doug McMillon about her prospects with Asda.

[88] Ms. Galea wrote to Mr. McMillon on July 19, 2010, to thank him for the guidance and insight that he had provided a week before. In that email, she told him how excited she was about the potential opportunity to work with a great business like Asda, and how she looked forward to further discussions with Andy Clarke in the UK.

[89] Mr. McMillon responded the following day with an email that said “Hi Gail, I’ll help in any way that I can. I look forward to seeing your impact. Doug.”

[90] Mr. Cheesewright and Mr. Hakeem travelled to Bentonville on or about July 22, 2010, for the annual Talent Review meeting for Wal-Mart International. This was the forum where the Presidents and heads of Human Resources from Wal-Mart companies around the world would meet and discuss matters of importance to Wal-Mart worldwide, and to identify those eligible for promotion for Wal-Mart operations and management. This meeting provided an opportunity for Mr. Cheesewright to speak with Mr. Clarke or with Chet Kuchinad who were attending from the UK about a possible role for her at Asda.

The PAR Grid as a Measure

[91] An Associate at Wal-Mart is ranked two ways for promotion potential. One way is the rating given by upper management on a performance grid, known as a People Asset Review, or PAR. After a PAR review, the name of the individual is placed into the appropriate box on a 9 box PAR grid determined by the upper management for the Wal-Mart company in that country. The PAR rating for an Associate is influential for management of the Wal-Mart company in a country to know the skill set and potential of the Associate for advancement.

[92] The second is the Associate Opinion Survey (AOS) score, which is calculated by a complex grading system made up of answers to questionnaires completed by people who report directly and indirectly to the designated Associate.

[93] Ms. Galea was familiar with the nine box grid that had been used by upper management at Wal-Mart since 2008. She knew that she had been rated at the Q1 or Q2 level according to the criteria for those boxes on the 2008 PAR grid the previous year. These ratings made her promotable. The rating of Associates on the grid was the reference guide that upper management would use when making decisions about that the best people to promote internally, or to make a recommendation to Wal-Mart affiliates in other countries for expatriate assignments. This grid was marked as Exhibit “J” at trial.

[94] Ms. Galea had met earlier with Susan Chambers, Executive Vice President of People at Wal-Mart International on a trip to Arkansas. She had taken the trip to Bentonville to meet with Brian Cornel, President and CEO of Sam’s Club, a Wal-Mart affiliate in the Wal-Mart U.S. organization. She left her meeting with Mr. Cornel expecting to receive a job offer from Sam’s Club.

[95] It was from Susan Chambers that Ms. Galea learned for the first time that she had been moved from a Q1 rating on the 2008 PAR grid that she believed to be applicable at all material times in 2010, to a Q5 rating. She also learned from Susan Chambers that her AOS score had been recorded as 59, instead of the 65 she knew she had been given.

[96] According to the guidelines used to interpret the meaning for each box on the 2008 PAR grid, a Q5 rating meant that she was not currently considered promotable.

[97] In the Amended Fresh as amended Statement of Claim, Ms. Galea has pleaded that Mr. Cheesewright changed her rating on the applicable PAR grid from Q1 to Q5 without her knowledge. Mr. Cheesewright admitted this fact.

[98] The AOS score for Ms. Galea had been recorded at 59 in 2010. Previously, her AOS score had been 65. This was confirmed on her performance review on April 16, 2010. Ms. Galea requested that Ms. Chambers take immediate steps to have her AOS score reviewed and corrected.

[99] Mr. Cheesewright was examined for discovery as the representative produced by Wal-Mart on July 19, 2012. At that examination, Wal-Mart had produced a 9 box grid for 2012 that was marked as Exhibit U3 at trial. The box for the Q5 rating on this 2012 PAR grid reads “Consistent performer with potential for promotion. Need more evidence to show strong results/confirm potential. Action: Targeted development related to current role challenges.”

[100] On December 30, 2015, virtually days before this trial would commence, Wal-Mart Canada provided answers to undertakings. One of those undertakings was to answer a question relating to the production of the PAR grid in effect at

Wal-Mart Canada in 2010. The following question and answer was given as that undertaking:

Q. 1136-1140 Produced "box grids" for years 2007, 2008, 2009 and 2010 if they are different that box grid Canada version 2012 at Exhibit 10.

A. No such documents for those years have been located, but they were likely the same or substantially similar.

[101] When looking at the interpretation guide for the 2012 PAR grid, Ms. Galea noted that the Q5 terms for what the Q5 box signified had been changed from the grid she believed was in place in 2010. In any event, she was not at Wal-Mart Canada in 2012. She did not use this document during her years at Wal-Mart Canada.

Ms. Galea goes to Harvard

[102] The program at Harvard that Ms. Galea attended in 2010 lasted for eight weeks. This program was offered to 110 selected participants representing different industries from all corners of the world. Susan Chambers and Mr. Cheesewright had both suggested that Ms. Galea would find the Harvard program a positive experience.

[103] Before she left for Harvard, Ms. Galea met with Mr. Cheesewright on August 5, 2010 upon returning from Bentonville. She asked him why she had been changed from a Q1 to a Q5 rating on the PAR grid. Mr. Cheesewright did not respond to her question about the change of her PAR rating to Q5. Mr. Cheesewright instead suggested she speak with Mr. Hakeem about the change to her AOS score.

[104] Ms. Galea told Mr. Cheesewright at the time that she had met with Brian Cornel at Sam's Club, and that the meeting had gone well. Mr. Cheesewright told her that she should be ready to go if Sam's Club made an offer to her. He also informed her that the position with Asda Foods in the UK was still a possibility. Mr. Cheesewright then told her that the last six months had not gone the way he had hoped. He undertook to speak to an individual he knew about a possible role for her in the new dot.com business that Wal-Mart was developing.

[105] At this time, however, Ms. Galea felt that eight years of her life had been invested in Wal-Mart Canada, and the respect that had been earned during those eight years had been taken away. She told the court that this had all been a very difficult time for her physically and mentally, and for her entire family.

[106] Ms. Galea continued as a member of the Presidents Global Council for Women Leaders for Wal-Mart worldwide. Ms. Galea was one of three women who prepared a report that would be presented to Mike Duke and his direct reports at Wal-Mart International on the ex patriate program. This program addressed an issue identified within Wal-Mart that there was no program to repatriate those employees who had relocated to another country to work at a Wal-Mart affiliate.

[107] While at the program at Harvard, Ms. Galea was on a conference call where she learned that Mr. McNaughton would be returning to the United States.

Events in November, 2010

[108] Ms. Galea returned from the program at Harvard on November 1, 2010. Upon returning to the executive offices of Wal-Mart Canada, she discovered that her personal effects had been packed up and moved from her office to another office entirely. From that location, she would not have access to Mr. Cheesewright at all. Even her telephone had been disconnected.

[109] Ms. Galea was also omitted from the hotel room assignment list for a strategic planning meeting for management that Wal-Mart Canada was organizing off site. She had routinely been included in this meeting in past years.

[110] The strategic planning meeting organized by Wal-Mart Canada took place on November 4, 2010. Ms. Galea attended after her name had been added to the room allocation list. At that meeting, she met with Mr. Cheesewright and Mr. Hakeem to determine what her role and responsibilities were to be going forward. At that time, Mr. Hakeem told her to keep an open mind and that Wal-Mart Canada would have an offer to make to her. She was told to meet with Mr. Cheesewright and Mr. Hakeem when they had all returned from the strategic planning meeting.

[111] On November 9, 2010, Ms. Galea attended a meeting with Mr. Cheesewright expecting to receive an offer of a position. According to Ms. Galea, Mr. Cheesewright started the meeting off by telling her that she was one of the best merchandisers, and a high achiever, at Wal-Mart Canada. He stated that he was impressed by the way she had handled the last six months. He then suggested that they not talk about the past, but focus instead on the future.

[112] Mr. Cheesewright explained that although Wal-Mart Canada had replaced the Chief Merchandising Officer twice in three years, he did not feel that she was ready for the job. He told her that he wanted her to run the E-commerce business, and to report to Sean Clarke. Mr. Cheesewright then gave Ms. Galea a letter dated November 9, 2010 that offered her the position of Senior Vice President E-Commerce or the choice of accepting an offer of severance from her employment with Wal-Mart Canada.

[113] Ms. Galea was shocked at this letter. It directly contradicted the comments Mr. Cheesewright had made at the meeting. She considered the position of Senior Vice President E-Commerce to be a position that was not comparable to her experience. It was a job offer extended on a probationary basis, and proposed entirely on terms that favoured Wal-Mart.

[114] Ms. Galea went home and discussed the entire situation with her family. To Ms. Galea, Mr. Cheesewright's behaviour showed that Wal-Mart did not have confidence in her. The letter of November 9, 2010 gave her two options, neither of which she considered acceptable.

[115] Ms. Galea told Mr. Hakeem that she had received this letter. She told him that this turn of events would have an impact on her whole family. Her husband was in poor health, and she was the sole wage earner. Mr. Hakeem gave Ms. Galea his personal telephone number and told her that he was open to discussion.

[116] Mr. Hakeem subsequently sent Ms. Galea a text message and advised her that he would like to talk to her at home. During that call, Mr. Hakeem told her that Sean Clarke would not be staying in Canada with Wal-Mart and was moving to the United States. He told her that Shelly Broader would be her new superior at Wal-Mart Canada. Mr. Hakeem characterized her choice to stay with Wal-Mart as Senior Vice President E-Commerce as a high-risk decision, and told her that Ms. Broader did not want her in the organization.

[117] Ms. Galea understood from speaking with Mr. Hakeem that if she worked under Ms. Broader and reported directly to her, her position of Senior Vice President E-Commerce would be challenging and she would only be delaying the inevitable. Mr. Hakeem discussed these matters with Ms. Galea because he wanted her to have all of the information to make an educated decision. He wanted her to make the best choice between the offers that Wal-Mart extended in the letter dated November 9, 2010.

[118] Throughout this time, Ms. Galea states that Mr. Cheesewright expressed his support, and his commitment to her success. In contrast, Mr. Hakeem was suggesting to her that accepting the position of Senior Vice President E-Commerce would not be a good one because Ms. Broader was not supportive of her. He recommended that she should take the opportunity to bow out gracefully.

[119] Ms. Galea also understood from Mr. Hakeem that her Q5 rating would be a hurdle for her promotion within Wal-Mart Canada or in the Wal-Mart organization, or to her advancement in the company generally.

[120] Ms. Galea made an effort to meet with Mr. Cheesewright and Mr. Hakeem to discuss the developing situation with respect to Ms. Broader and the offer of the Senior Vice President E-Commerce position. That meeting was never arranged because of scheduling difficulties. Mr. Cheesewright and Mr. Hakeem were never available at the same time to meet with Ms. Galea.

[121] On November 19, 2010, Ms. Galea was scheduled to meet again with Mr. Hakeem. She had spent the last nine months performing tasks assigned to her by Wal-Mart. She had on-going concerns about her Q5 rating and what it meant. She wished to speak with Mr. Hakeem about her concerns with the position of Senior Vice President E-Commerce she had been offered, and how it provided no career path forward. She also wished to discuss the NCA to seek clarity about what she was entitled to receive under it.

[122] Ms. Galea told Mr. Hakeem that she had met with Mr. Cheesewright about the job. She told him she was not considering the severance option because Mr. Cheesewright had encouraged her to accept the E-Commerce position whereas Mr. Hakeem had not. She felt conflicted. At this meeting she told Mr. Hakeem that she not only needed clarity, but needed him to make it work for her.

[123] Later that day, Ms. Galea was called into Mr. Cheesewright's office. Mr. Cheesewright informed Ms. Galea in a matter of fact way that she was being terminated from her employment with Wal-Mart Canada.

[124] Ms. Galea was devastated by this statement. She could not understand how she could have spiralled downward from her place as a top performer. She could not reconcile how Mr. Cheesewright would consistently tell her that he supported her, and what Mr. Hakeem had been telling her from a practical perspective.

[125] Mr. Hakeem did not attend this meeting in Mr. Cheesewright's office. Ms. Galea therefore went directly to Mr. Hakeem's office after Mr. Cheesewright had terminated her employment. Mr. Hakeem then gave her a severance letter. Although that letter provides two options with respect to providing severance, it was agreed at trial between counsel because of the "without prejudice" nature of the letter that only the first paragraph was admissible in evidence. This paragraph read as follows:

"This will serve to confirm the details of our meeting today. As we have been unable to come to a mutual decision with respect to the employment options detailed in the letter provided to you on November 8, 2010, we have come to the difficult decision that it is in your best interest and in the best interest of the company that your employment be terminated effective immediately."

[126] Ms. Galea was mortified by what this letter portrayed. First, there had been no letter dated November 8, 2010. If Wal-Mart Canada meant to refer to the letter dated November 9, 2010, no options acceptable to her had been given as both choices were equally detrimental to her career.

[127] Ms. Galea states that she never received a job description for the role of Senior Vice President E-Commerce. Nothing had come of the projects she had been given as Vice-President Merchandising –Strategic Initiatives. There had been no job offers from any Wal-Mart affiliate she had actively pursued. The Company had provided no viable options for her to stay employed. She now realized that Wal-Mart had just taken nine months to make the decision to let her go.

Payments received after Termination

[128] Wal-Mart Canada continued to pay Ms. Galea her base salary for the next 11.5 months, and then stopped. Wal-Mart provided Ms. Galea's record of employment that erroneously recorded her last day of payment as November 4, 2011. Ms. Galea responded through her solicitor's letter dated November 29, 2011, that she required a corrected record of employment with the correct dates. This letter also stated that Wal-Mart had cancelled all of Ms. Galea's medical, dental and life insurance benefits without communicating termination of these benefits to her, or providing her with reasonable notice that it would be taking such steps.

[129] Ms. Galea's lawyers also stated in the letter dated November 29, 2011, that although the executive retirement plan statement provided to Ms. Galea indicated that she had received her incentive bonus for the year end January 2011 in the amount of $129,047, she had never received that money. Her lawyers also stated that they expected that amount to be paid immediately, with interest. It is unclear from the evidence given at trial if that bonus was ever paid to Ms. Galea.

[130] On December 19, 2011, Heenan Blaikie wrote a letter on behalf of its client, Wal-Mart Canada, to Ms. MacDonald, counsel for Ms. Galea. Enclosed in that letter were two cheques payable to Ms. Galea for $18,224.07 and $3,208.08, respectively for vacation pay, and the corrected record of employment for Ms. Galea dated December 9, 2011.

ANALYSIS

[131] The damages that Ms. Galea claims against Wal-Mart come from two sources. She seeks one set of damages of a contractual nature that flow from the NCA as an employment contract. The NCA provides that Wal-Mart would continue to pay Ms. Galea for two years if she was not dismissed for cause, and she abided by the terms of the NCA not to compete with Wal-Mart. Ms. Galea was not dismissed for cause, and there was no evidence given that she breached any term of the NCA.

[132] Ms. Galea claims another set of damages at law for moral damages, and for punitive damages flowing from Wal-Mart's conduct. She seeks moral damages to compensate her for the mental and emotional distress caused by Wal-Mart's breach of its duty as her employer to treat her as an employee in good faith, and to deal fairly with her in the manner of terminating her employment. Wal-Mart's liability for these damages arises from its conduct on and after January 29, 2010, to the actual date it terminated Ms. Galea's employment on November 19, 2010.

[133] Ms. Galea also seeks moral damages for the mental distress and aggravating circumstances Wal-Mart has caused her over the course of the litigation, including trial.

[134] Finally, Ms. Galea has made a substantial claim for punitive damages to sanction Wal-Mart for its conduct throughout the termination process, including the litigation that followed.

[135] In her Amended Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim, Ms. Galea seeks the following relief:

1. damages in the amount of $1,750,000;

2. damages in the amount of $144,282 representing the plaintiff's bonus entitlement for fiscal 2010;
3. an accounting of the value of the performance shares that would have vested over the reasonable notice period, and judgment on that value;
4. an accounting of the value of 4% of the fiscal year end earnings in the plaintiff's deferred profit sharing plan (the "DPSP") for fiscal 2010 as well as the contributions that would have been made over the period of the plaintiff's notice entitlement, and judgment for those amounts;
5. an accounting for the value of 13% of the plaintiff's salary and bonus for fiscal 2010 and judgment on that value in lieu of the plaintiff's entitlement under the executive retirement plan (the "ERP");
6. an accounting of the value of the ERP contributions that the plaintiff would have received over the reasonable notice period, and judgment on that value;
7. moral damages in the amount of $1,000,000; and
8. punitive damages in the amount of $1,000,000.

[136] In addition to those damages, Ms. Galea seeks pre-judgement interest under the Courts of Justice Act, and costs.

INTERPRETATION OF EMPLOYMENT CONTRACTS

[137] There are few things in the life of a working adult more fundamentally important to a person outside of her or his family than the relationship with her or his employer. Chief Justice Dickson enshrined this importance of a person's work in the judgment of the court in reference Re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alberta), 1987 CanLII 88 \(SCC\), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313, at para. 91, where he said:

Work is one of the most fundamental aspects in a person's life, providing the individual with a means of financial support and, as importantly, a contributory role in society. A person's employment is an essential component of his or her sense of identity, self-worth and emotional well-being.

[138] The manner in which a person is terminated from her or his employment is as important as the employment itself. Justice Iacobucci determined that it is on termination of employment that a person is most vulnerable, and it is at that time that a person is most in need of protection: Wallace v. United Grain Growers Ltd., 1997 CanLII 332 \(SCC\), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 701.

[139] The Court of Appeal has recently canvassed the law relating to the interpretation of employment contracts in Wood v. Fred Deeley Imports Ltd., 2017 ONCA 158. In Wood v. Fred Deeley Imports Ltd., the court explained that where a termination clause can reasonably be interpreted in more than one way, courts should prefer the interpretation that gives the greater benefit to the employee, citing Ceccol v. Ontario Gymnastics Federation (2001), 55 O.R. (3d) 614, 2001 CanLII 8589 \(Ont. C.A.\), as authority.

[140] In this action, Ms. Galea makes a claim for contractual damages for Wal-Mart's breach of the NCA. In effect, Ms. Galea is seeking specific performance of the NCA. However, because Wal-Mart stopped paying under the NCA and has denied certain claims she has made for entitlement under one or more incentive plans over the transition period, Ms. Galea seeks damages for breach of contract. This cause of action is consistent with the conclusion reached by the Court of Appeal in Love v. Acuity Investment Management Inc., 2011 ONCA 130, and as discussed in Lin v. Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan Board, 2016 ONCA 619 at paragraphs 84 to 89.

[141] Ms. Galea relied on the NCA as an employment contract at trial. While Wal-Mart did not concede that the NCA operates as an employment contract, neither does it strenuously resist that characterization. Ms. Galea bases her claim for damages on the express language of the NCA that provides that she is entitled to salary and benefits as transition payments for two years if she abides by her obligations not to compete with Wal-Mart.

[142] An employment agreement providing a fixed term contract can be either express or implied. A fixed term can be expressed in words, such as the five year term in Howard v. Benson Group Inc., 2016 ONCA 256. A fixed term can be implied from the language of an employment agreement where the essential elements of offer, acceptance and consideration are found. In Ballim v. Bausch & Lomb Canada Inc., 2016 ONSC 6307, Justice Lederman found that the parties had entered into a binding agreement giving the employee a one year contract. The court implied a fixed term based on the provisions in the agreement relating to the number of months the employee would be paid for his work.

[143] I conclude, on considering the principles summarized in Wood v. Fred Deeley Imports Ltd., that the NCA was an employment contract that entitled Ms. Galea to transition payments for a fixed term of two years, provided she complied with her own obligations under the NCA. There was no evidence led at trial that Ms. Galea did anything other than honour those obligations. There is no defence asserted that Ms. Galea had a duty to mitigate any amount she was owed under the NCA. In any event, the Court of Appeal in Howard v. Benson Group Inc. has now determined on a definitive basis that an employee with a fixed term contract has no duty to mitigate.

[144] The question at trial with respect to the NCA and Ms. Galea's claim for contractual damages was the basis and amount for that claim.

Covenant not to Compete (The "NCA")

[145] On September 9, 2005, Ms. Galea and Wal-Mart entered into the NCA. In exchange for the covenant given by Ms. Galea not to compete, Wal-Mart agreed that it would, for a period of two years from the effective date of such termination, continue to pay Ms. Galea the following:

- 1) her base salary;
- 2) any incentive payable in accordance with the Annual Incentive Plan in effect on the date of termination; and
- 3) its portion of health and dental benefit premiums in accordance with such plans in effect on the date of termination.

[146] The payments that Wal-Mart agreed to pay were referred to as "transition payments". The period of time for which those transition payments would be made were referred to in the agreement as the "transition period".

[147] Under paragraph 14 of the NCA, Ms. Galea acknowledged that she had received a copy of it, and that she had read the agreement carefully before signing. This acknowledgement also confirmed that Ms. Galea had ample opportunity to ask questions concerning the agreement and had been given the opportunity to discuss the agreement with legal counsel of her choosing. Paragraph 14 provided that she understood her rights and obligations under the agreement, and entered into the agreement voluntarily. Ms. Galea did not seek legal advice prior to signing the NCA.

[148] The NCA was executed by Mary Alice Vuicic, Vice President, People on behalf of Wal-Mart, and by Ms. Galea.

Principles of Interpretation

[149] The principles of how the court will interpret the terms of an employment contract reaffirmed recently in Wood v. Fred Deeley Imports Ltd. are reflected in the trial reasons of this court in O'Neill v. General Motors of Canada, 2013 ONSC 4654. In O'Neill, the court held that employment contracts hold a “special place” in the constellation of contracts, and must be interpreted with the goal of protecting employees. This reflects the inherent power imbalance that is often found in the employment relationship:

[72] The third reason relates to the special place of employment contracts. Courts have recognized that because of the importance of employment to individuals and the need to protect employees who are generally vulnerable in the bargaining relationship, employment contracts are unlike ordinary commercial contracts.[16] Legal commentators have noted that in employment law, these policy goals inform the interpretive process, and as a result, in the absence of “clear language mandating some other result,” employment contracts are interpreted so as to protect employees.”

[150] In my view, there could be no greater power imbalance than Wal-Mart as the employer and Ms. Galea as an employee who not only promised to dedicate herself and her career to Wal-Mart, but also promised to forfeit any opportunity of a competitive position with another mass retailer for two years following her termination from employment, even if it was without cause.

[151] Ms. Galea relies upon the general law for contractual relations enshrined in Bhasin v. Hrynew, 2014 SCC 71. The Supreme Court of Canada in Bhasin v. Hrynew recognized good faith as a primary organizational principle underlying contract law in Canada, a principle that is well-founded in Ontario. This principle of good faith includes a duty of honesty and a duty to act reasonably, and not capriciously or arbitrarily in contractual relations. As the court explained at para. 73:

[73] In my view, we should. I would hold that there is a general duty of honesty in contractual performance. This means simply that parties must not lie or otherwise knowingly mislead each other about matters directly linked to the performance of the contract. This does not impose a duty of loyalty or of disclosure or require a party to forego advantages flowing from the contract; it is a simple requirement not to lie or mislead the other party about one's contractual performance. Recognizing a duty of honest performance flowing directly from the common law organizing principle of good faith is a modest, incremental step. The requirement to act honestly is one of the most widely recognized aspects of the organizing principle of good faith: see Swan and Adamski, at § 8.135; O'Byrne, "Good Faith in Contractual Performance: Recent Developments", at p. 78; Belobaba; Greenberg v. Meffert (1985), 1985 CanLII 1975 \(ON CA\), 50 O.R. (2d) 755 (C.A.), at p. 764; Gateway Realty, at para. 38, per Kelly J.; Shelanu Inc. v. Print Three Franchising Corp. (2003), 2003 CanLII 52151 \(ON CA\), 64 O.R. (3d) 533 (C.A.), at para. 69. For example, the duty of honesty was a key component of the good faith requirements which have been recognized in relation to termination of employment contracts: Wallace, at para. 98; Honda Canada, at para. 58.

[152] This principle requirement to act in good faith, including the duty to act honestly and reasonably in the performance of a contract, is fundamental in the context of employment relationships: Styles v. Alberta Investment Management Corporation, 2015 ABQB 621. This organizing principle of good faith is even more pronounced in the setting where an employer is terminating a person's employment, and that termination affects the contractual rights of the departing employee.

Surrounding circumstances

[153] In Consolidated Bathurst Export Ltd. v. Mutual Boiler and Machinery Insurance Co., 1979 CanLII 10 \(SCC\), [1980] 1 S.C.R. 888, Justice Estey of the Supreme Court of Canada approved the proposition put forth by Mr. Justice Meredith in Pense v. Northern Life Assurance Co. (1907), 15 O.L.R. 131, aff'd (1908), 1908 CanLII 11 \(SCC\), 42 S.C.R. 246, that meaning must be given to the intention of the parties, gathered from the words they have used.

[154] The Supreme Court of Canada has recently held in Sattva Capital Corporation v. Creston Moly Corp., 2014 SCC 53 \(CanLII\), [2014] S.C.J. No. 53 that the modern approach to the interpretation of a contract is treated as a question of mixed fact and law. The court explained in Sattva that the interpretation of contracts has evolved toward a common sense approach where the overriding concern is to determine "the intent of the parties and the scope of their understanding" in the following way:

47 Regarding the first development, the interpretation of contracts has evolved towards a practical, common-sense approach not dominated by technical rules of construction. The overriding concern is to determine "the intent of the parties and the scope of their understanding" (Jesuit Fathers of Upper Canada v. Guardian Insurance Co. of Canada, 2006 SCC 21, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 744, at para. 27 per LeBel J.; see also Tercon Contractors Ltd. v. British Columbia (Transportation and Highways), 2010 SCC 4, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 69, at paras. 64-65 per Cromwell J.). To do so, a decision-maker must read the contract as a whole, giving the words used their ordinary and grammatical meaning, consistent with the surrounding circumstances known to the parties at the time of formation of the contract. Consideration of the surrounding circumstances recognizes that ascertaining contractual intention can be difficult when looking at words on their own, because words alone do not have an immutable or absolute meaning:

No contracts are made in a vacuum: there is always a setting in which they have to be placed... . In a commercial contract it is certainly right that the court should know the commercial purpose of the contract and this in turn presupposes knowledge of the genesis of the transaction, the background, the context, the market in which the parties are operating.

[155] The Supreme Court also examined the nature of the evidence that a court can reliably consider to reach conclusions about the surrounding circumstances in which the agreement came to be. In paragraph 58, Justice Rothstein wrote:

58 The nature of the evidence that can be relied upon under the rubric of "surrounding circumstances" will necessarily vary from case to case. It does, however, have its limits. It should consist only of objective evidence of the background facts at the time of the execution of the contract (King, at paras. 66 and 70), that is, knowledge that was or reasonably ought to have been within the knowledge of both parties at or before the date of contracting. Subject to these requirements and the parol evidence rule discussed below, this includes, in the words of Lord Hoffmann, "absolutely anything which would have affected the way in which the language of the document would have been understood by a reasonable man" (Investors Compensation Scheme, at p. 114). Whether something was or reasonably ought to have been within the common knowledge of the parties at the time of execution of the contract is a question of fact.

[156] The reference to surrounding circumstances when engaged in the interpretation of contracts, however, comes with a warning. The Supreme Court in Sattva recognized that the review of circumstances surrounding the formation of a contract for the purposes of its interpretation must never "overwhelm" the actual language used by the parties. The objective for considering surrounding circumstances is to gain a better understanding of the mutual intention of the parties having regard to the words and phrases used by them in the contract. Nor is the consideration of surrounding circumstance to offend the parol evidence rule.

[157] In view of the different positions taken by the parties with respect to what constituted an Annual Incentive Plan as that term is used in the NCA, I consider the surrounding circumstances relevant to properly interpret and apply the contractual intent of the parties under the NCA.

Plaintiff's position on the evidence

[158] Ms. Galea understood from what Mario Piloizzi and Mary Vuicic told her in 2005 that Wal-Mart had the obligation under the NCA to "make her whole" for the two years of the transition period if she was terminated without cause, provided she did not compete or otherwise contravene the noncompetition provisions of the NCA. She trusted Mr. Pillozzi and Ms. Vuicic. It was because of quality people like them that she had joined Wal-Mart Canada in the first place. She understood that to be made whole meant that she would participate in all incentives provided to an employee of her level under any annual incentive plan. She read the term Annual Incentive Plan in the NCA as a collective term, and not in reference to a single document.

Defendant's position on the evidence

[159] The position taken by Mr. Dye on behalf of Wal-Mart Canada relies on a literal reading of the term Annual Incentive Plan. It requires a document with that title to provide entitlement to any incentive for Ms. Galea to receive over the transition period.

[160] Wal-Mart Canada further relies upon principles of general application, taken together with rules of contractual interpretation, to argue that Ms. Galea's entitlement to participate under any incentive program is subject to the terms of the governing plan or contract.

[161] In a surprising concession during his examination in-chief, Mr. Cheesewright stated that the NCA supersedes and replaces the terms of the plans with respect to the plans for which Will Wilson was called to testify about at trial. Those plans included the Wal-Mart Canada Inc. stock incentive plan of 1998 in place when Ms. Galea was hired, the Wal-Mart Canada Corp. Executive Retirement Plan that was in effect when she entered the NCA, the FYE 2006 incentive plan in place when Ms. Galea entered the NCA, the 2008 LTIP and the Wal-Mart 2011 incentive plan for Ms. Galea's pay band 9 in effect when she was terminated on November 19, 2010.

Relevance of Surrounding Circumstances

[162] Wal-Mart did not call any witness to testify about the circumstances that prevailed at the time Ms. Galea and Wal-Mart signed off on the NCA in 2005. Mr. Cheesewright conceded that he could not give evidence regarding the NCA because he was not an employee of Wal-Mart when it was entered. Mr. Cheesewright was hired by Wal-Mart Canada in 2007.

[163] Ms. Galea's evidence about her entitlement under the NCA based on what she was told at the time the NCA was signed is uncontradicted. Although Ms.

Galea's recollection of what Mario Piloizzi or Ms. Vuicic told her was ruled inadmissible at trial, her understanding from what she was told goes to the circumstances surrounding the formation and contractual intent behind the NCA . It is therefore relevant, and admissible in evidence.

DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT

Base Salary

[164] Ms. Galea served a Request to Admit on counsel for Wal-Mart pursuant to Rule 51 of the Rules of Civil Procedure before trial. Counsel for Wal-Mart served a response to that request to admit. It is admitted as a fact that Ms. Galea was earning $288,565 a year as a base salary at the date of her termination. Under the NCA, Wal-Mart was to continue paying Ms. Galea her base salary for two years, for a total of $577,130. Wal-Mart in fact continued to pay Ms. Galea her salary for 11.5 months into the transition period when it ceased making those payments, unceremoniously and without notice.

[165] There is no dispute that Wal-Mart paid Ms. Galea her base salary and benefits for 25 pay periods, representing approximately 11.5 months after the date of termination. Wal-Mart acknowledges that Ms. Galea is owed 54 weeks for the balance of the two year transition period, for a total of $299,644.

Benefit Plan Premiums

[166] The NCA specified that Wal-Mart would continue paying its portion of the premiums for health and dental benefits to cover Ms. Galea for the transition period. Ms. Galea gave evidence that she participated in the Wal-Mart group benefit plan for coverage of health – family, dental – family, long term disability, basic life, dependent life and basic accidental death and disability coverage. Wal-Mart continued to carry Ms. Galea and her family on the group plan for 11.5 months after termination.

[167] Ms. Galea seeks 10 percent of her base salary to replace the benefit coverage by the group plan that should have continued for 12.5 months, being the balance of the transition period. This compensation would provide Ms. Galea with the funds necessary to purchase similar coverage from a private carrier.

[168] Ms. MacDonald made submissions to the court that the 10 percent used by Ms. Galea for the valuation of this claim is based on the approach taken by this court in Camaganacan v. St. Joseph's Printing Ltd., 2010 ONSC 5184. In that decision, Justice Whitaker held that 10 percent of an employee's base salary is a good approximation of what it would cost to replace group benefits under an employee group benefit plan.

[169] Wal-Mart takes a different approach. First, Mr. Dye submits that the NCA only requires Wal-Mart to continue with payment of its portion of the health and dental benefits extended to Ms. Galea during her employment. Wal-Mart called Joseph Chan to give evidence relating to Ms. Galea's coverage under the group plan for health and dental premiums. Other benefits for which Ms. Galea received coverage during her employment are not mentioned in the NCA. In fact, subsection 2(g) of the NCA expressly excludes any benefits other than those expressly listed. Wal-Mart also refers to the evidence given by Will Wilson and Joseph Chan that Ms. Galea was solely responsible for paying the full premium cost of long term disability insurance benefits.

[170] Wal-Mart paid premiums that were based on a group rate pursuant to an agreement between Wal-Mart and the insurance provider for the employment benefit group plan coverage. No witness for Wal-Mart told the court how much premiums would cost for Ms. Galea to pay for the purchase of health and dental coverage outside of those group rates.

[171] Wal-Mart submits that there is no evidentiary basis for the court to make a finding that Ms. Galea should receive 10 percent of her base salary to compensate her for the loss of group benefits. It has been held that an estimate of the cost to an employer of fringe benefits that is equated to the plaintiff's loss does not satisfy the burden of proof on the plaintiff: Martin v. Midland-Walwyn Inc., 1993 CarswellOnt 957.

[172] Wal-Mart states that the only evidence of the actual value of the benefits that Wal-Mart terminated was given by Joseph Chan. According to Mr. Chan's evidence, Wal-Mart's portion of those premiums for health and dental coverage amounted to $66.04 per pay. The amount of this premium over 27 pays would therefore be $1,783.08, plus HST for a total of $1,925.73.

[173] Ms. Galea has the burden of proof to provide evidence to prove each part of her claim. There was no evidence called to prove the amount she is claiming for Wal-Mart's failure to pay the required premiums.

[174] In view of the evidence given by the witnesses for Wal-Mart and the principle of general application for the court to determine the value of premiums to purchase or replace group benefit plan coverage, I am awarding Ms. Galea double the value of Wal-Mart's cost of the premiums to compensate her for lost health and dental benefits over 12.5 months without the volume discount arranged by Wal-Mart. I have taken the contractual language of the NCA into account that Wal-Mart is only responsible for its portion of the premiums, and not the full cost of the premiums claimed by Ms. Galea. Furthermore, the NCA does not require Wal-Mart to continue paying premiums on any benefits other than health and dental benefits. Therefore, the damages awarded for this claim are $3,851.46.

What Incentive Plan does the NCA apply to?

[175] Ms. Galea claims damages for Wal-Mart's failure to pay any incentive payable in accordance with the Annual Incentive Plan in effect on the date of termination. She claims that Wal-Mart has failed to pay under those plans known as the Management Incentive Bonus Plan (MIP), the Deferred Profit Sharing Plan (DPSP), Executive Retirement Plan (ERP) and the Long Term Incentive Plan (LTIP), that transformed into the performance share plan (PSP). She claims that she is entitled to any incentive payable in accordance with those plans to make her whole during the transition period.

[176] Wal-Mart takes the position that Ms. Galea is not entitled to any benefits under these plans. Wal-Mart argues that these plans were not in existence when the NCA was signed in 2005. They were not known to the parties, and could not form the basis of agreement between the contracting parties when the NCA was signed. Wal-Mart also relies upon the contractual language used in the relevant agreements, constituting documents and related notices for those plans in effect on Ms. Galea's date of termination. Wal-Mart argues that the language of those plans exclude resulting benefits as transition payments to Ms. Galea under the NCA because her employment was terminated, effective immediately, by the letter dated November 19, 2010.

[177] The Court of Appeal in Paquette v. TeraGo Networks Inc., 2016 ONCA 618, confirmed the fundamental principle that damages in a wrongful dismissal case "should place the employee in the same financial position he or she would have been in had reasonable notice of that employee's termination from employment been given." See also Sylvester v. British Columbia, 1997 CanLII 353 \(SCC\), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 315. For the purposes of interpreting the NCA, I consider the same principles should apply to an agreement that provides for the continued payment of salary benefits and other compensation over a prescribed term. The entitlement of an employee in respect of a plan would, of course, be subject to the express language found in a plan, and any other contractual language that applies.

[178] When reading the NCA through the lens provided by the Court of Appeal in Wood, I consider the language used in Section 2 to be broad enough to conclude that “any incentive”, which suggests the possibility that there could be more than one incentive available to her, can only mean that the term Annual Incentive Plan should be read in the plural as Plans. A generous interpretation of Section 2 of the NCA supports the conclusion that Ms. Galea as the employee is entitled to the benefit of those Plans in effect at the time of her termination as part of the compensation regime.

[179] Under Ontario law, a dismissed employee is entitled to damages for the loss of compensation plans over the course of a reasonable period of notice as they form part of the employee’s compensation, subject to contractual terms to the contrary: Kieran v. Ingram Micro Inc., 2004, Canlii 4852 (Ont. C.A.) at paragraph 56. In that respect, the focus must be on the language used in the particular plan.

[180] In this case, Wal-Mart and Ms. Galea have agreed to the fixed term of two years under the NCA as the applicable period for compensation.

MIP – Management Incentive (Bonus) Program

[181] The entitlement under the MIP for Ms. Galea’s 10 months of employment during FYE 2011, and during the transition period, raises a number of issues. First, there is the issue that the bonuses are payable in Wal-Mart’s sole, absolute and unfettered discretion each year.

[182] I have already referred to the views expressed by Paquette v. TeraGo Networks Inc., where the Court of Appeal explained that the basic principle in awarding damages for wrongful dismissal is for the parties to recognize that the terminated employee is entitled to compensation for all losses arising from the employer’s failure to give proper notice. The court held, among other things, that damages for wrongful dismissal will “typically include all of the compensation and benefits that the employee would have earned during the notice period”. [emphasis added]

[183] If the payment of a benefit as an incentive bonus comes down to a matter of discretion, that discretion must be exercised properly, which means the discretion must be exercised honestly and in good faith. In Greenberg v. Meffert, 1985 CanLII 1975 (ON CA), 1985 CarswellOnt 727, Justice Robins wrote:

25. Manifestly, in this case the exercise of the discretion was not based on reasoned considerations. Meffert admittedly represented the company in this matter. He, in collusion with Melfi, directed payment of the listing agent's commission to Melfi so that the commission could be divided between them. This kick-back arrangement, or bribe as the trial judge termed it, obviously formed the basis of the purported exercise of discretion on the company's behalf. The company, it is to be noted, did not seek to disassociate itself from the individual respondents but throughout these proceedings has sought to justify their conduct. Its failure to recognize any contractual responsibility to act fairly or reasonably towards the appellant in the exercise of its discretionary power is evidenced by the testimony at trial of its Ontario manager who indicated that the company had no interest in the arrangements between Melfi and Meffert. "What Mr. Melfi does with his share of the commission", he said, "is Mr. Melfi's business and that has nothing to do with the company."

[184] The second issue concerns what ratio to apply to Ms. Galea's base salary to determine the appropriate amount of any bonus payable for the years in question. Ms. Galea claims entitlement to a bonus at 62.5 percent of her base annual salary, or $180,353.13 a year. She refers to the letter from Mr. Cheesewright dated February 3, 2010 that speaks of changing her status to ensure that Wal-Mart offers a competitive remuneration plan for that year in her position as Senior Vice President – Merchandising. This position placed Ms. Galea in an M9 pay band, and increased her potential bonus under MIP from 50 percent to 62.5 percent. Fifty percent of her salary would equal $144,282.50, contrasted with the $180,353.13 she claims.

[185] Ms. Galea also refers to the email from Sean Clarke on November 16, 2010 to a number of his direct reports, including Ms. Galea. In that email, Mr. Clarke reported that the LTIP was tracking at 112% as of the end of October, based on Sales Growth and Return On Investment measurements for Wal-Mart. Although this email was directed at those Associates to advise them of the payout on the LTIP for FYE 2011, the same economics would inform the performance targets under MIP.

[186] Mr. Dye makes the submission that Ms. Galea's claim for a bonus under the MIP in paragraphs 33 and 34 of the Amended Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim is based on a maximum of 50 percent of her base salary. In making that observation, Mr. Dye is correct. The Amended Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim also seeks damages of $144,282 representing Ms. Galea's bonus entitlement for fiscal 2010 in the prayer for relief. This amount is equal to 50% of her base salary. I therefore consider 50 per cent of her base salary to be the cap on Ms. Galea's bonus entitlement under the MIP.

[187] Third, Mr. Dye argues that Ms. Galea has not proven the required performance for Wal-Mart in FYE 2011, or in the two subsequent years to qualify her for a 50% of her base salary, let alone 62.5%. I find as a fact that Wal-Mart did not disclose financial information for use as evidence by either party in its disclosure obligations under the Rules. In the absence of that evidence, I consider the information in Sean Clarke's email, together with the statement that Sales is the biggest opportunity over Qtr4 to influence the FYE 2011 payout as proof that Wal-Mart's financial performance would have resulted in the full bonus of 50 per cent to Ms. Galea each year.

[188] I do not accept the evidence given by Peter Vukovich, Director, Internal Audit at Wal-Mart, about the financial performance of the company for FYE 2011 or 2012. His concessions made on cross-examination, while seemingly honest and earnest, illustrated the shoddy paperwork prepared by Wal-Mart to disclose proper financial accounting. The document found at tab 132 of the Joint Book of Documents was prepared for the litigation, and not in the usual and ordinary course of Wal-Mart's business to qualify as a business record. Other documents relating to the PSP were not signed, or not dated properly by International Finance. These deficiencies, when added to Wal-Mart's failure to disclose its financial statements, leads me to doubt Mr. Vukovich's evidence.

[189] Fourth and finally, Mr. Dye also refers to the contractual language found in the Management Incentive Bonus (Plan No. 7), the FYE 2006 Incentive Plan as well as the FYE 2011 Incentive Plan in effect on Ms. Galea's termination. In the FYE 2011 Incentive Plan, the following clause appears:

To be eligible for payment of any incentive, the individual must be employed in the eligible position by Wal-Mart Canada Corp. on the last day of the employment plan year. No incentive will be paid to anyone who has left the company, for any reason, prior to the end of the incentive plan year, or to any individual working through his or her notice period. "For any reason" includes by resignation, by retirement, or by termination, whether lawful or unlawful, with or without cause, or with or without notice.

[190] The Court of Appeal released the appeal decisions in Lin v. Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan and in Paquette v. TeraGo Networks Inc. on the same day.

Both of these cases provide resounding authority on this issue. The court describes the issue as turning not on the bonus itself, but the damages for the wrongful dismissal, or in Ms. Galea's case, the damages for Wal-Mart's breach of the NCA. Justice van Rensburg explained this distinction for the court in Paquette the following way:

[22] In Taggart v. Canada Life Assurance Co. (2006), 50 C.C.P.B. 163 (Ont. C.A.), Sharpe J.A. explained the correct approach. In relation to the requirement for active service as a prerequisite for the accrual of pension benefits, and its impact on wrongful dismissal damages, he stated at para. 16:

Assuming that the pension plans can be read as requiring active service as a prerequisite for the accrual of pension benefits, I find unpersuasive the argument that this precludes damages as compensation for lost pension benefits. This argument, it seems to me, ignores the legal nature of the respondent's claim. The claim is not ... for the [benefits] themselves. Rather, it is for common law contract damages as compensation for the [benefits] the [employee] would have earned had the [employer] not breached the contract of employment. The [employee] had the contractual right to work and to be paid his salary and receive benefits throughout the entire ... notice period.

[23] Similarly, in the present case the appellant's claim was not for the bonuses themselves, but for common law contract damages as compensation for the income (including bonus payments) he would have received had TeraGo not breached his employment contract by failing to give reasonable notice of termination.

[191] At paragraph 34 of Paquette, Justice van Rensburg reasoned that an employer cannot disentitle the employee to damages for loss of her bonus by reason of its own breach. The same reasoning applies to Wal-Mart in this case.

[192] I conclude on the facts and on the law that Wal-Mart cannot deprive Ms. Galea of her bonus for the proportion of the year she worked during FYE 2011, and over the transition period. However, Ms. Galea must live within the limits of her pleading that claims the annual MIP bonus at 50 percent of her base annual salary. Pleadings matter. Therefore, Ms. Galea is awarded damages for Wal-Mart's breach of the NCA that deprived her the MIP bonus for 9.6 months in 2010, and for the transition period under the NCA at 50 percent of her base salary. This bonus for those timeframes translates into $115,420 and $288,552 respectively.

DPSP – Deferred Profit Sharing Plan

[193] Ms. Galea seeks damages for Wal-Mart's failure to pay her under the DPSP in breach of its contractual obligation under the NCA.

[194] I am allowing Ms. Galea's claim for the contribution towards her account in the DPSP that Wal-Mart should have paid for the 9.6 months she provided services in FYE 2011, and the two years she would be entitled to contributions towards the DPSP as an incentive. This claim is allowed for the same reasons I have found that Ms. Galea is entitled to her management bonus under the MIP. The DPSP was part of the compensation package promised to her in the employment letter dated August 14, 2002, and it was in effect on Ms. Galea's date of termination.

[195] The DPSP is 100 percent funded by Wal-Mart. The parties do not dispute that the amount that Wal-Mart would contribute to the DPSP for an employee would be equal to 4% of the sum made up of that employee's base salary, management bonus and vacation pay for that year. As the parties are agreed that Ms. Galea's base salary for FYE 2011 was $288,565, and as I have found that her annual management incentive bonus is $144,282.50 and that Ms. Galea was paid $21,432.15 in vacation pay, the sum total of $454,279 x 4 percent results in a DPSP contribution of $18,171.16 a year. Over 33.6 months, that DPSP contribution would be $50,416 ($14,534 for FYE 2011 plus $36,342 over the transition period).

ERP – Executive Retirement Plan

[196] Ms. Galea also claims damages for Wal-Mart's breach of the NCA for failure to pay her the equivalent of 13% of her annual salary and bonus under the ERP.

[197] Mr. Wilson admitted that Wal-Mart did not pay out Ms. Galea's ERP balance within 90 days after the termination of her employment, as required by the plan. I do not know if that balance has since been paid.

[198] The employment letter dated August 14, 2002, makes reference to annual contributions that Wal-Mart would make towards Ms. Galea's personal account under a retirement plan. Ms. Galea takes the position that the ERP qualifies as a retirement plan as contemplated in the employment letter when she was hired. She certainly considered the ERP as an incentive plan in effect when she was terminated.

[199] I agree. A retirement plan is designed not only to provide an employee with security at the end of their working years, it is also a retention tool that provides the employee with an incentive to stay employed by the employer as a reward for loyalty and service.

[200] Therefore, Ms. Galea claims damages equal to 13% of the subtotal between her annual salary of $288,565 and her management bonus of $144,282, which equals $432,847 for an ERP contribution of $56,270 per year. Ms. Galea is awarded damages for her entitlement to ERP for two years in the amount of $112,540, plus payment of her ERP from 2010 in the amount of $45,014 for the same reasons I found her entitled to receive for the damages for the loss of her MIP bonus.

LTIP/PSP – Long Term Incentive Plan / Performance Shares

[201] Ms. Galea's claim for damages arising from Wal-Mart's refusal to pay her for the stock options she had been granted but had not exercised up to the date of termination, as well as the performance shares she had been issued, totals $922,315.

[202] The entitlement to stock options, or any plan under which stock options would be granted to an employee at Ms. Galea's level, was not recognized in the employment letter dated August 14, 2002. However, Wal-Mart was operating a stock option program for Wal-Mart associates under the Wal-Mart Canada Inc. Stock Incentive Plan of 1998.

[203] Wal-Mart confirmed Ms. Galea's transfer to the position of General Merchandise Manager in its letter dated September 9, 2005. In that letter, Wal-Mart advised that its management would recommend to the Stock Incentive Plan Committee that she be awarded stock options at the Committee's discretion, subject to the terms of the Wal-Mart Canada Stock Incentive Plan of 1998. At the same time, Wal-Mart required Ms. Galea to execute and deliver the NCA and a Statement of Ethics.

[204] Wal-Mart ultimately enrolled Ms. Galea in the Stock Option Program on the same day that she signed the NCA.

[205] On July 4, 2008, Wal-Mart replaced the Stock Incentive Plan of 1998 with the Wal-Mart Canada Long Term Incentive Plan. Under the LTIP, performance shares would be issued to designated employees, instead of stock options. The award for 2008 was "triple loaded"; Ms. Galea received a one time award equivalent to three standard awards. Those shares would vest over three consecutive years. PSP awards in 2009 and subsequent years would be the amount equivalent to 40 percent of the employee's base salary. Wal-Mart described the purpose of the new PSP in the letter dated July 4, 2008, in a manner that "allows Wal-Mart Canada to better recognize and reward the significant impact of your efforts and contributions have on both the current and future success of our company".

[206] Ms. Galea was pleased when she was informed that she was entitled to participate in the performance share package in 2008. This development moved her incentive plan from a stock option basis to the award of performance shares.

[207] Between September 9, 2008 and March 30, 2010, Wal-Mart would issue notice of plan awards to Ms. Galea to show the performance shares that she had been granted, and when they would vest. On November 15, 2010, Wal-Mart provided Ms. Galea with an Optionee Statement showing options and performance shares exercisable as of November 15, 2010. The Optionee Statement also showed the number of shares and their date of issue, as well as the dates the shares granted in each award would vest. At the date of her termination, January 31, 2011 was the earliest any shares held by Ms Galea would vest. Shares granted in later awards would vest at later dates.

[208] Ms. Galea gave evidence at trial that she considered this Optionee Statement to be like a bank account statement for the options and performance shares she had been given by Wal-Mart.

[209] The Wal-Mart Canada Long Term Incentive Plan of 2008 sets out the terms of the PSP. The term "Associate" is defined to mean any person employed by Wal-Mart or an affiliate. The "Continuous Status as an Associate" is also a defined term:

2.8 "Continuous Status as an Associate" means, notwithstanding any contrary provisions in any applicable agreement of any nature whatsoever, the uninterrupted period during which an Associate provides services to Wal-Mart or an Affiliate at its request, but does not include any notice or period of payment of an indemnity in lieu of notice given upon termination of employment of an Associate for any reason whatsoever, if the Associate does not provide services to Wal-Mart or an Affiliate during said notice or period. Continuous Status as an Associate shall be considered interrupted in the case of Disability but shall otherwise not be considered interrupted by: (i) sick leave; (ii) military leave; (iii) any other leave of absence approved by the Committee, provided that such leave is for a period of not more than 90 days, unless reemployment upon the expiration of such leave is guaranteed by contract or statute, or unless provided otherwise pursuant to any policy adopted by Wal-Mart or an Affiliate, as the case may be, from time to time; or (iv); in the case of transfers between locations of Wal-Mart or between Wal-Mart, any of its Affiliates or their respective successors.

[210] The Continuous Status of Ms. Galea as an Associate is key to her entitlement to exercise the stock options, or rights to redeem performance shares she had not exercised prior to November 19, 2010. Those stock options and performance shares are shown on the Optionee Statement dated November 15, 2010. Ms. Galea's employment was terminated, effective November 19, 2010.

Her Continuous Status had been interrupted as that status did not include any notice or period of payment in lieu of notice upon termination of employment where the Associate does not provide services to Wal-Mart. The termination of that Continuous Status must be read in to the contractual language of the plan documents to determine if any of Ms. Galea's rights survived termination.

[211] The 2008 LTIP contemplates the effect of the employee's termination of employment in Article 5.8, where it states that:

. . . Notwithstanding the foregoing, unless otherwise determined by the committee and specified in the applicable notice of plan award, upon termination of a recipient's Continuous Status as an Associate any then outstanding options, restricted stock, restricted stock rights, stock appreciate rights or performance shares granted to such recipient in respect of which all restrictions were not satisfied prior to the recipient's date of termination of Continuous Status as an Associate shall immediately be cancelled and forfeited and all rights and interests in respect thereof of the recipient or his or her beneficiary shall thereupon terminate, in all cases, for no consideration.

[212] Each notice of plan award that Ms. Galea received under the 2008 LTIP contains a paragraph that provides that, subject to a provision for the event that a recipient's Continuous Status as an Associate terminates, vesting shall be effective on the last day of the applicable Performance Period, provided that the recipient's Continuous Status as an Associate has not terminated on or before that date. The clause that provides for the event where the recipient's Continuous Status as an Associate terminates states that:

(b) For any reason other than the recipient's death, all PSPs granted hereunder that have not vested on or before the date on which the recipient's Continuous Status as an Associate ceases and all rights with respect to such PSPs shall be forfeited by the recipient and shall terminate.

[213] Each notice of plan award was issued in the form of an offer. Ms. Galea signed each notice of plan award for 2008 on November 6, 2008, as well as the notice of plan award for 2009 on January 22, 2009 and June 16, 2009 to accept those terms.

[214] Wal-Mart takes the position that the terms of the 2008 LTIP, and the provisions of each notice of plan award that Ms. Galea accepted, results in the cancellation for forfeiture of those stock options and performance shares that she has not exercised or that have not vested as of the date of her termination.

[215] In Veer v. Dover Corporation (Canada) (1999), 1999 CanLII 3008 \(ON CA\), 120 O.A.C. 394, the Court heard the appeal of an employer who had been ordered by the trial judge to pay damages for stock options held by the dismissed employee over the term of the notice period. On dismissing the appeal, the court determined that entitlement to exercise stock options after dismissal from employment but within the notice period turns on the specific language of the stock option plan.

[216] In Kieran v. Ingram Micro Inc., the court found that the language in the stock option agreement was sufficiently clear to deny an employee entitlement to exercise his stock options over the notice period. Kieran was discussed by the Court of Appeal in Paquette as follows:

[38] Kieran is a stock option case. The issue was whether Mr. Kieran's time for exercising stock options upon the termination of his employment was extended by the common law notice period where he had been dismissed without cause. The stock option plans provided that he had 60 days from the termination of his employment for any reason other than death, disability or retirement to exercise any rights then vested. "Termination of employment" was defined as the date the employee "ceases to perform services for" the employer "without regard to whether the employee continues thereafter to receive any compensatory payments therefrom or is paid salary thereby in lieu of notice of termination."

[217] Justice Lang in Kieran found that the language in the Ingram plans was not ambiguous. The court held that Mr. Kieran was bound by the language of the plans, and that his rights were determined by that language. In the result, his right to exercise options was not extended over the period of reasonable notice, and he was therefore not entitled to damages for the stock options he had never exercised.

[218] Similarly, the Court of Appeal in Love v. Acuity Investment Management Inc. held that the employer's right to repurchase the shares of a departing employee arose when he "ceases to be an employee". Mr. Love was terminated without notice and the termination date represented the end of his employment:

[51] However, he was given no notice. His termination without notice entitled him as a matter of law to full compensation for this breach of his contract of employment. His entitlement to this remedy arose because his employment was terminated by the employer on May 3, 2005. He would not have had this entitlement had his employment continued beyond that date. The end of his notice period represents the end point of his entitlement to compensation in lieu of notice, not the end point of his employment.

[52] In short, the respondent terminated the appellant on May 3, 2005. That severed his employment relationship as of that date. It cannot be said that, nonetheless, his employment continued until the end of his notice period. He ceased to be an employee on May 3, 2005.

[219] These authorities recognize that where the contractual language specifically contemplates that the right to exercise stock options or to redeem performance shares is not available during the notice period of a terminated employee, the court will give effect to that language to preclude damages for the loss of those stock options or the right to redeem. The terms of the stock option plan or the plan granting performance shares that allow for the cancellation or forfeiture of those stock options or shares upon termination of the employee's employment will be enforced if the language is clear enough to give effect to those terms. These are the terms that the parties agreed upon, and the terms that the employee agreed to, come good times or bad. It is the recognition of the courts that the power to contract includes the power to provide for the cancellation or forfeiture of rights upon the happening of a given event.

[220] I find that the language used in the 2008 LTIP, and in the notice of plan awards that Ms. Galea had accepted are contracts between herself and Wal-Mart that contain specific language that is clear. Once Ms. Galea's Continuous Status as an Associate ceased, she no longer had rights to exercise outstanding stock options or to redeem performance shares that had not vested. By operation of the 2008 LTIP and the several notice of plan awards, all rights under stock options and performance shares were cancelled and forfeited under paragraph 5.8. Therefore, her claim for that relief is dismissed.

MORAL DAMAGES

Governing principles

[221] The recognition of a person's employment by Chief Justice Dickson in 1987 is reflected by the importance the law gives to the manner in which a termination from that employment is made. This importance gave rise to an employer's implied duty of good faith and fair dealing in the course of dismissing an employee. This duty was established in Wallace v. United Grain Growers Inc., 1997 CanLII 332 (SCC), [1997] 3 SCR 701. After Wallace, it was available for the court to award an extended period of notice if a finding was made that an employer had breached that duty.

[222] The Supreme Court of Canada in Keays v. Honda Canada Inc., 2008 SCC 39 introduced the concept of moral damages that took the place of any extended period of notice as a remedy. The court reaffirmed the fundamental nature of the same principles discussed in Wallace, but characterized them as deserving of a distinct category of damages known as moral damages. Chief Justice McLachlin defined moral damages at paragraphs 56 to 59 in Keays by stating:

[56] We must therefore begin by asking what was contemplated by the parties at the time of the formation of the contract, or, as stated in para. 44 of Fidler: “[W]hat did the contract promise?” The contract of employment is, by its very terms, subject to cancellation on notice or subject to payment of damages in lieu of notice without regard to the ordinary psychological impact of that decision. At the time the contract was formed, there would not ordinarily be contemplation of psychological damage resulting from the dismissal since the dismissal is a clear legal possibility. The normal distress and hurt feelings resulting from dismissal are not compensable.

[57] Damages resulting from the manner of dismissal must then be available only if they result from the circumstances described in Wallace, namely where the employer engages in conduct during the course of dismissal that is “unfair or is in bad faith by being, for example, untruthful, misleading or unduly insensitive” (para. 98).

[58] The application of Fidler makes it unnecessary to pursue an extended analysis of the scope of any implied duty of good faith in an employment contract. Fidler provides that “as long as the promise in relation to state of mind is a part of the bargain in the reasonable contemplation of the contracting parties, mental distress damages arising from its breach are recoverable” (para. 48). In Wallace, the Court held employers “to an obligation of good faith and fair dealing in the manner of dismissal” (para. 95) and created the expectation that, in the course of dismissal, employers would be “candid, reasonable, honest and forthright with their employees” (para. 98). At least since that time, then, there has been expectation by both parties to the contract that employers will act in good faith in the manner of dismissal. Failure to do so can lead to foreseeable, compensable damages. As aforementioned, this Court recognized as much in Fidler itself, where we noted that the principle in Hadley “explains why an extended period of notice may have been awarded upon wrongful dismissal in employment law” (para. 54).

[59] To be perfectly clear, I will conclude this analysis of our jurisprudence by saying that there is no reason to retain the distinction between “true aggravated damages” resulting from a separate cause of action and moral damages resulting from conduct in the manner of termination. Damages attributable to conduct in the manner of dismissal are always to be awarded under the Hadley principle. Moreover, in cases where damages are awarded, no extension of the notice period is to be used to determine the proper amount to be paid. The amount is to be fixed according to the same principles and in the same way as in all other cases dealing with moral damages. Thus, if the employee can prove that the manner of dismissal caused mental distress that was in the contemplation of the parties, those damages will be awarded not through an arbitrary extension of the notice period, but through an award that reflects the actual damages. Examples of conduct in dismissal resulting in compensable damages are attacking the employee's reputation by declarations made at the time of dismissal, misrepresentation regarding the reason for the decision, or dismissal meant to deprive the employee of a pension benefit or other right, permanent status for instance (see also the examples in Wallace, at paras. 99-100).

[223] In the course of the trial, Ms. MacDonald brought a motion to amend the statement of claim to increase Ms. Galea's claim to moral damages from $100,000 to $1 million. Leave to amend the statement of claim in this respect was granted, on consent. Ms. Galea also sought leave to amend the statement of claim to plead that Wal-Mart's duty of good faith and fair dealing in its manner of dismissal encompassed both pre-termination and post-termination conduct.

[224] After a contested motion, leave to amend paragraph 41 of the Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim was granted, but not to the extent of the allegation "including the defendants conduct throughout the litigation and the trial itself". The statement of claim was further amended to include the following particulars as subparagraph 41(e) regarding the pre-termination and post-termination conduct:

(e) The defendant failed to disclose, or insufficiently disclosed, relevant documents in its possession to the Plaintiff throughout the litigation, when it was reasonably within the contemplation of the Defendant that such failure to disclose, or insufficient disclosure would cause the Plaintiff to suffer mental distress, having regard to the timing and circumstances of the disclosure.

Test for Moral Damages

[225] Keays v. Honda relates the availability of moral damages to the requirement that those damages for an employer's breach of good faith and fair dealing must be reasonably foreseeable. The court bases the principle of reasonable foreseeability on the contractual nature of the employment relationship, and on the principles set out in the seminal case from the English courts in Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854), 9 Ex. 341; 156 E.R. 145. On this approach, damages are recoverable for a contractual breach if the damages are those that may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally from breach of the contract itself, or those that may have within the reasonable contemplation of both parties.

[226] The reasonable foreseeability of damages would therefore be within the contemplation of the parties having regard to the special circumstances in which the contract or, in the employment context, the employer and employee relationship was formed.

[227] The Supreme Court in Keays v. Honda refers to its earlier decision in Fidler v. Sunlife Assurance Co. of Canada, 2006 SCC 30, where it held that “as long as the promise in relation to state of mind is part of the bargain in the reasonable contemplation of the contracting parties, mental distress damages arising from its breach are recoverable”. The court in Keays v. Honda also makes reference to Wallace, where the court held that employers were held “to an obligation of good faith and fair dealing in the manner of dismissal” and created the expectation that, in the normal course of dismissal, employers would be “candid, reasonable, honest and forthright with their employees”. The court held that since at least that time, there has been an expectation by both parties to the contract, or in the case of an employment relationship between employers and employees, that the employers will act in good faith in the manner of dismissal, and that failure to do so can lead to foreseeable, compensable damages.

[228] In Wallace, the court discussed the duty of good faith and fair dealing in the manner of terminating an employee’s employment. It was recognized that this duty is a legal presumption and a primary obligation of all employers. The court held that employers are expected to be “candid, reasonable, honest and forthright with their employees.”

[229] The court in Keays v. Honda reinforced these principles as values to live by. The court held that compensation flows from conduct of an employer in the course of a dismissal that is “unfair or is in bad faith by being, for example, untruthful, or unduly insensitive”.

[230] Where an employer has breached the duty of good faith and fair dealing in the manner of dismissing an employee, the court in Keays v. Honda found no reason to retain the distinction between “true aggravated damages” resulting from a separate cause of action, and moral damages resulting from conduct in the manner of termination. Instead, the court found that the damages attributable to the conduct of the manner of dismissal shall always be awarded according to the principles in Hadley v. Baxendale.

[231] The manner of dismissal causing an employee mental distress has now been recognized as the basis for moral damages. The court in Keays v. Honda concluded that if an employee can prove that the manner of dismissal caused mental distress that was in the contemplation of the parties, an award that reflects the actual damages caused may be made by the court. The court gave examples of such conduct upon dismissal of the employee that could result in compensable damages. Among them are cases where an employer attacks the employee's reputation by making declarations at the time of dismissal, making misrepresentations regarding the reason for the decision, dismissal meant to deprive the employee of a pension or other benefit or right, and those examples given in Wallace itself.

[232] From the cases, I consider the following factors to summarize when moral damages may be available to a plaintiff:

1. Where an employer has breached its duty of good faith and fair dealing in the manner in which the employee was dismissed;
2. Conduct that could qualify as an employer's breach of good faith or the failure to deal fairly in the course of a dismissal includes an employer's conduct that is untruthful, misleading or unduly insensitive, and a failure to be candid, reasonable, honest and forthright with the employee;
3. Where it was within the reasonable contemplation of the employer that the manner of dismissal would cause the employee mental distress;
4. The wrongful conduct of an employer must cause the employee mental distress beyond the understandable distress and hurt feelings that normally accompany a dismissal; and
5. The grounds for moral damages must be assessed on a case by case basis.

[233] The fundamental nature of damages for conduct in the dismissal of an employee, including damages for psychological injury, is and remains compensatory. Moral damages relate to foreseeable damages to compensate an employee for injury or harm suffered by an employer's conduct. The award of moral damages is distinct from any award for punitive damages, which are directed at the employer. The analysis regarding punitive damages relates to the employer's conduct and concerns the disapproval of the court with respect to that conduct.

[234] Moral damages must not be confused with expense caused by another party for the conduct of the action. That expense is not appropriate as a claim to consider for damages. Litigation conduct is a matter properly reserved for submissions on costs. This is a question I dealt with in the reasons given at trial on June 3, 2016 on Ms. Galea's motion for leave to amend her pleadings. On that motion, Wal-Mart referred to the decision of Justice Beaudoin in Geographic Resources Integrated Data Solutions Ltd. v. Peterson, 2015 ONSC 4658. In Geographic Resources, Justice Beaudoin recognized that Canadian courts have held that "where the conduct complained of relates to the conduct of litigation, it should be sanctioned by an elevated costs award and not punitive damages".

[235] The same might be said to exclude matters relating to litigation conduct from a claim for moral damages. That said, it is my view an exception can be made for moral damages to respond where the evidence proves on the balance of probabilities that an employer has acted in bad faith, and that bad faith is manifested by the decisions and conduct of an employer or counsel acting on the employers' instructions to frustrate or deny the rights of an employee.

Manner of dismissal

[236] Ms. Galea claims moral damages based on the pre-termination, and post-termination conduct of Wal-Mart to establish her claim for moral damages under the principles set out in Keays v. Honda.

[237] Ms. Galea alleges that Wal-Mart's conduct was unfair or amounts to bad faith, as it was untruthful, misleading and unduly insensitive to her. In terms of pre-termination conduct, Ms. Galea submits that rather than repositioning her for career advancement, the time between January 29, 2010 and November 19, 2010 was simply a long goodbye.

[238] Ms. Galea argues that in view of her career history and level of accomplishment, it was within Wal-Mart's contemplation that the time it took and the manner in which the dismissal was executed would cause her mental distress. Wal-Mart knew that Ms. Galea was the sole income earner in her family, and that she was raising two children who were still in school. Wal-Mart also knew Ms.

Galea had devoted her working life for the last seven years to Wal-Mart and considered Wal-Mart her legacy employer.

[239] Ms. Galea submits that Wal-Mart's conduct after termination entitles her to moral damages. Wal-Mart continued to pay her a base salary, and to pay premiums for her health and dental coverage for 11.5 months after November 19, 2010, only to terminate both without notice. Upon commencing this action in 2011, Wal-Mart acted the unresponsive defendant who did not make full disclosure pursuant to the Rules of Civil Procedure to allow Ms. Galea to proceed with her claim in a timely fashion. Wal-Mart did not answer the undertakings that Mr. Cheesewright gave on its behalf at his examination for discovery in 2014 until mere days before the trial was to begin in January 2016.

[240] Ms. Galea argues that this conduct is the personification of an employer acting unfairly and in bad faith. She argues that the termination of her base salary and health and dental benefits, as well as the frustration of the litigation process to have her claims adjudicated, are part and parcel of Wal-Mart's manner of dismissing her. She links this conduct to her claim that Wal-Mart has purposely frustrated her financial health, as well as her ability to pursue her rights as a dismissed employee who has entitlements under an employment contract. Wal-Mart's conduct at termination has been unfair and taken in bad faith, contrary to its duty owed to her.

Pre-termination Conduct

[241] Ms. Galea believed she was enjoying a stellar career at Wal-Mart by January, 2010. She had attained a level in upper management, with deepening experience in sales and merchandising. There was nowhere to go but higher. Little did she know that Wal-Mart would stall her ascent, leaving her to fall with no one there to catch her.

[242] Ms. Galea reported to Duncan McNaughton, her coach and immediate superior for the first quarter of FYE 2011. Mr. McNaughton completed the performance appraisal for Ms. Galea in April 2010 on the form provided for senior management (executive) employees. The performance appraisal consisted of three sections, each broken down into component parts. In Section one for corporate beliefs and values, Mr. McNaughton graded Ms. Galea on the components that added up to overall rating for corporate beliefs and values of 4.1 out of 5. In Section two regarding performance objectives, Mr. McNaughton graded

Ms. Galea on the various components of that part between 3.5 and 4.0, for an overall rating of 4.0. Where Section 3 provided for overall comments, Mr. McNaughton made positive comments, recognized Ms. Galea's achievements, including that she continue to improve her AOS which was improved that year to 65 overall from 59 the previous year, and highlighted various objectives for the coming year. In the overall performance rating, Mr. McNaughton gave Ms. Galea a 4.1 rating that represented the median within the category "exceeds expectations".

[243] The claim Ms. Galea is making for moral damages is based on how Wal-Mart defeated her from taking one of two distinct career paths. One was to earn a promotion to Chief Merchandising Officer for Wal-Mart Canada. The other was to acquire a transfer within the Wal-Mart International structure to a Wal-Mart company in another country. Ms. Galea is recorded as saying that she aspired to an ex patriate assignment in another country in the performance appraisal completed in April 2010 for FYE 2010.

[244] At trial, Ms. Galea gave evidence that she was led to believe that Wal-Mart was grooming her to someday head a Wal-Mart company in the world. This belief was founded on comments made by Mr. Pilozzi in Ms. Galea's application to the Leadership Foundation in 2007, and continued into the years Mike Duke was CEO of Wal-Mart International.

[245] When Wal-Mart removed Ms. Galea from her position as Vice President, General Merchandising on January 29, 2010, she was removed from having people report directly and indirectly to her. She was removed from a position of managing sales representing 7 billion dollars for the Company. This removal and reassignment into an ad hoc position was first announced in front of the staff at Wal-Mart Canada in Mississauga on February 8, 2010, accompanied by a press release. Wal-Mart Canada would go on hire Shelly Broader to become Chief Merchandising Officer for Wal-Mart Canada.

[246] Wal-Mart does not dispute that it unilaterally removed Ms. Galea from her position as Vice President – General Merchandising. Nor does Wal-Mart dispute the fact that this change in position was made effective February 8, 2010. However, Wal-Mart disputes Ms. Galea's assertion that this change in position in itself amounted to bad faith.

[247] I do not view Wal-Mart's decision to remove the role and responsibility of Vice President, General Merchandising from Ms. Galea on January 29, 2010 to constitute bad faith. Employers in a non-union environment have the right to implement personnel changes within the workplace, and to structure management lines as they see fit. An employee effected by such change may consider herself constructively dismissed if circumstances warrant taking that position.

[248] Although Ms. Galea pleaded a claim of constructive dismissal in her initial statement of claim, the essence of her claim against Wal-Mart and the nature of the action itself was not based on constructive dismissal. An action for constructive dismissal only arises when an employee elects to resign: Saltsov v. Rolnick, 2010 ONSC 914. Ms. Galea never elected to resign, and remained an employee of Wal-Mart Canada until a termination letter was given to her on November 19, 2010.

[249] The treatment Ms. Galea received from Wal-Mart between February 8 and November 19, 2010 is another matter. She was made to suffer repeated humiliation, starting with the announcement of her re-assignment from Vice President, General Merchandising to that of a roving vice president of little substance. There was no opportunity provided within Wal-Mart Canada for her, and she received no offers from any Wal-Mart Company in India, Brazil, Chile or the U.K.

[250] Mr. Cheesewright testified that he did not speak with Andy Clarke from Asda about Ms. Galea's prospects at the Talent Review on July 22, 2010 in Bentonville. However, there was nothing to stop him from seeking Mr. Clarke out at the meeting. This would have been something he would do if he was sincere in supporting Ms. Galea's efforts. The fact that he did not and that he had changed her PAR rating that could have enhanced or diminished her prospects in the U.K. amounts to evidence of bad faith.

[251] Wal-Mart takes the position that it was Ms. Galea's responsibility to find the right posting, having regard to her skills and the opportunities available at the time throughout the Wal-Mart International structure. There was no dispute that Mr. Cheesewright told Ms. Galea that she was a valued employee. He told her that the company would pay for a career coach, visits to Chile, the UK and the U.S. to explore opportunities within the Wal-Mart organization outside Canada, and for an eight week executive course at Harvard University.

[252] Mr. Cheesewright testified that the PAR rating given to Ms. Galea of Q5 had been made by him. However, he stated that this did not affect her eligibility for hiring by a Wal-Mart company in another country. Wal-Mart argues that there was no evidence given at trial that executives in a Wal-Mart company in another country responsible for hiring even knew about Ms. Galea's Q5 rating.

[253] Where the evidence of Ms. Galea and Mr. Cheesewright conflict and credibility is an issue, I prefer the evidence of Ms. Galea. She took notes from January 29, 2010 onwards. Mr. Cheesewright did not. She followed every lead that could open an opportunity for her. Mr. Cheesewright would say he would assist where he could, but there is no evidence he ever did. While I accept his evidence that it is up to the Wal-Mart affiliate in each country to hire its own Associates, Mr. Cheesewright made representations to Ms. Galea that amounted to extending a good faith promise he never kept.

Post-termination Conduct

[254] Ms. Galea extends her claim for moral damages to include post-termination conduct. On her motion for leave to further amend the Fresh as Amended Statement of Claim at trial, Ms. Galea relied upon the decision of Justice Sanderson in Antidormi v. Blue Pumpkin Software Inc., 2004 CarswellOnt 3831, in support of amending her claim for moral damages based on post-termination conduct. In Antidormi, Justice Sanderson relied on the reasons in Gismondi v. Toronto (City) where Justice Rosenberg acknowledged that "Wallace" damages are not limited to a conduct of an employer as of the moment of the dismissal and can include post-termination conduct. She explained that,

[23] In my view, these factors neither individually nor cumulatively justified increased compensation under Wallace. I do not disagree with the trial judge's view that Wallace damages are not limited to acts of the employer at the very moment of dismissal and can in appropriate circumstances include "the employer's conduct pre- and post-termination . . . and the conduct of the employer in its aftermath" but only, in my view, as a component of the manner of dismissal. None of the conduct referred to by the trial judge reached the level of seriousness justifying increased notice under Wallace. Further, the trial judge made no findings that the manner in which the respondent was dealt with caused any injury that was entitled to compensation in accordance with Wallace.

[255] Justice Sanderson in fact considered the employer's conduct in Antidormi at the time of termination, at the mediation that followed, and at trial to be relevant for the purpose of the plaintiff's claim. Justice Sanderson put it this way:

[155] In my view, Blue Pumpkin's conduct at the time of termination, the mandatory mediation and indeed at the trial, did reflect a blatant disregard, callous and insensitive treatment of Antidormi. Its failure or refusal to address Antidormi's concerns, to treat her fairly, reasonably and decently, taken together, amount to unduly insensitive conduct that has affected her emotionally and professionally and that ought to merit compensation.

[256] The Court of Appeal has recently recognized that post-termination conduct is relevant to the issue of moral damages. In Doyle v. Zochem, 2017 ONCA 130, Justice Weiler summarized the circumstances that would support an extension of the notice period under Wallace that now takes the form of moral damages. The appeal decision in Doyle reaffirms that pre-termination and post-termination conduct may be considered for an award of moral damages, provided it is “a component of the manner of dismissal”. Justice Weiler traces that principle back to Gismondi by stating that:

[12] Beginning with Wallace v. United Grain Growers Ltd., 1997 CanLII 332 \(SCC\), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 701, at para. 95, the Supreme Court of Canada recognized that there is an obligation of good faith in the manner of dismissal of an employee and, at paras. 88 and 98, specified that damages are available where an employer engages in conduct that is “unfair or is in bad faith by being, for example, untruthful, misleading or unduly insensitive.” Initially the award, now known as moral damages, involved compensation through an addition to the period of notice. However, in Keays v. Honda Canada Inc., 2008 SCC 39 \(CanLII\), [2008] 2 S.C.R. 362, at para. 59, the Court essentially did away with the distinction between aggravated damages and moral damages and held that these damages should be recognized through a fixed monetary award rather than through an extension of the notice period: see S.R. Ball, Canadian Employment Law, loose-leaf (2016), vol. 2 (Toronto: Thomson Reuters Canada Ltd., 2007), at § 22: 20.19 (1.1), p. 22-59 and § 22:20.19 (1.2), p. 22-60.

[13] The factors relevant to an award of moral damages are not limited to the examples in Honda, at para. 59 and Wallace, at paras. 98, 101. Nor, is the time frame limited to the moment of dismissal. Pre and post termination conduct may be considered in an award for moral damages, so long as it is “a component of the manner of dismissal”: Gismondi v. Toronto (City), 2003 CanLII 52143 \(ON CA\), 64 O.R. (3d) 688 (C.A.), at para. 23, leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused [2003] S.C.C.A. No. 312; Ball, at § 22:20.19(1.1), p. 22-50.

Litigation Conduct

[257] The evidence marshalled by Ms. Galea and her counsel at trial with respect to Wal-Mart's post-termination conduct extended the trial beyond its original time estimate of 5 to 7 days in January, 2016. The court heard evidence that a PAR grid for 2010 had been produced after the third day of trial differed from the 2012 PAR grid that Wal-Mart had produced at Mr. Cheesewright examination for discovery in July 2012. This 2010 PAR grid, with a different wording for the Q5 box, was introduced at trial by Mr. Dye when cross examining Mr. Galea. The PAR grid for 2012 and the new 2010 PAR grid differed from the 2008 PAR grid Ms. Galea had produced, albeit late as well, which she believed to be the PAR grid in effect at all material times in 2010.

[258] When I permitted Wal-Mart's motion to introduce the 2010 PAR grid into evidence for Ms. Galea's cross-examination, the trial was adjourned to provide Ms. Galea's counsel the opportunity to examine Mr. Cheesewright on the 2010 PAR grid. This examination for discovery was limited to two hours in duration, and was restricted to the issue of the 2010 PAR grid including, but not limited to facts concerning:

- a) the origin of the 2010 Grid;
- b) where it was located and where it has been located since its inception;
- c) what efforts were made to find it for inclusion in the defendants affidavit of documents, and to answer the undertakings given by Mr. Cheesewright in the chart provided on December 30, 2015;
- d) why it was not produced until Thursday, January 7, 2016 to counsel for Ms. Galea during the first week of trial;
- e) what relevance or application to the facts the 2010 Grid had at any time relating to Ms. Galea's employment with Wal-Mart in 2010, 2011 or 2012; or
- f) his involvement with its application to Ms. Galea's employment.

[259] My ruling permitting the 2010 PAR grid as admissible evidence also provided Ms. MacDonald with generous latitude to re-examine Ms. Galea on any issue relating to grids marked as exhibits at trial or for identification, as to their meaning, effect or as they relate to each other when the trial resumed.

[260] The further examination of David Cheesewright on the PAR grids took place on January 28, 2016. In April 2016, counsel for Ms. Galea brought a motion to enforce undertakings and refusals that had been given by Mr. Cheesewright at that further examination for discovery. This resulted in an order made by Justice Ricchetti on April 8, 2016 for Wal-Mart to provide various answers before the trial continued. Those answers, and supporting documents included a volume of other PAR grids and related material that further complicated Ms. Galea's case. These PAR grids and related materials, including Talent Review guidelines where PAR grids would be used, were produced by Wal-Mart and marked as several exhibits at trial. Exhibits "BB" (then "W" with corrected tabs), "X", "Y", "Z", "AA", "FF", "GG" and "HH" were among those late productions. None of these late arriving documents were listed in Schedule A to Wal-Mart's affidavit of documents, or in Schedules B or C as documents Wal-Mart would or could not produce.

[261] Ms. MacDonald was careful to advise the court that she did not attribute any fault for the disclosure deficits, or the litigation conduct of Wal-Mart to its counsel. I accept those submissions.

[262] It was the continual production of new PAR grids and related material, much of it compelled through the process of the court during trial, that forms the basis of Ms. Galea's claim for moral damages. Ms. Galea alleges Wal-Mart should have reasonably contemplated that these tactics, and the documents generated from them would cause her mental distress in the course of seeking redress and remedies for the manner of her dismissal.

[263] In the course of his testimony, Mr. Cheesewright gave evidence that he did not use any guidelines to perform a PAR of an Associate at his level. This is inconsistent with his evidence that was read in from his examination for discovery on January 28, 2016. It was Mr. Cheesewright's testimony that he used the 2010 PAR grid to assess Ms. Galea in 2010. However, at trial he could not identify how or when the 2010 PAR grid had been developed.

[264] Upon assessing the evidence of Ms. Galea and of Mr. Cheesewright on the PAR grid that Wal-Mart would use in 2010 for promotions or internal transfers, I prefer the evidence of Ms. Galea. I find as a fact that the 2008 PAR grid marked as Exhibit "J" (and also Exhibit "U2") was the PAR grid in use by Wal-Mart at all materials times in 2010. When Mr. Cheesewright changed Ms. Galea's PAR rating on that grid to Q5, he placed her in a "not currently promotable category".

If medical evidence is required

[265] The cases have been divided between the authorities holding that medical evidence is required to prove mental distress or aggravated damages arising from the manner of dismissal for the court to award moral damages, and those authorities that do not require expert evidence of that nature.

[266] Even the Court of Appeal has provided differing views. In the appeal decision of Brien v. Niagara Motors Limited, 2009 ONCA 887, the Court expressed the view that a plaintiff must have sought medical attention for the mental distress suffered. The Plaintiff had testified at trial that after being terminated from employment, her life had been an emotional rollercoaster. With respect to damages for mental distress, the court stated as follows:

[3] The second issue is whether the two months award for Wallace damages ($8,826.56) can survive the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Honda Canada Inc. v. Keays, 2008 SCC 39 (CanLII), which was released following argument but before the reasons in this case were released by the trial judge. In our view, the appeal must be allowed on this ground. Although the appellant's conduct in wrongfully alleging misconduct against the respondent was improper, any claim for punitive damages based on that conduct was abandoned before the trial. While the respondent's misconduct in this respect could have led to a proper award of mental distress damages as defined in Keays, the mental distress that the respondent suffered upon her termination and the manner of that termination was not of the nature and scope to qualify for compensatory damages in accordance with that decision, as the respondent did not seek any medical attention, professional assistance or undergo any therapy for her mental distress.

[267] In Slepenkova v. Ivanov, 2009 ONCA 526, the Court expressed a different view. In Slepenkova, the Court upheld the award of damages for mental distress to the plaintiff where the employer's communications to her colleagues at the time of her termination had been found to be unfair and in bad faith. There was a finding that those communications were "unfounded" and damaging to her reputation. There was no mention of any medical evidence given at trial to support her claim for "Wallace" damages.

[268] In Pate Estate v. Galway-Cavendish and Harvey (Township), 2009 CanLII 70502 (SCJ), the Court held that the Plaintiff was "entitled to compensation for bad faith conduct in the manner of his dismissal which caused additional humiliation, embarrassment and damage to his self-worth and self-esteem without requiring medical evidence." The appeal decision in Pate Estate is found at 2013 ONCA 669, where the award of moral damages was upheld on appeal.

[269] In 2013, Justice McNamara of this Court held in Middleton v. Highlands East (Municipality), 2013 ONSC 763 awarded aggravated damages on the basis of the evidence taken as a whole:

[142] I accept the Plaintiff's evidence that being dismissed in the manner he was caused him embarrassment and damage to his self-worth and self-esteem. I accept that it was belittling, interfered with his sleep, and caused a strain in his relationship with others. I am also satisfied that any employer, including these Defendants, would know that this would be a likely result if an employee was unfairly terminated. The Court in Honda, did not comment on the level of mental distress a plaintiff must experience, nor is there any strict requirement for medical documentation, of which there is none in this case. I am satisfied on the evidence as a whole that, in the circumstances, the Plaintiff suffered mental distress beyond normal distress and hurt feelings from dismissal and is entitled to an award of aggravated damages which I assess at $30,000.

[270] It would appear that the state of the law in Ontario does not require a plaintiff to lead medical evidence to make out a case for damages for mental distress in an employment context. The claim for aggravated or moral damages should be available to a claimant on all of the evidence given, including the subjective evidence of the plaintiff, provided that all other elements under the case law are met.

[271] The question of whether damages are available to a plaintiff for mental injury without expert evidence has been clarified by the Supreme Court of Canada recently in Saadati v. Moorhead, 2017 SCC 28. Saadati is an appeal of a decision from the British Columbia Court of Appeal that reversed the decision of the trial judge. The appeal court held that recovery for mental injury requires a claimant to prove, with opinion evidence from a medical expert, a “recognizable [or recognized] psychiatric illness”. The Supreme Court of Canada, in allowing the appeal and restoring the judgment of the trial judge, summarized the law in Canada with respect to the pre-condition for the recovery of damages for mental injury as follows:

[2] This Court has, however, never required claimants to show a recognizable psychiatric illness as a precondition to recovery for mental injury. Nor, in my view, would it be desirable for it to do so now. Just as recovery for physical injury is not, as a matter of law, conditioned upon a claimant adducing expert diagnostic evidence in support, recovery for mental injury does not require proof of a recognizable psychiatric illness. This and other mechanisms by which some courts have historically sought to control recovery for mental injury are, in my respectful view, premised upon dubious perceptions of psychiatry and of mental illness in general, which Canadian tort law should repudiate. Further, the elements of the cause of action of negligence, together with the threshold stated by this Court in Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 114, at para. 9, for proving mental injury, furnish a sufficiently robust array of protections against unworthy claims. I therefore conclude that a finding of legally compensable mental injury need not rest, in whole or in part, on the claimant proving a recognized psychiatric illness. It follows that I would allow the appeal and restore the trial judge’s award.

Application of the facts

[272] No evidence was given at trial about why Wal-Mart stopped its payment of Ms. Galea’s base salary or providing health and dental coverage under its group plan to Ms. Galea and her family without notice 11.5 months after she was terminated. There was no evidence given, and no issue made about whether Ms. Galea had complied with the provisions of the NCA not to compete with Wal-Mart for the entire two-year transition period. Wal-Mart could reasonably contemplate that the stopping of payments and insurance coverage would cause Ms. Galea mental distress.

[273] In terms of other pre-termination conduct, I do not consider facts like Wal-Mart's decision to hire Duncan McNaughton or Sean Clarke as members of management to whom Ms. Galea would report, despite her aspirations to become Chief Merchandising Officer, or even the hiring of Shelly Broader as CMO, as conduct relevant to Wal-Mart's duty of good faith or fair dealing. These decisions are made by an employer in the normal course of running its business and fall outside any consideration of a claim for moral damages. They are therefore irrelevant as factors when determining whether an award of moral damages should be made: Doyle v. Zochem.

[274] Having regard to the evidence as a whole, I find as a fact that Wal-Mart breached its implied duty of good faith owed to Ms. Galea between January 29 and November 19, 2010, and that caused her mental distress. It is clear to me from the evidence that Mr. Cheesewright had made the decision by January 29, 2010 to dismiss or denigrate Ms. Galea to the point where she might resign. Thus began the long goodbye that would last until November 19, 2010. Ms. Galea was moved to an ad hoc position that was essentially an international job search. She was, as she puts it, left to "twist in the wind". This conduct was unfair to Ms. Galea, and tinged with bad faith.

[275] The mental distress that Wal-Mart knew its actions would cause Ms. Galea did not stop there. In the course of the litigation, Wal-Mart was either purposely dilatory in instructing its counsel to provide disclosure and to conduct examinations for discovery, including the legal obligation to provide answers and supporting documents to fulfil undertakings on a timely basis. Alternatively, Wal-Mart was indifferent to Ms. Galea's claims. As a result, this purposeful delay or indifference caused mental distress for Ms. Galea that exceeded the normal stress and hurt feelings that accompany a dismissal.

[276] I agree with the submissions of Ms. MacDonald that Wal-Mart's conduct with respect to the pace and disclosure process in the litigation originating from Wal-Mart as the party (as distinct from the instructions given to counsel for the conduct of the action itself) formed part of the manner of dismissal. See Antidormi, at para 155. Ms. Galea was entitled to a respectful and responsive approach to defending the action while Wal-Mart defended vigorously, not a deafening silence where indifference bordered on disdain towards her. Attrition is not friend of justice, nor should it appear to be.

[277] It is for these reasons that I find that Wal-Mart's conduct was misleading at best, and dishonest at worst, in the way the company treated Ms. Galea. Only Wal-Mart knew that Ms. Galea's career was over long before she was actually terminated. To keep her in suspended animation was unduly insensitive conduct. The ten months she was left to seek a new foothold qualifies as a manner of dismissal that caused Ms. Galea mental distress and qualifies her for aggravated damages.

[278] Galea is awarded $200,000 for moral damages. This amount is consistent with the decision of the Court of Appeal in Boucher v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp., 2014 ONCA 419 that upheld an award in that amount for aggravated damages.

[279] I am also awarding moral damages to Ms. Galea for Wal-Mart's post-termination conduct. I consider Wal-Mart's decision to stop the continued payment of her base salary and the health and dental coverage to her and her family to be unduly insensitive, and to have caused her mental distress. I consider Wal-Mart's delay in answering its undertakings until the eve of trial, and the torrent of productions made in the course of the trial, particularly in the face of Mr. Cheesewright's answer to Question 1136 to 1140, capable of causing Ms. Galea prolonged anguish about the case. For these reasons, I award Ms. Galea a further $50,000 in moral damages for Wal-Mart's post-termination conduct.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES

[280] The discussion about any claim for punitive damages in the modern era begins with the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Company, 2002 SCC 18.

[281] A first consideration must be how punitive damages are distinct from aggravated damages. The court explained in Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Company that punitive damages are awarded in exceptional cases against a defendant for "malicious, oppressive and highhanded" misconduct that "offends the courts sense of decency": Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 \(SCC\), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130.

[282] The Supreme Court in Whiten was dealing with a claim against the defendant Pilot Insurance Company for a fire loss under an insurance policy. On appeal, Pilot acknowledged that as an insurer, it owed a duty of good faith and fair dealing. However, Pilot argued that this was a contractual duty, and that the principles established by the court in Vorvis v. Insurance Corp. of British Columbia, 1989 CanLII 93 \(SCC\), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1085, and in Wallace v. United Grain Growers that punitive damages were only available if, apart from the breach upon which the action was based, the defendant had committed an “independent actionable wrong”. Justice Binnie, writing for the majority in Whiten, expressed the view that “a breach of the contractual duty of good faith is independent of and in addition to the breach of contractual duty to pay the loss. It constitutes an “actionable wrong” within the Vorvis rule, which does not require an independent tort.”

[283] In Keays v. Honda, the court continued the discussion that it started with Whiten v. Pilot Insurance. In Keays, Justice Bastarache stated at paragraph 68:

[68] Even if I were to give deference to the trial judge on this issue, this Court has stated that punitive damages should “receive the most careful consideration and the discretion to award them should be most cautiously exercised” (Vorvis, at pp. 1104-5). Courts should only resort to punitive damages in exceptional cases (Whiten, at para. 69). The independent actionable wrong requirement is but one of many factors that merit careful consideration by the courts in allocating punitive damages. Another important thing to be considered is that conduct meriting punitive damages awards must be “harsh, vindictive, reprehensible and malicious”, as well as “extreme in its nature and such that by any reasonable standard it is deserving of full condemnation and punishment” (Vorvis, at p. 1108). The facts of this case demonstrate no such conduct. Creating a disability program such as the one under review in this case cannot be equated with a malicious intent to discriminate against persons with a particular affliction.

[284] The Court of Appeal in Boucher v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp. provided a comparative analysis for recent awards of the level of punitive damages. Justice Laskin made the following statements when he concluded that the punitive damages awarded by the jury in that case were excessive:

[88] The very high aggravated damages award by itself sends a significant denunciatory and punitive message and likely will have a deterrent effect. Additionally, although the jury was justified in finding Wal-Mart’s misconduct sufficiently reprehensible to warrant an award of punitive damages, its misconduct falls far short of the gravity and duration of the misconduct in other cases that have attracted high punitive damages awards. These cases were extensively reviewed by my colleagues Lauwers J.A. in dissent and Cronk J.A. for the majority in Pate Estate v. Galway-Cavendish and Harvey (Township), 2013 ONCA 669 \(CanLII\), 312 O.A.C. 244. Two of these cases will illustrate the differences: Whiten and Pate Estate itself.

[89] In Whiten, the Supreme Court of Canada upheld the jury’s award of $1,000,000 in punitive damages. In that case, however, Pilot, the insurer, refused to pay a fire loss claim. Instead:

Pilot acted maliciously and vindictively by maintaining a serious accusation of arson for two years in the face of the opinions of an adjuster and several experts it had retained that the fire was accidental. It abused the obvious power imbalance in its relationship with its insured by refusing to pay a claim that it knew or surely should have known was valid, and even by cutting off rental payments on the Whitens' rented cottage. It took advantage of its dominant financial position to try to force the Whitens to compromise or even abandon their claim. Indeed, throughout the nearly two years that the claim was outstanding, Pilot entirely disregarded the Whitens' rights.

See Whiten, at para. 137. In addition to the punitive damages, the plaintiffs in Whiten received substantial costs and their out-of-pocket losses from the fire, but no aggravated damages or compensatory tort damages.

[285] The Court of Appeal found the circumstances in Pate Estate v. Galway-Cavendish and Harvey (Township), to provide the basis for a significant award of punitive damages by the trial judge, tempered to a moderate extent on appeal. In Pate Estate, the trial judge had awarded $550,000 in punitive damages in addition to an award of $75,000 for aggravated damages. On appeal, the court reduced the punitive damage award to $450,000. Writing for the majority, Justice Cronk agreed with the dissenting opinion of Justice Lauwers with respect to his conclusions regarding the trial judge's application of the applicable principles. However, Justice Cronk concluded that the trial judge erred in his analysis of the punitive damages by fixing those damages in the amount of $550,000 and reduced them to $450,000 as the appropriate award for punitive damages in that case.

[286] In Pate Estate, Justice Lauwers addressed the factors set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Company:

- (a) Proportionality;
- (b) The relationship between punitive damages and compensatory damages;
- (c) Using the same factors twice;
- (d) Failing to take into account the amounts already awarded;
- (e) The award is not out of line with the case law on punitive damages.

[287] Justice Cronk had this to say about the danger of duplication and overlap among the considerations a trial judge must take into the "calculus" of compensatory damages, punitive damages and ultimately, costs:

[236] As is apparent, there was considerable duplication or overlap among the considerations factored by the trial judge into his calculus of compensatory damages, costs and punitive damages. Consequently, in my view, the quantum of punitive damages to be awarded should have been materially discounted to avoid the risk of an inordinately high award and “double-compensation” to Mr. Pate, having regard to the punitive elements of the penalties already imposed on the Township: see Honda, at para. 60.

...

[238] The task of a trial judge in quantifying a punitive damages award is not an easy one. It is far from an exact science. It must be guided, however, by the Supreme Court’s repeated cautions to avoid “double-compensation” and that court’s clear warning that, in most cases, a moderate award will generally suffice to adequately punish a defendant for its misconduct. This is especially so where, as here, the total penalties otherwise imposed on a defendant have a clear punitive component: Whiten, at para. 94; Honda, at paras. 60 and 69.

[288] Justice Cronk concluded that a punitive damages award in the amount of $450,000 was sufficient to meet the requirement for additional punishment of the Township defendant to denounce its conduct, and to achieve the additional objectives of retribution and deterrence.

[289] I am of the view that Wal-Mart’s conduct when dealing with Ms. Galea between January 29, 2010 and November 19, 2010 was callous, highhanded, insensitive and reprehensible, deserving of an award for punitive damages. Where I have made findings of fact to award contractual damages or moral damages to Ms. Galea leading up to the date of her termination on November 19, 2010, I do not rely upon any findings of fact after that date to award her punitive damages.

[290] All of Wal-Mart’s conduct that justifies an award of punitive damages occurred between January 29, 2010 and November 19, 2010 when Wal-Mart would make representations to Ms. Galea about her career prospects while making decisions that detracted from, or even defeated that purpose. It is not that Wal-Mart set Ms. Galea up to fail; it is that Wal-Mart built her up, only to let her down that much more. That corporate behaviour was not just unduly insensitive, it was mean.

[291] I find as an essential element for an award of punitive damages that Wal-Mart’s breach of its implied duty of good faith and fair dealing towards Ms. Galea. This was an independent wrong within the meaning of Vorvis, Whiten and Keays.

[292] Having regard to all of the evidence given at trial and the submissions of counsel, I am of the view that the amount of punitive damages must be proportionate to other damages granted, rational to the facts, and appropriate to meet the objectives of denunciation and deterrence. This amount must be a fair and just award for punitive damages based on the factors introduced by the court in Whiten, as they were applied by the Court of Appeal in Pate Estate. These factors have been established to ensure that the court awards a sufficient amount to meet the objectives of the law in a civil case at the same time while ensuring that the size of the award does not offend the court's sense of reason.

Proportionality

[293] The principle of proportionality relates to the blameworthiness of the defendant's conduct. In order to assess that blameworthiness and maintain the proper perspective, it is equally necessary to assess the degree of vulnerability of the plaintiff, as well as the harm or potential harm directed to her. Other considerations include the need for deterrence and other penalties paid by the defendant. These are the aspects of proportionality identified by the Supreme Court in Whiten. In the context of an employment case, these aspects relate to the importance of the employment relationship and the vulnerability of an employee at the time of termination.

[294] The power imbalance, including the ability of Mr. Cheesewright to correct Ms. Galea's AOS score and his arbitrary alteration of her PAR rating from Q1 to Q5, regardless of the PAR grid on which he made that change, and his final act of giving her an ultimatum to choose between a probationary position as Vice President of E-Commerce or taking her severance is beyond doubt. Similarly, Wal-Mart's indifference to the litigation process and the manner of dismissal on termination, and over the course of the action highlight her vulnerability in significant ways. Wal-Mart's conduct both before termination and since termination towards Ms. Galea has been, in a word, deplorable. It is conduct deserving of a higher award for punitive damages.

[295] A higher award for punitive damages is required to deter Wal-Mart from conducting itself in a similar fashion against employees in Ms. Galea's position in the future, in Ontario or elsewhere in Canada. What would be an appropriate amount that is proportionate to the blameworthiness of Wal-Mart's conduct, and the need for deterrence to make this known to Wal-Mart is something of a unique question.

[296] According to Mr. Cheesewright, Wal-Mart is the largest retail company in the world. Wal-Mart earned 135 billion dollars worldwide in 2016. Any award within recognized limits according to Canadian law would be an affordable amount for an award of punitive damages for Wal-Mart to pay. However, that is not the measure. The measure is what the appropriate amount of punitive damages should be to meet the objectives of denunciation and deterrence, in proportion to the other damages the court is awarding to the plaintiff that can be rationally justified.

The Relationship Between Punitive Damages and Compensatory Damages

[297] The Court of Appeal in Pate Estate summarized the focus for awarding aggravated damages or damages for mental distress as distinct from the purpose of an award of punitive damages in the following terms:

[107] The purpose for an award of aggravated or mental distress damages is different from the purpose for an award of punitive damages. In fixing mental distress damages, the court focuses on compensating the plaintiff for his or her mental distress relating to the manner of dismissal: Honda, at para. 60. In fixing punitive damages, the court focuses on punishing the defendant's wrongful acts "that are so malicious and outrageous that they are deserving of punishment on their own": Honda, at para. 62. See also Hill, at para. 196, and Whiten, at para. 73.

[298] I have considered the focus of punitive damages when making this award to chastise Wal-Mart for its conduct, as opposed to the focus of awarding moral damages to Ms. Galea to compensate her for the aggravation and mental distress arising from the manner of her dismissal.

[299] The level of punitive damages in employment cases has been increasing where the facts merit a significant award to punish a defendant employer for its conduct, provided the award is in proportion to the other damages granted in the case, and the amount of the award can be rationally justified. In Boucher v. Wal-Mart, the Court of Appeal reduced the punitive damages awarded by the jury from $1 million to $100,000 against Wal-Mart. The troublesome issue the Court had to contend with in Boucher was the distinction between the reprehensible conduct of the plaintiff's immediate superior who was the immediate cause of her mental distress, and the inaction of Wal-Mart to intercede, that the jury found reprehensible and deserving of punishment.

[300] In Ms. Galea's case, there is no such distinction. Ms. Galea makes her claim for punitive damages against Wal-Mart for the reprehensible conduct of Mr. Cheesewright as President and CEO of Wal-Mart Canada. The decisions made, and the conduct to treat Ms. Galea with callous indifference were made on behalf of the company. The fact that those decisions and conduct played out at such a high level within the executive offices and with such visibility amplifies the damages necessary to chastise Wal-Mart. The damages must be in an amount within the range given by the authorities, but sufficient to serve the objectives of denunciation of such conduct, and deterrence to discourage any repeat of it.

Using the Same Factors Twice

[301] Although the same facts form the basis of awarding punitive damages as those for awarding damages of a compensatory nature, the plaintiff is not awarded “double compensation”. As the court in Pate Estate explained, the real concern at issue is to avoid over compensating the plaintiff by awarding an excessive amount for punitive damages. An award of punitive damages depends on the specific facts of the case. As the court explained in Pate Estate:

[116] Everything turns on the specific facts of the case. The defendant’s misconduct might have caused mental distress that substantiates an award of mental distress damages; that same conduct could well also be deserving of punishment and thus justify an award of punitive damages. This would be true in the cases where both aggravated and punitive damages were awarded. See, for example, Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 \(SCC\), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130 and McNeil. On the other hand, the defendant’s conduct might be worthy of punishment even though it might not have been found to have caused mental distress, as in Whiten. The same factual matrix is considered in setting all the heads of damages.

The Award is Not Out of Line With the Case Law on Punitive Damages

[302] In Pate Estate, the majority of the Court of Appeal reduced the punitive damages awarded by the jury at trial from $550,000 to $450,000. In his dissenting opinion, Justice Lauwers found that the jury had awarded damages that was not out of line with the punitive damages awarded by the jury in McNeil v. Brewers Retail Inc., 2008 ONCA 405. He found the jury award for punitive damages of $500,000 in McNeil was approved on appeal for conduct that was roughly comparable with the Municipality’s conduct in Pate Estate.

[303] Although Justice Cronk reduced the punitive damages award in Pate Estate, she observed the facts did not justify an award for punitive damages to exceed those in McNeil. McNeil was wrongfully accused of theft by his employer so that he was made to endure two criminal trials and an appeal. In my view, Wal-Mart’s conduct to “starve the plaintiff into a trial” is equally reprehensible.

[304] I consider the conduct of Wal-Mart to be more egregious than Wal-Mart as the defendant in Boucher. The facts here make the case for punitive damages in the higher range as much as the case against the municipal defendant in Pate Estate, where the plaintiff was put to defending himself at a criminal trial to seek vindication. In view of the court's reference to McNeil, as a watermark, I conclude that $500,000 is the appropriate amount to award Ms. Galea for punitive damages.

SUMMARY

[305] For these reasons, judgment is granted to the plaintiff Gail Galea as follows:

1. damages for the annual salary she was receiving at the date of termination for two years, less $281,755.60 for salary paid: $299,644;
2. damages for Wal-Mart's portion of the health and dental benefits it was paying her behalf as of date of termination for 12.5 months under the NCA: $3,851.46;
3. damages for the MIP in the amount she would have received for two years under the NCA: $288,552;
4. damages for the unpaid MIP she was to have received for FYE 2011 up to November 19, 2010 ($ $144,282 divided by 12 x 9.6 months): $115,420;
5. damages for the contributions to the DPSP she would have received annually for two years under the NCA: $36,342;
6. damages for the unpaid contribution or balance of the DPSP she was to have received for FYE 2011 ($18,171 divided by 12 x 9.6 months): $14,534;
7. damages for payments she would have received under the ERP for two years under the NCA: $112,540;
8. damages for the unpaid amounts she would have received under the ERP for FYE 2011 ($56,270 divided by 12 x 9.6 months): $45,014;

9. payment of any balance remaining in trust, or to the account of Gail Galea at Wal-Mart or any affiliate or agent for amounts granted, paid or redeemed in the MIP, DPSP, ERP or their predecessor plans, to which she was legally entitled to receive upon notice as of November 19, 2010. If there is a dispute about Ms. Galea's prior entitlement under any plan, that issue may be spoken to at the next attendance before the court;
10. Moral damages, including aggravated damages and damages for mental distress: $250,000;
11. Punitive damages: $500,000; and
12. Such prejudgment interest as may be ordered.

[306] In view of the nature of this action and the conduct of the trial, I do not consider written submissions to be the appropriate manner to address costs. There may be offers to settle to take into account. There may be nuanced submissions on what factors under Rule 57.01(1) I should consider. I anticipate, based on the argument I heard on the plaintiff's motion to amend the statement of claim during trial, that submissions will be required to make findings of fact that are, or are not, already the basis for damages awarded. These submissions will be important to hear to ensure that costs do not overlap or duplicate relief already granted.

[307] Instead, the parties are invited to contact my judicial assistant, Ms. Melanie Powers, to schedule a further attendance before the court to make submissions on costs. I will also hear submissions on any order for pre-judgment interest that the plaintiff seeks at that time. If counsel are able to come to an agreement with respect to either issue, I would be grateful if they would send me a joint letter to that effect.

[308] In closing, I take this opportunity to commend all counsel on their thoroughness, professionalism and the high standard of advocacy shown throughout this trial. Those qualities, in court and in the written materials filed as part of the submissions made, have been of great assistance to me. I thank them for that assistance. I also want to thank the parties for their patience while waiting for the release of this decision.

Emery J.

DATE: December 7, 2017

CITATION: Galea v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp., 2017 ONSC 245

COURT FILE NO.: CV-11-0901-00

DATE: 2017 12 07

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: GAIL GALEA, Plaintiff v. WAL-MART CANADA CORP., Defendant

BEFORE: EMERY J.

COUNSEL: Natalie MacDonald and Cody Yorke, for the Plaintiff

Jonathan L. Dye, for the Defendant

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

EMERY J.

DATE: December 7, 2017

Tab 155

R.B. v E.S., 2017 ONSC 7866 (CanLII)

Source: Superior Court of Justice
Date: 2017-01-11
File number: CV-14-501116
Other citation: [2017] CarswellOnt 248
Citation: R.B. v E.S., 2017 ONSC 7866 (CanLII), <<https://canlii.ca/t/gwv7f>>, retrieved on 2026-03-24

CITATION: R.B. v. E.S., 2017 ONSC 7866
COURT FILE NO.: CV-14-501116
DATE: 20170111

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: R.B., Plaintiff

AND:

E.S., by his litigation guardian M.S., Defendant

BEFORE: Madam Justice Kristjanson

COUNSEL: Elizabeth Roberts, for the Plaintiff

Mark Elkin, for the Defendant

HEARD: September 29, 2016

ENDORSEMENT

[1] This is a motion for summary judgment brought by R.B. in a civil claim for sexual assault, battery, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of trust and intentional infliction of mental distress. E.S. was R.B.'s criminal lawyer. They met to prepare for a criminal matter in which E.S. was representing R.B. During this meeting, E.S. engaged in a sexual non-consensual touching of R.B., which took the form of cupping R.B.'s breast, hugging her and touching her under her shirt in the back and attempting to kiss her in the context of a situation where E.S. suggested he had a "hard on." R.B. filed a report with the police on the same day. E.S. was charged with sexual assault, pleaded guilty to the lesser charge of assault, and was given a conditional discharge on the condition that he no longer practice law. The sentencing judge found that at the time of the assault, E.S. was suffering from Alzheimer's.

[2] The defendant filed no evidence on this summary judgment motion. The defendant conceded that he was not in a position to contest liability, given E.S.'s mental state. The defendant asserts that he requires a defence medical to contest issues regarding damages, but failed to take timely steps to arrange a defence medical in light of the court-ordered timetable, which issued on consent. The defendant did not cross-examine the plaintiff on her affidavit, or seek to cross-examine the plaintiff's psychologist on his report. The defendant did not meet the filing dates set out in the CPC order, or seek to amend the consent timetable. As Justice Dunphy stated in Mazza v. Ornge Corporate Services Inc., 2015 ONSC 7785, 2015 CarswellOnt 19531 (Ont. S.C.) at para 50:

Strategic choices, including the choice to bring summary judgment motions and how to respond to them, have strategic consequences. Parties who fail to cross-examine on affidavits or adduce evidence available to them that they require for argument will be held to the consequences of their strategic choices: c.f. ThyssenKrupp Elevator (Canada) Ltd. v. Amos, 2014 ONSC 3910 (Ont. S.C.J.) (CanLII). Both parties must assume that the service of a notice of motion starts a train heading down the procedural tracks that will lead to a decision on the merits of each and every issue raised by the notice of motion subject only to those issues the court determines genuinely require a trial in the interests of justice.

[3] In a post-Hryniak world, a party cannot sit back, assert that it will file future evidence, or merely argue that a matter is clearly not suited for summary judgment: Hryniak v. Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7 (S.C.C.). The court is entitled to assume that the parties have placed before it all of the evidence that will be available for trial; the responding party must present its best case or risk losing.

[4] On the evidence before me, I grant judgment in favour of the plaintiff.

Background to the Motion

[5] The chronology of steps taken, or more accurately, which were failed to be taken, are set out below, since the defendant's failure to file evidence on the summary judgment motion and failure to take reasonable steps to respond to this summary judgment motion are critical to the disposition of this case. I set out a detailed chronology of the litigation process in Schedule "A".

[6] The statement of claim was issued in March, 2014. E.S. filed a statement of defence approximately five months later, although he has not yet filed an affidavit of documents. R.B. was examined for discovery in March, 2016. Given E.S.'s mental state, it is likely that he cannot be examined for discovery.

[7] R.B. decided to bring a summary judgment motion. In December, 2015, the plaintiff served a psychological – legal report of Dr. Ronald Seatter together with a notice under section 52 of the Evidence Act specifically providing notice that R.B. intended to introduce the Seatter Report into evidence at her motion for summary judgment. On the same day, R.B. sought dates for attendance at motion scheduling court in January and February to obtain a return date for the summary judgment motion.

[8] In April, 2016 a motion scheduling court attendance was adjourned on consent to Civil Practice Court ("CPC") in May, 2016. At that time Justice McEwen set the matter down to be heard for 1.5 days in September, 2016. The order noted that "liability not in issue." The CPC Order set a timetable, signed by counsel for the parties, as follows:

- plaintiff's motion record to be served and filed by June 17, 2016;
- responding record to be served and filed by July 15;

- cross examinations to be completed by August 5;
- plaintiff's factum to be served by August 26;
- responding factum to be filed by September 16.

[9] R.B.'s motion record was filed June 17, 2016 in accordance with the timetable. A supplementary motion record containing transcripts of the criminal sentencing and guilty plea was filed on September 21, 2016. No objection was taken to the filing of that material.

[10] E.S. filed no evidence on this summary judgment motion, although on the return date in late September, counsel for the defendant did hand up a factum together with a responding motion record which appeared to contain an excerpt from defence counsel's submissions in a criminal proceeding against the plaintiff, although there was no affidavit indicating what the transcript excerpt was or the date of the proceeding. The responding factum and motion record were served on plaintiff's counsel on three days before the summary judgment motion. The material filed by defendant's counsel was not in compliance with the timetable and order of Justice McEwen and, in addition, did not comply with the normal deadline for filing motion materials. As a result the court filing office refused to accept the respondent's materials, and they were handed to the court on the return date of the motion, without objection.

Has the plaintiff established that there is no genuine issue requiring a trial?

[11] Rule 20.04(2)(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure provides that the court shall grant summary judgment if: "the court is satisfied that there is no genuine issue requiring a trial with respect to a claim or defence." The Supreme Court in Hryniak held at para. 49:

There will be no genuine issue requiring a trial when the judge is able to reach a fair and just determination on the merits on a motion for summary judgment. This will be the case when the process (1) allows the judge to make the necessary findings of fact, (2) allows the judge to apply the law to the facts, and (3) is a proportionate, more expeditious and less expensive means to achieve a just result.

[12] A responding party may not rest solely on the allegations or denials in the party's pleadings, but "must set out, in affidavit material or other evidence, specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue requiring a trial": Rule 20.0(2). Each side must "put its best foot forward" with respect to the existence or non-existence of material issues to be tried. A court is entitled to assume that the record contains all the evidence that the parties would present if the matter proceeded to trial: Sweda Farms Ltd. v. Egg Farmers of Ontario, 2014 ONSC 1200 (ONSC) at paras. 26-27; aff'd 2014 ONCA 878 (Ont. C.A.).

[13] The court should first determine if there is a genuine issue requiring trial based only on the evidence in the motion record, without using the fact-finding powers set out in Rule 20.04(2.1) and (2.2). The analysis of whether there is a genuine issue requiring a trial should be done by reviewing the factual record and granting summary judgment if there is sufficient evidence to fairly and justly adjudicate the dispute and summary judgment would be a timely, affordable and proportionate procedure.

[14] If there appears to be a genuine issue requiring a trial, then the court should determine if the need for a trial can be avoided by using the fact-finding powers under Rule 20.04. Their use will not be against the interest of justice if their use will lead to a fair and just result and will serve the goals of timeliness, affordability and proportionality in light of the litigation as a whole.

[15] Given that the only evidence filed on the proceeding is the evidence of R.B., and that evidence was uncontested, as discussed below I have determined that there is no genuine issue requiring trial based on the evidence in the motion record. For the reasons set out below I grant summary judgment as there is sufficient evidence to fairly and justly adjudicate the dispute, and a summary judgment is a timely, affordable and proportionate procedure.

Is Summary Judgment Appropriate in Light of the Jury Notice?

[16] In oral argument, the defendant submitted that summary judgment, particularly on the issue of damages, would be “close to unprecedented” in a case such as this where a jury notice has been served. I note that the mandatory wording of Rule 20 requires the court to grant summary judgment if there is no genuine issue requiring a trial.

[17] Summary judgment is a dispute resolution mechanism separate from a trial. A party’s right to have a jury find facts does not arise if a judge finds pursuant to Rule 20.04 that there is no serious issue requiring a trial. The courts have applied Rule 20 to jury cases on a number of occasions: see Cooke v. Toivonen, 2011 ONSC 1315 (CanLII) and Anjum v. John Doe, 2015 ONSC 5501, 2015 CarswellOnt 13454 (Ont. S.C.).

[18] In this case, the defendant has filed no evidence to show that there is a triable issue. It is open to me to find that summary judgment is most fair, just, efficient and proportional process to determine the litigation as a whole, despite the delivery of a jury notice, and I do so.

Facts Relating to Criminal Assault Conviction

[19] In 2011, R.B. retained E.S. as her criminal lawyer. At the time, E.S. was a criminal defence lawyer with approximately 40 years of experience. R.B. resided in City #1, but came to City #2 with her boyfriend to meet E.S. to prepare for her criminal case.

[20] In 2012 R.B. met E.S. at her hotel. R.B.’s affidavit sets out the following facts, which are uncontradicted in this litigation. R.B. told E.S. she would meet him in the hotel lobby, but instead he proceeded to her room. R.B. was alone in the room as her boyfriend was at the hotel gym. E.S. cupped one of the plaintiff’s breasts and tried to pull her shirt down. E.S. reached under R.B.’s shirt trying to undo her bra and tried to kiss the plaintiff about 3 times. E.S. eventually left. When R.B.’s boyfriend returned, R.B. called the police and filed a report that day.

[21] In his statement of defence, E.S. concedes that at the guilty plea, he “admitted the facts alleged by the Crown Attorney insofar as they support the allegation of a common assault”. I refer to the facts alleged by the Crown Attorney below, in the section on criminal proceedings, since those facts constitute battery of a sexual nature.

1. Criminal Proceedings

[22] E.S. was charged with a sexual assault on R.B. The defendant was represented by counsel. On the record, counsel acknowledged that he had gone through the plea inquiry with the defendant. The defendant pled not guilty to the charge of sexual assault, but guilty to the included offence of simple assault.

(a) Statement of Facts Read In by Crown Attorney

[23] The Crown read in a statement of facts which as noted above, the defendant conceded in the statement of defence insofar as they support the allegation of common assault.

[24] In 2011 the plaintiff retained the accused to represent her on criminal charges arising in City #2. The plaintiff was living City #1 at the time. R.B. and her boyfriend travelled to City #2, for the purpose of meeting with the defendant to review the disclosure in the criminal case and prepare her defence. This was their first meeting in person. The defendant attended at the hotel where was staying. She had requested that the defendant call her when he arrived at the hotel; instead he came directly to the room. She was alone in the room as her boyfriend had gone down to work out at the gym. E.S. sat on the chair and R.B. sat at the end of the bed to discuss the court matter. The statement of facts includes the following:

During their discussions the accused frequently rubbed R.B.'s arms and asked how she got skin so soft. The accused asked R.B. what size her breasts were and tried to pull her shirt down to expose her breasts. The accused asked R.B. to show him her breasts. She backed away and told the accused, "No". The accused then cupped R.B.'s left breast with his hand over the top of the clothes. Again R.B. said "No." As the meeting went on the accused asked R.B. for a hug and placed his arms around her.

When he did so he reached through the armholes of R.B.'s shirt and slid his hands under her bra and rubbed her back. R.B. responded by backing away. The accused told R.B. that he wanted to hold her for a long time because he had a "hard – on".

The accused then tried to kiss R.B. at which point she told the accused to leave and he did so.

[25] The Crown agreed that reports filed by the defence indicated that E.S. had issues with respect to Alzheimer's disease.

(b) Conviction - Assault

[26] Justice M. McLeod of the Ontario Court of Justice presided over the conviction and sentencing. He noted that the defence was in a position where they would not be contesting the facts. The court found, on factual assertions made by the Crown as well as evidence in two reports filed with respect to E.S. , that:

"...obviously there was non-consensual touching which is the essential elements of the offense of assault but, in this case, the non-consensual touching took the form of cupping R.B.'s breast, hugging her and touching her under her shirt in the back and attempting to kiss her in the context of a situation where it's less important in terms of the charge but important in terms of context where there were words uttered involved... Where E.S. suggested he had a "hard on" and those are the findings that are going to be made."

[27] The court found that "on the basis of those findings there will be a finding of guilt on the assault."

(c) Sentencing

[28] The sentencing took place in 2014. E.S. was represented by counsel on the sentencing as well.

[29] On sentencing, the court found that E.S.'s behaviour was consistent with the issues of dementia identified in neurological and psychiatric assessments filed.

[30] E.S. was granted a conditional discharge with terms including executing an irrevocable undertaking not to engage in the practice of law.

Liability

[31] The defendant was convicted of assault. He concedes that he was R.B.'s criminal lawyer at the time of the conviction. In his pleading, the defendant admitted the facts read in by the Crown as they supported the assault conviction. In conceding the facts read in by the Crown as they support the conviction for assault, I find that the defendant has conceded the non-consensual touching which took the form of cupping R.B.'s breast, hugging her and touching her under her shirt in the back and attempting to kiss her, which are the non-consensual touching element alleged by the Crown and found by the trial judge to support the finding of guilt on the assault. In any event, the uncontradicted evidence of R.B. is to the same effect.

[32] In the hearing, the defendant's counsel conceded that he was not in a position to contest liability. In the absence of any other evidence, I find that the facts are sufficient to ground liability for battery and breach of fiduciary duty as alleged in the statement of claim.

1. Tort of Battery

[33] The defendant asserts as a matter of law that battery and assault are intentional torts, and the plaintiff has not proved intention.

[34] The tort of battery for sexual assault claims requires the plaintiff to prove, on a balance of probabilities, that the defendant intentionally contacted the plaintiff in a sexual manner. The plaintiff must also demonstrate that the contact was harmful or offensive; this is implied in the context of a sexual battery. The burden then shifts to the defence, to establish either an absence of intention or consent.

[35] The tort of battery is based on a violation of personal autonomy, which protects the right to control who touches your body. It includes physical contact or touching of a sexual nature as happened here. The elements of the tort of battery in the sexual context were considered by the Supreme Court of Canada in Non-Marine Underwriters, Lloyd's London v. Scalera, 2000 SCC 24 (CanLII), [2000] 1 S.C.R. 551 (SCC). McLachlin, J. for the majority held at para. 2:

As Goff L.J. (as he then was) stated in Collins v. Wilcock, [1984] 3 All E.R. 374 (Eng. Q.B.), at p. 378, "The fundamental principle, plain and incontestable, is that every person's body is inviolate." The law of battery protects this inviolability, and it is for those who violate the physical integrity of others to justify their actions. Accordingly, in my respectful view, the plaintiff who alleges sexual battery makes her case by tendering evidence of force applied directly to her. "Force," in the context of an allegation of sexual battery, simply refers to physical contact of a sexual nature, and is neutral in the sense of not necessarily connoting a lack of consent. If the defendant does not dispute that the contact took place, he bears the burden of proving that the plaintiff consented or that a reasonable person in his position would have thought that she consented.

[36] On the facts in the record before me, I am satisfied that a battery took place when E.S. touched R.B. in a sexual manner. On the evidence of R.B., the touching was harmful and offensive. In the absence of any evidence being filed by the defendant, the tort is made out.

2. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

[37] R.B. claims that E.S. breached his fiduciary duty as a lawyer, and in her affidavit states that: "I trusted [E.S.] and feel betrayed by him. I am humiliated and degraded by his actions." They were meeting to discuss preparing her criminal defence when the assault took place.

[38] The solicitor-client relationship is by definition a fiduciary relationship, and the defendant has conceded that relationship.

[39] Engaging in sexual touching and comments in the context of a lawyer/client meeting is a breach of fiduciary duty, and a breach of the trust essential to that relationship. It is a unilateral exercise of power or discretion affecting the plaintiff's personal autonomy and personal sense of trust and security. It is a betrayal of the duty of loyalty and betrays the trust which must be reposed in a lawyer. Criminal lawyers must be able to receive a client's darkest secrets. When charged with an offence, the criminal lawyer has a critical role as the only person on a client's side, the one expected to protect the client's interests at a time of great stress and vulnerability, as she faces criminal charges in the legal system. So when E.S. improperly engaged in the sexual touching, and created an atmosphere of sexuality in referring to his hard-on, he breached the trust which is essential to the lawyer-client relationship, injuring the person he was charged to protect.

[40] I find that E.S. breached his fiduciary duty as a lawyer to R.B..

[41] Again, in the absence of any evidence, including the absence of any evidence as to E.S.'s mental capacity at the time, I find that the cause of action is made out. There is no genuine issue for trial, and no need for additional fact-finding powers.

[42] The plaintiff did not pursue intentional infliction of mental distress or breach of trust, and I do not deal with them here.

Summary Judgment and Damages

[43] The next issue is whether the plaintiff has established that there is no genuine issue respecting trial on damages.

[44] R.B. seeks general non-pecuniary damages in the amount of $60-70,000. In the evidence and in her factum, the plaintiff claims costs for psychological treatment in the amount of $2,000 to $5,000, and in oral argument sought leave to amend the claim to include these future care costs. Her counsel stated that she has elected not to seek punitive damages given the health of E.S.

[45] The uncontradicted evidence relating to damages is the affidavit evidence of R.B., who was not cross-examined, and the September, 2015 psychological – legal report of psychologist Dr. Ronald Seatter. The Form 53 Acknowledgment of Expert's Duty dated August 31, 2016 was handed to the Court on the return date of the motion.

1. Evidence of R.B.

[46] In her affidavit sworn in 2016, R.B. swears that she has suffered acute mental distress and loss of enjoyment of life. She says that she "trusted [E.S.] and feel betrayed by him. I am humiliated and degraded by his actions." She states that she has isolated herself socially since the incident, stop communicating with friends and family, has difficulty forming and maintaining relationships with other persons, feels angry, hurt and sad, has difficulty concentrating and suffers from memory loss. She feels as though her situation is hopeless and she will never be happy again. She also states she has recurring dreams about what happened with E.S., or will experience a memory or see an image relating to the incident.

[47] She also states: "I have been unable to work since the incident because of my anxiety and depression." I note that at the time she swore the affidavit in 2016, R.B. was incarcerated, albeit for approximately four months, and the incident happened four years ago.

2. Dr. Seatter Report

[48] Dr. Seatter is a registered psychologist and a member of the College of Psychologists of Ontario. He assessed R.B. on August 26 and September 8, 2015. The Seatter Report states that R.B.'s current condition includes trauma, mood disorders, and relationship stresses that relate directly to the incident involving E.S. He found that R.B. suffers from post-traumatic stress disorder, depression and anxiety: the DSM-5 diagnoses are 309.81, Posttraumatic Stress Disorder, With Dissociative Symptoms of Depersonalization, and 296.23, Major Depressive Disorder, Single Continuous Episode, Severe, with Anxious Distress.

[49] He found: "R.B.'s trauma symptomology, emotional dysregulation, depressed mood, restricted affect, persistent symptom focus, persistent anxiety about said symptoms, and excessive time and energy devoted to these symptoms all indicate a high level of impairment." He found that the current condition is a concinnity of trauma, mood disorders and relationship stresses that relate directly to the incident with E.S. (which he identifies as the [2012] incident.) He found that "the incident itself with its traumtogenic, peri-traumatic, and betrayal factors alone name themselves as the cause of the current difficulties," and stated that: "it is reasonable to conclude that the incident of [2012] is the significant cause of her current psychological difficulties."

[50] He found that a regimen of psychotherapy would be warranted, and she would need "acute psychological intervention for several sessions", likely a block of 10 – 12 sessions initially because of both the severity and the chronicity of her difficulties. He estimated the cost of initial therapy sessions and future assessments ranges from $2000 - $5000.

Issues Raised by Respondent re Damages Claim

[51] The respondent raises three main issues with respect to the damages claim. First, he asserts the Seatter report is not properly admissible. Second, he raises an issue with respect to a defence medical which has not yet been conducted allegedly due to the incarceration of the plaintiff. Third, he raises a causation issue based on an extract of a transcript from what he states to be R.B.'s defence counsel's submissions in a criminal proceeding.

Issue #1: Is the Seatter Report Admissible in Evidence?

[52] The defendant takes the position that the Seatter Report is not admissible, since it is not in the form of an affidavit, and "the submitting party may not shield its expert from examination by appending the report to an affidavit of someone completely unqualified to testify to the issue."

[53] The purpose of adducing evidence by way of affidavit on motions is to ensure that the deponent is available for cross-examination. While evidence is to be given by way of affidavit on a motion, Rule 20.01(1) provides that a plaintiff may move "with supporting affidavit material or other evidence" for summary judgment. In this case, the plaintiff served a notice pursuant to section 52(2) of the Evidence Act that she intended to rely on the Seatter Report on the summary judgment motion, which I find to be "other evidence" functionally equivalent to an affidavit as Dr. Seatter was available for cross-examination.

[54] As stated in Kapulica v. Dumancic, 1968 CanLII 419 (ON CA), [1968] 2 O.R. 438 (Ont. C.A.), when one party tenders a medical report under the provisions of the Evidence Act, that party tenders the author of the report as his witness as fully as if the author had testified, and therefore the author is subject to cross-examination by opposing counsel. In this case the section 52 notice served the same purpose as the affidavit: the defendant had nine months' notice, and never sought to cross-examine Dr. Seatter.

[55] The Seatter Report was served on the defendant on December 10, 2015, together with a Notice to Rely on Medical Reports under section 52 of the Evidence Act. On December 10, 2015, R.B.'s counsel wrote to say that she intended to introduce the report in evidence at the summary judgment motion pursuant to the section 52 notice. In May, 2016, the parties attended in Civil Practice Court, where Justice McEwen endorsed the record stating that expert reports will be filed, and the parties waived cross-examination of experts.

[56] The parties thus waived cross-examination of experts at the time that the defendant was in possession of the Seatter Report, and had been given notice that the plaintiff would be relying on the Seatter Report on the summary judgment motion.

[57] Given the service of the section 52 Evidence Act notice for the purposes of the summary judgment motion, the Form 53 Acknowledgment, and the waiver of cross-examination, I find that the Seatter Report is admissible for the purposes of the summary judgment motion.

Issue #2: Should the Summary Judgment Motion be Adjourned to Obtain a Defence Medical?

[58] R.B. was taken into custody following conviction on a criminal charge in 2016, with a scheduled release date later in 2016. There is no evidence before me about the date and nature of the charge; it is only relevant with respect to timing of the defence medical.

[59] At the return date of the summary judgment motion, counsel for the defendant raised an issue regarding a defence medical by a psychiatrist or psychologist which he states that he was not able to arrange in time for this motion, as R.B. was incarcerated at the time he sought to schedule the defence medical, and the correctional facility could only schedule two and three hour blocks of time. In August, 2016 defendant's counsel arranged a "triage" call with Justice Wilson on the defence medical issue. I take it this was a case management conference call pursuant to Rule 50.13. There is no endorsement in the file, and Mr. Elkin indicated that Justice Wilson had told him to raise the matter with the motions judge.

[60] I asked whether Mr. Elkin was requesting an adjournment of the argument as to whether or not summary judgment was appropriate in this case until after the defence medical was completed. Counsel for E.S. advised that he was prepared to proceed to argue that this was not an appropriate case for summary judgment without the defence medical. If that argument did not succeed, he submitted that summary judgment on the question of damages should be delayed for the purpose of completing a defence medical and the quantum of damages determination be deferred until that time.

[61] I was concerned with respect to steps taken to schedule the defence medical, and the effect of the plaintiff's incarceration. After the hearing, I circulated two sets of questions to counsel, and received their submissions. On the basis of this information, I find that the defendant has failed to respond to the requirements of a summary judgment motion. He failed to comply with the CPC Order of Justice McEwen, and the consent timetable. Given this delay, there is no basis for adjourning the damages issue to obtain a defence medical. Had defence counsel responded appropriately, the defence medical could have and should have been arranged in time to have the material in his responding motion record.

[62] The litigation was commenced in March, 2014. In March 2015, R.B.'s counsel informed E.S.'s counsel that he would be bringing a summary judgment motion. The Seatter Psychological-Legal Report was served in December, 2015, with a section 52 Evidence Act notice, which indicated that the plaintiff would rely on the report on the summary judgment motion. The defendant's first request to schedule discoveries was made on February 18; the discoveries were scheduled five weeks later, on March 24, 2016. In May, 2016, counsel agreed to a consent timetable scheduling the 1.5 day summary judgment motion for September, and requiring the defendant to file his responding record by July 15, 2016.

[63] Thus, the court order and consent timetable required all responding evidence to be completed by July 15, 2016. However, the first phone call from defendant's counsel attempting to schedule a defence medical was July 14, 2016 – the day before the responding record was due.

[64] In his response to my written questions about scheduling the defence medical, counsel responded as follows:

The defendant consciously and deliberately took no steps to arrange a defence medical until the completion of examinations for discovery. In civil personal injury actions it is the practice of counsel to obtain defence medicals once the plaintiff has testified under oath. This is particularly important in cases where the credibility of the witness is paramount and the injuries are in the psychiatric realm.

[65] Defendant's counsel indicates that after the discoveries he spoke with the defendant and family to obtain instructions, and contacted two psychiatrists on an informal basis to see whether they would be prepared to provide an opinion. He states then called the plaintiff's counsel and learned the plaintiff was incarcerated. It is important to note that the first time defence counsel called to obtain a defence medical was on July 14, 2016 – one day before the responding record was due, and approximately two months before the hearing date. As importantly, both in court and in response to my questions after the hearing, defendant's counsel states that it takes months to obtain a defence medical.

[66] After receiving the July 14 phone call requesting a defence medical, R.B.'s counsel contacted the correctional facility, and informed the defendant's counsel that arrangements could be made to conduct the defence medical at the correctional facility, although in three sessions of two hours over one day, rather than an uninterrupted five hour session. Defendant's counsel took no steps to schedule the defence medical at the correctional facility, and filed no evidence as to why this accommodation would not be sufficient.

[67] The court is generally entitled to assume that the record on a motion for summary judgment contains all the evidence the parties would present at trial. There are exceptions to this; where evidence is missing due to the other party's misconduct, or for reasons beyond the party's control, then this assumption may be rebutted. However, "[i]n these circumstances, a burden of persuasion rests on [the party] to establish that it has taken reasonable steps to obtain the evidence it needs for the motion for summary judgment, and that the missing evidence would be material to the disposition of this motion": Sweda Farms Ltd. v. Egg Farmers of Ontario, 2014 ONSC 1200, 2014 CarswellOnt 2149, at paras. 27-28.

[68] The steps taken by defendant's counsel in respect of the defence medical were too little, too late. Counsel for the defendant stated in response to my written questions that: "it simply was not practical for him to have obtained instructions and made arrangements for a significant psychiatric examination in the short time period that followed the examinations for discovery up until the incarceration of the plaintiff." I disagree.

[69] The defendant knew in December, 2015 that Dr. Seatter's Report would be relied on in the summary judgment motion. Knowing that it takes months to obtain a defence medical report, he took no steps to arrange a defence medical until the day before his record was due. Accepting that the defence medical is best done after discoveries, in the fact of a pending motion, the defendant took almost four months after discoveries to even call the plaintiff to arrange the defence medical. In this case, the defendant should have taken reasonable steps to schedule the defence medical, even if the timing required it to be completed after discoveries.

[70] He has filed no evidence as to why the alternate accommodation – conducting the defence medical at the correctional facility – was insufficient. In May 2016, before even attempting to schedule a defence medical, his office consented to the timetable – in the face of assertions today that it takes months to get a defence medical. Thus, the defendant has not met the burden of establishing that he took reasonable steps to obtain the evidence he required for the summary judgment.

[71] The defendant has also not met the burden of establishing that the missing evidence would be material to the motion; he has filed no evidence with respect to the types of information that might be gleaned on a defence medical, for example. He chose not to cross-examine Dr. Seatter, he chose not to cross-examine the plaintiff on her affidavit, and he chose not to file any evidence. In the absence of any evidence, the defendant has not met this burden.

Issue #3: Causation and Defence Counsel's Submissions in a Criminal Proceeding

[72] On the motion the defendant filed a partial transcript of what appears to be R.B.'s defence counsel's submissions in what appears to be a sentencing proceeding. The partial transcript was filed without an affidavit, and without identifying the date of the submissions or the nature of the proceeding. In his factum, defendant's counsel then sought to rely on this extract of defence counsel's submissions in a criminal proceeding to raise an issue with respect to causation of damages.

[73] However, as set out in R. v. Pahl, 2016 BCCA 234 (CanLII) at para. 55:

Counsel's podium is not the equivalent of the witness box. In speaking to sentence, counsel make submissions, they do not give "evidence."

[74] The transcript excerpt was not filed with an affidavit, but was handed up in a record on the day of the hearing. It is not properly identified. The submissions have no evidentiary value with respect to raising any issues relating to causation or extent of damages claimed.

Assessment of Damages

[75] The function of non-pecuniary damages in a sexual battery case is to provide solace for the victim's pain and suffering and loss of enjoyment of life, to vindicate the victim's dignity and personal autonomy and to recognize the humiliating and degrading nature of the wrongful acts: G. (B.M.) v. Nova Scotia (Attorney General) 2007 NSCA 120, 2007 CarswellNS 552 at para. 132. Crowell, J.A. held at para. 127:

In the context of sexual assault and battery, the cases have recognized that there are fundamental, although intangible, interests at stake: the victim's dignity and personal autonomy. Thus, the award of damages should take a functional approach in relation to these interests in addition to the more familiar ones of pain, suffering and loss of enjoyment of life.

[76] Factors to be considered include:

- (a) The circumstances of the victim at the time of the events, including factors such as age and vulnerability;
- (b) The circumstances of the assault, including number, frequency, violence, and how invasive and degrading they were;
- (c) The circumstances of the defendant, including age and whether he was in a position of trust, and
- (d) The consequences for the victim of the wrongful behaviour, including ongoing psychological injuries: (G. (B.M.), para. 134)

[77] The plaintiff relied on three cases to establish the range of damages.

- (1) In Evans v. Sproule, 2008 CanLII 58428 (ON SC), 2008 CarswellOnt 8753(S.C.J.) the defendant police officer sexually assaulted the plaintiff in his police cruiser while on duty. Justice Chapnik awarded $150,000 for general and aggravated damages, $40,000 for loss of earning capacity, $12,342.00 for future therapy costs, and $25,000.00 in punitive damages. The plaintiff suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder, anxiety and depression requiring medical treatment.
- (2) In Morgan v. Kent, 2008 CarswellOnt 1357 (S.C.J.) the plaintiff did not seek counselling, and the defendant was not in a position of trust or a fiduciary relationship; although dismissed on the basis of a limitation period, Justice Matheson would have awarded general damages in the amount of $25,000.
- (3) In Pearson v. Mian, the court awarded general damages in the amount of $25,000 (2002 CarswellOnt 7286 (S.C.J.))

[78] I have also considered cases set out by Justice Glustein in Silvera v. Olympia Jewellery Corp., 2015 CarswellOnt 9277 2015 ONSC 3760 (S.C.J.), a case in which an employee was inappropriately touched on several occasions by her boss (see paras. 128-139).

[79] I fix general non-pecuniary damages in the amount of $70,000, on the basis of the uncontested evidence of the plaintiff and Dr. Seatter, and the comparable cases on damages, with pre-judgment and post-judgment interest at the Courts of Justice Act rate. Factors I consider include that E.S. was in a position of trust. He was R.B.'s lawyer. The battery took place in the first meeting with the new client, when they were meeting for the purposes of preparing her defence to a criminal charge. The touching was sexual, unwanted, and an invasion of R.B.'s personal dignity and autonomy. As a client, she was vulnerable. There was no violence involved, and took place on one occasion only. On the evidence before me, the consequences for R.B.'s psychological integrity were significant.

[80] I note that although there is much discussion of E.S.'s dementia, no evidence was filed to support the dementia, including the nature and extent, and its effects on E.S. The plaintiff states she is foregoing punitive damages in light of his health.

[81] The plaintiff claims costs of future therapy care in the amount of $2,000 to $5,000, based on the evidence of Dr. Seatter, for initial psychological treatment for approximately 10-12 sessions plus future treatment. I award $5,000 for future therapy costs and psychological counselling, with post-judgment interest at the Courts of Justice Act rate.

[82] Paragraph 25 of the Statement of Claim had claimed future care costs, including for therapy and counselling, the details of which would be provided prior to trial. In this matter, she moved for summary judgment on her claim. The basis of and amount for future care costs was included in Dr. Seatter's report, provided in December, 2015. I find that the claim for the therapy and counselling as future care costs is validly made; at the oral hearing plaintiff's counsel requested leave to amend if required, to claim the therapy costs. I find leave to amend is not required, but would have granted if it were. I note that notice of motion sought summary judgment in the amount of $250,000, which was substantially reduced in the factum and oral argument.

COSTS

[83] If the parties are not able to reach an agreement on costs, they may make costs submissions to me. The plaintiff may make their costs submissions to me in writing by January 18th, and the defendant by January 25th. Each party is restricted to three pages (not including the bills of costs).

[84] I would remind E.S.'s counsel to consider including a bill of costs with the responding submissions. The reasonable expectations of the unsuccessful party are an important factor in determining an amount of costs that is fair and reasonable. However, in order for this factor to be assessed, the court requires the bills of costs of all counsel: United States v. Yemec (2007), 2007 CanLII 65619 (ON SCDC), 85 O.R. (3d) 751 (Ont. Div. Ct.) at para. 54. I note that all too often, unsuccessful parties fail to include their bill of costs with submissions, thereby depriving the court of information potentially relevant to the issue.

Kristjanson J.

Date: January 11, 2017

NOTE: This endorsement has been edited subsequent to the release to the parties to anonymize the following information: names, dates, and places.

Schedule "A" – Chronology of Litigation

March, 2014	R.B. issues Statement of Claim
August, 2014	E.S. files Statement of Defence
March 23, 2015	R.B.'s counsel informs E.S.'s counsel that he has instructions to bring summary judgment motion, and requesting dates for motion scheduling court
March 30, 2015	R.B.'s counsel writes to confirm a new lawyer will be taking carriage of the matter
April 7, 2015	E.S.'s counsel acknowledges summary judgment motion request, and requests Affidavit of Documents, R.B.'s psychiatric medical history and moving to examinations for discovery
May 6, 2015	R.B. provides draft Affidavit of Documents with Schedule A productions (sworn copy provided at discovery). Letter again raises R.B.'s intention to proceed with summary judgment motion and stated that the motion requisition form for CPC dates was submitted
May 20, 2015	E.S.'s counsel inquires whether R.B. will be available for examinations for discovery, and requests materials dealing with R.B.'s sentencing, pre-sentencing psychiatric materials, and status of criminal matter.
May 22, 2015	R.B.'s counsel: • confirms R.B. will be produced for discoveries • suggests combining with cross-examinations on summary judgment motion

	• provides motion scheduling court dates in June and July to schedule summary judgment motion • confirms that she does not possess materials submitted at time of R.B. 's sentencing • questions relevance of status of criminal charges, requests to be advised of the relevance, and indicates she will reflect on the request.
After May 22, 2015	Counsel discuss availability to attend CPC
December 10, 2015	R.B. serves Psychological-Legal report of Dr. Seatter together with Notice to Rely on Medical Reports under s. 52, Evidence Act , and notifying that R.B. intends to introduce in evidence at summary judgment motion
December 10, 2015	R.B.'s counsel writes with dates for motion scheduling court in January and February, to set summary judgment motion date
February 18, 2016	E.S.'s counsel leaves voicemail re scheduling discoveries
February 29, 2016	Counsel discuss examinations for discovery, agree to discover R.B. March 24, and E.S.'s counsel informs R.B.'s counsel that E.S. would likely not be available to be examined for discovery
March 24, 2016	R.B. is examined for discovery
March 28, 2016	E.S.'s counsel states he has written to determine the medical condition and whereabouts of client, and that he suspects he is not going to be producible for discoveries but he will confirm
April 15, 2016	On consent, motion scheduling court adjourned to Civil Practice Court in May, 2016
May, 2016	Parties attend in CPC. Matter set for September 29-30. Timetable set and signed by counsel for both parties; Justice McEwen issues order setting September 29-30, 2016 dates and approving of timetable.
June 6, 2016	R.B. incarcerated
June 17, 2016	Deadline for R.B.'s motion record as per CPC timetable; R.B.'s counsel files motion record in compliance with timetable
Sometime between March 24, 2016 and July 14, 2016	E.S.'s counsel speaks with defendant and family discussing costs and funding of psychiatric examination and potential experts. Counsel contacts two psychiatrists on informal basis to conduct examinations. Once counsel received instructions and obtained consent, he telephoned plaintiff's counsel (July 14, 2016) to arrange.
July 14, 2016	E.S.'s counsel telephones R.B.'s counsel for the first time to arrange defence medical, and is informed that R.B. is incarcerated. R.B.'s counsel contacts the correctional facility and informs E.S.'s counsel by e-mail that the correctional facility can accommodate two sessions, rather than a single five hour session, for a defence medical, and p roviding details as to how to arrange. No further steps taken by E. S.'s counsel.

July 15, 2016	Deadline for E.S.'s motion record as per CPC timetable; no materials filed.
July 25, 2016	E.S.'s counsel writes to R.B.'s counsel indicating that he does not believe the case is appropriate for summary judgment and suggesting a triage court attendance to obtain directions.
August 4, 2016	R.B.'s counsel returns from holidays and replies to July 25 letter with her availability in August (August 11, 12, 16-19, 22-26).
August 5, 2016	Deadline for completion of cross-examinations as per CPC timetable; no cross-examinations conducted.
August 23, 2016	Case Conference with Justice Wilson. E.S.'s counsel indicates that he arranged the "triage" call to raise issue that defence medical could not be completed due to incarceration; no order issued and no endorsement in the file, and E.S.'s counsel indicates Justice Wilson told him to raise the issue with the motions judge
August 26, 2016	Deadline for R.B.'s factum as per CPC timetable.
September 16, 2016	Deadline for E.S.'s factum as per CPC timetable.
September 21, 2016	R.B.'s counsel files Supplementary Motion Record containing transcripts of E.S.'s criminal sentencing and plea; no objection was taken to the filing of that material
September 29-30, 2016	Summary judgment motion is heard as per CPC timetable E.S.'s counsel hands up factum and responding motion record containing only excerpts from defence counsel's submission in a criminal proceeding involving R.B. No objection taken to handing up material (served on R.B. September 26, but not accepted for filing by civil motions counter as not compliant with Rules of Civil Procedure) E.S. has not provided an Affidavit of Documents or draft Affidavit of Documents by the return date.
October, 2016	R.B. scheduled to be released from incarceration

Tab 157

AA v. BB and CC, 2018 ONSC 4173 (CanLII)

Source: Superior Court of Justice
Date: 2018-07-03
File number: CV-15-109
Other citation: [2018] OJ No 4501 (QL)
Citation: AA v. BB and CC, 2018 ONSC 4173 (CanLII), <<https://canlii.ca/t/htrr0>>, retrieved on 2026-03-24

WARNING

This case is subject to subsections 87(8) and 87(9) of the Child, Youth and Family Services Act, 2017. These subsections and subsection 142(3) of the Child, Youth and Services Act, 2017, which deals with the consequences of failure to comply, read as follows:

87(8) Prohibition re identifying child — No person shall publish or make public information that has the effect of identifying a child who is a witness at or a participant in a hearing or the subject of a proceeding, or the child's parent or foster parent or a member of the child's family.

(9) Prohibition re identifying person charged — The court may make an order prohibiting the publication of information that has the effect of identifying a person charged with an offence under this Part.

142(3) Offences re publication — A person who contravenes subsection 87(8) or 134(11) (publication of identifying information) or an order prohibiting publication made under clause 87(7)(c) or subsection 87(9), and a director, officer or employee of a corporation who authorizes, permits or concurs in such a contravention by the corporation, is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable to a fine of not more than $10,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than three years, or to both.

CITATION: AA v. BB and CC, 2018 ONSC 4173
COURT FILE NO.: CV-15-109
DATE: 20180703

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

AA

Plaintiff

Self-represented

– and –

BB and
CC

Defendants

Self-represented

Self-represented

HEARD: November 28, 29, 30,
December 1 and 2, 2016

November 21, 22, 23, 28 and
December 4, 2017

AMENDED ENDORSEMENT

Amended decision: The text of the original judgment was amended on July 22, 2020 and a description of the amendment is appended.

CORKERY J.

[1] On April 16, 2013, the Kawartha Haliburton Children's Aid Society received a report from an anonymous caller stating she had witnessed a man abusing children and a woman. BB was the caller. She was a friend of CC. CC is the mother of AA's two children. The report was false. AA has sued CC and BB claiming damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress, conspiracy, slander and libel. He has spent the past five years prosecuting this action and trying to clear his name.

[2] The trial of this matter initially took place in November and December, 2016. Although she had filed a defence, BB did not participate in the trial. No lawyer or agent appeared on her behalf. No communication was received from her as to why she did not attend. The trial proceeded in her absence and AA was allowed the opportunity to prove his claim against her, pursuant to Rule 52.01(2).

[3] On June 5, 2017, I released my initial decision. The plaintiff's claim was dismissed as against CC and judgment was granted against BB for slander with general damages in the amount of $5,000.00 plus $5,000.00 for punitive damages.

[4] On July 18, 2017, the plaintiff successfully moved to set aside my original judgment under Rule 59.06(2)(a) on the basis of his discovering new facts. Applying the test set out by the Ontario Court of Appeal in Mehedi v. 2057161 Ontario Inc., 2015 ONCA 670, I ordered the trial be re-opened to receive and consider new evidence relating to communication between the defendants, including: texts, emails and telephone conversations.

[5] The re-opened trial proceeded in November and December, 2017. BB did participate in this part of the trial. At her request, she was permitted to participate in the trial by telephone conference call. All three parties were allowed to testify with respect to the new evidence relating to communication between the defendants.

A. Background

[6] AA and CC share custody of their two young children, born in 2008 and 2009. They separated in January, 2011, ending a four-year relationship. On April 21, 2011, AA filed an application seeking custody of his children. CC sought custody, support and a restraining order. After a thirteen-day trial, Gunsolus J. ordered that the parties would have shared custody with the children residing with both parents on a week-about schedule. The order is extensive and includes detailed provisions addressing emergency medical care for the children.

[7] During the course of the litigation, commencing in 2011, there were five referrals to the Society about AA made by someone associated with his children's mother (see AA v. Kawartha-Haliburton Children's Aid Society, 2014 CFSRB 63 at paragraph 9). None of the previous referrals were verified.

[8] In 2016, the defendants, BB and CC, were co-workers who provided support to each other as single parents. They helped each other by caring for each other's children.

[9] The April 16, 2013 anonymous report was not the first complaint that the Society had received concerning AA. There had been at least five previous "referrals" concerning him. A "referral" is the word used by the Society for a report they receive about a possible child in need of protection. None of the five previous "referrals" concerning AA were "verified" by the Society, meaning that their investigation of the five previous referrals did not confirm what was reported.

[10] On April 30, 2013, the Society wrote to AA to inform him that the April 16, 2013 allegations against him were not verified and that his file was closed. In that letter, the investigator also stated that there was "some concern that the allegations reported to the Society were malicious in nature...".

[11] AA had more than "some concern" that the allegations were malicious. He was certain they were malicious. He commenced this action as a result of those allegations.

[12] In his Statement of Claim, AA alleges that the defendants, CC and BB, conspired together to make a fabricated complaint to the Society. AA alleges that BB made the malicious call to the Society using information she received from CC. AA further alleges that CC is liable for statements she made to the Society in the course of its investigation.

[13] AA claims damages in the amount of $70,000 for the loss of his career, his income and pension, aggravated and punitive damages, and costs. He asserts three causes of action:

- a. intentional infliction of emotional distress;
- b. conspiracy; and
- c. slander and libel.

B. The Facts

1. The Pleadings: deemed admissions of BB

[14] By Notice of Action dated April 16, 2015, and Statement of Claim dated July 2, 2015, AA commenced this action.

[15] In paragraph 11 of his Statement of Claim, AA alleges as follows:

11. On or around April 16th 2013 [BB] called the Kawartha Haliburton Children's Aid Society (KHCAS) and made allegations that I harmed my children as well as abused both physically and verbally my girlfriend Kelly Grant in front of my children, Kelly's children, and another friend's children. Among the statements made were the following: 1) That I had thrown my daughter [K.H.], and had thrown a chair and shovel at my partner Kelly Grant; 2) Swore in front of the children saying "You're a cunt", "You're a bitch", "You can't even take care of the kids and this is all you're supposed to do".

[16] In her defence, BB did not deny paragraph 11 of the Statement of Claim nor did she state that she had no knowledge of it. Similarly, she did not deny nor did she state that she had no knowledge of paragraphs 14, 15, 16, 18, 19 or 20 of the Statement of Claim. Under Rule 25.07(2), BB is deemed to have admitted these paragraphs. Her admission of paragraph 11 of the Statement of Claim is consistent with the pleading in her brief defence in paragraph 1:

The defendant is a Duty to Report Mandated Reporter under Ministry of Children Youth services legislation (CFSAS s 72(2) and (CFSA s. 72(3))).

[17] In particular, I note the following deemed admissions by BB:

1. BB was the anonymous female caller person who called the Society on April 16, 2013 and made allegations about AA to Ms. Hill (paragraph 11 of the Statement of Claim);
2. BB repeated those allegations on April 22 to Ms. Cooper and made additional allegations that AA had poisoned the neighbour's dog and that most people in the neighbourhood think there is something wrong with AA (paragraph 15 of the Statement of Claim); and
3. BB knew or ought to have known that making a false allegation to the Society about AA would be "hugely damaging" to him and understands the implications of making a referral to the Society (paragraphs 43 and 45 of the Statement of Claim).

2. Evidence from the initial trial

a) Sunday, April 14, 2013

[18] The evidence of what happened on April 14, 2013 is not contentious. Both AA and his partner, K.G., testified.

[19] In 2013, AA and K.G. were in a relationship. On Friday, April 12, 2013 K.G. travelled from Oshawa to Peterborough with her two older children to spend the weekend with AA and his two children. On the Sunday evening, April 14, 2013, they enjoyed a barbeque with another friend, N.H., and her two children. At the time, AA's and CC's two daughters were 5 and 3 years old. K.G.'s son was 9, one daughter was 6 and her youngest daughter (who was not with her that weekend) was 3 months. N.H.'s daughter was 13, her son was 10.

[20] Just after 7:00 p.m., the three adults were inside AA's house and the six children were outside playing on a trampoline, when K.G.'s son came to the back door to say that AA's daughter,

K.H., was hurt. AA went out to the trampoline and carried K.H. into the house to a couch. She was crying and saying her leg hurt. No bruising or swelling was apparent on her leg. AA and K.G. made her comfortable and put an ice pack on her leg. K.H. fell asleep on the couch around 7:30 and AA carried her to bed. N.H. and her children left for home around 8:00 p.m. AA did not contact CC that evening.

[21] On Monday morning K.H. told her father her leg still hurt and she was unable to put weight on it. AA decided to take her to the hospital to have it looked at. After dropping his other daughter off at the daycare, AA arrived at the hospital at 8:30 a.m. He did not contact CC as he knew that she had would have just arrived home from working a night shift. K.H. was content and AA thought she may have a sprain. Also, either before arriving at the hospital or shortly after arriving, the battery of his cell phone died. Apparently, AA was able to charge it at the hospital.

[22] Around 11:00 a.m. K.H.'s leg was x-rayed. Initially, AA was told by the x-ray technician that there was no break. AA texted CC that he had taken K.H. to the hospital and she was fine. This was the first communication he had with CC about K.H.'s injury. Shortly thereafter, AA was informed by the doctor that the x-ray revealed a fracture. AA immediately informed CC of this new information. CC responded by texting that AA had no authority to authorize medical treatment. AA told the doctor that K.H.'s mother was on her way and that she would provide directions as to treatment. The doctor proceeded to put a splint on K.H. When CC arrived at the hospital, she made the arrangements for K.H. to get a cast the following day. K.H. remained with her father until the next morning. They departed the hospital between 12:00 p.m. and 1:00 p.m.

[23] On Tuesday, April 16, 2013, AA took K.H. to the cast clinic to meet her mother after he dropped his other daughter off at the daycare. AA provided mother with further information about how K.H. injured her leg and then went to work.

[24] At 10:49 a.m., CC emailed AA seeking clarification regarding how K.H. broke her leg. She wanted to know what time the trampoline incident occurred and the details of what occurred on the trampoline. CC also expressed her concern that she had not been informed of the injury until the next morning after x-rays had been taken, although she is the parent with primary responsibility for making medical decisions.

[25] At 4:18 p.m., AA responded to the e-mail, answering CC's questions. As he had been at work, he did not see the e-mail until later in the day. He reported the facts as outlined herein and expressed his view that he had not made any medical decisions and had reported the injury to CC when appropriate.

b) The Referral to the Society

[26] On Tuesday, April 16, 2013, at 1:51 p.m., the Society received a telephone call from an anonymous female. She informed Jennifer Hill, an intake worker at the Society, that she had observed incidents of a man abusing children and screaming at a woman. She reported seeing five or six children playing on a trampoline on the previous Saturday. A woman and a man were outside with the children. One of the children started yelling that her leg hurt and the man got mad and told her to shut up and keep playing. The caller reported that the man then started yelling at his partner: "You're a cunt." "You're a bitch." "You can't even take care of the kids and that is all you are suppose [sic] to do." She said he threw a chair and a shovel toward her. Then the little girl started yelling about her leg and dad again told her to shut up. He then lifted her up off the ground by her right arm and threw her up and across the trampoline. The caller was concerned for the little girl as there was no net on the trampoline. The little girl continued to cry and yell that her leg was hurting.

[27] The anonymous caller stated she observed the incident from the home of a neighbour she was visiting. On the day she was calling, she stated there were no children around. She assumed they were in school. The same day, before she called, she had heard the man yelling at the woman “Get it fucking cleaned up stupid”.

[28] The caller provided the address of the home she was observing. From its records, the Society determined the address provided was that of AA. The caller was adamant that her identity remain anonymous. She provided only a first name, Marie, and a telephone number where she could be contacted.

c) Society Investigation

[29] As a result of the call, the Society commenced a child protection investigation. Bobbi Cooper, a child welfare worker with the Society, conducted the investigation.

[30] On April 18, 2013, Ms. Cooper conducted a home visit at AA’s home. She interviewed AA and his two children and K.G. and her five-year-old daughter. Her interviews confirmed the facts of the trampoline incident consistent with that described by AA and K.G. outlined above. They all denied that AA was angry or yelling.

[31] On April 19, 2013, Ms. Cooper spoke by telephone with K.G. K.G. expressed her concerns that the call appeared to be malicious.

[32] On April 22, 2013, Ms. Cooper contacted the anonymous caller, leaving a voice message on the number provided by the caller for “Mary”, not “Marie”, to call Ms. Cooper. Ms. Cooper wanted to clarify with the caller information she had provided in the original referral, such as the day of the week when the incident occurred and whether the power was out. Ms. Cooper had already determined that power had been off all weekend at AA’s home due to a local outage. “Mary” returned Ms. Cooper’s call. Mary did not want to identify the neighbor she was staying with, but stated that the house is on the street behind AA’s house and the back yard’s back onto one another. Mary could not recall the exact day of the incident, but believed it occurred on Sunday. She confirmed that she could hear the yelling from her friend’s house.

[33] On April 25, 2013, Ms. Cooper met with N.H. and her two children at the Society office. Her interviews with them also confirmed the facts of the trampoline incident as outlined above. N.H. and her two children stated that AA was not yelling, swearing or angry at anyone. N.H. stated that at no point in her friendship with AA has she heard AA yell or swear at his children or K.G. She would not lie for him or ask her children to cover for him.

[34] On April 25, 2013, Ms. Cooper spoke with CC by telephone. At 4:20 p.m. on April 25, 2013, Ms. Cooper had left two voice messages requesting that CC call her. One message was left on the number Ms. Cooper had on file for CC. The other message was left on the contact number provided by Mary and which Ms. Cooper had used to contact Mary on April 22, 2013. At 5:00 p.m., Ms. Cooper received a telephone call from Mary’s contact number, the caller said nothing and hung up. Two minutes later, Ms. Cooper received the call from CC, from a telephone number Ms. Cooper did not know.

[35] CC told Ms. Cooper she did not know what was going on. Ms. Cooper explained that the Society had received a referral concerning AA and that she was trying to determine if there was any link between the referral source and CC. CC denied any knowledge of a call being made to the Society regarding AA. Ms. Cooper asked CC how she knew to call her. CC explained that she had received a message from her co-worker, BB to call Ms. Cooper.

[36] Ms. Cooper testified that CC discussed with Ms. Cooper the difficulties of her custody litigation with AA. It had cost her a lot of money and it was now difficult to co-parent with AA. She spoke about how AA was abusive and vindictive. CC said she had asked other people not to call the Society about AA, as a judge had told her she would never see her children again if anybody from her camp contacted the Society again. Ms. Cooper told CC she had no intention of telling AA or K.G. about their conversation. Ms. Cooper told CC that she believed that the referral was made maliciously. CC reacted by becoming upset and stating she had nothing to do with the referral to the Society. CC told Ms. Cooper that at work she has talked about her frustration with AA and the court process and had sought advice from peers on how to manage the situation. She talked at work about the fact that K.H. broke her leg. She has talked at work about how AA is a terrible parent and an abusive person and that AA will spin a conspiracy theory so she will never see her children again. In cross-examination, Ms. Cooper stated she could not recall if CC stated that she used AA's name when she spoke of him at work.

[37] In her evidence, CC acknowledged that she did talk at work about K.H. breaking her leg, she does seek advice from her co-workers but at no time has she used AA's name. During their family litigation many allegations were made by both sides. Referring to Ms. Cooper's case note of the interview between CC and Ms. Cooper, CC stated that she believes that note speaks for itself.

[38] Ms. Cooper's case note of her conversation with CC: notation "She stated that she has talked about how he is a terrible and abusive parent and that she feels he will spin a conspiracy theory and she will never see her children again."

[39] On April 25, 2013, Ms. Cooper visited AA's property without informing AA. She observed that there was no adjacent property from which the anonymous caller could reasonably see or hear the things she claimed to have seen and heard.

[40] On April 26, 2013, Ms. Cooper met with K.G. and her eight-year old son.

[41] On April 29, 2013, Ms. Cooper determined that the allegations made in the referral were unverified.

[42] On April 30, 2013, Ms. Cooper wrote to AA to inform him that the allegations were determined to be unverified and that his file was now closed. She also communicated the Society's remaining concern at the conclusion of the investigation that the allegations reported were malicious in nature.

d) Obtaining Disclosure

[43] AA was shocked when he received Ms. Cooper's letter. Up to that point, Ms. Cooper had provided very little detail to him about the nature of the allegations he was facing. This initial disclosure caused him great stress.

[44] AA testified that he had thought that with the conclusion of his family litigation with CC, the unfounded referrals about him to the Society would end. He explained how those allegations had caused him a great deal of stress and he could not eat or sleep and his doctor telling him not to go to work. False allegations against him had already been the cause of one failed relationship and now he feared it would cause K.G. to leave him. He promised her and himself that he would get to the bottom of this to protect her, their children and himself from any more such allegations.

[45] He committed himself to finding the source of the April 16, 2013 referral and to holding that person accountable.

[46] AA tried to take a sabbatical from work without a doctor's note. Ultimately, he lost his job. AA did not call his employer to provide evidence as to the precise reason he was dismissed.

[47] AA's own investigation began with the Society which led to a process involving the Society's Internal Complaints Review Panel. AA was not satisfied with that process and on November 21, 2013, filed an application with the Child and Family Services Review Board.

[48] In a lengthy decision dated October 30, 2014 (AA v. Kawartha-Haliburton Children's Aid Society, 2014 CFSRB 63), the Board ordered, together with other relief, that AA be given full access to his file redacted to exclude identifying information of third parties (AA v. Kawartha-Haliburton Children's Aid Society, 2014 CFSRB 63 at paragraph 139, paragraph 1 of the directions therein.)

[49] The Board's decision also included a "Confidentiality Order" that prohibited AA, the applicant, from using any of the information provided and used in the proceeding from being disclosed or relied upon in any other proceeding. Thus, AA was required to commence an application in this court for disclosure of the names of the person or persons who made the referral. That application was granted by MacDougall J. on May 29, 2015.

3. The Plaintiff's Rule 59.06 motion

[50] On July 18, 2017, I heard the plaintiff's motion to re-open the trial under Rule 59.06. It was opposed by CC. I determined that the trial should be re-opened to hear new evidence. I set aside my original judgment and made the following order:

1. The trial of this matter will continue in the fall 2017 sittings commencing November 20, 2017 before me.
2. Only new evidence of communication between the defendants will be received in the continuation of the trial, including: texts, emails and telephone conversations.
3. The defendants shall serve updated affidavits of documents together with any new documents identified for which privilege is not claimed on or before July 31, 2017.
4. The plaintiff may bring any motion with respect to disclosure on August 1, 8 or 29.
5. The parties shall attend for a judicial pre-trial in Lindsay on October 12, 2017.

4. Evidence from the second part of the trial

a) Evidence of AA

[51] On June 13, 2017, AA's daughter arrived at his home after being with her mother, with an iPhone. AA learned from K.H. that her mother had given her the phone. AA checked the contents of this phone and discovered that it had many old text messages, including messages about him. AA transferred the texts to his computer to preserve them. He did not edit the texts or modify them in any way.

[52] Included in these texts AA discovered on the iPhone given to his daughter is an exchange between CC and BB in which BB is reacting to having been served with AA's claim against her in this action. BB is upset that CC's "ex" is suing her.

[53] On October 7, 2015, after BB tells CC she has been served by AA, the following text exchange takes place between BB and CC:

11:42:00 BB: I know you are scared I will not be your scape goat. So your email today saying don't text email or call today. Seriously. You and your mom who is now in violation of privacy is asking someone to set themselves up for lawsuit. You (CC) set this whole issue up. You are abusing the courts with your games. I will not;

11:43:55 CC: What are you talking about?! You are not a scape goat for anything. I am not abusing the courts for anything.;

11:44:27 CC: My mom?!;

11:47:20 CC: I also never sent you an email today.;

12:00:02 BB: What you don't get is because of you. I am now in the middle of a law suit with your ex.;

12:01:39 CC: I have no control over my ex. He is emotionally and mentally unstable and unpredictable. I have no idea why you are turning against me all of a sudden.;

12:07:50 BB: I am not turning against you. Yet your last comment was well you were manated to report it has nothing to do with me. The fuck it doesn't. In case you haven't forgotten it is the holiday season. I lost my nephew and parents at this time. So this year as I am trying to move forward I have your ex with a bs claim my address in a different city and now safety concerns. Happy thanksgiving to me.;

12:09:22 CC: (BB), I can't control him. It's not fair. He's suing me too. He's psychotic. I know that this is a tough time for you and I hate that he's doing this. I have no control over him and his psychotic actions.;

12:10:30 BB: I can't and won't do this ;

12:13:26 CC: He's filed a lawsuit. We have to respond and defend ourselves or it doesn't go away.;

12:14:40 BB: I shouldn't be in this Shit at all. Period;

12:15:26 CC: I agree 600%;

12:16:30 BB: And when you state well you hate report. Nothing to do with me. Sorry all to do with you.;

12:19:24 CC: I'm sorry that he's doing this.;

18:43:58 BB: Are friendship was and is done. You threw it away long before today. I won't throw you under a bus but I also won't be thrown there either. I am filing a defence that I reported and legally had to. Do not report that you didn't know me and that I was rogue. Don't just don't. My statement will be the truth protecting me p and the girls. Don't say any different because I won't lie. You decided a long time ago that fuck her and you acted accordingly. I am not nothing and won't be treated as nothing. DON'T REPLY I DON'T WQNT TO HEAR ANY MORE LIES. JUST KNOW I WON'T WRITE THEM.;

18:51:36 BB: Not once in this issue have you said Omg I am sorry. And when you got served and not yesterday did you say a fucking word to me. It isn't and won't be all about you. Not for me and p not this time.;

[54] On October 8, 2015, BB continues:

05:36:25 BB: Hi I drove down and filed today. Said duty to report. Didn't know him. Knew you from work. That is it. Quoted duty to report protection and law. And filed a motion to suppress my address due to safety concerns related to cases I worked on.;

05:41:51 BB: Won't put you or girls in jeopardy

b) Evidence of BB

[55] BB testified that she made the call to the Society because of her “duty to report” although she admitted that she did not witness the incident. She stated that she learned of AA’s address from one of his daughters and that she called the Society to protect his daughter because she was “dealing with a lot of stuff.”

[56] BB said that she received the information she reported to the Society from the girls (AA and CC’s daughters). The were present when BB and CC were having a conversation before CC went off to work. BB was caring for the children that night. BB recalled that the younger one was in a cast. BB was talking with the girls and the information came out. BB confirmed that she received the information when both girls and her own son were present.

[57] BB waited 24 to 36 hours before contacted the Society.

a) Evidence of CC

[58] CC testified that on the night before the call was made to the Society, she was in the hospital due to a miscarriage. She explained that she did not mention this in the original trial because she had no memory of it until now. She is currently receiving psychotherapy to deal with post-traumatic stress disorder. Through therapy she recently discovered that she is blocking out memories and entire blocks of time.

[59] She testified about her efforts to provide AA with complete disclosure. However, she offered no explanation as to why she never disclosed the undeleted texts on the iPhone she gave to her daughter.

[60] Most of her testimony related to explaining the reasons for her sending and receiving so many text messages in 2017.

[61] In cross-examination, CC acknowledged that between April, 2013 and June, 2013 she exchanged over 1,000 texts with BB. She agreed that she attended the hospital on April 15, 2013 and that, when leaving, AA offered that she could take children but she declined. Her memory remained unclear as this was the day after she had spent the evening at the hospital after the miscarriage.

C. The Law

1. Intentional infliction of emotional distress

[62] The Ontario Court of Appeal recently affirmed the elements necessary to prove the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress: Prinzo v. Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care (2002), 2002 CanLII 45005 \(ON CA\), 60 O.R. (3d) 474 (C.A.). The tort of intentional infliction of mental suffering has three elements. The plaintiff must prove:

1. The defendant's conduct was flagrant and outrageous;
2. The defendant's conduct was calculated to harm the plaintiff;
3. The defendant's conduct caused the plaintiff to suffer a visible and provable illness.

2. Conspiracy

[63] In 1983, the Supreme Court of Canada recognized two categories of civil conspiracy: lawful means conspiracy (or simple motive conspiracy) and unlawful means conspiracy: Canada Cement LaFarge Ltd. v. British Columbia Lightweight Aggregate Ltd., 1983 CanLII 23 \(SCC\), [1983] 1 S.C.R. 452 at pp. 471-2.

[64] Essential, however, to any civil conspiracy is that two or more persons must act in combination by agreement or common design. As that essential element is lacking in this case, it is unnecessary to review the nuances of the developing law and the more recent decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada and our Court of Appeal with respecting the lawful and unlawful means categories.

3. Slander and libel

[65] To succeed in the tort of defamation the plaintiff must prove three things:

A plaintiff in a defamation action is required to prove three things to obtain judgment and an award of damages: (1) that the impugned words are defamatory, in the sense that they would tend to lower the plaintiff's reputation in the eyes of a reasonable person; (2) that the words in fact referred to the plaintiff; and (3) that the words were published, meaning that they were communicated to at least one person other than the plaintiff. If these elements are established on a balance of probabilities, falsity and damages are presumed. The plaintiff is not required to show that the defendant intended to do harm, or even that the defendant was careless. The tort is thus one of strict liability. (Grant v. Torstar Corp., 2009 SCC 61 (CanLII), [2009] 3 S.C.R. 640 at para. 28.)

[66] Once the plaintiff proves the three essential elements on a balance of probabilities, the defendant can defend the claim by proving the defamatory words were true or that the words were part of a privileged communication absolute or qualified.

[67] Qualified privilege was explained by the Supreme Court of Canada in Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 (SCC), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130, [1995] S.C.J.:

143 Qualified privilege attaches to the occasion upon which the communication is made, and not to the communication itself. As Lord Atkinson explained in Adam v. Ward, [1917] A.C. 309 (H.L.), at p. 334:

... a privileged occasion is ... an occasion where the person who makes a communication has an interest or a duty, legal, social, or moral, to make it to the person to whom it is made, and the person to whom it is so made has a corresponding interest or duty to receive it. This reciprocity is essential.

[68] In Cusson v. Quan, 2007 ONCA 771, the Ontario Court of Appeal recognized some of the contexts in which a qualified privilege may arise.

[39] Employment references, business and credit reports, and complaints to police, regulatory bodies or public authorities are classic examples of occasions of qualified privilege. The rationale for qualified privilege is that on such occasions, "no matter how harsh, hasty, untrue, or libelous the publication ... the amount of public inconvenience from the restriction of freedom of speech or writing would far outbalance that arising from the infliction of private injury" (Huntley v. Ward (1859), 6 C.B. (N.S.) 514, at p. 517).

[40] The privilege is said to be qualified as it can be defeated upon proof of malice, that is spite or ill-will, ulterior purpose, or, more commonly, proof that the defendant either knew the statement was false or was reckless as to its falsity: see Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, 1995 CanLII 59 (SCC), [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130, [1995] S.C.J. No. 64, at para. 145 ("Hill v. Scientology"). The privilege can also be lost where the limits of the duty or interest are exceeded by the use of words not reasonably appropriate to the occasion.

D. Analysis

a) Conspiracy

[69] In my original decision, I was not prepared to conclude that BB and CC acted in combination by agreement or common design which is necessary to prove the civil tort of conspiracy.

[70] Considering the evidence received in the second part of this trial, I am satisfied on a balance of probabilities that BB and CC did act in combination by agreement or common design to make a false report to the Society.

[71] I reject the evidence of BB that she learned of the information that she reported to the Society from one of AA and CC's daughters. The children were never in her company between the time of the injury and the time of the report to the Society. The only possible source for BB learning of the injury was from CC and I find that CC was the source of the information. Considering the texts exchanged between CC and BB and CC's inconsistent and evasive evidence, I find her evidence to be neither reliable or credible.

[72] I am not satisfied that any special damages have been identified or proven by AA that related directly to the conspiracy. Accordingly, the conspiracy claim merges with the two claims addressed below.

b) Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

[73] In this case, I am satisfied on a balance of probabilities that the three elements of the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress have been proved by the plaintiff. In making a false referral to the Society, BB engaged in conduct that was flagrant and outrageous and that was calculated to harm the plaintiff.

[74] My original decision was released without my having the benefit of the very recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Saadati v. Moorehead, 2017 SCC 28, on the extent to which expert evidence of mental health is required to prove damages. On the evidence of AA alone, I am satisfied that the false referral caused AA to suffer a visible and provable illness.

[75] On his evidence, I am satisfied that the false referral caused him to suffer depression and anxiety beyond "the upset, disgust, anxiety, agitation or other mental states that fall short of injury: Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27 at para. 9.

[76] On the evidence before me, AA is entitled to general damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress in the amount of $10,000.00 for which BB and CC are jointly and severally liable.

c) Slander and Libel

[77] The communication that BB had with the Society referred to AA using words that unquestionably would tend to lower the plaintiff's reputation in the eyes of a reasonable person.

[78] AA has proved on a balance of probabilities his claim of slander against both BB and CC who conspired together.

[79] I am not satisfied that AA has made out a separate claim for slander against both CC for the answers she gave to the Society when questioned.

[80] Communication with child welfare agencies responsible for protecting children in the course of their investigations is, in my view, but another "classic example" of an occasion of qualified privilege as referred to by the Court of Appeal in Cusson v. Quan. To find otherwise, would make it impossible for such public agencies to carry out their difficult but very necessary responsibility of protecting vulnerable children. I have no doubt that most interviews conducted in the course of such investigations will include statements that tend to lower another's reputation in the eyes of a reasonable person. CC spoke to Ms. Cooper about AA on the promise from Ms.

Cooper that she would not disclose what CC told her. This expectation was reasonable. Her discussion with Ms. Cooper was protected by qualified privilege, even if it included CC making admissions about what she said to others at work.

[81] I was provided with no authorities dealing with the quantum of damages in these circumstances. In determining the appropriate amount, I have considered how long it took the Society to complete its investigation, the nature of the allegation, the number of people and who heard the false allegation and the fact that the Society records show it as an unverified referral noting a concern that it may have been malicious. It impossible to know if this lowers or improves AA's reputation in the eyes of the Society.

[82] On the evidence before me, AA is entitled to general damages for slander in the amount of $10,000.00 for which BB and CC are jointly and severally liable.

d) Punitive damages

[83] Given the malicious nature of the false referral, AA is entitled to punitive damages in the amount of $5,000.00 for which BB and CC are jointly and severally liable.

E. Conclusion

[84] Judgment is granted in favour of the plaintiff against both defendants in the total amount of $25,000.00 for which BB and CC are jointly and severally liable.

[85] I will receive brief submissions, no more than eight pages, to be served and filed on or before July 31, 2018. I will also receive any reply from any party of no more than two pages to be served and filed on or before August 14, 2018.

J.C. Corkery J.

Released: July 3, 2018

Appendix

Amendments made July 22, 2020:

In accordance with the order made June 1, 2020 (AA v. BB and CC, 2019 ONSC 3423):

- the endorsement was amended to use the letters AA, BB and CC in place of the names or initials of parties, and
- the warning was added.

Tab 158

R. v. Barry, 2021 BCPC 59 (CanLII)

Source: Provincial Court of British Columbia
Date: 2021-03-26
File number: 26253
Citation: R. v. Barry, 2021 BCPC 59 (CanLII),
<<https://canlii.ca/t/jdzpk>>, retrieved on 2026-03-24

Citation: R. v. Barry
2021 BCPC 59

Date: 20210326
File No: 26253, 26239, 22417,
22587, 22641
Registry: Castlegar
Grand Forks

IN THE PROVINCIAL COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

File No: 26253
Registry: Castlegar

REGINA
v.
DARREN ANDREW BARRY

File No: 26239
Registry: Castlegar

REGINA
v.
ALICIA MARIE SIMPSON

File No: 22417, 22587
Registry: Grand Forks

REGINA
v.
MICHAEL VEDOVATO

File No: 22641
Registry: Grand Forks

REGINA
v.
KELLY KEVIN ZIMMERMAN

RULING ON APPLICATION
OF THE
HONOURABLE ASSOCIATE CHIEF JUDGE P. DOHM

Counsel for the Crown:	R. Carot
Counsel for the Accused, A. Simpson and M. Vedovato:	B. Suffredine, Q.C.
Counsel for the Accused, D. Barry and Zimmerman:	M. Goulden
Place of Hearing:	Nelson, B.C., via videoconference
Date of Hearing:	November 16, December 18, 2020, and January 29, 2021
Date of Judgment:	March 26, 2021

Introduction

[1] In March and April of 2020, in response to the global COVID-19 pandemic, the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court of British Columbia directed the adjournment of thousands of criminal files without the accused having to attend Court. Some of these adjournments ended up being for more than three months.

[2] The accused, Darren Barry, Alicia Simpson, Michael Vedovato and Kelly Zimmerman, now apply for two declarations. The first is that jurisdiction over them was lost by these adjournments, and the second is that since no process was issued for them within three months of that loss of jurisdiction, their charges are deemed dismissed for want of prosecution pursuant to section 485\(3\) of the Criminal Code.

Background

[3] The onset of the global COVID-19 pandemic caused the BC Provincial Health Officer to declare a public health emergency on March 17, 2020. On that same day, the Provincial Court announced that “all out of custody criminal matters (initial appearances, remands, applications, trials, and sentencings) scheduled to proceed between March 18 and May 16, 2020, are adjourned without the parties attending Court” (COVID-19 March 17, 2020 Update). The following day, the Government of British Columbia declared a provincial state of emergency. Both the public health and provincial state of emergencies have remained in effect since their declarations.

[4] On March 19, 2020, the Chief Judge announced the suspension of:

[the] regular operations of the Provincial Court of British Columbia at all of its locations to protect the health and safety of court users and to help contain the spread of COVID-19. In light of the extraordinary circumstances during the current public health emergency, members of the public who do not have urgent business before the Court are discouraged from attending any courthouse.

[5] This announcement was made in the first release of the Notice to the Profession and Public 19 (“NP 19”) and it was effective March 25, 2020. This suspension did not apply to bail hearings, in-custody trials and sentencings, and criminal matters determined urgent by a judge, as those were able to proceed at specified court locations.

[6] NP 19 incorporated the March 17 direction adjourning all out of custody criminal matters scheduled between March 18 and May 16, 2020. On April 28, the Chief Judge, again through NP 19, directed the adjournment of all out of custody criminal matters scheduled to proceed between May 19 and July 3. These two mass adjournments of thousands of files (the “COVID-19 adjournments”) were directed to occur without the parties having to attend Court. NP 19 further advised that “the Court file will record that these adjournments are due to COVID-19”.

[7] Included within NP 19 were “Adjournment Details” pursuant to which counsel and the accused could determine the next Court date resulting from the COVID-19 adjournments. For many court locations, those next dates were specifically listed and approximately 90 days from the originally scheduled appearance. For other locations, including most Circuit Courts, a scheduling telephone or email contact for a Judicial Case Manager (“JCM”) was provided to contact on the day the Court appearance was originally scheduled in order to set the next appearance date.

[8] NP 19 was amended on many occasions to inform the profession and the public of the steps and measures the Court was taking to address the COVID 19 safety concerns while also ensuring and advancing access to justice. Included within those objectives was the gradual re-opening of courthouses once they had been assessed and safety remediation work carried out by an independent professional entity hired by the BC government to ensure the courts were safe for all who attended to them. While the suspension of regular Court operations ended on July 3, 2020, many courthouses around the province, and particularly Circuit Court locations, were not able to be safely re-opened for several months due to the time and effort required to complete that assessment and remediation process.

[9] With respect to these accused, a judge adjourned their files from a date prior to March 18, to a date covered by the COVID-19 adjournments. Three of the accused’s files were adjourned into the timeframe covered by the first COVID-19 adjournments, then administratively adjourned and re-scheduled by a JCM, without the Crown, the accused or their counsel being present, to a date within the timeframe covered by the second COVID-19 adjournments. Mr. Vedovato’s two files had been adjourned by a judge from a date prior to March 18, to a date covered by the second COVID-19 adjournments.

[10] Prior to the accused’s scheduled Court date within the second COVID-19 adjournments timeframe, a JCM cancelled their upcoming Court dates without the Crown, accused or their counsel being present, and scheduled their files for September 22, in Grand Forks for Mr. Vedovato and Mr. Zimmerman, and for September 23, in Castlegar for Mr. Barry and Ms. Simpson. By those dates, the courthouses for those Circuit Court locations were able to be re-opened following the assessment and safety remediation process. It is my understanding the JCM advised the Crown and counsel for the accused, but not the accused themselves, of these September dates by electronic communication at the time those dates were scheduled by the JCM.

[11] Although counsel for the accused attended Court on behalf of their clients on those September dates, the Crown does not suggest through those appearances, the accused attorned to the jurisdiction of the Court, or jurisdiction over the accused was “revived”, if there had been an earlier loss of jurisdiction by the COVID-19 adjournments. That is because more than three months had elapsed between the date(s) on which the accused submit jurisdiction over the accused was lost and the September Court dates, such that by virtue of section 485(3), the proceedings would be deemed dismissed.

Position of the Accused

[12] The main submission of the accused is that jurisdiction over them was lost by the COVID-19 adjournments because they were not personally present when their files were adjourned to the next date. They say accused are required to attend Court for scheduled appearances so they will know their next Court date, and jurisdiction over them is lost without personal attendances unless either the accused expressly consents to being adjourned to another date without attending Court, or the accused appears through an agent for summary conviction offences or designated counsel for indictable offences. Since there was no consent, agency or designated counsel appearances when their files were adjourned by the COVID-19 adjournments, jurisdiction over them was lost.

[13] The accused acknowledge that jurisdiction over them would not have been lost if a summons or warrant had been issued for them at the time of the COVID-19 adjournments, but that did not occur. They also acknowledge that jurisdiction over them could have been regained through the issuance of a summons or warrant, provided that process was issued within three months of the COVID-19 adjournments. However, that also did not occur in their cases.

Analysis

[14] Section 485\(1.1\) of the Criminal Code states:

Jurisdiction over an accused is not lost by reason of the failure of the accused to appear personally, so long as the provisions of this Act or a rule made under section 482 or 482.1 permitting the accused not to appear personally apply.

[15] Section 482 permits the Court to make rules that “cannot create substantive law, but rather address matters concerning pleading, practice and procedure in criminal matters and case management” (R. v. Campbell, 2008 BCSC 805 at par. 26). This section also stipulates that the rules cannot be inconsistent with the Criminal Code or any other Act of Parliament, and they “must be published or otherwise made available to the public” (section 482(4)). Section 482.1 specifically addresses case management rules.

[16] The Crown says NP 19, and specifically the COVID-19 adjournments, are rules of the Court under section 482. This position was recently accepted by this Court in R. v. Bernard, 2021 BCPC 13, where Judge Harris concluded “that the Notices that resulted in the COVID-19 adjournments were rules of the Court as permitted by the Code and that they were not inconsistent with the Code or any other Act of Parliament” (at para. 25). Bernard is a considered decision of the Court and therefore binding on me. The accused’s efforts to convince me Bernard is wrongly decided have not been successful. In any event, I agree with the reasoning and conclusions of Judge Harris, but also wish to add the following additional comments.

[17] In his analysis, Judge Harris references and relies on the Court’s Criminal Caseflow Management Rules (“CCFM Rules”). These rules were created pursuant to section 482 and their purpose is set out in Rule 1, which states:

- (1) The purpose of these Rules is to provide simple, effective and efficient management of all proceedings of a criminal nature in order to secure a just and timely determination of every case before the Court.

[18] Rule 3 of the CCFM Rules provides the Chief Judge with the authority to issue practice directions “consistent with these Rules and their purpose”.

[19] In my view, it was not necessary to rely on the CCFM Rules to conclude the provisions of NP 19 relating to criminal matters were rules of the Court made under section 482. A review of those NP 19 provisions indicates they address and provide procedural directions relating to the management of all criminal prosecutions within the Court’s jurisdiction during COVID-19. For example, they specify how files for in-custody and out of custody accused will be dealt with, the procedure for urgent criminal matters, and how applications for judicial authorizations would be processed.

[20] More specifically for these applications, the provisions relating to the COVID-19 adjournments directed the attendance of the accused was not required, set out when the next Court date was or how it could be easily determined, and indicated the Court files would record the adjournments were due to COVID-19. All of these directions were procedural in nature and directed by the Chief Judge as part of the Court’s need “to protect the health and safety of court users and to help contain the spread of COVID-19”.

[21] Moreover, the criminal provisions of NP 19 do not contain any substantive criminal law and they are not inconsistent with the Code or any other Act of Parliament. In particular, with regards to the COVID-19 adjournments, section 669.1(2) provides the Court with very broad powers to adjourn the proceedings “at any time before or after the plea of the accused or defendant is taken”. No provision in the Code specifically states the accused must be present for an adjournment of their file to a “fix date” to schedule another appearance, which is what the COVID-19 adjournments did, so there is no inconsistency between the COVID-19 adjournments and the Code.

[22] Section 803(1) applies to summary conviction offences and it does state the Court “may, in its discretion, before or during the trial, adjourn the trial to a time and place to be appointed and stated in the presence of the parties or their counsel or agents”. What is clear from this section is that when a trial is adjourned, the accused, their counsel or agent must be present when the new trial date is fixed or appointed, but not if the trial is adjourned to a “fix date” to schedule a new trial date. The reason for the requirement for the new trial date to be stated in the presence of the accused, his counsel or agent, is because section 803(2) permits the Court to proceed with the trial in the absence of the accused as long as the accused has been notified of the time and place for the trial. While the COVID-19 adjournments did adjourn some summary conviction trials (not in relation to any of these particular accused), the adjournments were not to trial dates. Rather, they were merely to “fix dates” to then schedule new trial dates so there was no essential requirement for the accused to be present for the adjournment of those summary conviction trials pursuant to the COVID-19 adjournments. Accordingly, there was also no inconsistency between the COVID-19 adjournments and section 803(1).

[23] Lastly, NP 19 was published and made available to the public as it was posted on the Court’s public website.

[24] Section 482 does not specify the rules have to be in any specific form or actually even be named “rules”. What matters is that the requirements of section 482 are satisfied and, in my view, they are with the criminal provisions of NP 19. Although NP 19 could also have been called “The COVID-19 Rules” as compared to a Notice to the Profession and Public, the difference would have been merely one of form over substance.

[25] All of the section 482 requirements relating to the making of rules were satisfied with respect to the criminal provisions of NP 19 without the need to rely on the CCFM Rules. While I agree with Judge Harris’ reliance on the CCFM Rules, I also find that reliance was not necessary to conclude the criminal provisions of NP 19, and specifically those relating to the COVID-19 adjournments, were rules pursuant to section 482.

[26] The criminal provisions of NP 19, including those for the COVID-19 adjournments, were rules of the Court and those provisions specifically directed the accused that they were not required to personally appear for the adjournment of their files for the COVID-19 adjournments. Accordingly, pursuant to section 485(1.1), there was no loss of jurisdiction over the accused as a result of their non-appearance at the COVID-19 adjournments.

[27] While this conclusion is sufficient to dispose of these applications, I will nevertheless address the other two arguments upon which the Crown submitted the COVID-19 adjournments were lawful and did not result in a loss of jurisdiction over the accused.

Jurisdiction by Necessary Implication and Authority to Control its own Process

[28] As a statutory court, the Provincial Court of British Columbia derives its power and authority from statutes including the Criminal Code and the Provincial Court Act, R.C.B.C. 1996, c. 379. However, the Supreme Court of Canada has also recognized that statutory courts have additional powers:

[19] Likewise in the case of statutory courts, the authority to control the court's process and oversee the conduct of counsel is necessarily implied in the grant of power to function as a court of law. This Court has affirmed that courts can apply a “doctrine of jurisdiction by necessary implication” when determining the powers of a statutory tribunal:

... the powers conferred by an enabling statute are construed to include not only those expressly granted but also, by implication, all powers which are practically necessary for the accomplishment of the object intended to be secured by the statutory regime

(ATCO Gas and Pipelines Ltd. v. Alberta (Energy and Utilities Board), 2006 SCC 4, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 140, at para. 51)

Although Bastarache J. was referring to an administrative tribunal, the same rule of jurisdiction, by necessary implication, would apply to statutory courts.

(R. v. Cunningham, 2010 SCC 10) (Emphasis added)

[29] Similar conclusions and comments can also be found in that Court's decisions in R. v. 974649 Ontario Inc., 2001 SCC 81 at paras 70 and 71, and Ontario v. Criminal Lawyers Association, 2013 SCC 43, at paras 46 and 112.

[30] Based on these and other authorities, the Crown says:

[The COVID-19 adjournments] were made and authorized by powers that flow by necessary implication from the [court's] express statutory jurisdiction to try indictable matters under s. 469 and s. 470 and to try summary matters under s. 785 (see definition of “summary conviction court”) and s. 798. The Crown submits that these statutory powers by necessary implication are synonymous with the [court's] constitutionally entrenched mandate regarding the assignment of judges, the setting of sittings of the court and court lists, the allocation of courtrooms and the direction of administrative staff carrying out these functions: R. v. Valente, 1985 CanLII 25 (SCC), [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673, paras 47-49; Ref re Remuneration of Judges of the Prov. Court of P.E.I.; Ref re Independence and Impartiality of Judges of the Prov. Court of P.E.I., 1997 CanLII 317 (SCC), [1997] 3 SCR 3, para. 260; and Ontario v. Criminal Lawyers' Association of Ontario, 2013 SCC 43, paras. 40-41. Without such constitutional and statutory (by necessary implication) powers, the [court] could not function as a court of law in a global health emergency.

[31] I agree with this position.

[32] In order “to protect the health and safety of court users and to help contain the spread of COVID-19”, the Court had to act quickly and decisively to limit people from attending courthouses as much as possible. It did so in part by mass-adjourning all out of custody non-urgent files without counsel or the accused having to attend Court. These files were adjourned either to specific dates or to a date that could easily be obtained from a JCM. Requiring the accused to physically attend to a courthouse to be informed of their next Court date would have completely defeated the purpose of NP 19.

[33] The “Adjournment Details” in NP 19 provided reasonable and sufficient notice to counsel and the accused to inform them of the status of Court files and more importantly how to determine the next Court date. While I accept that some accused may not have had access to NP 19, they were aware of their outstanding Court file and their need to attend Court at some point to deal with it. For those accused represented by counsel, they could have obtained information about their next Court date from their counsel who obviously had access to NP 19 and also knew how to connect with a JCM to determine the next Court date. For those accused not represented by counsel, they could have found out their next Court date by contacting Court officials by telephone or electronic communication. The Court does not have access to personal contact information for the accused to be able to notify them of the next Court date, but it is not unreasonable to expect an accused to take some minimal steps to find out when their next Court date is.

[34] Moreover, failure by the accused to attend their next Court date arising from the COVID-19 adjournments did not mean that a warrant would automatically be issued for their arrest. Rather, upon failure of the accused to attend Court, a judge would determine what, if any, process would be issued for the accused to compel their attendance to Court. That determination would quite properly be based on the individual circumstances of the accused, the submissions of the Crown, and the Court file. In some cases, and after consideration, a judge may issue a warrant, but there would be a basis for doing so on the Court record. In other cases, a summons may be issued, while for others, the file may simply be adjourned for inquiries to be made by counsel or the police in an effort to have the accused return to Court.

[35] It is important to point out that the COVID-19 adjournments only adjourned files to “fix dates” to schedule a further Court date. They did not impact any substantive rights of the accused such as the need to be present for their election, plea, trial or sentencing, and, as counsel have conceded, there was no prejudice to the accused as a result of the COVID-19 adjournments. Moreover, the accused had the ability to argue their file should proceed on the basis of urgency, and their Charter section 11(b) right to be tried within a reasonable time has not been adversely affected.

[36] The exceptional circumstances presented by the global COVID-19 pandemic and the declarations of provincial and public health states of emergency compelled the Court to take immediate steps to drastically reduce attendances at courthouses for the protection and safety of the public by helping to minimize the spread of the COVID-19 virus. The COVID-19 adjournments were one of those steps by adjourning all out of custody non-urgent files to another date without the accused having to attend Court. Section 669.1(2) of the Code provides the Court with the express power to adjourn proceedings “at any time before or after” plea, and, as previously noted, there is no specific requirement in the Code that the accused must be present when their file is adjourned to a “fix date”. What the Code, or any other statutory provision, does not expressly provide to the Court or the Chief Judge is the authority to mass-adjourn thousands of files and direct the accused were not required to attend personally for those adjournments. However, in the circumstances, the Court had to do so in order to function as a Court of law in this pandemic, and I find the authority for the COVID-19 adjournments lies in the power of the Court by necessary implication to control its process and to manage both Court operations and the administration of justice during COVID-19. Accordingly, in all the circumstances and for the reasons expressed above, the Court acted lawfully with the COVID-19 adjournments based on the “doctrine of jurisdiction by necessary implication”.

The COVID-19 Adjournments were Lawful Because They Comply with the Code

[37] The case law is relatively clear that jurisdiction over an accused is lost when a statutory court acts unlawfully in dealing with remands and adjournments (R. v. Krannenburg, 1980 CanLII 179 \(SCC\), [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1053) or it does not do anything on a file on a scheduled Court date (R. v. Hampton, 2020 ABQB 429, and R. v. Faulkner, 2002 SKQB 131). If the Court had not adjourned these accused and to another date, then there would have been a loss of jurisdiction over them. However, the case law is not entirely clear on whether jurisdiction is lost over accused by an adjournment of their file to another date when they were not present for that adjournment and no process was issued to maintain that jurisdiction.

[38] As previously noted, the accused say there was a loss of jurisdiction over them by the COVID-19 adjournments because they were not present for the adjournment of their files, they did not provide their express consent to being adjourned to another date, or they did not appear by agent or designated counsel. They also add that no process was issued to maintain jurisdiction over them. They rely on a number of cases in support of their position including R. v. Ferreira, 2014 ONCJ 617; Hampton; Faulkner; R. v. D'Arcy, [2015] A.J. No. 112; R. v. Denny, [2020] N.S.J No. 148; R. v. Bowen (1999) 1999 CanLII 32157 \(ON CJ\), 28 CR (5th) 162 (Ont. C.J.); and R. v. Millar, 2012 ONSC 1809 \(CanLII\), [2012] OJ No. 1276 (QL).

[39] I do not agree with this position in so far as it applies to the COVID-19 adjournments.

[40] The Crown has provided two Court of Appeal authorities that stand for the proposition “that adjournments (can) be made in the absence of the accused without a loss of jurisdiction”. Those authorities are the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in R. v. Szoboszloi, 1970 CanLII 329 \(ON CA\), [1970] 3 OR 485, and the Manitoba Court of Appeal in R. v. Born, (1971) 1971 CanLII 1220 \(MB CA\), 6 CCC (2d) 70.

[41] In Born, the accused was not brought in to Court from where he was incarcerated for one of his adjournment dates prior to the start of his preliminary inquiry because of an administrative error. The Judge did not issue a warrant for the accused, but simply adjourned the file for a week. The Court concluded there was no loss of jurisdiction over the accused in these circumstances with Dickson J.A. (as he then was) reasoning in part as follows (at para. 8):

If a magistrate is precluded from granting a remand in the absence of the accused, it would seem, if the view of the learned Chambers Judge be accepted, that an accused could cause a Magistrate to lose jurisdiction by the simple expedient of failing to appear unless the Magistrate resorted to the use of a Bench warrant. The accused's absence might be due to illness, accident or even inadvertence. A Magistrate might adjourn the case to the following day in order that appropriate inquiries be made. Has the Court thereby lost jurisdiction? We think not.

[42] Counsel for the accused have not provided any compelling basis to suggest these cases are wrongly decided or distinguishable, or are no longer applicable due to other case law, or amendments or additions to the Code. I would also point out that none of the authorities provided by the accused are from the Court of Appeal level.

[43] Moreover, Parliament's enactment in 1985 of section 669.1(2) is significant, not just because it provided Courts with a single comprehensive provision for adjourning proceedings, but also because in doing so, it specifically did not state the presence of the accused, their agent or designated counsel was required when Courts exercised this jurisdiction. This adjournment power is available “at any time before or after” plea, applies broadly to include any “proper officer of the court”, and is not restrictive as to the duration for which an adjournment can be granted so they can be for more than three months. In granting this all-encompassing authority, had Parliament wanted the accused, their agent or designated counsel to be present for all adjournments in order for jurisdiction to be maintained over them, it could have easily indicated that through this provision.

[44] In my view, this section and the case law establish that there is not an automatic loss of jurisdiction over the accused if they, their agent or designated counsel are not present for an adjournment of their file. Rather, jurisdiction over the accused can be maintained if there has been a lawful adjournment of their file to a “fix date” as the COVID-19 adjournments did. Section 669.1(2) provides the Court with broad powers to adjourn proceedings and it does not mandate the presence of the accused, their agent or designated counsel for adjournments of their proceedings. Also, as previously noted, the Code does not require the accused or their agent or designated counsel be present for an interim adjournment of their file to a “fix date”.

[45] I find there is merit to the Crown’s submission that jurisdiction over the accused was not lost by the COVID-19 adjournments specifically because they were interim adjournments to “fix dates” where nothing of substance occurred for the accused. That is to be contrasted with adjournments where something affecting or prejudicing the accused occurs such as fixing a trial or sentencing date, or where there is a failure to comply with a mandatory Code provision requiring the presence of the accused (for example, sections 650 and 803). In those situations, jurisdiction would be lost by those adjournments.

[46] Jurisdiction over the accused was not lost by the COVID-19 adjournments because those adjournments were lawful in that they complied with the Code and they did not involve anything of substance for the accused. Rather, jurisdiction over the accused was maintained by the lawful adjournment of their file in their directed absence to a “fix date” at which time, if necessary, the Court could issue process for the return of the accused to Court in the event they did not attend Court on that date.

[47] I am also of the view that it was not necessary to issue any process at the time of the COVID-19 adjournments in order to maintain jurisdiction over the accused. In that regard, I agree with the Crown’s submission that “the concept of “preserving” jurisdiction must be tied to the common law rule when jurisdiction over the accused is lost: where a statutory court has acted unlawfully in the course of remands and adjournments, has not done anything in relation to a case, or has proceeded with matters of substance in the absence of the accused. Nowhere in this common law rule or the Criminal Code is it mandated that a summons or warrant must be issued in order to “preserve” jurisdiction.” All that is required is that “something lawful was done with the case” and that was accomplished by the COVID-19 adjournments.

[48] I would also point out that in the unique circumstances facing the Court as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, it was also not practical, desirable or, in some cases, even lawful for some form of process to be issued at the time of the COVID-19 adjournments in order to maintain jurisdiction over the accused.

[49] Issuing a summons requires a returnable Court date and at the time of the COVID-19 adjournments, it was not known when the Courts would be able to safely resume sitting given the state of the pandemic. What the Court did not want, and needed to prevent as much as possible based on the existing public health directions, was accused returning to courthouses when it was unsafe to do so. Moreover, when that would change was not known at the time of the COVID-19 adjournments. The Court did adjourn many files for a period of approximately 90 days, but that was to retain jurisdiction over them and it was also based in large part on public health information specifically in relation to when the suspension of regular Court operations may end at the time the COVID-19 adjournments were made.

[50] Issuing a bench warrant for the accused to retain jurisdiction over them presented several challenges. First, it is difficult to justify the issuance of bench warrants when there was no basis to establish the accused failed to attend Court, which is the ground upon which bench warrants can be issued. That is particularly so when the accused were directed not to attend Court and no Court was in fact sitting to hear out of custody non-urgent files on the day the accused had been scheduled to attend Court. Second, issuing bench warrants would naturally result in accused being brought back to Court and that was an outcome that was not desired nor intended in the circumstances of the pandemic. Third, section 597(4) of the Code does permit a judge when issuing a bench warrant to specify a period before which it should not be executed; however, this option suffers the same difficulty identified with the issuance of summons and not knowing when that period should end at the time of the COVID-19 adjournments. Fourth, there is authority binding on this Court that the Criminal Code does not permit a bench warrant to be issued solely to preserve jurisdiction over the accused (R. v. Peters, [1972] BCJ. No. 559 (SC), para. 7, upheld at [1973] BCJ. No. 780 (CA). See also R. v. Sheppard, 2020 CanLII 43917 (NL PC)).

[51] Public interest warrants pursuant to section 512(1) of the Code to compel the attendance of the accused to Court present the same challenges identified above in that their issuance would result in accused being brought back to Court at a time during the pandemic when it was unsafe to do so. Section 511(3) does allow a judge to specify the period before which the warrant shall not be executed, but the same problem identified above with bench warrants and section 597(4) would exist. It is also difficult to comprehend how it would be in the public interest to issue process to compel the appearance of accused to Court when the Court determined it was in the public interest and in the administration of justice for accused not to attend Court. In addition, an application for the Court to exercise its discretion to issue a section 512(1) warrant requires an examination of the circumstances of each accused and each file. That process would have generated the need for thousands of Court hearings, which at a minimum would have required the participation and assistance of the Crown, court staff and the judiciary. Such a process would not have been consistent with the public safety purposes of NP-19.

[52] It is also important to point out that arrest warrants trigger a substantial interference with an individual's liberty. The person is arrested, removed from their environment, transported and held in-custody until released. To have these deprivations visited on accused persons who did not appear because they were directed not to by the Court would significantly impact the public's confidence in the administration of justice.

[53] Furthermore, with regards to the issuance of process to retain jurisdiction over the accused, it must be remembered that the Court was dealing with thousands of files. Issuing and executing warrants or summons on all of those files during the early stages of the pandemic would have created, rather than reduced, public health risks, and would not have been workable logistically or safety wise for those involved in the administration of justice. Any process or procedure that required the accused to attend Court was contrary to public health and safety recommendations at the time of the COVID-19 adjournments and it was not known when that situation would change.

[54] Also, to address a concern raised by counsel for the accused, issuing process around the time of the COVID-19 adjournments would not have provided a certain Court date for the accused to attend Court. Warrants certainly would not have provided that date. Although summons would have had a returnable date on them, it was not known at that time whether that would in fact be the next Court date due to the uncertainty as to when it would be safe for the Court to end the suspension of regular Court operations including being able to safely open up Circuit Courts.

[55] There was no loss of jurisdiction over the accused by their files being adjourned by the COVID-19 adjournments to a "fix date" without their personal appearance and without issuing any process to retain jurisdiction over them. Rather, jurisdiction over them was maintained by the Court's lawful adjournment of the files to a "fix date" without requiring the accused to attend Court and by recording the adjournments as "due to COVID-19".

Conclusion

[56] The criminal provisions of NP 19 and specifically those in relation to the COVID-19 adjournments were rules of the Court pursuant to section 482 and, since those provisions permitted the accused not to appear personally, section 485(1.1) dictates there was no loss of jurisdiction over them as a result of the COVID-19 adjournments.

[57] Alternatively, the Court had the authority to direct the COVID-19 adjournments by the “doctrine of jurisdiction by necessary implication” to control its process and manage Court operations during the COVID-19 pandemic. Further, the COVID-19 adjournments were lawful as they complied with the Code and there was no loss of jurisdiction over the accused by the adjournment of their files to a “fix date” without them being personally present and without process being issued for them.

[58] The COVID-19 adjournments did not result in a loss of jurisdiction over the accused so there is no basis to declare their charges dismissed for want of prosecution pursuant to section 485(3) of the Code. Their applications are denied.

The Honourable Associate Chief Judge P. Dohm
Provincial Court of British Columbia

Tab 159

R v Hampton, 2020 ABQB 429 (CanLII)

Source: Court of King's Bench of Alberta
Date: 2020-07-27
File number: 181032418Q1; 190100404Q1
Citation: R v Hampton, 2020 ABQB 429 (CanLII),
<<https://canlii.ca/t/j8vbk>>, retrieved on 2026-03-24

Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta

Citation: R v Hampton, 2020 ABQB 429

Date: 20200727
Dockets: 181032418Q1
190100404Q1
Registry: Edmonton

Between:

Her Majesty the Queen

Crown

- and -

Ryan David Hampton

Accused

Reasons for Decision of the Honourable Mr. Justice John T. Henderson

I. OVERVIEW

[1] Ryan David Hampton (the Accused) applies for an Order confirming that the Court has no jurisdiction to continue with these proceedings. He concedes that the Court had jurisdiction over him for several months, but argues this jurisdiction was lost on August 30, 2019 and was not properly regained. In these circumstances, he argues that in accordance with s 485(3) of the Criminal Code of Canada, RSC, c C-46 the proceedings are deemed to have been dismissed for want of prosecution. He asserts that this Court has no jurisdiction to continue with the proceedings.

[2] The Accused was arrested on August 27, 2018 on grounds that he had committed a number of offences including a series of break and enters into dwelling houses, personation of a police officer and use of an imitation firearm. The offences are alleged to have occurred during the period May 2018 to August 2018. Information ending 2418P1 was sworn on August 28, 2018 in relation to those allegations. On the same day, the Accused appeared to speak to bail and was released on judicial interim release on conditions described in a recognizance.

[3] The Accused retained Counsel in relation to the charges described on Information ending 2418P1 and signed an "Appointment of Counsel by Designation" that was filed with the Court pursuant to s 650.01(1) on September 12, 2018. Counsel then appeared for the Accused in Provincial Court on November 1, 2018. At that appearance, after the Crown elected to proceed by Indictment, the Accused, through Counsel, entered an election of trial by Queen's Bench Judge alone and set dates for a preliminary hearing to be held on July 8 to 10, 2019.

[4] On January 10, 2019, the Accused was arrested for possession of and trafficking in identity documents. Those offences were alleged to have been committed on August 27, 2018. The Accused was released on a Promise to Appear on the date of his arrest. The Promise to Appear required the Accused to attend in Provincial Court on February 7, 2019. Information ending 0404P1 was sworn in relation to those charges on January 30, 2019.

[5] On February 7, 2019, the Accused did not appear in Provincial Court as the Promise to Appear required. Instead, Counsel appeared on his behalf and spoke to Information ending 0404P1. The Accused's election was reserved and the matter was put over to join Information ending 2418P1 at the July 8, 2019 preliminary hearing. Because the Accused was not present in the Courtroom and because no Designation of Counsel had been signed by the Accused or filed with the Court in relation to Information ending 0404P1, a warrant was issued to be held until the date of the preliminary hearing.

[6] The Accused appeared with Counsel in Provincial Court on July 8, 2019 in relation to both Informations. He waived his preliminary hearing and consented to committal on all counts on both Informations. On this basis the Provincial Court Judge committed the Accused and directed that he appear in Queen's Bench Appearance Court (QBAC) on August 30, 2019. The warrant to hold that had been issued on February 7, 2019, in relation to Information 0404P1, was vacated on July 8, 2019 because the Accused was personally in attendance in the Courtroom.

[7] Following committal to stand trial at a preliminary hearing, a Provincial Court Judge is required by s 551 to transmit the Information and other relevant documentation to the Clerk of the Court of Queen's Bench. However, in this case, due to an administrative error, the files in relation to both Informations were apparently misplaced and as a result, the matters did not appear on the QBAC list for the return date of August 30, 2019. For this reason, the case was never called and the matter was never spoken to on August 30, 2019. Counsel for the Accused was, however, in the appointed Courtroom ready to make an appearance for the Accused if called upon. The Accused was not present in the Courtroom at that time.

[8] The files in relation to both Informations were ultimately found and the matters were placed on the QBAC list for November 29, 2019. Counsel for the Accused was given notice by email on November 27, 2019 that these matters would be spoken to in QBAC at that time.

[9] Counsel for the Accused appeared in the QBAC Courtroom on November 29, 2019. When the matters were called, Defence Counsel explained to the Court that this was an unusual situation and that the matter had an earlier QBAC date but did not appear on that earlier list due to a mix up. Counsel expressly told the Court that “I can’t make any comments with respect to jurisdiction ... I don’t have any instructions with respect to that”. The Crown explained that there had been an issue with respect to the files having been lost and that Indictments had not yet been prepared. He asked for an adjournment for two weeks so that the Indictments could be prepared. The adjournment was granted.

[10] On December 10, 2019, the Indictments were signed by the assigned Crown Prosecutor and then filed with the Court on December 11, 2019.

[11] The Accused argues that in these circumstances the Court is without jurisdiction to continue these proceedings. For the reasons that follow, I conclude that the Court does have jurisdiction in relation to Indictment ending 2418Q1, but the proceedings that relate to Information ending 0404P1 were deemed to be dismissed for want of prosecution on November 30, 2019 and therefore the Court has no jurisdiction to continue with Indictment 0404Q1, unless the Crown complies with the requirements of s 485.1, which it has not done.

II. JURISDICTION OF THE COURT

[12] The Court can only continue with a criminal proceeding if it has both jurisdiction over the offence and jurisdiction over the accused.

[13] The Accused concedes that jurisdiction over the offence is not an issue in this case. The loss of the Information upon which an accused person is committed to stand trial does not result in “loss of jurisdiction over the indictment” preferred in accordance with the committal for trial. This is so where there is independent proof that the accused person had been committed for trial in respect of the charges in the indictment, as the Accused concedes in this case. Furthermore, the failure of a committing justice (in this case the Provincial Court Judge) to transmit the Information to the superior court, in accordance with his duty to do so pursuant to s 551 of the Criminal Code, constitutes, at most, a “procedural irregularity”. Section 485(1) applies in respect of the procedural irregularity: E.G. Ewaschuk, Criminal Pleadings & Practice in Canada, looseleaf, 2nd ed., vol. 3 (Aurora: Canada Law Book, 2020) (Ewaschuk) at 11:0132; R v Meng, 2019 ONCJ 250; and R v City of Toronto, 2011 ONCJ 131. The Accused is therefore correct that jurisdiction over the offence is not an issue in this case.

[14] Even though the Court has jurisdiction over the offence, the Defence maintains that the Court does not have jurisdiction over the Accused and that the proceedings have been dismissed for want of prosecution by the operation of s 485(3).

(a) Did the Court have Jurisdiction Over the Accused at One Time?

[15] Any analysis of whether s 485(3) of the Criminal Code can result in a proceeding being deemed to be dismissed for want of prosecution must begin with a consideration of whether the jurisdiction of the Court over the accused person was invoked at some point in time.

[16] In R v Wilson, 2015 SKCA 58 [Wilson], the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal considered s 485(3) and concluded that before jurisdiction can be “lost” within the meaning of s 485(2), the Court must first have acquired jurisdiction over the Accused. In Wilson, the accused was a serving prisoner. An Information was sworn against him in relation to an allegation that he had smuggled marijuana into the penitentiary. Despite the Information being sworn, no process had been issued to compel the accused to appear in Court. More than 3 months later the accused was brought before the Court pursuant to the terms of production order. At that appearance the Court concluded that jurisdiction had been lost for more than 3 months before the granting of the production order and that, in accordance with s 485(3), the proceedings were deemed to be dismissed for want of prosecution.

[17] On appeal, the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal explained that s 470(a) is the starting point for determining whether the Court has jurisdiction over an accused person. That subsection authorizes a Court to try an accused person for an offence if the person “is found, is arrested or is in custody within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court”. The SKCA further explained that the presentation of a sworn Information to a Justice is an administrative act that does give rise to the exercise of jurisdiction over an accused person within the meaning of s 470(a). However, the judicial act of issuing process to compel the accused person to appear in Court does amount to the exercise of jurisdiction over the accused person, as does the accused person attending in court without process having been issued. As a result, because no process was initially issued following the swearing of the Information, the Court had not asserted jurisdiction over Mr. Wilson until the production order that resulted in his first appearance in Court. There was no earlier jurisdiction that could have been lost. Therefore s 485(3) had no application and the proceedings were not deemed to be dismissed. The appeal was allowed and the Court of Appeal reinstated the Information.

[18] In the present case the Court assumed jurisdiction over the Accused in relation to Information 2418P1 when he appeared before a Justice of the Peace and was granted bail. Jurisdiction continued after the bail hearing because the Justice directed the Accused to appear in Provincial Court on a specific date and time. He made this appearance through Counsel by way of Designation. The matter was then put over to the preliminary hearing. Jurisdiction over the Accused was maintained.

[19] With respect to Information 0404P1, the Accused did not appear in Court as required by the Promise to Appear, but Counsel appeared for him and arranged for the preliminary hearing to be held on July 8, 2019. Because no Designation of Counsel was signed and filed in relation to Information ending 0404P1, a warrant to hold was granted. The Court acquired jurisdiction over the Accused at that time.

[20] The Accused appeared at the preliminary hearing and consented to committal on both Informations. The Accused was committed and was directed to appear in QBAC on August 30, 2019. The committal transferred jurisdiction to the Court of Queen’s Bench. Therefore, the Court did have jurisdiction over the Accused as at August 30, 2019.

(b) Did the Court lose Jurisdiction Over the Accused on August 30, 2019?

[21] The Accused arranged for Counsel to appear in QBAC on August 30, 2019 although he was not in the Courtroom personally. He was entitled to appear by Counsel on Information ending 2418P1 because a Designation of Counsel had been filed in relation to that Information. He was required to appear personally in Court in relation to Information ending 0404P1 because no such Designation had been filed in relation to that Information.

[22] Despite the presence of the Accused’s Counsel, neither of the Informations appeared on the QBAC list on August 30, 2019 and neither of the matters were called to be spoken to. The files had apparently been lost in transit between Provincial Court and the Court of Queen’s Bench.

[23] After August 30, 2019, there was nothing that compelled the Accused to appear in any Courtroom at any time to answer to either of the Informations. The Court lost jurisdiction over the Accused in relation to both Informations at that time.

(c) Did the Court Regain Jurisdiction Over the Accused?

[24] The files were ultimately found and the Crown arranged for both Informations to be brought forward to QBAC on November 29, 2019. In accordance with his professional obligations, Counsel for the Accused attended in the Courtroom and advised that there were jurisdictional issues in the case.

[25] The Accused argues that his Counsel had been given very short notice of the need to appear on November 29, 2019 and that this did not give sufficient time for instructions to be given in relation to the jurisdictional issues. He further argues that Counsel’s appearance on November 29, 2019 was an “appearance under protest” and that by advising the Court that there were jurisdictional issues he was not attorning to the jurisdiction of the Court. He therefore argues that nothing that took place on November 29, 2019 resulted in the Court regaining jurisdiction over him.

[26] There are two problems with the Accused’s position on this point. Firstly, at no time during the November 29, 2019 appearance did Counsel advise that he was appearing under protest. Simply advising the Court that there are jurisdictional issues does not amount to an appearance under protest. Secondly, and even more fundamentally, with one exception that is not applicable here, there exists no procedure in criminal law analogous to a conditional appearance in civil litigation. An appearance even under protest in a criminal proceeding will nonetheless constitute attornment to the jurisdiction of the Court unless jurisdiction over the offence never existed: R v Sinopec Shanghai Engineering Company Ltd, 2011 ABCA 331 [Sinopec], leave to appeal dismissed 2012 CanLII 39728 (SCC); Ewaschuk, at 1:7140; R v Harnish (1979), 1979 CanLII 2956 (NS CA), 49 CCC (2d) 190, 38 NSR (2d) 273 (NSCA); R v Gougeon (1980), 1980 CanLII 2842 (ON CA), 55 CCC (2d) 218 (Ont CA); and R v Anderson (1983), 1983 ABCA 264 (CanLII), 9 CCC (3d) 539, 37 CR (3d) 67 (Alta CA).

[27] The facts in Sinopec illustrate the application of this principle. Sinopec Shanghai Engineering Company Limited (SSEC) was a Chinese corporation. It incorporated a Canadian corporation (SSEC Canada) for the purpose of undertaking industrial construction work in Alberta. During the course of that work, an accident occurred that resulted in the deaths of two workers and serious injuries to other workers. Following an investigation into the cause of the accident, proceedings were commenced against both the SSEC and SSEC Canada under the Occupational Health and Safety Act, RSA 2000, c O-2.

[28] The Crown purported to serve the summons on both corporations by serving the only employee of SSEC Canada. SSEC retained Alberta Counsel who appeared on 2 occasions in Provincial Court to challenge the validity of the service of the summons upon that corporation. Counsel made it clear on both occasions that he was making only a “conditional appearance” and that he was not attorning to the jurisdiction of the Court. Despite these protestations, the majority of the Court of Appeal agreed with the Summary Conviction Appeal Judge that the mere fact that Counsel appeared in Court for SSEC was sufficient to overcome any shortcomings in the method of service and that by attending in Court there had been an attornment to the jurisdiction of the Court.

[29] The majority in Sinopec allowed for only one exception to the general rule that conditional appearances cannot be made in a criminal proceeding. Where the accused challenges the jurisdiction of the Court over the offence a conditional appearance may be made to argue that the Information is invalid, thus depriving the Court of initially acquiring proper jurisdiction over the offence.

[30] The hypothetical example given by the majority in Sinopec was of proceedings commenced in Alberta in relation to offences occurring in Saskatchewan. In those circumstances, the Provincial Court of Alberta would have no jurisdiction because its jurisdiction is limited to offences that are committed within the geographical limits of Alberta. In those circumstances, a conditional appearance could be made to challenge the jurisdiction over the offence. However, the exception to the general rule has no application to situations where the lack of jurisdiction over the offence is said to arise due to procedural irregularities, which would in any event be cured by s 485(1) in most cases.

[31] Sinopec makes it clear that in a criminal proceeding, an accused person cannot make a conditional appearance, or an appearance under protest, to challenge the jurisdiction of the Court over the accused.

[32] In this case no process or direction of the Court compelled the Accused to appear in Court on November 29, 2019. However, Counsel appeared in the Courtroom after having been advised by the Crown that the matter would be spoken to on the QBAC list that day. The Accused does not challenge the Court's jurisdiction over the offence. There is nothing to suggest that either of the Informations are invalid. In these circumstances, the Accused was not entitled to make a conditional appearance on November 29, 2019.

[33] The appearance on November 29, 2019 was made on Information ending 2418P1 by Designated Counsel. Where a Designation of Counsel is filed "an appearance by designated counsel is equivalent to the accused's being present, unless the Court orders otherwise": s 650.1(3)(b). As a result, the appearance by Designated Counsel on November 29, 2019 amounted in law to the appearance by the Accused in Court.

[34] The Court's jurisdiction over the accused may be established, or regained once an accused is brought before the Court by any means including the issuance of a summons or a warrant or a voluntary or involuntary appearance, even if the means to secure the attendance are not necessarily in compliance with all procedural requirements: R v Champion, 2016 SKCA 125 [Champion]; R v Lindsay, 2006 BCCA 150 at para 20, leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada dismissed [2011] SCCA No 265; Wilson; and R v Kennedy, 2019 NBQB 211 at para 10.

[35] In the present case, regardless of how or why the November 29, 2019 appearance was made, Designated Counsel appeared. This appearance resulted in the Court regaining jurisdiction over the Accused in relation to Information ending 2418P1.

[36] However, with respect to Information ending 0404P1, no Designation of Counsel had been filed and the Accused was therefore not permitted to make an appearance by Counsel. His personal appearance in Court was required. Therefore, despite the presence of Counsel purportedly speaking for the Accused, there was no lawful appearance and, in these circumstances, the Court did not regain jurisdiction over the Accused on November 29, 2019 in relation to Information ending 0404P1.

(d) Did s 485(3) Operate to Dismiss for Want of Prosecution?

[37] Pursuant to s 485(3), where jurisdiction over an accused has been lost and not regained, the proceedings are "deemed to be dismissed for want of prosecution" unless a summons or a warrant is issued within 3 months after the loss of jurisdiction.

(i) Information Ending 2418P1

[38] Designated Counsel appeared before the Court on behalf of the Accused on November 29, 2019 on Information ending 2418P1. This was within 3 months from August 30, 2019, the date on which the Court lost jurisdiction over the Accused. The Court regained jurisdiction over the Accused on November 29, 2019. As a result, s 485(3) is not applicable. The proceedings under Information ending 2418P1 were not deemed to be dismissed for want of prosecution.

(ii) Information Ending 0404P1

[39] No lawful appearance was made by the Accused on Information ending 0404P1 on November 29, 2019 because no Designation of Counsel had been filed in relation to that Information. Jurisdiction could have been regained on November 29, 2019 through the issuance of a summons or a warrant in the public interest. The Crown did not seek this remedy. As a result, no process was issued on November 29, 2019 and by the time of the next appearance 2 weeks later, the 3-month time limitation in s 485(2) had expired and it was no longer possible to issue process against the Accused.

[40] The Crown argues that even in these circumstances the proceedings in relation to 0404P1 were not dismissed for want of prosecution because s 485(3) is not applicable to proceedings before superior courts. In support of this position the Crown refers to older case law that discuss an earlier version of the Criminal Code. These authorities are not applicable to the interpretation of the current s 485. As is noted by Ewaschuk at 1:7010: "Cases decided prior to 1986 should be viewed circumspectly in view of the amendment to s. 485 in 1985".

[41] By its express terms, s 485 applies to “any court, judge, provincial court judge or justice”. I conclude that s 485 applies to proceedings in all courts including the Court of Queen’s Bench of Alberta.

[42] The Crown also argues that jurisdiction over the Accused was regained when the Crown prepared, signed and filed the Indictment ending 0404Q1 on December 10, 2019. This argument overstates the significance of signing and filing an Indictment with the Court. The filing of an Indictment by an agent of the Attorney General is a purely administrative act. Despite being filed, the Indictment is not preferred “until it is lodged with the trial Court at the opening of the accused’s trial, with the Court ready to proceed with the trial”: R v Chabot, [1980] 2 SCR 985, 1980 CanLII 54 and R v Philbin (1977), 1977 ALTASCAD 242 (CanLII), 6 AR 506, 37 CCC (2d) 528 at paras 16 to 17. The Indictment becomes a new jurisdictional starting point at that time.

[43] In the present case, the filing of Indictment ending 0404Q1 had no jurisdictional consequence and certainly did not permit the Court to regain jurisdiction over the Accused because 10 days prior to the filing of the Indictment the proceedings were deemed to have been dismissed for want of prosecution pursuant to s 485(3).

[44] While not raised by the Crown, I have considered the dicta of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Champion at paras 14 to 15, which could possibly be read to suggest that where the Court has lost jurisdiction over the accused and the proceedings are deemed to be dismissed pursuant to s 485(3), jurisdiction may be regained if the accused is later brought before the Court. I do not believe that Champion should be interpreted to support this proposition for a number of reasons: first, in Champion the Provincial Court had issued a warrant within the 3 months provided for in s 485(2) and the Court of Appeal concluded that jurisdiction had been regained at that time; second, Champion was applying the earlier decision of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Wilson which does not support the proposition that jurisdiction can be regained after the proceedings have been deemed dismissed for want of prosecution; and third, such an interpretation would be inconsistent with the clear intention of s 485(3) that proceedings are “deemed” to be dismissed where jurisdiction over the accused is not regained within the 3 months prescribed by s 485(2). As a result, I conclude that Champion does not assist the Crown in relation to Information ending 0404P1.

[45] I conclude that the proceedings under Information ending 0404P1 were deemed dismissed for want of prosecution on November 30, 2019. The proceedings are at an end and were not properly recommenced through the filing of the Indictment ending 0404Q1. The proceedings in relation to the charges described in Information ending 0404P1 can only be recommenced if the Crown complies with s 485.1 and first obtains the consent of the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General. This has not taken place.

III. CONCLUSION

[46] The proceedings under Information ending 0404P1 are deemed to be dismissed for want of prosecution pursuant to s 485(3) of the Criminal Code and the Court has no jurisdiction in relation to that Information unless the Crown recommences the proceedings by complying with the provisions of s 485.1

[47] The proceedings under Information ending 2418P1 were not dismissed for want of prosecution and the Crown may proceed in relation to those offences in accordance with the Indictment that has now been filed.

Heard on the 14th day of July, 2020.

Dated at the City of Edmonton, Alberta this 27th day of July, 2020.

John T. Henderson
J.C.Q.B.A.

Appearances:

James Mahon for the Crown

Dan Nagase
for the Accused

Tab 160

R. v. Denny, 2020 NSPC 14 (CanLII)

Source: Provincial Court of Nova Scotia
 Date: 2020-04-06
 File number: 8375056
 Citation: R. v. Denny, 2020 NSPC 14 (CanLII),
<https://canlii.ca/t/j6bzh>, retrieved on 2026-03-24

PROVINCIAL COURT OF NOVA SCOTIA

Citation: R v Denny, 2020 NSPC 14

Date: 2020-04-06

Docket: 8375056

Registry: Pictou

Between:

Her Majesty the Queen

v

Eric Joseph Denny

CORRECTED DECISION TO ADJOURN

[The text of the original decision has been corrected according to the attached erratum dated April 7, 2020].

Judge:	The Honourable Judge Del W Atwood
Heard:	2020: 6 April in Pictou, Nova Scotia
Charge:	Paragraph 267(b) of the Criminal Code of Canada
Counsel:	Jody McNeill for the Nova Scotia Public Prosecution Service Jade Pictou for Eric Joseph Denny

By the Court:

[1] This sentencing matter along with a number of other trial, sentencing and arraignment matters are being called today and are being adjourned in accordance with the current directive of the Chief Judge: COVID-19: NOTICE TO COUNSEL AND THE PUBLIC RE: MATTERS IN THE PROVINCIAL COURT AND YOUTH JUSTICE COURT, accessed online at

https://courts.ns.ca/News_of_Courts/documents/NSPC_Consolidated_Directive_COVID19_03_31_20.pdf

[2] Unless ordered otherwise, all matters called today will be adjourned for scheduling to 15 June 2020: adult matters will be called at 9h30; youth justice matters will be called at 13h30.

[3] None of the persons with matters before the court is present. Most have counsel. Some do not.

[4] For those with counsel (and I would note that we have received § 650.01 designations where required) the jurisdiction of the court over the person is preserved, and nothing further need be done.

[5] For those persons not present, without counsel, but with in-order, confirmed process on record, I decline to issue bench warrants or new process at this time; in due course, a notification will be posted on courts.ns.ca with a list of adjourned dates.

[6] Following up on this last point, I wish to take this opportunity to address two items of electronic correspondence which the court received last week from justice-system participants which raised concerns with directives issued from the court since the declaration of the state of emergency on 22 March 2020 (the declaration may be accessed online at <https://novascotia.ca/coronavirus/Declaration-of-Provincial-State-of-Emergency-by-Minister-Porter-Signed-March-22-2020.pdf>).

[7] Questions and concerns of this nature should be raised most certainly by justice stakeholders, the public and media over the responses undertaken by the various branches of government to COVID-19. The need for transparency and accountability does not end when a state of emergency begins. In fact, the necessity of accountability is elevated in challenging times such as these, in order to surveil against overreach or other irregularity.

[8] The concerns raised in this case have to do with directives that seek to move cases away from the court over the next two months, until the evolving nature of the public-health risk will have become clearer and the level of risk attenuated.

[9] The directives in question had to get issued quickly, and this necessarily limited the scope of consultation.

[10] It is clear that, in diverting cases from court, it was not the intent of the directives to turn justice centres into antiseptic enclosures. Such a goal would be wholly unattainable.

[11] Rather, the purpose, as set out in the various judicial directives, was primarily to protect public health. This was based on the recognition that:

- the court must adapt its operations to current public-health guidance to limit public gatherings;
- justice centres—much as other government and commercial buildings that are now either closed or excluded from walk-in services—are gathering places for large numbers of members of the public, and so are situated as potential sites for infection transmission, unless strict controls are imposed;
- court-operations policies now in place have reduced the numbers of staff on site at our justice centres, which has made it necessary to regulate daily case loads;
- many Nova Scotians are currently subject to self-isolation and self-quarantine requirements set out in the order of the Medical Officer of Health issued initially 25 March 2020, updated 2 April 2020, accessed online at

<https://novascotia.ca/coronavirus/COVID-19-Global-Order-2020-04-02.PDF>; it would not be possible—and might not be legal—for the court to try to identify those persons, served with compulsory process, who might be subject to the requirements of the order; as such, it is safer and more efficient to divert all persons with cases away from court temporarily, except for those deemed essential-to-mission;

- finally, and most significantly, many persons who come before the court are in high-risk-of-infection categories because of underlying conditions; their health and safety must be protected, and that is accomplished best by allowing them to shelter in place to the extent they are able.

[12] This new operational paradigm has placed substantial burdens on all justice-system participants: counsel, policing services, corrections, victim services, witnesses, and persons who face charges.

[13] Particularly affected are our court staffs and sheriff services. We are now working under what has been described as an essential-services model. I would expand that by observing that staff and sheriffs are attaining an exceptional-service level, as they bring innovation, ingenuity, flexibility and resilience in fulfilling their administration-of-justice duties throughout these challenging times.

[14] One of the proposals that has been made—to attempt to reduce the inevitable catchup effect in a few-months’ time, once things will have stabilised—is to have the court issue so-called warrants-to-hold in order to preserve jurisdiction over those persons whose cases are called, but who have stayed home in accordance with the various court directives and public-health orders. This practice has been adopted in a number of judicial centres in Canada.

[15] Regrettably, I am unable to go along with that sort of procedure.

[16] First, I have held in the past that this court, as a statutory court, is unable to issue a bench warrant and then place an administrative or judicial “hold” on it. Section 597 of the Code, which provides for the issuance of warrants in default of appearance, does not admit of holds. Similarly, § 512(2). An order comes into force on the date it is made, unless there is a specific statutory provision otherwise—as in, say, ¶ 732.2(1)(b) & (c). Consider section 719, which states that sentences commence when imposed; this is merely a codification of the common law that applies to all court orders.

[17] Second, although § 511(3) and 597(4) of the Code (which, while falling under Part XX of the Code, is applicable to summary proceedings in virtue of §795) admit of an issued bench warrant including a condition that it not be executed before a specific date, it is my view that the issuance of any warrant on default of appearance for a person who has been directed—not just induced, but directed officially—not to attend court would be illegal.

Recall what was held in R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at ¶ 39: any statutory provision—even one that might fall outside the compel-appearance provisions of Part XVI of the Code—that allows for the pre-trial detention of an accused person triggers the reasonable-bail protections of ¶ 11(e) of the Charter. See also R v Myers, 2019 SCC 18 at ¶ 67. In my view, the issuance of a default-of-appearance warrant for the arrest of a person who has been directed, officially, not to attend court would not comport with ¶ 11(e) Charter values, particularly where the Code admits of a non-custodial-process cure in § 485(2):

(2) Where jurisdiction over an accused or a defendant is lost and has not been regained, a court, judge, provincial court judge or justice may, within three months after the loss of jurisdiction, issue a summons, or if it or he considers it necessary in the public interest, a warrant for the arrest of the accused or defendant.

[18] To be sure, by my not issuing “hold” or delayed-enforcement warrants, there will likely be multiple loss-of-jurisdiction-over-person occurrences (as comprehended in R v Kranenberg, 1980 CanLII 179 (SCC), [1980] 1 SCR 1053) in cases involving persons not represented by counsel, as an adjournment effected without the accused person or counsel or an agent present is not authorized statutorily: see § 803(1) regarding summary-proceedings adjournments; and see § 571, 606(3), 645(1)-(2), 669.1(2), which must be read in light of the requirement that an accused person be present—either in person, or by a statutorily approved alternate means—as things proceed, in accordance with § 650 of the Code.

[19] A loss of jurisdiction over the person can be cured by the person attorning to the jurisdiction of the court voluntarily, which might happen after reading an online notice; or it might happen if the person is brought into court in custody on some other matter.

[20] Unfortunately, website or letter mail notices to come to court are not process as recognized in the Code.

[21] When jurisdiction over the person is lost, the burden reverts to the state to get it reacquired.

[22] This issuance of new process under § 485(2)—and there is likely to be a surge of these—will place demands on policing services, to be sure. However, I would observe two things.

[23] First, no process need be issued or served now, while the state of emergency remains in effect. I should have made this clear in some of the cases I dealt with a couple weeks ago, and I apologise for this oversight.

[24] Second, no process need be issued or served at all. I say this, having had the opportunity last week to have participated in a conference call among international jurists who are dealing—some, on a much larger scale—with the same challenges the justice system in Nova Scotia is facing now. In many foreign jurisdictions, prosecuting and policing authorities are making hard decisions about which cases must continue and which might, in the public interest, be let go.

[25] Further, this hiatus will allow prosecutors ample time to collaborate with defence counsel to attempt to resolve cases that are building up.

[26] These are police-operations and prosecution-operations discretionary decisions to be made by those executive-branch authorities in the exercise of their lawful discretion.

[27] I hope that this provides some clarity to the directions the court has undertaken over the past three weeks. It has been a steep learning curve, but the guidance of the Chief

Judge's office and the executive office of the judiciary has been invaluable, and the cooperation of our justice-system collaborators has been vital.

JPC

PROVINCIAL COURT OF NOVA SCOTIA

Citation: R v Denny, 2020 NSPC 14

Date: 2020-04-06

Docket: 8375056

Registry: Pictou

Between:

Her Majesty the Queen

v

Eric Joseph Denny

ERRATA SHEET

The text of the original judgment issued on 6 April 2020 is corrected on 7 April 2020 with the following corrections made:

¶ [11], fourth bullet, clause corrected to read: “all persons with cases”.

¶ [16] add to the fourth line the sentence: “Similarly § 512(2)”.

¶ [17] add to the first line “511(3)” and in the third line to correct “to including” to “including”.

¶ [17] add to the seventh line the complete citation for Antic.

¶ [17] at to tenth line “See also R v Myers, 2019 SCC 18 at ¶ 67.”

Tab 161

Public Prosecution
Service of Canada

Service des poursuites
pénales du Canada

Public Prosecution Service of Canada

DESKBOOK

Cette publication est également disponible en français sous le titre :
Guide du Service des poursuites pénales du Canada

© Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada, represented by the Attorney General of Canada, 2014-2020.

This document is available on the PPSC website at the following address:
www.ppsc-sppc.gc.ca

Catalogue No. J79-2/2014E-PDF

ISBN No. 978-1-100-23610-0

PPSC No. 2020-1

PREFACE

Prosecutors possess significant discretion in the criminal justice system. To ensure public confidence in its administration, prosecutorial discretion must be exercised in a manner that is objective, fair, transparent and consistent.

The Public Prosecution Service of Canada Deskbook (PPSC Deskbook) is a means of achieving this goal. It is a compilation of the directives and guidelines that provide instruction and guidance to federal prosecutors, whether employees of the PPSC or private-sector agents, in the exercise of their prosecutorial discretion. It is therefore essential that the Deskbook be consulted, understood, and adhered to by federal prosecutors.

In applying the Deskbook to the case before them, federal prosecutors make decisions without the fear of political interference or improper or undue influence. They are, however, accountable to the Director of Public Prosecutions and, through the Director, to the Attorney General, Parliament and ultimately, the Canadian public for the way in which they have exercised this important responsibility.

The Deskbook is a permanent work in progress: all federal prosecutors should be conscious of the need to suggest changes where policies are unclear or outdated. PPSC managers are obliged to monitor application of the policies to ensure they are properly applied.

The PPSC Deskbook is divided into two parts: Part 1 contains directives of the Attorney General of Canada and guidelines of the Director of Public Prosecutions; Part 2 contains confidential legal memoranda.

Part 1 — Directives and Guidelines. Section 10(2) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act (DPP Act) empowers the Attorney General to issue directives respecting the initiation or conduct of prosecutions generally.

Section 3(3)(c) of the DPP Act provides the Director of Public Prosecutions with a general power to issue guidelines respecting the conduct of prosecutions generally.

As neither the power to issue directives under section 10(2) nor guidelines under section 3(3)(c) extend to Canada Elections Act prosecutions, guidelines in respect of those prosecutions are issued by the Director under section 3(8) of the DPP Act.

Part 2 — Confidential Legal Memoranda. These memoranda are issued by the Deputy Directors of Public prosecution and supplement the directives and guidelines by providing legal advice to PPSC counsel. The memoranda are privileged and therefore not made available to the public.

The publication of the PPSC Deskbook is the culmination of years of review and consultation. For the first time in nearly a decade, the policy guidance directing federal prosecutors has been completely updated to reflect changes in legislation and in practice. This effort represents a significant step forward, both in respect of the prosecution function specifically and Canada's criminal justice system generally. I would like to thank all those involved in the preparation of this important document. I would like to offer a special word of thanks to Debbie Johnston for her tireless efforts in leading this project and seeing it through to completion.

Brian Saunders, Q.C.
Director of Public Prosecutions

PPSC DESKBOOK

Directives of the Attorney General and Guidelines of the Director of Public Prosecutions

PART I: ROLES OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL AND THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS
1.1	Relationship between the Attorney General and the Director of Public Prosecutions
1.2	Duty to Inform the Attorney General under Section 13 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act
1.3	Consultation within Government
PART II: PRINCIPLES GOVERNING CROWN COUNSEL'S CONDUCT
2.1	Independence and Accountability in Decision-Making
2.2	Duties and Responsibilities of Crown Counsel
2.3	Decision to Prosecute
2.4	Prevention of Wrongful Convictions
2.5	Principles of Disclosure
2.6	Consultation within the Public Prosecution Service of Canada
2.7	Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies
2.8	Contacts with the Courts
2.9	Communications with the Media
2.10	Application of the PPSC Deskbook in Respect of Canada Elections Act Prosecutions
2.11	Official Languages in Prosecutions
2.12	The Disclosure of Police Misconduct Information – R v McNeil
2.13	Allegations of Misconduct by Persons Involved in the Investigation of Charges

PART III: PROCEDURAL ISSUES AND TRIAL PRACTICE

3.1	Major Case Management
3.2	Designation of the Parties and the Prosecutors
3.3	Immunity Agreements
3.4	Sealing Orders and Publication Bans
3.5	Delegated Decision-Making
3.6	Direct Indictments
3.7	Resolution Discussions
3.8	Alternative Measures
3.9	Waiver of Charges
3.10	Elections and Re-Elections
3.11	Informer Privilege
3.12	Jury Selection
3.13	Release of Exhibits for Testing or Examination
3.14	Testimony of Police Officers and Police Civilian Agents
3.15	Appeals and Interventions in the Provincial and Territorial Superior Courts and Courts of Appeal
3.16	Supreme Court of Canada Litigation
3.17	Ensuring Timely Prosecutions
3.18	Judicial Interim Release
3.19	Bail Conditions to Address Opioid Overdoses (The Guideline was repealed on June 20, 2024. Guidance on this subject can now be found in Guideline 3.18 “Judicial Interim Release”.)
3.20	Judicial Referral Hearings
3.21	Remediation Agreements

PART IV: EVIDENTIARY ISSUES

4.1	Protecting Confidential Information under Section 37 of the Canada Evidence Act
4.2	Protecting Confidential Information under Section 38 of the Canada Evidence Act
4.3	Protecting Cabinet Confidences under Section 39 of the Canada Evidence Act

PART V: SPECIFIC TYPES OF PROSECUTIONS

5.1	National Security
5.2	Competition Act
5.3	Proceeds of Crime
5.4	Youth Criminal Justice
5.5	Domestic Violence
5.6	Victims of Crime
5.7	Impaired Driving Cases: Notice to Seek Greater Punishment
5.8	Corruption of Foreign Public Officials
5.9	Private Prosecutions
5.10	Parental Child Abduction
5.11	The Approach to the Prosecution of Certain Offences Committed Prior to the Coming Into Force of the Cannabis Act
5.12	Prosecutions involving Non-Disclosure of HIV Status
5.13	Prosecution of Possession of Controlled Substances Contrary to s. 4(1) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act

PART VI: SENTENCING MATTERS

6.1	Drug Treatment Courts
6.2	Mandatory Minimum Penalties for Particular Drug Offences under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act
	6.2.1 Supplementary Guideline on Mandatory Minimum Penalties for Certain Drug Offences under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act
6.3	Statutory Restrictions on the Use of Conditional Sentences
6.4	Mandatory Minimum Penalties under the Criminal Code
6.5	Process for Presumptively Eligible Status for a Dangerous Offender or Long Term Offender Designation
6.6	Charitable Donations
6.7	Restitution

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

1.1 RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE ATTORNEY GENERAL AND THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED
UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1.	OVERVIEW OF THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE ATTORNEY GENERAL AND THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS	2
1.1.	Creation of the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions	2
1.2.	Role of the Attorney General.....	3
1.3.	Role of the Director of Public Prosecutions	5
1.4.	Guiding principles	7
2.	POWERS, DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS UNDER THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT	8
2.1.	The exercise of the Director's duties and functions	8
2.2.	The power of the Attorney General to issue directives	8
2.3.	The duty to inform	10
2.4.	The power of the Attorney General to intervene in proceedings.....	10
2.5.	The power of the Attorney General to assume conduct of proceedings.....	11
2.6.	The duty to report	12
2.7.	Delegated decision-making	12

1. OVERVIEW OF THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE ATTORNEY GENERAL AND THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

1.1. Creation of the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions

The Director of Public Prosecutions Act¹ (DPP Act or the Act) established the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions (ODPP). The DPP Act was designed to strengthen the twin goals of institutional independence and ultimate ministerial accountability.² On one hand, it was intended to enhance integrity in government by statutorily ensuring independence of the prosecution decision-making function from inappropriate political control, direction and influence. It enshrines in legislation the quasi-constitutional principle of independence of the prosecution function from the partisan political process. In this sense, it evokes the oft-quoted 1924 aphorism of Lord Chief Justice Hewart that

¹ Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9 [DPP Act].

² Government of Canada, Federal Accountability Act and Action Plan, "Creating a Director of Public Prosecutions", online: Treasury Board of Canada Secretariat. As the Minister of Justice put it, in speaking to the Senate on the bill that ultimately became the DPP Act, supra note 1: "Mr. Chairman, the government believes that the provisions of this bill strike an appropriate balance between independence and accountability in federal prosecutions. It ensures independence from unwanted control, direction and influence. At the same time, it ensures a substantial measure of accountability for the exercise of prosecutorial discretion." Testimony of the Honourable Vic Toews, Minister of Justice before the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, 29 June, 2006 [Testimony of the Honourable Vic Toews].

“Justice should not only be done but should manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done.”³

At the same time, the DPP Act does not speak of absolute ODPP independence. Because the Attorney General is fully accountable to Parliament for the prosecution function, the Act ensures a measure of oversight for the exercise of prosecutorial discretion.⁴ First, s. 3\(3\), which outlines the Director of Public Prosecutions’ (DPP) duties and functions, provides that the DPP acts “under and on behalf of the Attorney General.” Second, the Attorney General may issue directives in respect of specific prosecutions⁵ or in respect of prosecutions more generally.⁶ Third, as discussed below, ss. 13-15 of the Act require the DPP to notify the Attorney General about important questions of general interest, and give the Attorney General the power to intervene in proceedings or to assume conduct of prosecutions. In turn, the DPP Act counterbalances the Attorney General’s oversight function and safeguards DPP independence from the Attorney General by requiring that the issuance of s. 10 directives and assuming conduct of a prosecution under s. 15 be in writing and made public.

1.2. Role of the Attorney General

The DPP Act has not changed the Attorney General’s historical role as chief law officer of the Crown. The Attorney General retains jurisdiction to prosecute all non-Criminal Code federal offences (except those under the Canada Elections Act⁷) in the provinces and authority to prosecute both Criminal Code and non-Criminal Code offences in the three territories. Moreover, ss. 2\(b.1\)-\(g\) of the definition of “Attorney General” in the Criminal Code give concurrent jurisdiction to the Attorney General of Canada to prosecute certain Criminal Code offences including terrorism offences, organized crime offences, fraud, insider trading, and stock market fraud. However, under s. 3\(3\) of the Act, these powers have been delegated to the DPP, who exercises these general powers “under and on behalf of the Attorney General” independently, subject to directives issued by the Attorney General under s. 10, and subject to the Attorney General’s powers to intervene in⁸ or assume conduct of⁹ criminal proceedings. Because the Attorney General may also defend the constitutionality of federal legislation, the Attorney General may exercise the powers to take charge of a prosecution or intervene and thereby become a ³ R v Sussex Justices Ex parte McCarthy, 1924 1 KB 256, 1923 All ER 233; for a thorough consideration of this principle, see Philip C. Stenning, “Prosecutions, Politics and the Public Interest: Some Recent Developments in the United Kingdom, Canada and Elsewhere” (2010) 55 CLQ 449 [P. C. Stenning]; see also Hon. Marc Rosenberg, “The Attorney General and the Administration of Criminal Justice” (2009) 34 Queen’s LJ 813-862 [Hon. M. Rosenberg].

⁴ Testimony of the Honourable Vic Toews, supra note 2.

⁵ DPP Act, supra note 1, s 10\(1\).

⁶ Ibid, s 10\(2\).

⁷ See DPP Act, supra note 1, s 3\(8\) which specifies that the DPP initiates and conducts, on behalf of the Crown, prosecutions with respect to offences under the Canada Elections Act.

⁸ DPP Act, ibid, s 14.

⁹ Ibid, s 15.

party to proceedings as appellant, respondent or, in the case of provincial Criminal Code prosecutions, intervener where the constitutionality of federal legislation is challenged.

It is a core constitutional tenet that the Attorney General, and by extension the DPP, are bound by the principle of independence in respect of the prosecution function.¹⁰ As the Supreme Court stated in Law Society of Alberta v Krieger:¹¹ “It is a constitutional principle in this country that the Attorney General must act independently of partisan concerns when supervising prosecutorial decisions.” However, it is quite appropriate for the Attorney General to consult with Cabinet colleagues before exercising his or her powers under the DPP Act in respect of any criminal proceedings. Indeed, sometimes it will be important to do so in order to be cognisant of pan-government perspectives. The Attorney General of England, Sir Hartley Shawcross (later Lord Shawcross) in 1951 best described the proper relationship between the Attorney General and Cabinet colleagues (and now, likewise, between the DPP, his or her designated agents and the departments that administer the statutes):

I think the true doctrine is that it is the duty of an Attorney-General, in deciding whether or not to authorize the prosecution, to acquaint himself with all the relevant facts, including, for instance, the effect which the prosecution, successful or unsuccessful as the case may be, would have upon public morale and order, and with any other considerations affecting public policy.

In order so to inform himself, he may, although I do not think he is obliged to, consult with any of his colleagues in the Government; and indeed, as Lord Simon once said, he would in some cases be a fool if he did not. On the other hand, the assistance of his colleagues is confined to informing him of particular considerations, which might affect his own decision, and does not consist, and must not consist in telling him what that decision ought to be. The responsibility for the eventual decision rests with the Attorney-General, and he is not to be put, and is not put, under pressure by his colleagues in the matter.

Nor, of course, can the Attorney-General shift his responsibility for making the decision on to the shoulders of his colleagues. If political considerations which, in the broad sense that I have indicated, affect government in the abstract arise, it is the Attorney-General, applying his judicial mind, who has to be the sole judge of those considerations.¹²

¹⁰ Hon. M. Rosenberg, supra note 3 at para 16.

¹¹ Law Society of Alberta v Krieger, 2002 SCC 65, [2002] 3 SCR 372 [Krieger]; see also Binnie J. in R v Regan, 2002 SCC 12, [2002] 1 SCR 297 at paras 157-58 (dissenting on another point) [Regan] and Miazga v Kvello Estate, 2009 SCC 51, [2009] 3 SCR 339 at para 46.

¹² UK, H.C. Debates, vol 483, cols 683-84, (29 January 1951).

Since then, federal and provincial Attorneys General in Canada have adopted this statement, often referred to as the “Shawcross principle”.¹³ Similarly, the judiciary has supported these principles,¹⁴ as have leading authorities on the role of the Attorney General.¹⁵

1.3. Role of the Director of Public Prosecutions

The DPP has the power to make binding and final decisions to prosecute offences under federal statutes, stay proceedings or launch an appeal, unless otherwise instructed by the Attorney General under s. 10\(1\). The notion of DPP independence relates to the prosecutorial decision-making process – and all steps incidental to it.¹⁶ The DPP is regarded as an independent officer, exercising quasi-judicial responsibilities.¹⁷ Section 3\(3\) of the Act enumerates the duties and functions that are delegated to the DPP, which include the authority to:

- (a) initiate and conduct federal prosecutions subject to the Attorney General’s s. 15 power;
- (b) intervene in proceedings that raise a question of public interest that may affect the conduct of prosecutions or related investigations, subject to the Attorney General’s s. 14 power;

¹³ In 1978, the Attorney General of Canada, the Hon. Ron Basford referred to the Shawcross principle while explaining to the House of Commons a decision concerning a prosecution under the Official Secrets Act, Canada, HC Debates, vol 4 at 3881 (17 March 1978). One year later, Senator Jacques Flynn, then Attorney General of Canada, affirmed the Shawcross principle with respect to a proposed prosecution under the Combines Investigation Act. The statement was attached as an appendix to Canada, Senate Debates, 28 Elizabeth II at 126 (18 October 1979). Similar views have been expressed by the Hon. Mark MacGuigan in 1983: “The Position of the Attorney General of Canada on Certain Recommendations of the McDonald Commission” (unpublished, August 1983) at 6-9, the Hon. John Crosbie in 1988 (Canada, H.C. Debates, at 18437-38 (17 August 1988) and, in Ontario, by the Hon. Roy McMurtry in 1978 (Ontario Legislature Debates (23 December 1978) and the Hon. Ian Scott in 1987: “The Role of the Attorney General and the Charter”, (1986-87) 29 Crim LQ 187).

¹⁴ R v Smythe (1971), 3 CCC (2d) 98 at 110 and 112, aff’d at 122, further aff’d by the Supreme Court of Canada at 3 CCC (2d) 366 esp. at 370; Gouriet v Union of Post Office Workers, [1977] 3 All ER 70 (HL); Re Saikaly and the Queen (1979), 48 CCC (2d) 192 at 196 (Ont CA); Re M and The Queen (1983), 1 CCC (3d) 465 at 468 (ON HC); R v Harrigan and Graham (1976), 33 CRNS 60 at 69 (Ont CA); The Royal Commission on Civil Rights in the Province of Ontario (Chief Justice McRuer, Chairman) (1968) Report No 1 at 933-4; Commission of Inquiry into Certain Activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (Mr. Justice D.C. McDonald, Chairman) (1981) at 509.

¹⁵ See generally Hon. M. Rosenberg, supra note 3; P. C. Stenning, supra note 3; K. Roach “Prosecutorial Independence and Accountability in Terrorism Prosecutions”, 2010 55 CLQ 486 at 496-497 in the context of terrorism prosecutions; D. Stuart “Prosecutorial Accountability in Canada” in P. C. Stenning, ed. “Accountability for Criminal Justice: Selected Essays (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1995) at 353; See also Royal Commission on the Donald Marshall, Jr. Prosecution, vol. V [Marshall Inquiry]; “Walking the Tightrope of Justice: An Examination of the Office of the Attorney General”, a series of opinion papers prepared by J.L.J. Edwards (1989) esp. at 128-146; Law Reform Commission of Canada, Working Paper 62, Controlling Criminal Prosecutions: The Attorney General and the Crown Prosecutor (1990), esp. 8-14.

¹⁶ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.1 Independence and Accountability in Decision-Making”.

¹⁷ See R v Logiacco (1984), 11 CCC (3d) 374 (Ont CA).

- (c) issue general guidelines to prosecutors;¹⁸
- (d) advise law enforcement agencies on matters related to prosecutions generally and particular investigations that may lead to a prosecution;
- (e) communicate with the media and the public on prosecution matters; and
- (f) exercise the Attorney General's authority in respect of private prosecutions.

Section 3\(3\)\(g\) leaves open the possibility that the Attorney General may delegate additional functions to the DPP.¹⁹ It provides that the DPP may exercise any other power, duty or function assigned by the Attorney General that is compatible with the Office of the DPP. In relation to the matters set out in s. 3(3), the DPP is accountable to the Attorney General and is the Deputy Attorney General of Canada for the purpose of performing these duties and functions.²⁰

In Canada, the investigation and prosecution functions are separate and independent. The courts have affirmed this principle repeatedly.²¹ Indeed, several commissions of inquiry into wrongful convictions, most notably the Royal Commission on the Donald Marshall Prosecution,²² have insisted that a clear line of demarcation be drawn between the two functions. The DPP Act upholds this principle and does not confer on the DPP any investigative powers.²³ By the same token, the Attorney General cannot direct the DPP to work with the RCMP on a specific investigation. Police are independent from political control and from control by either the Attorney General or the DPP when investigating ¹⁸ Section 3\(5\) exempts from the requirements of the Statutory Instruments Act any guidelines the DPP issues under s 3\(3\)\(c\). As such, these guidelines need not be approved by a Parliamentary committee.

¹⁹ For example, the Attorney General assigned to the DPP the responsibility of developing a set of best practices for prosecuting fraud involving governments (21 February 2007), the power, duty or function to conduct prosecutions the Attorney General of Canada is authorized to undertake under agreements with the provincial Attorneys General and to conduct, on the authority of provincial Attorneys General, prosecutions and related proceedings, including appeals, of charges that fall under the exclusive prosecutorial authority of the province (i.e., major-minor agreements) (21 February 2007), and the responsibility of administering the National Fine Recovery Program including initiating and conducting proceedings to enforce the collection of outstanding federal fines (20 September 2007). Other examples of the types of other duties or functions that could be assigned include special inquiries into prosecution-related issues, issue-driven forums with provincial, territorial or international prosecution agencies regarding prosecution-related issues, or reports on the prosecutorial impacts of policy initiatives.

²⁰ See DPP Act, supra note 1, s 3\(4\). Note, however, that where the Attorney General intervenes in a proceeding under s 14 or assumes conduct of a federal prosecution under s 15, the Deputy Minister of Justice assumes the role of Deputy Attorney General in respect of those matters.

²¹ See, notably, the Supreme Court of Canada decisions in Krieger, supra note 11; Regan, supra note 11; and R v Beaudry, 2007 SCC 5, [2007] 1 SCR 190.

²² Marshall Inquiry, supra note 15.

²³ This separation of investigation and prosecution functions is reinforced by s 3\(3\)\(d\) which states that the DPP "advises law enforcement agencies or investigative bodies in respect of prosecutions generally or in respect of a particular investigation that may lead to a prosecution".

crime.²⁴ In the same manner, the DPP is independent from police in the prosecution function. No investigative agency or investigating body within a government department may instruct the prosecution to pursue or discontinue a particular prosecution or to undertake a specific appeal. These decisions rest solely with the DPP (and his or her delegated agent), subject to the Attorney General's powers under ss. 10 and 15. Although the investigation and prosecution functions are distinct, there is nevertheless a great deal of cooperation and consultation between police, investigative agencies and prosecutors even at the investigative stage.²⁵

1.4. Guiding principles

Given their interconnected responsibilities, an effective relationship between the Attorney General and the DPP is of the utmost importance in ensuring that both can fulfill their important public duties while achieving the legislative goal of an independent, apolitical, and accountable prosecution service. The Attorney General is directly accountable to Parliament, while the DPP is indirectly accountable to Parliament. The DPP is required to report to Parliament annually on its activities through the Attorney General and the DPP may be called to appear before parliamentary committees. Thus, it is crucial that they work in a consultative way so their decisions are fully informed. To ensure prosecutorial independence and accountability, their relationship should be premised on the following principles:

1. Respect for the independence of the prosecutorial function - By virtue of s. 3\(3\)\(c\) and s. 10\(2\), the Attorney General and the DPP are jointly responsible for establishing general prosecution policy, but the DPP is responsible for the exercises of prosecutorial discretion pursuant to that policy (subject to the Attorney General's residual powers under ss. 10 and 15).
2. Notification on matters of significant public interest - The vast majority of prosecutorial decision-making and policy development requires no prior notice. However, the DPP should inform the Attorney General when the exercise of his or her duties raises issues that pertain to the Attorney General's functions. Notification in this regard comes within the DPP's duty to inform under s. 13 of the DPP Act,²⁶ which is designed to assist the Attorney General in deciding whether or not to issue a directive under s. 10\(1\), to exercise the authority under s. 14 to intervene in first instance or on appeal, or under s. 15 to assume carriage of a prosecution. Additionally, quite apart from the aforementioned DPP Act powers, the Attorney General must be adequately briefed on prosecutorial decisions that are expected to generate significant public interest in order to report to Parliament on the manner in which the prosecution function is exercised in his or her name.²⁷

²⁴ In [R v Campbell, \[1999\] 2 SCR 956](#), the Supreme Court of Canada affirmed that police officers are not government functionaries or agents of the Crown in performing law enforcement duties and cannot be directed by the executive to investigate or not investigate someone.

²⁵ See the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.3 Consultation within Government" and the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.7 Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies".

²⁶ Consultation between the PPSC and the Department of Justice generally is dealt with in the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.3 Consultation within Government", ibid; see also the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.2 Duty to Inform the Attorney General under Section 13 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act".

3. In the same vein, the Attorney General consults with the DPP on policy, legislative or litigation matters which may have a significant impact on prosecutions or police powers. It is understood that consultations with prosecutors from both provincial and federal prosecution services can provide crucial practical perspective on criminal law policy issues.
4. Periodic meetings and discussions -The Attorney General and the DPP are to meet on a regular basis to discuss prosecution-related issues. It is particularly important that this occur with respect to issues which may be the subject of policy directives²⁸ that have a broad operational impact. The DPP Act does not specify a frequency of meetings between the DPP and the Attorney General.²⁹ This allows for flexibility to suit the particular working relationship of successive DPPs and the Attorneys General.

2. POWERS, DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS UNDER THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

2.1. The exercise of the Director's duties and functions

Section 3\(3\) of the DPP Act sets out most of the duties and functions of the DPP.³⁰ It provides that those duties and functions will be performed “under and on behalf of” the Attorney General, without further defining the words “under and on behalf of”. What this connotes is that the DPP is independent from influence in the decision-making process related to the prosecution function. However, the DPP has only the powers, duties and functions conferred by statute, he or she is accountable to the Attorney General, and, in turn, the Attorney General remains answerable to Parliament for the DPP's activities.

2.2. The power of the Attorney General to issue directives

Prosecutorial decision-making must take place independently of the interests of the government of the day.³¹ The historical practice of successive Attorneys General of

²⁷ The DPP does not brief the Attorney General on Canada Elections Act matters in light of s 3\(8\) of the DDP Act, supra note 1 which specifies that the DPP initiates and conducts, on behalf of the Crown, prosecutions with respect to offences under the Canada Elections Act.

²⁸ In fact, s 10\(2\) of the DPP Act, supra note 1 requires the Attorney General to consult the DPP prior to issuing directives respecting the initiation or conduct of prosecutions generally.

²⁹ By contrast, Public Prosecutions Act, SNS 1990, c 21, s 6A requires the Nova Scotia DPP and the Attorney General to meet minimally 12 times per year preferably on a monthly basis.

³⁰ Pursuant to s 3\(8\), the Director also conducts on behalf of the Crown prosecutions under the Canada Elections Act; in this regard see the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.10 Application of the PPSC Deskbook in Respect of Canada Elections Act Prosecutions”. Pursuant to s 3\(9\), the Director may also perform work for the Attorney General under the Extradition Act and the Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters Act”.

³¹ See e.g. Krieger, supra note 11.

Canada has been to refrain from becoming involved in the day-to-day operational decision making of public prosecutions. In recognition of the Attorney General's powers of superintendence, s. 10 of the DPP Act allows the Attorney General to issue directives on the initiation or conduct of any specific prosecution,³² and with respect to prosecutions generally.³³

Section 10 is one of the hallmarks of independence of the prosecution function.³⁴ To safeguard the DPP's independence, s. 10 requires that directives respecting specific prosecutions and respecting prosecutions generally be in writing and published in the Canada Gazette. Mandatory publication of the directive assures transparency, and enables the Attorney General to be accountable for his or her decisions. Ultimately, this requirement for transparency serves as a strong deterrent against partisan political influence and pressure in prosecution-related decision-making. These directives are not intended to have the force of law and are exempt from review by Parliament's Standing Joint Committee for the Scrutiny of Regulations.³⁵

The power to issue directives has been exercised sparingly in other jurisdictions in which this power exists.³⁶ Such a situation may arise, for example, where there is disagreement between the DPP and the Attorney General as to whether to proceed with certain types of prosecutions or whether to appeal in a particular case, based on divergent assessments of what the public interest demands in the particular circumstances of that case.

Section 11\(1\) authorizes both the Attorney General and the DPP to delay publication of a directive in a specific prosecution in the interests of the administration of justice. This measure of flexibility recognizes that occasionally the publication rule may have to yield to operational exigencies, for example, to ensure the integrity of an ongoing investigation or to avoid a negative impact on prosecutions or other proceedings that are still before the courts. This delay may not continue beyond the completion of the prosecution or any related prosecution.³⁷

³² DPP Act, supra note 1, s 10\(1\).

³³ Ibid, s 10\(2\).

³⁴ The provinces of Nova Scotia, Quebec and British Columbia all have similar requirements in their legislation. The same is true of many other jurisdictions that have adopted a Director of Public Prosecutions model.

³⁵ Section 12 of the DPP Act, supra note 1 makes it clear that the directives issued under s 11 are exempt from the requirements of the Statutory Instruments Act. This exemption means that the directives issued by the Attorney General to the DPP in specific prosecutions and in relation to prosecutions generally need not be approved by a parliamentary committee before they have the force of law.

³⁶ For example, in British Columbia, previous Attorneys General have issued directives (i) to continue with a murder prosecution rather than accepting a guilty plea to the lesser and included offence of manslaughter, (ii) to appeal a manslaughter sentence, and (iii) to the Assistant Deputy Attorney General directing him to appoint a specified special prosecutor to conduct a charge assessment of alleged polygamy in Bountiful, British Columbia. As of March 31, 2010, The Attorney General of Quebec had issued no such directives to its Director of Public Prosecutions.

³⁷ See DPP Act, supra note 1, s 11\(2\).

2.3. The duty to inform

Under s. 13 of the DPP Act, the DPP has a duty to “inform the Attorney General in a timely manner of any prosecution, or intervention that the DPP intends to make, that raises important questions of general interest.”³⁸ This duty is fundamental to the relationship between the Attorney General and the DPP, since the Attorney General may use such information in deciding whether to issue a directive under s. 10, to intervene in proceedings under s. 14,³⁹ or to assume conduct of a prosecution under s. 15.

Although the Act sets out no corresponding duty on the part of the Attorney General, it is essential to a properly functioning relationship that information flow in both directions. For example, many civil cases raise constitutional, evidentiary or privilege issues which can have an important impact on the prosecution practice of the DPP.

2.4. The power of the Attorney General to intervene in proceedings

As the chief legal advisor to Cabinet and to the Government of Canada, the Attorney General has a broad perspective concerning the development of all aspects of law including matters that fall under the Criminal Code and other federal penal statutes. The legal challenges facing the Government of Canada are complex and multi-dimensional in nature. Their resolution requires that they be viewed through many lenses – whether policy, aboriginal, strategic, division of powers, or the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (Charter), to name but a few. As a result, the Attorney General may seek to intervene in criminal litigation, particularly if there is a constitutional challenge to federal laws.⁴⁰

Section 14 of the DPP Act gives the Attorney General the power, after notifying the DPP, to intervene in proceedings at first instance or on appeal that, in his or her opinion, raise questions of “public interest”.⁴¹ In theory, the Attorney General may intervene in prosecutions conducted by the DPP in order to present different views on an issue, for example proceedings that raise issues of informer privilege, broader issues of police conduct or cases that raise both Charter and division-of-powers issues. However, such interventions in federal prosecutions would be rare, in light of the power to take charge of a prosecution.⁴²

³⁸ See the PPSC Deskbook directive “1.2 Duty to Inform the Attorney General under Section 13 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act”, supra note 26.

³⁹ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.15 Appeals and Interventions in the Provincial and Territorial Courts of Appeal”.

⁴⁰ For example, the Attorney General may decide that it is in the public interest to intervene in a prosecution that raises a division of powers issue, or that raises an issue regarding the scope of victims’ rights in criminal proceedings, so that the court may have the benefit of hearing the Attorney General’s perspective.

⁴¹ Section 14: “When, in the opinion of the Attorney General, proceedings raise questions of public interest, the Attorney General may, after notifying the DPP, intervene in first instance or on appeal.”

⁴² For a more in depth discussion of interventions, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.15 Appeals and Interventions in the Provincial and Territorial Courts of Appeal”, supra note 39.

The DPP, or the Attorney General, may wish to intervene in a provincial matter. Typically the DPP, or Attorney General of Canada, will intervene in a provincial matter to support the province, since such federal interventions often involve challenges to the constitutionality of Criminal Code provisions. Like the ODPP, provincial prosecution services prosecute matters only where the prosecution is considered to be in the "public interest". On occasion, however, in view of the multifarious considerations that may come into play in a given case, the two levels of government may assess public interest considerations differently or the federal government may consider it important to advance a particular argument as intervener that may not be advanced by the provincial appellant.⁴³

The Attorney General and the DPP cannot both intervene in a case prosecuted by a provincial Attorney General. Section 3\(3\)\(b\) of the DPP Act provides that the DPP can intervene unless the Attorney General has decided to intervene. Section 13 imposes a positive duty on the DPP to give advance notice, in a timely manner, of interventions that the DPP intends to make. Moreover, as a practical matter, most interventions at first instance or on appeal result from Notices of Constitutional Question (NCQ). By statute or by court rules,⁴⁴ an applicant who intends to challenge the constitutional validity or applicability of a particular piece of federal legislation or regulation, a common law rule or to claim a remedy under s. 24\(1\) of the Charter in relation to an act or omission of a federal government institution, must serve a NCQ on the Attorney General.⁴⁵ Thus, in effect, the Attorney General essentially has a "right of first refusal" in deciding whether or not to intervene in cases prosecuted by a provincial Attorney General.

2.5. The power of the Attorney General to assume conduct of proceedings

Section 15 of the DPP Act sets out the power of the Attorney General to take over a prosecution from the DPP. However, the Attorney General must first consult the DPP regarding his or her decision to assume conduct of a prosecution and must publish the notice in the Canada Gazette "without delay",⁴⁶ unless either the Attorney General or the DPP considers a delay in notice to be justified "in the interests of the administration of justice".⁴⁷ The DPP must turn over the prosecution file to the Attorney General, where ⁴³ See e.g. Robert J. Frater, Prosecutorial Misconduct (Aurora: Canada Law Book, 2009) at 12-13.

⁴⁴ Rules of the Supreme Court of Canada, SOR/2002-156 amended by SOR/2006-203, rule 61. Similarly, provincial legislation provides that NCQs must be served on the relevant Attorney General; see e.g. Courts of Justice Act, RSO. 1990, c C-14, s 109; Nova Scotia Rules of Civil Procedure, NS Reg 420/2008, rule 31.19; Constitutional Question Act, RSBC 1996, c 68, s 8; Quebec Code of Civil Procedure, RSQ, c C-25, s 95.

⁴⁵ This requirement applies in respect of Supreme Court of Canada, but is not required in all provincial court rules.

⁴⁶ DPP Act, supra note 1, s 15\(1\).

⁴⁷ Ibid, s 15\(3\). It is anticipated that delays in publication would be exceptional and would only occur where necessary to protect the confidentiality of proceedings (such as proceedings that might compromise the identity of an informer or an ongoing investigation, especially given that by definition, a prosecution includes a prospective prosecution).

the latter assumes conduct of the case, and must provide any information that the Attorney General requires within the time specified by the Attorney General (s. 15\(2\)).

Section 15 reflects the fact that the Attorney General retains his or her criminal law related powers under the DPP Act. The foregoing power, like the power to issue directives, is one which is to be exercised sparingly in order to preserve the independence of the DPP.⁴⁸ Nevertheless, s. 15 recognizes that the Attorney General is ultimately accountable to Parliament for federal prosecutions. Accordingly, there must be a residual capacity in the Attorney General to ensure that decisions are taken in the public interest.

2.6. The duty to report

Section 16 of the DPP Act requires the DPP to provide the Attorney General with an annual report not later than June 30 of every year. The Attorney General is then required to table that report in the Houses of Parliament within the first 15 sitting days immediately following receipt of the report. The DPP's annual report to Parliament is a key mechanism for ensuring transparency and public accountability for federal prosecutions. The report is required to provide a summary of the DPP's activities⁴⁹ of the year in review, and usually contains a review of the anticipated legal challenges and priorities for the future, and how public money was expended in carrying out the DPP's duties and functions.

2.7. Delegated decision-making

Some offences in the Criminal Code and in other federal statutes can be prosecuted only with the prior consent of the Attorney General on whose behalf the prosecution will be conducted.⁵⁰ By virtue of s. 3\(4\) of the DPP Act, the DPP is Deputy Attorney General for the purpose of exercising the bulk of prosecution-related duties, functions and powers, which are set out in s. 3\(3\).⁵¹ The principal significance of s. 3(4) is that it brings into play s. 2 of the Criminal Code which defines the Attorney General to include the Deputy Attorney General. Additionally, s. 3\(3\)\(a\) delegates to the DPP, as Deputy Attorney General, the Attorney General's power to initiate and conduct prosecutions. Thus, ordinarily, decisions statutorily requiring the "personal consent in writing" of the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General, will be made by the DPP, being the Deputy Attorney General for the functions set out in s. 3\(3\)\(c\) of the DPP Act.

⁴⁸ Testimony of Chantal Proulx, before Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs concerning Bill C-2, 29 June 2006.

⁴⁹ This excludes PPSC activities related to the Canada Elections Act.

⁵⁰ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.5 Delegated Decision-Making".

⁵¹ The Deputy Attorney General's authority to act for the Attorney General is recognized in three ways: 1) specifically, in some statutory provisions (such as Criminal Code, s. 577); 2) generally, in s 2 of the Criminal Code, through the definition of "Attorney General"; and 3) more generally, for all federal legislation, by virtue of s. 24\(2\)\(c\) of the Interpretation Act.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

1.2 DUTY TO INFORM THE ATTORNEY GENERAL UNDER SECTION 13 OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised July 6, 2023

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION.....	2
2. TYPES OF CASES THAT SHOULD BE REPORTED UNDER SECTION 13	3
2.1. Prosecutions.....	4
2.2. Appeals.....	4
2.3. Interventions.....	4
3. NOTICE AT THE PRE-CHARGE STAGE AND REGARDING DECISIONS NOT TO PROSECUTE.....	5
4. TIMING OF NOTICE.....	6
5. CONTENT OF NOTICE	6
6. TREATMENT OF NOTICE	6

1. INTRODUCTION

Section 13 of the *Director of Public Prosecutions Act*¹ (DPP Act) provides that the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) has a duty to “inform the Attorney General in a timely manner of any prosecution, or intervention that the Director intends to make, that raises important questions of general interest.” This duty arises from the relationship between the Attorney General and the DPP, since the Attorney General may rely upon information provided under section 13 in deciding whether to issue directives to the DPP under subsection 10\(1\), to intervene in proceedings under section 14,² or to assume conduct of a prosecution under section 15.³

Section 13 is not intended to be the exclusive mechanism for information flow between the DPP and the Attorney General in respect of prosecution matters. Rather, section 13 is intended as a statutory guarantee that the DPP will inform the Attorney General to enable the Attorney General to properly execute their functions as chief law officer of the Crown.

¹ Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9 [DPP Act].

² See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.15 Appeals and Interventions in the Provincial and Territorial Courts of Appeal”.

³ Although section 13 does not limit the Attorney General’s power to issue directives or assume conduct of a prosecution.

Section 13 notes are issued by the DPP and are intended for the Attorney General personally.

Section 13 does not apply to proceedings conducted by the Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC) on behalf of the Attorney General in relation to the Attorney General's powers, duties and functions under the Extradition Act⁴ and the Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters Act⁵ pursuant to subsection 3\(9\) of the DPP Act,⁶ nor does it apply to prosecutions under the Canada Elections Act.⁷

2. TYPES OF CASES THAT SHOULD BE REPORTED UNDER SECTION 13

Section 13 notices are required in cases that raise “important questions” that are of “general interest”. The framers opted for the term “general interest” which is broader than “public interest”. As the legislative summary of Bill C-2, An Act providing for conflict of interest rules, restrictions on election financing and measures respecting administrative transparency, oversight and accountability, explained:

A distinction is made between the term “public interest” and the broader term “general interest” (considered to subsume “public interest”) so that the DPP will have a broader duty to inform the Attorney General of important matters. The House Committee removed the need for questions of general or public interest to be “beyond the scope of those usually raised in prosecutions,” as it was considered to be unnecessary and unduly limit the ability of the Attorney General to intervene.⁸

The qualifier “important questions” acts as an additional threshold to distinguish matters of significance from more routine or recurring matters.

Examples of cases that may involve important questions of general interest and thus generally would be subject to a section 13 notice include prosecutions, appeals and interventions as set out below.

⁴ SC1999, c 18.

⁵ RSC 1985, c 30 (4th Supp).

⁶ Subsection 3\(9\) of the DPP Act authorizes the DPP to exercise, under and on behalf of the Attorney General, any of the Attorney General's powers, duties or functions under the Extradition Act or the Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters Act. The section 13 notice requirement is restricted to “prosecutions and interventions” and thus does not cover extradition and MLAT matters.

⁷ Section 13 of the DPP Act requires notice specifically for “prosecutions and interventions”. The definition of “prosecution” in section 2 of the DPP Act expressly excludes Canada Elections Act (CEA) prosecutions under subsection 3\(8\) of the DPP Act, which stipulates that the DPP initiates and conducts CEA prosecutions, appeals and other prosecution-related CEA proceedings on behalf of the Crown. In contrast to the DPP's other duties and functions as set out in subsection 3\(3\), subsection 3\(8\) prosecutions are not undertaken under and on behalf of the Attorney General.

⁸ Footnote 45 of Bill C-2 Legislative Summary 1st Sess, 39th Parl.

2.1. Prosecutions

- Cases giving rise to concerns regarding public confidence in the administration of justice, including the manner in which a prosecution is conducted insofar as the impartiality or independence of the PPSC is at issue;
- Cases that may have a significant impact on established jurisprudence;
- National security prosecutions;
- War crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide prosecutions;
- Novel official languages issues in prosecutions;
- Prosecutions that involve novel aboriginal rights issues;
- Criminal organization prosecutions that raise “important questions of general interest” by virtue of the significance or novelty of the issues being litigated, or any broader government concerns such as border security;
- Environmental prosecutions that raise issues of national importance;
- Capital markets fraud cases of national significance;
- Cases with an international dimension;
- Constitutional challenges (Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (Charter) or division of powers) to legislation or to federal government programs that are novel (that is, notices would not be required on routine or recurring constitutional challenges); and
- Cases that give rise to sustained, significant and/or anticipated media interest and that also raise important questions, for example, when a matter puts into question the public’s confidence in the administration of justice.

2.2. Appeals

- Supreme Court of Canada appeals, whether on leave or as of right; and
- Other appeals, to provincial and territorial courts of appeal and summary conviction appeals, which raise “important questions of general interest”. They would include
 - Cases involving constitutional challenges to legislation (Charter, division of powers, Aboriginal rights), official languages rights;
 - Cases that may have a significant impact on police and prosecutorial powers, duties and functions;
 - Cases that raise a significant impact on rules of procedure and evidence; and
 - Cases that raise other significant Charter issues.

2.3. Interventions

- Interventions to be made on behalf of the DPP or the Attorney General,⁹ whether in the Supreme Court of Canada, in any court of appeal or at trial.

⁹ The Attorney General and the DPP cannot both intervene in a case prosecuted by a provincial Attorney General. Paragraph 3(3)(b) of the DPP Act provides that the DPP can intervene unless the Attorney General has decided to intervene. Section 13 imposes a positive duty on the DPP to give advance notice, in a timely manner, of interventions that the DPP intends to make.

3. NOTICE AT THE PRE-CHARGE STAGE AND REGARDING DECISIONS NOT TO PROSECUTE

The section 13 notice requirement is limited to “prosecutions and interventions”. Under section 2 of the DPP Act, the term “prosecutions” is defined to include not only a prosecution under the Attorney General’s jurisdiction, but also “a proceeding respecting any offence where the prosecution or prospective prosecution” comes within the Attorney General’s jurisdiction. Generally, the DPP does not provide section 13 notices in respect of investigations, in recognition of the independent investigative function.¹⁰ However, the section 2 reference to “prospective prosecutions” indicates that the section 13 notice requirement extends to pre-charge “proceedings”. This would include various ex parte Crown applications to obtain judicial authorization to use investigative or enforcement techniques (special search warrants, restraint orders and management orders). That said, it is anticipated that section 13 notices in respect of ex parte Crown applications would be exceedingly rare at the pre-charge stage in large part because the fundamental principle of police independence at the investigative stage must inform what is an important question of general interest.

In most Canadian jurisdictions, decisions to decline prosecution are made post-charge and dealt with by way of a stay of proceedings or withdrawal of charges. Proceedings to stay or withdraw charges are subject to s. 13. However, by virtue of the s. 2 definition of “prosecutions” which is limited to “proceedings”, s. 13 would not extend to prosecutorial decisions not to prosecute in pre-charge approval jurisdictions (Quebec, British Columbia and New Brunswick) because the prosecutorial decision-making is not a “proceedings”. For the same reason, s. 13 would not apply to decisions of the DPP not to consent to institute criminal proceedings.¹¹ That said, while such decisions to decline prosecution would not constitute “proceedings” and thus would fall outside the scope of s. 13, the DPP will apply the spirit of s. 13 and notify the Attorney General of such pre-charge decisions if they raise important questions of general interest so that the Attorney General may decide whether or not to issue a directive under subsection 10\(1\) or to assume conduct of a prosecution under s. 15 where the DPP has declined to prosecute. It is conceivable, for example, that the Attorney General could reach a different conclusion in applying the “public interest” criteria of the decision to prosecute test.¹²

¹⁰ The conduct of any investigation is the sole responsibility of the law enforcement agency involved. The law enforcement agency does not require authorization from the prosecution before commencing an investigation nor does the prosecution direct an investigation or prohibit the continuation of an investigation. In practice, of course, investigators may and regularly do consult the prosecution during the investigation.

¹¹ Certain Criminal Code offences require consent of the Attorney General to institute proceedings. Paragraph 3\(3\)\(a\) of the DPP Act delegates this consent function to the DPP to “initiate prosecutions”.

¹² See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”. For commentary on the public interest factor see Robert J. Frater, Prosecutorial Misconduct (Aurora: Canada Law Book, 2009) at 9-13: “The ‘guardian of the public interest’ role is particularly noteworthy in a federal state such as Canada, where there are many attorneys general and directors of public prosecution. Determining what the public interest demands in a particular situation is a subject on which reasonable people may sometimes differ, depending on how much weight they choose to attach to objectively relevant factors.”

4. TIMING OF NOTICE

Section 13 requires that notice be given “in a timely manner”. By necessity, the timelines for providing a section 13 notice will vary from case-to-case in accordance with the particular facts, including any applicable time limitation periods.¹³ That said, the section 13 timeliness requirement must be interpreted to uphold the overarching principle that, to the extent possible, the Attorney General must be given sufficient opportunity to react.

Notices should be given in respect of prosecutions that raise important questions of general interest at various milestone stages of the prosecution, notably prior to initiating prosecutions, discontinuing proceedings, staying a prosecution, including a private prosecution, and prior to decisions to appeal or to intervene. The decision of whether to issue a notice (or a follow-up notice) should be made to give effect to the Attorney General’s role as chief law officer of the Crown, including the powers that the Attorney General may exercise pursuant to the DPP Act regarding directions given to the DPP (s. 10), assuming conduct of a prosecution (s. 15), and interventions by the Attorney General (s. 14).

5. CONTENT OF NOTICE

Section 13 notices should include a contextual explanation setting out why the Attorney General is being informed of the matter, as well as details concerning relevant timelines, such as filing deadlines, hearing dates, and trial dates, and other information that would be relevant to inform any decision by the Attorney General.

6. TREATMENT OF NOTICE

Insofar as they contain legal advice and other privileged information, section 13 notices are to be treated as privileged. They are also confidential insofar as they relate to the exercise of prosecutorial discretion. The Attorney General may share section 13 notices with the Deputy Minister of Justice or others for the purpose of obtaining advice as to whether they should exercise their authority to issue a directive or take over a prosecution. The Attorney General may seek additional information from the DPP upon receiving a section 13 notice. As noted above, the Attorney General relies on the information contained in section 13 notices in deciding whether to issue specific directives, intervene in proceedings or take over a prosecution. The Attorney General may issue specific directives or take over a prosecution on public interest grounds or because they are of the view that there is, or is not, a reasonable prospect of conviction.

¹³ All appeals and interventions are governed by mandatory time limitation periods, usually 30 days, except for leave applications in the Supreme Court of Canada, which are 60 days.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

1.3 CONSULTATION WITHIN GOVERNMENT

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED
UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. CASES WHERE CONSULTATION IS HIGHLY RECOMMENDED	3
2.1. Cases involving official languages issues	4
2.2. Aboriginal law cases	4
2.3. Cases involving national security issues	4
3. CONSULTATION WITH ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITIES	5
4. CONSULTATION WITH DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE GENERALLY	6
4.1. Consultation process	6
4.2. The Human Rights Law Section	6
4.3. The Constitutional, Administrative and International Law Section	6
4.4. The Information Law and Privacy Section	7
4.5. The Criminal Law Policy Section	7
4.6. The National Security Group	7
4.7. The Criminal Litigation Division	7
4.8. The Department of Justice Legal Service Units	8

1. INTRODUCTION

The independence of the Attorney General of Canada, the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP), and by extension Crown counsel, in deciding whether to prosecute is an important constitutional principle in Canada.¹ "Prosecutorial independence", however, does not mean regional or institutional isolation and does not exclude the notions of cooperation and consultation. Under the Director of Public Prosecutions Act² (DPP Act), the independence is that of the DPP who is ultimately accountable to the Attorney General,³ to the public and to the courts for the prosecution function, and not of individual prosecutors. In some instances prosecutorial decision-making, including the determination of whether a prosecution best serves the public interest,⁴ whether charges should be stayed, or a particular position on sentence taken, may warrant consultation with those who can provide Crown counsel with relevant information and expertise.

¹ For a more detailed discussion of this principle, see the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.1 Relationship between the Attorney General and the Director of Public Prosecutions" and the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.1 Independence and Accountability in Decision-Making".

² SC 2006, c 9 [DPP Act].

³ With the exception of Canada Elections Act matters; see DPP Act, ibid, s 3(8).

⁴ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.3 Decision to Prosecute", for a discussion about the public interest criteria to be considered when deciding whether to prosecute.

The Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC) is responsible for prosecuting offences under numerous federal statutes and for providing prosecution-related legal advice to law enforcement agencies in relation to these statutes. Cases prosecuted by the PPSC include those involving drugs, organized crime, terrorism, tax law, money laundering and proceeds of crime, crimes against humanity and war crimes, all Criminal Code offences in the territories, and a vast array of other offences under federal statutes. With such wide-ranging prosecutorial responsibilities, PPSC counsel require an effective consultation process.

Interdepartmental consultation is important because of the shared responsibilities among government departments for enforcing federal laws. Specific ministers and departments are responsible for administering and enforcing specific legislation that also contain offence provisions prosecuted by the PPSC. For example, the Minister of National Revenue is primarily responsible for administering and enforcing the Income Tax Act; the Minister of Transport administers and enforces the Aeronautics Act.

This directive describes the consultation process with other departments of the Government of Canada that are involved in the enforcement of federal statutes, and with Department of Justice centres of expertise. Other guidelines describe the consultation process within the PPSC, between PPSC Regional Offices and Headquarters, and with investigative agencies.⁵

2. CASES WHERE CONSULTATION IS HIGHLY RECOMMENDED

Formal consultation may be warranted in cases that are of significant public interest, which raise legal issues of national importance or which involve certain specialized areas of the law. These include, but are not limited to: cases before the Supreme Court of Canada; larger scale environmental prosecutions; challenges to the constitutionality of federal legislation; war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide prosecutions; and cases involving official language rights, aboriginal law or national security issues.

However, even if a case does not fall into one of the above categories, Crown counsel should consider whether consultation with the Department of Justice and/or other federal departments and agencies is necessary. In deciding whether to consult outside the PPSC on a case, counsel should consider a number of factors including:

- whether other branches of government are likely to have information that could be relevant to the issues arising in the prosecution;
- whether the decision to be made or the case itself is likely to have impact on the broader public interest; and ⁵ For discussion of the types and manner of consultation between Crown counsel and investigators, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.7 Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies”. For a discussion of consultation within the PPSC, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.6 Consultation within the Public Prosecution Service of Canada”.

- whether a proposed position is inconsistent with or likely to be inconsistent with the advice given by non-PPSC counsel to other government departments or agencies.

Where consultation is required, Crown counsel are expected to adhere to the process set out in the following paragraphs.⁶

2.1. Cases involving official languages issues

Crown counsel must contact the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) at the earliest opportunity of impending cases in which language rights issues are raised under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Official Languages Act or any related legislation.

If warranted, the champion or co-champion of official languages will then consult with the Official Languages Law Section of the Department of Justice. That Section helps ensure government wide consistency and accuracy in positions being advanced respecting official languages.

For further information on the consultation process respecting official languages issues, see the PPSC Deskbook directive "2.11 Official Languages in Prosecutions".

2.2. Aboriginal law cases

When Aboriginal law issues that are complex or novel arise in the course of a prosecution, Crown counsel must contact PPSC Headquarters counsel responsible for Aboriginal law issues in litigation.

If warranted, the Headquarters counsel will consult with the Aboriginal Law Portfolio in the Department of Justice. That Section provides legal advice on complex and emerging issues in the area of Aboriginal law.

2.3. Cases involving national security issues

Crown counsel must be particularly sensitive to the need to protect information the disclosure of which would be injurious to national security. Any prosecution which involves the possible disclosure of such information requires a special consultative process.

When a national security interest arises, Crown counsel must advise at the earliest opportunity the CFP who, in turn, will advise the Headquarters Senior Counsel, National Security Issues. The latter will contact the head of the appropriate Legal Services Unit

⁶ Such cases frequently require the DPP to inform the Attorney General pursuant to s 13 of the DPP Act, supra note 2. For more information regarding s 13 notices, see the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.2 Duty to Inform the Attorney General under Section 13 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act".

(for example, CSIS, CSE, or the RCMP), and the Department of Justice National Security Group, and the Privy Council Office as needed. The Senior Counsel, National Security Issues will also consult with the Deputy DPP.

For further information on the consultation process respecting national security issues, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline “5.1 National Security” and the PPSC Deskbook directive “4.2 Protecting Confidential Information under Section 38 of the Canada Evidence Act”.

3. CONSULTATION WITH ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITIES

Most federal prosecutions stem from investigations conducted by federal department investigators or by the police. In some situations, Crown counsel will be aware of a case at the investigative stage because of a request for legal advice. Sometimes, Crown counsel will not learn of a case until after investigators have laid charges and sent the Report to Crown Counsel/Crown Brief to the Regional Office. In either situation, decisions will have to be made regarding the charges to pursue, the evidence to call, the legal arguments to make, the recommendations to make on sentence and the decision to appeal. In making these decisions, Crown counsel should consult, where appropriate, with the investigating officers where the investigative agency’s interests are engaged substantively.

Especially in the prosecution of offences under specialized statutes (for example, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, 1999, Immigration and Refugee Protection Act, Proceeds of Crime \(Money Laundering\) and Terrorist Financing Act (PCMLTFA), Aeronautics Act and the Migratory Birds Convention Act, etc.), Crown counsel should review the compliance and enforcement policies developed by the department or agency responsible for the underlying legislation.

Counsel may communicate directly with the appropriate investigating authority.⁷ In cases where consultation is warranted with senior managers of a government department or agency, as for example, where that department’s or agency’s policies or practices are challenged, where legislation is attacked or on the more technical aspects of regulatory statutes, Crown counsel may ask the Department of Justice Legal Services Unit for that department or agency to arrange the consultation. Ultimately however, the DPP is responsible for the conduct of litigation subject to any directives the Attorney General may issue under s. 10\(1\) of the DPP Act.

⁷ For more detail regarding consultation with investigative agencies, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.7 Relationship between Crown counsel and Investigative Agencies”, supra note 5.

4. CONSULTATION WITH DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE GENERALLY

In respect of criminal or regulatory offence proceedings, in addition to consulting with police officers and other investigators, it may be important for Crown counsel to consult with other centres of expertise within government, in order to:

- ensure an awareness of national policies and objectives that may be relevant to an individual case;
- be cognisant of broader pan-government perspectives; and,
- to draw on the specialized subject-matter expertise of counsel in specific areas of the law.

This type of consultation gives Crown counsel access to a wide range of viewpoints and expertise and helps ensure that prosecutorial decisions are made with knowledge of all relevant information. It is appropriate where circumstances warrant for Crown counsel to consult with Department of Justice counsel where specialized advice is required. Crown counsel should initiate the consultation process at the earliest possible stage in the proceedings to allow the consultation to be useful.

4.1. Consultation process

All consultation with the Department of Justice Headquarters normally should be routed, at least initially, through PPSC Headquarters counsel, who provide assistance on complex or novel prosecution issues. Crown counsel can identify the appropriate PPSC Headquarters counsel contact by reviewing the subject-matter experts on the PPSC intranet. If no subject-matter expert exists for the issue at hand, Crown counsel should contact their PPSC Headquarters counsel regional contact. PPSC Headquarters counsel will then contact subject-matter experts within the Department of Justice as needed.

4.2. The Human Rights Law Section

Crown counsel conducting prosecutions which raise human rights issues involving the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Canadian Human Rights Act, the Canadian Bill of Rights, or international human rights law may receive assistance from the Human Rights Law Section (HRLS).

4.3. The Constitutional, Administrative and International Law Section

When prosecutions raise legal issues in the areas of constitutional law and the law relating to federal government institutions, such as the extent and level of delegation of authority and due process, Constitutional, Administrative and International Law Section (CAILS) counsel may assist Crown counsel.

4.4. The Information Law and Privacy Section

Crown counsel may wish to consult the Information Law and Privacy Section (ILAP) when litigation questions arise regarding disclosure of personal information in the Crown's possession that may be restricted under the Privacy Act or when other issues relating to the Access to Information Act and the protection of privacy under Privacy Act arise.⁸

4.5. The Criminal Law Policy Section

The Criminal Law Policy Section (CLPS) develops and implements policies related to the Criminal Code and other federal statutes involving the criminal law. In cases involving a constitutional challenge to a provision of the Criminal Code or other federal legislation, the CLPS can explain why the provision was adopted in its current form and assist in identifying material, such as transcripts of hearings before Parliamentary Committees that will assist in defending the legislation.

4.6. The National Security Group

The National Security Group (NSG) is the central coordinating office within the Department of Justice for s. 38 of the Canada Evidence Act, providing advice, receiving s. 38 CEA notices, and making recommendations to the Attorney General of Canada as to whether to consent to the disclosure of sensitive information in criminal proceedings. NSG counsel also provide legal advice on security and information-related issues under the Security of Information Act, the Security Offences Act, and the Anti-terrorism Act in general. The NSG must be consulted on issues relating to s. 38 notices.⁹

4.7. The Criminal Litigation Division

The Criminal Litigation Division within the Department of Justice's Litigation Branch conducts criminal litigation on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada. One of its primary functions is the conduct of extradition and mutual legal assistance proceedings.¹⁰ Additionally, because the Attorney General defends the constitutionality of federal legislation, either the Attorney General or the DPP may seek to intervene in provincial Criminal Code prosecutions.

⁸ Such issues may arise, for example, in cases involving complainants and sexual assault charges.

⁹ See also the PPSC Deskbook directive "4.2 Protecting Confidential Information under Section 38 of the Canada Evidence Act" and the PPSC Deskbook guideline "5.1 National Security".

¹⁰ Counsel in the Criminal Litigation Division litigate these matters as agents of the Attorney General of Canada.

4.8. The Department of Justice Legal Service Units

Counsel in the Department's Legal Service Units have specialized subject-matter expertise and can assist PPSC counsel on technical or interpretation issues regarding the regulation or statutes in their respective areas of expertise.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.1 INDEPENDENCE AND ACCOUNTABILITY IN DECISION-MAKING

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. STATEMENT OF POLICY	3
3. ACCOUNTABILITY	4
4. DELEGATION OF DECISION-MAKING POWER	5
5. CONSULTATION.....	5

1. INTRODUCTION

The principle of the independence of the Attorney General is firmly entrenched in our legal system, widely respected, and carefully safeguarded. Perhaps less well understood is the operation of the independence principle in the day-to-day decision-making of individual Crown counsel. Crown counsel¹ exercise their independence as the representative of the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP). As such, their “independence” is a delegated independence. This independence is institutional, rather than personal, and is aimed at safeguarding the independence of the Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC). Crown counsel are obliged to make decisions in accordance with the directives of the Attorney General and the guidelines of the DPP,² and they act under the direction of Chief Federal Prosecutors (CFP), who are in turn responsible to the DPP and his or her Deputy DPPs.³ That said, Crown counsel also retain a degree of discretion in individual cases.⁴

Crown counsel, like the Attorney General and the DPP, are accountable for their decisions. Since the Attorney General is accountable to Parliament, the courts and the public⁵ for decisions made on his or her behalf, this means that the Attorney General may

¹ The term “Crown counsel” used in this guideline includes both in-house federal prosecutors and private sector barristers and advocates retained to act as federal prosecutors under s 7\(2\) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9 [DPP Act].

² The directives are issued in accordance with s 10\(2\) of the DPP Act, supra note 1, and the DPP guidelines are issued in accordance with s 3\(3\)\(c\) of the DPP Act (ibid). These directives and guidelines constitute the PPSC Deskbook.

³ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.6 Consultation within the Public Prosecution Service of Canada”.

⁴ Indeed some courts have indicated that policies that completely remove Crown counsel’s discretion are improper: see R v Catagas (1978), 38 CCC (2d) 296 (Man CA); R v Wood (1983), 31 CR (3d) 374 (NS Prov Mag Ct).

⁵ The Attorney General may take steps to explain decisions to the public, in order to promote public confidence in the administration of justice: see the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.9 Communications with the Media.”

issue a directive to the DPP in a particular case,⁶ though such situations would be relatively rare and any such directives must be published in the Canada Gazette in order to maintain transparency.⁷

The independence principle also does not mean that Crown counsel need not consult. Quite to the contrary, responsible prosecutorial decision-making often requires consultation with colleagues, superiors or investigators.⁸ Indeed prosecutorial discretion is not exercised in a vacuum. The principle of independence means that, subject to s. 10\(1\) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act (DPP Act), the DPP does not take instructions as to how to exercise discretion in prosecution matters. Similarly, Crown counsel do not take instructions as to how to proceed, except from those in the line of authority leading ultimately to the Attorney General, including, the CFP, the Deputy DPPs, and the DPP who, for the purpose of performing the powers, duties and functions under s. 3\(3\) of the DPP Act, is the Deputy Attorney General.⁹

The interaction of the principles of independence, accountability and consultation mean that what is protected is a system of prosecutorial decision-making in which the prosecutor is an integral component. A large measure of independence is conferred on Crown counsel, but absolute discretion is not.

2. STATEMENT OF POLICY

Crown counsel are obliged to exercise independent judgment in making decisions. Because their decision-making powers are delegated to them by the DPP, whose own powers, duties and functions to act under and on behalf of the Attorney General are delegated under the DPP Act,¹⁰ Crown counsel are accountable for their decisions, and they must consult where required. Prosecutorial independence is not a license to do as one wishes, but to act as the Attorney General and the DPP should act.¹¹

⁶ See DPP Act, supra note 1, s 10 \(1\).

⁷ See the discussion in Controlling Criminal Prosecutions: The Attorney General and the Crown Prosecutor, Working Paper 62 (Ottawa: Law Reform Commission of Canada, 1990) at 16-17, 53-59.

⁸ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.6 Consultation within the Public Prosecution Service of Canada”, supra note 3.

⁹ See DPP Act, supra note 1, s 3\(4\): Crown counsel act on behalf of the DPP who in turn, as the Deputy Attorney General, acts on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada with respect to all powers, duties and functions of the latter set out in the Criminal Code except for those that must be exercised by the Attorney General personally.

¹⁰ See DPP Act, supra note 1, s 3\(3\).

¹¹ See Bruce A. MacFarlane, “Sunlight and Disinfectants: Prosecutorial Accountability and Independence through Public Transparency” (2001) 45 Criminal Law Quarterly 272 at 279: “[The] independence of the Attorney General to be free, in the decision-making process, from the partisan political pressures of the day...does not mean that an individual Crown attorney, in the discharge of his or her responsibilities as agent of the Attorney General, is free to do whatever he or she wishes, irrespective of the law, practice or the general guidelines or policies of the Attorney General.”

3. ACCOUNTABILITY

"Prosecutorial independence" is that of the DPP who is accountable to the courts and to the public for the federal prosecution function as explained below. Individual prosecutors are, in turn, accountable to their CFP, the Deputy DPPs and the DPP. Additionally, while the DPP Act creates the Office of the DPP,¹² the Attorney General of Canada remains the chief law officer of the Crown and is ultimately accountable to Parliament, the courts and the public for the federal prosecution function. The DPP's role is distinct from that of the Attorney General; it entails closer oversight and more frequent involvement in files.

This form of public accountability is crucial to a system of open justice, and Crown counsel must be cognizant of this fact. This explains the need to ensure that the DPP is well-briefed in order to fulfill his or her statutory responsibility to inform the Attorney General of prosecutions and interventions that raise important questions of general interest. This duty to inform also allows the Attorney General to provide answers to questions that may be posed in Parliament. The principle of public accountability is clearest in situations where Parliament has required that some prosecutorial decisions be made by the Attorney General (or Deputy Attorney General) personally; an example is the decision to lay war crimes/crimes against humanity charges under s. 9\(3\) of the Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act.¹³

An equally important form of accountability is internal accountability. All Crown counsel are accountable to their superiors for decisions taken.¹⁴ The PPSC is organized to foster principled, competent and responsible decision-making. One of the goals of the DPP's guidelines is to assist counsel in making the numerous difficult decisions which arise in criminal litigation. In so doing, they set objective standards against which prosecutorial conduct may be measured.

Individual prosecutors are also subject to a form of public accountability through their membership in provincial law societies.¹⁵ Another form of public accountability occurs through judicial review of a prosecutor's actions, for example, through the abuse of process doctrine, or judicial control of actions which may prejudice fair trial interests, such as inflammatory jury addresses. Accountability is also enhanced because of the availability to the public of the Attorney General's directives and the DPP's guidelines, ¹² The Office of the DPP is known under the applied name of the "Public Prosecution Service of Canada" (PPSC).

¹³ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.5 Delegated Decision-Making."

¹⁴ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.6 Consultation within the Public Prosecution Service of Canada", supra note 3; see generally the discussion in D. Stuart, "Prosecutorial Accountability in Canada," in P. Stenning, Accountability in Criminal Justice (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1995) at 336-339.

¹⁵ See e.g. Krieger v Law Society of Alberta, 2002 SCC 65 (CanLII), [2002] 3 SCR 372. For example, law societies have at least some jurisdiction to deal with actions of a prosecutor qua lawyer, such as the duty not to engage in dishonourable conduct; see J.L.J. Edwards, "The Office of Attorney General - New Levels of Public Expectations and Accountability" Accountability in Criminal Justice, note 6 at 299-304.

since the public is able to assess the actions of Crown counsel against the standards set out in the directives and guidelines. Finally, recognition of the importance of public accountability imposes a duty on Crown counsel in certain circumstances to communicate the reasons for certain decisions to the public through the media.¹⁶

4. DELEGATION OF DECISION-MAKING POWER

As a practical matter, Crown counsel exercise most of the functions assigned by the Criminal Code to the Attorney General. The DPP exercises delegated powers, duties and functions on behalf of the Attorney General by virtue of the DPP Act and, in turn, has delegated many of these powers¹⁷ to Crown counsel, but retains a discretion to direct that a particular decision be made. Likewise, the Attorney General may direct that a particular decision be made in a specific prosecution under s. 10\(1\) of the DPP Act. Transparency is assured by making the Attorney General's action a matter of public record for such a directive must be in writing and published in the Canada Gazette.¹⁸

Sections 14 and 15 of the DPP Act recognize the power of the Attorney General both to intervene in criminal proceedings and to assume conduct of particular prosecutions. Where the Attorney General gives notice to the DPP that he or she intends to assume conduct of a prosecution, prosecutorial independence is safeguarded by the DPP Act which requires publication of the notice of intent in the Canada Gazette, making the Attorney General's action a matter of public record.¹⁹

5. CONSULTATION²⁰

Independence of the prosecution service from government does not mean that Crown counsel cannot consult others. They may, and in some cases shall, consult others for the purpose of determining whether it is in the public interest to prosecute a case. Examples of persons with whom counsel can, and in some circumstance should, consult include police officers or other investigators,²¹ victims of crime,²² and government departments or agencies²³.

¹⁶ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.9 Communications with the Media", supra note 5.

¹⁷ As well as duties and functions under s 9\(1\) of the DPP Act, supra note 1.

¹⁸ See DPP Act, supra note 1, s 10\(1\).

¹⁹ Note that s 3\(8\) of the DPP Act, supra note 1, specifies that the DPP initiates and conducts, on behalf of the Crown, prosecutions with respect to offences under the Canada Elections Act.

²⁰ For a more thorough discussion on consultation, see the guideline "2.6 Consultation within the Public Prosecution Service of Canada", supra note 3.

²¹ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.7 Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies".

²² See the PPSC Deskbook directive "5.6 Victims of Crime".

²³ See the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.3 Consultation within Government".

Consultation ensures that Crown counsel have access to a wide range of viewpoints and information so that their decisions are made with full knowledge of all the circumstances. This is particularly useful in regulatory prosecutions. However, prosecutorial independence means that government departments and police officers cannot dictate to Crown counsel that a certain course of action be followed.

Consultation within the PPSC rests on a somewhat different footing. The DPP exercises delegated powers, duties and functions on behalf of the Attorney General.²⁴ In turn, the DPP has delegated authority to Crown counsel under s. 9 of the DPP Act. Because Crown counsel, as a practical matter, act in the DPP's name, it is important that consultation be undertaken internally to ensure that the DPP is made aware of potential problems, and, in some cases, to direct that a particular course of action be undertaken. This is necessary to ensure consistent decision-making, and that the DPP approve of decisions for which he or she is publicly accountable.²⁵ This also allows the DPP to fulfill his statutory obligation under s. 13 of the DPP Act²⁶ to inform the Attorney General of prosecutions and interventions that raise important questions of general interest.²⁷

²⁴ See DPP Act, supra note 1, s 3\(3\).

²⁵ DPP Act, supra note 1, s 16 requires the DPP to provide an annual report to the Attorney General for tabling in Parliament.

²⁶ See the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.2 Duty to Inform the Attorney General under Section 13 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act."

²⁷ See DPP Act, supra note 1, s 13.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.2 DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF CROWN COUNSEL

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised September 12, 2023

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. THE CONDUCT OF CRIMINAL LITIGATION.....	2
3. THE DUTY TO BE FAIR AND MAINTAIN PUBLIC CONFIDENCE.....	4
3.1. The duty to educate oneself on an ongoing basis	6
3.2. The duty to adopt proper language and conduct.....	6
4. THE DUTY TO MAINTAIN OBJECTIVITY.....	7
5. THE DUTY TO ACT WITH INTEGRITY AND DIGNITY	8
6. THE DUTY TO MENTOR AND GUIDE	8
7. THE DUTY TO BE INDEPENDENT FROM THE JUDICIARY	9
8. THE DUTY TO AVOID CONFLICT OF INTEREST.....	9

1. INTRODUCTION

This guideline describes the duties and responsibilities of Crown counsel¹ in carrying out their delegated functions pursuant to sections 3(3) and 9(1) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act.

2. THE CONDUCT OF CRIMINAL LITIGATION

Crown counsel are vested with substantial discretionary powers² delegated by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP).³ These discretionary powers must be exercised with the public interest in mind.⁴

¹ The terms “Crown counsel” and “prosecutor,” as used throughout the PPSC Deskbook and are meant to refer to employed federal prosecutors and private sector agents retained to act as federal prosecutors pursuant to s. 7(2) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9 [DPP Act]. The terms also refer to paralegals and articling students when they exercise duties and functions delegated to them by the DPP under ss. 3(3) and 9(1) of the DPP Act.

² R v Cook, [1997] 1 SCR 1113 at para 19.

³ See Guideline 3.5 “Delegated Decision-Making” and the delegation of the Director to federal prosecutors pursuant to subsection 9(1) of the DPP Act: Delegation to Federal Prosecutors and Persons Acting as Federal Prosecutors.

⁴ Skogman v The Queen, [1984] 2 SCR 93.

As quasi ministers of justice, Crown counsel's primary interest is not to secure a conviction, rather, it is to pursue justice.⁵ In doing so, Crown counsel represent the public interest. They are not lawyers for the police, the victims, or the accused. The Supreme Court of Canada articulated Crown counsel's role, in the context of a criminal prosecution, in its landmark decision in Boucher:

It cannot be over-emphasized that the purpose of a criminal prosecution is not to obtain a conviction, it is to lay before a jury what the Crown considers to be credible evidence relevant to what is alleged to be a crime. Counsel have a duty to see that all available legal proof of the facts is presented: it should be done firmly and pressed to its legitimate strength, but it must also be done fairly. The role of the prosecutor excludes any notion of winning or losing.⁶

Crown counsel are subject to ethical obligations that differ from those of other litigants.⁷ Fairness, moderation, and dignity should always characterize Crown counsel's conduct during litigation.⁸ At the same time, thorough and vigorous advocacy are important qualities in Crown counsel. The Supreme Court affirmed that vigorous Crown advocacy is a critical element of Canada's criminal law mechanism.⁹ However, Crown counsel should not consider litigation as a personal contest of skill or professional pre-eminence.

Courts generally do not interfere with Crown counsel's exercise of discretion unless it has been exercised for an oblique motive, offends the right to a fair trial, or otherwise amounts to an abuse of process.¹⁰ At all times Crown counsel must exercise their discretion in good faith and in accordance with the highest of ethical standards. In Regan, the Supreme Court of Canada listed objectivity, independence, and lack of animus as three major duties of a minister of justice.¹¹ These duties attach to Crown counsel at all times, and in all dealings with an accused person, both before and after charges are laid. They also attach to Crown counsel's dealings with other justice system participants, including victims and witnesses.

⁵ Boucher v The Queen, [1955] SCR 16 at 23-24.

⁶ Boucher v The Queen, [1955] SCR 16 at 23-24.

⁷ For a foundational discussion of the role of the prosecutor, see Robert Frater, Prosecutorial Misconduct, 2nd ed (Toronto: Thomson Reuters, 2017), ch 1 "The Role of the Prosecutor"; Michel Proulx and David Layton, Ethics and Canadian Criminal Law (Toronto: Irwin Law, 2011), ch 12 "The Prosecutor"; Proulx v Quebec, 2001 SCC 66; Re Skogman v The Queen, [1984] 2 SCR 93 at 109, which held that Crown counsel are in a different position from the ordinary litigant, for they represent the public interest in the community at large; R v McNeil, 2009 SCC 3 at para 49: where the Supreme Court held: "The Crown is not an ordinary litigant. As a minister of justice, the Crown's undivided loyalty is to the proper administration of justice"; and Marc Rosenberg, "The Attorney General and the Prosecution Function in the Twenty-First Century" (2009) 43:2 Queen's LJ 813.

⁸ Ibid at paras 151-158; See Rule 5.1-3 of the Federation of Law Societies of Canada Model Code of Professional Conduct. Prosecutors should also refer to their own law society's rules of professional conduct.

⁹ R v Cook, [1997] 1 SCR 1113 at para 21.

¹⁰ R v Nixon, 2011 SCC 34; R v Power, [1994] 1 SCR 601; Krieger v Law Society of Alberta, 2002 SCC 65; Miazga v Kvello Estate, 2009 SCC 51 at paras 6-7; R v Anderson, 2014 SCC 41.

¹¹ R v Regan, 2002 SCC 12 at paras 155-156.

The duties also attach to Crown counsel's exercise of prosecutorial discretion when decisions are made leading up to trial. For example, Crown counsel exercise discretion when they decide whether to oppose bail or consent to release, proceed with the case, prefer an indictment, or formulate a resolution position. Every discretionary decision has an impact on both the accused and the administration of justice.

While Crown counsel have many responsibilities, the responsibilities outlined below are among the most important.

3. THE DUTY TO BE FAIR AND MAINTAIN PUBLIC CONFIDENCE

Public confidence in the administration of justice is bolstered by a system where Crown counsel are not only strong and effective advocates, but also ministers of justice, with a duty to ensure the justice system operates fairly for all. Crown counsel must recognize that one can intend to act fairly while unintentionally leaving an impression of secrecy, bias, or unfairness. Crown counsel have a duty not only to act fairly, but also to ensure that their conduct is seen to be fair.¹²

As part of this duty, Crown counsel must consider whether systemic and background factors or systemic racism contributed to bringing an accused to court. Systemic and background factors may also have contributed to certain victims being over-represented as victims of crime. Racism, historical mistreatment, lower socio-economic status, mental illness, substance use disorders, and discrimination¹³ are all factors that increase the likelihood of a person entering the criminal justice system, either as an accused or a victim. Crown counsel must turn their mind to these realities, because these factors may bear on decisions made throughout the course of a prosecution.

Crown counsel must recognize that the exercise of prosecutorial discretion has an impact on an accused, and that impact will be different on each individual accused. For example, decisions can have a more onerous and disproportionate impact on vulnerable and marginalized populations. Therefore, Crown counsel must ensure that their decisions do not disproportionately impact someone due to their vulnerability.¹⁴ This means that applying the same rules, measures, or standards to every accused may not always be appropriate. Successfully eliminating the unfair, unequal, or discriminatory impact of prosecutorial decisions requires Crown counsel to actively examine all of their choices, in the context of the material placed before them by investigative agencies and information provided by the accused.

¹² For Crown counsel's duties and obligations with respect to allegations of misconduct by persons involved in the investigation of charges, see Guideline 2.13 "Allegations of Misconduct by Persons Involved in the Investigation of Charges."

¹³ Discrimination is often based on different factors. Intersectional factors are the various facets of a person's social identity including, but not limited to: age, disability, economic status, education, employment, ethnicity, family status, gender, geography, health, indigeneity, language, race, religion, sex, sexual orientation, and social status. While there is no exhaustive list of these factors, legislation identifies some of the prohibited grounds for discrimination. This includes the following prohibited grounds of discrimination: race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, marital status, family status, genetic characteristics, disability or conviction for an offence for which a pardon has been granted or in respect of which a record suspension has been ordered. Section 15 of the Charter protects the right to equality and lists the following prohibited grounds of discrimination: race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability. This list is not closed. Courts have identified additional prohibited grounds analogous to those listed.

Crown counsel also fulfill the duty to be fair by:

- Making disclosure in accordance with the law;¹⁵
- Bringing all relevant cases and authorities known to counsel to the attention of the court, even if they are contrary to the Crown's position;
- Not misleading the court;
- Stating the law accurately;
- Not accepting a plea or alternative measures, in circumstances where there is no reasonable prospect of conviction;
- Being conscious of the factors that can lead to wrongful convictions, for example false confessions or mistaken eyewitness identification;
- Not expressing personal opinions on the evidence, including the credibility of witnesses or the guilt or innocence of the accused, in court or in public. Such expressions of opinion are improper;¹⁶
- Being accurate and dispassionate in presenting evidence or addressing the jury. This includes abstaining from inflammatory rhetoric, demeaning commentary, or sarcasm;
- Not relying on, nor referring to, evidence that has not been admitted at trial, even if that evidence is available but the Crown chose not to adduce it;
- Not discriminating on any prohibited basis;¹⁷

¹⁴ In R v Gladue, [1999] 1 SCR 688 and R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 79, for example, the Supreme Court of Canada acknowledged that measures which appear to be neutral, such as a type of sentence or release conditions, may have a disproportionate impact on certain individuals or group of individuals.

¹⁵ See Guideline 2.5 "Principles of Disclosure"; R v Stinchcombe, [1991] 3 SCR 326 at 338-339: "The Crown is under a duty at common law to disclose to the defence all material evidence, whether favourable to the accused or not. Transgressions with respect to this duty constitute a very serious breach of legal ethics." See also R v McNeil, 2009 SCC 3, regarding disclosure of police misconduct information and the Crown's duty to make reasonable inquiries.

¹⁶ Boucher v The Queen, [1955] SCR 16 at 31; R v Charest, (1990) 57 CCC (3d) 312 (QCCA); R v Regan, 2002 SCC 12 at para 65; R v Boudreau, 2012 ONCA 830 at para 16.

¹⁷ For more information on prohibited grounds of discrimination, see footnote 13.

- Making decisions on files in a timely fashion, in particular when the decisions impact the accused's incarceration, public safety, or confidence in the administration of justice;
- Asking relevant and proper questions during the examination of a witness;
- Not asking questions designed to embarrass, insult, abuse, belittle, attack, or demean the witness. Cross-examination can be skillful and probing, yet still show respect for the witness.¹⁸ The law distinguishes between a cross-examination that is "persistent and exhaustive," which is proper, and a cross-examination that is "abusive";¹⁹
- Acting with civility and respect to all parties whether inside or outside the courtroom;²⁰
- Respecting defence counsel,²¹ the accused, and the proceedings while vigorously asserting the Crown's position, and not publicly and improperly criticizing defence counsel or the defence strategy;
- Remaining open to theories put forward by the defence;
- Respecting the court and judicial decisions, and not publicly disparaging judgments, including jury verdicts; and
- Avoiding engagement in "judge shopping".²²

3.1. The duty to educate oneself on an ongoing basis

The proper exercise of prosecutorial discretion requires Crown counsel to educate themselves on an ongoing basis, not only on the law, but also about the ethical duties of their office and the social realities of the communities in which they prosecute. This may be done through continuing legal education, self-study, or other training.

3.2. The duty to adopt proper language and conduct

Crown counsel must use language that is free of bias, stigmatization, and negative attitudes or beliefs. Crown counsel must recognize that terminology used to label victims of crime, accused persons, or witnesses may have a profound impact. This includes unfairness or further traumatization to the victim (if there is one). Using derogatory or biased language may also cause a mistrial, loss of confidence in the prosecution service, and the expenditure of additional resources.

¹⁸ R v Robinson, (2001) 153 CCC (3d) 398 (ONCA).

¹⁹ R v Lowe, 2009 BCCA 338 at para 51.

²⁰ Groia v Law Society of Upper Canada, 2018 SCC 27 at para 2.

²¹ R v Mallory, 2007 ONCA 46 at paras 330-345.

²² R v Regan, 2002 SCC 12 at paras 59-61.

Crown counsel must not “engage in inflammatory rhetoric, demeaning commentary or sarcasm, or legally impermissible submissions”.²³ Such conduct undermines trial fairness. While Crown counsel may argue a case forcefully, such behavior must never be used under any circumstances.²⁴ A comment may be determined inappropriate in context with the nature of the comment, the number of times the comment was made, the specific language used, or the overall tone of Crown counsel’s address. Crown counsel are held to a higher standard than counsel for the accused.

4. THE DUTY TO MAINTAIN OBJECTIVITY

Crown counsel fulfill this duty by:

- Being aware of the dangers of tunnel vision, and taking active steps to guard against it, including seeking out the perspectives of other colleagues who may provide a different perspective;
- Ensuring evidence is reviewed in an objective, rigorous, and thorough manner throughout the proceedings;²⁵
- Remaining objective when providing advice to investigators at the pre-charge stage, and ensuring that pre-charge involvement does not impact Crown counsel’s ability to remain objective at the prosecution stage. Active steps, including involving a “fresh eyes” perspective, must be taken to ensure the prosecution is free from actual or perceived biases.²⁶ In some cases, it may not be appropriate for the advisory Crown to also be the prosecuting Crown;
- Taking active steps to set aside their own biases, and identifying biases that may have impacted the investigation. Crown counsel must guard against all forms of conscious and unconscious biases that may perpetuate historical and systemic discrimination. Bias or discrimination can be based on a number of identity factors including race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, marital status, family status, genetic characteristics, disability, socio-economic status, or political association;²⁷
- Making all necessary inquiries regarding potentially relevant evidence;²⁸

²³ See, e.g., R v Mallory, 2007 ONCA 46 at para 340.

²⁴ For a thorough discussion of inflammatory Crown comments see Robert Frater, Prosecutorial Misconduct, 2nd ed (Toronto: Thomson Reuters, 2017), ch 7 “Improper Jury Addresses”; R v Munroe, (1995) 96 CCC (3d) 431 (ONCA). See also R v Mallory, 2007 ONCA 46 at paras 330-345; R v Boudreau, 2012 ONCA 830 at para 16; and R v Clyde, 2021 ONCA 810 at paras 34-35, 70-77.

²⁵ See Directive 2.4 “Prevention of Wrongful Convictions.” See also R v Ahluwalia, (2000) 149 CCC (3d) 193 (ONCA); R v McNeil, 2009 SCC 3 at paras 48-51.

²⁶ R v Regan, 2002 SCC 12 (victim interviews); R v Trang, [2002] 7 WWR 157 (ABQB) (pre-charge advisory role).

²⁷ R v Le, 2019 SCC 34 at paras 76 and following.

²⁸ R v Ahluwalia, (2000) 149 CCC (3d) 193 (ONCA) at paras 71-72; R v McNeil, 2009 SCC 3 at paras 13, 49-51.

- Never permitting personal interests or any political considerations to interfere with the proper exercise of prosecutorial discretion; and
- Not exceeding the scope of appropriate remarks, for example elevating the role of Crown counsel in the eyes of the jury to the custodian of the public interest.²⁹

5. THE DUTY TO ACT WITH INTEGRITY AND DIGNITY

Crown counsel fulfill this duty by:

- Complying with their bar association's applicable rules of ethics;
- Complying with the PPSC's Code of Conduct, Missions and Values, and the PPSC Deskbook;
- Exercising careful judgment in presenting the case for the Crown throughout the course of a prosecution.
- Conducting themselves with civility;³⁰
- Not rushing to judgment in exercising prosecutorial discretion;
- Ensuring that all relevant information is available in order to properly exercise prosecutorial discretion. If relevant information is not available, Crown counsel must make requests to the investigative agency so that they may provide or gather that information;
- Remaining independent of the investigating agency, the victim and the witness(es);
- Adequately preparing for each case; and
- Acting with moderation, fairness, and impartiality.

6. THE DUTY TO MENTOR AND GUIDE

Mentorship is essential to the legal profession. Mentoring relationships facilitate the passing on of skills, knowledge, and wisdom developed through experience. Mentoring not only provides substantive learning opportunities, but can also help a lawyer develop judgement, allowing them to exercise their discretion reasonably, and with confidence. Experienced Crown counsel should mentor junior Crown counsel when they are able to do so.

²⁹ R v Patrick, 2007 CanLII 11724 (ONSC) at paras 3-7; R v McLennan, 2016 ONCA 732 at paras 61-62.

³⁰ See R v Felderhof, (2003) 180 CCC (3d) 498 (ONCA) at para 83; Groia v Law Society of Upper Canada, 2018 SCC 27.

7. THE DUTY TO BE INDEPENDENT FROM THE JUDICIARY

Crown counsel fulfill this duty by:

- Not discussing an ongoing case with the presiding judge, or any sitting judge, without the participation of defence counsel (or an accused representing themselves), unless there is a legal justification for such ex parte discussions;³¹
- Not dealing with matters in chambers that should properly be dealt with in open court;
- Avoiding personal or private discussions with a judge in chambers or outside the court while presenting a case before that judge;
- Refraining from appearing before a judge on a contentious matter when a personal connection exists between Crown counsel and the judge that would compromise, or appear to compromise, the independent function of either role; and
- Refraining from socializing with a judge outside of court before the case is fully decided.

8. THE DUTY TO AVOID CONFLICT OF INTEREST

The special ethical obligations on Crown counsel, as quasi ministers of justice, demand the highest standards of honesty and integrity. Crown counsel's conduct should garner the public's confidence and trust. Thus, it is important that Crown counsel avoid actual, perceived, or potential conflicts of interest.³²

Crown counsel should not participate in any prosecution involving an accused, a victim, a material witness who is a relative or friend, or anyone else in respect of whom there is an objectively reasonable perception of conflict of interest. If the matter is already before the court when the conflict becomes apparent, Crown counsel should notify defence counsel and the court and disqualify themselves from the case.

³¹ For example, in an application under section 37 of the Canada Evidence Act or in addressing common law informer privilege.

³² In addition to obligations set out by their respective law societies, Crown counsel must abide by those in the PPSC Code of Conduct which apply to their activities outside their work as well as those which pertain to conflict of interest and conflict of duties.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.3 DECISION TO PROSECUTE

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT SECTION 3(3)(c)

Revised March 7, 2023

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. OVERVIEW	3
2. PREVENTION OF WRONGFUL CONVICTIONS.....	4
3. DUTY TO PRESENT A FAIR, CLEAR, AND COMPREHENSIBLE CASE.....	4
4. THE DECISION TO PROSECUTE	5
4.1 Reasonable Prospect of Conviction	5
4.1.1 Application of the Standard	6
4.1.2 Irrelevant Factors	7
4.1.3 Duty to Protect Privileged Information.....	7
4.2 Public Interest	8
4.2.1 Factors to Consider	8
a) Nature and Gravity of the Alleged Offence	8
b) Circumstances of the Accused	10
c) Circumstances and Views of the Victim	12
d) Confidence in the Administration of Justice	13
e) Harm to the Community	14
f) Alternatives to Prosecution	15
4.2.2 Irrelevant Factors	16
4.2.3 Duty to Protect Private or Privileged Information	16
5. CONSULTATION	17
6. DOCUMENTING AND COMMUNICATING DECISION-MAKING	18
7. PROVIDING ADVICE TO INVESTIGATIVE AGENCIES ON THE DECISION TO PROSECUTE	18
8. DELEGATED PROVINCIAL / TERRITORIAL PROSECUTIONS.....	19

1. OVERVIEW

Crown counsel must only proceed with prosecutions¹ where two conditions are met:

- (1) There is a reasonable prospect of conviction; and
- (2) The prosecution is in the public interest.

The decision to prosecute is among the most important exercises of prosecutorial discretion undertaken by Crown counsel. The decision can be a difficult one to make, and must be made on a principled basis. Crown counsel must carefully balance the interests of the public, the victim(s) (if any), and the accused. Communities also rely upon and expect Crown counsel to make decisions in a manner that promotes confidence in the administration of justice.

Crown counsel hold a quasi-judicial role as a minister of justice.² This means that the Crown does not win or lose, nor does the Crown seek a conviction at all costs. At the same time, Crown counsel must be strong and effective advocates. The adversarial process is an important part of the Canadian judicial system. Therefore, it is permissible for Crown counsel to vigorously pursue a legitimate result to the best of their ability. Public confidence in the administration of justice is bolstered when Crown counsel effectively lay before a trier of fact credible evidence relevant to an alleged crime, firmly and to its legitimate strength, but fairly. At all times, Crown counsel must act fairly, independently, objectively, and without negative or positive animus towards the accused or victim(s).³

Crown counsel must also be diligent in all decision-making activities to recognize existing personal conscious and unconscious biases, institutional biases, and stereotypes. Both becoming aware of these biases, and taking active steps to set them aside, are necessary to ensure that the decision to prosecute analysis does not perpetuate any form of systemic discrimination or racism.

Crown counsel must ensure that their assessment of the evidence gathered by the investigating authority, the credibility of the witnesses, the defences brought forth by the accused, or any other relevant fact, is free from bias.

¹ See s. 2 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9, s 121 [DPP Act] for the definition of “prosecution”: A prosecution means “a proceeding respecting any offence, the prosecution — or prospective prosecution — of which is under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General, and any appeal related to such a prosecution or proceeding.”; Director of Public Prosecutions Act s 3(8): “The Director conducts prosecutions on behalf of the Crown with respect to any offences under the Canada Elections Act, as well as any appeal or other proceeding related to such a prosecution.”

² Miazga v Kvello Estate, 2009 SCC 51 at para 47. See also Boucher v The Queen, [1955] SCR 16 at 23-24. See the PPSC Deskbook Guideline 2.1 “Independence and Accountability in Decision-Making”.

³ Krieger v Law Society of Alberta, 2002 SCC 65 at paras 3, 29-30, 32, 48; and R v Regan, 2002 SCC 12 at paras 43, 70, LeBel J and paras 156-57, Binnie J dissenting but not on this point. In the PPSC Deskbook, the use of the term “accused” includes persons who have not been formally charged, but Crown counsel must make the decision to prosecute.

For example, Crown counsel must be aware of the existence of different perspectives. Crown counsel should make reasonable efforts to consult with colleagues who have different backgrounds or life experiences to obtain another perspective in assessing the decision to prosecute.

2. PREVENTION OF WRONGFUL CONVICTIONS

Wrongful convictions result in a miscarriage of justice, and significant harm to the convicted person. When the criminal justice system fails, the human cost can be substantial, and public confidence in the justice system is lost. Therefore, Crown counsel must always be scrupulous in their role as ministers of justice to prevent wrongful convictions and to zealously guard against it.

Crown counsel must be mindful of the “environmental” or “predisposing circumstances” that have been identified as fostering wrongful convictions. These circumstances include:

- Tunnel vision (potentially caused by unconscious bias or close contact between Crown counsel, investigative agencies, or victims);⁴
- Decisions influenced by biases, including racial bias, stereotypes, or prejudices of any kind;
- Public pressure to convict in high-profile cases;
- Inadequate or misinterpreted evidence;
- Eyewitness identification error;
- False confessions;
- An unpopular accused;
- A legal environment or culture which focuses on winning; and
- The presence of what has been labelled “noble cause corruption,” or the belief that the end justifies the means.

3. DUTY TO PRESENT A FAIR, CLEAR, AND COMPREHENSIBLE CASE

Crown counsel should be mindful of the principle of moderation in the use of criminal enforcement powers, the accused’s constitutional right to have a trial within a reasonable time, and the appropriate use of state resources. This means that Crown counsel must structure their case in a manner that allows the trier of fact to understand and digest the evidence effectively and efficiently.

⁴ The concept of “tunnel vision” is discussed extensively in: Canada, Justice Canada, The Path to Justice: Preventing Wrongful Convictions (Ottawa: Federal/Provincial/Territorial Heads of Prosecutions, Subcommittee on the Prevention of Wrongful Convictions, 2011). See also PPSC Deskbook Directive 2.4 “Prevention of Wrongful Convictions”.

The practice of overcharging is not appropriate, whether it is through the duplication of counts, the laying of additional or heightened charges that are marginal, or laying charges where the evidence barely meets the directed verdict threshold. Overcharging unduly lengthens and complicates a trial.⁵ Charges must always be tailored to focus on the key evidence and the key issues relevant in the context of the individual case.

Crown counsel must carefully consider whether the public interest would be better served by declining to prosecute marginal charges or deciding not to pursue them once the evidence at trial is complete.

4. THE DECISION TO PROSECUTE

As noted earlier, a prosecution should not be undertaken unless there is a reasonable prospect of conviction and the prosecution would best serve the public interest.⁶ The test applies to each individual accused, and every charge on the information or indictment.

If the available evidence does not meet the reasonable prospect of conviction standard, the decision to prosecute threshold is not met, and the prosecution should not proceed.⁷ If charges have been laid, those charges should be withdrawn or a stay of proceedings entered. Crown counsel must continue to consider the decision to prosecute criteria throughout all stages of the prosecution, until the exhaustion of all appeals. It is particularly important for Crown counsel to reconsider the criteria when new and credible information comes to light, including from the accused.

4.1 Reasonable Prospect of Conviction

A reasonable prospect of conviction is a standard higher than a bare prima facie case. It requires more than sufficient evidence whereby a reasonable jury, properly instructed, could return a verdict of guilty.⁸ However, a reasonable prospect of conviction does not require a probability of conviction in order to proceed.⁹

⁵ See R. v Rodgeron 2015 SCC 38, at paras 40-46

⁶ See Canada, Department of Justice, Controlling Criminal Prosecutions: the Attorney General and the Crown Prosecutor, Working Paper 62 (Law Reform Commission of Canada, 1990) at 82 [Controlling Criminal Prosecutions]; Report of the Attorney General's Advisory Committee on Charge Screening, Disclosure and Resolution Discussions (Queen's Printer for Ontario, 1993) (Justice G. Arthur Martin, Chair) at 74 [Martin Report]; British Columbia, Discretion to Prosecute Inquiry, vol 1 (Queen's Printer for Ontario. Reproduced with permission, 1990) (Stephen Owen, Commissioner) at 104, 117 [Owen Report]. See also the 1951 statement of Lord Hartley Shawcross, then Attorney General of England and Wales, to the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, UK, HC Parliamentary Debates, vol 483, col 681, (29 January 1951).

⁷ See Martin Report at 51.

Crown counsel must assess the reasonable prospect of conviction standard objectively, and on the assumption that the trial will unfold before an impartial trier of fact acting in accordance with the law.

4.1.1 Application of the Standard

In applying the standard, Crown counsel must make a limited assessment of witness credibility based on the admissibility of evidence, and all available defences. In doing so, Crown counsel must be cautious about making any decision that may have the effect of usurping the ultimate role of the trier of fact.¹⁰

It bears repeating that Crown counsel must set aside their own personal or unconscious biases in assessing the credibility of witnesses, and assessing the impact of any Charter breaches. In particular, Crown counsel must consider the evidence from the perspective of the accused, imbued with the background and experiences that accompany their particular circumstances.

With this in mind, Crown counsel must consider the following:

- The evidence likely to be admissible and available at trial;
- The availability, competence, credibility, and reliability of witnesses;
- Credible evidence that may favour the accused, including evidence that supports a defence, whether apparent on the face of the Crown's case, raised by the accused, or otherwise brought to the attention of Crown counsel; and
- The impact of potential Charter breaches. This includes Charter issues that are apparent from the facts of the case or have been identified by the accused.

Crown counsel must assess whether there is a reasonable prospect of conviction as soon as practicable, following charge referral by the investigative agency or the laying of charges. As the prosecution progresses, new evidentiary information or legal issues often emerge. Crown counsel must continually assess the reasonable prospect of conviction at every stage of the proceeding.

⁸ Mezzo v The Queen, [1986] 1 SCR 802.

⁹ For a discussion of the distinction between a reasonable prospect of conviction and a probability of conviction (also known as the “51 per cent rule”) see: Controlling Criminal Prosecutions at 81-82; Martin Report at 51, 58-59, 63; Owen Report at 102-104; and John L. J. Edwards, The Attorney General, Politics and the Public Interest (London Street & Maxwell, 1984) at 413-414.

¹⁰ Miazga v Kvello Estate, 2009 SCC 51 at para 66; R v Regan, 2002 SCC 12 at paras 64, 66, 67, 70 LeBel J and at paras 159-161 Binnie J dissenting; Martin Report at 25-26, 32, 35-39, 42, 51.

4.1.2 Irrelevant Factors

The decision to prosecute must not be influenced by any of the following:

- i. Bias or discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, marital status, family status, genetic characteristics, disability, socio-economic status, or political association;¹¹
- ii. Crown counsel's personal views or feelings about the accused, victim(s), or witness(es); or
- iii. The possible effect of the decision on the personal or professional circumstances of Crown counsel, the investigative agencies, or its members, including personal or institutional gain.¹²

4.1.3 Duty to Protect Privileged Information¹³

In assessing reasonable prospect of conviction, Crown counsel must consider whether there is evidence protected by a privilege, and assess the consequences of the Crown's inability to disclose that evidence. This includes evidence that may:

- i. Reveal the identity of a confidential informant;
- ii. Breach solicitor/client privilege;
- iii. Be injurious to national security, international relations, or national defence¹⁴; or
- iv. Breach investigative privilege.¹⁵

A prosecution cannot proceed if the privileged information is essential to the case, and the reasonable prospect of conviction standard is not met without it. Similarly, if Crown counsel is required to disclose this type of information (for example, as a result of a court order), the prosecution cannot proceed in the absence of a waiver or the lifting of caveats. Therefore, Crown counsel must canvass the possibility of a waiver of the privilege or the lifting of caveats that would authorize the disclosure. If this is not possible, Crown counsel must refer the matter to their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP). The CFP may consult with the Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (DDPP) to determine if the appropriate persons

¹¹ This list is non-exhaustive. Many of these identity factors are recognized as prohibited grounds of discrimination pursuant to the Canadian Human Rights Act, RSC 1985, c H-6.

¹² Crown counsel may consider criminal and civil forfeiture in their decision, as long as it is not the sole basis for making a decision.

¹³ See PPSC Deskbook Directive 4.2 "Protecting Confidential Information under Section 38 of the Canada Evidence Act".

¹⁴ See Guideline 5.1 of the PPSC Deskbook on "National Security".

¹⁵ For example, the Crown may have a disclosure obligation in a minor case that would compromise an ongoing investigation in a more important or serious case. In this circumstance, Crown counsel would have a duty to protect that ongoing investigation. This may result in the Crown not being able to proceed with the minor case because they cannot fulfill their disclosure obligation.

have been consulted, and whether further steps need to be taken. The DDPP may also consult with the Attorney General of Canada (or their designate) if required.

4.2 Public Interest

Where there is a reasonable prospect of conviction, Crown counsel must determine whether it is in the public interest to continue with the prosecution. “No public interest, however compelling, can warrant the prosecution of an individual if there is no prospect of conviction.”¹⁶ Crown counsel must continuously consider the public interest in light of relevant and emerging developments. There must be a reassessment of the public interest at each stage of the prosecution.

If Crown counsel determines that the reasonable prospect of conviction threshold is barely reached, other public interest criteria may weigh in favour of not proceeding with the prosecution. For example, where the case against an accused is not very strong and they have personal circumstances that are mitigating, Crown counsel should consider not proceeding. These circumstances may include an accused who has been subject to systemic discrimination, has mental health challenges, or has committed the offence(s) because of a substance-use disorder.

The approach set out in this guideline directs Crown counsel to focus on the most serious cases. A serious case is one that involves violence or raises issues of public safety. In cases that are not considered serious, Crown counsel should turn their mind to the availability of alternative measures. For example, diversion must be considered in cases where a person is charged with simple possession of a controlled substance.¹⁷

4.2.1 Factors to Consider

When deciding whether to prosecute or discontinue a prosecution, Crown counsel must consider a number of public interest factors. No one factor is determinative. The significance and influence of each consideration vary from case to case, keeping in mind that the application to the public interest analysis is intended to be flexible and contextually driven.

The non-exhaustive factors are set out below.

a) Nature and Gravity of the Alleged Offence

Aggravating and mitigating circumstances will influence the public interest assessment. Generally speaking, the more serious an alleged offence is, the more likely it is that public interest considerations will weigh in favour of a prosecution. Conversely, the less serious

¹⁶ Martin Report at 76.

¹⁷ Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, SC 1996, c 19, s 10.3. See also Guideline 5.13 of the PPSC Deskbook “Prosecution of Possession of Controlled Substances Contrary to s. 4\(1\) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act”.

an alleged offence is, the more likely public interest will weigh in favour of discontinuing the prosecution, or pursuing an alternative measure.¹⁸

There are many factors that influence the nature and gravity of the alleged offence. For example:

- The harm, such as serious personal injury, or risk of harm caused by the offence.¹⁹ The public interest generally weighs in favour of proceeding with cases involving serious offences such as terrorism, the trafficking or importation of large amounts of controlled substances, the trafficking of harmful opioids such as fentanyl or carfentanyl, or personal injury offences;
- The amount and nature of the controlled substance, including the prevalence of that controlled substance in the community;
- Any other impact of the alleged offence on communities or individuals, including harm to the environment, a protected species, or the economy;
- The amount of fraud;
- The accused's alleged degree of responsibility;
- Whether the alleged offence is committed by a person acting in a position of authority, trust, or dependence;
- Whether the accused is alleged to be part of a criminal organization or a terrorist group;
- Whether the alleged offence is motivated by racism, bias, prejudice, or hate;
- Whether children or other vulnerable persons are victimized;

¹⁸ R v Beaudry, 2007 SCC 5 at para 40.

¹⁹ See also Criminal Code, RSC 1985, c C-46, ss: 264 (4) (aggravated criminal harassment); 269.01 (offences against public transportation operators); 320.22 (serious conveyance-related offences); 380.1 (aggravating factors in certain fraud and illicit financial transactions); 348.1 (home invasion type theft, robbery, forcible confinement or extortion); 718.01 (offences against children); 718.02 (offences against peace officers or other justice system participants); 718.04 (the abuse of vulnerable persons, including Indigenous females); 718.2 (crimes motivated by bias, prejudice or hate; offences against intimate partners or family members; the abuse of minors, the abuse of trust or authority, offences against health services providers; criminal organization offences; terrorism offences); 718.04 (offences against vulnerable persons); Part XXIV high-risk offender prosecutions; Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, SC 1996, c 19, s 10(2) (drug offences involving violence, weapons, proximity to schools, children under 18); Canadian Environmental Protection Act, SC 1999, c 33, s 287.1 (2) (offences involving vulnerable species or areas, impacting human health, causing irreparable damage, financially motivated, failure to mitigate, obstruction, etc.); Cannabis Act, SC 2018, c 16, s 15(2) (offences involving violence, weapons, proximity to schools); Competition Act, RSC 1985, c C-34; Immigration and Refugee Protection Act, SC 2001, c 27, s 121 (human smuggling and trafficking); WAPPRIITA, SC 1992, c 52, s 22.08(2) (offences involving vulnerable species, profit motivated, planning, non-compliance history, etc.).

- The prevalence and impact of the alleged offence in the community. For example, prosecutors must consider the over-representation of Indigenous women and girls as victims of crime; and
- Whether the offence targeted a particular individual or group of individuals such as a “justice system participant” as defined in section 2 of the Criminal Code.

Crown counsel must consider that the routine prosecution of certain non-serious offences may have a disproportionate impact on over-represented groups. One example is administration of justice offences. Administration of justice offences include failure to appear in court, failure to comply with a bail condition, or failure to comply with a probation order.²⁰ These prosecutions may contribute to a “revolving door” in the justice system. Therefore, if the offence relates to underlying social conditions such as systemic discrimination, homelessness, a substance-use disorder, or mental health challenges, Crown counsel must consider not proceeding.

However, the public interest weighs in favour of proceeding with the prosecution where the administration of justice offence is alleged to be a serious one. For example, where the offence results in harm to a victim, or the accused is charged with failure to comply with a firearm prohibition order. Other circumstances may cause Crown counsel to conclude the alleged offence is serious.

In cases that are not considered serious, Crown counsel must consider resorting to the judicial hearing regime.²¹ Judicial referral hearings are a means of dealing with administration of justice offences as an alternative to charging the accused with a new offence. Judicial referral hearings are available if the offence has not caused harm to a victim. Harm includes physical or emotional harm, property damage, or economic loss. For more on judicial referral hearings, see Guideline 3.20.

b) Circumstances of the Accused

The background and personal circumstances of an accused are relevant to determine whether it is in the public interest to prosecute.

Factors that may influence the public interest analysis include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Indigenous Identity: Crown counsel must consider the ongoing impacts of colonialism, residential schools, over-representation, and systemic discrimination

²⁰ See PPSC Deskbook Guideline 3.18 “Judicial Interim Release”. See also the Supreme Court’s decision in R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 and R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14.

²¹ Parliament’s intent in introducing the judicial referral hearing regime was to limit the number of administration of justice offences that result in prosecution, and to address delay in the justice system. See Criminal Code, RSC 1985, c C-46, s 523.1 and PPSC Deskbook Guideline 3.20 “Judicial Referral Hearings”.

in the criminal justice system when the accused is First Nations, Métis, or Inuit.²² These factors may shed light on the accused's moral culpability, and may weigh against a prosecution when considered with the totality of the relevant factors.²³

- Systemic and background factors: Crown counsel must consider the impact of systemic racism and the over-representation of certain groups in the justice system, such as members of Black, racialized, or marginalized communities. Crown counsel must also consider any relevant systemic or background factors that may have played a role in bringing the particular accused before the court.
- Underlying issues: Alternatives to prosecution must be considered when the accused's offending behaviour or prior criminal record relates to underlying issues such as homelessness, poverty, or a substance-use disorder.
- Mental health of the accused: Alternatives to prosecution must be considered when the accused's alleged criminal behaviour relates to any significant mental health illness or low cognitive ability.
- Treatment or rehabilitation: Alternatives to criminal prosecution should be considered when the accused has taken significant steps towards treatment or rehabilitation, either before or following the alleged offence.
- Age: The public interest in a prosecution may be diminished when the accused is at an advanced age or is youthful.
- Disability: The public interest in a prosecution may be diminished when the accused is living with a significant disability.
- Criminal Record: When assessing any pre-existing criminal record, Crown counsel must consider the gravity of any prior convictions, the date of those convictions, and the identity of the victim of the prior offence. The existence of a previous criminal record for recent, substantial offences supports the decision to prosecute, while a first-time offender or an offender with a very dated or less serious record invites consideration of alternatives to criminal prosecution.
- Consequences for the accused: The public interest in a prosecution is diminished when the consequences of a prosecution or conviction will be disproportionately harsh or oppressive for the accused.

²² Throughout the PPSC Deskbook, the terms First Nations, Inuit and Métis, and Indigenous will be used. Different terms are currently used in treaties, legislation, case law and other Canadian legal texts. For example, s. 718.2(e) of the Criminal Code refers to Aboriginal offenders. In R v Barton 2019 SCC 33, the Supreme Court of Canada referred to the victim as an "Indigenous woman" (para 2). The United Nations uses the term "Indigenous" in its Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. The PPSC Terminology Guide on Equity, Diversity and Inclusion recommends the use of the terms First Nations, Inuit, and Métis.

²³ R v Gladue, [1999] 1 SCR 688 and R v Ipeelee, 2012 SCC 13.

c) Circumstances and Views of the Victim²⁴

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Canadian Victims Bill of Rights²⁵ and the public interest require Crown counsel to consider victims' rights in the decision to prosecute analysis and throughout Crown counsel's conduct of criminal justice matters.

Accordingly, Crown counsel must make diligent efforts to determine and incorporate the views of the victim and/or the victim's family members, where appropriate. In all discretionary decisions involving a victim, Crown counsel must consider the following factors:

- Any serious or adverse impact upon the victim's physical well-being, or mental health.
- The personal circumstances of the victim, including age, cognitive ability, vulnerability, disability, dependence, physical health and mental health;
- An expression or strong interest in holding an accused accountable, either through a prosecution or through alternative measures; and
- A victim's choice to be involved in a prosecution, despite the hardships in doing so, as a useful process to allow the truth to be told in court and to hold the accused accountable.

If the victim is not willing to testify, Crown counsel must consider the underlying reasons along with the victim's particular circumstances. In cases of domestic or sexual violence, a victim's unwillingness to testify weighs in favour of not proceeding with a prosecution, unless there is a reasonable belief that the victim may change their mind.²⁶

Crown counsel must also assess whether there is other admissible evidence sufficient to prosecute the accused in the absence of the victim's testimony. If Crown counsel determines that a material witness warrant is appropriate, they must consult with, and seek the approval of, their CFP.

Where the alleged offence impacts a vulnerable victim, the public interest will weigh in favour of prosecution. For example, there is a strong public interest in the prosecution of cases where the victim is an Indigenous woman or girl. The Criminal Code specifically recognizes the disproportionate harm suffered by Indigenous women or girls as victims of crime.²⁷ The Criminal Code also includes specific recognition of the impact of crime on victims who are over-represented in the criminal justice system by virtue of their vulnerability on account of race, age, gender identity, poverty, substance-use disorder, mental illness, or any other similar factors.

²⁴ See PPSC Deskbook Directive "Victims of Crime".

²⁵ The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s 7, Part 1 of the Constitution Act, 1982, being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (UK), 1982, c 11; Canadian Victims Bill of Rights, SC 2015, c 13.

²⁶ The refusal of a witness to testify, who is essential to prove the case, and the corresponding decision whether to seek a material witness warrant, impacts the assessment of both reasonable prospect of conviction and public interest.

Some victims may be fearful of the litigation process, in particular testifying. Crown counsel must consider the applicability of procedural tools in the Criminal Code that may diminish any potential negative impacts on victims and witnesses.²⁸ The applicability of these procedures may influence the public interest assessment in appropriate cases.

There may be other factors that contribute to a victim's reluctance to participate in the justice process. Those factors may include the community's perception of the justice system, fear of being ostracized in the community, fear of family reprisal, or fear of losing an income-provider or family hunter. Crown prosecutors should discuss these factors with the victim and should consider them in the assessment of the public interest criteria.

While it is important to take into account the views of the victim, Crown counsel must never lose sight of the fact that, like other justice system participants, the victim's views are not determinative with respect to the decision to prosecute. Crown counsel must always remember that prosecutorial independence is a cornerstone of our system of criminal justice and the Crown has a duty to make its decisions dispassionately, without regard to either public sentiment or political pressures.

d) Confidence in the Administration of Justice

Crown counsel must assess whether a prosecution would maintain public confidence in the courts and the administration of justice. For example, prosecuting a case where there is serious state misconduct may lower public confidence in the administration of justice. Examples of serious state misconduct include overt racial profiling, pretext stops, discrimination, abuse by police, or serious Charter breaches.²⁹

Evidence of misconduct may not be readily apparent. However, when considered in all the circumstances, after gathering all the relevant information, patterns may emerge showing that over-represented groups, including First Nations, Inuit, Métis, or Black individuals are disproportionately targeted because of racial profiling or systemic discrimination. Despite the challenges in identifying police misconduct, Crown counsel should be on the lookout for evidence at all stages of a prosecution.

²⁷ Statutory aggravating factors include whether the victim was a child (Criminal Code s 718.01), an intimate partner (Criminal Code s 718.201), a female person, or an Indigenous female person (Criminal Code s 718.04).

²⁸ There are many tools Crown counsel can consider. For example, proceeding by way of summary conviction, or making use of various testimonial aids. A victim's privacy may also be protected through the Criminal Code: Section 276 (admissibility of evidence of prior sexual activity); s 278.3 (production of records); s 715.1 (admissibility of video-recorded evidence taken from children during an investigation); and s 486.1 (application for a support person). Crown counsel may also refer to the PPSC Deskbook Directive 5.6 "Victims of Crime", section 5.1 "Aids to trial testimony".

²⁹ See PPSC Deskbook Guideline 2.13 "Allegations of Misconduct by Persons Involved in the Investigation of Charges".

If additional evidence is required to make this determination, Crown counsel should make requests to the investigative agency and potentially the accused.

The CFP or their designate will provide guidance to the assigned Crown and may communicate with the police or investigative agency at the appropriate level to address the evidence of serious state misconduct. The CFP, in consultation with the assigned Crown, must decide independently of the police or investigative agency whether a prosecution properly serves the public interest.

Where Crown Counsel identifies serious state misconduct on a balance of probabilities, the prosecution should not proceed.

Where the charges are serious or a victim is involved, Crown counsel must weigh the evidence of the state misconduct with any impact the discontinuation of the prosecution may have on the administration of justice and the victim. In serious cases, or where there is a victim involved, Crown counsel must consult with the CFP or their designate before making a final determination.

In addition to serious state misconduct, there may be circumstances where the conduct of the investigation may reduce the public interest in carrying out the prosecution. For example, Crown counsel must consider that delay between the commission of the alleged offence and the time of the charging decision may negatively impact the confidence in the administration of justice. Crown counsel should consider the investigative agency's reasons for the delay, the accused's responsibility for the delay, and the complexity and length of the investigation.

e) Harm to the Community

Crown Counsel should take steps to gain knowledge and understanding of the communities in which they prosecute. This includes an understanding of communities that may be under-policed or over-policed. Prosecutors can learn more about their communities by consulting public documents. For example, they can consult reports from commissions of inquiries, reports prepared by police review agencies, or civil lawsuits filed against investigatory agencies or attorneys general.

The public interest analysis must include consideration of the impact of the alleged offence and prosecution on the local community. Potential harms include any loss or injury caused by the alleged offence, and the impact of the alleged offence on public safety, public health, public welfare, the environment, natural resources, and other economic, cultural or societal public interests. The public interest may favour a prosecution if the offence is so serious that not proceeding with the prosecution would have an impact on the local community's confidence in the administration of justice.

Where the impact of the alleged offence contributes to the ongoing trauma and disproportionate victimization already experienced by Indigenous persons and communities because of historic and systemic factors, the public interest will weigh in favour of prosecution.³⁰

Crown counsel should consider whether the prosecution of an offence would maintain public confidence in a regulatory regime or have the opposite effect.

f) Alternatives to Prosecution

Crown counsel must consider the factors below in determining whether the public interest can be satisfied without a prosecution:

- The consequences of a prosecution or conviction would be disproportionately harsh or oppressive;
- The effect on the administration of justice of committing resources to conduct the proceedings when considered in relation to the seriousness or triviality of the alleged offence, the likely sentence that would result from a conviction, and the attendant public benefit(s); and
- The likelihood of achieving the desired result and requisite level of specific and general deterrence and denunciation without a prosecution.

Alternatives to prosecution are designed to serve the public interest by promoting accountability and rehabilitation for the accused while avoiding both the stigma of a criminal conviction and criminal procedures that consume time and resources. There are a variety of alternatives to prosecution. They include alternative measures pursuant to s. 716 of the Criminal Code, such as the referral of the investigation or charges to a restorative justice program.³¹ In many First Nations, Inuit, and Métis communities, alternative measures include culturally appropriate restorative justice programs inspired by legal traditions aimed at rehabilitation and community reintegration.

In addition to alternative measures, other alternatives to prosecution may be appropriate to respond to the specific needs of the accused. For example, Crown counsel must consider:

- Extrajudicial sanctions for young persons;³² and

³⁰ These factors have been identified in R v Gladue, [1999] 1 SCR 688 and R v Ipeelee, 2012 SCC 13, and in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. See also Canada, National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls, Reclaiming Power and Place: The Final Report of the National Inquiry Into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls (Vancouver: Privy Council Office, 2019) (Chief Commissioner Marion Buller).

³¹ See PPSC Deskbook Directive 3.8 “Alternative Measures”.

³² See PPSC Deskbook Directive 5.4 “Youth Criminal Justice”.

- Referral to mental health courts or drug treatment courts,³³ where available, for accused with mental health challenges or a substance-use disorder.

Alternatives to prosecutions may be appropriate in light of the nature and seriousness of the offence and the availability of appropriate parallel processes such as:

- Prosecution by a provincial or territorial prosecution service pursuant to another legislation;
- Administrative sanctions; or
- Compliance programs.

4.2.2 Irrelevant Factors

A determination of whether it is in the public interest to prosecute an accused must not be influenced by any of the following:

- i. Bias or discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, marital status, family status, genetic characteristics, disability, socio-economic status, or political association;³⁴
- ii. Conviction for an offence where a pardon has been granted or where a record of suspension has been ordered; or
- iii. Possible political or any other advantage or disadvantage to the government or any other political group or party.

4.2.3 Duty to Protect Private or Privileged Information

In assessing whether it is in the public interest to proceed with a prosecution, Crown counsel must consider their duty to protect sensitive or privileged information, as well as the harm that can result from its disclosure.³⁵ This includes information that may:

- i. Reveal the nature and extent of an ongoing investigation;
- ii. Be injurious to national security, international relations, or national defence;
- iii. Negatively impact the privacy interests or safety of a third party or victim; or
- iv. Disclose an investigative technique, thereby compromising future investigations.

³³ See PPSC Deskbook Guideline 6.1 “Drug Treatment Courts”.

³⁴ This list is not exhaustive. Many of the factors listed are prohibited grounds of discrimination under the Canadian Human Rights Act, RSC 1985, c H-6.

³⁵ For example, see PPSC Deskbook Directive 4.1 “Protecting Confidential Information under Section 37 of the Canada Evidence Act”.

While this duty to protect exists, the disclosure of sensitive or privileged information may be justified depending on the nature and seriousness of the case. In these circumstances, Crown counsel must determine if it is possible to obtain consent to disclose the protected information or seek a waiver of the privilege. Even with consent or a waiver, Crown counsel must weigh the seriousness of the case with the harm that may result in disclosure. In doing so, Crown counsel must consult with the appropriate individuals (including representatives of the investigative agency) and their CFP. The CFP may consider it appropriate to consult with the DDPP.

5. CONSULTATION³⁶

In some cases, it will be appropriate for Crown counsel to obtain the views of the investigative agency or the victim before making the decision to prosecute. Crown counsel are encouraged to consult to gain knowledge about how the prosecution, or the discontinuation of the prosecution, may impact the victim or the particular community where the alleged offence took place.

The CFP or Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutor (DCFP) must consult with their assigned DDPP when a decision may have a significant impact on other prosecution decisions regarding a class of cases, the enforcement practices or policies of investigative agencies, a regulatory enforcement/compliance regime, or a provincial, territorial, or national practice.³⁷

Consultation between counsel within the federal government may also be warranted, particularly with a Department of Justice Legal Services Unit that advises a federal department or agency with an enforcement mandate.³⁸ Those federal agencies may be particularly attuned to the nature, philosophy, objectives of the enforcement regime, and its remedial options. In prosecutions relevant to regulatory statutes, investigative agencies often have views about the enforcement of their regulatory schemes and should be consulted in the event that the public interest factors weigh against a prosecution.

In the event that the investigative agency disagrees with a decision to not prosecute a charge that has been laid or referred, Crown counsel must advise the CFP or their designate. The CFP, or their designate, may communicate with the police or investigative agency at the appropriate level. In cases of national importance, the CFP must consult with the assigned DDPP.

³⁶ See the PPSC Deskbook Directive 1.3 “Consultation within Government” and the PPSC Deskbook Guideline 2.6 “Consultation within the Public Prosecution Service of Canada”.

³⁷ When dealing with issues and cases involving Indigenous persons, which may have national implications for the PPSC, the PPSC Regional Offices are invited to consult the Indigenous Justice and Reconciliation Committee.

³⁸ See also PPSC Deskbook Directive 1.3 “Consultation within Government”.

6. DOCUMENTING AND COMMUNICATING DECISION-MAKING

Where a decision is made to not institute proceedings or to discontinue an existing prosecution, Crown counsel must document the reasons for that decision to a level of detail appropriate in the circumstances. In sensitive, serious, or complex cases, any consultations made in reaching that decision must also be documented.

Crown counsel must also make reasonable efforts to explain their decision to the police or investigative agency.

Where a decision is made to not prosecute on the basis of racial profiling, any other apparently illegitimate investigative pretext, excessive use of force, or other similar reasons, Crown counsel must record the details of their decision in the file and advise their CFP. The details must include a summary of the facts and the rationale for arriving at the conclusion that the investigation was a result of any of these circumstances.

Crown counsel must know and follow the requirements of the Canadian Victims Bill of Rights. This includes a victim's right to request information about the progress and outcome of proceedings in relation to an offence.³⁹

Finally, in some circumstances, the need to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice may also necessitate public communication of the reasons for not prosecuting.⁴⁰ This communication may occur through a statement in court at the time charges are discontinued or a news release. In providing reasons, Crown counsel should consider the privacy interests of victims, witnesses, accused persons, and the need to protect privileged information.

7. PROVIDING ADVICE TO INVESTIGATIVE AGENCIES ON THE DECISION TO PROSECUTE

Public safety and effective prosecutions are promoted when Crown counsel maintain a cooperative relationship with investigative agencies.

Crown counsel should provide timely legal advice to investigating agencies when reasonable and necessary to do so. Upon request, Crown counsel may provide a preliminary confidential legal opinion addressing whether the decision to prosecute analysis would be met on the available evidence. Such requests may be made prior to charges being laid or referred for approval. Generally speaking, it is advisable that such legal advice be given when all the available evidence has been gathered by the investigative agency, after a thorough and complete investigation. Crown counsel should ensure they have all the relevant information to arrive at an informed opinion.

It is Crown counsel, not the investigative agency, who are ultimately responsible for making the decision to prosecute, except where the consent of the Attorney General is required. Crown counsel must make this decision objectively and independently from the investigative agency.⁴¹ When Crown counsel decides not to proceed with a prosecution, the reasons for this decision should be communicated to the investigative agency, in a timely manner. If the investigative agency has acted contrary to the law, Crown counsel should provide an explanation, along with legal advice, that will assist in conducting investigations moving forward.

³⁹ Canadian Victims Bill of Rights, SC 2015, c 13, ss 2, 7.

⁴⁰ See the PPSC Deskbook Guideline 2.9 "Communications with the Media".

8. DELEGATED PROVINCIAL / TERRITORIAL PROSECUTIONS

Where a charge has been delegated from a provincial Attorney General to the DPP for prosecution, Crown counsel makes the decision to prosecute in accordance with the applicable provincial decision to prosecute policies.

⁴¹ See the PPSC Deskbook Guideline 2.7 “Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies”.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.4 PREVENTION OF WRONGFUL CONVICTIONS

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED
UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. TUNNEL VISION	4
3. INCOMPLETE DISCLOSURE.....	5
4. EYEWITNESS MISIDENTIFICATION	6
5. FALSE CONFESSIONS, FALSE ACCUSATIONS OR PERJURY	7
6. GUILTY PLEAS	9
7. IN-CUSTODY INFORMERS	9
8. FORENSIC EVIDENCE AND EXPERT TESTIMONY	10
8.1. DNA evidence.....	12
9. CONDUCT OF POLICE AND COUNSEL	12
10. CONCLUSION.....	13

1. INTRODUCTION

Crown counsel play an important role in the prevention of wrongful convictions. Crown counsel assess the evidence in a given case to determine if there is a reasonable prospect of conviction, and must continue to assess the evidence on an ongoing basis to determine whether to continue with the prosecution.¹ It is thus crucial that Crown counsel are aware of the factors and circumstances that have been identified as common in wrongful conviction cases, and take all necessary steps within their mandate to help ensure that innocent persons are not convicted of crimes they did not commit.

The primary purpose of this directive is to apprise Crown counsel of the factors that have been identified as contributing causes in wrongful conviction cases,² to highlight best practices that can assist Crown counsel in preventing miscarriages of justice, and to bring to the attention of Crown counsel the extensive research in this field. Bearing in mind that all cases are different, the following information is intended to provide general guidance to federal prosecutors.

¹ This directive should be read in conjunction with related PPSC Deskbook guidelines and directives, including: “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”, “2.2 Duties and Responsibilities of Crown Counsel” and “2.7 Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies.”

² The research regarding the phenomenon of wrongful convictions is voluminous; scholars have found discussion in the legal commentary dating back to the writings of Sir Edward Coke in 1644 in the Institutes of the Laws of England, who documented a 1611 case of a wrongful conviction and execution for murder, as well as the writings of William Blackstone a century later. See Bruce P. Smith, “The History of Wrongful Execution,” (June 2005) 56 Hastings L.J. 1185 at 1189. The study of wrongful convictions in the modern era begins with the research of Yale law professor Edwin Borchard, who wrote Convicting the Innocent: Sixty-Five Actual Errors of Criminal Justice, (Garden City, New York: Yale University Press, 1932). The book has been reproduced by Nabu Public Domain Reprints.

Wrongful convictions are usually the result of a combination of errors; one or more of the following elements may be a contributing factor:³

- Tunnel vision by police and/or the Crown;
- Incomplete disclosure;
- Eyewitness misidentification;
- False confessions, false accusations or perjury;
- Guilty pleas by the factually innocent;
- The false testimony of in-custody informers;
- Faulty or unreliable forensic evidence or expert testimony, including the lack of biological samples suitable for DNA testing; and
- Conduct of police and counsel.

In addition to the above contributing factors, Crown counsel should also be aware that the following four “environmental or predisposing circumstances” have been identified as fostering wrongful convictions:

- Public pressure to convict in high-profile cases;
- An unpopular defendant, who is a member of a minority group and often perceived as an outsider;

³ In his 1932 pioneering study, Borchard observed that the causes of wrongful convictions were most often mistaken identification, circumstantial evidence that resulted in incorrect inferences, perjury, or some combination of these factors, supra note 2. See more recently two FPT reports that have surveyed the research, and include individual chapters on all of the perceived common factors in these cases: The 2005 Report on the Prevention of Miscarriages of Justice, FPT Heads of Prosecutions Committee Working Group, 2005 [2005 FPT Report], is available online. The 2011 update to this report, The Path to Justice: Preventing Wrongful Convictions, is available on the PPSC internet site. These are excellent resource documents, which not only include separate chapters on factors recognized as common in wrongful conviction cases, but set out best practices for police and Crown counsel. The PPSC issued an information bulletin to its prosecutors in January 2005, summarizing the findings of the 2005 FPT Report and the recommendations and best practices of most relevance to Crown counsel. For further reading, see for example Bruce A. MacFarlane, "Convicting the Innocent: A Triple Failure of the Justice System," (2005) 31 Manitoba L.J., No 3 at 443; Jon B. Gould and Richard A. Leo, "One-Hundred Years Later: Wrongful Convictions After a Century of Research," (2010) 100 Journal of Criminal Law & Criminology, No 3 at 825; and Samuel R. Gross and Michael Shaffer, "Exonerations in the United States, 1989-2012, Report by the National Registry of Exonerations," a joint project of the University of Michigan Law School and the Centre on Wrongful Convictions at Northwestern University School of Law. The Registry can be found online. The US-based Innocence Project is also a wealth of information, research and statistics regarding the various mistakes and factors that have consistently played a role in wrongful convictions.

- A legal environment or culture that focuses on winning; and
- The presence of what has been labelled “noble cause corruption,” the belief that the end justifies the means and that improper practices are acceptable to ensure a conviction because the accused committed the crime.⁴

2. TUNNEL VISION

Tunnel vision by the police, or the Crown, or both, in a given case, has been identified as a contributing factor in wrongful convictions in Canada and elsewhere.⁵

Experts define tunnel vision as a “single-minded and overly narrow focus on a particular investigative or prosecutorial theory, so as to unreasonably colour the evaluation of information received and one’s conduct in response to that information.”⁶ Police officers and Crown counsel affected by tunnel vision can become so convinced that the correct suspect has been identified and that the theory of the case is correct, that they see only the evidence that supports that theory and ignore facts and information that do not support it.

Crown counsel must not only watch for signs of tunnel vision among the police officers involved in the investigation of the case, but they must also constantly guard against developing it themselves. One of the greatest safeguards for Crown counsel is to bear in mind the key principles regarding the role of the Crown so clearly articulated in the classic case of Boucher v The Queen.⁷ In their review of the evidence in a given case, Crown counsel must remain cognizant of their duty to be fair and impartial, and to ensure they review the evidence in an objective, rigorous and thorough manner. Crown counsel fulfil a gatekeeper function by virtue of the Crown’s duty to critically and independently assess the evidence presented by the police.⁸

⁴ See MacFarlane, supra note 3 at 435-443.

⁵ 2005 FPT Report, supra note 3 at c 4 and the 2011 update to c 4. See in particular the paper by Bruce A. MacFarlane, “Wrongful Convictions: The Effect of Tunnel Vision and Predisposing Circumstances in the Criminal Justice System,” released with the 2008 Inquiry Into Pediatric Forensic Pathology in Ontario, “the Goudge Inquiry,”. See also Keith Findlay and Michael Scott, “The Multiple Dimensions of Tunnel Vision in Criminal Cases,” (June 2006) University of Wisconsin Law School, Legal Studies Research Paper Series, Paper No 1023 at 291. Recent illustrations of tunnel vision by the police and the Crown can be found in the 2006 Lamer Commission of Inquiry Pertaining to the cases of Ronald Dalton, Gregory Parsons and Randy Druken, particularly the case of Gregory Parsons. See also The Commission on Proceedings Involving Guy Paul Morin, Toronto: Queen’s Printer, 1998.

⁶ The Morin inquiry, ibid. This definition is contained in Recommendation 74.

⁷ [1955] SCR 16. This case is discussed in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.2 Duties and Responsibilities of Crown Counsel”. See, in particular, the discussion of the Crown’s duty to be fair. On the role of Crown counsel, see also an excellent article by Robert J. Frater, “The Seven Deadly Prosecutorial Sins,” (2002) 7 Can Crim L Rev 209.

⁸ See the 2005 FPT Report, supra note 3 at 39. See also the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”.

While Crown counsel should, where appropriate, encourage co-operation and early consultation with the police during police investigations, it is crucial that Crown counsel understand the distinct and independent role of the Crown vis-à-vis the police.⁹ Although the police are responsible for directing the investigation, during the file review, Crown counsel should not hesitate to question aspects and perceived shortcomings of the police investigation that relate to the sufficiency of the evidence and impact the prospect of conviction. A fair, independent and impartial review of the file by Crown counsel also means remaining open to alternative theories of the case, which may be different from the theory advanced by the police.

Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC) managers and Crown counsel should also strive to create a workplace atmosphere that encourages questions, consultations and frank discussion and debate among Crown counsel and that is receptive to the expression of alternative views regarding a case.¹⁰

During file review and trial preparation, checks and balances through supervision and second opinions should be encouraged. Crown counsel with carriage of the file may consider consulting a fellow Crown counsel who can play the role of a contrarian or devil's advocate. This can be a very useful technique, particularly in the most serious cases.

Mentoring should be encouraged regarding various aspects of Crown counsel's role, such as the importance of the independent role of Crown counsel vis-à-vis the police, and the appropriate limits of Crown advocacy.¹¹

3. INCOMPLETE DISCLOSURE

Incomplete disclosure by the police and/or the Crown has been a factor in some wrongful conviction cases in Canada.¹² Crown counsel must ensure they fully understand the breadth of Crown counsel's disclosure obligations under the law and that they adhere strictly to them.¹³ Crown counsel's disclosure obligations are discussed in the PPSC

⁹ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.7 Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies", supra note 1.

¹⁰ 2005 FPT Report, supra note 3 at 40.

¹¹ Concerns about the nature of Crown advocacy were discussed at length in the Parsons case, which is one of the three cases examined in the Lamer Inquiry, supra note 5.

¹² 2005 FPT Report, supra note 3 at c 11. See also c 11 in the updated version of this report, which was released in September 2011. While lack of disclosure played a role in a number of historic cases of wrongful convictions in Canada, such as those of Donald Marshall Jr. and of Thomas Sophonow, see more recently the Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Certain Aspects of the Trial and Conviction of James Driskell (2007) and the Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Wrongful Conviction of David Milgaard (2008). In the Lamer Inquiry report, supra note 5, Lamer identified inadequate disclosure as an issue in two of the three cases examined. See also the discussion of inadequate disclosure as a factor in wrongful conviction cases in Bruce A. MacFarlane, "Convicting the Innocent," supra note 3 at 450. This topic is discussed and referenced further in the section on Official Misconduct.

¹³ See [R v Stinchcombe, \[1991\] 3 SCR 326](#); R v MacNeil \(2009\), SCJ No 3.

Deskbook guideline “2.5 Principles of Disclosure”. Crown counsel must remain mindful that the Crown’s disclosure obligation continues after conviction, including after appeals have been decided or the time for appeal has elapsed. Consequently, whenever Crown counsel receives information suggesting that there may be a reasonable basis to conclude that a miscarriage of justice likely occurred, Crown Counsel should immediately report the matter to the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) for whatever further investigation or action may be required.

4. EYEWITNESS MISIDENTIFICATION

Eyewitness misidentification has been identified as the single most important factor leading to wrongful convictions, indeed the overwhelming factor.¹⁴ Eyewitness misidentification was a key factor in a number of Canadian cases of wrongful convictions.¹⁵ In one American study, eyewitness misidentification, either mistaken or intentional, was a factor in at least 94 per cent of the exonerations for sexual assault, child sexual abuse and robbery.¹⁶

When the identification of the perpetrator is at issue, Crown counsel must assess eyewitness identification evidence carefully, and be cautious regarding its use, despite its potential value.

The Canadian judiciary has acknowledged the inherent frailties of identification evidence, due to the unreliability of human observation and recollection.¹⁷ Honest and confident witnesses, who believe they recall an incident correctly, make convincing witnesses, but they can be wrong. Crown counsel must be wary of eyewitness evidence, particularly single-witness identification where there is no corroboration and be attuned to the fact that confidence does not necessarily equate with accuracy.

Crown counsel should remain mindful that a description of the offender given to the police shortly after the event, when the witness’s memory is fresh and the description is less

¹⁴ Bruce A. MacFarlane, “Convicting the Innocent”, supra note 3 at 443 and 447. See also Angela Baxter, “Identification Evidence in Canada: Problems and a Potential Solution,” (February 2007) vol 52, No 2, CLQ at 175, and Gross and Shaffer, supra note 3 at 43. See also comments from Justice Rosenberg in R v Hanemaayer \(2008\), OJ No 3087 at para 29 (CA) [Hanemaayer].

¹⁵ See e.g. Hanemaayer, ibid; R v Henry \(2010\), BCCA 462. See also The Inquiry Regarding Thomas Sophonow, (Winnipeg: Manitoba Justice, 2001), supra note 12.

¹⁶ Gross and Shaffer, supra note 3 at 52.

¹⁷ 2005 FPT Report, c 5, in particular at p 49, as well as the 2011 update to this chapter. See R v Hay, 2013 SCC 61, where the court discussed eyewitness evidence; the majority held at para 51 that a jury may convict on the basis of a single eyewitness’s testimony, notwithstanding the frailties of eyewitness identification, if the witness’s testimony could support a finding of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. See also [R v Sutton, \[1970\] 2 OR 358 \(CA\)](#); R v Nikolovski \(1996\), 111 CCC \(3d\) 403 \(SCC\) at 412; [Burke v The Queen, \[1996\] 1 SCR 474, \(1996\), 105 CCC \(3d\) 205 at 224](#); [R v Hibbert \(2002\) SCC 39, \[2002\] 2 SCR 445](#) and more recently, Hanemaayer, supra note 14.

likely to be tainted by suggestions from others or other outside influences, is the most reliable.

Crown counsel must keep current regarding developments in this area and familiarize themselves with the relevant case law,¹⁸ as well as the best practices recommended for police forces and Crown counsel.

The PPSC has endorsed the following best practices, which are explained in greater detail in the 2011 report, The Path to Justice, Preventing Wrongful Convictions:¹⁹

- Assume the identity of the accused is always at issue unless the defence admits it on the record. Timely preparation and a critical review of all of the available identification evidence, including the manner in which it was obtained, is required as it will affect the conduct and quality of the trial;
- Be wary of the weaknesses associated with certain types of single-witness identifications, e.g., where there was a poor opportunity to observe or no prior contact with the identified person. While not required by law to secure a conviction, corroboration of an eyewitness's identification can overcome deficiencies in the quality of that evidence;
- Be familiar with the identification procedures used by the police force in the case and critically assess the extent to which these procedures are in line with recognized best practices, and how any shortcomings impact the quality of the identification evidence;
- Do not condone or participate in a "show-up" line-up (presenting a single suspect in person to the witness at some point during the pre-trial investigation and asking if the witness recognizes the individual);
- Never show a witness an isolated photograph or image of an accused during the interview; and
- Always lead evidence of the history of the identification. It is vitally important that the trier of fact be told not only of the identification but all the circumstances involved in obtaining it, i.e., the composition of the photo pack.

5. FALSE CONFESSIONS, FALSE ACCUSATIONS OR PERJURY

Crown counsel must remain alive to the fact that for a variety of reasons individuals sometimes confess to crimes they did not commit.

¹⁸ The PPSC has amassed considerable information on this important topic, including valuable training materials that can be provided upon request. In addition, the two FPT HOP reports, supra note 3, have chapters on this subject. Finally, the following cases are of particular relevance to prosecutors regarding the circumstances where out of court statements of identification may be admitted for the truth of their contents. See R v Starr, [2000] 2 SCR 144 and R v Tat (1997), 117 CCC (3d) 481 (ONCA).

¹⁹ A list of best practices and practical suggestions for Crown counsel can be found in c 5 of the report at 75-76. See the link to this report at supra note 3.

The Supreme Court of Canada has acknowledged that false confessions are a problem within the criminal justice system,²⁰ and that innocent people make false confessions more frequently than those unfamiliar with the phenomenon might expect.²¹ False accusations and perjury have also been identified as factors in wrongful conviction cases, and particularly common in homicide and child sex abuse cases,²² although these factors tend to have received less attention in the studies and academic literature to date.

In light of the emerging evidence regarding the existence of false confessions, Crown counsel must critically assess statements from suspects for reliability and admissibility, and should be particularly cautious when assessing the confessions of certain types of suspects, including the young and the intellectually disabled,²³ who may be particularly receptive to police suggestions and more disposed to falsely confess.²⁴ Crown counsel should also remain cognizant of the various reasons a voluntary confession can be false.²⁵

Canadian commissions and inquiries into wrongful convictions have consistently recommended the audio-visual recording of police interviews of chief suspects and witnesses in serious crimes, including the interviews of youthful and other vulnerable witnesses.²⁶ The Canadian judiciary has increasingly encouraged and, in some instances, has stopped just short of insisting on, the recording of statements from suspects.²⁷

²⁰ R v Oickle, 2000 SCC 38 at paras 34-45 [Oickle].

²¹ See Binnie J's dissent in [R v Sinclair, 2010 SCC 35, \[2010\] 2 SCR 310](#). Justice Binnie cites Oickle, supra note 20, on this point at para 90 of Sinclair. (The majority decision in Oickle discusses at paras 34-45 academic literature that explores the relationship between modern police interrogation techniques and false confessions.)

²² Gross and Shaffer, supra note 3 at 40 and at 53. As discussed in note 2, from the earliest studies of the past century, perjury has been identified as among the common factors cited in these cases but it has not been a focus of the academic literature in this area to date.

²³ There is a growing body of research regarding the particular vulnerability of young persons and other vulnerable groups to falsely confess. See for example Christopher Sherrin, "False Confessions and Admissions in Canadian Law," (2005) 30 QLJ at 601; Kent Roach and Andrea Bailey, "The Relevance of Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder in Canadian Criminal Law from Investigation to Sentencing," (2009) 42 UBCL Rev at 1; Steven Drizin and Greg Luloff, "Are Juvenile Courts a Breeding Ground for Wrongful Convictions?" (2007) 34 Northern Kentucky Law Review at 257, and the USSC in JDB v North Carolina, 131 S. Ct. 2394 \(2011\).

²⁴ Oickle, supra note 20 at para 42. See also Sarah Burns, The Central Park Five (New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 2011), which examines why five black and Latino teenagers falsely confessed to the beating and rape of a female jogger in Central Park.

²⁵ See for example Hanemaayer, supra note 14.

²⁶ The reliability of statements from youthful witnesses was a major issue in various cases of wrongful convictions in Canada, including the cases of Donald Marshall and David Milgaard. In fact, the Milgaard inquiry report recommended that all statements taken from young persons in major cases, whether as suspects or witnesses, be audio and video recorded. See online hyperlinks at note 12.

²⁷ Oickle, supra note 20 at para 46. Some lower courts have cited lack of a recording of the interrogation as a significant factor in ruling statements of accused inadmissible on the basis that voluntariness had not been proven. See e.g. R v Wilson \(2006\), 210 CCC \(3d\) 23, 39 CR \(6th\) 345, 213 OAC 207 \(ONCA\); R v Ah-

Crown counsel should encourage the police to record the statements of suspects and witnesses in serious crimes, including those of youthful and other vulnerable witnesses.

6. GUILTY PLEAS

Members of the Canadian judiciary have expressed concern about cases where defendants have pleaded guilty to serious criminal offences they did not commit to avoid the risk of a potentially lengthier sentence if convicted after trial. In such cases, although the guilty pleas were valid in the legal sense,²⁸ fresh evidence admitted on appeal established that the guilty pleas should be set aside as miscarriages of justice.²⁹ Crown counsel must be fully aware of this risk during plea resolution discussions. Crown counsel is bound by relevant Director of Public Prosecutions' (DPP) guidelines regarding the limits of plea resolution discussions,³⁰ as well as ethical obligations outlined by law societies across Canada. Law society rules of professional conduct, as well as those of the Canadian Bar Association, identify the general duties of prosecutors, which include the duty to act fairly³¹ and honourably.³²

7. IN-CUSTODY INFORMERS

Crown counsel must be particularly cautious when assessing the evidence of jailhouse or in-custody informers, who are notoriously unreliable witnesses.³³ The use of evidence med (2002), 170 CCC (3d) 27, 7 CR (6th) 308, 166 OAC 254 and R v Moore-McFarlane (2001), 56 OR (3d) 737, 160 CCC (3d) 493, 47 CR (5th) 203, 152 OAC 120.

²⁸ Section 606 of the Criminal Code states that a court may accept a guilty plea only if it is satisfied that the accused is making the plea voluntarily, that he or she understands that the plea is an admission of the essential elements of the offence, and that he or she appreciates the nature and consequences of the plea. The court is not bound by any agreement made between the accused and the prosecutor.

²⁹ See for example, Hanemaayer, supra note 14 at para 18, where Rosenberg J. identified the quandary as a "terrible dilemma" faced by the accused: "[T]he justice system held out to the appellant a powerful inducement that by pleading guilty he would not receive a penitentiary sentence." See also R v Kumar (2011), OJ No 618 (CA), R v Sherrett-Robinson (2009), OJ No 5312 (CA); R v Brant (2011), OJ No 2062 (CA) and Joan Brockman, "An Offer You Can't Refuse: Pleading Guilty When Innocent," (2010) 56 CLQ at 116.

³⁰ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.7 Resolution Discussions."

³¹ See for example the BC Law Society Professional Conduct Handbook, c 8, Rule 18, Duties of Prosecutor.

³² Law Society of Upper Canada, Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 4.01(3). See also the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.2 Duties and Responsibilities of Crown Counsel", supra note 1.

³³ This section of this directive should be read in conjunction with the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.3 Immunity Agreements", in particular section 7, which concerns information provided by a jailhouse or in-custody informer, as well as section 8 regarding out-of-custody co-operating witnesses. An in-custody informer, as defined by the Honourable Fred Kaufman, CM, QC, in his report on the case of Guy Paul Morin, supra note 5, vol 1, chapter III, section C at 598, is someone who allegedly receives statements from an accused while both are in custody in relation to offences that occurred outside of the custodial institution.

from in-custody informers (which later turns out to be false) has been a contributing factor in wrongful convictions, both in Canada and elsewhere.³⁴ Even experienced police officers and prosecutors can be fooled by such witnesses.³⁵ Crown counsel must assess the evidence of in-custody informers with the utmost care and be satisfied that the evidence of the informer is credible before calling him or her as a witness. If Crown counsel is satisfied that the witness is credible, he or she should recommend to the CFP that the informer be called as a witness. If the CFP believes it is an appropriate case for the use of the in-custody informer, the CFP should seek the advice of the Major Case Advisory Committee before making a final decision. If the Committee and the CFP disagree, the matter should be directed to the appropriate Deputy DPP for a final decision. The role of the Committee is discussed in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.1 Major Case Management”.³⁶

8. FORENSIC EVIDENCE AND EXPERT TESTIMONY

Faulty forensic procedures, unreliable science and/or flawed expert opinion testimony have been factors in a number of wrongful conviction cases in Canada.³⁷ Crown counsel, who deal with experts from a diverse range of disciplines, must be cognizant of the risks associated with the use of forensic evidence and expert testimony. Depending on their practice, Crown counsel may develop a sound understanding of the domain of various experts with whom they interact routinely. However, the ability to remain current on significant developments in forensic science is a challenge, particularly where novel areas of expertise and science are to be relied upon in specific prosecutions.

Crown counsel should not refrain from reliance on a novel scientific theory or technique, provided there is a sufficient foundation to establish the reliability and necessity of these opinions and that the probative value exceeds the potential prejudicial impact. Crown counsel must exercise diligence in obtaining and adducing sufficient evidence to meet the factors in support of reliability (e.g., can the theory or technique be empirically validated? Is there a professional association or society offering continuing education to its recog-

The accused does not have to be in custody for, or charged with, the offences to which the statements relate. This definition does not include informers who allegedly have direct knowledge of the offence independent of the statements of the accused.

³⁴ 2005 FPT Report at 75, and its 2011 update, supra note 3. See also the inquiries concerning Sophonow, supra note 12 and Morin, supra note 5 and more recently the Lamer Inquiry, supra note 5 and the Driskell Inquiry, supra note 12.

³⁵ See The Inquiry Regarding Thomas Sophonow, supra note 12.

³⁶ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.3 Immunity Agreements” for a full detailing of the PPSC Policy concerning the use of jailhouse informers, including the factors Crown counsel should consider when assessing their credibility and the nature of the relationship between the informer and the police.

³⁷ The Morin and Sophonow inquiries are early Canadian examples of this but see more recently the Goudge Inquiry, supra note 5 regarding the role of forensic science and forensic scientists in the criminal justice system and problems in this area generally. See also R v Mullins-Johnson, (2007) OJ No 3978 (CA), where the Court held that the wrongful conviction and 12-year imprisonment of Mullins-Johnson for the murder of his niece was the result of a rush to judgment based on flawed scientific opinion.

nized members? Is there a meaningful certification program? Can the findings be reliably recreated and tested by qualified examiners?) Crown counsel must also be satisfied that the evidence will be used for a proper purpose.³⁸

Crown counsel should also be open to case conferences between Crown and defence experts to try to narrow and/or potentially resolve the scientific issues in a given case.

Ultimately, the key issues Crown counsel must consider are the following:

1. The validity of the science;
2. The qualifications of the expert;
3. The quality and validity of the testing procedures;
4. The objectivity and independence of the opinion;
5. Whether a proper evidentiary foundation can be laid; and
6. The relevance of the evidence to an issue in dispute.³⁹

Crown counsel are encouraged to seek out educational opportunities and resources that will enable them to increase their understanding and knowledge of various forensic disciplines, and to keep abreast of the relevant jurisprudence as well as new procedures and developments in the field of forensic science.⁴⁰ Crown counsel should not hesitate to consult colleagues and superiors, and to seek the support and resources they require in prosecutions involving expert evidence with which they have little professional experience, or in very serious cases where expert evidence is a fundamental component of the case.

Provided Crown counsel exercise due care and diligence in presenting the expert opinion, establishing the sufficiency of the factual underpinning supporting it, with the fairness of the trial process in mind, the possibility of a miscarriage of justice arising from its use can be reduced.⁴¹

³⁸ [R v Mohan, \[1994\] 2 SCR 9](#) continues to be relied upon for its four-part test regarding the admission of proposed expert evidence. See also [R v J-LJ, \[2000\] 2 SCR 600](#), R v DD, 2000 SCC 43, [\[2000\] 2 SCR 275](#) and more recently, [R v Trochym, \[2007\] 1 SCR 239](#) and Reference re: Truscott, \(2007\) 225 CCC \(3d\) 321 \(ONCA\).

³⁹ Section 7 of this directive is largely an excerpt from the recommendations and guidelines in c 9 of the 2005 FPT Report, supra note 3.

⁴⁰ In a 2013 report on Forensic Science in Canada under the auspices of the Centre for Forensic Science & Medicine at the University of Toronto, forensic experts from across Canada discuss the state of forensic science in Canada. Among their recommendations is that multidisciplinary cross-training should be encouraged among scientists, police, lawyers and judges, and that judges should receive ongoing training in this field.

⁴¹ Detailed guidelines and best practices for prosecutors can be found in c 9 of the 2005 FPT Report, supra note 3, and in its 2011 update. Goudge Inquiry, supra note 5, vol 3, c 17 also provides advice to Crown counsel.

8.1. DNA evidence

The advent of DNA testing has been a critical development in the field of forensic science generally, both to convict the guilty and exonerate the innocent. The legislation in the Criminal Code has been expanded and now makes it possible to obtain DNA orders following conviction in relation to more offences.⁴²

Crown counsel should be familiar with the legislation in the Criminal Code,⁴³ and relevant case law, and ensure that the DNA data bank provisions are being used to their full potential and that DNA orders are being sought in all appropriate cases.⁴⁴

Crown counsel should also make every effort to work co-operatively with the police and other criminal justice partners to ensure that DNA evidence is available for post-conviction testing in appropriate cases.

9. CONDUCT OF POLICE AND COUNSEL

Official misconduct, which encompasses a broad range of conduct by various criminal justice participants, ranging from abusive investigative procedures that can produce false evidence, to committing or procuring perjury, to concealing exculpatory evidence, has also been cited as among the factors that can contribute to a wrongful conviction.⁴⁵ Regarding Crown conduct, the research suggests the most common transgression is the failure to disclose exculpatory evidence, either because the police did not provide prosecutors with the information, or because prosecutors were unaware that they had such information in the file or intentionally withheld it.⁴⁶

The conduct of defence counsel, which can include conduct that may be perceived in retrospect, to be ineffective, erroneous or missteps, has also been identified as relevant in ⁴² As of 2008, the list of designated offences that qualify for inclusion in the National DNA Data Bank Convicted Offenders Index (COI) has been significantly expanded. More than 150 offences were added to the list. The list captures terrorism offences, criminal organization offences, and drug offences under ss 5, 6, 7 (or an attempt or conspiracy to commit any of the above) under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, SC 1996, c 19 that are tried by indictment and carry a maximum sentence of five years or more.

⁴³ Section 487.051.

⁴⁴ See c 8 in the 2005 FPT Report and in its 2011 update, supra note 3.

⁴⁵ See Gross and Shaffer study, supra note 3 at 65-67 and Brandon Garrett, Convicting the Innocent (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 2011) at 167-171 and at 205-209.

⁴⁶ See Gould and Leo, supra note 3 at 854-855. See also MacFarlane, supra note 3 at 450-452, and Kathleen M. Ridolfi & Maurice Possley, "Preventable Error: A Report on Prosecutorial Misconduct in California, 1997-2009," (October 2010), Northern California Innocence Project, Santa Clara University School of Law. This study is characterized as the most in-depth statewide review of prosecutorial misconduct in the United States. See also the discussion in the Lamer Commission of Inquiry, supra note 5, concerning the role of the Crown in the case of Gregory Parsons at 134-156, and Robert J. Frater, Prosecutorial Misconduct, supra note 7.

some wrongful conviction cases in the US and Canada.⁴⁷ In R v GDB,⁴⁸ the Supreme Court of Canada held that the right to effective assistance of counsel is a principle of fundamental justice; however this right will be seen to be violated in law only if the conduct is unreasonable and incompetent and results in a miscarriage of justice. If Crown counsel develops concerns in a particular case that an accused is not being effectively represented, Crown counsel should consult his or her CFP or the CFP delegate to discuss the appropriate course of action.

10. CONCLUSION

Like other key criminal justice system participants, Crown counsel should become familiar with the factors that have been widely recognized as contributing factors in wrongful conviction cases, and keep abreast of the relevant jurisprudence and the best practices that have been associated with their prevention. In addition, training in relation to the prevention of wrongful convictions should be provided to federal prosecutors.⁴⁹ Indeed, the education of criminal justice system participants has been identified as a key aspect of the prevention of wrongful convictions.⁵⁰

When a particular file raises concerns, Crown counsel should consult experts, colleagues and superiors.⁵¹

⁴⁷ This issue is discussed in the Lamer Inquiry, supra note 5. See also MacFarlane, “Convicting the Innocent,” supra note 3 at 468-470. The US Innocence Project identifies “bad lawyering” as one of the seven most common causes of wrongful convictions. See also discussion of this issue in Garrett, supra note 45 at 205-207 and Gross and Shaffer, supra note 3 at 41-43.

⁴⁸ 2000 SCC 22. In the US, see Strickland v Washington, 466 US 668 (1984), which is the seminal USSC case on the subject but see more recently Missouri v Frye, 132 S Ct 1399 (2012).

⁴⁹ For example, training on this topic is routinely provided at the PPSC annual School for Prosecutors.

⁵⁰ See c 10 in the 2005 FPT Report, as well as the 2011 updated c 10, supra note 3. A number of the Canadian inquiries, including the recent 2006 Lamer Inquiry and the 2008 Goudge Inquiry, stressed the importance of educating key justice system participants such as police, Crowns and forensic scientists, regarding the many subjects implicated by the wrongful conviction cases in Canada.

⁵¹ A summary of all of the recommendations from the seven Canadian inquiries that relate to wrongful convictions can be found in: Gary Botting, Wrongful Conviction in Canadian Law, (Markham, Ont: Lexis Nexis Canada Inc., 2010).

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.5 PRINCIPLES OF DISCLOSURE

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1.	INTRODUCTION	3
2.	STATEMENT OF POLICY	3
3.	INCLUSIONS	4
3.1.	Charging Document	5
3.2.	Particulars of the Offence	5
3.3.	Witness Statements	5
3.4.	Audio/video evidence statements by witnesses.....	6
3.5.	Statements by the accused	6
3.6.	Accused's criminal record	6
3.7.	Expert witness reports.....	6
3.8.	Documentary and other evidence	7
3.9.	Exhibits	7
3.10.	Search warrants	7
3.11.	Authorizations to intercept private communications.....	7
3.12.	Similar fact evidence	8
3.13.	Identification evidence	8
3.14.	Witnesses' criminal records.....	8
3.15.	Material relevant to the case-in-chief	9
3.16.	Impeachment material.....	9
3.17.	Information obtained during witness interviews	9
3.18.	Information obtained by Crown Witness Coordinators	10
3.19.	Other material	10
4.	EXCEPTIONAL SITUATIONS	10
4.1.	Third party information	10
4.2.	Protecting witnesses against interference	11
4.2.1.	Consent release of information concerning a witness.....	11
4.2.2.	Witnesses refusing to be interviewed	11
4.2.3.	Controlled interviews.....	12
4.3.	Unrepresented accused.....	12
4.4.	Voluminous documentary evidence	14
5.	EXCLUSIONS	14
5.1.	Police informers	15
5.2.	Reply evidence	15
5.3.	On-going investigations	16
5.4.	Investigative techniques	16
5.5.	Cabinet confidences	16
5.6.	International relations/national security/national defence	16
5.7.	Solicitor-client privilege	16
5.8.	Work product privilege	17

6.	DISCLOSURE COSTS.....	17
7.	FORM OF DISCLOSURE.....	18

1. INTRODUCTION

In the seminal case on the Crown's disclosure obligations, R v Stinchcombe,¹ the Supreme Court of Canada set out the duty on the part of the Crown to provide disclosure to an accused person. The Supreme Court makes it clear that the obligation, though broad, is not absolute, but is subject to Crown counsel's discretion with respect to both the timing of disclosure and the withholding of information for valid purposes, including the protection of police informers, cabinet confidences and national security, international relations and national defence information.² The obligation is also subject to the limitation that the accused has no right to information that would distort the truth-seeking process.³

2. STATEMENT OF POLICY⁴

There is a general duty on the part of the Crown to disclose all material it proposes to use at trial and especially all evidence which may assist the accused⁵ even if the Crown does not propose to adduce it. While the Crown must err on the side of inclusion, it need not produce evidence that is beyond the control of the prosecution, clearly irrelevant, or privileged.

It is the Crown's obligation to disclose all information, whether inculpatory or exculpatory, that could "reasonably be used by the accused either in meeting the case for

¹ [1991] 3 SCR 326.

² See Canada Evidence Act, RSC 1985, c C-5, ss 37, 38 and 39. See the PPSC Deskbook directives "4.1 Protecting Confidential Information under Section 37 of the Canada Evidence Act", "4.2 Protecting Confidential Information under Section 38 of the Canada Evidence Act" and "4.3 Protecting Cabinet Confidences under Section 39 of the Canada Evidence Act". See also the PPSC Deskbook guidelines "3.11 Informer Privilege" and "5.1 National Security".

³ R v Mills [1999] 3 SCR 668; (1999), 139 CCC (3d) 321 at 363-4.

⁴ This guideline assumes that the accused is before a court in Canada charged with an offence in a domestic criminal proceeding. If charges were laid but the accused fled Canada or for some other reason is not before a Canadian court, there is no obligation to provide full disclosure. It may, however, be appropriate to provide counsel with a brief summary of the case. Where an accused absconds during a preliminary hearing or trial, and the hearing is continued in his absence pursuant to ss 475 and 544 of the Code, the obligation to make disclosure to his counsel continues if counsel continues to act.

⁵ Information which "may assist the accused" is not always easily recognizable. It is difficult to provide 'bright line' guidelines respecting disclosure of the 'unused' material in the Crown's file. Counsel are expected to exercise good judgment and consult with senior managing lawyers in assessing what should and what need not be disclosed. The purpose of this requirement is to avoid a miscarriage of justice on the basis of non-disclosure.

the Crown, advancing a defence or otherwise in making a decision which may affect the conduct of the defence such as, for example, whether to call evidence.”⁶ Information is relevant for the purposes of the Crown's disclosure obligation if there is a reasonable possibility that the withholding of the information will impair the right of the accused to make full answer and defence.⁷

In all cases, whether a request has been received or not, Crown counsel should disclose any information, within their knowledge, tending to show that the accused may not have committed the offence charged. The inability of the Crown to make such disclosure may require a Crown stay or withdraw the charges or request a judicial stay of proceedings.⁸

The purpose of disclosure is two-fold:

1. to ensure that the accused knows the case to be met, and is able to make full answer and defence; and
2. to encourage the resolution of facts in issue including, where appropriate, the entering of guilty pleas at an early stage in the proceedings.

The information to be disclosed need not qualify as evidence; that is, it need not pass all of the tests concerning admissibility.⁹ It is sufficient if the information is relevant, reliable and not subject to some form of privilege. Second-hand information that is unconfirmed may or may not be disclosed, depending on counsel's assessment of the issues in the case.

Crown counsel's disclosure obligation is a continuing one and relates to information that comes to the attention of or into the possession of Crown counsel throughout the process and continues after conviction, including after appeals have been decided or the time of appeal has elapsed.¹⁰

3. INCLUSIONS

Crown counsel shall, as soon as reasonably practicable,¹¹ provide disclosure. In most cases, this will mean that the defence will be given at least the following, subject to

⁶ See R v Egger, [1993] 2 SCR 451 at 466-67.

⁷ Stinchcombe, supra note 1 at 340.

⁸ See R v Carosella, [1997] 1 SCR 80 for a discussion of lost or destroyed evidence.

⁹ R v O'Connor, [1995] 4 SCR 411; (1995), 103 CCC (3d) 1 at 20 [O'Connor].

¹⁰ Stinchcombe, supra note 1 at 14. See also the Report of the Attorney General's Advisory Committee on Charge Screening, Disclosure, and Resolution Discussions, (Queen's Printer for Ontario, 1993) at 206-208 [Martin Committee Report]. The purpose of this section is to underscore the proposition that disclosure is not a 'one-shot' deal.

¹¹ The phrase "as soon as reasonably practicable" is intended to provide a degree of flexibility based on the facts in individual cases. The right to disclosure is triggered by a disclosure request made by or on behalf of the accused, though the practice of waiting for the request by defence appears to differ across Canada. Where there has been a timely request, disclosure should be made before plea or election or any resolution editing for statutory or common law privilege or a determination by Crown counsel that the information is irrelevant:¹²

3.1. Charging Document

A copy of the information or indictment;

3.2. Particulars of the Offence

Particulars¹³ of the circumstances surrounding the offence. This may include a Report to Crown Counsel (RTCC), an analytical document prepared by the investigative agency, which sets out the evidence relating to the elements of the offences and the investigators' theory of the case;

3.3. Witness Statements

Copies of the text of all written statements concerning the offence which have been made to the police or a person in authority by a person with relevant information to give; where the person has not provided a written statement, a copy or transcription,¹⁴ if available, of any notes that were taken by investigators when interviewing the witness; if there are no notes, a 'will-say' or summary of the anticipated evidence of the witness. This requirement includes statements provided by persons whether or not Crown counsel proposes to call them as witnesses; discussions: Stinchcombe, supra note 1 at 14. Where the request is not timely, disclosure must be made as soon as reasonably practicable and in any event before trial. See section 4.3 of this guideline, regarding unrepresented accused. Usually, disclosure will occur after the investigators have given Crown counsel the details of the case. In view of the respective roles played by investigators and Crown counsel in the criminal justice system, the investigative agency is in a unique, if not an exclusive, position to give Crown counsel the information required to be disclosed under this guideline. If the agency fails to do so, Crown counsel may need to assess the extent to which the accused is able to have a fair trial and decide whether, in the circumstances, an adjournment, stay of proceedings or other remedy is required or appropriate. The investigative agency, although operating independently of the prosecution, has a duty to disclose to Crown counsel, without prompting, all relevant information uncovered during the investigation of a crime, including information which assists the accused: Martin Committee Report, supra note 10 at 167. See also R v T (L.A.), (1993) 84 CCC (3d) 90 (Ont CA) at 94; R v V (W.J.), (1992) 72 CCC (3d) 97 (Nfld CA) at 109; R v McNeil 2009 SCC 3 [McNeil].

¹² The 'shopping list' of information set out in this section is information that would normally be disclosed in a given case. Subject to the limitations in section 5 of this guideline, it is more in the nature of a minimal statement of disclosure on behalf of the prosecution. It is not intended to be exhaustive, see section 3.18 of this guideline regarding other material. Counsel should take into account the disclosure requirements described by provincial appellate courts and the Supreme Court of Canada when assessing the scope of disclosure required in any given case.

¹³ 'Particulars' is not intended in the sense that it is used in s 587 of the Code. Rather, it contemplates the provision of details or information concerning the circumstances surrounding the offence.

¹⁴ Stinchcombe, supra note 1 contemplates disclosure of the investigator's notes or copies of notes concerning the interview of a witness. In some instances, it may be helpful to provide a transcription, although that is not required as a matter of law. Additionally, a notebook may contain many references to different investigations. Only those notes relating to the interview should be produced.

3.4. Audio/video evidence statements by witnesses

An appropriate opportunity¹⁵ to view and listen to, in private, a copy of any audio or video recording of any statements made by a witness other than the accused to a person in authority.¹⁶ This does not preclude Crown counsel, in his or her discretion, from providing copies of any video or audio recording or a transcript, where available and appropriate, but with appropriate disclosure conditions that take into account the sensitivity of the material. Where defence counsel is unwilling to accept the disclosure conditions, Crown counsel should seek to impose conditions by court order;

3.5. Statements by the accused

A copy of all written, audio or video recorded statements concerning the offence which have been made by the accused to a person in authority; in the case of oral statements, a verbatim account, where available, including any notes of the statement taken by investigators during the interview; if a verbatim account is not available, an account or description of the statement; and a reasonable opportunity to view and listen to, any original audio or video recorded statement of the accused to a person in authority. Copies of all such statements or access thereto should be provided whether or not they are intended to be relied upon by the Crown;¹⁷

3.6. Accused's criminal record

Particulars of the accused's and any co-accused's criminal record;¹⁸

3.7. Expert witness reports

As soon as available, copies of all expert witness reports in the possession of Crown counsel relating to the offence, whether helpful to the Crown or not, should be disclosed. Counsel should pay close attention to s. 657.3 of the Criminal Code (Code), which requires notice to be given where an expert is to be called as a witness at trial;

¹⁵ In most instances, it will be appropriate to provide this access under the supervision of an investigator or Crown counsel.

¹⁶ This section was not intended to require full access to, for instance, intercepted private communications made between co-conspirators, one of whom has now agreed to testify on behalf of the Crown. With respect to intercepted private communications generally, see section 3.11 of this guideline.

¹⁷ Absent unusual circumstances, recordings made by a potential Crown witness through an electronic body pack should be disclosed. Special considerations may apply where counsel for the accused seeks access to intercepted private communications involving the accused. See sections 3.8, 3.9 and 3.11 of this guideline in this regard. Stinchcombe, supra note 1 requires disclosure of notes prepared during a custodial interview. Absent unusual circumstances, copies of undercover notes outlining conversations involving the accused should similarly be provided.

¹⁸ Foreign convictions, if known, should also be disclosed. In some instances, they may be available through the Interpol office at RCMP Headquarters. In the case of foreign convictions, however, special care must be taken to confirm the proper identity of the person convicted.

3.8. Documentary and other evidence

Where reasonably capable of reproduction, copies of (or access to) all documents, photographs, audio or video recordings of anything other than a statement of a person, should be provided whether or not they are intended to be relied upon by the Crown. Where there exists a reasonable privacy or security interest of any victim(s) or witness(es) that cannot be satisfied by an appropriate undertaking from defence counsel, Crown counsel should seek to impose conditions by court order;

3.9. Exhibits

An appropriate opportunity¹⁹ to inspect any case exhibits,²⁰ i.e., items seized or acquired during the investigation of the offence which are relevant to the charges against the accused;

3.10. Search warrants

A copy of any search warrant, whether relied on by the Crown or not, and, subject to relevance and the limitations in section 5 of this guideline, the information in support unless it has been sealed pursuant to a court order,²¹ and a list of the items seized thereunder, if any;

3.11. Authorizations to intercept private communications

If intercepted private communications will be tendered, a copy of the judicial authorization or written consent under which the private communications were intercepted;²²

¹⁹ As in the case of recorded statements of a witness (see section 3.4 of this guideline), steps should be taken to ensure that access is provided under controlled circumstances which preserve the integrity of the case exhibit. How this can be achieved will depend on the circumstances in each case, although it may be appropriate to provide access only under the supervision of an investigator or employee of the investigating agency.

²⁰ Where a case exhibit is detained by police pursuant to a court order, counsel for the accused may, depending on the circumstances, be required to obtain an order under s 490\(15\) of the Code before it can be examined.

²¹ Requests for production of the information in support of a search warrant that has been sealed pursuant to a court order under s 487.3 of the Code will be governed by the substantive law and procedure set out in that section, and the case law as it is developing in this area. See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.4 Sealing Orders and Publication Bans”.

²² The wiretap logs and session lists should be a routine part of the disclosure provided to the accused in every wiretap case, subject to editing for privilege and subject to appropriate undertakings or court-ordered conditions.

3.12. Similar fact evidence

Particulars of similar fact evidence that Crown counsel intends to rely on at trial;

3.13. Identification evidence

Particulars of any procedures used outside court to identify the accused;²³

3.14. Witnesses' criminal records²⁴

Information regarding criminal records of material Crown or defence witnesses that is relevant to credibility may have to be disclosed.²⁵ This includes disciplinary records of police witnesses where those records fall within the scope of the Crown's disclosure obligation pursuant to McNeil.²⁶ There is no obligation to do a criminal record check on all Crown witnesses.²⁷ Special care must be taken with police agents and other potentially disreputable witnesses, particularly foreign ones. A reliable copy²⁸ of the person's criminal record, and relevant information²⁹ relating to any outstanding criminal charges against the witness, must be disclosed. Crown counsel must request such information in ²³ This is especially important in undercover cases: disclosure should be made of any identification evidence such as license plate numbers, business cards, the post-operation "roundup". Evidence or information of this nature often is not included in the brief to Crown counsel. Counsel should, therefore, ask the investigators to provide a briefing on the means by which the person arrested was identified as the person involved in the impugned transaction.

²⁴ If the accused is seeking access to a youth criminal record, Crown counsel should refer to the Youth Criminal Justice Act, SC 2002, c 1 which governs disclosure of youth criminal records.

²⁵ Crown counsel have a discretion (reviewable by the trial judge) to determine whether information regarding a criminal record of a proposed witness is relevant to that witness's credibility. Crown counsel will have to exercise discretion when assessing whether to disclose old criminal convictions or convictions for offences which could not really assist in the impeachment process. For example, a criminal conviction for impaired driving 10 years ago could hardly assist in impeaching the credibility of a witness in a drug trafficking trial. Furthermore, in northern regions, the automatic disclosure of criminal records of victims or witnesses may be problematic as it may stigmatize unnecessarily the witnesses. On the other hand, convictions for offences of dishonesty will almost always be relevant, regardless of when they were entered. The balance to be struck on this issue centers around the privacy interests of the witness, as measured against the accused's right to test the Crown's case.

²⁶ In McNeil, supra note 11 the Court emphasized that the Crown has a significant role to play as "gatekeeper" with respect to disclosure of police misconduct information. Prosecutors have an obligation to review misconduct material prior to disclosure to the accused. This role does not involve a wholesale turning over of material provided by the police but rather a "studied analysis" to determine if it is relevant to the defence."

²⁷ This obligation is limited to material witnesses whose credibility is in issue. See the Martin Committee Report, supra note 10 at 243.

²⁸ In Canada, this means a printout of the record held by the Canadian Police Information Centre (CPIC); for foreign witnesses, this means the CPIC equivalent.

²⁹ "Relevant information" means the nature of the charges, the court, and the status of the proceedings.

writing from the relevant police authority³⁰ and place the letter and response on the file. Such information should be adduced by the Crown in the examination-in-chief of the witness.

If, at any point in the proceedings, it becomes apparent that the complete criminal record or the relevant information on outstanding charges was not disclosed, or the witness did not testify truthfully about those matters, defence counsel must be advised and Crown counsel must make immediate efforts to determine the reasons for the non-disclosure or misleading disclosure. Such efforts will include a written request for an explanation to the police officer "handling" the witness and his or her superior officer, and a request that the witness and "handler" be made available to testify on the issue, should the need arise.

3.15. Material relevant to the case-in-chief

Particulars of any other evidence on which Crown counsel intends to rely at trial;

3.16. Impeachment material

Any information in the possession of Crown counsel which the defence may use to impeach the credibility of a Crown witness in respect of the facts in issue in the case;³¹

3.17. Information obtained during witness interviews³²

Crown counsel has an obligation to disclose any additional relevant information received from a Crown witness during an interview conducted by Crown counsel in preparation for trial. Additional relevant information includes information inconsistent with any prior statement(s) provided to the investigative agency, e.g., a recantation. Such information should be promptly disclosed to the defence or an unrepresented accused, subject to any ³⁰ "Relevant police authority" means the investigative agency which has been the primary contact with the witness in relation to the information at issue. For example, where the witness is being "handled" by a foreign investigative agency, the request should be made directly to that agency, and copied to the Canadian investigative agency in charge of the Canadian investigation.

³¹ This is a 'catch-all' provision, intended to require disclosure of (a) any other evidence forming part of the Crown's case and (b) information that could be helpful for impeachment purposes. Counsel is expected to exercise careful judgment in assessing the extent to which background information concerning a witness need necessarily be disclosed. For production to be required, impeachment information must be capable of affecting the credibility of the witness with respect to some fact in issue in the case. Some information may be very invasive of privacy rights, e.g., information concerning a mental disorder which may bear upon the capacity of a witness to be sworn. Disclosure of records containing personal information in the possession of Crown counsel for which there is a reasonable expectation of privacy is governed by ss 278.1 to 278.9 of the Code unless the witness to whom the record relates has expressly waived the application of those sections. In most instances, this section will require disclosure of the basic terms of the arrangement between the Crown and any co-operating accomplice expected to testify on behalf of the Crown, subject to the limitations in section 5 of this guideline. See section 3.14 of this guideline for information regarding criminal records of material Crown or defence witnesses.

³² This section does not require the disclosure of information protected by work product privilege. See section 5.8 in this regard.

limitations contemplated by section 5 of this guideline. To avoid the possibility of Crown counsel being called as a witness, interviews should be conducted in the presence of a police officer or other appropriate third person, where practical to do so;³³

3.18. Information obtained by Crown Witness Coordinators

In Canada's three territories, Crown counsel work closely with Crown Witness Coordinators (CWCs). CWCs are in frequent contact with victims and witnesses throughout the court process and often receive information from these sources between the time of initial contact and the trial or sentencing hearing.

The Crown's disclosure obligation includes any additional relevant information received by CWCs from victims and civilian witness during interviews or other contacts with such persons. Crown counsel and CWCs must always ensure that any additional relevant information provided by victims and civilian witnesses is properly documented and if necessary disclosed. This will also allow Crown counsel to determine if it is necessary to ask police to interview the victim or civilian witness regarding the additional information;

3.19. Other material

Additional disclosure beyond that outlined in sections 3.1 to 3.17 above may be made at the discretion of Crown counsel. In exercising this discretion, Crown counsel shall balance the principle of fair and full disclosure, described in section 1 and 2 of this guideline, with the need, in appropriate circumstances, to limit the extent of disclosure, as outlined in section 5 of this guideline;

4. EXCEPTIONAL SITUATIONS

4.1. Third party information

Information in the possession of third parties such as boards, social agencies, other government departments, rape crisis centres, women's shelters, doctors' offices, mental health and counselling services or foreign law enforcement agencies is not in the possession³⁴ of Crown counsel or the investigative agency for disclosure purposes. Where Crown counsel receives a request for information not in their possession or the possession of the investigative agency, the defence should be advised that these records are in the possession of a third party in a timely manner in order that the defence may take such steps to obtain the information as they see fit. Even where third party records are physically in the possession of the Crown, disclosure is not automatic. Unless the person to whom the information pertains has waived his or her rights, that person still has a privacy interest in the records.

³³ Thus, if any new information comes to light, the officer or other third person can make notes to facilitate disclosure, and give whatever testimony may be necessary at trial in relation to that information.

³⁴ The concept of possession, in law, requires control. Without control there is no duty to disclose on the part of Crown counsel or the police. Records held by foreign law enforcement agencies are not in the possession or control of the Crown for disclosure purposes. A Canadian court has no jurisdiction to order anyone in the United States to disclose anything to the RCMP, the Crown or an accused directly: R v Lore \(1997\), 7 CR \(5th\) 190 \(Que CA\) at 200.

If the Crown is put on notice or informed of the existence of potentially relevant information in the hands of a third party, including information pertaining to the credibility or reliability of the witnesses in a case, the Crown's duty to make reasonable inquiries of that third party is triggered.³⁵ The third party is not obligated to provide them to the Crown on request. Crown counsel must disclose the request to the defence who may choose to bring an application for disclosure of the third party records.³⁶

4.2. Protecting witnesses against interference

If the defence seeks information concerning the identity or location of a witness, Crown counsel must consider four factors : first, the right of an accused to a fair trial and to make full answer and defence; second, the principle that there is no property in a witness;³⁷ third, the right of a witness to privacy and to be left alone until required by subpoena to testify in court; fourth, the need for the criminal justice system to prevent intimidation or harassment of witnesses or their families, danger to their lives or safety, or other interference with the administration of justice.³⁸

4.2.1. Consent release of information concerning a witness

Where the witness does not object to the release of information concerning his or her identity or location of a witness, and there exists no reasonable basis to believe that the disclosure will lead to interference with the witness or with the administration of justice as described above, the information may be provided to the accused without court order.

4.2.2. Witnesses refusing to be interviewed

Where a witness does not wish to be interviewed by or on behalf of an accused,³⁹ or where there is a reasonable basis to believe that the fourth consideration referred to in ³⁵ See McNeil, supra note 11.

³⁶ See McNeil, ibid and O'Connor, supra note 9.

³⁷ See R v Gibbons, (1947) 86 CCC 20 (Ont CA) at 28; Smith v Jones, [1999] 1 SCR 455.

³⁸ The Supreme Court of Canada has recognized the right of an individual to be left alone and the appropriateness of preventing the unnecessary invasion of witnesses' privacy: R v Grant 2009 SCC 32, [2009] 2 SCR 353 at para 153 per Binnie J. concurring and R v Rodgers 2006 SCC 15, [2006] 1 SCR 554 at para 36 per Charron J. for the majority; R v Duarte, [1990] 1 SCR 30, (1990), 53 CCC (3d) 1 at 11 and 15; R v Wong, [1990] 3 SCR 36, (1990), 60 CCC (3d) 460 esp at 483; R v Seaboyer, [1991] 2 SCR 577, (1991), 66 CCC (3d) 321 at 387; Stinchcombe, supra note 1 at 8-9. The Supreme Court of Canada has also recognized that Crown witnesses are not the property of the Crown whom Crown counsel can control and produce for examination by the defence: R v Khela, [1995] 4 SCR 201, (1995), 102 CCC (3d) 1 at 10.

³⁹ While Crown counsel and the investigators may wish to ask if a witness wants to be interviewed by the defence, care should be taken to ensure that the witness understands that he or she is fully entitled to be section 4.2 (interference with witnesses or their families) may arise on the facts of the case,⁴⁰ Crown counsel may hold back information concerning the identity or location of the witness unless a court of competent jurisdiction orders its disclosure.⁴¹ Nevertheless, defence counsel must be advised of the existence of the witness and his or her relevant information.

4.2.3. Controlled interviews

Where a witness is willing to be interviewed, but there nonetheless exists a reasonable basis to believe that the disclosure of information concerning the identity or location of the witness may lead to interference with the witness or with the administration of justice as described above, including situations where the witness is in a Witness Protection Program, Crown counsel may decide to arrange for an interview by defence counsel at a location and under circumstances that will ensure the continued protection of the witness.⁴² If the witness is protected under a Witness Protection Program, the agreement of the police agency administering the program will be required.

4.3. Unrepresented accused

An unrepresented accused is entitled to the same disclosure as a represented accused in order to make full answer and defence. However, the precise means by which disclosure is provided to an unrepresented accused is left to the discretion of Crown counsel based on the facts of the case.

interviewed or not to be interviewed. It should not be suggested (directly or indirectly) that it would be better not to be interviewed.

⁴⁰ There is a two-pronged test for determining whether information concerning whereabouts or identity should be withheld: first, has the witness expressed a desire not to be interviewed by the defence? Second, is there a reasonable basis to believe that the witness may be interfered with? The basis for the belief in a potential witness must be real, not imagined. The information available in each case should be examined carefully. Wherever reasonably practicable, Crown counsel should request a written threat assessment from the investigators where limits on disclosure are being considered on this basis. An adjournment may be necessary in these circumstances to ensure a fair trial. The threat assessment may, itself, be the subject of a disclosure request. Absent extraordinary circumstances, disclosure of this assessment should be resisted on the basis that confidential information is necessary in order to ensure that the discretion to produce or withhold is exercised properly. If the defence presses with this request, counsel should consult with the Chief Federal Prosecutor who may consult and, ultimately, the appropriate Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions. In some instances, resort may have to be made to s 37 of the Canada Evidence Act, supra note 2 to protect the confidential nature of this information. See the PPSC Deskbook directive "4.1 Protecting Confidential Information under Section 37 of the Canada Evidence Act", supra note 2.

⁴¹ An adjournment may be necessary in these circumstances to ensure a fair trial.

⁴² In some instances, a controlled interview will provide the necessary balance between the right of the accused to full answer and defence and the need to protect the witness against interference or threats. The circumstances surrounding the interview should be agreed upon by Crown counsel and the investigators in advance of the interview. This could, in some situations, permit the presence of counsel for the witness or Crown counsel, and include a method of recording the interview.

If an unrepresented accused indicates an intention to proceed without counsel, Crown counsel shall advise the accused of the right to disclosure and how to obtain it.⁴³ This requirement does not preclude a guilty plea without disclosure, for example, where the accused simply wishes to dispose of the charge as quickly as possible. Disclosure does not form a condition precedent to the entry of a guilty plea. However, an unrepresented accused must clearly indicate that he or she does not wish disclosure before a guilty plea is entered.⁴⁴

If an unrepresented accused indicates an intention to plead guilty to an offence for which there will likely be a significant jail term, counsel should suggest to the presiding judge that an adjournment may be in order to permit disclosure to the accused. However, an adjournment is not required as a matter of law and much will depend on the circumstances of each case, including whether the accused is in custody.

If there are reasonable grounds for concern that leaving disclosure materials with an unrepresented accused would jeopardize the safety, security, privacy interests, or result in the harassment of any person, Crown counsel may provide disclosure by means of controlled and supervised, yet adequate and private, access to the disclosure materials. Special care may be required where an unrepresented accused personally seeks access to evidence where the integrity of that evidence may be placed in issue at trial, e.g., the drug exhibit, taped private communications.

Counsel should ensure that, where disclosure is made to an unrepresented accused, it is made subject to conditions governing the appropriate uses and limits upon the use of disclosure material. In cases in which there are no sensitive disclosure materials, these basic conditions provide fair warning for accused persons that the disclosure material is not to be disseminated or used for purposes other than to assist them in making full answer and defence in the prosecution. Violations by an accused of the conditions (contained in a cover letter) would likely give rise to a Crown request to impose those conditions on the accused by court order. Any breach of the court order could be dealt with pursuant to the court's contempt powers. Counsel should be particularly mindful of the sensitivity of McNeil disclosure information, when dealing with self-represented accused persons.

In some cases, there may be sensitive disclosure materials, as well as some basic, non-sensitive, disclosure material. If the latter material can be separated from the rest of the disclosure it can be given to the accused with disclosure conditions. The sensitive portions of the disclosure could be dealt with by providing the accused either with access to the material in a private room in a police station or with the disclosure material subject to restrictive court-ordered conditions.⁴⁵

⁴³ The precise method by which the accused is informed of the availability of disclosure may vary from region to region. In some instances, the summons or appearance notice may provide this information. In others, Crown counsel may wish to provide the accused with a written or oral notification in court. In some regions, the judge presiding over first appearances may tell the accused that disclosure is available from the Crown.

⁴⁴ See section 3.1 on unrepresented accused in the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.7 Resolution Discussions".

Special care may also be required where an unrepresented accused is incarcerated. Incarcerated unrepresented accused persons are entitled to adequate and private access to disclosure materials under the control and supervision of custodial officials. Arrangements can be made with the jail to facilitate adequate and private electronic access to the disclosure materials.

Crown counsel must place a note on the Crown file concerning the nature, extent and timing of disclosure to an unrepresented accused, including any representations about disclosure made to the accused in court. This is especially important given the prospects of a Stinchcombe review of the decisions made by Crown counsel on the issue of disclosure.

4.4. Voluminous documentary evidence

In document heavy cases, counsel must particularly ensure that the disclosure provided to defence is well organized and capable of being searched. In other words, it must be reasonably accessible. As noted in Dunn,⁴⁶ “the greater the volume of material disclosed, the greater the need for organization and reasonable search capabilities”.

5. EXCLUSIONS

The Crown’s obligation to disclose is not absolute: only relevant information need be disclosed, and information which is relevant to the defence may be withheld on the basis of the existence of a legal privilege.⁴⁷

Where Crown counsel decides not to disclose relevant information on the grounds of privilege, defence counsel should be advised of the refusal, the basis of the refusal (i.e., type of privilege alleged) and the general nature of the information withheld to the extent possible. However, in some circumstances, even the acknowledgement that information exists (i.e., information related to international relations, national defence or security or information regarding a police informer or an ongoing police investigation) would cause the harm that the privilege is seeking to prevent. In such circumstances, counsel are expected to exercise good judgment and consult with their chief federal prosecutor to assess what is an appropriate course of action. If the fact of the existence of the privileged information cannot be disclosed, a stay of proceedings may be required.

⁴⁵ Due to the sensitive nature of the disclosure on some files, Crown counsel should consider whether or not it is appropriate to provide disclosure to an out-of-custody self-represented accused by disk, hard drive or other electronic storage device.

⁴⁶ R v Dunn, 2009 CanLII 75397 \(ONSC\) at para 59. See also Beaulieu c R, 2011 QCCS 639 \(CanLII\) at para 32.

⁴⁷ See Stinchcombe, supra note 1 at 340.

Where disclosure of information is delayed to protect the safety or security of witnesses pursuant to section 4.2 of this guideline or to complete an investigation pursuant to section 5.3, Crown counsel must disclose the information as soon as the justification for the delay in disclosure no longer exists. The fact that some disclosure is being delayed should be communicated to the defence without revealing the reason for the delay.

5.1. Police informers⁴⁸

Disclosure of information that may tend to identify a confidential police informer is not permitted. The Crown like the Court is under an obligation to protect the identity of a confidential police informer. The privilege cannot be waived unilaterally by the informant or by the Crown. This obligation is not limited to protecting the name of the informer: it extends to any information that may tend to reveal the identity of the person who provided information to the police. The vetting process must be done in close consultation with the police who are better placed to assess the degree of risk in unredacted information. The police informer privilege is subject to only one exception: where the accused's factual innocence is at stake.

5.2. Reply evidence

During trial, Crown counsel must disclose any previously undisclosed information in Crown counsel's possession, as soon as reasonably possible after it becomes apparent that the information is relevant. However, pre-trial disclosure is not required of reply evidence that could be tendered by the Crown in response to issues raised by the accused at trial, where the relevance of that evidence only becomes apparent during the course of the trial itself.⁴⁹

For example, Crown counsel is not generally required to disclose evidence in his or her possession regarding the accused's bad character. However, if the accused indicates that reliance will be placed on good character evidence in support of the defence advanced and the Crown becomes aware of information either rebutting or confirming the defence, the information must be promptly disclosed to the defence.⁵⁰ There is a general obligation to disclose any relevant information resulting from an investigation prompted by an accused's pre-trial disclosure of a defence.

⁴⁸ For a more complete discussion of this issue, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.11 Informer Privilege", supra note 2.

⁴⁹ Martin Committee Report, supra note 10 at 202. In general, the Crown's obligation is to adduce evidence that is relevant to an element of the offence that the Crown must prove, and not adduce evidence in chief to challenge a defence that an accused might possibly raise: R v Chaulk, [1990] 3 SCR 1303; (1990), 62 CCC (3d) 193 at 237 ff. Crown counsel cannot be expected to disclose information relevant to an issue not reasonably anticipated before trial. See also R v Wilson (1994), 87 CCC (3d) 115 (Ont CA).

⁵⁰ See R v Hutter (1993), 86 CCC (3d) 81 (Ont CA) at 89-90, leave to appeal to the SCC refused and Martin Committee Report, supra note 10 at 206.

5.3. On-going investigations

Information that may prejudice an ongoing police investigation should not be disclosed.⁵¹ It is important to note that the Crown may delay disclosure for this purpose but cannot refuse it, i.e., withhold disclosure for an indefinite period.

5.4. Investigative techniques

Information that may reveal confidential investigative techniques used by the police is generally protected from disclosure.

5.5. Cabinet confidences⁵²

Information that constitutes a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada pursuant to s. 39\(2\) of the *Canada Evidence Act*⁵³ must be protected from disclosure.

5.6. International relations/national security/national defence⁵⁴

Section 38 of the Canada Evidence Act creates a scheme for the protection of 'sensitive information' and 'potentially injurious information', as defined in that section, with respect to international relations, national defence or national security.

5.7. Solicitor-client privilege

Information protected by solicitor-client privilege⁵⁵ cannot be disclosed, subject to waiver or any of the exceptions.

⁵¹ See Stinchcombe, supra note 1 at 9 and 12; Martin Committee Report, supra note 10 at 214. Thus, in certain circumstances, Crown counsel may have to consider staying a charge in order to avoid the disclosure of information that would prejudice an ongoing investigation.

⁵² For a more complete discussion of this issue, see the PPSC Deskbook directives "4.1 Protecting Confidential Information under Section 37 of the Canada Evidence Act", "4.2 Protecting Confidential Information under Section 38 of the Canada Evidence Act" and "4.3 Protecting Cabinet Confidences under Section 39 of the Canada Evidence Act", supra note 2.

⁵³ RSC 1985, c C-5.

⁵⁴ Ibid.

⁵⁵ See R v Campbell, [1999] 1 SCR 565. See generally Smith v Jones, [1999] 1 SCR 455; Descôteaux v Mierzwiński, [1982] 1 SCR 860; Solosky v The Queen, [1980] 1 SCR 821; Idziak v Canada, [1992] 3 SCR 631; R v Creswell, [1998] BCJ No 1090 (QL). Note that solicitor-client privilege is waived where the police or the Crown rely on confidential legal advice to defend an abuse of process application even in circumstances where only the existence, and not the contents, of the advice is disclosed: Campbell, (ibid.).

5.8. Work product privilege⁵⁶

This privilege, whose object is to ensure the efficacy of the adversarial process, protects information or documents obtained or prepared for the dominant purpose of litigation, either anticipated or actual. Thus, Crown counsel generally need not disclose any internal notes, memoranda, correspondence or other materials generated by the Crown in preparation of the case for trial unless the work product contains material inconsistencies or additional facts not already disclosed to the defence.⁵⁷ As a general rule, work product applies to matters of opinion as opposed to matters of fact.⁵⁸ This privilege does not exempt disclosure of medical, scientific, or other experts' reports.⁵⁹ Unlike solicitor-client privilege, this privilege has a limited lifespan and comes to an end, absent closely related proceedings, upon the termination of the litigation that gave rise to the privilege.⁶⁰

6. DISCLOSURE COSTS

An accused person or his or her counsel shall not be charged a fee for 'basic disclosure' materials.⁶¹

"Basic disclosure" materials include the information, a synopsis, copies of witness statements or will-says, the Report to Crown Counsel, if one exists, and copies of documents, photographs and the like, that Crown counsel intends to introduce as exhibits in the Crown's case. Each accused is entitled to one copy of 'basic disclosure' materials. Where an accused person requests an additional copy or copies, the accused may be charged a reasonable fee for this service.⁶²

⁵⁶ Also referred to as 'litigation privilege'. See also section 3.17 of this guideline, regarding information obtained during witness interviews.

⁵⁷ O'Connor, supra note 9 at 45 (per L'Heureux-Dubé J.) and at 86 (per Major J.). However, the Crown is obliged to turn over drawings and statements made by witnesses to the prosecution during pre-trial interviews, if they are new or contain new information. See also the Martin Committee Report, supra note 10 at 251.

⁵⁸ Martin Committee Report, ibid at 252.

⁵⁹ Martin Committee Report, ibid at 252. But see R v Petersen (1997), 155 Sask R 133 (QB) where spreadsheets prepared by the police regarding different theories as to how the accused had committed a complex fraud were held to fall within the work product domain. See also R v Stewart, [1997] OJ No 924 (QL) where the court recognized police and Crown work product in a database of electronic documents.

⁶⁰ See Blank v Canada (Minister of Justice), [2006] 2 SCR 319.

⁶¹ Report of the Criminal Justice Review Committee, (Queen's Printer for Ontario, February 1999) at 48. See also the Martin Committee Report, supra note 10 at 272; R v Blencowe (1997), 118 CCC (3d) 529 (Ont Ct (Gen Div)) at 537. The rule here is two-pronged: documents and photographs that will form part of the Crown's case should be copied and provided to the accused at the expense of the government or the investigative agency. Documents the Crown does not intend to rely upon need not be copied, although upon request defence counsel should be provided with access to case exhibits not intended to be adduced at trial. See section 3.9 of this guideline regarding access to case exhibits.

⁶² Where defence counsel withdraws from the case, there is a professional obligation to pass disclosure on to new counsel representing the accused, or to return the disclosure to the Crown, if the disclosure

Costs associated with the preparation of copies of materials that are not part of ‘basic disclosure’, e.g., photographs that will not be introduced as exhibits by Crown counsel, should be considered on a case-by-case basis. In instances of unfocused or unreasonable requests involving substantial numbers of documents, it may be appropriate to shift the resource burden to the defence, by requiring that the costs be borne by the accused.⁶³ Failing agreement, simple access without copies may be provided.

7. FORM OF DISCLOSURE⁶⁴

Crown counsel may provide the defence with copies of documents that fall within the scope of ‘basic disclosure’ materials as defined in section 6 of this guideline in either a paper format (e.g., photocopies), an electronic format (e.g., by CD-ROM) or a web-based format. Where the accused is unrepresented, Crown counsel should use his/her judgment as to whether copies of such documents should be provided in a paper format.

Where disclosure is in one of the two official languages, it does not need to be translated.

conditions so direct. Accordingly, disclosure need not be copied a second time. Unusual situations should be discussed with the Chief Federal Prosecutor.

⁶³ Martin Committee Report, supra note 10 at 273.

⁶⁴ An accused is not entitled to insist upon a particular form of disclosure as a constitutional prerequisite: R v Blencowe, supra note 61 at 539. Nor does an accused have an absolute right to disclosure or production of original material: Stinchcombe, supra note 1. However, where the original is within the possession of either Crown counsel or the investigative agency, there is an obligation to allow the defence inspection of or access to the original.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.6 CONSULTATION WITHIN THE PUBLIC PROSECUTION SERVICE OF CANADA

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. ACCOUNTABILITY FOR THE PROSECUTION FUNCTION	2
3. THE PURPOSE OF CONSULTATION BETWEEN PPSC REGIONAL OFFICES AND HEADQUARTERS	3
4. THE ROLE OF THE HEADQUARTERS COUNSEL GROUP	4
4.1. Providing advice on prosecutions policy to the Director and Deputy Directors	7
5. CONSULTATION WITH HEADQUARTERS	8
6. CONSULTATION WITHIN AND BETWEEN REGIONAL OFFICES	9

1. INTRODUCTION

This guideline describes the consultation process within the Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC). More specifically, the guideline focuses on consultation between PPSC Regional Offices and Headquarters. Other guidelines describe the consultation process with other federal government departments that enforce federal statutes, with Department of Justice centres of expertise, and with investigative agencies.¹

2. ACCOUNTABILITY FOR THE PROSECUTION FUNCTION

The independence of the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP), and by extension Crown counsel, in exercising prosecutorial discretion free from partisan political influence is an important constitutional principle in Canada.² Crown counsel act independently of investigative agencies³ and other government departments.⁴ "Prosecutorial independence" is ultimately that of the DPP who is accountable to the courts and to the public for the

¹ For a discussion of the types and manner of consultation between prosecutors and investigators, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.7 Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies" and the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.3 Consultation within Government".

² For a more detailed discussion of this principle, see the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.1 Relationship between the Attorney General and the Director of Public Prosecutions" and the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.1 Independence and Accountability in Decision-Making"; see also Hon. Marc Rosenberg "The Attorney General and the Administration of Criminal Justice" (2009), 34 Queen's LJ 813.

³ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.7 Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies", supra note 1.

⁴ See the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.3 Consultation within Government", supra note 1 and the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.2 Duties and Responsibilities of Crown Counsel".

federal prosecution function. Individual Crown counsel are, in turn, accountable to the DPP. Additionally, while the Director of Public Prosecutions Act⁵ (DPP Act) creates the Office of the DPP (ODPP), the Attorney General of Canada remains the chief law officer of the Crown and is ultimately accountable to Parliament for the federal prosecution function. The DPP's role is distinct from that of the Attorney General; it entails closer oversight and more frequent involvement in files.

In acting as public prosecutors, Crown counsel exercise a delegated function on behalf of the DPP.⁶ The “independence” of the prosecutor is nothing more, but also nothing less, than the institutional independence of the Office of the DPP and ultimately of the Attorney General. Prosecutorial independence must be properly understood as flowing from the offices of the Attorney General and the DPP. For this reason, Crown counsel are accountable to the DPP and the DPP in turn to the Attorney General for their prosecutorial decision-making.⁷

Accountability in federal prosecutions is maintained through the hierarchical management structure within the PPSC. Crown counsel are directly accountable to their team leaders, Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutors (or General Counsel, Legal Operations) and Chief Federal Prosecutors (CFP), for the decisions which they make in prosecutions. The CFPs, in turn, are accountable to the Deputy DPPs who report to the DPP. The DPP is responsible for the manner in which the prosecution function is carried out on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada. The DPP performs the duties and functions set out in s. 3\(3\) of the DPP Act under and on behalf of the Attorney General.⁸ Finally, the Attorney General is answerable to Parliament for the decisions made on his or her behalf.

3. THE PURPOSE OF CONSULTATION BETWEEN PPSC REGIONAL OFFICES AND HEADQUARTERS

In some instances, prosecutorial decision-making, including the determination of whether the prosecution threshold has been met,⁹ whether or not charges should be stayed, or a

⁵ Director of Public Prosecutions Act, s 121 being Part 3 of the Federal Accountability Act, SC 2006, c 9 [DPP Act].

⁶ Section 9\(1\) of the DPP Act, supra note 5 permits the DPP to delegate prosecutorial functions to federal prosecutors.

⁷ For a good discussion of the relationship between the prosecutor and the DPP or Attorney General and the appropriate balance between prosecutorial independence and the right of the DPP to direct decision-making on the DPP's behalf, see Robert J. Frater Prosecutorial Misconduct (Aurora: Canada Law Book, 2009) at 9-15.

⁸ Section 16 of the DPP Act, supra note 5 requires the DPP to provide the Attorney General with an annual report not later than June 30 of every year. The Attorney General is then required to table that report in the Houses of Parliament within the first 15 sitting days immediately following receipt of the Report. The DPP's annual report to Parliament is a key mechanism for ensuring transparency and public accountability for federal prosecutions.

⁹ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute” for a discussion about the public interest criteria to be considered when deciding whether to prosecute.

particular position on sentence taken, requires consultation with those who can provide Crown counsel with additional relevant information and expertise.

For the purposes of this guideline, the term “consultation” is used to refer to (i) information briefings from a Regional Office to Headquarters regarding a particular matter, (ii) counsel in a Regional Office seeking advice or support from Headquarters counsel, (iii) Headquarters counsel consulting with Regional Offices regarding operational matters and matters of prosecution policy and (iv) informal consultation within regional offices.

Reciprocal consultation between PPSC Regional Offices and Headquarters counsel is essential for a number of reasons including the need to ensure:

- that the DPP, who is accountable for the prosecution function, is kept abreast of developments in PPSC prosecutions when appropriate (“briefing up”) and on cases that give rise to sustained, significant and/or anticipated media interest or public interest;
- that the Attorney General is briefed on cases of “general interest” requiring notice under s. 13 of the DPP Act;¹⁰
- coordinated and consistent national policy in discharging the DPP’s mandate;
- consistent positions in prosecutions across the country;
- effective legal risk management; and
- that CFPs and Crown counsel in the Regional Offices learn of cases of significant public interest, relevant legal precedents, and emerging legal issues or trends in other parts of the country and internationally.

Communicating a consistent and coordinated message to investigators and Crown counsel in respect of approaches to be applied in the interpretation of legislation, or to types of litigation, is a critical component of the DPP’s role. Achieving this consistency is a challenge that requires cooperation across the organization given that its services are delivered by hundreds of prosecutors across all regions of the country within a diversity of litigation environments.

4. THE ROLE OF THE HEADQUARTERS COUNSEL GROUP

The Headquarters Counsel Group comprises counsel within both the Drug, National Security and Northern Prosecutions Branch and the Regulatory and Economic Prosecutions Branch. Headquarters counsel focus on operational issues arising from federal prosecutions.

¹⁰ See the PPSC Deskbook directive “1.2 Duty to Inform the Attorney General under Section 13 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act”.

The work of the Group can be categorized as falling within one of three major areas:

- strategic direction, litigation risk management and support to particular types of litigation or cases;
- general support to frontline prosecutors; and
- support to the DPP, the Deputy DPPs, and to concerned federal departments and agencies.

For the Drug, National Security and Northern Prosecutions Branch, the Group's work includes issues related to the investigation and prosecution of offences under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act,¹¹ proceeds of crime/money-laundering cases, national security matters and Criminal Code prosecutions in the North. The Regulatory and Economic Prosecutions Branch focuses on Criminal Code capital market fraud cases and on all other federal offences such as those under the Competition Act,¹² the Income Tax Act,¹³ the Fisheries Act,¹⁴ the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act,¹⁵ the Canadian Environmental Protection Act,¹⁶ and the Copyright Act.¹⁷

Headquarters counsel have responsibility for the coordination of legal advice and the development of prosecutions policy for the ODPP. Along with the National Prosecution Policy Committee (NPPC) and the Major Prosecutions Advisory Committee (MPAC), counsel in this group help ensure consistency in the positions being advanced in federal prosecutions.¹⁸ They do this by tracking similar or related cases, coordinating positions,

¹¹ SC 1996, c 19.

¹² RSC 1985, c C-34.

¹³ RSC 1985, c 1 (5th Supp).

¹⁴ RSC 1985, c F-14.

¹⁵ SC 2001, c 27.

¹⁶ SC 1999, c 33.

¹⁷ RSC 1985, c C-42.

¹⁸ The mandates of these two committees are as follows:

The Major Prosecutions Advisory Committee serves as a senior advisory body whose members have specialized expertise in major prosecutions. The Committee ensures consistency of PPCS approaches regarding major prosecutions throughout the country, including in respect of work done by agents. To this end, the Committee:

- Reviews and recommends for approval by the Deputy DPP prosecution plans for major prosecutions cases;
- Identifies regional practices or approaches that may be of national interest and makes recommendations for their broader diffusion;
- Makes recommendations regarding the need for prosecution policies or practice directives in respect of the management of major prosecutions; and
- Reviews any national policies and practice directives regarding major prosecutions.

developing practice directives, collaborating with regional counsel in the development of facts to address evolving or novel areas of the law, and advising on implementation and interpretation of significant pieces of new legislation affecting federal prosecutors.

Their responsibilities, in ensuring DPP accountabilities and that Headquarters is a useful resource centre for Crown counsel in the regions, for investigative agencies and for senior management, include:

- Offering subject-matter expertise;
- Providing specific prosecution-related advice to Crown counsel, federal investigative agencies, and Department of Justice legal service units;
- Offering coordination and strategic direction, litigation risk management and litigation support to frontline prosecutors conducting litigation that is of national interest, by virtue of the significance of issues being litigated, the magnitude of a case, the emergence of a particular issue nationally, or because of a novel constitutional challenge;
- Ensuring that the DPP and Deputy DPPs are kept informed of cases of importance, which include, but are not limited to those:
 - with novel, complex and/or constitutional legal issues;
 - where there is a national or regional interest in the outcome;
 - where federal legislation is attacked;
 - where the investigative agency's policies, practices or enforcement powers are challenged;
 - where there is significant public or media interest;¹⁹
 - where there is potential for a negative judicial ruling or comment against a Crown counsel personally or the PPSC generally, or a step by the prosecution;

The National Prosecution Policy Committee serves as a senior advisory and decision-making body on matters that affect PPSC nationally and which are not related to a specific on-going prosecution, investigation, appeal or intervention. More specifically, the Committee:

- Reviews proposed confidential advice and guidelines to federal prosecutors and makes recommendations for the Deputy DPP and the DPP approval regarding such directives;
- Occasionally examines legal issues that are not contemplated for a formal practice directive, but for which its views are sought;
- Considers and recommends for the Deputy DPP and the DPP approval revisions to the PPSC Deskbook;
- Monitors emerging trends in federal prosecution practice and makes recommendations as to how the PPSC should adjust to such trends; and
- Provides a forum for resolution of divergent views on legal issues so as to ensure consistency in the arguments advanced by Crown counsel or agents on behalf of the DPP.

¹⁹ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.9 Communications with the Media”.

- Developing policy with respect to prosecutorial operational issues;
- Liaising and facilitating communication with counsel in the Department of Justice, departmental enforcement officers and investigative agencies on non-case specific matters;²⁰
- Providing prosecutorial perspective and advice on criminal law policy development;
- Providing input on legislative, enforcement and funding initiatives of other departments as these relate to and impact upon prosecutions; and
- Recommending direct indictments and other statutory consent matters.

4.1. Providing advice on prosecutions policy to the DPP and Deputy DPPs

As mentioned, the DPP is ultimately accountable to the public and to the courts for the conduct of Crown counsel who act in his or her name. Yet, because of the sheer volume of cases it would be impracticable for the DPP to be directly involved in all federal prosecutions. The DPP does not typically become involved in routine matters. However, the DPP may become involved in a prosecution matter because the nature of the matter requires closer monitoring of the exercise of prosecutorial discretion for which the DPP is accountable. Some examples of the types of cases that would warrant closer monitoring are listed in the bullets under heading 6.5. Additionally, the DPP may become involved in a prosecution matter because of a statutory consent requirement. For example, the DPP's consent is required to prefer a direct indictment and to institute proceedings in respect of certain types of offences.²¹

When the DPP or a Deputy DPP is involved in the decision-making on a prosecution file, they rely on both regional counsel and Headquarters counsel for advice. In this capacity, Headquarters counsel add a national perspective to a legal issue and, because of their coordination role, in some cases they may be aware of particular interests of other government departments and agencies. Headquarters counsel normally respond to requests for advice from the DPP and Deputy DPPs. Requests for information from Headquarters counsel to the regions are in effect requests from the DPP or a Deputy DPP. Regional offices will normally prepare the materials outlining the nature of the case and key considerations, and may receive requests for additional information or, on occasion, be required to provide some of the original documents upon which their recommendation is made.

²⁰ See the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.3 Consultation within Government", supra note 1.

²¹ For the list of matters requiring DPP consent or some form of delegated consent, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.5 Delegated Decision-Making".

5. CONSULTATION WITH HEADQUARTERS

Whether or not counsel in PPSC Regional Offices should consult with PPSC Headquarters respecting a particular prosecution will necessarily involve an exercise in judgment. When in doubt, counsel should seek the advice of their Associate or CFP at the earliest opportunity. On some occasions, consultation is mandatory; on others, while not mandatory, counsel may wish to consult PPSC Headquarters.

The following are examples of the types of files on which Crown counsel must consult with Headquarters counsel:

- Cases involving terrorism offences or that otherwise have a national security aspect;
- Cases having precedential value in terms of sentence or legal argument;
- Cases having novel legal arguments;
- Large scale complex prosecutions;²²
- Cases that give rise to sustained, significant and/or anticipated media interest;
- Regulatory prosecutions of a large magnitude, that are complex or that raise issues of national importance or novel issues;
- International assistance requests in respect of proceeds of crime targeting property that, if seized/blocked/forfeited in Canada, would require an undertaking or the approval of the Deputy DPP; and
- Proposals to depart from the PPSC Deskbook.

The following are examples of the types of files on which Crown counsel may wish to consult with Headquarters counsel:

- Legal advice on non case-specific files;
- Proposed decisions respecting appeals to provincial and territorial courts of appeal;²³ and
- Proposed plea resolutions that are especially sensitive including homicide prosecutions wherein the Crown is agreeing to a plea on a lesser count than that which was charged or where there is to be a joint position on sentence;

²² Normally, cases of this nature will be brought to the attention of the Major Prosecution Advisory Committee; see the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.1 Major Case Management”.

²³ On routine matters, Crown counsel in the regions should simply inform Headquarters of proposed appeals.

Crown counsel should bring to the attention of Headquarters counsel all such cases at the earliest reasonable opportunity.²⁴ Crown counsel need not consult on more routine prosecutions unless they require advice or precedents.

Crown counsel may contact one of designated subject-matter experts in the Headquarters Counsel Group. Where there is no identified subject-matter expert, counsel in the PPSC Regional Offices should contact the Headquarters Counsel Regional Contact.

6. CONSULTATION WITHIN AND BETWEEN REGIONAL OFFICES

Consultation encompasses not only horizontal consultation within the PPSC and across government, but also includes consultation locally with one's direct colleagues in a particular regional office and between regional offices. Crown counsel should consult regularly with their regional office colleagues. In fact, Crown counsel are not only entitled to consult on difficult questions, they are expected to consult with colleagues who have more experience or who may have grappled with similar issues in the past. Crown counsel should bear in mind that they are not alone, and that consultation does not mean abdication of prosecutorial independence. For example, divining the public interest in cases involving complex social issues can be a challenging task, particularly in the regulatory and economic field. The lone Crown counsel should consult colleagues on such matters.

CFPs are encouraged to develop policies for their offices regarding the types of matters that require consultation in their regional office and the appropriate consultation mechanisms for that office.

²⁴ Crown prosecutors should bring to the attention of a counsel from the Headquarters Counsel Group a criminal, regulatory or economic prosecution that is large-scale, complex or that involves novel issues.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.7 RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN CROWN COUNSEL AND INVESTIGATIVE AGENCIES

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. ROLE OF LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES AND INVESTIGATIVE AGENCIES: THE AUTHORITY TO INVESTIGATE AND TO LAY CHARGES	3
2.1. The common law principle	3
2.2. Statutory exceptions.....	3
3. ROLE OF CROWN COUNSEL BEFORE AND AFTER CHARGES ARE LAID..	4
3.1. Introduction.....	4
3.2. Statutory involvement before charges are laid.....	5
3.3. Non-statutory involvement	6
3.3.1. Advice concerning the operational plan	6
3.3.2. Immunity agreements –Investigative assistance agreements.....	6
3.3.3. Preparation of search warrant material	6
3.3.4. Access to sealed packets	7
3.3.5. Extensions of the time periods seized items may be detained	7
3.3.6. Preparation of the Crown Brief.....	8
3.3.7. Disclosure management	8
3.3.8. Interviewing potential witnesses before charges are laid	9
3.4. Charge review	10
3.5. After charges are laid	10
4. RESOLVING DISAGREEMENTS BETWEEN CROWN COUNSEL AND INVESTIGATORS ON WHETHER TO PROCEED	11

1. INTRODUCTION

Administration of criminal justice is a continuum. At one end, the police investigate criminal offences and arrange for suspected offenders to appear in court. At the other, Crown counsel are responsible for presenting the Crown's case in court. Their roles are interdependent. While both have separate responsibilities in the criminal justice system, they must inevitably work in cooperation to administer and enforce criminal laws effectively. As the Supreme Court of Canada has stated, "the proper functioning of the criminal justice system requires (...) that all actors involved be able to exercise their judgment in performing their respective duties, even though one person's discretion may overlap with that of another person."¹

This guideline describes the respective responsibilities of the investigative agencies and of Crown counsel, emphasizing the role of each in the administration of justice. It should be read in conjunction with the Public Prosecution Service of Canada's (PPSC) service standards.

¹ [R v Beaudry, 2007 SCC 5, \[2007\] 1 SCR 190](#) at para 48.

2. ROLE OF LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES AND INVESTIGATIVE AGENCIES: THE AUTHORITY TO INVESTIGATE AND TO LAY CHARGES

2.1. The common law principle

Maintaining the independence of law enforcement agencies from direct political control is fundamental to our system of criminal justice. Under the common law, the police could not be directed by the Executive or by Parliament to start an investigation, much less lay charges. As one former Ontario Attorney General said, "No one can tell an officer to take an oath which violates his conscience and no one can tell an officer to refrain from taking an oath which he is satisfied reflects a true state of facts".² In R v Metropolitan Police Commissioner, ex parte Blackburn,³ Lord Denning described the principle in this way:

I hold it to be the duty of the Commissioner of Police, as it is of every chief constable, to enforce the law of the land. He must take steps so to post his men that crimes may be detected; and that honest citizens may go about their affairs in peace. He must decide whether or not suspected persons are to be prosecuted; and, if need be, bring the prosecution or see that it is brought; but in all these things he is not the servant of anyone, save of the law itself. No Minister of the Crown can tell him that he must, or must not, keep observation on this place or that; or that he must, or must not, prosecute this man or that one. Nor can any police authority tell him so. The responsibility for law enforcement lies on him. He is answerable to the law and to the law alone.

2.2. Statutory exceptions

For certain offences under the Criminal Code (Code) and other federal statutes, for example, corruption of judicial officers⁴ or offences on territorial seas,⁵ war crimes,⁶ the Canada Labour Code,⁷ the Canada Human Rights Act,⁸ terrorism offences and offences

² Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Police Discretionary Powers in a Democratically Responsive Society, vol 41, no 12 (Ottawa: RCMP Gazette, 1978) at 5-6.

³ [1968] 1 All ER 763 at 769 (CA).

⁴ Criminal Code, s 119.

⁵ Ibid, s 477.2.

⁶ Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act, SC 2000, c 24, s 9(3).

⁷ RSC 1985, c L-2.

⁸ RSC 1985, c H-6; see the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.5 Delegated Decision-Making" for a more complete list.

against non-Canadians committed outside of Canada, the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP)⁹ or minister of the Crown is required to lay an information.

3. ROLE OF CROWN COUNSEL BEFORE AND AFTER CHARGES ARE LAID

3.1. Introduction

Crown counsel and investigative agencies play complementary roles in the criminal process. They both have roles to play before and after charges are laid.

While the involvement of the Crown is not required at the pre-judicial stage, the practice is increasingly common. The authors Michael Code and Patrick Lesage have noted this phenomenon and explained it as follows:

There has been a natural evolution towards much closer police and Crown pre-charge collaboration over the past 20 to 30 years. As noted above, criminal procedure had become much more complex than it was in an earlier era. Police investigative procedures are now the subject of pre-trial motions to determine whether there has been a Charter violation, whether evidence will be admitted under the new "principled approach" and whether a statutory process, such as a wiretap authorization or search warrant, has been properly followed. The police have increasingly turned to Crown counsel for pre-charge legal advice in order to navigate these difficult waters... It is simply not feasible in the modern era to expect the police and Crown to work in entirely separate silos, as they once did.¹⁰

Cooperation and consultation between law enforcement agencies and the Crown are essential to the proper administration of justice, since investigators must gather evidence that is both admissible and relevant. Later, when deciding whether to prosecute, consultation becomes useful for assessing the sufficiency of the evidence and the public interest criteria.¹¹ This cooperation is even more important in complex cases.

Accordingly, Crown counsel should be available for consultation during an investigation and before charges are laid. This will encourage investigators to ask for advice. In complex cases, Crown counsel may be required to work closely with the police to identify and collect cogent and relevant evidence. However, this does not mean that Crown counsel must take on the work of the investigators. At the end of an investigation, the role of Crown counsel is to give the investigators a fair and objective assessment of the quality of the evidence and the appropriateness of proceeding. In conducting this assessment, counsel must be vigilant and take care to avoid "tunnel vision", meaning the loss of the ability to conduct an objective assessment of the case through contact with the investigators.¹²

⁹ Under s 3\(3\) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9 this power to initiate prosecutions was delegated by the Attorney General to the DPP, who exercises this power independently "under and on behalf of the Attorney General".

¹⁰ Ministry of the Attorney General of Ontario, Report of the Review of Large and Complex Criminal Case Procedures, (Toronto: 2008) at 25 (Hon. Patrick Lesage and Prof. Michael Code).

¹¹ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.3 Decision to Prosecute".

3.2. Statutory involvement before charges are laid

In some instances, Crown counsel become involved in an investigation because of statutory requirements. These include:

- Obtaining wiretap authorizations pursuant to s. 186 of the Code;
- Obtaining special search warrants and restraint orders pursuant to ss. 462.32 and 462.33 of the Code regarding suspected proceeds of crime;¹³
- Obtaining restraint orders pursuant to s. 14 of the *Controlled Drugs and Substances Act*¹⁴ regarding suspected proceeds of crime;
- Obtaining management orders pursuant to s. 490.81 of the Code, s. 14.1 of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, and in certain circumstances, s. 6 of the Seized Property Management Act;¹⁵
- Obtaining orders for the disclosure of tax information pursuant to s. 462.48 of the Code;
- Enforcing orders on behalf of foreign governments or the Government of Canada when property is found abroad, for the seizure, restraint or forfeiture of offence-related property or proceeds of crime pursuant to s. 9.3 of the Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters Act.¹⁶

In all these situations, Crown counsel may assist in preparing the necessary materials and making the application to court, where applicable.

¹² The concept of "tunnel vision" is discussed extensively in: FPT Heads of Prosecution Committee, Report of the Working Group on the Prevention of Miscarriages of Justice, c 4 (Ottawa: Justice Canada, 2004). The 2011 update to this report, The Path to Justice: Preventing Wrongful Convictions, is available on the PPSC internet site. For more detailed guidance on this issue, see also the PPSC Deskbook directive "2.4 Prevention of Wrongful Convictions".

¹³ Section 462.331 of the Criminal Code also provides that if a management order is needed with respect to property seized under s 462.32 of the Criminal Code or restrained under s 462.33 of the Criminal Code, the application is to be made by the Attorney General or a person acting with the written consent of the Attorney General. For more details, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline "5.3 Proceeds of Crime".

¹⁴ SC 1996, c 19.

¹⁵ SC 1993, c 37.

¹⁶ RSC 1985, c 30 (4th Supp).

3.3. Non-statutory involvement

Crown counsel can provide a wide range of assistance to investigators. In most non-statutory roles, Crown counsel play a supporting role by providing advice to ensure the rule of law.

3.3.1. Advice concerning the operational plan

The police have complete autonomy to decide whom to investigate and for what suspected crimes. They also have the discretion to decide how to structure the investigation and which investigative tools and techniques to use.

However, prior to undertaking an investigation or in its early stages, investigators may wish to consult with Crown counsel for advice and guidance as to how the investigation should be structured to ensure a sustainable prosecution. It is best to make structural decisions early in the investigation, rather than waiting until it is too late to take corrective action. For example, if the operational plan contemplates an investigation of a large criminal organization, it may be prudent to consult Crown counsel prior to undertaking the investigation. Decisions can be made early in the investigation that may assist in developing a case that can be put before the courts in an effective manner.

3.3.2. Immunity agreements – Investigative assistance agreements

Crown counsel must be involved in the granting of immunity from prosecution, and any agreement must be in writing.¹⁷

3.3.3. Preparation of search warrant material

Although investigators may apply for certain judicial authorizations without the advice of Crown counsel, Crown counsel can provide advice when requested to do so.

Crown counsel may give advice on various types of warrants and orders,¹⁸ including:

- General warrants;
- Tracking warrants;
- Dialled number recorder warrants;
- DNA warrants;
- Production orders pursuant to ss. 487.012 and 487.013 of the Code; and
- Search warrants to be executed in law offices.

¹⁷ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.3 Immunity Agreements”.

¹⁸ In some jurisdictions, judges only meet with investigators in the presence of Crown counsel. In those jurisdictions, Crown counsel will appear with the investigator.

Crown counsel should be prepared to advise whether a judicial authorization is required, what judicial authorization is required, whether the threshold for the application is met, and whether a publication is appropriate. Normally the police draft the materials in support of a judicial authorization. Only exceptionally will Crown counsel be involved.

3.3.4. Access to sealed packets

In some cases, investigators will obtain an order to seal a search warrant and supporting materials. Occasionally, either the subject of the search or the media may apply for access to the sealed materials. Crown counsel may appear on those applications.

The decision as to whether the sealing order should continue or whether to allow a partial disclosure of information is made jointly by investigators and Crown counsel.

3.3.5. Extensions of the time periods seized items may be detained

Investigations are becoming more complex, and investigators often need to extend the time seized items may be detained or retained under s. 490\(2\) of the Code. In many cases, the investigation may continue for a lengthy time after the search.

The Criminal Code provides for three stages of detention:

1. The first three months - ordered by the justice who receives the Form 5.2 report;¹⁹
2. The next nine months;²⁰ or
3. A period longer than one year from the date of seizure.²¹

Section 490 allows Crown counsel or a peace officer to present applications for detention. In the vast majority of cases, peace officers are able to deal with these applications without the involvement of Crown counsel. However, in some cases, the application to extend can be a very complex procedure. Issues regarding the protection of ongoing investigations, informers and other related issues may arise. The individual subject to the search may attempt to use the detention hearing as a means of gaining access to the investigation file long before charges are laid.

Crown counsel may play a role in these hearings, in particular by:

- Reviewing the affidavit prepared by investigators or participating in its preparation (even where Crown counsel will not appear at the hearing);
- Providing advice to investigators concerning the type of information to detain or to return;²² or ¹⁹ Criminal Code, s 490\(1\)\(b\).

²⁰ Ibid., s 490\(2\).

²¹ Ibid., s 490\(3\).

- Appearing at contested hearings, where it is anticipated that complex issues will arise.²³

3.3.6. Preparation of the Crown brief

The Crown brief is one of the most important documents an investigator will prepare during an investigation.²⁴ It is through this brief that the investigator presents his or her theory of the case and demonstrates the existing evidence to prove that theory.

Crown counsel may assist in the preparation of the brief in a number of ways, including:

- Providing advice on how to structure the brief during the planning stages;
- Providing advice on areas of the brief that should be improved or corrected, in particular, evidence collected to establish grounds regarding the commission of the offence; and
- Providing advice on the use of electronic briefs.

3.3.7. Disclosure management

Except in the most routine cases, disclosure management is key to an effective prosecution. Unless planning and thought is given to developing a disclosure strategy and incorporating it into the operational plan, significant obstacles may arise and prevent the court from hearing the case in a timely manner.

Crown counsel may assist in disclosure management in various ways, including providing advice on:

- the general obligations to disclose as set out in the case law;
- the structure of the disclosure management strategy to ensure that the materials generated and collected by the investigators are presented in a form that meets prosecution needs and legal requirements;
- issues of privilege (for example, police informer privilege) and editing;
- the scope of disclosure that is required in a particular case; and
- the application of the decision in R v McNeil²⁵.

²² The assistance Crown counsel may provide is determined to a large extent by the status of the investigation. If the case is in its early stages, it may be difficult to determine what is relevant and what is not.

²³ Crown counsel would appear in most cases where the application is brought in the superior court. When the case proceeds to another court, Crown counsel's appearance will depend on the nature of the case.

²⁴ The Report to Crown Counsel/Crown Brief (RTCC/CB) guide explains the PPSC's national approach regarding the RTCC/CB and outlines our expectations of the police. It is not about the format the RTCC/CB is to be provided, but on its substantive content.

3.3.8. Interviewing potential witnesses before charges are laid

Generally, Crown counsel do not participate in the interviewing of witnesses before charges are laid.²⁶ Crown counsel assess potential evidence by reviewing the Crown brief,²⁷ documentary evidence and videotaped witness statements.

However, in some circumstances, it may be appropriate for Crown counsel to interview a witness before charges are laid. In these situations, the investigator or the Crown witness coordinator normally should be present during the interview. Situations in which such involvement may be appropriate include:

- Where the prosecution will depend on witnesses with unsavoury backgrounds, such as police agents or jailhouse informers. Given issues of credibility that arise with such witnesses, it is generally prudent to conduct an examination before charges are laid;²⁸
- Where the prosecution will depend on witnesses who may be reluctant to testify, given their lack of familiarity with the court system or the nature of the offence committed. For example, in cases of sexual assaults or in those involving young children, it may be appropriate for Crown counsel to meet with the witness to explain the process and the safeguards for the witness. In these cases, caution must be exercised to avoid Crown counsel taking on the role of investigator, rather than simply providing the witness additional information about the process;²⁹
- Where the case involves particularly problematic Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms issues that require closer examination of the evidence;
- To interview a wiretap application affiant prior to approving the charges; and
- Where there is a statutory requirement for the Crown to consent to the laying of charges;³⁰ and
- When taking « KGB » statements.³¹

²⁵ 2009 SCC 3, [2009] 1 SCR 66.

²⁶ One of the reasons for this is that if the purpose of the interview is to assess the person's credibility, it may be difficult to accurately assess how that person will come across when testifying in the more stressful context of the courtroom. On this, see [R v Regan, 2002 SCC 12, \[2002\] 1 SCR 297](#) [Regan].

²⁷ See PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”, supra note 11.

²⁸ See procedure established for “jailhouse informers” set out in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.3 Immunity Agreements”, supra note 17.

²⁹ See generally, the PPSC Deskbook directive “5.6 Victims of Crime”.

³⁰ As set out in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.5 Delegated Decision-Making”, supra note 8.

³¹ [R v B\(KG\), \[1993\] 1 SCR 740, 79 CCC \(3d\) 257](#) at 299.

3.4. Charge review

During the investigation, investigators are not only entitled, but are encouraged to consult with Crown counsel about the evidence, the offence and proof of the case in court. At the end of the investigation, investigators are again entitled (and strongly encouraged in difficult cases) to consult with Crown counsel on the laying of charges. This consultation might include discussions about the strength of the case and the form and content of proposed charges. Ultimately, however, the police have the discretion at law to commence any prosecution according to their best judgment, subject to statutory requirements for the consent of the Attorney General, and the authority of the Attorney General to stay proceedings if charges are laid.

In practice, a form of pre-charge screening or "charge approval" occurs in Quebec, New Brunswick and British Columbia. Under these systems, charges can be laid only if Crown counsel reviews and approves them.³²

When the DPP chooses to participate in a process of pre-charge approval of charges, the DPP will apply the charge approval standard established in the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.3 Decision to Prosecute" to all proceedings proposed to be commenced at the instance of the Government of Canada. Consideration should be given to whether counsel who advises the investigative agency during the investigation (the pre-charge advisory Crown) should be different from counsel who conducts the screening process (the pre-charge approval or screening Crown). There is no iron clad rule in this respect. Factors to consider in making this decision include the effective and efficient prosecution of the matter, the orderly transition of the file, the length of time and extent of involvement of the pre-charge Crown counsel, the need to avoid preconceived notions, exclusion if called as a witness, and the value of fresh eyes assessing the case.

3.5. After charges are laid

Generally, just as peace officers are independent from political control when laying charges, Crown counsel are independent from the police in the conduct of prosecutions.³³ Crown counsel's independence applies, for example, to assessing the strength of the case,³⁴ electing the mode of trial,³⁵ providing disclosure to the accused,³⁶ assessing the witnesses (including decisions about immunity from prosecution),³⁷ deciding how to ³² Discretion to Prosecute Inquiry, Commissioner's Report (British-Columbia, Ministry of the Attorney General of British-Columbia, 1990) (Chair: Stephen Owen) at p 25; Royal Commission into the Prosecution of Donald Marshall, Jr., Inquiry Report, vol 1 at 232.1, D Geoffrey Cowper, QC "A Criminal Justice System for the 21st Century" Final Report of the BC Justice Reform Initiative to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General Honourable Shirley Bond, August 27, 2012).

³³ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.1 Independence and Accountability in Decision-Making".

³⁴ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.3 Decision to Prosecute", supra note 11.

³⁵ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.10 Elections and Re-elections".

³⁶ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.5 Principles of Disclosure".

³⁷ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.3 Immunity Agreements", supra note 17.

present the evidence,³⁸ negotiating and repudiating plea agreements,³⁹ and deciding if the public interest warrants continuing or staying a prosecution.⁴⁰

When charges are laid, full responsibility for the proceedings shifts to the DPP. The police must, on request, carry out further investigations that counsel believes are necessary to present the case fairly and effectively in court. The DPP also has the authority to control the proceedings after charges are laid. This authority extends to conditions of bail, staying or withdrawing charges and representations on sentencing. This role should, whenever reasonably possible, be carried out in consultation with the investigators, but the consultation (much less agreement) is not required by law.

4. RESOLVING DISAGREEMENTS BETWEEN CROWN COUNSEL AND INVESTIGATORS ON WHETHER TO PROCEED

In cases where a disagreement between investigators and Crown counsel on whether to lay charges or not occurs, the issue should be resolved according to any existing agreements between the two organizations or through discussions at successively more senior levels on both sides.

The decision whether a case should commence or continue should be made at the regional level. Disagreements should be referred to the team leader and then, if necessary, to the Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutor (or General Counsel, Legal Operations) and to the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP). When the unresolved disagreement is between a Crown agent and the police, the matter should be referred to the agent supervisor at the regional office. If the issue cannot be resolved at this level, it should be referred to the CFP.

In rare circumstances, senior managers at PPSC Headquarters may need to review a case in which there is a disagreement. The CFP should refer the case to the appropriate Deputy DPP for assessment.

³⁸ [R v Cook, \[1997\] 1 SCR 1113](#).

³⁹ [R v Nixon, 2011 SCC 34, \[2011\] 2 SCR 566](#).

⁴⁰ Criminal Code, s 579; see also the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”, supra note 11.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.8 CONTACTS WITH THE COURTS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. OBJECTIVE	2
3. GUIDELINES.....	3
3.1. Business or personal relationships with judges and judicial officers	3
3.2. Improper attempts to influence a judge or judicial officer	3
3.3. Communicating with judges or judicial officers in contested matters.....	3
3.4. Meetings in relation to administrative matters.....	3
3.5. Referral to the Chief Federal Prosecutors	3

1. INTRODUCTION

The principle of judicial independence is a pillar of our justice system.¹ As a result, Crown counsel must be careful and sensitive when in contact with courts and judges. Counsel, moreover, must be aware of the implications of their unique functions and the concomitant importance of avoiding remarks that would give rise to a suggestion that they have attempted to influence improperly or pressure the judiciary. Most of the time, common sense and professional integrity will be a sufficient guide.

However, ambiguous and complex situations arise. When this occurs, it may be necessary to refer the matter to the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) who will ensure that proper action, if any, is taken, including referring the matter to the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP).

2. OBJECTIVE

The purpose of this guideline is to help Public Prosecutions Service of Canada (PPSC) officials avoid situations that could give the impression that the PPSC or its prosecutors are improperly attempting to influence or exert pressure on the courts or judges. While all lawyers must be sensitive to the propriety of their contacts with the courts and their relationship with the judiciary, and are expected to act in accordance with their law society codes of conduct, Crown counsel and other PPSC employees, as representatives of the DPP, are in a unique position that requires particular caution in their dealings with the courts.

¹ For a thorough discussion of the principle of judicial independence and the rules of conduct that counsel must follow in order to uphold that principle, see generally [Canada \(Minister of Citizenship and Immigration\) v Tobiass, \[1997\] 3 SCR 391](#) at paras 67ff, 118 CCC (3d) 443.

3. GUIDELINES

3.1. Business or personal relationships with judges and judicial officers

Crown counsel shall not appear before a judge or judicial officer when he or she has a business or personal relationship with that person that might reasonably be perceived to affect the impartiality of Crown counsel, the judge or the officer.

3.2. Improper attempts to influence a judge or judicial officer

Crown counsel shall not attempt, or knowingly allow anyone else to attempt, to influence the decisions or actions of a judge or judicial officer, directly or indirectly, except by legitimate means of open persuasion as an advocate.

3.3. Communicating with judges or judicial officers in contested matters

Crown counsel shall not communicate, directly or indirectly, with a judge or any judicial officer except

- in open court;
- with the consent of, or in the presence of, the other parties or their respective counsel;
- in writing, provided a copy is given at the same time to the other parties or their respective counsel; or
- in ex parte matters, as permitted by law.

3.4. Meetings in relation to administrative matters

In discussing with judges, judicial officers, and other court officials matters of government policy that could affect the administration of the courts, Crown counsel shall conduct themselves so as to avoid any possible suggestion that they are improperly attempting to influence or exert pressure on the courts or individual judges in the exercise of their judicial functions.

3.5. Referral to the Chief Federal Prosecutors

Where there is doubt about whether a particular contact or action involving a judge or judicial officer is appropriate, counsel shall consult with the CFP.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.9 COMMUNICATIONS WITH THE MEDIA

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. STATEMENT OF POLICY	3
3. HANDLING MEDIA ENQUIRIES	3
4. EXPLAINING PROSECUTORIAL DECISION-MAKING	4
5. TYPES OF COMMUNICATION	4
5.1. Contacts initiated by the media.....	4
5.2. Contacts initiated by Crown counsel	4
5.3. Media requests requiring consultation	5
5.4. Social media.....	5
5.5. Communications before charges are laid.....	5
5.6. Investigative agency news releases.....	6
5.7. Communicating with the media in one's personal capacity	6
6. GUIDING PRINCIPLES	6
7. SPECIFIC DIRECTION	7
7.1. Provision of factual information	7
7.2. Information which cannot be provided	8

1. INTRODUCTION

An informed public is an essential element of a transparent, fair and equitable justice system. By providing accurate and timely information on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP), Crown counsel can help ensure that citizens have a fair opportunity to determine whether the justice system is functioning effectively. Access to full and accurate information on court proceedings, in effect, enhances public confidence in the administration of justice.

As set out in s. 3\(3\)\(e\) of the *Director of Public Prosecutions Act*¹ (DPP Act), the DPP may communicate with the media and the public on all matters that involve the initiation and conduct of prosecutions. This authority is delegated to Crown counsel, who are accountable for the cases and proceedings in which they are involved.² Crown counsel should be accessible and responsive to the media and the public regarding the cases they prosecute. They are the Public Prosecution Service of Canada's (PPSC) spokespersons and the first point of contact in respect of specific prosecutions assigned to them. Crown counsel are considered to be “authorized spokespersons” within the meaning of s. 8.17 of the PPSC Code of Conduct “on cases for which they are responsible”.³

¹ Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9 [DPP Act].

² Responsibility is delegated by virtue of s 9\(1\) of the DPP Act, supra note 1. For a brief discussion of Crown counsel's delegated responsibilities, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.2 Duties and Responsibilities of Crown Counsel".

This guideline applies to contacts initiated by the media and to contacts initiated by Crown counsel.

2. STATEMENT OF POLICY

The PPSC’s media communications policy is founded upon three cornerstone principles: accessibility, transparency and responsiveness. The PPSC strives to enhance public understanding of, and confidence in, the administration of justice by providing accurate and relevant information in a timely manner. Subject to the overriding duty to the administration of justice to ensure that trials are fair, Crown counsel shall provide the media with timely, complete and accurate information on matters relating to the administration of criminal justice in which they are involved.

It must be recognized, however, that in their role as “ministers of justice”,⁴ Crown counsel have a responsibility to relate to the media and the public in a manner that is courteous, dispassionate, free from provocative rhetoric. In making a public statement, Crown counsel must ensure that the privacy interest of third parties are protected, that common law and statutory confidentiality obligations are respected, including publication bans, and that the fair trial rights of an accused are not jeopardized.

3. HANDLING MEDIA ENQUIRIES

Crown counsel should, on cases for which they are responsible, make reasonable efforts to respond directly to media enquiries relating to court proceedings in relation to routine matters (e.g. scheduling), questions relating to the status of a prosecution or appeal and matters of criminal procedure.

When in doubt about any aspect of a media inquiry, including the reasonableness of the request or how to handle a particular media inquiry, Crown counsel should seek the advice of the Communications Group and consult with their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP). Crown counsel may also simply refer calls to the Communications Group, which has a coordinating role in these matters. Referring the inquiry to the Communications Group will often be advisable when for example: a) the matter is particularly controversial; b) a PPSC spokesperson has already handled media inquiries regarding the same subject; c) Crown counsel is under time constraints, or d) there are security concerns in the case, for example, for the personal safety of Crown counsel.

³ Section 8.17, Publicly Commenting for the PPSC states that “Only authorized spokespersons may issue statements or comments on the PPSC’s position on a given subject. PPSC prosecutors are authorized to act as spokespersons on cases for which they are responsible. If asked for the PPSC’s position, employees who are not spokespersons must refer the inquiries to their manager or to the Communications Group.”

⁴ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.2 Duties and Responsibilities of Crown Counsel”, supra note 2.

4. EXPLAINING PROSECUTORIAL DECISION-MAKING

There is no “freestanding principle of fundamental justice” requiring Crown counsel to justify and explain the exercise of prosecutorial discretion to the court and indirectly to the public.⁵ The principle of prosecutorial independence is firmly entrenched in our legal system. Nonetheless, while the Crown is not legally required to give reasons for its core decision-making, it may be advisable in certain circumstances to offer an explanation for decisions in order to help maintain public confidence in the administration of justice. As Doherty JA stated in R v Gill:⁶ “By offering an explanation, the prosecutor clearly enhances the transparency of his or her decision-making process and, hence, the fairness of the proceeding.”

Crown counsel should provide an explanation for a particular decision when it is public interest to do so, for example where (i) the basis is not self-evident and (ii) it is reasonably foreseeable that the lack of an explanation would lead the court or members of the public to draw conclusions that attribute erroneous and improper motives to the Crown’s exercise of prosecutorial discretion. Prior to giving reasons in respect of these decisions, Crown counsel must consult with and seek prior approval of their CFP or supervisors.

5. TYPES OF COMMUNICATION

5.1. Contacts initiated by the media

Media representatives may seek information in various ways, including questioning counsel outside the courtroom. When this occurs, Crown counsel may not have the opportunity to consult before responding. Crown counsel should provide the media with accurate and factual information in a timely manner. When information is not readily available, Crown counsel should make reasonable efforts to gather the required information and answer questions directly, or refer questions to the Communications Group.

5.2. Contacts initiated by Crown counsel

The PPSC may, on occasion, identify a need to correct inaccuracies or to provide information without being contacted by the media. This might be done, for example, by a simple call or message, through a letter to the editor of a media outlet (print, radio, TV or social media) by a handout, or a fact sheet. Depending on the circumstances, it may be appropriate to distribute information more broadly. In those situations, Crown counsel must consult with their CFP, their supervisors, or with the Communications Group with respect to the appropriate means of communication and its content.

⁵ See e.g. R v Gill, 2012 ONCA 607 at para 75.

⁶ Ibid at para 77.

5.3. Media requests requiring consultation

From time to time, Crown counsel may be invited to participate in a more lengthy or detailed interview regarding a prominent case or issue. Some of these cases may also be the subject of multiple requests for PPSC comment. Crown counsel must therefore consult with their CFP on these matters. The CFP must bring these requests to the attention of the Communications Group and to the appropriate Deputy DPP, to ensure the matter is appropriately resolved.

Such cases include those in which:

- the prosecution involves significant constitutional questions, federal-provincial or international relations, government operations, or national security;
- the accused is a public figure; or
- the issues raised have previously generated public debate.

5.4. Social media

Social media⁷ has added a new dimension to the way information is disseminated to the public. It is important to note that anything Crown counsel says should be considered “on the record” and may end up in the public domain. A comment to a local blogger may be picked up by a national broadcast media outlet. Therefore, Crown counsel must exercise the same care and attention when dealing with anyone seeking information, and not just traditional media outlets.

5.5. Communications before charges are laid

Before charges are laid, the media may seek to confirm that a specific matter or person is under investigation or that charges are imminent. The PPSC does not comment on such matters.

To deny the existence of an investigation at one time, and to decline to comment later, says as much as an affirmation. It is best not to comment so as to not prejudice a potential or ongoing investigation, or any possible proceedings. The proper response is to state as a matter of policy that the PPSC does not and will not discuss such matters.

⁷ Social media refers to electronic networks or channels where content is exchanged in virtual communities between individuals or organizations, including media or government agencies.

5.6. Investigative agency news releases

Some investigative agencies issue news releases at the time that charges are laid or at a particular stage in the proceedings such as a guilty plea or finding of guilt after trial. Unless they relate specifically to elements of a prosecution or are subject to a general agreement between agencies, these news releases are issued independently of the PPSC and Crown counsel cannot dictate to an investigative agency the content of its announcements.⁸

5.7. Communicating with the media in one's personal capacity

Crown counsel, like all government employees, are subject to certain limitations when communicating with the media in their personal capacity.⁹ This is especially true for those who perform their duties in the public eye. In this respect, Crown counsel must familiarize themselves with ss. 8.16 and 8.17 of the PPSC Code of Conduct. Crown counsel must not make statements that would:

- compromise their ability to do their job in the future by commenting publicly and critically on the wisdom of a particular offence or specific law, a federal government policy, position or proposal;
- discourage public respect for the administration of justice or weaken the public's confidence in legal institutions, for example, by publicly commenting on or criticizing a judge's decision in another case in a manner that could bring about either of these results;
- contravene professional codes of conduct; or
- constitute opinions on matters of public interest where the opinion is sought or is relevant because of the nature of a person's position as Crown counsel.

6. GUIDING PRINCIPLES

The following general principles must govern Crown counsel's approach to communications with the media:

- Give facts, not opinions - Crown counsel should provide information, and they should explain. They should not offer personal opinions about court decisions, or laws or governmental policies. The goal is to foster understanding, not to create sensation.

⁸ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.7 Relationship Between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies".

⁹ See also the PPSC Code of Conduct, at s 8.16 for Public Criticism of the PPSC and the Federal Government and at s 8.17 for Publicly Commenting for the PPSC.

- Speak for attribution - All communications with the media should be considered “on the record”. Crown counsel must assume that any comments they make to journalists can be attributed to them in their names.
- Respect journalists’ needs - It is important to recognize that journalists have a job to do, whether or not you assist them. Because they will pursue the story, it is usually better to respond to their questions. It is also necessary to bear in mind journalists’ deadlines in attempting to respond.
- Be responsive - “No comment” is not an acceptable response to a request for information. If the particular question posed cannot be answered because it calls for an opinion, invites comment on matters under judicial consideration, or attempts to confirm the existence of a police investigation, explain to the questioner why it would be inappropriate to comment.
- Do not express satisfaction or dissatisfaction with an outcome – In response to questions such as “Are you happy with the outcome?” or “How do you feel about the acquittal?”, Crown counsel should respond that the Crown does not express satisfaction or dissatisfaction with particular trial outcomes, our role is to put before the court all available, relevant, and admissible evidence necessary to enable the court to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused.¹⁰
- Educate the public - The media, and the public generally, may not understand the complexities of the justice system. Crown counsel should explain aspects of the system such as the role of the prosecutor or the appeal process, in a clear, concise and comprehensible way.
- Be timely - Misinformation, left uncorrected, can be harmful to people and institutions. Seek to prevent an inaccurate public record by providing information in a timely way, respecting where possible journalists’ needs to meet deadlines. Where comment is to be made after the appearance of a misleading or inaccurate story, a representative of the PPSC should set the record straight as soon as possible.
- Protect the integrity of the trial - Any comment that prejudices the right of an accused to a fair trial must be avoided.

7. SPECIFIC DIRECTION

The following sections are intended to provide, in a non-exhaustive way, guidance to Crown counsel as to how to apply the foregoing general principles.

7.1. Provision of Factual Information

Crown counsel may provide factual information, not opinions, concerning:

¹⁰ [Boucher v The Queen, \[1955\] SCR 16](#) at 23-24.

- cases before the courts;
- documents filed in open court and otherwise available to the public;
- the prosecution policies in the PPSC Deskbook (for example, explaining the “reasonable prospect of conviction” standard in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”);
- the process or procedures of the criminal justice system and how they apply to specific proceedings;
- the role of prosecutors at the PPSC. Crown counsel may also refer to the PPSC Annual Report or www.ppsc-sppc.gc.ca for more detailed explanations;
- the meaning of a court decision, without commenting on whether it is “right”, “wrong”, “good” or “bad”;
- the role and responsibilities of the DPP.

7.2. Information which Cannot be Provided

Crown counsel should not comment on:

- the possibility of charges being laid;
- cases under review or ongoing investigations;
- speculation as to what may happen during any stage of ongoing proceedings;
- privileged information, such as advice given to, or discussions held with, the PPSC, colleagues, foreign officials, or members of an investigative agency, whether or not such advice or discussions are privileged;
- any information the disclosure of which is prohibited by law (e.g. by virtue of the Privacy Act¹¹, Youth Criminal Justice Act¹²) or by a court-imposed publication ban;
- policies, procedures or decisions of investigative agencies (such inquiries should be directed to the investigative agency);
- the wisdom or efficacy of federal or provincial policies, programs or legislation;
- the strength or weakness of the Crown or defence case during a trial;
- the appropriateness of a judge's charge to the jury, particular rulings, the verdict of a jury, the sentence or any comments made by the judge;
- whether a decision will be appealed or not (however, the procedure for considering whether or not to appeal may be explained); or
- the guilt or innocence of an accused.

¹¹ RSC 1985, c P-21.

¹² SC 2002, c 1.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.10 APPLICATION OF THE PUBLIC PROSECUTION SERVICE OF CANADA DESKBOOK IN RESPECT OF CANADA ELECTIONS ACT PROSECUTIONS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(8) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

August 26, 2016

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. THE DPP'S AUTHORITY TO ISSUE GUIDELINES	2
3. APPLICATION OF PPSC DESKBOOK TO CANADA ELECTIONS ACT PROSECUTIONS.....	3

1. INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this guideline is to provide guidance to federal prosecutors conducting prosecutions under the Canada Elections Act.

The Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) is independent in his or her decision-making with respect to prosecution functions but remains accountable to the Attorney General, who, in turn, is answerable to Parliament for the DPP's activities. That accountability, however, does not extend to the DPP's authority to initiate and conduct prosecutions under the Canada Elections Act, which is conferred by subsection 3(8) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act (DPP Act).¹

By virtue of that subsection, these prosecutions are not conducted under the authority of the Attorney General, nor can the Attorney General issue directives with respect to, or take over these prosecutions. As a result, a distinctive regime is required under the DPP's authority to issue guidelines in relation to Canada Elections Act prosecutions.

2. THE DPP'S AUTHORITY TO ISSUE GUIDELINES

For all prosecutions other than those under the Canada Elections Act, the Attorney General has the authority to issue directives both with respect to the initiation or conduct of prosecutions generally under s 10(2) of the DPP Act. Similarly, s 3(3)(c) of the Act provides the Director of Public Prosecutions with the power to issue guidelines respecting the conduct of prosecutions under the authority of the Attorney General.

As the Attorney General has no authority over Canada Elections Act prosecutions, neither the directive or guideline power under ss 3(3)(c) or 10(2) of the DPP Act extends to Canada Elections Act prosecutions. Accordingly, the Director's prerogative to issue guidelines in respect of elections prosecutions stems from the Director's supervisory authority over federal prosecutors.

¹ SC 2006, c 9, s 121. Section 3(8) provides: "The Director initiates and conducts prosecutions on behalf of the Crown with respect to any offences under the Canada Elections Act, as well as any appeal or other proceeding related to such a prosecution."

3. APPLICATION OF PPSC DESKBOOK TO CANADA ELECTIONS ACT PROSECUTIONS

Other than the specific exceptions noted below, federal prosecutors, when initiating and conducting prosecutions on behalf of the Crown with respect to offences under the Canada Elections Act,² as well as any appeal or other proceeding related to such prosecutions, are to be guided by the policies and guidelines for the exercise of prosecutorial authority as set out in Volume I of this Deskbook.

Accordingly, for prosecutions under the Canada Elections Act, the following chapters of the PPSC Deskbook:

(A) do apply (except that references to the Attorney General and to the Attorney General's powers and responsibilities under the DPP Act are not applicable):

- Part II (Principles Governing Crown Counsel's Conduct);
- Part III (Procedural Issues and Trial Practice);
- Part IV (Evidentiary Issues);
- Part V, Chapters 5.4 (Youth Criminal Justice), 5.6 (Victims of Crime); and 5.9 (Private Prosecutions) with the caveat that the initiation of any prosecution under the Canada Elections Act requires the written consent of the DPP: see s 512(1) of that Act;
- Part VI, Chapter 6.6 (Charitable Donations).

(B) do not apply:

- Part I (Roles of the Attorney General and the Director of Public Prosecutions);
- Part V (chapters 5.1 (National Security), 5.2 (Competition Act), 5.3 (Proceeds of Crime), 5.5 (Domestic Violence), 5.7 (Impaired Driving Cases), 5.8 (Corruption of Foreign Public Officials) and 5.10 (Parental Child Abduction);
- Part VI, chapters 6.1 (Drug Treatment Courts), 6.2 (Mandatory Minimum Penalties for Particular Drug Offences under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act), 6.2.1 (Supplementary Guideline on Mandatory Minimum Penalties for Certain Drug Offences Under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act), 6.3 (Statutory Restrictions on the Use of Conditional Sentences), and 6.4 (Mandatory Minimum Penalties under the Criminal Code), 6.5 Process for Presumptively Eligible Status for a Dangerous Offender or Long Term Offender Designation.

² SC 2000, c 9.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.11 OFFICIAL LANGUAGES IN PROSECUTIONS

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED
UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

April 28, 2017

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. PURPOSE OF DIRECTIVE	3
2. PURPOSE OF PART XVII OF THE CRIMINAL CODE	3
3. APPLICATION PERTAINING TO LANGUAGE OF TRIAL UNDER SECTION 530 OF THE CRIMINAL CODE	4
3.1 ACCUSED WHOSE LANGUAGE IS ONE OF THE OFFICIAL LANGUAGES	4
3.2 ACCUSED WHOSE LANGUAGE IS NOT ONE OF THE OFFICIAL LANGUAGES.....	4
3.3 ACCUSED MUST BE INFORMED OF RIGHT TO APPLY FOR ORDER.....	4
3.4 TIME FRAME FOR MAKING THE APPLICATION	5
3.5 APPLICATION MADE OUTSIDE TIME FRAME	5
3.6 AMENDING THE ORDER	6
3.7 WAIVER	6
4. LANGUAGE OF TRIAL	7
4.1 TRIAL IN ONE OF THE TWO OFFICIAL LANGUAGES	7
4.2 TRIAL IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES (“BILINGUAL TRIAL”).....	8
4.2.1 Single accused.....	8
4.2.2 Co-accused.....	8
5. EFFECTS OF ORDER PERTAINING TO LANGUAGE OF COURT AND OF CROWN COUNSEL	9
5.1 JUDGE, JUDGE AND JURY MUST SPEAK SAME OFFICIAL LANGUAGE AS ACCUSED	9
5.2 CROWN COUNSEL MUST “SPEAK” SAME OFFICIAL LANGUAGE AS ACCUSED	9
5.2.1 Institutional obligation	9
5.2.2 When to “speak” the same official language as the accused	10
5.2.3 Written pleadings	11
6. OTHER EFFECTS OF ORDER.....	13
7. EVIDENCE.....	14
7.1 DISCLOSURE	14
7.2 DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.....	14
8. APPEAL PROCEEDINGS	15
9. OTHER ASPECTS OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES.....	15
10. OFFICIAL LANGUAGES LAW TEAM OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE (OLLT).....	16
11. QUESTIONS TO CONSIDER FOR PART XVII PROCEEDINGS	16

1. PURPOSE OF DIRECTIVE

This directive is intended to assist Crown counsel in applying the language provisions of the Criminal Code (the Code), in particular, those dealing with the language of the trial (ss 530, 530.01, 530.1, 530.2, 531 and 849(3)). It is intended to apply only to cases governed by Part XVII of the Code: its provisions are not intended to extend or apply to official languages of a court or jurisdiction other than English or French, such as aboriginal languages in certain provinces or territories.

2. PURPOSE OF PART XVII OF THE CRIMINAL CODE

The purpose of s 530 of the Code is to provide equal access to the courts to accused persons who speak one of the official languages of Canada.¹ These linguistic provisions are distinct from the principles of fundamental justice such as the right to a fair trial.² Section 530 of the Code sets out the procedure whereby an accused can apply to be tried before a court who speaks the official language of the accused or both official languages. Once an order has been made under s 530 of the Code, s 530.1 of the Code sets out how the proceedings are to be conducted.

The nature of the accused's right and the purpose of this part of the Criminal Code is to ensure that accused individuals can have their preliminary hearing and trial in the official language of their choice.

The Supreme Court of Canada underlined in *Beaulac*³ that language rights of accused persons “must in all cases be interpreted purposively, in a manner consistent with the preservation and development of official language communities in Canada.”

As the Court of Appeal of Ontario has stated in its Munkonda decision:⁴

“The objective of s 530 of the Criminal Code is ‘to provide equal access to the courts to accused persons speaking one of the official languages of Canada in order to assist official language minorities in preserving their cultural identity.’”

The Supreme Court of Canada has further established that criminal courts must be institutionally bilingual:⁵

Section 530(1) creates an absolute right of the accused to equal access to designated courts in the official language that he or she considers to be his or her own. The

¹ R v Beaulac, [1999] 1 SCR 768 at para 34, 173 DLR (4th) 193 [Beaulac]. These language provisions are distinct from the principles of fundamental justice such as the right to a fair trial (Ibid at para 41).

² Ibid.

³ Ibid, para 25.

⁴ R v Munkonda, 2015 ONCA 309, 2015 OJ no 2284, 5 May 2015 and Beaulac, para 34.

⁵ Beaulac, para 28.

courts called upon to deal with criminal matters are therefore required to be institutionally bilingual in order to provide for the equal use of the two official languages of Canada.

3. APPLICATION PERTAINING TO LANGUAGE OF TRIAL UNDER SECTION 530 OF THE CRIMINAL CODE

3.1 Accused whose language is one of the official languages

For the language of trial provisions of the Criminal Code to be triggered, the accused whose language is one of the official languages of Canada must make an application under s 530(1) of the Code for an order that the accused be tried before a judge or a judge and jury who speak the official language of the accused or, if the circumstances warrant, both official languages of Canada. This is a substantive right and not a procedural one.⁶

3.2 Accused whose language is not one of the official languages

When an accused does not speak one of the official languages, a judge may grant an order under s 530(2) of the Code directing that the accused be tried before a judge or a judge and jury who speak the official language in which the accused, in the opinion of the judge, can best give testimony or, if the circumstances warrant, who speak both official languages.

3.3 Accused must be informed of right to apply for order

The judge, before whom an accused first appears, whether or not the accused is represented, must ensure that the accused is advised of his or her right to apply for an order and of the time before which such an application must be made (s 530(3) of the Code). The judge must be proactive in ensuring the protection of the linguistic rights of an accused person, no matter what position is taken by counsel appearing before the court.⁷

Crown counsel have the duty to promote the integral application of ss 530 and 530.1 of the Code.⁸ He or she needs to be mindful of the obligation of the justice of the peace or provincial court judge before whom the accused first appears to inform the accused of his or her right to apply for an order under s 530(1) and (2) of the Code and of the time before which such an application must be made.⁹ This duty of the Crown prosecutor to remain vigilant encompasses the duty to make sure the accused is made aware by the court of the ⁶ Ibid at paras 28 and 31.

⁷ R v Parsons, 2014 QCCA 2206, at paras 34-35.

⁸ Ibid, para 35.

⁹ Criminal Code, RSC 1985, c C-46, s 530(3). Given the nature of language rights, the requirement of substantive equality and the purpose of s 530 of the Code, the violation of the language provisions was characterized by the Supreme Court as a substantial wrong and not a procedural irregularity; see Beaulac, Ibid at para 54. The violation of s 530 of the Code is not a breach of s 15 or ss 16(1) or 16(3) of the Charter. Accordingly, the violation of s 530 of the Code does not give rise to a remedy under s 24(1) of the Charter; see R v MacKenzie, 2004 NSCA 10, 181 CCC (3d) 485, 221 NSR (2d) 51, 697 APR 51, 116 CRR (2d) 63.

nature and extent of this right¹⁰ as well as the duty to ensure the accused exercises this right at the earliest opportunity in the criminal process in order that arrangements can be made with respect to subsequent proceedings.

3.4 Time frame for making the application

An accused's language of trial application must be made not later than:

- (a) the time of the appearance of the accused at which his trial date is set, if
 - (i) he is accused of an offence mentioned in s 553 of the Code or punishable on summary conviction, or
 - (ii) the accused is to be tried on an indictment preferred under s 577 of the Code;
- (b) the time of the accused's election, if the accused elects under s 536 of the Code to be tried by a provincial court judge or under s 536.1 of the Code to be tried by a judge without a jury and without having a preliminary inquiry, or
- (c) the time when the accused is ordered to stand trial, if the accused
 - (i) is charged with an offence listed in s 469 of the Code,
 - (ii) has elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge or a judge and jury, or
 - (iii) is deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury.

The transcript of appearances by the accused may demonstrate that the accused has asserted a right to have the trial in the official language of his or her choice, without a formal application having been made pursuant to s 530.¹¹

3.5 Application made outside time frame

Section 530(4) of the Code applies where an accused's application is made outside the prescribed time frame.

In that case, if the court before which the accused is to be tried is satisfied that it is in the best interests of justice that the accused be tried before a court that speaks the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or, if the language of the accused is not one of the official languages of Canada, the official language in which the accused can best give testimony, the court may remand the accused to be tried before a court that speaks that language or, if the circumstances warrant, that speaks both official languages of Canada.

¹⁰ Parsons, at para 32.

¹¹ R v Foster 2015 NLTD(G) 26, para 22. In regions where sections 530 and 530.01 of the Code are frequently used, formal applications may be rare or never made as an accused need only state on the record a choice of official language at the time of setting the date of the preliminary hearing or the trial.

To determine the best interests of justice, the court must consider the reasons for the delay and then the factors that relate to the conduct of the trial. Institutional inconvenience, the ability of the accused to understand the other official language and the fairness of the trial (which is distinct from the language rights granted under s 530 of the Code) must not be taken into account. The additional difficulties caused by an untimely application and the reasons for the delay are relevant factors.¹² The ability of the accused to speak the other official language is not a valid consideration: all that is needed is that the accused be able to instruct counsel in the official language of his or her choice.¹³

The basic principle is that, generally, owing to the importance of language rights and the stated intention of the legislator to ensure the equality of French and English, the best interests of justice will be better served by an order allowing the application by the accused to be tried in his or her official language. The denial of the application is exceptional, and the burden of justifying it falls on the Crown.¹⁴

3.6 Amending the order

Pursuant to s 530(5) of the Code, an order under s 530 of the Code that a trial be held in one of the official languages may, if the circumstances warrant, be varied by the court to require that it be held in both official languages, and vice versa.

3.7 Waiver

The rights provided in ss 530 and 530.1 of the Code may be waived. The accused must know and understand the rights he or she is waiving as well as the consequences of such waiver.¹⁵ The judge and counsel must be vigilant in this regard and the judge may have to question the reasons behind the waiver to ensure that the accused is fully cognizant of its ¹² “... mere administrative inconvenience is not a relevant factor. The availability of court stenographers and court reporters, the workload of bilingual prosecutors or judges, the additional financial costs of rescheduling are not to be considered because the existence of language rights requires that the government comply with the provisions of the Act by maintaining a proper institutional infrastructure and providing services in both official languages on an equal basis. As mentioned earlier, in the context of institutional bilingualism, an application for service in the language of the official minority language group must not be treated as though there was one primary official language and a duty to accommodate with regard to the use of the other official language. The governing principle is that of the equality of both official languages.” Beaulac, supra note 1 at paras 36-41.

¹³ Foster, supra note 8 at para 21; see the explanation found in section 4.1 below.

¹⁴ Ibid at para 42.

¹⁵ R v Dow, 2009 QCCA 478, [2009] RJQ 679, 245 CCC (3d) 368.

consequences.¹⁶ The fact that counsel may have difficulty in speaking the official language of the accused cannot constitute a valid justification for waiver.¹⁷

Crown counsel should ensure that proceedings are conducted in an official language that the accused person understands. Accordingly, Crown counsel should ask that the waiver of one of the rights provided in ss 530 and 530.1 of the Code be noted on the record, especially if the accused is unrepresented.

4. LANGUAGE OF TRIAL

4.1 Trial in one of the two official languages

For the purposes of s 530 of the Code, the language of the accused is the official language with which the accused has a sufficient connection. It does not have to be the accused's dominant language. If the accused has sufficient knowledge of an official language to instruct counsel, the accused may assert that that language is his or her language, regardless of his or her ability to speak the other official language. The onus is on the Crown to show that this assertion is unfounded. The court will satisfy itself only that the accused is able to (i) instruct counsel and (ii) follow the proceedings in the chosen language. The dominant cultural identity and the personal language preferences of the accused are not relevant.¹⁸

It should be noted that ss 530.1(a) and (b) of the Code provide that both the accused and counsel for the accused have the right to use either official language during the preliminary inquiry and trial. Thus, the language used by the accused or his or her counsel may not be invoked by Crown counsel to challenge the accused's choice of language of trial.

As the Court of Appeal for Ontario has noted:¹⁹

“...the rights of the accused and the obligation of the state and the court to provide the service are not reduced or diminished by the fact that an accused understands and speaks the language of the majority. The linguistic ability of the accused [Beaulac, at para 45] ‘is irrelevant because the choice of language is not meant to support the legal right to a fair trial, but to assist the accused in gaining equal access to a public service that is responsive to his linguistic and cultural identity.’”

Crown counsel cannot contest the choice of official language of the accused unless the accused clearly has insufficient knowledge of the chosen official language to instruct counsel and to follow the proceedings in that language.

¹⁶ Parsons, supra note 4 at paras 32 and 35. The judge must enquire directly from the accused whether he is aware of the nature and extent of his rights and thus is able to freely accept the consequences of the claimed waiver. Where the responses provided by the accused are incompatible with free and informed consent, the court must refuse the claimed waiver.

¹⁷ Ibid.

¹⁸ Beaulac, para 34.

¹⁹ R v Munkonda 4, para 59.

Crown counsel cannot contest the accused's statement that he or she will best be able to give testimony in one of the official languages when neither official language is the language of the accused unless the accused clearly has insufficient knowledge of the chosen language to instruct counsel and to follow the proceedings in that language.

4.2 Trial in both official languages (“bilingual trial”)

4.2.1 Single accused

A judge may order that the accused be tried before a judge or a judge and jury who speak both official languages if the circumstances warrant. For example, such circumstances may occur when an accused requests a trial before a judge who speaks only one official language but the evidence is in the other official language or witnesses speak the other official language.

4.2.2 Co-accused

Section 530(6) of the Code is intended to clarify the specific situation of co-accused who are to be tried jointly but who do not have the same official language. Prior to the coming into effect of this provision on October 1, 2008, the courts had taken different approaches regarding separate trials where co-accused exercised their right to be tried in the official language of their choice, which was not the same. Section 530(6) of the Code provides that the fact that two or more accused who are to be tried together are each entitled to be tried before a judge or judge and jury who speak one of the official languages and that these official languages are different may constitute circumstances that warrant that an order be granted directing that they be tried before a judge or a judge and jury who speak both official languages. This order reconciles the language rights of the accused with the principle of one trial for co-accused.²⁰

Where co-accused who do not have the same official language exercise their respective right to be tried before a judge or a judge and jury who speak their official language, Crown counsel should try to avoid separate trials and obtain an order for a bilingual trial. This constitutes circumstances that warrant such an order under s 530(6) of the Code. That said, in exercising its right to join several accused in a single indictment, the prosecution does not escape its linguistic obligations, and the accused do not lose their linguistic rights; the adjustments required by a bilingual trial must not give an advantage to either of the language groups.²¹

In the Munkonda decision, the Court of Appeal for Ontario underlined that both official languages must be used and “the principle of equal access must be respected.” Two principles govern the conduct of a bilingual trial or preliminary inquiry. They are as follows:

²⁰ R v Bellefroid, 2009 QCCS 3193.

²¹ Munkonda, para 63.

1. the accused retain their right to equal access to proceedings in their language even though the proceeding is bilingual; and
2. the court and the prosecution must be bilingual and not favour one or the other official language.

5. EFFECTS OF ORDER PERTAINING TO LANGUAGE OF COURT AND OF CROWN COUNSEL

Once an order has been made under s 530 of the Code, it takes effect immediately, and the scheme created by ss 530 to 530.1 of the Code applies.

The specific rights listed in s 530.1 of the Code also apply where a bilingual trial is ordered.²²

5.1 Judge, judge and jury must speak same official language as accused

The judge or judge and jury must speak the official language of the accused or both official languages, as the case may be, at the preliminary inquiry and the trial.²³ The judge must not only understand and be able to speak the official language of the accused, he or she must in fact use that language during the trial, as well as in interlocutory or final judgments.²⁴ Failure by the judge to ensure that the requirements of ss 530 and 530.1 are met will result in a loss of jurisdiction.²⁵

5.2 Crown counsel must “speak” same official language as accused

5.2.1 Institutional obligation

Section 530.1(e) of the Code imposes a specific obligation on Crown counsel by providing that the accused has the right to have Crown counsel who “speaks” the same official language as the accused or both official languages, as the case may be. This includes an implicit requirement that Crown counsel in fact uses this language.²⁶ Consequently, every time an order is made under s 530 of the Code, Crown counsel responsible for the file must ensure that he or she has sufficient command of the official language stated in the order; in the case of a prosecution team, each prosecutor must be fluent in the official language of the accused and able to fully participate in the trial in the language chosen.²⁷ The same ²² Beaulac, supra note 1 at para 49.

²³ Criminal Code, ss 530(1), 530 (2), 530(4) and 530.1(d).

²⁴ Wilcox v R, 2014 QCCA 1744, para 108; Munkonda, paras 94 to 97.

²⁵ Munkonda, para 133.

²⁶ See R v Potvin (2004), 69 OR (3d) 654 (ON CA).

²⁷ Munkonda, para 67. See also R v Sarrazin (2005), 75 OR(3d) 485, 2005 OJ No 1404, 196 OAC 224, 195 CCC(3d) 257 (CA); R v Gagnon, [2013] QJ No 13377, 2013 QCCA 1744, and R v Dow, [2009] QJ No 2004, 2009 QCCA 478, JE 2009-591, EYB 2009-156034, [2009] RJQ 679, 245 CCC(3d) 368, 188 CRR (2d) 44, principle applies to bilingual trials as well, where the prosecutor or, in the case of a prosecution team, the entire team, i.e., all counsel of record appearing for the Crown and taking place at the counsel table, must be bilingual and ensure that one official language is not favoured over the other.²⁸

Section 530.1 of the Code creates an institutional obligation. Thus, if Crown counsel on the file is not fluent in the official language of the accused or does not consent to arguing the case in that language, he or she must inform his or her superior (or, in the case of an agent, the agent supervisor), who then has the responsibility of assigning the case to another counsel who is fluent in the official language of the accused and consents to proceed in the language chosen by the accused.²⁹

5.2.2 When to “speak” the same official language as the accused

The language rights guaranteed by ss 530 and 530.1 of the Code apply at the preliminary inquiry and the trial.³⁰

Where an order is made under s 530 of the Code, Crown counsel must use the official language of the accused in all oral submissions and during any examination of the accused.

Where an order has been made for a trial before a judge or a judge and jury who speak both official languages (“bilingual trial”), the judge presiding over a preliminary inquiry or trial may, at the start of the proceeding, make an order setting out the circumstances in which and the extent to which Crown counsel and the judge may use each official language at the hearing (s 530.2(1) of the Code). Crown counsel must ensure that such an order is made at the earliest opportunity.

This order must, to the extent possible, respect the right of the accused to be tried in his or her official language (s 530.2(2) of the Code).

Crown counsel must use both official languages in a balanced fashion, depending on the unique circumstances of each trial. Accordingly, for example, if the accused or counsel for the accused addresses the court in the official language of the accused, the prosecutor and the judge must use that language in communication with that particular accused and counsel. This means that, generally, accused persons must each be examined in their own official language while oral argument must be divided in a balanced fashion between the two official languages unless the judge has ordered otherwise.

where it is specified that interpretation is meant for the benefit of the witness and not the prosecutor, which leads to the conclusion that all prosecutors in a bilingual proceeding governed by s 530 and 530.1 must be bilingual.

²⁸ Munkonda, paras 67, 86 and 87.

²⁹ It may be necessary to seek an adjournment. If another Crown counsel willing to speak the language of the accused is not assigned to the case within a reasonable time, the trial judge may order a stay of the proceedings; see R v Cross, [1998] RJQ 2587 at 2594 (QC CA).

³⁰ Criminal Code, ss 530.1(d) and (e).

On the other hand, where an order for a “bilingual trial” is made, but there is only one accused or the accused persons all speak the same official language, arguments and examinations must be conducted in that language only unless the judge has ordered otherwise.

Sections 530.1(c) and 530.1(c.1) of the Code, provide that witnesses have the right to give evidence in either official language during the preliminary inquiry and at trial and that the judge may, if the circumstances warrant, authorize Crown counsel to examine or cross-examine a witness in his or her official language even where that language is not the language of the accused or the one in which the accused can best give testimony. In the context of a bilingual trial or preliminary inquiry, when the official language of the witness is that of the accused having asserted the rights conferred by ss 530 and 530.1, the witness must be examined in that language, particularly when this witness is a victim of violent acts that are the basis of the legal proceedings, or when this witness has prepared notes in that language.³¹

Obviously, the criminal process consists of a number of steps, other than the preliminary inquiry and the trial, during which the accused’s rights may be affected, but they are not subject to the language scheme under ss 530 to 531 of the Code.

Nevertheless, once an order is made under s 530 of the Code that the accused will be tried before a judge or a judge and jury who speak the official language of the accused, Crown counsel must use the official language of the accused not only at the preliminary inquiry and trial stages but also in all proceedings at the trial level at which the accused is present unless the parties have agreed otherwise.³²

5.2.3 Written pleadings

Under s 849(3) of the Code, the forms set out in Part XXVIII of the Criminal Code (for example: summons, search warrant) must be printed in both official languages.³³

³¹ Munkonda, paras 69 and 70.

³² However, this directive is applied only if the relevant provincial or territorial statutes permit the use of the official language of the accused. Since the use of French and English in proceedings other than the trial and the preliminary inquiry is not governed by the Criminal Code, the provincial or territorial statutes must be consulted to determine the law on this point. The law may vary considerably from one province or territory to another. In certain provinces and territories, the Constitution or the provincial or territorial statutes provide that English and French may be used in oral and written pleadings in any court of justice in criminal proceedings (Yukon, N.W.T., Nunavut (Court practice directive), Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick). On the other hand, others allow only English to be used (British Columbia). Lastly, in some provinces, the law is uncertain or is silent on this point.

³³ Most courts have held that the fact that s 849(3) of the Code is expressed in mandatory terms does not automatically lead to a nullity. If the accused has not been prejudiced, this defect may be corrected by an amendment; see R v Goodine (1992), 112 NSR (2d) 1, 71 CCC (3d) 146, 307 APR 1 (NS CA); Lavoie v R (1990), 58 CCC (3d) 246, JE 90-874 (QC SC); R v Cotton (13 March 1991), Hull 550-36-000038-909, JE 91-735 (QC SC); R v Sorensen (1990), 59 CCC (3d) 211, 75 OR (2d) 659 (Ont Gen Div Ct); R v S(H) (1995), 87 OAC 114, 27 OR (3d) 97 and 116, 105 CCC (3d) 461 (Ont CA) [R v S(H)], leave to appeal to the SCC

Section 530.01(1) of the Code states that, if an order is granted under s 530 of the Code, Crown counsel is required, on application by the accused, to cause the portions of the information or indictment against the accused that are in an official language that is not that of the accused or that in which the accused can best give testimony, to be translated into the other official language and to provide the accused with a written copy of the translated text at the earliest possible time.

Crown counsel must ensure that portions of informations or indictments are in the official language chosen by the accused if such a choice has been made.

If the official language of the accused is not known, Crown counsel should ensure that the accused is clearly informed by the court on the record that a translation may be obtained, within a reasonable time, in the official language chosen by the accused.

As stated above, s 530.1(e) provides that Crown counsel must “speak” the same language as the accused or both official languages, as the case may be. This means that Crown counsel must actually use that language in oral representations, and as mentioned in section 5.2.2 of this directive, in written representations as well, both at the preliminary inquiry and at trial. This also means that Crown counsel must use that language in any correspondence with the accused or accused’s counsel.

Where an order has been made pursuant to s 530 of the Code for a “bilingual trial,” but there is only one accused or the accused all speak the same official language, the documents prepared by Crown counsel must be in the official language of the accused unless the judge orders otherwise.

Where an order has been made pursuant to s 530 of the Code for a “bilingual trial,” and there are Francophone and Anglophone accused, the documents prepared by Crown counsel must be in both official languages unless the judge orders otherwise.³⁴

Crown counsel must file case law, literature and legislation in the official language of the original documents. As well, quotations must be reproduced in the original official language.

Where a version of these texts is available in the official language of the accused, that version must also be filed with the court. Similarly, where a quotation is written in an dismissed [1996] SCCA No. 86. However, there is a minority view to the effect that failure to comply with s 849(3) of the Code results in a nullity because the provision confers an imperative language right; see R v Keenan (1990), 84 Man R (2d) 1 (Man Prov Ct).

³⁴ Munkonda, para 72. This obligation extends to notices under s 189(5) and s 540(8) of the Code: paras 74 and 79. This would apply to other written pleadings as well, notably documents prepared for pretrial conferences and case management conferences or hearings.

official language other than the language of the accused, the passage must, where practicable, be translated with the notation [TRANSLATION].³⁵

Where an order has been made under s 530 of the Code, Crown counsel must prepare documents in the official language of the accused not only at the preliminary hearing and trial stages but also in all proceedings at the trial level at which the accused is present unless the parties have agreed otherwise. In a bilingual trial or preliminary hearing, Crown documents must be prepared in both languages.³⁶

6. OTHER EFFECTS OF ORDER

As the Court of Appeal for Ontario has stated in Munkonda:³⁷

In conceptual terms, a bilingual trial or preliminary inquiry is a merger of a proceeding in French and a proceeding in English. Whether the accused are francophone or anglophone, they do not lose their language rights; rather, and by necessity, each accused's language rights must be accommodated. Each accused cannot have the right to have all of the evidence presented in his or her own language. Oral evidence can be presented in only one or the other of the two official languages. Similarly, the prosecution and the judge cannot speak both languages at the same time.

Nonetheless, the language rights of each accused must be respected to the extent possible. This would mean, for example, that if an accused or his or her counsel addresses the court in the accused's official language, the prosecutor and the judge should interact with the accused and counsel in that language.

Where an order is made under s 530 of the Code, the court is required to make interpreters available to assist the accused, his or her counsel or any witness during the preliminary inquiry or trial (s 530.1(f) of the Code). The interpreter is present for the benefit of the accused, the jury and witnesses, and not for the judge or Crown counsel. Consecutive interpretation is generally a better solution than simultaneous interpretation, as it allows the quality of interpretation to be monitored. If simultaneous interpretation is provided, it must be done in such a way that the translation can be recorded and transcribed, in order for such monitoring to be made possible.

In certain cases, the trial may be held in another territorial division if an order made under s 530 cannot conveniently be complied with in the territorial division in which the offence would otherwise be tried (s 531 of the Code).

³⁵ See Charlebois v Saint John (City), 2005 SCC 74, 3 SCR 563, 261 DLR (4th) 1.

³⁶ See supra note 30.

³⁷ Munkonda, paras 56 and 57.

In a trial or preliminary hearing governed by the regime set out in ss 530 and 530.1, all court personnel in the courtroom must be bilingual.³⁸

7. EVIDENCE

7.1 Disclosure

In interpreting the language rights in the Criminal Code or of any other constitutional language rights provisions, courts have not imposed a legal obligation on the Crown to provide a translation of evidence disclosed to the accused into the official language of the accused, or into the official language of counsel retained by the accused.³⁹

In exceptional circumstances; however, the right to make full answer and defence may entitle the accused to obtain an order for translation of a portion or summary of the evidence into his or her official language.⁴⁰ Insofar, as the issue is no longer the application of language rights, properly speaking, but the principles of fundamental justice, the approach should be the same whatever the language of the accused may be. This question should be decided on a case-by-case basis, and even exhibit by exhibit.⁴¹

7.2 Documentary evidence

Crown counsel may file any documentary evidence in the official language in which it is supplied to them, without the need for translation. The provisions of s 530.1(g) of the Code require only that the documentary evidence be filed in the record at the preliminary hearing and at trial in the language in which it was tendered. In the context of a bilingual trial, the transcript of intercepted conversations must be prepared in the official language in which the conversation was held and not only in a translated version.⁴² Where the intercepted conversation takes place in a language other than English or French, the transcript must be translated into the official language of the accused if there is only one accused, and into both official languages if there is more than one accused and one or more of the accused have invoked their Part XVII rights, unless there is a clear waiver stated on the record that the translated transcript can be in one official language only. There again, as with ³⁸ Munkonda, paras 103 to 107.

³⁹ R v Rodrigue (1994) 91 CCC (3d) 455 (YTSC), aff'd on other grounds by 95 CCC (3d) 129, 26 CRR (2d) 175 (YTCA), leave to appeal to the SCC dismissed [1995] SCCA No 83; R v Breton (9 July 1995), Whitehorse TC-94-10538 (YTSC); R v Mills (1994), 124 NSR (2d) 317, 345 APR 317 (NSSC); R v S(H), supra note 17, application for leave to appeal to the SCC dismissed [1996] SCCA No 86; R v Stockford 2009 QCCA 1573 (CanLII) at para 13, R v Potvin (2004), 186 CCC (3d) 257 (ONCA); R v Schneider (2004), 188 CCC (3d) 137 (NSCA); Deschambault v R, 2010 QCCS 6851 (CanLII).

⁴⁰ R v Stadnick, [2001] QJ No 5226 (QC SC), leave to appeal to the SCC dismissed [2002] SCCA No 413; R v Hunt 2007 QCCQ 1405.

⁴¹ Before agreeing to having any evidence translated into English or French, Crown counsel should apply a test that would consist in considering what parts of any evidence that had been obtained in a language other than English or French would have to be translated to enable the accused to be able to make full answer and defense.

⁴² Munkonda, para 88.

disclosure of documents, there may be some circumstances that justify a court ordering that an exhibit be translated into the language of the accused, not based on the language rights in the Criminal Code, but rather on the principles of fundamental justice.

8. APPEAL PROCEEDINGS

There is no legal obligation on Crown counsel to use the official language of the accused in appeal proceedings. As indicated above, ss 530 and 530.1 of the Code apply only to the preliminary inquiry and the trial.

In appeal proceedings, Crown counsel must use the official language chosen by the defence for the purposes of the appeal, for both oral and written submissions.⁴³

Where the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) initiates the appeal, it is assumed that the language of the proceeding will be the same as in the earlier judicial proceeding unless the parties have agreed otherwise.

Where the DPP is an intervener, Crown counsel must also use the official language chosen by the defence for the purposes of the appeal.⁴⁴ In cases involving more than one accused or where there is reason to assume that both official languages will be used, Crown counsel must file written argument in both official languages. In oral pleadings, Crown counsel must use the official language chosen by the defence. If counsel for the accused persons do not all use the same official language in oral argument, Crown counsel must use the language that appears to be most appropriate in the circumstances.

9. OTHER ASPECTS OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Under the Constitution, French and English have equality of status as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada, in federal statutes and in the Federal Courts and, subject to certain limitations, in communications between the public and federal institutions.⁴⁵ The Constitution also guarantees certain language rights with respect to the legislatures and courts of Quebec, Manitoba and New Brunswick.⁴⁶

Certain spheres of federal jurisdiction, the *Official Languages Act*⁴⁷ specifies the rights of the public and the obligations of federal institutions with respect to the use of both official languages in parliamentary proceedings (Part I), in legislative and other instruments (Part II), in the administration of justice (Part III), in communications with and services to the public (Part IV) and in the work environment of federal institutions (Part V).

⁴³ Supra note 17.

⁴⁴ Ibid.

⁴⁵ Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, The Constitution Act, 1982, being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (UK), 1982, c 11 s 16-20; The Constitution Act, 1867 (UK), 30 & 31 Victoria, c 3, s 133.

⁴⁶ See supra note 1; Manitoba Act, 1870, RSC 1970, App II, No 8, s 23.

⁴⁷ RSC 1985, c 31 (4th Supp).

10. OFFICIAL LANGUAGES LAW TEAM OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE (OLLT)

Crown counsel must inform their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) as soon as possible of all imminent matters where language rights are at issue pursuant to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (Charter), the Official Languages Act, Part XVII of the Criminal Code or related legislation. The CFP shall then inform the champion or co-champion of official languages of the PPSC.

If needed, the champion or co-champion of official languages of the PPSC will consult the OLLT. The OLLT coordinates policy and legal advice to the federal government relating to official languages and language rights. However, any subsequent dealings with the OLLT will be conducted by Crown counsel who will keep the CFP and champion or co-champion informed of the progress of the file.

11. QUESTIONS TO CONSIDER FOR PART XVII PROCEEDINGS

Official Language of the Accused

- What is the official language requested by the accused?
- Has the accused been informed by the court of his or her language rights?
- Has there been an informed waiver of the accused's right to a trial in his or her official language?
- Does the accused have a sufficient knowledge of the official language selected to instruct counsel and follow the proceedings in that language?
- The following factors are not relevant:
 - o the fact that the accused is able to speak the other official language as well or better;
 - o the official language of counsel for the accused or the ability of counsel to understand the proceedings in the other official language.
- The ensuing steps in the proceeding must take place before a judge who understands the official language of the accused.
- Crown counsel having carriage of the file for any subsequent step of the proceeding must understand and be able to speak the official language of the accused.
- Have co-accused elected to have their trial in different official languages, which would justify an order for a bilingual trial or for separate trials?

Prosecution Plan

- Where required, does the prosecution plan outline:
 - the measures that will be needed by an order made under the provisions of Part XVII of the Criminal Code?
 - the steps taken, including the presence of an interpreter?

Disclosure

- Disclosure does not have to be translated. In exceptional circumstances, an accused may, as part of the right to full answer and defense, seek an order providing that portions or a summary of the evidence be translated into his or her official language.
- Documents in the disclosure package are to be provided to the accused in the official language in which they were obtained during the investigation.
- Transcripts of wiretaps, police interviews and interrogations are to be prepared in the official language in which the conversations, interviews or interrogations took place.
- Transcripts of conversations, interviews or interrogations taking place in a foreign language are to be translated into the official language of the accused. If co-accused in a proceeding have each elected a different official language, such transcripts must be translated into both official languages.

Witnesses

- Witnesses have the right to testify in either official language.
- However, in a trial taking place in the official language of the accused, a witness must be examined in the official language of the trial, but the judge can allow the prosecutor to examine or cross-examine a witness in that witness's official language, even if it is not the official language of the accused. An interpreter must be present when a witness does not testify in the official language of the accused, and measures must be taken in the courtroom to monitor the quality of interpretation.
- In a bilingual trial, the prosecutor must examine or cross-examine a witness in the official language of the witness when it is the official language of the accused.
- In the case of bilingual trials with several co-accused, a witness must be examined in his or her official language, even if that official language is not the official language of each co-accused. An interpreter must be present and measures taken in the courtroom to monitor the quality of interpretation.

Interpreters

- Are interpreters available?
- Is interpretation provided in such a way that a transcript can be made of either the interpretation or of the testimony without interpretation?
- Is interpretation provided in such a way that the quality and accuracy of interpretation can be monitored by the court?

Hearings

- In a proceeding governed by Part XVII, the prosecutor must speak and use the official language of the accused. If the file requires that a prosecution team be formed, every prosecutor in the team must speak the official language of the accused.
- The prosecutor must cross-examine the accused in the accused's official language.
- The prosecutor must respond to objections from defense counsel or to comments from the bench in the official language in which the objection or comment was made.

Pleadings

- Have the forms in Part XXVII of the Criminal Code been printed and completed in both official languages?
- Has the accused received a translation of those portions of the information or indictment written in the other official language?
- Was the translation provided at the earliest possible time?
- If the official language of the accused is not known, has the accused been informed in writing that a translation could be obtained?

Other documents

- Are letters and other documents addressed to the accused or co-accused by the Crown written in the official language of each accused?
- Is caselaw, legislation and secondary legal sources filed by the Crown in the official language in which they were officially released? Are excerpts cited in the original official language?
- If legal sources are available in the official language of the accused, has this version been filed with the court?

Other questions

- Must the team leader be advised? Does the team leader have to inform the CFP?
- Must the OL co-champions be advised? Should the co-champions seek the advice of counsel on the PPSC OL Committee or the Official Languages Law Team of DOJ?

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.12 THE DISCLOSURE OF POLICE MISCONDUCT INFORMATION - R v McNEIL

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised April 4, 2018

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. SUMMARY OF R v McNEIL	2
3. DISCLOSURE OF MISCONDUCT INFORMATION	3
4. CROWN COUNSEL’S DUTY TO MAKE REASONABLE INQUIRIES.....	6

1. INTRODUCTION

The Supreme Court of Canada’s decision in *R v McNeil*¹ expanded the scope of disclosure in criminal cases by imposing obligations on both the police and Crown prosecutors.² These obligations “bridge the gap” between first party disclosure under *Stinchcombe*³ and third party production under O’Connor.⁴

This directive provides guidance to federal prosecutors to assist them in fulfilling these obligations and ensuring that our disclosure practice is consistent across the Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC). These guidelines also inform the advice that federal prosecutors provide to the police and other law enforcement agencies on the content of McNeil first party disclosure packages and “reasonable inquiry” letters to third parties.

2. SUMMARY OF R v McNEIL

The Court in McNeil found that the police and other investigating agencies must disclose to the prosecuting Crown, as first party disclosure material, findings of serious misconduct by police officers involved in the investigation of the accused. This information may be relevant to their credibility and reliability. Not all such information will necessarily be given to the defence. Crown counsel must perform a gatekeeper role in reviewing this material and withholding or redacting information that is irrelevant or privileged. The gatekeeper function requires that the Crown conduct a “studied analysis” to determine relevance. In the end, if the material has no realistic bearing on the credibility or reliability of the person involved in the investigation, it should not be disclosed to the defence. In addition, where a prosecutor is put on notice or informed of the existence of information potentially relevant to an accused’s case that is held by a Crown entity (or other third party), the prosecutor has a duty to inquire and obtain the information if it is reasonably feasible to do so. The Court recognized that the Crown is not

¹ R v McNeil, 2009 SCC 3 (ci-après McNeil). The appeal stemmed from a motion for production of third party police disciplinary records and criminal investigation files relating to the Crown’s main police witness in a drug prosecution.

² It has also modified the third party production regime established by R v O’Connor, [1995] 4 SCR 411 by recalibrating the balance between privacy interests and relevance to the defence in favour of the latter. The Mills regime under ss 278.1 to 278.91 of the Criminal Code that applies in sexual offence cases remains unchanged.

³ R v Stinchcombe, [1991] 3 SCR 326.

⁴ R v O’Connor, [1995] 4 SCR 411.

obliged to make such inquiries if the notice appears unfounded. Moreover, defence still retains the ability to seek the information via an O'Connor application.

3. DISCLOSURE OF MISCONDUCT INFORMATION

The disclosures obligations apply to police members and civilian members of a police force or law enforcement agency, such as translators, forensic analysts and wiretap monitors, in addition to any other civilian employees who played more than a peripheral role in the investigation. Information concerning acts of serious misconduct by police officers who may be called as witnesses or who were otherwise involved in the investigation of the accused⁵ that is either “related to the investigation against the accused” or could “reasonably impact” on the case against the accused has been carved out of O'Connor and placed squarely in the first party disclosure package under Stinchcombe. Thus, misconduct information that falls into either of these two categories must be provided to the Crown by the police without prompting.

The Supreme Court of Canada recognized that some police officers may have played only a minor or peripheral role in the investigation. Some latitude is given to Crown counsel in determining whether the conduct in question has a realistic bearing on the credibility or reliability of the officer’s evidence. The Supreme Court also stated that not every act or allegation of misconduct needs to be disclosed to defence as first party disclosure,⁶ e.g., discipline imposed for being late for work. Similar disciplinary findings related to neglect of health, improper dress, and untidiness in person, clothing or equipment while on duty need not be disclosed to the Crown.

It is the responsibility of the Crown to review the misconduct material to determine what, if anything, should be disclosed to the accused.⁷ This review includes an assessment of whether the material is clearly irrelevant, whether any vetting is needed to remove personal information, and whether there is privileged or third party information to be held back. The Crown has an obligation to notify the accused if they are holding back privileged information or information in which there is a third party privacy interest. If material received from the police is “clearly irrelevant” it does not need to be disclosed to the defence.

(a) The Contents of the McNeil Disclosure Package

A listing of police misconduct information for all police officers involved in the file should be sent automatically to the Crown who will then determine whether the witness or officer otherwise involved in the investigation is truly a peripheral player. The police should indicate on ⁵ The principles governing the disclosure of misconduct information apply equally to members of other law enforcement agencies involved in the investigation and all Crown witnesses, whether they are Canadian citizens or not.

⁶ McNeil, supra, note 1, at para 59.

⁷ It is extremely difficult to determine at the outset of a case what issues will arise in a prosecution – especially in relation to whether a member’s involvement is peripheral and whether credibility or reliability will be in question. For these reasons, it is our opinion that the police should not review material for relevance, but leave that determination to be made by the Crown as part of its continuing obligation to provide full disclosure to the accused.

the form whether they object to the disclosure of any misconduct information included in the list, and, if so, on what grounds.

In addition to the above-mentioned information, the police should provide the Crown with the following information pertaining to each police officer who may be called as a witness or who was otherwise involved in the investigation except those officers who have played a truly peripheral role in the investigation as determined by the Crown:

1. Complaints and investigations into a police officer's actions relating to the same incident that forms the subject matter of the charge against the accused. (The police should provide the Crown with a copy of the investigation file for this particular category of misconduct information);
2. A list of convictions or findings of guilt for an offence under the Criminal Code or the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act for which a pardon has not been granted (Canadian Police Information Centre (CPIC) record);
3. A list of all outstanding charges under the Criminal Code and the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act;
4. A list of all convictions or findings of guilt under any other federal or provincial statute (with the exception of convictions or findings of guilt for minor traffic infractions or other minor regulatory offences), including those under the applicable provincial Police Act or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act,⁸ for which a pardon has not been granted;
5. A list of outstanding charges of misconduct under the applicable provincial Police Act or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, and
6. Any other material that is "obviously relevant" to the credibility or reliability of the police witness should be submitted to the Crown for review and vetting to determine if it is relevant to the issues in the prosecution or defence of the accused.

McNeil does not draw a distinction between a finding of misconduct and records related to the finding of misconduct. We recommend that the police should initially be required to provide Crown prosecutors with a list of convictions, findings of guilt, and outstanding charges described above without prompting. The prosecutor must then assess whether further particulars, including, where necessary, the entire file underlying the investigation of acts of police misconduct must be produced to the Crown.

With respect to the categories of police misconduct described in 2 to 6 above, if the prosecuting Crown is of the opinion that the circumstances underlying the misconduct information are required to assist in performing their gatekeeper role (see below) he or she should make a separate request for this additional information.

⁸ Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, RSC, c R-10, s 1.

Production of disciplinary records and criminal investigation files in the possession of the police that do not fall within the scope of this first party disclosure package as enumerated above is governed by the O'Connor regime for third party production.⁹

(b) The Crown's Gatekeeper Role

The McNeil Court emphasized that the Crown has a significant role to play as “gatekeeper” with respect to disclosure of police misconduct information.¹⁰ Prosecutors have an obligation to review misconduct material prior to disclosure to the accused. This role does not involve a wholesale turning over of material provided by the police but rather a “studied analysis” to determine if it is relevant to the defence.¹¹

It is the Crown's responsibility as gatekeeper to determine which police officers played peripheral roles. For example, an officer who would be called to testify at trial or preliminary hearing, or who would testify absent an admission from defence, is not a peripheral player. The Crown must also make a judgment call as to whether a particular type of misconduct qualifies as serious, taking into account, inter alia, the circumstances of the misconduct, the date of the misconduct, its impact on the reliability or credibility of the officer, and the subject matter of the current charges against the accused.

The Crown should review the material in the McNeil Packages to determine if any of the information received is clearly irrelevant to the prosecution or the defence. If the material has no realistic bearing on the credibility or reliability of the witness it should not be disclosed to the defence. The Crown should also review all the material forwarded by the police in McNeil Packages to determine if any material is privileged at common law or statute. Privileged material should not be disclosed.

An investigative file of police misconduct findings or convictions containing some relevant information will also likely contain irrelevant and personal information. The Court in McNeil acknowledged the concern that irrelevant disclosure may lead to protracted trials. Therefore, the Crown should review disclosure with an eye to editing all irrelevant information and to placing restrictions on disclosure so that the interference with third party privacy interests is minimized. This may require consultation with the third parties to assess privacy interests.¹² The Court in McNeil recognized that police officers may “make submissions”¹³ to the Crown, relating to factual matters to assist the Crown in identifying information in which the officer has a privacy

⁹ R v McNeil, supra, note 1, at para 15.

¹⁰ R v McNeil, supra, note 1, at para 58.

¹¹ Review and Recommendations Concerning Various Aspects of Police Misconduct, Vol. I, Toronto: Toronto Police Service, 2003. This report, prepared by the Honourable George Ferguson, Q.C. and commonly referred to as the “Ferguson Report” is discussed at paras 55-60 of McNeil.

¹² McNeil, supra, note 1, at para 58.

¹³ R v McNeil, supra, note 1, at para 58. The police could use a form letter that informs the recipient that he or she may make submissions in writing to the Crown on the issue of the nature of his or her privacy interests, why the information should not be provided to the defence, the need for redaction of irrelevant information, and/or the need for conditions to be attached to the disclosure.

interest, in advising the Crown of the basis of the privacy interest and in discussing what disclosure restrictions may address that privacy interest.

4. CROWN COUNSEL'S DUTY TO MAKE REASONABLE INQUIRIES

- McNeil* applies to all third parties, whether in Canada or outside, and whether government or private sector.

The Court appears to indicate, in McNeil, that the Crown's obligation to make inquiries of third parties was intended to extend to all third parties. When making reasonable inquiries of third parties, the appropriate threshold for relevance is potentially relevant information, including information pertaining to the credibility or reliability of the witnesses in a case.¹⁴

- The Crown's obligation to make reasonable inquiries is triggered if the Crown is "put on notice" or "informed" that a third party may have in its possession potentially relevant information, including information pertaining to the credibility or reliability of a witness.

If the Crown is put on notice or informed of the existence of potentially relevant information in the hands of a third party, including information pertaining to the credibility or reliability of the witnesses in a case, the Crown's duty to make reasonable inquiries of that third party is triggered. In terms of what constitutes being "put on notice" or "informed," the Crown could either be informed by the investigating agency of the existence of potentially relevant information in the possession of a third party, or could become aware of such information from another source (such as from a review of the Crown brief), or the likelihood of the existence of such information may be apparent from the circumstances of the case. Alternatively, it could come to the Crown's attention that a third party was "involved in the investigation." McNeil appears to equate the "involvement" of a third party in the investigation with the reasonable likelihood that the involved third party would as a consequence possess potentially relevant evidence. With respect to the interpretation of the phrase "involved in the investigation," the Crown should satisfy itself that the third party participated in the investigation in some meaningful manner or had some meaningful nexus to the investigation, which would be assessed by the Crown on a case-by-case basis.

- A mere demand letter from defence counsel, absent any foundation for the existence of the third party materials, would not suffice as "notice" in itself. Proper "notice" requires credible proof of the information's existence and relevance and the third parties' possession of it. It is the Crown's role as gatekeeper to assess whether the notice appears to have any foundation [paragraph 49].

A bare request for third party materials from defence counsel, without giving any basis for the existence of those materials, does not suffice as "notice." McNeil provides some guidance as to when the Crown's duty to make reasonable inquiries would not be triggered – see paragraph 49:

¹⁴ McNeil, supra, note 1, at para 49-50.

“[u]nless the notice appears unfounded....” The language used in *R v Chaplin*¹⁵ (which was restated in McNeil at paragraph 29) in discussing where the existence of material which is alleged to be relevant by the defence is disputed by the Crown, may be helpful in further circumscribing the Crown’s obligation:

“[...] Once the Crown alleges that it has fulfilled its obligation to produce it cannot be required to justify the non-disclosure of material the existence of which it is unaware or denies. Before anything further is required of the Crown, therefore, the defence must establish a basis which could enable the presiding judge to conclude that there is in existence further material which is potentially relevant. Relevance means that there is a reasonable possibility of being useful to the accused in making full answer and defence. The existence of the disputed material must be sufficiently identified not only to reveal its nature but also to enable the presiding judge to determine that it may meet the test with respect to material which the Crown is obliged to produce [...].”

And further at paragraph 32:

“Apart from its practical necessity in advancing the debate to which I refer above, the requirement that the defence provide a basis for its demand for further production serves to preclude speculative, fanciful, disruptive, unmeritorious, obstructive and time-consuming disclosure requests.”

- Once the duty is triggered, the Crown should make the inquiry in writing directly to the third party.

The reasonable inquiry of a third party should be made directly to the third party by the Crown, with a copy to police. It should also be put in writing to create a record of the Crown’s exercise of its duty to inquire, as it may be the subject of review by a court at some later date. The Crown, should, of course, refrain from giving any legal advice when communicating with third parties. The Crown’s reasonable inquiry function should not be delegated to the investigating agency. Since a less-than-diligent exercise of the Crown’s obligation to make reasonable inquiries of third parties may constitute an ethical breach by the Crown, it is essential that the Crown maintain control over the reasonable inquiry process.

- The Crown should instruct the third party, in the reasonable inquiry letter, to send the potentially relevant information directly to the investigating agency and to advise the Crown if it objects to the production of that information or any part thereof.

Since the police are in a better position than the Crown to receive and process evidence, the third parties should be instructed by the Crown in the reasonable inquiry letter to provide any potentially relevant evidence directly to the investigating agency. Any handling of the third party evidence should be left to the investigating agency in order to avoid the possibility of the Crown as a witness in the proceedings. In the event that the third party objects to the production of the potentially relevant evidence, the Crown should advise defence counsel of the objection. The accused then has the option to pursue an O'Connor application.

¹⁵ [1995] 1 SCR 727 at paragraph 30

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

2.13 ALLEGATIONS OF MISCONDUCT BY PERSONS INVOLVED IN THE INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

August 12, 2021

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. CONTEXT	- 2 -
2. STATEMENT OF POLICY	- 3 -
3. PROCEDURE	- 4 -
4. CONCLUSION	5

1. CONTEXT

The PPSC as an organization has no tolerance for any form of bias, racism or discrimination, or other practices that may deprive the public of its right of access to a fair and just system. The PPSC has a positive obligation to ensure that the cases it brings forward comply with the rule of law and accord with the fundamental principles of justice and equality and other rights before the law. A prosecution must be undertaken only when the requisite evidence exists and when it would best serve to advance the public interest. It would never be in the public interest to bring forward a case where a finding of guilt depends on evidence that is false, misleading or unreliable.

All PPSC employees must uphold the highest ethical and professional standards. The PPSC Code of Conduct requires all PPSC employees to immediately report allegations or evidence of misconduct by PPSC employees – even if the allegation is against themselves. Members of the public may also report any misconduct by filing a complaint in accordance with PPSC's Complaints Policy. Once misconduct is reported, the PPSC Code of Conduct requires PPSC management to ensure that known or suspected misconduct by PPSC employees is both investigated and addressed.¹

In some cases, prosecutors may also become aware of allegations of serious misconduct that relates to the credibility and reliability of those involved in the investigation of charges, such as those who collected evidence and those who may be called as witnesses in a prosecution. The allegation may relate to the actions of a single Crown witness, whether they are a police officer, an investigator, a civilian agent, or a civilian employee of a police, regulatory, investigative, or intelligence agency. The allegation may also relate to a systemic issue going beyond the actions of a single person. This information may have not yet resulted in a finding, conviction, charge, investigation, or formal complaint. Determining whether a particular type of misconduct qualifies as serious is a judgement call that takes into consideration all the circumstances of the misconduct, the date when it occurred, its impact on the reliability and credibility of the Crown witness, and whether it has a realistic bearing on the case the accused has to meet, having regard to the subject matter of the current charges against the accused.²

¹ For the purposes of this guideline, “misconduct by PPSC employees” is understood as any act that would constitute “wrongdoing” for the purposes of the PPSC Code of Conduct.

A mere allegation does not trigger the same legal obligations as a finding, conviction, or charge.³ This is because there has been no investigation into the merits of the allegation at this stage. Ordinarily, prosecutors do not know if the allegation is well founded, and PPSC does not have the mandate to investigate or adjudicate the merits of an allegation. There may, however, be instances where the nature of the allegations, the basis for the allegations or the manner in which the allegations are investigated may be relevant to the discharge of obligations by prosecutors.

Prosecutors cannot remain passive. Prosecutors have the duty to be fair, impartial, and objective and to make reasonable inquiries to ensure that the matter is dealt with. They must seek to protect the rights of individuals and the rule of law. They must maintain the confidence of the public in the administration of justice. And they know that they can commit or perpetuate an injustice by doing nothing.

This policy assists prosecutors in fulfilling their obligations by establishing a process for the documentation of serious misconduct information and the specific follow-up expected to occur. It assigns clear responsibilities upon those who become aware of such misconduct to report it to their superiors in the PPSC, as well as the roles and responsibilities of supervisors and managers in relation to follow-up with the appropriate investigatory bodies. It also indicates the steps to be taken to ensure that all prosecutors are able to consider such allegations and the results of the determination and investigation of such misconduct in all cases that may be impacted. These steps include compliance with disclosure obligations and consideration of such allegations or results in the assessment of the decision to prosecute in affected cases.

2. STATEMENT OF POLICY

Prosecutors will document, report and track allegations of serious misconduct by persons involved in the investigation of charges when these allegations have not yet resulted in a finding, conviction, charge, investigation, or formal complaint.

² See Chapter 2.12 The Disclosure of Police Misconduct Information – R v McNeil.

³ In R v McNeil, the Supreme Court of Canada confirmed that the police must disclose to the prosecuting Crown, as first party disclosure, findings and charges of serious misconduct by police officers involved in the investigation of the accused where the misconduct arises from the investigation of the charges against the accused or is obviously relevant to the accused's case where the misconduct is extrinsic. Prosecutors will also find guidance on their obligations regarding findings of serious misconduct by Crown witnesses in Chapter 2.12 The Disclosure of Police Misconduct Information – R v McNeil, as well as in Chapter 2.2 Duties and Responsibilities of Crown Counsel, 2.3 Decision to Prosecute, and 3.14 Testimony of Police Officers and Police Civilian Agents.

3. PROCEDURE

1. Each Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) will designate a person who will be responsible for coordinating the implementation of this Guideline (“designated person”).
2. The prosecutor with conduct of the case or who otherwise becomes aware of an allegation of serious misconduct must:
 - a. Inform their supervisor and the designated person of the allegation; and
 - b. Document the allegation and record it in the prosecution file.⁴ For this purpose, the prosecutor will:
 - i. Request a description of the allegation in writing, if the allegation is made by the accused, defence counsel, or a third party;
 - ii. Write a note to file describing what the prosecutor observed, if the prosecutor personally witnessed the serious misconduct or discovered it through their review of the file; or
 - iii. Request a copy of the transcript or decision, if the allegation arose in the course of judicial proceedings.
3. The designated person will:
 - a. Identify outstanding cases that could be affected by the allegation and assign prosecutor(s) to assess the decision to prosecute test;
 - b. Identify the appropriate body that has jurisdiction to investigate the allegation,⁵ inform them of the allegation, and provide them with the relevant information and materials required for their investigation;
 - c. Follow up with the body investigating the allegation to confirm the status and outcome of the investigation;
 - d. Inform the prosecutor who reported the allegation, as well as prosecutors involved in outstanding cases affected by the allegation, of the status and outcome of the investigation; and
 - e. Create and maintain a central repository for records relating to allegations of serious misconduct and a list of files affected by these allegations.

⁴ If security requirements do not allow the recording of the information in the prosecution file, prosecutors should consult their supervisors and the designated person to determine an alternative way to record the information.

⁵ Depending on the circumstances, the appropriate body can be the management of the police or investigative agency itself, their professional standards unit, or an independent review or complaints body. The investigating officer(s) must not be informed if doing so may compromise the integrity of an investigation into the misconduct.

4. If upon further investigation by the appropriate body or otherwise the allegations have been substantiated on credible and reliable information,⁶ or result in a conviction, finding, charge or notice of hearing, the prosecutor with conduct of the case or assigned by the designated person must:
 - a. Prepare a memorandum to the Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (DDPP) in consultation with the designated person. The memorandum must:
 - i. Describe the allegation(s);
 - ii. Identify the charges and status of the prosecution;
 - iii. Identify other prosecutions that may be affected; and,
 - iv. Describe the PPSC's actions in response to the allegation(s).
 - b. Assess the reasonable prospect of conviction and the public interest test in the case and confirm with the designated person who will assess the decision to prosecute in other outstanding cases impacted by the misconduct, and
 - c. Fulfill the requirements outlined in Chapter 2.2 Duties and Responsibilities of Crown Counsel, 2.3 Decision to Prosecute, Chapter 2.12 The Disclosure of Police Misconduct Information – R v McNeil, and 3.14 Testimony of Police Officers and Police Civilian Agents.
5. The CFPs (or their delegate) will:
 - a. Provide the memorandum to the DDPP, where one is required;
 - b. Notify the concerned police or investigating agency in writing about the allegation, if the allegation is against one of their officers, investigators, civilian employees, or civilian agents;
 - c. Provide regular status reports to the DDPP on the status of files affected by allegations of serious misconduct;
 - d. Communicate with their counterparts in provincial prosecution services about the handling of files affected by allegations of serious misconduct; and
 - e. Determine the course of action for completed files that could be impacted by the allegation of serious misconduct or the outcome of its investigation.

4. CONCLUSION

Prosecutors should consult their supervisors, the designated person, the CFP or their delegate if they have any question about the procedure described in this Guideline or about whether particular conduct amounts to serious misconduct that must be documented, reported, and tracked.

⁶ There may be cases which warrant a review of the file before the investigation is completed, such as in cases where the allegations are of a particularly pressing and serious nature and have been substantiated on credible and reliable information.

Prosecutors who have concerns about the manner in which the allegation is being addressed may raise their concerns with the DDPP, or the Director of Public Prosecutions, if the allegation had already been raised with the DDPP.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.1 MAJOR CASE MANAGEMENT

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1.	INTRODUCTION	2
2.	PURPOSE OF THE GUIDELINE.....	3
3.	THE MANAGEMENT OF A MAJOR CASE	3
3.1.	The relationship with the investigative agency	3
3.2.	Providing legal assistance to the investigative agency	3
3.3.	Input into the formation of the investigative agency's operational plan	4
3.4.	Disclosure management	5
3.5.	Charge management.....	5
3.6.	Composition of the prosecution team	7
4.	THE CROWN'S PROSECUTION PLAN	7
4.1.	Early warning.....	8
4.2.	Development of the prosecution plan	8
5.	MAJOR CASE ADVISORY COMMITTEE	9
5.1.	Recommendation to the Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions	9
5.2.	The MCAC's litigation monitoring function	9
5.3.	Post-case assessment.....	10

1. INTRODUCTION

The administration of justice may be severely strained by trials that stretch over an extended period of time and involve many accused facing several charges. As the Ontario Court of Appeal has observed, "[u]ntil relatively recently a long trial lasted for one week, possibly two. Now, it is not unusual for trials to last for many months, if not years."¹

While major cases can arise for various reasons and have various characteristics, three features in particular commonly exist. First, they result from lengthy investigations, often involving wiretapping. Second, they generally concern joint enterprises. This usually means that there will be more than one accused, each facing many serious charges. Third, the cases are characterized by voluminous evidence. Because they deal with serious crime committed by persons who use sophisticated methods of avoiding detection and/or are engaged in extensive criminality, proof of the Crown's case may involve production of thousands of pages of wiretap transcripts, surveillance reports, business documents, witness statements and other documentary evidence. Because the Crown's disclosure obligations extend beyond the evidence the Crown intends to lead in proof of its case, the volume of disclosable material will be even greater.

¹ R v Felderhof \(2003\), 180 CCC \(3d\) 498, 68 OR \(3d\) 481 \(ONCA\) at para 40.

For the purpose of the application of this guideline, all cases rated as “High Complexity” are to be considered a major case. At the discretion of the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP), the components of this guideline may be applied to cases other than those rated as “High Complexity”.

2. PURPOSE OF THE GUIDELINE

The purpose of this guideline is primarily to function as a legal risk management tool to address the legal, financial and strategic risks associated with major cases. In so doing it will ensure a consistent approach is taken, one that serves to support the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) in respect of his or her responsibility for prosecutions by generating specific recommendations as to how particular major cases should be managed. The special challenges posed by these cases must be identified at an early point and a plan of action created and approved to ensure that key strategic choices are made throughout the investigative process in a timely way.

3. THE MANAGEMENT OF A MAJOR CASE

3.1. The relationship with the investigative agency²

The principle of the investigative independence of the police is firmly entrenched in this country.³ That principle seeks to ensure that investigative decisions will not be subject to improper political control. The Supreme Court of Canada has also recognized that both investigative and prosecutorial functions should be exercised independently, but the same court has refused to dictate how the relationship between investigators and prosecutors should be structured.⁴

While prosecutors and investigators continue to be independent when discharging their respective functions, a sense of partnership must permeate the relationship. This is particularly true in major cases. Accordingly, the Public Prosecution Service of Canada’s (PPSC) involvement in major cases should be characterized by early, continuous and close involvement with the investigative agency.

3.2. Providing legal assistance to the investigative agency

As early as possible in the investigation, the CFP should discuss with the investigative agency the need to assign the services of one or more counsel on an ongoing basis to provide advice. These counsel should have the experience necessary to ensure that any advice given is in accordance with best prosecutorial practices. It is important that these advisory counsel be experienced, and that they consult with CFPs, team leaders, or senior colleagues (particularly those who may be assigned to conduct the prosecution down the road) on potentially problematic issues, in order to ensure consistency in positions taken throughout the duration of the case.

² See also the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.7 Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies”.

³ See e.g. [R v Campbell, \[1999\] 1 SCR 565](#) at paras 33-36.

⁴ [R v Regan, \[2002\] 1 SCR 297](#) at para 64; [R v Beaudry, \[2007\] 1 SCR 190](#) at para 48.

Crown counsel's assistance to investigators should be offered on several fronts,⁵ such as:

- providing advice on the legality of investigative measures;
- assisting in the development of a strategic plan that will result in a manageable prosecution or prosecutions;
- drafting immunity agreements with co-operating witnesses, where necessary;⁶ and
- reviewing or assisting in the drafting of search warrants or other applications, where appropriate
- disclosure.

It should be emphasized that Crown counsel's role is to provide appropriate legal and strategic advice. This will include advising investigative agencies as to how investigative choices will impact on any future prosecution, and may also involve asking hard questions designed to ensuring the investigation remains focused.

3.3. Input into the formation of the investigative agency's operational plan

The formation and structure of an operational plan is the exclusive responsibility of the investigating agency. Involvement from the very outset of the investigation by Crown counsel can, however, assist the investigators in achieving the ultimate objective of the plan, which will often be to debilitate a criminal organization. Crown counsel can offer insight as to how the choice of particular instruments (e.g., the number of accused, the type of charges, measures other than prosecution) may affect fulfillment of the plan.

Where prosecutions are to proceed, they must be financially and legally manageable.⁷ Crown counsel can assist the investigators by, for example: a) identifying aspects of the operational plan that may present difficult problems of proof, particular disclosure obligations, or lead to unwieldy prosecutions; and b) analyzing whether the operational plan takes account of significant resourcing issues.⁸ While Crown counsel can offer advice to focus the investigation, it is not the role of counsel to make choices such as who should be investigated, and what techniques should be used. It is crucial that the PPSC be alerted

⁵ The type of assistance that may be given at the pre-trial stage is dealt with more fully in the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.7 Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies", supra note 2.

⁶ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.3 Immunity Agreements".

⁷ "Legally manageable" includes ensuring that the case that is not so large in terms of number of accused and charges that it becomes incomprehensible to the trier of fact.

⁸ For example, the transcription of wiretaps and appointment of a disclosure co-ordinator.

to the likelihood that significant human and financial resources may need to be allocated to the case. The need to seek additional resources has to be identified as early as possible in order to make sure the projected resource requirement is properly addressed; if the resources will not be available, the investigative agency must be advised.

3.4. Disclosure management

The most effective way of satisfying Crown counsel's ethical obligation to make full disclosure of the Crown's case⁹ is to be involved at an early stage and continue to be involved throughout the investigation.¹⁰

The responsibility for the preparation of disclosure materials should be viewed as a joint one between Crown counsel and the investigative agency. Crown counsel must give the investigative agency advice and direction to ensure that the investigators produce a well-organized package that is as complete as possible and in a user-friendly format before charges are laid.¹¹ The assistance provided should seek to enable the police to produce both excellent Crown briefs and complete disclosure packages for the defence.

Crown counsel can assist the investigative agency in numerous ways,¹² for example, by:

- providing legal advice as to what material is privileged or non-disclosable for any other reason;
- ensuring that the disclosure package contains a summary of the case against each individual (which will be particularly important for charge screening);
- assisting with the preparation of separate disclosure packages to be used for bail hearings; and
- ensuring the investigative agency prepares the package in a user-friendly way by, for example, cataloguing wiretap material according to its relevance to common issues such as investigative necessity, knowns/unknowns.

3.5. Charge management

Effective charge management assumes an ongoing level of cooperation with the investigative agency such that the agency will not be seeking to proceed on a prosecution or prosecutions that are unwieldy in terms of the number of accused or the number of charg-

⁹ [R v Stinchcombe, \[1991\] 3 SCR 326](#) at 339.

¹⁰ See in this regard, the Rapport Final du Comité ad hoc du Comité en Droit Criminel sur les Mégaprocès (Barreau du Québec, fev 2004) at 2.

¹¹ Bearing in mind that post-arrest statements and other investigative developments will require vigilant monitoring to ensure that the continuing disclosure obligation is met.

¹² Such assistance would encompass training. The responsibility for file management is that of the investigative agency, but prosecutors can play an important role in training exercises designed to show what a "user-friendly" disclosure package may consist of.

es. Crown counsel and investigators should work at developing a common understanding at as early a stage as the circumstances of the investigation permit as to what charges against which subjects are likely to go forward, so as to permit both parties to work on issues such as disclosure and the preparation of the Crown brief in a meaningful way, as early as possible. The investigative agency has the final say, however, as to all strategic choices on the structure of the investigation itself.

Crown counsel are required, on an ongoing basis, to assess every case according to the reasonable prospect of conviction/public interest test set out in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute.”¹³ Charge review in the major case context requires strict attention to the difficult choices that must be made, and Crown counsel must objectively review the case to determine whether a prosecution would best serve the public interest, as the “Decision to Prosecute” guideline demands.

First, to the extent possible, charge review should be done before charges are laid. This assumes that there has been co-operation with the investigative agency, particularly with respect to the preparation of a package for Crown counsel that gives a comprehensive overview of the investigation and a detailed summary of the evidence against each individual. Meaningful charge review cannot take place without receiving such information, and prosecutions cannot proceed where a high standard of disclosure is not met.

Second, the consideration of the “public interest” factor in the “Decision to Prosecute” guideline must take into account what will be practically feasible. The fact that many charges meet the “reasonable prospect of conviction” test does not necessarily mean that all criminal acts by all accused must be prosecuted; difficult choices must be made. Counsel must bear in mind the potential number of accused and the evidence available in deciding what combination of accused and charges will give rise to a prosecution or prosecutions that can be successfully mounted and will be most likely to advance the strategic goals of the investigation and prosecution.

The charge review process will also necessitate paying close attention to the desirability of encouraging early resolution discussions, and using other appropriate measures short of prosecution. Crown counsel should have a comprehensive view of appropriate dispositions for each accused, in order to encourage early resolution and reduce the number of accused as appropriate. As set out in other policies,¹⁴ Crown counsel should make, as soon as practicable, a time-limited offer. This offer should reflect that generally a plea of guilty is a mitigating factor on sentence, especially where the accused pleads guilty at the earliest opportunity. Absent a significant change in circumstances, this offer should not be repeated at subsequent stages in the trial process (e.g., after a preliminary hearing, on the day of trial). Due to the substantial public resources typically at stake in major case prosecutions, it is particularly important in such cases that Crown counsel make reasonable efforts to resolve cases at an early stage, in a manner consistent with the public interest.

¹³ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”.

¹⁴ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.7 Resolution Discussions”.

3.6. Composition of the prosecution team

A major case will sometimes require deployment of a multidisciplinary team to address the numerous challenges that will arise. Managers must pay attention to a wide variety of factors in considering the composition of the prosecution team, including the personal compatibility of the individuals selected. Depending on the needs of the particular case, the various parts of the team will include:

- advisory counsel, to work closely with the investigative agency; and
- lead and assisting counsel, to perform the charge screening and conduct preliminary hearings and trials;

And also may include any or all of the following:¹⁵

- bail counsel, to deal specifically with initial bail hearings and subsequent bail reviews;
- counsel with specific expertise, to deal with specific issues such as Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms motions, claims of prosecutorial misconduct, or funding of the defence, for example;
- paralegals and other administrative support personnel to assist counsel with all of the foregoing functions;
- a project manager to handle matters like the scheduling and attendance of witnesses, materiel requirements, accommodation, and other logistical issues;
- communications persons, who can assist prosecuting counsel with the demands for information, or provide media training to prosecuting counsel;
- information management experts, to ensure that systems are in place to properly manage electronically-stored information;
- non-departmental personnel, should contracting out of photocopying be necessary, for example.

4. THE CROWN'S PROSECUTION PLAN

Development of a prosecution plan should be seen as an essential part of the prosecution function in major cases. It is incumbent on CFP's to identify potential major cases as early as possible, and ensure that a prosecution plan is developed and approved by the CFP. As noted in section 1 of this guideline, "major cases" include all prosecutions rated as "High Complexity". At the CFP's discretion, prosecution plans may be required in cases not rated as "High Complexity". A prosecution plan helps to focus counsel's and management's attention on potential issues and ensure an understanding of the theory of the case at an early stage, and also to provide a roadmap for the subsequent conduct of the case.

¹⁵ These are intended as examples only. A "team" may include some or all in any given case, and some may be part of the team for a brief time or only for highly specific purposes.

In addition to review by the CFP, prosecution plans must be referred to the Major Case Advisory Committee (MCAC) in all cases involving national significance, exceptional complexity, or very substantial resource implications. Other cases may be referred to the MCAC for its review at the discretion of the CFP.

4.1. Early warning

In the early stages of the investigation, while it would be unreasonable to expect a detailed prosecution plan, it is nonetheless important for the CFP to provide the relevant Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (Deputy DPP), as soon as practicable, with a “heads up” when it becomes clear that the investigation will likely develop into a major case involving national significance, exceptional complexity, or very substantial resource implications. This may involve, for example, an assessment of the investigative agency's operational plan and its potential impact on the PPSC. As well, the note should describe what steps the PPSC is taking, or should take, to manage the potential risk.

4.2. Development of the prosecution plan

It is up to the CFP, or the Deputy DPPs, to decide at what stage a prosecution plan should be prepared. As a general rule however, the prosecution plan should be developed within a time frame that will permit the plan to be reviewed effectively by the CFP and/or the MCAC, and the resource requirements to be addressed properly. Accordingly, the prosecution plan should be developed as soon as the unfolding investigation permits a strategy to be defined.

The prosecution plan must be sufficiently descriptive of the nature of the investigation so that it can be objectively reviewed. It must address issues such as:

- the nature of the investigation and the key evidence in the case to the extent known;
- the likely resource demands of the case, including an analysis of whether those demands can be satisfied by the regional office in question;
- the general contours of the prosecution, including the number of potential accused and charges, and the number of prosecutions
- particular legal challenges likely to arise;
- an assessment of how effectively information is being managed, so that disclosure will be able to be made as soon as practicable after arrest.

5. MAJOR CASE ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The DPP has responsibility for prosecutions and needs to be satisfied that resources are being effectively used.

To support the DPP and the Deputy DPPs in this responsibility, the PPSC has created the MCAC, composed of senior prosecutors from across the country with extensive trial and appellate experience and expertise relevant to the key cases. Members are chosen by the Deputy DPPs after consultation with CFPs. The MCAC exercises a review and challenge function in regard to major cases involving national significance, exceptional complexity, or very substantial resource implications. In addition, the MCAC will provide that review and challenge function in regard to other cases referred to it by a CFP or Deputy DPP.

5.1. Recommendation to the Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions

A matter must be submitted in time to allow for meaningful review and ultimate approval by the responsible Deputy DPP. The MCAC exercises a challenge function with respect to strategic planning on major cases; it does not "approve" plans. The MCAC provides advice to the major case team and to the CFP based on its objective assessment of the case, and provides recommendations to the relevant Deputy DPP. As a result of the challenge, the CFP may choose to make modifications to the plan before the committee makes its recommendations to the Deputy DPP.

The lead prosecutor on any major case submitted to the MCAC, and his or her CFP, should present the plan to the Committee. It should be viewed by the prosecution team and the CFP as an opportunity to get advice on the overall approach to the case, or any particularly troublesome aspects of the case. The co-chairs of the MCAC and the CFP will provide written recommendations to the appropriate Deputy DPP with respect to the latest version of the prosecution plan. If the plan is approved, the CFP remains responsible for ensuring the execution of the plan.

Counsel may use the MCAC as a source of advice, for example, in assessing the legal strategy and any significant legal risks as they arise. Requests for assistance may also encompass seeking the advice of the MCAC on particular legal issues. It is up to counsel's CFP to determine when an issue should be referred to the Committee. The MCAC may also provide advice on revisions to the prosecution plan.

5.2. The MCAC's litigation monitoring function

Apart from the specific mandate of the Committee with respect to major cases, the Committee may exercise additional functions in support of the DPPs' responsibility for the prosecution function, and in cooperation with CFP's and HQ Counsel Group, including:

- monitoring emerging trends in federal prosecution practice and making recommendations as to how the PPSC should adjust to such trends;

- ensuring consistency of approaches by the PPSC throughout the country, including in respect of work done by agents;
- identifying regional practices or approaches that may be of national interest and make recommendations for their broader diffusion.

5.3. Post-case assessment

Upon the conclusion of any prosecution arising out of projects which have been reviewed by the MCAC, a debriefing exercise should be conducted. The purpose of this exercise is to assist the Major Case Advisory Committee in assessing the utility of its recommendations, developing a better understanding of the challenges and best practices involved in the conduct of large and complex prosecutions, and providing advice and assistance on future cases.

The report should be completed by the lead prosecutor upon the completion of the prosecution and forwarded to the co-chairs of the MCAC. Upon receipt of the completed report, a teleconference may be scheduled to further discuss counsel's experience with the case and any observations they may have on what worked or didn't work and their suggestions for future cases.

In other cases in which the CFP thinks it is advisable, or in addition to the debriefing referred to above, a "lessons learned" exercise may be conducted after the completion of the prosecution. These post-case assessments should be conducted in cooperation or consultation with the investigative agency.

The CFP, who has the responsibility for ensuring these exercises take place, should consult with the head of the local investigative agency so that they can jointly determine how to conduct an effective post-case assessment.

Questions that should be addressed include: the adequacy of the resources deployed, the effectiveness of the cooperation with the investigative agency before and during the prosecution; the ability of the prosecution team to identify and effectively manage the legal risks presented by the case; the use of the MCAC and support by other areas of the PPSC.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.2 DESIGNATION OF THE PARTIES AND THE PROSECUTORS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. THE CROWN AS PARTY TO THE PROCEEDINGS	3
3. THE DPP AS PARTY TO THE PROCEEDINGS.....	4
4. R V R PROSECUTIONS: A GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENT AS DEFENDANT.....	5
5. OTHER SCENARIOS	5
5.1. Direct indictments with both provincial and federal charges	5
5.2. Federal prosecutor as agent of the Attorney General of Canada	6
APPENDIX A.....	7

1. INTRODUCTION

When counsel introduce themselves to a court, they also identify the party for whom they act.¹ The purpose of this guideline is to clarify who is the proper party and to explain how federal prosecutors and agents acting as federal prosecutors should identify themselves and whom they represent in all written pleadings² and in court.

The Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC) is a federal government organization, created on December 12, 2006, when Part 3 of the Federal Accountability Act³ received Royal Assent, bringing the Director of Public Prosecutions Act⁴ (DPP Act) into force. The applied name of this federal government office under Treasury Board's Federal Identity Program is the Public Prosecution Service of Canada, whereas its legal name is the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions (ODPP).⁵

¹ Most court rules require court documents to have a “general heading” or “style of cause” which identify the parties before the court; they will often be identified as either applicant or respondent or intervener, or as appellant or respondent. This note is concerned with the proper use of names in the general heading as well as with how counsel identifies themselves in signature blocks and orally in court.

² “Pleadings” is used expansively to include all types of material filed in courts, including, without limiting the generality of it, indictments, applications and motions, affidavits, facts and written submissions, and orders.

³ SC 2006, c 9.

⁴ Section 121 being Part 3 of the Federal Accountability Act, SC 2006, c 9.

⁵ An applied title is the approved name used in the signature to identify an institution, program or activity. This title should be used in all communications. By contrast, the legal title is the name that appears in the enabling legislation, proclamation, order in council, or other instrument used to create a branch of government.

In criminal proceedings, the prosecuting party is Her Majesty the Queen,⁶ or the Crown. This title emanates from the concept of state legal authority within a constitutional monarchy whereby the Queen, or “the Crown”, is the legal representative of the executive branch of government. Within the Canadian federation, the Queen, or the Crown, operates both at the federal level as “Her Majesty in Right of Canada” and at the provincial level as “Her Majesty in Right of” each province. The Crown may, in a given case, be an applicant, respondent, appellant or intervener, depending on the nature of the proceeding.

The Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) is not a party to a prosecution. Rather, the DPP is the legal agent of the Crown, or counsel for the Crown. The DPP may, “under and on behalf of the Attorney General”, initiate and conduct prosecutions “on behalf of the Crown.” When exercising purely prosecutorial functions, federal prosecutors,⁷ in turn, act as “delegated agents” for the DPP.⁸

2. THE CROWN AS PARTY TO THE PROCEEDINGS

Whenever the Crown is the proper party named in the general heading of the court documents, which is the case for prosecutions and related proceedings,⁹ federal prosecutors act as “agents of the DPP”, reflecting the language in s. 9\(2\) of the DPP Act, or “Counsel for Her Majesty the Queen”, or “Crown counsel”.

Thus, the proper description of counsel in documents which initiate a proceeding, or are a form of pleading, is “counsel for Her Majesty the Queen”, “counsel for the Crown” or “agent for the Director of Public Prosecutions”.¹⁰ Unless the DPP is named as a party to a proceeding, written submissions and facts filed with the court should be signed with the ⁶ Also referred to as “Regina”, hence the use of the abbreviation “R” in criminal styles of cause; e.g. R v John Doe.

⁷ This is the expression used by Parliament in ss 7 and 9 of the DPP Act to designate the prosecutors acting on behalf of the Federal Crown; the French version uses the term “procureurs de l’État”.

⁸ Section 9\(1\) of the DPP Act authorizes the DPP to delegate any of his or her powers, duties or functions (with the exception of the actual power to delegate), to employed federal prosecutors and to agents retained under s 7\(2\).

⁹ For example, an application for a management order pursuant to s 6 of the Seized Property Management Directorate Act, brought on consent of the Attorney General, is a step within the trial process and falls within the purview of s 3\(3\)\(a\) of the DPP Act (conducting prosecutions). Thus, a federal prosecutor applying for a management order, applies as agent of the DPP or counsel for the Crown because the Crown is the proper party, even though the law specifies that the Attorney General makes the application. Similarly, the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General (i.e., the DPP for this function) must authorize in writing a direct indictment under s 577 of the Criminal Code. Nevertheless, the proper party is the Crown and the federal prosecutor will sign the direct indictment as “agent of the Director of Public Prosecutions” and not as “agent of the Attorney General of Canada”.

¹⁰ Note that, while the term “agent of the DPP” is technically accurate in pleadings, prosecutors more commonly employ the term “Crown counsel” as it identifies the actual party to the proceeding, rather than the party’s counsel (i.e., DPP and his or her agent).

identifier “counsel for Her Majesty the Queen”, “counsel for the Crown”, or “Crown counsel”, unless “counsel for the appellant” or “counsel for the respondent” is more appropriate and in keeping with the local practice of a particular court. In the same vein, unless the DPP is party to a proceeding, federal prosecutors should introduce themselves to the court as “counsel for the Crown”, “Crown counsel” or “counsel for the federal Crown”,¹¹ or words to the same effect. The cover page of written pleadings should identify counsel as being with the PPSC.

In all written pleadings, counsel should indicate the date and place of signature above or below the signature block. Some court rules require it.

In regulatory matters, some related proceedings are brought at the instance of the investigating agency.¹² Others are brought by persons attacking procedures instituted by the investigating agency. In those situations, where PPSC counsel are acting as advisory counsel to the regulatory agency, the general heading of the court documents will name the person identified by the relevant statute as the applicant. Counsel will identify themselves as “counsel for the applicant” (or respondent, as the case may be). However, the back page and other locations in the court documents requiring identification of the law firm and its address for service, counsel should indicate that they are from the ODPP, with their relevant branch or group and their own business address.

3. THE DPP AS PARTY TO THE PROCEEDINGS

Where the DPP is named as a party to a proceeding, federal prosecutors act as counsel for the DPP. In these circumstances, written submissions and facts should be signed “counsel for the Director of Public Prosecutions” and federal prosecutors should introduce themselves as “counsel for the Director of Public Prosecutions”. Examples of situations in which the DPP is a party to the proceedings are interventions in provincial prosecutions¹³ and appeals made under s. 3\(3\)\(b\) of the DPP Act; extraordinary remedies sought against the DPP under Part XXVI of the Criminal Code (i.e., certiorari, habeas corpus, prohibition and mandamus); and judicial reviews of decisions made by the DPP.

¹¹ Note that, while there is no juridical party named the “federal Crown”, federal prosecutors commonly use this vernacular term to introduce themselves to the court, as distinct from their provincial counterparts, and it has been accepted.

¹² See e.g. applications to a superior court by the Commissioner of Competition for search warrants or production orders under ss 15 and 11, respectively, of the Competition Act, RSC 1985, c C-34, as amended.

¹³ Counsel for the province in these matters represents the Crown, whereas the DPP becomes party to the proceedings as intervener.

4. R V R PROSECUTIONS: A GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENT AS DEFENDANT

A government department or agency does not generally have distinct legal personality and therefore does not have the capacity to be a defendant in criminal proceedings.¹⁴ All prosecutions either commenced by, or taken against, the federal Crown, are conducted in the name of Her Majesty the Queen. Thus, insofar as a statute binds Her Majesty in right of Canada,¹⁵ Her Majesty can be prosecuted under that statute for the criminal conduct of her servants. In these situations the Queen finds herself on both sides of the prosecution. The Queen is represented by her Ministers for different purposes in a “R v R” prosecution. The Queen is represented for the prosecution by her Minister, the Attorney General of Canada, whose prosecution authority is delegated to the DPP by virtue of s. 3\(3\) of the DPP Act. In her defence, Her Majesty is represented by the Minister who is responsible for the defendant government institution. The defendant is “Her Majesty the Queen as represented by the Minister of [name of the department/agency]”.

Where a defendant in a federal prosecution or a respondent to a government application is a government department or agency whose legislation does not give it the capacity to sue or be sued or otherwise has no legal personality, the proper style of cause is “Her Majesty the Queen v Her Majesty the Queen”, “Regina v Regina”, or “R v R” for short. Similarly, the same practice applies in respect of certain other government entities that have no governing legislation and merely operate within the legislative mandate of another government department.¹⁶

5. OTHER SCENARIOS

5.1. Direct indictments with both provincial and federal charges

Any direct indictment containing provincial charges must have the consent of the respective provincial Attorney General, or Deputy Attorney General, even if the provincial counterpart delegates the prosecution of those charges to the federal prosecutor.

¹⁴ Munro v Canada, \(1992\), 11 OR \(3d\) 1 \(Gen Div\) at 10-13. See also [Conseil des ports nationaux v Langelier, \[1969\] SCR 60](#) at 71; Glaxo Canada Inc v Canada (1987), 11 FTR 121 at 125; Re Air India (1987), 62 OR (2d) 130 (HC); Robichaud v Canada \(Attorney General\) (1991), 44 FTR 172 at 177.

¹⁵ Section 17 of the Interpretation Act, RSC 1985, c I-21 provides that “No enactment is binding on Her Majesty or affects Her Majesty or Her Majesty’s rights or prerogatives in any manner, except as mentioned or referred to in the enactment.” For example, s 5 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, 1999, SC 1999, c 33 provides that “This Act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province.”

¹⁶ For example, Service Canada operates within the legislative mandate and framework of the Department of Human Resources and Skills Development Act and the Department of Social Development Act. It has delegated authorities to execute its mandate and functions.

When filing a direct indictment containing both federal and provincial charges, counsel should sign the document as “agent for the Director of Public Prosecutions” with respect to the federal charges, and “agent for the Attorney General of [name of province]” with respect to the provincial charges. When jointly prosecuting federal and provincial charges, counsel should introduce themselves as appearing “for the Crown”, and so indicate in written submissions.¹⁷

5.2. Federal prosecutor as agent of the Attorney General of Canada

A federal prosecutor would almost never act as counsel or agent for the Attorney General, because this would suggest that the prosecutor could take directives directly from the Attorney General. This would go against the underlying purpose of the DPP Act which is to insulate the prosecution function from the Attorney General and the political process. Where the Attorney General intervenes in a prosecution or an appeal under s. 14 of the DPP Act, or assumes conduct of a prosecution under s. 15 of the DPP Act, normally counsel from the Department of Justice would act as agent of the Attorney General in that prosecution, intervention or appeal. The only rare situation where a federal prosecutor would be counsel for the Attorney General would be where the Attorney General appointed a federal prosecutor to act on behalf of the Attorney General in a s.14 intervention or a s. 15 prosecution.¹⁸ This type of appointment would require prior approval of the DPP and, if approved, would involve certain administrative steps in order to formalize the fact that a federal prosecutor (who acts pursuant to s. 9 of the DPP Act) is no longer agent for the DPP when acting on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada in relation to a specific file.

¹⁷ The authority of Crown counsel to prosecute a matter or institute an appeal need not be proved as part of the case at trial or on appeal. There is a presumption that when counsel attends to prosecute matters in a particular court and describes herself or himself as “Crown counsel” or “the Crown” or “agent for the DPP”, they are cloaked with the proper authority to do so. The court is entitled to rely on that presumption unless and until there is an objection taken. In the event of a technical challenge to jurisdiction, Crown counsel, as officer of the court, may confirm his or her authority and file any written documentation purporting to be signed by the relevant authorizing person that confirms that authority. See R v Chen \(2006\), 209 CCC \(3d\) 534, 205 Man R \(2d\) 157 at para 12, R v Lemay (No 2) (1951), 100 CCC 365 (BC CA), and R v Elliott \(2003\), 181 CCC \(3d\) 118 \(ONCA\).

¹⁸ In R v Marshall, 2002 NSSC 233, the Nova Scotia Supreme Court considered the right of the DPP to cross-appoint counsel from the provincial justice department to argue an appeal. The Court dismissed the application for judicial review. It found no conceptual difficulty with the cross-appointment but acknowledged that the situation may have been more difficult if the DPP had appointed counsel to conduct a trial.

APPENDIX A

Sample signature blocks

ALL OF WHICH IS RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED

Dated at [city, province/territory] this ____ day of _____, 20__.

At first instance

[Name of counsel]
Counsel for Her Majesty the Queen

Or

[Name of counsel]
Crown Counsel

Or

[Name of counsel]
Agent of the Director of Public
Prosecutions

On appeal

[Name of counsel]
Counsel for the Appellant/Respondent

[Name of co-counsel (if applicable)]
Counsel for the Appellant/Respondent

Or

[Name of counsel]
Counsel for Her Majesty the Queen

[Name of co-counsel (if applicable)]
Counsel for Her Majesty the Queen

Or

[Name of counsel]
Agent of the Director of Public
Prosecutions

[Name of co-counsel (if applicable)]
Agent of the Director of Public
Prosecutions

DPP as intervener

[Name of counsel]
Counsel for the Intervener*

[Name of co-counsel (if applicable)]
Counsel for the Intervener

Or

[Name of counsel]
Counsel for the Director of Public
Prosecutions

[Name of co-counsel (if applicable)]
Counsel for the Director of Public
Prosecutions

Note that, in these interventions, counsel for the appellant or respondent Attorney General will be “counsel for Her Majesty the Queen”.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.3 IMMUNITY AGREEMENTS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	3
2. PURPOSE OF THE GUIDELINE.....	3
3. DEFINITION OF "IMMUNITY AGREEMENT"	4
4. TYPES OF IMMUNITY	4
4.1. Stay of proceedings.....	4
4.2. Immunity from future prosecutions	5
4.3. "Use immunity" investigative assistance agreements.....	5
4.4. Guarantees of immunity for Competition Act offences	5
5. CRITERIA TO APPLY REGARDING OFFERS OF IMMUNITY	6
5.1. Seriousness of the offence	6
5.2. Reliability of the person.....	6
5.3. Reliability of the anticipated evidence.....	7
5.4. Full and candid disclosure	7
5.5. The Importance of the person's testimony or co-operation.....	8
5.6. The nature and extent of the person's involvement in the offence	8
5.7. Other forms of reward.....	8
5.8. The person's history of co-operation	9
5.9. Protection of the public	9
5.10. Disclosure prior to detection	9
5.11. Inappropriate criteria.....	9
6. THE CONDUCT OF NEGOTIATIONS.....	9
6.1. Consultation required before concluding an agreement	11
7. THE "JAILHOUSE" OR "IN-CUSTODY" INFORMER	12
7.1. Credibility	13
7.2. The approval process for the use of the in-custody informer	14
7.3. Informer benefits.....	14
8. OUT-OF-CUSTODY COOPERATING WITNESSES	14
9. BREACH OF AGREEMENTS	15
10. FILING OF THE AGREEMENT IN COURT	15
APPENDIX "A" – AGREEMENT CHECKLIST	16
APPENDIX "B" – IMMUNITY AGREEMENT	17
APPENDIX "C" – INVESTIGATIVE ASSISTANT AGREEMENT	18

1. INTRODUCTION

Those who have violated the law should be held accountable for their crimes. However, some crimes can be proved only by the testimony or cooperation of individuals who are implicated in the same crime or in some other criminal activity and who seek immunity from prosecution in exchange for their testimony and/or their cooperation with the police. Emphasis by investigating agencies on the investigation of the upper echelons of criminal organizations often heightens the need to rely on the evidence or assistance of co-operating accomplices, or other persons with outstanding charges, to prove offences.

While the cooperation of these individuals has been recognized as a very powerful tool in the battle against crime, it brings with it the very real risk that individuals will falsely accuse others and/or minimize their own culpability in the hope of securing immunity. Great care therefore must be taken in dealing with individuals seeking immunity.

2. PURPOSE OF THE GUIDELINE

The purpose of this guideline is to:

1. set out the applicable criteria in determining whether the Crown should enter into an immunity agreement with someone who may otherwise be prosecuted;
2. provide guidelines for Crown counsel on the proper handling of co-operating information-providers¹ both in and out of court;
3. distinguish the role of Crown counsel from that of the investigating agency in the immunity-seeking process.

While the focus of this guideline is on immunity agreements with potential Crown witnesses, the principles, procedures and criteria described here apply, with necessary adaptations, when the Crown is contemplating granting other forms of consideration (including use immunity) in exchange for providing testimony, information, assistance or other forms of cooperation with the Crown and/or investigative agency.

This guideline must be applied in conjunction with the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.11 Informer Privilege”.²

¹ The term “information-provider” will be used as a generic description of the person seeking some form of immunity, as opposed to “witness” or other description.

² See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.11 Informer Privilege”.

3. DEFINITION OF "IMMUNITY AGREEMENT"

The term "immunity agreement" in this guideline refers to any agreement by the Crown to refrain from prosecuting someone for a crime or crimes or to terminate a prosecution (including appeals), in return for providing testimony or other valuable information, co-operation or assistance.

A checklist of issues to address in the agreement and a sample immunity agreement, are included as Appendices "A" and "B" to this guideline.

4. TYPES OF IMMUNITY

Courts have recognized the legal basis of a power to grant immunity despite the absence of any express provision in the Criminal Code (Code) authorizing the practice.³ There are various mechanisms by which the Crown can confer immunity under Canadian criminal law.

4.1. Stay of proceedings

Pursuant to s. 579 of the Code, the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) or his or her delegate has the statutory power to stay existing criminal proceedings in appropriate cases. If the Crown wishes to recommence the prosecution, the Crown must notify the clerk of the court of the recommencement of the stayed proceedings within a period of one year from the date of the entry of the stay. Crown counsel must be conscious of this time limitation in drafting immunity agreements, particularly where the terms of the agreement require that the information provider do something or refrain from doing something during that period.

The authority of the DPP to stay proceedings does not include the power to stay prosecutions conducted by provincial prosecution authorities, unless there is ad hoc or standing delegated authority for the provincial charges (for example a major-minor agreement between prosecution services).⁴ Accordingly, the agreement must be worded carefully so as to make the extent of the immunity clear and unambiguous. Counsel for the information-provider should be referred to the provincial attorney general if his or her client desires immunity from offences prosecuted by a provincial attorney general. Crown counsel may respond to a request for consultation from the provincial representative, or initiate consultation with provincial authorities where appropriate.

³ R v Edward D (1990), 73 OR (2d) 758 (ONCA); Bourrée v Parsons (1987), 29 CCC (3d) 126 (Ont Dist Ct); R v Betesh (1975), 30 CCC (2d) 233 (Ont Co Ct).

⁴ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.7 Resolution Discussions" at section 5.

4.2. Immunity from future prosecutions

The DPP is also entitled to provide an assurance of immunity against future prosecution⁵ for crimes that the information-provider is known to have already committed, but for which no charges have yet been laid.

4.3. "Use immunity" investigative assistance agreements

Traditionally, requests for immunity were made upon completion of the investigation. In recent years, however, Crown counsel and investigative agencies increasingly have had far greater contact during investigations in an effort to enhance the ability of the state to effectively fight crime, and present prosecution cases that are ready to proceed efficiently from the time charges are laid.

With respect to offers of immunity, this may require that Crown counsel be involved in discussions with the investigating agency before an investigation is complete in order to offer assurances to persons who may have valuable information to provide to the investigating agency. So, for example, persons may be willing to give details of their knowledge of criminal activity in audiotaped or videotaped interviews, where they receive assurances that information provided will not be used directly against them for investigative purposes.

This form of immunity agreement is referred to as "use immunity". It differs somewhat from immunity agreements discussed elsewhere in this guideline in that it focuses on the uses that may be made of the information provided, rather than acts which will not be prosecuted. It is appropriate for Crown counsel to engage in discussions with investigating agencies, and sign formal "Investigative Assistance Agreements" which bind the DPP. A sample is found as Appendix "C".

Investigative Assistance Agreements must be approved by Crown counsel in consultation with their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or Deputy CFP.⁶ The CFP should retain a copy of such agreements.

4.4. Guarantees of immunity for Competition Act offences

Pursuant to the Competition Bureau's Immunity Program, persons or corporations with information concerning anti-competitive business practices such as bid-rigging and price fixing are encouraged to make disclosure to the Competition Bureau. The policy respecting immunity agreements in relation to Competition Act investigations and offences is set out in a separate PPSC Deskbook guideline entitled "5.2 Competition Act".

⁵ The form of the assurance is an undertaking not to prosecute or to stay any prosecution once initiated.

⁶ In the case of legal agents, the agreement must be approved by the Agent Supervisor in consultation with the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP).

5. CRITERIA TO APPLY REGARDING OFFERS OF IMMUNITY

Immunity from prosecution is provided only where the information or co-operation is of such value that it is clearly in the public interest not to hold a person accountable for criminal activity. However, immunity should be the exception rather than the norm. The DPP is responsible for the conduct and supervision of all federal prosecutions in Canada. Thus, only the DPP through Crown counsel, and not the investigating agency, is entitled to confer immunity from prosecution.⁷

In determining whether immunity may be appropriate, Crown counsel should weigh all relevant circumstances, including the following:

5.1. Seriousness of the offence

Generally, immunity should be considered only when the information provided relates to the commission of a serious offence, or when the prosecution of a case is otherwise important in achieving effective enforcement of the law. As a rule, it should not be considered in relatively minor cases.

5.2. Reliability of the person

The dangers associated with reliance upon immunity-seekers are well known.⁸ The person may be attempting to purchase lenient treatment by falsely accusing others. Being familiar with the circumstances surrounding the offence, the witness is in a position to attribute certain acts to innocent persons. The witness may also minimize his or her own role in the transaction and transfer the primary blame to others.

Before offering immunity, Crown counsel should assess the truthfulness and candour of the information-provider. If the person is to testify, Crown counsel should be satisfied that a properly instructed jury would likely view the witness as credible.⁹

However, truthfulness should not be equated with moral character, as Toy J. pointedly observed in Re Meier:¹⁰

⁷ This is not to say that investigating agencies do not have the discretion to exercise a form of immunity by deciding not to lay charges.

⁸ See the PPSC Deskbook directive “2.4 Prevention of Wrongful Convictions”.

⁹ By putting the witness forward, counsel does not vouch for the credibility of the witness on all points. Where counsel has called a witness who has stated facts incorrectly, counsel can call other witnesses to ensure an accurate version of events emerges: R v Burns, [1994] 1 SCR 656; R v Ewert, [1992] 3 SCR 161; R v Precourt (1976), 39 CCC (2d) 311 at 325 (ONCA).

¹⁰ (1 March 1982) (BCSC) [unreported]. The same point was made by Barrette-Joncas, J, in R v Dubois:¹⁰ In criminal matters, and particularly in cases of murder, it is not always possible to have a bishop (priest) for a witness as the Crown did in the case of R v Vaudry, 500-9-8144-773, also before this court.

The state when it moves in to prosecute those who have allegedly committed crimes does not have the luxury of picking and choosing their witnesses. The state may have to rely on drunks, prostitutes, criminals, perjurers, paid informers as well as solid citizens to prove their case.

Counsel should be cautious in providing immunity to persons with a history of serious criminal activity. While it may sometimes be appropriate to provide immunity to such persons in order to prosecute more serious offenders, counsel must be aware the person's testimony will be viewed with great caution by the trier of fact; in some circumstances, reliance on such a witness may be damaging to the Crown's case.

5.3. Reliability of the anticipated evidence

Crown counsel should be satisfied that the anticipated evidence is reliable. Crown counsel should ensure that the investigating agency has attempted to confirm the reliability of the information provided and that the most knowledgeable investigators on the case have reviewed all the facts and circumstances of the case that are known to the Crown. This usually involves Crown counsel conducting a thorough examination of all documents, exhibits, seizures, surveillance reports and wiretap interceptions, as well as the statements of the other witnesses. The object is to determine the extent to which, if at all, the proposed evidence is consistent with the balance of the case for the Crown. Particular attention should be paid to intercepted communications, to which the potential witness was a party, things that were seized from him or her or from a place under his or her control, and any police surveillance that focused on his or her activities.

5.4. Full and candid disclosure

The information-provider must be candid about his or her involvement in criminal activity.¹¹ When meeting with the information-provider respecting potential immunity, Crown counsel must ask the person whether he or she has been: a) convicted of any criminal offence; b) charged with any criminal offence; and, c) knowingly the object of a criminal investigation. If the person subsequently testifies, Crown counsel will be required to place the person's full criminal record before the court.¹² Crown counsel must also be satisfied that the information-provider has made full and candid disclosure of all information pertaining to the activity in question or likely to affect the credibility of the information-provider. Such disclosure may relate to criminal activity in Canada or to criminal activity abroad, over which the DPP lacks prosecutorial authority. The information-provider must be advised that the DPP cannot bind other prosecutorial authorities.

¹¹ Where the information-provider is the officer of a corporation, "involvement in criminal activity" includes criminal activity of the corporation, of which the officer is aware.

¹² R v Ahluwalia \(2000\), 149 CCC \(3d\) 193 \(ONCA\) [Ahluwalia].

5.5. The Importance of the person's testimony or co-operation

Crown counsel should also assess the relative strength of the case for the prosecution with and without the information provider's testimony or other evidence, and should be satisfied that the person is able and prepared to provide reliable evidence on significant aspects of the case. Counsel should also consider whether the same evidence can be obtained from another source not requiring an assurance of immunity. The fact that the information-provider's testimony will corroborate otherwise uncorroborated evidence from other witnesses may make it sufficiently important to warrant immunity.

5.6. The nature and extent of the person's involvement in the offence

Crown counsel should compare the degree of the information-provider's culpability with that of others being prosecuted. In the absence of unusual circumstances, it is generally not in the public interest to rely on the testimony of a high-ranking member of a criminal organization to convict a minor figure in the organization.

A co-operating accomplice is not, by reason only of involvement in the crime, incompetent to testify at the trial of former confederates.¹³ Nor does the fact that the accomplice has been indicted separately for the offence, or for some other offence, render the accomplice non-compellable at the instance of the Crown.¹⁴ The accomplice's evidence is, however, viewed with great caution.¹⁵ Crown counsel must be conscious of the danger that the accomplice's evidence may become tainted during the process of conversion from accomplice to Crown witness.¹⁶

5.7. Other forms of reward

The public interest may not be served by providing immunity against prosecution to a person who has committed a particularly serious offence. Lesser forms of "reward" such as a joint submission for a reduced sentence should also be considered.¹⁷

¹³ Canada Evidence Act, RSC 1985, c C-5, s 3; USA v Sheppard, [1977] 2 SCR 1067; R v Cruikshanks (1990), 58 CCC (3d) 26 (BCCA).

¹⁴ Jobin v The Queen, [1995] 2 SCR 78; R v RJS, [1995] 1 SCR 451 (SCC); R v Mazur (1986), 27 CCC (3d) 359 (BCCA), lv ref 20 May 1986; Ruben v The Queen (1983), 24 Man R (2d) 100 (QB); Re Crooks and The Queen (1982), 2 CCC (3d) 57 (Ont HC), aff'd 64n (Ont CA); R v Walters (1982), 2 CCC (3d) 512 (BCCA). However, see Praisoody v R (1990), 3 CR (4th) 91 (Ont Ct J) and R v Zurlo (1990), 57 CCC (3d) 407 (Que CA).

¹⁵ Vetrovec v The Queen, [1982] 1 SCR 811.

¹⁶ For a discussion of the potential for witness contamination before trial by police and/or Crown, see the Ontario Superior Court decision in R v Spence, [2011] OJ No 2051. See also R v Buric, [1997] 1 SCR 535, affirming 106 CCC (3d) 97 (Ont CA) [Buric].

¹⁷ In accordance with the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.7 Resolution Discussions", supra note 4.

5.8. The person's history of co-operation

Counsel should consider whether the person has co-operated with law enforcement officials in the past, either as a witness or an informer, and whether the person has previously entered into immunity arrangements. In particular, counsel should consider whether and to what extent the proposed witness has previously, on being arrested, sought immunity through offers of co-operation. The expectation of immunity should not be allowed to become a license to commit crime.

5.9. Protection of the public

"Public protection" is a concept somewhat narrower than, but certainly related to, "the public interest". The fundamental question is whether the protection of the public would be better served through prosecution (and possible imprisonment) of the proposed information-provider than by relying on that person as a witness in the prosecution of another accused.

5.10. Disclosure prior to detection

In cases that are covert or difficult to detect, full and candid disclosure of conduct before its detection is an important consideration in favour of granting immunity. For example, competition offences such as price-fixing may continue unabated for some time unless one of the parties to the price-fixing scheme comes forward voluntarily. The grant of immunity should reflect the significant benefit to the legislative goals in such circumstances.

5.11. Inappropriate criteria

The decision to confer or withhold immunity should never be improperly influenced by factors such as race, nationality, or religion. Nor may these decisions be influenced by partisan political considerations. Crown counsel must remain objective in deciding whether to grant immunity.

6. THE CONDUCT OF NEGOTIATIONS

In negotiating immunity agreements, Crown counsel have numerous responsibilities. More particularly, Crown counsel should:

1. strongly encourage the immunity-seeker to obtain the assistance of legal counsel before entering into any immunity agreement and negotiate through this lawyer;
2. whenever possible, limit his or her meetings with the person and deal primarily with the other lawyer until the agreement is finalized and ready for signature;
3. never meet the immunity-seeker alone (i.e., the investigating officer should always be in attendance);

4. maintain detailed records of all negotiations with the immunity-seeker and his or her lawyer leading up to the agreement;
5. be diligent not to expose the immunity-seeker to facts or evidence about the prosecution to which his or her testimony, information, assistance or cooperation will apply;
6. canvass the areas usually explored in cross-examination before deciding whether to conclude the agreement;
7. be fully aware of the circumstances, such as who approached whom, the numbers of interviews and the parties attending, whether the interviews were recorded;
8. explore whether, during the debriefing process, the information-provider consciously or unconsciously may have absorbed facts previously unknown to him or her, that investigators had obtained from other sources;¹⁸
9. make it clear that he or she does not have unfettered discretion to approve any immunity agreement that is negotiated; rather any such agreement must be approved in accordance with the procedures outlined in this guideline;
10. be familiar with the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.7 Resolution Discussions";¹⁹
11. reduce to writing any immunity agreement that is negotiated and ensure that the written agreement is signed by the immunity-seeker and, if applicable, his or her lawyer;
12. avoid agreeing to grant complete immunity from criminal responsibility unless it is absolutely necessary in order to obtain the required testimony, information, assistance or cooperation. The granting of a limited form of immunity is generally preferred;
13. Crown counsel should explore the following potential, and non-exhaustive, terms of any immunity agreement:
 - a. dropping charges;
 - b. reducing charges;
 - c. dropping or reducing the charges of others, such as family members or friends;
 - d. agreeing to a lesser sentence;
 - e. the timing of dealing with outstanding charges;
 - f. the resolution of pending applications for the return of offence-related property or proceeds of crime;

¹⁸ This danger may arise, for example, where the person was given something by the investigating agency designed to "prompt" memory on certain matters, including investigative aids such as flow charts. This may also include items received by way of Crown disclosure when the person was charged. This is not to suggest it is never proper to show the person business records, for example, but simply to emphasize that care must be taken. As to "witness tainting" generally, see Buric, supra note 16.

¹⁹ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.7 Resolution Discussions", supra note 4.

- g. reward money; and
- h. the circumstances under which the agreement could be terminated.

Additionally, certain factors over which Crown counsel have no control may be appropriately contained within immunity agreements. Crown counsel should also be aware of certain matters that arise in the immunity agreement negotiations between the investigators and the information-provider, including:

- a. circumstances prompting relocation;
- b. providing of a new identity;
- c. all payments of money (lump sum, monthly allowance, relocation expenses);
- d. assistance in securing employment; and
- e. special privileges while in jail or under the control of the police pursuant to s. 527\(7\) of the Code;

6.1. Consultation required before concluding an agreement

Granting immunity can be, and usually is, a complex process involving several offices with differing mandates. Consequently, consultation on at least four levels may and often will be required.

First, Crown counsel²⁰ must consult with the CFP before entering into an immunity agreement. In cases of significant public interest, the CFP should consult the appropriate Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (Deputy DPP) before finalizing an arrangement. As well, before taking recourse in other proceedings against a person who has breached the immunity agreement, CFPs must consult the appropriate Deputy DPP.

Second, in most cases, the immunity process begins with discussions between the information-provider and the case investigators without prior consultation with Crown counsel. Following these discussions, investigators usually approach the prosecutor. Crown counsel rely on the investigating agency's input in weighing the relevant public interest criteria. Crown counsel should be satisfied that the agency's lead investigator responsible for overseeing such agreements has reviewed and approved the proposed agreement. The investigating agency makes a recommendation to Crown counsel. However Crown counsel bears the ultimate responsibility for deciding who is prosecuted and who is called as a witness.

Third, where the offence for which immunity is being offered is alleged to have been committed in multiple provinces or territories, Crown counsel may wish to consult with other Regional Offices either (a) to ascertain whether that office, or the local police forces, may have information relevant to the immunity seeker's reliability or (b) to ascertain whether there may be any outstanding charges in iCase.²¹

²⁰ Legal agents must always consult the Agent Supervisor, who will in turn consult the CFP.

Fourth, although the agreement signed on behalf of the DPP does not extend to prosecutions that may be commenced by provincial authorities, or to crimes undisclosed by the witness, it will sometimes be desirable to discuss the proposed immunity agreement with provincial authorities if the provincial Attorney General (or DPP) has jurisdiction to prosecute other offences committed by the person. Whether and to what extent Crown counsel should become involved in these discussions, or whether Crown counsel should leave them entirely to counsel for the person should be decided on a case-by-case basis.

7. THE "JAILHOUSE" OR "IN-CUSTODY" INFORMER²²

When the information-provider in question can be categorized as a "jailhouse" or "in-custody" informer, together with all of the other considerations set out in this chapter, it is important to examine additional factors. Notice should be taken of the definition of an "in-custody informer", as set out by the Honourable Fred Kaufman, C.M., Q.C. in his report on the Guy Paul Morin case:²³

An in-custody informer is someone who allegedly receives one or more statements from an accused while both are in custody, and where the statements relate to offences that occurred outside of the custodial institution. The accused need not be in custody for, or charged with, the offences to which the statements relate. Excluded from this definition are informers who allegedly have direct knowledge of the offence independent of the alleged statements of the accused (even if a portion of their evidence includes a statement made by the accused).

The use of in-custody informers has been identified as a significant contributing factor in cases of wrongful conviction.²⁴ There are four issues to which Crown counsel should pay particular attention when dealing with an in-custody informer.

²¹ The prosecuting Regional Office should verify the name of the individual seeking immunity in iCase. If additional files are identified, counsel should consult the regional office where those files are located.

²² For a more thorough discussion of the in-custody informer, see the PPSC Deskbook directive "2.4 Prevention of Wrongful Convictions", supra note 8.

²³ Canada, Report of the Kaufman Commission on Proceedings Involving Guy Paul Morin, vol 1 (Toronto: Queen's Printer, 1998) at 601. [Kaufman Report].

²⁴ See the PPSC Deskbook directive "2.4 Prevention of Wrongful Convictions", supra note 8. See also F/P/T Heads of Prosecution Committee, Report of the Working Group "The Path to Justice: Preventing Wrongful Convictions", 2011, ch 7.

7.1. Credibility

As stated in the Kaufman Report:

Jailhouse informant evidence is intrinsically, though not invariably, unreliable and many of us have failed in the past to appreciate the full extent of this unreliability. It follows that prosecutors must be particularly vigilant in recognizing the true indicia detracting from, or supporting, [their] reliability.²⁵

At a minimum, Crown counsel should subjectively assess the jailhouse informer's proposed testimony and examine the details of the evidence, possible motives for lying, and the possibility of collusion, where there is more than one in-custody informer."²⁶

In addition to the factors listed in sections 5.1-5.6, in assessing credibility, Crown counsel should consider the following factors:

- The jailhouse informer's background, including
 - o his or her psychological and psychiatric profiles;
 - o any prior claims of having received in-custody statements;
 - o reliability of any previous information;
 - o any prior testimony;
 - o any convictions for offences involving dishonesty;
- The circumstances of the informer's incarceration, including the placement of the informer within the prison facility and access to information about the crime in question;
- Relationship between the informer and the police and the circumstances surrounding the giving of the "confession", including
 - o When, where and how was the statement made?
 - o Did the police solicit the evidence?
 - o Any prior association between the in-custody informer and the police officer involved with the investigation?
 - o Did the police approach the informer prior to "receiving" the "confession"?
 - o Did the police provide information to the informer prior to the making of the statement?
 - o Did the police ask leading questions?

²⁵ Kaufman Report, vol 1 at 487, supra note 23.

²⁶ Kaufman Report, ibid at 607-609. This part of the Kaufman Report was referred to with approval by Major J, dissenting in [R v Brooks, \[2000\] 1 SCR 237](#).

- The circumstances surrounding the disclosure of the alleged statement to the Crown;
- The benefits sought or received in return for the information;
- External corroboration
 - o The use of tests to ensure reliability (e.g., polygraph examinations);
 - o The extent to which the statement is corroborated by other evidence.²⁷
- The specificity of the statement; for example, does it contain details or leads known only to the culprit?

7.2. The approval process for the use of the in-custody informer

Where Crown counsel has addressed the factors set out above, and is satisfied that the informer evidence is credible, Crown counsel should recommend to the CFP that the informer be called as a witness.²⁸ The CFP makes the final decision.

7.3. Informer benefits

Crown counsel who is prosecuting the accused should not conduct the negotiation of such benefits. Furthermore, the benefits should never be conditional on whether the Crown obtains a conviction of the accused.²⁹ The benefits ultimately agreed upon are subject to disclosure.

8. OUT-OF-CUSTODY COOPERATING WITNESSES

Out-of-custody cooperating witnesses are not subject to the same pressures and opportunities to seek favourable treatment or special privileges in jail, as are in-custody witnesses. The fact that a cooperating witness is not in jail does not obviate the need for the Crown to exercise a high degree of care in assessing the reliability of the evidence and the other factors outlined above, including those highlighted in respect of in-custody cooperating witnesses. There is always a concern in relation to the potential for the fabrication of evidence whenever any witness is offering information in a context in which he or she may receive a benefit- whether money, privilege, immunity or a reduced sentence- as a result of their cooperation.

²⁷ Where there is more than one in-custody informer, such corroboration should be independent of the other informer's statement.

²⁸ The recommendation might be for immunity or some other benefit, depending on the circumstances. If the CFP believes it is an appropriate case for use of the informer, the CFP should seek the advice of the Major Case Advisory Committee before making a final decision. Should the Committee and the CFP disagree, the matter should be directed to the appropriate Deputy DPP for a final decision. The role of the Committee is discussed in the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.1 Major Case Management".

²⁹ R v Xenos \(1991\), 70 CCC \(3d\) 362 \(Ont CA\); but see R v Naoufal \(1994\), 89 CCC \(3d\) 321 \(Ont CA\).

While each case will be fact-specific, Crown counsel should consult their CFP where their careful assessment of the out-of-custody cooperating witness' credibility has identified matters of concern. A case in which Crown counsel is uncertain as to whether the testimony of the witness is sufficiently corroborated by other evidence would clearly fall within this category.

The CFP may also refer cases to the Major Case Advisory Committee³⁰ for its consideration.

9. BREACH OF AGREEMENTS

It may become necessary to seek a remedy against a person previously granted immunity where that person:

- withdraws promised co-operation with the Crown;
- fails to be truthful when testifying;³¹
- has wilfully or recklessly misled the investigating agency or Crown counsel about material facts concerning the case including factors relevant to that person's reliability and credibility as a witness; or
- has sought immunity by conduct amounting to a fraud or an obstruction of justice.

Whether the person should be charged if this occurs, either for the offence for which he or she sought immunity or for some other offence, will depend on the circumstances of each case. The terms of the agreement with the person and the manner in which it was breached will be important considerations.³² In some circumstances, the laying of charges against the witness (or the recommencement of proceedings under s. 579\(2\) of the Code) may amount to an abuse of process.³³

10. FILING OF THE AGREEMENT IN COURT

In all cases in which a Crown witness testifies as part of an immunity agreement, Crown counsel will provide the agreement to the defence as part of pre-trial disclosure, and seek to file the agreement with the Court as an exhibit when the person testifies.

³⁰ For a description of the Committee, see the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.1 Major Case Management", supra note 28.

³¹ See e.g. Ahluwalia, supra note 12 where the Crown was criticized for failing to fully investigate the lack of full disclosure of a witness's criminal record. See also the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.5 Principles of Disclosure", for Crown Counsel's disclosure obligations in this regard.

³² In one case, the witness deceived investigators concerning his real involvement in the crime. The Ontario Court of Appeal held that he was properly indicted by the Attorney General on the basis of facts subsequently discovered to be true: R v MacDonald (1990), 54 CCC (3d) 97.

³³ R v Kearney, [1992] 3 SCR 807; R v Conway, [1989] 1 SCR 1659, 49 CCC (3d) 289 (SCC); R v Cutforth (1987), 61 CR (3d) 187 (Alta CA); R v TCD (1987), 61 CR (3d) 168 (Ont CA).

APPENDIX "A" – AGREEMENT CHECKLIST

CONTENTS OF IMMUNITY AGREEMENTS: A CHECKLIST

An immunity agreement must be executed before a witness testifies. It must be in writing, be signed and be given to the witness before testifying, and must include the following information:

1. the names of all parties to the agreement to obtain immunity;
2. the name of any other person intended to benefit from the agreement;
3. the acts or omissions in respect of which the immunity is provided;
4. the scope of the agreement, e.g., that it does not extend to prosecutions that may be commenced by provincial authorities, or to crimes undisclosed by the witness;
5. the form the immunity will take (e.g., staying existing charges, undertaking not to proceed on potential charges);
6. the evidence, information, co-operation, assistance or other benefit to be exchanged for the immunity;
7. any additional commitments made by the parties, including the specifics of any expenditures to be made by the Crown;
8. a general description of what will amount to a breach of the agreement, and the consequences of such a breach; and
9. a stipulation that information or evidence provided under an agreement must be truthful.

APPENDIX "B" – IMMUNITY AGREEMENT

SAMPLE IMMUNITY AGREEMENT

NOTE: The contents of an immunity agreement will vary according to the facts of each case. The following is a sample only; when drafting agreements, counsel should review the issues described in Appendix "A" to ensure completeness. The document should be drafted in a legal format, and not in the form of a letter to the witness.³⁴

John Doe agrees to:

[set out all details of proposed co-operation]

The Director of Public Prosecutions agrees to:

It is understood by John Doe and the Director of Public Prosecutions that:

1. Full and frank disclosure regarding [state in general terms] by John Doe forms an essential term of this agreement;
2. The failure to provide truthful evidence at the trial of the accused results in the termination of this agreement, and may lead to the prosecution of John Doe for perjury, the giving of contradictory evidence, obstructing justice, public mischief, or some related offence. It may also result in charges against John Doe for other offences described above;
3. Immunity from prosecution under this agreement is confined to the offence described above. It does not extend to offences not disclosed in writing by John Doe to [name of Crown counsel] before entering into this agreement. Nor does it extend to offences that John Doe may commit after this agreement is signed, or to any offence that may be prosecuted by the Attorney General of a province.

The understanding described in this memorandum is the complete agreement between the Director of Public Prosecutions and John Doe.

Dated at the City of _____, in the Province/Territory of _____, the ___ day of ___, 201__.

John Doe Counsel agent of the Director of Public Prosecutions and Deputy Attorney General of Canada

Counsel for John Doe

I received a copy of this agreement on the ___ day of ___, 201__.

John Doe

³⁴ Note that there are specialized competition law immunity agreements; see the PPSC Deskbook guideline "5.2 Competition Act".

APPENDIX "C" – INVESTIGATIVE ASSISTANT AGREEMENT

SAMPLE INVESTIGATIVE ASSISTANCE AGREEMENT

NOTE: The contents of an immunity agreement will vary according to the facts of each case. The following is a sample only; when drafting agreements, counsel should review the issues described in Appendix "A" to ensure completeness. The document should be drafted in a legal format, and not in the form of a letter to the witness.

1. PARTIES TO THE AGREEMENT

THIS AGREEMENT is between

1. the Crown in Right of Canada, as represented by the Director of Public Prosecutions, or his/her delegated agent and by the investigating agency, namely the _____; and _____;
(name of information-provider)

2. RECITALS

WHEREAS the _____ [the investigating agency] have been and are continuing to investigate the following persons or activities, namely _____ [the investigation] and whereas counsel for _____ has advised the investigating agency that [name] is willing to give the investigating agency any and all information in his/her possession concerning the subject-matter of the investigation in return for assurances that this information will not be used against him/her except in the circumstances detailed in writing in this agreement or as may be later mutually agreed; and

WHEREAS the investigating agency, having consulted with the delegated agent of the Director of Public Prosecutions, wishes to receive this information and, together with the Director of Public Prosecutions, is prepared to give these assurances on behalf of the Crown in Right of Canada, in return.

3. OBLIGATIONS

THEREFORE [name] and the Crown in Right of Canada hereby agree as follows:

3.1 [name] agrees to:

3.1.1 attend on the investigating agency at a place of mutual convenience for the purposes of giving them all information (including documents) in his/her knowledge, possession, or control with respect to the acts, statements, and communications of himself/herself and others in all matters about which that investigating agency may inquire;

3.1.2 be sworn or affirmed in any manner that may be binding under Canadian law, to receive and acknowledge all cautions or warnings that may have to be administered under that law, and to answer all questions that may be posed during the course of one or more interviews that will be videotaped and/or audiotaped;

3.1.3 disclose all information and to produce the original (or a true copy) of any document that is in his/her knowledge, possession or control concerning all matters about which the investigating agency shall inquire, in as true complete, and unequivocal a manner as it is known or available to him/her;

3.1.4 keep confidential and not disclose, except to his or her counsel or a court of law, all questions asked and all answers given during the course of these interviews, including any information pertaining to the state of the investigation or the nature and extent of police knowledge, opinions, and theories about the subjects of the investigation and their activities;

3.1.5 testify fully and truthfully in any proceeding to which he or she is subpoenaed as to all matters within his or her knowledge that arise out of the subject-matter of this investigation; and

3.1.6 notify _____ of the _____ (or any other investigator who may be specified from time to time), in writing within forty-eight (48) hours of the signing by [name] of this agreement, of his or her current residence, postal address, and telephone number, and to advise that police officer in writing and within a similar time period, of any changes in them, as they may occur.

3.2 THE CROWN IN RIGHT OF CANADA agrees that:

3.2.1 No statements made by [name] during the one or more interviews held by virtue of this agreement, will be used in evidence against [name] in any criminal proceedings prosecuted by or on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions, in which [name] is charged as an accused person except in the case of:

- a) [name] subsequently giving, in any trial, hearing, or proceeding (including any in which he/she is an accused), evidence that is materially different from that given by him/her under this agreement, or
- b) [name] being charged, as a result of anything said or done by him/her during the course of these interviews, with one or more offences of committing perjury, giving contradictory evidence, fabricating evidence, obstructing a peace officer, obstructing justice, or committing public mischief by false statement.

3.2.2 No original or copy of a document provided by [name] during the course of the one or more interviews held by virtue of this agreement, or given later to the investigating agency as a direct result of any request made by them at such interview(s), will be used in evidence against [name] in any criminal proceedings prosecuted by or on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions, in which [name] is charged as an accused person, except in the case of the events set out in paragraphs 3.2.1 (a) or (b) above, occurring. This applies as well to any copy made by the Crown in Right of Canada of any document furnished by [name].

4. LIMITATIONS

4.1 Nothing in this agreement affects the right of the Crown in Right of Canada to make use of any information or document provided by [name] under this agreement in order to discover or acquire derivative information or documents from a source other than [name].

4.2 Nothing in this agreement affects any use that the Crown in Right of Canada may make of any information or document obtained from a source other than [name], notwithstanding:

1. that the form or content of that information or document may be similar or identical to that of any information or document provided by [name] under this agreement, or
2. that any information or document provided by [name] under this agreement led directly or indirectly to the discovery or acquisition of the information or document obtained from the other source.

4.3 Nothing in this agreement affects the right of the Crown in Right of Canada to determine, what, if any, criminal charges may be laid and prosecuted against any person, including [name], in relation to this investigation.

5. BREACH

5.1 It is fundamental to this agreement that [name] disclose to the investigating agency fully, straightforwardly, and truthfully, all the information and documents that [name] knows, possesses, or controls in relation to the subject-matter of the investigation; do so in the form and manner required by this agreement; maintain all confidence imposed by this agreement; and testify fully and truthfully when so obliged in relation to the subject-matter of the investigation. A failure or refusal to do any of these things, or a failure or refusal to do them to the extent or in the manner required by this agreement, will constitute a breach of this agreement.

5.2 It is also fundamental to this agreement that [name] comply in a timely and accurate fashion with the obligations set out in paragraph 3.1.6 of the section OBLIGATIONS as well as those contained in any provisions of this agreement governing pleas of guilty, positions to be taken on sentence, compliance with sentences imposed including payment of fines in full within such times as may be allowed or extended by the courts, and the execution of any consent or authorizations as may be requested of [name] in order to permit access by the investigating agency to evidence, interviews, testimony, statements, or documents given to any other person or body in Canada or elsewhere. A failure or refusal to do any of these things, or a failure or refusal to do them to the extent or in the manner required by this agreement, will, at the option of the Crown in Right of Canada, constitute a breach of this agreement.

6. ACKNOWLEDGEMENT BY [NAME]

I acknowledge that I have received a copy of this agreement, have read it, where necessary I have had it explained to me in whole or in part, and I understand it. I further acknowledge that it fully sets forth the terms of my agreement with the Crown in Right of Canada in respect of my providing information and/or documents to the investigating agency in respect to the subject investigation. There have been no promises or representations made to me that are not disclosed in this agreement. I have been fully advised of my rights by counsel of my own choice. I am aware of the legal consequences under Canadian law for those who would knowingly provide false, misleading, or incomplete information under these circumstances. Finally, I acknowledge that I fully understand my rights under Canadian law and I am entering into this agreement voluntarily.

DATED at the City of _____, in the Province / Territory of _____, this _____ day of _____, 20 ____.

for the Director of Public Prosecutions

(name) for the Investigating Agency

Counsel for (name)

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.4 SEALING ORDERS AND PUBLICATION BANS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. SEALING ORDERS FOR MATERIAL FILED IN SUPPORT OF EX PARTE JUDICIAL AUTHORIZATIONS	3
2.1. Mandatory sealing of documents supporting a wiretap authorization	3
2.2. Discretionary sealing in other cases of ex parte judicial authorization	4
2.3. Common law authority to seal in other cases of ex parte judicial authorization	4
2.4. Unsealing for disclosure purposes: procedure and policy	5
3. PUBLICATION BANS	6
3.1. Introduction.....	6
3.2. Requirement to notify the media.....	6
3.3. Mandatory publication bans.....	7
3.4. Discretionary publication bans	8
3.5. Common law publication bans.....	9
3.6. Appeal from a publication ban.....	10

1. INTRODUCTION

The “open court principle” establishes a presumption of public access to court proceedings and court records, and has been described as a “hallmark of a democratic society”.¹ One aspect of the open court principle, freedom of the press, is a constitutional right under s. 2\(b\) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (Charter). Any restriction on the open court principle must be based on equally sound principles and values accepted in our democracy.

Displacing the open court principle in order to prevent or restrict access to court documents and court proceedings requires a balancing against the countervailing interests. The purpose of this guideline is to identify occasions where this balancing is required and the applicable considerations.

Among the interests which may be taken into account are the need to protect an ongoing covert police investigation, the need to protect informer privilege, and the need to protect the privacy rights of persons affected by the court proceeding in question.

In some areas Parliament has already determined the balance, for example, with respect to wiretap packets, where sealing of the packet is statutorily required, or with respect to proceedings under the Youth Criminal Justice Act,² where publication of the accused’s identity is actually a criminal offence. In other areas the balancing must be done case by case, for example, with respect to a ban on the publication of a complainant's or witness's identity under s. 486.5 of the Criminal Code (Code), where the court must determine the balance by reference to enumerated criteria.

¹ Vancouver Sun \(Re\), 2004 SCC, [2004] 2 SCR 332 at para 23. See also: A.B. v Bragg Communications Inc, 2012 SCC 46, [2012] 2 SCR 567 at para 11.

² SC 2002, c 1.

2. SEALING ORDERS FOR MATERIAL FILED IN SUPPORT OF EX PARTE JUDICIAL AUTHORIZATIONS

In the case of court materials filed in support of ex parte judicial authorizations such as search warrants, production orders and wiretap authorizations, the presumption of public access applies. However, common law authority and statutory rules exist which may either require or permit sealing of the material in question.

As well, there is a common law rule that the material filed in support of a search warrant or similar judicial authorization should remain sealed from public view until the warrant or order is executed and the police make a “report to justice”.³ Where a search has been executed but nothing has been seized, the common law also establishes that only affected persons may have access to the material in question.⁴

It should be understood that when a sealing order is made, or automatic sealing is required as discussed in the next section in the case of wiretap materials, this does not restrict the ability of law enforcement officials to continue to use and share as necessary the content of the information subject to sealing. The sealing order – or automatic sealing – applies to the actual documents in question and not to the information, which may exist in another form as work product.

2.1. Mandatory sealing of documents supporting a wiretap authorization

Section 187 of the Code mandates that all documents relating to an application under Part VI (which generally deals with wiretaps) must be sealed and kept by the court in a place with no public access, subject only to further order of a court. A specific sealing order is therefore not required.

However where a wiretap authorization includes judicial authority for other investigative measures (e.g. a general warrant or an assistance order) wiretap agents normally should draft the proposed authorization to include a sealing order covering those aspects of the material.

Opening a sealed wiretap packet for the purposes of making Stinchcombe disclosure is discussed below.

³ [A.G. \(Nova Scotia\) v MacIntyre, \[1982\] 1 SCR 175.](#)

⁴ [Ibid; Michaud v Québec \(A.G.\), \[1996\] 3 SCR 3.](#)

2.2. Discretionary sealing in other cases of ex parte judicial authorization

Section 487.3 of the Code gives the issuing justice authority to order the sealing of material filed in support of an ex parte application for a warrant under the Criminal Code or any other federal statute, a production order under ss. 487.012 or 487.013 of the Code, or a Feeney warrant under s. 529 of the Code. Sealing is not automatic. The application for the sealing order will usually be made by the peace officer applying for the warrant or order, at the same time, and can be granted on the grounds set out in s. 487.3 of the Code.

The peace officer applying for the warrant or production order in question is therefore expected to provide affidavit material that details how and why one or more of the grounds mentioned in s. 487.3\(2\) justifies a sealing order. The most common grounds will be: to protect an ongoing police investigation; and to protect informer privilege.

Where the peace officer has neglected to obtain a needed sealing order at the time the warrant was issued, or later decides that a sealing order should now be sought, s. 487.3 is still available as the section specifically says that the sealing order may be granted by the provincial court judge or justice “on application made at the time of issuing a warrant [or other order]...or at any time thereafter”. In such a case, Crown counsel may be consulted to assist in the application.

Different courts across Canada have different procedures in place to handle sealing orders. In every case, however, the sealing order should result in the material being kept in a secure location not subject to public access.

In some jurisdictions the issuing justices grant sealing orders for a limited time, e.g. one year from the date of issuance. This is to be discouraged, as if the grounds for sealing are to protect informer privilege, it may never be safe to unseal the original unvetted material. Crown counsel are encouraged to advise their enforcement agencies to seek sealing orders of unlimited duration.

Procedures for unsealing warrant materials are discussed below.

2.3. Common law authority to seal in other cases of ex parte judicial authorization

Section 487.3 of the Code specifically applies to warrants and the orders mentioned in the section. There are other ex parte proceedings not specifically mentioned, and here the court’s inherent jurisdiction (in the case of the superior court) or its ability to control its own process (in the case of a statutory court such as the provincial court) can be engaged.

For example, s. 462.48 of the Code allows for an ex parte application by the Crown for an order to obtain tax information in certain cases related to proceeds of crime, money laundering, organized crime, and terrorism. This type of application is usually brought early in the stages of the criminal investigation and is therefore sensitive. A sealing order for the supporting material will invariably be desired in order to protect both the ongoing investigation and the identity of confidential informers. As this particular application is brought ex parte before a judge of the superior court, the inherent jurisdiction of the superior court can be relied upon for the issuance of a sealing order, as the Criminal Code is silent on the point. The grounds for the sealing order will no doubt parallel those set out in s. 487.3, discussed above. Again, it is important that the Crown be able to overcome the presumption of public access under the open court principle.

2.4. Unsealing for disclosure purposes: procedure and policy

In the case of wiretap packets, ss. 187\(1.3\) and \(1.4\) of the Code authorize a provincial or superior court judge to order that the packet be unsealed for the purposes of copying and examination. The section goes on to provide that the Crown has the right to edit the packet materials to protect informer privilege, ongoing investigations, sensitive police techniques, and the interests of innocent persons: ss. 187\(2\) – \(4\). The section goes on to require the original material to be resealed: s. 187\(6\).

With respect to informations to obtain search warrants and other orders, s. 487.3\(4\) of the Code contemplates that the issuing justice, or a judge of the court before which resulting criminal proceedings are underway, may vary the sealing order issued under s. 487.3 as discussed above.

Section 187\(1.4\) of the Code in relation to the sealed wiretap packet assumes that trial proceedings are underway and that the accused has applied to obtain a (vetted) copy of the affidavit material. Section 487.3(4) is less restrictive. Modern practice, largely in view of the Crown's obligation to make disclosure pursuant to Stinchcombe, now usually means that Crown counsel will initiate the unsealing application at the appropriate time, i.e. when the material can safely be vetted and disclosed to the defence.

Unsealing applications can usually be made by Crown counsel ex parte, on the ground that unsealing the material for the purpose of making Stinchcombe disclosure is in the interests of the accused. Proceeding ex parte also gives Crown counsel appropriate control of the application. On the other hand, forcing the accused to bring the application puts the accused in control of the timing and manner of the proceeding and may increase the risk of disclosing sensitive information such as informer privilege or ongoing investigations. This is a particular risk in smaller jurisdictions where court staff may not be familiar with the requirements that the Crown be notified of an application to unseal and be given an opportunity to vet the copied material before it is disclosed, or that the original unvetted material must be resealed.

As a matter of policy, therefore, Crown counsel in an individual case has the discretion to determine when to bring an application to unseal the material filed in support of a wiretap Authorization, search warrant, or other order. In exercising this discretion, and determining whether and when to bring an unsealing application, Crown counsel should consider:

- a. the interests and views of the investigating authority, particularly in respect of the sensitivity of information that may tend to identify a confidential informer or compromise an ongoing investigation;
- b. the timing of the application: there may be a tension between the need to make Stinchcombe disclosure and the sensitivity of information, which sensitivity may attenuate as time passes; and
- c. the stage of the proceedings: e.g., on the eve of trial, the accused may force an adjournment if he or she has not received disclosure of sealed material filed in support of a judicial authorization (a wiretap Affidavit, or information to obtain); equally, the accused may decline to make election or plea until sealed material is unsealed, vetted, and disclosed.

As to the last item, the stage of the proceedings, once a matter is set down for preliminary inquiry or trial, Crown counsel should promptly initiate unsealing in order to avert last-minute adjournments.

3. PUBLICATION BANS

3.1. Introduction

As discussed above, the open court principle presumes public access to all court proceedings, and freedom of the press – i.e., the media’s right to publish details of court proceedings – is also engaged. However countervailing interests may justify restrictions on the publication of court proceedings in their entirety or in part.

As with sealing orders, publication bans require a balancing of the open court principle against the countervailing interests. In some cases Parliament has already established the balance – e.g. statutorily requiring a ban on publication of evidence taken at a judicial interim release hearing, or making it a criminal offence to publish the name of the accused in proceedings under the YCJA – while in other cases the presiding judge must make a case-by-case analysis – e.g. a ban on publishing the identity of a juror in certain circumstances.

3.2. Requirement to notify the media

Unless the publication ban is mandatory, as discussed below, Crown counsel must advise the court if necessary of the common law rule that the media must be notified before any publication ban is ordered: [Dagenais v C.B.C., \[1994\] 3 SCR 835](#). This is because any publication ban interferes with the constitutionally protected right to freedom of expression under s. 2\(b\) of the Charter.

In some jurisdictions the courts and/or media have arranged for a procedure where notice of application for a publication ban may be given to a central clearing house.⁵

3.3. Mandatory publication bans

The Criminal Code and the YCJA provide for mandatory publication bans in several areas:

- Criminal Code:
 - s. 276.3\(1\) – ban on publication of proceedings on application by accused to cross-examine regarding complainant’s sexual activity under s. 276.1 – automatic;
 - s. 486.4\(2\) – ban on publication of the identity of complainant or child witness in sexual offence cases, upon application of the prosecutor, complainant or witness – mandatory;
 - s. 486.4\(3\) – ban on publication of the identity of a witness under 18 years of age or of any person who is the subject of child pornography, in offences relating to child pornography under s. 163.1, upon application of the prosecutor, complainant or witness – mandatory;
 - s. 517 – ban on publication of evidence, information, submissions and judicial reasons at judicial interim release hearing – mandatory if the accused requests a ban, and discretionary if the prosecutor requests it;
 - s. 539\(1\)\(b\) – ban on publication of evidence taken at preliminary inquiry – mandatory if the accused requests a ban, and discretionary if the prosecutor requests it;
 - s. 542\(2\) – ban on publication of the fact of or details of any confession tendered at a preliminary inquiry – automatic;
 - s. 648 – ban on publication of any proceedings in the absence of the jury – automatic.
- Youth Criminal Justice Act:

The YCJA automatically imposes a ban on the publication of, e.g., the identity of a young person (s. 110\(1\)), so neither the court nor Crown counsel need to do anything for the publication ban to be in place. There are provisions allowing for the youth court to lift such statutory publication bans. See, e.g., s. 110\(4\) which deals with a

⁵ See e.g. :

- British Columbia, Publication Ban Notification Project – Expansion to New Westminster.
- North West Territories Supreme Court, Practice Direction, « Publication Bans », July 9, 2004.
- Alberta, E-File Notice of Application for Publication Ban.
- Saskatchewan, Discretionary Publication Ban Application.
- Nova Scotia, Notice of Applications for Publication bans service.

peace officer's application to allow publication of the identity of a young person who is accused of an indictable offence and who poses a danger to others, where publication of the young person's identity is necessary to assist in his or her apprehension. Section 110\(6\) allows a young person to apply for relief from the statutory ban on publication of his or her identity, if the youth court is satisfied publication would not be contrary to the interests of the young person or the public interest.

Section 75\(2\) requires a youth court, upon imposing a sentence on a young person for a violent offence, to consider lifting the ban on publication of the young person's identity, where this is necessary to protect the public from further violent offences by the young person.

As a matter of policy, when there is an automatic, mandatory publication ban (e.g. publication of proceedings in the absence of the jury, as in s. 648 of the Code, or publication of the identity of a young person as in s. 110 of the YCJA), Crown counsel need not take any steps since it is the operation of statute that automatically mandates the ban on publication. Where a publication ban only results from a positive order of the court, however, Crown counsel should be aware of those instances. Where a mandatory publication ban is triggered upon application of the defence (e.g. ban on publication of proceedings at show cause hearing or preliminary inquiry), Crown counsel need not take any steps if the accused is represented by counsel. In the case of a self-represented accused, however, it is appropriate for Crown counsel to remind the court that there is such a provision so that the court can discharge its duty to assist the self-represented accused in this regard. As well, Crown counsel should ensure in a prosecution for an offence listed in s. 486\(1\)\(a\) or \(b\) of the Code – basically, most sexual offences – that the court is aware of its obligation to inform any witness under the age of 18 years and any complainant of his or her right to apply for a publication ban, which ban is automatic upon application by the young witness or complainant, or by the prosecutor.

3.4. Discretionary publication bans

There are also provisions for discretionary publication bans in many instances under the Criminal Code:

- s. 486.5\(1\) – ban on publication of the identity of any victim or witness, not already covered by the mandatory publication ban in s. 486.4, upon application of the prosecutor, victim or witness, if the ban is “necessary for the proper administration of justice” – discretionary;
- s. 486.5\(2\) – ban on publication of the identity of any “justice system participant” as defined in s. 2, in any prosecution for an offence listed in s. 486.2\(5\), i.e. intimidation of a justice system participant, offences related to criminal organizations, terrorism offences, and offences related to the Security of Information Act,⁶ upon application of the prosecutor or a justice system

⁶ RSC 1985, c O-5.

- participant, if the ban is “necessary for the proper administration of justice” – discretionary;
- s. 631\(6\) – ban on publication of the identity of a juror, upon application of the prosecutor or on the court’s own motion, if the ban is “necessary for the proper administration of justice” – discretionary.

As a matter of policy, when a discretionary publication ban is in issue, Crown counsel should ensure that persons affected by the proposed ban have been given proper notice of the application. Concerning the media, see the discussion above about the need to ensure the media is notified as per Dagenais. Crown counsel also has an obligation to ensure that victims and witnesses are properly notified and advised of their right to make application for a publication ban, usually by informing the presiding judge of this right. If affected persons have been given proper notice, Crown counsel’s position on whether a discretionary publication ban should be imposed is governed by Crown counsel’s general duty to protect the public interest. Crown counsel will normally be initiating or supporting the application for a discretionary ban on publication, and should be able to address the public interest considerations in his or her submissions to the court.

3.5. Common law publication bans

The superior courts have inherent jurisdiction to impose publication bans, and arguably the provincial courts have the same jurisdiction when exercising the authority to control their own process.⁷ Such publication bans are discretionary. In Mentuck, the Supreme Court of Canada propounded the test for a common law publication ban as follows:

A publication ban should only be ordered when:

- (a) such an order is necessary in order to prevent a serious risk to the proper administration of justice because reasonably alternative measures will not prevent the risk; and
- (b) the salutary effects of the publication ban outweigh the deleterious effects on the rights and interests of the parties and the public, including the effects on the right to free expression, the right of the accused to a fair and public trial, and the efficacy of the administration of justice.⁸

With respect to the first branch of the test, the “serious risk” must be real, substantial, and well grounded in the evidence. As Iacobucci J put it: “it is a serious danger sought to be avoided that is required, not a substantial benefit or advantage to the administration of justice sought to be obtained”.⁹ The second branch of the test requires a balancing of interests, including constitutional protections for the accused and the press.

⁷ R v Cunningham, 2010 SCC 10.

⁸ R v Mentuck, 2001 SCC 76 at para 32, per Iacobucci J. See also Toronto Star Newspapers v Ontario, 2005 SCC 41.

⁹ Mentuck, ibid at para 34.

As a matter of policy, Crown counsel should ensure that affected parties (including the media) are notified of the proposed discretionary ban on publication, and be prepared to speak to the public interest considerations which are engaged. These include:

- o the right of an accused to a fair and public hearing – s. 11\(d\) of the Charter;
- o freedom of expression – s. 2\(b\) of the Charter;
- o the privacy interests of witnesses and other third parties; and
- o the integrity of the administration of justice, including the ability of the police to conduct an investigation without being compromised by publicity, with particular reference to the “serious risk” sought to be avoided by the proposed publication ban.

3.6. Appeal from a publication ban

There is no statutory right to appeal from a publication ban. Any such appeal must therefore fall within s. 40\(1\) of the Supreme Court Act,¹⁰ i.e., pursuant to an application for leave to appeal from the order directing a publication ban.¹¹

¹⁰ RSC 1985, c S-26.

¹¹ Dagenais v Canadian Broadcasting Corp., [1994] 3 SCR 835; R v Adams, [1995] 4 SCR 707; Mentuck, supra note 8.

Public Prosecution
Service of Canada

Service des poursuites
pénales du Canada

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.5 DELEGATED DECISION-MAKING

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised March 25, 2022

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. PURPOSE	2
2. CONTEXT	2
3. PROCEDURE TO OBTAIN CONSENT	4
4. OBLIGATION TO CONSULT IN CONSENT-BASED PROSECUTIONS	5
APPENDIX A – CONSENT FORM	6

1. PURPOSE

This guideline explains the procedure to obtain approval when a statute requires the consent of the Attorney General before initiating a prosecution or taking a particular step in a criminal proceeding.

2. CONTEXT

Prosecutors make the vast majority of prosecutorial decisions pursuant to authorities delegated by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP). The DPP’s prosecutorial powers and functions are codified in the Director of Public Prosecutions Act (DPP Act).¹ Pursuant to s. 3\(3\) of the DPP Act, the DPP exercises these general powers “under and on behalf of the Attorney General” independently, subject to directives issued by the Attorney General under s. 10.² Pursuant to s. 9\(1\) of the DPP Act, the DPP may authorize federal prosecutors and other employees to exercise the powers and perform the duties and functions related to prosecutions, such as the power to initiate and conduct prosecutions. The DPP has delegated many of these powers, duties, and functions to federal prosecutors, paralegals, and articling students.³

Certain prosecutorial decisions require specific higher-level approval, however. Some offences in the Criminal Code and in other federal statutes require the consent of the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General before a prosecution can be initiated or before a certain step can be taken in a criminal proceeding. Statutes articulate this requirement in different ways. Some demand the Attorney General’s “personal consent in writing”.⁴ Others require the Attorney General’s “consent

¹ Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9, s 121 [DPP Act].

² See the Directive of the Attorney General reproduced in “1.1 Relationship between the Attorney General and the Director of Public Prosecutions”.

³ The Delegations to Prosecutors, the Delegations to Paralegals and the Delegations to Articling Students are available on the PPSC website.

⁴ See e.g. Criminal Code, s 485.1 and 577, and Geneva Conventions Act, s 3(4).

in writing”⁵ or simply “the consent of the Attorney General”.⁶ Some of these go further and identify a need to obtain consent from a particular Attorney General, federal⁷ or provincial.⁸

The DPP has the authority to provide the required consent as the Deputy Attorney General. Indeed, s. 2 of the Criminal Code defines the Attorney General as including the Deputy Attorney General and s. 3\(4\) of the DPP Act confirms that the DPP is the Deputy Attorney General for the purpose of exercising the powers and performing the duties and functions set out in s. 3\(3\). In addition, paragraph 24(2)(c) of the Interpretation Act confirms that words directing or empowering a minister to do an act or thing also include the minister’s deputy.⁹

Deputy Directors of Public Prosecutions (DDPPs) also have the authority to provide consent. Subsection 6\(3\) of the DPP Act specifies that a DDPP may, under the DPP’s supervision, exercise any of the powers and perform any of the duties or functions set out in s. 3\(3\) of the DPP Act, and for that purpose is a lawful deputy of the Attorney General.¹⁰

Pursuant to s. 9 of the DPP Act, the DPP has also authorized Chief Federal Prosecutors (CFPs), Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutors (DCFPs), Team Leaders and prosecutors to provide consent for the purposes of certain statutory provisions. The decision maker remains accountable to the DPP for the decisions taken.¹¹ For statutory provisions that are not listed in the authorization, consent must be sought from:

1. The DPP, if the provision requires the personal consent in writing of either the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General; or
2. The DPP or a DDPP, in all other cases.

Prosecutors should identify cases requiring consent at the pre-charge or initial charge review stage, and seek consent from the appropriate decision maker as soon as possible. Where an offence requires the consent of the Attorney General to “institute”, “commence”, or “continue” a prosecution, the consent is an element of the offence that the Crown must be able to prove beyond a reasonable doubt.¹² It is a necessary precondition to the jurisdiction of the court and charges can ⁵ See e.g. Criminal Code, s 119(2) and Special Import Measures Act, s 77.034(3).

⁶ See e.g. Criminal Code, s 7(7) and 172(4).

⁷ See e.g. Criminal Code, s 119.

⁸ See e.g. Criminal Code, s 342(2).

⁹ Interpretation Act, RSC 1985, c I-21, s 24(2) (c).

¹⁰ Subsection 6(4) of the DPP Act, supra note 1 provides that the DDPP may also act for and on behalf of the DPP, under the DPP’s supervision, in the exercise of any other powers or the performance of any other duties or functions that the DPP has under the DPP Act or any other Act of Parliament.

¹¹ The Delegations to Prosecutors is reproduced on the PPSC website. Paralegals and articling students are not authorized to provide this consent, however. See Delegation to Paralegals and Delegation to Articling Students.

¹² Re Quinn Contracting Ltd (1983), 27 Alta LR (2d) 334 (QB); R v Spicer and Blakely (1992), 120 AR 139 (CA); R v Chen (2006) 209 CCC (3d) 534, 205 Man R (2d) 157 at para 10.

be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction if the Crown cannot prove consent.¹³ Where the statutory language requires consent to “institute” proceedings, consent must be obtained before laying the information, since a prosecution is instituted when a person lays an information before a justice, while a prosecution is commenced when a justice of the peace issues process compelling the attendance of the accused in court.¹⁴

3. PROCEDURE TO OBTAIN CONSENT

In cases where a prosecutor must obtain the consent of a Team Leader, DCFP, CFP, DDPP, or the DPP, the prosecutors must:

1. Prepare a memorandum containing:
 - a. A concise statement of facts showing that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction and that the public interest is best served by a prosecution. If multiple accused are to be charged, the memorandum must demonstrate that there is sufficient evidence to implicate each accused individually. The statement of facts must also include:
 - i. The name of the accused;
 - ii. Their citizenship, if the accused is not a Canadian;
 - iii. A list of the charges sought against the accused;
 - iv. A summary of the evidence; and
 - v. The date by which the consent is required.
 - b. A confirmation that the investigating department or agency has been consulted and a summary of its views about the proposed prosecution.¹⁵
 - c. A recommendation for each element requiring consent.
 - d. An annex containing a draft consent form in the format reproduced at Appendix A.
2. Provide the memorandum to the appropriate decision maker, if consent can be provided by a Team Leader, DCFP or CFP. If consent can only be provided by a DDPP or the DPP, the prosecutor must provide the memorandum to the CFP.

In cases requiring the personal consent of a DDPP or the DPP,

1. The CFP will:
 - a. Review the memorandum prepared by the prosecutor; and
 - b. Endorse the recommendation and send it to the DDPP if the CFP is satisfied that the case meets the criteria set out in the DPP guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”.
2. The DDPP will review the request and will

¹³ R v Linamar Holdings Inc., [2007] OJ No 4859 [Linamar]; R v Alrifai, 2008 ONCA 564.

¹⁴ Alrifai, supra note 13 at para 22 citing Linamar, supra note 13.

¹⁵ See also Chapter 2.7 “Relationship between Crown Counsel and Investigative Agencies”.

- a. Inform the CFP that the request for consent has been denied or will not be forwarded to the DPP, if the DDPP concludes that proceedings should not be instituted;
- b. Sign the consent form (Appendix A), for matters where the DDPP is authorized to provide consent; or
- c. Endorse the recommendation and forward it to the DPP, for matters that require the personal consent of the DPP.

4. OBLIGATION TO CONSULT IN CONSENT-BASED PROSECUTIONS

In cases where consent to institute a prosecution was obtained, prosecutors must consult the decision maker before discontinuing a prosecution, making major changes to the charges, or accepting pleas to lesser charges than those for which consent had originally been granted. Prosecutors may consult the decision maker directly in cases where consent was provided by a Team Leader, DCFP, or CFP. In cases where consent was provided by a DDPP or the DPP, consultations should be routed via the CFP.

APPENDIX A – CONSENT FORM

Pursuant to (state section and statute requiring consent), I consent to the (institution, commencement, or continuation) of proceedings against (accused's name, address and, if not Canadian, citizenship) for an offence contrary to (state offence section and statute).

This consent is given in relation to the following allegation(s):

(provide draft charges and a brief description of primary facts alleged including date and location)

This consent is given at (City), Canada, this ____ day of _____ , _____.

(As the case may be, Director of Public Prosecutions of Canada and Deputy Attorney General of Canada; Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions and lawful deputy of the Attorney General of Canada pursuant to subsection 6(3) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act; Chief Federal Prosecutor; Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutor; or Team Leader)

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.6 DIRECT INDICTMENTS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised March 25, 2022

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. STATEMENT OF POLICY	2
3. PROCEDURE.....	4
4. RE-ELECTIONS	5

1. INTRODUCTION

Section 577 of the Criminal Code (Code) permits the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General to send a case directly to trial without a preliminary inquiry or after an accused has been discharged at a preliminary inquiry. The object of the section has been described by Southin J.A. of the British Columbia Court of Appeal in the following terms:

In my opinion, Parliament intended, by this section, to confer upon the Attorney General or his Deputy the power to override the preliminary inquiry process. It is a special power not to be exercised by Crown counsel generally but only on the personal consideration of the chief law officer of the Crown and his or her deputy.

Such a power is recognition of the ultimate constitutional responsibility of Attorneys General to ensure that those who ought to be brought to trial are brought to trial. There are many reasons why an Attorney General or a Deputy Attorney General might consider a direct indictment in the interests of the proper administration of criminal justice. Witnesses may have been threatened or may be in precarious health; there may have been some delay in carrying a prosecution forward and, thus, a risk of running afoul of s. 11(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; a preliminary inquiry, in, for instance, cases essentially founded on wire-tap evidence, may be considered by the Attorney General to be expensive and time consuming for no purpose. These are simply illustrations. It is neither wise nor possible to circumscribe the power of the Attorney General under this section.¹

This guideline outlines the criteria applied by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP), acting as the Deputy Attorney General of Canada, when determining whether to consent to the preferring of an indictment pursuant to this provision. It also describes the procedure for Crown counsel and agents to follow when making a recommendation for a “direct indictment”.

2. STATEMENT OF POLICY

The DPP will exercise the discretion vested in the Attorney General under s. 577 of the Code in circumstances involving serious violations of the law and where it is the public interest to do so.

¹ R v Charlie (1998), 126 CCC (3d) 513 at 521-522 (BCCA).

A direct indictment may be in the public interest where:

1. The accused is discharged at a preliminary inquiry because of an error of law, jurisdictional error, or a palpable error on the facts of the case;²
2. The accused is discharged at a preliminary inquiry and new evidence is later discovered that would likely have resulted in an order to stand trial if it had been tendered at the preliminary inquiry;
3. The accused is ordered to stand trial on the offence charged and new evidence is later obtained that justifies trying the accused on a different or more serious offence for which no preliminary inquiry has been held;
4. The delay (actual or anticipated) in bringing the matter to trial has led to the conclusion that the right to trial within a reasonable time guaranteed by s. 11(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms may not be met unless the case is brought to trial immediately;
5. There is a reasonable basis to believe that the lives, safety or security of witnesses, witnesses' families, informers, or justice system participants may be in peril, and the potential for interference with them can be reduced significantly by bringing the case directly to trial without preliminary inquiry;³
6. Proceedings against the accused ought to be expedited to ensure public confidence in the administration of justice;
7. A direct indictment is necessary to avoid multiple proceedings, for example, where one accused has been ordered to stand trial following a preliminary inquiry, and a second accused charged with the same offence has just been arrested or extradited to Canada on the offence;⁴
8. The age, health or other circumstances relating to witnesses⁵ require their evidence to be presented before the trial court as soon as possible, or present difficulties in having witnesses testify more than once;
9. The holding of a preliminary inquiry would unreasonably tax the resources of the prosecution, the investigative agency or the court; or

² For a discussion of "palpable error" as a basis for controverting findings of fact made in earlier proceedings, see MacNeill and Shanahan v Briau, [1977] 2 SCR 205; Hoyt v Grand Lake Devl. Corp., [1977] 2 SCR 907 at 911-912, adopted in R v Purves (1979), 50 CCC (2d) 211 at 222-24 (Man CA); R v Van Der Peet, [1996] 2 SCR 507 at 565-566.

³ Wherever reasonably practicable, Crown counsel should first ask the investigators, with the cooperation of the PPSC Security Officer, to prepare a confidential threat assessment where a direct indictment is being considered on this basis.

⁴ See e.g. R v Cross (1996), 112 CCC (3d) 410 (QC CA).

⁵ It would be appropriate to consider, for example, the particular circumstances relating to complainants in highly traumatic cases, such as sexual offences or war crimes. This may include consideration of whether requiring the witness to testify about the same matters a number of times will cause harm to that person, or will inhibit the presentation of candid and truthful evidence, or may cause the witness to change their evidence or refuse to testify.

10. A direct indictment is necessary to protect ongoing police investigations, operations and security where the requirement for such protection is of importance and can be significantly demonstrated.

3. PROCEDURE

In cases where a prosecutor intends to seek a direct indictment, the prosecutor must:

1. Inform their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutor (DCFP) that they intend to seek a direct indictment as soon as possible.
2. Prepare a memorandum containing:
 - a. A concise statement of facts showing that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction and that the public interest is best served by a prosecution. If multiple accused are to be charged, the memorandum must demonstrate that there is sufficient evidence to implicate each accused individually. The statement of facts must also include:
 - i. The name of the accused;
 - ii. Their citizenship, if the accused is not a Canadian;
 - iii. A list of the charges sought against the accused;
 - iv. A summary of the evidence; and
 - v. The date by which the indictment is required.
 - b. An analysis explaining:
 - i. The strengths and weaknesses of the case;
 - ii. Any significant legal issues expected to be encountered and any issues of particular importance to the public interest;
 - iii. The reasons for requesting a direct indictment;
 - iv. The state of disclosure already given to the accused, the extent of the disclosure yet to be made, the anticipated timelines for completion of the disclosure process, and any anticipated disclosure problems or disputes; and
 - v. The factors set out in this guideline, including a reasoned and objective assessment of the factors weighing both for and against a direct indictment.
 - c. A copy of the approved prosecution plan, if any.
 - d. An annex containing an indictment containing all charges for which the indictment is requested, with the following appearing at the end:

I hereby consent to the preferring of this indictment pursuant to section 577 of the Criminal Code.⁶

Dated at Ottawa, Ontario, this _____ day of _____, _____.

⁶ A direct indictment should be endorsed to read that consent has been given “pursuant to s 577 of the Criminal Code”. This is intended to avoid the erroneous conclusion that the preferment of the indictment by the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General was intended to require a jury trial under s 568. A requirement of that nature will, as outlined in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.10 Elections and Re-elections”, be expressly endorsed on the indictment.

Director of Public Prosecutions and Deputy Attorney General of Canada

3. Provide this memorandum to the CFP or DCFP.
4. Consider whether and when a section 13 notice pursuant to the Director of Public Prosecutions Act is appropriate⁷, based on the particular circumstances of the matter at hand.

The CFP or the DCFP will:

1. Inform the appropriate Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (DDPP) of the intention to seek a direct indictment.
2. Review the memorandum prepared by the prosecutor and, if they are satisfied that the factors are met and that a direct indictment is appropriate, endorse the memorandum and send it to the DDPP.

The DDPP will:

1. Review the memorandum and conduct an objective assessment of the request. In this role, the DDPP exercises a challenge function.
2. Advise the CFP or DCFP that no recommendation will be made to the DPP, if the DDPP concludes that a direct indictment is not appropriate in the circumstances.
3. Endorse the recommendation and send it to the DPP, if the DDPP concludes that a direct indictment is appropriate.⁸

Prosecutors must consult the DPP when an indictment has been preferred and they conclude that the charges (or any of them) should be withdrawn, stayed or reduced. These consultations should be routed via the CFP.

4. RE-ELECTIONS

Where an indictment has been preferred under s. 577, the accused is deemed under s. 565(2) to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. Under that same section, however, the accused may re-elect for trial by a judge without a jury. The procedures necessary to give effect to the re-election are described in s. 565(3) and (4), and s. 561(6) and (7).

⁷ See the PPSC Deskbook directive “1.2 Duty to Inform the Attorney General under Section 13 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act”.

⁸ In R v Trang, 2002 ABQB 744 at para 419 (August 15, 2002), it was held that the recommendation is subject to solicitor-client privilege; see also R v Ahmad, 2008 CanLii 27470 (ONSC).

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.7 RESOLUTION DISCUSSIONS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised March 4th, 2024

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION.....	3
2. PRINCIPLES GUIDING RESOLUTION DISCUSSIONS.....	3
2.1 OPENNESS	3
2.1.1 Consulting interested parties.....	4
2.1.2 Upholding the open court principle	5
2.1.3 Documenting the prosecution file.....	5
2.2 FAIRNESS.....	6
2.2.1 The risk of wrongful convictions.....	6
2.2.2 Honouring communicated positions	7
2.2.3 Other principles related to fairness	9
2.3 PRINCIPLE OF RESTRAINT.....	9
3. PLEA DISCUSSIONS	10
3.1 Charge discussions.....	10
3.2 Procedural Discussions	11
3.3 Scope of Sentencing Discussions.....	11
3.4 Agreements about the Facts	12
3.5 Determining a Fit Sentence.....	12
3.6 Joint Submissions.....	13
4. TAKING INTO ACCOUNT BACKGROUND AND SYSTEMIC FACTORS....	14
4.1 First Nations, Métis, and Inuit Accused.....	15
4.2 Other Overrepresented and Marginalized Groups	16
5. UNREPRESENTED ACCUSED.....	16
6. NARROWING THE TRIAL ISSUES	17
7. JUDICIAL PRE-TRIAL CONFERENCES.....	17
8. DELEGATED AUTHORITY TO PROSECUTE	18

1. INTRODUCTION

Early and meaningful resolution discussions between Crown counsel and defence counsel are an essential part of the criminal justice system.

Resolution discussions may encompass a variety of topics including the strength of the case, possible defences, Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms violations, and the appropriate sentence or sentencing range. They may also serve to narrow the issues to focus the trial or avoid litigation altogether.

Crown counsel must not proceed with resolution discussions where there is no reasonable prospect of conviction, or it is not in the public interest to pursue the case. For a detailed analysis on this test, see Guideline 2.3 “Decision to Prosecute.”¹ If this test is not met, Crown counsel must not engage in resolution discussions, pursue resolution discussions, or accept a plea. Rather, Crown counsel must withdraw or stay the charges.

Since resolution discussions occur before trial, and typically before disclosure is complete, Crown counsel must be aware of the circumstances that contribute to wrongful convictions. This includes incomplete disclosure, and guilty pleas entered solely for the purpose of release or to benefit from a time-limited offer from the Crown. These principles are discussed in detail below.

2. PRINCIPLES GUIDING RESOLUTION DISCUSSIONS

Crown counsel must conduct resolution discussions with the public interest in mind, as well as the effective and consistent enforcement of the law. Crown counsel are advocates and quasi-ministers of justice. They must represent the public interest as knowledgeable and effective negotiators, while at the same time ensuring that the accused’s constitutional rights are respected.

The principles of openness, fairness, and restraint must govern any resolution discussion.

2.1 Openness

One of the more serious criticisms of resolution discussions (in particular, plea bargaining) relates to the secrecy and lack of accountability of the process, and the related concern that “private deals” occur that are subsequently ratified by the judiciary. This can result in public suspicion and cynicism.²

¹ There may be cases where counsel for a person or organization under investigation initiates plea discussions, before charges are laid. This may occur, for example, in tax evasion or competition matters. In such cases, the appropriate threshold for entering into plea discussions is whether the decision to prosecute test can or could be met. Moreover, Crown counsel must consider the availability of the regime of Remediation Agreements when the accused is an organization. For more on this topic, see part XXII.1 of the Criminal Code and Guideline 3.21 “Remediation Agreements”.

² Canada, Department of Justice, Plea Discussions and Agreements, Working Paper 60 (Law Reform Commission of Canada, 1989) at 12 [Plea Discussions and Agreements].

The principle of openness stems from the concept that “fair and rational decisions are more likely to be perceived as fair and rational if their origins and underpinnings have been fully disclosed.”³

The openness principle has at least three components: (i) consulting, where appropriate, interested parties about a proposed resolution; (ii) upholding the open court principle; and (iii) adequately documenting the prosecution file.

2.1.1 Consulting interested parties

Crown counsel must consult interested parties where it is appropriate to do so.

Absent exceptional circumstances, Crown counsel must seek input from victims (where there is one)⁴ and keep them informed about the nature and extent of resolution discussions.

The Canadian Victims Bill of Rights (CVBR)⁵ gives victims the right to information upon request. In addition, the Criminal Code imposes obligations on the court to inquire whether the prosecutor has taken steps to:

- inform the victim, if the victim advised the prosecutor that they wanted to be informed of any plea agreement or if the agreement relates to the offence of murder, a serious personal injury offence, or any other indictable offence where the maximum punishment is five years or more;⁶
- provide the victim with an opportunity to indicate whether they are seeking restitution for their losses and damages;⁷ and
- provide the victim with an opportunity to prepare a victim impact statement.⁸

In cases where an accused expresses a desire to plead guilty and the Crown has not yet had an opportunity to consult the victim, Crown counsel must consider seeking an adjournment so that consultation may occur.⁹ Crown witness coordinators may be best positioned to have those communications because they are often in direct contact with victims and their family members.

It is also good practice to seek input from investigative agencies prior to engaging in resolution discussions. This is particularly important in serious or major cases.

³ Ibid at 13.

⁴ The discussion with victims of crime is subject to certain statutory limitations. For example, where Crown counsel believes that discussions with a victim may endanger the life or safety of another person, they can rely on s 20(d) of the Canadian Victims Bill of Rights, SC 2015, c 13, s 2 [CVBR] to limit, delay or avoid such discussions.

⁵ Ibid, ss 6, 7.

⁶ Criminal Code, RSC 1985, c C-46, ss 606(4.1), 606(4.2) [Criminal Code].

⁷ Ibid, s 737.1 (2). See also s 16 of the CVBR and Guideline 6.7 “Restitution.”

⁸ Criminal Code, ss 722, 737.1(3).

⁹ Ibid, s 722(3), 737.1(3).

It may also be necessary to consult the community in which the offence was committed. For example, Crown counsel may consult First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities, as well as other community leaders or school representatives. This consultation should occur in cases where the offence or resolution position has a significant impact on the community, and when it is reasonably possible to do so.

Crown counsel may also be required to consult other stakeholders. For example, it may be appropriate to consult the relevant provincial prosecuting service, or PPSC headquarters. PPSC headquarters may connect counsel with a Department of Justice legal services unit, if required.¹⁰

After consultation, the final responsibility for assessing the appropriateness of a plea agreement rests with Crown counsel.¹¹ If a plea agreement is reached, Crown counsel must make reasonable efforts to ensure that victims and investigating agencies¹² understand the substance of the agreement and the reasoning behind it.

2.1.2 Upholding the open court principle

Public access to the justice system helps to ensure that justice is administered in a principled manner and in accordance with the rule of law. Therefore, where an agreement has been reached, Crown counsel should present the proposal to the trial judge in open court and on the record.¹³ Where the agreement is a product of discussions that occurred during a judicial pre-trial conference, Crown counsel must put the relevant details on the court record.

While there is a presumption that courts are open, Crown counsel must be aware of statutory publication bans that may be applicable in a proceeding. For more on mandatory and discretionary publication bans, see Guideline 3.4 “Sealing Orders and Publication Bans.”

2.1.3 Documenting the prosecution file

Crown counsel must maintain a written record of all issues discussed at a resolution meeting. The record must be dated and kept in the file. The record must include offers made, agreements reached or rejected, and information provided to victims.¹⁴ Maintaining a written record will promote a consistent and informed practice, particularly where multiple Crown counsel successively handle a file, while ensuring proper accountability and transparency.

¹⁰ See Directive 1.3 “Consultation within Government.”

¹¹ See Guideline 2.1 “Independence and Accountability in Decision-Making.”

¹² See Guideline 5.1 “National Security.”

¹³ Publication bans or sealing orders at a sentencing hearing may be required in certain circumstances. The court may order a publication ban where the moving party can demonstrate it is in the best interests of the administration of justice.

¹⁴ For an illustration of the difficulties that may arise where no proper record of discussions is kept, see R v Rajaeefard, [1996] OJ No 108 (ONCA).

Even when resolution discussions take place informally, Crown counsel must document the file when they are able to do so.

2.2 Fairness

The principle of fairness must guide Crown counsel's resolution positions for all accused persons, regardless of whether the accused is unrepresented, represented, or may not be effectively represented. For example, Crown counsel should not take a higher sentencing position when dealing with a less experienced defence counsel versus a more experienced or effective defence counsel. Crown counsel must take care to ensure that they are fair to all accused, regardless of their circumstances.

2.2.1 The risk of wrongful convictions

Fairness means that the accused must receive core disclosure prior to any form of resolution discussions so that the parties are on equal footing. However, this may not always be reasonably feasible. For example, the accused may express a desire to plead guilty at an early stage, before disclosure is available.

Should an accused insist on pleading guilty before they receive disclosure, Crown counsel must turn their mind to the following risk factors:

- Guilty pleas entered without the benefit of full disclosure may contribute to wrongful convictions.¹⁵
- An accused may enter a guilty plea only to expedite their release in response to an offer of "time-served," significant credit due to an early plea, or pressure of a looming expiry date.
- Giving too little time to an accused to make a decision may result in unfairness. Accused persons must not face pressure to make a quick decision. They must have sufficient time to discuss the offer with their counsel, consider the resolution offer, and understand the consequences that flow from it.¹⁶

These concerns are particularly important with an unrepresented accused.¹⁷ If the accused is unrepresented, Crown counsel should canvass the availability of a defence counsel or duty counsel to speak with the accused.¹⁸ Crown counsel must also be aware that First Nations, Métis, Inuit, Black, and other marginalized groups are overrepresented amongst the wrongfully convicted. Crown counsel must have a heightened awareness of this fact when engaging in resolution discussions.

¹⁵ See Canada, Report of the Federal/Provincial/Territorial Heads of Prosecutions Subcommittee on the Prevention of Wrongful Convictions, Innocence at Stake: The Need for Continued Vigilance to Prevent Wrongful Convictions in Canada (Ottawa, Public Prosecution Service of Canada, 2018) (Co-Chairs Stephen Bindman and Eric Tolppanen), specifically Chapter 8 - False Guilty Pleas. Incomplete disclosure has been identified as fostering wrongful convictions. For more detail on this obligation, see Directive 2.4 "Prevention of Wrongful Convictions".

¹⁶ Generally speaking, time limits should have some connection to an event in the progress of the case. For example, requiring an accused to plead guilty before a date for trial is set may be an acceptable practice, since it is connected to the dedication and expenditure of resources by the court and the Crown.

¹⁷ See Guideline 2.5 "Principles of Disclosure" on providing disclosure to an unrepresented accused.

If Crown counsel develop concerns about the lack of meaningful disclosure or an expedited guilty plea, alternatives to a plea of guilt must be explored. The alternatives must be reasonable in the circumstances. For example, Crown counsel may, if appropriate, revisit their position on bail, encourage consultation with duty counsel, extend the expiry of resolution offers, or offer alternative measures.

Where the accused waives their right to disclosure, and insists on proceeding with a guilty plea, Crown counsel must ensure that the waiver is clear and informed. Crown counsel must confirm on the record that the accused waives their right to disclosure at the time of entering the plea. Crown counsel should also ask the presiding justice to conduct a formal plea inquiry pursuant to s. 606(1.1) of the Criminal Code.

Crown counsel must make complete notes of the circumstances and details of the resolution discussions, including any waivers. The notes must be placed in the Crown file.

2.2.2 Honouring communicated positions

Fairness includes the principle that Crown counsel should honour all negotiated agreements unless fulfilling the agreement¹⁹ would bring the administration of justice into disrepute or is otherwise contrary to the public interest.²⁰

Fairness also includes the principle that an accused person is entitled to rely on resolution positions conveyed by the Crown. Therefore, only in a “rare and exceptional” case can Crown counsel repudiate a communicated position.²¹ For example, Crown counsel may not be bound by a communicated position if it is based on misleading or incorrect information about material facts that were provided by the accused.

The decision not to fulfill an agreement and seek a higher penalty can only be made by the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP), after carefully considering whether the communicated position is contrary to the administration of justice or the public interest. The following factors will assist in this determination:

¹⁸ For more on unrepresented accused, see section 5 of this Guideline.

¹⁹ The term “agreement” means a Crown offer that the accused has accepted. This should be distinguished from “uncommunicated positions” on file, “communicated offers” that have been communicated to defence counsel or to the accused, but have not yet been accepted, or positions that have been communicated, but the timeline for acceptance has expired. For clarity, a position communicated by one Crown is binding on all Crown counsel.

²⁰ This describes the public interest test that the judge must apply when deciding whether to depart from a joint submission, as described in R v Anthony-Cook, 2016 SCC 43 at para 32.

²¹ See R v Nixon, 2011 SCC 34.

- (i) The circumstances leading to the plea agreement, and any resulting prejudice to the accused;
- (ii) The seriousness of the offence;
- (iii) The strength of the Crown's case;
- (iv) The range of sentences customarily imposed for the offence;
- (v) The existence of aggravating and mitigating factors, and whether those factors justify a departure from the established range for the offence;
- (vi) Any prejudice to trial fairness that the accused will suffer as a result of the repudiation and whether the accused can be restored to their original position; and²²
- (vii) The timing of the repudiation. If repudiation is to take place, it must be done expeditiously.

In cases where the Crown has communicated a position based on the Crown's incorrect assessment of the evidence,²³ the CFP must consider this factor and not repudiate a communicated position absent exceptional circumstances.

If the CFP determines that repudiation is required, Crown counsel must inform defence counsel of the reasons for the repudiation in writing. These reasons may be disclosed in a court proceeding, should an allegation of abuse of process arise.²⁴

If Crown counsel determines that a more lenient sentence is justified based on facts presented to them, even though another Crown counsel communicated a higher sentence, all reasonable efforts must be made to consult with the counsel who made the original offer before communicating the new offer.

²² In the context of an abuse of process application, the SCC held in R v Nixon, 2011 SCC 34 that once it is established that the Crown repudiated a plea agreement, the evidentiary burden shifts to the Crown to explain to the court the circumstances and reasons behind the decision to repudiate the agreement (see para 63). The reasons should be complete and include an assessment of any trial fairness issues or prejudice that the accused might suffer from the repudiation (see paras 56 and 64).

²³ For example, Crown counsel may not have fully reviewed the file before conveying a resolution position. In addition, the investigative agency may not have provided relevant or material facts to Crown counsel in a timely fashion. In both of these circumstances, it is generally not appropriate for Crown counsel to modify their position because they were not aware of information that would have been available to them if they had taken steps to obtain it.

²⁴ Courts do not interfere with prosecutorial discretion unless it has been exercised for an oblique motive, offends the right to a fair trial, or otherwise amounts to an abuse of process. See R v Nixon, 2011 SCC 34, at para 68, Charron J. articulated the standard courts should apply to assess if Crown counsel may lawfully renege on a plea agreement: "In the absence of any prosecutorial misconduct, improper motive or bad faith in the approach, circumstances, or ultimate decision to repudiate, the decision to proceed with the prosecution is the Crown's alone to make."

2.2.3 Other principles related to fairness

In addition to the three principles explained above, Crown counsel must also follow the principles outlined below:

- Crown counsel must be diligent to recognize and set aside any existing personal conscious or unconscious biases, stereotypes, or prejudices;
- Crown counsel must ensure that no justice system participant, for example a victim or witness, is prejudiced by any form of bias from any party during resolution discussions or sentencing;
- Crown counsel are encouraged to consult with their colleagues in arriving at a fit and appropriate sentence. Consultation allows Crown counsel to receive diverse perspectives and ensure that consistent approaches are taken. Crown counsel should make reasonable efforts to seek out and consider the views of colleagues who have different backgrounds or life experiences. The more serious the crime, the more important it is to consult;
- Crown counsel should initiate and respond to plea discussions with defence counsel in a prompt manner to ensure timely prosecutions;²⁵
- Crown counsel engaged in resolution discussions should continue their efforts to set trial dates, unless the accused provides an express waiver of the delay. Since the accused is waiving their constitutional right to be tried within a reasonable time, waivers in writing should be confirmed on the court record in the presence of the accused or their counsel; and
- When an accused changes counsel, Crown counsel must advise the new defence counsel of all previous offers and the Crown's present position in light of the known facts.

2.3 Principle of Restraint

When determining the appropriate sentence for an accused, the principle of restraint under s. 718.2(d) and (e) of the Criminal Code requires Crown counsel to explore all available sanctions other than imprisonment that are reasonable in the circumstances. Crown counsel must be particularly mindful of the principle of restraint to avoid contributing to the overrepresentation of individuals from First Nations, Métis, Inuit, Black and other marginalized groups in the criminal justice system.

To this end, Crown counsel must avoid recommending “short and sharp” sentences because their utility in achieving the principles and objectives of sentencing is questionable. Short and sharp sentences also contribute to the problem of overrepresentation. Only in exceptional circumstances, may Crown counsel seek a short and sharp sentence. If Crown counsel seeks such a sentence, they must document the file to record their reasons.

²⁵ See R v Jordan, 2016 SCC 27 and Guideline 3.17 “Ensuring Timely Prosecutions.”

3. PLEA DISCUSSIONS

Crown counsel may engage in plea negotiations where all three of these preconditions are met:

- The decision to prosecute test has been met on the charge(s) the accused wishes to resolve;
- The accused is willing to acknowledge guilt unequivocally on the charge(s) they wish to plead guilty to; and
- The accused's decision to plead guilty is both voluntary and informed.

3.1 Charge discussions

Charge discussions may cover the following topics:

- Reducing a count to a lesser or included offence, or including a charge that arises out of the same transaction (see s. 606(4) of the Criminal Code);
- Reducing a count to a lesser or included offence to avoid a mandatory minimum penalty (MMP). For example, Crown counsel may determine that a sentence lower than the MMP would assist in addressing overrepresentation, or more adequately reflect the seriousness of the offence and the moral culpability of the accused;
- Withdrawing or staying other charges;
- Agreeing not to proceed with a charge, or to stay or withdraw related charges against another accused who is charged in relation to the same event or transaction;
- Agreeing to reduce multiple charges to one all-inclusive charge; or
- Agreeing to stay certain counts and proceed with others, relying on the material facts that support the stayed counts as aggravating factors for sentencing purposes.²⁶

The following practices are not acceptable:

- Proceeding with unnecessary additional charges to secure a negotiated plea;
- Agreeing to a guilty plea for an offence not disclosed by the evidence;

²⁶ Section 725 of the Criminal Code now regulates this practice.

- Agreeing to a guilty plea for a charge that inadequately reflects the gravity of the accused's provable conduct unless, in exceptional circumstances, the plea is justified by the benefit that will accrue to the administration of justice;
- Negotiating plea agreements that involve other government departments' administrative or enforcement processes (e.g., Canada Revenue Agency) without consulting them about the proposed resolution; or
- Negotiating plea agreements with defence counsel representing multiple co-accused where there is reason to believe that counsel is in a conflict of interest.

3.2 Procedural Discussions

Procedural discussions may properly include the following:

- Agreeing to proceed by summary conviction or by indictment;²⁷
- Agreeing to dispose of the case at a specified future date if, on the record and in open court, the accused indicates that they are prepared to waive the delay; or
- Agreeing to waive charges to or from another province or territory, or to or from another judicial district within a province or territory.²⁸

3.3 Scope of Sentencing Discussions

Sentencing discussions may cover the following topics:

- An undertaking to recommend a certain range of sentences or a specific sentence;
- A joint recommendation for a specific sentence (for more on joint submissions, see section 4.6 below);
- An agreement not to oppose a sentence recommendation by defence counsel, so long as Crown counsel is aware what that recommendation will be;
- An agreement not to seek ancillary orders that may attach to a sentence (for example, a forfeiture order or a weapons prohibition order). However, Crown counsel cannot negotiate mandatory sentencing measures required by the law;²⁹

²⁷ See Guideline 3.10 "Elections and Re-Elections" for more on the Crown's discretion to elect. Note in particular the discussion of the Crown's ability to re-elect from proceeding by indictment to summary conviction when the limitation period has expired.

²⁸ See Guideline 3.9 "Waiver of Charges" for guidelines and procedures on waivers.

²⁹ See e.g. s 109(1) of the Criminal Code, which requires a prohibition order for firearms in certain cases, or s 487.051 of the Criminal Code, which requires the judge to order the taking of a DNA sample for forensic analysis upon conviction for a "primary designated offence."

- An agreement not to file a notice of intention to seek greater punishment;³⁰
- An agreement not to oppose the imposition of an intermittent sentence rather than a continuous sentence;
- An agreement to include or not include restitution as part of the sentence; or
- An agreement regarding the type of conditions to be imposed on a conditional sentence or probation order.

Crown counsel must not convey a promise or an undertaking not to appeal the sentence imposed.

3.4 Agreements about the Facts

Where an accused decides to plead guilty, Crown counsel should rely on facts that are provable by admissible evidence. Crown counsel must read these facts into the record, or file an agreed statement of facts.

Crown counsel must not present facts that are of little or no significance to the charges and are presented solely to embarrass the accused.

Agreements respecting facts must not mislead the court and must not give the appearance of misleading the court. The following types of agreements are not acceptable:

- An agreement not to advise the court of any part of the accused's provable criminal record that is relevant or could assist the court;
- An agreement not to advise the court of the extent of the injury or damages suffered by a victim; or
- An agreement to withhold from the court facts that are provable, relevant, and that aggravate the offence, unless there is a clear and reasonable basis for doing so.

3.5 Determining a Fit Sentence

In determining a fit sentence, Crown counsel must consider:

- All relevant objectives and principles of sentencing set out in the Criminal Code, other legislation, and case law;
- All relevant aggravating and mitigating circumstances, including those set out in legislation;

³⁰ See Guideline 5.7 "Impaired Driving Cases: Notice to Seek Greater Punishment", which sets out the policies on seeking greater punishment for this offence.

- Relevant sentencing precedents in the region; and
- Any background and systemic factors relevant to the accused.

Each case must be decided based on its own facts and circumstances. Crown counsel must weigh a person's degree of responsibility against the seriousness of the offence, the impact the offence has on any victim or the community, and other relevant sentencing considerations as set out in the Criminal Code. In light of all of these factors, Crown counsel should consider whether:

- alternatives to prosecutions (including alternative measures) would be appropriate;
- incarceration remains appropriate, or if a non-custodial sentence satisfies the purposes and principles of sentencing; or
- the duration of the term of imprisonment should be reduced.

Where the common law has established ranges for a particular offence, Crown counsel must be mindful of the Supreme Court's direction that ranges are guidelines for a starting point and should not be seen as a "straitjacket."³¹

Departures from an established sentencing range may be appropriate depending on the unique circumstances of an individual case. For example, where there are significant mitigating circumstances, or the accused's moral culpability is reduced, a sentence below an established range may be appropriate. Ultimately, any sentencing decision must reflect the particular circumstances of the offence and the accused. If Crown counsel determines that a departure is required, they must consult their team leader before entering into a plea agreement.

Before recommending that a fine be imposed, Crown counsel should take all reasonable steps to ensure that the fine is an appropriate disposition, including the accused's ability to pay the fine, the length of time required to pay it, and the availability of a fine option program.

Crown counsel must be aware of the requirement to consult their CFP in circumstances as outlined in Guideline 2.6 "Consultation within the Public Prosecution Service of Canada".

3.6 Joint Submissions

A resolution discussion may result in Crown counsel agreeing to present a joint submission as to the exact sentence. Crown counsel may do so if the joint submission will not bring the administration of justice into disrepute, and is not otherwise contrary to the public interest.

³¹ R v Parranto, 2021 SCC 46 at paras 33-37; R v Friesen, 2020 SCC 9 at paras 36-38, 162; R v Lacasse, 2015 SCC 64 at paras 57-61, 67-69; R v Nasogaluak, 2010 SCC 6 at para 44.

Crown counsel must put on the record the considerations supporting the joint submission, including all relevant aggravating and mitigating factors.³² The Supreme Court of Canada has held that putting a thorough justification of a joint submission on the record is also important for public perception. This ensures that the court and the members of the public readily understand the reason for the joint submission.

When a joint submission is outside the range established by the common law, Crown counsel must inform the judge of all the circumstances of the case that justify the departure. This may include:

- The circumstances of the accused, including mitigating factors or reduced moral culpability;
- The impact of the charges or sentence on the accused;
- The background or systemic factors that may have contributed to the cause of the underlying offence; or
- The benefits obtained by the Crown (if any).

Judges may depart from joint submissions “only rarely,” and if the joint submission is so “markedly out of line with the expectations of reasonable persons aware of the circumstances.”³³ When a judge indicates a possible departure from a joint submission, Crown counsel should request an opportunity to make further submissions before pronouncing on the sentence.³⁴

4. TAKING INTO ACCOUNT BACKGROUND AND SYSTEMIC FACTORS

Sentencing is highly individualized. Different sentences may be justified for different persons charged with similar crimes depending on the particular circumstances of the case and the accused.

Given that one of the fundamental principles of sentencing is proportionality, Crown counsel must consider whether broad background and systemic factors played a role in the commission of the offence.³⁵ While relevant to the formulation of an appropriate sentence, ³² See R v Anthony-Cook, 2016 SCC 43 at para 57. This may include any relevant aggravating or mitigating circumstances, and any of the sentencing objectives listed in s 718 of the Criminal Code that are sought to be achieved.

³³ R v Anthony-Cook, 2016 SCC 43 at paras 32-34.

³⁴ R v Anthony-Cook, 2016 SCC 43 at paras 58-60. See also R v Abel, 2011 NWTCA 04 and R v Hood, 2011 ABCA 169.

³⁵ The Supreme Court of Canada decisions in R v Gladue, [1999] 1 SCR 688 and R v Ipeelee, 2012 SCC 13, and the courts of appeal decisions in R v Anderson, 2021 NSCA 62 and R v Morris, 2021 ONCA 680 held that background and systemic factors must be considered when sentencing an accused. Gladue factors must be considered for all self-identified member of a First Nation, Métis or Inuit community unless the individual waives this right. Background and systemic factors are also relevant to other accused. In R v Anderson, 2021 NSCA 62, the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal held that systemic anti-Black racism was a relevant factor in sentencing the accused. The Ontario Court of Appeal in R v Morris, 2021 ONCA 680, emphasized that no one factor is determinative. Background and systemic factors must be considered in the context of all the other relevant purposes and principles of sentencing.³⁶

This means that Crown counsel must make reasonable efforts to gather relevant information in order to arrive at an informed resolution position. In particular when prosecuting a member of an overrepresented or marginalized group. This information may come directly from the accused (or their counsel)³⁷, or through pre-sentence reports as discussed below.

Crown counsel must also consider whether the victim (if there is one) is part of a group overrepresented as victims of crime.

Crown counsel must delicately balance all the competing interests fairly before communicating a sentencing position, and be mindful of the paramount principles and objectives of sentencing relevant to a particular case.

4.1 First Nations, Métis, and Inuit Accused

Crown counsel must consider information provided by a Gladue Report³⁸, an enhanced pre-sentence report, and information provided by defence counsel in arriving at a sentencing position. This information may include community supports. Crown counsel must also provide the court with any relevant information in their possession about the accused's background or unique circumstances. If the accused or the court requests a Gladue report, Crown counsel must not object.

Crown counsel may also seek the assistance of Indigenous court workers when exploring community-based culturally appropriate resources for the accused.

An accused does not need to establish a causal link between their Indigenous background and the offence committed. Gladue factors must be considered regardless of whether the accused has status or lives on a reserve. Gladue factors may include:

- The impact of colonialism, including residential schools;
- The displacement of Indigenous communities and peoples;
- The impact of the “Sixties Scoop,” where Indigenous children were removed from their homes;

background and systemic factors are relevant to all accused, and endorsed the use of enhanced pre-sentence reports in sentencing Black individuals.

³⁶ R v Gladue, [1999] 2 SCR 688, at para 88.

³⁷ If the accused chooses to provide this information.

³⁸ Crown counsel must be guided by the principles enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in both Gladue and Ipeelee.

- The cumulative impact of these factors, including how colonialism and systemic racism translate into:
 - Lower educational attainment;
 - Lower incomes;
 - Higher unemployment;
 - Higher rates of substance use and suicide; and
 - Higher levels of incarceration for Indigenous peoples.³⁹

These factors must form the necessary context for any resolution discussion.

4.2 Other Overrepresented and Marginalized Groups

Enhanced pre-sentence reports, or Impact of Race and Culture Assessment reports (IRCA), may be available for Black and other racialized accused persons. These reports can help the court better understand how poverty, marginalization, racism, or social exclusion has impacted the accused's circumstances and the offence committed.

If the accused or the court requests an IRCA, Crown counsel must not object to the court receiving such reports. The information contained in these reports may serve to attenuate moral culpability, thereby assisting Crown counsel with determining a position on the sentence, and the court with imposing a fit and proportionate sentence.

5. UNREPRESENTED ACCUSED

Plea or sentencing negotiations with an unrepresented accused call for extreme care. In any discussion with an unrepresented accused, Crown counsel must ensure that a witness is present, absent exceptional circumstances.⁴⁰ It is especially crucial for Crown counsel to keep a detailed written record of all discussions in the file.

Crown counsel must inform the accused of their right to retain counsel and, where appropriate, advise them of the availability of legal aid. Crown counsel must also raise potential Charter and evidentiary issues that may arise from the facts or circumstances of the case.

Crown counsel may also inform an unrepresented accused of the Crown's initial position on sentence in the event of a guilty plea. However, Crown counsel must not advise the accused whether they should accept the Crown's offer. Discussions can only proceed if ³⁹ R v Ipeelee, 2012 SCC 13 at para 60.

⁴⁰ Depending on the jurisdiction, a third person may be a police officer, a Crown Witness Coordinator, or another Crown. The third party may become a witness to the proceeding if the nature of the discussions later becomes in dispute.

Crown counsel is satisfied that the accused is acting voluntarily. Moreover, Crown counsel must not take advantage of the fact that the accused is unrepresented by counsel.

If Crown counsel develop concerns about the accused's ability to understand the extent of their jeopardy or their right to counsel, additional steps must be taken to encourage the accused to consult with counsel. Ultimately, Crown counsel must abstain from negotiating with the accused if they conclude that the accused does not understand sufficiently.

Crown counsel should advise the judge that the accused was encouraged to retain counsel. Crown counsel should ensure that the court record reflects what they said to the accused outside of the courtroom, seeking confirmation or corrections from the accused. This will ensure that the court record accurately reflects the conversation and agreement (if any).

Crown counsel should follow local practices to mitigate the risks regarding dealings with unrepresented accused. For example, Crown counsel may ask duty counsel to speak with an unrepresented accused. In the alternative, Crown counsel may request a pre-trial hearing in open court where a judge may assist in explaining to the accused their rights and options.

If the accused has agreed to plead guilty, Crown counsel must recommend that the presiding judge hold a plea comprehension hearing.

6. NARROWING THE TRIAL ISSUES

Crown counsel must attempt to narrow the litigation issues as much as possible in cases that are proceeding to trial. For example, Crown counsel may identify foreseeable legal issues and seek defence counsel's position on those issues. Crown counsel may also prepare a witness list, a summary of the anticipated evidence, and a list of issues from which defence counsel might make admissions.⁴¹ It may not be possible to narrow the issues in all cases, but Crown counsel must make reasonable efforts to do so.

7. JUDICIAL PRE-TRIAL CONFERENCES

A system of judicially supervised pre-trial conferences exists in most jurisdictions, although the form may differ from one jurisdiction to the next. They are effective not only in encouraging the fair disposition of cases without a trial, but also in narrowing the issues in cases that proceed to trial.⁴² Crown counsel are encouraged to take the initiative with court administrators to hold a pre-trial conference if the court has not done so.

⁴¹ Depending on the jurisdiction, it may be useful for Crown counsel to draft a list of potential admissions and provide it to defence counsel for their consideration and signature.

⁴² Pursuant to s 625.1(2) of the Criminal Code, pre-trial conferences are mandatory for cases in which a jury trial is to take place. Pre-trial conferences may also take place in trials before a judge or justice alone pursuant to s 625.1(1) of the Criminal Code.

Crown counsel are encouraged to be proactive and take all reasonable measures to ensure that such conferences are productive and useful. Some examples are outlined below:

- Ensuring that sufficient disclosure has been made to defence counsel before the pre-trial conference to enable meaningful discussions about the facts, any possible issues, or a plea resolution;
- Identifying, before the pre-trial conference, areas where agreements can be reached on issues that would shorten the proceedings;
- Discussing the relevant issues with defence counsel prior to the pre-trial conference; and
- Securing the attendance of an investigator on the case, where such attendance would be useful or necessary (depending on the jurisdiction and local practices).

Crown counsel may conduct guilty plea and sentence proceedings before the judge who presides over the pre-trial conference where there is a joint position on sentence or where both defence and Crown counsel consent to the pre-trial judge conducting the sentencing hearing.

If, during the pre-trial, the judge comments that they will impose a particular sentence if the plea proceeds before them, Crown counsel should consider the appropriateness of proceeding with the plea before that judge.⁴³ While the Crown should not participate in judge shopping, the objective is to proceed before a court that has not predetermined the outcome of the sentencing hearing before hearing all the facts.

Crown counsel should also ensure that the court record reflects that a judicial pre-trial conference regarding resolution has been held.

8. DELEGATED AUTHORITY TO PROSECUTE

Different levels of government may have jurisdiction to prosecute when individuals are charged with offences under both the Criminal Code and other federal statutes arising from the same incident. Delegation of charges will typically occur in these circumstances to avoid separate trials or conflicting outcomes. It is customary for the prosecuting service having jurisdiction over the less serious offence to delegate authority to prosecute to the prosecution service having jurisdiction over the more serious offence.⁴⁴ The Director of ⁴³ Courts have universally condemned pre-plea participation by the trial judge in charge of sentence negotiations: R v Wood (1975), 26 CCC (2d) 100, at 108 (ABCA); R v Dubien (1982), 67 CCC (2d) 341, at 346-47 (ONCA); R v White (1982), 39 Nfld and PEIR 196 (CA). Generally, see: GA Ferguson, “The Role of the Judge in Plea Bargaining” (1972-73) 15 Crim LQ 26; Plea Discussions and Agreements at 12-15, and Recommendation 4; Curran, “Discussions in the Judges Private Room,” [1991] Crim L Rev 79.

⁴⁴ The DPP may enter into agreements with her provincial or territorial counterparts respecting the delegation of authority to prosecute where an accused has been charged on the same information or indictment with federal and provincial/territorial offences. These are commonly referred to as “major-minor agreements.” Alternatively, CFPs may enter into similar agreements with their provincial or territorial counterparts at the Public Prosecutions (DPP) may also delegate the prosecution of an offence when there is a conflict of interest.

When delegation occurs, the prosecution service that delegated the prosecution retains ultimate control over the prosecution. This means that the prosecution service who has taken delegation remains ultimately accountable to the delegating prosecution service.

Therefore, when the DPP⁴⁵ delegates authority to the province to prosecute a federal charge, the DPP retains the right to be informed of the matter and assume the conduct of the delegated matter if there is disagreement on how the matter should be handled. It is the usual practice for consultation between the prosecution services to continue as needed after the delegation. In practice, this ultimate accountability means that the delegating prosecution service should be consulted on resolution discussions if:

- They give rise to sustained, significant or anticipated media interest;
- There is potential for a negative judicial ruling or comment against a prosecutor personally or the PPSC generally;
- There is potential for a particular resolution agreement to generate significant public criticism;
- They involve a challenge to an investigative agency's policies, practices or enforcement powers; or
- A proposed resolution agreement would depart from this Guideline.

local level. These may take the form of local major-minor agreements signed between the CFP and their counterpart that delegate standing authority to prosecute certain "minor" offences from the other jurisdiction, or ad hoc arrangements in individual cases.

⁴⁵ Depending on the jurisdiction, the DPP may have delegated this authority to the CFP, DCFP, or a team leader.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.8 ALTERNATIVE MEASURES

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

June 3, 2024

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. AUTHORIZATION OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS.....	3
3. APPLICABLE PRINCIPLES AND CRITERIA.....	4
3.1 General principles.....	4
3.2 Legislative criteria	5
3.3 Background Systemic Factors of the Accused	5
3.4 The Nature of the Offence	6
3.4.1 Consultation.....	6
4. IMPLEMENTATION OF ALTERNATIVE MEASURES	7

1. INTRODUCTION

The fundamental principle underlying the use of alternative measures¹ in s. 717 of the Criminal Code is that criminal proceedings should be used with restraint. This means that not everyone who is alleged to have committed an offence should be prosecuted. In appropriate cases, the public interest may be best served by resolution through alternative measures. Alternative measures provide an accused with an opportunity to have charges dealt with outside of the criminal process, if they accept personal responsibility and agree to make amends. This allows Crown counsel to take into account both the nature and circumstances of the offence, as well as the accused's personal circumstances.

Section 717 of the Criminal Code applies to all federal offences unless the federal statute creating the offence expressly provides otherwise.² Crown counsel must apprise themselves of the federal statutes that have their own alternative measures framework.³

Crown counsel must also be diligent in all decision-making activities to recognize existing personal conscious and unconscious biases, institutional biases, and stereotypes. Both becoming aware of these biases, and taking active steps to set them aside, are necessary to ensure that the decision whether to offer alternative measures does not perpetuate any form of systemic discrimination or racism.

¹ Section 716 of the Criminal Code defines alternative measures as measures other than judicial proceedings under the Criminal Code used to deal with a person who is 18 years of age or over and alleged to have committed an offence. The term "person" means both individuals and organizations given the definition of "organization" in s. 2 of the Criminal Code and "person" in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act. Extrajudicial measures for youth are governed by the Youth Criminal Justice Act and are addressed in Directive 5.4 "Youth Criminal Justice."

² Interpretation Act, RSC 1985, c I-21, s 34(2).

³ See for example the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, 1999, the Species at Risk Act and the Fisheries Act.

2. AUTHORIZATION OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

Pursuant to section 717(1)(a) of the Criminal Code, alternative measures may only be used if it is part of a program of alternative measures authorized by the Attorney General or his lawful deputy, the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP).⁴

The DPP authorizes Crown counsel to use any measures that are consistent with the principles and criteria contained in this Guideline.

Alternative measures do not need to be part of a formal or separate program.

The DPP authorizes the following alternative measures:

- Community service;
- Restitution or compensation in cash or services;
- Mediation;
- Referrals to specialized programs for counselling, treatment or education (e.g. life skills, drug or alcohol treatment, anger management), including those delivered by Indigenous counsellors, elders or community members;
- Referrals to community justice committees and Indigenous, or youth justice committees;
- Victim-accused reconciliation programs and similar measures aimed at restorative justice;
- A letter of apology; and
- Other reasonable alternatives or measures that are consistent with the objectives and criteria in this Guideline.

Crown counsel can also refer an accused to an appropriate alternative measure that is part of a program authorized by a province or territory in accordance with s. 717(1)(a) of the Criminal Code.⁵

⁴ See the definition of “Attorney General” under s. 2 of the Criminal Code, and s. 3(4) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, which states that the DPP is the Deputy Attorney General for the purpose of the duties and functions listed in s 3 (3) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act.

⁵ Prosecutors searching for alternative measures programs offered in their community may consult the Department of Justice’s directory of restorative justice programs at the following address:
<https://www.justice.gc.ca/eng/cj-jp/rj-jr/sch-rch.aspx>

3. APPLICABLE PRINCIPLES AND CRITERIA

3.1 General principles

Crown counsel can consider alternative measures before or after charges are laid, and only if the decision to prosecute test is met.⁶ If the test is not met, Crown counsel must withdraw or stay the charges. For more on the decision to prosecute test, see Guideline 2.3, “Decision to Prosecute.”

Section 717(1) of the Criminal Code sets out when alternative measures may be used. Section 717(2) specifies that alternative measures cannot be used if a person denies participation or involvement in the offence or expresses a wish to have the charge dealt with by the court.

Other federal legislation may set out specific requirements concerning alternative measures. For example, the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (CDSA)⁷ creates an obligation on Crown counsel to consider alternative measures in prosecutions for possession of drugs for personal use. Section 10.3 of the CDSA states that prosecutions for possession of a controlled substance are only appropriate in light of the principles set out in s. 10.1. Crown counsel must also follow the direction in Guideline 5.13 “Prosecution of Possession of Controlled Substances Contrary to s. 4\(1\) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act”. This Guideline directs that alternatives to prosecution must be considered in all cases where possession for personal use is charged, unless they are inadequate to address the concerns related to the accused’s conduct.

Crown counsel should consider the use of alternative measures in cases where the following objectives are met:

- Instill a sense of accountability in the accused and a recognition of the damage done; and
- Promote public safety, deterrence, denunciation, rehabilitation and restitution to victims and the community while avoiding judicial proceedings, thus sparing the accused the consequences of a criminal conviction and a criminal record.

Crown counsel must assess whether the measures are appropriate in the circumstances. This assessment must take into account the legislative criteria, the nature and seriousness of the offence, and the background and systemic factors of the accused. Crown counsel must adopt a principled, consistent, fair, and flexible approach when making the initial assessment and implementing the alternative measures.

Crown counsel must also become familiar with the alternative measures that are available in the community where the prosecution is being conducted.

⁶ Law enforcement agencies may also use alternative measures by exercising their discretion not to charge and when appropriate, by referring accused to existing programs.

⁷ Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, SC 1996, c 19.

3.2 Legislative criteria

Crown counsel who are considering an alternative measure must be satisfied that the following legislative preconditions are met:

- The measure is authorized under s. 717(1)(a) of the Criminal Code and complies with s. 2 of this Guideline;
- The alternative measure is appropriate having regard to the needs of the accused, the interests of society, and the interests of the victim (s. 717(1)(b) of the Criminal Code);
- The accused consents to participate in the alternative measure fully and freely after being informed of the alternative measure and advised of their right to be represented by counsel (s. 717(1)(c) and (d) of the Criminal Code);
- The accused accepts responsibility for the offence charged (s. 717(1)(e) of the Criminal Code); and
- There is sufficient evidence to proceed with the prosecution, and the prosecution is not in any way barred by law (s. 717(1)(f) and (g) of the Criminal Code).

3.3 Background Systemic Factors of the Accused

Crown counsel must determine whether the measures are appropriate for the particular circumstances of the accused, taking into account the following factors:

- The overrepresentation of First Nations, Inuit, and Métis accused in the criminal justice system;
- The overrepresentation of Black persons and persons from other racialized or marginalized groups in the criminal justice system;
- Specific systemic or historical factors that may have contributed to bringing the accused to court;
- The accused's personal circumstances, including those that led to the commission of the offence and those that affect moral culpability. For example, mental health issues, substance use disorders, age, housing insecurity, racism, or racial inequities;
- The accused's expression of remorse, including fair restitution to victims;
- The potential for a restorative justice response to address the issues that led to the offence;
- Any rehabilitative measures the accused has undergone to avoid reoffending;
- The accused's prior criminal history. The fact that an accused has a criminal record or has previously benefitted from alternative measures does not preclude offering alternative measures again. Crown counsel should consider all the circumstances surrounding the accused's criminal history;

- Any other criminal charges the accused is facing; and
- The risk the accused poses to the community.

3.4 The Nature of the Offence

As set out in the introduction of this Guideline, the law does not limit the types of offences that can be dealt with by alternative measures. Therefore, all offences are eligible for alternative measures.

At the same time, it is important to note that alternative measures are only appropriate if they are consistent with the protection of society and maintaining public confidence in the administration of justice. It is also important to recognize that alternative measures can enhance public safety and public confidence by addressing the underlying causes of the crime.

In assessing whether alternative measures are appropriate, Crown counsel must consider the following non-exhaustive factors that may be relevant in a particular case:

- The nature and seriousness of the offence;
- Any potential harm to the community, society, or victim (if there is one);
- Whether the harm caused requires the use of the criminal process or can be adequately addressed with an alternative measure;
- The prescribed sentence and the range of sentences for the offence, as established by the common law;
- The relevant sentencing principles and circumstances set forth in the Criminal Code and other federal statutes;⁸
- The views of law enforcement; and
- The degree of responsibility of the accused.

3.4.1 Consultation

Depending on the unique and particular circumstances of a case, Crown counsel must consider consultation with the following individuals before making an assessment about alternative measures:

⁸ See, for example, the Antarctic Environmental Protection Act, SC 2003, c 20; the Canada National Marine Conservation Areas Act, SC 2002, c 18; the Canada National Parks Act, SC 2000, c 32; the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, 1999, SC 1999, c 33; the International River Improvements Act, RSC 1985, c 1-20; the Saguenay-St. Lawrence Marine Park Act, SC 1997, c 37; and the Canada Consumer Product Safety Act, SC 2010, c 21.

- Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or Deputy CFP: CFPs or DCFPs must approve the offering of alternative measures in cases where the offence is serious. For example, a serious crime is one that involves significant amounts of a harmful controlled substance, public safety issues, or violence. Crown counsel must determine whether an offence is serious based on the unique facts of each case.
- Victims: The *Canadian Victims Bill of Rights (CVBR)*⁹ gives victims the right to information upon request. Absent exceptional circumstances, Crown counsel should seek input from victims (where there is one)¹⁰ and keep them informed about their intention to use alternative measures.
- The community: Where reasonable and appropriate, Crown counsel may consult community leaders to determine whether an alternative measure is appropriate based on the interests of society and of the victim.
- Law enforcement agencies: Crown counsel should consult the organization concerned to consider the organization's objectives and relevant compliance policies which may include, for example, the protection of human health and the environment and sustainable management of natural resources.
- Defence counsel: Counsel for the accused may be in possession of relevant information that they are willing to provide in order for the Crown to make an assessment about alternative measures. They may also provide suggestions about the type of alternative measures that might be appropriate in the circumstances.
- Colleagues: Consultation with other Crown counsel helps to ensure different perspectives are considered.

4. IMPLEMENTATION OF ALTERNATIVE MEASURES

The completion of alternative measures may lead to the charges being withdrawn or stayed, or to a reduction of the sentence. Crown counsel should ask the court to note on the information that the charges have been withdrawn or stayed as a result of alternative measures.

Crown counsel must decide whether it is appropriate to request that the accused report back to the court in order for the charge to be withdrawn or stayed. If Crown counsel determines that reporting back is not required, the charge should be withdrawn or stayed and the Crown will not be required to monitor the completion of the alternative measures.

⁹ The Canadian Victims Bill of Rights, SC 2015, c 13, s 2, ss 6 and 7.

¹⁰ The discussion with victims of crime is subject to certain statutory limitations. For example, where Crown counsel believes that discussions with a victim may endanger the life or safety of another person, Crown counsel can rely on s 20(d) of the CVBR to limit, delay or avoid such discussions.

Crown counsel should ensure that the release conditions of an accused who is participating in diversion are amended as necessary to allow for the full use of the process.

In cases where the accused does not complete the alternative measures within the prescribed time and is charged with a new offence, Crown counsel may consider reinstituting the charges that were dealt with by alternative measures. Crown counsel must consider the public interest before deciding to reinstitute charges and pay particular attention to any special circumstances that would make the prosecution unfair.

In all circumstances, Crown counsel must keep a detailed written record, and must also update the electronic file.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.9 WAIVER OF CHARGES

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised March 25, 2022

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. STATEMENT OF POLICY	2
3. PROCEDURE.....	3
4. OUTSTANDING CHARGES IN DIFFERENT LOCATIONS.....	5
5. POST-WAIVER.....	6
APPENDIX A – APPLICATION FOR WAIVER OF CHARGES	7
APPENDIX B – EQUIVALENT COURT OF EACH PROVINCE AND TERRITORY	8
APPENDIX C – CONSENT TO THE TRANSFER OF CHARGES	9
APPENDIX D – F/P/T PROTOCOL ON THE INTER-PROVINCIAL TRANSFER OF CRIMINAL CHARGES	10

1. INTRODUCTION

Offences are normally tried in the judicial district where they are alleged to have been committed.¹ This guideline sets out the policy on when the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) will consent to waivers of charges (i) from one judicial territorial jurisdiction to another in the same province (“intra-provincial” waivers of charges pursuant to s. 479 of the Criminal Code (Code)) and (ii) from one province to another (“inter-provincial” waivers pursuant to s. 478\(3\) of the Code).

2. STATEMENT OF POLICY

Both inter-provincial and intra-provincial waivers must meet the following requirements for consent from the DPP:

1. The offence must not be a s. 469 of the Code offence;
2. The proceedings must have been instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on its behalf;
3. The DPP, a Deputy DPP (DDPP), or the DPP’s delegate must consent to the waiver;² and

¹ See Criminal Code, RSC 1985, c C-46, s 470, 478\(1\).

² See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.5 Delegated Decision-Making” and the Delegation to Prosecutors regarding the delegation of the decision to consent to inter-provincial waivers to Chief Federal Prosecutors, Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutors and Team Leaders, and intra-provincial waivers to Crown counsel. Pursuant to s 9\(1\) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9, s 121 [DPP Act], the DPP may delegate this decision-making to Crown counsel. Sections 478 and 479 of the Code specify that the “Attorney General” must consent to the transfer of charges. Section 2 of the Code defines “Attorney General” as including their lawful deputy. Section 3\(4\) of the DPP Act specifies that the DPP is the Deputy Attorney General for the purposes of exercising the prosecution functions set out in s 3\(3\) of the DPP Act including the conduct of prosecutions. Subsection 6(3) of the DPP Act confirms that Deputy DPPs are also lawful deputies of the Attorney General and may exercise the powers, duties and functions referred to in s 3(3) of the DPP Act under the supervision of the DPP.

4. The accused must have agreed to plead guilty to the charge being waived.

Upon the request of the accused, together with a written undertaking to plead guilty, the DPP or their delegate will generally consent to a waiver of charges from one jurisdiction to another if the transfer of charges is in the public interest.³ The following considerations, among others, are relevant in assessing public interest:

1. Does the accused have substantial ties with the jurisdiction to which the charge would be waived (the “receiving” jurisdiction)?
2. Are the offences of such a nature that we should expect that the victim or members of the victim’s family may want to participate in or attend the sentencing hearing?
3. Would the waiver create inconveniences for the victim or members of the victim’s family to attend or participate in the sentencing hearing?
4. Are the sentencing practices and precedents in the receiving jurisdiction reasonably consistent with those of the jurisdiction from which the charge is to be waived (the “originating” jurisdiction)?
5. Is there a significant public interest in the case such that it ought to be disposed of in the community where the offence occurred?
6. Is a waiver likely to result in undue delay, or has undue delay already occurred?
7. Will splitting up proceedings cause undue complexity, for example where outstanding forfeiture hearings or other ancillary proceedings remain in the originating jurisdiction?
8. Is there a reasonable basis to believe that once the charge is waived the accused may withdraw the undertaking to plead guilty to the offence, thereby requiring the charge to be returned to the originating jurisdiction?
9. Despite the undertaking to plead guilty, are significant aggravating or mitigating facts likely to be at issue, thus requiring the Crown to call viva voce evidence from the originating jurisdiction under the rule in R v Gardiner?⁴

3. PROCEDURE

The following procedure should be followed for both intra-provincial and inter-provincial waivers. An accused requesting a waiver must deliver a signed Application for Waiver,⁵ to the appropriate Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC) Regional Office,⁶ along with a written ³ R v Fleming (1992), 72 CCC (3d) 133 (Man QB): The Courts will not interfere with the Attorney General’s refusal to consent to a transfer unless it is arbitrarily exercised.

⁴ R v Gardiner, [1982] 2 SCR 368 at 413 ff; 68 CCC (2d) 477 at 513-16. See Criminal Code, supra note 1, s 724\(3\).

⁵ A sample waiver application is attached as Appendix “A”.

⁶ Note that accused persons who wish to transfer Criminal Code charges from a province to a territory must file their requests for waivers of the Criminal Code charges with the originating provincial Attorney General’s office or undertaking to plead guilty in the receiving jurisdiction to the charge(s) for which waiver is sought. The Application for Waiver must state the following:

1. The full name of accused;
2. The current location of the accused;
3. A description of the offence and a copy of the relevant information(s), to make clear which charge(s) is the subject of the request;
4. The name of the originating and receiving judicial districts; and
5. The specific level of court to which the charge(s) is sought to be waived and the specific level of court from which the charge(s) is waived.⁷

If the waiver request is approved, Crown counsel must prepare a written Consent to the Transfer of Charges⁸ which must include the following:

1. A description of the offence, including the name of the substance if an illegal substance is involved;
2. The date and place where the offence is alleged to have occurred;
3. A reference to the accused's undertaking to plead guilty;
4. The name and current location of the accused; and
5. The signature of the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP), Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutor (DCFP), or Team Leader of the originating Regional Office for inter-provincial waivers, or the Crown counsel of the originating Regional Office for intra-provincial waivers.

In addition to the Consent to the Transfer, the Regional Office in the originating jurisdiction must transmit to the "receiving" court the following documents:

1. The original information/indictment sworn in respect of the offence(s);
2. A summary of the facts alleged in support of the charge(s);
3. A copy of the accused's criminal record (if any);
4. A copy of the accused's Application for Waiver;
5. A copy of the undertaking to plead guilty;
6. A copy of the Certificate of Analyst and the Notice of Intention, if the charge(s) is under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (CDSA) (if necessary); and provincial prosecution service, rather than with a regional PPSC office. Waiver requests in respect of CDSA or other federal charges are processed through the originating PPSC offices.

⁷ Appendix "B" lists equivalent court levels for each province and territory.

⁸ A sample consent form is attached as Appendix "C".

7. A copy of the Notice to Seek Greater Punishment (if applicable) and other documents associated with impaired driving offences, if the charge(s) is under s. 320.14\(1\) of the Code.

To ensure that the receiving court receives the above documents, the Regional Office in the originating jurisdiction must:

1. Ask the clerk of the originating court to transfer the information/indictment to the receiving court;
2. Provide Crown counsel appearing in the receiving court with a prosecution brief including sufficient particulars about the offence to support the Crown's case and to enable the court to accept a plea of guilty;
3. Provide Crown counsel appearing in the receiving court with a copy of any correspondence or notes made by the counsel previously handling the file in respect of any agreement with defence counsel on sentencing submissions; and
4. Inform the investigating agency in the originating jurisdiction of the transfer.

The CFP, DCFP, or Team Leader in the originating jurisdiction, or the person the DPP has specifically delegated for this purpose, may consent to the waiver of charges on behalf of the DPP.⁹ Where the waiver request is refused, as a general rule, the Regional Office should provide written reasons to counsel for the accused, or to the accused personally if they have not retained counsel.

For an inter-provincial waiver of charges, the receiving Regional Office should advise the originating Regional Office of the date the accused pleaded guilty and the sentence imposed. Upon receiving this information, the originating office should advise the investigative agency.

In serious cases, the decision-maker should consider the interests of the victims before consenting to the transfer and Crown counsel should notify them in advance of the pending transfer.

Where the waiver of charges involves a provincial prosecution service, the process must respect the protocol adopted by the Federal/Provincial/Territorial Heads of Prosecution on transfer of charges (Appendix "D").

4. OUTSTANDING CHARGES IN DIFFERENT LOCATIONS

It is in the public interest for justice to be administered speedily and that all known charges against an accused be disposed of as early as possible. Whenever practicable, Crown counsel should ask the appropriate police authorities to verify whether an accused has any outstanding charges in other jurisdictions. Where Crown counsel knows that the accused is facing additional charges in another jurisdiction, they should advise defence counsel of the outstanding charges. In the case of interprovincial charges, the accused may wish to take advantage of s. 478\(3\) of the Code.¹⁰ Where charges to which the accused has not submitted an Application for Waiver are identified, a remand may be necessary so that the accused can consider whether to amend the Application for Waiver to include consent to plead guilty to the additional charges.

⁹ PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.5 Delegated Decision-Making" and the Delegation to Prosecutors, supra note 2.

Where the accused has outstanding charges in different locations within the same province, waiver may not be appropriate unless the accused agrees to waive all of the charges.¹¹

Crown counsel and defence counsel in the originating jurisdiction are to settle any factual disagreements with respect to the allegations underpinning the offence(s) to which the accused will plead guilty prior to transferring the file. Transfers should not require formal hearings on the facts in the receiving jurisdiction.

5. POST-WAIVER

Where the accused fails to appear in the receiving court or refuses to plead guilty, the Regional Office which authorized the waiver must arrange for the clerk of the receiving court to return the information to the originating court. The accused must then reappear before the originating court. If the accused fails to appear before the originating court, a warrant should be requested.

In the case of an inter-provincial waiver of charges, the receiving Regional Office or prosecuting agent may not reduce the charge to a lesser included offence without first consulting the originating Regional Office. The originating office should advise the receiving office in writing of any discussions with respect to sentencing that took place prior to the waiver; however, the originating office should not dictate a sentence recommendation to the receiving office.¹²

Where an accused who has consented to the waiver of charge to another jurisdiction “refuses to admit the factual allegations” underlying the offence, the indictment should be returned to the province where the offence was committed.¹³

¹⁰ R v Parisien (1971), 3 CCC (2d) 433 (BCCA).

¹¹ A partial waiver will not be refused solely on the basis that an accused intends to contest some aspect of their outstanding charges. However, the accused should not be allowed to benefit from a partial waiver where they are in violation of a court appearance order in another jurisdiction.

¹² R v Lister 2003 BCCA CanLII 269, 175 CCC (3d) 528 at paras 11-13: The sentencing judge in the receiving jurisdiction cannot entirely ignore cases decided in similar circumstances in the originating jurisdiction. That sentencing judge should give substantial consideration to joint submissions made by counsel where a charge is being waived by consent for disposition from one province to another. However, the sentencing judge is not bound to accept a joint submission from the originating jurisdiction and ultimately must decide what is an appropriate sentence. See also R v Shaw 2005 BCCA 380 CanLII, 199 CCC (3d) 93 at paras 11-12. “...upholding a sentence that deviates significantly from the approach in British Columbia runs the risk of allowing the Crown to drive too hard a bargain for the waiver of jurisdiction.”

¹³ R v Hirt (1997), 34 WCB (2d) 441 (BCSC).

APPENDIX A – APPLICATION FOR WAIVER OF CHARGES

APPLICATION FOR WAIVER OF CHARGES

UNDER [SECTION 478\(3\) or SECTION 479] OF THE CRIMINAL CODE
DATE

I, [name of accused] hereby advise that I am in custody in [institution, city, province or territory] (or I presently reside at [street, city, province or territory]). I wish to avail myself of the provisions of [section 478(3) or section 479] of the Criminal Code in respect of the following outstanding charge(s) against me:

[list charge(s) with full particulars as to date, place, etc.]

I wish to have the above charges transferred to [level of court, name of the receiving judicial district] from [level of court, name of the originating judicial district] in order that I may plead guilty to the charge(s) in accordance with [section 478(3) or section 479] of the Criminal Code.

(Applicant's signature)

APPENDIX B – EQUIVALENT COURT OF EACH PROVINCE AND TERRITORY

EQUIVALENT COURT OF EACH PROVINCE AND TERRITORY

Province/ Territory	Provincial Court	Superior Court	Youth Court
Alberta	Provincial Court (Criminal Division)	Court of Queen's Bench	Provincial Court (Family and Youth Division)
British Columbia	Provincial Court	Supreme Court	Youth Court
Manitoba	Provincial Court	Court of Queen's Bench	Provincial Court (Youth Court)
New Brunswick	Provincial Court	Court of Queen's Bench	Provincial Court (Youth Court)
Newfoundland and Labrador	Provincial Court	Supreme Court, Trial Division	Provincial Court (Youth Court)
Nova Scotia	Provincial Court	Supreme Court	Provincial Court (Family Division)
Ontario	Court of Justice	Superior Court of Justice	Youth Court
Prince Edward Island	Provincial Court	Supreme Court Trial Division	Youth Court
Quebec	Court of Quebec (Criminal and Penal Division)	Superior Court	Court of Quebec (Youth Division)
Saskatchewan	Provincial Court	Court of Queen's Bench	Youth Court
Yukon Territory	Territorial Court	Supreme Court	Youth Court
Northwest Territories	Territorial Court	Supreme Court	Youth Court
Nunavut	Court of Justice	Court of Justice	Court of Justice (Youth Court)

APPENDIX C – CONSENT TO THE TRANSFER OF CHARGES

I have been informed by [name of defence counsel] that [name of accused] has been charged with the following offence[s] in the _____ [name of province or territory]

[list charge(s) with full particulars as to date, place, etc.]

I have further been informed that [name of accused] is [incarcerated/resides] at [location] and desires, in accordance with section 478\(3\) or section 479 of the Criminal Code, to transfer this charge[s] to [level of court, city, province or territory] from [level of court, city, province or territory] in order to plead guilty to the charge[s];

I consent to [name of accused] appearing before a Judge in [level of court, city, province] to signify [his/her/their] consent to plead guilty and to plead guilty to the charge[s].

DATED at the City of _____ in the Province of /or Territory of _____, this ____ day of _____, ____.

[Signature and title of CFP, DCFP, Team Leader or Crown counsel]

APPENDIX D – F/P/T PROTOCOL ON THE INTER-PROVINCIAL TRANSFER OF CRIMINAL CHARGES

This protocol addresses the definition of responsibilities and accountability between transferring and recipient provinces, territories, and the PPSC under s. 478 of the Criminal Code (of the Code).

(a) Statement of Principle

It is understood that an originating jurisdiction, in agreeing to transfer of a charge to another, is effectively waiving control over that charge, subject to the provisions of this protocol.

(b) Reduction/Withdrawal of Charges

Reduction of charges or withdrawal of multiple counts should be delineated by the originating jurisdiction prior to transfer. The receiving jurisdiction should consult with the originating jurisdiction regarding any proposed reduction or withdrawal of a transferred charge.

(c) Sentencing Representations to the Court

While the receiving jurisdiction will take into consideration any recommendations as to sentence offered by the originating jurisdiction, the position to be taken on sentencing will be determined by the receiving jurisdiction [in accordance with the sentencing regime of the receiving jurisdiction]. The Crown in the originating jurisdiction should communicate to defence counsel and unrepresented applicants for transfers in the originating jurisdiction that any recommendation on sentence agreed to before transfer will not be binding in the receiving jurisdiction.

(d) The Decision to Appeal

The decision to appeal a sentence rests with the receiving jurisdiction. That jurisdiction may seek input from the originating jurisdiction in this regard, but shall be guided by the principles and ranges, as established by that jurisdiction's appellate courts.

(e) Limitation on Transfer Requests

Generally, only one request for the transfer of charges between jurisdictions will be considered, subject to any exceptional circumstances which may exist. This should be communicated to applicants for transfer by the originating jurisdiction.

(f) Victims/Victim Impact Statements

In considering whether to transfer a charge, the originating jurisdiction must consider the interests of the victim, as well as the offender. Should the Crown in the originating jurisdiction receive an indication from the victim that he/she wishes to participate in person in the sentencing proceeding, this position should be considered prior to transferring the criminal charge. Where a charge is transferred, Victim Impact Statements which have been prepared will be provided in separate sealed envelopes to the receiving jurisdiction along with the charges and other related documentation.

Where the matter is sensitive and has significant public interest and concern, the originating jurisdiction should advise victims that the matter is being waived and that the ultimate control over the filing of Victim Impact Statements will be subject to the policies and practices of Crown counsel in the receiving jurisdiction. Victims in these circumstances will be provided a telephone number or other contact means to reach the Crown in the receiving jurisdiction in order to express their concerns about the filing of victim impact information. Otherwise, the filing of victim impact information should be at the discretion of the receiving Crown, with the benefit of recommendations from the originating jurisdiction but based on the receiving jurisdiction's policies and practices.

(g) Documentation

All receiving jurisdictions will attempt to provide certified copies of sentencing documentation to the originating jurisdiction.

(h) Determination of the Facts

Crown counsel in the originating jurisdiction should ensure that a summary of the facts is included in the documentation transferred to the receiving jurisdiction. Save in exceptional circumstances, Crown counsel in the receiving jurisdiction, in making representations to a Court, should not vary from the facts as determined by the Crown in the originating jurisdiction. This protocol does not provide for witnesses to travel from the originating jurisdiction to the receiving jurisdiction to establish the facts. Where it is proposed to vary from the facts as submitted by the originating jurisdiction, Crown Counsel in the receiving jurisdiction is encouraged to contact the Crown in the originating jurisdiction. A dispute as to the facts which cannot be resolved by Crown counsel in the receiving jurisdiction will result in the return of the file to the original jurisdiction for its attention.

(i) Charges under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (CDSA)

Where these matters fall within the prosecutorial responsibility of the Director of Public Prosecutions, on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada, prosecutors or standing agents engaged by the PPSC will generally conduct such transferred proceedings in the receiving jurisdiction, unless the PPSC opts to request the involvement of a provincial prosecution service.

(j) Administration

All jurisdictions are encouraged to have one office to coordinate transfers to and from that jurisdiction. In any jurisdiction where this is not feasible, that jurisdiction will provide all jurisdictions with a list of those individuals within that prosecution service who are responsible for transfer of criminal charges.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.10 ELECTIONS AND RE-ELECTIONS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised March 25, 2022

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. CROWN ELECTIONS IN HYBRID OFFENCES	3
2.1 Statement of policy	3
2.2 Crown re-elections	4
2.3 Proceeding summarily or by indictment beyond the six-month limitation period	4
3. RE-ELECTIONS BY AN ACCUSED	5
3.1 Statement of Policy	6
4. DECISION TO REQUIRE TRIAL BY JUDGE AND JURY	7
4.1 Statement of Policy	7
4.2 Procedure	8

1. INTRODUCTION

This guideline is designed to direct Crown counsel in the following exercises of prosecutorial discretion:

- Deciding whether to proceed summarily or by indictment in “hybrid” (“dual procedure”) offences;
- Consenting to re-election by an accused; and
- Requiring a trial by a judge and jury under s. 568 of the Criminal Code (Code).

Like any exercise of prosecutorial discretion, decisions regarding elections and re-elections must be made in accordance with Crown counsel’s duty to be fair.¹ Such decisions must not be, and must not appear to be, an attempt by the prosecutor to achieve an unfair tactical advantage.

While the Crown is not legally required to give reasons for its elections or its refusal to consent to an accused’s intended re-election, the need to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice may necessitate in some circumstances the giving of reasons. For example, Crown counsel should consider providing an explanation for a particular decision regarding elections and re-elections where the basis is not self-evident and it is reasonably foreseeable that the lack of an explanation would lead the court or members of the public to draw conclusions that attribute erroneous and improper motives to the Crown’s exercise of prosecutorial discretion.² Prior to giving reasons in respect of these decisions, Crown counsel must consult with and seek prior approval of their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or the CFP's designate. Additionally, Crown counsel should note in the prosecution file the particular factor(s) which influenced their decision.

¹ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.2 Duties and Responsibilities of Crown Counsel”. For example, Crown counsel’s election decision should not be made for the sole purpose of prohibiting access to conditional sentences under s 742.1\(f\) of the Code. See also R v De Zen, [2010] OJ No 601 (ONSCJ).

² Ibid at paras 35–36. See also R v Gill, 2012 ONCA 607 at para 77.

2. CROWN ELECTIONS IN HYBRID OFFENCES

In hybrid offences, Crown counsel has the discretion to proceed by summary conviction or indictment.³ This discretion allows Crown counsel the flexibility of taking the specific circumstances of a case into account to ensure that the interests of justice, including the public's interest in the effective and efficient enforcement of the criminal law, are best served.

2.1 Statement of policy

Crown counsel should generally elect whether to proceed summarily or by indictment on a hybrid offence before the accused is asked to enter a plea on the charge(s).

When deciding whether to proceed summarily or by indictment,⁴ Crown counsel must examine the circumstances surrounding the offence and the background of the accused. Factors that are of particular importance include whether:

1. The facts alleged make the offence a relatively serious one, for example when:
 - a. The offence caused death or serious bodily harm;
 - b. The offence involves a large number of victims or a large financial loss;
 - c. An innocent third party suffered significant losses because of the actions of the accused or by innocently acting on the advice of the accused;
 - d. The accused, or someone on the accused's behalf, attempted to tamper with important evidence or witnesses; or
 - e. The accused used intimidation to coerce others to assist in or acquiesce in the offence.
2. The accused has a lengthy criminal record or a record of criminal convictions for similar types of offences.

³ For a discussion of the nature of hybrid offences, see R v Dudley 2009 SCC 58, [2009] 3 SCR 570 [Dudley]; see generally [R v Smythe, \[1971\] SCR 680](#), (1971), 3 CCC (2d) 366, which held that the discretion given by law to the Attorney General to prosecute by way of summary conviction or on indictment is not discriminatory or contrary to the principles of equality under the Canadian Bill of Rights; R v Century 21 Ramos Realty \(1987\), 32 CCC (3d) 353 (Ont CA), holding that the authority of Crown counsel to elect the mode of procedure in hybrid offences is not contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms; [R v V.T., \[1992\] 1 SCR 749](#), (1992), 71 CCC (3d) 32 which confirmed R v Smythe

⁴ Before the Crown elects, a hybrid offence is treated as an indictable offence, pursuant to s 34\(1\)\(a\) of the Interpretation Act, RSC 1985, c I-21. See also Dudley, supra note 3 at paras 18, 20. Where the Crown fails to elect the mode of procedure for a hybrid offence and the case proceeds in summary conviction court, the Crown is deemed to have elected to proceed on a summary conviction basis: see E. Ewaschuk, Criminal Pleadings and Practice in Canada, 2d ed, Aurora (Ontario: Canada Law Book, 2010) at s 7:2070.

3. In the event of a conviction, the range of sentences at the summary conviction level could adequately address the purpose and principles of sentencing in respect of the particular offender and offence.⁵
4. Having to testify at both a preliminary inquiry and a trial may have an effect on witnesses.⁶
5. The offence is prevalent in the community and requires deterrence.
6. The accused is alleged to be a member of a criminal organization as defined in s. 467.1\(1\) of the Code.
7. The accused holds themselves out as a member or sympathizer of a criminal organization or of an organization that uses physical violence or intimidation, or wears symbols associated with a criminal organization.
8. It is in the public interest to have a trial by jury.

Where an accused is charged with a number of offences arising out of the same transaction, Crown counsel should also consider making elections that avoid a multiplicity of proceedings. Such a course may benefit the accused, by reducing their court appearances, as well as serve the interests of the administration of justice. This approach will be beneficial not only at the trial level, but also in the event of an appeal.

2.2 Crown re-elections

Where the Crown initially elects to proceed by indictment, Crown counsel normally may re-elect to proceed summarily without the accused's consent, unless the preliminary inquiry or trial has begun.⁷ Crown re-elections may be used, for example, in respect of guilty plea agreements. The factors set out in the previous paragraph apply in respect of re-elections.

2.3 Proceeding summarily or by indictment beyond the six-month limitation period

A summary conviction court has jurisdiction, with the consent of both the Crown and defence counsel, pursuant to s. 786\(2\) of the Code, over time-limited summary conviction proceedings.⁸ Absent consent, it does not. Where the Crown elects to proceed summarily beyond the statutory

⁵ Note, however, that imposition of the maximum sentence for a summary conviction offence does not require the "worst offence" having been committed in the "worst circumstances". See [R v LM, 2008 SCC 31, \[2008\] 2 SCR 163](#) at paras 18–22.

⁶ If the procedure by indictment is chosen, this may lead to the preferring of a direct indictment or resort to s 540\(7\) of the Code where the complainant's evidence is considered credible and trustworthy. See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.6 Direct Indictments" and the PPSC Deskbook directive "5.6 Victims of Crime".

⁷ R v Sheehan, 2010 NLTD 167 \(CanLII\) at paras 10–16, citing Abarca v R, (1980) 57 CCC (2d) 410, (ONCA) at para 17, R v Graetz, 2007 QCCS 309 at paras 16–17, [R v Linton, \[1994\], 90 CCC \(3d\) 528, 18 OR \(3d\) 647 \(Gen Div\)](#).

⁸ See s 786 of the Code. For a discussion of the governing principles where a hybrid offence is prosecuted by way of summary conviction beyond the six-month limitation period, see Dudley, supra note 3 at paras 2, 24, 29. For example, where an information contains both indictable and straight summary conviction offences, defence counsel may want to avoid an indictable trial and may thus consent to a Crown election to proceed summarily in respect of statute-barred offences.

limitation period, the prosecutor and the defendant must both declare expressly on the record — again, before plea — that they agree to proceed summarily.⁹

The failure of the accused to consent to the prosecution of a hybrid offence by way of summary conviction beyond the limitation period is fatal to the validity of the Crown's election and to the proceedings that ensued.¹⁰ However, the information remains valid, and the Crown may still proceed by indictment, unless "the evidence discloses an abuse of process arising from improper Crown motive, or resulting prejudice to the accused sufficient to violate the community's sense of fair play and decency".¹¹ In some circumstances, the Crown's election may be impugned as an abuse of process if it appears that it was made solely to circumvent a limitation period.¹²

Where, having considered the factors set out in section 2.1 of this guideline, Crown counsel would normally elect to proceed summarily but the limitation period for a summary proceeding has expired and the accused has refused to give consent to have the matter proceed by summary conviction, Crown counsel generally should not elect to proceed by indictment unless:

1. The particular circumstances of the offence did not come to light until shortly before or at some time after the limitation period expired;
2. The accused contributed significantly to the delay;
3. The investigative agency acted with due diligence but the investigation continued beyond the limitation period because of the complexity of the case; or
4. Not proceeding would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

3. RE-ELECTIONS BY AN ACCUSED

Where the accused is charged with an indictable offence other than those listed in s. 469 or s. 553 of the Code, the accused is permitted to elect their mode of trial (i.e., trial by a provincial or territorial court judge, trial by judge alone or trial by judge and jury). After the initial election, the accused may seek to change the mode of trial by re-electing in accordance with the provisions of ⁹ Dudley, supra note 3 at para 19.

¹⁰ Ibid at paras 42–44. Prior to Dudley, there was a large and divided body of case law considering the Crown's right to "re-elect" on the original information to proceed by indictment after first electing to proceed summarily; See e.g. Dudley, supra note 3 citing Re Abarca and The Queen, (1980) 57 CCC (2d) 410 (ONCA) at para 17; R v Jans, (1990), 59 CCC (3d) 398 (Alta CA) [Jans]; R v Burke, (1992), 78 CCC (3d) 163 (Nfld CA); R v Kalkhorany, (1994), 89 CCC (3d) 184 (Ont CA); R v Boutilier, (1995), 104 CCC (3d) 327 (NSCA) [Boutilier]; See also R v Phelps, (1993), 79 CCC (3d) 550 (ONCA).

¹¹ Dudley, supra note 3 at para 44.

¹² There are a number of decisions in the area, with each turning on its particular facts; See e.g. Dudley, supra note 3 at para 5; R v Smith, 210 NSR (2d) 234; 170 CCC (3d) 315, R v Quinn (1989), 54 CCC (3d) 157 (Que CA); Boutilier, supra note 10 (the first information was laid within the six month limitation period, but charged the wrong offence. On those facts the court was satisfied the second information was an abuse of process and that a stay was the appropriate remedy); R v Belair (1988), 41 CCC (3d) 329 (ONCA); Jans, supra note 10.

s. 561 or s. 561.1 of the Code (for Nunavut).¹³ In most cases, these re-elections are authorized only with the Crown's consent.

The Criminal Code provisions authorizing re-election by the accused require that written notice be given to the Crown. They also require the Crown's consent be given in writing. However, ss. 561 and 561.1 of the Code are otherwise silent about the criteria or manner in which Crown prosecutors exercise the discretion to consent or withhold consent to the intended re-election.

This guideline applies to the re-elections described in ss. 473, 561 and 561.1 of the Code that require the consent of Crown counsel, the CFP or the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP). More specifically, these include re-elections:

1. From judge alone or judge and jury to provincial court judge (ss. 561(1)(a) and (c) of the Code);
2. From provincial court judge to judge alone or judge and jury (s. 561(2) of the Code);
3. From judge and jury to judge alone for offences listed in s. 469 (s. 473 of the Code);
4. To another mode of trial in the Nunavut Court of Justice (ss. 561.1(1) and (3) of the Code).

3.1 Statement of Policy

While the decision to consent or to refuse to consent to a re-election must be made on a case-by-case basis, Crown counsel should generally consent to a timely request for re-election made by an accused or counsel for the accused. The following factors are important in deciding whether to consent. In some instances, one of them may be decisive:

1. The timing of the request for re-election;¹⁴
2. The impact of a re-election on the orderly administration of justice;¹⁵
3. The reasons for the re-election;¹⁶
4. The delay that may result from the proposed re-election and whether this delay could lead to a violation of s. 11\(b\) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms;

¹³ Section 473 of the Code is specific to the offences listed in s. 469 (e.g. murder) and allows for a trial without a jury when both the accused and Attorney General consent.

¹⁴ For example, Crown counsel should ask: How soon after the time limit was the request made? Was the request made before a particular trial judge was assigned?

¹⁵ Tardy re-elections may be harmful to the administration of justice for various practical reasons including jury selection proceedings, summons of potential jurors, inconveniencing witnesses, and Crown counsel trial preparation.

¹⁶ For example, the Supreme Court of Canada affirmed the impropriety in trying to influence the outcome of a proceeding by trying to "select" the judge (i.e. "judge-shopping") in R v Regan, 2002 1 SCR 297 at para 60. See also [R v Ng \(2003\), 173 CCC \(3d\) 349, 12 CR \(6th\) 1, \[2003\] 11 WWR 429 \(ABCA\)](#): "Within the constraints of the fair trial process, the defense is entitled to press its case, as is the Crown. However, when the defense re-election to judge alone is firmly tethered to knowing the identity of the trial judge, this belies the assertion that it is the mode of trial which is of primary concern. In these circumstances, it clearly is not. Instead, the choice of mode of trial is being used as a means to maneuver the criminal justice system. If the accused considers the particular assigned judge a better option than the jury, then, and only then, does the preferred mode of trial become judge alone. But a right to select mode of trial, where one exists, is not tied to knowing the name of the trial judge. Indeed, the statutory framework under the Criminal Code is designed to ensure that the final choice of mode of trial is made before the name of the trial judge is disclosed, failing which Crown consent is required."

5. Any previous re-election by the accused in the same case;
6. The inconvenience caused by a re-election on the court, including prospective jurors and witnesses;
7. The complexity of the legal issues; and
8. The public interest in having a trial by jury.

It should be borne in mind that the interests of the accused and those of the Attorney General are not the same when considering re-election as to mode of trial. The accused is entitled to base their decision to re-elect on purely tactical considerations. Crown counsel's exercise of discretion cannot be for tactical reasons. It must instead take into account a much broader range of interests, including legal, practical and ethical interests.

Absent Crown misconduct amounting to an abuse of process (arbitrary, capricious or improper considerations), the court has no jurisdiction to override the Crown's exercise of discretion not to consent.¹⁷

4. DECISION TO REQUIRE TRIAL BY JUDGE AND JURY

4.1 Statement of Policy

Under s. 568 of the Code,¹⁸ the DPP¹⁹ may require an accused to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, even if the accused has previously elected or re-elected otherwise. The alleged offence must be punishable by more than five years' imprisonment.

A requirement to be tried by judge and jury under s. 568 of the Code will be directed only when it is in the public interest to do so. Requiring a trial by judge and jury may be warranted where:

1. Someone who is normally involved in the administration of justice, such as a police officer, lawyer, or judge, is charged with a serious offence. It is important in those cases to ensure that the public has, and continues to have, confidence in the criminal justice system;
2. Community standards are in issue, or where the accused's guilt or innocence is of particular public importance; and
3. Jointly charged accused select different modes of trial, and the provincial court judge chooses not to exercise the power in s. 567 of the Code to decline to record the non-jury elections.

¹⁷ See e.g. [R v Ng \(2003\), 173 CCC \(3d\) 349, 12 CR \(6th\) 1, \[2003\] 11 WWR 429 \(ABCA\)](#) at para 33 "The basis for a court to probe into prosecutorial discretion, therefore, arises in the limited case of an abuse of the court's process where the prosecutor's misconduct threatens either the accused's Charter right to a fair trial or the public interest in a fair and just trial process."

¹⁸ In Re Haneson v The Queen (1987), 31 CCC (3d) 560 (ONHC), it was held that this section is not contrary to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

¹⁹ The DPP makes the decision under and on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada. See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.5 Delegated Decision-Making", as well as the Delegation to Prosecutors, the Delegation to Paralegals and the Delegation to Articling Students.

In all instances the decision to proceed under s. 568 of the Code must be made personally by the DPP, on the advice of a Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (DDPP) and the CFP.

4.2 Procedure

In cases where a prosecutor seeks the DPP's approval under s. 568 of the Code, the prosecutor should generally provide notice to the accused or their counsel. The prosecutor should also present their request for approval to the DPP at the earliest stage of the proceeding possible.

To request the DPP's approval under s. 568 of the Code, the prosecutor must:

1. Inform their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutor (DCFP) of the potential request for approval.
2. Prepare a memorandum containing:
 - a. A concise statement of facts showing that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction and that the public interest is best served by a prosecution. If multiple accused are to be charged, the memorandum must demonstrate that there is sufficient evidence to implicate each accused individually. The statement of facts must also include:
 - i. The name of the accused;
 - ii. Their citizenship, if the accused is not a Canadian;
 - iii. A list of the charges sought against the accused;
 - iv. A summary of the evidence;
 - v. A historical or procedural record of the case;
 - vi. Any representation made by defence counsel in response to being notified that a decision under s. 568 of the Code was being sought; and
 - vii. The date by which a decision under s. 568 of the Code is required.
 - b. An analysis explaining:
 - i. The strengths and weaknesses of the case;
 - ii. Any significant legal issues expected to be encountered and any issues of particular importance to the public interest;
 - iii. The reasons why a trial by a judge and jury would be in the public interest; and
 - iv. The factors set out in this guideline, including a reasoned and objective assessment of the factors weighing both for and against requiring a trial by judge and jury.
 - c. A copy of the approved prosecution plan, if any.
 - d. An annex containing an indictment containing all charges for which requirement for a trial by a judge and jury is requested, with the following appearing at the end:

I hereby require the above-named accused to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury pursuant to section 568 of the Criminal Code.

Dated at Ottawa, Ontario, this _____ day of _____, _____.

Director of Public Prosecutions and Deputy Attorney General of Canada

3. Provide this memorandum to the CFP or DCFP.

The CFP or the DCFP will:

1. Inform the appropriate Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (DDPP) of the intention to seek the DPP's approval under s. 568 of the Code.
2. Review the memorandum prepared by the prosecutor and, if they are satisfied that the factors are met and that requiring a trial by a judge and jury pursuant to s. 568 of the Code is appropriate, endorse the memorandum and send it to the DDPP.

The DDPP will:

1. Review the memorandum and conduct an objective assessment of the request. In this role, the DDPP exercises a challenge function.
2. Advise the CFP or DCFP that no recommendation will be made to the DPP, if the DDPP concludes that requiring a trial by a judge and jury pursuant to s. 568 of the Code is not appropriate in the circumstances.
3. Endorse the recommendation and send it to the DPP, if the DDPP concludes that requiring a trial by a judge and jury pursuant to s. 568 of the Code is appropriate.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.11 INFORMER PRIVILEGE

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. THE IMPORTANCE OF THE PRIVILEGE	2
3. THE NATURE OF THE PRIVILEGE	3
4. STATEMENT OF POLICY	4
5. OPERATION OF THE PRIVILEGE	5
6. SCOPE OF THE PRIVILEGE.....	5
7. INNOCENCE AT STAKE IS THE ONLY EXCEPTION.....	6
8. SITUATIONS WHERE THE PRIVILEGE MIGHT NOT APPLY	7

1. INTRODUCTION

This guideline sets out the policy on protecting the identity of informers in prosecutions (“informer privilege”).

2. THE IMPORTANCE OF THE PRIVILEGE

Informer privilege is one of longstanding existence. The modern statement of the privilege dates back to the 19th century English case of Marks v Beyfus.¹ In *R v Leipert*² the Supreme Court of Canada stressed the significance of the rule in the following terms:

A court considering this issue must begin from the proposition that informer privilege is an ancient and hallowed protection which plays a vital role in law enforcement. It is premised on the duty of all citizens to aid in enforcing the law. The discharge of this duty carries with it the risk of retribution from those involved in crime. The rule of informer privilege was developed to protect citizens who assist in law enforcement and to encourage others to do the same.³

¹ Marks v Beyfus (1890), 25 QBD 494.

² [1997] 1 SCR 281 [Leipert]; see also Bisaillon v Keable, [1983] 2 SCR 60 [Bisaillon] and R v Scott, [1990] 3 SCR 979 [Scott].

³ Leipert, ibid at para 9.

In summary, informer privilege is of such importance that it cannot be balanced against other interests. Once established, neither the police nor the court possesses discretion to abridge it.⁴

The policy reasons that underlie this broad and powerful privilege are two-fold: to protect persons who give information related to criminal matters in confidence to the police from possible retribution and to encourage future potential informers to do the same.

The common law imposes a duty on the police, the Crown and the courts to protect informer privilege.⁵ By virtue of the rationale underlying the privilege, police officers, prosecutors and judges cannot weigh, on a case-by-case basis, either the maintenance or the scope of the privilege depending on what risks the informer might face.⁶ While a judge is determining whether the privilege applies, all caution must be taken on the assumption that it does apply.⁷ Once a judge is satisfied that the privilege exists, a complete and total bar on any disclosure of the informer's identity applies.⁸ The non-discretionary nature of the privilege explains why the rule is referred to as "absolute."⁹

3. THE NATURE OF THE PRIVILEGE

Informer privilege is a class privilege. In R v National Post, the Supreme Court of Canada explained the significant features of a class privilege as follows:¹⁰

"At common law, privilege is classified as either relating to a class (e.g. solicitor and client privilege) or established on a case-by-case basis. In a class privilege what is important is not so much the content of the particular communication as it is the protection of the type of relationship. Once the relevant relationship is established between the confiding party and the party in whom the confidence is placed, privilege presumptively cloaks in confidentiality matters properly within its scope without regard to the particulars of the situation. Class privilege necessarily operates in derogation of the judicial search for truth and is insensitive to the facts of the particular case. Anything less than this blanket confidentiality, the cases hold, would fail to provide the necessary assurance to the solicitor's client or the police informant to do the job required by the administration of justice."
[underlining added]

⁴ Ibid at para 14.

⁵ R v Barros, [2011] 3 SCR 368 at para 37 [Barros].

⁶ Named Person v Vancouver Sun, [2007] 3 SCR 253 at para 22 [Named Person]; R v Basi, [2009] 3 SCR at 389 [Basi].

⁷ Named Person, ibid at para 47; Basi, ibid at para 44.

⁸ Named Person, ibid at para 30.

⁹ Ibid at para 23.

¹⁰ [2010] 1 SCR 477 at para 42.

4. STATEMENT OF POLICY

Crown counsel has a duty to protect the identity of informers.¹¹ Where the privilege applies, unless there is some other evidentiary basis to make an objection, Crown counsel must object to disclosure of information tending to reveal an informer's identity or status as an informer.

Crown counsel should discuss with the investigative agency whether any informer privilege issues are anticipated to arise in a proceeding. Informer issues not only may arise during court proceedings, but also may affect pre-trial disclosure obligations.

Early discussions with investigators will also be beneficial in that counsel can learn the extent of any risk to the informer if disclosure is ordered by the court, determine whether it may be necessary to have a certificate prepared under s. 37 of the Canada Evidence Act,¹² or gather other evidence to support the Crown's objection.¹³

Informer privilege may be invoked under the common law or by relying on s. 37 of the Canada Evidence Act.¹⁴ Generally, Crown counsel should advance their objection on the basis of the common law rule first. It is only where a judge has dismissed Crown counsel's common law objection and privileged information tending to reveal the identity of an informer is to be released to an accused that the Crown should invoke s. 37 of the Canada Evidence Act.¹⁵ When s. 37 is used the strictness of the informer privilege rule is not relaxed.¹⁶

Sometimes courts may, contrary to the position taken by the Crown, order the informer's identity revealed or order the informer to appear. Crown counsel has a number of options which may vary depending on the facts of the case and the level of court at which the issue arises:

- a) Disclose the information in question in compliance with the judge's ruling but only after fully informed waiver has been provided by both the informer and the Crown, and counsel has determined that it is in the public interest to do so. Before disclosing, counsel must consult with the police to determine if the informer is likely to be subject to retribution if the judge's ruling is followed and, if so, whether the police can provide protection.

¹¹ Barros, supra note 5; see also Leipert, supra note 2 at para 10; R v Stinchcombe, [1991] 3 SCR 326, 68 CCC (3d) 1 at 14 [Stinchcombe].

¹² RSC 1985, c C-5.

¹³ See the PPSC Deskbook directive "4.1 Protecting Confidential Information under Section 37 of the Canada Evidence Act."

¹⁴ Supra note 12.

¹⁵ Ibid.

¹⁶ Basi, supra note 6 at para 23.

Where disclosure is not feasible, Crown counsel may elect one of the following options;

- b) invoke s. 37 of the Canada Evidence Act.¹⁷ Crown counsel can assert this claim personally.¹⁸ However, it is preferable for a senior police officer to do so, as occurred in R v Archer;¹⁹
- c) inform the court that counsel declines to comply with the ruling and offer no evidence, as in R v Leipert.²⁰ The resulting acquittal can be appealed;
- d) inform the court that counsel declines to comply with the ruling to disclose and invite the court to enter a judicial stay of proceedings, as in R v Creswell.²¹ Also, counsel may stay the proceedings under s. 579 of the Criminal Code where none of the foregoing options is feasible; in exceptional circumstances, counsel may stay and re-commence proceedings, as in R v Scott.²² The Supreme Court of Canada found that this procedure was justifiable in the unusual circumstances of the case, but it is clearly an extraordinary recourse and should be used only in compelling situations. Counsel considering this option must first consult with the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP), who, in turn, may wish to consult with the appropriate Headquarters officials.

5. OPERATION OF THE PRIVILEGE

Informer privilege is a non-discretionary rule which binds the police, Crown and members of the judiciary.

Crown counsel cannot waive the privilege without the consent of the informer. Once it is established that the privilege exists, the court is bound to apply the rule.²³ Even if Crown counsel does not assert the rule, the court must apply it of its own motion.²⁴

6. SCOPE OF THE PRIVILEGE

Informer privilege is “extremely broad” in its application.²⁵ It applies to both documentary evidence and oral testimony; and in both criminal and civil proceedings.²⁶ It

¹⁷ Supra note 12.

¹⁸ R v Meuckon (1990), 57 CCC (3d) 193 (BCCA).

¹⁹ (1989), 47 CCC (3d) 567 (Alta CA); see also supra note 12.

²⁰ Leipert, supra note 2.

²¹ (2000) BCCA 583.

²² Scott, supra note 2.

²³ Named Person, supra note 6 at para 23.

²⁴ Bisaillon, supra note 2 at 93.

²⁵ Named Person, supra note 6 at para 26.

²⁶ Ibid.

is not limited to the courtroom:²⁷ it also protects against revelation of the informer's identity in public.²⁸

The privilege protects not only the informer's name but also any information that might tend to reveal the identity of the informer.²⁹ Because the identification of informers can be revealed by seemingly innocuous pieces of information, scrupulous care must be taken in protecting from disclosure any information that may disclose their identity.³⁰ This includes information that tends to narrow the pool of people who have the same characteristics or identifiers as the informer.³¹ Thus, Crown counsel must object to questions which narrow the field of possible informers in a way that may disclose indirectly the informer's identity.

7. INNOCENCE AT STAKE IS THE ONLY EXCEPTION

The only exception to informer privilege is innocence at stake: In Leipert, Named Person and Basi, the Supreme Court of Canada confirmed that the only real exception to informer privilege is “when the innocence of the accused is demonstrably at stake.”³² The Court also held that no exception exists for full answer and defence or for disclosure under Stinchcombe.³³ All other purported exceptions were held to be either applications of the innocence at stake exception or examples of situations where the privilege does not apply.³⁴

When the innocence at stake is alleged, the procedure mandated by R v McClure³⁵ must be followed. McClure comprises a threshold test and a two-stage innocence at stake test. To satisfy the threshold test, the accused must establish that (1) the information is not available from any other source, and (2) he or she is otherwise unable to raise a reasonable doubt. In R v Brown³⁶ the Supreme Court stated that the second component of the threshold test was intended to carefully screen requests for access to information that may reveal the identity of an informer. Access is allowed only when (1) the accused has shown that he has no other defence, and (2) the requested information would make a positive difference in the strength of the defence case. If the threshold test is met, the judge must proceed to the following two stages:

²⁷ Barros, supra note 5 at para 30.

²⁸ Bisaillon, supra note 2.

²⁹ Ibid.

³⁰ R W Hubbard, S Magotiaux, & S M Duncan, The Law of Privilege in Canada, (loose-leaf) at 2.4.

³¹ R v Omar, 2007 ONCA 117 at para 40.

³² Basi, supra note 6 at para 37.

³³ Stinchcombe, supra note 11.

³⁴ Named Person, supra note 6 at para 29.

³⁵ [2001] 1 SCR 445, 2001 SCC 14.

³⁶ [2002] 2 SCR 185, 2002 SCC 32 at para 55.

- Stage 1 – The accused must demonstrate an evidentiary basis to conclude that information exists that could raise a reasonable doubt as to his guilt; and
- Stage 2 – If the stage 1 test is met, the judge should examine the information to determine whether in fact it is likely to raise a reasonable doubt as to his guilt.

In each instance, an accused must show “some basis” to believe his or her innocence is at stake. If that basis is shown, the court should “only reveal as much information as is essential to allow proof of innocence.”³⁷

8. SITUATIONS WHERE THE PRIVILEGE MIGHT NOT APPLY

There are situations where informer privilege does not apply, where the information-provider is a police agent or agent provocateur, when the privilege has been waived, or where a person provides information to the police in the absence of a promise or guarantee of confidentiality, either express or implied.³⁸ In these situations, the information-provider does not have (or, in the case of waiver, no longer has) informer status.

a) Distinguishing Agents from Informers

One of the most difficult problems in this area is determining when the privilege applies to the actions of persons cooperating with the police. Informer privilege does not apply when the information-provider is characterized as a “police agent” or “agent provocateur,” rather than an “informer.”

A helpful explanation of the distinction between informers and agents is found in the Ontario Court of Appeal’s decision in R v Babes:³⁹

In general terms, the distinction between an informer and an agent is that an informer merely furnishes information to the police and an agent acts on the direction of the police and goes “into the field” to participate in the illegal transaction in some way. The identity of an informer is protected by a strong privilege and, accordingly, is not disclosable, subject to the innocence at stake exception. The identity of an agent is disclosable.

Generally speaking, passive observers to criminal activities will be considered informers. In contrast, individuals who participate in the criminal activities under investigation as a result of being directed by the police will generally be considered police agents or agents provocateurs. A person may ³⁷ Leipert, supra note 2 at para 33.

³⁸ Barros supra note 5 at para 31, R v Named Person B, 2013 SCC 9 at para 18.

³⁹ (2002), 146 CCC (3d) 465 at para 10.

have dual status as a confidential informer and police agent in relation to separate investigations or targets.⁴⁰

b) Waiver of Informer Privilege

The privilege belongs jointly to the Crown and the informer. Neither can waive it without the consent of the other.⁴¹ There is no basis for a deemed or implicit waiver of the privilege. To be operative, consent to waive must be clear, express and informed.⁴² Inadvertent disclosure of an informer's identity does not result in waiver or loss of the privilege.⁴³

c) Where Information is Provided in the Absence of a Promise or Guarantee of Confidentiality

Not everybody who provides information to the police thereby becomes a confidential informant. There must be a promise of protection and confidentiality. However, the promise need not be express and may be implicit in the circumstances: Barros, at para 31, R v Named Person B, 2013 SCC 9, at para 18. An implicit promise of informer privilege may arise even if the police did not intend to confer the status or consider the person an informer, so long as the police conduct in all the circumstances could have created reasonable expectations of confidentiality.

In Basi, Fish J. referred to the privilege arising in situations “where a police officer, in the course of an investigation, guarantees protection and confidentiality to a prospective informer in exchange for useful information”.⁴⁴ This passage in Basi was relied on by the Ontario Court of Justice in R v Kaboni⁴⁵ where a 911 caller provided information to the police regarding a suspected impaired driver. Only later did she request anonymity. The judge held that the 911 caller did not have the status of an informer because she was never promised or guaranteed confidentiality by the police in ⁴⁰ Ibid at paras 29-34. During the course of a wiretap investigation, a person who the Crown claimed to be an informer purchased contraband, using his own money, from individuals unrelated to the wiretap investigation. The police did not direct him to do so nor did they know that he was going to do what he did. The Court of Appeal agreed with the Crown that this activity in the field in respect to an unrelated investigation did not cause the informer to lose his status as such. An informer cannot, by his own actions, i.e., without any direction by the police, make himself a police agent.

⁴¹ Basi, supra note 6 at para 40; Leipert, supra note 2 at para 15.

⁴² R v Schertzer, 2008 CanLII 1952 \(ON SC\); R v Sandham, 2008 CanLII 84098 \(ON SC\).

⁴³ [R v Hazelwood, \[2000\] OJ No 459 \(SCJ\)](#) at paras 18-26; [R v Nicholson, \[2001\] BCJ No 2239 \(SC\)](#) at paras 15-16; R v Hirschbaltz, 2004 SKQB 17 at paras 26-27; [R v Poncellet, \[2005\] SJ No 756 \(Sask QB\)](#) at para 16; [R v Santos, \[2007\] OJ No 5235 \(ONCJ\)](#) at para 16; [R v Beauchamp, \[2008\] OJ No 2647 \(SCJ\)](#) at para 24; A W Bryant, S N Lederman, M K Fuerst, The Law of Evidence in Canada (Markham: LexisNexis, 2009) at 1079.

⁴⁴ Basi, supra note 6 at para 36.

⁴⁵ 2010 ONCJ 91 (CanLII).

return for her information. See also *R v Chui*⁴⁶ where the court similarly rejected the notion that a person had the status of an informer where there was nothing in the facts to suggest that the information had been provided in confidence. Kaboni and Chui illustrate unsuccessful attempts by the police to retroactively confer informer status on persons lacking that status at the time they provided police with a statement or other information.

Since the relationship between the police and the informer/agent is crucial to the determination of the person's status, it is essential that Crown counsel obtain a full understanding of the nature of that relationship from the police. Counsel should discuss the matter with the CFP, or another experienced practitioner.

⁴⁶ 2005 BCSC 353.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.12 JURY SELECTION

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. BACKGROUND	2
2. SUGGESTED APPROACH.....	2

1. BACKGROUND

This guideline outlines the type of information that counsel may request from the police and other justice system participants with respect to prospective jurors and the ensuing disclosure obligations. These inquiries represent the maximum requests that counsel are permitted to make and should not be made, if such inquiries are conducted already by other justice system participants (e.g., sheriffs) or if it does not accord with the practices in counsel's jurisdiction.

2. SUGGESTED APPROACH

Counsel may request that the police conduct Canadian Police Information Centre (CPIC) and provincial/territorial data base system checks only for the purpose of confirming whether or not the juror has:

- 1) a conviction for which he/she was sentenced to a term of imprisonment exceeding 12 months¹ for which a pardon has not been received, as referred to in s. 638\(1\)\(c\) of the Criminal Code; or
- 2) a conviction that disqualifies them under the Juror's Act in the province or territory in which the trial will take place.

The request should be made in writing and should be specific.

Counsel will not seek out any additional information about the jurors unless so ordered or authorized by the court.

Counsel will not search or seek to have searched iCase for information about jurors.

All information sought and obtained will be disclosed to defence.

If by chance, other information does come to the knowledge of counsel, then this information must be disclosed to defence.

Any disclosure of information shall not include privileged information.

¹A sentence of imprisonment exceeding 12 months includes a conditional sentence.

This guideline applies in all cases except where specific jurisdictional Rules of Court, Court Orders or Court Practice Directives provide otherwise.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.13 RELEASE OF EXHIBITS FOR TESTING OR EXAMINATION

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. CROWN CONSENT TO DEFENCE REQUESTS FOR RELEASE OF EXHIBITS	3
3. CONDITIONS FOR SECURITY, CUSTODY, AND CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION	3
4. PROCESS FOR MAKING AN APPLICATION	4
5. DRUG EXHIBITS	4
6. EXHIBITS IN THE POSSESSION OF INVESTIGATORS THAT HAVE NOT BEEN FILED IN COURT	5
7. REQUESTS BY CROWN COUNSEL FOR THE RELEASE OF EXHIBITS FOR TESTING	5

1. INTRODUCTION

This guideline sets out the procedure for the release of exhibits¹ for testing or examination pursuant to s. 605 of the Criminal Code.² Crown counsel are also bound by the applicable criminal proceedings rules of the court in their particular jurisdiction.

Section 605 enables an accused to access original items seized for the purposes of testing or scientific analysis. The purpose of s. 605 is to enable the accused to properly prepare or present a defence.

The s. 605 power is discretionary. In order for a court to order release of an exhibit, an accused must provide a factual foundation demonstrating that there is an “air of reality”³

¹ “Exhibits” refers to items seized that have been filed with a court and does not refer to exhibits that have been seized by the police but that are still in the possession of the investigators.

² Under s. 605 of the Criminal Code, either Crown counsel or the accused may request the release of an exhibit for testing:

605 (1) A judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a court of criminal jurisdiction may, on summary application on behalf of the accused or the prosecutor, as the case may be, order the release of any exhibit for the purpose of a scientific or other test or examination, subject to such terms as appear to be necessary or desirable to ensure the safeguarding of the exhibit and its preservation for use at the trial.

(2) Everyone who fails to comply with the terms of an order made under subsection (1) is guilty of contempt of court and may be dealt with summarily by the judge or provincial court judge who made the order or before whom the trial of the accused takes place.

to the examination sought. The examination sought must have a “meaningful capacity” to advance any available defence.⁴ The request must be reasonable in the sense that it must be founded on something more than mere speculation.⁵ It must relate to a live issue.⁶ “Fishing expeditions” are not permitted.

2. CROWN CONSENT TO DEFENCE REQUESTS FOR RELEASE OF EXHIBITS

Crown counsel may consent in writing to a defence application for the release of exhibits for testing except in the following situations:

- where the analysis by the government analyst is not yet completed;
- where the proposed analysis will unduly delay the trial;
- where the application is brought for an improper purpose;
- where the application clearly amounts to a “fishing expedition”; or
- where there is a reasonable basis to believe that the independent analyst proposed by the defence is not competent to conduct the analysis.

3. CONDITIONS FOR SECURITY, CUSTODY, AND CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION

Crown counsel should request that the judge impose conditions pursuant to s. 605\(1\) that adequately safeguard the security, custody, and continuity of possession of the exhibit.⁷ Accordingly, Crown counsel should seek to have the following terms included in the order:

- the name of the person who will have custody of the exhibit;
- the means by which the integrity of the exhibit will be safeguarded. This is especially important if the proposed testing is to take place outside of Canada;
- the time and place of the analysis or the length of notice to be given to Crown counsel regarding the time and place; and ³ See R v Gauthier 2013 SCC 32 at para 60 where the Court affirmed the test of “air of reality” in the context of putting a defence to the jury, previously stated in R v Cinous, 2002 SCC 29, [2002] 2 SCR 3. The Court reiterated that “it is not enough to simply identify “some evidence” or “any evidence”; the evidence must be “reasonably capable of supporting the inferences required for the defence to succeed”.

⁴ R v Rhab (1985), 21 CCC (3d) 97, cited in R v W.C.S., 2000 CanLII 28292 \(NS SC\), R v Hodgson, 1990 CanLII 2106 \(BC CA\); R c Lawson 2009 QCCQ 7738 at paras 23-25 [Lawson].

⁵ R v Eagles, 1989 CanLII 205 \(NS CA\), (1989), 47 CCC (3d) 129 at 136.

⁶ Lawson, supra note 4 at para 24.

⁷ Re Klassen and The Queen (1976), 31 CCC (2d) 235 (Sask QB).

- the names of the persons entitled to be present during the analysis including the person designated by the Crown.

Additionally, Crown counsel may request that the judge permit analysis of only a portion of an exhibit such as a drug exhibit or a water sample.

4. PROCESS FOR MAKING AN APPLICATION

The application must be made to a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or to a judge of a court of criminal jurisdiction in accordance with the applicable court's criminal proceedings rules.⁸ A justice presiding over a preliminary inquiry is not competent to make an order under s. 605.⁹

An application under s. 605 can be made in connection with Criminal Code charges or charges under any other act of Parliament, unless the other act contains a complete and exclusive procedure dealing with exhibits in criminal proceedings.¹⁰

5. DRUG EXHIBITS

An applicant may apply to re-analyze a drug exhibit in order to show that the intended analysis can be characterized as quantitatively or qualitatively different from the one initially carried out by the Crown. One example is where the second analysis is designed to assess the purity of the drug exhibit.

Given the nature of drug exhibits, Crown counsel should carefully review the background and professional qualifications of the independent analyst to ensure that the analyst is competent to re-analyze the exhibit.

Wherever possible, only a portion of a drug exhibit should be given to the independent analyst. A sufficient quantity of the drug should be retained in the event that further analysis is ordered by the court on application by the Crown or the accused. Crown counsel should therefore request that the order make provision for the analysis of a part of the drug exhibit only.

⁸ Note as well that s 683 of the Criminal Code governs the power of the appellate courts to permit the production of new evidence which could include a scientific analysis.

⁹ [Doyle v The Queen, \[1977\] 1 SCR 597, \(1976\), 29 CCC \(2d\) 177](#), R v Walsh (1981), 59 CCC (2d) 554 (Ont Prov Ct).

¹⁰ For example, s 50 of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, SC 1996, c 19 does not set out a complete and exclusive procedure for drug exhibits in criminal proceedings. Accordingly, s 605 applies to drug exhibits. See R v Bryers and Mueller (1975), 28 CCC (2D) 466 at 468 (Ont Gen Sess Peace).

A court order authorizing an analyst named in the order to do an independent analysis should be regarded as authorizing the analyst to possess the drug lawfully for the analysis.¹¹

The presence of an official designated by the Crown during the independent analysis may be warranted, where feasible, to ensure continuity of possession of the exhibit.

The result of the independent analysis may differ from the result of the analysis conducted by the government analyst. If the independent analyst testifies in court, a government analyst should be present in court to assist Crown counsel. This can be arranged through Health Canada.

6. EXHIBITS IN THE POSSESSION OF INVESTIGATORS THAT HAVE NOT BEEN FILED IN COURT

Defence counsel may want to have independent tests done on items that are not deemed to be “exhibits” that have not been filed in court, but that are in the custody of a law enforcement agency (such as handwriting samples, tape recordings, bodily fluids, blood, and computer hardware).

These items may be released for testing in accordance with the Stinchcombe disclosure principles.¹²

7. REQUESTS BY CROWN COUNSEL FOR THE RELEASE OF EXHIBITS FOR TESTING

Crown counsel should comply with the normal rules of criminal practice in the province or territory regarding application for release of exhibits for testing. Wherever possible, the initiating documents should be accompanied by a supporting affidavit setting out the basis for the application.

¹¹ Re R v Vales (1979), 46 CCC (2d) 269 (Ont HC).

¹² See also the pre-Stinchcombe decision in R v Savion and Mizrahi, (1980) 52 CCC (2d) 276 (ON CA).

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.14 TESTIMONY OF POLICE OFFICERS AND POLICE CIVILIAN AGENTS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

December 22, 2016

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. BACKGROUND	2
2. BEFORE TENDERING A STATEMENT UNDER OATH (AN AFFIDAVIT OR TESTIMONY)	3
3. DURING TRIAL	3
3.1. Misleading or false evidence inadvertently given under oath	3
3.2. Misleading or false testimony intentionally given under oath.....	3
3.3. Discrimination.....	4
3.4. The assessment of whether the test for continuing a prosecution is met: reasonable prospect of conviction.....	4
4. AFTER TRIAL	4

1. BACKGROUND

In the prosecution setting, it is the role of the prosecutor to decide which witnesses to call and of the courts to assess the credibility and reliability of the witnesses and determine the weight to be given to their testimony. This guideline provides guidance on the steps prosecutors should take when they become aware that a police officer¹ or a civilian police agent (“police witness”) may give, or has given, sworn evidence, either in the form of an affidavit or as testimony before a court (collectively referred to as “testimony”) that is not credible or is unreliable.²

Credibility is a complex matter. Crown counsel must be mindful that all witnesses including police witnesses may have different opportunities to observe an incident and differing perspectives and may therefore honestly provide inconsistent testimony.

Reliability has to do with the accuracy of a witness’ testimony and may include consideration of a witness’ ability to observe, recall or recount the issue. A Court may reject a police witness’ testimony in whole or in part, or make a finding which is inconsistent with the witness’ testimony without necessarily finding that the witness was dishonest in his or her testimony.

Crown counsel must remain aware that they are not the trier of fact and must not by their decisions prevent the trier of fact from making determinations as to the credibility or reliability of witnesses without a compelling basis.

¹ This guideline also applies to investigators who are not police officers.

² Crown counsel who have concerns regarding statements to be made or made under oath, but which do not rise to the level described in this guideline, should discuss them with their team leader.

These guidelines are based on the principles found in the jurisprudence respecting the role of Crown counsel, the rules of professional conduct governing counsel, and the policies contained in the PPSC Deskbook.

2. BEFORE TENDERING A STATEMENT UNDER OATH (AN AFFIDAVIT OR TESTIMONY)

In determining which witnesses to call, Crown counsel must respect the obligations relating to the conduct of a prosecution. These obligations include ensuring that appropriate disclosure has been made to the accused of any information that relates to the credibility or reliability of a witness. In relation to police officers, these obligations were outlined by the Supreme Court of Canada in R v McNeil. Crown counsel must not call as a witness someone, including a police witness, who they reasonably believe, based on compelling information, will mislead the court with their testimony on matters that are material to the proof of the essential elements of the offence and without which the Crown could not satisfy the trier of fact beyond a reasonable doubt.

3. DURING TRIAL

3.1. Misleading or false evidence inadvertently given under oath

Where Crown counsel has a compelling basis for believing that misleading or inaccurate testimony has inadvertently been given by a police witness, Crown counsel must inform the defence counsel and the Court that the Crown does not rely upon the testimony to prove its case. This relates to cases of a serious error/mistake and cases of unacceptable negligence.

Crown counsel must bring the testimony to the attention of their supervisor or manager, in writing.³ If the manager considers that the concern is well-founded, then the manager must bring it to the attention of the appropriate Officer in Charge (OIC) or the OIC's superior, to assess how such a situation can be avoided in the future.

3.2. Misleading or false testimony intentionally given under oath

Where a court makes a finding or where it can be reasonably inferred from judicial comments that misleading or inaccurate evidence has been intentionally given by a police witness, Crown counsel must bring it to the attention of their supervisor or manager in writing⁴ so that the matter will be referred to the police for possible investigation. If Crown counsel otherwise has a compelling basis for believing that inaccurate testimony has been intentionally given by a police witness, they must bring it to the attention of their supervisor or manager, and they must notify defence and the court. For example, where a police officer had testified at trial that the voluntary statement evidence he was giving the court were the exact words of the defendant. In fact, the police officer later indicated that he had reconstructed his notes. In this situation, Crown counsel must inform the team leader, Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutor or Chief Federal Prosecutor and defence counsel and put the witness back on the stand to explain himself.

³ Transcripts of the testimony must be ordered, but the notice to the Crown counsel's manager or supervisor should not await the transcript.

⁴ Ibid.

3.3. Discrimination

Where a court makes a finding or where it can be reasonably inferred from judicial comments that investigative steps were undertaken by the police witness based, in whole or part, on the race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, sexual orientation, political associations, activities or beliefs of the accused or any other person involved in the investigation, Crown counsel must bring it to the attention of their supervisor or manager in writing so that the matter will be referred to the police for possible investigation. The supervisor or manager may determine that a review of the other files in relation to which the police witness may be involved is appropriate.

3.4. The assessment of whether the test for continuing a prosecution is met: reasonable prospect of conviction.

In all instances of misleading or inaccurate statements made under oath, Crown counsel must assess the impact of the testimony upon the overall reliability or credibility of the police witness and whether the threshold test for prosecuting continues to exist.

4. AFTER TRIAL

The same steps must be taken where Crown counsel is put on notice by the findings of a court that the court considers that a police witness has given misleading or inaccurate testimony or where the Crown counsel has a compelling basis for believing that it has occurred.

In cases where the findings of the court admit of ambiguity as to whether the testimony was intentionally misleading or inaccurate as opposed to the court simply determining that it will not accept the evidence of the police witness, Crown counsel should consult with their supervisor and manager.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.15 APPEALS AND INTERVENTIONS IN THE PROVINCIAL AND TERRITORIAL SUPERIOR COURTS AND COURTS OF APPEAL

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised March 25, 2022

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. THE DECISION TO APPEAL AGAINST AN ACQUITTAL.....	2
2.1. The Crown’s right of appeal from acquittal is limited.....	3
2.2. No appeal from an interlocutory ruling.....	4
2.3. The public interest.....	4
3. THE DECISION TO APPEAL AGAINST A SENTENCE	5
4. INITIATING AN APPEAL: THE PROCEDURE	6
4.1. Conceding appeals	6
5. THE CROWN AS INTERVENER.....	7
6. APPEALS FROM SUMMARY CONVICTION APPEALS	8

1. INTRODUCTION

This guideline sets out the factors that must be considered in deciding whether to appeal an acquittal or sentence¹. It also identifies who should make the decision to appeal on behalf of the Crown and the process for deciding.

2. THE DECISION TO APPEAL AGAINST AN ACQUITTAL

The authority to appeal in criminal proceedings comes entirely from statute. Common law appeals against conviction or acquittal do not exist.² In Canada, even accused persons had no effective right of appeal until 1923. In 1930, an amendment to the Criminal Code (Code) permitted Crown appeals against a “question of law alone”. While the basis for Crown appeals has since been further defined in the Code, essentially the Crown is still limited to raising legal, not factual, issues.

At the foundation of criminal law lies the cardinal principle that no person shall be placed in jeopardy twice for the same matter and the reasons underlying that principle are grounded in deep social instincts. This principle is reflected in s. 11(h) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (Charter). However, s. 11(h) does not preclude the Crown’s right of appeal as the words “finally acquitted” in s. 11(h) have been interpreted to mean after the appellate procedures provided in the Code have been completed.³

¹ A separate guideline exists for appeals and interventions in the Supreme Court of Canada; see PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.16 Supreme Court of Canada Litigation”.

² R v Meltzer, [1989] 1 SCR 1764 [Meltzer]; R v Robinson (1990), 51 CCC (3d) 452 at 463 (AB CA) [Robinson].

³ R v Morgentaler Smoling and Scott, [1988] SCR 30 at 155-156.

Over the past 60 years, the courts have signalled the need to show restraint in exercising the right to appeal. Only cases where the public interest is best served by pursuing should be appealed.

2.1. The Crown's right of appeal from acquittal is limited

In indictable matters, the Crown's right of appeal against an acquittal is found in s. 676(1)(a), which provides:

676. (1) The Attorney General or counsel instructed by him for the purpose may appeal to the court of appeal

(a) against a judgment or verdict of acquittal or a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder of a trial court in proceedings by indictment on any ground of appeal that involves a question of law alone.

This is a much narrower right of appeal than that conferred upon a convicted person, who may appeal against conviction on any ground of appeal that involves a question of law alone or, with leave of the court of appeal, on any ground of appeal that involves a question of fact or mixed fact and law, or any ground of appeal that appears to the court of appeal to be a sufficient ground of appeal (s. 675(1)(a) of the Code). On an accused's appeal against conviction the court may allow the appeal if it concludes that the verdict of guilty was unreasonable, if the trial judge made an error of law (e.g. in an evidentiary ruling, or in the charge to the jury),⁴ or if there was a miscarriage of justice (s. 686(1) of the Code).

By contrast, the restriction on the Crown's right of appeal to a question of law alone means that the Crown cannot just complain about the verdict, or argue that the trier of fact rendered an unreasonable acquittal.⁵ Justice Lamer (as he then was) explained as follows in Rousseau:⁶

The trial judge considered that the accused's guilt was not established beyond a reasonable doubt. I have read the evidence and I believe that he did not, in so concluding, commit an error of law. Indeed, this is an appeal by the Crown from an acquittal, covered by s. 605(1)(a) of the Criminal Code, which limits the appeal to grounds "that involve [...] a question of law alone". For the doubt entertained by the judge to amount to an error of law it must be the result of conjecture and have no basis whatever in the evidence. [Emphasis added]

⁴ Subject to the verdict-preserving "curative provisos" in Criminal Code, ss 676(1)(b)(iii) and (iv).

⁵ R v Schuldt, [1985] 2 SCR 592.

⁶ Rousseau v The Queen, [1985] 2 SCR 38 at 42.

In addition to satisfying the court of appeal that a pure error of law led to the wrong outcome, the Crown must also show that “the error (or errors) of the trial judge might reasonably be thought, in the concrete reality of the case at hand, to have had a material bearing on the acquittal”.⁷

2.2. No appeal from an interlocutory ruling

There is no right of appeal to a provincial or territorial court of appeal from an interlocutory order or pre-trial ruling.⁸ Appeals are from verdicts. If there is no acquittal (or a judicially entered stay of proceedings, which for appeal purposes is the same as an acquittal),⁹ the Crown has no right of appeal.

Where the trial judge has made a pre-trial ruling that for all practical purposes ends the prosecution, for example, a decision to exclude critical evidence under s. 24(2) of the Charter, or a disclosure order with which the Crown cannot comply because it would breach informer privilege, the prosecutor may simply invite an acquittal or a judicial stay, and consider an appeal on the basis of an error of law in the impugned ruling. However, where the impact of the ruling is not so decisive, the prosecutor should continue the prosecution and await the verdict, as otherwise the prosecutor’s decision to invite an acquittal in order to trigger a right of appeal may be seen as an abuse of process.¹⁰

2.3. The public interest

Not every unfavourable ruling or error in law should be appealed. Neither the judiciary nor the Crown has the resources to review every judgment that might be wrong. Still, the public expects and is entitled to a criminal justice system that is applied consistently and is effective in the suppression of crime.

Where the dual thresholds for a Crown appeal against acquittal are met – (1) error of law, (2) that in the concrete reality of the case materially contributed to the acquittal – the Crown will consider whether the public interest is best served by appealing the acquittal.

Factors which may be considered when deciding whether the public interest is best served by an appeal include the following:

1. Is the issue raised by the case of widespread importance for the effective enforcement of the criminal law, or is its impact confined largely to the immediate case?

⁷ R v Graveline, 2006 SCC 16 at para 14.

⁸ Meltzer, supra note 2.

⁹ R v Jewitt, [1985] 2 SCR 128. A judicial stay would result e.g. from the Crown’s inability to comply with a disclosure order on grounds of protecting informer privilege.

¹⁰ R v Power, [1994] 1 SCR 601; United States v Fafalios, 2012 ONCA 365.

2. Does the seriousness of the offence or the circumstances of the offender demand a reconsideration of the case?
3. Have courts differed in interpreting the issue raised?
4. Could the trial decision impair the enforcement or administration of a significant government policy initiative (for instance, confiscating the proceeds of crime, reducing domestic violence) if left unchallenged?
5. Will the resources required to prepare and present the appeal significantly outweigh the value of pursuing the case further?¹¹
6. Would the trial decision or decision to present an appeal have an impact on systemic racism, systemic discrimination, or the overrepresentation of certain groups in the criminal justice system, such as Indigenous accused and victims?

The application of and weight to be given to these and other relevant factors will depend on the circumstances of each case.

A decision whether to appeal must not be influenced by any of the following:

1. The race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, sexual orientation, political associations, activities or beliefs of the accused or any other person involved in the case, unless these factors are considered in the analysis of the decision's impact on systemic racism, systemic discrimination, or the overrepresentation of certain groups in the criminal justice system;
2. Crown counsel's personal feelings about the accused, the victim, or the trier of fact;
3. Possible political advantage or disadvantage to the government, special interest group or political party; or
4. The possible effect of the decision on the personal or professional circumstances of those responsible for making the decision to appeal.

3. THE DECISION TO APPEAL AGAINST A SENTENCE

An appeal against a sentence¹² need not be grounded in an error of law (s. 687 of the Code). However, the standard of review – error in principle, or a sentence that is manifestly unfit – nonetheless invites a court of appeal to give considerable deference to the sentencing judge and the Crown should not lightly initiate an appeal against the sentence.

¹¹ On the use of judicial resources, see Borowski v Attorney General of Canada, [1989] 1 SCR 342, (1989), 47 CCC (3d) 1 at 14-15; Robinson, supra note 2; but see the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”.

¹² A sentence may include a number of ancillary orders: Criminal Code, s 673.

It may be in the public interest to appeal where the trial judge erred in interpreting or applying a statutory provision or principle concerning the sentence, or where the sentence is clearly below the accepted range of sentences, not merely at the low end of the range, or where the sentence may set a negative precedent.

The Crown must also consider how long it will take to appeal, and whether by then the offender will have served his or her sentence and deserves reincarceration.

4. INITIATING AN APPEAL: THE PROCEDURE

In general, the decision to initiate an appeal to a court of appeal is made by the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) while the decision to initiate an appeal to the superior court can be made by the CFP or the Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutor (DCFP). This decision is made upon the written recommendation of Crown counsel with carriage of the prosecution at trial or, where the trial was conducted by an agent, of the agent supervisor. The CFP or DCFP will consult with the applicable regional litigation committee, and where appropriate the National Litigation Committee, before deciding.

Crown counsel may sometimes need to file a “protective” notice of appeal before consultations are completed and a final decision is taken about proceeding with the appeal. Protective notices should be the exception, not the rule, since counsel are obliged to bring significant adverse decisions to the attention of their superiors so that appropriate and timely action can be taken. Counsel should ensure that a final decision is made as soon after filing the notice as is reasonably practicable.

Finally, Crown counsel, including a legal agent, must not announce that an appeal will or will not be initiated until the decision has been made by the appropriate authority.

4.1. Conceding appeals

The Crown is much more frequently the respondent than the appellant on criminal appeals. On rare occasions, appellate counsel may be placed in a situation in which an error of law committed by the trial court is so clear, or the findings of fact so patently unreasonable, that it may raise the possibility that the appeal ought to be conceded. This may arise, for example, in a case where a decision by the Supreme Court of Canada subsequent to the trial but prior to the appeal completely undermines the basis for conviction.

The decision to concede an appeal or to concede on a particular issue¹³ within the appeal is never one that can be taken lightly. As a general rule, Crown counsel’s duty is to advance all reasonable arguments that may be made to support the decision of the court below, and to leave it to the appellate court to decide whether to allow the appeal.¹⁴

¹³ The Supreme Court has been highly critical of concessions by Crown counsel that it felt should not have been made: see Schachter v The Queen, [1992] 2 SCR 679, and Miron v Trudel et al, [1995] 2 SCR 418 at 485-486.

¹⁴ Bearing in mind that many legal errors may be regarded as causing an accused no substantial wrong or prejudice: see Criminal Code, s 686(1)(b)(iii) and 686(1)(b)(iv).

Generally speaking, it is within the discretion of appellate counsel to concede on a particular issue in an appeal without conceding the appeal itself, where there is no reasonable argument to be made on that issue. Where that issue concerns the constitutional validity of federal legislation, however, instructions must be sought from the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP), normally upon the advice of the National Litigation Committee. Where the issue concerns the constitutional validity of provincial legislation, consultation with the appropriate Attorney General's office is in order.

Appellate counsel may also be called upon to exercise a discretion with respect to the admission of fresh evidence on appeal. The admission of such evidence is governed by the well-known four-part test consistently used by the Supreme Court.¹⁵ Counsel may well choose to consent to the admission of such evidence where it raises a substantial concern about an offender's innocence.¹⁶

Further consultations are necessary when counsel is of the view that an appeal ought to be conceded. Before making such a recommendation to the CFP, appellate counsel will seek the views of the trial counsel and, where appropriate, the investigative agency. Where the concession is in a significant case,¹⁷ consultation with the appropriate Litigation Committee will be necessary.

5. THE CROWN AS INTERVENER

Generally, only the parties to a criminal prosecution, Crown and accused, may participate in an appeal before a provincial or territorial court of appeal. Interveners, when allowed, are generally not permitted to add to the issues in dispute, or to enlarge the record.

In deciding whether to exercise its discretion to permit an intervener, the court of appeal will consider whether this will delay the hearing or resolution of the appeal, prejudice the parties including increased costs, whether the intervener has additional submissions to offer not already advanced by the parties, and the prospect of the appeal between the parties being expanded by the intervener's interests.¹⁸ A recognized consideration that is relevant to the Public Prosecution Service of Canada is whether it is desirable to have a national perspective on the issues brought in to the appeal.¹⁹

The decision to intervene in a provincial or territorial court of appeal is made by the DPP. The procedure for applying to intervene is the same as is explained in the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.16 Supreme Court of Canada Litigation".

¹⁵ See e.g. Palmer v The Queen, [1980] 1 SCR 759, (1979), 50 CCC (2d) 193, R v Stolar [1988] 1 SCR 480, (1988), 40 CCC (3d) 1.

¹⁶ In this regard, see Report of the Commission on Proceedings Involving Guy Paul Morin, Toronto: Queen's Printer, 1998, vol 2 at 1170-1171.

¹⁷ As defined in the PPSC Deskbook directive "1.3 Consultation within Government".

¹⁸ John Sopinka & Mark E. Gelowitz, The Conduct of an Appeal, 3rd ed (Canada: LexisNexis, 2012) at para 8.98.18.

¹⁹ R v Regan (1999), 174 NSR (2d) 1, 1999 CanLII 1855 (NS CA).

6. APPEALS FROM SUMMARY CONVICTION APPEALS

In summary conviction matters, the accused may appeal from the adverse decision of a summary conviction appeal court (normally the superior court of justice) to the court of appeal on any ground of appeal that involves a question of law alone, with leave of the court of appeal or a judge of that court (s. 839 of the Code).

For many years in some jurisdictions the issue of leave to appeal was simply rolled into the main appeal, and was considered at the same time as the oral hearing of the appeal on its merits.²⁰ Leave to appeal to the court of appeal was routinely granted, whether or not the appeal on its merits was allowed or dismissed.

In the 2008 judgment in *R v R.R.*²¹ the Ontario Court of Appeal significantly reinvigorated the requirement of leave to appeal contained in s. 839 of the Code. Doherty JA, writing for the court, reasoned that:

*The requirement that the applicant obtain leave to appeal in s. 839 provides the mechanism whereby this court can control its summary conviction appeal docket. Access to this court for a second appeal should be limited to those cases in which the applicant can demonstrate some exceptional circumstance justifying a further appeal.*²²

Justice Doherty went on to explain that leave to appeal to the court of appeal in a summary conviction matter may be granted: (1) where the merits of the proposed question of law are arguable, even if not strong, and the proposed question of law has significance to the administration of justice beyond the four corners of the case; and (2) where there appears to be a “clear” error even if it cannot be said that the error has significance to the administration of justice beyond the specific case.

The courts of appeal in some other provinces and territories have moved in a similar direction.²³

Therefore, when Crown counsel is facing an appeal to the court of appeal in a summary conviction matter, counsel must consider whether to oppose leave to appeal by reference to the above considerations. In some cases, Crown counsel will want to press the court of appeal to determine the issue of leave in advance, thereby avoiding an investment of time and resources responding to a groundless appeal.²⁴ The application may be made to a single justice (s. 839 of the Code).

²⁰ R v R.R., 2008 ONCA 497 at para 2.

²¹ Ibid.

²² Ibid at para 27.

²³ See e.g. R v Winfield, 2009 YKCA 9; Petrin v R, 2013 NWTCA 1; R v Harper, 2008 ABCA 325; R v Oliver, 2011 MBCA 12; Bouchard c R, 2011 QCCA 30; R v Pottie, 2013 NSCA 68; Dorgan and Gavin v R, 2009 PECA 23; R v Ralph, 2008 NLCA 70.

²⁴ See e.g. R v Metin, 2013 ONCA 21.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.16 SUPREME COURT OF CANADA LITIGATION

GUIDELINE ISSUED BY THE DIRECTOR UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

June 5, 2024

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION.....	3
2. SUPREME COURT OF CANADA LITIGATION COORDINATION SECTION	4
2.1 Composition of the Section.....	4
2.2 Role of the Section.....	4
2.3 Role of the Supreme Court of Canada Agent	4
2.4 Managing the National Litigation Committee	4
2.5 Service and Filing of Documents in the Supreme Court of Canada	5
3. APPLICATIONS FOR LEAVE TO APPEAL	5
3.1 Crown as Applicant.....	5
3.1.1 Decision-Making Authority: The DPP	5
3.1.2 Applicable Test: “Public Importance”	5
3.1.3 Internal Procedure	6
3.1.4 Timelines	7
3.1.5 Required Documents	7
3.1.6 Memorandum of Argument.....	8
3.2 Crown as Respondent	9
3.2.1 Decision-Making Authority: The Coordinator	9
3.2.2 Applicable Test: “Public Importance”	9
3.2.3 Internal Procedure	9
3.2.4 Timelines	10
3.2.5 Required Documentation.....	10
4. APPEALS.....	11
4.1 Appeals as of Right.....	11
4.1.1 Decision-Making Authority: The DPP	11
4.1.2 Applicable Test: “Modified Public Interest”	11
4.1.3 Internal Procedure	12
4.2 Appeals with Leave.....	12
4.3 Notice of Appeal	12
4.3.1 Time Limits	12
4.3.2 Required Documents	13
4.4 Constitutional Questions	13
4.5 Factum on Appeal	14
4.5.1 Decision-Making Authority: The DPP	14
4.5.2 Internal Procedure	14
4.5.3 Time Limits	15
4.5.4 Form and Content of Factum.....	15
5. INTERVENTIONS	16
5.1 General Principles	16
5.1.1 Power of the DPP to Intervene	16
5.1.2 Sharing Interventions with the Attorney General.....	16

5.1.3 Two Types of Interventions: As of Right and with Leave	17
5.1.3.1 Intervention as of Right for Constitutional Questions	17
5.1.3.2 Intervention with Leave	17
5.2 Decision-Making Authority: The DPP	17
5.3 Criteria Applicable: “Interest and Usefulness”	17
5.4 Internal Procedure	18
5.4.1 Identification of Potential Cases for Intervention	18
5.4.2 Procedure for DPP Authorization.....	18
5.5 Time Limits.....	19
5.5.1 Intervention as of Right.....	19
5.5.2 Intervention by Leave.....	19
5.6 Documentation Required	19
5.7 Intervener Factums.....	20
5.7.1 Decision-Making Authority: The DPP.....	20
5.7.2 Internal Procedure	20
5.7.3 Time Limits	20
5.7.4 Form and Content of the Intervener’s Factum	21
6. BRIEFING NOTE PURSUANT TO S. 13 OF THE DPP ACT	21

1. INTRODUCTION

This guideline outlines the procedure applicable to litigation in the Supreme Court of Canada (the Court) that falls within the purview of the Director of Public Prosecutions (the DPP) and addresses the role of the Supreme Court of Canada Litigation Coordination Section (the Section). It also covers the internal procedure for preparing documents to be filed with the Court, i.e., applications for leave to appeal, appeals, interventions, and other motions as well as general correspondence.

Criminal appeals to the Court are primarily governed by the Criminal Code, the Supreme Court Act, the Rules of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Guidelines for Preparing Documents to be Filed with the Supreme Court of Canada,¹ the conventions and practices of the Court, as well as the Public Prosecution Service of Canada (the PPSC) internal practices.

Pursuant to s. 34 of the Interpretation Act, the provisions of the Criminal Code apply to offences under other federal statutes, including appeals to the Supreme Court related to criminal offences prosecuted by indictment.² Other criminal appeals are subject to the Supreme Court Act.

¹ Established by the Registrar of the Court pursuant to s. 21 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Canada [Rules].

² Criminal Code, ss 691-696.

2. SUPREME COURT OF CANADA LITIGATION COORDINATION SECTION

2.1 Composition of the Section

The Section is comprised of two Supreme Court of Canada coordinators assisted by a paralegal. The Section reports directly to the DPP. Its offices are located at PPSC headquarters in Ottawa.

2.2 Role of the Section

As its name implies, the Section is responsible for coordinating all Supreme Court of Canada litigation conducted on the DPP's behalf, starting with the service of originating documents to all follow-ups necessitated by a judgment of the Court in any case involving the PPSC.

For the Section to properly exercise its functions, prosecutors must promptly report to it reception or service of documents related to litigation before the Court – especially originating documents – so that a proper follow-up can take place within the prescribed periods.

2.3 Role of the Supreme Court of Canada Agent

Parties to appeals or interventions before the Supreme Court of Canada may communicate with the Court through an agent who must be a lawyer practicing in the National Capital Region.³ One of the coordinators acts as agent for the DPP.

In practice, communications with the Court take place between the Section and the Court Registry personnel, although the latter may occasionally liaise directly with assigned prosecutors. In all cases, prosecutors must consult with the Section before communicating directly with the Court personnel.

2.4 Managing the National Litigation Committee

The National Litigation Committee (NLC) advises the DPP on all Supreme Court of Canada litigation and, occasionally for any other court. Consultation with the NLC is ordinarily required for recommendations to the DPP regarding applications for leave to appeal, approval of appeal and intervention factums before the Court, as well as motions for intervention made on the DPP's behalf before all levels of court.

In view of the central role played by the NLC regarding Supreme Court of Canada litigation, the coordinators preside and manage it with the assistance of the paralegal who acts as secretary.

³ Rules, ss 2, 16.

2.5 Service and Filing of Documents in the Supreme Court of Canada

The Section is responsible for the finalization, service, and filing of all documents with the Court. This implies that once the content has been approved, the Section sees to the making and formatting of the electronic documents in accordance with the Rules, prepares the hard copies, serves and files documents within the prescribed deadlines.

3. APPLICATIONS FOR LEAVE TO APPEAL

A significant proportion of criminal appeals before the Court are heard by leave. The federal Crown, like any other litigant, can be the applicant or respondent, although in practice it is often the respondent.

3.1 Crown as Applicant

3.1.1 Decision-Making Authority: The DPP

It is the decision of the DPP whether an application for leave to appeal will be filed, taking into consideration the non-binding recommendation made by the NLC.

3.1.2 Applicable Test: “Public Importance”

As the highest court of law in the land, the Court is a “court of direction,” the role of which is to rule on legal matters. It is not a “court of revision” the primary role of which is to rectify errors made by lower courts. That role is performed by intermediate provincial and territorial appellate courts. This explains why leave to appeal is granted, pursuant to s. 40(1) of the Supreme Court Act, only when “the Supreme Court is of the opinion that any question involved therein is, by reason of its public importance or the importance of any issue of law or any issue of mixed law and fact involved in that question, one that ought to be decided by the Supreme Court or is, for any other reason, of such a nature or significance as to warrant decision by it.” This is the so-called “public importance” test (formerly coined as the “national importance” test), which also applies to leave applications made pursuant to s. 693(1)(b) of the Criminal Code, governing leave applications on indictable offence verdicts. The DPP applies a similar test in deciding whether to seek leave to appeal.

It is not sufficient for prosecutors recommending an appeal to show that the lower court’s judgment is ill-founded in law since this does not meet the “public importance” threshold. As the Court does not issue reasons in deciding leave applications, there are no judgments to look to for guidance in assessing whether a case meets the threshold. However, without being exhaustive, the following circumstances are generally recognized as justifying the granting of leave:

- where there are conflicting decisions in provincial or territorial appellate courts;
- where a case raises significant constitutional issues (particularly Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (Charter) or division of powers questions);

- where the scope of police or Crown powers is at issue; or
- where the interpretation of new legislation raises an issue of significant importance.⁴

In assessing the public interest test for seeking leave to appeal, the policy considerations relevant to the decision to prosecute must be taken into account,⁵ as is required for all the stages of a prosecution, including appeals.

3.1.3 Internal Procedure

It is the responsibility of the regional office to decide in the first place whether it is desirable to seek the approval of the DPP to apply for leave to appeal. It is not necessary to refer the case to the DPP when the case does not pass the public interest test.

The regional office concerned, however, can deem it necessary to obtain a decision from the DPP, even when the recommendation is not to apply for leave to appeal. This may arise, for example, when a case has attracted significant media interest or when prosecutors are of the opinion that the court of appeal's decision, although erroneous, falls just short of the public importance threshold. In such circumstances, the coordinator must be consulted as to what direction to take. When the decision is made at the regional level to submit the case to the DPP, the procedure set out below applies.

The decision-making process begins with the preparation in the regional office of a memo for the NLC⁶ explaining why the case should (or should not) be submitted to the Court for leave to appeal. Once approved at the regional level, the memo⁷ is sent to the coordinator who submits it to the NLC for consideration. The NLC may endorse or reject the position set forth in the memo or may make alternate recommendations for correction before being provided to the DPP. The memo must be submitted early enough within the time limit for an application for leave to permit a meeting of the NLC to take place on a week's notice and to allow time for the finalization of the documentation.

Following the NLC consultation, the coordinator reports to the DPP.

If the DPP chooses to apply for leave to appeal, the prosecutors assigned to the case prepare the supporting documentation and submit it to the coordinator for review and approval.

⁴ Justice Sopinka explained in a 1997 address some of the relevant criteria used by the Court in deciding leave applications; the speech is reproduced in L. Watt, J. Beedell, G. Ragan and M. Estabrooks, Supreme Court of Canada Practice (Toronto: Thomson Reuters, 2023) at § 4:161.

⁵ See PPSC Deskbook, Guideline "2.3 Decision to prosecute".

⁶ A template memo can be obtained from the Section.

⁷ The memo should be accompanied by a copy of the relevant decisions from the lower courts and of the factums filed with the lower court, if any.

3.1.4 Timelines

Applicants have 60 days from the date of the lower court's judgment to serve and file an application for leave to appeal.⁸ The month of July is excluded in the computation of time.⁹

It is important to bear in mind the distinction between the judgment and the reasons for judgment as the time limits begin to run as soon as the lower court renders judgment, even if the reasons are released later. Obviously, it may prove challenging to draft an application for leave without the written reasons from the court below. When delay in the release of reasons by the lower court makes it impossible to draft, serve and file more than a bare-bones application, it is appropriate to request from the Court an extension of time. Such extension may be submitted by motion at the same time the application for leave to appeal is filed; in such circumstances, we must inform in writing the respondent or our intent to seek leave to appeal in order to comply with the first factor of the Roberge test.¹⁰ Alternatively, a motion can be filed within the 60-day period to obtain in advance leave to file late.

Unless otherwise agreed, a draft leave application must be received by the Section a week before the filing date.

3.1.5 Required Documents

Rule 25 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Canada and the Guidelines issued by the Registrar set forth the nature and format of the documentation required in an application for leave to appeal. In a typical case, the following documents are submitted, bound in a single booklet and in the following order:¹¹

- a notice of application for leave to appeal, which cites the legislative provision that authorizes the application;
- a copy of any judgments, orders and relevant reasons issued by the lower courts;
- a memorandum of argument;
- documents to which the application refers, if any, including transcript excerpts, but only when they are essential for the purposes of the application.

A certificate of counsel (Form 23A) must be served and filed with the application, which alerts the Court to any information that should not be publicly disclosed, along with a copy of supporting authority, such as a court order or applicable legislation.

⁸ Supreme Court Act, s 58(1)(a).

⁹ Supreme Court Act, s 58(2).

¹⁰ R v Roberge, 2005 SCC 48, [2005] 2 SCR 469, at para 6.

¹¹ A precedent may be obtained from the Section.

Although affidavits in support of the application may be submitted under Rule 25(1)(d), they are not usually required. The evidentiary basis for the application usually will have been established in the courts below; the public importance of the case does not generally require the filing of additional evidence.

3.1.6 Memorandum of Argument

The memorandum of argument contains seven parts, in the following order:¹²

Part I: a concise overview of the party's position regarding the issues of public importance raised in the application and a concise statement of facts including the judicial history of the case, if required;

Part II: a concise statement of the questions in issue; if the proposed appeal raises an issue in respect of the constitutional validity or applicability of a statute, regulation or common law rule or the inoperability of a statute or regulation, a concise statement of the issue;

Part III: a concise statement of argument;

Part IV: submissions as to costs which generally consist in making no submission;¹³

Part V: the order sought, which is usually that the application for leave to appeal be granted, without costs;

Part VI: a table of authorities — including the relevant provisions of any statute, regulation, rule, ordinance, or by-law being relied on, and, if available, hyperlinks to the provisions — arranged alphabetically and setting out the paragraph numbers where the authorities are cited;

(It should be noted that when doing the last revision, the Section adds hyperlinks in both the argument found in Part III as well as in the table of authorities)

Part VII: any statute, regulation, rule, ordinance, or by-law being relied on for which hyperlinks are not provided in Part VI, in both official languages if they are required by law to be published in both official languages.

Parts I to V of the memorandum must not exceed 20 pages. Note that this is the maximum, not the targeted, length.

¹² Rules, s 25(1)(c).

¹³ Save exceptional circumstances, costs are not awarded in criminal matters: see R v M(CA), [1996] 1 SCR 500 at para 97.

3.2 Crown as Respondent

A regional office that is served with an application for leave to appeal (or any other originating document) must promptly inform the Section so that the appropriate response can be planned and coordinated.

3.2.1 Decision-Making Authority: The Coordinator

The coordinator, or their delegate, approves responses to leave applications. The coordinator may choose to refer the draft response to the NLC for consideration and formulation of advice to the DPP who then exercises final decision-making authority. Such a referral is more likely to occur when it is envisaged to concede that leave be granted.

3.2.2 Applicable Test: “Public Importance”

Public importance, as described above when the prosecution seeks leave to appeal, remains the applicable test.

Applicants often, incorrectly, base their applications on a demonstration of errors allegedly committed by the lower courts, rather than on showing the public importance of the issues they raise. A mere showing of legal error does not suffice. A common example is the application of a legal standard to the facts of the case, which is a question of law for appeal purposes.¹⁴ Even if the lower court erred in its conclusion, an issue of public importance is not necessarily raised thereby, insofar as the lower court applied the appropriate legal rule; the standard applicable to the arrest power constitutes a common example of a well-settled legal principle.¹⁵

In its response to a leave application, a respondent is not bound by the questions as framed by the applicant, or by the argumentative structure adopted by the applicant. It may be useful, perhaps even necessary, to reformulate the issues and to adopt a structure that is different to that of the applicant. However, it is important to identify clearly the points raised in the application, while setting out how the application fails to raise an issue of public importance.

3.2.3 Internal Procedure

As noted above, it is important to advise the Section as soon as an application for leave is received or served and to provide a copy. The Section maintains a log of all applications for leave involving the PPSC and ensures that the prescribed time limits are respected, including by providing assigned prosecutors with a timeframe. At this early stage, it is not necessary to prepare a briefing note (which is required for leave applications, as prescribed above).

¹⁴ R v Shepherd, 2009 SCC 35, [2009] 2 SCR 527 at para 20.

¹⁵ Criminal Code, s 495(1)(a); R v Storrey, [1990] 1 SCR 241 at p 249; R v Zacharias, 2023 SCC 30 at paras 27-28.

When opposing leave, which is the position in the vast majority of cases, a final draft of the response, approved by the appropriate authorities within the concerned regional office, must be sent to the Section within the delay, as described in the next subsection.

When any type of response other than opposing leave is considered, the coordinator must be advised promptly to allow sufficient time for a NLC meeting, if required, and for the approval of the DPP. Insofar as the coordinator chooses to refer the matter to the DPP for approval, the procedure to follow is essentially the same as that governs applications for leave to appeal. Once the DPP has agreed with the proposed position, the final approval of the response rests with the coordinator.

3.2.4 Timelines

The respondent has 30 days from the opening of a file by the Supreme Court to serve and file a response to an application for leave to appeal.¹⁶ The operative date is that of the letter sent by the Court to the applicant, with a copy to the respondent, advising that a file has been opened and that a file number has been assigned. A copy of that letter must be provided to the Section.

Where the response opposes the leave application, unless otherwise agreed, a draft of the response must be sent to the Section one week before the filing date to allow for review and approval by the coordinator. In other cases, a timeline should be established with the Section as soon as possible.

3.2.5 Required Documentation

Rule 27 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Canada and the Guidelines issued by the Registrar set forth the nature and format of the documentation required in a response to a leave application.¹⁷ The following documents are submitted, bound in a single booklet in the following order:

- a memorandum of argument similar in form to an applicant's memorandum with the necessary modifications;
- documents to which the response refers, if any.

Responses in letter format – Rule 27(3) provides that a response may take the form of a letter of no longer than two pages instead of a memorandum of argument. Letter-format

¹⁶ Rules, s 27(1). Prior to January 2014, the 30-day period began as soon as the application for leave was served, except for self-represented claimants, in which case the time to respond began only when the Court opened a file; the Court has extended that procedure to all applications for leave to appeal.

¹⁷ Templates are available from the Section.

responses are the norm within PPSC. A memorandum of argument will only be justified in the rare cases where more than a two-page letter is necessary to properly address the public importance criterion. If the filing of a memorandum of argument is considered, consultation with the coordinator must take place prior to pursuing that approach.

Considering the practice of using letter-format responses, affidavits and other supporting documents are rarely necessary, as is the case for books of authorities, especially since the Section adds hyperlinks, when available, to all sources cited in the letter-format response.

A certificate of counsel (Form 23A) must be served and filed with the response, which alerts the Court to any information that should not be publicly disclosed, along with a copy of supporting documentation, such as a court order or applicable legislation.

4. APPEALS

4.1 Appeals as of Right

Pursuant to s. 693(1)(a) of the Criminal Code, the Crown may appeal as of right in an indictable case on any question of law on which a judge of the court of appeal dissents. Sentence and summary case appeals require leave of the Court under s. 40 of the Supreme Court Act, even where a judge dissents in the provincial or territorial court of appeal.

Pursuant to s. 37 (10) of the Youth Criminal Justice Act, no appeal lies from a judgment of the court of appeal in respect of a finding of guilt or an order dismissing an information or indictment except with leave of the Court.¹⁸ For summary offences, leave must be sought pursuant to s. 40 of the Supreme Court Act. There are no appeals as of right to the Court for youth criminal justice matters.

4.1.1 Decision-Making Authority: The DPP

Although it can be argued that the public importance of appeals as of right is implicitly recognized by the Criminal Code, it is up to the DPP to decide whether an appeal will be pursued by taking into consideration the recommendation of the NLC.

4.1.2 Applicable Test: “Modified Public Interest”

The DPP’s decision to launch an as of right appeal on the public interest criterion is applied with a flexible perspective, hence the adjective “modified”. It is not necessary to satisfy the public interest criterion proper, but rather to show the usefulness of submitting the appeal to the Court.

¹⁸ Section 37(10) of the YCJA was found to be constitutional by the Supreme Court in R v CP, 2021 SCC 19.

Recourse to the modified public interest criterion for as of right appeals flows from the fact that not all such appeals deserve the attention of the Court. For instance, the application of a legal standard to a set of facts, such as whether a particular scenario amounts to reasonable grounds for an arrest or search, is a question of law for appellate purposes which may not require clarification. Nevertheless, it may be in the public interest to take the matter to the Supreme Court; for example, where there is a need to re-establish a guilty verdict for particularly serious offences, or to avoid retrying a mega-case, or to consider a crime that has a substantial impact on the community in which it was committed.

In applying the modified public interest test for appealing as of right, the policy considerations relevant to the decision to prosecute must be assessed,¹⁹ as is required for all the stages of a prosecution, including appeals.

4.1.3 Internal Procedure

The procedure for applications for leave to appeal applies to appeals as of right.²⁰

4.2 Appeals with Leave

When the Court grants the Crown's application for leave to appeal, a notice of appeal must be filed within 30 days from the judgment granting the application.²¹ No internal procedure is required. Consultation takes place with the Section which will serve and file the notice of appeal.

4.3 Notice of Appeal

4.3.1 Time Limits

The time limit to file a notice of appeal is 30 days from the Court's decision to grant leave.

For appeals as of right, the 30-day time limit begins on the date of the appellate court's judgment.²² As noted under section 3.1.4, the distinction between the judgment and the reasons for judgment must be borne in mind as deadlines begin to run from the time the lower court renders judgment, even if the reasons are released later.

¹⁹ See PPSC Deskbook, Guideline "2.3 Decision to prosecute".

²⁰ See section 3.1.3.

²¹ Supreme Court Act, s 58(1)(b).

²² Supreme Court Act, s 58(1)(b).

4.3.2 Required Documents²³

For appeals by leave, it is sufficient for the notice of appeal to indicate that the appellant is appealing the lower court's judgment, without having to state the issues on appeal.

In the case of appeals as of right, the notice of appeal must specify the grounds of appeal and must be accompanied by a copy of the judgment and reasons being appealed from.²⁴ The grounds of appeal are limited to those questions of law on which there was a dissent in the court of appeal.²⁵ A party wishing to raise any additional issue must apply for leave.

4.4 Constitutional Questions

It used to be the prerogative of the Chief Justice of Canada, or of a designated puisne judge, to formulate constitutional questions. Since 2016, with the repeal of Rules 60 and 61, this is no longer the case.²⁶ The responsibility to formulate constitutional questions now lies with the parties, without any intervention from the Court.

Such questions are reserved for appeals that involve a challenge to the constitutional validity, applicability or inoperability of federal or provincial laws or regulations, or a challenge to the constitutional validity or applicability of common law rules.²⁷ Generally speaking, in addition to division of powers cases, constitutional questions are appropriate when the remedy sought falls under s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982, as opposed to s. 24 of the Charter. Proposed constitutional questions must clearly identify the impugned provisions or common law rule as well as the general nature of the alleged constitutional deficiency. It is preferable, but not mandatory, to agree with the other parties on the formulation of the constitutional question.

Pursuant to Rule 33(2), a notice of constitutional question in Form 33B shall be filed by the appellant, as a schedule to the notice of appeal, or by the respondent, if the issue has been raised by the respondent, within 30 days after leave to appeal has been granted or after the filing of the notice of appeal in respect of an appeal for which leave is not required.

The purpose of formulating constitutional questions is to ensure that the Attorney General of Canada, the attorneys general of the provinces, and the ministers of Justice of the territories are alerted to constitutional challenges, so that they may decide whether or not to intervene as of right; it also serves to advise the parties and other potential interveners of the constitutional issues before the Court.²⁸ Under Rule 33(3), a copy of the notice of ²³ A notice of appeal template is available from the Section.

²⁴ Form 33 of the Rules.

²⁵ Criminal Code, s 677 requires that the judgment of the court of appeal specify any grounds in law on which the dissent is based.

²⁶ Rules Amending the Rules of the Supreme Court of Canada, SOR/2016-271, s 35.

²⁷ Rules, s 33.

²⁸ Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v Rex, 2002 SCC 42, [2002] 2 SCR 559 at para 57.

constitutional question must be served by email on all other parties to the appeal, as well as on all attorneys general and ministers of Justice who are not already part of the procedure. The email shall contain hyperlinks, if applicable, to the decision granting leave, the judgment below, the provisions attacked and relied upon to mount the challenge. An attorney general who wishes to intervene as of right must serve and file a notice of intervention within four weeks after the service of the notice of constitutional question.

Since no specific rule provides a procedure to oppose an ill-founded or ill-formulated constitutional question, an objection to the filing of a notice of constitutional question should take the form of a sui generis motion pursuant to Rule 3 made to a judge of the Court.

The responsibility to formulate a constitutional question, or to take a position on the questions proposed by other parties, rests with the coordinator who shall consult with prosecutors assigned to the appeal.

4.5 Factum on Appeal

4.5.1 Decision-Making Authority: The DPP

All factums on appeal filed with the Supreme Court of Canada must be approved by the DPP following a recommendation by the NLC before being served and filed.

4.5.2 Internal Procedure

Prosecutors assigned to the appeal prepare a draft factum for the NLC's review and the DPP's approval.

Depending on the nature of the issues raised, it may be useful, even required, to consult stakeholders outside the PPSC during the preparation and drafting of the factum; for example, consultations may take place with Justice Canada's Human Rights Law Section for Charter issues or the Criminal Law Policy Section with respect to provisions of federal criminal legislation, including the Criminal Code.²⁹

It should be noted that a respondent can advance new arguments to defend the judgment appealed from since the respondent is not restricted to the points raised by the appellant. It is not necessary for the respondent to seek leave to cross-appeal to raise new arguments.³⁰ This rule is subject to the availability of a sufficient record to address the new argument, which may require a fresh evidence motion to supplement the record.³¹

²⁹ See PPSC Deskbook, Directive "1.3 Consultation within Government".

³⁰ Rules, s 29(3); Perka v The Queen, [1984] 2 SCR 232 at 240; R v Keegstra, [1995] 2 SCR 381 at 398-399.

³¹ Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v Rex, 2002 SCC 42, [2002] 2 SCR 559 at paras 58-59; R v KRJ, 2016 SCC 31, [2016] 1 SCR 906 at paras 59-60.

The draft factum, along with supporting documentation,³² is sent to the coordinator within agreed-upon deadlines. The coordinator then submits the draft to the NLC members. Meetings are called by the Section. They are usually held by videoconference. In exceptional circumstances, for instance, where there is insufficient time to hold a meeting, the coordinator may obtain the views of NLC members by other means.

Following the NLC consultation, the coordinator reports to the DPP.

Once approved by the DPP, the Section and assigned prosecutors finalize the factum, as well as the record and the book of authorities. No major substantive change can be made to the arguments after the DPP approval without prior consultation with the coordinator.

4.5.3 Time Limits

Unless otherwise ordered by the Court, appellants have 8 weeks from the filing of the notice of appeal to serve and file their factum, record and book of authorities;³³ the respondent has 8 weeks from the service of the appellant's factum, record and book of authorities.³⁴ The month of July is included in the computation of the time limit,³⁵ but the period from December 23 to January 3 is not.³⁶

Prosecutors are expected to abide by the deadline for submission of the draft factum agreed upon with the coordinator. It usually takes two weeks before the filing deadline to complete the internal procedure described above; that is, one week for the NLC members to prepare for the meeting, and one week for the NLC's suggested changes to be incorporated and for the DPP to review and approve the factum.

4.5.4 Form and Content of Factum

The appeal factum, like the memorandum of argument on leave, is divided into seven parts:³⁷

Part I: the facts, divided into two parts: first, an overview that, in a few paragraphs, summarizes the position adopted in the factum; second, a summary of the relevant facts, including the case's judicial history, if necessary;

Part II: a statement of the questions in issue; for the respondent, their position in response to the questions raised by the appellant;

Part III: a statement of argument;

³² A copy of other parties' factum and of the lower court judgment, if any.

³³ Rules, s 35(1).

³⁴ Rules, s 36(1).

³⁵ Rules, s 5(3).

³⁶ Rules, s 5.1.

³⁷ Rules, s 42(2).

Part IV: submissions as to costs which generally consist in making no submission;³⁸

Part V: the order sought, without costs;

Part VI: submissions on the impact that any sealing or confidentiality order, publication ban, classification of information in the file as confidential under legislation or restriction on public access to information in the file could have on the Court's reasons, if any, in the appeal;

Part VII: a table of authorities — including the relevant provisions of any statute, regulation, rule, ordinance, or by-law being relied on, and, if available, hyperlinks to the provisions — arranged alphabetically and setting out the paragraph numbers where the authorities are cited.

(It should be noted that when doing the last revision, the Section adds hyperlinks in both the argument and the table of authorities.)

Parts I to V of the factum must not exceed 40 pages.³⁹ Note this is the maximum and not the targeted length.

5. INTERVENTIONS

5.1 General Principles

5.1.1 Power of the DPP to Intervene

The DPP may intervene before any court regarding any matter that raises issues of public interest that may affect the conduct of prosecutions or criminal investigations.⁴⁰ This power extends to interventions before the Supreme Court of Canada, which have become much more common in criminal appeals since the Charter came into force in 1982.

5.1.2 Sharing Interventions with the Attorney General

The DPP shares intervention powers with the Attorney General of Canada who also has the authority to intervene in criminal cases.⁴¹ Where the Attorney General has exercised their authority to intervene, the DPP is precluded from doing so.⁴²

³⁸ Save exceptional circumstances, costs are not awarded in criminal matters: see R v M(CA), [1996] 1 SCR 500 at para 97.

³⁹ Rules, s 42(4). A template is available from the Section.

⁴⁰ Director of Public Prosecutions Act, s 3(3)(b) [DPP Act]. For a review of the general procedure that applies to interventions, see PPSC Deskbook, Guideline “3.15 Appeals and Interventions in the Provincial and Territorial Superior Courts and Courts of Appeal”.

⁴¹ DPP Act, s 14.

⁴² DPP Act, s 3(3)(b).

Under an informal agreement between the PPSC and Justice Canada, interventions relating to extraditions, or the constitutional validity of legislative enactments are undertaken by the Attorney General. Appeals pertaining to investigative powers, criminal procedure, evidence, and offences are undertaken by the DPP. This division is not rigid and may vary according to the specific circumstances of an appeal.

5.1.3 Two Types of Interventions: As of Right and with Leave

5.1.3.1 Intervention as of Right for Constitutional Questions

Federal and provincial attorneys general and territorial Justice ministers have the power to intervene as of right when a notice of constitutional question is filed in an appeal before the Court.

A party filing a notice of constitutional question must serve it on all attorneys general and ministers of Justice of the territories.⁴³ Attorneys general then have four weeks to serve on all other parties and file with the Registrar a notice of intervention without having to obtain leave to intervene from the Court.⁴⁴

5.1.3.2 Intervention with Leave

All other interventions require leave of a judge of the Court on application made by filing a motion to intervene. Interventions are possible not only in appeals and references, but also at the application for leave to appeal stage.⁴⁵ Motions at the leave stage, however, are rare and the granting of leave rarer still.

5.2 Decision-Making Authority: The DPP

The DPP authorizes all interventions to the Supreme Court of Canada as well as before any other court on the recommendation of the NLC.

5.3 Criteria Applicable: “Interest and Usefulness”

The Court’s justices assess motions for intervention according to two criteria:

- the interest of the applicant in the questions raised;
- the usefulness to the Court of the proposed intervention.⁴⁶

The DPP’s interest in criminal investigations and prosecutions is usually easily demonstrated and poses little difficulty.

⁴³ See rubric 4.4. on constitutional questions.

⁴⁴ Rules, s 33(4).

⁴⁵ Rules, s 55.

⁴⁶ Rules, s 57.

Satisfying the usefulness criterion requires the applicants to set out in general terms their proposed submissions, their relevance, and the fact that they differ from those of the parties to the appeal, to avoid redundancy. The following examples are circumstances in which an intervention may be warranted:

- when one of the parties fails to raise a question of law relevant to the issue or to deal adequately with such question;
- when the intervener proposes a new interpretative approach to constitutional, statutory, or regulatory provisions or common law rules;
- when the intervener proposes a comparative law approach that is useful to the consideration of the questions in issue.

Normally, interveners cannot raise new questions, adduce further evidence, or otherwise supplement the record of the parties; basically, the intervener's submissions must fall within the scope of the appeal as defined by the parties.

5.4 Internal Procedure

5.4.1 Identification of Potential Cases for Intervention

The Section maintains a log of all Supreme Court of Canada appeals directly or indirectly related to criminal law or that may be of interest to the DPP. The Section identifies and tracks cases for possible intervention. Cases are monitored by the Section to abide by the deadlines prescribed for intervention motions. The Section liaises with other prosecution services when considering a possible intervention.

The coordinator and the Justice Canada liaison officer identify potential cases for intervention and determine whether it is more appropriate for the DPP or the Attorney General of Canada to act on the file.

The coordinator considers suggestions made by prosecutors with respect to a potential intervention.

5.4.2 Procedure for DPP Authorization

When the coordinator considers that an application for intervention should be made, the coordinator prepares, or asks prosecutors to prepare, a memo for the NLC justifying a DPP intervention.⁴⁷

The Section calls a meeting of the NLC to consider the memo and to formulate a recommendation to the DPP. The memo and accompanying documents⁴⁸ must be sent to the Section for distribution to NLC members enough in advance to allow sufficient time to consider the recommendation and for the DPP to review the case and decide. Generally, the NLC requires a week's notice prior to the meeting.

⁴⁷ A note template is available from the Section.

⁴⁸ The note must be accompanied by a copy of the relevant judgments appealed from and the factums filed with the Supreme Court and the court appealed from, if applicable.

In exceptional circumstances, for instance, where timelines do not permit the holding of a NLC meeting, the coordinator may instead select another mode of consultation.

Following the NLC consultation, the coordinator reports to the DPP.

After the DPP approves the filing of a motion for intervention, the Section prepare the relevant documentation for service and filing, with the assistance of assigned prosecutors.

5.5 Time Limits

5.5.1 Intervention as of Right

The Attorney General or the DPP has four weeks from the date of service of a notice of constitutional question to serve and file a notice of intervention. The month of July is included in the computation of time,⁴⁹ but the period from December 23 to January 3 is not.⁵⁰

5.5.2 Intervention by Leave

The DPP has four weeks from the filing of the appellant's factum to serve and file an intervention motion.⁵¹ The month of July is included in the computation of time,⁵² but the period from December 23 to January 3 is not.⁵³

Owing to the short period, the process for NLC consultation and DPP approval must be expeditious. A schedule must be agreed upon with the Section to meet the prescribed time limits.

5.6 Documentation Required

A motion for intervention is comprised of a notice of motion and an affidavit.⁵⁴

The notice of motion can simply refer to the affidavit which contains all the facts and information required to satisfy the two criteria: the interest of the DPP in the appeal and the usefulness of the proposed intervention. The Section in collaboration with the assigned prosecutors prepares the required documentation.

⁴⁹ Rules, s 5(3).

⁵⁰ Rules, s 5.1.

⁵¹ The time limit is 30 days for a motion for intervention in the case of an application for leave to appeal.

⁵² Rules, s 5(3).

⁵³ Rules, s 5.1.

⁵⁴ Precedents are available from the Section.

Although a factum in support of the motion may be filed, it is not necessary. Setting out the reasons for the intervention in an affidavit is permitted and is usually sufficient to provide the Court with the needed information to properly rule on the motion.

5.7 Intervener Factums

5.7.1 Decision-Making Authority: The DPP

The intervener factum must be approved by the DPP, on the recommendation of the NLC, before filing with the Court.

5.7.2 Internal Procedure

Prosecutors assigned to the appeal are responsible for preparing a draft factum for review by the NLC and approval by the DPP. Assigned prosecutors must provide the Section with a draft factum, together with the relevant documentation,⁵⁵ by an agreed-upon deadline. The Section distributes the draft factum and documentation to the NLC for review which usually takes place during a meeting called by the Section. In exceptional cases, the coordinator may use other methods of consultation if the circumstances warrant, such as where the time limits prevent a full meeting from being held.

Following the NLC consultation, the coordinator reports to the DPP.

If the DPP approves the draft factum, the Section and prosecutors assigned to the case finalize the factum and the book of authorities, if any. Once DPP approval has been obtained, no substantial changes can be made to the factum without prior consultation with the coordinator.

5.7.3 Time Limits

Unless otherwise ordered by the Court, the intervener has six weeks from the order granting leave to intervene to serve and file their factum and book of authorities, if any; in the case of an intervention for which leave is not required, the time limit is 16 weeks from the filing of the notice of intervention.⁵⁶ The month of July is included in the computation of time,⁵⁷ but the period from December 23 to January 3 is not.⁵⁸

Assigned prosecutors must submit a draft factum within the time limit agreed upon with the Section. It usually takes two weeks before the filing deadline to complete the internal procedure described above, that is, one week for NLC members to prepare for the ⁵⁵ The factum must be accompanied by a copy of the factums of the other parties and the judgment appealed from, if any.

⁵⁶ Rules, s 37.

⁵⁷ Rules, s 5(3).

⁵⁸ Rules, s 5.1.

meeting and one week for the NLC's suggestions to be incorporated and for the DPP to review the file and approve the factum.

5.7.4 Form and Content of the Intervener's Factum

The factum for intervention resembles that on appeal, with a few exceptions described below.

The factum cannot exceed 20 pages for interventions as of right and generally 10 pages for interventions by leave.

Given that the intervention should first and foremost address questions of law, it is generally not necessary to discuss the facts.

The intervener is not allowed to take a position on the outcome of the appeal. Instead, the intervener's contribution to the case is to enlighten the Court on the points of law relevant to the issues.

Part V of the factum is replaced by a request to make oral argument if permission is not already granted in the intervention order.

6. BRIEFING NOTE PURSUANT TO S. 13 OF THE DPP ACT

Under s. 13 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, the DPP must inform the Attorney General of Canada in a timely manner of any prosecution, or intervention that the DPP intends to make that raises important questions of general interest.

A s. 13 briefing note is required for all appeals, whether on leave or as of right, involving the federal Crown or the DPP as a party or as an intervener to an appeal before the Supreme Court of Canada.⁵⁹ That excludes applications for leave to appeal.

A note must be transmitted sufficiently in advance to allow the Attorney General to consider exercising his or her power to give direction or take over a prosecution.⁶⁰

A draft briefing note is prepared by the Section in collaboration with assigned prosecutors. The Section assumes the responsibility of finalizing the note internally for approval by the DPP.

⁵⁹ See PPSC Deskbook, Directive of the Attorney General of Canada: "1.2 Duty to Inform the Attorney General under Section 13 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act", at section 2.2.

⁶⁰ DPP Act, s 15.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.17 ENSURING TIMELY PROSECUTIONS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

August 25, 2016

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. FILE MANAGEMENT	3
2.1 Review of Files	3
2.2 Disclosure Readiness	4
2.3 Stays of Proceedings or Withdrawal of Charges	4
2.4 Prosecution Plans	4
2.5 Advancing Files	4
3. COURT APPEARANCES	5
3.1 Remand Dates	5
3.2 Judicial pre-trials.....	5
3.3 Adjournments.....	6
3.4 Re-elections.....	6
4. ADDITIONAL ISSUES	6
4.1 Ongoing Prioritization of Cases.....	6
4.2 Direct Indictments.....	7
4.3 Multiple Accused Prosecutions.....	7
4.4 Stays of proceedings by the Crown or the Court as a result of the Jordan timelines.....	7
4.5 Management of s 11(b) litigation.....	7

1. INTRODUCTION

In R v Jordan, 2016 SCC 27, the Supreme Court re-examined the Morin framework governing the determination of unreasonable delay. A majority of the Court decided to depart from Morin and substituted a new framework for analyzing delay under s 11(b) of the Charter. The new framework sets ceilings beyond which delay will be presumptively unreasonable: if the total length of delay from charge to the actual or anticipated end of trial (minus defence delay) exceeds 18 months, in cases going to trial in provincial court, or 30 months for cases going to trial in superior court, the ceilings will have been breached.

The new approach outlined in Jordan places an even greater emphasis upon the Crown to avoid, through appropriate case management, reaching the 18/30 month ceilings and in those cases where the ceiling is surpassed, to demonstrate that it did all it could to manage the prosecution. For managers, supervisors and prosecutors, this translates into vigorously following and building upon existing practices and policies relating to file management. Since Crown counsel do not control all of the levers to ensure the timely conclusion of a prosecution, the Jordan approach will necessarily implicate our relationships with the police, defence counsel and the Courts.

2. FILE MANAGEMENT

In Jordan, the Supreme Court emphasized the significance of the case management of the prosecution, in determining whether a prosecution should be stayed for unreasonable delay:

[70] It is not enough for the Crown, once the ceiling is breached, to point to a past difficulty. It must also show that it took reasonable available steps to avoid and address the problem before the delay exceeded the ceiling. This might include prompt resort to case management processes to seek the assistance of the court, or seeking assistance from the defence to streamline evidence or issues for trial or to coordinate pre-trial applications, or resorting to any other appropriate procedural means. The Crown, we emphasize, is not required to show that the steps it took were ultimately successful — rather, just that it took reasonable steps in an attempt to avoid the delay.

Chief Federal Prosecutors must ensure that case management policies and practices to ensure that they are applied in a robust, consistent and effective manner. The following elements bear particular attention.

2.1 Review of Files

There must be timely, competent and effective review of each file to ensure that core disclosure is complete and the charges against each accused meet the test for prosecution. Ordinarily, initial review should occur no later than the second appearance. Each regional office must have a process in place for assigning files for timely review. Undertaking this review, making decisions based upon the review and clearly noting the results of the review will enhance effectiveness and efficiency.

Responsibility for file review at each stage of the prosecution must be clear. Any Crown should be able to quickly and confidently see the results of the review, the actions taken and any changes in circumstances. This is especially important when other Crowns are required to deal with the file due to changed scheduling requirements or opportunities. This information must be clearly recorded and readily accessible in the file.

The nature of the review expected of counsel will intensify as the case advances. Counsel's review at earlier stages of the proceeding will necessarily be less detailed than that required in preparation for the preliminary inquiry or trial. Nonetheless, for the low and medium complexity cases¹, counsel should be clearly identifying which witnesses are required, determining resolution positions and estimated preliminary inquiry or trial time and indicating them on the file and, at the appropriate time, communicating them to defence counsel. The more detailed review in preparation for a preliminary hearing or trial must be outlined in detail in the file to permit transfer of the file to other counsel if required to accommodate scheduling exigencies.

¹ High complexity files must comply with the guideline contained in Chapter 3.1: Major Case Management

2.2 Disclosure Readiness

Chief Federal Prosecutors must ensure that understandings and practices regarding Crown expectations for the completion of disclosure by investigators reflect the Jordan framework.

Focused communications with the regional management of investigative agencies should occur to reinforce the expectations and emphasize the impact that delays can have on a successful prosecution. The escalation from the line prosecutors and investigators to managers to resolve disagreements about the file should aim for resolution of disagreements at the lowest levels possible.

The need to move more expeditiously with file management decisions must not jeopardize the Crown's ability to fulfill its obligations with respect to providing disclosure and safeguarding sensitive information, including privileged information and privacy interests. Chief Federal Prosecutors must ensure that adequate mechanisms are in place to ensure such obligations can be fulfilled without impeding the expeditious progress of the file.

2.3 Stays of Proceedings or Withdrawal of Charges

In cases where it has been determined on either initial or subsequent review that the Decision to Prosecute² criteria are not met, charges must be stayed or withdrawn in a timely fashion. Supervisors should be available for consultation with counsel especially in relation to files with particular sensitivities relating to disclosure, for example, unusual confidential informant issues.

2.4 Prosecution Plans

Prosecution Plans must be prepared in all cases rated as high complexity, as set out in Chapter 3.1. Jordan highlights the importance of strict compliance with this policy in order to anticipate issues and minimize delay, and to be in a position to assert that the Crown has taken reasonable steps to do so. Ideally, Prosecution Plans should be prepared in advance of charges being laid. Prosecution Plans must be approved by the Chief Federal Prosecutor, and the Chief Federal Prosecutor is responsible for ensuring that appropriate cases are referred for review by the Major Case Advisory Committee as set out in Chapter 3.1.

2.5 Advancing Files

Mechanisms must be in place to ensure that files do not languish or move forward without ongoing appropriate follow-up with the police, the defence counsel and the court.

Follow-up must be ongoing with the police on disclosure, witness availability and trial preparation. Communications with the defence should be undertaken in a timely way to determine the suitability and completeness of disclosure, readiness for trial, estimates of time for the trial (or preliminary inquiry) and defence election. These communications should occur in the ordinary course and standardized letters should be developed in each region for this purpose.

² Chapter 2.3 : Decision to Prosecute

Chief Federal Prosecutors must ensure that a system is in place for requiring supervisors to review the handling of files within their team. Initial responsibility for supervision of the processes remains with the team leader/supervisor. This responsibility includes to ensure consistency, the substantive quality of the decisions in the file, the management of the physical or electronic file itself as well as mentoring and instruction.

In any case where it becomes apparent that the 18/30 month ceilings will be breached (including cases already in the system at the time Jordan was decided), Crown counsel must assume that a s 11(b) application will be brought in the absence of a specific undertaking to the contrary by defence counsel. Any necessary transcripts should be ordered in a timely way so as to ensure no additional delay is occasioned.

3. COURT APPEARANCES

3.1 Remand Dates

Crown counsel must be prepared to set preliminary inquiry or trial dates at the earliest opportunity after core disclosure has been completed. At each stage, Crown counsel must ensure that the record will provide an adequate demonstration of the proactive management of the file. In the early stages, Crown counsel would be confirming on the record that disclosure has been made and that the Crown is prepared to set pre-trial dates or even a hearing date. When setting a preliminary inquiry or a trial date, Crown counsel should be prepared to provide some information on the record about the file's complexity, in order to explain the time being sought for the completion of the hearing or trial. Particularly, Crown counsel should indicate on the record the number of witnesses to be called, the expectation that defence will bring a Charter application (if you are aware of it), the voluminous material disclosed, and other pertinent matters.

Crown counsel should invite defence counsel to detail any pre-trial applications they intend to bring, including the potential time requirements. Any concessions or narrowing of the issues should be noted on the record as part of explaining the factors considered in estimating hearing time. Crown counsel should note on the record any attempts made with defence counsel to obtain concessions or narrow the issues. This, of course, would be to demonstrate due diligence by the Crown where delay is occasioned by the necessity to secure a large block of time, especially if that block subsequently proves unnecessary because issues are subsequently narrowed.

Where available dates for hearings, particularly for lengthy matters, will exceed the 18/30 month ceilings set by Jordan, Crown counsel should consider asking the court to set aside additional time for the hearing of a s 11(b) application, unless defence counsel is prepared to state on the record that no such application will be made. Crown counsel may also consider asking the court to set deadlines for defence to file Charter notices in sufficient time to permit the obtaining of any necessary transcripts for the proper hearing of a s 11(b) application.

3.2 Judicial pre-trials

Crown counsel should seek to identify in advance any issues which might be usefully canvassed at pre-trials, and provide any relevant material, including caselaw, to defence counsel. Crown counsel should be cognizant that matters discussed at pre-trial hearings may form part of the record at a s 11(b) hearing. For this reason, counsel should ensure that a record exists of pertinent matters discussed and positions taken at the pre-trial. This would include resolution positions put forward by either side, time estimates, elections, concessions or admissions made, concessions or admissions suggested by Crown but rejected by defence counsel, witnesses required or waived, and other pertinent matters. Matters which, in any given jurisdiction, are recorded by the pre-trial judge and form part of the court record need not necessarily be recorded separately in the Crown file. Where appropriate, matters discussed at the pre-trial should be reduced to writing and communicated to defence counsel. In some instances, in jurisdictions that permit it, Crown counsel may request that pre-trials be conducted on the record because it is anticipated that the transcript of the pre-trial may be required on a s 11(b) hearing.

3.3 Adjournments

Crown counsel must ensure that it is clearly indicated on the record who asked for the adjournment, the reasons and the effect upon time to trial. Requests for adjournments to accommodate the convenience of police witnesses, for example, vacation not previously indicated when the trial date was set, should not ordinarily be made in the absence of extenuating circumstances, such as miscommunication or innocent mistake. Where extenuating circumstances do exist, counsel must give careful consideration to whether accommodating the request would jeopardize the s 11(b) integrity of the proceeding.

Where the defence requests the adjournment, defence should ordinarily be asked whether resulting delay is waived. Defence requests for adjournments should not be consented to in the absence of such a waiver, unless extenuating circumstances exist such that it would be unreasonable for the Crown to insist on such a waiver – for example, where the reason for the defence request arises from some failure or inaction on the part of the Crown or the police, such as late disclosure.

3.4 Re-elections

Crown counsel should require that accused waive the delay stemming from the re-election from a superior court trial to a provincial court trial as a condition of its consent. The majority in Jordan recognized that it would be reasonable to do so. (para 62). This is significant because the change in level of court moves the yardstick from 30 months to 18 months. Before Crown counsel consent, the defence must agree to waive all delay since the date of the original election to Superior Court, in effect re-setting the clock to within the 18 months contemplated at the level of a provincial court trial without a preliminary hearing.

4. ADDITIONAL ISSUES

4.1 Ongoing Prioritization of Cases

Systems should be developed to permit the re-scheduling of preliminary inquiries and trials to accommodate moving up cases of higher priority or which are in danger of exceeding the 18/30 month ceilings. Some jurisdictions may be able to implement such systems within the current framework used by the court. In jurisdictions where such systems would be a departure from the norm, consultation with the judiciary and defence bar will be required.

4.2 Direct Indictments

The potential that an unreasonable delay will occur and result in a stay is a well-established reason in Chapter 3.6 for seeking a Direct Indictment. While the risk of stays for unreasonable delay may be heightened as a result of Jordan, the requirements of Chapter 3.6 will still need to be met.

4.3 Multiple Accused Prosecutions

Ongoing consideration must be given to the question of whether the accused should be tried together or if severance is appropriate. In addition to the ongoing rigorous application of the decision to prosecute standard against all of the accused in a multiple accused prosecution, it will also require a realistic and pragmatic consideration of the delay implications of proceeding against multiple accused, in particular the difficulty of finding dates available to numerous defence counsel. The minimisation of the risk of perverse or contrary verdicts that could result from severance must also be borne in mind.

4.4 Stays of proceedings by the Crown or the Court as a result of the Jordan timelines

When this occurs, the term “Jordan stay” is to be recorded in the note field in iCase so that it can be searched subsequently. Crown stays of proceedings / withdrawals and judicial stays of proceedings must continue to be recorded as separate outcomes.

4.5 Management of s 11(b) litigation

CFP’s may consider assigning s 11(b) applications to a designated group of prosecutors, where feasible, in order to both maximize efficiencies in the handling of such litigation, and to effectively manage the development of the law in this area.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.18 JUDICIAL INTERIM RELEASE

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised June 20, 2024

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. OVERVIEW	3
2. THE PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE.....	3
2.1 The Right Not to Be Denied Bail Without Just Cause	4
2.2 The Right to Reasonable Bail.....	5
3. THE DECISION TO OPPOSE BAIL.....	6
3.1 Crown Onus Offences	7
3.2 Reverse Onus Offences	7
3.2.1 Conditional reverse onus provisions	7
3.2.2 Offence-based reverse onus provisions	8
3.3 Irrelevant Criteria	8
3.4 Background and Systemic Factors	8
3.5 Consultation.....	9
4. CONDITIONS OF RELEASE	10
4.1 Least Onerous Conditions in the Circumstances.....	10
4.2 Guidance on Specific Bail Conditions	11
4.3 Conditions to Protect Victims, Witnesses and Justice System Participants.....	12
4.4 Surety Releases.....	12
4.5 Cash Bails.....	13
4.6 The Opioid Crisis	14
5. THE BAIL HEARING	14
5.1 The Right to a Timely Bail Hearing.....	14
5.1.1 Seeking Adjournments.....	15
5.1.2 Lengthy Bail Hearings and Delay	15
5.2 Credible or Trustworthy Evidence	15
5.3 Cross-Examination of Sureties	16
6. BAIL FORFEITURE (OR ESTREATMENT)	16

1. OVERVIEW

Crown counsel's decision whether to oppose bail or consent to release is a challenging and important decision. The exercise of this discretion must focus on the statutory grounds for detention, described below:

The primary grounds: Detention is necessary to ensure that the accused attends court;

The secondary grounds: Detention is necessary for the protection or safety of the public, including victims or witnesses, having regard to all the circumstances including any substantial likelihood that the accused will, if released, commit an offence or interfere with the administration of justice; and

The tertiary grounds: Detention is necessary to maintain confidence in the administration of justice.

The grounds for detention must be balanced with the liberty interests of the accused, the impact that detention may have in a particular case (for example, loss of employment, severing of family ties, or the pressure to plead guilty), and whether any systemic factors resulted in the accused coming before the courts.

It is important that Crown counsel exercise their discretion in a timely fashion. Discretion must also be exercised with objectivity, independence, fairness, and without bias, prejudice, or animus towards the accused. Crown counsel must take active steps to set aside any biases when assessing the allegations and when assessing the appropriateness of a surety who offers to supervise the accused.

Crown counsel must apply the principle of restraint. Codified in s. 493.1 of the Criminal Code, the principle of restraint states the following:

In making a decision under this Part, a peace officer, justice or judge shall give primary consideration to the release of the accused at the earliest reasonable opportunity and on the least onerous conditions that are appropriate in the circumstances, including conditions that are reasonably practicable for the accused to comply with, while taking into account the grounds referred to in subsection 498(1.1) or (515)(10), as the case may be.

While Crown counsel must seriously consider all relevant factors in exercising discretion, the protection of the public and victims warrants special consideration.

2. THE PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE

The presumption of innocence is one of the most fundamental rights in Canadian criminal law. This right is enshrined in s. 11(e) of the Charter. Section 11(e) requires that detention occur only in a narrow set of circumstances, for specific purposes, and when it "is necessary to promote the proper function of the bail system.”¹ The denial of bail cannot be for “any purpose extraneous to the bail system.”² For example, Crown counsel must never seek detention for punishment, retribution, or reform.³

The protection afforded under s. 11(e) encompasses two components: (1) the right not to be denied bail without ‘just cause’; and (2) the right to “reasonable bail” in terms of any conditions imposed, including the quantum of any monetary form of bail.⁴ Both of these concepts are discussed below.

2.1 The Right Not to Be Denied Bail Without Just Cause

The Supreme Court has repeatedly made clear that the right not to be denied bail without just cause is an essential element of an enlightened criminal justice system.⁵ This principle entrenches the presumption of innocence and safeguards the liberty interests of an accused.

Just cause refers to the statutory grounds that justify pre-trial detention enumerated in s. 515(10) of the Code, and the reverse onus provisions in s. 515(6).

Section 515(10) sets out the grounds on which bail can be denied. Crown counsel bears the burden to justify detention on a balance of probabilities unless the offence is subject to a reverse onus. In general, there is just cause to deny bail where the accused’s detention is necessary on any of the statutory grounds set out earlier and summarized again below:

1. To ensure attendance in court (the “primary grounds”);
2. For the protection or safety of the public (the “secondary grounds”); or
3. To maintain confidence in the administration of justice (the “tertiary grounds”).⁶

Crown counsel must consider each of these grounds in arriving at a decision to consent to release or seek detention. All three grounds are equally capable of justifying a detention order. It is important to note that the tertiary ground is not a residual ground for use only where the primary and secondary grounds are not made out. Nor is this ground limited to exceptional circumstances. “It is a distinct ground that itself provides a basis for ordering the pre-trial detention of an accused.”⁷

Section 515(6) of the Code puts the onus on an accused to justify pre-trial release, if charged with certain offences or if certain conditions are met. Since this reverse onus amounts to a presumption of detention, it is an exception to the basic entitlement to bail

¹ R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 40; R v Pearson, [1992] 3 SCR 665 at p. 693; R v Morales, [1992] 3 SCR 711 at 737; R v Hall, 2002 SCC 64 at para 16.

² R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 40; R v Pearson, [1992] 3 SCR 665 at p. 693; R v Morales, [1992] 3 SCR 711 at 737; R v Hall, 2002 SCC 64 at para 16.

³ R v Morales, [1992] 3 SCR 711 at 753; R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 67.

⁴ R v St-Cloud, 2015 SCC 27 at para 27.

⁵ R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 67.

⁶ Criminal Code s. 515(10)

⁷ R v St-Cloud, 2015 SCC 27 at para 87. The same paragraph also conveniently summarizes the principles governing the application of s. 515(10)(c).

contained in s. 11(e) of the Charter.⁸ In these cases, there is just cause to deny bail where the accused fails to prove - on a balance of probabilities - that their detention is not justified on the three grounds for detention. These rules reflect Parliament's intention to make bail more difficult to obtain in certain circumstances.⁹

2.2 The Right to Reasonable Bail

Every accused has the right to reasonable bail.¹⁰ Reasonable bail refers to the terms of bail, the quantum of any monetary amount, and the restrictions or conditions imposed. When seeking to impose conditions on bail, Crown counsel must be mindful of two principles: the principle of restraint and the principle of review.

In applying the principle of restraint, Crown counsel must only seek conditions that are:

- Clearly articulated;
- Minimal in number;
- Necessary;
- Reasonable;
- The least onerous in the circumstances; and
- Sufficiently linked to the specific risks posed by the accused with regard to the grounds for detention in s. 515(10) of the Code.¹¹

Bail conditions must be tailored to the individual risks posed by the accused,¹² designed to address specific risks regarding the grounds for detention and imposed only to the extent necessary.¹³

The principle of review requires the Crown to “carefully scrutinize bail conditions at the release stage whether the bail is contested or is on consent.”¹⁴ This means that Crown counsel should consider the necessity of all bail conditions, even those that the accused has suggested or consented to. Crown counsel must also review the bail conditions throughout the course of a prosecution to determine their continued necessity.

The principles of restraint and review are there to ensure the bail system operates fairly for everyone. When the bail system permits the imposition of unnecessary and unreasonable bail conditions, existing inequalities in the justice system tend to become exacerbated. This

⁸ R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 39, citing R v Pearson, [1992] 3 SCR 665 at 693.

⁹ The Honourable Justice Gary T. Trotter, The Law of Bail in Canada 3rd ed (Toronto: Carswell, 2022), at section 5.9. See also R v Pearson, [1992] 3 SCR 665.

¹⁰ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 20; R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 41.

¹¹ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at paras 6, 25, 89, 100; R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 67. This is also articulated in s. 515(2.01) of the Criminal Code.

¹² R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 88.

¹³ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at paras 25, 89.

¹⁴ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 6, 100.

is because overrepresented and marginalized groups are disproportionately subjected to these conditions and face more breach of bail charges as a result.¹⁵

For more on bail conditions, see section 4 of this Guideline.

3. THE DECISION TO OPPOSE BAIL

As explained earlier, the principle of restraint requires Crown counsel to seek the least onerous form of release that may be appropriate in the circumstances. This means that a release plan, with or without conditions, should be favoured over detention if the plan addresses the statutory grounds for detention.

Regardless of onus, Crown counsel must not seek detention in the following circumstances:

1. Where the decision to prosecute test has not been met. For more on the factors to consider, see Guideline 2.3 “The Decision to Prosecute”. If Crown counsel determines that there is no reasonable prospect of conviction or it is not in the public interest to prosecute the case, the charges must be withdrawn or stayed.
2. Where a custodial sentence is not appropriate, after considering all the known facts at the time.
3. The length of potential sentence is shorter than the time the accused would be in custody pending trial. Only in exceptional circumstances tied to the primary or secondary grounds can Crown counsel seek detention where the sentence is likely to expire before trial. If detention is ordered, Crown counsel must regularly and diligently review the situation to determine if new circumstances justify taking steps to release the accused.

Where the accused is charged with an offence against the administration of justice, such as a breach of a court order, Crown counsel must refer to specific guidance contained in Guideline 2.3 “The Decision to Prosecute”. That guideline sets out the circumstances in which Crown counsel can proceed with administration of justice offences. If it is appropriate to proceed with the prosecution, Crown counsel must refer to Guideline 3.20 “Judicial Referral Hearings” and consider whether to pursue a Judicial Referral Hearing if available in their jurisdiction. Judicial Referral Hearings must be strongly considered where the offence has not caused a victim physical or emotional harm, property damage, or economic loss.¹⁶

In cases that involve a spouse or intimate partner, Crown counsel must be conscious of the potential increased risk of harm (including physical, emotional, or psychological) on the victim. Crown counsel must seek a detention order where they consider it necessary for the safety and security of the victim or the public. For more on this issue, refer to Guideline 5.5 “Domestic Violence”.

¹⁵ See e.g., R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 79.

¹⁶ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14, at para 27.

3.1 Crown Onus Offences

Where the onus is on the Crown to justify detention, Crown counsel must not oppose bail unless there is just cause to deny bail under at least one of the three grounds for detention.

When deciding whether to seek detention for a Crown onus offence, Crown counsel must recognize the impact that a detention order would have on an accused. Access to disclosure and support services are limited in custody, and an accused person detained at the bail stage may feel pressure to plead guilty. Crown counsel must not take this decision lightly. The decision to seek detention must only be made where Crown counsel have substantial concerns, based on the circumstances of the particular file, on one or more of the three grounds for detention.

3.2 Reverse Onus Offences

Where the onus is on the accused, there is a presumption in favour of detention. Reverse onus offences reflect the reality that repeated acts of violence and serious offences committed with firearms or other weapons, have a harmful impact on victims and communities. Such offences undermine public safety and confidence in the criminal justice system. Therefore, if Crown counsel develops a genuine concern about public safety based on the information available to them, and these concerns are not addressed by the proposed release plan, the accused must be put to their onus at the bail hearing.

It is important to also note that the principle of restraint continues to apply when a person is charged with a reverse onus offence. This means that Crown counsel must not routinely ask the accused to show cause by way of a bail hearing because they are charged with a reverse onus offence.

For clarity, the reverse onus provisions do not operate to deny bail for all persons charged with these offences, only those persons who are unable to demonstrate that detention is not justified having regard to the grounds for detention. Therefore, Crown counsel must consider the release plan, and any other relevant information offered by the accused, to determine whether that plan alleviates concerns based on the statutory grounds for detention.

3.2.1 Conditional reverse onus provisions

Some offences only become reverse onus when certain conditions are met. Section 515(6)(b.1) makes intimate partner violence a reverse-onus offence if the accused has been previously convicted or discharged for similar offences. Section 515(6)(b.2) makes serious violent offences involving a weapon a reverse-onus offence if the accused has been previously convicted within five years of specific violent offences.¹⁷

Crown counsel must pay special attention to the presence of these conditions when deciding whether to oppose bail. While the decision to oppose bail should always be made on the totality of the circumstances, the presence of one or more of the conditions in s. 515(6) should generally favour opposing bail.

¹⁷ Crown counsel must refer to relevant confidential practice directives that provide guidance on the interpretation of these provisions.

3.2.2 Offence-based reverse onus provisions

Parliament has enumerated several offences (including drug and firearm offences) as reverse-onus in s. 515(6) of the Code.

As noted above, Crown counsel must consider the circumstances surrounding the offence, the circumstances of the accused, and the proposed release plan before asking the accused to show cause. Each case must be considered individually. For example, an accused who is alleged to be marginally involved in a drug-trafficking scheme or is alleged to have trafficked a small amount of drugs may more easily meet their onus.¹⁸

Only after considering all the relevant information, Crown counsel must decide whether it is appropriate to propose a consent release.

3.3 Irrelevant Criteria

In exercising discretion, Crown counsel must not be influenced by any of the following considerations:

- Opposing release or seeking conditions to increase the likelihood of the accused pleading guilty or to expedite the judicial process.
- Making a decision influenced by bias or discrimination based on race, nationality, ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, marital status, family status, genetic characteristics, disability, socio-economic status, or political association.¹⁹
- Opposing bail to permit the police or an investigative agency to complete their investigation. For guidance on seeking adjournments at a bail hearing, see section 5.1.1 below.
- Opposing bail to prevent further substance use.
- Making a decision to advance one's own personal or professional objectives, or those of the investigative agencies or members.

3.4 Background and Systemic Factors

The PPSC has made a commitment to not exacerbate the problem of overrepresentation of historically marginalized groups, including First Nations, Métis, Inuit, and Black accused persons.²⁰ Crown counsel must be aware of the fact of overrepresentation, and educate themselves about the specific overrepresented groups in their local jurisdiction.

¹⁸ See R v Pearson, [1992] 3 SCR 665 at 698.

¹⁹ This list is not exhaustive. Many of the factors listed are prohibited grounds of discrimination under the Canadian Human Rights Act, RSC 1985, c H-6.

Seeking the detention of a person who is a member of any marginalized or overrepresented group will be an exceptional measure in cases where the evidence does not point to a serious concern that their release will endanger the safety and security of the public or a victim.

Sections 493.2 and 515(13.1) of the Criminal Code require that particular attention be given to the circumstances of First Nations, Métis and Inuit accused who are more likely to be denied bail and are overrepresented in the remand population.²¹

Crown counsel must consider all available information about background or systemic factors that played a role in the accused's criminal record or their current charges. Crown counsel must be open to receiving informal information from the accused about their background, since a formal Gladue report or Impact of Race and Culture Assessment (IRCA) may not be available at the bail stage. Such informal information may include a Gladue report or IRCA that was used by the accused in a previous case.

Seemingly neutral factors that might otherwise influence the decision to seek detention, must be carefully scrutinized. Unemployment, lack of stability in housing, or sureties without significant means may simply be reflective of socioeconomic conditions in a given community. These factors are not relevant to the assessment of the suitability of a release plan. An accused's lack of access to accommodation, resources, networks or supports must not prevent them from obtaining bail if they are otherwise releasable, since such support systems are not available to everyone.

Crown counsel must balance these considerations carefully where the victim may also be overrepresented as victims of violence in Canada.

3.5 Consultation

Crown counsel must make reasonable efforts to gather relevant information from the accused before deciding whether to seek detention or concede that the accused has met their onus. Crown counsel must be receptive to any trustworthy or credible information.

Where appropriate, Crown counsel should obtain information from a victim or witness (through Crown Witness Coordinators) about any safety concerns that can be put before the court. This is particularly important in situations where the alleged conduct reflected in the charges may imply a potential threat to the victim or witness.

²⁰ There are many different overrepresented groups in pre-trial detention.

²¹ R v Gladue, [1999] 1 SCR 688 at para 65 (Cory and Iacobucci JJ for the Court); R v Summers, 2014 SCC 26 at para 67; and R v Myers, 2019 SCC 18 at para 26. Section 515(13.1) also requires a justice to include in the record a statement that sets out how they determined whether an accused is from a vulnerable population, and how they considered the accused's personal circumstances.

Information from victims and witnesses may also assist in crafting release conditions necessary to address the secondary ground. This can be important in small or remote communities, where public amenities and alternative housing arrangements are limited. In these communities, bail conditions may need to be explicit about the manner in which potentially threatening interactions will be prevented.

Section 515(12) provides that even when an accused has been detained, the justice may order that the accused abstain from communication with a victim or witness or any other person named in the order. Section 515(13) requires the justice to specifically state that they have considered the safety and security of every victim of the offence, and the security of the community.

Crown counsel must ensure that victims and witnesses are informed about the custodial status of the accused following the bail hearing. Section 515(14) requires the justice to provide a copy of the order to any victim of the offence upon request. For more on this, see Directive 5.6 “Victims of Crime”.

Crown counsel must also communicate with the police to ensure all relevant information that may impact the decision whether to oppose bail has been provided. Crown counsel are also expected to consult, if possible, with the relevant investigative agency regarding the release or detention of the accused, particularly regarding safety concerns for victims and witnesses. In all cases, Crown counsel’s position on bail must be made independently from the police.

4. CONDITIONS OF RELEASE

Criminal charges for violating bail conditions are common. Many historically marginalized groups are set up for a revolving door of charges because unnecessary bail conditions are imposed on them. Therefore, as stated under section 2.2 of this Guideline, Crown counsel must be diligent to ensure that conditions are tailored to the specific risks posed by the accused having regard to the grounds for detention in s. 515(10) of the Code.²²

4.1 Least Onerous Conditions in the Circumstances

Crown counsel must take into account the presumption of innocence before imposing any bail condition, and only seek conditions that are connected to the purpose of bail. Conditions that unjustifiably or unreasonably restrict the liberty of the accused must be avoided. For example, rigid curfews may interfere with employment, family gatherings, and daily life. Crown counsel must consider the impact any condition may have on an accused before seeking them.

Sections 515(2)(a) to (e) of the Code set out the increasingly restrictive types of release conditions available for the accused. Each provision “involves more burdensome conditions of release for the accused than the one before it.”²³ When read in combination with section 515(2.01), these provisions enshrine the ladder principle. By virtue of section 515(2.01), a justice shall not make an order for a more onerous form of release than the Crown has demonstrated is necessary.

²² See R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at paras 6, 25, 89; R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 67. This is also articulated in s 515(2.01) of the Criminal Code.

²³ R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 46.

It is important to note that the ladder principle does not apply to reverse onus situations.²⁴ However, the accused is still entitled to reasonable bail.²⁵ In practice, this means any conditions imposed on the accused must be sufficiently linked to concerns around flight risk, public safety or the administration of justice. The conditions must also not be more onerous than necessary.²⁶

4.2 Guidance on Specific Bail Conditions

Crown counsel should not seek conditions that are difficult for an accused to meet unless the conditions are necessary to address the primary or secondary grounds for detention.

The following conditions should only be sought if they are required to protect a victim or the community:

- Abstinence conditions and prohibitions on the possession of drug paraphernalia: Individuals with a substance-use disorder will not benefit from such conditions because they set the person up for a subsequent breach charge. Further, abstinence conditions tend to disproportionately affect marginalized groups.²⁷ As indicated in Section 4.4 of this Guideline, these types of conditions can also exacerbate the risk of overdose following the accused's release.

Crown counsel must recognize the impact of imposing these conditions and consider other options. For example, in order to ensure the safety of the public or victims, it may be appropriate to seek a condition that an accused not have contact with a victim or attend a location while under the influence of alcohol or controlled substance. For bail conditions imposed on those participating in Drug Treatment Court, Crown counsel must refer to Guideline 6.1 "Drug Treatment Courts".

- Rehabilitation conditions: Conditions intended to rehabilitate/treat an offender (e.g. "attend school" or "attend counselling") or that require the accused to follow the rules of a treatment facility are inappropriate and tend to disproportionately impact marginalized accused.²⁸ These conditions may also create situations where accused persons do not know what rules they need to follow in order to meet their bail requirements.²⁹

²⁴ See R v Abdulle, 2020 ONSC 7324 at para 10.

²⁵ The Honourable Justice Gary T. Trotter, The Law of Bail in Canada, 3rd ed (Toronto: Carswell, 2022), at section 6.9.

²⁶ See R v Kilbride, 2022 ONSC 1074 at para 23.

²⁷ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at paras 92, 97.

²⁸ For matters relating to young persons, see Guideline 5.4 "Youth Criminal Justice".

²⁹ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 93-95.

- "Red zone" or "no-go" conditions: Broad area restrictions risk isolating people from essential services or their support systems. They should be avoided whenever possible.³⁰ If Crown counsel determines that an area restriction is necessary to protect a victim or the public, the condition must be carefully tailored to the specific offence and to a specific location. Crown counsel must also ensure the restriction does not adversely impact the accused's ability to access services, supports, or employment.

The following conditions should be avoided:

- Keep the peace and be of good behaviour: This condition inevitably leads to additional, unnecessary charges.³¹ Although it may be an appropriate condition for peace bonds and probation orders, its breadth means it violates the principle of restraint and has a tenuous link to any of the three grounds to deny bail.³²
- Conditions that impact additional Charter rights: Crown counsel should avoid seeking any condition that subjects an accused to a lower standard for a search than would be otherwise required under the Charter.³³

It bears repeating that Crown counsel must never seek to impose conditions for the purpose of punishing the accused or for the purpose of reforming the accused.³⁴ Doing either is not in keeping with the presumption of innocence.

4.3 Conditions to Protect Victims, Witnesses and Justice System Participants

If an accused will be released on bail, Crown counsel must consider specific conditions that will ensure the safety and security of any victim, witness, or justice system participant. Sections 515(4.2) and (4.3) provide for specific orders for the protection of any person including victims, witnesses or justice system participants in relation to certain offences identified in those sections. See also the PPSC Deskbook for more detailed guidance: paragraph 3.2 "Judicial Interim Release" in Guideline 5.5 "Domestic Violence", and paragraph 4.4 "Bail Hearings" in Directive 5.6 "Victims of Crime."

4.4 Surety Releases

Crown counsel must only seek a surety release in exceptional circumstances. A surety release is one of the most onerous forms of release and must not be an automatic default or starting position.³⁵ In keeping with the ladder principle, the less onerous forms of release referred to in s. 515(2) must be considered and rejected before seeking a surety release.³⁶

³⁰ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 97.

³¹ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 94.

³² R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 94.

³³ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 98.

³⁴ R v Zora, 2020 SCC 14 at para 85.

³⁵ R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 67.

³⁶ See s. 515(2.03) of the Criminal Code, which calls for restraint in the use of surety releases.

Many accused will not be able to find a surety.³⁷ Even those who are able to find a surety often have difficulty doing so while in custody. These situations can prolong incarceration or prevent the release of an accused who does not require a detention order. Therefore, if a surety is required, Crown counsel should not routinely require them to be present in court.

While certain jurisdictions have their own practices, the presence of a surety in court is not a prerequisite to release. For many sureties, the process is disruptive, sometimes requiring that they miss work, school, or other responsibilities to attend court. Crown counsel should consider whether there is an alternative to testimony from the surety to assist the court in determining whether the use of a surety, and a particular person as a surety, is appropriate.

Crown counsel must take appropriate steps to satisfy themselves that the proposed surety is suitable and understands their role.³⁸ While it is not the Crown's role to provide legal advice to the proposed surety, Crown counsel may consider providing them with government-supplied information on the role of a surety.

Crown counsel's decision on the suitability of a surety must be free of any conscious and unconscious biases, institutional biases, and stereotypes. Both becoming aware of these biases, and taking active steps to set them aside, are necessary to ensure that conclusions made are objective and fair. Providing reasons is one way to ensure that decisions are made free of bias. Therefore, if a proposed surety is not suitable to the Crown, Crown counsel must convey to the accused the reasons why the surety is not suitable. Crown counsel should also advise what would make a suitable surety in the particular case to determine if such a surety is available to the accused.

4.5 Cash Bails

Cash bails may have the effect of denying bail to those without means. They may also have the effect of leaving the perception that those with significant means may more easily be granted bail. Both of these premises are problematic.³⁹

The Criminal Code permits a cash bail in any case. Where a cash bail is combined with a surety, however, sections 515(2)(d) and (e) only permit such an order where the accused is not ordinarily resident within 200 kilometres of the location of the arrest.

Despite these provisions, cash bails are discouraged and should only be used in exceptional cases. In any case where Crown counsel determines that a cash bail is necessary, the effect of such an order must not result in disadvantaging those with limited financial means.

³⁷ This may be particularly difficult in the Northern regions where the accused may be in custody hundreds of kilometers from their home.

³⁸ Appropriate steps should not become so exhaustive where the primary issue on the bail hearing becomes surety suitability. See R v Tunney, 2018 ONSC 962 at para 42.

³⁹ As the Supreme Court stated in R v Antic, 2017 SCC 27 at para 48, "Parliament included cash in the most onerous 'rungs' of the ladder for added flexibility, not because cash is more effective." The Supreme Court made clear that release with a pledge of money (as opposed to a deposit) has the same coercive power as release with a cash deposit.

These same principles apply when the accused is asked to pledge an amount of money to secure their release.

4.6 The Opioid Crisis

The number of opioid overdoses and deaths has caused a public health emergency in many jurisdictions. Crown counsel must be mindful of bail conditions that may increase the likelihood of short-term detention, thereby contributing to the risk of opioid overdoses. The short-term detention of an accused with a substance-use disorder may lower their tolerance for opioid use, putting them at heightened risk of an overdose upon release from custody.

Crown counsel must also be mindful of the risks posed for an accused with a substance-use disorder when they begin a period of custody because a lack of access to substances may have negative health impacts.

To avoid exacerbating this public health emergency, Crown counsel must avoid putting an accused in the position where they are likely to violate their bail due to a substance-use disorder. This can happen if Crown counsel seeks abstinence conditions or prohibitions against the possession of drug paraphernalia. As set out earlier, Crown counsel must not seek such conditions with an accused who has a substance use disorder. If such conditions have been imposed, Crown counsel must consider seeking a bail variation.

The determination of whether an individual has a substance use disorder can, in some cases, be inferred from the information provided by the investigating authority. This determination may also be based upon reliable information provided by the accused.

Where such conditions have been imposed, and breach charges or new charges are proposed, Crown counsel must take steps to have the new charges dealt with on an out-of-custody basis unless public safety concerns require detention. For example, Crown counsel can refer the accused to Drug Treatment Court, resort to the judicial hearing regime, or use alternative measures.

5. THE BAIL HEARING

In preparing for and conducting a bail hearing, Crown counsel should keep the following considerations in mind.

5.1 The Right to a Timely Bail Hearing

The right to reasonable bail includes the right to a timely bail hearing. If an accused is made to wait for their bail hearing for an unreasonably prolonged time, this can breach their right to reasonable bail.⁴⁰ Therefore, Crown counsel must ensure that the bail hearing proceeds expeditiously and as effectively as possible.

The Criminal Code requires a person who is arrested to be brought before a justice within 24 hours of arrest, or as soon as reasonably possible. Crown counsel must ensure that initial appearance proceeds within 24 hours, and that if the accused wants to run a bail hearing, the Crown is ready to proceed.

⁴⁰ R v Zarinchang, 2010 ONCA 286 at para 39.

5.1.1 Seeking Adjournments

Section 516(1) of the Criminal Code permits the Crown to seek an adjournment for up to three clear days. The accused must consent to a longer adjournment.

Crown counsel must only seek an adjournment for reasons based on good faith and informed by the requirement for a just cause analysis pursuant to s. 515 of the Code.⁴¹ Where a key piece of information is missing, or a key event is pending, it is legitimate to consider whether the accused may interfere with the investigation by destroying evidence, tampering with witnesses, or otherwise interfering with the administration of justice should they be released.⁴²

Crown counsel must never request adjournments for administrative convenience or to pursue evidence that will not have a bearing on the issues relevant to bail.

If an adjournment is sought, it must be for as short a time as necessary. Crown counsel must put the reasons for the request on the record.

5.1.2 Lengthy Bail Hearings and Delay

Crown counsel must be mindful of inherent delays that may occur when scheduling lengthy bail hearings. For example, some jurisdictions may require a date to be set in the future when a bail hearing will require a full day or more. To avoid unnecessary delay, Crown counsel must consider, based on the circumstances of the offence and the accused, whether it is possible to narrow the issues and reduce the amount of court time necessary to conduct the hearing.

For example, Crown counsel may seek admissions on non-controversial matters, limit the evidence tendered, or revise the synopsis into a concise summary.

5.2 Credible or Trustworthy Evidence

Section 518(1)(e) of the Code states that the judicial officer hearing a bail matter may receive evidence considered “credible or trustworthy.”⁴³ Depending on the jurisdiction, the Crown may read in a synopsis or present a witness for examination.

In either case, Crown counsel must ensure that the evidence they rely upon to make important decisions about bail, and any evidence presented at a bail hearing, is sufficiently credible and trustworthy. Crown counsel must not lead evidence they know is unavailable or unreliable.

⁴¹ See R v Donnelly, 2016 ONCA 988 at para 80.

⁴² Such concerns may be relevant to the secondary ground for detention as described in section 515(10)(b) of the Criminal Code. See R v Myers, 2019 SCC 18 at para 41; see also R v CM, 2021 ONSC 2948 at para 54.

⁴³ Toronto Star Newspapers Ltd v Canada, 2010 SCC 21, at para 28.

5.3 Cross-Examination of Sureties

Crown counsel, through the respectful and vigorous questioning of a surety, may assist the court in determining whether the proposed surety can adequately address a particular ground of detention that is an impediment to the release of the accused.

Before cross-examination, Crown counsel must take steps to identify and set aside any assumptions based on stereotypes or bias (whether conscious or not), about the surety or the nature of the relationship between the surety and the accused. Bias, prejudice, or stereotypes must never play any role in determining the adequacy of a surety.

6. BAIL FORFEITURE (OR ESTREATMENT)

When an accused breaches the conditions of their bail, they (or their sureties) may lose money that was pledged to secure their release. Part XXV of the Criminal Code, “Effect and Enforcement of Undertakings, Release Orders and Recognizances”, sets out the legal and procedural framework for the enforcement of recognizances, including forfeiture.⁴⁴ The test at a forfeiture hearing is not rigid. The main principle is to preserve the “moral pressure” or the “pull of bail” to ensure the effectiveness of the bail system.⁴⁵

In the event of a breach, Crown counsel must decide whether to pursue forfeiture proceedings. Not every breach will warrant forfeiture. For example, it may be appropriate to seek estreatment in cases where the accused absconded and remains at large. It may also be appropriate to seek estreatment where the accused fails to attend their trial.

In deciding whether to pursue forfeiture proceedings, Crown counsel must consider the following non-exhaustive factors:

- the need to protect the integrity of the justice system;
- the seriousness of the underlying charge;
- the seriousness of the breach;
- the surety’s diligence in supervising the accused;
- the degree of fault of any surety in the accused’s failure to comply with the order, including any efforts made by that surety to render the accused;
- change in financial circumstances on the part of the surety;
- whether forfeiture is practical in the circumstances of the particular case, including the surety’s ability to pay and the effects of forfeiture on them.⁴⁶

⁴⁴ Criminal Code s. 771.

⁴⁵ Canada (Attorney General) v Horvath, 2009 ONCA 732 at paras 43-44.

⁴⁶ See R v Biya, 2022 ONCA 99 at paras 16, 20.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.20 JUDICIAL REFERRAL HEARINGS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

January 07, 2020

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. OVERVIEW OF THE JUDICIAL REFERRAL HEARING REGIME.....	2
3. BACKGROUND AND PARLIAMENTARY INTENT IN ENACTING THE REGIME	3
4. THE LEGISLATIVE CONTEXT IN WHICH JUDICIAL REFERRAL HEARINGS ARE BEING INTRODUCED	4
5. OVERVIEW OF CROWN APPROACH – BALANCING PUBLIC SAFETY AND PARLIAMENT’S INTENT	5
6. HOW WILL JUDICIAL REFERRAL HEARINGS ARISE IN PRACTICE	6
7. JURISDICTION.....	6
8. PRE-CONDITIONS AND PROCESS.....	7
9. CONSEQUENCES	8
10. ARREST (SECTION 495.1) AND CANCELLING BAIL (SECTION 524).....	8
11. EXERCISE OF CROWN DISCRETION TO SEEK A JUDICIAL REFERRAL HEARING.....	9
12. RELEVANT FACTORS THAT SHOULD BE CONSIDERED	10
13. CONCLUSION	11

1. INTRODUCTION

The enactment of Bill C-75 is a Parliamentary initiative to address delay in the justice system. One of the important aspects of Bill C-75 is the introduction of judicial referral hearings as a means of dealing with so-called administration of justice offences, which are offences committed against the integrity of the criminal justice system including alleged breaches of bail. The relevant sections of Bill C-75, which amend the Criminal Code to create judicial referral hearings, come into force on December 18, 2019.¹ The purpose of this Chapter is to provide an overview of the new provisions and guidance to prosecutors.

2. OVERVIEW OF THE JUDICIAL REFERRAL HEARING REGIME

The new provisions in the Criminal Code allow the police or the Crown to direct administration of justice offences to a judicial referral hearing as an alternative to charging the accused with a new offence and resorting to s. 524 of the Code. Judicial referral hearings are available as long as the alleged administration of justice offence has not caused harm to a victim, which includes physical or emotional harm, property damage or economic loss. At a judicial referral hearing, the judge or justice will review any existing conditions of release and could decide to take no action, release the accused on new conditions or detain the accused, depending on the particular circumstances of the accused and the offence.

¹ An Act to Amend the Criminal Code, SC 2019, c. 25, s 407 (Bill C-75). The relevant sections creating judicial referral hearings come into force 180 days from Royal Assent, which took place on June 21, 2019.

It is important to recognize that a judicial referral hearing is initiated when a prosecutor “seeks a decision” under s. 523.1(2) of the Criminal Code. The new procedure does not impact police powers in non-charge approval provinces relating to whether or not to lay charges. The provisions operate by enhancing police and prosecutorial discretion by allowing them to compel an accused to appear at a judicial referral hearing as an alternative to laying or pursuing charges where appropriate, and when it is believed that an alleged breach should be brought to the attention of a justice or a judge.

A judicial referral hearing is essentially a review of the individual’s bail status, and the conditions that were imposed when the accused was released after being charged with an earlier offence. Guilt or innocence with respect to the alleged administration of justice offence is not considered. The alleged administration of justice offence will not appear on the accused’s criminal record. Any charges that have been laid regarding the administration of justice offence in question are dismissed by the judge or the justice once a decision is made with respect to the release status of the accused.²

If an accused fails to attend a judicial referral hearing, they cannot be charged with an additional offence for failure to appear. The issue can be dropped, the accused can be offered another hearing, or the accused can be charged for the original breach that was to be addressed through the judicial referral hearing.

3. BACKGROUND AND PARLIAMENTARY INTENT IN ENACTING THE REGIME

The overarching theme of Bill C-75 was to address delay within the justice system.³

The focus on administration of justice offences arose in part from the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (Senate Committee) who conducted a sweeping year-long study on delay and released its final report in June 2017.⁴ One focus of the Senate Committee study was so-called administration of justice offences. The most common of these offences include failing to comply with bail conditions, failing to appear in court and breaches of probation. The Senate study found that the number of individuals charged with administration of justice offences has been increasing, despite a consistent decrease in the volume and severity of other criminal offences in Canada.⁵

² Legislative Background: An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Youth Criminal Justice Act and other Acts and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, (Bill C-75 in the 42nd Parliament), Department of Justice Canada, August 2019, (<https://www.justice.gc.ca/eng/rp-pr/csj-sjc/jsp-sjp/c75/c75.pdf>) at 20-21.

³*Ibid*, at 5-14.

⁴ Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, June 2017, Delaying Justice is Denying Justice: An Urgent Need to Address Lengthy Court Delays in Canada.

⁵ According to the Department of Justice, administration of justice offences represent approximately 10 per cent of incidents reported by the police, while 40 per cent of cases in adult criminal courts include at least Concern over the volume of administration of justice offences in the justice system led the Senate Committee to explore options as extreme as the decriminalization of these offences. However, in the end the Senate Committee settled on the following⁶:

Recommendation 33: “The committee recommends that the Minister of Justice prioritize the reduction of court time spent dealing with administration of justice offences and develop alternative means of dealing with such matters with the provinces and territories.”

The creation of Judicial Referral Hearings represents the government’s response to the Senate Committee recommendation. The intention is to change the way some administration of justice offences are processed in order to reduce the pressure they place on the criminal justice system and thereby reduce delay.⁷ The goal of this approach is to allow for alternative and early resolution of minor breaches in an attempt to ensure that only reasonable and necessary conditions have been imposed. This approach is intended to be a more efficient alternative to laying a new criminal charge in response to a breach.⁸

4. THE LEGISLATIVE CONTEXT IN WHICH JUDICIAL REFERRAL HEARINGS ARE BEING INTRODUCED

Bill C-75 made a number of other amendments and additions to the judicial interim release provisions in the Criminal Code which provide some context in which the judicial referral hearing should be interpreted.

First, the principle of restraint has been codified.⁹ Primary consideration is to be given to the release of the accused “at the earliest reasonable opportunity and on the least onerous conditions ...including conditions that are reasonably practicable for the accused to comply with...”. The language used closely resembles that used by the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Antic.¹⁰ In making a decision on release, s. 493.2 specifies that the justice or judge “shall give particular attention to the circumstances of Aboriginal accused,” and “accused who belong to a vulnerable population that is overrepresented in the criminal justice system and that is disadvantaged in obtaining release under this Part.”

Second, in keeping with the language used in s. 493.1, and “the ladder principle” set out in Antic, additional provisions were added to s. 515, further codifying the principle of restraint. For example:

one administration of justice offence, most of which result in a guilty verdict and a jail sentence. See Burczyk, Marta and Christopher Munch, 2015, “Trends in offences against the administration of justice,” Statistics Canada Catalogue no. 85-002-X.

⁶ Supra, note 2.

⁷ Hansard: Number 300 (42nd Parliament, 1st Session) Thursday May 24, 2019, 1530h, 2nd Reading Speech, Minister of Justice.

⁸ Ibid.

⁹ Section 493.1

¹⁰ [2017] 1 SCR 509.

- a. section 515(2.01) requires the prosecution to show cause why any less onerous form of release would be inadequate;
- b. section 515(2.02) provides that a promise to pay shall be favoured over a deposit of money provided the accused or surety has reasonably recoverable assets; and
- c. section 515(2.03) provides that a surety be required only if the justice is satisfied that this requirement is the least onerous form of release possible for the accused in the circumstances.

Third, the reference to the condition that an accused abstain from alcohol or drugs is no longer specifically listed as one of the conditions a peace officer may impose when releasing an accused. This is consistent with the language found in s. 493.1 that conditions should be “reasonably practicable for the accused to comply with.” In order for a peace officer to impose such a condition, he or she would have to demonstrate that the condition was reasonable and necessary to ensure the safety and security of any victim of or witness to the offence.¹¹ A justice can presumably still impose such a condition using the general power to impose “any other reasonable conditions specified in the order that the justice considers desirable.”¹²

5. OVERVIEW OF CROWN APPROACH – BALANCING PUBLIC SAFETY AND PARLIAMENT’S INTENT

In deciding whether to pursue a judicial referral hearing, the Crown must consider the objectives of Parliament and balance them against the safety of the public and any victim of the alleged offence(s). The objectives of Parliament in making these amendments include: (1) decriminalizing non-compliance with bail conditions that is minor or ‘technical’ in nature and non-harmful to victims; (2) reducing the substantial burden that administration of justice offences place on the criminal justice system; and (3) providing a speedy process for amending release conditions to take into account the particular circumstances of the accused, including mental health issues, the existence of neurocognitive disorders such as fetal alcohol spectrum disorder (FASD), substance abuse disorders, and homelessness.¹³

Ideally, release orders under s. 515 will have been fashioned, ab initio, to be reasonably capable of being respected, thus reducing the likelihood that a judicial referral hearing will be necessary. However, the circumstances of the accused may change over time, requiring a review of the original order and the accused’s performance on bail.

In most cases, the existence or absence of physical or financial harm to a victim will be evident in the Crown brief, but it may be more difficult for prosecutors to assess whether a victim has suffered emotional harm because of an accused’s failure to abide by release conditions. If this is not clear from the Crown Brief, the Crown's office should seek further investigation by police.

¹¹ Section 501(3)(k).

¹² Section 515(4)(h).

¹³ Supra, note 2.

Where an accused has been issued an appearance notice to appear at a judicial referral hearing, or the prosecutor refers a charged breach to a judicial referral hearing, the prosecutor must consider the guidelines in Chapter 3.18 of the Deskbook which deal with Judicial Interim Release. The prosecutor should pay particular attention to any circumstances of the accused that have likely contributed to their failure or inability to comply with conditions as well as s. 493.2 of the Criminal Code where applicable.

6. HOW WILL JUDICIAL REFERRAL HEARINGS ARISE IN PRACTICE

Judicial referral hearings introduce a new Criminal Code process through which certain administration of justice offences may be resolved summarily without the need for an information to be sworn and without the necessity of a trial. Listed offences to which the new provisions apply consist of failing to comply with a summons, appearance notice, undertaking or release order; and failure to attend court as required. The process allows a judge or justice to review the reasonableness of bail or other release conditions and to take appropriate action in keeping with the overall intent of the related legislative changes as outlined above.¹⁴

There are two pathways to the judicial referral hearing process. Peace officers have been given discretion to initiate the judicial referral hearing process. Pursuant to s. 496 of the Criminal Code, they may issue an appearance notice to a person to appear at a judicial referral hearing. The officer must have reasonable grounds to believe that a person has committed an administration of justice offence, and that the failure to comply or appear did not cause a victim "physical or emotional harm, property damage or economic loss."¹⁵ Such an appearance notice is issued "without laying a charge," such that all that is under review at the hearing is the accused's status on judicial interim release for the original charge.

The second route to a judicial referral hearing is when an information has been sworn charging the accused with an administration of justice offence, and the Crown exercises a discretion to seek a judicial referral hearing as opposed to pursuing the charge and seeking recourse to s. 524 of the Code.

7. JURISDICTION

The jurisdiction for a justice or judge to hear and decide a judicial referral hearing is set out in s. 523.1 of the Criminal Code. If the administration of justice offence arises from a bail order of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction under subsection 522(3), it is that ¹⁴ While this outline will focus on adult criminal processes, there are corresponding provisions for administration of justice offence prosecutions pursuant to the Youth Criminal Justice Act.

¹⁵ Section 496 of the Criminal Code.

court that must hear the judicial referral hearing¹⁶. Otherwise, the hearing may take place before a justice.¹⁷

There is some uncertainty about the extent to which each province and territory will support the implementation of judicial referral hearings, for example, by creating dedicated courts where such hearings routinely take place. It is clear from the legislation, however, that where the prosecutor seeks a decision under s. 523.1(2) it is mandatory for the justice to conduct the matter in the context of a judicial referral hearing. Thus, the Crown should exercise its discretion in accordance with the will of Parliament, with due regard for the needs of public safety, and pursue judicial referral hearings where appropriate.

It should be noted that s. 523.1 does not include a legislative equivalent to s. 518(1) which allows a justice at a judicial interim release hearing to make inquiries “on oath or otherwise,” and consider any evidence “considered credible or trustworthy.” While the amendments creating judicial referral hearings do not specify an exact procedure or what kind of evidence is contemplated, the Crown should bear in mind that the objective of the legislation is to reduce the strain on court resources and reduce delay.¹⁸

8. PRE-CONDITIONS AND PROCESS

In order for a court to hold a judicial referral hearing, certain pre-conditions must be satisfied. First, a peace officer must have issued an appearance notice pursuant to s. 496, or a charge must have been laid. Second, the Crown must exercise its discretion to “seek a decision” under the judicial referral hearings.¹⁹ If the conditions have been met, the purpose of the hearing is to inquire into whether the accused failed to comply with a bail order or failed to attend court, and if so to review the conditions of release.

If satisfied that an administration of justice offence occurred and did not cause a victim physical or emotional harm, property damage or economic loss, the judge or justice shall review the relevant conditions of release and exercise one of the following powers:

- take no action;²⁰

¹⁶ Section 523.1(1)(a) of the Criminal Code. In the Yukon and Northwest Territories, it is a judge of the Supreme Court and in Nunavut, a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice.

¹⁷ A justice is defined under s. 2 of the Criminal Code as, “a justice of the peace or a provincial court judge, and includes two or more justices where two or more justices are, by law, required to act or, by law, act or have jurisdiction.”

¹⁸ It is recognized that the specific procedural and evidentiary requirements may differ in accordance with regional practices and the requirements of the judiciary. The Crown should advocate in favour of a procedure that is as streamlined and efficient as possible in accordance with local practices.

¹⁹ Section 523.1(2).

²⁰ Section 523.1(3)(a).

- cancel the summons, appearance notice, undertaking or release order and either make a new release order under s. 515 of the *Criminal Code*²¹ or issue a detention order²² if the Crown shows cause,²³; or
- remand the accused to custody for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act.²⁴

9. CONSEQUENCES

Certain consequences flow automatically from the completion of a judicial referral hearing. When the court makes a decision at a judicial referral hearing, and a charge has been laid, the judge or justice “shall” dismiss the charge.²⁵ The focus at a judicial referral hearing is on whether the accused did or did not fail to comply with an order or failed to appear. There is no finding of guilt or innocence, and no criminal record arises from the administration of justice offence. If a judge makes a decision at a judicial referral hearing, no charges may be laid by information or indictment in relation to the failure to comply or appear that was the subject of the hearing.²⁶ As noted above, if the accused does not attend their judicial referral hearing pursuant to a s. 496 appearance notice to do so, they cannot be charged with the offence of failure to appear.²⁷ When this happens, the options are to drop the matter, offer the accused another hearing, or charge the accused for the breach that was to have been addressed by way of a judicial referral hearing.

10. ARREST (SECTION 495.1) AND CANCELLING BAIL (SECTION 524)

Peace officers retain the power to arrest without warrant for the purposes of having an accused appear before a judge or justice pursuant to section 524 of the Code. Section 495.1 of the Criminal Code authorizes a peace officer to arrest an accused without warrant for the purposes of having the accused dealt with under s. 524. The officer must have reasonable grounds to believe that an accused has or is about to contravene a summons, appearance notice, undertaking or release order or reasonable grounds to believe the accused has committed an indictable offence while subject to a summons, appearance notice, undertaking or release order. This power of arrest was formerly set out in s. 524(2) of the Code and remains the mechanism by which an accused can be kept in custody for the purposes of a s. 524 application.

²¹ Section 523.1(3)(b)(i).

²² Section 523.1(3)(b)(ii). If the judge or justice makes a detention order, they must provide reasons.

²³ It should be noted that unlike other instances of failure to comply with a release order which place the accused in a reverse onus for the purposes of obtaining release on bail (see ss. 515(6)(c) and 524(4)), the judicial referral hearing process requires the Crown to show cause why a person’s detention in custody is justified pursuant to ss. 515(10) of the Criminal Code.

²⁴ Section 523.1(3)(c).

²⁵ Section 523.1(4).

²⁶ Section 523.1(5).

²⁷ This is by operation of ss. 145(3) and 508(b)(i) of the Code. Section 145(3) makes it an offence to fail to attend court when required to do so pursuant to an appearance notice which has been confirmed under s. 508. Pursuant to s. 508(b)(i), a justice may confirm an appearance notice when a related information has been laid. Because s. 496 appearance notices do not contemplate the laying of an information, a failure to attend court pursuant to a s. 496 appearance notice cannot be the subject of a charge.

Section 524 of the Criminal Code has undergone some amendments, but remains a means by which the Crown may seek revocation of bail. The structure of section 524 is similar to the basic structure in s. 523.1 for judicial referral hearings.²⁸ However, there are important differences as well. Under s. 524(3) it is mandatory for a justice who finds that the accused contravened a bail order (or there were reasonable grounds to believe the accused committed an indictable offence while on bail) to cancel the order.²⁹ That in turn gives rise to a mandatory order that the accused be detained in custody, unless the accused shows cause why their detention in custody is not justified.³⁰ The judicial referral hearing thus provides a more flexible approach for dealing with alleged breaches of bail. The presiding justice may elect to do nothing, may change or modify the bail to prevent further breaches, and though they may detain the accused on the original charge, no reverse onus arises as a result of the alleged breach. It is thus important for the Crown to carefully consider whether to pursue a judicial referral hearing or a s. 524 hearing.

11. EXERCISE OF CROWN DISCRETION TO SEEK A JUDICIAL REFERRAL HEARING

As outlined above, judicial referral hearings are an alternative to charging the accused with an administration of justice offence. The discretion to “seek a hearing” rests with the Crown both when an appearance notice has been issued, and when a charge has been laid. As such, when deciding whether to seek a judicial referral hearing rather than proceeding by way of a charge for an administration of justice offence, the analysis requires the Crown to consider the decision to prosecute test. In this context, the Crown must consider the principles enumerated in Chapter 2.3 of the Deskbook with particular reference to the nature of the alleged offence.

In considering the public interest branch of the decision to prosecute, the Crown must consider the legislative intent in creating judicial referral hearings. In many cases, judicial referral hearings provide an opportunity to more effectively deal with failures to comply with conditions of release and failures to appear in court. In order to reduce delay, and increase the efficiency of the justice system, the Crown should resolve minor or technical breaches by means of a judicial referral hearing without the necessity of a charge.

In exercising the discretion to direct a judicial referral hearing, consideration should be given to how the offender’s circumstances relate to the particular administration of justice offence at issue. For example, if the allegation is that the accused failed to appear, the existence of an underlying problem or condition of the accused, such as homelessness, substance abuse or mental disorder that affected or contributed to the failure to appear would be a relevant factor. Such considerations may inform the determination as to whether a prosecution or a judicial referral hearing is the best means of promoting future compliance with court orders.

²⁸ For example, where the accused was released from custody under section 522(3) by a Superior Court judge, then only a judge of that court can hear the matter, whereas in any other case a justice can hear the matter.

²⁹ Section 524(3).

³⁰ Section 524(4). The requirement of the accused to show cause why their detention is not justified is in contrast to the onus on the Crown to show cause under the judicial referral hearing provisions of the code (see s. 523.1(3)(b)(ii)).

Judicial referral hearings provide the Court with an opportunity to review existing conditions of release and are an extension of the bail process. Judicial referral hearings are intended to reduce administration of justice offences. As such, they are an opportunity for a tailored response to breaches that does not involve detention or new charges. The Crown should consider whether the principle of restraint is properly captured by the existing bail, and whether the accused is a member of an overrepresented population such as Indigenous persons. In all cases, the Crown must apply the principles related to judicial interim release outlined in Chapters 3.18 and 3.19 of the Deskbook when considering judicial referral hearings.

In some instances, it may be obvious that the conditions of release imposed on the accused cannot be complied with. For example, if a homeless person has a curfew as part of his or her conditions of release, it may be impossible for the accused to comply with that condition. In these circumstances, Crown counsel are encouraged to immediately exercise their discretion with respect to the administration of justice offence and seek to amend the conditions of release with the consent of the accused.

The fact that police have laid a charge for an administration of justice offence rather than issue an appearance notice may be a relevant factor to the exercise of Crown discretion, but is not determinative. It may be necessary to inquire of the police why an administration of justice offence was laid rather than a referral by police to a judicial referral hearing in the first instance. This further information may provide greater context for the Crown when exercising its discretion under the decision to prosecute test and deciding whether to continue the prosecution or seek a judicial referral hearing.

12. RELEVANT FACTORS THAT SHOULD BE CONSIDERED

In deciding whether to seek a judicial referral hearing prosecutors should take all of the following factors into account:

- the nature of the underlying offence;
- any safety concerns expressed by the police or arising from the facts;
- the accused's criminal record, particularly for violence and non-compliance with court orders;
- the safety concerns of any alleged victim or witness;
- the perspective of the victim regarding whether they expect the relationship to continue, and whether they wish to have contact with the accused;
- the information received from the accused regarding their personal circumstances;
- whether the accused has mental health issues, suffers from a substance abuse disorder, or any other medical condition that would affect their performance on bail; and

- the particular circumstances of an Aboriginal accused or an accused who belongs to a vulnerable and overrepresented population in the criminal justice system;
- whether the accused has been through a number of judicial referral hearings on the same substantive offence;
- whether the accused has demonstrated an unwillingness to participate in a judicial referral hearing;
- whether the accused has failed to appear for the judicial referral hearing;
- whether the breach arises out of a continuation or a re-commission of the offence or new substantive offences;
- whether the breach is part of a pattern of conduct that demonstrates disregard by the accused for his or her conditions of release.

It is important to recognize that despite the importance of resolving alleged breaches in an expeditious fashion, not every situation can be appropriately dealt with by way of judicial referral hearing. In appropriate cases, the Crown can and should continue to rely on s. 524 and seek a revocation of bail. The following are factors that will affect the Crown decision to seek revocation under s. 524(4) rather than by judicial referral hearing:

- whether the breach invokes issues of public safety;
- whether the breach arises out of a continuation or re-commission of the offence or new substantive offences; and
- whether the breach is part of a pattern of conduct that demonstrates disregard by the accused for his or her conditions of release.

Crown counsel should also bear in mind that in some circumstances, revocation under s. 524(4) can be used following a breach to consolidate bail orders, particularly where the accused is having difficulty complying with multiple, conflicting terms of release. While the section requires an accused to show cause why they should be released, the Crown may not oppose release depending on the circumstances.

13. CONCLUSION

Bill C-75 addresses the need to modernize and streamline the bail regime and enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of procedures. The result is the creation of a new and more flexible means of addressing alleged breaches of bail and reducing unnecessary delay. Judicial referral hearings should be used by the Crown where appropriate in order to give due recognition to the will of Parliament, and ensure the efficient use of court resources. Regional differences will arise in practice, particularly between charge approval provinces and non-charge approval provinces, but the existence of the hearings and the jurisdiction and powers of a justice at such a hearing are now clearly set out in the Criminal Code, and all Crown lawyers must be prepared to consider, and where appropriate, invoke the new procedures.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

3.21 REMEDIATION AGREEMENTS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

January 23, 2020

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1.	INTRODUCTION	2
2.	STATEMENT OF POLICY	2
3.	PROCEDURE.....	3
3.1.	Regional offices	4
3.1.1.	Seeking AG Consent.....	4
3.1.2.	Where AG Consent is not sought.....	5
3.2.	Headquarters	5
4.	CONDUCT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NEGOTIATIONS	5

1. INTRODUCTION

Part XXII.1 of the Criminal Code (Code) provides a regime under which the Attorney General (AG) may approve the negotiation of a Remediation Agreement (RA) between a prosecutor and an organization accused of a scheduled offence. Under an RA, the accused would agree to take specified actions in return for the charges against the accused organization being stayed.

Known more widely as “Deferred Prosecution Agreements” in other jurisdictions, agreements of this nature are used in appropriate cases as an alternative to prosecution and serve as a means to hold organizations accountable while putting in place measures to mitigate the risk of future offences and harm to third parties, such as employees, victims and investors.

This guideline outlines the criteria applied by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) in his or her capacity as Deputy Attorney General of Canada when determining whether to consent to the negotiation of an agreement pursuant to section 715.32(1)(d) of the Code. It also describes the procedure for Crown counsel and agents to follow when making a recommendation for an RA as well as the process for the negotiation of an agreement.

2. STATEMENT OF POLICY

Before an RA can be considered, the threshold of reasonable prospect of conviction must be met. An RA is an alternative to a traditional prosecution but should only be applied in cases where a prosecution is viable. Once the threshold test is met and where Crown counsel recommend that an invitation to negotiate an RA should be made, the discretion vested in the Attorney General under section 715.32 of the Code will be exercised only in circumstances where it is in the public interest to issue an invitation to negotiate an RA rather than proceeding with a traditional prosecution.

Factors that must be considered in determining the public interest are set out in subsection 715.32(2) of the Code:

- a. the circumstances in which the act or omission that forms the basis of the offence was brought to the attention of investigative authorities;
- b. the nature and gravity of the act or omission and its impact on any victim;
- c. the degree of involvement of senior officers of the organization in the act or omission;
- d. whether the organization has taken disciplinary action, including termination of employment, against any person who was involved in the act or omission;
- e. whether the organization has made reparations or taken other measures to remedy the harm caused by the act or omission and to prevent the commission of similar acts or omissions;
- f. whether the organization has identified or expressed a willingness to identify any person involved in wrongdoing related to the act or omission;
- g. whether the organization — or any of its representatives — was convicted of an offence or sanctioned by a regulatory body, or whether it entered into a previous remediation agreement or other settlement, in Canada or elsewhere, for similar acts or omissions;
- h. whether the organization — or any of its representatives — is alleged to have committed any other offences, including those not listed in the schedule to this Part; and
- i. any other factor that the Crown counsel considers relevant.

While all of the listed factors must be considered, the weight given to each will be case specific. Note that if the organization is accused of an offence pursuant to the Corruption of Foreign Public Officials Act, consideration must not be given to the national economic interest, the potential effect on relations with a foreign state or the identity of the organization or any individual involved.

3. PROCEDURE

As set out in subsection 715.32(1) of the Code, an RA may only be considered in relation to a listed offence where there is a reasonable prospect of conviction. In order to evaluate whether this threshold has been met, a full law enforcement investigation must be undertaken. The RA regime does not alter the manner in which criminal offences are to be investigated. Internal or private investigations by the organization are not a substitute for the independent determination of law enforcement whether to conduct an investigation and their assessment of the results of any investigation of the offence even when it results from a voluntary disclosure.

There are a number of circumstances in which Crown counsel may be asked about the likelihood of negotiating an RA. These include:

- by counsel for an organization in the context of making a voluntary disclosure or considering such a disclosure;
- by counsel for an organization in situations where law enforcement are investigating an offence and the organization is aware of the investigation but charges have not been laid;
- by counsel for an organization following the laying of charges;
- by law enforcement prior to or in the course of an investigation.

In all cases, Crown counsel should refrain from offering any view on the likelihood of an invitation to negotiate an RA being issued. In situations involving potential disclosure of offences, Crown counsel shall refer organizations or their counsel to the appropriate law enforcement agency. In all cases, Crown counsel must avoid any comment on an invitation to negotiate an RA being issued until such time as a final decision is made pursuant to the procedure set out in this guideline.

3.1. Regional offices

Once an investigation has been conducted by law enforcement and once Crown counsel is satisfied that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction involving a scheduled offence and an organization as an accused, Crown counsel shall consider the possible application of the RA regime pursuant to this guideline.

3.1.1. Seeking AG Consent

Following a review of the investigation and having concluded that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction, if Crown counsel is of the view that an invitation to negotiate an RA should be considered, Crown counsel shall recommend to the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) that consent of the AG should be sought.

If the CFP is also of the view that the negotiation of a remediation agreement is in the public interest, he or she shall advise the appropriate Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (Deputy DPP) of the intention to seek the approval of the Attorney General to issue an invitation to negotiate a remediation agreement and provide a legal memorandum containing a concise description and analysis of the available evidence, demonstrating how that evidence results in a reasonable prospect of conviction with respect to the accused on each count, and addressing how the public interest is met by negotiating a remediation agreement rather than conducting a prosecution.

The memorandum should explain the reasons for requesting the RA with direct reference to the considerations set out in the Code and should include a reasoned and objective assessment of the factors weighing both for and against pursuing an agreement.

3.1.2. Where AG Consent is not sought

Following a review of the investigation and having concluded that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction, if Crown counsel is of the view that an invitation to negotiate an RA is not appropriate, Crown counsel shall notify the CFP in writing, who will in turn notify the Deputy DPP by providing a basic overview of the case and the reasons why an RA is not recommended.

3.2. Headquarters

If the CFP recommends that the negotiation of an RA is appropriate, the Deputy DPP conducts an objective assessment of the request to determine whether the negotiation of an RA will be recommended. In this role, the Deputy DPP exercises a challenge function.

If the Deputy DPP agrees that an invitation to negotiate an RA should be issued, the recommendation will be forwarded to the DPP who, on behalf of the AG, will make a final decision on whether to consent to the issuance of an invitation to negotiate an RA.

If the Deputy DPP concludes that an RA is not appropriate in the circumstances, the Deputy DPP will advise the CFP that no recommendation will be made to the DPP.

Where approval to initiate the negotiation of an RA is given, the procedure set out in the section below is to be followed. Where approval to negotiate an RA is denied the prosecution will proceed in the normal manner pursuant to applicable guidelines and directives.

4. CONDUCT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Where the approval of the DPP is given, the negotiation of the RA shall be conducted by Crown counsel designated by the DPP for this purpose (designated counsel).

Designated counsel shall review the file and issue a written invitation to negotiate to the accused organization pursuant to section 715.33 of the Code. Negotiations with the accused organization shall be conducted by designated counsel in the role of “prosecutor” as set out in Part XXII.1 of the Code.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

4.1 PROTECTING CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION UNDER SECTION 37 OF THE CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED
UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. STATEMENT OF POLICY	3
3. CONSULTATION.....	3
4. WHO MAKES THE OBJECTION	4
5. PROCEDURE FOR MAKING THE OBJECTION	4
6. FORUM FOR THE OBJECTION	5
7. WHERE THE COURT ORDERS DISCLOSURE.....	5

1. INTRODUCTION

The public interest may require that sensitive or confidential information in the possession of government agencies be protected from disclosure, including disclosure in the litigation process. The need for confidentiality can arise in many ways and can involve information received or generated by government.¹ Public interest privilege protects certain confidential information from disclosure where such disclosure would be contrary to the public interest.² Public interest privilege can be invoked both under the common law and under certain statutory schemes. It typically involves a weighing of the competing public and private interests.

In criminal cases, an accused may seek disclosure of information that the government wishes to keep confidential.³ Sections 37, 38 and 39 of the Canada Evidence Act (the CEA) establish a regime for objecting to the disclosure of information. This directive sets out the policy and procedures for objections raised under s. 37 during a prosecution.⁴ Separate directives exist in respect of s. 38 and s. 39 of the CEA.⁵

¹ For example, national security agencies sometimes receive information from foreign governments or other sources about terrorist groups in Canada. Similarly, law enforcement agencies receive information on criminal activity, and departments are often made privy to proprietary information concerning corporations.

² For a thorough discussion of law the law of privilege and in particular public interest privilege, see Robert W. Hubbard, Susan Magotiaux & Suzanna M. Duncan, “The Law of Privilege in Canada”, (Aurora: Canada Law Book, 2011) chapter 3 “Public Interest Privilege Under Section 37 of the Canada Evidence Act and Common Law”.

³ Bisaillon v Keable, [1983] 2 SCR 60 at 97.

⁴ Section 38 sets out the procedure for objecting to disclosure under s 37 on the grounds that the disclosure would be injurious to international relations, or national defence or security. The Federal Court is the forum for determining such objections. Section 39 sets out the right to object to the disclosure of confidences of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

⁵ See PPSC Deskbook directives “4.2 Protecting Confidential Information under Section 38 of the Canada Evidence Act” and “4.3 Protecting Cabinet Confidences under Section 39 of the Canada Evidence Act”.

These objections are most commonly raised in situations where Crown counsel objects to an application for further disclosure from defence counsel, where a court might otherwise compel its production. Similarly, such objections may arise where defence counsel attempts to elicit confidential information while cross-examining a Crown witness. It is also possible that a federal official (e.g. RCMP, CSIS a government department) or a provincial or municipal official (e.g. a provincial Attorney General, municipal police force) may object to disclosure of confidential information.

2. STATEMENT OF POLICY

Section 37 of the CEA sets out when objections can be made to the disclosure of information on the basis of a specified public interest. Reliance on s. 37 to assert claims of privilege should be the exception, not the rule.⁶ The CEA therefore should be a mechanism of last resort to protect evidence from disclosure. If disclosure of the information can be prevented on some other basis, such as lack of relevance or by asserting a common law privilege, those methods should be pursued first. For example, the common law rules preventing disclosure on grounds such as solicitor/client privilege, investigative privilege technique, location of surveillance post, or police informer privilege⁷ first should be invoked rather than s. 37. Alternatively, steps may be taken to adduce the evidence without endangering the interest at risk (for example, vetted disclosure, delayed disclosure).

However, the assertion of a claim of privilege under the common law does not preclude subsequent resort to s. 37.⁸ Where a trial judge rejects a common law claim of privilege and orders disclosure of confidential information over objections of the party claiming the privilege, the claimant may then invoke the broader s. 37 public interest privilege.

3. CONSULTATION

Where Crown counsel expects that an issue of this nature may arise, it is important to confer with investigators and interested departments or agencies before the proceedings begin. A plan must then be developed that takes into account the following matters, among others:

- the nature of the public interest to be protected;
- whether other objections have been or may be raised;

⁶ [R v Basi, \[2009\] 3 SCR 389](#) at 398.

⁷ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.11 Informer Privilege”.

⁸ Basi, supra note 6.

- the competing public interests in disclosure and non-disclosure for the purposes of the s. 37(5) balancing the court must undertake;⁹
- whether non-disclosure would compromise the prosecution;
- the effect the objection may have on the proceedings;¹⁰
- whether the claim of privilege grounding the objection is justified in the circumstances and not overreaching;¹¹ and
- who should advance the objection.¹²

4. WHO MAKES THE OBJECTION

Objections under s. 37 of the CEA involving a public interest will usually be made by a senior public official from the relevant investigating body or government department or agency which has responsibility in relation to the specified public interest. For example, the official may be a senior police officer concerned about the possible disclosure of police techniques and methods of investigation, such as the location of observation sites or the identity of police informers. The official may be either a federal or provincial government official.

5. PROCEDURE FOR MAKING THE OBJECTION

Objections under s. 37 may be made orally or in writing by certifying that information should not be disclosed on the grounds of a "specified public interest".¹³ Under s. 37\(5\) of the CEA, the court is required to weigh the public interest in disclosure against the specified public interest. Crown counsel must identify the actual injury or harm that will result from disclosure. Crown counsel will have to offer a convincing rationale, explaining how the information came into existence, why non-disclosure is important, and the nature and gravity of the injury or harm that will occur if it is disclosed. However, when the "specified public interest" at stake is informer privilege, no balancing is required. Crown counsel can simply argue that the information is of a class which, by ⁹ Note that informer privilege is absolute and thus there is no balancing of the public interest in disclosure versus confidentiality in respect of informer privilege claims.

¹⁰ For example, will the objection be determined by a court other than the trial court? Are there concerns regarding resulting delay?

¹¹ If unfounded or overly broad claims of privilege are made, courts may over time begin to accord less weight to certificates filed under s 37 when balancing the competing interests in disclosure and non-disclosure.

¹² Where the interested party is a federal department or agency, typically lawyers from the Department of Justice Civil Litigation Section advance the objection on behalf of that party. If the police advance the claim, typically PPSC counsel advance the objection in court on behalf of the police.

¹³ Canada Evidence Act, s 37\(1\).

definition, merits non-disclosure. Informer privilege is not amenable to the public interest balancing contemplated in s. 37(5).¹⁴

The CEA does not define the nature of the public interest which may be protected. Where the public interest claim must be assessed on a case-by-case basis, Crown counsel should assess the validity of the claim of privilege by measuring it against, among other criteria, those established by Wigmore:¹⁵

1. the communications must originate in a confidence that they will not be disclosed;
2. this element of confidentiality must be essential to the full and satisfactory maintenance of the relation between the parties;
3. the relation must be one which in the opinion of the community ought to be sedulously fostered;
4. the injury that would ensue to the relation by the disclosure of the communications must be greater than the benefit thereby gained for the correct disposal of litigation.

6. FORUM FOR THE OBJECTION

A s. 37 application constitutes a proceeding separate from the trial proper and from pre-trial proceedings.¹⁶ Crown counsel may invoke common law privilege and make a claim under s. 37 of the CEA both in provincial and superior courts. However, whereas claims of common law privilege may be determined by both provincial and superior court judges, only superior court judges and the Federal Court have jurisdiction to determine s. 37 claims. By resorting first to the common law privilege in provincial courts, Crown counsel may avoid unnecessary fragmentation of, and delay in, the proceedings. Where the Crown invokes s. 37, the application must be heard before the Superior Court of the same province or territory.¹⁷

7. WHERE THE COURT ORDERS DISCLOSURE

On an objection under s. 37, courts must determine that the public interest in disclosure outweighs the importance of the specified public interest.¹⁸ When the court decides in favour of disclosure, Crown counsel should again consult with the interested parties and determine which of the following options is most appropriate:

¹⁴ Basi, supra note 6 at paras 22-23. See also R v Barros 2011 SCC 51 where Binnie J states that the courts will enforce informer privilege without balancing of the competing interests that applies to other forms of privilege such as journalistic privilege.

¹⁵ Wigmore, Evidence in Trials at Common Law (McNaughton rev. 1961), vol 8 at 527; cited by the Supreme Court of Canada to assess privilege on a case-by-case basis in [R v National Post, 2010 SCC 16 \[2010\] 1 SCR 477](#); [Globe and Mail v Canada \(Attorney General\), 2010 SCC 41, \[2010\] 2 SCR 592](#).

¹⁶ Basi, supra note 6 at para 19.

¹⁷ CEA, s 37\(3\)\(b\). Alternatively, it can go before the Federal Court.

¹⁸ CEA, s 37\(5\).

1. Simply comply with the court's ruling. Before doing so, counsel should ascertain from the client department or investigating agency the extent of the harm that will occur on disclosure and assess whether the harm can be minimized in a way that is still consistent with the court's ruling;
2. Appeal the court's ruling. This decision should be made in consultation with the Chief Federal Prosecutor and investigating agency;¹⁹ or
3. Stay the proceedings. This option is to be used when there is no other way to protect the information and the importance of keeping it in confidence outweighs the public interest in pursuing the charges.²⁰

¹⁹ In accordance with the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.15 Appeals and Interventions in the Provincial and Territorial Courts of Appeal”.

²⁰ In rare and compelling circumstances, it may be appropriate to stay proceedings and then re-commence them in accordance with s 579\(2\) of the Criminal Code. See for instance, [R v Scott, \[1990\] 3 SCR 979, \(1990\), 61 CCC \(3d\) 300](#). Before taking this approach, however, the matter must be discussed with counsel’s supervisor, and in some instances may need to be raised with the Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

4.2 PROTECTING CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION UNDER SECTION 38 OF THE CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED
UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. OVERVIEW	2
3. APPLICATION	3
4. TIMING	3
5. RELATIONSHIP WITH SECTION 37 OF THE CANADA EVIDENCE ACT	4
6. JURISDICTION	4
7. PROCEDURE IN PPSC PROSECUTIONS – DOCUMENTS IN THE INVESTIGATIVE FILE	4
8. TEST FOR POTENTIALLY INJURIOUS OR SENSITIVE INFORMATION	5
9. APPLICATION TO THE FEDERAL COURT UNDER SECTION 38.04 OF THE CANADA EVIDENCE ACT FOR A DISCLOSURE ORDER UNDER SECTION 38.06 OF THE CANADA EVIDENCE ACT	7
10. IMPACT OF CONFIRMATION OF PROHIBITION OR PROHIBITION CERTIFICATE	8

1. INTRODUCTION

Section 38 of the *Canada Evidence Act*¹ (CEA) sets out a regime which prevents the disclosure of information or documents that contain what is defined as “sensitive” or “potentially injurious” information in a criminal proceeding without the consent of the Attorney General of Canada (Attorney General), or a court order.

2. OVERVIEW

Section 38.01 requires every participant in a proceeding to advise the Attorney General, as opposed to the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP), in writing where there is a possibility of disclosure of sensitive or potentially injurious information. The disclosure of this information is prohibited unless authorized by the Attorney General or by a Federal Court judge. References in this directive to the Attorney General relate to the Department of Justice and not to the Office of the DPP.

¹ RSC 1985, c C-5.

Upon receipt of the written notice, the Attorney General has ten days to provide written notice of his or her decision with respect to disclosure of the information.

If disclosure is not authorized within 10 days, disclosure of the information remains prohibited, pending a decision of the Federal Court.

3. APPLICATION

Section 38 applies to all criminal proceedings,² and whether the Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC), a provincial Attorney General or even a private prosecutor has carriage of the prosecution.

4. TIMING

The obligation to notify the Attorney General arises both where disclosure is required to be made and where it may not be required but is nevertheless expected. Under the CEA, the obligation rests with the participant who expects to disclose. However, PPSC counsel must also ensure that the provisions are respected whether or not the Office of the DPP is the custodian of the information. Thus, counsel should raise the issue:

- with opposing counsel where PPSC is a party to the proceedings and it becomes apparent that the defence proposes to call or commences calling evidence that may engage s. 38;
- with the provincial Crown where it comes to counsel's attention that the Crown has disclosure materials in a provincial prosecution that may engage s. 38; and
- with the provincial Crown where it comes to counsel's attention that either the Crown or the defence in a provincial prosecution plan to call a witness or tender evidence that may engage s. 38.

Unless PPSC counsel is satisfied that provincial Crown counsel and/or opposing counsel, as appropriate, have provided notice to the Attorney General of Canada, PPSC counsel should consider appearing in court to raise the matter with the presiding justice.

Although likely to be a rare event in a criminal trial, counsel should also be aware that certain witnesses, who meet the definition of an "official" under s. 36.1 CEA,³ may also ² It also applies to any other proceedings under the Criminal Code, such as a sealing order under s 487.3 of the Criminal Code or an order for forfeiture under s 83.14 of the Criminal Code.

³ Section 36.1 of the CEA adopts the definition in s 118 of the Criminal Code of "official", namely a person who (a) holds an office, or (b) is appointed or elected to discharge a public duty.

raise the matter with the court where the witness believes that information covered by the provision are at risk of being disclosed.⁴

5. RELATIONSHIP WITH SECTION 37 OF THE CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

Where Crown counsel determine that both s. 38 and s. 37 may apply, s. 38 takes primacy and Crown counsel should resort first to s. 38.

6. JURISDICTION

Where the PPSC does not have carriage of the prosecution, s. 38.15 CEA allows for the serving of a fiat on the prosecution establishing the exclusive jurisdiction of the Attorney General of Canada to conduct the prosecution. In the alternative, the Attorney General of Canada may choose not to issue a fiat but instead come to an agreement with the provincial prosecutor respecting the manner and substance of disclosure of sensitive information.

Therefore, any counsel who becomes aware of the existence of any non-federal prosecution or potential prosecution, or any other court proceeding that may engage s. 38, must advise their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP), as well as the Regional Terrorism Prosecutions Co-ordinator, of the matter.

The Regional Terrorism Prosecutions Co-ordinator in turn will advise the National Terrorism Prosecutions Co-ordinator so he or she may confirm that the Attorney General has been advised of the possibility of disclosure and determine whether a fiat should be issued.

7. PROCEDURE IN PPSC PROSECUTIONS – DOCUMENTS IN THE INVESTIGATIVE FILE

As a practical matter, s. 38 claims are most likely to arise in the context of national security prosecutions. Files that may be reasonably expected to contain documents engaging national security privilege include:

- terrorism offences,⁵ including public bombings under s. 431.2 of the Criminal Code;

⁴ See CEA, s. 38.01\(2\). The official may also raise it with the Attorney General, CEA, s. 38.01\(3\). The provision is actually broader: the official need not be a witness to raise the matter but may actually not be directly involved in the proceeding at all.

⁵ “Terrorism offences” are defined in s. 2 of the Criminal Code.

- offences relating to internationally protected persons under s. 424 and s. 431 of the Criminal Code or against a member of the United Nations or associated personnel;
- war crimes;
- human smuggling;
- Security of Information Act⁶ offences;
- passport or citizenship forgery offences under ss. 57 and 58 of the Criminal Code;
- files with classified information (generally Secret or above) or documents from CSIS, CSE or RCMP National Security Intelligence; and
- files with information from foreign law enforcement partners.

In many of these cases, the PPSC may be involved in providing legal advice prior to charges being laid.

The first stage in assessing a s. 38 claim is to identify whether or not the information is relevant under R v Stinchcombe.⁷ Information that is not relevant is not subject to disclosure and there is no need to advise the Attorney General of Canada unless there is a risk of disclosure. If information would otherwise be subject to disclosure under Stinchcombe, but is properly the subject of a s. 38 claim, then the prosecutor should inform the National Security Group, and promptly prepare a Notice under s. 38.01 in accordance with this directive.

In complex prosecutions, PPSC counsel may seek and receive input from the investigative agency about both the likely relevance of the information as well as whether or not the information may cause harm to national security, national defence or international relations if disclosed.

Prior to sending a Notice, PPSC counsel shall notify the CFP and the National and Regional Terrorism Prosecutions Co-ordinators. Pursuant to s. 38.02\(1\)\(b\), the fact that Notice has been given shall not be disclosed.

8. TEST FOR POTENTIALLY INJURIOUS OR SENSITIVE INFORMATION

“Potentially injurious information” is defined in s. 38 as information that could injure international relations, national defence or national security. It should be noted that:

- the information need not be in possession of the Crown nor generated by the Crown;

⁶ RSC 1985, c O-5.

⁷ [1995] 1 SCR 754, 96 CCC (3d) 318.

- the focus is on the potential for harm rather than on any particular subject matter;
- the information need not be in a document, but may also include information known to a witness; and
- the reliability of the information is not relevant to the determination of its sensitivity.

“Sensitive information” is information in the possession of the Government of Canada of a type that Canada is taking measures to safeguard, and relates to international relations, national defence or national security. The information must:

- be in the possession of the Government of Canada; and
- relate to one of the three enumerated interests.

It may not be apparent to counsel whether or not the Government of Canada is taking means to protect the information. Crown counsel should err on the side of caution. If in doubt, counsel must consult the National Security Group (NSG) of the Department of Justice.

The NSG’s guide to s. 38 entitled “An Introduction to Section 38 of the Canada Evidence Act” has a non-exhaustive list of some practical examples of sensitive or potentially injurious information, such as:

- confidential diplomatic exchanges or other information about Canada’s relationships with foreign states;
- strategies of the government in foreign affairs;
- information received from third parties such as foreign intelligence services with a caveat against further disclosure;⁸
- capabilities and functions of Canadian forces, details of military operations
- intelligence operation, organizations and sources;
- telecommunications and cipher systems or cryptology, military equipment; and
- the identity of covert employees, confidential sources, or the targets of an ongoing or past investigation that have not been made public.

In assessing whether s. 38 applies, PPSC counsel may have recourse to the following resources:

- the NSG’s Guide is available from the Regional Terrorism Prosecution Co-ordinator through the Terrorism Toolkit;

⁸ In this case, some form of request for further disclosure should usually be made to the foreign source and an answer received prior to relying on the third party rule. However, the claim should be made in the interim until and unless a permissive answer is received.

- the regional Terrorism Prosecution Co-ordinator or the National Terrorism Prosecution Co-ordinator; and
- the NSG.

Where the information may fall within s. 38, counsel shall prepare a Notice, required by ss. 38.01\(1\) to \(4\) and send it to:

Director of the National Security Group
The National Security Group
Criminal Litigation Division
Litigation Branch
284 Wellington Street
Ottawa, Ontario
K1A 0H8

The Notice must contain:

- the name, address and phone number of PPSC counsel acting as the notifier;
- the nature, date and place of the proceeding in which the disclosure may occur;
- a brief procedural history and synopsis of the case;
- an assessment of the relevance of the information;
- a description of the information and, if possible, the information itself; and
- a brief description of the possible injury that disclosure should cause, i.e. the basis upon which it is believed that s. 38 may apply.

Counsel may contact NSG to obtain assistance with respect to the content of the Notice.

The NSG will formulate the Attorney General of Canada's position as to whether a privilege under s. 38 applies and whether to authorize disclosure of the information under s. 38.03 or enter into a disclosure agreement under s. 38.031 CEA.

Note also that the CEA prohibits disclosure of the fact that Notice has been given until authorized by the Attorney General. Counsel should confirm with NSG that permission to disclose the fact of the notice has been granted by the Director of the NSG.

9. APPLICATION TO THE FEDERAL COURT UNDER SECTION 38.04 OF THE CANADA EVIDENCE ACT FOR A DISCLOSURE ORDER UNDER SECTION .06 OF THE CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

The disclosure issue may be taken before the Federal Court on the initiative of the Attorney General, the Crown, the accused (if he or she has been made aware of it), or any other person who seeks the disclosure of the protected information (s. 38.04).

Applications before the Federal Court are conducted by Department of Justice counsel acting on behalf of the Attorney General and not by PPSC counsel. However, the trial judge in a criminal trial is to be given notice of the hearing, as are the accused and his or her counsel, and PPSC counsel should be vigilant in verifying that this has in fact taken place unless the Federal Court has declined to so order.

PPSC counsel with carriage of the prosecution should also seek to be served with Notice of a Hearing under ss. 38.04\(i\) or 38.04\(5\)\(c\)\(i\) CEA, and should ask counsel for the Attorney General to seek this order on the DPP's behalf. PPSC counsel must consider whether it is necessary to apply to make representations on the application.

The test for a disclosure order under s. 38.06 requires a Federal Court justice to assess whether or not the disclosure of the information would be injurious to international relations, national defence or national security. If this threshold is met, the justice then must consider whether the public interest in disclosure outweighs the public interest in non-disclosure.

Before undertaking this balancing test, the federal court judge must determine whether the information sought to be disclosed is relevant, with the onus on the party seeking disclosure.⁹ In arguing this aspect of the test, Department of Justice counsel may well benefit from the input of PPSC counsel respecting the relevance of the information to an issue at trial.

The Federal Court justice has the option of crafting conditions on the form of disclosure as well as to order a summary of the information, a part or summary of the information or a written admission of facts relating to the information.

10. IMPACT OF CONFIRMATION OF PROHIBITION OR PROHIBITION CERTIFICATE

Section 38.14 CEA authorizes the trial judge to make any order considered appropriate to protect the right of the accused to a fair trial, including staying the proceedings, dismissing specified counts or an order finding against the Crown on the issue relating to disclosure that has been prohibited.

Lack of disclosure in this context cannot necessarily be equated with the denial of the right to make full answer and defence resulting in an unfair trial. There will be many instances in which non-disclosure of protected information will have no bearing at all on trial fairness or where alternatives to full disclosure may provide assurances that trial fairness has not been compromised by the absence of full disclosure. However, the remedies have been defined very broadly and, according to the Supreme Court of Canada, ⁹ R v Ribic, 2005 1 FCR 33; Canada \(Attorney General\) v Canada \(Commission of Inquiry into the Actions of Canadian Officials in relation to Maher Arar\), 2008, 3 FCR 248.

“Parliament expected trial judges to be provided with a sufficient basis of relevant information on which to exercise their remedial powers judicially”.¹⁰

Of particular note, a stay of proceedings can be granted even where the “clearest of cases” threshold ordinarily required for a stay has not been met. The Supreme Court held in Ahmad,¹¹ that “...the legislative compromise made in s. 38 will require a stay in such circumstances if the trial judge is simply unable to conclude affirmatively that the right to a fair trial, including the right of the accused to a full and fair defence, has not been compromised.”

The Supreme Court has suggested a number of possible “arrangements” to satisfy the trial judge that non-disclosure has not materially affected trial fairness, including:

- “partial or conditional disclosure” to the trial judge alone;
- provision of a summary of the information to the trial judge alone, the trial judge and prosecutor, or all the parties;
- adapting certain facts sought to be established by an accused as proven and true for the purposes of the criminal proceeding;
- where the relevance of the withheld material is in issue, the appointment of a special advocate may be appropriate; and
- allowing defence counsel to access the withheld material on an undertaking not to disclose it to the accused. However, the Supreme Court of Canada urged caution in resorting to this practice.¹²

These arrangements require either the consent of the Attorney General, or a Federal Court order.

If, under the arrangements that are made, there is simply not enough information to decide whether or not trial fairness has been materially affected, the trial judge must presume that the non-disclosure order has adversely affected the fairness of the trial, including the right of the accused to make full answer and defence.

However, in such a case, rather than proceed directly to issuance of a stay, the Supreme Court placed an obligation on the trial judge to give the Crown “fair warning”. PPSC counsel will then have an opportunity to make further and better disclosure to address the trial judge’s concerns. This is an opportunity for PPSC counsel to approach the NSG to determine if there are any conditions that may be devised whereby the Attorney General may consent to release any additional information. If no (or inadequate) additional information can be provided to the trial judge, a stay of proceedings will be the presumptively appropriate remedy.¹³

¹⁰ [R v Ahmad, 2011 SCC 6, \[2011\] 1 SCR 110](#) [Ahmad].

¹¹ Ibid at para 35.

¹² Ibid at para 49.

For this reason, PPSC counsel should explore any and all options, in consultation with counsel for the Attorney General, for providing as much material as possible (a) to all parties and (b) failing that, to the trial judge with counsel for the Attorney General acting on the s. 38 hearing.

Outside agencies from which the information originates may seek the prosecutor's views as to the impact that non-disclosure may have on the fairness of the trial. PPSC counsel may provide these views but must remain mindful of the fact that these agencies are not the investigative agency on the file and are third parties for the purposes of the prosecution with their own legal counsel.

If it becomes obvious to Crown counsel that non-disclosure under s. 38 will significantly and irreparably impact trial fairness, then Crown counsel itself ought normally to enter a stay of proceedings.¹⁴ In assessing both the reasonable prospect of conviction and the public interest in a prosecution PPSC counsel will be assisted by the earliest possible identification of material which, the Attorney General is not prepared to disclose. This is another reason for advisory counsel to send early notifications to the NSG where sensitive or potentially injurious information is identified.

¹³ Ibid at para 51.

¹⁴ Ibid at para 46.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

4.3 PROTECTING CABINET CONFIDENCES UNDER SECTION 39 OF THE CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED
UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. OVERVIEW	2
3. DOCUMENT REVIEW	3
4. CHALLENGE TO A CERTIFICATE	4

1. INTRODUCTION

Cabinet decision-making is founded on the principle of collective responsibility. In practice, this means that a decision of the Cabinet, or one of its committees, binds all members of the Government, regardless of their personal views on the issues being decided. Cabinet and its committees constitute the forum in which Ministers collectively make decisions on government policy and initiatives. The Cabinet meetings enable Ministers, within a confidential setting, to debate issues vigorously, reconcile different perspectives, participate in and influence deliberations, and collectively reach decisions.

Section 39 of the Canada Evidence Act (CEA) constitutes the statutory means for safeguarding that Cabinet confidentiality sets out a regime which prevents the disclosure of information or documents that consist of confidences of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

2. OVERVIEW

Although the “Queen’s Privy Council for Canada” referred to in s. 39 of the Canada Evidence Act (CEA) has quite an expansive membership, for the purposes of litigation the concern is usually with Cabinet documents. The purpose of “Cabinet Confidence” privilege is to protect from disclosure discussions and deliberations of federal Cabinet Ministers on matters that are, or have been, the subject of discussion at Cabinet meetings or between Cabinet Ministers. Cabinet Confidence privilege exists so that Ministers can have open and frank discussions and not be concerned with public perception of their deliberations. Cabinet Confidence privilege does not extend to the day-to-day administration of federal government departments. Section 39\(4\) limits Cabinet Confidence privilege to 20 years.

Section 39 of the CEA acts as an absolute bar to the disclosure of Cabinet Confidences as defined in s. 39\(2\). Whereas a judge assesses and makes the determination regarding disclosure or protection of information under ss. 37 and 38¹ of the CEA, the determination of Cabinet Confidences under s. 39 is made by the Clerk of the Privy Council or a Cabinet Minister. Where a certificate is filed under s. 39 certifying that the information constitutes a Cabinet Confidence, a court must refuse disclosure of that information without examination or hearing of the information.² Objections under s. 39 must be made in writing, certifying that the information constitutes a Cabinet Confidence.

¹ With the exception of s 38.13 of the Canada Evidence Act.

3. DOCUMENT REVIEW

Section 39\(2\) of the CEA, which defines “confidence of the Queen's Privy Council”, protects the following types of documents from disclosure:³

- a) Final and draft forms of Memoranda to Cabinet and information or preparatory documents that discuss subject matter or input into such Memoranda (s. 39\(2\)\(a\));
- b) In addition to actual agendas of Cabinet meetings, documents that discuss dates, locations, attendees and details of Cabinet meetings (s. 39\(2\)\(c\)); while Cabinet decision-making and recorded decisions are secret, the implementation of those decisions is not;
- c) Any record used for or reflecting communications or substantive discussions of any kind between Ministers regarding government policy and decisions (s. 39\(2\)\(d\));
- d) Final versions of briefings to a Minister on matters to be discussed with another Minister or at a Cabinet meeting (s. 39\(2\)\(e\)); drafts of these Memoranda, often called a “Briefing Note to the Minister” or “Memorandum to the Minister”, may be circulated widely for input. This wide circulation does not necessarily remove the document from s. 39 privilege; and,
- e) draft legislation (s. 39\(2\)\(f\)).

Determining whether a document is a Cabinet Confidence as described in s. 39(2)(a) to (f) and thereby protected from disclosure can be challenging in some cases. Documents may also be severed or have portions redacted instead of being entirely protected.

Crown counsel working on a file that may contain Cabinet Confidence documents must identify the relevant documents and the documents must be sent to the Privy Council Office (PCO) for review. It is wise to contact PCO as soon as reasonably practicable so that PCO officials can plan to review the documents and obtain the Clerk's Certificate. Crown counsel shall notify the Chief Federal Prosecutor who will bring the matter to the attention of the appropriate Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions. The latter will consult with the Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet (Legislation and House Planning) to allow the ² Babcock v Canada \(Attorney General\), 2002 SCC 3, [2002] 3 SCR 3 at para 17.

³ The discussion papers referred to at s 39\(2\)\(b\) CEA have not been in use since the 1980's. Since the privilege for these documents expires after four years (s 39\(4\)\(b\)) CEA, no discussion papers are protected.

Minister⁴ or the Clerk of the Privy Council to certify the documents and protect them from disclosure.

Once PCO officials have reviewed the documents and the Clerk has made a final determination of privilege, a Clerk's Certificate will be prepared.

4. CHALLENGE TO A CERTIFICATE

The consultation process described above also applies where an accused seeks disclosure of information which has been certified as a Cabinet Confidence.⁵ The Clerk's Certificate produced in court simply describes the protected documents without revealing their contents. This Certificate is evidence that the listed documents are protected from disclosure. A court may not review the Cabinet documents listed in the Certificate. Although the court is not entitled to go behind a proper certificate filed under s. 39, the court can review the certificate to determine if, on its face, it complies with this section.⁶

⁴ The Minister may also certify the documents, however, this is a rare occurrence.

⁵ In the past, Cabinet Confidences have been released in prosecutions only where a Minister of the Crown has been charged and that Minister had a conventional right of access as a Minister to the information at issue in the prosecution. An Order in Council releasing such information is required. Where, for the purposes of a prosecution, Crown counsel seeks to disclose information which may be a confidence of the Privy Council, permission to do so may be obtained in this manner as well.

⁶ See Babcock, supra note 2 at para 28; Canada \(Privy Council\) v Pelletier, 2005 FCA 118 at paras 16-18.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.1 NATIONAL SECURITY

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised June 22, 2021

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION.....	2
1.1 Terrorism Offences	3
2. PRE-CHARGE LEGAL ADVICE	4
3. COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS	5
3.1 The Decision to Prosecute Test in the National Security Context.....	5
3.2 Deciding which Charges Should Be Laid	5
3.2.1 Sensitive Information.....	5
3.2.2 Assessment of the Evidence in Light of the Rights Protected by the Charter	6
3.2.3 Public Interest	8
3.2.4 Jurisdictional Issues	9
3.3 Procedure to Obtain Consent to Commence Proceedings	10
4. MANAGEMENT OF NATIONAL SECURITY PROSECUTIONS	11
5. SENTENCING	12
5.1 Consecutive Sentences.....	13
5.2 Delayed Parole Eligibility	13
5.3 Sentencing under the Youth Criminal Justice Act.....	14
5.3.1 Terrorism Offences	14
5.3.2 Breach of Recognizance	15

1. INTRODUCTION

National security prosecutions focus on the security of Canadian society. This notion of security has several facets. Its core element is to protect Canadians from physical harm. It also includes protecting Canadians' sense of well-being, both at home and abroad. Inherent to this well-being is the safeguarding of fundamental rights and freedoms. Another facet of this notion of security is the maintenance of the public institutions of Canadian society.

National security prosecutions have both a national and international significance, whether they involve terrorism, espionage, war crimes, or crimes against humanity. They regularly involve sensitive issues of international relations, national defence and national security, and information associated with those interests.

For the purposes of this guideline, the following are considered national security prosecutions:

- Terrorism offences as defined in s. 2 of the Criminal Code, including the offences under Part II.1 of the Criminal Code and any inchoate form of these offences;
- Offences as defined in s. 2 of the Security Offences Act;¹
- Public bombings under s. 431.2 of the Criminal Code;
- Offences against internationally protected persons or members of the United Nations or associated personnel;²
- Offences captured by s. 7(7) of the Criminal Code and involving foreign officials or heads of state;
- Offences under the United Nations Act;³
- Offences under the Security of Information Act;⁴
- The offence under s. 18 of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act;⁵
- Offences under the Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act;⁶
- Offences involving the proliferation or the illegal import, export or sale of nuclear materials; and
- Offences under the Defence Production Act.⁷

1.1 Terrorism Offences

The preamble of the Anti-Terrorism Act stresses that an effective response to terrorism goes hand-in-hand with a continued commitment to the values and safeguards enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Indeed, it is the guarantee of the exercise of the freedom of expression, religion and political activity that underscores the existential dimension of the harm to Canadian values wrought by someone who seeks to justify advancing political, ideological or religious beliefs through the use of violence.

Parliament has chosen to address terrorism offences as crimes.⁸ The rule of law and the rights and freedoms enshrined in the Charter apply to these offences. They govern police investigative

¹ Security Offences Act, RSC 1985, c S-7.

² Criminal Code, s 7(3) and 7(3.71).

³ United Nations Act, RSC 1985, c U-2, s 3.

⁴ Security of Information Act, RSC 1985, c O-5, s 4-23.

⁵ RSC 1985, c C-23, s 18.

⁶ SC 2000, c 24.

⁷ RSC 1985, c D-1.

⁸ Parliament did not invoke the notwithstanding clause. In the Reference re Section 82.28 of the Criminal Code, the Supreme Court of Canada underlined this parliamentary choice, noting that “the Canadian government opted to procedures as well as the rights available to an accused person before the courts during the trial and, if convicted, on sentence. Terrorism offences are prosecuted in ordinary criminal courts; the Crown must prove the offences to the same standard of proof as other crimes, namely, proof beyond a reasonable doubt based upon admissible evidence. The accused has the same rights regarding choosing the mode of trial, including trial by judge and jury, as for other crimes.

Terrorism often involves large scale attacks targeting victims indiscriminately. The planning cycle for the commission of terrorism offences may be long or short-term. Perpetrators are often, though not always, motivated by non-financial considerations and are willing to suffer personal consequences to accomplish their purpose. Acts may be planned in conjunction with other persons who share the same political, ideological or religious purposes, objectives or causes, although that is not always the case. Persons involved in these offences may play different roles with varying degrees of involvement and knowledge of the plans and targets. The targets of terrorist activities may be selected based upon opportunities or shifting philosophical priorities. Attacks or threats directed towards public institutions or processes, including political, economic, social and military ones, as well as those that allow Canada to act internationally, are threats to Canadian society as a whole. They seek to undermine the democratic rights and principles that Canadians enjoy through their institutions.

The objective of legislative tools like the terrorism provisions of the Criminal Code is to disrupt these offences at the early stages of planning and preparation. The consequences of a terrorist attack can be particularly dire. They require an early, decisive intervention, but they may also be difficult to evaluate given the nature of the activities.

Acts at early stages of preparation can be subject to multiple interpretations. Some purposes may be difficult to differentiate from innocuous ones without clear indications of the objectives, purposes, causes or intentions of the persons involved. Others may be intimately connected to the exercise of fundamental freedoms such as those related to free expression, free association, political activism or religious beliefs. Terrorism offences do not criminalize holding, disseminating or advocating beliefs, even though they may be abhorrent, distasteful or anti-societal/anarchic. Criminal sanction can only be imposed if these beliefs are combined with a criminal act (actus reus) and the required intent (mens rea) of an offence.

2. PRE-CHARGE LEGAL ADVICE

Prosecutors may be approached to provide pre-charge legal advice in relation to national security matters. When this occurs, prosecutors must inform their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) and the enact specific criminal law and procedure legislation and did not make use of exceptional powers, for example under the Emergencies Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 22 (4th Supp.), or invoke the notwithstanding clause at s. 33 of the Charter.” See Application under s. 83.28 of the Criminal Code (Re), 2004 SCC 42 at para 39.

National Terrorism Prosecutions Coordinator that they have been asked to provide legal advice, even if the investigation is in its infancy.

When providing legal advice, prosecutors must pay particular attention to the protection of information under ss. 37, 38 and 39 of the Canada Evidence Act. In applications for judicial authorizations, information of a sensitive nature that may not be disclosable must be handled so that issues of confidentiality can be dealt with effectively in subsequent court proceedings. Prosecutors must also be mindful that some sensitive information provided under caveat may not be disclosable at all, including in an affidavit.

3. COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS

3.1 The Decision to Prosecute Test in the National Security Context

National security prosecutions must meet the charge approval standard of the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute.” The threshold for commencement of a prosecution applies without modification to national security offences. Specifically, the public interest criteria cannot affect the assessment of the sufficiency of the evidence. Where the evidentiary standard is met, a prosecution will normally best serve the public interest given that national security cases are inherently serious. However, each case requires an individual analysis of the factors in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute.”

3.2 Deciding which Charges Should Be Laid

One of the common issues in national security prosecutions is deciding which charges should be laid. This decision will often be informed by four considerations: the sensitivity of the information, the assessment of the evidence in light of the rights protected by the Charter, the public interest, and jurisdictional issues.

3.2.1 Sensitive Information

National security prosecutions usually rely on sensitive information whose disclosure could be injurious to national security, international relations or national defence, or could reveal cabinet confidences. As part of the consideration of the reasonable prospect of conviction, prosecutors must conduct extensive consultations with Government of Canada stakeholders, including the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Global Affairs Canada, the Department of National Defence, and the National Security Group of the Department of Justice.

These consultations are required to ensure that evidence can be used as well as to establish a litigation strategy addressing the timing, extent and manner of disclosures. Prosecutors must consider not only the disclosure of information that will be used as evidence, but also the disclosure of information that will be at issue during pre-trial applications challenging investigative steps such as warrants and other judicial orders. Prosecutors must also consider the disclosure of information relating to the initiation of the criminal investigation and to activities that may have been undertaken before the criminal investigation or in parallel. It may not be possible to arrive at a final determination in regard to disclosure given that some elements will require consultations with departments and agencies who are responsible for protection of the information or other court proceedings such as those pursuant to s. 38 of the CEA.

3.2.2 Assessment of the Evidence in Light of the Rights Protected by the Charter

Prosecutors must assess evidence related to the commission of a terrorism offence in light of the rights and freedoms protected by the Charter. The political, ideological or religious purpose of an act is often an element of a terrorism offence. Section 83.01 of the Criminal Code defines “terrorist activity” either as an offence under one of the enumerated international conventions and protocols, or as an act or omission committed in whole or in part for a political, religious, or ideological purpose, objective, or cause. The second definition is met if the activity was committed completely or in part because of a religious, ideological or political purpose. While the motivation need not be the sole or even primary purpose in relation to the activity, it should be a significant one. Determining whether the purpose is political, ideological or religious, or a combination of one or more of these factors, will depend on the evidence. Trying to particularize how they are in fact combined may not be possible.

The treatment of religious purposes requires particular consideration because of the potential that biases and stereotypes may arise. Prosecutors should not be reluctant to inquire into the religious purpose of an act. While it may be convenient to attempt to characterize all beliefs, objectives or purposes as political or ideological rather than religious, Parliament should be assumed to have been familiar with the judicial considerations of religion when it included it as part of the purpose requirement in the definition. Specifically, there is no basis to confine religious beliefs to mainstream or established orthodox manifestations of any particular religious belief system. While the term religious is not defined in the Criminal Code, the Supreme Court of Canada has dealt with the term religion in the following terms in the context of the exercise of freedom of religion:

To summarize up to this point, our Court’s past decisions and the basic principles underlying freedom of religion support the view that freedom of religion consists of the freedom to undertake practices and harbour beliefs, having a nexus with religion, in which an individual demonstrates he or she sincerely believes or is sincerely undertaking in order to connect with the divine or as a function of his or her spiritual faith, irrespective of whether a particular practice or belief is required by official religious dogma or is in conformity with the position of religious officials.⁹

⁹ Syndicat Northcrest v. Amselem, [2004] 2 SCR 551 at para 46.

The Supreme Court therefore focused on the personal choices that individuals make with respect to religious beliefs. It follows that an individual's religious claims may have very little connection to official religious dogma or to the position of religious representatives. The terminology used to describe a religious motivation must be sensitive to the inadvertent effects that too broad a description using terminology that refers to more widely held, non-violent beliefs may cause.

Prosecutors must be mindful, however, about the legitimate expression of beliefs when they assess evidence about the political, ideological or religious purpose of an act. However, violent acts, including threats of violence, are clearly excluded from the ambit of s. 2 of the Charter.

Prosecutors must be guided by the interpretative provision enacted at the time of the adoption of the amendments to Part II.1 of Criminal Code in the Anti-Terrorism Act, 2001. Specifically, s. 83.01 (1.1) provides that:

(1.1) For greater certainty, the expression of a political, religious or ideological thought, belief or opinion does not come within paragraph (b) of the definition terrorist activity in subsection (1) unless it constitutes an act or omission that satisfies the criteria of that paragraph.

The preamble to the Anti-Terrorism Act highlights that the provisions are to be interpreted in a manner that continues “[t]o respect and promote the values reflected in, and the rights and freedoms guaranteed by, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.” Significant among those rights and freedoms are those guaranteed in s. 2 of the Charter, namely,

- (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
- (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;
- (c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and
- (d) freedom of association.

Prosecutors must make a deliberate effort to adequately take into account the possible legitimate exercise of these rights. This may include the thoughts, beliefs, or opinions held or expressed by the accused or by persons alleged to be associated with the accused. A description or characterization of the motivational component of a terrorism offence can inadvertently result in an implicit association with an established ideological, political or religious school of thought or belief. Such an association may negatively affect other persons who share the underlying motivation but condemn any criminal acts and attempts to condone them.

3.2.3 Public Interest

Prosecutors must consider the public interest when deciding which charges should be laid. The choice of charges is sometimes binary: it could either be prosecuted with a national security lens or be prosecuted without such a lens, by applying other Criminal Code offences. When confronted with this choice, prosecutors must determine which offences should be prosecuted in the public interest. Besides considering which offences are most clearly supported by admissible evidence, prosecutors must also consider the potential impact of particular charges on national security, international relations and national defence. This includes considering to what extent the disclosure required for the prosecution may have a negative impact on those interests.

Prosecutors must also consider which charges appropriately reflect the nature of the conduct and its gravity, denunciation being a particularly relevant consideration for terrorism offences. In the Report on the Air India tragedy, the Honourable John Major summarized the characteristics of terrorism that distinguish it from other crimes. He noted that “[t]errorism is an existential threat to Canadian society in a way that murder, assault, robbery and other crimes are not. Terrorists reject and challenge the very foundations of Canadian society.”¹⁰ The Supreme Court has affirmed that denunciation and deterrence, both specific and general, will generally be paramount at the sentencing hearing given the seriousness of terrorism offences. Moreover, the attempt to justify or legitimize violent acts by putting a political, ideological or religious gloss over them must be denounced. In other words, prosecutors may underline that the beliefs or purposes in themselves are not criminal even if they are abhorrent, but that the underlying acts are criminal, and are not justified by virtue of the association with a political, ideological or religious belief or purpose.

At the same time, prosecutors should consider if charging a person with a terrorism offence rather than another Criminal Code offence would be counterproductive. Prosecutors must assess if a terrorism offence would unduly or unnecessarily stigmatize the accused in a manner disproportionate to the nature of the conduct, the harm it represents, and the needs of deterrence and denunciation. Prosecutors must also assess if charging the accused with a terrorism offence may victimize the accused’s family and their community during the course of the investigation or the trial process, including through stigmatization by association. The nature of the evidence required may be relevant to this consideration. Prosecutors should consider if the alleged offence can be proven with evidence that does not further victimize the family members of the accused, or in a way that helps preserve family or community relationships, which will facilitate the accused’s reintegration and rehabilitation after serving their sentence.

¹⁰ See Commission of Inquiry into the Investigation of the Bombing of Air India Flight 182, Air India Flight 182: A Canadian Tragedy, vol. 1 (Ottawa: Public Works and Government Services Canada, 2010) at 159.

3.2.4 Jurisdictional Issues

The choice of charges may raise jurisdictional issues between the Attorney General of Canada and provincial Attorneys General. The Attorney General of Canada has a wide jurisdiction to prosecute national security offences. The Security Offences Act provides the Attorney General of Canada with jurisdiction to prosecute any offence where:

- (a) the alleged offence arises out of conduct constituting a threat to the security of Canada within the meaning of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act, or
- (b) the victim of the alleged offence is an internationally protected person within the meaning of section 2 of the Criminal Code.¹¹

In addition, s. 2.3 of the Criminal Code confers concurrent jurisdiction to the Attorney General of Canada in relation to certain Criminal Code offences, including terrorism offences.

Where the conduct under consideration could constitute an offence that is ordinarily or exclusively prosecuted by a provincial Attorney General, however, prosecutors will have to determine if the Attorney General of Canada's jurisdiction should be asserted. For example, the Attorney General of Canada has jurisdiction to prosecute terrorism offences. A terrorism offence includes not only those in Part II.1 of the Criminal Code, but also any other indictable offence that could constitute a terrorist activity. In this way, placing an explosive in a place of public use could not only constitute an offence under s. 431.2 of the Criminal Code, but also constitute a terrorism offence.

Prosecutors should determine if they should seek jurisdiction through a delegation from the Attorney General of the province. Terrorism offences may require proving additional elements that would not be required to establish guilt of the other Criminal Code offence. Prosecutors should consider if the evidence proves these additional elements in any event, even in the absence of any allegation that the conduct constituted a terrorism offence. If that is the case, then prosecutors may consider whether they should seek a delegation from the provincial Attorney General. Such a delegation may also be appropriate when PPSC is already prosecuting other charges within the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of Canada, or when the evidence includes sensitive information that should be handled by prosecutors with established federal relationships and security clearances. Understandings between PPSC and provincial prosecution services are in place to determine if a matter will be the responsibility of the Attorney General of Canada or the Attorney General of a province. These understandings contemplate early communication between interested Attorneys General. Any questions about the application of the understandings should be raised with the National Terrorism Prosecutions Coordinator.

¹¹ Security Offences Act, RSC 1985, c S-7, s 2.

3.3 Procedure to Obtain Consent to Commence Proceedings

The consent of the Attorney General is required to commence many national security proceedings such as terrorism proceedings.¹² That consent may be given by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) or a Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (DDPP).¹³

Requests to obtain consent should be made by the appropriate senior headquarters representative of the concerned law enforcement agency and be directed to a DDPP. Prosecutors must inform their CFP if they anticipate that a police force they are advising will request consent to commence proceedings. Prosecutors, with the approval of their CFP, must also inform the National Prosecutions Terrorism Coordinator.

Once a request is submitted, PPSC Headquarters will request a recommendation from the region in which the investigation originated. Prosecutors in the region must ensure that they possess sufficient information, including documentation from the investigative file, to assess the request according to the applicable standard. Prosecutors must provide their assessment by preparing a memorandum that contains:

1. The name of each accused, the charges, and the date, if any, for which the police are requesting consent;
2. A concise description and analysis of the available evidence, an explanation of how the evidence results in a reasonable prospect of conviction with respect to each accused on each count, and addressing why it is in the public interest to prosecute. The memorandum should highlight the strengths and weaknesses of the case, as well as any significant legal issues expected to be encountered, and any issues of particular importance to the assessment of the public interest;
3. An assessment of the degree to which the prosecution may require the disclosure of information that could be injurious to national security, international relations or national defence;
4. A recommendation on whether the request should be granted;
5. Copies of witness statements and other key pieces of evidence essential to evaluating the strength of the prosecution's case; and
6. The Information containing all charges.

The CFP will review the memorandum and, if satisfied that it adequately considers the factors indicated above, endorse the recommendation and send it to a DDPP. The DDPP will conduct an objective assessment of the request. If consent is granted, the requesting prosecutor must prepare a briefing note to the Attorney General in compliance with s. 13 of the DPP Act.¹⁴ Prosecutors must obtain the consent of the DDPP if they review the evidence and conclude that all or some of the charges should be withdrawn, stayed or reduced.

¹² Criminal Code, s 83.24.

¹³ Section 2 defines the Attorney General as including their lawful deputy, being the Deputy Attorney General. Subsection 3(4) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9 [DPP Act] designates the DPP as the Deputy Attorney General of Canada for the purposes of exercising the powers and duties under the DPP Act. Subsection 6(3) of the DPP Act designates the DDPPs, under the supervision of the DPP, as lawful deputies of the Attorney General. See also the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.5 Delegated Decision-Making".

Less formal communications may be appropriate when an arrest has been made or is imminent and time does not permit a structured memorandum. This may include a combination of written materials and supplementary oral briefings. This may also be done entirely orally in cases of extreme and unanticipated urgency that does not allow the preparation of any written materials. However, any abbreviation is one of form and not of substance. In all cases, the reviewing Crown and the CFP (or their designate) must provide their informed assessments of the file. A written record of the information and analysis provided in the briefing must be made by the reviewing Crown as soon as possible.

Where a request is made to lay criminal charges, but there is no reasonable prospect of conviction and the threshold to commence proceedings is therefore not met, prosecutors should consider if there is nevertheless a reasonable prospect of meeting the threshold for a recognizance under either s. 810.011 or s. 83.3 of the Criminal Code.¹⁵ If that is the case, prosecutors should inform the police accordingly so that the police can determine if they want to seek the consent of the Attorney General to commence an application for a recognizance under one of these provisions.

Where the police request consent for a recognizance under s. 810.011 or s. 83.3 of the Criminal Code, prosecutors must follow the same procedures as a request to commence proceedings and determine whether there is a reasonable prospect of meeting the threshold for a recognizance under either provision.

4. MANAGEMENT OF NATIONAL SECURITY PROSECUTIONS

All national security prosecutions are deemed to be Major Cases and the policies contained in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.1 Major Case Management” apply to them. In addition, national security prosecutions must follow the following reporting and record-keeping obligations.

Prosecutors must ensure that their CFP, the National Terrorism Prosecutions Coordinator and the DDPP are informed of the developments of national security files. Prosecutors must inform their CFP and the National Terrorism Prosecutions Coordinator from the moment they are asked to provide pre-charge legal advice. Prosecutors must keep their CFP informed of the progress of the file in accordance with regional processes and keep the DDPP informed through the National Terrorism Prosecutions Coordinator. Keeping the National Terrorism Prosecutions Coordinator informed of developments in a file is important, notably because it allows the DDPP to determine whether any case is ready to be considered for consent. In particular, prosecutors must consult the National Terrorism Prosecutions Coordinator before providing any advice to law enforcement suggesting that the thresholds have not been met. Once the trial has been completed, the CFP must report the outcome to the DDPP.

¹⁴ See the PPSC Deskbook Directive “1.2 Duty to Inform the Attorney General under s.13 of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act.”

¹⁵ The test under s 810.011 requires reasonable grounds to fear that a person may commit a terrorism offence. The test under s 83.3 requires reasonable grounds to believe that a terrorist activity will be carried out and reasonable suspicion that a recognizance or arrest is necessary to prevent the terrorist activity from occurring. They are prospective.

Prosecutors must prepare s. 13 briefing notes at several stages of the prosecution to enable the Attorney General to exercise their powers under the DPP Act, should the Attorney General choose to do so. More precisely, prosecutors should prepare a s. 13 briefing note when:

- Consent is granted to commence proceedings;
- Prosecutors conclude that all or some of the charges should be withdrawn, stayed or reduced, and have consulted the DDPP;
- The court discharges the accused on a preliminary inquiry or enters a judicial stay of proceedings;
- The accused is acquitted or convicted;
- The court imposes a sentence; and
- Important questions of general interest are raised such as important constitutional issues.

Information about national security prosecutions must be properly recorded. Each office must maintain records about police requests to commence proceedings in relation to terrorism charges or recognizances under either s. 810.011 or s. 83.3 of the Criminal Code, including the date when the request was made. Prosecutors should also confirm with the police when, from an operational perspective, they require a decision, and record this information on the file. Each office should also maintain records about police requests for legal advice regarding thresholds, when the police do not seek consent to commence proceedings but ask for feedback on whether a threshold has been met. Finally, records should be kept respecting whether or not a brief provided by the police was sufficient to permit prosecutors to make an assessment, and any steps that were taken in response to the request.

5. SENTENCING

As in all criminal cases, sentencing is a highly individualized process depending on the particular facts at issue and the circumstances of the offender. Sentences in national security cases are decided under the same set of sentencing principles as other crimes.

National security prosecutions catch a wide variety of conduct, a feature recognized in respect of terrorism offences by the Supreme Court of Canada in R v Khawaja. The Supreme Court also held, however, that denunciation and deterrence, both specific and general, would generally be paramount at the sentencing hearing given the seriousness of national security offences, including terrorism offences.¹⁶

Sentencing remains an individualized exercise that takes into account all of the circumstances of the offender and the offence. When assessing the individual factors of a case, prosecutors should note that courts have so far indicated that life sentences or sentences exceeding 20 years will generally be appropriate when offenders knowingly engaged in a terrorist activity that was designed or is likely to result in the indiscriminate killing of innocent human beings. There may be exceptional circumstances warranting a departure from the ordinary sentencing range, such as when the offender cooperated with the authorities to bring other terrorists to justice.

5.1 Consecutive Sentences

Terrorism offences may require consecutive sentences. Section 83.26 of the Criminal Code provides that a sentence imposed for an offence under any of ss. 83.02 to 83.04 and 83.18 to 83.23 must be served consecutively to any other punishment imposed on the person for an offence arising out of the same event or series of events, unless the sentence was one of life imprisonment. In R v Khawaja, the Supreme Court held that the requirement of s. 83.26 is not inconsistent with the totality principle. The fact that sentences of 20 years or more may be imposed more often in terrorism cases attests to the particular gravity of terrorist offences and the moral culpability of those who commit them.¹⁷

5.2 Delayed Parole Eligibility

Courts have the power to delay parole eligibility in accordance s. 743.6 of the Criminal Code. Prosecutors should consider presenting an application under this section, especially where the offences are serious and there are no exceptional mitigating circumstances.

Certain national security offences may be subject to a presumption for delayed parole eligibility. Pursuant to s. 743.6 (1.2) of the Criminal Code, terrorism offences are presumed to be offences for which a delayed parole order is appropriate. If a prosecutor is of the view that exceptional circumstances rebut this presumption, they must prepare a written recommendation to their CFP before the matter is addressed in court. If the CFP is satisfied that the recommendation is appropriate, the CFP endorses the recommendation and sends it to the DDPP for approval.¹⁸

¹⁶ R v Khawaja, 2012 SCC 69.

¹⁷ Ibid at para 126.

¹⁸ Other national security offences may not be subject to this presumption, for example, the normal rules for delayed parole eligibility apply to offences under s. 4 to 7 of the Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act.

5.3 Sentencing under the Youth Criminal Justice Act

The Youth Criminal Justice Act (YCJA) applies to any young person charged with a terrorism offence or recognizance under s. 810.011 or s. 83.3 of the Criminal Code. In considering sentencing for a young person who has been convicted of either a terrorism offence or a breach of a recognizance, the YCJA's provisions regarding the availability of custodial sentences will apply. Subsection 39(1) of the YCJA states that:

(1) A youth justice court shall not commit a young person to custody under section 42 (youth sentences) unless

(a) the young person has committed a violent offence;

(b) the young person has previously been found guilty of an offence under section 137 in relation to more than one sentence and, if the court is imposing a sentence for an offence under subsections 145\(2\) to \(5\) of the Criminal Code or section 137, the young person caused harm, or a risk of harm, to the safety of the public in committing that offence;

(c) the young person has committed an indictable offence for which an adult would be liable to imprisonment for a term of more than two years and has a history that indicates a pattern of either extrajudicial sanctions or of findings of guilt or of both under this Act or the Young Offenders Act, chapter Y-1 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985; or

(d) in exceptional cases where the young person has committed an indictable offence, the aggravating circumstances of the offence are such that the imposition of a non-custodial sentence would be inconsistent with the purpose and principles set out in section 38.

Prosecutors should also note that other provisions of the YCJA set out other requirements and considerations before a custodial sentence may be imposed.

5.3.1 Terrorism Offences

A young person with no record who is found guilty of a terrorism offence may be eligible for a custodial sentence pursuant to s. 39(1)(a) of the YCJA. This section provides that custodial sentences may be imposed when the young person has committed a violent offence. Violent offence is defined in s. 2 of the YCJA as:

(a) An offence committed by a young person that includes as an element the causing of bodily harm;

(b) An attempt or a threat to commit an offence referred to in paragraph (a); or

(c) An offence in the commission of which a young person endangers the life or safety of another person by creating a substantial likelihood of causing bodily harm.

Given the broad range of conduct which may be captured by terrorism offences such as facilitation, prosecutors will have to consider whether the conduct at issue in a particular case fits the definition of violent offence, and be prepared to counter defence arguments that it does not.

Paragraph 39(1)(d) would also generally support a custodial sentence for terrorism offences. It provides that in “exceptional cases,” a custodial sentence may be imposed for an indictable offence where the aggravating circumstances of the offence are such that the imposition of a non-custodial sentence would be inconsistent with the purpose and principles set out in s. 38.

5.3.2 Breach of Recognizance

A custodial sentence will generally not be available when a young person has no record, enters into a s. 810.011 recognizance, and is then found guilty of a breach of that recognizance. Section 39(1)(b) provides that a custodial sentence may be imposed if the young person has failed to comply with “non-custodial sentences.” This has been judicially interpreted to mean failure to comply with more than one sentence – in other words, multiple breaches of the same non-custodial sentence are not sufficient.¹⁹ The young person must have been found guilty and sentenced to at least two separate non-custodial sentences, which were then breached.

Prosecutors should state for the record the reason why they are not seeking a custodial sentence in their sentencing submissions for the breach of a s. 810.011 recognizance. Prosecutors should also take the position that a new non-custodial sentence should be imposed for the breach, such that if there is a breach of the new sentence, the young person would be eligible for a custodial sentence under s. 39(1)(b). This places the young person on notice.

The YCJA does not include a specific provision dealing with the breach of a recognizance under s. 810.011. In the event of such a breach, s. 811 of the Criminal Code applies.²⁰

If a young person fails or refuses to enter into a recognizance, the court can impose any of the sanctions under s. 42(2) of the YCJA, but a custody and supervision order under s. 42(2)(n) cannot exceed 30 days.²¹

¹⁹ R v A (E.S.) (2003) 57 W.C.B. (2d) 461 (Alta Prov Ct).

²⁰ See s 140 of the YCJA, which says that the Criminal Code provisions apply regarding offences committed by young persons, with any required modifications, except to the extent that they are inconsistent with or excluded by the YCJA.

²¹ YCJA, s 14(2).

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.2 COMPETITION ACT

DIRECTOR'S GUIDELINE ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	3
2. POLICY OBJECTIVE.....	3
3. COMPETITION LAW PROSECUTORS	3
4. ROLE AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF CROWN COUNSEL IN COMPETITION LAW MATTERS.....	3
4.1. Consultation	4
4.2. Role and responsibilities of Crown counsel prior to the laying of charges	4
4.3. Role and responsibilities at the prosecution stage	5
4.4. Plea and resolution discussions.....	5
4.5. Decision to appeal.....	5
5. IMMUNITY AGREEMENT	5
5.1. Process for granting immunity.....	6
5.2. Cooperation and disclosure by the immunity applicant.....	6
5.3. Revoking immunity	7
6. PLEA AGREEMENT FOLLOWING A RECOMMENDATION OF LENIENCY..	7
6.1. Administration of the leniency program	8
6.2. Cooperation and disclosure by the leniency applicant.....	8
6.3. Plea and sentencing agreement	8
7. APPLICATIONS FOR PROHIBITION ORDERS UNDER S. 34(2) OF THE COMPETITION ACT.....	9
7.1. Considerations.....	9
7.2. Procedure	9
APPENDIX A – MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE COMMISSIONER OF COMPETITION AND THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS.....	10
APPENDIX B – ORGANIZATION IMMUNITY AGREEMENT TEMPLATE	20
APPENDIX C – INDIVIDUAL IMMUNITY AGREEMENT TEMPLATE	28
APPENDIX D – LETTER OF INDIVIDUAL COVERAGE ASSOCIATED WITH ORGANIZATION IMMUNITY	35
APPENDIX E – LETTER GUARANTEEING NO DIRECT USE IN EVIDENCE OF INFORMATION PROVIDED	36

1. INTRODUCTION

The Competition Act (Act)¹ is a law of general application that establishes basic principles for the conduct of business in Canada. The Act is designed to, among other objectives, maintain and encourage competition in Canada and provide consumers with competitive prices and product choices.

2. POLICY OBJECTIVE

This guideline sets out the main practices and policies of the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) with respect to competition law cases. A Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) has been established between the DPP and the Commissioner of Competition (Commissioner). The purpose of the MOU is to clarify the parties' roles and responsibilities at the investigative and prosecution stages of a case under the Act.²

3. COMPETITION LAW PROSECUTORS

The National Capital Regional Office (NCRO) includes a group of Crown counsel (the Competition Law Section (CLS)) assigned to conduct prosecutions under the Act in the courts of all provinces and before the Federal Court.³

When the Commissioner of Competition requires the services of a prosecutor under s. 21 of the Act or refers evidence to the Attorney General under s. 23, the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) of the NCRO determines whether the case should be assigned to counsel in the NCRO or whether assistance should be sought from Crown counsel in another regional office of the Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC) or from an agent having the appropriate delegation from the DPP.

When a competition law case is assigned to Crown counsel outside the NCR, the counsel should consult with the CFP or the Deputy CFP of the NCRO on any legal decision or issue that may arise in the course of the prosecution.

4. ROLE AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF CROWN COUNSEL IN COMPETITION LAW MATTERS

The responsibilities of the Commissioner⁴ include the investigation of suspected offences under the Act and the referral of evidence to the PPSC. In addition, the Commissioner

¹ RSC 1985, c C-34.

² A copy of the MOU is attached as Appendix A to this guideline and can also be found online: [Competition Bureau \[MOU\]](#).

³ See Competition Act, supra note 1, s 73.

⁴ The Commissioner discharges his responsibilities with assistance of members of the Competition Bureau.

makes recommendations to the PPSC on matters such as the granting of immunity and leniency, charges to be laid and the appropriate sanctions to be imposed following a conviction.

Crown counsel involved in competition law matters are responsible for providing prosecutorial advice, both general and specific, during an investigation. Under s. 23 of the Act, the Commissioner may remit evidence gathered in the course of an investigation to the PPSC with a request that a prosecution be commenced. The evidence is then assessed in accordance with the principles set out in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute” for the purpose of determining whether a prosecution is warranted. When a prosecution is approved, Competition Bureau (Bureau) officers swear the information.

4.1. Consultation

In the regulatory prosecution context, “public interest” considerations include the objectives of the regulatory regime in question. Crown counsel should consult the Bureau in order to ascertain those objectives, especially as they relate to the matter being considered, and more particularly, with respect to charges to be laid and arguments to make before the court.⁵ In this regard, see the PPSC Deskbook directive “1.3 Consultation within Government” in which the importance of consultation and communication is emphasized.

The goal of prosecutions under the Act is to promote compliance with the competition policy entrenched in the Act. Nevertheless, in light of the independence of the DPP, the Commissioner cannot dictate litigation positions to prosecutors or impose specific courses of action.⁶

4.2. Role and responsibilities of Crown counsel prior to the laying of charges

Crown counsel may be called upon from the outset of an investigation to provide legal advice to help ensure that the investigative strategy, techniques and procedures are consistent with the rules of evidence and with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Counsel may also advise Bureau officers on the nature of the evidence required, the use of investigative powers and the sufficiency of evidence.

While Crown counsel may work closely with the investigative team, they must not act as officers themselves by, for example, taking part in searches, participating in the surveillance of suspects or conducting interviews of witnesses. However, in certain circumstances, Crown counsel may interview important witnesses before charges are laid, for example, in the context of the Bureau’s Immunity and Leniency Programs.

⁵ See MOU, supra note 2 at para 2.31.

⁶ See the PPSC Deskbook directive “1.3 Consultation within Government”.

Crown counsel may also provide legal advice on Bureau policies and programs in the criminal field (for example, the Immunity Program) and on practice and advisory notes (for example, search and seizure, disclosure, immunity and plea agreements).

4.3. Role and responsibilities at the prosecution stage

Crown counsel are responsible for the approval and prosecution of charges under the Act and for the conduct of all plea and resolution discussions.

Upon the referral of evidence by the Bureau to the PPSC in accordance with s. 23 of the Act, counsel must exercise his or her discretion independently of the Bureau in determining whether or not the recommended prosecution meets the standards set out in the PPSC Deskbook.⁷

4.4. Plea and resolution discussions

Crown counsel are responsible for conducting all plea and resolution discussions in accordance with the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.7 Resolution Discussions”. Crown counsel will consult with Bureau officers regarding the terms of a proposed resolution⁸ and will brief Bureau officers on the terms and supporting rationale of a plea agreement.

4.5. Decision to appeal

In general, decisions as to whether to commence an appeal are made by the CFP of the NCRO after consultation with the Team Leader of the CLS, a representative from the regional office in the province where the appeal is to be commenced and, in matters with significant public interest or national importance, the Deputy DPP, Regulatory and Economic Prosecutions. Crown counsel who has made a recommendation for an appeal must wait to receive instructions from the CFP before commencing an appeal.

5. IMMUNITY AGREEMENT

In respect of serious criminal activity under the Act, it may be in the public interest to offer immunity from prosecution to persons willing to terminate their participation in the illegal conduct and fully cooperate with the Bureau and the PPSC.⁹

Pursuant to the Bureau’s Immunity Program, persons or organizations with information concerning anticompetitive business practices such as bid-rigging and price fixing are encouraged to make disclosure to the Bureau.¹⁰ Both organizations and individuals may request immunity. When an organization is granted immunity, the organization may also apply for immunity for its directors and employees, past or present, provided these individuals meet the criteria and commit to the same disclosure and cooperation requirements as the organization.

⁷ For the guiding principles regarding independence and pre-charge involvement of Crown counsel in police investigations and the delineation of the respective roles of officers and prosecutors. See [R v Regan, 2002 SCC 12, \[2002\] 1 SCR 297](#).

⁸ MOU, supra note 2 at para 2.33.

⁹ See also the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.3 Immunity Agreements”.

The decision to grant immunity rests solely with the Crown and, like all exercises of prosecutorial discretion, is made in the name of the DPP.¹¹

5.1. Process for granting immunity

Bureau officers conducting an investigation and approached by an applicant for immunity will formulate a recommendation to Crown counsel. This recommendation must set out in as much detail as possible all relevant considerations to enable counsel to exercise his or her discretion independently. When counsel agrees that immunity should be granted, he or she must obtain approval from the Team Leader of the CLS to enter into an immunity agreement, which sets out the terms by which the parties to the agreement will be bound.

To that end, Crown counsel should follow immunity agreement templates. These can be found in Appendices B (organization immunity) and C (individual immunity) of this guideline. Individuals covered by organization immunity (Appendix B) must sign a standard letter setting out the independent conditions for continuing or revoking the individual immunity coverage. An example of such a letter is provided in Appendix D. Any proposed deviation from these standard forms must be approved by the Team Leader of the CLS. Because an immunity agreement typically includes issues of interest to the Bureau, the relevant Deputy Commissioner of the Bureau should also be notified of any such deviations.¹²

5.2. Cooperation and disclosure by the immunity applicant

When Crown counsel, on behalf of the DPP, grants immunity and the parties enter into an agreement to that effect, the applicant for immunity must confirm in writing, as soon as possible, the content of the representations it has made within the application process and disclose all pertinent facts and documents of which it has knowledge and/or possession. Cooperation on the part of the immunity applicant is crucial and must be given completely and promptly.

As part of this process, Bureau officers will usually interview all involved parties, including an organization's senior executives or, if the immunity applicant is an individual, that person. Bureau officers may have to interview witnesses before an immunity agreement can be implemented. In such cases, Crown counsel will provide an assurance in writing that the statements made by these witnesses and the information or documents they provide cannot be used directly against them. An example of a letter covering such a situation is included in Appendix E.

¹⁰ The Immunity Program sets out the practices of the Bureau, the respective roles of the Bureau and the PPSC with respect to the process of granting immunity, the conditions on which the Bureau will recommend that the PPSC grant immunity and the obligations of the applicant for immunity.

¹¹ See Krieger v Law Society (Alberta), 2002 SCC 65, [2002] 3 SCR 372 at para 46; and Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9, s 9(1).

¹² See MOU, supra note 2 at para 3.11.

5.3. Revoking immunity

Under the terms of an immunity agreement, immunity is contingent upon immunity applicants fulfilling their obligations. The agreement also provides that immunity may be revoked. Like the decision to grant immunity, the decision to revoke rests with the PPSC. However, Crown counsel should take into account any representations made by the Bureau in that regard.

In consultation with the Team Leader of the CLS, Crown counsel in such cases must evaluate whether it is advisable to revoke immunity by referring to the factors set out in section 9 of the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.3 Immunity Agreements”. Factors identified as relevant to possible revocation include when an immunity applicant:

- withdraws promised co-operation with the Crown;
- fails to be truthful when testifying;¹³
- has wilfully or recklessly misled the investigating agency or Crown counsel about material facts concerning the case including factors relevant to that person's reliability and credibility as a witness; or
- has sought immunity by conduct amounting to a fraud or an obstruction of justice.

A final decision to revoke immunity must be approved by the CFP of the NCRO.

6. PLEA AGREEMENT FOLLOWING A RECOMMENDATION OF LENIENCY

The Bureau's Leniency Program complements the Immunity Program and aims at encouraging other participants in an illegal cartel to acknowledge their actions and cooperate with the Bureau and the PPSC. In such cases, the Bureau recommends to the PPSC that the applicant receive lenient treatment in sentencing following a guilty plea. As with all plea negotiations, openness and fairness are crucial to the effective operation of the Leniency Program.

¹³ See e.g. R v Ahluwalia \(2000\), 149 CCC \(3d\) 193, 39 CR \(5th\) 356, 138 OAC 154 \(ONCA\), where the Crown was criticized for failing to fully investigate the lack of full disclosure of a witness's criminal record. See also the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.5 Principles of Disclosure”, for Crown counsel's disclosure obligations.

6.1. Administration of the leniency program

Organizations or individuals may apply for leniency provided that they meet the criteria set out in the Leniency Program.

The Bureau's recommendations of leniency to the PPSC must set out all relevant considerations to enable Crown counsel to exercise their discretion independently and with full knowledge of the facts. Only Crown counsel has the discretion to enter into and conduct discussions leading to a resolution of the case and sentencing.

6.2. Cooperation and disclosure by the leniency applicant

Under the Leniency Program, a plea and sentencing agreement entered into between the DPP and a leniency applicant sets the conditions under which the applicant will benefit from leniency in sentencing. The agreement specifies the obligation upon the candidate for leniency to provide full, frank, timely and truthful disclosure and cooperation during any related investigation and resulting prosecution.

Failure by a leniency applicant to fulfill its obligations could lead to any leniency granted being revoked. In such circumstances, Crown counsel, in consultation with the Team Leader of the CLS, should evaluate whether to revoke leniency by having regard to the factors set out in section 9 of the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.3 Immunity Agreements".

A final decision to revoke leniency must be approved by the CFP of the NCRO.

6.3. Plea and sentencing agreement

Generally speaking, plea and sentencing resolutions¹⁴ (including agreements pursuant to a leniency recommendation made by the Bureau under the Leniency Program) entered into with respect to an offence under the Act prior to charges being laid should be reduced to a written plea agreement in the form set out in Appendices F and G of this guideline.¹⁵ The agreement must include a statement of facts admitted by the accused.

When charges have already been laid, Crown counsel may decide to proceed without a written plea agreement if no permanent obligation to cooperate will be imposed on the pleading party as part of the proposed resolution.

It is the responsibility of each Crown counsel to ensure that the standard plea agreement is used in every case where counsel proposes to enter into such an agreement, when a permanent obligation to cooperate as well as immunity arrangements will be provided for in the agreement. Any proposed deviation from the standard plea agreements must be approved by the Team Leader of the CLS.

¹⁴ See also the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.7 Resolution Discussions".

¹⁵ Appendices F and G, the plea agreement templates are currently being developed, and will be posted upon completion.

7. APPLICATIONS FOR PROHIBITION ORDERS UNDER S. 34(2) OF THE COMPETITION ACT

Section 34\(2\) of the Competition Act permits a superior court of criminal jurisdiction to prohibit or prevent the commission of an offence under Part VI of that Act. The court may prohibit the “commission of the offence or the doing or continuation of any act or thing by that person or any other person constituting or directed toward the commission of the offence”. Before the prohibition order can be made proceedings must have been commenced.

7.1. Considerations

The following factors, among others, are relevant when deciding whether a case should be the subject of a prohibition order, a prosecution or a more informal action:

1. any history of anti-competitive or other relevant behaviour by the respondent company, its principals or any associated company;
2. the seriousness of the conduct, including:
 - i. whether a prior order or undertaking has been contravened;
 - ii. the apparent effect of the conduct on consumers, competitors, etc.;
 - iii. whether the conduct violates corporate policy (and, if so, how effectively that policy is policed, and how quickly the conduct was terminated when senior officials became aware of it);
3. any remedial steps by the respondent; and
4. compliance policies of the Competition Bureau.

7.2. Procedure

The decision to pursue a prohibition order under s. 34\(2\) requires the approval of the CFP of the NCRO. The CFP will sign the information in support of the prohibition order.

The Deputy DPP, Regulatory and Economic Prosecutions and Management Branch, must approve the decision to pursue a s. 34(2) prohibition order in cases of significant public interest. A request for the Deputy DPP’s approval must be accompanied by a memorandum outlining the background of the matter and the reasons for the recommendation. A draft order, information, notice of application, consent, and an agreed statement of facts or affidavit must also be included.

APPENDIX A – MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE COMMISSIONER OF COMPETITION AND THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

May 13, 2010

With respect to the conduct of criminal investigations and prosecutions of offences under the Competition Act, the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act, the Textile Labelling Act and the Precious Metals Marking Act.

PREAMBLE

Whereas the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) and the Commissioner of Competition (Commissioner), the Parties to this Memorandum of Understanding (the Parties), have separate responsibilities within the criminal justice system of Canada, each Party recognizing the other's independence in performing their respective functions and duties;

Whereas the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions, referred to as the Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC), has a section composed of prosecutors (the Competition Law Section) specifically assigned to prosecutions of offences under the Competition Act, the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act, the Textile Labelling Act, and the Precious Metals Marking Act (the Acts);

Whereas the Commissioner carries out her responsibilities with the support of the Competition Bureau (Bureau), which is composed of authorized representatives, including managers, competition law officers (officers), and support staff;

Whereas the Parties recognize that their roles are interdependent and they need to work together in close consultation in support of one another's mandates;

Whereas it is understood that effective collaboration can be based only on a clear understanding of one another's roles, mutual respect, and trust;

Whereas federal prosecutors are guided by the principles articulated in the Federal Prosecution Service Deskbook (FPS Deskbook).

THEREFORE THE PARTIES AGREE AS FOLLOWS:

1. Purpose of the Memorandum of Understanding and Governing Principles

1.1 The purpose of this Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) is:

1. to provide a clear understanding of the Parties' respective roles and responsibilities at the investigative and prosecution stages of a case under the Acts; and,
2. to improve the efficacy of prosecutions and to implement strategies to enhance the quality of investigations and of the cases presented at trial.

1.2 As a best practice, each Party undertakes to consult the other regarding any decision that is likely to have an impact on a prosecution emanating from a Bureau investigation.

1.3 The Parties undertake to disseminate this MOU throughout their respective organizations so that prosecutors, paralegals, managers, officers and support persons are aware of the principles it establishes and the resolve of the Parties to achieve its purpose.

2. Roles and Responsibilities

2.1 In the exercise of their respective mandates the Parties respect one another's independence while recognizing the need to work together toward common goals.

2.2 The Bureau's responsibilities include the investigation of suspected offences under the Acts, the referral of evidence to the PPSC, and the making of recommendations on the charges to be laid, the appropriate sanction(s) to be imposed, and the granting of immunity and leniency.

2.3 The PPSC is responsible for: prosecutorial advice, both general and specific during the investigation; the decision, in accordance with FPS Deskbook principles, as to whether charges should proceed, the wording of charges, and the choice of persons to be charged; and the prosecution of charges laid.

Bureau: Roles and Responsibilities at the Investigative Stage

2.4 The primary mandate of the Bureau is to enforce and administer the Acts. The Acts are designed to – among other objectives – maintain and encourage competition in Canada, and to provide consumers with competitive prices and product choices.

2.5 Officers commence and conduct investigations pertaining to the Acts. They are responsible for identifying the object and targets of an investigation. They also determine the structure, scope, and duration of those investigations, and the means to be used to carry them out. Under the direction of the Commissioner, officers exercise full discretion with respect to the conduct of investigations.

2.6 The Bureau will assign a lead officer at the opening of an investigation. The lead officer and assigned counsel will be one another's primary point of contact on the file and will keep one another updated as to developments. Officers assigned to the file will keep one another updated as to developments.

2.7 Officers gather evidence, and ensure its preservation. They organize the information and evidence collected over the course of an investigation, in anticipation of litigation and with a view to the Crown's disclosure obligation in accordance with the Briefing Note on Disclosure and with any other directive or guideline of the DPP.

2.8 As may be reasonable, officers will seek the advice of counsel in the PPSC Competition Law Section, assigned counsel from a PPSC regional office or, where appropriate, designated agents of the DPP as defined in paragraph 2.17 of this MOU (counsel) on any legal issue likely to impact an investigation or any subsequent prosecution. Officers will also refer to the relevant Practice Notes issued by the Competition Law Section (PPSC).

2.8.1 More specifically, officers will consult counsel in relation to the following:

- When seeking a search warrant under sections 15 and 16 of the Competition Act, or a search warrant, a general warrant, tracking warrant, or dialled-number recorded warrant under the Criminal Code;
- When seeking judicial authorization for electronic surveillance pursuant to Part VI of the Criminal Code;
- When seeking an order under section 11 of the Competition Act, or a production order under sections 487.012 and 487.013 of the Criminal Code;
- When seeking a special search warrant or a restraint order pursuant to sections 462.32 and 462.33 of the Criminal Code, dealing with suspected proceeds of crime;
- When seeking a sealing order pursuant to section 487.3 of the Criminal Code;
- On matters relating to the granting of immunity or leniency;
- On matters involving undercover or surveillance operations;
- Regarding the preparation of a disclosure package;
- When drafting a Report to Crown Counsel (RTCC) that summarizes the evidence gathered during the investigation, to ensure that it addresses all applicable PPSC legal and policy requirements;
- On claims of solicitor-client privilege; and,
- When retaining an expert.

2.9 In seeking any legal advice, managers and officers will inform counsel of the existence of legal advice they have already received on a given matter from another counsel, of requests for advice on the same or related issues of which they are aware, and of all relevant facts. The above information should be provided to counsel in writing to prevent any misunderstanding.

2.10 When the Bureau formally refers matters together with an RTCC pursuant to section 23 of the Competition Act for such action as warranted, it will endeavour to do so as expeditiously as possible, consistent with its enforcement priorities.

Bureau: Roles and Responsibilities at the Prosecution Stage

2.11 Officers are responsible for providing ongoing, timely support and assistance to counsel during the course of post-referral proceedings until the prosecution is completed. More specifically, they will:

- Preserve evidence and all inculpatory and exculpatory information obtained, and maintain continuity and security of all evidence;
- Provide and identify to counsel all relevant information pursuant to disclosure obligations. The ultimate determination of relevance is up to counsel;
- Be available to review with counsel the facts of the case and disclosure issues;
- Take all necessary steps to ensure the availability of witnesses;
- Attend pre-trial interviews of prospective witnesses by counsel, and keep notes of such interviews for disclosure purposes;
- Attend court proceedings, when required;
- Carry out additional investigative tasks that are reasonably required by counsel.

2.12 Officers will continue to provide all relevant evidence, reports and briefs discovered or produced throughout the prosecution phase.

2.13 Officers, when called as witnesses, shall bring with them all notes and evidence in their possession relevant to their anticipated testimony.

2.14 The Bureau is responsible for making arrangements for the attendance of all Crown witnesses in court, expert reports, witness fees, and all litigation expenses, in accordance with applicable Treasury Board guidelines and Rules of Court.

Plea and Resolution Discussions

2.15 The Bureau is responsible for fully briefing counsel of the results of its investigation and identifying available evidence prior to the commencement of any plea and sentence negotiations. The briefing must provide a synopsis of the available evidence, both documentary and testimonial. The Bureau is responsible for making recommendations indicating what it believes to be an appropriate sentence, together with its rationale based on the Bureau's Information Bulletin on Sentencing and Leniency in Cartel Matters.

Prosecutors: Roles and Responsibilities at the Investigative Stage

2.16 Pursuant to subsection 3\(3\) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, the DPP is responsible for carrying out varied duties, which either involve or are related to the prosecution of offences. Broadly speaking, federal prosecutors carry out the criminal litigation responsibilities on behalf of the DPP, namely, the prosecution of infractions and all prosecution-related functions. The PPSC acts as prosecutor in all matters prosecuted by the DPP on behalf of the Crown. The PPSC ensures that a consistent national approach is taken to issues arising in prosecutions under the Acts.

2.17 The DPP may delegate his or her duties to private sector counsel or to counsel in the Department of Justice, Competition Bureau Legal Services (CBLS), and these counsel may act as an agent of the DPP only when they have been designated as such by the DPP for a specific case.

2.18 A prosecutor's role is to provide assistance and timely and strategic legal advice at the outset and during the course of an investigation, in accordance with the FPS Deskbook.

2.19 The PPSC, at the Bureau's request, will assign counsel to provide advice and assistance. The lead officer and assigned counsel will be one another's primary point of contact on the file and will keep one another updated as to developments. Where more than one counsel is assigned to the file, a lead counsel will be designated. Counsel assigned to the file will ensure that they update one another as to developments.

2.20 If requested, counsel may provide advice in the development of Bureau policies and programs in the criminal field (e.g., the Immunity Program) and on any related questions; draft and update practice and advisory notes (e.g., search and seizure, disclosure, immunity and plea agreements); and periodically provide information sessions and training programs to officers.

2.21 Counsel will help shape the investigation in the early stages by advising officers on the nature of the evidence required, and by providing input into the development of the case, the use of investigative powers, the adequacy of the evidence and the quality of the witnesses.

2.22 Counsel will assist the Bureau with any investigative procedure in a timely way. A refusal by a prosecutor to adopt a procedure, where approval by the PPSC is required, will be explained to the Bureau.

2.23 Counsel will provide assistance relating to:

- Any request of an officer on any legal issue likely to impact an investigation or any subsequent prosecution.
- Court applications made by officers. Counsel will review information to obtain search warrants, production orders, sealing orders and wiretap authorizations, among other applications. Counsel may also suggest modifications for the sake of clarity or accuracy, and assist in processing such applications.
- The preparation of the RTCC, at the earliest stage, to ensure that it meets all legal and policy requirements.
- The preparation of witness interviews. Counsel may attend witness interviews as needed.

2.24 Timely legal advice will be provided to officers or, alternatively, to their supervisors to ensure that investigation techniques and procedures are consistent with the rules of evidence and constitutional standards. Where such advice differs from that set out in the practice and advisory notes, counsel will explain any discrepancy, if requested.

2.25 When an officer seeks legal advice, counsel will consult with the officer to determine whether legal advice is necessary, the specific legal question to be answered, and the form that the advice should take. If the legal advice is to be provided in the form of a written legal opinion, counsel should consult with the officer before the opinion is finalized so as to ensure that all relevant facts have been set out and all relevant legal issues have been considered and answered.

2.26 Bearing in mind the independence of prosecutors and the need to assess cases on their own particular facts, counsel nevertheless recognizes the benefit of ensuring consistent advice and will strive to be consistent with that provided by other federal prosecutors.

Prosecutors: Roles and Responsibilities at the Prosecution Stage

2.27 Counsel is responsible for the authorization and the prosecution of charges in court and for the conduct of all plea and resolution discussions. Counsel are agents of the DPP and prosecute offences on behalf of the Crown; they are bound by the Constitution, statute law, jurisprudence, and the rules of the relevant provincial or territorial law societies.

2.28 Upon the referral of evidence by the Bureau to the PPSC, counsel will review the evidence in the case in accordance with the "Decision to Prosecute" policy of the FPS Deskbook. This review is a crucial component of the exercise of independent prosecutorial discretion.

2.29 As far as reasonably possible, a decision to prosecute is to be taken by an arms-length counsel not originally assigned to the investigation who consults his or her colleagues assigned to the investigation before deciding independently whether or not to lay charges.

2.30 Counsel will, in a timely way, review all evidence referred, and in consultation with the officers, where applicable:

- Determine the charges to be sworn and the persons to be charged;
- Lay an information seeking a prohibition order pursuant to subsection 34\(2\) of the Competition Act;
- Make an application for the issuance of an interim injunction pursuant to section 33 of the Competition Act;
- Make a recommendation of further investigation;
- Estimate the resources needed and the cost of the prosecution; and,
- In all events, inform the Bureau of his or her decision as soon as possible and provide an explanation in the case of a refusal to lay charges.

2.31 The decision to prosecute is an ongoing process that continues throughout the prosecution. Counsel shall determine the sufficiency of evidence and evaluate whether a prosecution is in the public interest. In doing so, counsel shall exercise independent judgment and should consult with the Bureau to determine whether the prosecution is in the public interest.

2.32 The prosecutor's role is not to obtain a conviction but to lay before a trier of fact credible evidence relevant to an alleged offence. This must be done fairly, excluding any notion of winning or losing. However, if counsel elects to pursue a prosecution, it is done vigorously and to the best of his or her ability, with due regard to the law, legal ethics, his or her role as an officer of the court, and the overriding obligation to act objectively and fairly in the public interest. Further, when exercising his or her discretion, counsel must act independently, fairly, objectively and impartially.

2.33 Counsel is responsible for the conduct of all plea and resolution discussions. Counsel must ensure that the conduct meets the standards articulated by the FPS Deskbook. Counsel will consult the Bureau to elicit its views as to the appropriateness of any proposed plea and sentence or other resolution, and will consider the Bureau's comments. This consultation should be ongoing so that the Bureau fully appreciates how the negotiations have been conducted in order that it can make a more informed recommendation. If a plea agreement is reached, counsel will convey to the officers the substance of the agreement and the reasoning behind it. Usually officers are present and provide assistance to prosecutors at plea and sentencing negotiations.

2.34 Counsel will consult with the Bureau on questions of staying or withdrawing charges, and on decisions to appeal. Counsel will provide an explanation of these decisions to the Bureau, if requested.

2.35 Counsel has an obligation to ensure that witnesses, including officers, are prepared adequately prior to testifying and that notices required pursuant to the rules of evidence have been served in a timely manner.

3. Immunity — Leniency

3.1 To uncover and stop criminal activity pursuant to the Competition Act, the Bureau has put in place the Immunity Program that sets out the Bureau's practices, its role and the role of the PPSC in the immunity process, the conditions under which the Bureau will recommend that the PPSC grant immunity and the responsibilities of the immunity applicant. The Immunity Program is one of the Bureau's most effective tools for detecting and investigating criminal activities prohibited by the Competition Act.

3.2 The Bureau and the PPSC recognize that, in respect of serious criminal activity under the Competition Act, it is in the public interest to offer immunity from prosecution to a participant who is willing to terminate its participation in the illegal conduct and fully cooperate with the Bureau and PPSC.

3.3 The Bureau's Leniency Program complements the Immunity Program and aims at encouraging other participants in an illegal cartel to acknowledge their actions and cooperate with the Bureau and the PPSC

3.4 The Bureau and the PPSC recognize that certainty, predictability of results and transparency are crucial to the effective operation of the Immunity and Leniency Programs.

3.5 The management of the Immunity and Leniency Programs, including such matters as acceptance of markers, taking of proffers, interviewing of witnesses and the collection of documentary evidence, is the responsibility of the Bureau.

3.6 A recommendation for immunity or leniency by the Bureau to the PPSC must fully set out the relevant considerations in order to permit counsel to exercise independent discretion while referencing as complete a record as possible.

3.7 The decision to grant immunity or leniency upon a recommendation by the Bureau, or otherwise, rests solely with counsel who exercises his or her independent discretion in accordance with the principles articulated in the FPS Deskbook. However, the Bureau's recommendation to the PPSC is given due consideration.

3.8 Officers and counsel shall consult one another as necessary throughout the immunity or leniency processes to ensure that all criteria are satisfied and that the public interest may be served by granting immunity and leniency in appropriate cases.

3.9 When counsel agrees with the recommendations of the Bureau, he or she must obtain approval from his or her manager to enter into an immunity agreement, or plea agreement, that sets out the terms by which the participants to the immunity or plea agreement will be bound. A standard immunity agreement form or plea agreement form must be used in this regard. This process will be guided by the principles set out in paragraph 3.4.

3.10 All plea and sentence resolutions concluded prior to charges being laid, and where appropriate after charges are laid, shall be reduced to a written plea agreement in the approved form, which shall include a statement of admitted facts.

3.11 Any deviation from the standard immunity agreement form or plea agreement form must be approved by the Director of the CLS, and notification given to the relevant Deputy Commissioner.

3.12 The Bureau is responsible for assessing whether the immunity or leniency applicant is in compliance with the terms of an immunity or plea agreement and to provide counsel with the evidence supporting a recommendation that immunity or leniency be revoked.

3.13 The decision to revoke immunity or leniency rests solely with counsel who will give due consideration to the Bureau's recommendation for revocation. Counsel shall exercise independent discretion when considering revocation or any other appropriate remedy, in accordance with paragraph 35.8 of the FPS Deskbook, after examining the terms of the agreement and the manner in which it was breached.

4. Disclosure Protocol

4.1 Prosecutors must act in accordance with the disclosure policies of the PPSC. In all prosecutions, the Bureau will be responsible for ensuring timely and complete disclosure in accordance with the Advisory Note on Disclosure.

4.2 A designated Bureau officer (the disclosure officer) will ensure that complete disclosure is available to each accused at the time of first appearance, in a form that is acceptable to PPSC counsel and in compliance with the Advisory Note on Disclosure.

4.3 The disclosure officer will provide supplementary disclosure to counsel as soon as reasonably practicable.

4.4 The disclosure officer will endeavour to bring to the attention of counsel any material that is subject to legal privilege, such as solicitor-client privilege or informer privilege. The final determination regarding whether a privilege applies with respect to disclosure is the responsibility of counsel.

4.5 Disclosure will generally be made electronically.

4.6 The Bureau is responsible for the costs of disclosure. However, counsel must consult the Bureau prior to making a determination that has an impact on the costs of disclosure

(e.g., software to be used). Counsel will consider the best way to structure disclosure from the outset of an investigation so as to minimize cost and the duplication of effort.

4.7 Counsel has an ongoing role to give advice and consult with the officers with respect to the nature of the evidence and information that is required as part of disclosure. The final responsibility for reviewing disclosure and determining the information to be disclosed lies with counsel.

5. Designated Officials

5.1 The following designated officials will have overall administrative responsibility for the implementation of this MOU.

For the Competition Bureau:

Senior Deputy Commissioner of Competition, Criminal Matters Branch

Deputy Commissioner of Competition, Fair Business Practices Branch

For the PPSC:

Director of the Competition Law Section, Public Prosecution Service of Canada

6. Confidentiality and Security of Information

6.1 Subject to the provisions of this MOU, the Competition Act, the Access to Information Act, the Privacy Act, and any other applicable Act of Parliament, the information shared between the Parties under the terms of this MOU will be treated as confidential, and will be protected from further disclosure. The shared information can be used only for the specific purpose for which it is provided, and will not be passed on to any third party without the written consent of the Party from whom it originated. In the event of a request for disclosure of information under the Access to Information Act or the Privacy Act, the Party receiving the request agrees to consult with the other Party.

6.2 Each Party will ensure that its procedures for safeguarding information subject to this MOU comply with its operational standards and government security policy.

7. Dispute Resolution

7.1 Any dispute arising from this MOU shall be referred to the designated officials noted in Part 5 of this MOU for resolution. If these officials are unable to resolve the dispute, it shall be referred to the Commissioner of Competition, and the Deputy Director for resolution.

8. Review

8.1 The Parties agree to review this MOU as required.

9. Amendments

9.1 This MOU may be amended at any time with the consent of the Parties. Such amendments may be effected by an exchange of letters between the Commissioner of Competition and the Deputy Director.

10. Effective Date and Termination

10.1 This MOU shall come into effect on the date when it is last signed.

10.2 Either of the Parties may terminate this MOU upon six months written notice to the other Party. Such notice shall be given by either the Commissioner of Competition or the Deputy Director.

11. Nature of the MOU

11.1 This MOU is an administrative understanding between the Parties. It is not intended to be legally binding or enforceable before the courts, nor is it designed to alter the pre-existing obligations, responsibilities, duties, or entitlements of either Party as may be defined by statute, regulation, or otherwise.

In Witness Whereof, this Memorandum was signed in duplicate, each copy being equally authentic

For the Competition Bureau

Melanie L. Aitken
Commissioner of Competition
Date

For The Public Prosecution Service Of Canada

Chantal Proulx
Acting Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions

APPENDIX B – ORGANIZATION IMMUNITY AGREEMENT TEMPLATE

Service des poursuites
pénales du Canada

Public Prosecution
Service of Canada

[ORGANIZATION IMMUNITY AGREEMENT]

THIS AGREEMENT IS BETWEEN:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT OF CANADA,
as represented by the
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

- and -

[X LTD.]

This document sets out the terms and conditions of an agreement between Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada, as represented by the Director of Public Prosecutions [“DPP”], and [X Ltd., as defined below] governing the grant of immunity from prosecution under the Competition Act [“Act”].

This grant of immunity follows an application by [X Ltd.] to the Commissioner of Competition [“Commissioner”] in accordance with the Competition Bureau’s information bulletin entitled Immunity Program under the Competition Act [“Immunity Bulletin”], attached to this agreement as Appendix 1.

This grant of immunity relates only to anticompetitive conduct as defined below.

This agreement is conditional and depends upon [X Ltd.] satisfying all of the terms and conditions set out below.

The parties to this agreement agree and undertake as follows:

1. Definitions: In this agreement,

“anticompetitive conduct” means that [X Ltd.] [entered into an agreement to fix prices, rig bids, made false and misleading representations, etc.] relating to [insert precise description of the product(s) and geographic market(s)] [insert specific time period]. Specifically [X Ltd.] represents that it [describe particular conduct: description of alleged offence, including nature of illegal behaviour and provision(s) of the Act violated];

“cooperation” means complete, timely and ongoing cooperation, at [X Ltd.’s] own expense throughout, with the DPP and the Commissioner in connection with the investigation of the anticompetitive conduct and in any proceedings that may be instituted by the DPP in relation to the anticompetitive conduct, as more fully described in paragraphs 3 through 5 of this agreement;

“confidential information” means this agreement and any information that in any way relates to the investigation of the anticompetitive conduct;

“record” has the same meaning as found in section 2 of the Competition Act, RSC, 1985, c C-34;

“[X Ltd.]” means [as agreed by the parties to this agreement; here specify what other affiliates, etc. may be included].

2. Representations: [X Ltd.] represents that:

- a) it has reported to the Commissioner and the DPP that it has engaged in the anticompetitive conduct;
- b) it has taken effective steps to terminate its participation in the anticompetitive conduct;
- c) it has not coerced others to be a party to the anticompetitive conduct; and
- d) it has revealed to the DPP and the Commissioner any and all conduct of which it is aware that may constitute an offence under the Act.

3. Cooperation and Disclosure: [X Ltd.] shall provide cooperation and full, complete, frank and truthful disclosure to the DPP and the Commissioner, including, but not limited to:

- a) providing all non-privileged information, records and things in its possession, under its control or available to it, wherever located, whether or not requested by the DPP or the Commissioner, that in any manner relate to the anticompetitive conduct. Before providing the information, records and things, [X Ltd.] will consult with the Commissioner with respect to the relevance and scope of such information, records and things and the form in which such information, records and things will be provided to the Commissioner;
- b) using all measures, lawful where taken, to secure the cooperation of the current [and former (if appropriate)] directors, officers and employees [agents (if appropriate)] of [X Ltd.], and encouraging such persons to provide voluntarily to the DPP and the Commissioner all of their non-privileged information, records and things that in any manner relate to the anticompetitive conduct;

- c) facilitating, in accordance with the conditions set out in the Immunity Bulletin, the ability of current [and former (if appropriate)] directors, officers and employees [agents (if appropriate)] to appear for interviews and to provide testimony in connection with the anticompetitive conduct as the DPP or the Commissioner may require, at the times and places designated by the DPP or the Commissioner; and
 - d) revealing any and all conduct of which it becomes aware that may constitute an offence under the Act.
- 4. Corporate Immunity: Having considered the recommendation of the Commissioner and after an independent review by the DPP, the DPP grants [X Ltd.] immunity from prosecution under the Act in respect of the anticompetitive conduct defined above conditional upon:
 - a) the veracity of the representations contained in paragraph 2 above; and
 - b) the cooperation of and disclosure by [X Ltd.] as required pursuant to this agreement.
- 5. Immunity of Individuals Covered by Corporate Immunity Agreement: Subject to the veracity of the representations contained in paragraph 2 above, the DPP grants to the current [and former (if appropriate)] directors, officers and employees [agent, if appropriate] [indicate “carve-outs” from agreement, eg, “other than individual Y”] of [X Ltd.] immunity from prosecution under the Act in respect of the anticompetitive conduct, conditional on their admission of their knowledge of and participation in the anticompetitive conduct and on their continuing cooperation with and disclosure to the DPP and the Commissioner. Such cooperation and disclosure shall include, but not be limited to:
 - a) providing all non-privileged information, records and things (including personal records), in their possession, under their control or available to them, wherever located, whether or not requested by the DPP or the Commissioner, and that in any manner relate to the anticompetitive conduct, without falsely implicating any person or withholding any information known to them. Before providing the information, records and things, individuals covered by this agreement will consult with the Commissioner with respect to the relevance and scope of such information, records and things and the form in which such information, records and things will be provided to the Commissioner;
 - b) making themselves available in Canada for interviews and to testify in judicial proceedings at times and places designated by the DPP or the Commissioner; and

- c) revealing any and all conduct which may constitute an offence under the Act.
6. Revocation of Corporate Immunity Does Not Affect Individual Immunity: If at any time the Commissioner or the DPP should determine that [X Ltd.] does not satisfy the terms and conditions of this agreement and its immunity under this agreement is revoked, individual protection under this agreement will continue so long as no grounds exist to revoke, and the DPP has not revoked, the individual's immunity pursuant to paragraph 14 of this agreement.
7. Confidentiality of Identity: The DPP and the Commissioner shall not disclose to any third party the identity of [X Ltd.] or the individuals covered by this agreement ["individuals"], except where:
- a) disclosure is required by law, including:
 - i. in response to an order of a Canadian court of competent jurisdiction; or
 - ii. to a person charged with an offence in Canada;
 - b) disclosure is necessary to obtain or maintain the validity of a judicial authorization for the exercise of investigative powers;
 - c) disclosure is necessary for the purpose of securing the assistance of a Canadian law enforcement agency in the exercise of investigative powers;
 - d) [X Ltd.] has agreed to disclosure;
 - e) there has been disclosure by [X Ltd.]; or
 - f) disclosure is necessary to prevent the commission of a serious criminal offence.
8. Confidentiality of Information: The DPP and the Commissioner shall not disclose to any third party information obtained from [X Ltd.] or the individuals, subject only to the exceptions listed above or where disclosure of such information is otherwise for the purpose of the administration or enforcement of the Act.
9. Disclosure to Foreign Law Enforcement Agency: The DPP and the Commissioner shall not disclose the identity of [X Ltd.] or the individuals, nor the information obtained from [X Ltd.] or the individuals, to any foreign law enforcement agency without the consent of [X Ltd.].

10. Disclosure to Third Parties: Unless made public by the DPP or the Commissioner, or as required by law, [X Ltd.] and any individual shall not disclose confidential information to any third party, without the consent of the DPP, which consent will not be unreasonably withheld. Where disclosure is required by law, [X Ltd.] or any individual shall give notice to and consult with the DPP prior to making any required disclosure.
11. Notice of Disclosure to Third Parties: If any third party seeks to compel disclosure of confidential information from any party to this agreement, or any individual, that party or individual shall give prompt notice to the parties to this agreement, and shall take all reasonable steps to resist disclosure unless all parties to this agreement consent to such disclosure.
12. Failure to Comply with the Immunity Agreement: The parties agree that full compliance with all of the terms and conditions in this agreement by any person granted immunity by it is a condition of and fundamental to the agreement. The parties also agree that the accuracy and veracity of all representations required by this agreement by any person granted immunity by it is a condition of and fundamental to the agreement. Non-compliance with any of the terms and conditions of this agreement by any person granted immunity by it constitutes a breach of the agreement by that person, which may result in revocation of immunity for that person.
13. Revocation of Corporate Immunity: If the DPP determines that [X Ltd.] has made misrepresentations with respect to any of the matters referred to in paragraph 2, failed to provide the cooperation and disclosure required under paragraph 3, or failed to comply with any other terms and conditions of this agreement, the DPP may revoke the immunity granted to [X Ltd.] upon fourteen (14) days prior written notice to counsel for [X Ltd.]. The DPP will provide counsel for [X Ltd.] with an opportunity to meet with the DPP regarding the potential revocation of immunity.
14. Revocation of Individual Immunity: If the DPP determines that an individual granted immunity by this agreement has not provided the cooperation and disclosure required under paragraph 5 or complied with any other terms and conditions of this agreement, or that the individual has caused [X Ltd.] to be ineligible for immunity, continued to participate in the anticompetitive conduct after [X Ltd.] notified the individual to cease doing so, or obstructed or attempted to obstruct justice, the DPP may revoke the immunity granted to the individual upon fourteen (14) days prior written notice to counsel for the individual and to counsel for [X Ltd.]. Absent exigent circumstances, the DPP will provide counsel for the individual with an opportunity to meet with the DPP regarding the potential revocation of immunity.

15. Impact of Revocation of Immunity: Following revocation of immunity for a breach of this agreement, as described in paragraphs 12 through 14 above, the DPP may take such action against the person whose immunity has been revoked as the DPP considers appropriate, including prosecution under the Act. In any such action the DPP may use, in any way, any information, evidence, record, statement or testimony provided by any person at any time after the application for immunity and any evidence of any kind derived directly or indirectly from such information, evidence, record, statement or testimony provided. For greater certainty, any privilege that may apply in respect of any information, evidence, record, statement or testimony provided is deemed waived upon revocation of immunity.
16. Use in Evidence: No information, evidence, record, statement or testimony provided during an interview by any person granted immunity pursuant to this agreement will be used in evidence against that person in any proceedings undertaken by or on behalf of the DPP, except where the person granted immunity:
 - a) subsequently gives in any trial, hearing or judicial proceeding (including any proceeding in which the person is an accused) evidence that is materially different from the statement given in an interview;
 - b) is charged with perjury, giving contradictory evidence, fabricating evidence or obstructing justice; or
 - c) has had its immunity revoked after a breach of this agreement.
17. Use of Information: Nothing in this agreement affects the right of the DPP or the Commissioner to use any information, evidence, record, statement or testimony provided by any person under this agreement in order to discover or acquire other information, evidence or records from another source.
18. Privilege and Jurisdiction: Nothing in this agreement, or any action taken pursuant to it, shall constitute:
 - a) except for the waiver mentioned in paragraph 15, a waiver of any privilege by any party to this agreement; or
 - b) except for the purpose of this agreement and proceedings related to the enforcement of this agreement, a submission to the jurisdiction of the Canadian courts by any person granted immunity by this agreement who is not present in Canada.
19. Applicable Law: This agreement shall be construed in accordance with the laws of Canada.

20. Entire Agreement: This agreement constitutes the entire agreement between the DPP and [X Ltd.], including the individuals covered by this agreement, and supersedes all prior understandings or agreements, if any, whether oral or written, relating to the subject matter of this agreement.
21. Notices: Any notice required to be given under this agreement is deemed to be validly given if in writing and by pre-paid registered mail, courier delivery, facsimile transmission or electronic mail (e-mail) transmission to:
- a) The Director of Public Prosecutions

[Insert appropriate address and fax number]

Attention: Public Prosecution Service of Canada, Competition Law Section
 - b) The Commissioner of Competition

Attention: Senior Deputy Commissioner

Criminal Matters Branch
20th Floor, Place du Portage, Phase I
50 Victoria Street, Gatineau, QC, K1A 0C9
Canada
Fax: (819) 997-3835
 - c) [X Ltd.]

[Insert appropriate address and fax number]

Attention:

With copy to:

Counsel for [X Ltd.]

[Insert appropriate address and fax number]

Attention:
22. Execution in Counterparts: This agreement may be executed in counterparts.

23. The Commissioner Joins in this Agreement: The Commissioner joins in this agreement solely for the purposes of giving effect to the Commissioner's rights and obligations as set out in paragraphs 7 to 11 and paragraph 17 above.
24. Authority and Capacity: The DPP, [X Ltd.] and the Commissioner each represent and warrant to the others that their respective signatories to this agreement have all the authority and capacity necessary to execute this agreement and to bind them to it. [X Ltd.] represents that it has had an opportunity to consult Canadian legal counsel in respect of this agreement.

The signatories acknowledge the full and voluntary acceptance of the foregoing terms and conditions.

Dated at _____
this _____ day of _____, 20____.
Prosecutions

Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada as represented by the Director of Public

Per:

[insert name and title of counsel for the Public Prosecution Service of Canada]

Dated at _____
this _____ day of _____, 20____.

Commissioner of Competition

[insert name of Commissioner of Competition]

Dated at _____ this _____ day of _____, 20____.

[X Ltd.]

Per:

[insert name and title of signing officer]

[insert name of counsel to [X Ltd]]

APPENDIX C – INDIVIDUAL IMMUNITY AGREEMENT TEMPLATE

Service des poursuites
pénales du Canada

Public Prosecution
Service of Canada

[INDIVIDUAL IMMUNITY AGREEMENT]

THIS AGREEMENT IS BETWEEN:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT OF CANADA,
as represented by the
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

- and -

[INDIVIDUAL X]

This document sets out the terms and conditions of an agreement between Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada, as represented by the Director of Public Prosecutions of Canada (“the DPP”) and [INDIVIDUAL X] governing the grant of immunity from prosecution under the Competition Act (the “Act”).

This grant of immunity follows an application by [INDIVIDUAL X] to the Commissioner of Competition [“Commissioner”] in accordance with the Competition Bureau’s information bulletin entitled Immunity Program under the Competition Act [“Immunity Bulletin”], attached to this agreement as Appendix 1.

This grant of immunity relates to anticompetitive conduct as defined below.

This agreement is conditional and depends upon [INDIVIDUAL X] satisfying the terms and conditions set out below.

The parties agree and undertake as follows:

1. Definitions: In this agreement,

“anticompetitive conduct” means that [INDIVIDUAL X.] [entered into an agreement to fix prices, rig bids etc., made false and misleading representations, etc.] relating to [insert precise description of the product(s) and geographic market(s)] [insert specific time period]. Specifically [INDIVIDUAL X] represents that he/she [describe particular conduct: description of alleged offence, including nature of illegal behaviour and provision(s) of the Act violated];

“cooperation” means complete, timely and ongoing cooperation, at [INDIVIDUAL X’s] own expense throughout, with the DPP and the Commissioner in connection with the investigation of the anticompetitive conduct and in any proceedings that may be instituted by the DPP in relation to the anticompetitive conduct, as more fully described in paragraph 3 of this agreement;

“confidential information” means this agreement and any information that in any way relates to the investigation of the anticompetitive conduct;

“record” has the same meaning as found in section 2 of the Competition Act, RSC, 1985, c C-34;

2. Representations: [INDIVIDUAL X] represents that he/she:
 - e) has reported to the Commissioner and the DPP that he/she has engaged in the anticompetitive conduct;
 - f) has taken effective steps to terminate his/her participation in the anticompetitive conduct;
 - g) has not coerced others to be a party to the anticompetitive conduct; and
 - h) has revealed to the DPP and the Commissioner any and all conduct of which he/she is aware that may constitute an offence under the Act.
3. Cooperation and disclosure: [INDIVIDUAL X] shall provide cooperation and full, complete, frank and truthful disclosure to the DPP and the Commissioner, including, but not limited to:
 - e) providing all non-privileged information, records and things in his/her possession, under his/her control or available to him/her, wherever located, whether or not requested by the DPP or the Commissioner, that in any manner relate to the anticompetitive conduct. Before providing the information, records and things, [INDIVIDUAL X] will consult with the Commissioner with respect to the relevance and scope of such information, records and things and the form in which such information, records and things will be provided to the Commissioner;
 - f) making him/herself available in Canada for interviews and to testify in judicial proceedings at times and places designated by the DPP or the Commissioner; and
 - g) revealing any and all conduct of which he/she becomes aware which may constitute an offence under the Act.
4. Immunity: Having considered the recommendation of the Commissioner and after an independent review by the DPP, the DPP grants [INDIVIDUAL X] immunity from prosecution under the Act in respect of the anticompetitive conduct defined above conditional upon:

- c) the veracity of the representations contained in paragraph 2 above; and
 - d) the disclosure and cooperation of [INDIVIDUAL X] as required pursuant to this agreement.
5. Confidentiality: The DPP and the Commissioner shall not disclose to any third party the identity of [INDIVIDUAL X.] except where:
- g) disclosure is required by law, including:
 - i. in response to an order of a Canadian court of competent jurisdiction; or
 - ii. to a person charged with an offence in Canada;
 - h) disclosure is necessary to obtain or maintain the validity of a judicial authorization for the exercise of investigative powers;
 - i) disclosure is necessary for the purpose of securing the assistance of a Canadian law enforcement agency in the exercise of investigative powers;
 - j) [INDIVIDUAL X.] has agreed to disclosure;
 - k) there has been disclosure by [INDIVIDUAL X.]; or
 - l) disclosure is necessary to prevent the commission of a serious criminal offence.
6. Confidentiality of Information: The DPP and the Commissioner shall not disclose to any third party information obtained from [INDIVIDUAL X.] subject only to the exceptions listed above or where disclosure of such information is otherwise for the purpose of the administration or enforcement of the Act.
7. Disclosure to Foreign Law Enforcement Agency: The DPP and the Commissioner shall not disclose the identity of [INDIVIDUAL X.] nor the information obtained from [INDIVIDUAL X.] to any foreign law enforcement agency without the consent of [INDIVIDUAL X.].
8. Disclosure to Third Parties: Unless made public by the DPP or the Commissioner, or as required by law, [INDIVIDUAL X.] shall not disclose confidential information to any third party, without the consent of the DPP, which consent will not be unreasonably withheld. Where disclosure is required by law, [INDIVIDUAL X.] shall give notice to and consult with the DPP prior to making any required disclosure.

9. Notice of Disclosure to Third Parties: If any third party seeks to compel disclosure of confidential information from any party to this agreement that party shall give prompt notice to the parties to this agreement, and shall take all reasonable steps to resist disclosure unless all parties to this agreement consent to such disclosure.
10. Failure to Comply with the Immunity Agreement: The parties agree that full compliance with all of the terms and conditions in this agreement by [INDIVIDUAL X] is a condition of and fundamental to the agreement. The parties also agree that the accuracy and veracity of all representations required by this agreement by [INDIVIDUAL X] is a condition of and fundamental to the agreement. Non-compliance with any of the terms and conditions of this agreement by [INDIVIDUAL X] constitutes a breach of the agreement which may result in revocation of immunity.
11. Revocation of Immunity: If the DPP determines that [INDIVIDUAL X] has made misrepresentations with respect to any of the matters referred to in paragraph 2, failed to provide the cooperation and disclosure required under paragraph 3, or failed to comply with any other terms and conditions of this agreement, the DPP may revoke the immunity granted to [INDIVIDUAL X.] upon fourteen (14) days prior written notice to counsel for [INDIVIDUAL X.]. The DPP will provide counsel for [INDIVIDUAL X] with an opportunity to meet with the DPP regarding the potential revocation of immunity.
12. Impact of Revocation of Immunity: Following revocation of immunity for a breach of this agreement, as described in paragraphs 10 and 11 above, the DPP may take such action against [INDIVIDUAL X] as the DPP considers appropriate, including prosecution under the Act. In any such action the DPP may use, in any way, any information, evidence, record, statement or testimony provided by [INDIVIDUAL X] at any time after the application for immunity and any evidence of any kind derived directly or indirectly from such information, evidence, record, statement or testimony provided. For greater certainty, any privilege that may apply in respect of any information, evidence, record, statement or testimony provided is deemed waived upon revocation of immunity.
13. Use of Statements: No information, evidence, record, statement or testimony provided by [INDIVIDUAL X] during an interview will be used in evidence against him/her in any proceedings undertaken by or on behalf of the DPP except where [INDIVIDUAL X]:
 - d) subsequently gives in any trial, hearing, or judicial proceeding (including any proceeding in which [INDIVIDUAL X] is an accused) evidence that is materially different from the statement given in an interview;

- e) is charged with perjury, giving contradictory evidence, fabricating evidence or obstructing justice; or
 - f) has had his/her immunity revoked after a breach of this agreement.
14. Use of Information: Nothing in this agreement affects the right of the DPP or the Commissioner to use any information, evidence, record, statement or testimony provided by [INDIVIDUAL X] in order to discover or acquire other information, evidence or records from another source.
15. Privilege and Jurisdiction: Nothing in this agreement, or any action taken pursuant to it, shall constitute:
- c) except for the waiver mentioned in paragraph 12, a waiver of any privilege by any party to this agreement; or
 - d) except for the purpose of this agreement and proceedings related to the enforcement of this agreement, a submission to the jurisdiction of the Canadian courts by [INDIVIDUAL X], who is not present in Canada.
16. Applicable Law: This agreement shall be construed in accordance with the laws of Canada.
17. Entire Agreement: This agreement constitutes the entire agreement between the DPP and [INDIVIDUAL X] and supersedes all prior understandings or agreements, if any, whether oral or written, relating to the subject matter of this agreement.
18. Notices: Any notice required to be given under this agreement is deemed to be validly given if in writing and by pre-paid registered mail, courier delivery, facsimile transmission or electronic mail (e-mail) transmission to:
- b) The Director of Public Prosecutions

[Insert appropriate address & fax number]

Attention: Public Prosecution Service of Canada, Competition Law Section
 - c) The Commissioner of Competition

Attention: Senior Deputy Commissioner

Criminal Matters Branch
20th Floor, Place du Portage, Phase I
50 Victoria Street, Gatineau, QC, K1A 0C9

Canada
Fax: (819) 997-3835

d) [INDIVIDUAL X]

[Insert appropriate address & fax number]

Attention:

e) With copy to:

Counsel for [INDIVIDUAL X]

[Insert appropriate address & fax number]

Attention:

19. Execution in Counterparts: This agreement may be executed in counterparts.
20. The Commissioner Joins in this Agreement: The Commissioner joins in this agreement solely for the purposes of giving effect to the Commissioner's rights and obligations as set out in paragraphs 7 to 11 and paragraph 17.
21. Authority and Capacity: The DPP, [INDIVIDUAL X.] and the Commissioner each represent and warrant to the others that their respective signatories to this agreement have all the authority and capacity necessary to execute this agreement and to bind them to it. [INDIVIDUAL X.] represents that he/she has had an opportunity to consult Canadian legal counsel in respect of this agreement.

The signatories hereto acknowledge the full and voluntary acceptance of the foregoing terms and conditions.

Dated at _____
this _____ day of _____, 20____.
Prosecutions

Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada as represented by the Director of Public

Per:

[insert name and title of counsel for the Public Prosecution Service of Canada]

Dated at _____
this _____ day of _____, 20____.

Commissioner of Competition

Per:

[insert name of Commissioner of Competition]

Dated at _____
this _____ day of _____, 20____.

[INDIVIDUAL X]

Per:

[insert name]

Dated at _____
this _____ day of _____, 20____.

Signature of [INDIVIDUAL X] witnessed by counsel to [INDIVIDUAL X]

Per:

*[insert name of counsel to [INDIVIDUAL
X]]*

APPENDIX D – LETTER OF INDIVIDUAL COVERAGE ASSOCIATED WITH ORGANIZATION IMMUNITY

Public Prosecution
Service of Canada

Service des poursuites
pénales du Canada

Name of [X LTD.] director, officer or employee (company individual)
Address

Dear company individual:

Re: [X LTD.] – Immunity Agreement – Interview – Company Individual

This is to confirm that pursuant to the Competition Bureau’s information bulletin, entitled Immunity Program under the Competition Act, [X LTD.] has entered into an immunity agreement [“the agreement” – attached to this letter as an appendix] with the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Commissioner of Competition. The agreement, which governs the terms and conditions of your eligibility for immunity, covers you as a current director, officer or employee of [X LTD.] (as defined in the agreement) subject to your full disclosure and cooperation, as described in the agreement.

By signing this letter, you confirm that you have read and that you understand the agreement and that you have had an opportunity to consult with Canadian legal counsel in respect of the agreement.

By signing this letter you acknowledge your full and voluntary acceptance of the terms and conditions of the agreement pertaining to individuals and agree to be bound by them.

Dated at city this ____ day of month, year

Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada as represented by the Director of Public Prosecutions

Signature of PPSC counsel

I understand the content of this letter and agree to the terms and conditions of the agreement pertaining to individuals.

Company individual

Dated: _____

APPENDIX E – LETTER GUARANTEEING NO DIRECT USE IN EVIDENCE OF INFORMATION PROVIDED

Address
Telephone:
Facsimile:
.@ppsc-sppc.gc.ca

PRIVILEGED and CONFIDENTIAL

[Date]

[Name/address]

Re: Inquiry Name

Dear [witness' name],

This letter sets forth the basis upon which you will make yourself available on [date], for an interview in connection with the Commissioner of Competition's investigation into possible violations of the Competition Act in the [Inquiry Name or Industry Name].

1. You have had an opportunity to consult with legal counsel.
2. At your request, [counsel's name] counsel, may be present at the interview.
3. The Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) agrees that no statement made by you, or any record that you or [X Ltd.] make available during the interview, will be used directly against you, in any legal proceeding brought by the DPP or the Commissioner of Competition, except that your statements or documents may be used in any such proceeding to impeach your testimony or to rebut evidence offered on your behalf. In addition, the DPP may use any statements made in the interview in a prosecution of you for perjury, obstruction of justice, or giving contradictory evidence.
4. Subject to paragraph 3 above, the Commissioner or DPP is free to use any information from the interview to pursue [his/her] investigation and any information directly or indirectly derived from the interview in any subsequent prosecution of you or others.

This letter constitutes the entire understanding between the DPP and you. Please sign and date this letter to indicate your understanding of and agreement with the conditions for your interview.

Witness Name

Dated: _____

Yours truly,

X _____
[PPSC counsel]

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.3 PROCEEDS OF CRIME

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised March 25, 2022

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. INVOLVEMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICES AND PROCUREMENT CANADA (PSPC).....	3
3. UNDERTAKINGS	3
3.1. Authority to sign the undertaking	4
3.1.1. Prosecutions related to proceeds of crime.....	4
3.1.2. Terrorism Prosecutions	4
3.1.3. Briefing note	4
4. OFFENCE-RELATED PROPERTY	5
5. INTER-PROVINCIAL SPECIAL WARRANTS, RESTRAINT AND FORFEITURE ORDERS.....	5
6. MOTION BY THIRD PARTY BEFORE AND AFTER FORFEITURE AND ROLE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE	6
7. FORFEITURE ORDER.....	6
7.1. Partial forfeiture	6
8. RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN PROCEEDS OF CRIME (POC) COUNSEL AND HEADQUARTERS COUNSEL GROUP (HCG)	7
9. CIVIL FORFEITURE.....	7

1. INTRODUCTION

This guideline offers an overview of the practice and policies of the Director of Public Prosecutions regarding cases dealing with proceeds of crime, money laundering, offence-related property, and property associated with terrorist activities.¹ This guideline must be read and applied taking into account other chapters of the PPSC Deskbook, in particular, the chapters dealing with the decision to prosecute and resolution discussions.² In dealing with these matters, it is important for Crown counsel to also consider the Seized Property Management Act (SPMA),³ which is the statute governing seized, restrained and forfeited property.

¹ For all questions related to terrorism prosecutions, see Chapter 5.1 of the Deskbook.

² See Chapters 2.2, 2.3 and 3.7 in volume 1 in the Deskbook.

³ SC 1993, c 37.

2. INVOLVEMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICES AND PROCUREMENT CANADA (PSPC)

Under the SPMA, the Minister of Public Services and Procurement Canada (PSPC) is responsible for managing property when a management order has been issued and the Minister has been appointed by a Court order to manage:

- Property restrained or seized under Part XII.2 of the Criminal Code;
- Offence-related property restrained or seized under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (CDSA) or the Criminal Code;
- Property restrained or seized under s 83.13 of the Criminal Code; and
- Property seized under s. 487 of the Criminal Code.

In accordance with the provisions of the SPMA, PSPC has established the Seized Property Management Directorate (SPMD) located in Gatineau, Quebec, to manage these types of property.

Since PSPC is responsible for the payment of damages arising from all undertakings given by the Attorney General of Canada under the SPMA, SPMD must be consulted prior to the signing of any undertaking, seizure, restraint or forfeiture of property. Such consultation serves to notify the SPMD that a particular property will be put under its management, allows SPMD to make comments on draft orders and to have input as to the feasibility or advisability of the seizure, restraint or forfeiture.

Where terrorism-related property is involved, Crown counsel may forego consulting with the SPMD prior to obtaining an order to seize or restrain property under s 83.13 of the Criminal Code if they consider it appropriate in the circumstances. Once the order has been obtained, Crown counsel must immediately notify the SPMD, which can then take appropriate management measures if need be.

SPMD personnel must also be consulted before counsel agrees to the payment of legal costs out of seized or restrained property.

Consultation with the SPMD must continue after the seizure or restraint as circumstances require (e.g. prior to an amendment to the order) to ensure the implementation of the proposed amendment.

3. UNDERTAKINGS

As a prerequisite for the issuance of a search warrant or restraint order under s 83.13 (Terrorism) or Part XII.2 (Proceeds of Crime) of the Criminal Code, the Attorney General of Canada must undertake to pay any damages or costs that could arise from their issuance and execution. This undertaking must be filed with the application for the warrant or order under s 83.13 or Part XII.2 of the Criminal Code.

3.1. Authority to sign the undertaking

3.1.1. Prosecutions related to proceeds of crime

Where the property in question is neither a business nor a property whose seizure or restraint might reasonably affect the operation of a business, Crown counsel must obtain the approval of the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or the Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutor (DCFP) before signing the undertaking.

Where the property in question is a business, or a property whose seizure or restraint might reasonably affect the operation of a business, the undertaking must be approved by:

- a. The CFP or DCFP, where the estimated aggregate value of the business or the property is $1,000,000 or less;
- b. A Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (DDPP), where the estimated aggregate value of the business or the property exceeds $1,000,000.

At the option of the approval authority, the undertaking may be signed by the approval authority themselves or by the Crown counsel handling the file.

3.1.2. Terrorism Prosecutions

In these prosecutions, the prosecutor must obtain the approval of a DDPP before signing the undertaking. At the option of the DDPP, the undertaking may be signed by the DDPP or the Crown counsel.⁴

3.1.3. Briefing note

Where approval is required, a briefing note must be submitted.

The briefing note must contain the following information:

1. SUBJECT: Provide an overview of what is being sought, e.g. approval of an undertaking;
2. BACKGROUND: Attach a detailed summary of the facts established in the supporting affidavit. Describe any anticipated significant problems and how it is proposed to address them;
3. STATUS: Describe the asset management considerations, including Seized Property Management Directorate consultations, the potential interim costs or damages in the particular seizure or restraint, and the harm, if any, to innocent third parties. In addition, describe the asset to be seized or restrained with the rights related to that asset and the evidence relating to the complicity or collusion of any third parties which would justify a partial confiscation pursuant to the tests of proportionality or principal residency. Indicate when the police plan to lay charges and when a court order will be sought;

⁴ See chapter 3.5 of the Deskbook, Delegated Decision-making, as well as the Delegation to Prosecutors, the Delegation to Paralegals and the Delegation to Articling Students.

4. RECOMMENDATION: Outline the asset management options, select the preferred option and indicate briefly why that option is the best one for the case. If other options are available, they must be submitted for consideration.

A copy of the affidavit in support of the proposed application as well as the proposed order must be attached to the briefing note.

4. OFFENCE-RELATED PROPERTY

Approval for the restraint of offence-related property under the CDSA or the Criminal Code must be obtained in all cases from the CFP or the DCFP regardless of the estimated value and nature of the property involved. The briefing note described above for undertakings must also be prepared for any requests for approval of a restraint order.

As for a management order, its approval may be obtained from any Crown counsel. Before obtaining a management order, Crown counsel must be satisfied that an order of forfeiture is feasible in respect of the property.⁵

5. INTER-PROVINCIAL SPECIAL WARRANTS, RESTRAINT AND FORFEITURE ORDERS

As set out in ss. 462.32(2.1), 462.33(3.01) and 462.371 of the Criminal Code, a special warrant, restraint order or forfeiture order can be obtained for execution in another province.

Before obtaining such a warrant or order, Crown counsel from the regional office where the property is located must be consulted to ensure that its terms are consistent with the relevant provincial legislation so as to avoid any execution problems. Crown counsel from the regional office must also oversee the execution of the warrant or order.

It is also essential to coordinate obtaining and executing the warrant, or the restraint or forfeiture order, with Crown counsel from the regional office where the property is located so as to limit the delay between issuance of the instrument and its execution in the other province.

Last, Crown counsel who obtained the warrant or order continues to be responsible for the process and must therefore ensure that the document has been duly registered or renewed under s 462.35 of the Criminal Code as appropriate.

⁵ Some judges have refused to order forfeiture of property as offence-related property because its use was not determinative in the commission of the offence but incidental to it.

6. MOTION BY THIRD PARTY BEFORE AND AFTER FORFEITURE AND ROLE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

One of the underlying principles of the offence-related property or proceeds of crime regime is protecting innocent third parties who have an interest in the property. Their rights may be recognized before or after forfeiture, depending on their nature.

Given that the rights claimed by third parties are civil in nature, Department of Justice counsel may be required to address the issues that arise. It is therefore important to contact the SPMD in your region as soon as possible to determine what steps to take to respond to these issues.

It is essential to keep a detailed account of all discussions in the file in relation to the rights of third parties and seized property due to the complexity of questions, the potential for many people to be involved and the multiple overlapping discussions that may arise.

Crown counsel must not take a third party's claim into account nor agree to reimburse them in resolution discussions. Only SPMD can decide whether to recognize a third party's claim after the forfeiture.

7. FORFEITURE ORDER

The briefing note described in section 3.1.3 must be updated and resubmitted before requesting the forfeiture of any property. This briefing note must specify the property being seized and any third party rights. If restraint is not being sought, a briefing note is required before any forfeiture.

In addition, in the context of resolution discussions, it is important to ensure that an agreement includes the facts which support, as much as possible, a future request for forfeiture. Without these facts, it can be difficult to proceed with forfeiture.

Once property is forfeited, it belongs to the federal Crown, subject to the 30-day appeal period. Forfeited property is governed by the SPMA. The procedure for selling forfeited property and using the proceeds of sale are set out in the Regulations adopted pursuant to the SPMA. It is important to consult the SPMD prior to obtaining a forfeiture order to ensure that it complies with the SPMA. If the order does not comply, Crown counsel will have to apply to the court, on behalf of SPMD, to amend the order so as to bring it into compliance.

7.1. Partial forfeiture

In R v Craig, the Supreme Court of Canada held that partial forfeiture of offence-related real property under the CDSA can be ordered. However, the forfeiture of the equity or part of the equity, the physical division of a property, or the partial forfeiture subject to conditions are not allowed.⁶

⁶ 2009 SCC 23, [2009] 1 SCR 762.

It is important to point out that partial forfeiture is not a negotiation tool. If the facts justify an application for total forfeiture, Crown counsel may not, as part of negotiations, suggest partial forfeiture.

When certain conditions are met, alternatives to partial forfeiture are possible, in particular, the immediate payment of a sum of money equivalent to forfeiture. This amount is not a fine but should be considered offence-related property in lieu of partial forfeiture. Another option is selling the property by way of judicial sale prior to forfeiture and considering the proceeds of sale in lieu of the real property. The proportionality criterion would then apply to the sum of money, and Crown counsel could request a partial forfeiture.

8. RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN PROCEEDS OF CRIME (POC) COUNSEL AND HEADQUARTERS COUNSEL GROUP (HCG)

The HCG manages the Integrated Proceeds of Crime initiative. It decides on the strategic direction of the initiative within the PPSC, coordinates proceeds of crime matters and participates in the development of prosecution policies.

HCG counsel are also resource persons who provide advice on a range of proceeds of crime, money laundering, offence-related property and other related issues.

Crown counsel should contact the HCG⁷ on all matters pertaining to national policies, the current state of case law or legal issues with respect to proceeds of crime or money laundering. This will ensure that the PPSC's position on the matter is consistent across the country.

9. CIVIL FORFEITURE

In recent years, almost all provinces have enacted legislation on the civil forfeiture of criminal property. In Chatterjee, the Supreme Court of Canada recognized the validity of such a forfeiture scheme in Ontario.⁸ In cases where it is decided that seized or restrained property will be transferred to the province for civil forfeiture, it is incumbent on Crown counsel first to ensure that all orders obtained by the PPSC affecting the property are set aside. Orders that have been registered on title must be removed. If the management orders are not set aside, the SPMD will continue to be responsible for the property, and it cannot be turned over to the province.

⁷ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.6 Consultation within the Public Prosecution Service of Canada."

⁸ 2009 SCC 19, [2009] 1 SCR 624.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.4 YOUTH CRIMINAL JUSTICE

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED
UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

June 27, 2014

5.4 YOUTH CRIMINAL JUSTICE

APPENDIX B	20

1. INTRODUCTION

Young persons¹ who are charged with federal offences² generally must be prosecuted in accordance with the provisions of the Youth Criminal Justice Act (YCJA).³ The YCJA provides the philosophical and procedural framework for a distinct and separate criminal justice regime for young persons, which recognizes that the youth criminal justice system must be based on the principle of the diminished moral culpability of young persons.⁴

Crown counsel who are prosecuting young persons must be familiar with the YCJA provisions, including the guiding principles, enhanced procedural protections, extrajudicial measures,⁵ sentencing principles, available sentences, and the specific rules regarding the privacy of young persons as well as access to, and disclosure of, youth records. These rules differ, and often significantly, from those that apply to adults who are prosecuted in accordance with the Criminal Code. Young persons have not only all of the rights guaranteed to adults by virtue of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, they have additional rights and protections under the YCJA.

2. GUIDING PRINCIPLES UNDER THE YCJA

The key guiding principles of the YCJA are found in both the Preamble and in s. 3 of the YCJA, and are intended to guide Crown counsel and other youth justice system participants in the interpretation and application of the YCJA. The Preamble includes as one of the overarching principles of the YCJA: The youth criminal justice system is

¹ Young persons are defined in s 2 of the YCJA as persons who are at least 12 but under 18 at the time of the alleged commission of the offence. Thus an adult can be charged with having committed an offence as a young person.

² The definition of an offence in s 2 of the YCJA captures offences under Acts of Parliament and federal regulations.

³ Youth Criminal Justice Act, SC 2002, c 1 (in force 1 April 2003). Crown counsel must be mindful of significant amendments to the YCJA, which came into force on October 23, 2012. This directive incorporates those amendments, however, a link to the precise wording of the amendments is included here because the annual annotated Criminal Codes do not always include the important transitional provisions contained at Clause 195 of the Safe Streets and Communities Act, SC 2012 c1. Some versions of the Criminal Code also contain mistakes regarding the amendments. For example, the 2014 version of Martin's Annual Criminal Code wrongly retains a reference in s 3\(1\)\(a\) of the YCJA to the long-term protection of the public when in fact this wording was removed in the new version of s 3\(1\)\(a\) of the YCJA. See online.

⁴ YCJA, ibid at s 3\(1\)\(b\).

⁵ Extrajudicial Measures are measures other than judicial proceedings used to deal with young persons alleged to have committed offences .

intended to reserve its most serious intervention for the most serious crimes and to reduce the over-reliance on incarceration for non-violent⁶ young persons.

Section 3 of the YCJA provides detailed guiding principles regarding the youth criminal justice system, but does not prioritize those principles. Nevertheless, the first statement in s. 3 states that the youth criminal justice system is intended to protect the public by holding young persons accountable through proportionate measures, by promoting their rehabilitation and re-integration, and by referring them to community programs or agencies to address the circumstances underlying their offending behavior and thus help prevent crime. Crown counsel should also remain attuned to the fact that s. 3 states that measures against young persons are expected to respect gender, ethnic, cultural and linguistic differences and respond to the needs of aboriginal young persons and young persons with special requirements.⁷

3. EXTRAJUDICIAL MEASURES

3.1. Introduction

Similar to alternative measures for adults, extrajudicial measures are measures other than formal judicial proceedings designed to hold young persons accountable for the offending conduct. Unlike alternative measures for adults, however, the extrajudicial measures regime for young persons is detailed and directive; it identifies specific types of extrajudicial measures, states their objectives, and provides principles to guide decisions regarding their use.

Crown counsel can use extrajudicial measures to address offending behaviour by young persons provided the Crown is satisfied that it would be appropriate in the circumstances. Generally such measures will be most suitable for young persons with no record, who have committed less serious offences and are not likely to re-offend. Such measures may often be the most effective, and quickest response (in relation to the time of the offending conduct), to hold the young person accountable, to repair the harm done to the victim and the community, and to reduce recidivism, and thus serve the important goal of public protection.

3.2. Statutory guidelines for the use of extrajudicial measures

The YCJA sets out specific principles in ss. 4 and 5 to guide police and Crown counsel in the use of extrajudicial measures.

⁶ A violent offence is defined in s 2 of the YCJA and includes an offence in the commission of which a young person endangers the life or safety of another person by creating a substantial likelihood of causing bodily harm.

⁷ YCJA, supra note 3, s 3 \(1\)\(c\)\(iv\). This paragraph is not a complete encapsulation of the principles set out in s 3.

Extrajudicial measures are expected to be proportionate to the seriousness of the offence. They are also presumed adequate to hold a young person accountable for a non-violent offence if the young person has not previously been found guilty of an offence.⁸ This presumption, albeit rebuttable, is a strong direction from Parliament that Crown counsel are expected to use extrajudicial measures rather than the court to deal with non-violent young persons who have not previously been found guilty of offences. However, Crown counsel may find that certain offences that have not generally been interpreted by the courts to fit the definition of a violent offence under the YCJA nevertheless require the Crown to conclude that extrajudicial measures may not be appropriate.⁹

Crown counsel should also be aware that extrajudicial measures can be used, even if the young person has previously been dealt with by extrajudicial measures, or has previously been found guilty of an offence, provided the use of the extrajudicial measure is consistent with the principles in s. 4 and is considered adequate to hold the young person accountable.¹⁰

3.3. Extrajudicial measures: options for Crown counsel

If a pre-charge screening program¹¹ is in place in the jurisdiction, Crown counsel can advise the police that, under s. 6 of the YCJA, before laying a charge, police are obliged to consider whether any of the following options would be sufficient to address the offending conduct:

- take no further action;
- issue a warning;
- issue a police caution if a police cautioning program has been established in the jurisdiction; or
- with the consent of the young person, refer the young person to a community program or agency that may assist the young person not to commit offences.

Section 6 of the YCJA does not oblige the police to consider whether an extrajudicial sanction, which is the most severe type of extrajudicial measure, would be appropriate before proceeding with a formal charge. However, if the police advise the Crown prior to laying a charge that the police believe a sanction would be the best response in the ⁸ YCJA, supra note 3, at ss 5 \(e\) and 4 \(c\) respectively.

⁹ One example may involve a situation where a young person trafficks in Schedule I drugs, such as cocaine, heroin, ecstasy or methamphetamine. Historically, the courts have generally not found trafficking in serious drugs to meet the definition of a violent offence in the YCJA, but this jurisprudence generally dates from the period before the definition of violent in the YCJA was expanded in 2012 to capture conduct that endangers the life or safety of others. The amended definition supports an argument that trafficking in serious drugs meets the definition of a violent offence and thus the presumption of an extrajudicial measure does not apply.

¹⁰ YCJA, supra note 3, s 4\(d\).

¹¹ Pre-charge screening programs exist in British Columbia, Quebec and New Brunswick.

circumstances, Crown counsel must be satisfied that the conditions in s. 10 of the YCJA have been met.¹²

If a pre-charge screening program is not in place in the jurisdiction, and, as a result, Crown counsel is not consulted until after the police lay the charge, Crown counsel has the following options once a charge has been laid and the police have forwarded the file to the Crown:

3.3.1. Withdrawal of the charge

Crown counsel may determine that, although there is sufficient evidence to proceed with the prosecution,¹³ withdrawal of the charge is appropriate. It may be clear, for example, that after considering the principles and objectives in ss. 3, 4 and 5 of the YCJA, and the factors related to the seriousness of the offence, discussed below, that the process of apprehension, detention and charging has been a sufficient response from the youth criminal justice system, and no further action is required.

3.3.2. Referral to a community program or agency

A referral to a community program or agency, with the consent of the young person, may be appropriate in cases where it is clear that the young person needs assistance with a problem that may have contributed to the commission of the offence. Rather than prosecuting the young person, Crown counsel may conclude that the matter can be addressed more appropriately outside of the criminal justice system by such a referral. For example, the young person may require help from a substance abuse program. While the YCJA does not expressly codify this referral power for prosecutors within the extrajudicial measures regime, as it does for the police, s. 3 of the YCJA states that the youth criminal justice system is intended to protect the public by supporting crime prevention through referrals of young persons to community programs or agencies to address the underlying causes of their criminality. It is within Crown counsel's discretion to make such referrals.

3.3.3. Crown cautions

3.3.3.1. Attorney General of Canada authorization for Crown cautions

Pursuant to s. 8 of the YCJA, the Attorney General¹⁴ may establish a program authorizing prosecutors to administer cautions to young persons instead of starting or continuing ¹² The conditions required before an extrajudicial sanction can be imposed are similar to those that must be present in relation to Alternative Measures for adults under s 717 of the Criminal Code. Before an extrajudicial sanction can be imposed, for example, s 10\(2\)\(f\) requires that the Attorney General be satisfied that there is sufficient evidence to proceed with a prosecution.

¹³ Crown counsel should also consider the factors listed in the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.3 Decision to Prosecute".

¹⁴ In s 2 of the YCJA, Attorney General means the Attorney General as defined in s 2 of the Criminal Code and includes an agent or delegate of the Attorney General.

judicial proceedings. The Attorney General of Canada hereby authorizes the use of Crown cautions by federal prosecutors in accordance with this directive.

3.3.3.2. Definition of Crown cautions and general procedures regarding their use

A Crown caution¹⁵ is a formal warning from the prosecutor that, although there are sufficient grounds to prosecute the offence, the prosecutor will not be proceeding with the charge. The caution advises the young person to avoid involvement in crime in the future.

A Crown caution letter must be provided to the young person. Crown counsel should meet with young persons to provide these cautions to emphasize the importance of the message. A police officer or another appropriate witness must be present for this meeting; the presence of this witness is particularly important when Crown counsel meets with a young person of the opposite gender. The young person should be encouraged to be accompanied by a parent or another suitable adult. See Appendix A for the format and substance of a Crown caution letter. A notice that the young person has been cautioned, as well as a copy of the caution letter, must also be provided to the parent or guardian of the young person wherever possible. See Appendix B for the format and substance of a Crown notice to a parent or guardian.

Once Crown counsel has confirmed that the young person has been cautioned, and has documented the file accordingly, the charge or charges should be withdrawn.

3.3.3.3. Crown cautions: specific considerations

Crown cautions should be adequate to hold young persons accountable for less serious offences.

Crown counsel must not use Crown cautions in relation to matters in which the young person caused or attempted to cause bodily harm¹⁶ or should have reasonably foreseen that bodily harm would be caused by the offence.

A Crown caution is also unlikely to be adequate to hold a young person accountable for the following drug offences:

- possession of more than 30 grams of marihuana or more than one gram of cannabis resin, or possession of Schedule I drugs, such as cocaine, ecstasy, heroin or methamphetamine;
- trafficking in a controlled substance, or possession of the controlled substance for the purpose of trafficking.

¹⁵ YCJA, supra note 3, s 8. See also Appendix A.

¹⁶ Crown counsel must keep in mind that bodily harm includes psychological harm. See [R v McCraw \[1991\] 3 SCR 72](#).

In some circumstances, Crown counsel may consider resolving the drug offences identified directly above by using an extrajudicial sanction, which is the most serious state response available within the range of extrajudicial measures, as discussed below.

The choice between using a Crown caution or an extrajudicial sanction depends on several factors, as discussed below.

3.3.4. Extrajudicial sanctions

3.3.4.1. Authorization of the Attorney General of Canada

Pursuant to s. 10\(2\)\(a\) of the YCJA, the Attorney General of Canada hereby authorizes the use by federal prosecutors of extrajudicial sanctions consistent with the principles of the YCJA and criteria in this directive.

For the purposes of s. 10(2)(a) of the YCJA, the range of acceptable sanctions that can form part of an extrajudicial sanctions program authorized by the Attorney General of Canada can include community service, restitution or compensation in cash or services, mediation, referrals to specialized programs for counselling, treatment or education, (e.g. life skills, drug or alcohol treatment, anger management), referrals to community, aboriginal or youth justice committees (which can recommend sanctions), victim-offender reconciliation programs and similar measures aimed at restorative justice, a letter of apology or essay, and other reasonable sanctions or measures that are consistent with the objectives of the YCJA and criteria in this directive. For greater certainty, a federal prosecutor can also refer an offender to an individual, committee or agency in a community that can recommend a sanction or sanctions provided the extrajudicial sanction falls within a program of extrajudicial sanctions authorized by the province or territory in accordance with s. 10(2)(a).

3.3.4.2. Statutory preconditions regarding extrajudicial sanctions

Extrajudicial sanctions can be used to deal with a young person alleged to have committed an offence only if the young person cannot be dealt with by a warning, caution or referral in ss. 6, 7 or 8 because of the seriousness of the offence, the nature and number of previous offences committed by the young person or any other aggravating circumstances. Crown counsel should determine the seriousness of the offence by considering the factors discussed below at 3.3.4.4.

Unlike other types of extrajudicial measures, such as a police warning or a Crown caution, an extrajudicial sanction has specific conditions outlined in s. 10, such as requiring the young person to accept responsibility for the act that forms the basis of the offence. The young person must also consent to the terms and conditions of the sanction. Failure to comply can result in the prosecution of the offence.

3.3.4.3. Extrajudicial sanctions: specific considerations

There is no limit to the number of times that a young person may be dealt with through extrajudicial sanctions.

Even if the Crown determines that a less serious extrajudicial measure, such as a Crown caution, is inappropriate, Crown counsel should consider whether an extrajudicial sanction would be adequate to hold the young person accountable for the offending behaviour.

It is unlikely that an extrajudicial sanction will be appropriate for offences in which the young person caused or attempted to cause bodily harm, or should have reasonably foreseen that bodily harm would be caused by the offence.

Extrajudicial sanctions may be appropriate to deal with some drug offences that are too serious to be dealt with by a Crown caution. However, it will generally be inappropriate to resolve the following drug offences or offences committed in the following circumstances by imposing an extrajudicial sanction rather than proceeding with a prosecution:

- using another person more than two years younger than the young person alleged to have committed the offence to commit or assist in the commission of a drug offence;
- trafficking or possession for the purpose of trafficking in Schedule I drugs, such as cocaine, heroin, ecstasy or methamphetamine (an exception may arise where the young person shares a very small quantity of the substance with a peer for little or no consideration);
- the conduct demonstrated sophisticated planning (for example, the offence was part of an ongoing criminal enterprise); or
- where weapons were involved.

When Crown counsel imposes an extrajudicial sanction on a young person, the young person's file must be documented accordingly.

3.3.4.4. Factors related to the seriousness of the offence, the history of previous offences or any other aggravating circumstances

The following factors are relevant to determining the seriousness of the offence, the history of previous offences or any other aggravating circumstances, for purposes of deciding if an extrajudicial sanction is appropriate:

- whether the offence is summary or indictable;
- whether the offence involved the use of, or threatened use of, violence reasonably likely to result in harm that is more than transient or trifling in nature;

- whether a weapon was used or threatened to be used in the commission of the offence. As youth cases have demonstrated (water balloons and spit-balls have been found to be weapons), it is important to consider the actual danger represented by the weapon;
- the potential or actual harm or damage to the victim (physical, psychological or financial) and/or to society;
- whether it was a sexual offence; if the offence is a drug offence, the nature and deleterious consequences of the drugs involved should be considered;
- whether a mandatory minimum penalty could be imposed for the offence if the young person were found eligible for an adult sentence;
- whether the offence is a property offence. If so, did the young person intentionally cause or attempt to cause substantial property damage or loss? Should the young person have reasonably foreseen that substantial property damage would be caused by the offence?;
- whether the offence is an administration of justice offence, such as breach of probation. If so, would the non-compliance (e.g., failure to attend school, violation of curfew) have been an offence outside the context of a probation order? If not, it should be considered less serious and more likely to be dealt with appropriately through extrajudicial measures or through a review of the original sentence to determine whether the conditions should be changed;
- the role of the young person in the incident. For example, if the young person was the leader who planned and directed the offence, then his/her degree of responsibility is greater. However, this factor is secondary to the seriousness of the offence;
- whether the young person was a victim in the commission of the offence (e.g., a sexually exploited juvenile prostitute, a young person committing a drug offence who is being directed or exploited by an adult drug dealer). If so, it is more likely that an extrajudicial measure should be used;
- whether the young person has a history of committing offences. If so, what is the nature and number of previous offences? Although a history of offences may indicate that a more serious consequence is required to hold the young person accountable, this factor is secondary to the seriousness of the current offence;
- whether the young person has displayed remorse (e.g., through voluntary reparation to the victim or to the community, or has agreed to make such reparation); and
- if the young person were to proceed through the court system, what is the likelihood that the sentence would be more severe than what is available through extrajudicial measures?

4. BAIL

Young persons can be detained in custody at the pre-trial stage only in the circumstances identified in s. 29 \(2\) of the YCJA. Crown counsel bears the onus of satisfying the youth justice court judge or the justice, on a balance of probabilities, that detention is required due to any of the grounds described in s. 29 \(2\)\(b\) and that no conditions of release would enable the risk to be managed in the community. Otherwise, the provisions in Part XVI of the Criminal Code regarding detention and release apply to young persons, unless these provisions are inconsistent with the specific provisions of the YCJA.¹⁷

4.1. When should the Crown consider opposing bail for a young person?

Crown counsel should be most concerned about violent and repeat offenders who pose a public safety risk if released. This is consistent with the principles in the bail regime in s. 29 \(2\), as well as the Preamble, which clearly states that the youth criminal justice system should reduce the over-reliance on jail for non-violent young persons.

If the Crown wishes to show cause, Crown counsel should be satisfied that the concern (failure to appear, protection of the public, or exceptional circumstances and maintaining confidence in the administration of justice) cannot be addressed and managed by conditions of release.

5. RIGHT TO COUNSEL

Crown counsel should be aware that, in certain situations, the youth justice court can direct that a young person be represented by counsel. When such direction is made, the Attorney General must appoint counsel, or cause counsel to be appointed.¹⁸ In these circumstances, Crown counsel should notify the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or a person designated by the CFP in the territory or province to discuss procedures.

6. SENTENCING

6.1. Sentencing principles

A young person who is found guilty of an offence will receive a youth sentence in accordance with the general principles in s. 3, the purpose and principles of sentencing in s. 38, and the available sentences in the YCJA. However, if a young person is found guilty of an offence, and the youth justice court judge orders an adult sentence pursuant to s. 72 of the YCJA, as discussed below, the young person will be sentenced in accordance with the sentencing principles and sentences in the Criminal Code. In these ¹⁷ YCJA, supra note 3, s 28. In particular, Crown counsel should note s 29\(1\) (prohibition on detention as a social measure) and s 31 (availability of a responsible person rather than pre-trial detention).

¹⁸ YCJA, supra note 3, s 25\(5\).

circumstances, mandatory minimum penalties available under the Criminal Code or the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act can be imposed on young persons provided the conditions for an MMP are satisfied in the particular case.¹⁹

6.2. When to seek a custodial youth sentence

Crown counsel can seek a custodial youth sentence for a young person only in certain situations, which are identified in s. 39 of the YCJA. Under the YCJA, youth custodial sentences are designed so that a portion of the sentence is served in custody and a portion is served in the community. This approach is aimed at encouraging the rehabilitation and re-integration of the young person back into the community.

In considering whether to seek a custodial sentence, Crown counsel must consider the nature of the sentence that is required to hold the young person adequately accountable, that will have meaningful consequences for the young person, and that will also promote rehabilitation and re-integration into society, and thus contribute to the long-term protection of society.²⁰

Specific sentencing principles apply to a young person who is to receive a youth sentence under the YCJA.²¹ For example, the youth sentence must be proportionate to the seriousness of the offence and the degree of responsibility of the young person.²² The sentencing principles of rehabilitation and re-integration, specific deterrence and denunciation, are all subject to proportionality.

Crown counsel must also bear in mind that s. 38 directs the youth justice court to consider all available sanctions other than custody that are reasonable for all young persons, paying particular attention to the circumstances of aboriginal young persons.²³ Further, Crown counsel must remain alive to the fact that general deterrence is not a sentencing principle that applies to a young person who is receiving a youth sentence under the YCJA.²⁴

6.3. Adult sentences

Crown counsel can apply for an adult sentence for a young person in any case it considers appropriate, provided the young person meets the basic eligibility requirements: there must be a guilty finding against the young person in relation to an offence for which an ¹⁹ YCJA, supra note 3, ss 50 and 74 \(1\).

²⁰ YCJA, supra note 3, s 38 \(1\).

²¹ YCJA, supra note 3, ss 3 and 38\(2\).

²² YCJA, supra note 3, s 38\(2\)\(c\)

²³ YCJA, supra note 3, s 38\(2\)\(d\).

²⁴ As discussed in section 9 of this directive concerning transitional provisions, Crown counsel must remain mindful that the sentencing principles of specific deterrence and denunciation apply only to offences committed after October 23, 2012.

adult could receive more than two years in jail and the young person must have been at least 14 at the time of the offence.²⁵

However, if the offence is a serious violent offence,²⁶ committed by a young person who was at least 14 at the time of the incident, Crown counsel must consider whether it would be appropriate to apply for an adult sentence.²⁷ In such cases, prior to deciding whether to apply for the adult sentence, Crown counsel with carriage of the file must consult the CFP, the Deputy CFP or the General Counsel Legal Operations. If the Crown ultimately decides not to apply in such a case, the Crown must advise the youth justice court before the young person enters a plea or, with leave of the court, before the trial.²⁸ Crown counsel must ensure that the file is appropriately documented so that it is clear that Crown counsel considered the appropriateness of an adult sentence in all cases where it is now obliged to do so.

Otherwise, when the Crown intends to apply for an adult sentence, the Crown must give notice of that intention to the young person and the youth justice court before the young person enters a plea or, with leave of the court, before the start of the trial.

6.3.1. Factors relevant to whether Crown counsel should apply for an adult sentence

The YCJA does not explicitly identify the factors Crown counsel should consider in deciding whether to apply for an adult sentence.²⁹ However, given that Crown counsel is statutorily mandated to consider applying for an adult sentence any time a young person who was at least 14 at the time of the incident has committed a serious violent offence, the seriousness of the offence is obviously a factor to be considered.³⁰

Other relevant factors Crown counsel should consider when deciding whether to apply for an adult sentence, include the following:

- the age, maturity, character, background and previous record of the young person;
- the level of intelligence, sophistication, and dependency (including the capacity for moral judgment) of the young person;
- the role of the young person in the commission of the crime;

²⁵ YCJA, s 64.

²⁶ Under s 2 of the YCJA, a serious violent offence is defined as murder, attempt murder, manslaughter or aggravated sexual assault.

²⁷ YCJA, s 64 \(1.1\).

²⁸ Ibid.

²⁹ R v DB, 2008 SCC 25 [R v DB] at paras 41, 44, 47, 54, 62-65 and 76-77 provides some guidance as to the factors during the discussion of diminished moral blame worthiness.

³⁰ YCJA, s 64 \(1.1\).

- the harm done to victims, and whether it was intentional or reasonably foreseeable;
- the adequacy of a youth sentence to hold the young person accountable, to protect the public and to serve the goal of rehabilitation;
- the availability of treatment and resources in the youth system versus the adult system;
- the fact that the identity of the young person will automatically be made public when a young person receives an adult sentence,³¹
- the importance of general deterrence, which is a sentencing principle only when a young person receives an adult sentence; and
- any other factors that the Crown considers relevant in a particular case.

6.3.2. Test for an adult sentence

Before imposing an adult sentence, the youth justice court must be satisfied that the presumption of the diminished moral blameworthiness of the young person has been rebutted.³² The youth justice court must also be satisfied that a youth sentence would not be of sufficient length to hold the young person accountable. The Crown bears the onus of satisfying the youth justice court in this regard.³³

7. PRIVACY, PUBLICATION AND RECORDS

7.1. Introduction

The privacy rights of young persons who are dealt with under the YCJA are set out in s. 3 and Part 6 of the YCJA;³⁴ the privacy of young persons is a theme throughout the YCJA.

7.2. Publication

The YCJA generally protects the identities of young persons who are dealt with under the YCJA, as well as the identities of children and young persons who are witnesses or ³¹ YCJA, supra note 3, s 110 \(2\)\(a\).

³² In R v DB, supra note 29, the Supreme Court of Canada found at paras 59 and 70 respectively that the presumption of the diminished moral culpability of young persons is not only a longstanding legal principle but a principle of fundamental justice. R v DB also provides some guidance regarding the factors and evidence Crown counsel can adduce to rebut this presumption in a given case, such as the age, maturity and capacity for moral judgment of the young person in question. The factors the Crown may wish to raise in seeking to rebut the presumption of diminished moral blameworthiness will often be the same factors referred to above under “Factors Relevant to Whether Crown counsel Should Apply for an Adult Sentence”.

³³ YCJA, supra note 3, s 72.

³⁴ YCJA, supra note 3, s 3\(1\)\(b\)\(iii\).

victims in relation to offences committed or alleged to have been committed by young persons. However, there are exceptions to these rules,³⁵ which include when a young person receives an adult sentence, or, in certain circumstances, when a young person receives a youth sentence for a violent offence.³⁶

The identity of a young person can be published when the young person receives an adult sentence. Regarding the second exception (when the young person receives a youth sentence for a violent offence), the publication ban can be lifted only if Crown counsel satisfies the youth justice court judge that the publication ban should be lifted because the young person poses a significant risk of committing another violent offence and lifting the ban is necessary to protect the public.³⁷ Thus, in cases where the Crown takes the position that the ban must be lifted, Crown counsel must ensure that it has placed before the court an adequate evidentiary record.

7.3. Access to and disclosure of youth records

The YCJA creates a regime for access to, and disclosure of, three types of youth records: court records, police records and records kept by government departments or agencies, which includes the Crown. It is an offence to disclose youth records, as defined in the YCJA, except in accordance with the YCJA.³⁸

Crown counsel, as a record-keeper, has discretion under s. 119 of the YCJA as to whether to disclose a youth record in its possession to the parties identified in that section. When Crown counsel receives a request for a youth record, Crown counsel must be attuned to the fact that youth records generally remain accessible for only specified periods of time, which are spelled out in s. 119\(2\).

Crown counsel also has the discretion to disclose court or police records during proceedings under any federal act to a person who is a co-accused with the young person in relation to the offence for which the record is kept, and information to an accused in a proceeding that identifies a witness as a young person who has been dealt with under the YCJA.³⁹

In the event that a requesting party disagrees with the Crown's decision not to disclose a youth record in a given case, the party can apply to a youth justice court judge for the record under s. 119\(1\)\(s\) if the access period to the record has not expired. If the access period has expired, an application can be made under s. 123.

³⁵ YCJA, supra note 3, ss 110-111.

³⁶ YCJA, supra note 3, s 75.

³⁷ YCJA, supra note 3, ss 110\(2\)\(b\) and 75 \(2\) respectively (in terms of the examples cited).

³⁸ YCJA, supra note 3, ss 118 and 138.

³⁹ YCJA, supra, note 3, s 125\(2\).

Once a party is granted access to a record, the party cannot further disclose the information in the record unless there is authority for such further disclosure in the YCJA.⁴⁰

When the Crown is preparing for sentencing in relation to a youth case, it is important for the Crown to be aware that the young person's youth record can be included in the pre-sentence report, provided access to the youth record is still open under s. 119\(2\).⁴¹

Crown counsel should also be aware that, unlike other types of extrajudicial measures, a young person's record of extrajudicial sanctions can be made available to various parties⁴² upon request, and the history of a young person's involvement in extrajudicial sanctions can be included in a pre-sentence report and raised during the young person's sentencing hearing for a subsequent offence, provided the access period to the record is still open.⁴³

It is also important for Crown counsel to be attuned to the fact that if a person is convicted of an offence committed after becoming an adult, while access to his or her youth record remains open, Part 6 of the YCJA no longer applies and that person's youth record loses the protections of the YCJA and is to be treated like an adult record.⁴⁴ In addition, in certain circumstances, a guilty finding received under the YCJA can be considered a previous conviction for purposes of imposing a greater punishment on an adult under other Acts of Parliament, such as the Criminal Code or the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act.⁴⁵

Access to police and government records are more strictly controlled when the record concerns an extrajudicial measure other than an extrajudicial sanction. Only the police, the Crown, or a person participating in a conference, is allowed to have access to these records for certain purposes, including in order to decide whether to use another extrajudicial measure. By contrast, youth records involving extrajudicial sanctions are more widely accessible.⁴⁶

⁴⁰ YCJA, supra note 3, s 129.

⁴¹ YCJA, supra note 3, at ss 40 \(2\)\(iii\) and \(iv\).

⁴² YCJA, supra, note 3, s 119\(2\)\(a\)

⁴³ But by virtue of ss 119\(4\) and s 40 \(2\)\(d\)\(iv\), any extrajudicial measures used other than extrajudicial sanctions, such as a Crown caution, cannot be mentioned.

⁴⁴ YCJA, supra note 3, s 119\(9\)\(b\). See also s 120 \(6\) of the YCJA regarding a similar provision in relation to RCMP records concerning offences listed in the YCJA schedule (which include trafficking, importing and exporting, and production offences under the CDSA).

⁴⁵ While the Supreme Court of Canada has never ruled on this point, this is the combined effect of ss 119\(9\)\(a\) and 82\(4\) of the YCJA as discussed in R v Able 2013 OJ No 2675; 2013 ONCA. See also the 2013-06-27 PPSC Memo titled: Youth Records and MMPs under the CDSA.

⁴⁶ YCJA, supra note 3, ss 119\(4\) and 119\(2\)\(a\).

Nevertheless, police forces must keep records of all extrajudicial measures that they use to deal with young persons.⁴⁷ Crown counsel should ensure police forces are aware of this obligation and check with the relevant police force in appropriate cases to ensure the Crown has the complete record.

8. CROWN OBLIGATION TO PARENTS AND VICTIMS

The YCJA expressly recognizes the interests of victims as well as those of the parents of accused young persons.⁴⁸

Thus, Crown counsel should:

- Verify that parents have been informed of measures or proceedings involving their children and encourage them to support their children in addressing their offending behaviour;⁴⁹
- If a young person receives an extrajudicial sanction, attempt to ensure that the program administrator is aware of the obligation to inform the parent of the young person of the sanction;⁵⁰
- Take into account the interests of victims,⁵¹ treat victims with courtesy, compassion and respect, and provide them with information about the proceedings so that they have an opportunity to participate and be heard;⁵²
- If a young person receives an extrajudicial sanction, inform the victim, upon request, of the identity of the young person and how the offence was dealt with.⁵³ In these circumstances, the Crown must also inform the victim that he or she is not permitted to further disclose that information unless provisions of the YCJA authorize it.⁵⁴

9. TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS

Crown counsel must remain mindful of the transitional provisions that are contained in the Safe Streets and Communities Act because they clarify when and how the 2012

⁴⁷ YCJA, supra note 3, s 115 \(1.1\).

⁴⁸ See YCJA, supra note 3, Preamble and ss 3 \(1\)\(d\)\(ii\),\(iii\) and \(iv\), as well as ss 11-12.

⁴⁹ YCJA, supra note 3, s 3\(1\)\(d\)\(iv\).

⁵⁰ YCJA, supra note 3, s 11.

⁵¹ See YCJA, supra note 3, Preamble, clause 5.

⁵² YCJA, supra note 3, ss 3\(1\)\(d\) \(ii\) and \(iii\).

⁵³ YCJA, supra note 3, Preamble, clause 3, but more specifically s 12.

⁵⁴ YCJA, supra note 3, ss 118 and 129. Pursuant to s 138 of the YCJA, it is an offence to further disclose youth records or information provided under the YCJA unless the YCJA permits it.

amendments to the YCJA apply. As discussed at note 3, annual annotated Criminal Codes do not always include these transitional provisions. For example, Crowns must remain cognizant that some of the 2012 amendments to the YCJA apply only to offences committed after the October 23, 2012 coming into force date of the amendments, such as the amendments relating to the sentencing principles and to the eligibility criteria for custodial sentences under s. 39.⁵⁵ The other amendments, such as changes to the bail regime under s. 29 of the YCJA, apply to young persons who committed offences before the coming into force of the amendments if proceedings had not commenced before October 23, 2012.

⁵⁵ As per clause 195 of the Safe Streets and Communities Act, the following provisions do not apply to young persons who committed the offence before the coming into force of these amendments on Oct. 23, 2012:

- The broader definition of a violent offence in s 2;
- The new s 3\(1\)\(a\) of the YCJA;
- The sentencing principles of denunciation and specific deterrence;
- The expanded eligibility for custody under s 39\(1\)\(c\) of the YCJA; and
- The new wording of s 75 of the YCJA, which expands the circumstances where the identity of a young person who has received a youth sentence can be published.

APPENDIX A

CROWN CAUTION LETTERS

Consistent with the policy criteria set out in section 3.3.3 of this directive, federal prosecutors may administer Crown cautions under s. 8 of the Youth Criminal Justice Act, in the format below, modified as necessary to fit the circumstances.

Section 8 Youth Criminal Justice Act

Crown Caution to a Young Person

To: (name of young person)

The Public Prosecution Service of Canada has received a report from {police agency}. In this report, police officers indicate that they have reasonable grounds to believe that you have broken the law by:

{set out offence(s)}.

While there is sufficient information to proceed with a prosecution, the Crown has decided, under s. 8 of the Youth Criminal Justice Act, to issue a formal caution to you rather than proceeding with charges for this offence.

If you break the law in the future, more serious consequences, including charges and prosecution with potentially serious penalties, may follow.

If a future matter proceeds to prosecution, a youth record could result. Meanwhile, a record of this Crown caution remains on file.

You are required to contact the Crown's office, or your probation officer or youth worker, to confirm receipt of this caution letter.

(date)

(place)

{name of person signing on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions and Deputy Attorney General of Canada}

Contact # for further information _____

APPENDIX B

NOTICE TO PARENT OR GUARDIAN

Crown counsel should notify a parent or guardian of the young person that a Crown caution has been administered in the following format, modified as necessary to fit the circumstances.

Section 8 Youth Criminal Justice Act

Notice to the Parent or Guardian that a Young Person has been given a Crown Caution

To:{name of parent, guardian or adult with legal responsibility for young person}

This letter concerns {name of young person}.

The Public Prosecution Service of Canada has received a report from {police agency}. In this report, police officers indicate that they have reasonable grounds to believe that (name of young person) has broken the law by:

{set out offence(s)}

While there is sufficient information to proceed with a prosecution, the Crown has decided, under s. 8 of the Youth Criminal Justice Act, to issue a formal caution to (the young person) rather than proceeding with charges for this offence.

Please understand that if (the name of the young person) breaks the law in the future, there may be more serious consequences, including charges and prosecution with potentially serious penalties. If a future matter proceeds to prosecution, a youth record could result.

A record of this Crown caution remains on file.

{date}

{place}

{name of person signing on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions and Deputy Attorney General of Canada}

Contact # for further information_____

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.5 DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised January 31, 2022

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. APPLICATION OF THE GUIDELINE	2
3. THE COURT PROCESS.....	3
3.1. Evidentiary considerations and the decision to prosecute.....	3
3.2. Judicial interim release.....	4
3.3. Preparation of witnesses and the role of Crown Witness Coordinators.....	5
3.4. Issues at trial.....	6
4. SENTENCE	8
5. ALTERNATIVES TO PROSECUTIONS	10
6. THE USE OF SECTION 810 RECOGNIZANCES	10

1. INTRODUCTION

This guideline highlights the importance of ensuring that the safety of complainants, and their families, is the paramount consideration at all stages of the prosecution.

A domestic violence case is one involving a physical or sexual assault, or threat of such violence, against an intimate partner. An intimate partner, with respect to a person, includes their current or former spouse, common-law partner and dating partner. The definition encompasses both opposite and same-sex partnerships.

2. APPLICATION OF THE GUIDELINE

The Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC) has jurisdiction to prosecute domestic violence cases in Canada's three territories. It is therefore incumbent upon Crown counsel to take into account circumstances particular to the North, including its Indigenous people and their history. With respect to the prosecution of domestic violence cases in the North, Crown counsel must be informed about the present-day reality and history of remote Indigenous communities, as well as their impact on the rate of domestic violence. These circumstances include the fact that in many small northern communities, the options available to complainants of domestic violence may be limited because:

- a) complainants may not have access to the same types of support typically available in larger communities in southern Canada, such as emergency shelters or counselling services;

- b) absolute prohibitions on contact with the alleged abuser may be unrealistic in a small isolated community;
- c) complainants may still be committed to the relationship even though they would like the violence to cease;
- d) there are often financial or subsistence considerations that can impact a complainant and children in the family; and
- e) options for treatment of accused persons or couples may not be available.

3. THE COURT PROCESS

3.1. Evidentiary considerations and the decision to prosecute

Crown counsel must obtain the prior consent of the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or their designate in domestic violence prosecutions where there is a reasonable prospect of conviction, but Crown counsel proposes to terminate the prosecution on the basis that it is not in the public interest to proceed.

When considering whether a prosecution best serves the public interest, Crown counsel must consider the criteria set out in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”. Crown counsel should also consider:

- a) the view of the complainant;
- b) the community supports available and being accessed by the complainant;
- c) any indication that the complainant has been directly or indirectly threatened or intimidated by the accused or the accused’s family or friends in connection with the present prosecution;
- d) any undue trauma that may be caused if the complainant is required to testify;
- e) any indication that the complainant may commit perjury if called to testify;
- f) the likelihood that similar offences will be committed in the future, particularly against the complainant or children in the home;
- g) the efforts of the accused to address the abusive behaviour through counselling or some other treatment or program, including culturally-based healing programs; and
- h) the accused’s prior convictions for domestic violence offences or other violent offences.

Where it is determined that the police investigation has not provided all the information or evidence that may be available in relation to these factors, Crown counsel should advise the police in writing at the earliest possible stage that the evidence is incomplete.

A record explaining the reasons of any decision to terminate a domestic violence prosecution must be placed on file and copied to the CFP or their designate.

In all cases where a domestic violence prosecution is terminated, Crown counsel must make all reasonable efforts to communicate their decision to the police and the complainant before terminating the prosecution. In exceptional cases where this is not possible, this should be done as soon as possible thereafter.

3.2. Judicial interim release

In some circumstances, victims of domestic violence may express wishes for reconciliation and to have the accused released from custody. In determining what position to take at the judicial interim release stage, Crown counsel must ensure that the victim's wishes do not outweigh serious objective concerns for the safety of the victim and members of the family.

Complainants in domestic violence cases may be reluctant to cooperate with the prosecution. While a complainant's views are relevant, the responsibility for the prosecution and decisions to be made at the stage of interim release rests with Crown counsel.

In assessing what position to take on the issue of interim release, Crown counsel must address the safety of the complainant and any children, regardless of whether the onus to show cause is on the Crown or the accused. When taking a position on release, Crown counsel must be mindful of the principle and considerations in section 493.1. Under this section, it is necessary to give primary consideration to the release of the accused on the least onerous conditions paying particular attention to the circumstances of both Indigenous accused and those from vulnerable populations. Section 515(3) obligates a justice to consider intimate partner violence when making a decision to release.

When necessary, Crown counsel should not hesitate to request additional relevant information from both the accused (through defence counsel or duty counsel) and the police. This information may assist in determining what terms of release are appropriate. Crown counsel should also request assistance in the preparation of submissions for a show cause hearing.

Crown counsel should oppose the accused's release if it creates an unreasonable risk to the complainant. Where the court is satisfied that the accused can be released, some restrictions will ordinarily be necessary to ensure the safety of the complainant and to preserve the integrity of the prosecution. As circumstances may require, Crown counsel should consider recommending the following conditions:

- a) non-communication with the complainant directly or indirectly;
- b) arrangements for access to children through a neutral third party (if the court is inclined to allow the accused to have contact with the children);
- c) prohibiting attendance at or near the residence or place of work of the complainant;
- d) surrender of all firearms, ammunition, explosives and firearms licence;
- e) where limits to the consumption of alcohol or drugs are considered, counsel should turn their mind to the connection of the substance use to the circumstances of the allegation and the ability of the accused to comply with such a condition; and

- f) in communities where access to domestic violence treatment programs is available, and the accused has expressly consented, attend all appointments required for treatment purposes and to comply with all related conditions.

Crown counsel should always seek to avoid situations which may have the effect of re-victimizing the complainant. Crown counsel should ensure that decisions or representations made at the interim release stage do not have the effect of forcing or pressuring the complainant and the children to leave the family home or community.

Where the accused is released from custody, a copy of any conditions should be provided to the complainant. In circumstances where the complainant has relocated to another community, Crown counsel or the Crown Witness Coordinator shall ensure that the police detachment nearest to the complainant is informed of the release terms. The police detachment in both the accused's and the complainant's communities should be provided with copies of the terms of release.

In some circumstances, the police may seek Crown counsel's advice on whether to release an accused person from custody before the formal laying of charges. It is also possible that the accused seeks changes to the terms specified by the police in the appearance notice or undertaking. In all these situations, Crown counsel must ensure that police provide all the particulars of the case and relevant information before providing advice on the issue of interim release or before determining whether the changes being sought should be consented to or opposed. If an accused has been arrested and then released by the police on an appearance notice or undertaking, Crown counsel should review and determine if the conditions are adequate to protect the complainant and the children, as the case may be. If necessary, Crown counsel should request a warrant or a variation of the conditions pursuant to ss. 502(1) or 512 of the Code.

Where the court decides to release an accused in circumstances where Crown counsel considers that the complainant or other family members may be at risk, immediate consideration should be given to making an application for bail review, after consultation with the CFP or their designate.

Crown counsel should always consider recommending an order prohibiting the accused from having contact with the complainant or other persons that may be necessary, pursuant to ss. 516(2) or 515(12) of the Code.

Throughout the interim release process, Crown counsel or the Crown Witness Coordinator must keep the complainant informed of the proceedings and any outcomes relevant to the complainant's safety. The Crown Witness Coordinator must advise Crown counsel of any information provided by the complainant that may be relevant to the interim release process or that may have other evidentiary implications.

3.3. Preparation of witnesses and the role of Crown Witness Coordinators

Witness preparation is an important function in domestic violence cases. Crown counsel and Crown Witness Coordinators should work together to prepare complainants for the criminal court process. Special attention should be paid to the background and context of the witness so that any preparation process is sensitive to the needs of the witness. During this process, Crown counsel or a Crown Witness Coordinator should ensure that the following steps are taken:

- a) where possible, meet with the complainant as soon as possible after charges are laid and prior to any proceeding where the complainant may be called to testify;
- b) where possible, communicate with the complainant in the language of their choice or obtain the assistance of a person who is able to communicate in this language;
- c) explain the role of Crown counsel and defence counsel in criminal proceedings;
- d) explain the role of the Crown Witness Coordinator;
- e) explain the role of a witness in court;
- f) assess the complainant's reliability as a witness;
- g) tell the complainant or witness that they must testify truthfully;
- h) inform the complainant of any release conditions imposed on the accused, and determine if the complainant has any concerns with the accused's compliance with those conditions;
- i) confirm that the complainant has been made aware of available community services;
- j) attempt to answer any questions the complainant may have and discuss any continuing safety concerns; and
- k) ensure that the complainant has been informed of the opportunity to file a Victim Impact Statement.

Crown counsel or the Crown Witness Coordinator must review the complainant's police statement with them. In circumstances where a Crown Witness Coordinator reviews a statement with the complainant, the Crown Witness Coordinator must document the particulars of that meeting and inform Crown counsel of any new or inconsistent information provided by the complainant.

Crown counsel must inform defence counsel immediately if new information, or information inconsistent with the previous statement, is provided by the complainant or any other witness.

3.4. Issues at trial

Where a complainant fails to attend court, Crown counsel should make every reasonable effort to determine the reason(s) for the complainant's failure to appear. Crown counsel should generally seek an adjournment unless they are in a position to proceed to trial without calling the complainant as a witness.

In circumstances where Crown counsel considers seeking a witness warrant against the complainant, Crown counsel must obtain the prior permission of the CFP or their designate where practicable. Where prior consent is not feasible, Crown counsel must provide the CFP or their designate with a written memorandum explaining this decision and ensure the memo is placed on file.

In cases where a witness warrant is obtained, Crown counsel should inform the police about the circumstances surrounding the issuance of the warrant. Ordinarily, Crown counsel will advise the police to seek information from the complainant about the reason for not attending court and that the complainant should be released as soon as possible on terms that they attend court as required.

In domestic violence cases, it is quite common for complainants to demonstrate reluctance or unwillingness to participate in the criminal justice process. In order to maximize the prospect that the complainant will participate in the process, Crown counsel and Crown Witness Coordinators must work together and provide support and information to complainants throughout the process. It is particularly important to contact the complainant at the earliest possible opportunity.

In most, if not all cases, Crown counsel should seek an order restricting publication of any information that could identify the complainant in sexual offence cases pursuant to s. 486.4 of the Criminal Code.

In cases where the complainant raises concerns about testifying, Crown counsel should consider the following:

- a) seeking the early intervention of a Crown Witness Coordinator or other support person to assess the complainant's willingness to participate in the process and any reasons for their reluctance to participate;
- b) reviewing the case to determine if the police should be asked to obtain a sworn videotaped statement from the complainant; and
- c) applying to the court for a testimonial aid such as the following:
 - i. allowing a support person inside the courtroom pursuant to s. 486.1(2.1) of the Criminal Code;
 - ii. allowing the use of screen or closed-circuit television pursuant to s. 486.2(2.1) of the Criminal Code; or
 - iii. in rare cases, an order excluding the public from the courtroom while the complainant gives evidence pursuant to s. 486(1) of the Criminal Code.

If the complainant refuses to testify, Crown counsel should consider whether other admissible evidence is sufficient to prove the domestic violence offence. Crown counsel may consider excusing the complainant from testifying without further consequence.

If the complainant does testify but cannot recall details, or the testimony differs from previous statements given, Crown counsel should consider the various options available that may enable the presentation of credible and reliable evidence of the complainant before the court, such as:

- a) seeking leave to show the complainant a prior statement, for the purpose of refreshing their memory;

- b) seeking leave to cross-examine the complainant as an adverse witness, pursuant to s. 9(1) of the Canada Evidence Act;¹
- c) seeking leave to cross-examine the complainant on the prior inconsistent statement, pursuant to s. 9(2) of the Canada Evidence Act;
- d) seeking to introduce evidence of a prior inconsistent statement for the truth of its contents, pursuant to the Supreme Court's judgment in R v KGB;² and
- e) seeking to introduce evidence of prior out-of-court utterances of the complainant as res gestae evidence (e.g. police officer hearsay, 911 or police dispatch tapes).

4. SENTENCE

Where an accused pleads guilty or is found guilty of a domestic violence offence, Crown counsel's submissions on sentencing should include ensuring the long-term safety of the complainant and other family members. Section 718.2(a)(ii) of the Code makes abuse of one's spouse, common law partner or child an aggravating feature on sentence. Courts have found denunciation and deterrence to be important sentencing principles in cases of domestic violence. Section 718.04 states that these objectives are the primary consideration when the victim is part of a vulnerable population. Section 718.201 requires courts to consider the increased vulnerability of female victims with particular attention to be paid to the circumstances of Indigenous female victims when determining a sentence.

In cases involving Indigenous offenders, particular attention must be paid to the principle of restraint in s. 718.2(e) as explained by the Supreme Court of Canada in *R v Gladue*³ and R v Ipeelee.⁴ The principle requires that all available sanctions that are reasonable in the circumstances (other than imprisonment) be considered given: (a) the unique systemic or background factors which may have played a part in bringing the particular Indigenous offender before the courts; and (b) the types of sentencing procedures and sanctions which may be appropriate in the circumstances for the offender because of their particular Indigenous heritage or connection.

Where available in the three territories, Crown counsel are also encouraged to seek the engagement of community, professional and therapeutic resources that may assist in treating the accused and preventing a reoccurrence of violence between partners who choose to continue in their relationships. This includes seeking out culturally-based or Indigenous healing programs which may be locally available.

Crown counsel should also consider the following:

- a) Where an accused person has a prior conviction for violence against an intimate partner, counsel should refer to s. 718.3(8) for elevated maximum sentences. Counsel may need to seek additional information from the police or court records to determine whether a prior violent conviction was against an intimate partner as defined in s. 2.

¹ Canada Evidence Act, RSC 1985, c C-5.

² R v KGB [1993] 1 SCR 740.

³ R v Gladue, [1999] 1 SCR 688.

⁴ R v Ipeelee, 2012 SCC 13.

- b) In most circumstances, domestic violence cases are not suitable for conditional or absolute discharges unless extraordinary and compelling circumstances are present. This is because such dispositions do not adequately reflect public denunciation of domestic violence and the need to deter such offences.⁵ An accused who has successfully completed the treatment process of a specialized therapeutic court program is an example of extraordinary and compelling circumstances for a discharge. Whether a conditional or absolute discharge is appropriate must be determined on a case-by-case basis.
- c) Consideration should be given to seeking probation with conditions obliging the accused to participate in a therapeutic violence prevention program. Where necessary, conditions aimed at ensuring the safety of the complainant and other family members, including a no contact condition, should be sought.
- d) Crown counsel must ensure that the complainant is given a reasonable opportunity to prepare and submit a Victim Impact Statement, pursuant to s. 722 of the Criminal Code. In cases where a victim impact statement is not filed, counsel may need to seek additional information to provide to the Court about the personal circumstances of the victim to satisfy s. 718.04.
- e) Crown counsel should consider recommending an order prohibiting the possession of weapons or firearms, pursuant to ss. 109 (mandatory) and 110 (discretionary) of the Criminal Code. However, Crown counsel must be sensitive to the need for hunting for subsistence or cultural reasons which may justify lifting the prohibition order in accordance with s. 113 of the Criminal Code.
- f) Crown counsel should seek orders pursuant to ss. 114 and 115 of the Criminal Code directing that any firearms licence be surrendered and forfeited where a prohibition order has been imposed.
- g) Crown counsel should consider seeking an order for forfeiture of any weapon or ammunition used in the commission of a domestic violence offence.
- h) Crown counsel should consider seeking a DNA order, pursuant to s. 487.051 of the Criminal Code.
- i) When a custodial sentence is sought, Crown counsel should consider seeking an order pursuant to s. 743.21 of the Criminal Code prohibiting the accused from communicating directly or indirectly with the complainant or witness during the period of custody.
- j) Crown counsel should generally not consider recommending a conditional sentence pursuant to s. 742.1 of the Criminal Code in circumstances where an accused has in the past received a conditional sentence for domestic violence-related offence(s). Before seeking or agreeing to a conditional sentence for an accused in this circumstance, Crown counsel first must seek the approval of the CFP or their designate.

Crown counsel, with the assistance of a Crown Witness Coordinator, shall take reasonable steps to ensure that the complainant is informed of the sentence imposed and the status of any appeal proceedings undertaken.

⁵ R v Shortt, 2002 NWTJ 55.

5. ALTERNATIVES TO PROSECUTIONS

Crown counsel may only resort to diversion, alternative measures, or extrajudicial sanctions in cases involving domestic violence with the prior consent of the CFP or their designate.

Such alternatives to prosecutions should only be pursued in cases where there is a reasonable prospect of conviction. In addition, Crown counsel must consider ss. 2 and 3 of the PPSC Deskbook directive, “3.8 Alternative Measures”, the views of the complainant, the views of the police, and the views of other officials or treatment professionals who can assist in the assessment of the appropriateness of resolving by way of alternative measures. If the complainant expresses disagreement or reluctance to alternative measures, Crown counsel must inquire as to the reasons behind the complainant’s disagreement or concern. The reasons for such disagreement or concern are factors that Crown counsel must consider in determining whether it is in the public interest to terminate a prosecution in order to resolve a domestic violence case using alternative measures.

6. THE USE OF SECTION 810 RECOGNIZANCES

Before resorting to s. 810 of the Criminal Code in domestic violence cases, Crown counsel must obtain the consent of the CFP or their designate. Both counsel and the CFP should consider Indigenous concepts of justice in their analysis of whether a peace bond is appropriate in the circumstances.

Section 810 may be resorted to where there is no reasonable prospect of conviction on the evidence, but there is a reasonable prospect of meeting the threshold for a recognizance under s. 810. In this circumstance, Crown counsel must ensure that the defence counsel understands the withdrawal or stay of the domestic violence charge(s) is not because of the accused’s willingness to agree to abide by a s. 810 recognizance. Rather, it is on the basis that the complainant reasonably fears for their safety, the safety of other family members, or property.

Section 810 may also be resorted to where there is a reasonable prospect of conviction but a prosecution does not best serve the public interest. Before seeking the consent of the CFP, Crown counsel must seek the views of the complainant, police and other administration of justice officials or treatment professionals. Generally, a peace bond may be appropriate in the following circumstances:

- a) the complainant is agreeable to such a disposition;
- b) the violence involved was minimal;
- c) the accused has no history of violence with either this complainant or others;
- d) there is a realistic safety plan for ensuring that future violence is avoided;
- e) the available information about the accused’s treatment and rehabilitative steps is consistent with the prospect that future violence will be avoided; and
- f) there are resources in the community for the effective monitoring of compliance with the peace bond, for example by the police or probation services.

If the accused enters into a s. 810 recognizance, Crown counsel or a Crown Witness Coordinator must inform the complainant of the terms of the recognizance and the implications of non-compliance by the accused.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.6 VICTIMS OF CRIME

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

January 15, 2017

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. DEFINITION OF VICTIM.....	3
3. STATEMENT OF POLICY	3
4. OPERATION OF THE POLICY	4
4.1. Rights of victims of crime.....	4
4.2. Special needs of some victims	5
4.3. Alternative measures.....	6
4.4. Bail hearings	6
4.5. Peace bonds.....	6
4.6. Sentencing.....	7
5. PROVIDING INFORMATION TO VICTIMS AND PARTICIPATION IN THE COURT PROCESS	7
5.1. Aids to trial testimony.....	9

1. INTRODUCTION

The views, concerns and representations of victims are an important consideration in the criminal justice system. The *Canadian Victims Bill of Rights*¹ (CVBR) provides victims of crime with rights in the criminal justice system.

Although Crown counsel do not represent victims in criminal proceedings, they must ensure that victims are properly informed about matters that affect them. Where appropriate, they must be provided the opportunity to participate in the criminal justice process. The *Criminal Code*² (Code) contains numerous provisions intended to increase the opportunities for victims to be heard before the courts, and to provide protection to victims' physical integrity as well as to their privacy.

¹ SC 2015, c 13.

² In relation to criminal prosecutions involving young persons, the Youth Criminal Justice Act (YCJA) contains similar provisions in the Preamble and ss 3(1)(d)(ii) and (iii).

This directive provides guidance to Crown counsel and Crown Witness Coordinators³ in their interactions with victims, including victims of crimes committed by young persons under the Youth Criminal Justice Act (YCJA).⁴

2. DEFINITION OF VICTIM

The term “victim” is defined in section 2 of the CVBR to include “an individual who has suffered physical or emotional harm, property damage or economic loss as the result of the commission or alleged commission of an offence.” The term is given a more specific definition in section 2 of the Criminal Code for the purpose of Criminal Code provisions where it is defined as “a person against whom an offence has been committed, or is alleged to have been committed, who has suffered, or is alleged to have suffered, physical or emotional loss, property damage or economic loss as a result of the commission of the offence.” The distinction between these definitions means that, while both natural persons and legal persons can benefit from the Criminal Code provisions, only natural persons have rights under the CVBR. The CVBR provides that no adverse inference shall be drawn against an accused person from the fact that an individual is identified as a victim.

The CVBR provides that, where a victim is dead or incapable of acting on their own behalf, the following individuals may exercise the victim’s rights on behalf of the victim: their spouse; their common-law spouse; a relative or dependant of the victim; an individual having custody or care of the victim or of their dependants.

3. STATEMENT OF POLICY

Crown counsel are bound to follow the letter and the spirit of the Canadian Victims Bill of Rights. In particular, counsel must be mindful of the principles contained in the preamble to the CVBR:

Whereas crime has a harmful impact on victims and on society;
Whereas victim of crime and their families deserve to be treated with courtesy, compassion and respect, including respect for their dignity;
Whereas it is important that victims’ rights be considered throughout the criminal justice system;
Whereas victims of crime have rights that are guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms;⁵

³ Crown Witness Coordinators provide court-based support to victims and witnesses in the three Territories and are based in the PPSC regional offices in the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Crown Witness Coordinators work with prosecutors in supporting victims and witnesses through the criminal justice process and providing information about the court process. Crown Witness Coordinators are required to travel to many small and remote communities, many of which are only accessible by air. The Crown Witness Coordinators locate and meet with victims and witnesses, and help them prepare for court appearances.

⁴ Note that the YCJA contains specific provisions concerning victims.

⁵ See, eg, R v NS, [2012] 3 SCR 726; R v O’Connor, [1995] 4 SCR 411.

Whereas consideration of the rights of victims of crime is in the interests of the proper administration of justice;

Whereas the federal, provincial and territorial governments share responsibility for criminal justice;

Whereas, in 1998, the federal, provincial and territorial governments endorsed the Canadian Statement of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and, in 2003, the Canadian Statement of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime, 2003.

In dealing with victims, Crown counsel must be careful to ensure that victims understand the role of a Crown prosecutor. They must therefore inform victims at the outset that they do not represent them in the proceedings and that, as Crown counsel, they must be scrupulously fair in presenting the case and may, as a result, present evidence that is favourable to the accused.

Crown counsel and Crown Witness Coordinators must bear in mind the disclosure obligations that may arise as a result of their dealings with witnesses, for example the need to disclose to defence all statements made by the victim, particularly where the victim has given inconsistent versions of the relevant events. These obligations should be explained to victims and witnesses.

4. OPERATION OF THE POLICY

4.1. Rights of victims of crime

The CVBR creates a statutory obligation on the PPSC to recognize and respect several rights of victims of crime. The rights in the CVBR apply to individual persons who suffer physical or emotional harm, property damage or financial loss as a result of an offence or an alleged offence under the Criminal Code, the Youth Criminal Justice Act or the Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act, a designated substance offence as defined under section 2(1) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act or an offence under section 91 and Part 3 of the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act. These rights apply to investigations, prosecutions, corrections and conditional release processes in Canada for which there is a victim of crime who is a Canadian citizen or permanent resident or who is present in Canada.

Sections 6-8 of the CVBR provide victims of crime with a right to general information about the justice system and their role, as well as specific case in which they are involved. Sections 9-13 provide victims with various rights to protection, including security, privacy and identity. Victims have specific rights which may arise during a prosecution, such as a right to request a testimonial aid, to present a victim impact statement or to request a restitution order. Section 14 provides victims with a right to convey their views about decisions which affect their rights. Finally, victims of crime have the right to complain to the Director of Public Prosecutions if they believe that their rights are not respected.⁶ Counsel have an obligation to consider these rights in their approach to a prosecution and are strongly encouraged to work closely with Crown Witness Coordinators in regard to these rights.

⁶ See the PPSC Complaints Policy, available at <http://www.ppsc-sppc.gc.ca/eng/cmp-pln/index.html>.

4.2. Special needs of some victims

In their dealings with victims, Crown counsel and Crown Witness Coordinators must take into account the circumstances of the victims (including their age and gender), the nature of the crime(s) and the harm or loss (emotional, financial or physical) that the victims sustained. Trauma may affect a victim's ability to process information about proceedings, particularly when that information concerns unknown or new terms or processes, which may require Crown counsel and Crown Witness Coordinators having to repeat information about the court process.

While the needs and circumstances of each victim will invariably be unique, Crown counsel should bear in mind certain considerations in specific types of cases.

Where the victim of a crime is a child, communication and protection take on special importance. Crown counsel must consider what measures are required to ensure the victim understands the information that is conveyed about the criminal justice system. Crown counsel should use language appropriate to the age, understanding and maturity of the child, and to the extent possible, should interview the child in a place and manner that is most likely to ensure the child's comfort and security. Specialized services, such as Child Advocacy Centres or Social Services, may be available to assist Crown counsel in proceedings involving child victims or witnesses.

Where the crime is one of domestic violence, Crown counsel should be aware of the dynamics commonly at play in respect of victims of such offences. To that end, Crown counsel must be familiar with the PPSC Deskbook guideline "5.5 Domestic Violence".⁷

Where the crime involved the violation of the victim's sexual integrity, the victim may find it difficult to participate in the proceedings. Crown counsel should attempt to ascertain the needs of the victim and respond accordingly.

In all crimes of violence, Crown counsel should be sensitive to a victim's sense of vulnerability and should consider appropriate measures to ensure the security and enhance the comfort of the victim. Such measures should include steps to ensure that victims are kept informed about the progress of the case, and about the types of issues that may arise: for example, applications to introduce evidence of prior sexual activity, or to obtain access to their personal, medical or other records.

In cases involving victims with special physical needs, Crown counsel must work to eliminate barriers that might impede the involvement of the victims in the proceedings. The same is true in cases where the first language of a victim is not the same as that of Crown counsel or the language in which proceedings are conducted.

Some victims may view court proceedings with suspicion; they may have concerns about bias or prejudice based on their race, ethnic origin, gender identity, or sexual orientation. Crown counsel should be aware of such concerns and seek to address them in an appropriate manner.

⁷ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "5.5 Domestic Violence".

4.3. Alternative measures

Not all offences require criminal proceedings. In some cases, the interests of victims, offenders, and society may be properly addressed through the use of alternative measures programs.

In cases involving physical violence, the public interest normally requires that the offence be prosecuted. Crown counsel must consider the position of the victim and, where appropriate, seek input from the victim in deciding whether an alternative to prosecution is appropriate. Where an alternative to prosecution is appropriate, care must be taken to ensure that Crown counsel's decision is explained to the victim.

When considering an alternative measure for a criminal offence, Crown counsel must apply the PPSC Deskbook directive "3.8 Alternative Measures". Crown counsel should also be aware that the rights of victims to receive information provided in sections 6 and 7 of the CVBR may require that the victims be advised of the use of alternative measures.⁸

Crown counsel should also keep in mind that when such measures are being considered for a young person, they must consider relevant provisions under the YCJA.⁹

4.4. Bail hearings

On bail applications, Crown counsel must consider whether bail should be opposed in order to protect the victim. Even where bail is denied, Crown counsel must consider whether conditions of non-communication with the victim should be sought.

When considering the Crown position regarding interim release, Crown counsel must give particular attention to the provisions of the Criminal Code that allow the court to impose conditions aimed at protecting the victim: see sections 515(4-4.2), 515(12-14), 516(2), 522(2.1) of the Code. In particular, Crown counsel should be aware that the judge is required to note on the record that the security of the victim has been considered in making a bail order, and, on request of the victim, to provide a copy of the bail order to the victim.

Crown counsel or the Crown Witness Coordinator must communicate information related to bail proceedings and decisions made by the court to victims in a timely manner. In circumstances where the victim is difficult to contact, the assistance of police should be sought.

4.5. Peace bonds

Crown counsel should, in appropriate circumstances, consider other options for protecting victims. Sections 810 to 810.2 of the Code are designed to assist potential victims by seeking to prevent contact with them and persons who may commit violent acts.

⁸ See Criminal Code, ss 732.1(5)(a) and 742.3(3)(a) respectively.

⁹ See YCJA, ss 4-12.

4.6. Sentencing

The Criminal Code requires that the harm to victims and to society be considered by the Court in formulating an appropriate sentence.¹⁰ Crown Counsel must provide information to the Court on these two elements in their submissions on sentencing. Crown Witness Coordinators should work with victims to assist them in providing this information, as appropriate, as part of their victim impact statement.

In addition, Crown counsel must consider seeking measures aimed at preventing future criminal offences, for example, conditions in probation orders or conditional sentences that prohibit an offender from being in certain places or having contact with people of a certain age or gender. Crown counsel should be aware that the Criminal Code allows victims to request and be provided copies of probation orders and conditional sentence orders.¹¹

Crown counsel should also consider available sentencing approaches or processes available in their respective jurisdictions, including domestic violence treatment options, drug treatment, mental health treatment court processes. These may include other restorative sentencing approaches, such as sentencing circles, which may be available in certain Indigenous communities.

5. PROVIDING INFORMATION TO VICTIMS AND PARTICIPATION IN THE COURT PROCESS

Crown counsel and Crown Witness Coordinators must work together to provide information to victims and to assist in their preparation as witnesses in the court process. Once a Crown Witness Coordinator becomes involved in a case, he or she must make reasonable efforts to contact the victim as soon as possible, explain the role of the Crown Witness Coordinator, provide appropriate information about the case and remain a point of contact for the victim during the process.

In providing the victim with information about the case, Crown counsel and the Crown Witness Coordinator must be careful not to disclose other evidence in the case so as not to taint the victim's testimony. Crown Witness Coordinators should also provide the victim, as early in the process as possible, with information about victims' services available within the territory, either through the police, the community or territorial government services.

Once charges are laid, Crown counsel, in collaboration with the Crown Witness Coordinators or with local police, should:

- make every reasonable effort to ensure the victims are made aware of the release of the accused from custody if this occurs before the completion of proceedings, the terms of release, and any subsequent amendment to the terms of release;

¹⁰ See Criminal Code, ss 718(a), 718(f), 718.2(e).

¹¹ See Criminal Code, ss 732.1(5)(a) and 742(3)(a).

- make sure the victims know what to do if they have concerns about the accused's compliance with the terms of release, and who to call if there is a breach;
- ensure that the victims are informed of any conditions prohibiting contact with the victims while the accused is in custody;
- explain to the victims the roles of Crown counsel, defence counsel, the judge, and the jury and their role as witness;
- assess the victims' reliability as witnesses and ensure that the victims have been given the opportunity to review their statement, if any, before testifying;
- consider the need for and type of testimonial aid that may be helpful in helping victims to testify in the proceedings, and apply for these testimonial aids from the Court;
- ensure, to the extent feasible, that the victims are informed beforehand when proposing to make a significant amendment to the charges, or to terminate a prosecution;
- consider steps to prevent inappropriate use or dissemination of the disclosure materials where they contain information of a sensitive nature pertaining to the victim. In particular, Crown counsel must follow, as required, the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.5 Principles of Disclosure";¹²
- apply, where appropriate, for an adjournment where an application is made by the accused for the production of records pertaining to a victim and the victim requests the opportunity to retain a lawyer;
- provide timely information regarding developments in the proceedings as well as information pertaining to plea and sentence negotiations;
- seek restitution orders where appropriate (consistent with the PPSC Deskbook guideline "Restitution");
- inform the victims about options to participate in the sentencing process by means of testimony, or a victim impact statement pursuant to section 722 of the Code (and inform the victims that this can be read aloud, if they so wish, or presented by other means, for example by using a testimonial aid);
- inform the victims of the right to notice and participation in various post-conviction processes, such as parole hearings, Criminal Code Review Board hearings and parole eligibility hearings; and
- inform the victims of any appeals made either by the Crown in case of an acquittal or by defence against a conviction or against the sentence, and ensure that the victims are informed of any decisions related to bail.

¹² See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.5 Principles of Disclosure".

5.1. Aids to trial testimony

The Criminal Code provides a number of measures that can be invoked to increase the comfort and security of victims obliged to testify in criminal proceedings. It is the responsibility of Crown counsel to consider if any of these measures are available and appropriate in a given case, and to apply to the court accordingly:

- Section 486 - the exclusion of the public from the courtroom;
- Section 486.1 - the presence of a support person;
- Section 486.2 - the use of a screen or closed circuit television;
- Section 486.3 - preventing cross-examination by self-represented accused;
- Section 486.31 – non-disclosure of witness’ identity;
- Sections 486.4 and 486.5 - orders restricting publication of identity of victims;
- Section 486.7 – any order necessary to protect the security of any witness;
- Section 715.1 - the use of pre-recorded video evidence;
- Section 657.1 - the use of affidavit evidence;
- Sections 278.1 to 278.91 - opposing production to the accused of a victim’s personal records;
- Sections 276 to 276.5 - opposing the admissibility of evidence of the victim’s prior sexual conduct; and
- Section 277 – opposing the admissibility of evidence of the victim’s sexual reputation for the purposes of challenging the credibility of the victim.

Crown counsel are to assess the needs of witnesses and victims with regard to the various testimonial aids available, in order to determine which aid or support to apply for, where appropriate. Crown counsel, with the assistance of a Crown Witness Coordinator when necessary, may need to seek additional information from witnesses and victims (for example, from the victim about their ability to testify or from the Court about the availability of testimonial aids) prior to the hearing in order to support an application for a testimonial aid.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.7 IMPAIRED DRIVING CASES: NOTICE TO SEEK GREATER PUNISHMENT

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised June 27, 2025

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. PURPOSE.....	2
2. BACKGROUND	2
3. PROVING NOTICE.....	3
4. WHEN NOTICE MUST BE PROVEN	3
5. WHEN NOTICE MAY NOT BE PROVEN	4
6. CONSIDERATIONS IN RELATION TO INUIT, FIRST NATION, AND MÉTIS PEOPLE.....	5
7. DELAYED SENTENCING	6
8. APPLICATION OF THE YOUTH CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT	6

1. PURPOSE

This Guideline provides direction to prosecutors on when to engage the relevant mandatory minimum penalty for a second and subsequent impaired driving offence.

2. BACKGROUND

The Criminal Code prescribes mandatory minimum sentences of incarceration and driving prohibitions for a second and subsequent impaired driving offence.¹ These mandatory minimum sentences and driving prohibitions apply only if the prosecution proves, prior to any plea, that it notified the accused of its intention to seek a greater punishment because of their previous convictions (Notice). If the prosecution cannot prove that Notice was provided to the accused, the minimums do not apply, and the court may determine that a non-custodial sentence is appropriate.

Accordingly, prosecutors have a central role in determining whether an accused person will be incarcerated for a second or subsequent impaired driving offence. Prosecutors must carefully and thoughtfully consider all relevant circumstances when deciding whether to pursue mandatory minimum penalties. Prosecutors must be particularly mindful of competing considerations in this area, such as the serious public safety concerns posed by impaired driving, the overrepresentation of Inuit, First Nations, and Métis people in custody, and the significant health aspects of substance use disorders.

¹ Criminal Code, section 320.19. Under section 320.26, only certain prior convictions qualify as earlier offences for the purpose of imposing a mandatory minimum sentence for impaired driving.

Public Prosecution Service of Canada prosecutors must recognize the negative impact that personal and institutional biases may have on their decisions. They must become aware of these biases, take active steps to set them aside, and maintain an open mind when considering alternative perspectives to ensure that their decision to seek greater punishment does not perpetuate any form of systemic discrimination or racism.

3. PROVING NOTICE

Prosecutors must verify whether the police have served the accused with a Notice of Intention to Seek Greater Punishment document prior to plea in all cases of impaired driving. Service of this document is required so that prosecutors can, at the appropriate stage in the prosecution, decide whether to prove Notice and engage the relevant mandatory minimum penalty.

Where the police have not served the document, the prosecutor must take steps to ensure that the accused is notified prior to plea that greater punishment will be sought, so that the option of proving Notice is preserved. While Notice may be provided orally in court and on the record prior to plea, the best practice is for prosecutors to notify defence counsel or the accused in writing. This practice allows for the written Notice to be marked as an exhibit at sentencing.

4. WHEN NOTICE MUST BE PROVEN

The decision to prove Notice must be determined by considering the circumstances of the offence, the offender, and the interests of the administration of justice, including the substantial threat that impaired driving offences poses to the safety of the public. Prosecutors must also consider the background and systemic circumstances of the accused when exercising discretion.

If additional information relevant to these considerations is required from the police, prosecutors must request and review the information prior to deciding whether to prove Notice. Prosecutors must also consider whether further information should be sought from defence counsel or a self-represented accused concerning the background and personal circumstances of the accused.

Subject to the exception described below in section 5, Notice must be proven if any of the following scenarios apply:

- the accused has previously been convicted of two or more impaired driving offences;
- any prior impaired driving offences occurred less than five years before the commission of the current offence;
- the accused has previously been incarcerated for an impaired driving offence;

- the concentration of alcohol in the blood of the accused at the time when the offence was committed was equal to or exceeded the level deemed aggravating under the Criminal Code;²
- the accused was subject to a driving prohibition order made under the Criminal Code;
- there have been a large number of impaired driving offences in the region, indicating a need to emphasize general deterrence;
- during or after the commission of the current offence, the offender attempted to flee from the police;
- the current offence involves a fatality, significant accident, or personal injury caused by the accused; or
- the degree of intoxication and the nature of the operation of the conveyance demonstrated a significantly enhanced risk of injury or property damage.

5. WHEN NOTICE MAY NOT BE PROVEN

If a scenario from the list above applies, but a prosecutor has assessed that the mandatory minimum penalty would not be an appropriate sentence, they may seek permission from their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) to not prove Notice. In all matters where the consent of the CFP or their delegate is granted to not prove Notice, prosecutors must place written reasons for the decision on the file.

The CFP or their delegate may provide their consent to not prove Notice if exceptional or compelling circumstances exist. Exceptional circumstances are circumstances that are unusual or atypical, while compelling circumstances are circumstances that militate toward a particular outcome. The circumstances need not be exceptional and compelling for discretion to be exercised to not prove Notice; the presence of one or the other on its own will suffice.

In determining whether there are exceptional or compelling circumstances that may warrant not proving Notice, prosecutors and the CFP or their delegate may consider the following non-exhaustive factors:

- The degree of risk to the safety of the public that the accused poses, including:
 - o the existence of any aggravating factors in respect of the offence;
 - o the attitude of the accused towards the offence, including any acceptance of responsibility or remorse;
 - o any confirmed period of sobriety since the offence;
 - o any treatment programs taken by the accused since the offence that may assist in the accused's rehabilitation, including any culturally appropriate programming;

² Criminal Code, section 320.22(e).

- o the total number of previous convictions for related offences;
 - o the historical nature of the previous convictions and any intervening periods of sobriety;
 - o past sentences and their effect on the accused; and
 - o whether the risk to public safety can be appropriately addressed by a lengthy driving prohibition order rather than incarceration.
- The accused's personal circumstances, including their age, employment, and physical or mental health or their dependents and the consequences of the sentence on them.
 - A victim who will be particularly traumatized and potentially re-victimized by testifying in court.

While all relevant factors must be balanced by the CFP or their delegate in the course of making their decision, if the accused poses an unacceptable risk to the safety of the public, Notice must be proven.

6. CONSIDERATIONS IN RELATION TO INUIT, FIRST NATION, AND MÉTIS PEOPLE

Prosecutors must always consider the ongoing impacts of colonialism, residential schools, over-representation, and systemic discrimination in the criminal justice system when exercising their discretion whether to prove Notice in respect of a First Nations, Métis, or Inuk³ individual. Prosecutors should also consider any potential collateral consequences of proving Notice on the ability of a First Nations, Métis, or Inuk individual to practice cultural or subsistence activities.

In circumstances where the accused is Inuk, First Nations or Métis and proving Notice is expected, prosecutors and CFPs or their delegate must consider whether exceptional or compelling circumstances exist such that Notice should not be proven. This assessment must take account of the overrepresentation of Inuit, First Nations, and Métis people in the criminal justice system, the systemic and background factors affecting them in Canadian society, and the availability of culturally appropriate alternatives to custody, as set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Gladue and R. v. Ipeelee.

Before determining that exceptional or compelling circumstances do not exist and that Notice should be proven, prosecutors and CFPs or their delegate must also consider whether additional information about the First Nation, Métis, or Inuk individual's background is necessary. If additional information is necessary, prosecutors must make reasonable efforts to engage with defence counsel, or the accused if self-represented, to gather such information.

³ “A concern for reconciliation and inclusivity requires that, when referring to Indigenous persons, we use the terms preferred by the community. Thus, we refer to the traditional inhabitants of Canada's northern regions and Arctic coastline by the terms Inuk and Inuit. Inuk is the singular noun, used to refer to one person, regardless of gender. Inuit is the plural noun.” Government of Canada, Inuk, Inuit (Linguistic recommendation from the Translation Bureau), online: Inuk, Inuit \(Linguistic recommendation from the Translation Bureau\) – Writing Tips Plus – Writing Tools – Resources of the Language Portal of Canada – Canada.ca \(noslangues-ourlanguages.gc.ca\).

Prosecutors must ensure that wherever possible and appropriate, the accused's identification as a First Nations, Métis, or Inuk individual and any Gladue factors are conveyed to the sentencing judge.

7. DELAYED SENTENCING

The Criminal Code permits a court, with the consent of the prosecutor and the offender, and after considering the interests of justice, to delay sentencing an offender who has been found guilty of an impaired driving offence. This delay is intended to allow the offender to attend a treatment program approved by the province or territory in which the offender resides. If the offender successfully completes the treatment program, the court is not required to impose a minimum punishment but cannot impose a discharge.

If an offender requests a delay of sentencing to attend an approved treatment program, the prosecutor should generally not object unless the delay is contrary to the public interest. Prosecutors should secure a waiver of the delay from defence counsel on the court record or in writing when consenting to a delay of the offender's sentencing hearing. Prosecutors should also ensure that the court imposes the mandatory interim driving prohibition order before the delay is granted.

8. APPLICATION OF THE YOUTH CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT

As a general rule, this guideline does not apply to the sentencing of young persons pursuant to the Youth Criminal Justice Act (YCJA). The mandatory minimum sentences in the Criminal Code do not apply to youth offenders under the YCJA.⁴

Section 82(4) of the YCJA precludes the use of a guilty finding imposed under the YCJA as a previous "conviction" for the purpose of imposing a mandatory minimum sentence because of a previous conviction. However, where the circumstances in s. 119(9)(a) of the YCJA are satisfied, the guilty finding of a young person under the YCJA for a prior offence can be considered a previous conviction for the purposes of imposing a mandatory minimum penalty on that person, as an adult, under the Criminal Code.

⁴ R. v. H. (R.), 1992 CanLII 7426 (ONCA).

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.8 CORRUPTION OF FOREIGN PUBLIC OFFICIALS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. PURPOSE OF THE GUIDELINE.....	3
3. APPLICATION OF THE GUIDELINE	3
3.1. Coordination	3
3.2. The decision to initiate a prosecution or refuse to prosecute.....	3
3.3. Annual report	4

1. INTRODUCTION

On December 17, 1997, Canada signed the Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions (the Convention), an initiative arising primarily from work done by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). Canada ratified the Convention on December 17, 1998.

To implement the terms of the Convention, Parliament passed the Corruption of Foreign Public Officials Act (CFPOA)¹ which came into force on February 14, 1999. The CFPOA essentially prohibits giving, offering or agreeing to give or offer any benefit, directly or indirectly, to a foreign public official for the purpose of obtaining or retaining an advantage in the course of business. For a detailed description of the CFPOA please refer to the document published by the Department of Justice entitled *The Corruption of Foreign Public Officials Act: A Guide, 1999*².

Significant amendments to the CFPOA were made in June of 2013,³ including:

- an increase in the maximum penalty for an individual convicted of a foreign bribery offence from 5 to 14 years imprisonment in addition to unlimited fines;
- creation of a new offence in relation to books and records kept to further or hide foreign bribery,
- expanded jurisdiction based on nationality⁴,
- removal of the concept of “for profit” from the definition of business; and

¹ SC 1998, c 34.

² Available on the Government of Canada Publications internet site. Note that this document has not been updated to reflect the 2001 amendments and should be read with this in mind.

³ Fighting Foreign Corruption Act, SC 2013, c 26.

⁴The Act deems acts of Canadian citizens, permanent residents, corporations, societies, firms or partnerships on a worldwide basis to be acts within Canada for the purposes of the CFPOA. This provision essentially subjects all Canadian citizens and companies to global regulation by Canadian authorities under the CFPOA.

- the future removal of the facilitation payment⁵ exception under the Act.

Additionally, the RCMP will now have the exclusive authority to lay charges under the CFPOA.

2. PURPOSE OF THE GUIDELINE

The purpose of the guideline is to ensure the effective coordination of prosecutions under the CFPOA and to call attention to unique aspects of the Act and the Convention.

3. APPLICATION OF THE GUIDELINE

3.1. Coordination

Given the inherent international dimension of prosecutions under the CFPOA and the potential impact on Canada's relationship with other states, it is essential to coordinate prosecutions under the Act at a national level. Accordingly, Chief Federal Prosecutors (CFP) shall notify the Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (Deputy DPP) of the Regulatory and Economic Prosecution and Management Branch of all requests for advice in relation to investigations, any prosecutions initiated and all developments in relation to cases involving the CFPOA.

Headquarters counsel are available to provide support to Regional Offices in the form of subject matter expertise in relation to the interpretation of the CFPOA, sentencing considerations, comparable foreign statutes and consultation with other government departments as required.

3.2. The decision to initiate a prosecution or refuse to prosecute

Like any decision regarding whether or not to prosecute, prosecutions under the CFPOA must be instituted or refused on a principled basis and must be made in accordance with the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.3 Decision to Prosecute". In particular, Crown counsel should be mindful of s. 5 of the Convention which states:

5. Investigation and prosecution of the bribery of a foreign public official shall be subject to the applicable rules and principles of each Party. They shall not be influenced by considerations of national economic interest, the potential effect upon relations with another State or the identity of the natural or legal persons involved.

⁵ Facilitation payments are those made to foreign public officials to secure or expedite the performance of acts of a routine nature that are within the scope of the official's duties. The exception will be removed from the Act by way of an Order in Council at a date that is yet to be determined.

Crown counsel should record in writing the reasons for deciding or declining to institute proceedings. Such reasons may be highly relevant in dispelling any suggestion of improper political concerns influencing prosecutorial decision-making.

Where there is disagreement between the police and prosecutors over the merits of a particular prosecution based on the assessment of sufficiency or the evidence or the public interest criteria, Crown counsel should notify the Deputy DPP at the earliest opportunity in order to resolve the matter.

3.3. Annual report

A unique aspect of the CFPOA is the reporting requirement imposed by s. 12 of the Act, which states:

12. Within four months of the end of each fiscal year, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Minister for International Trade and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada shall jointly prepare a report on the implementation of the Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions, and on the enforcement of this Act, and the Minister of Foreign Affairs shall cause a copy of the report to be laid before each House of Parliament on any of the first fifteen days on which that House is sitting after the report is completed.

Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC) counsel must maintain information in prosecution files sufficient to enable the Minister of Justice and Attorney General to make such a report. To that end, on or before January 31st of each year, the CFP in each region, shall forward to the Deputy DPP a report on activities with respect to the provisions of the CFPOA covering the previous year. The report shall detail:

1. the nature and status of any prosecutions undertaken by the PPSC pursuant to the provisions of the CFPOA or the Criminal Code;
2. the nature and status of any other proceedings taken pursuant to the CFPOA or the Criminal Code to which the Attorney General is a party, such as seizure of assets.

The Deputy DPP shall collate the information and provide it to the Senior General Counsel (Criminal Law Policy Section) in the Department of Justice to assist that section in preparing the Minister of Justice and Attorney General's contribution to the report.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.9 PRIVATE PROSECUTIONS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. AUTHORITY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA TO INTERVENE IN PRIVATE PROSECUTIONS.....	3
3. THE PRE-ENQUETE – SECTION 507.1.....	4
4. CONDUCT OF THE PRE-ENQUETE	5
5. THE DECISION WHETHER OR NOT TO INTERVENE IN A PROSECUTION .	6
6. INTERVENTION IN A PRIVATE PROSECUTION IN ORDER TO STOP IT.....	7
7. INTERVENTION IN AND CONDUCT OF A PRIVATE PROSECUTION	7
8. SCOPE OF PRIVATE PROSECUTOR’S AUTHORITY	8
9. PROCEDURAL MATTERS	9

1. INTRODUCTION

A private prosecution is a prosecution started by a private individual who is not acting on behalf of a law enforcement agency or prosecution service.

The right of a citizen to institute a prosecution for a breach of the law has been called "a valuable constitutional safeguard against inertia or partiality on the part of authority".¹ The private citizen, as prosecutor, and the Attorney General, who has exclusive authority to represent the public in court and to supervise criminal prosecutions, are both fundamental parts of our criminal justice system.² As a result, where the two roles conflict, the role of the Attorney General is paramount as the Attorney General may intervene and take over a private prosecution where in his or her opinion the interests of justice so require.

¹ Gouriet v Union of Post Office Workers, [1978] AC 435 at 477 (HL) [Gouriet]. For commentary on the inherent value of private prosecutions, see also Law Reform Commission of Canada, Private Prosecutions (Working Paper 52) (Ottawa: Law Reform Commission of Canada, 1986) at 28. Except where the Attorney General's consent is required, s. 504 of the Code permits anyone to lay an information. The definitions of "prosecutor" in ss. 2 and 785 make it clear that someone other than the Attorney General may institute proceedings. The 2002 addition to the Code of s. 507.1 providing for a "pre-enquete" is the most explicit recognition of the ability of persons not involved in law enforcement to commence criminal proceedings.

² Gouriet, supra note 1 at 481; Re Dowson and The Queen (1981), 62 CCC (2d) 286 (Ont CA), approved unanimously by the Supreme Court of Canada: [1983] 2 SCR 144, (1983), 7 CCC (3d) 527 at 535-6.

This guideline explains when the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) should intervene either to stay a private prosecution or to take over conduct of such a prosecution.

2. AUTHORITY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA TO INTERVENE IN PRIVATE PROSECUTIONS

The DPP exercises the authority of the Attorney General of Canada respecting private prosecutions, including the authority to intervene and assume the conduct of – or direct the stay of – such prosecutions by virtue of s. 3\(3\)\(f\) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act.³

The DPP has full authority to intervene, throughout the country, in private prosecutions of Controlled Drugs and Substances Act drug matters.⁴

Section 2 of the Criminal Code (Code) provides that the Attorney General of Canada and the Attorneys General of the provinces share responsibility for conducting prosecutions.⁵ More particularly, provincial Attorneys General, and their lawful deputies have jurisdiction to prosecute Criminal Code offences in the provinces.⁶ The Attorney General of Canada is the Attorney General in respect of proceedings taken in the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut. The Attorney General of Canada will also have authority to prosecute federally-enacted, non-Criminal Code offences in the provinces where the proceedings were commenced at the instance of the federal government.

Accordingly, the DPP has full authority to intervene in private prosecutions of Criminal Code offences brought in the Northwest Territories, the Yukon Territory, and Nunavut.

³ Director of Public Prosecutions Act, SC 2006, c 9.

⁴ SC 1996, c 19. See definition of Attorney General in s 2 of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act.

⁵ Section 2 of the Criminal Code assigns prosecutorial roles as follows:

“Attorney General”

with respect to proceedings to which this Act applies, means the Attorney General or Solicitor General of the province in which those proceedings are taken and includes his lawful deputy, and with respect to the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, or proceedings commenced at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of that Government in respect of a contravention of a conspiracy or attempt to contravene or counselling the contravention of any Act of Parliament other than this Act or any regulation made under any such Act, means the Attorney General of Canada and includes his lawful deputy.

⁶ See also Constitution Act, 1867, s 92\(14\) which assigns to provinces the following power: "The Administration of Justice in the Province, including the Constitution, Maintenance, and Organization of Provincial Courts, both of Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction, and including Procedure in Civil Matters in those Courts."

Equally, the DPP has concurrent jurisdiction with provincial prosecuting authorities to prosecute the offences set out in ss. 2\(b.1\) to \(g\) of the Code:⁷

- extraterritorial offences in relation to cultural property (s. 2(b.1) and s. 7(2.01) of the Code;
- certain terrorism and national security offences as enumerated in s. 2(c) of the Code;
- frauds under ss. 380, 382, 382.1 and 400 of the Code.

As already noted, the s. 2 definition limits the Attorney General of Canada's authority to prosecute offences under non-Criminal Code federal statutes to proceedings that are commenced at the instance of the federal government. This does not cover private prosecutions in the provinces because such proceedings are not "commenced at the instance of the Government of Canada". Nonetheless, the DPP has full authority to intervene in private prosecutions commenced under federal statutes other than the Criminal Code – either for the purpose of conducting or staying the proceedings – where the relevant provincial Attorney General has not intervened.⁸

3. THE PRE-ENQUETE – SECTION 507.1

Section 507.1 governs pre-inquiry hearings in the case of private prosecutions.⁹ It requires that a justice receiving an information sworn by a private informant refer that information to a provincial court judge or, in Quebec, to a judge of the Court of Quebec or to a designated justice to consider whether to compel the appearance of the accused. The justice or judge conducts a pre-enquete to determine whether process should issue to compel the attendance of the person named in the information to answer to the charge, thus to determine whether a criminal prosecution will be commenced. These provisions were designed to provide a judicial screening process to avoid burdening the justice system with vexatious litigation, misuse of the criminal process in order to advance a civil dispute, and to protect innocent persons from the stigma of having to appear in court on such matters.¹⁰

⁷ Sections 2\(b.1\) to \(g\) of the Code provide concurrent jurisdiction for the Attorney General of Canada and the Attorneys or Solicitors General of the provinces to prosecute the offences set out in those sections.

⁸ Criminal Code, s 579.1 was added in 1994 to give the Attorney General of Canada authority to intervene in private prosecutions commenced under federal statutes other than Criminal Code, where the provincial Attorney General has not intervened.

⁹ By virtue of Criminal Code, s 507.1 \(9\), this process does not apply to s 810 and s 810.1 peace bonds.

¹⁰ R v Friesen \(2008\), 229 CCC \(3d\) 97 \(Ont SC\) at paras 9-11 [Friesen], cited in Ambrosi v British Columbia \(Attorney General\), 2012 BCSC 1261 at paras 54-57 [Ambrosi].

This “pre-enquete” or process hearing¹¹ places the onus on the private informant to establish that a summons or warrant should issue to compel an accused to attend before the court to answer a criminal charge. The information must establish a prima facie case, requiring some evidence on all of the essential elements of the offence.¹²

The judge or designated justice may issue process compelling the appearance of the accused only after considering the allegations and evidence of the informant and being satisfied that the relevant Attorney General has received a copy of the information, has been given reasonable notice of the hearing and has had an opportunity to cross-examine, call witnesses and present evidence.

A criminal proceeding commences with the swearing of an information. A criminal prosecution commences with the issuance of process to compel the appearance of the accused. Crown counsel may intervene to take over the prosecution or withdraw a charge only after the court makes an order issuing process.¹³ Crown counsel may, however, enter a stay at any time after an information is sworn.

Sections 507\(2\) to \(8\) regarding compelling appearance in public prosecutions applies to the hearing under s. 507.1. Unless expressly prohibited in a particular statute, the Criminal Code provisions permitting private prosecutions apply to other federal statutes.¹⁴ Thus, s. 507.1 applies to proceedings under the Criminal Code and all other federal acts.

If the pre-enquete justice does not issue process to compel the appearance of the accused, and the private prosecutor has not commenced proceedings to compel process within six months, the Information is deemed never to have been laid.¹⁵

4. CONDUCT OF THE PRE-ENQUETE

A s. 507.1 hearing is to be held ex parte and Crown counsel should request that it be held in camera.¹⁶ Crown counsel may appear at the pre-enquete without being deemed to ¹¹ The s 507.1 hearing may be referred to as a pre-enquete, a pre-inquiry, a referral hearing, or as a process hearing because it relates to the issuing of process.

¹² Ambrosi, supra note 10 at 56.

¹³ R v McHale 2010 ONCA 361 at paras 59-62 and 71-77.

¹⁴ Lynk v Ratchford et al \(1995\), 142 NSR \(2d\) 399 \(CA\), by virtue of s 34\(2\) of the Interpretation Act, RSC 1993 c I-21 provides:

All the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to indictable offences apply to indictable offences created by an enactment, and all the provisions of that Code relating to summary conviction offences apply to all other offences created by an enactment, except to the extent that the enactment otherwise provides.

¹⁵ Criminal Code, s 507.1\(5\).

¹⁶ R v Whitmore, (1987), 41 CCC (3d) 555 (Ont H CJ) (aff’d 51 CCC (3d) 294 (Ont CA); McHale, supra note 13 at para 48.

intervene in the proceeding.¹⁷ At the process hearing, Crown counsel, as an officer of the Court, are permitted (but not required) to assist the court in determining whether or not a case for issuing process is made out (i.e. whether there is a prima facie case) by cross-examining the informant or the informant's witnesses, calling witnesses, presenting any relevant evidence or making submissions.

Upon receiving notice of the pre-enquete, Crown counsel should contact the informant, ask for copies of the evidence in support of the charge(s) and attend the pre-enquete. At the same time, Crown counsel should contact the relevant investigative agency to ascertain whether or not they have been investigating the matter giving rise to the private prosecution. If it appears that Crown counsel's active participation at the pre-enquete, for example by cross-examining the informant's witnesses or by presenting evidence, will assist the presiding judicial officer in determining whether a prima facie case has been made out, Crown counsel should assume that role.

Even when a private investigation precedes a private prosecution, it may be difficult to assess whether there is sufficient evidence to justify continuing the proceedings. Thus, in most instances where no investigative agency investigation preceded the process hearing, Crown counsel may need to conduct follow-up steps after their initial charge assessment. If additional time is needed, Crown counsel may request an adjournment, and ask the appropriate investigative agency to review the evidence and to investigate further as needed. Crown counsel should request the views of the relevant investigative agency on the sufficiency of the evidence. It may be necessary to stay proceedings while the investigation is conducted. Once the investigation is complete, the assigned Crown counsel should assess whether to commence proceedings in accordance with the two-pronged test set out in the PPSC Deskbook guideline "2.3 Decision to Prosecute".

Where the pre-enquete has resulted in an issuance of process, Crown counsel should obtain a transcript of the process hearing.

5. THE DECISION WHETHER OR NOT TO INTERVENE IN A PROSECUTION

If process issues,¹⁸ Crown counsel assigned to review the case must assess (1) whether to assume conduct of the prosecution and terminate the proceedings by withdrawal or a stay; (2) whether to assume conduct of the prosecution and continue it or (3) whether to allow the private prosecution to run its course. In all cases, Crown counsel must consult with their Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) who, in cases of particular public interest or complexity, should confer with the Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions (Deputy DPP) before making a decision.

¹⁷ Friesen, supra note 10 at para 11.

¹⁸ R v McHale 2010 ONCA 361: A criminal proceeding commences with the swearing of an information. A criminal prosecution commences with the issuance of process to compel the appearance of the accused. The Attorney General may withdraw a charge only after process is issued but may issue a stay at any time after an information is sworn.

6. INTERVENTION IN A PRIVATE PROSECUTION IN ORDER TO STOP IT

Crown counsel shall apply the evidentiary standard and the public interest test that is applicable to all prosecutions as set out in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”, namely, whether there is a reasonable likelihood of conviction and, if so, whether the prosecution best serves the public interest. A private prosecution should be taken over and stayed if, upon review of the evidence, either the evidential sufficiency test or the public interest test, as set out in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute” is not met.

Where the evidentiary standard set out in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute” is met, it nonetheless may be necessary to take over and stop the prosecution on behalf of the public where there is a particular “public interest” need to do so. Apart from the factors set out in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”, examples of factors likely to damage the interests of justice that specifically may arise in the private prosecution context include cases where:

- the prosecution interferes with the investigation of another criminal offence;
- the prosecution interferes with the prosecution of another criminal charge;
- Crown counsel is satisfied that the private prosecution is vexatious or being undertaken on malicious grounds; and
- the prosecuting authorities have given the defendant a promise of immunity from prosecution.¹⁹ This does not include cases where the prosecuting authorities have merely informed the defendant that they will not be bringing or continuing proceedings.

Where Crown counsel decides that taking over a private prosecution in order to stop it is the appropriate course of action, unless there are exceptional circumstances, Crown counsel should write to the private prosecutor explaining the reasons for the decision.

7. INTERVENTION IN AND CONDUCT OF A PRIVATE PROSECUTION

If it is determined that the charge is well founded, Crown counsel must then decide whether to assume conduct of the prosecution. The issue must be decided on a case-by-case basis. Normally, there is nothing wrong in allowing a private prosecution to run its course through to a verdict. There is no requirement for the DPP to take charge of the prosecution.

The following considerations will help to inform Crown counsel’s decision whether or not to take charge of the prosecution:

¹⁹ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.3 Immunity Agreements”.

1. the need to strike an appropriate balance between the right of the private citizen to initiate and conduct a prosecution as a safeguard in the justice system, and the responsibility of the Attorney General of Canada for the proper administration of justice;
2. the relative seriousness of the offence – generally, the more serious, the more likely it is that the DPP should intervene;
3. there are detailed or complex disclosure issues to resolve;
4. the prosecution requires the disclosure of highly sensitive material or the conduct of the prosecution involves applications for special measures or for witness anonymity;
5. there is a reasonable basis to believe that the private prosecutor lacks the capacity or the funding to effectively carry the case forward to its completion;
6. there is a reasonable basis to believe that the decision to prosecute was made for improper personal or oblique motives, or that it otherwise may constitute an abuse of the court's process such that, even if the prosecution were to proceed, it would not be appropriate to permit it to remain in the hands of a private prosecutor;
7. given the nature of the alleged offence or the issues to be determined at trial, it is in the interests of the proper administration of justice for the prosecution to remain in private hands.

If the reviewing Crown counsel recommends allowing the matter to proceed privately, he or she should advise the CFP in writing of the circumstances and, in cases of particular public interest or complexity, if the CFP agrees with the recommendation, the CFP must seek approval of the appropriate Deputy DPP. Similarly, Crown counsel must seek written approval of their CFP prior to intervening in a private prosecution to stop it or stay it.

Where new information or a change in circumstances comes to light that could reasonably impact the DPP's decision not to intervene in a private prosecution such that the DPP may want to take charge of and stop or conduct the prosecution, Crown counsel should be prepared to revisit the decision regarding intervention.

8. SCOPE OF PRIVATE PROSECUTOR'S AUTHORITY

In summary conviction proceedings, the private prosecutor controls the proceedings from start to finish unless the Attorney General intervenes. In indictable matters, a private prosecutor may conduct the preliminary inquiry and the trial. However, the private prosecutor requires a judge's written consent under s. 574\(3\) of the Code to prefer an indictment.

9. PROCEDURAL MATTERS

When drafting a written pleading in a private prosecution matter, Crown counsel should refer to the informant as “[Name of Informant] as Private Prosecutor”.

Challenges to the exercise of Crown discretion to take charge of or stay a private prosecution may be brought as a judicial review of DPP decision-making in the Federal Court. Such matters should be referred to the Department of Justice.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.10 PARENTAL CHILD ABDUCTION

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED
UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. INTRODUCTION	2
2. STATEMENT OF POLICY	3
3. WHERE CHARGES WARRANTED	4
3.1. Abduction in contravention of a custody order (s. 282 of the Criminal Code) ..	4
3.2. Abduction in absence of a Canadian custody order (s. 283 of the Criminal Code).....	5
4. THE PUBLIC INTEREST.....	7
4.1. Factors or circumstances favouring prosecution.....	7
4.2. Factors or circumstances weighing against prosecution	7
5. DEFENCES	8

1. INTRODUCTION

Parental child abduction occurs when one parent, without either legal authority or the permission of the other parent, takes a child from the parent who has lawful custody. There may be both international and domestic aspects to child abduction. Although children may not be in physical danger, their lives are nevertheless greatly disrupted. They are deprived by the abducting parent of security, stability and continuity in their lives. The purposes of ss. 282 and 283\(1\) of the Criminal Code are to prevent such outcomes and to encourage parents to settle child custody and access issues in court and to abide by any court orders that are made.¹

Section 282 of the Criminal Code prohibits parental child abductions in situations where there is a custody order made by a Canadian court. Section 283 applies to situations where parents continue to have joint custody of their child by operation of law, where there is a written agreement, where there is a foreign custody order, or where the abducting parent did not believe or know there was a valid custody order.

The Ontario Court of Appeal in R v McDougall \(1990\) 62 CCC \(3d\) 174 at 189 cautioned that:

The offence created by s. 282 is a grave one and is intended to strike at conduct in the nature of child abduction. Care must be taken before a prosecution is launched under s. 282 to ensure that the events complained of truly amount to criminal conduct. This care is evidenced by the requirement in s. 283 (a companion section to s. 282) that the Attorney General or counsel instructed by him consent to proceedings under that section. It is very common in custody and access disputes that each parent feels terribly wronged and makes the most serious allegation against the other Criminal prosecutions cannot become a weapon in the arsenal of parties to acrimonious family disputes.

¹ Only the PPSC's Northern offices handle parental child abduction prosecutions under ss 282 and 283 of the Criminal Code.

In October of 1998, the Federal/Provincial/Territorial Ministers responsible for Justice adopted model charging guidelines for use by police and Crown counsel to assist in the uniform application of the Criminal Code provisions and in particular in deciding when and how charges may be laid. The guidelines remain advisory only, since the decision on charging rests with investigative agencies and ultimately with Crown counsel. This directive reflects the principles set out in the model guidelines.

2. STATEMENT OF POLICY

The Criminal Code provisions send a clear message that unilateral actions by one parent that affect lawful care and control rights of the other parent respecting the child will not be tolerated. Such actions have a detrimental effect on the well-being of the children involved. Parents are to be discouraged from using “self-help” remedies to deal with custody disputes. Parents are to be encouraged to comply with existing orders or agreements and to resolve disputes with the other parent through civil processes.

Not all cases of parental child abduction will warrant criminal charges. As with any decision to prosecute, in addition to assessing the reasonable prospect of conviction, Crown counsel must consider whether a prosecution best serves the public interest.² Civil enforcement is another route that can be used as an alternative to the criminal response when criminal charges are not appropriate.

The federal Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance Act establishes procedures to ascertain the addresses of parents and children residing in Canada from federal information banks to facilitate the enforcement of custody orders.

The Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction (the Hague Convention), which has been adopted by all Canadian jurisdictions, is the main international treaty that can assist parents whose children have been abducted to another country.

Article 3 of the Hague Convention states in part:

The removal or the retention of a child is to be considered wrongful where:

1. it is in breach of rights of custody attributed to a person, an institution or any other body, either jointly or alone, under the law of the State in which the child was habitually resident immediately before the removal or retention;

² See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”.

and

2. at the time of removal or retention, those rights were actually exercised, either jointly or alone, or would have been so exercised but for the removal or retention.

Article 5 of the Hague Convention states in part:

For the purposes of this Convention

- a. “rights of custody” shall include rights relating to the care of the child and, in particular, the right to determine the child's place of residence;

In addition, each jurisdiction should ensure the police, Crown counsel and others dealing with s. 282 and s. 283 of the Criminal Code are provided with information on the role of, and how to contact, the Central Authority for the Hague Convention in their jurisdiction.³ There may be civil proceedings for the return of the child underway or available under the Hague Convention. Crown counsel should consult with the Central Authority in their province/territory as international cooperation may be facilitated by understanding the relationship between civil and criminal actions.

3. WHERE CHARGES WARRANTED

Given the significance of charging a parent with abducting his or her child, Crown counsel must consult with their Chief Federal Prosecutor before proceeding. Additionally, consent of the Attorney General is a statutory prerequisite to commencing a prosecution under s. 283\(1\). This consent power may be exercised by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) and a Deputy DPP⁴ as lawful deputies of the Attorney General.

The offence under s. 282 and s. 283 apply only where children under the age of 14 are involved.

3.1. Abduction in contravention of a custody order (s. 282 of the Criminal Code)

Charges under s. 282\(1\) of the Criminal Code may be warranted where:

1. A child under the age of 14 is involved; and
2. There is a court order establishing “custody rights” granted in Canada which is not being complied with.

³ The current contact information for the federal government Central Authority, as well as the provincial and territorial Central Authorities, can be found on the Hague Conference on Private International Law website.

⁴ See Annex B of the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.5 Delegated Decision-Making” which specifies that these decisions regarding consent can be made by the DPP or a Deputy DPP.

To establish an offence under s. 282, the evidence must demonstrate that:

- a) the alleged abductor
 - i. is a parent, guardian (as defined in s. 280\(2\)) or other person having the lawful right to care for or charge of a child;
 - ii. takes, entices away, conceals, detains, receives or harbours the child;
 - iii. is in contravention of the custody provisions of a Canadian custody order; and
 - iv. intended to deprive the parent, guardian or person having lawful care or charge of the child of possession of the child contrary to a court order.
- b) The parent, guardian or other person whom the alleged abductor intended to deprive of possession of the child did not consent to the taking, of the child by the alleged abductor (see s. 284); and
- c) There is no reason to believe that the alleged abductor did not know of the existence or terms of the custody order.

In considering whether charges are warranted, Crown counsel must keep the following in mind:

- 1) Persons can have different types of “custody rights” under custody orders. For example, an order may grant a person sole custody, joint custody, periods of care and control (with custody remaining joint between the parents by virtue of provincial legislation) or guardianship. These are all types of “custody rights.”
- 2) There may be no reasonable prospect of conviction: (a) where the order is not clear on its face as to the terms of custody allegedly breached and the available evidence does not clarify the nature of the breach; or (b) where there are competing interim or final orders issued by different courts dealing with the custody of a child, which are both valid on their face.
- 3) It is not necessary to register an order of custody granted in one province before criminal charges can be laid in another. The investigating agency must be advised to ascertain whether the custody order relied upon is the most current order and is still in effect. The agency must obtain a copy of the order. This can be done by asking the complainant, calling the registrar/court staff where the order was issued, or otherwise.

3.2. Abduction in absence of a Canadian custody order (s. 283 of the Criminal Code)

No proceedings may be commenced under s. 283\(1\) of the Criminal Code without the consent of the Attorney General or counsel instructed by him or her for that purpose is obtained. Under the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, the DPP and Deputy DPP’s are lawful deputies and may consent on behalf of the Attorney General.⁵ The fact that consent has been given may be added to Informations under s. 283\(1\), as follows: “The Consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions and Deputy Attorney General of Canada (or Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions) has been obtained to lay this charge.”

Charges under s. 283\(1\) may be warranted where:

1. A child under 14 is involved; and
2. One of the following scenarios exists:
 - a) A Canadian custody order exists but the alleged abductor was unaware or did not believe that there was a valid order (see s. 282\(2\));
 - b) No Canadian custody order exists, but parental rights of custody under statute or common law exist (e.g. provincial family law legislation may indicate that parents have joint custody of their children unless the court orders otherwise);
 - c) No Canadian custody order exists, but custody rights under a separation agreement or a foreign order have been violated. Where the rights of the access parent are not so extensive, resort should be made to civil remedies;
 - d) There has been a permanent or indefinite denial of a right or access pursuant to an agreement that provides the access parent with a significant degree of care and control over a child with or without a provision permitting the child’s removal from the jurisdiction. Where the rights of the access parent are not so extensive, resort should be made to civil remedies; or
 - e) There has been a permanent or indefinite denial of right of access pursuant to a court order, which provides the access parent with a significant degree of care and control over a child. Where the rights of the access parent are not so extensive, resort should be made to civil remedies, which exist in the jurisdiction.

To establish an offence under s. 283, the evidence must demonstrate that:

1. The alleged abductor
 - a. is a parent, guardian (as defined in s. 280\(2\)) or other person having the lawful right to care for or charge of a child;
 - b. takes, entices away, conceals, detains, receives or harbours the child;
 - c. intended to deprive the parent, guardian or person having lawful care or charge of the child of possession of the child; and
 - d. the parent, guardian or other person whom the alleged abductor intended to deprive of possession of the child did not consent to the taking of the child by the alleged abductor (see s. 284 below).

⁵ Ibid.

4. THE PUBLIC INTEREST

On charge assessment for alleged offences under s. 282\(1\) or s. 283\(1\), the factors to be considered in deciding whether a prosecution best serves the public interest are described in the PPSC Deskbook guideline “2.3 Decision to Prosecute”, but also include the following factors that are specific to this type of a prosecution.

4.1. Factors or circumstances favouring prosecution

1. A child has been taken from a situation where there has been some degree of permanency, contrary to a settled (written or otherwise) or ongoing arrangement.
2. Custody proceedings have been initiated or are anticipated, and the alleged abductor, in taking the child, is frustrating the proceedings. This may include, but is not restricted to, situations in which the court has stated that, pending a determination, the child is not to be removed from the jurisdiction.
3. There are reasonable grounds to believe that one parent has a foreign custody order and the alleged abductor is in breach of that order.
4. The child has been taken by the alleged abductor contrary to existing custody rights and a criminal charge is necessary to ensure protection of the child.
5. The alleged abductor takes the child surreptitiously and disappears with the child.
6. The alleged abductor takes the child where there is a provision in an order or agreement restricting the ability of a parent to remove the child from the jurisdiction.
7. The alleged abductor takes the child and in so doing has permanently or indefinitely frustrated the other parent’s rights, where such rights by their nature involve a significant degree of care and control over the child.
8. The offending party has previously breached ss. 282\(1\) or 283\(1\).
9. There are reasonable grounds to believe that the offending party is incapable of looking after the child (e.g. due to substance abuse or diminished capacity).

4.2. Factors or circumstances weighing against prosecution

1. A less onerous civil remedy is available and would be more appropriate in the circumstances.
2. The offending parent is merely late in returning a child from an access visit.
3. Although technically possible, a charge would not likely be laid in circumstances in which one party moves out of the home with the child while in the course of separating from the other party, if it appears that the parties are attempting to resolve custody either through the courts or by agreement.

5. DEFENCES

1. It is a defence if the alleged abductor establishes that the taking of the child was done with the consent of the parent, guardian or other person having the lawful possession, care or charge of the child (s. 284). However, the alleged abductor's consent is not sufficient for this defence.
2. It is a defence:
 - a. if the child was taken to protect the child from danger of imminent harm; or
 - b. if the alleged abductor was fleeing from imminent harm and taking the child as well. For example, protecting a child from child abuse would be a defence as would a parent escaping from a situation of spousal assault and removing the child at the same time (s. 285).
3. It is not a defence to any charge under ss. 282 and 283 that the young person consented to or suggested any conduct of the accused (s. 286).

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.11 THE APPROACH TO THE PROSECUTION OF CERTAIN OFFENCES COMMITTED PRIOR TO THE COMING INTO FORCE OF THE CANNABIS ACT

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

August 12, 2019

With the passage of Bill C-93, the Criminal Records Act streamlined the process for obtaining a pardon for CDSA simple possession charges, including the requirement that a sentence be expired according to the law before a pardon application can be made. The bill, as amended, received Royal Assent on June 21, 2019 and came into force by order of the Governor in Council on August 1, 2019. As of August 12, 2019, Chapter 5.11 of the Deskbook has been revoked and replaced with a new policy. A copy of the policy is available upon request.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.12 Prosecutions involving Non-Disclosure of HIV Status

DIRECTIVE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ISSUED UNDER SECTION 10(2) OF THE
*DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

December 8, 2018

Directive

Whereas HIV is first and foremost a public health issue, and public health authorities' efforts to detect and treat HIV have resulted in significantly improved health outcomes for those living with HIV in Canada, as well as prevention of its onward transmission;

Whereas the Supreme Court of Canada has stated that the criminal law has a role to play in cases involving sexual activity and non-disclosure of HIV where public health interventions have failed and the sexual activity at issue poses a risk of serious harm;

Whereas persons from marginalized backgrounds such as, for example, Indigenous, gay and Black persons, are more likely than others to be living with HIV in Canada such that criminal laws that apply to HIV non-disclosure are likely to disproportionately impact these groups;

Whereas the criminal law applies to persons living with HIV if they are aware of their HIV positive status and that they are infectious, and they fail to disclose, or misrepresent, their HIV status prior to sexual activity that poses a realistic possibility of transmission of HIV;

Whereas the Supreme Court of Canada has clarified that the issue of whether sexual activity poses a realistic possibility of transmission is to be determined on the basis of the most recent medical science on HIV transmission;

Whereas the most recent medical science shows that the risk of HIV transmission through sexual activity is significantly reduced where: the person living with HIV is on treatment; condoms are used; only oral sex is engaged in; the sexual activity is limited to an isolated act; or, the person exposed to HIV, for example as a result of a broken condom, receives post-exposure prophylaxis;

Whereas it is not in the public interest to pursue HIV non-disclosure prosecutions for conduct that medical science shows does not pose a risk of serious harm to others;

Whereas the research, medical science and analysis presented in Justice Canada's 2017 Report on the Criminal Justice System's Response to HIV Non-Disclosure, as well as any future developments in the relevant medical science, should be considered before pursuing a criminal prosecution in HIV non-disclosure cases;

Whereas I have consulted with the Director of Public Prosecutions under subsection 10(2) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act;

1. I direct the Director of Public Prosecutions as follows:
 - (a) The Director shall not prosecute HIV non-disclosure cases where the person living with HIV has maintained a suppressed viral load, i.e., under 200 copies per ml of blood, because there is no realistic possibility of transmission.
 - (b) The Director shall generally not prosecute HIV non-disclosure cases where the person has not maintained a suppressed viral load but used condoms or engaged only in oral sex or was taking treatment as prescribed, unless other risk factors are present, because there is likely no realistic possibility of transmission.

- (c) The Director shall prosecute HIV non-disclosure cases using non-sexual offences, instead of sexual offences, where non-sexual offences more appropriately reflect the wrongdoing committed, such as cases involving lower levels of blameworthiness.
- (d) The Director shall consider whether public health authorities have provided services to a person living with HIV who has not disclosed their HIV status prior to sexual activity when determining whether it is in the public interest to pursue a prosecution against that person.

The Honourable Jody Wilson-Raybould
Attorney General of Canada

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

5.13 PROSECUTION OF POSSESSION OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES CONTRARY TO S. 4(1) OF THE CONTROLLED DRUGS AND SUBSTANCES ACT

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(C) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

August 17, 2020

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. PURPOSE	2
2. CONTEXT	2
3. APPLICABLE PRINCIPLES	3
4. CONCLUSION.....	4

1. PURPOSE

The following provides guidelines to prosecutors in determining the appropriate approach to the prosecution of the possession of a controlled substance contrary to s. 4(1) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (the “CDSA”).

2. CONTEXT

The purpose of the guideline is to articulate a principled prosecutorial litigation approach to the well-documented realities about the health impact of substance use while acknowledging that certain drug use may present particular public safety concerns, particularly when associated with other criminal conduct. The prosecution directives contained in the PPSC Deskbook already take into account health and public safety concerns in the assessment of the public interest in initiation, continuation and disposition of all charges, including simple possession under section 4(1) of the CDSA.

The approach set out in this guideline directs prosecutors to focus upon the most serious cases raising public safety concerns for prosecution and to otherwise pursue suitable alternative measures and diversion from the criminal justice system for simple possession cases.

The approach reflects the multiple tools Parliament has created, and prosecutorial policies incorporated over time. These include Drug Treatment Courts, alternative measures as well as judicial referral hearings.

It also reflects three realities: (i) substance use has a significant health component; (ii) in addition to the personal health component, substance use may be associated with conduct that poses separate serious public safety concerns requiring a criminal enforcement component; and, (iii) simple possession may result in a criminal record as well as a fine or a short period of incarceration. Criminal sanctions, as a primary response, have a limited effectiveness as (i) specific or general deterrents and (ii) as a means of addressing the public safety concerns when considering the harmful effects of criminal records and short periods of incarceration.

When public safety concerns arise from the substance use, it is often associated with other criminality, such as weapons possession and the threat of or commission of violent crime. Consideration must be given as to whether the public safety concerns associated with the substance use are more readily addressed through the prosecution of the other criminal activity.

3. APPLICABLE PRINCIPLES

PPSC prosecutors will be guided by the following principles:

1. Resort to a criminal prosecution of the possession of a controlled substance contrary to s. 4(1) CDSA should generally be reserved for the most serious manifestations of the offence (described in paragraph 3 below).
2. In all instances, alternatives to prosecution should be considered unless they are inadequate to address the concerns related to the conduct, including in the following circumstances:
 - a) The possession relates to a substance use disorder. In particular, alternatives to prosecution should be pursued where the offender is enrolled in a drug treatment court program or a course of treatment provided under the supervision of a health professional, including those involving Indigenous culture-based programming, peer counselling, and abstinence-based recovery centres;
 - b) The offender's conduct arises from a violation of a bail condition and can be addressed adequately through a judicial referral hearing;
 - c) The offender's conduct can be adequately addressed through an approved alternative measure or a measure that is consistent with the principles contained in Chapter 3.8 of the PPSC Deskbook governing alternative measures;
 - d) The offender is an Indigenous person and their conduct can be addressed through an Indigenous restorative justice response; or
 - e) The offender's conduct can be addressed through a restorative justice response.
3. The following areas of concern will generally be considered to be the most serious manifestations of the harms justifying a criminal prosecution response:
 - a) Conduct that poses a risk to the safety or well-being of children or young persons, including simple possession:
 - i. committed in the vicinity of places frequented by children or young persons;
 - ii. committed by a person who is in a position of trust or statutory authority in respect of children or young persons;
 - b) Conduct that puts at risk the health or safety of others, including simple possession associated with impairment from substance use while preparing to drive, being responsible for supervision of a person driving, or driving a motor vehicle, operating machinery, possession of a weapon, or performing an activity posing a risk to public health or safety;
 - c) Conduct that poses a heightened risk to a community's efforts to address consumption of controlled substances in accordance with its own community approaches. This concern is often present in relation to isolated or remote communities;

- d) Conduct where there is a factually grounded basis to associate it with another offence contrary to the CDSA, including cultivation, production, harvesting, trafficking or possession for the purpose of trafficking, obtaining a prescription substance for the purpose of trafficking or the use of others, or importation of a controlled substance (for commercial gain) or another Criminal Code offence;
- e) Conduct in breach of the rules of a regulated setting such as a custodial facility, jail or penitentiary;
- f) Conduct committed by a peace officer or public officer, where it is relevant to the discharge of their duties.

4. CONCLUSION

Some regional flexibility will be permitted to reflect the different severities of the underlying situation being addressed, availability of health-based responses and the state of the consultative process with partners. Chief Federal Prosecutors (CFPs), Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutors (DCFPs) and General Counsel, Legal Operations (GCLOs) should undertake discussions with the police, provincial prosecution services and health care providers in order to assist with the establishment of the specific regional practices.¹ Chief Federal Prosecutors (CFPs) must consult with Deputy Directors in respect of any flexibility required to implement this guideline following those consultations.

¹The agreements and arrangements with provincial prosecution services entered into pursuant to subsection 3(7) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act (referred to as “major-minor agreements”) should be addressed to ensure that all prosecutions of s. 4(1) CDSA offences that are delegated are prosecuted in accordance with this guideline.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

6.1 DRUG TREATMENT COURTS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

Revised January 2, 2024

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. OVERVIEW	2
2. DRUG TREATMENT COURT (DTC) PROGRAMS	3
2.1 Nature of DTC Programs	3
2.2 Approaches to Treatment.....	3
2.3 Core Principles	4
2.4 Approval of a DTC program	5
3. ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA FOR DTC PROGRAMS.....	5
3.1 General Principles.....	5
3.2 Specific Considerations	5
3.3 CDSA Offences.....	6
3.4 Readmission to a DTC Program.....	6
4. AVAILABLE DISPOSITIONS	6
4.1 Guilty Plea	6
4.2 Alternative Measures.....	7
4.3 Post-Trial Dispositions	7
5. SUCCESSFUL COMPLETION OF A DTC PROGRAM.....	7
APPENDIX A - ATTORNEY GENERAL'S APPROVAL	9

1. OVERVIEW

Drug Treatment Court (DTC) is a judicially supervised treatment program that enables persons suffering from a substance use disorder to meaningfully address their substance use. The treatment program is a non-adversarial environment supported by a multidisciplinary team that includes judges, prosecutors, defence counsel, law enforcement, social service agencies, and health service professionals.

The objective of a DTC program is to reduce the likelihood that its participants will commit a criminal offence that is related to their substance use disorders, thereby breaking the cycle of recidivism.

Crown counsel exercise an important gatekeeping role when determining if an individual is eligible to participate in a DTC program. In addition to eligibility, Crown counsel make recommendations on the approach to adopt with each participant, depending on what stage of the proceedings the participant engages in DTC. A person can apply to DTC at any point in their criminal proceedings.

2. DRUG TREATMENT COURT (DTC) PROGRAMS

2.1 Nature of DTC Programs

DTC programs across the country vary in structure and design in accordance with the needs of the communities they serve and available resources. The components of individual DTC programs may be different from one jurisdiction to another. There is no program that will fit in all instances. Each region, in collaboration with all DTC partners, will determine the ultimate design of their respective DTC programs.

Despite these variations, DTC programs generally share the following characteristics:

- Considered and individualized screening for eligibility based on an assessment of the relationship between the participant's criminal conduct and the substance use disorder. The screening also takes other factors into account. This includes the participant's willingness and ability to undertake activities to address their substance use disorder and reduce recidivism.
- Courts remaining seized of the participant's criminal charges for a period of time sufficient for the provision of treatment.
- Multidisciplinary community assistance with the provision of health treatment and social services.
- Appropriate response measures that are individualized to each participant. These response measures encourage progress and respond to setbacks. Intentional breaches may result in a removal from the DTC program.

2.2 Approaches to Treatment

The PPSC supports an approach to DTC programs that recognizes abstinence from consumption of drugs as the optimal goal. However, abstinence is not always a realistic goal for some participants and may not be achievable by an individual participant within the cycle of a prosecution. The key measure is an individual participant's ability to address the factors underlying their substance use to break the cycle of criminality and to develop positive behaviours towards themselves and other members of the community.

2.3 Core Principles

Before a person charged with a criminal offence is considered for a DTC program, Crown counsel must ensure that:

- The decision to prosecute test is met;¹
- The accused has received sufficient disclosure unless there is a clear and informed waiver;
- The charges are within the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of Canada.

The Canadian Association of Drug Treatment Court Professionals has adopted a list of guiding principles that are nationally recognized. They include:

1. Drug Treatment Courts integrate addiction treatment services with justice system case processing.
2. Using a non-adversarial approach, prosecution and defence counsel promote public safety while protecting participants' Charter rights.
3. Eligible participants are identified early and placed in the Drug Treatment Court program as promptly as possible.
4. Drug Treatment Courts provide access to a continuum of drug, alcohol and other related treatments and rehabilitative services.
5. Compliance is objectively monitored by frequent substance testing.
6. A coordinated strategy governs Drug Treatment Court response to participants' compliance and non-compliance.
7. Swift, certain, and consistent sanctions or rewards for non-compliance or compliance.
8. Ongoing judicial interaction with each Drug Treatment Court participant is essential.
9. Monitoring and evaluation processes measure the achievement of program goals and gauge effectiveness.
10. Continuing interdisciplinary education promotes effective Drug Treatment Court planning, implementation, and operations.
11. Forging partnerships among courts, treatment and rehabilitation programs, public agencies and community-based organizations generates local support and enhances program effectiveness.
12. Ongoing case management providing the social support necessary to achieve social reintegration.
13. Appropriate flexibility in adjusting program content, including incentives and sanctions, to better achieve program results with particular groups such as women, Indigenous people and minority ethnic groups.²

¹ See Deskbook Guideline 2.3 "Decision to prosecute".

² Canadian Association of Drug Treatment Court Professionals, online: < <https://cadtc.org/dtc-program-title/> >.

These principles highlight the different roles that Crown counsel may play when involved in a file that is admitted to a DTC program.

2.4 Approval of a DTC program

DTCs do not require a formal designation to operate as a DTC. Pursuant to s. 10(4)(a) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (CDSA), a DTC program must be approved by the Attorney General of Canada. Approval requires compliance with the principles mentioned below. This approval can be provided by the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) in the appropriate province, territory or region when the CFP is satisfied that the DTC program complies with the relevant principles and signs the form at Annex A.

3. ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA FOR DTC PROGRAMS

3.1 General Principles

An application to a DTC program should only be considered in light of convincing evidence of the applicant's willingness and ability to commit to treatment. The treatment must be tailored to the individual participant, their criminal conduct, and the potential to reduce the risk of recidivism.

3.2 Specific Considerations

The interdisciplinary teams within a DTC program include PPSC prosecutors. PPSC prosecutors play an important role in recommending admission to a DTC program in a team environment. The factors that Crown counsel must consider in determining eligibility include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Whether the offence involves violence or raises issues of public safety;³
- Whether the offence involves drug-impaired driving;
- The participant's criminal record, including whether there is a recent or significant history of violence. If the participant used, or threatened to use, a weapon during the commission of an offence, this would be considered a crime involving violence;
- The offence involves conduct that poses a heightened risk to a community's efforts to address substance use disorders. This concern is often present in relation to smaller, isolated or remote localities and First Nations, Métis and Inuit communities.

These factors, which are meant to protect against risks to public safety, must not be used as barriers to limit the participation in a DTC program by Indigenous persons or members of racialized or marginalized groups who are overrepresented in the criminal justice system. Consideration must also be given to background and systemic factors,⁴ and the personal circumstances of an applicant to determine if public safety risks can be mitigated to ensure fair and equal accessibility for all to DTC.

³ A violent offence includes serious drug offences such as high-level commercial trafficking, exporting/importing and production. See, for example, R v Hamilton, 2004 CanLII 5549 (ONCA).

⁴ See AG Directive 3.8 "Alternative Measures" for a list of relevant background systemic factors of the accused.

Crown counsel must also consider the region in which the DTC program operates. For example, a metropolitan setting may have medical and social services that are more elaborate and standardized versus those in a smaller population center.

PPSC prosecutors must seek the approval of their Chief Federal Prosecutor or Deputy Chief Federal Prosecutor to admit an accused into a DTC program where the alleged offence involves serious acts of violence. This includes offences where it is alleged that a weapon was used or intimate partner violence occurred. Prior consultation must also occur with the DTC program team members and the relevant law enforcement agencies.

3.3 CDSA Offences

For CDSA offences, an applicant will generally be ineligible for admission into DTC if:

- there is no evidence that the applicant suffers from a substance use disorder;
- the person has been charged with having a significant role in organized trafficking for commercial gain;
- the drug offence involved risk to a young person;
- the offence involves conduct in breach of the rules of a regulated setting such as a custodial facility, jail or penitentiary;
- the offence involves criminal conduct by peace officers or public officers related to the discharge of their duties, such as corruption or breach of trust; or
- the person is an associate or member of a criminal organization.

3.4 Readmission to a DTC Program

Readmission into a DTC program will generally be encouraged for any applicant who has previously graduated from a DTC program and suffered a relapse that resulted in new charges. Readmission will be encouraged if the eligibility criteria are met and there are no concerns about public safety. Persons who have previously participated in a DTC program and were expelled within the previous year are generally eligible for readmission upon demonstrating to the satisfaction of the DTC program team that they should be given another opportunity.

4. AVAILABLE DISPOSITIONS

4.1 Guilty Plea

An expression of responsibility, such as the willingness to plead guilty to one or more outstanding charges, will be an important element of the assessment of whether an accused should be admitted in a DTC program. Sections 10(4) and 10(5) of the CDSA allow a court to delay sentencing if an offender is participating in a DTC program approved by the Attorney General or attends a treatment program approved by the province.⁵

4.2 Alternative Measures

In some cases, an accused may be eligible to participate in a DTC program without the requirement of a guilty plea to one or multiple charges. As provided by s. 717(1)(e) of the Criminal Code, a candidate seeking to participate in a DTC program as an alternative measure must accept responsibility for the commission of the actions that form the basis for the offence(s).

A candidate will be ineligible if they deny participation or involvement in the commission of the outstanding offence(s) or express a desire to have the charge(s) dealt with by the court in the traditional sense.⁶

The general principles and criteria outlined in AG Directive 3.8 “Alternative Measures” of the PPSC Deskbook apply where a DTC program operates as an alternative measure to prosecution. Instead of a conviction, graduates of a DTC program will have outstanding charges withdrawn or stayed.

All participants in a DTC program who do not plead guilty to outstanding charges will be required to waive any period of delay arising from their participation in it. Failure to complete the DTC program should result in the continued prosecution of charges.⁷ If a participant in a DTC program is charged with a new offence, PPSC prosecutors may consider measures such as reinstituting the original charges, removal from DTC, or having the participant continue in DTC if the new charges also relate to a substance use disorder. In the latter case, the circumstances of the new charge(s) must satisfy all preconditions for continued participation in DTC.

4.3 Post-Trial Dispositions

An individual suffering from a substance use disorder found guilty after trial may still be considered for entry into a DTC program provided that they meet all eligibility criteria and are prepared to waive all delay incurred from their participation in a DTC program.

5. SUCCESSFUL COMPLETION OF A DTC PROGRAM

The standard for the successful completion of a DTC program is to be determined by the DTC team. This standard must be individualized to the individual participant and be consistent with the requirements and objectives of the program.

⁵ Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, SC 1996, c 19, s 10(2), 10(4), and 10(5). The sentencing is delayed while the offender is under the supervision of the court as outlined in s 720(2) of the Criminal Code.

⁶ See s 717(2) of the Criminal Code.

⁷ A prosecution will resume where Crown counsel is satisfied that there is public interest in its continuation and there remains a reasonable prospect of conviction.

Some suggested criteria include:

- A realization of positive outcomes including management of, and insight into, an individual's substance use disorder.
- A substantial period of time having passed without further criminal convictions.
- Social stability indicators such as having obtained stable housing, ongoing attendance at community support programs, being employed, attending school, or participating in significant volunteer work.

Persons who satisfy a DTC program's successful completion criteria will graduate from the program and be eligible for special considerations regarding the outcome of their charges. This may include withdrawing or staying charges for persons who have not yet entered a plea, or to a reduced sentence for persons who have entered a plea. The range of sentences for the most serious offenders in a DTC program may include a suspended sentence along with a period of probation.

In any case, the DTC is not required to impose the mandatory minimum penalty (MMP) for the offence. In some situations, it may even be appropriate to allow a participant to strike their guilty plea and for PPSC prosecutors to seek a stay of proceedings or withdraw charges. This should only happen where a participant has gone above and beyond the satisfaction of all program requirements.

PPSC prosecutors may, where appropriate, consult with the DTC program team as part of the Crown's determination of its position on the sentence upon graduation.

APPENDIX A - ATTORNEY GENERAL'S APPROVAL

Section 10 of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act provides, in part, as follows:

10(4) A court sentencing a person who is convicted of an offence under this Part may delay sentencing to enable the offender:

- a. to participate in a drug treatment court program approved by the Attorney General;
- b. to attend a treatment program under subsection 720(2) of the Criminal Code.

10(5) If the offender successfully completes a program under subsection (4), the court is not required to impose the minimum punishment for the offence for which the person was convicted.

I hereby approve the (name of the program) as a drug treatment court program approved by the Attorney General of Canada pursuant to paragraph 10(4)(a) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act. This approval is provided further to powers, duties, and functions that the Attorney General of Canada assigned to the Director of Public Prosecutions on February 18, 2019 (Assignment 5) and that the Director delegated to Chief Federal Prosecutors in the Guideline "Drug Treatment Courts".

Dated at the City of _____, _____, this ____ day of _____, 20____.

Chief Federal Prosecutor for the Region of _____

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

6.2 MANDATORY MINIMUM PENALTIES FOR CERTAIN DRUG OFFENCES UNDER THE CONTROLLED DRUGS AND SUBSTANCES ACT

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. PURPOSE	2
2. IMPACT ON PROSECUTIONS	2
2.1. Stay, withdrawal or accepting plea to lesser offence	3
2.2. Non-reliance upon notice	3
2.3. Obtaining prior consent not feasible	4
3. BACKGROUND	4
4. CONCLUSION	6
APPENDIX A - MANDATORY MINIMUM PENALTIES FOR SERIOUS DRUG OFFENCES	7

1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this guideline is to provide direction to Crown counsel regarding the 2012 amendments to the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (CDSA) that add mandatory minimum penalties (MMPs) for particular drug offences in certain circumstances.¹ The amendments are contained in the Safe Streets and Communities Act (Act). These amendments apply only to offences committed after the coming into force of this legislation.

2. IMPACT ON PROSECUTIONS

As noted below, there is a requirement that the Crown provide notice of the intention to seek the MMP and the intention to prove the aggravating factors. There is no time limit provided for the giving of notice, except that it be before the accused enters a plea; therefore it is recommended that Crown counsel review their files early-on in order to ensure that notice has been provided to the accused, and if not, provide one as soon as possible. Each regional office should coordinate with their local police forces the specific procedure to be followed for providing this notice to the accused, including the possibility of the police providing this notice as a matter of course at the time of arrest.

With the implementation of this MMP regime, Crown counsel may be under increased pressure from defence counsel to negotiate a plea agreement that would not require that an MMP be imposed in a particular prosecution. The guiding principle for Crown counsel during plea negotiations is not to undermine the MMP regime during the process. Crown counsel are reminded that they are obliged to present all available provable facts to the court, in a firm but fair manner, in order to ensure the integrity of the prosecution throughout the litigation process.² Crown counsel must also conduct plea and sentence negotiations in a manner consistent with the policies set out in the PPSC Deskbook. In particular, the Deskbook states that an agreement to withhold from the court facts that are provable and relevant, and that aggravate the offence is not acceptable.³

¹ Safe Streets and Communities Act, SC 2012, c 1.

In keeping with the will of Parliament, it will generally be inappropriate to take a plea to a lesser offence, or to stay or withdraw a charge, when it is done with the intent of avoiding the imposition of an MMP where the evidence supports the original charge. In situations where the facts supporting the MMP are present and provable, counsel should generally prosecute that offence and the court will impose the MMP. Also, where there are two possible charges in a prosecution and one has an MMP and one does not, or both have an MMP but one is higher than the other, the one with the MMP or the one with the higher MMP should proceed.⁴ In cases where there are two charges, both of which are punishable by MMPs, counsel should not take a plea to one MMP charge, and stay the other charge, if the sentence for the remaining MMP charge is less than the sentence that would have been imposed following conviction on both charges.⁵

2.1. Stay, withdrawal or accepting plea to lesser offence

If counsel wishes to stay or withdraw a charge with an MMP, or to take a plea to a lesser offence, the prior consent of the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or his/her delegate is required. Counsel must provide the CFP with a written memorandum setting out the basis for the stay, withdrawal or plea and explaining why the proposed course of action is in the public interest. If the reason for the stay, withdrawal or plea to a lesser offence is due to the evidentiary threshold for prosecution not being met (i.e. no reasonable prospect of conviction), consent is not required.

2.2. Non-reliance upon notice

In situations in which Crown counsel intends to proceed with the prosecution of an offence with an MMP but considers that the imposition of an MMP would likely result in an unduly harsh consequence under the circumstances of a particular case, counsel may exercise discretion not to rely on the notice of intention to seek the MMP. For example, Crown counsel might consider exercising their discretion in proving the notice of intent in situations where the imposition of an MMP would be an unduly harsh consequence for someone who has special needs, such as a

² See Boucher v The Queen, [1955] SCR 16 at 23-24 : “It cannot be over-emphasized that the purpose of a criminal prosecution is not to obtain a conviction; it is to lay before a jury what the Crown considers to be credible evidence relevant to what is alleged to be a crime. Counsel have a duty to see that all available legal proof of the facts is presented: it should be done firmly and pressed to its legitimate strength, but it must also be done fairly.”

³ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.7 Resolution Discussions” at para 3.5 c).

⁴ Examples include: (A) Accused charged with ss 7(1) and 5(2) for a 300 plant grow operation, no criminal record, and plants grown in his or her own home. Section 7(1) has an MMP of 12 months and the s 5(2) has no MMP. Crown counsel shall not withdraw or stay the s 7(1) charge. (B) Accused charged with ss 7(1) and 5(2) of methamphetamine with the aggravating factors of the lab being in a rental home and using a 16 year old to operate it. The s 7(1) charge has a 3-year MMP while the s 5(2) charge has a 2-year MMP. The Crown shall not withdraw or stay the s 7(1) charge.

⁵ Example: If each offence is punishable by an MMP of two years and, based on the facts, the sentences would be consecutive rather than concurrent, counsel cannot take a plea for less than four years for the one MMP offence without the approval of the CFP.

medical condition that would make jail particularly onerous. In such cases, counsel may do so only with the prior consent of their CFP or his/her delegate. Counsel shall nonetheless still present the aggravating factor(s) to the court if they are relevant and provable.

2.3. Obtaining prior consent not feasible

In exceptional circumstances, where it is not feasible for counsel to obtain the CFP's consent beforehand, Crown counsel may stay, withdraw, or agree to a plea to a lesser offence on a charge with an MMP. In such circumstances, counsel must provide to the CFP, as soon as practicable after doing so, a written memorandum demonstrating how the proposed course of action was in the public interest and why it was not feasible to seek consent beforehand.⁶ Counsel must also ensure that the memorandum is placed on the file.

3. BACKGROUND

The Act amends the CDSA to provide for MMPs when an accused is convicted of certain serious drug offences including trafficking, possession for the purpose of trafficking, importing and exporting, and production. This is the case only when the charges involve drugs listed in Schedule I and Schedule II of the CDSA. It should be noted that GHB and Flunitrazepam (Rohypnol), most commonly known as the “date-rape drugs,” as well as all of the amphetamine drugs have been moved from Schedule III to Schedule I as a result of the Act. Also, the maximum penalty for production of Schedule II drugs has been increased from 7 to 14 years.

In general, the MMP will apply where there is an aggravating factor present, including where the production of the drug constituted a potential security, health or safety hazard. MMPs are also triggered by trafficking, exporting, importing or producing certain quantities of either Schedule I or Schedule II substances. For the production of between 6 and 200 marihuana plants, the Crown must prove by way of expert evidence that the production was for the purpose of trafficking.

The chart attached as Appendix A to this note sets out in detail, by quantity and other aggravating factors, the penalties mandated for both Schedule I and Schedule II drugs. In particular, the aggravating factors involve offences committed:

Aggravating Factors List A:

- for the benefit of, at the direction of, or in association with a criminal organization;
- involving use or threat of violence;
- involving use or threat of use of weapons;

⁶ Such circumstances must be understood as exceptional. Crown counsel are expected to make efforts to contact the CFP or his/her delegate in person, by email or by telephone, when necessary, to seek consent in all circumstances. Crown counsel may only stay, withdraw or agree to a plea on a change with an MMP in circumstances where, after making reasonable attempts to contact the CFP or his/her delegate and where obtaining an adjournment of the case in order to seek the consent would not be feasible and might otherwise jeopardize the prosecution.

- o by someone who has been previously convicted of a designated substance offence,⁷ or has served a term of imprisonment for a designated substance offence,⁸ within the previous ten years;⁹ and
- through the abuse of authority or position, or by abusing access to restricted area, to commit the offence of importation/exportation and possession to export.

Aggravating Factors List B:

- in or near a school, on or near school grounds, or in or near an area normally frequented by persons under the age of 18;
- in a prison;
- using the services of, or involving, a person under 18;
- in relation to a youth (e.g., selling to a youth).

In relation to the production offences, MMPs may be imposed where the following security, health and safety factors are:

- the accused used real property that belongs to a third party to commit the offence;
- the production constituted a potential security, health or safety hazard to children who were in the location where the offence was committed or in the immediate area;
- the production constituted a potential public safety hazard in a residential area; or
- the accused placed or set a trap.

It should be noted that a court is not required to impose an MMP unless it is satisfied that the offender, before entering a plea, was notified of the possible imposition of an MMP for the offence in question and of the Attorney General's intention to prove any factors in relation to the offence that would lead to the imposition of an MMP.¹⁰

The Act also allows a court to delay sentencing while an offender with a substance use disorder either participates in a drug treatment court program approved by the Attorney General, or attends a treatment program approved by the province under the supervision of the court as outlined in s 720(2) of the Criminal Code. If the person successfully completes the treatment program, the court is not required to impose the MMP for the offence.¹¹

⁷ Refers to a "designated substance offence" as defined in part 2 of the CDSA.

⁸ This is interpreted to mean the warrant expiry date.

⁹ This is to be interpreted as ten years preceding the commission of the offence.

¹⁰ See Bill C-10, s 42 which adds a new s 8 to the CDSA.

¹¹ See Bill C-10, s 43(2) which provided the amendment to s 10(2) and the new ss 10(4) and (5) of the CDSA.

4. CONCLUSION

Crown counsel must be aware of the facts in a given case that may give rise to the imposition of an MMP, ensure that notice has been given before the matter proceeds, and be prepared to prove the aggravating factors present in the case. Throughout this process, Crown counsel are duty bound to present to the court all provable aggravating facts that are relevant to the prosecution.

APPENDIX A - MANDATORY MINIMUM PENALTIES FOR SERIOUS DRUG OFFENCES

SCHEDULE I - DRUGS (COCAINE, HEROIN, METHAMPHETAMINE, ETC., AND DRUGS BEING MOVED FROM SCHEDULE III INCLUDING ECSTASY, GHB AND ROHYPNOL)
OFFENCE	MANDATORY MINIMUM PENALTY				NOTES
		w/ Aggravating Factor - List A¹	w/ Aggravating Factor - List B²	w/ Health and Safety Factors³
7(1) Production	2 YEARS	n/a	n/a	3 YEARS
5(1) Trafficking		1 YEAR	2 YEARS	n/a
5(2) Possession for the Purpose of Trafficking		1 YEAR	2 YEARS	n/a
6(1) Importing Exporting	1 YEAR	n/a	n/a	n/a	1 year for Schedule I under 1 kg if (i) the offence is committed for the purpose of trafficking; (ii) the person abused a position of trust or authority; or (iii) the person had access to an area that is restricted to authorized persons and used that access.
	2 YEARS (if more than 1 kg)

6(2) Possession For the Purpose of Exporting	1 YEAR	n/a	n/a	n/a	1 year for Schedule I under 1 kg if (i) the offence is committed for the purpose of trafficking; (ii) the person abused a position of trust or authority; or (iii) the person had access to an area that is restricted to authorized persons and used that access.
	2 YEARS (if more than 1 kg)

SCHEDULE II DRUGS (CANNABIS MARIHUANA)
OFFENCE	MANDATORY MINIMUM PENALTY				NOTES
		w/ Aggravating Factors - List A¹	w/ Aggravating Factor - List B²	w/ Health and Safety Factors³
5(1) Trafficking		1 YEAR	2 YEARS	n/a	Offence would have to involve more than 3 kg of cannabis marihuana or cannabis resin
5(2) Possession for the Purpose of Trafficking		1 YEAR	2 YEARS	n/a	Offence would have to involve more than 3 kg of cannabis marihuana or cannabis resin
6(1) Importing Exporting	1 YEAR	n/a	n/a	n/a	One year for Schedule II if (i) the offence is committed for the purpose of trafficking; (ii) the person abused a position of trust or authority; or (iii) the person had access to an area that is restricted to authorized persons and used that access.
6(2) Possession for the Purpose of Exporting	1 YEAR	n/a	n/a	n/a	One year for Schedule II if (i) the offence is committed for the purpose of trafficking; (ii) the person abused a position of trust or authority;; or (iii) the person had access to an area that is restricted to authorized persons and used that access.
7(1) Production of	6 MOS	n/a	n/a	9 MOS	Offence is committed for the purpose of trafficking.

6 - 200 plants					Maximum penalty will be increased to 14 years imprisonment
7(1) Production of 201 – 500 plants	1 YEAR	n/a	n/a	18 MOS	Maximum penalty will be increased to 14 years imprisonment
7(1) Production of over 500 plants	2 YEARS	n/a	n/a	3 YEARS	Maximum penalty will be increased to 14 years imprisonment
*7(1) Production of substances in schedule II other than marihuana (i.e. resin/oil)	1 YEAR	n/a	n/a	18 MOS	If offence is committed for the purpose of trafficking.

¹ Aggravating Factors List A

The aggravating factors include offences committed:

- for the benefit of, at the direction of, or in association with a criminal organization;
- involving use or threat of violence;
- involving use or threat of use of weapons;
- by someone who was previously convicted of a designated drug offence or had served a term of imprisonment for a designated substance offence within the previous ten years; and
- through the abuse of authority or position or by abusing access to restricted area to commit the offence of importation/exportation and possession to export.

² Aggravating Factors List B

The aggravating factors include offences committed:

- in or near a school, on or near school grounds, or in or near an area normally frequented by persons under the age of 18;
- in a prison;
- using the services of, or involving, a person under 18;
- in relation to a youth (e.g. selling to a youth).

³ Health and Safety Factors

- the accused used real property that belongs to a third party to commit the offence;
- the production constituted a potential security, health or safety hazard to persons under the age of 18 who were in the location where the offence was committed or in the immediate area;
- the production constituted a potential public safety hazard in a residential area;
- the accused placed or set a trap, device or other thing that is likely to cause death or bodily harm to another person in the location where the offence was committed or in the immediate area, or permitted such a trap, device or other thing to remain or be placed in that location or area.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

6.2.1 SUPPLEMENTARY GUIDELINE ON MANDATORY MINIMUM PENALTIES FOR CERTAIN DRUG OFFENCES UNDER THE CONTROLLED DRUGS AND SUBSTANCES ACT

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

June 24, 2016

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1.	OVERVIEW.....	2
2.	BACKGROUND	2
3.	DIRECTION TO PROSECUTORS	3

1. OVERVIEW

In light of recent rulings that have found four trafficking-related mandatory minimum penalties (MMPs) unconstitutional, effective immediately, prosecutors must no longer seek the imposition of the following MMPs for trafficking or possession for the purpose of trafficking in Schedule I drugs or large quantities of Schedule II drugs:

- One year when the offender carried a weapon in committing the offence (s. 5(3)(a)(i)(C));
- One year when the offender has been convicted of a drug offence (other than simple possession) in the previous 10 years (s. 5(3)(a)(i)(D));
- Two years when the offence was committed in or near a school or other public place usually frequented by persons under 18 (s. 5(3)(a)(ii)(A));
- Two years when the offender involves a person under 18 in the offence (s. 5(3)(a)(ii)(C)).

Other Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (CDSA) MMPs, including those under ss. 6 and 7, are unaffected by this guideline. The Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC) will continue to seek these MMPs where appropriate.

2. BACKGROUND

On April 15, 2016, in R. v. Lloyd,¹ the Supreme Court of Canada struck down the one-year MMP for an offender with a drug record in the previous ten years who trafficked or possessed Schedule I or large amounts of Schedule II drugs for the purpose of trafficking. As a consequence, this MMP has been of no force or effect since that ruling and federal prosecutors are no longer able to seek its imposition.

On April 25, 2016, in light of Lloyd, the British Columbia Court of Appeal struck down in *R. v. Dickey*² the two-year MMPs applicable when the offence is committed in or near a school or other public place usually frequented by persons under 18³ or when a young person is involved in the transaction.⁴

¹ 2016 SCC 13

² 2016 BCCA 177

³ S. 5(3)(a)(ii)(A)

⁴ S. 5(3)(a)(ii)(C)

The PPSC is not seeking leave to appeal the Dickey rulings to the Supreme Court of Canada. The PPSC is also abandoning an appeal to the British Columbia Court of Appeal from the provincial court ruling that struck down the one-year MMP for trafficking while carrying a weapon in Jackson-Bullshields.⁵

3. DIRECTION TO PROSECUTORS

Regarding the offences listed above, prosecutors should simply seek the appropriate sentence based on relevant sentencing principles, including the aggravating factors in s. 10 of the CDSA, and the case law. In some instances the appropriate sentence may exceed the MMP. Prosecutors must no longer file or rely on the s. 8 notices in the CDSA regarding the MMPs listed above.

However, regarding s. 5(3)(a)(i)(C), the Court struck down only the “carrying” aspect of the provision. Crown counsel must continue to file and rely on the s. 8 notice and seek the MMP in appropriate cases under this provision when the person used or threatened to use a weapon in committing the offence.

PPSC counsel must advise the courts and defence counsel of this position. Chief Federal Prosecutors (CFP) or their delegates must also advise the police forces in their jurisdictions of this position, since the police generally serve the s. 8 notices under the CDSA.

While PPSC counsel are directed to no longer seek the MMPs in the four circumstances identified above, absent binding appellate jurisprudence, counsel are not to concede the unconstitutionality of these MMPs. In any case, where defence counsel still wishes to argue the constitutionality of one or more of the MMPs listed above (despite the fact that the Crown is no longer seeking the MMP), counsel should notify the CFP to discuss next steps.

This guideline applies to all PPSC cases in the system where these MMPs are at issue, including appeals.

In all other respects, PPSC guidelines regarding MMPs continue to apply. In particular, the MMPs Guideline in Chapter 6.2, of the PPSC Deskbook, at paragraph 2.2., provides for non-reliance on the notice in situations where the Crown determines that the imposition of the MMP would likely result in an unduly harsh consequence in a particular case.

⁵ R. v. Jackson-Bullshields, 2015 BCPC 411 and 2015 BCPC 414. See also CDSA, s. 5(3)(a)(i)(C)

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

6.3 STATUTORY RESTRICTIONS ON THE USE OF CONDITIONAL SENTENCES

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. PURPOSE	2
2. IMPACT ON PROSECUTIONS	3
2.1. Stay, withdrawal or accepting plea to a lesser offence	4
2.2. Obtaining prior consent not feasible	4
3. CONCLUSION	5
APPENDIX A – NON-CRIMINAL CODE OFFENCES PUNISHABLE BY A MAXIMUM SENTENCE OF 14 YEARS IMPRISONMENT	6
APPENDIX B – NON-CRIMINAL CODE OFFENCES PUNISHABLE BY A MAXIMUM SENTENCE OF LIFE IMPRISONMENT	8

1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this guideline is to provide direction to Crown counsel regarding the key changes to the conditional sentence regime pursuant to s. 742.1 of the Criminal Code (Code), as a result of the coming into force in 2012 of certain aspects of the Safe Streets and Communities Act (the Act). The effect of the amendments is to restrict the availability of conditional sentences. These amendments apply only to offences committed after the coming into force of the provisions, which are contained in Part 2 of the Act.

Under the new regime, conditional sentences remain unavailable if the offence is punishable by a minimum term of imprisonment,¹ or if the offence is a terrorism offence or a criminal organization offence prosecuted by way of indictment for which the maximum term of imprisonment is 10 years or more.

The new s. 742.1 of the Code no longer states that conditional sentences are unavailable in relation to serious personal injury offences as defined in s. 752 of the Code. Under the new regime, conditional sentences are now unavailable in the following circumstances:

- In the case of all offences prosecuted by way of indictment for which the maximum term of imprisonment is either 14 years or life;²

¹ Existing mandatory minimum penalties (MMP) in the Criminal Code can be found in the Offence Grid, which appears at the back of the Criminal Code, before the Index. It is also important to read this guideline in conjunction with other PPSC guidelines concerning the Act, which concern new or increased MMP in relation to certain Criminal Code offences and particular drug offences committed in certain circumstances.

² The list of offences in the Criminal Code that fall in these categories can be found in the Offence Grid, located in the Criminal Code, as explained in note 1. See also the attached Appendices A and B of this guideline for examples of offences in other federal acts that fall into these categories.

- Offences prosecuted by indictment for which the maximum term of imprisonment is 10 years, that:
 - (i) resulted in bodily harm;
 - (ii) involved the import, export, trafficking or production of drugs, or
 - (iii) involved the use of a weapon.

In addition, a list of eleven offences, when prosecuted by indictment, are expressly excluded from eligibility for conditional sentences. This list includes prison breach (s. 144 of the Code), criminal harassment (s. 264 of the Code), sexual assault (s. 271 of the Code), kidnapping (s. 279 of the Code), trafficking in persons-material benefit (s. 279.02 of the Code) and abduction of person under 14 (s. 281 of the Code), but also includes a number of property offences:

- motor vehicle theft (s. 333.1 of the Code);
- theft over 5,000 (s. 334 \(a\) of the Code);
- breaking and entering a place other than a dwelling house (s. 348 \(1\)\(e\) of the Code);
- being unlawfully in a dwelling-house (s. 349 of the Code); and
- arson for fraudulent purpose (s. 435 of the Code).

Thus, fewer offences are eligible for conditional sentences as a result of these changes to the CSO regime, and because of related amendments to the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (CDSA) in the Act that include an increase in the maximum penalty for marihuana production from seven to 14 years and the introduction of mandatory minimum penalties (MMP) for certain CDSA offences committed in certain circumstances in relation to Schedule I and II drugs.³

As a practical matter, as far as CDSA offences are concerned, conditional sentences will remain available for s. 4 offences. However, conditional sentences will no longer be available for any other Schedule I or Schedule II drug offence, except for s. 5 offences of trafficking or possession for the purpose of trafficking in three kilograms or less of a Schedule II drug (marihuana).

2. IMPACT ON PROSECUTIONS

These amendments mandate no change in the general Crown approach and rationale regarding Crown elections, plea resolution and sentencing discussions. That said, Crown counsel must follow the guidelines described below that relate to the exercise of discretion.

³ See the PPSC Deskbook guidelines “6.4 Mandatory Minimum Penalties under the Criminal Code” and “6.2 Mandatory Minimum Penalties for Certain Drug Offences under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act”.

Regarding the Crown election, the same considerations should arise when the Crown is deciding whether to proceed summarily or by indictment. In other words, if the Crown would normally choose to proceed by indictment, due to the seriousness of the case, the criminal record of the accused or because of other relevant factors, the Crown should not elect to proceed summarily so that a conditional sentence would remain available to the accused.⁴

Likewise, concerning plea resolution and sentencing discussions, in keeping with the will of Parliament, it will generally be inappropriate to either agree to a plea to a lesser offence, or stay or withdraw a charge, where the evidence supports the original charge, so that the accused will remain eligible for a conditional sentence. For example, if the accused is charged with an offence that is punishable by an MMP, or that is an indictable offence punishable by 14 years or life, Crown counsel should not generally agree to a plea to a lesser offence so that a conditional sentence will be available to the accused.

2.1. Stay, withdrawal or accepting plea to a lesser offence

If Crown counsel wishes to stay or withdraw a charge, or take a plea to a lesser offence, so that a conditional sentence will remain available to the accused, the prior consent of the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or his or delegate is required. Counsel must provide the CFP with a written memorandum setting out the basis for the stay, withdrawal or plea and explaining why the proposed course of action is in the public interest. For example, there may be situations where the lack of availability of a conditional sentence would likely result in an unduly harsh consequence under the circumstances of a particular case, such as where the unavailability of a conditional sentence would result in young children being left with no caretaker. In such situations, Crown counsel might exercise discretion to reach a resolution that would permit a conditional sentence. However, if the reason for the stay, withdrawal or plea to a lesser offence, is due to the threshold for prosecution not being met (a reasonable prospect of conviction), the above-mentioned consent is not required.

2.2. Obtaining prior consent not feasible

In exceptional circumstances, where it is not feasible for Crown counsel to obtain the CFP's consent beforehand, Crown counsel may stay, withdraw, or agree to a plea to a lesser offence, which would enable the accused to remain eligible for a conditional sentence. In such circumstances, Crown counsel must provide to the CFP, as soon as practicable after doing so, a written memorandum demonstrating how the proposed course of action was in the public interest and why it was not feasible to seek consent beforehand.⁵ Crown counsel must also ensure that the memorandum is placed on the file.

⁴ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline "3.10 Elections and Re-Elections" for the PPSC policy regarding Crown elections in relation to dual procedure offences.

During sentencing submissions, it will also be important for Crown counsel to remind the judiciary that the principles of sentencing for adults in the Criminal Code have not changed. Judges must continue to sentence in accordance with the sentencing principles and the jurisprudence, to the extent that the jurisprudence has established the applicable sentencing principles, sentence range, and overall sentence fitness in certain types of cases. Crown counsel can reasonably argue that Parliament has not altered the sentencing principles but merely restricted sentencing options in relation to certain kinds of offences. For example, probation will not be appropriate as a result of these amendments in situations where it was not appropriate before.

Finally, Crown counsel should never hesitate to consult senior colleagues of the Public Prosecution Service of Canada (PPSC) and their manager when engaged in resolution discussions and the preparation of sentencing submissions. Crown counsel should also remain mindful of their obligation to consult managers in appropriate circumstances as outlined in the PPSC Deskbook and in relevant guidelines.

3. CONCLUSION

Crown counsel continue to be bound by relevant PPSC Deskbook policies concerning Crown elections, plea resolution and sentencing discussions involving offences for which a conditional sentence will no longer be available.

It will generally be inappropriate for Crown counsel to take a plea to a lesser offence, or stay or withdraw a charge, when it is done with the intent of ensuring that a conditional sentence remains available to the accused, where the evidence supports the original charge. In exceptional circumstances deviating may be acceptable and must be done in accordance with the present guideline.

⁵ Such circumstances must be understood as exceptional. Crown counsel are expected to make every effort to contact the CFP or his/her delegate in person, by email or by telephone, when necessary, to seek consent in all circumstances. Crown counsel may stay, withdraw a charge, or agree to a plea, which would result in a conditional sentence being available to the accused only where it otherwise would not be, if reasonable attempts were made to contact the CFP or his or her delegate and where obtaining an adjournment of the case in order to seek the consent would not be feasible and might otherwise jeopardize the prosecution.

APPENDIX A – NON-CRIMINAL CODE OFFENCES PUNISHABLE BY A MAXIMUM SENTENCE OF 14 YEARS IMPRISONMENT

1. CONTROLLED DRUGS AND SUBSTANCES ACT OFFENCES

No offences punishable by a maximum sentence of 14 years imprisonment.⁶

2. CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY AND WAR CRIMES ACT

#	SECTION	OFFENCE
1	s. 18	Bribery of judges and officials
2	s. 19(3)	Perjury
3	s. 20	Witness giving contradictory evidence
4	s. 21	Fabricating evidence

3. IMMIGRATION AND REFUGEE PROTECTION ACT

#	SECTION	OFFENCE
1	s. 117(2)(a)(ii)	Human smuggling and trafficking: Organizing entry into Canada (under 10 persons)
2	ss. 122 and 123(b)	Offences Related to Documents
3	ss. 119 and 120	Human trafficking

4. COMPETITION ACT

#	SECTION	OFFENCE
1	s. 45(2)	Conspiracies, agreements or arrangements between competitors
2	s. 47(2)	Bid rigging
3	s. 52(5)(a)	False representations
4	s. 52.1(9)(a)	Telemarketing
5	s. 53(6)(a)	Deceptive notice of winning a prize

⁶ As of the coming into force on November 6, 2012 of the changes to the CDSA by virtue of the Act, the maximum sentence for the production of marihuana has increased to 14 years.

5. SECURITY OF INFORMATION ACT

#	SECTION	OFFENCE
1	s. 3(1)	Prejudice to the safety or interest of the State
2	s. 4(1)	Wrongful communication, etc., of information
3	s. 4(2)	Communication of sketch, plan, model, etc.
4	s. 4(3)	Receiving code word, sketch, etc.
5	s. 4(4)	Retaining or allowing possession of document, etc.
6	s. 5(1)	Unauthorized use of uniforms; falsification of reports, forgery, personation and false documents
7	s. 5(2)	Unlawful dealing with dies, seals, etc.
8	s. 6	Approaching, entering, etc., a prohibited place
9	s. 7	Interference
10	s. 14(2)	Unauthorized communication of special operational information
11	s. 23	Conspiracy, attempts, etc.

APPENDIX B – NON-CRIMINAL CODE OFFENCES PUNISHABLE BY A MAXIMUM SENTENCE OF LIFE IMPRISONMENT

1. CONTROLLED DRUGS AND SUBSTANCES ACT OFFENCES

#	SECTION	OFFENCE
1	s. 5(3)(a) CDSA	Trafficking – Schedule I or II
2	s. 6(3)(a) CDSA	Import/export – Schedule I or II
3	s. 7(2)(a) CDSA	Production – Schedule I or II

2. CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY AND WAR CRIMES ACT

#	SECTION	OFFENCE
1	s. 4(2)(a) and (b)	Genocide committed in Canada
2	s. 5(3)	Breach of responsibility by military commander or superior
3	s. 6(2)(a) and (b)	Genocide, etc., committed outside of Canada
4	s. 7(4)	Breach of responsibility by a superior

3. IMMIGRATION AND REFUGEE PROTECTION ACT

#	SECTION	OFFENCE
1	s. 117(3)	Human smuggling and trafficking: Organizing entry into Canada
2	ss. 118 and 120	Disembarking persons at sea
3	ss. 119 and 120	Human trafficking
4	s. 131	Counseling

4. SECURITY OF INFORMATION ACT

#	SECTION	OFFENCE
1	s. 16(3)	Communicating safeguarded information
2	s. 17(2)	Communicating special operational information
3	s. 20(3)	Foreign-influenced or Terrorist-influenced Threats or Violence

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

6.4 MANDATORY MINIMUM PENALTIES UNDER THE CRIMINAL CODE

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. PURPOSE	2
2. IMPACT ON PROSECUTIONS	2
3. CONCLUSION.....	3
APPENDIX A	4
APPENDIX B	5

1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this guideline is to provide direction to Crown counsel regarding the certain amendments to the Criminal Code (Code) in 2012 that add mandatory minimum penalties (MMPs) for particular offences involving the sexual exploitation of children. The amendments are contained in the Safe Streets and Communities Act (Act), formerly Bill C-10. These amendments apply only to offences committed after the coming into force date of these provisions.¹

The Act also creates two new hybrid offences (ss. 171.1 and 172.2 of the Code). Section 171.1 makes it an offence to provide sexually explicit material to a child. Section 172.2 creates an offence to agree or make arrangements with another person by means of telecommunications to commit a sexual offence against a child.

2. IMPACT ON PROSECUTIONS

Crown counsel are reminded that they are obliged to present all available provable facts to the court, in a firm but fair manner, in order to ensure the integrity of the prosecution throughout the litigation process.² Crown counsel must also conduct plea and sentence negotiations in a manner consistent with the policies set out in the PPSC Deskbook. In particular, the Deskbook states that an agreement to withhold from the court facts that are provable and relevant, and that aggravate the offence is not acceptable.³

¹ These provisions are contained in Part 2 of the Bill and came into force on August 9, 2012.

² See [Boucher v The Queen, \[1955\] SCR 16](#) at 23-24: “It cannot be over-emphasized that the purpose of a criminal prosecution is not to obtain a conviction, it is to lay before a jury what the Crown considers to be credible evidence relevant to what is alleged to be a crime. Counsel have a duty to see that all available legal proof of the facts is presented: it should be done firmly and pressed to its legitimate strength but it must also be done fairly”.

³ See the PPSC Deskbook guideline “3.7 Resolution Discussions”, in particular para 3.5c).

In keeping with the will of Parliament, it will generally be inappropriate to either agree to a plea to a lesser offence, or to stay or withdraw a charge, when it is done with the intent of avoiding the imposition of an MMP, where the evidence supports the original charge. Also, where there are two possible charges in a prosecution and one has an MMP and one does not, or both have an MMP but one is higher than the other, the one with the MMP or the one with the highest MMP should proceed.

If an offence with an MMP has a reasonable prospect of conviction, such an offence may be stayed or withdrawn under a plea agreement only with the consent of the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) or his/her delegate. The consent of the CFP shall only be given where the basis for the plea is set out in a written memorandum that demonstrates, to the satisfaction of the CFP, how the proposed course of action is in the public interest.

If the reason for the stay, withdrawal or agreement to a plea to a lesser offence is due to the threshold for prosecution not being met (a reasonable prospect of conviction), such consent is not required. In such circumstances Crown counsel must provide a written memorandum to the CFP or his/her delegate that explains the decision and ensure that the memo is filed.

In exceptional circumstances, where it is not feasible to get consent, Crown counsel may stay, withdraw, or agree to a plea to a lesser offence on a charge with an MMP. In such circumstances Crown counsel must provide to the CFP, as soon as practicable after doing so, a written memorandum explaining the decision and why it was not feasible to get the consent.⁴ Crown counsel must also ensure the memo is filed.

3. CONCLUSION

It is important for Crown counsel to refer to the tables in Appendices A and B below, in order to know whether an MMP attaches to offences involving the sexual exploitation of children.

Under the new MMP regime it will generally be inappropriate for Crown counsel to take a plea to a lesser offence, stay or withdraw a charge, when it is done with the intent of avoiding the imposition of an MMP, where the evidence supports the original charge. In exceptional circumstances deviating may be acceptable and must be done in accordance with the present guideline.

⁴ Such circumstances must be understood as exceptional. Crown counsel are expected to make efforts to contact the CFP or his/her delegate in person, by email or by telephone, when necessary, to seek consent in all circumstances. Crown counsel may stay, withdraw or agree to a plea on a charge with an MMP in circumstances only where, after making reasonable attempts to contact the CFP or his/or her delegate and where obtaining an adjournment of the case in order to seek the consent would not be feasible and might otherwise jeopardize the prosecution.

APPENDIX A

NEW OFFENCES AND NEW MANDATORY MINIMUM PENALTIES FOR SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF CHILDREN
Offence		Criminal Code Section	New mandatory minimum penalties
			On Summary Conviction	On Indictment
1.	Incest, against a person under 16 years of age (indictable offence)	155	n/a	5 years
2.	Bestiality	160 (3)	6 months	1 year
3.	New: Providing sexually explicit material to a child (hybrid offence)	171.1	30 days	90 days
4.	Internet luring (hybrid offence)	172.1	90 days	1 year
5.	New: Agreeing/making arrangements with another person, via telecommunication, to commit sexual offence against a child (hybrid offence)	172.2	90 days	1 year
6.	Exposure	173(2)	30 days	90 days
7.	Sexual assault, against a young person under 16 years of age (hybrid offence)	271	90 days	1 year
8.	Sexual assault with a weapon, ¹ against a young person under 16 years of age (indictable offence)	272	n/a	5 years
9.	Aggravated sexual assault, ² against a young person under 16 years of age (indictable offence)	273	n/a	5 years

¹ There is a mandatory minimum penalty for this offence if a restricted or prohibited firearm is used in connection with organized crime (5 years for first offence; 7 years for second or subsequent offence).

² There is a mandatory minimum penalty for this offence if a firearm is used (4 years).

APPENDIX B

INCREASED MANDATORY MINIMUM PENALTIES FOR EXISTING SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF CHILDREN OFFENCES
Offence		Criminal Code Section	On summary conviction	On indictment
			Increased Mandatory Minimum Penalty	Increased Mandatory Minimum Penalty
1.	Sexual interference (hybrid offence)	151	90 days	1 year
2.	Sexual touching (hybrid offence)	152	90 days	1 year
3.	Sexual exploitation (hybrid offence)	153	90 days	1 year
4.	Bestiality in the presence of or by a child	160(3)	6 months	1 year
5.	Making child pornography	163.1(2)	6 months	(No change)
6.	Distributing child pornography	163.1(3)	6 months	(No change)
7.	Possession of child pornography (hybrid offence)	163.1(4)	90 days	6 months
8.	Accessing child pornography (hybrid offence)	163.1(4.1)	90 days	6 months
9.	Parent/guardian procuring sexual activity where victim is under 16 (indictable offence)	170(a)	n/a	1 year
	Parent/guardian procuring sexual activity where victim is 16-17 (indictable offence)	170(b)	n/a	6 months
10.	Householder permitting sexual activity where victim is 16-17 (indictable offence)	171(b)	n/a	90 days

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

6.5 PROCESS FOR PRESUMPTIVELY ELIGIBLE STATUS FOR A DANGEROUS OFFENDER OR LONG TERM OFFENDER DESIGNATION

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE *DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC
PROSECUTIONS ACT

March 1, 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. BACKGROUND	2
2. SUGGESTED APPROACH.....	2

1. BACKGROUND

During initial file review, counsel should always be prepared to assess the feasibility of whether or not an offender could be declared a dangerous offender (DO) or long term offender (LTO), paying particular attention to the criteria needed by the court to make such a designation pursuant to s. 752 of the Criminal Code (Code).

On July 2, 2008, Bill C-2 came into force imposing a new duty on prosecutors in some circumstances to advise the court as soon as feasible after the finding of guilt and before sentence whether the prosecutor intends to make an application under s. 752.1 of the Code to have the offender remanded for an assessment for use as evidence in a DO or LTO application.

Section 752.01 of the Code states:

“If the prosecutor is of the opinion that an offence for which an offender is convicted is a serious personal injury offence that is a designated offence and that the offender was convicted previously at least twice of a designated offence and was sentenced to at least two years of imprisonment for each of those convictions, the prosecutor shall advise the court, as soon as feasible after the finding of guilt and in any event before sentence is imposed, whether the prosecutor intends to make an application under subsection 752.1(1).”

2. SUGGESTED APPROACH

Crown counsel are required to identify all prospective files for a possible DO or LTO designation at the bail hearing or charge screening stage as considerable time is needed for adequate preparation and information gathering.

All files identified through the National Flagging System or identified through normal file review that meet the appropriate criteria for consideration must be brought to the attention of a member of the regional management team, or designate, as soon as practicable.

A member of the regional management team or designate will review the file in accordance with applicable PPSC policies or guidelines.

Management will then assign the file to designated counsel who will be responsible for gathering and reviewing all the relevant information and documentation needed.

The designated counsel then has an ongoing obligation to keep the Chief Federal Prosecutor (CFP) fully informed as to the progress with respect to the file and the decision whether to proceed or not must be made in consultation with the CFP.

If the decision is made to proceed, the designated counsel will make an assessment application under s. 752.1 of the Code at the appropriate time after there has been a finding of guilt and before sentencing.

Once the Assessment Report has been received and reviewed, designated counsel will prepare a written memo to the CFP setting out the reasons for requesting a dangerous offender or long term offender designation.

The CFP will review the memo, sign off on it if appropriate and provide a copy of it, together with the completed Assessment Report to the appropriate Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions for his or her consideration pursuant to the PPSC Deskbook guideline “Delegated Decision-Making”.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

6.6 CHARITABLE DONATIONS

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

November 28, 2017

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. PURPOSE	2
2. POLICY STATEMENT	2
3. BACKGROUND	3
4. SUGGESTED APPROACH	3
5. PROSECUTIONS OF INDIVIDUALS	3
6. PROSECUTIONS OF ORGANIZATIONS	3
7. OFFENCES UNDER REGULATORY STATUTES – PRINCIPLES GOVERNING CHARITABLE DONATIONS	6
8. CONCLUSION	7

1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this guideline is to provide direction to Crown counsel regarding the making of charitable donations to registered charities or non-registered benevolent organizations (“charitable donations”) by offenders as an aspect of diversion or sentence.

2. POLICY STATEMENT

Donations by individual offenders to registered charities or non-registered benevolent organizations are unacceptable, as an aspect of an alternative measure for an adult or an extrajudicial sanction¹ for a young person, in exchange for a withdrawal of charges or as an aspect of sentence.

In exceptional circumstances, donations by certain kinds of organizations to registered charities or non-registered benevolent organizations are acceptable as an aspect of sentence.

Charitable donations by offenders are not specifically mentioned in the Criminal Code, the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act or the Youth Criminal Justice Act (YCJA). Except to the extent provided in this policy, Crown counsel must not agree to an offender making a charitable donation as part of the resolution of a case.

Other federal statutes may permit the making of payments as a component of alternative measures or sentence, including to organizations that may have charitable status designations. This is discussed in the sections below on Prosecutions of Organizations and Offences Under Regulatory Statutes – Principles Governing Charitable Contributions.

¹ An extrajudicial sanction under s 10 of the Youth Criminal Justice Act is similar to an alternative measure under s 717 of the Criminal Code.

3. BACKGROUND

A charitable donation may be a component of a diversion agreement², or as a condition of a probation order³ or of a conditional sentence order⁴. The common law regarding charitable donations by offenders is unsettled, and varies across Canada.⁵ The Supreme Court of Canada has not decided the issue.⁶

4. SUGGESTED APPROACH

In jurisdictions where binding legal authority permits such donations in certain contexts, Crown counsel should nevertheless indicate to the court that Crown counsel opposes charitable donations by individual offenders on policy grounds.

5. PROSECUTIONS OF INDIVIDUALS

Charitable donations by individual offenders may raise policy concerns, which have been identified in the Canadian jurisprudence and are summarized below.

Misperceptions when criminal justice system participants choose charities

As the Manitoba Court of Appeal said in R v Choi, ordering charitable donations has the potential for abuse, or at least, for the appearance of abuse, when the charity is selected by a criminal justice system participant, such as defence counsel, the Crown or the judge. “[T]he question may be asked: [W]hy did the judge pick charity X and not charity Y? Did the judge or counsel have some connection to the charity in question?”⁷

² Criminal Code, section 717(1).

³ Criminal Code, section 732.1(3)(h) or (3.1)(g).

⁴ Criminal Code, section 742.3(2)(f).

⁵ See for example R v Choi, 2013 MBCA 75 at paras 71-77, 12 WWR 711, where the five-member panel in obiter points to the inconsistency in the case law across Canada and suggests the matter is best addressed by Parliament. British Columbia, Manitoba and Northwest Territories Courts of Appeal have disapproved of charitable donations in sentences: see Choi, R v DeKleric (1968) 66 WWR 251 (BCCA), R v McMeekin (1991) NWTJ No 11 (QL), R v Wisniewski, 2002 MBCA 93, and R v Grosso, (2008) 79 WCB (2d) 198 (Sup Ct). However, Ontario and Quebec and Newfoundland have included charitable donations in sentences: R v Burnside, (2001) 54 WCB (2d) 122 (Sup Ct); R v Penney 2013 NJ No 340 (Nfld and Labrador Prov Ct); R c Leduc, 2016 QCCQ 2266 (CanLII). In Quebec, charitable donations are a regular practice of the Court, in particular when the donation is made to a CAVAC (Centre d’aide aux victimes d’actes criminels). Note that, in both R v Prokos, 1998 CanLII 12949 (QC CA) and R v M.A.F.A. Inc., [2000] OJ No 1773 (QL) (CJ), the Courts ordered a charitable donation without commenting on it. Alberta courts do not have a clear practice on the issue: see R v Russell, [1982] AJ No 421 (QL) (CA) contra R v Schell, 2002 ABQB 439 (CanLII).

⁶ In R v Ouellette, 2009 SCC 24, [2009] 1 SCR 818, a $2000 donation, divided between various charities, was an aspect of the offender’s sentence however the SCC did not comment on this aspect of the case. The focus of the SCC appeal was on the propriety of the forfeiture of the house.

⁷ See Choi, supra note 2 at para 76, point 2. See also DeKleric, supra note 2, where the appeal court deleted a trial judge’s probationary condition that the offender make a $500 donation to a Vancouver police association. Such donations, it warned, at para 7, “can lead to the greatest of abuses.” But see Burnside, supra

It is not the role of criminal justice system participants to decide how public monies collected from offenders should be re-allocated. Parliament has created other statutory mechanisms for that purpose as discussed below.

A charitable donation may create a misperception about outcomes for impecunious offenders

Permitting the offender to make a charitable donation as a condition of diversion in lieu of proceeding with a prosecution creates a risk, or at least may foster the perception, that an offender who can afford to make a charitable donation can receive a more lenient outcome than an impecunious offender, and thus “buy” his or her way out of a prosecution.⁸

In addition, since an offender must consent to an alternative measure,⁹ a charitable donation would be considered a voluntary payment and thus be income tax deductible.¹⁰ The offender, then, would receive a benefit.

A charitable donation is not an acceptable condition of a discharge

Crown counsel should not agree to a donation as a condition attached to a conditional discharge for reasons similar to those discussed above regarding alternative measures. There is a risk that an offender who can afford to make a charitable donation could receive a conditional discharge while a similarly situated impecunious offender would receive a more onerous sentence, such as the imposition of community service.¹¹

note 2, where a $300 donation to Crime Stoppers as a condition of a probation order was upheld on appeal regarding a conviction for possession of a small amount of marihuana. In the course of that ruling, Nadeau J noted with approval at paras 25 and 30 that imposing a donation as a condition of a probation order is an accepted practice in Ontario courts whether it is proposed by defence, Crown, a joint submission, or imposed by the trial judge (as was the case in Burnside). In Quebec, charitable donations are a regular practice of the Court, in particular when the donation is made to a CAVAC (Centre d’aide aux victimes d’actes criminels).

⁸ See obiter comments in the unanimous judgment of the five-member court in Choi, supra note 2 at para 76, point 1, regarding concerns about “unequal justice,” and the risk of fostering the perception “that a person who has the means to make a charitable donation may be able to obtain a discharge and no conviction or record...whereas someone without such means is not able to do so, and is therefore subject to a conviction and record.” This point was made regarding a donation as a probationary condition attached to a discharge but the same concern arises when an offender makes a charitable donation as partial or complete compliance with an alternative measure. Similar to a discharge, when the matter is resolved by way of an alternative measure, an offender avoids prosecution, a conviction and a criminal record. See also Grosso, supra note 2 at paras 14 and 15, where Langdon J expressed concern about the practice of charitable donations creating the perception of “buying justice.”

⁹ See s 717(1)(c) of the Code. Regarding the similar requirement for young persons under the YCJA, see s 10(2)(c).

¹⁰ A charity can issue an official donation receipt only for a voluntary donation. For this reason, individuals and corporations cannot claim court-ordered donations to charities for purposes of income tax credits or deductions because these donations are not considered voluntary. Court-ordered charitable donations as a condition of a probation order or conditional sentence order are more accurately characterized as penalties. In a case where the court orders the accused to make a charitable donation, despite Crown objections, Crown counsel should ask that the order include a term that the offender not claim a deduction for tax purposes. The court order should also require service of the order on the charity so that it will be aware that the donation is not voluntary.

¹¹ See the jurisprudential discussion referred to in note 5.

In addition, under the Code, it is illegal for a fine to be imposed in relation to a conditional discharge because a discharge is not a conviction. (A fine can be imposed only following a conviction.)¹² Thus, it is inappropriate and improper for a charitable donation to be ordered instead of a fine in these circumstances. This can be seen as circumventing the intent of Parliament by imposing a fine indirectly.¹³

A charitable donation is not subject to the fine regime

The objectives of a charitable donation can be more effectively satisfied through the imposition of a fine, an order of compensation, restitution, or community service.

The Code and other federal and provincial legislation provide for clear processes whereby court-ordered monies are to be collected and redistributed, a transparent process that ensures public accountability and oversight.¹⁴

A fine, for example, is a recognized sanction that is part of a statutory framework in the Code. The fine is paid to government. This permits the government to redistribute the monies based on its priorities.

The Code also provides a method of enforcing payment of fines and gives offenders time to pay, which can level the playing field among offenders of various means. There is no similar framework or oversight in the case of charitable donations by offenders.¹⁵

6. PROSECUTIONS OF ORGANIZATIONS

The principles governing individuals apply equally to for-profit organizations. However, for governments and not-for-profit organizations, a donation to a charitable organization may have a greater effect than a fine, in enhancing public confidence in the administration of justice by making apparent the direct and immediate link between the penalty and the contribution, by remedying the harm or reducing the likelihood of a similar offence by the offender or other offenders in the future.¹⁶

¹² Criminal Code, s 734.

¹³ See Grosso, supra note 2 at paras 14 and 15.

¹⁴ See the discussion in Choi, supra note 2 at para 76, points 1 and 3, outlining the statutory framework in the Code regarding fines.

¹⁵ See Choi, ibid.

¹⁶ The option to impose a charitable donation on these offenders does not raise the potential perception that arises in respect of individuals and for-profit organizations where the ability to pay may be perceived to be a factor in the Crown's position on the inclusion of a charitable donation in a sentence.

In exceptional circumstances, Crown counsel may propose a payment of money to a charitable organization as a condition of a probation order or an alternative measure provided that:

- 1) It is a prosecution of a government organization (sometimes known as an “R v R” prosecution) or a not-for-profit organization;
- 2) The statute under which the organization was charged or constituted has no restrictions on such a payment;
- 3) The appellate caselaw in the jurisdiction does not preclude such an option;¹⁷
- 4) The charitable recipient has been in existence for some time and has a track record as a responsible charitable endeavor;
- 5) The objectives of the charitable recipient are consistent with the objectives of the statute under which the charges were laid, e.g., occupational health and safety in the case of workplace safety offences;
- 6) There is no connection, personally or through family, between the Crown or any member of the investigating team, and the proposed recipient other than that of donor;
- 7) Prior approval is sought and obtained, in writing, from the DDPP or the DPP.

In all cases, this option should only be used when it is consistent with the principles of sentencing, the regulatory or legislative scheme at issue, and the interests of justice.

7. OFFENCES UNDER REGULATORY STATUTES – PRINCIPLES GOVERNING CHARITABLE DONATIONS

Some statutes, particularly those aimed at pollution control or wildlife protection, contain provisions allowing for the payment of money to an organization, as either an aspect of an alternative measure or as part of a sentencing order.¹⁸ In prosecutions under those statutes, it is appropriate for Crown counsel to join in a recommendation that a disposition by way of alternative measure include a payment to a charitable organization, where that organization’s purpose is in line with the goals of the particular statute or regulation. Similarly, it is appropriate for the Crown to support a recommendation for the payment of money to an organization as a term of an order made additional to the imposition of a fine or imprisonment, subject to the following conditions:

- The organizational recipient has been in existence for some time and has a track record as a responsible charitable endeavor;
- The objectives of the charitable recipient are consistent with the objectives of the statute under which the charges were laid e.g. conservation and protection of wildlife or the environment in the case of environmental offences; and

¹⁷ See footnotes 5 and 6.

¹⁸ For example: Canadian Environmental Protection Act, SC 1999, c 33, s 288, 289, 291(1)(o), (p) and 298; Migratory Birds Convention Act, SC 1994, c 22, s 16(1)(d.1) and (d.2); Species at Risk Act, SC 2002, c 9, ss 105(h) and (i), 108 and 109.

- There is no connection, personally or through family connection, between the Crown or any member of the investigating team, and the proposed recipient other than that of donor.

8. CONCLUSION

Crown counsel must engage in resolution discussions and conduct prosecutions in accordance with this policy.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

6.7 RESTITUTION

GUIDELINE OF THE DIRECTOR ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3(3)(c) OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS ACT

February 8, 2017

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. PURPOSE	2
2. INTRODUCTION	2
3. RESTITUTION RIGHTS UNDER THE CANADIAN VICTIMS BILL OF RIGHTS	3
4. OBTAINING AN ORDER.....	4
4.1 Standing of Victims and Role of Crown Counsel.....	4
4.2 Damages and Losses	4
4.3 Factors to consider	5
4.4 Effect on other parts of a sentence.....	6
4.5 Interplay with other Proceedings	7
4.6 Multiple Victims	7
5. CONSULTATIONS WITH VICTIMS OF CRIME.....	7
6. CROWN DISCRETION.....	8

1. PURPOSE

This guideline offers an overview of the practice and policies of the Director of Public Prosecutions relevant to restitution, particularly in light of the Canadian Victims Bill of Rights (CVBR) and amendments to the Criminal Code made in 2015.

2. INTRODUCTION

Restitution orders are made by a criminal court for an offender to pay a victim of crime a set amount which is related to the offence for which the offender has been found guilty. Restitution forms part of the sentence given to an offender. Restitution orders are distinguished in law from compensation orders, from fines and from the victim surcharge. A compensation award is a decision from a provincial or territorial body to provide a sum of money to a victim for the harm or loss related to a criminal action. Fines may form part of the sentence of an offender, but are paid by the offender to the government. These fines become part of the general revenues of the government. Victim surcharges are also paid by the offender to the government. These surcharges are directed to the provision of victim services.¹

Restitution can only be ordered when there is an identifiable victim, whether they are an individual, institution or organization. Where the loss or damage cannot be attributed to an individual or to a company and counsel is considering a monetary sanction, fines become the appropriate vehicle to include in a sentencing submission.²

3. RESTITUTION RIGHTS UNDER THE CANADIAN VICTIMS BILL OF RIGHTS

The *Canadian Victims Bill of Rights*³ created new statutory rights for victims of crime. Under this statute, a victim of crime has several rights⁴ relevant to restitution. Those rights are:

- the right to information about the criminal justice system and the case with which they are associated;
- the right to convey their views about decisions to be made to the appropriate authorities in the criminal justice system;
- the right to have the court consider making a restitution order against the offender; and
- the right to file such an order in a civil court.

The CVBR provides that these rights are brought to life by provisions of the Criminal Code which set out the criteria for obtaining a restitution order, the content of the order and the options for enforcing the order. The rights in the CVBR apply only to natural persons who have been victims of an alleged or proven offence in the Criminal Code, Drugs and Controlled Substances Act, Youth Criminal Justice Act, Immigration and Refugee Protection Act and Crimes Against Humanities and War Crimes Act.⁵

The restitution provisions of the Criminal Code apply to all Criminal Code offences and to individuals, organizations, municipalities and governments who are victims of crime. Therefore, while all victims (individuals, organizations, companies) can seek restitution orders and Courts must consider restitution orders for all offences, only natural persons

¹ See Criminal Code, section 737(7).

² Counsel should also be aware of the forfeiture provisions of the Criminal Code and consult chapter 5.3 “Proceeds of Crime” and the confidential legal memoranda section of the PPSC Deskbook.

³ Statutes of Canada 2015, c 13.

⁴ In considering these rights, it is important to note that the CVBR includes provisions (sections 21 and 22) that all other Acts are to be interpreted in a manner compatible with the provisions of the CVBR. This interpretative requirement does not apply to the Privacy Act, Official Languages Act, Canadian Bill of Rights and Access to Information Act, meaning that the CVBR is to be interpreted consistently with these four statutes but is superior to all other statutes.

⁵ See definition of victim and of offence in section 2 of the CVBR, SC 2015, c 13.

have a statutory right to a remedy if a restitution order is not considered by the Crown and the Court.

4. OBTAINING AN ORDER

4.1 Standing of Victims and Role of Crown Counsel

Restitution is sought by application made by Crown counsel, preferably using Form 34.1. As the use of this form is not mandatory by law, Crown counsel may also apply for restitution consistent with practices in a given jurisdiction. Restitution may also be ordered by the Court on its own motion or included in joint submissions on sentence to the Court.

The CVBR gives victims the right to have the court consider making an order for restitution. Victims of crime do not have standing to request restitution on their own motion and must work through Crown counsel to make a request for restitution. The CVBR has not changed the standing of victims to initiate a restitution application. Therefore, in order to give full effect to the victim's right to have the court consider making a restitution order as provided in the CVBR, Crown counsel must give due consideration to any request from a victim for restitution.

Amendments to the Criminal Code impose obligations on prosecutors and Courts to assist victims in exercising their rights to request restitution. Firstly, Crown counsel must be prepared to respond to the obligatory inquiry by the Court about whether a victim has been given the opportunity to request restitution.⁶ Secondly, where a victim has not been given such an opportunity, the Court may, on application of the prosecutor or on its own motion, adjourn sentencing to allow the victim to do so.

Counsel should be aware that, in large prosecutions such as frauds, law enforcement assistance or third party resources might be needed to identify and contact victims of the offence(s). These arrangements should be made at an early point in the prosecution.

4.2 Damages and Losses

The Criminal Code provides that a restitution order may be ordered in any of the following:

- (a) in cases of damage, loss or destruction of the property of any person as a result of the commission of the offence or the arrest or attempted arrest of the offender, for an amount not exceeding the value of damaged property (less the value of any property returned to the victim);
- (b) in cases of bodily or psychological harm to any person as a result of the commission of the offence or the arrest or attempted arrest of the offender, for an amount not exceeding all pecuniary damages incurred;

⁶ See Criminal Code, s 737.1(1) and (2).

- (c) in cases of bodily harm or threat of bodily harm to the offender's spouse or common-law partner or child, or any other person where the spouse or common-law partner, child or other person was a member of the offender's household at the relevant time, for an amount not exceeding reasonable moving expenses, including temporary housing, food, child care and transportation;
- (d) for expenses to replace identity documents and to correct credit history and credit rating in the case of an offence under section 402.2 or 403; and
- (e) for expenses to remove the intimate image from the Internet or other digital network in the case of an offence under subsection 162.1(1).⁷

Generally, restitution orders are sought for Criminal Code offences where there are victims named in the charge. However, Crown counsel must be mindful that restitution may be relevant to other types of cases such as offences under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act or other crimes that do not identify victims in the charge. For example, dangerous driving charges will not normally name a victim even though property or physical damages may have resulted from the alleged offence. Trafficking or production of drugs may result in damages and losses to an identifiable victim, such property damage or destruction through a grow-op, or physical injury or death to a person who consumed an illicit drug.

In all cases, the amount claimed in the application for restitution must be readily ascertainable. The mere fact of a dispute of the amount or of the application for restitution does not constitute a reason to deny the application.⁸ However, incomplete or varying information, the necessity of complicated calculations, or a clear dispute on fundamental factual issues may be the basis for the court to reduce or deny a restitution order.⁹

A restitution order can be made for the total or a partial amount of the loss.¹⁰ Restitution orders cannot include amounts for pain and suffering nor actuarial or legal costs related to the determination of the loss.¹¹

4.3 Factors to consider

In deciding whether to include restitution in any submissions on sentencing, Crown counsel must be governed by the Criminal Code sections on restitution as well as sections 718, 718.1 and 718.2. These provisions were changed in 2015 to give new emphasis to the harm caused by crime to victims and to society. Courts have found that restitution

⁷ See Criminal Code, s 738(1).

⁸ See R v Ghislieri, 25 AR 465 (ABCA); R v Bullen, 2001 YKTC 504.

⁹ See R v Semeniuk, 2004 BCCA 233, R v Dunlop 2006 NSSC 311 (NSCA).

¹⁰ See R v Rusanov, 2006 SKQB 491, R v Eizenga, 2011 ONCA 113.

¹¹ See R v Bullen 2001 YKTC 504.

orders may give effect to many of the principles of sentence: denunciation, specific and general deterrence and rehabilitation.¹²

In addition, Crown counsel should consider the following factors in their decision to make an application for restitution:

- the severity of the offence;
- the degree to which the offender is responsible for the loss or damage;
- the connection between the offence and the loss of the victim;
- the blameworthiness of the offender;
- the offender's financial means or ability to pay now or at a reasonably ascertainable future date;¹³
- whether the amount of loss is entirely or partially readily ascertainable;
- the impact of the restitution order on the offender's rehabilitation;
- whether other sentencing options are paramount; and
- any aggravating factors, such as where a breach of trust was involved in the offence or where significant planning and deliberation were involved.¹⁴

In all cases, Crown counsel must ensure that their submissions on sentence respect the principles and objectives of sentencing.

4.4 Effect on other parts of a sentence

Appellate courts have consistently held that restitution orders are only one part of an appropriate sentence. However, these appellate courts have varied in their views about the effect of a restitution order on other parts of a sentence, usually incarceration. Generally, the effect of a restitution order will be to reduce the severity of other parts of the sentence (for example, to reduce a period of incarceration) except for the most serious offences.¹⁵

Crown counsel should consider any payment of restitution prior to sentence and the willingness to enter into a restitution agreement at sentence as factors that may lead the

¹² R v Yates, 2002 BCCA 583; R v Fitzgibbon, 1990 1 SCR 1005; R v Spellacy, (1995) 131 Nfld & PEIR 127; R v Castro 2010 ONCA 718.

¹³ See Criminal Code, section 739.2 which codified appellate court decisions that the offender's capacity to pay at the time of sentencing does not prevent the Court from making a restitution order.

¹⁴ See R v Cadieux 2004 ABCA 98; R v Yates, 2002 BCCA 583.

¹⁵ See R v Dennis, 2010 ABCA 36; R v Quinlan, 1999 CanLII 18952 (NFCA); R v Veno, 2012 NBCA 15; R v Smolyar, 2003 ONCA 4056; 27612; R v Lord, 2011 BCCA 47; R v Zenari, 2012 ABCA 279; R v Green 2013 NWTSC 20; R v Siemens 1999 CanLII 18651.

Court to limit the other parts of an appropriate sentence. Any applications by the Crown for restitution must be made on an evidentiary basis considering the facts of each case and the application of the principles of sentencing (totality, rehabilitation, specific and general deterrence).

4.5 Interplay with other Proceedings

The existence of pending or completed civil proceedings to recover the amount of the losses, as well as to seek pecuniary damages for pain and sufferings is not a bar to an application nor to the granting of a restitution order.¹⁶ Similarly, applications or awards from provincial compensation programs are not a bar to an application or a restitution order, but such awards could affect the quantum of a restitution order. Victims have obligations to report restitution orders or receipt of restitution funds to both civil processes and to compensation programs.

4.6 Multiple Victims

Where there are multiple victims, the Criminal Code provides that a restitution order may be made out to several victims, with an apportioning of the amounts due to each one. Furthermore, the order may contain a priority ranking to each amount due.¹⁷ In addition, various cases have clarified that restitution orders may be made against several offenders who participated in the same offence.¹⁸ Courts must ensure; however, that restitution orders in such cases are consistent with the principles of sentencing (for example, proportionality between offenders, blameworthiness of offenders, etc.).

5. CONSULTATIONS WITH VICTIMS OF CRIME

Consultations with victims of crime have taken a new importance with the enactment of the Canadian Victims Bill of Rights. Most justice system participants have new responsibilities in relation to the rights of victims under the CVBR.

In the territories, Crown counsel must work with Crown Witness Coordinators (CWCs) to provide information to victims about the prospect of restitution. CWCs also act as liaisons between Crown counsel and victims. They are available to help victims and witnesses to understand the court process, their rights and responsibilities in the process and the roles of the court participants. They provide court updates, accompany witnesses to court, provide support during and after testimony, and assist with trial preparation.

In the provinces, Crown counsel must take steps to provide victims with such information and may wish to work with provincial victim and witness services towards that end. All conversations with victims and Crown counsel or victims services undertaken to satisfy these requirements should be documented in the case file.

¹⁶ See R v Zelensky, 1978 2 SCR 940; R v Perciballi, 2001 CanLII 13394 (ON CA).

¹⁷ See Criminal Code, s 739.3.

¹⁸ See R v Eizenga, 2011 ONCA 113, R v Siemens (1999) 136 CCC (3d) 353, R v Popert 2010 ONCA 89.

As first responders, law enforcement has a role in assisting victims of crime to realize their CVBR rights. In addition, many police forces have integrated victim services or work with local or provincial victim service bodies to provide assistance to victims. Crown counsel should be aware of the collaborative arrangement in their area in order to be able to advise the Court of any assistance that has been offered to victims of crime throughout the criminal justice process. Crown counsel should request the collaboration of law enforcement, where necessary, to advise victims of their rights at an early point in the criminal justice process and to remind victims of the need for receipts, work orders or invoices that may substantiate and quantify future claims for restitution.

Courts also have new responsibilities regarding victims of crime following the 2015 Criminal Code amendments. In regards to restitution, the Criminal Code imposes several obligations: firstly, to consider including a restitution order in sentencing for all offences; and secondly, after a finding of guilty, to ask Crown counsel if reasonable steps have been taken to provide victims with an opportunity to indicate if they wish to seek restitution.¹⁹ Accordingly, Crown counsel or Crown Witness Coordinators should, at an early point in the prosecution, make reasonable efforts to find out if a victim of an offence desires information on restitution and whether they wish to seek restitution. This early discussion will have the benefit of encouraging a victim to compile the receipts, work orders or inventories that will support an application for restitution and assist Crown counsel in avoiding any delays or adjournments related to this information from a victim. It will also allow Crown counsel to include restitution in any resolution offers.

6. CROWN DISCRETION

The role of Crown counsel changes subtly after the presumption of innocence has been refuted by a finding of guilt after trial or a guilty plea. In making submissions on sentence, Crown counsel must be mindful of their role in articulating the principles of sentencing. Specifically, the sentence must reflect the impact of the offence on the community and the victim. Crown counsel must consult the PPSC Deskbook chapter 3.7 on resolution discussions.

It is within Crown counsel's discretion to decide whether to apply for restitution based on the application of the factors mentioned above to the evidence. In all circumstances, Crown counsel should ensure that, during sentencing submissions, the court is proactively advised whether the victim had requested that restitution be sought by the Crown and, where restitution is not being sought, provide the Crown's reasons for not seeking restitution.

¹⁹ See Criminal Code, ss 737.1(1) and (2).

Tab 162

Crown Prosecution Manual

The Crown Prosecution Manual contains information on the criminal process and the role of Prosecutors in the criminal justice system. It is also used by the Attorney General to provide direction to Prosecutors.

Preamble to the Prosecution Manual

Prosecution Manual

The legal framework for decisions made by Prosecutors is provided by the Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) , other federal legislation and legal decisions of courts. It is also necessary in the public interest to have uniform prosecution policies applicable across the province in order to assist and guide Prosecutors in the exercise of their discretion. Prosecution policies provide mandatory direction, advice and guidance to Prosecutors on the exercise of prosecutorial discretion.

In Ontario, prosecution policies are issued by the Attorney General through the issuance of Directives. The Directives, as a whole, constitute Ontario's Prosecution Manual. Directives provide consistency of approach to prosecutions across Ontario and typically relate to a particular category of cases (e.g. impaired driving or intimate partner violence) or to a specific prosecutorial issue (e.g. judicial interim release (bail)). The Directives also provide the public with an indication of the guiding principles for Prosecutors, enhancing accountability and transparency.

Prosecutors are required to familiarize themselves with the contents of the Prosecution Manual and must follow the mandatory direction, advice and guidance as set out in the Directives when making decisions in cases. The Directives are not intended to replace the sound judgement that Prosecutors exercise. Prosecutors are expected to exercise their discretion in accordance with the overall priorities in the Manual, keeping in mind the need to see justice done in individual cases. Directives which bind the discretion of the Prosecutor in the conduct of individual cases are few and far between. There will be decisions made daily by Prosecutors that are not specifically described in the Directives. In general, Prosecutors should exercise their discretion in keeping with the spirit of the Directives and their duties as local Ministers of Justice.

The role of the Attorney General

The Attorney General of Ontario occupies a unique dual position – as both the Minister of Justice for the provincial government and as the Chief Law Officer of the Crown. The Attorney General is a minister and member of Cabinet. The responsibilities of the Attorney General extend beyond those of other Cabinet ministers [Roles and Responsibilities of the Attorney General].

Under the Canadian constitution the federal government is responsible for the creation of criminal law, and the provinces are responsible for the administration of justice. As Chief Law Officer in Ontario, the Attorney General is responsible for the administration of justice, including the prosecution of individuals charged with criminal and regulatory offences. The Attorney General must carry out the prosecutorial responsibilities based on objective, legal criteria, independent of any political considerations that may arise in any particular criminal case or area of criminal policy.

It is extremely rare for an Attorney General to become involved in decision-making in individual prosecutions. Decisions in individual prosecutions are made by the Prosecutors who act as agents for the Attorney General. The Prosecutors are part of the Criminal Law Division under the Ministry of the Attorney General.

In the event that the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General seeks to provide instructions to the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division on the conduct of a particular criminal prosecution or appeal that direction must be given in writing and must be published in a publicly accessible electronic forum. The publication of any such direction may be delayed by the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division, if the publication of the direction would interfere with the interests of justice.

Where the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General provides their personal consent to a prosecution-related matter as required under the Criminal Code, that consent will be filed with the relevant court or tribunal and will thereby be publicly accessible.

As with a particular prosecution or appeal, it is equally important that the development of criminal policy that relates to the prosecution of a category of cases or to specific prosecutorial issues also be free from political influence. Where the Attorney General seeks to provide specific direction to the Deputy Attorney General and the Criminal Law Division as it relates to the prosecution of a category of cases, specific prosecutorial issues or criminal policy that specific direction will be in writing. The applicable Directive will be revised (or newly posted) and the 'new' content will be clearly identified.

The publication of any such direction promotes the paramount goals of openness and transparency. Transparency avoids allegations of improper political influence that, even unfounded, can have significant adverse implications for the Attorney General, the government and public confidence in the criminal justice system.

The role of the Prosecutor

Prosecutors are appointed to act as 'agents' for the Attorney General and in turn, make the vast majority of prosecution-related decisions. Prosecutors have significant discretion to conduct cases in a way that ensures justice is done and is responsive to the particular circumstance of a case. When exercised fairly and impartially, prosecutorial discretion is an essential component of the criminal justice system.

The independence of the Attorney General advances the public interest by enabling Prosecutors to exercise considerable prosecutorial discretion and properly fulfill their quasi-judicial role as ministers of justice without fear of political influence.

The Prosecutor must act with objectivity, independence and fairness in each case to ensure timely and principled decision making based on the circumstances of the accused and the alleged offence and an appropriate use of legal principles without outside pressure or considerations. Decisions made by Prosecutors in the proper exercise of their discretion will be supported by the Attorney General.

The Prosecutor should not consider the personal feelings of any official involved in the prosecution about the alleged victim or the accused, the potential political advantage or disadvantage that might flow from the decision to undertake or stop a prosecution, or the possible effect on the personal or professional circumstances of anyone connected to the exercise of prosecutorial discretion.

Prosecutors are dedicated to enhancing public safety and to promoting public confidence in the administration of justice and the rule of law. As representatives of the Attorney General, Prosecutors act with integrity to protect the interests of all Ontarians through fair, effective and efficient prosecutions.

Acting as "advocate"

Public confidence in the administration of criminal justice is strengthened by a system where Prosecutors are not only strong and effective advocates for the prosecution but also Ministers of Justice with a duty to ensure that the criminal justice system operates fairly to all: the accused, victims of crime and the public. A Prosecutor's role excludes any notion of winning or losing. A Prosecutor's responsibilities are public in nature. As a Prosecutor and a public representative, demeanor and actions should be fair, dispassionate and moderate; show no signs of bias; and be open to the possibility of the innocence of the accused person.

Prosecutors have a responsibility to ensure that every prosecution is carried out in a manner consistent with the public interest. The Prosecutor must remain objective and be aware of the negative impact of stereotypes. In particular, stereotypes relating to race or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, political association or beliefs of the accused or any person involved in the case must be rejected.

Relationship with the police

Police officers have a responsibility and discretion over the investigation of a criminal offence and the laying of criminal charges except where the consent of the Attorney General is required by statute. While both the police and the Prosecutors exercise discretion independently and objectively, the relationship between the investigative service and the prosecutorial service is one of cooperation and mutual reliance.

Relationship with victims

Prosecutors owe special duties of candour and respect to all victims. The Prosecutor is not, and can never, function as the victim's lawyer. Prosecutors must display sensitivity, fairness and compassion in their dealings with victims. In circumstances where the fair and impartial exercise of prosecutorial discretion is at odds with the victim's desires, the Prosecutor should be sensitive but realistic and candid with the victim.

Prosecutors must ensure that efforts are made that victims are provided with all relevant information that allows for full and fair participation in criminal proceedings. Prosecutors also have an important role to play in identifying victims who may require assistance to fully access the criminal justice system, or to communicate their evidence to the court.

Words and phrases

General Guidelines Concerning Interpretation

In the Manual, the following general guidelines apply:

- 1) a word importing a masculine gender includes the feminine gender, and a word importing a feminine gender includes the masculine gender
- 2) a word in the singular includes the plural, and a word in the plural includes the singular
- 3) where a word is defined, other parts of speech and tenses of the same word have corresponding meaning

Specific Definitions

In the Manual, except where the context requires otherwise, each of the following words and phrases has the corresponding meaning that is set out below:

“accused” refers to a person charged with an offence and alleged to have committed an offence

“approval” means receiving prior permission, absent exceptional circumstances

“Attorney General” means the principal law officer of “the Prosecution service”; the Minister of the provincial government responsible for the administration of justice

“Crown Attorney” means the Crown Attorney of a particular jurisdiction

“Director” means the Director of Crown Operations of a particular region, the Director of the Crown Law Office – Criminal or the Director of Guns and Gangs

“designate” means the approval function has been delegated to experienced counsel who were selected and approved by the appropriate supervisor

“exceptional circumstances” are those where public safety including that of specific victims or overall public interest is better served by departing from the recommended course of action and includes unusual or unique situations arising in criminal prosecutions, many of them unforeseeable; issues relating to expediency or complexity do not constitute exceptional circumstances

“may” indicates that there is an issue that must be considered or a discretion to exercise, and that decision or action may, or may not, be taken

“must” indicates a mandatory direction made by the Attorney General

“must, absent exceptional circumstances” means that the Attorney General’s policy strongly leans toward the suggested course of action, but takes into account the unique situations that arise in criminal prosecutions

“must obtain approval from...” signifies an action or decision that requires supervisory permission received prior to the action or decision being made, absent exceptional circumstances

“offender” means a person who has been determined by a court to be guilty of an offence, whether on acceptance of a plea of guilty or on a finding of guilt

“Prosecutor” means counsel responsible for criminal and quasi-criminal prosecutions and related matters on behalf of the Attorney General, and includes outside prosecutors and per diem prosecutors

“shall” reflects a legal requirement relating to a statutory obligation

“should” indicates that there is an expectation that a task will be carried out, but recognizes that it may not always be possible or desirable to do so in the particular circumstance

D. 1: Appeals

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) creates the rights of appeal to all levels of court, for both an accused and the Attorney General. Anyone convicted of an offence may appeal conviction and/or sentence. The Criminal Code also provides the Attorney General with a right to appeal acquittals, orders for stays, and sentences in certain circumstances.

The appeal process in each level of court is governed by rules created for that specific court. Appeals from summary conviction matters are first heard in the Superior Court of Justice. In some cases, there is a further right of appeal, from the Superior Court to the Court of Appeal of Ontario. Appeals from indictable matters are heard in the Court of Appeal of Ontario. In limited circumstances, a decision of the Court of Appeal may be appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada.

When a case is being appealed, the appellate Prosecutor must notify the Prosecutor who conducted the trial (or who conducted the summary conviction appeal) of significant steps in the appeal proceedings before the case is heard in court. The appellate Prosecutor also must ensure that efforts are made to advise the victim of significant steps in the appeal proceedings before the case is heard in court. Reference should be made to the Victims Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) .

Crown appeals

The Criminal Code provides the Attorney General with a right to appeal in some circumstances, and sets out the legal criteria that shall be met. No Crown appeal may be approved unless it is in the public interest to fix the error and the legal basis for an appeal has been satisfied:

- in the case of indictable appeals to the Ontario Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of Canada, the proposed appeal must involve an error of law alone
- in the case of summary conviction appeals, the proposed appeal can be based on a question of fact, or mixed fact and law, or an error of law alone
- the verdict would not necessarily have been the same if the error had not been made or
- in the case of a sentence appeal, the sentence that was imposed was demonstrably unfit, illegal or the result of an error in principle.

Prudence, restraint and a careful attention to the public interest are important principles that guide the Attorney General in reaching a decision whether or not to launch any appeal. Not every unfavourable ruling, judgment or sentence can or should be appealed. Even if the strict legal criteria for an appeal is met, a Crown appeal will not be commenced unless a thorough and considered review of the circumstances of the case, the state of the law, and the public interest has been conducted. The following factors inform such determinations:

1. the safety and security of the public, having particular regard to the seriousness of the offence and the future dangers posed by the offender
2. the importance of the legal issue raised

3. the current state of the law on the issue being raised
4. the importance of the factual issue(s), if raised on a summary conviction appeal, having regard for the impact of the finding in the particular jurisdiction
5. the effect of the legal error on public confidence in the criminal justice system if it is left to stand
6. deference to the jury's verdict and the recognition that it will not be lightly set aside by an appellate court
7. whether the trial record provides a suitable basis upon which to raise the issues on appeal
8. the strength of the Crown's case and whether it may have deteriorated by the time a new trial is ordered or whether the Crown intends to proceed with a new trial.
Generally, it will not be in the public interest to appeal an acquittal where there is no expectation that the Crown will proceed with a new trial
9. whether there is a reasonable prospect that the appeal will be successful.

Obtaining approval for crown appeals

As a general rule, summary conviction appeals are dealt with by the Crown Attorney's office in the jurisdiction where the trial took place. The Prosecutor who conducted the trial must obtain approval for an appeal to the Superior Court of Justice from her Crown Attorney or designate. In the case of trials of summary conviction matters that were prosecuted by counsel from the Crown Law Office – Criminal, approval for a summary conviction appeal to the Superior Court of Justice must be obtained from the Director or designate.

All requests for a Crown appeal to the Court of Appeal for Ontario must, absent exceptional circumstances have the approval of either the Crown Attorney or the Director for the jurisdiction where the trial took place, or their designate. The request must be made in writing to the Director of Crown Law Office – Criminal who will decide whether the proposed appeal should be launched.

Following an unsuccessful Crown appeal or a successful defence appeal, the Attorney General may seek a further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. The appellate Prosecutor who conducted the appeal in the Court of Appeal for Ontario must obtain the approval for an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from the Director of Crown Law Office - Criminal.

Timelines

Strict time lines that are set out in the rules govern all appeals. There are some differences in the timelines depending on the nature of the appeal, who is the appellant and the court to which the appeal is being filed. In limited circumstances, the Court may extend these timelines.

For Crown appeals to the Superior Court of Justice and the Court of Appeal for Ontario, from an acquittal, an order staying the trial, or a sentence, the appellate Prosecutor shall serve the notice of appeal within 30 days of the date of the decision being appealed.

All notices of appeal of a mental disorder disposition shall be served within 15 days of the date of receipt of the reasons for the disposition.

Publication bans

The appellate Prosecutor must ensure compliance with any publication bans imposed, whether by statute or otherwise, by court order.

Responding to defence appeals

The Criminal Code provides a broad right of appeal to an accused from conviction and sentence. Defence appeals can be brought with or without a lawyer. Each jurisdiction, or level of court, may have specific procedures and rules that govern appeals brought by unrepresented appellants who are in custody.

Judicial interim release pending an appeal

An appellant who has been sentenced to a period of custody may apply to be released from custody pending appeal, in accordance with the relevant legislation.

The appellate Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made to notify the Prosecutor who conducted the trial (or the summary conviction appeal), when the appellate Prosecutor is notified of an application for judicial interim release pending appeal.

The appellate Prosecutor also must ensure that efforts are made to advise the victim when an application for judicial interim release pending appeal has been made and advised of the outcome of the hearing. The appellate Prosecutor should consider the directions set out in the Victims Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) .

Conceding appeals

The appellate Prosecutor may concede an appeal only where no reasonable argument can be made to sustain the verdict and/or sentence, after a comprehensive and rigorous analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of the case. In addition, the appellate Prosecutor must be satisfied that fairness and the interests of justice are best served by a concession. Although the Court will give the concession considerable weight, it is not bound to accept a concession.

In all cases, before conceding a defence appeal, the appellate Prosecutor must, absent exceptional circumstances, consult with the Prosecutor who had carriage of the trial or the summary conviction appeal.

In the case of a summary conviction appeal, the appellate Prosecutor must obtain the approval for the concession from the Director, or where delegated the Crown Attorney or the Supervisor of the Summary Conviction Appeals Office. For an indictable appeal, the appellate Prosecutor must obtain the approval for the concession from the Director of Crown Law Office - Criminal.

This requirement for approval to concede an appeal applies equally where the appellate Prosecutor concludes that there was a Charter violation and there is no reasonable argument that can be made against the granting of a Charter remedy.

Concessions of unconstitutionality

Striking down a piece of legislation (provincial or federal) or common law rule as unconstitutional has broad implications for the administration of justice. Only in rare circumstances will it be appropriate for the Prosecutor to concede that a statutory provision or common law rule is inconsistent with the Constitution and cannot be saved as a reasonable limit under the Charter.

In all cases whether trial or appeal, a Prosecutor must obtain the approval of the Deputy Attorney General before conceding that a statute or common law rule is unconstitutional, regardless of whether reliance will be made on section 1 of the Charter.

D. 2: Attorney General Consents and Delegations

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: October 3, 2018

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) directs that certain criminal proceedings or procedures can be commenced or undertaken only with the consent of the Attorney General. The Attorney General grants broad areas of discretion in criminal proceedings to Prosecutors, his agents, except in those specific circumstances where the law requires the personal consent of the Attorney General.

The Criminal Code defines the Attorney General as including his lawful Deputy. The Attorney General and his delegates exercise discretion in a fair and conscientious manner unaffected by irrelevant considerations, prejudice or partisan motives. Individual cases are assessed objectively and dispassionately. The public interest in the effective enforcement of the criminal law is the paramount consideration in making decisions to consent or refuse to consent.

Attorney General consent

The Attorney General's consent has not been delegated and is required in the following circumstances:

- initiating a dangerous offender or long-term offender application
- directing an indictment
- initiating a prosecution for advocating genocide
- initiating a prosecution for wilfully promoting hatred
- seizing hate propaganda
- providing an undertaking for suspected proceeds of crime, valued at greater than two million dollars
- the negotiation for a remediation agreement with an organization alleged to have committed an offence
- designating wiretap agents to obtain wiretap authorizations
- extending wiretap notification periods
- recommencing a prosecution where jurisdiction has been lost
- overriding an accused's election and directing a jury trial

Power to delegate

The Attorney General has the power to delegate his authority and, in certain instances, has delegated consent and power to the Assistant Deputy Attorney General, the Directors, Crown Attorneys or to Prosecutors in the Criminal Law Division.

In all instances where the Attorney General has delegated consent and power, the decisions are made in the same way, and on the same basis, that the Attorney General exercises this discretion. Once the Attorney General delegates authority, the delegate must exercise the power personally and must not delegate any further.

Where the consent of the Attorney General or delegate is required the Prosecutor must follow the process and procedures mandated by the relevant Directives (e.g. Direct Indictments (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-9-direct-indictments>) , Hate Propaganda and Hate Motivated Offences (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-16-hate-propaganda-and-hate-motivated-offences>) , Dangerous/Long-term Offenders (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-8-dangerous-long-term-offenders>)).

Where the consent of the Attorney General or his delegate is received to initiate a prosecution, the Prosecutor must notify the Assistant Deputy Attorney General-Criminal Law Division in order to seek prior approval prior to withdrawing or staying the prosecution.

Delegation of Attorney General consents

The following delegations hereby replace all prior delegations as they relate to the specific legislative provisions referred to below. These delegations are to continue to apply in the event that these provisions may be amended or re-numbered in the future.

I hereby delegate my powers under:

Provisions under the Criminal Code

(Description/Delegation)

s. 7(4.3): Proceedings with offences listed in s.7(4.1) (e.g. sexual tourism offences)
Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

ss. 83.24; 83.12: Proceeding with terrorism offence or an offence to terrorist property

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 83.28(3): Application for the gathering of information relating to terrorism offence

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 83.3(1): Laying an information for recognizance with conditions relating to terrorism

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 136(3): Initiating prosecution for giving contradictory evidence

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

ss. 164(7); 164.1(8): Proceedings following court-ordered seizure, forfeiture and/or destruction of obscene materials, crime comics, child pornography or voyeuristic recordings

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 172(4): Initiating prosecution for corrupting children

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 174(3): Initiating prosecution for public nudity

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 283(2): Prosecution for child abduction, whether or not there is a custody order

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division and, only in emergency situations, to Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal.

s. 342(2): Initiating a prosecution for credit card offences in Ontario where offence occurs outside Ontario

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 347(7): Prosecution for charging a criminal interest rate

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 385(2): Prosecution for fraudulently concealing title documents

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 402.2(4): Initiating a prosecution for identity theft/trafficking in identity information where offence occurs outside Ontario

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 422(3): Prosecution for criminal breach of contract

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 462.32(4.1): To permit a peace officer who has seized property via warrant to return same to the lawful owner

Director of Asset Management – Criminal, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

ss. 462.32(6); 462.33(7): Providing undertakings for search warrants and restraint orders (i.e. seizing or restraining property believed to be proceeds of crime and subject to forfeiture)

Where undertaking is less than $2 million: Director of Asset Management – Criminal, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

Where undertaking is greater than $2 million: Not delegated – personal consent of Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General required.

s. 462.331(1): To permit a person, other than the Attorney General, to apply to a judge for the appointment of a manager of seized property

Director of Asset Management – Criminal, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 462.34(2)(a): With respect to any property seized or restrained, on application of the Attorney General or any other person with the written consent of the Attorney General is required to abridge the time for notifying of a review

Director of CLO – Criminal, Deputy Directors of CLO – Criminal, Director of Asset Management – Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 462.42(6): Return of property by judicial order declaring interest not subject to forfeiture

Director of CLO – Criminal, Director of Asset Management – Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 462.48(2): Affidavit for application under s. 462.48(1.1) (re. disclosure of income tax information)

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 473(1): If the accused and the Attorney General consent, a trial for a s. 469 offence may be tried by a superior court judge alone

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 473(2): Withdrawing consent provided under s. 473(1) to a trial by a superior court judge alone where an accused is charged with a s. 469 offence

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 478(3)(b): Transferring charges to another province for a guilty plea

Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General –

Criminal Law Division.

s. 479(b): Transferring a guilty plea to an offence not listed in s. 469 to another jurisdiction within Ontario

Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 490.02902: SOIRA order for accused convicted outside Canada

Deputy Director of High Risk Offenders of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal, and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 579(1): Staying Proceedings (i.e. Crown stay)

All Crown counsel, Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Directors of Crown Operations, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal, and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

Where an offence has resulted in death, Crown counsel must obtain the approval of the Crown Attorney, Director, or the Deputy Director, as the case may be.

s. 579(2): Recommencing proceedings within one year from the time of the stay under s.579(1) (i.e. Crown stay)

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of the CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

All Crown counsel only if reason is an accused's failure to comply with diversion, alternative measures or restorative justice.

s. 672.81(1.1): Extension of review periods for mandatory Review Board disposition reviews (from 12 to maximum of 24 months)

All Crown counsel, Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Directors of Crown Operations, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 672.81(1.31): Extension of review periods for mandatory Review Board disposition reviews in cases of high-risk accused

All Crown counsel, Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Directors of Crown Operations, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 672.86(1)(b): Interprovincial transfer of accused in custody or directed to attend hospital pursuant to court or Review Board order

Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 672.86(2): Authorized officer must sign warrant for interprovincial transfer of in-custody accused

Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 672.86(2.1)(b): Interprovincial transfer of out-of-custody accused

Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

ss. 725(1)(b); 725(1)(b.1): With the consent of the Attorney General and the offender, a sentencing judge may take into account other outstanding charges

All Crown counsel, Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Directors of Crown Operations, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 733(1.1)(a): Interprovincial transfer of probation orders

Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 733.1(2): Initiating a prosecution in Ontario for a breach of probation that took place in another province

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 742.5(1.1)(a): Transferring a conditional sentence order to another province

Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 742.6(3.2)(a): Initiating a prosecution in Ontario for a breach of a conditional sentence that took place in another province

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 753.3(2): Initiating a prosecution in Ontario for a breach of a long-term supervision order that took place in another province

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 803(3): Proceeding in prosecution for failing to appear where the original trial proceeded in the absence of the accused

Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 810.01(1): Initiating a recognizance where there is fear that a criminal organization or terrorism offence will be committed

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 810.2(1): Initiating a recognizance where there is fear that a serious personal injury offence will be committed

Deputy Director of High Risk Offenders - CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 810.22(2)(a) Transfer of peace bond to another province made under s. 83.3 and 810 to 810.2

Deputy Director of High Risk Offenders – CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General.

Provisions under the Youth Criminal Justice Act

(Description/Delegation)

s. 14(3): Prosecution beyond limitation period prohibited without consent of accused and Attorney General

Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Directors of Crown Operations, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 57(1): Transfer of youth sentence to another territorial division

All Crown counsel, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Crown Attorneys, Directors of Crown Operations, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 57(3): Transfer of youth sentence of a young person to a province in which youth is an adult

Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Directors of Crown Operations, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 133: Transferring charges to another province for a plea

Crown Attorneys, Deputy Crown Attorneys, Directors of Crown Operations, Deputy Directors of CLO-Criminal, Director of CLO-Criminal and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

Miscellaneous matters (related statutes)

(Description/Delegation)

s. 102.1(2) of the Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act: disinterment of a body ordered by the Attorney General, Solicitor General, or a delegate

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 7 of the Visiting Forces Act (R.S.C. 1985, c.V-2) and s.3 of the Visiting Forces Regulations (C.R.C., c. 1598): Transferring jurisdiction to prosecute offences committed by foreign military personnel while on Canadian soil

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

s. 79(4) of the Police Services Act: prosecution for intimidating complainants, obstructing Independent Police Review Director, or providing false information

Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

D. 3: Charge Screening

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

A charge may only proceed if there is a reasonable prospect of conviction and it is in the public interest. The appropriate exercise of prosecutorial discretion is fundamental to the proper application of the charge screening standard. The community relies upon Prosecutors to pursue charges that can be proven while protecting individuals from the serious repercussions of a criminal charge where there is no reasonable prospect of conviction.

Deciding to continue or terminate a prosecution can be one of the most difficult decisions a Prosecutor can make. The Prosecutor must act with objectivity, independence and fairness in each case to ensure a principled decision is made. It requires a balancing of competing interests including the interests of the public, the accused and the victim.

The charge screening obligation is ongoing as Prosecutors receive new information in preparation for and during the conduct of bail hearings, pre-trials, preliminary hearings, trials and appeals. Any new information received during or after all appeals have been exhausted should be forwarded to the Director of Crown Law Office – Criminal.

Decisions made by Prosecutors about whether to continue or terminate a prosecution made in the proper exercise of their discretion will be supported by the Attorney General.

Reasonable prospect of conviction

When considering whether to continue the prosecution of a charge, the Prosecutor should determine if there is a reasonable prospect of conviction. This standard must be applied to all cases and at all stages. If at any stage of the proceeding, the Prosecutor determines there is no longer a reasonable prospect of conviction, the prosecution must be discontinued.

The reasonable prospect of conviction standard is higher than a prima facie case that merely requires that there is evidence whereby a jury, properly instructed, could convict. On the other hand, the standard does not require "a probability of conviction," that is, a conclusion that a conviction is more likely than not. The term reasonable prospect of conviction denotes a middle ground between these two standards. It requires the exercise of prosecutorial judgment and discretion based on objective indicators found in the case itself.

Applying the reasonable prospect of conviction standard requires a limited assessment of credibility based on objective factors, an assessment of the admissibility of evidence and a consideration of likely defences.

In applying the standard, Prosecutors should consider the following factors:

- the availability of evidence
- the admissibility of evidence implicating the accused
- an assessment of the credibility and competence of witnesses, without taking on the role of the trier of fact
- the availability of any evidence supporting any defences that should be known or that have come to the attention of the Prosecutor.

Public interest

If there is a reasonable prospect of conviction, the Prosecutor must then consider whether it is in the public interest to continue the prosecution. The public interest factors must only be considered after it is determined there is a reasonable prospect of conviction. No public interest, however compelling, can warrant the prosecution of an individual if there is no reasonable prospect of conviction.

When deciding whether to prosecute or discontinue the prosecution a number of public interest factors should be considered. No one factor is determinative when assessing the public interest, but consideration should be given to:

1. the gravity or relative seriousness of the incident
2. circumstances and views of the victim including any safety concerns
3. the age, physical health, mental health or special vulnerability of an accused, victim or witness
4. the prevalence of the type of offence and the actual or potential impact of the offence on the community and/or victim
5. the criminal history of the accused
6. whether the consequences of any resulting conviction would be unduly harsh or oppressive to the accused

7. whether the accused is willing to co-operate or has already co-operated in the investigation or prosecution of others
8. the degree of culpability of the accused, particularly in relation to other alleged parties to the offence
9. the likely outcome in the event of a finding of guilt, having regard to the sentencing options
10. the length and expense of a trial when considered in relation to the seriousness of the offence
11. the availability of any alternatives to prosecution such as diversion and civil remedies.

This is a non-exhaustive list and some cases will raise unique factors. Not all factors will be applicable to every case and in any particular case one factor may deserve more weight than it might in another case.

In determining whether there is a public interest to proceed or discontinue the prosecution, the Prosecutor must remain objective and be aware of the negative impact of stereotypes. In particular, stereotypes relating to race or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, political association or beliefs of the accused or any person involved in the case must be rejected.

The Prosecutor should not consider the personal feelings of any official involved in the prosecution concerning the victim or the accused, any political advantage or disadvantage that might flow from the decision to undertake or stop a prosecution or the possible effect on the personal or professional circumstances of anyone connected to the prosecution decision.

There is no class of cases that are of necessity outside the public interest to prosecute.

Discontinuing the prosecution

Where there is no reasonable prospect of conviction or there is no public interest to proceed, the Prosecutor must withdraw the charge. Brief reasons should be provided on the record where the Prosecutor withdraws the charge unless such comments would breach a privilege or create a risk of harm.

A stay of proceedings is not appropriate where a charge does not meet the charge screening standard and there is no expectation that it will meet the standard within a year. A stay is only appropriate where the proceedings are temporarily discontinued with an expectation of recommencing within one year.

Before discontinuing the prosecution, the Prosecutor must ensure reasonable steps are taken to inform the victim and the investigating officer that the charges will be withdrawn.

Reference should be made to the Victims Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) , Sexual Assault against Adults Directive (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-34- sexual-offences-against-adults) , Intimate Partner Violence Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>) .

D. 4: Community Justice Programs for Adults

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Community justice programs may provide an effective alternative to a formal prosecution. In some cases, the needs and interests of society can be better served through the exercise of prosecutorial discretion to withdraw or stay criminal charges upon an accused person's completion of a comprehensive diversion program.

Community based sanctions hold an accused person accountable for criminal conduct by requiring the completion of rehabilitative programs that effectively respond to the nature of the offence and accused, and the local needs of the community. An example is the Direct Accountability Program, in place in most jurisdictions across Ontario. Another example is the Indigenous Community Justice Program that provides an alternative for Indigenous adults.

Accused persons participating in one of the programs must be willing to assume responsibility for the actions that lead to the criminal charge and be prepared to make meaningful amends. Once in a program, a plan will be created for the accused that will address the underlying cause that lead to the offence. Prosecutors must only consider community based sanctions if a reasonable prospect of conviction exists and must not impose additional requirements on the accused person as a precondition to offering an alternative to diversion.

In circumstances where no formal programming options exist, Prosecutors may also exercise their discretion to consider informal modes of diversion. Where the alternative is a donation to charity, the amount donated must be approved by the Crown Attorney or designate, if it exceeds $1000.

This directive addresses diversion for adult accused persons. For young persons, please see Youth Criminal Justice: Extrajudicial Sanctions (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-a-youth-criminal-justice-extrajudicial-sanctions>) . For an adult suffering a mental illness, please see Mentally Ill Accused: Alternatives to Prosecution (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-a-mentally-ill-accused-alternatives-prosecution>) . For an Indigenous accused, please see Indigenous Peoples Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) .

Ineligible offences

Prosecutors must not refer any of the following offences to a community justice program, regardless of the circumstances of the offence or the accused:

- murder, manslaughter, infanticide, criminal negligence causing death
- driving offences causing death or bodily harm
- aggravated assault
- simple impaired driving or driving with a prohibited blood alcohol concentration or refusing to provide a breath sample
- offences involving firearms
- criminal organization offences
- terrorism offences
- kidnapping
- voyeurism
- publication etc., of intimate images without consent
- child abuse and child luring
- offences involving child pornography
- home invasions

- human trafficking offences
- robbery
- sexual offences including sexual assault, sexual assault cause bodily harm, sexual interference and exploitation, invitation to sexual touching and incest
- any offences where the Attorney General's consent was obtained to initiate proceedings

Presumptively ineligible offence

In exceptional cases, the Prosecutor may refer the following presumptively ineligible offences to a community justice program with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate:

- hate-motivated offences (Hate Propaganda and Hate Motivated Offences Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-16-hate-propaganda-and-hate-motivated-offences>))
- intimate partner violence offences (Intimate Partner Violence Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>))
- criminal harassment

Eligible offences

The Prosecutor may refer any other offence to a community justice program.

Factors to consider

In determining if a community justice program is an effective alternative to a formal prosecution for a presumptively ineligible offence or eligible offence for an adult accused, the Prosecutor and Crown Attorney or designate must consider the following factors:

Background of the accused person:

1. the age and health of the accused person
2. any prior findings of guilt or past involvement with community justice programs
3. the nature and number of any such previous offences

4. any outstanding charges
5. the role of the accused person and their corresponding degree of responsibility in relation to the offence
6. whether the accused person had been previously victimized
7. any remorse and willingness to engage in a community justice program
8. any prior restitution
9. if the accused person comes from a disadvantaged group
10. whether the accused self-identifies as Métis, Inuit or First Nations.

The circumstances and nature of the offence:

1. whether the offence is summary or indictable
2. whether the offence involves violence
3. whether the offence actually harmed the victim (physical, psychological or financial) and/or society
4. whether the incident affected the sexual integrity of a person
5. whether a weapon was used or threatened to be used
6. whether there was an intention to cause or attempt to cause substantial property damage or loss, and if so, whether the damage was reasonably foreseeable
7. whether the offence was against the administration of justice, such as breach of a court order, and, if so, the extent of non-compliance
8. whether the offence involved malice, extortion, exploitation or revenge
9. whether the offence involved a breach of trust
10. whether the offence was motivated by bias, prejudice, or hate
11. the age of the victim
12. the views of the victim and/or their parents or legal guardians (if victim is a child), if available.

Administration of justice considerations:

1. public confidence in the administration of justice
2. the length and expense of a trial when considered in relation to the seriousness of the offence
3. the likely sentence upon conviction
4. the availability of an appropriate sanction, including culturally relevant programming options, which will hold the accused person accountable and focus on correcting the offending behaviour
5. frailties in the prosecution e.g. staleness of the case, or the technical nature of the offence
6. whether the consequences of the prosecution would be unduly harsh to the accused person, the victim or any witnesses in the case, owing to such factors such as age, health or the relationship between the parties
7. whether a just result is accelerated by a referral to a community justice program.

D. 5: Confidential Informers

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Confidential informers play a vital role in law enforcement. The near absolute privilege attached to the identity of these individuals is premised on the duty of all citizens to aid in enforcing the law and is meant to protect them against retribution from those involved in crime and to encourage continued information sharing.

Confidential informer privilege applies to those who provide information about a crime to the police, or otherwise assist the police, on the understanding that their identities will not be revealed. In order for the privilege to apply, there must be an explicit or implicit offer of confidentiality.

Informer privilege

Prosecutors have a duty to protect the identity of confidential informers. Once informer privilege is found to exist the Prosecutor, police and Court are duty bound to protect the privilege.

Where the privilege applies, Prosecutors must ensure that no disclosure occurs of any information that might tend to reveal the identity of an informer, or their status as an informer. This obligation continues throughout every stage of the proceedings including the questioning of witnesses. In light of the serious consequences that could arise from a breach of this privilege, Prosecutors must alert their Crown Attorney to the existence of any case involving a confidential informer at the earliest opportunity.

Any issues regarding confidential informer privilege should be considered at the earliest possible stages in a prosecution.

Waiver

The privilege belongs jointly to the prosecution and the confidential informer. Neither can waive it without the consent of the other. Waiver is only valid where the informer has clearly and unequivocally waived the procedural safeguards associated with the privilege and is doing so with full knowledge of the rights that the privilege is designed to protect and of the effect, the waiver will have on those rights.

Waiver of an informer's privilege will only apply to the particular case and should never be assumed to mean an informer has waived any claims to privilege in past or future cases.

Disclosure obligations

A Prosecutor must not disclose any information that might tend to identify a confidential informer. It is the responsibility of the Prosecutor, together with the police, to comprehensively review and vet all disclosure materials.

Once it is determined that a case involves a confidential informer, that case must be brought to the attention of the Crown Attorney or designate for immediate assignment. The assigned Prosecutor is responsible for determining what material can be disclosed. No information that may tend to reveal the identity of the informer nor implicitly reveal their identity may be disclosed.

No disclosure in a criminal file involving an informer should be provided until the Prosecutor has been able to review and vet the entire file. Where possible, this should be done with the assistance of a confidential informer's assigned handler to ensure that no information is disclosed that may tend to identify a confidential informer.

The privilege continues to apply even if the informer's identity becomes known through notoriety or inadvertent disclosure.

Inadvertent disclosure

The Prosecutor must immediately inform the relevant police agency of any breach or potential breach of informer privilege so that appropriate steps can be taken.

In these circumstances, the Prosecutor must immediately notify her Crown Attorney of the breach. The Prosecutor must contact defence counsel, request the information be returned, along with any copies produced, and request that the information not be disclosed to any other person, including their client. The Prosecutor may be required to bring an application before the court for an order compelling the defence counsel to return the materials sought.

Innocence at stake exception

The privilege that is attached to a confidential informer's identity may give way when an accused person's innocence is at stake. "Innocence at stake" is the only justification to pierce informer privilege.

Confidential information protected by privilege may be disclosed by court order where an accused person establishes that their innocence is at stake. A claim of innocence at stake cannot be speculative and shall be supported by evidence. The application to establish innocence at stake is generally made at the close of the Crown's case.

If the judge determines that the evidence establishes that innocence is at stake, then the judge will order production of information only to the extent necessary.

If an order is granted requiring disclosure of confidential information that may tend to reveal the identity of an informer, a Prosecutor must inform her Crown Attorney of the ruling.

The Prosecutor must not reveal information that may tend to disclose the identity of an informer who has not waived the privilege, even where the exception is found to apply. If an order is made that innocence is at stake and the informer does not waive the privilege, the Prosecutor must reassess reasonable prospect of conviction and determine whether the prosecution can continue. The Prosecutor may also request an appeal of the judge's ruling under the Canada Evidence Act (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-5/>) .

D. 6: Contact with Media

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Public confidence in the administration of criminal justice is enhanced by the availability of appropriate and timely information about cases before the courts and the criminal process. Prosecutors have an important role to play as “Ministers of Justice” and have a responsibility to relate to the media and the public in a manner consistent with that role. Comments must be fair, factual, dispassionate and moderate and must be respectful of the court and all participants in the proceedings.

All communication with the media must be open and transparent and never “off the record”. The Prosecutor must not express personal opinions.

Prosecutors may confirm or provide factual information that is already in the public domain. They should also provide general information or explanations about the criminal process. Prosecutors must not provide information to the media prior to its presentation as evidence in court. Prosecutors must not initiate contact with the media without having obtained prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate.

This policy applies to all methods of communication including traditional media, electronic news outlets, websites and social media.

Public discussions

Any public discussions which could prejudice ongoing proceedings are prohibited and this prohibition applies until the end of the appeal process. In all their dealings with the media, Prosecutors must bear in mind the presumption of innocence and the need to protect the integrity of the court process and the rights of all the participants in the court process. Prosecutors must not comment on:

- the possibility of charges being laid
- cases under review or investigations that are ongoing
- speculation as to what may happen during any stage of ongoing proceedings
- discussions held with colleagues or members of an investigative agency, whether or not such advice or discussions are privileged

- any information the disclosure of which is prohibited by law or by a court-imposed publication ban
- policies, procedures or decisions of investigative agencies (such inquiries should be directed to the investigative agency)
- the wisdom or efficacy of federal or provincial policies, programs or legislation
- the existence of any plea negotiations or possibility of a plea of guilty or other disposition
- the strength or weakness of the prosecution or defence case including undisclosed elements of the prosecution's case or strategy
- the appropriateness of a judge's charge to the jury, particular rulings, the verdict of a jury, the sentence or any comments made by the judge
- whether a decision will be appealed or whether an appeal has been requested or not (however, the procedure for considering whether or not to appeal may be explained) or
- the guilt or innocence of an accused or anything that could jeopardize the accused's right to a fair trial.

Prosecutors should refrain from publicly elaborating on the reasons for the exercise of prosecutorial discretion beyond what was placed on the court record. When the Prosecutor is unsure how to respond to a media inquiry, Prosecutors should refer the media to the Ministry's media spokesperson at the Ministry of the Attorney General.

Publication bans and court exhibits

If a member of the media inquires about a restriction on publication, the Prosecutor should advise the media member about the existence of a publication ban. A Prosecutor must avoid providing legal advice to members of the media or the public respecting the propriety of publication or the breadth of any publication ban.

Judicial documents and court exhibits, including Victim Impact Statements, are generally accessible to the public (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/access-court-files-documents-and-exhibits>). The Prosecutor should seek to restrict access in any case where public access to court exhibits may undermine the right to a fair trial, violate privacy interests or interfere with the administration of justice.

Reference should be made to the Publication Bans and Sealing Orders Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-32-publication-bans-and-sealing-orders>) .

Communicating with the media in a personal capacity

Public statements by Prosecutors must not compromise their ability to function effectively as public servants nor diminish the public perception of impartiality necessary to fulfill a Prosecutor's quasi-judicial responsibilities. Prosecutors must also be mindful of their oath of loyalty and confidentiality and statutory restrictions on political comment by public servants. In their personal capacity Prosecutors must not make public statements that would:

- compromise their ability to function as a minister of justice by commenting publicly on the wisdom of a particular offence or specific law, a government policy, position or proposal
- discourage public respect for the administration of justice or weaken the public's confidence in legal institutions
- contravene professional codes of conduct or
- lecture on matters of public interest where their opinion is sought because they are a representative of the Crown.

If participating in external professional events, the Prosecutor must make it clear the oral or written views being expressed are personal views that do not necessarily represent the position of the Ministry.

This directive applies to Prosecutors who write, blog, participate in virtual communities or social networking sites outside of the scope of their employment. Prosecutors should also consider their safety and security when posting or providing information online.

Reference should also be made to the Publication Bans and Sealing Orders (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-32-publication-bans-and-sealing-orders>) and Professionalism (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-31-professionalism>) Directives.

D. 7: Criminal Asset Forfeiture

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Asset forfeiture plays an important role in deterring the commission of criminal offences. It is crucial that the profit motive from criminal offences is removed through the identification, restraint, seizure and forfeiture of proceeds of crime. It is equally important that property that is used to commit criminal offences be taken out of the hands of criminal organizations and individual offenders.

On occasion, police in the course of an investigation seize property used in the commission of an offence or obtained by proceeds of crime. This property may be tendered as evidence at a prosecution. The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) authorizes the return of property to its owner or the victim. It also authorizes the forfeiture of proceeds of crime and the forfeiture of property used to commit criminal offences (offence-related property).

The Criminal Code prioritizes the compensation of victims of crime over forfeiture. In determining whether an application for forfeiture should be made, Prosecutors must determine whether restitution to identified victims would be necessary in the circumstances of the offence.

Resolution discussions and sentencing

Seized property must be returned to its owner or the victim or be forfeited at the conclusion of the criminal case. The Prosecutor must ensure that an order is obtained to dispose of the property. The order sought must provide for forfeiture of the property or its return to its owner, or victim as appropriate. If forfeiture or return of property is not addressed at the conclusion of the proceedings by way of a forfeiture order or return order, the Prosecutor must bring an application to dispose of the property.

Prosecutors must ensure that notice is given to all parties who appear to have a valid interest in any proceeds of crime that the Prosecutor is seeking to have forfeited.

Other government bodies may have an interest in conducting legal proceedings to determine lawful entitlement to the property. Prosecutors must be mindful not to bind those interests during resolution discussions pertaining to the property.

Proceeds of crime

A Prosecutor is entitled to bring an application for forfeiture of proceeds of crime where it can be shown that the proceeds of crime derived from the commission of the offence that resulted in the conviction or discharge of the accused, or the property is nevertheless proceeds of crime from another offence.

Proceeds of crime is defined as:

- any property, benefit or advantage
- that is within or outside Canada
- that was derived directly or indirectly from the commission of an offence that may be prosecuted by indictment in Canada.

In the event that the property cannot be subject to forfeiture, for instance if it has been spent or hidden, the court may order a fine in lieu of forfeiture. The fine shall be of equal value to the property. In these circumstances, the court is obligated to impose a default consecutive jail sentence for failure to pay the fine in lieu of forfeiture.

Offence-related property

Where a prosecution has proceeded by way of indictment, a Prosecutor is entitled to apply for forfeiture of offence-related property where it can be shown that the property was used or intended to be used in the commission of an offence that resulted in the conviction of the accused, or in relation to some other offence.

Offence-related property is defined as:

- any property
- that is within or outside Canada
- that is used in any manner in connection with the commission of an offence prosecuted by indictment or that is intended to be used for committing an indictable offence.

D. 8: Dangerous/Long-term Offenders

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Protection of the public is the paramount consideration in dealing with potential dangerous and long-term offenders. The protection of the public requires Prosecutors to assess offenders who pose an ongoing risk to the safety of the public. While making this assessment, Prosecutors should determine whether an application is warranted for a court order declaring the offender to be a dangerous or long-term offender.

The consent of the Attorney General is required to initiate a dangerous or long-term offender application. It is for the Attorney General to determine whether an application will be made and whether it will be for a dangerous offender or a long-term offender designation. The Attorney General cannot be bound by any discussions or positions taken by Prosecutors.

After being declared a dangerous offender by a court, the offender shall receive an indeterminate prison sentence unless the court finds that a less severe measure will adequately protect the public. An offender who is declared a long-term offender shall be sentenced to an appropriate term of imprisonment and upon release be subject to a long-term supervision order for a period less than 10 years.

Each region has a designated Prosecutor known as Crown Counsel High-Risk Offender (CC-HRO), who has specialized expertise to assist in the prosecution of dangerous and long-term offenders and breaches of long-term supervision orders. Once a file is screened, and the possibility of a dangerous or long-term offender application is being considered, the Prosecutor must inform the CC-HRO of the case.

Resolution discussions

Where a case has been identified as a potential dangerous or long-term offender application, the Prosecutor must not negotiate a guilty plea in exchange for agreeing to forego a dangerous or long-term offender application without first consulting with the CC-HRO and her Crown Attorney.

It would rarely be appropriate for the Prosecutor to recommend a long-term offender designation, followed by a supervision order, for an offender who meets the statutory dangerous offender criteria because of the dramatically different consequences.

Any plea negotiations involving a dangerous or long-term offender application are subject to the Attorney General's approval as the Attorney General's consent is required to initiate the application. The Prosecutor must not purport to bind the Attorney General regarding the type of designation that may be sought in any plea negotiations.

Any recommendation of the Prosecutor must be amenable to reassessment following the results of the psychiatric assessment. The Prosecutor retains the discretion to amend her recommendation as new information comes to light.

Psychiatric assessment

A psychiatric assessment is required in order to bring a dangerous or long-term offender application. The Prosecutor must consult with the CC-HRO and must obtain the approval of her Crown Attorney or designate prior to seeking an order from the court directing a psychiatric assessment.

The Prosecutor must ensure that a full assessment is requested and must not agree to restrict the scope of the assessment to either a dangerous offender or long term offender designation. The Prosecutor must be mindful that the psychiatric assessment is not determinative of the legal issues that the Court must decide. The Prosecutor must still determine whether the evidence satisfies the legal requirement that the offender's risk can reasonably be controlled in the community.

Attorney General consent

Upon receipt of the assessment, if the Prosecutor in consultation with the CC-HRO determines that a dangerous or long-term offender application is warranted, the Prosecutor must obtain the Attorney General's consent to initiate proceedings. The Prosecutor must have the approval of her Crown Attorney or designate and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General - Criminal Law Division prior to commencing the process to seek the Attorney General's consent.

The position taken by the Prosecutor will depend on the evidence and the demands of the interests of justice in each particular case. The Attorney General's authority to initiate a dangerous or long-term offender application and direction to seek a particular type of designation does not detract from the Prosecutor's obligation to make decisions based on the evidence, the facts of the case and the applicable law. If the evidence before the court, psychiatric or otherwise, is different than what was anticipated such that it does not support the original position, the Prosecutor should exercise her discretion appropriately. The Prosecutor must notify the Assistant Deputy Attorney General - Criminal Law Division of any significant change in the application.

Reference should be made to the Attorney General Consent and Delegation Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-2-attorney-general-consents-and-delegations>) .

D. 9: Direct Indictments

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) permits the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General to direct an indictment and send a criminal case directly to trial without a preliminary hearing in the following circumstances:

1. prior to an accused person making an election to have a preliminary inquiry
2. a preliminary inquiry has commenced but has not been concluded, or
3. after an accused has been discharged at a preliminary inquiry.

The Prosecutor should make a request for the consent of the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General to direct an indictment where the interests of justice require that the matter be brought directly to trial.

Generally, full disclosure must be made prior to the Prosecutor's request for a direct indictment. If full disclosure has not been made prior to the request, the Prosecutor must ensure that disclosure allowing the accused to properly exercise their right to full answer and defence will be made prior to trial.

The Prosecutor must have concluded that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction and the continuation of the prosecution is not contrary to the public interest. The Prosecutor must also have the approval of her Crown Attorney and Director before requesting a direct indictment from the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General.

Factors to consider

The factors that the Prosecutor should consider in determining whether to request a direct indictment include, but are not limited to, the following:

- delays in the trial that could deprive the accused of the right to be tried within a reasonable time

- the physical or psychological health of victims and witnesses
- difficulties involved in having victims and witnesses testify more than once including the victimization of vulnerable witnesses
- preservation of the integrity of evidence including the risk that evidence could be destroyed
- preservation of the integrity of related ongoing police investigations
- safety concerns for the victims, witnesses and public
- the need to avoid multiple proceedings
- the accused was wrongly discharged following the preliminary inquiry because of errors or new evidence that has been discovered
- a preliminary inquiry would be unreasonably costly, complex, long or inappropriate because of the nature of the issues or the evidence
- the need to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice
- the case is notorious or of particular importance to the public such that the case should be tried as soon as possible
- there are circumstances that require the case be expedited.

Reference should be made to the Attorney General Consent and Delegation

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-2-attorney-general-consents-and-delegations>) , Charge Screening (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-3-charge-screening>) , Sexual Offences against Adults

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-34-sexual-offences-against-adults>) and Offences against Children (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) Directives.

D. 10: Disclosure

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

The Prosecutor must provide to the accused all information in her possession relating to the charges against the accused unless it is clearly irrelevant. Some information is exempt from disclosure because it is protected by privilege. The Prosecutor has discretion as to the timing of disclosure and the form it will take [e.g. hard copy, electronic]. Disclosure of all relevant information is vital to ensuring that the trial process is fair to all those accused of criminal offences.

Any information that points to either guilt or innocence that could be used by the accused in meeting the case for the prosecution, advancing a defence, or otherwise determining how to conduct a defence must be disclosed. The Prosecutor's duty to disclose is ongoing throughout the trial and appeal process and continues after those processes have concluded.

Duty to inquire

Where a Prosecutor has a reasonable basis to believe that the police or other government entity may be in possession of material or information that could reasonably impact the result of the prosecution, the Prosecutor has a duty to make inquiries of these parties for the purpose of obtaining the material. If the police or other government entity declines to provide the material, the accused may seek a court order for the material to be provided. The Prosecutor does not have a duty to inquire where there is not a reasonable basis for the request or there is no likelihood of relevance.

Exceptions

The Prosecutor is not obliged to disclose information that is irrelevant, protected by privilege or that is recognized at common law or by statute as an exception to the duty to disclose. In those cases the Prosecutor must not disclose the information without a court order. The material that falls within this category includes, but is not restricted to:

1. information that may identify a confidential informer (see Confidential Informers Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-5-confidential-informers>))
2. information subject to solicitor-client privilege
3. information subject to work-product privilege
4. information that may jeopardize ongoing police investigations or reveal confidential police investigative techniques
5. information that may jeopardize the safety of a witness or another third party
6. private information i.e. medical records, personal diaries, cell phones or therapeutic records (e.g. see Sexual Offences against Adults Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-34-sexual-offences-against-adults>)).

There may be occasions when information in the possession of the prosecution does not fall within its defined disclosure obligations or an existing judicially or statutorily-recognized exception. In those cases, prior to providing, withholding or delaying disclosure, the Prosecutor must consult with her Crown Attorney or designate, who must, in turn, consult with the Director.

Prosecutorial discretion

The Prosecutor has discretion as to the timing and form of disclosure. While the law provides for delayed disclosure in limited circumstances, such delays should be rare and should never be for tactical reasons. The Prosecutor should only delay providing disclosure after consultation with her Crown Attorney. The safety of witnesses, the protection of ongoing investigations or privacy concerns could justify a delay in disclosure or a variation in the form that the information is provided.

Child pornography

Possession of child pornography is a criminal offence. Police shall remain the custodians of all seized images of child pornography. Disclosure of these images is made by invitation to counsel to view the images in a secure, private location. Requests for electronic copies of the images must be declined. Those images may be provided electronically only pursuant to a court order with a corresponding sealing order.

Reference should be made to the Internet Child Exploitation Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-22-internet-child-exploitation>) .

Audio or Video material depicting or recounting child abuse or a sexual offence

Audio or video material depicting or recounting a sexual offence or crime of child abuse warrants additional precautions with respect to its access.

This audio or video material may be disclosed only upon receipt of a signed undertaking by counsel to use the material for the purpose of making full answer and defence in the particular case. If counsel refuses to provide this undertaking, the Prosecutor may impose conditions on viewing the material.

Audio or video material depicting or recounting child abuse or a sexual offence must not be provided to an unrepresented accused without a court order. The court order should direct the Prosecutor to provide the material and impose conditions on its possession by the accused (e.g. no copying or disseminating the material). In absence of a court order, arrangements should be made to permit the unrepresented accused to review the audio or video material.

Youth Criminal Justice Act and Young Offender Act records

Access to records pertaining to youth involved in criminal justice is governed by the Youth Criminal Justice Act (<http://www.laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/Y-1.5/index.html>) and the Young Offender Act. These records should only be disclosed in accordance with the relevant legislation.

Reference should be made to the Youth Criminal Justice: Court Practices and Procedures Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-b-youth-criminal-justice-court-practices-and-procedures>).

D. 11: DNA Data Bank Orders

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

A strong and effective DNA Data Bank benefits the criminal justice system by assisting law enforcement agencies to identify persons who have committed crimes. The collection and storage of DNA from convicted offenders has additional broader purposes including:

- to deter potential repeat offenders
- to promote the safety of the community
- to detect the presence of a serial offender
- to assist in solving old cases
- to streamline investigations
- to exclude innocent suspects
- to exonerate those wrongfully convicted.

The issuance of a DNA order will usually be in the best interests of the administration of justice. The greater the number of offender DNA profiles that are entered onto the Convicted Offenders Index of the National DNA Data Bank, the more effective the use of the Data Bank and its ability to fulfill its purposes.

Duty of the Prosecutor

For the purpose of DNA collections, the Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) designates eligible offences as either compulsory primary offences, other primary offences or secondary offences.

Compulsory primary designated offences

The Criminal Code directs that the court shall make a DNA Data Bank order for an adult convicted or discharged or for a young person found guilty of a “compulsory primary designated offence”. The Prosecutor must remind the court of its obligation to make the order.

Other primary designated offences

The Criminal Code directs that the court shall make a DNA Data Bank order for “other primary designated offences”. However, the court is not required to make the order if it is satisfied the offender has established that the impact of such an order on their privacy and security of the person would be grossly disproportionate to the public interest in the protection of society and the proper administration of justice. The Prosecutor must advocate for a DNA Data Bank order for “other primary designated offences”.

Secondary designated offence

The Criminal Code directs that upon application by the Prosecutor the court may make a DNA Data Bank order where it is in the best interests of the administration of justice for secondary designated offences. Given the number and nature of previously unsolved criminal investigations that were solved by samples taken on secondary designated offences, the Prosecutor should apply for a DNA Data Bank order for these offences. The Prosecutor should apply for an order in relation to each count even if an order was made on another count. In exceptional circumstances, the Prosecutor need not apply for the order where she determines that seeking a DNA Data Bank order is not in the interests of justice.

Not Criminally Responsible (NCR)

In the case of an accused found NCR, the Criminal Code directs that a court may make a DNA Data Bank order for compulsory primary, other primary or secondary offences, upon application of the Prosecutor, where it is in the best interests of the administration of justice. The Prosecutor must advocate for a DNA Data Bank order for compulsory primary or other primary offences when an accused is found NCR. For secondary offences, the Prosecutor should apply for a DNA Data Bank order if it is in the best interests of the administration of justice. Reference should be made to the Mentally Ill Accused Directives (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-26-mentally-ill-accused>) .

Resolution discussions and sentencing

Given the importance of the DNA Data Bank in the investigation and prosecution of crime, Prosecutors must not agree to withdraw a DNA designated offence as part of the negotiation process solely for the purpose of avoiding a DNA order.

Where the Prosecutor becomes aware that a DNA order was not considered at the time of conviction or sentencing, the Prosecutor must, absent exceptional circumstances, either take steps to have the matter brought back before the court or bring it to the attention of the Crown Attorney or designate.

Where the Prosecutor becomes aware of any problems with or errors in a particular DNA Data Bank order, including any issues relating to the execution or endorsement of orders, the Prosecutor must, absent exceptional circumstance, bring this to the attention of the Crown Attorney or designate.

D. 12: Expert Evidence

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Expert evidence is admissible where the subject matter requires specialized knowledge that is likely outside of an ordinary person's knowledge or experience and is necessary in order for the court to reach a correct judgment about the issue.

When considering the use of expert evidence, Prosecutors should be guided by the general duty to see that justice is done in the circumstances of the particular case. The Prosecutor who tenders expert evidence must ensure that it is presented to the court with no more, and no less, than its legitimate force and effect.

The role of an expert in the criminal justice system is a neutral one that requires independence and objectivity at all stages of her involvement.

Retaining an expert

Prosecutors should decide at the earliest possible opportunity whether expert evidence is required. This should be done early in the proceeding to minimize the delay occasioned by retaining an expert and in order to meet the notice and disclosure requirements set out in the Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) .

The Prosecutor must obtain prior approval from the Director or designate before retaining and paying an expert for the purpose of giving evidence or assisting the Prosecutor in preparing for trial.

Disclosure

The Prosecutor must generally disclose all relevant information in her possession relating to the charges against an accused. This includes all expert reports, summaries of expert opinions and, if requested, any underlying material relied upon by the expert where it is practicable to do so.

The Prosecutor is not obliged to disclose information that is irrelevant, protected by privilege or that is recognized at common law or by statute as an exception to the duty to disclose.

The Prosecutor's duty to disclose is ongoing throughout the trial and appeal process and continues after those processes have concluded.

Reference should also be made to the Disclosure Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-10-disclosure>) .

Presenting expert evidence

In preparing experts for their testimony, Prosecutors should ascertain from the expert the limitations on the expert opinion including their qualifications and any limitations on the inferences that can be reliably drawn from the expert evidence. When presenting the expert evidence in court, Prosecutors should make every effort to ensure that those limitations are fully impressed upon the court.

Where an expert expresses to the Prosecutor a concern that their evidence has left a misleading or inaccurate impression with the Court, the Prosecutor must immediately disclose this to the defence and in circumstances where the concerns are justified, it must be conveyed to the Court.

Reporting concerns

A Prosecutor must report to her Crown Attorney adverse judicial findings or comments about an expert or her own concerns about an expert's participation in the criminal justice system.

The Crown Attorney must forward any adverse judicial findings or comments about an expert or any concerns expressed by a Prosecutor regarding an expert's participation, to the Director, who will forward it onto the Assistant Deputy Attorney General - Criminal Law Division.

D. 13: Extradition

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Extradition is the diplomatic process where one country requests the return of a fugitive found in another country for the purpose of trial or punishment for the commission of an offence. Extradition may be requested for those accused of crimes and for those who have been convicted and have outstanding sentences. The Department of Justice Canada is responsible for responding to requests by foreign states for the return of fugitives found in Canada and for determining whether to seek the extradition of a Canadian from a foreign state.

Process

In Ontario, a request for the return of a fugitive to Ontario often begins with an inquiry by the police to a Prosecutor. The following factors inform the Prosecutor's assessment of whether to seek extradition:

- the strength of the case
- the seriousness of the allegations
- the dangerousness of the accused
- whether the offence warrants a substantial period of imprisonment upon conviction (usually a penitentiary term)
- whether there is a significant and pressing public interest in securing the return of the accused to Canada for prosecution or sentencing.

When a Prosecutor, with the approval of the Crown Attorney or designate, concludes that the request for extradition of the fugitive is warranted, the Prosecutor should work with Crown Law Office – Criminal in preparing the required materials. The request is forwarded to Department of Justice Canada where the determination is made whether to seek extradition.

A provisional arrest warrant permits a foreign state to secure the detention of a fugitive pending extradition. Department of Justice Canada determines whether it is appropriate for Canada to seek the diplomatic assistance of a foreign country to arrest and detain a fugitive pending extradition. The execution of a provisional arrest warrant triggers timelines for the formal extradition request to be transmitted to the foreign state.

Upon receipt, the foreign state will initiate its own internal process for extradition which may involve a hearing or a consent extradition. When the process is complete, the individual may be extradited to the requesting country.

D. 14: Firearms

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

The illegal possession and use of firearms is a matter of grave public concern because of the potential for violence and serious physical harm including death. The protection of the public is the paramount consideration at all stages from judicial release to sentencing, in any prosecution involving firearms.

The term “firearm” refers to any barreled weapon from which a shot, bullet or other projectile can be discharged and that is capable of causing serious bodily harm and may include a pellet gun or air gun.

Judicial interim release (bail)

In all cases involving firearms, the Prosecutor must seek a detention order, absent exceptional circumstances, to ensure the safety and security of the public. If exceptional circumstances exist, the Prosecutor must obtain prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate before recommending or consenting to any form of judicial interim release. This decision should be made at the earliest reasonable opportunity having regard to the requirements of the Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) .

The Prosecutor must advise the Crown Attorney or designate, when an accused charged with an offence involving firearms is granted judicial interim release. In these circumstances, the Crown Attorney or designate should consider whether a bail review is warranted.

Reference should be made to the Judicial Interim Release (Bail) Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) .

Charge screening

There are certain firearms offences that are so serious and inherently dangerous as to warrant proceeding by indictment.

The Prosecutor must elect to proceed by indictment, absent exceptional circumstances, where an accused is charged with one of the following hybrid offences:

- possession of restricted or prohibited firearm with ammunition
- possession of firearm obtained by crime
- making automatic firearm
- carrying a concealed firearm
- possession of a firearm for purpose dangerous to the public
- unauthorized possession of a firearm
- possession of firearm at unauthorized place
- possession of firearm in motor vehicle

- transfer a firearm without proper authority
- unauthorized importing or exporting of firearms
- possession of a firearm contrary to a court order.

If exceptional circumstances exist, the Prosecutor must seek prior approval from her Crown Attorney or designate before electing to proceed summarily.

Regarding all other hybrid firearms offences, the Prosecutor should consider the circumstances of the offender and the circumstances surrounding the offence in determining whether to proceed summarily or by indictment, including the following:

- whether the accused has prior convictions or outstanding charges for weapons or violent offences
- whether the conduct of the accused posed a danger to the public
- whether the accused associates with or is a member of a criminal organization
- whether the accused engaged in other criminal conduct
- whether the offence is of a regulatory nature
- whether the firearms, weapons or ammunition have been seized and will be forfeited
- whether the accused is violating a prohibition order
- whether the sentence if prosecuted summarily would adequately reflect the gravity of the alleged offence.

Resolution discussions and sentence

The resolution of firearms offences should be premised on providing the greatest possible protection of the public.

Absent exceptional circumstances and then only with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate, the Prosecutor must not:

- reduce or withdraw a charge involving a firearm to avoid a mandatory minimum term of imprisonment
- reduce or withdraw a charge of break and enter to steal a firearm, robbery to steal a firearm, possession of restricted or prohibited firearm with ammunition, any firearms trafficking offence, any importing or exporting firearms offence

- reduce or withdraw a charge of possession of firearm contrary to a court order.

Prosecutors should be aware that the Chief Firearms Officer has independent statutory authority and discretion under the Firearms Act and may seek a different regulatory remedy outside that agreed to by the Prosecutor.

Notice of Intention to Seek Increased Penalty

Notice of Intention to Seek Increased Penalty will be provided to an accused, where the Prosecutor seeks a higher range of sentence by reason of the accused's previous criminal record.

Absent exceptional circumstances, the Prosecutor must file a Notice of Intention to Seek Increased Penalty in all qualifying cases where the accused has a previous conviction for a firearms offence.

In exceptional circumstances where the Prosecutor is satisfied that the accused poses no future threat to public safety, the public interest may be served without filing the Notice of Intention to Seek Increased Penalty. In these circumstances, the Prosecutor must obtain the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate not to seek an increased penalty.

D. 15: Gaming and Betting

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) prohibits various gambling related activities involving betting, pyramid schemes and games of chance and lotteries. Backroom betting businesses, black market internet gambling websites, rigged midway games at a summer fair and video gambling machines in a bar are just a few examples of illegal gambling activities.

Exceptions

The Criminal Code provides for exemptions and exceptions to these prohibitions. Generally speaking, bets between private individuals who are not engaged in the business of betting are lawful. The provinces, charitable and religious organizations, horseracing associations and local fairs have been afforded exemptions to offer gaming and betting related activities, subject to strict controls.

Circumstances of the offence

What may appear as isolated gaming and betting related offences may in fact be linked to organized crime. Organized crime relies on gambling to raise money and to launder proceeds of crime. There is a high public interest in prosecuting organized crime. Criminal conduct in the regulated gaming and betting spheres – such as a fraud committed by an Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corporation (OLG) lottery ticket seller, or cheating by a patron or operator at an OLG casino - is also serious. Such conduct undermines the integrity and reputation of lawful gaming and betting operations. Even comparatively low level gambling related offences – for example, a corner store or bar owner offering a video gambling machine for customers - can encourage other criminal or anti-social behaviour potentially corrosive to the safety and security of the local community.

The Prosecutor reviewing gaming and betting related charges should confer with the investigating police agency. Information provided by the investigating police agency will include the circumstances of the offence.

Forfeiture

In gaming and betting related offences, the Criminal Code authorizes the restraint, seizure and forfeiture of the proceeds of crime and of the property used to commit the offence. The Prosecutor must ensure that notice is given to all parties who appear to have a valid interest in any proceeds of crime or property that the Prosecutor is seeking to have forfeited. Reference should be made to the Criminal Asset Forfeiture Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-7-criminal-asset-forfeiture>) .

Resolution discussions and sentence

Gaming and betting related offences are not victimless crimes. The resolution of gaming and betting related offences should be premised on providing protection to the public.

Several gaming and betting related offences are subject to mandatory minimum terms of imprisonment for second and subsequent convictions. The Prosecutor must not withdraw charges for such offences solely to avoid the imposition of the mandatory minimum sentence.

Absent exceptional circumstances, the Prosecutor must file a Notice of Intention to Seek Increased Penalty where an accused has a prior conviction for any of these offences. In exceptional circumstances where the Prosecutor is satisfied that the public interest could be served without seeking an increased penalty, the Prosecutor must obtain prior approval from the Crown Attorney or designate not to file a Notice of Intention to Seek Increased Penalty.

Other government bodies have independent authority and discretion over aspects of gaming and betting. Prosecutors must be mindful not to bind those interests during resolution discussions.

D. 16: Hate Propaganda and Hate  Motivated Offences

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Hate propaganda and hate motivated offences involve the intentional selection of a victim based on the offender's prejudice toward a "group" characteristic of the victim such as race, ethnic background, religion, gender, physical or mental disability or sexual orientation.

There is a substantial public interest in the prosecution of these offences. These offences are particularly serious because of their potentially devastating impact not only on the individuals involved, but also on the target group, other vulnerable groups and the community as a whole. The impact of hate propaganda and hate motivated offences include the following:

- the psychological and emotional harm caused by hate crimes on the identity and feelings of self-worth of the victim can be severe and long-lasting
- the group members of a target group may feel vulnerable to future victimization
- negative impact on other vulnerable groups that share minority status or identify with the targeted group, especially if the hate crime is based on an ideology or doctrine that covers a number of the groups that live within the community
- they can be socially divisive and undermine our collective identity. In a multicultural society like Canada, where all groups strive to live together in harmony and equality, hate crime is an anathema to our shared values. Any occurrence of a hate crime can lead to the erosion of fundamental Canadian values.

Hate propaganda offences

The offences of advocating genocide, public incitement of hatred, and wilful promotion of hatred against an identifiable group are characterized as hate propaganda offences that are prohibited by the Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) . An identifiable group is defined as “any section of the public distinguished by colour, race, religion, national or ethnic origin, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression or mental or physical disability.”

The Attorney General’s consent is required to initiate a prosecution for the offence of wilful promotion of hatred and the offence of advocating genocide.

Formal and informal requests by the police for the initiation of these proceedings must be brought immediately to the attention of the Assistant Deputy Attorney General -Criminal Law Division.

Once the consent of the Attorney General is received the hate propaganda proceedings are initiated. If new information comes to light the Prosecutor should apply the charge screening standard to the proceedings. If the Prosecutor concludes that the charge screening standard is no longer met, the Prosecutor must notify the Assistant Deputy Attorney General -Criminal Law Division in order to seek approval prior to withdrawing or staying the prosecution. Allegations of hate propaganda offences are not eligible for diversion.

Reference should be made to the Attorney General Consent and Delegation Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-2-attorney-general-consents-and-delegations>) .

Seizure and forfeiture of hate propaganda

In order to inhibit distribution of hate propaganda, the Criminal Code allows for the seizure and forfeiture of hate publications intended for public sale or distribution. In both circumstances, the Attorney General’s consent is required to commence proceedings for the seizure and/or forfeiture of hate propaganda.

The Criminal Code authorizes the court to issue a warrant to seize copies of publications where reasonable grounds exist for believing that the publication is hate propaganda and that copies are kept for sale or distribution. If the court is satisfied that the publication constitutes hate propaganda, the court shall order the forfeiture of the offending material.

The Criminal Code also provides a procedure for removing hate propaganda from the Internet. If the court is satisfied that the material or data is available to the public and is hate propaganda, the court may order the material or data be deleted and the electronic copy destroyed.

Reference should be made to the Criminal Asset Forfeiture Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-7-criminal-asset-forfeiture>) .

Hate motivated offences

Attorney General consent is not required where the offence is motivated by hate or where hate is an aggravating factor.

Mischief to property

The Criminal Code specifically prohibits mischief to religious property where the mischief is motivated by bias, prejudice or hate. There is no requirement for the Attorney General's consent to initiate proceedings with this offence.

Diversion

Generally, diversion is not an appropriate resolution for a crime motivated by hate. In exceptional circumstances, however, the issuance of an apology and/or rehabilitative considerations may be a just resolution. Where such exceptional circumstances exist, the Prosecutor must seek the prior approval from the Crown Attorney or designate.

Sentencing

The Criminal Code directs courts to consider evidence that the offence was motivated by bias, prejudice or hate based on race, national or ethnic origin, language, colour, religion, sex, age, mental or physical disability, sexual orientation or gender identity or expression or any other similar factor as aggravating factors on sentence. If there is evidence that the motivation for a crime was hate, bias or prejudice, the Prosecutor should tender that evidence during the sentencing phase.

D. 17: High-Risk Offender National Flagging System

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: October 4, 2021

The identification of violent offenders who pose an ongoing serious threat to society is an essential component of public safety. In Ontario, one of the ways that this is done is through participation in the National Flagging System. The National Flagging System is a Canada wide initiative that gathers and distributes information to interested prosecution services on violent offenders who have been identified and flagged as posing a high risk to violently re-offend. This information can be accessed by police and prosecution services. Each province has a Provincial Flagging Coordinator.

Duty of Prosecutor

Where an offender meets one or more of the following criteria, the Prosecutor, with the approval of her Crown Attorney or designate, must request that the offender be flagged by the Provincial Flagging Coordinator:

1. where the offender has previously been designated a dangerous or long-term offender or
2. where a review of the available information indicates that if the offender commits a further serious personal injury offence or a sexual offence, there is a reasonable prospect that they will be declared a dangerous or long-term offender (see Dangerous/Long-term Offender Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-8-dangerous-long-term-offenders>)).

When dealing with an offender who is known to have been flagged on the National Flagging System, a Prosecutor must request the offender's file from the Provincial Flagging Coordinator. At the conclusion of the prosecution, the Prosecutor must provide the Provincial Flagging Coordinator with the outcome of the prosecution and forward all new relevant material from the prosecution.

D. 18: Impaired Driving

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Individuals who drive under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs pose an unacceptable risk of harm to themselves and to the public. The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) and Highway Traffic Act (<https://www.ontario.ca/laws/statute/90h08>) (HTA) provide criminal sanctions and administrative measures, including the Ignition Interlock Program, to combat these offences. The protection of the public is the primary concern at every stage of the prosecution of impaired driving offences.

The following list sets out some aggravating features of an impaired driving offence. A Prosecutor should consider those features prior to making any significant decisions at all stages of the prosecution:

1. death, serious injuries and/or substantial property damage
2. a motor vehicle collision
3. driving conduct that poses a high risk to other motorists, pedestrians and/or police, such as excessive speed, racing or flight from police
4. whether the offence involves breach of a court order and frustrates the administration of justice, such as driving while prohibited or refuse breath sample
5. the presence of vulnerable people such as children
6. any prior criminal or HTA record for similar offences and/or fail to comply offences
7. high levels of blood alcohol concentration.

Charge screening

Ignition Interlock Program

The Criminal Code permits an offender to drive during a portion of the duration of the mandatory driving prohibition order, on certain conditions including installing the ignition interlock device in their vehicle. An ignition interlock device is an in-car alcohol breath screening device that prevents a vehicle from starting if it detects a certain blood alcohol concentration. The Ignition Interlock Program is administered by the Ministry of Transportation (<https://www.ontario.ca/page/ignition-interlock-program>) .

Where the Prosecutor intends to seek an increased absolute driving prohibition period, or an order that the offender not be permitted to drive with the interlock at all, the Prosecutor must convey that position to the offender prior to the plea being entered. In coming to this decision, the Prosecutor should consider the circumstances of the offence and the offender, any prior convictions under the Highway Traffic Act or Criminal Code, including those that are more than 10 years old.

Offenders convicted of drug impaired offences, or offences involving a combination of drugs and alcohol, are not eligible for the program.

Resolution discussions and sentence

Absent exceptional circumstances and then only with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate, the Prosecutor must not:

1. withdraw a Criminal Code driving offence that relates to the impairment of the driver in exchange for a guilty plea to an offence under the Highway Traffic Act or a Criminal Code offence that does not address the impairment of the driver
2. withdraw charges of "Over 80" solely because the readings are low
3. withdraw fail to remain or drive while disqualified charge in exchange for a guilty plea to impaired or "Over 80" or vice-versa.

Notice of Intention to Seek Increased Penalty

Notice of Intention to Seek Increased Penalty will be provided to an accused, where the Prosecutor seeks a higher range of sentence by reason of the accused's previous criminal record.

Absent exceptional circumstances, the Prosecutor must file the Notice of Intention to Seek Increased Penalty in all cases where the accused has a previous conviction for a drinking and driving offence within a five-year period of the current offence date. If exceptional circumstances exist, where the previous conviction is within a five-year period and the Prosecutor is satisfied that the accused poses no future threat to the safety of the public, the Prosecutor may consider that the public interest is served without seeking an increased penalty. In these circumstances, the Prosecutor must obtain the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate not to seek an increased penalty. The Prosecutor must still advise the court of the existence and complete extent of any criminal record of the accused.

After the five-year period, the Prosecutor may exercise her discretion to file the notice. In any event, the Prosecutor must still advise the court of the existence and complete extent of any criminal record of the accused.

Victims

Where the impaired driving offence has resulted in serious injury or death Prosecutors should ensure that efforts are made to inform the victim of the Victim/Witness Assistance Program (V/WAP) or similar victim support services. For further direction reference should be made to Victims Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) .

D. 19: In-Custody Informers

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Experience has shown that the use of in-custody informers may pose a substantial risk to the proper administration of justice. Prosecutors must be aware of the dangers of calling in-custody informers as witnesses. Policies are in place to prevent an injustice that occurs when an in-custody informer falsely implicates another person.

An in-custody informer is someone who claims to have received one or more statements from an accused person while both are in custody about offences that occurred outside the custodial institution. The accused person need not be in custody for, or charged with, the offences to which the statements relate. Excluded from this definition are informers who claim to have direct knowledge of an offence independent of the statements provided by the accused person.

Because of the potential risks posed by reliance upon evidence of an in-custody informer, there must be a compelling public interest to tender evidence from an in-custody informer. A decision to seek to tender this evidence must be the product of a rigorous, objective assessment of the in-custody informer's account of the accused person's alleged statement, the circumstances in which that account was provided to the authorities and the in-custody informer's general reliability.

In circumstances where the Prosecutor becomes aware that an in-custody informer has the intent to mislead and make a false statement with respect to an accused person, the case must be directed to the Crown Attorney. The case will then be investigated.

Calling an in-custody informer as a witness

Depending on the nature of the proceedings, a Prosecutor who seeks to tender the evidence of an in-custody informer must obtain the approval of the Crown Attorney, the Director, the In-Custody Informer Committee and/or the Assistant Deputy Attorney General - Criminal Law Division.

Preliminary inquiry

If the Prosecutor seeks to tender the evidence of an in-custody informer at a preliminary inquiry, the Prosecutor must bring the matter to the attention of her Director.

The Director must determine whether the in-custody informer's evidence can be used at the preliminary inquiry or if the case should be referred to the In-Custody Informer Committee for a decision.

An in-custody informer can only be called as a witness at a preliminary inquiry with the approval of a Director or the In-Custody Informer Committee.

Trial

A Prosecutor who forms the opinion that there is a compelling public interest in relying on the evidence of an in-custody informer at trial must refer the case to the In-Custody Informer Committee.

The Committee will consider the materials submitted by the Prosecutor, and absent exceptional circumstances, will meet with the Prosecutor to discuss the case before making its decision.

An in-custody informer can only be called as a witness at a trial with the approval of the In-Custody Informer Committee.

The deliberations of the Committee are privileged and will not be disclosed.

The existence of a public interest in proceeding with a prosecution based solely on the unconfirmed evidence of an in-custody informer is exceptional. In these circumstances, approval to tender the evidence must be approved by the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division as well as the In-Custody Informer Committee.

Agreements to testify

An in-custody informer must never be given consideration that is conditional upon the accused's conviction.

Any agreements made with in-custody informers relating to consideration in exchange for information or evidence must, absent exceptional circumstances, be reduced to writing and signed by a Prosecutor (other than the Prosecutor assigned to the case), the informer and counsel (if represented). An oral agreement, fully recorded, may substitute for a written agreement. A videotape recording or other type of record, such as audiotape or affidavit, may also suffice.

A Director must approve any agreements respecting consideration and the agreement must be provided to the In-custody Informer Committee.

Restrictions

If the in-custody informer recants their evidence following a decision by the In-Custody Informer Committee and the Prosecutor determines that the evidence of the in-custody informer should be tendered, the matter must be referred back to the Committee and the Director.

Where the in-custody informer is charged with additional criminal offences and/or seeks additional consideration, the Prosecutor must notify her Director who reviewed the original file, who will then determine whether the In-Custody Informer Committee ought to reconsider the matter.

The In-custody Informer Registry

The Ministry of the Attorney General has established an In-custody Informer Registry. The Chair of the In-custody Informer Committee is responsible for updating the registry with information provided by Prosecutors and the police.

Prosecutors who become aware of individuals coming forward to act as in-custody informers must forward to the Committee the name of the potential in-custody informer and the result of any investigation into the statement of the informant regardless of whether the Prosecutor seeks to use the informant's evidence. These names and this information will be included in the In-Custody Informer Registry.

The Prosecutor must forward to the Committee the outcome of a prosecution where an in-custody informer was permitted to testify at a preliminary inquiry or trial. These results will be noted in the In-Custody Informer Registry.

D. 20: Indigenous Peoples

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: February 13, 2019

Canada has distinct legal and constitutional obligations to Indigenous peoples derived from the recognition and confirmation of Aboriginal and Treaty rights in The Constitution Act, 1982 (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/const/page-15.html#h-38>) . The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) , the Youth Criminal Justice Act (<http://www.laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/Y-1.5/index.html>) , and legal decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada, requires consideration of the unique circumstances of Indigenous peoples.

Indigenous peoples within Canada include status and non-status First Nation, Inuit and Métis peoples. Many Indigenous peoples may prefer to self-identify as members of a specific community.

Canada's history of colonialism towards Indigenous peoples has included harmful policies of forced assimilation, displacement and child apprehension. The intergenerational impact of policies such as the '60's scoop' and residential schools has fragmented and dislocated families and communities and has caused significant trauma to Indigenous peoples and communities.

Many Indigenous peoples view the Canadian justice system as a foreign system that has been imposed upon them without their consent. Indigenous communities may prefer to adopt restorative justice principles that reflect Indigenous values and laws. Restorative justice principles can include a focus on relationships, repairing harm, taking responsibility and taking personal and family history into account.

Prosecutors should be familiar with the history of Indigenous peoples and understand the impact of that history on Indigenous accused, victims and communities. Prosecutors should also be aware of the value of restorative approaches to justice.

Relationships

A strong, positive working relationship based on mutual respect between Prosecutors and Indigenous communities, including police, advances the public interest. Prosecutors should work together with Indigenous leaders and Elders to build local relationships that ensure social harmony and community safety. Where feasible, the formation of a joint plan to promote safety in the community could be formulated through efforts by the community, police and the Crown Attorney.

Criminal proceedings

Indigenous peoples are overrepresented in virtually all aspects of the criminal justice system. There is widespread bias against Indigenous peoples within Canada and there is evidence that this widespread racism has translated into systematic discrimination in the criminal justice system.

The Prosecutor must maintain a flexible and open approach to criminal matters arising in Indigenous communities. The unique circumstances of an Indigenous accused, including their background, community history, and the effects of systemic discrimination should be considered at many stages of criminal proceedings, including bail and sentencing.

The Prosecutor should be aware of Indigenous programs and services in the courts and the community that are tailored and available to meet the unique needs of Indigenous persons in the criminal justice system, such as restorative justice diversion programs, Aboriginal Court Workers, Gladue Courts, Friendship Centres, and Indigenous Legal Services.

Diversion

For certain offences, diverting Indigenous accused to Indigenous Restorative Justice Programs may serve as an effective alternative to formal prosecution. Indigenous Restorative Justice Programs hold an Indigenous accused accountable for criminal conduct by bringing them before members of Indigenous communities with a focus on developing a plan that will allow the accused to take responsibility for their actions, address the root causes of the problem, and reintegrate into the community in a positive way.

Indigenous Restorative Justice Programs should be recommended where diversion is appropriate and the program is available. These programs may be meaningful to the Indigenous accused due in part to the fact that the consequence is imposed by community members often including respected Elders.

Prosecutors may consider the appropriateness of a community based sanction only if a reasonable prospect of conviction exists. A Prosecutor must not impose additional requirements on the accused person as a precondition to offering diversion.

When determining eligibility for diversion, Prosecutors should consider the background and systemic factors that brought an Indigenous accused in contact with the criminal justice system.

Reference should be made to the Community Justice Programs for Adults Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-4-community-justice-programs-for-adults>) , the Youth Criminal Justice: Extrajudicial Sanctions Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-a-youth-criminal-justice-extrajudicial-sanctions>) and the Mentally Ill Accused: Alternatives to Prosecution Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-a-mentally-ill-accused-alternatives-prosecution>) .

Judicial interim release (bail)

When determining a position on bail, the Prosecutor must apply the general principles set out in the Judicial Interim Release (Bail) Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) and consider the background and unique circumstances of an Indigenous accused and their connections to the Indigenous community. The Prosecutor should also consider the distance and remoteness of many Indigenous communities and the barriers that this creates for access to bail hearings and forms of release. A significant disadvantage is created since the accused is unlikely to have established connections or supports in the community in which the bail hearing is taking place. In these circumstances, seeking the detention of an Indigenous accused should remain an exceptional measure unless the release of the accused would jeopardize the safety and security of the victim or the public. Although the Prosecutor should keep in mind the principles referred to by the Supreme Court in Gladue, a Gladue report should not be requested by the Prosecutor for a bail hearing.

As with all accused, conditions of release shall not be imposed to change an Indigenous accused's behaviour or to punish the accused. These conditions often relate to therapeutic or rehabilitative measures and are more appropriate following conviction. The Prosecutor must ensure that any conditions she recommends on a bail release are necessary and appropriate to the circumstances of the Indigenous accused and relate to the alleged offence. The Prosecutor should only request conditions that are necessary to ensure public safety or to ensure attendance, and with which an accused can realistically comply.

Reference should be made to the Judicial Interim Release (Bail) Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) .

Sentencing

The Prosecutor must consider the unique systemic and background factors that may have played a part in bringing an Indigenous offender before the court in determining a position on sentencing. These factors may mitigate the Indigenous accused's moral blameworthiness. These factors are also relevant in assessing other principles of sentencing and to the types of sentencing options that may be appropriate because of the offender's particular Indigenous heritage or connection.

In determining a fit sentence, the court shall consider information provided by a Gladue Report, an enhanced Pre-Sentence Report and/or the submissions of defence counsel and the Prosecutor. This information could include a description of relevant community supports. The Prosecutor should provide the court with any relevant information that the Prosecutor is aware of about the Indigenous offender's background or unique circumstances.

Information about the offender and community in sentencing

Where the Prosecutor is seeking a significant custodial sentence, the accused, Prosecutor and/or judge may request that a Gladue Report be prepared following a finding of guilt or guilty plea.

A Gladue Report provides information to the court about the offender and their community including the unique systematic or background factor which may have played a part in bringing the particular Indigenous offender before the courts and may reduce the moral blameworthiness of the offender.

A Gladue Report contains information collected from research about the community and interviews conducted with the offender, family members, community leaders and others with relevant background information about the offender. The report also provides information of the types of sentencing procedures and sanctions that may be appropriate in the circumstances of the offender because of their particular Indigenous heritage or connection.

Although a Gladue Report is preferable, where one is not available, information about the offender and their community may be collected and provided to the court in an enhanced Pre-Sentence Report that would contain information about the offender's community obtained from research and interviews.

In addition, the Prosecutor may consider requesting a summary Gladue Report, use a past Gladue Report or work with defence counsel to introduce alternative sources of information (e.g. letters from family, friends, service providers and community members).

Victims

The Prosecutor should ensure that efforts are made to refer an Indigenous victim to Indigenous-specific Victim Services or, if Indigenous-specific services are not available, to Victim Witness Assistance Program or other victim services support.

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made to advise an Indigenous victim of testimonial aids that are available and appropriate to the circumstances. Further, steps should be taken to ensure that the Indigenous victim has access to translation and interpretation services into the victim's first language so that the victim can fully participate in the criminal proceeding.

As soon as feasible after an accused person is found guilty, the Prosecutor must take reasonable steps to provide an Indigenous victim with the opportunity to prepare a Victim Impact Statement, and inform the victim of their right to present it in court and their other options.

Reference should be made to the Victims Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) and the Testimonial Aids and Accessibility Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-35-testimonial-aids-and-accessibility>) .

D. 21: International Evidence Gathering

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Countries often seek the assistance of other countries in gathering evidence located in foreign jurisdictions for use in domestic criminal investigations and prosecutions. This assistance is provided by way of both informal and formal information-sharing processes.

Informal information-sharing processes typically involve police services in different countries working together to investigate offences allegedly committed in one or both countries. Informal police-to-police cooperation may take place where the requested assistance does not require a formal court process in the foreign jurisdiction. This assistance may include, for example, interviewing cooperative witnesses, conducting surveillance, gathering publicly-available information, and conducting coordinated joint investigations of cross-border offences. Informal police-to-police cooperation is performed by and in the discretion of the police.

The term “Mutual Legal Assistance” refers to the formal legal process through which countries cooperate in the investigation and prosecution of criminal offences. Mutual Legal Assistance does not replace existing means of informal cooperation. Informal police-to-police cooperation remains an important mechanism for international assistance, even where Mutual Legal Assistance is legally available.

When a search warrant, summons, production order or similar legal mechanism is necessary to obtain evidence in a foreign jurisdiction, a Mutual Legal Assistance request may be made. Mutual Legal Assistance requests typically involve confidential state-to-state communications governed by treaties and protocols. Where no treaty exists, assistance may still be provided pursuant to agreement between Canada and the foreign country.

Mutual Legal Assistance may include:

- gathering evidence, including documents and records
- compelling witnesses to give statements or testimony
- exchanging information and objects, such as exhibits

- locating and identifying persons
- transferring persons in custody
- executing requests for search and seizure
- serving documents
- enforcing fines and confiscation orders.

Seeking information/evidence in a foreign country

In Ontario, requests for Mutual Legal Assistance to obtain information in a foreign country in relation to criminal (and some provincial) investigations and prosecutions are made by the Crown Law Office – Criminal to the Department of Justice Canada, with input from the investigating police force and/or the assigned Prosecutor. The ultimate determination of whether Mutual Legal Assistance will be sought from the foreign country rests with the Department of Justice Canada.

Prosecutors requesting Mutual Legal Assistance should contact the Crown Law Office – Criminal as early on in the criminal process as possible, as Mutual Legal Assistance requests involve inherent delays and may be time-consuming. As noted above, informal means of cooperation may be more efficient and appropriate in certain cases.

Responding to requests for assistance by a foreign country

Mutual Legal Assistance requests by foreign countries for information and evidence located in Canada are reviewed by the Department of Justice Canada, and, if approved, forwarded to the appropriate province or territory for execution. In Ontario, Crown Law Office – Criminal is responsible for processing these requests with the assistance of local law enforcement.

If a Prosecutor is contacted directly by a foreign state seeking assistance, she should contact Crown Law Office – Criminal immediately. Crown Law Office – Criminal will advise whether the requested assistance can be provided through informal information-sharing processes or whether a formal Mutual Legal Assistance request must be made. If a formal Mutual Legal Assistance request is required, Crown Law Office – Criminal will refer the request to the Department of Justice.

D. 22: Internet Child Exploitation

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Internet child exploitation covers a number of offences including child pornography, voyeurism, luring a child, agreeing or arranging to commit a sexual offence against a child and making sexually explicit material available to a child. This may include the non-consensual distribution of intimate images. Child pornography exists in a variety of forms including written material, audio recordings, photographic, film, video or other visual representations. Like all crimes against children, offences relating to Internet child exploitation pose a serious threat of harm to children, the family and the community and must be prosecuted vigorously.

Prosecutions of Internet child exploitation offences raise a number of unique concerns in relation to victims, disclosure of sensitive or illegal materials, management of the courtroom and exhibits at trial, and ancillary orders at sentencing and wellness of those exposed to this evidence.

Sensitivity to the perspective of the child victims, their privacy interests, and their need to be protected from re-victimization must be considered at every stage of the prosecution. This is true even in cases where the specific identity or whereabouts of the child victims are unknown.

If the identity of victims is known, the Prosecutor should ensure that efforts are made to advise victims and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians of significant steps in the proceedings in advance of the case being heard in court, as appropriate. This includes meeting with victims in advance of the preliminary hearing and trial. Prosecutors should also ensure that efforts are made to inform the victims and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians of available specialized victims' services as facilitated by the Victim/Witness Assistance Program (V/WAP) or similar victims' support services.

Prosecutors dealing with cases involving Internet child exploitation should also consider the directions set out in the Offences against Children (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) and the Victims Directives (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) .

Prosecution

Charge screening

The Prosecutor should decide, at the charge screening stage, whether hybrid offences should be prosecuted by indictment or summary conviction. The Prosecutor should consider the directions set out in the Offences against Children Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) when determining whether to proceed summarily or by indictment. In addition, it is generally in the public interest to proceed by indictment where the offence involves making permanent recordings or distributing them on the Internet.

The Prosecutor should also consider the High Risk Offender National Flagging System (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-17-high-risk-offender-national-flagging-system>) and Dangerous/Long-term Offenders (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-8-dangerous-long-term-offenders>) Directives when prosecuting offences involving Internet child exploitation.

Disclosure

Prosecutions of child pornography offences raise unique disclosure concerns because access to child pornography is a criminal offence, there is potential trauma that may be caused by viewing such materials and the strong public interest in protecting the privacy and dignity of the children depicted in child sexual abuse materials.

In these unique circumstances, disclosure may be provided in two ways:

- by providing defence counsel with an opportunity to view the child pornography in a secure, private location
- by providing copies of the material pursuant to a court order with conditions sufficient to satisfy concerns that the material will be used for a legitimate purpose connected to the administration of justice, disclosure does not pose an undue risk of harm to children and the privacy interests of the children depicted in the child pornography will be adequately protected.

Reference should be made to the Disclosure Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-10-disclosure>) .

Protecting the privacy of child victims

Publication bans

The Prosecutor must employ the relevant statutory provisions to ensure that the privacy interests of the child victim, and that of other witnesses, are protected. The Prosecutor should have regard to the direction provided in the Publication Bans and Sealing Orders Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-32-publication-bans-and-sealing-orders>) .

In cases involving a child pornography offence, the Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) directs that the judge impose a publication ban, even in the absence of a request by the prosecution. The Prosecutor must remind the court of its obligation to make the order.

Tendering child pornography evidence

In prosecutions related to Internet child exploitation, exhibits are often filed that contain material alleged to be child pornography. Prosecutors must seek to protect the privacy and dignity of those children who may be depicted in child sexual abuse materials, as well as others who may be impacted by inadvertent exposure to such materials.

Given these concerns, all precautions must be taken to ensure that child pornography evidence is presented to the Court in such a manner that only those who are required to view the material are able to do so. Ultimately, the manner in which this material may be accessed will be determined by the Court.

Sealing orders

Prosecutors must apply for a sealing order in respect of any exhibit containing material alleged to be child pornography. On appeal, Prosecutors must seek an order sealing any Appeal Books or exhibits containing child pornography and seek restrictive terms respecting the use and eventual destruction of the Appeal Books.

Resolution discussions and sentence

Prosecutors should consider the specific directions set out in the Offences Against Children Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) when entering into resolution discussions. As soon as feasible, the Prosecutor must take reasonable steps to ensure that the victims and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians are informed of a proposed resolution (e.g. a guilty plea or proposed sentence) or that the charges will be withdrawn.

Absent exceptional circumstances, and then only with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate, the Prosecutor must not:

- reduce or withdraw a charge relating to Internet child exploitation
- accept a plea to a different offence, solely to avoid a mandatory minimum sentence
- accept a plea to a different offence, solely for the purpose of avoiding a DNA order or an order under the Sex Offender Information Registration Act (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/S-8.7/>) (SOIRA).

Victim impact statements

The Criminal Code directs the court to ask the Prosecutor if reasonable steps were taken to provide the victim with an opportunity to prepare a victim impact statement. As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, the Prosecutor must take reasonable steps to provide the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians with the opportunity to prepare a Victim Impact Statement, and inform the victim of their right to present it to the court and their other options.

Ancillary orders

All Internet child exploitation offences are “primary designated offences”, with the exception of voyeurism. The Prosecutor must remind the court that the DNA order is mandatory and must seek a DNA order regardless of whether the offender’s profile is already included in the DNA Data Bank. See DNA Data Bank Orders Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-11-dna-data-bank-orders>) .

All child exploitation offences are designated offences for which a SOIRA order is mandatory, with the exception of voyeurism. The Prosecutor must remind the court of this mandatory order and of the appropriate duration of the order.

In cases of voyeurism, the Prosecutor should make an application for both DNA and SOIRA orders where the Prosecutor is of the view that the voyeurism offence was committed with the intent of committing a designated sexual offence (such as making child pornography) or there is evidence supporting a legitimate concern that the offender’s behavior may be escalating or that the offender has a history of antisocial behavior.

Where appropriate, Prosecutors should apply for a prohibition order restricting the offender's ability to interact with children under the age of 16, either in person or over the Internet.

In all cases where an offender has been convicted of an offence involving Internet child exploitation, Prosecutors should apply for forfeiture of things used in child pornography or Internet luring, including computers. Prosecutors must seek forfeiture of any child pornography, the possession of which is illegal and all offence related property.

D. 23: Intimate Partner Violence

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Intimate partner (or domestic) violence involves the use of physical, psychological or sexual force, actual or threatened, as well as criminal harassment, in an intimate relationship. Intimate relationships vary in duration and legal formality, and include dating, living common law or married, whether current or former.

Intimate partner violence offences are often committed in a context where there is a pattern of assaultive and/or controlling behaviour. Violence may go beyond physical assault and may include emotional, psychological and sexual abuse that is intended to induce fear, humiliation and powerlessness. Intimate partner violence is not a private matter but is a serious criminal act. Intimate partner violence is a prevalent social problem with far ranging harmful effects.

The Prosecutor must be aware of the dynamics that exist in an intimate relationship that may affect the conduct of the prosecution. In addition to fear for their personal safety and that of their children, victims of these offences may be under considerable pressure on account of many factors, including financial considerations, the need for childcare, disapproval of family members, immigration consequences or fear of being ostracized by the community. In many cases, victims will also continue to feel an emotional bond to the accused.

Children are also directly affected by intimate partner violence. The Prosecutor must be aware of the risk that children often suffer lasting emotional and psychological harm when exposed to intimate partner violence. Prosecutors shall report to child protection agencies any cases where they have reasonable suspicion that a child is, or may be, in need of protection.

At all stages of the prosecution, including bail hearings, the safety of victims and their families is a paramount factor for Prosecutors to consider in the exercise of their discretion.

Each Crown Attorney's Office has a designated "Intimate Partner Violence" Prosecutor, who is also a member of the local Domestic Violence High-Risk Committee and any Domestic Violence Court Advisory Committee.

Judicial interim release (bail)

In intimate partner violence offences, the Prosecutor must take a position on judicial interim release applying the same general principles set out in the Judicial Interim Release (Bail) Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>), including the requirement for ongoing assessment of the strength of the Crown's case. Prosecutors should be sensitive to the needs of the victim and to the dynamics that exist in families where a partner is allegedly abused. The Prosecutor must be conscious of the potential increased risk of harm in these cases and must seek a detention order where she considers it necessary for the safety and security of the victim or the public.

In determining whether to consent to or oppose release, the Prosecutor must consider the possibility of ongoing violence and its potential impact on the physical, emotional and psychological well-being of any children, including any child witnesses. The Prosecutor must also consider any risk assessment information before taking a position on judicial interim release. Risk factors can include but are not limited to history of violence, a pending or actual separation or substance abuse issues.

The Prosecutor must ensure that any conditions she recommends on a bail release are necessary and appropriate to the circumstances of the alleged offence and the accused. The Prosecutor should have regard to the existence of any family court orders.

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made to notify the victim of any release order, the conditions of release, including non-communication and any order detaining the accused. In all cases where there is reason to have concern for a victim's safety, the Prosecutor must ensure that victim notification occurs as soon as possible. On request, the victim must be provided with a copy of the court order.

Charge screening

When applying the Charge Screening Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-3-charge-screening>) the Prosecutor should keep in mind the factors unique to cases of intimate partner violence. The public interest factors in these cases must be considered with the predominant need to protect the victim. Given the prevalence and danger of intimate partner violence it will usually be in the public interest to proceed with these prosecutions. Ultimately, the decision to prosecute must be based on factors specific to each case.

In certain circumstances, the interests of justice may be best served by requiring a motivated, low-risk accused to complete domestic violence education and counselling. The Prosecutor may consider recommending counselling provided by an early intervention program only where:

- the accused pleads guilty [or agrees to enter into a s.810 Recognizance]
- the accused has no convictions for violence-related offences
- the accused did not cause serious injuries or harm
- no weapon was used in the offence
- the victim is consulted.

The Prosecutor must not withdraw charges solely based on the victim's request. The Prosecutor must consider all the circumstances. These victims may be reluctant to continue a prosecution and be under considerable pressure to seek the withdrawal of the charges.

Victim as witness

In cases where the victim recants or refuses to testify, the Prosecutor must consider the reasons for the recantation or refusal. The Prosecutor must consider whether the case can be proven using other evidence and the appropriateness of an adjournment.

Resolution discussions and sentencing

Section 810 recognizances (“Peace Bonds”)

There may be exceptional cases where the victim’s safety, their best interests and the interests of society could be served by employing an alternative to criminal prosecution. The Prosecutor may resolve the case by way of a section 810 recognizance after considering all the circumstances, including the victim’s views and public safety and the factors outlined in the Community Justice Programs for Adults Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-4-community-justice-programs-for-adults>) .

A decision to agree to a section 810 recognizance must be approved by the Crown Attorney or designate. In all cases where a Prosecutor decides a section 810 recognizance is appropriate, firearms and weapons prohibitions must be considered as conditions of the peace bond. A Prosecutor must not use a common law peace bond in intimate partner violence cases unless a section 810 recognizance is not available and even then only with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate. The same considerations apply to the use of a common law peace bond as a section 810 recognizance.

Victim impact statements

As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, the Prosecutor must take reasonable steps to provide the victim with the opportunity to prepare a Victim Impact Statement, and inform the victim of their right to present it to the court and their other options. The victim may be informed of these rights early in the process.

Restitution

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) directs the court to consider making a restitution order and to ask the Prosecutor if reasonable steps have been taken to provide the victim with an opportunity to indicate whether they are seeking restitution i.e. compensation for counselling. As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, the Prosecutor must take reasonable steps to provide the victim with an opportunity to indicate whether the victim is seeking restitution for their losses and damages.

Sentencing

In cases of high-risk offenders, the Prosecutor must refer the case to the High-Risk Offender National Flagging System (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-17-high-risk-offender-national-flagging-system>) . In appropriate cases, the Prosecutor should consider whether to proceed with a Dangerous/Long-term Offender Application (see High-Risk Offender National Flagging System Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-17-high-risk-offender-national-flagging-system>) and Dangerous/Long-term Offender Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-8-dangerous-long-term-offenders>)).

Where probation is imposed, the Prosecutor should consider whether the Partner Assault Program or other relevant counselling program is appropriate.

Reference should be made to the DNA Data Bank Order Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-11-dna-data-bank-orders>), the Weapons Prohibitions and Forfeiture Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-37-weapons-prohibitions-and-forfeiture>), the Firearms Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-14-firearms>) and the Indigenous Peoples Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>).

D. 24: Judicial Interim Release (Bail)

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

One of the fundamental presumptions in Canadian criminal law is that a person arrested and charged with an offence will be out of custody prior to trial. This is based on the presumption of innocence. The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) and legal decisions from the Supreme Court of Canada emphasize that liberty while awaiting trial is a basic principle underlying the judicial interim release process.

Upon arrest an accused may be released by police or brought before the court for a bail hearing. A bail hearing involves a balancing of potentially conflicting interests: the liberty interests of the accused and the Charter right to reasonable bail balanced against societal interests in public safety and confidence in the administration of justice. Where a hearing is held, the court determines whether the accused should be released with or without conditions and with or without sureties, or held in custody prior to trial.

An accused is presumed innocent and the Prosecutor must be aware of the impact of even a brief period of detention in custody upon an accused. Even a brief period of detention in custody affects the mental, social and physical life of the accused and their family. An accused is presumed innocent and must not find it necessary to plead guilty to secure their release.

The decision whether to consent to or oppose bail is one of the most critical decisions in the criminal process. It requires a consideration of competing interests including the interests of public safety, the accused and the victim. This process is complicated by the challenges of accurately predicting future conduct.

The appropriate exercise of prosecutorial discretion is fundamental to the proper functioning of the bail process. The Prosecutor must act with objectivity, independence and fairness in each case to ensure early, timely and principled decision making based on the circumstances of the accused and the offence and an appropriate use of legal principles without outside pressures or considerations. Decisions made by Prosecutors about consenting to or opposing release made in the proper exercise of their discretion will be supported by the Attorney General.

The accused should be released or a bail hearing should be held at the earliest opportunity having regard to the requirements of the Criminal Code. The Prosecutor should consider the least restrictive form of release and should not request a release with a surety (the most onerous form) unless each lesser form of release has been considered and rejected as inappropriate. As noted by the Supreme Court of Canada, the default position is the unconditional release of the accused. Any conditions that are requested should be necessary and required in the interests of the accused and the safety and security of the victim or public and related to the commission of the offence.

Where the Prosecutor believes that the release of the accused would jeopardize the safety or security of the victim or the public and such risk cannot be appropriately mitigated by some form of community based release with conditions, the Prosecutor must seek the accused's detention.

Additional principles and directions that apply to specific circumstances are particularized in specific Directives. Reference should be made to the following Directives: Firearms (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-14-firearms>) , Indigenous Peoples (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) , Intimate Partner Violence (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>) , Mentally Ill Accused: Court Practices and Procedures (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-b-mentally-ill-accused-court-practices-and-procedures>) , Offences against Children

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) , Sexual Offences against Adults (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-34-sexual-offences-against-adults>) , Victims (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) , Weapons Prohibitions and Forfeiture (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-37-weapons-prohibitions-and-forfeiture>) , YCJ: Court Practices and Procedures (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-b-youth-criminal-justice-court-practices-and-procedures>) .

Bail hearing

The Charter guarantees the accused right not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause. The concept of “reasonable bail” relates to the terms of bail, including any monetary component and other restrictions that are imposed on the accused, and requires the least restrictive form of release available consistent with the public interest.

The concept of “just cause” is limited to three grounds for detention which are defined by the Criminal Code:

1. to ensure attendance in court
2. for the protection or safety of the public
3. to maintain confidence in the administration of justice.

Each of the three grounds is separate and independent from the others. There is no specific order in which the grounds are considered. The court decides which form of release to order and it is the court that determines and imposes conditions that are specific to the circumstances of the accused and the alleged offence and necessary to address the three grounds.

The Prosecutor should ensure that the bail hearing proceeds expeditiously and as effectively as possible. Wherever possible, the hearing should be conducted and completed on the first appearance of the accused in bail court. The Prosecutor should consider whether the hearing can be conducted by a factual summary and submissions without the necessity of calling evidence or by conducting a focused hearing dealing with only issues that are in dispute.

If the Prosecutor seeks an adjournment, it should be for as short a time as necessary. The reasons for the request should be stated in open court.

Factors to consider

The Prosecutor should consider whether there is a reasonable prospect of conviction and whether it is in the public interest to proceed with the prosecution of the charges (see Charge Screening Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-3-charge-screening>)). If the charge screening threshold is not met the charge should be withdrawn and the accused released. The Prosecutor should also consider whether a custodial sentence would be appropriate if the accused is subsequently found guilty. Detention should be rare if a custodial sentence is unlikely.

The Prosecutor must assess the circumstances of the alleged offence and the accused, including information relating to the victim, when determining a position on bail. This assessment must continue when new information is received. Information provided by the accused through counsel, may assist the Prosecutor in making a final determination on bail.

These factors must be considered by the Prosecutor regardless of whether the onus of showing why the accused must be detained, or not, is on the prosecution or the accused.

Circumstances of the accused

1. the age of the accused
2. the presence or absence of a criminal record, including any convictions for violence, related offences and breach of court orders
3. a concern that the accused will interfere with the administration of justice (e.g. coercion of witnesses, destruction of evidence)
4. the presence or absence of outstanding charges in any jurisdiction, together with their nature and circumstances
5. the need for and the availability of supervision of the accused while on bail
6. any ties to the community
7. the availability of community supports.

The Prosecutor must consider the unique circumstances of Indigenous Peoples when an accused self-identifies as Métis, Inuit or First Nation. The Prosecutor should also consider the distance and remoteness of many Indigenous communities and the barriers that this creates for access to bail hearings and forms of release. A significant disadvantage is created since the accused is unlikely to have established connections or supports in the community in which the bail hearing is taking place. In these circumstances, seeking the detention of an Indigenous accused should remain an exceptional measure unless the release of the accused would jeopardize the safety and security of the victim or the public. Although the Prosecutor should keep in mind the principles referred to by the Supreme Court in Gladue, a Gladue report should not be requested by the Prosecutor for a bail hearing. Reference should be made to the Indigenous Peoples Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) .

When determining a position on bail, Prosecutors should recognize the circumstances of vulnerable and disadvantaged accused, including racialized populations, the homeless, the poor or those suffering from mental illness or addictions. These accused may not have access to the type of accommodation, resources, networks or supports that commonly exist for other members of the community. Pre-trial detention should never be used as a substitute for mental health or other social measures.

Circumstances and nature of the alleged offence

1. whether the offence involved violence or threats of violence
2. whether serious bodily harm was reasonably foreseeable
3. whether the offence harmed the victim (physical, psychological or financial) and/or community
4. whether the incident violated the sexual integrity of a person
5. whether the victim has provided input through police or a victim services agency
6. whether a weapon was used or threatened to be used
7. whether there was an intention to cause or attempt to cause substantial property damage or loss, and if so, whether the damage was reasonably foreseeable
8. the interests of the community, including the needs of the victim.

The Prosecutor should consider whether the offence involved a spouse/intimate partner. Spouse/intimate partner offences are often committed in a context where there is a pattern of assaultive and controlling behaviour. Violence may go beyond physical assault and may include emotional, psychological and sexual abuse that is intended to induce fear, humiliation and powerlessness. The same general principles of bail apply to these cases, including the requirement for ongoing assessment of the strength of the Crown's case. Prosecutors should be sensitive to the needs of the victim and to the dynamics that exist in families where a partner is allegedly abused. The Prosecutor must be conscious of the potential increased risk of harm in these cases and must seek a detention order where she considers it necessary for the safety and security of the victim or the public. Reference should be made to the Intimate Partner Violence Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>) .

Where the charge is an offence against the administration of justice, such as a breach of a court order, the Prosecutor should consider the extent of non-compliance, the seriousness of the alleged breach and any apparent reasons for the breach in determining her position on bail. The Prosecutor should also consider the gravity of the administration of justice offence and the underlying facts in proportion to the consequences of proceeding with the criminal charge.

Where an accused is arrested for breaching a condition of a release order and/or committing a new offence, the decision to cancel the previous release order should not be automatic but subject to consideration of the same factors set out above.

Options for release

The Criminal Code permits a police officer to release an accused upon arrest. Where the police officer does not release the accused, the Criminal Code directs a court to release an accused on an undertaking without conditions unless the Prosecutor shows why a more onerous form of release or detention is warranted. There are certain offences for which the Criminal Code directs that the accused show why their detention in custody is not required pending trial.

There are several forms of release set out in the Criminal Code. The “ladder” principle requires that a justice not order a more onerous form of release unless the Prosecutor shows why a less onerous form of release is not appropriate. The “ladder approach” moves from the least restrictive to the most onerous form of release and permits the court to release in one of the following ways, with or without conditions:

1. an undertaking, with or without conditions
2. a recognizance without sureties with promise of money
3. a recognizance with sureties with promise of money
4. with Prosecutor’s consent, a recognizance without sureties with deposit of money

5. a recognizance with or without sureties, and a deposit of money where the accused does not live within 200 kilometres of place of arrest.

In determining her position on bail, the Prosecutor should apply the ladder approach. The Prosecutor should consider the least restrictive bail that still meets any concerns that have been identified. The Prosecutor shall consider each rung of the “ladder” individually and shall reject it before moving to a more restrictive form of release. This should be done by the Prosecutor whether the onus of showing why the accused must be detained, or not, is on the prosecution or the accused.

Although most accused persons will be released by the police or at a bail hearing, given the importance of the protection of the public, the Prosecutor must seek an order that the accused be detained in custody where she believes that the release of the accused would jeopardize the safety and security of the victim or public, and that such risk cannot be appropriately mitigated by some form of community-based release with conditions.

Supervision

In some circumstances, concerns about public safety or attendance in court could be addressed by supervision in the community rather than detention of an accused. Such supervision should only be considered where it is necessary and appropriate and where lesser forms of release would be inadequate to meet those concerns.

Supervision may be available through a Bail Verification and Supervision Program or by a surety. Community groups or organizations may also be able to perform a supervisory role.

The Bail Verification and Supervision Program may require the accused to report to the police or the program and assists the accused in abiding by any conditions set by the court. The program may also help in accessing other community services or support the accused person. The program should not be expected to ensure absolute compliance with the release.

A surety is a person who assumes responsibility for the accused's compliance with their conditions of release by promising to pay a sum of money if the accused breaches any of those conditions. A recognizance with a surety is one of the most onerous forms of release and should not be automatic. The Prosecutor should not request a surety unless all the less onerous forms of release have been considered and rejected as inappropriate. If the Prosecutor has determined that a surety release should be requested, the surety approval process should be efficient, minimally intrusive and consistent with the principles of the Criminal Code. Although the surety approval process is ultimately up to the court, as a best practice the Prosecutor should generally use an affidavit of the surety and use an out of court approval process where available.

Monetary component

A surety or an accused may promise an amount of money (with or without deposit) that may be forfeited if the accused does not comply with the conditions of release, including not attending court.

The Prosecutor should not request a deposit of cash for the release of an accused if their surety has assets that can be promised. A recognizance with a promise of money is functionally equivalent to depositing money and has the same persuasive effect. Requiring a deposit of money should be relied on only in exceptional circumstances where a release on a recognizance with a surety is unavailable.

The amount of money promised must be within the means of the accused and their surety. The Prosecutor should not request an amount to be promised or deposited that is unattainable as that has the same effect as a detention order.

Conditions of release

A court determines whether the accused should be released, with or without conditions and with or without supervision. The accused, the Prosecutor, sureties and a Bail Verification and Supervision Program may propose conditions of release for the court to consider. The court imposes conditions that are necessary and required in the interests of the accused and the safety and security of the victim or public.

The Prosecutor must ensure that any conditions she recommends on a bail release are necessary and appropriate to the circumstances of the accused and the alleged offence. The Prosecutor should only request conditions that are necessary to ensure public safety or to ensure attendance, and with which an accused can realistically comply. The conditions recommended should:

1. be rationally connected to one of the three grounds for detention in custody
2. relate to the specific circumstances of the accused and the offence
3. be realistic (the accused will be able to comply with the conditions)

4. be minimally intrusive and proportionate to any risk.

There must always be a connection between bail conditions proposed and the circumstances of the alleged offence and the accused (for example, “no alcohol” or “no drug” condition is not appropriate where it is not connected to the offence). Where a connection exists, consideration must be given to crafting the least restrictive bail conditions that still meet public safety concerns (for example, no drinking outside your residence as opposed to a complete ban on alcohol consumption or possession). It is important to limit the number of conditions that are imposed to those that are necessary and appropriate. Any condition recommended should be specific to the case and none should be automatic.

Conditions of release shall not be imposed to change an accused’s behaviour or to punish an accused person. These conditions often relate to therapeutic or rehabilitative measures and are more appropriate following conviction. Conditions imposing a curfew or a condition “not to associate with unnamed persons having a criminal record” or a condition prohibiting attendance at a place may have the unintended consequence of preventing an accused seeing family, accessing support services or losing access to the area they normally lives. The Prosecutor should not request these conditions as a matter of routine.

Victims

The Criminal Code directs that the court shall include in the record of the proceedings a statement that the safety and security of every victim of the offence was considered. The Prosecutor must communicate any concerns about the safety or security of any victims to the court.

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made to notify the victim of any release order, the conditions of release, including non-communication and any order detaining the accused. In all cases where there is reason to have concerns for a victim’s safety, the Prosecutor must ensure efforts are made for bail notification to occur as soon as possible. On request, the victim must be provided with a copy of the court order.

Similar notification should be made to victims when there is a bail variation or bail review.

Bail variation

The terms of a bail order may be varied on the consent of the accused and Prosecutor. In determining her position on a request to vary any condition in a bail order, a Prosecutor should consider whether there has been a change in circumstances that warrants a variation to the condition subject to consideration of the same factors set out above.

Bail review

The decision of a justice to release or detain an accused may be reviewed in the Superior Court of Justice if there is new evidence showing a significant change in circumstances, there has been an error in law or the decision is clearly inappropriate. The Prosecutor must obtain the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate to seek a bail review of a release order.

D. 25: Juries

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

A jury must be independent, impartial and competent. Impartiality requires the exclusion of those persons who may have a personal interest or connection to the case. It also requires the exclusion of those persons who are unable to put aside any biases, prejudices and tentative opinions relating to the case. Impartiality is reinforced through a process of randomly selecting eligible persons from the general population for jury duty. Competency is determined by eligibility criteria set out in the Juries Act (<https://www.ontario.ca/laws/statute/90j03>) and the Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) .

Serving as a juror is both a civic duty and an important opportunity to contribute to the community. It also ensures that decisions of the court are grounded in community values. The process by which eligible citizens are randomly selected for jury duty is governed by law and is described on the Ministry of Attorney General website (<https://www.ontario.ca/page/going-criminal-court>) . The random selection process promotes public confidence in the jury's verdict, and in the administration of criminal justice. It should also, to the extent possible, protect the legitimate privacy interests of prospective jurors.

It is important to protect actual impartiality and also maintain the appearance of an impartial jury during the course of a trial. The Prosecutor must seek to obtain a jury that is impartial, not a jury that is favourable to her position. The Prosecutor must not directly or indirectly communicate with any member of the jury except as permitted by law.

Juror background checks

The pool of eligible persons from which a jury can be selected in court is called the jury panel. The Prosecutor must not request criminal record checks or other background checks on members of the jury panel. If the Prosecutor determines that criminal record checks or other background checks are necessary, the express written approval of the Crown Attorney and Director are required. Where criminal record checks or other background checks are conducted, the Prosecutor must disclose the results to defence counsel and the Director must notify the Assistant Deputy Attorney General- Criminal Law Division.

The Prosecutor must not conduct any informal inquiries (for example seeking input from the office staff or the police) into a prospective juror's background without judicial approval.

Where the Prosecutor obtains judicial approval to conduct an informal inquiry into a prospective juror's background, the Prosecutor must record the names of each person who is shown the panel list, and must disclose those names to the defence. The Prosecutor should advise each person who is shown the jury panel list that the sole reason the person is viewing the list is due to prior judicial authorization. The Prosecutor should also tell each person that their comments are to be reduced to writing on the jury panel list and that their comments will be disclosed to the defence.

Challenge of the jury roll or panel

The Juries Act requires that one jury roll be prepared every year for each judicial district in Ontario. Once the jury roll is created for the judicial district, and certified as accurate and complete, Ontario's Provincial Jury Centre then uses a computer program to randomly select jury panels from the jury roll.

The jury roll or panel may be challenged prior to the selection of jurors on the grounds that the roll or panel is not representative including partiality, fraud or wilful misconduct or was prepared using improper procedures.

If the accused challenges the propriety or representativeness of the jury roll or panel, the Prosecutor must inform the Crown Attorney and Director. The Director must then notify the Assistant Deputy Attorney General-Criminal Law Division.

On the application, the Prosecutor should ensure that a proper evidentiary foundation for the challenge is placed before the court. This will require coordination and consultation with Court Services Division prior to proceeding with the application.

The Prosecutor must not challenge the propriety or representativeness of the jury roll or panel without the prior approval of the Crown Attorney and Director.

Safeguarding jury panel lists

Jury panel lists contain confidential information about prospective jurors and must be securely stored at all times. During the course of the trial, the Prosecutor must ensure that the list is not left in public view. After the trial, the Prosecutor must ensure that the confidentiality of the list is maintained.

The jury panel list should not be destroyed. The list must be placed in a sealed marked envelope, and must be stored with the contents of the Crown Brief. The jury panel list should be securely retained for a period of one year after its use.

D. 26: Mentally Ill Accused

Prosecution Directives

Mentally ill accused face unique challenges at each stage of the criminal justice process.

Mental disorders can take many forms and encompass any illness, disorder or abnormal condition that impairs a person's mind and its functioning. Mental disorders do not include temporary or self-induced states. The fact that a person has a mental disorder may be a relevant factor for consideration in a criminal proceeding.

In recognition of their particular circumstances, mentally ill accused may warrant special consideration within the criminal justice system, depending on the nature and circumstances of the offence and the background of the accused. The existence of a mental disorder may be relevant in determining whether an accused is eligible for diversion, determining a position on bail, whether a psychiatric assessment of the accused's mental condition is required, whether the accused may be exempt from criminal responsibility and the dispositions available at the conclusion of the criminal proceedings.

Any consideration given by Prosecutors to an accused's mental disorder and mental condition must always be consistent with maintaining public safety and public confidence in the administration of justice. In these circumstances, Prosecutors must be guided by the relevant provisions of the Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) , the governing law and any relevant legislation including the Mental Health Act (<https://www.ontario.ca/laws/statute/90m07>) .

In this section

- Mentally Ill Accused: Alternatives to Prosecution (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-a-mentally-ill-accused-alternatives-prosecution>)
- Mentally Ill Accused: Court Practices and Procedures (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-b-mentally-ill-accused-court-practices-and-procedures>)
- Mentally Ill Accused: Post Verdict Issues (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-c-mentally-ill-accused-post-verdict-issues>)

26 (a): Mentally Ill Accused - Alternatives to Prosecution

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Community based sanctions may serve as an effective alternative to the prosecution of mentally ill accused. In some cases, the needs and interests of society can be better served through the exercise of prosecutorial discretion to withdraw or stay criminal charges upon an accused person's entry or completion of a comprehensive diversion program. A mentally ill accused is entitled to special consideration flowing from the fact that, their illness, disorder or impaired cognitive functioning may have played some role in the commission of the offence.

To the extent that it is consistent with public safety, accused persons suffering from a mental illness (including developmental disabilities and concurrent disorders) should have the same access to community justice programs as all other accused. This may require an emphasis on restorative and remedial measures, such as specialized treatment options, supervisory programs or counselling programs, as alternatives to prosecution.

Prosecutors must only consider community based sanctions if a reasonable prospect of conviction exists and must not impose additional requirements on the accused person as a precondition to offering an alternative to diversion.

A community based program will hold the mentally ill accused accountable for criminal conduct by requiring the completion of rehabilitative programs that effectively respond to the nature of the offence, the accused, and the needs of the community. Once in a program, a plan will be created for the accused that will address the underlying causes that led to the commission of the offence.

In considering community based programs, Prosecutors should bear in mind that a purely medical approach (that may involve medication and/or psychiatric care) is not necessarily the preferred course for all mentally ill accused. Often, the provision of good housing and proper ongoing support in the community are, in themselves, an effective response.

Alternative sanctions for mentally ill accused may also include community service work, an apology, and restitution.

This directive addresses diversion for mentally ill persons. For young persons, please see Youth Criminal Justice: Extrajudicial Sanctions (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-a-youth-criminal-justice-extrajudicial-sanctions>) . For adults, please see Community Justice Programs for Adults (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-4-community-justice-programs-for-adults>) . For an Indigenous accused, please see Indigenous Peoples Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) .

Ineligible offences

Prosecutors must not refer any of the following offences to a community based program, regardless of the circumstances of the offence or the accused:

- murder, manslaughter, infanticide, criminal negligence causing death
- driving offences causing death or bodily harm
- aggravated assault

- simple impaired driving or driving with a prohibited blood alcohol concentration or refusing to provide a breath sample
- offences involving firearms
- criminal organization offences
- terrorism offences
- kidnapping
- voyeurism
- child abuse and child luring
- offences involving child pornography
- home invasions
- human trafficking offences
- robbery
- sexual assault cause bodily harm
- sexual interference and exploitation, invitation to sexual touching and incest
- any offences where the Attorney General's consent was obtained to initiate proceedings

Presumptively ineligible offences

In exceptional cases, the Prosecutor may refer the following presumptively ineligible offences to a community based program with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate:

- hate-motivated offences [Hate Propaganda and Hate Motivated Offences Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-16-hate-propaganda-and-hate-motivated-offences>)]
- intimate partner violence offences [Intimate Partner Violence Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>)]
- criminal harassment
- publication etc., of intimate images without consent

- sexual assault

Eligible offences

The Prosecutor may refer any other offence to a community based program.

Factors to consider

In determining if a community based sanction is an effective alternative to the prosecution of a presumptively ineligible offence or eligible offence for a mentally ill accused, the Prosecutor and Crown Attorney or designate must consider the following factors:

Background of the accused person:

1. the age and health of the accused person including any mental health issues and psychiatric history
2. any prior findings of guilt or past involvement with community justice programs or specialized treatment
3. the nature and number of any such previous offences
4. any outstanding charges
5. the role of the accused person and their corresponding degree of responsibility in relation to the offence
6. whether the accused person has been previously victimized
7. any remorse and willingness to engage in community justice programs or an appropriate treatment program, including the likelihood of compliance
8. the degree that the mental illness can be said to have impacted the accused person's behavior and involvement in the offence
9. whether the accused person comes from a disadvantaged group
10. whether the accused person has been or is presently engaged with the mental health system
11. whether the accused self-identifies as Métis, Inuit or First Nation.

The circumstances and nature of the offence:

1. whether the offence is summary or indictable
2. whether the offence involves violence
3. whether the offence actually harmed the victim (physical, psychological or financial) and/or society
4. whether the incident affected the sexual integrity of a person
5. whether a weapon was used or threatened to be used
6. whether there was an intention to cause or attempt to cause substantial property damage or loss, and if so, whether the damage was reasonably foreseeable
7. whether the offence was against the administration of justice, such as breach of a court order, and, if so, the extent of non-compliance
8. whether the offence involved malice, extortion, exploitation or revenge
9. whether the offence involved a breach of trust
10. whether the offence was motivated by bias, prejudice, or hate
11. the age of the victim
12. the views of the victim and/or their parents or legal guardians (if victim is a child), if available.

Administration of justice considerations:

1. public confidence in the administration of justice
2. the length and expense of a trial when considered in relation to the seriousness of the offence
3. the likely sentence upon conviction
4. the availability of an appropriate sanction, including culturally relevant programming options, which will hold the accused person accountable and focus on correcting the offending behaviour
5. frailties in the prosecution e.g. staleness of the case, or the technical nature of the offence
6. whether the consequences of the prosecution would be unduly harsh to the accused person, the victim or any witnesses in the case, owing to such factors such as age, health or the relationship between the parties

7. whether a just result is accelerated by a referral to a community justice program.

In this section

- Mentally Ill Accused: Alternatives to Prosecution
- Mentally Ill Accused: Court Practices and Procedures
(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-b-mentally-ill-accused-court-practices-and-procedures>)
- Mentally Ill Accused: Post Verdict Issues (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-c-mentally-ill-accused-post-verdict-issues>)

26 (b): Mentally Ill Accused - Court Practices and Procedures

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

An accused's mental illness may influence whether they are able to meaningfully participate in the criminal proceeding or whether they understood fully what they were doing at the time of the offence. If a mental illness renders the accused unable to participate in conducting their defence or instructing counsel, an accused may be found 'unfit to stand trial.' If a mental illness affects the accused's actions at the time of the offence such that they did not understand what they were doing or did not know what they were doing was wrong, the accused may be found 'not criminally responsible (NCR).'

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) sets out the legal requirements to determine fitness to stand trial and the finding of not criminally responsible.

Judicial interim release (bail)

When determining a position on bail, Prosecutors should recognize the unique circumstances and inherent vulnerability of an accused suffering from a mental illness. The accused should be released or a bail hearing held at the earliest opportunity having regard to the requirements of the Criminal Code.

The Prosecutor must be aware that even a brief period of detention can have a disruptive impact upon an accused dealing with a mental illness. These accused may not have access to the type of accommodation, resources, networks or supports that commonly exist for other members of the community. Pre-trial detention should never be used as a substitute for mental health or other social measures. If a psychiatric assessment is being sought at the bail stage, detention in custody may be necessary while the accused waits for space in a hospital.

Conditions of release shall not be imposed to change a mentally ill accused's behavior or to punish the accused. These conditions often relate to therapeutic or rehabilitative measures and are more appropriate following conviction. The Prosecutor must ensure that any conditions she recommends on a bail release are necessary and appropriate to the circumstances of the accused and the alleged offence. Any conditions recommended should be specific to the case and none should be automatic. The Prosecutor should only request conditions that are necessary to ensure public safety or to ensure attendance, and with which an accused can realistically comply. The accused's mental illness may impede the ability to understand and comply with conditions of release.

Reference should be made to the Judicial Interim Release (Bail) Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) .

Appointment of counsel

A mentally ill accused may require the assistance of counsel in the criminal proceedings yet not have the capacity to select and retain counsel. The Criminal Code and common law mandates a court to appoint counsel to assist an accused in these circumstances.

Psychiatric assessments

A psychiatric assessment may be requested if there are reasonable grounds to believe that an assessment is necessary to determine an accused's ability to meaningfully participate in the criminal proceedings or to determine if the mental illness might have affected the accused's actions at the time of the offence. The psychiatric assessment will assist the court in determining fitness to stand trial or criminal responsibility. As the issue of fitness and criminal responsibility are distinct, a psychiatric assessment should be ordered to address each individually.

In requesting a court ordered psychiatric assessment of the mentally ill accused, Prosecutors should consider the following factors:

- the purpose of the assessment:
 - an assessment should be conducted for a stated purpose linked to the prosecution. An assessment must not be conducted for a purpose extraneous to the criminal law, such as placing the accused in a more favorable environment
- the time required to conduct the assessment:
 - an assessment ought to be concluded within a fixed and reasonable amount of time which is specified in the order
- the location of the assessment:
 - an assessment can be conducted in or out of custody.

Fitness to stand trial

An accused person is presumed fit to stand trial. If a mental illness impedes an accused capability to conduct a defence due to an inability to communicate with counsel or to understand the nature, object or consequences of the proceedings, the proceedings will be halted until such time that the accused is mentally fit to stand trial.

The issue of fitness to stand trial can be raised at any time during the criminal proceedings. The Prosecutor or defence counsel who believes the accused may be unfit must bring this matter to the court's attention. The Prosecutor's ability to raise the issue of fitness is subject to limitations set out in the Criminal Code.

When the issue of fitness arises, the court must conduct an inquiry and render a decision on the accused's fitness.

Treatment disposition orders

Upon an accused being found unfit, a Prosecutor may make an application to the court for a treatment order if there is evidence that the accused could return to a fit state within a short period of time. Only a Prosecutor can request a treatment order. The accused's consent to be treated is not a prerequisite for a treatment order. It is necessary to have the consent of the hospital or the person assigned responsibility by the court for the treatment prior to the court making the order. Prosecutors should consider the appropriateness of an out-of-court treatment order where public safety would not be compromised.

If a court is satisfied that the statutory criteria set out in the Criminal Code is met, an order directing that treatment be carried out for a specified period may be issued. If the accused becomes fit to stand trial following treatment, the criminal proceedings continue. If the accused remains unfit following treatment, jurisdiction over the accused will transfer to the Ontario Review Board.

“Keep Fit” orders

Where an accused is found fit to stand trial and is detained in custody pending trial and there is a concern they may become unfit, an order may be made that the accused be detained in hospital rather than a correctional facility. In all cases where a “keep fit” order is made, Prosecutors should consider measures to expedite the trial, including bringing the trial date forward where feasible.

Unfit accused

An accused that remains unfit to stand trial falls under the jurisdiction of the Ontario Review Board until the accused becomes fit to stand trial or until the court directs a stay of proceedings. Reference should be made to the Mentally Ill Accused: Post Verdict Issues Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-c-mentally-ill-accused-post-verdict-issues>) .

The Information containing the charges laid against the accused remains in court. Every two years, the Prosecutor shall establish the continued existence of evidence to support the elements of the offence that the accused would face at trial. If there is insufficient evidence, the accused shall be acquitted.

Not Criminally Responsible (NCR)

An accused that satisfies the test for a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of a mental illness shall not be convicted or acquitted. The verdict of not criminally responsible recognizes the criminal act was a product of the accused’s mental illness such that the accused should be treated, not punished. The Criminal Code recognizes that punishment is inappropriate and ineffective in these circumstances as the criminal act was not a product of any rational choice by the accused.

The Prosecutor’s ability to raise this issue during the trial is limited to those cases where the accused has made his mental capacity an issue in the trial. Where the Prosecutor has reason to believe that an accused may be not criminally responsible, the Prosecutor must raise this issue following a finding of guilt. If an accused is found not criminally responsible and the court does not grant an absolute discharge, the accused falls under the jurisdiction of the Ontario Review Board. Reference should be made to the Mentally Ill Accused: Post Verdict Issues Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-c-mentally-ill-accused-post-verdict-issues>) .

Ancillary orders

Upon a finding of not criminally responsible, the Prosecutor must consider whether a request should be made and make the application to the court for any of the following:

- weapons prohibition
- high-risk accused designation
- DNA Databank Order

- Sex Offender Information Registration Order
- forfeiture order
- High Risk Offender Flag.

The Ontario Review Board does not have the jurisdiction to make ancillary orders.

Reference should be made to the Weapons Prohibitions and Forfeiture Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-37-weapons-prohibitions-and-forfeiture>) , the DNA Data Bank Orders Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-11-dna-data-bank-orders>) , the Criminal Asset Forfeiture Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-7-criminal-asset-forfeiture>) and the High-Risk National Flagging System Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-17-high-risk-offender-national-flagging-system>) .

In this section

- Mentally Ill Accused: Alternatives to Prosecution
(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-a-mentally-ill-accused-alternatives-prosecution>)
- Mentally Ill Accused: Court Practices and Procedures
- Mentally Ill Accused: Post Verdict Issues (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-c-mentally-ill-accused-post-verdict-issues>)

26 (c): Mentally Ill Accused - Post-Verdict Issues

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

An accused found either unfit to stand trial or not criminally responsible becomes subject to a comprehensive statutory process that determines when and under what conditions the accused person may be returned to the community. The process is aimed at protecting the public and treating the accused's mental illness. In Ontario, the Ontario Review Board (ORB) generally makes these decisions.

Ontario Review Board (ORB)

Once a person is found unfit to stand trial or not criminally responsible the court may hold a disposition hearing or refer the matter directly to the ORB. The ORB is an independent specialized provincial tribunal with jurisdiction to make and review dispositions whose members are appointed by the lieutenant governor in council. The ORB consists of legal, medical and lay members. Its mandate is to make and review orders referred to as "dispositions" in respect of accused persons found unfit to stand trial or not criminally responsible. A "disposition" determines the terms and conditions of an accused's supervision by a psychiatric hospital and the accused's return to the community. The ORB has a legal duty to seek out all evidence it believes is necessary to make its decision and must treat public safety as the paramount factor of consideration.

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) sets out timelines for when disposition hearings shall occur following a verdict of unfit to stand trial or not criminally responsible. The Attorney General is a party to the disposition hearings, and any appeals, and is represented by a Prosecutor.

The court or the ORB may conduct the initial disposition hearing. Thereafter and until the accused is absolutely discharged, the ORB conducts the annual disposition hearings.

In serious, lengthy and complex cases, the Prosecutor with carriage of the trial should when feasible attend the initial disposition hearing.

Appointment of counsel

Where an unrepresented accused has been found unfit to stand trial or it is otherwise in the interests of justice, the court or ORB shall assign counsel to act for the accused either before or at the time of the hearing.

Victim notification

The ORB is required to notify victims whenever a psychiatric assessment indicates a change in mental status of the accused that could provide grounds for an absolute or conditional discharge. The victim is also required to be notified, upon request, of any ORB hearing, any disposition of an ORB hearing and any escape of the accused from custody.

The victim is permitted to submit a Victim Impact Statement at any disposition hearing or a review of disposition order.

It is important that victims appreciate the process and purpose of the ORB. The Prosecutor should ensure that victims are informed of available victim services as facilitated by the Victim/Witness Assistance Program (V/WAP) or similar victim support services.

Reference should be made to the Victims Directive
(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) .

Not Criminally Responsible (NCR) disposition hearings

A verdict of not criminally responsible triggers an administrative process that is aimed at protecting the public and treating the accused's mental illness. This process involves regular disposition hearings to determine what further control over the accused is required. Public safety is always the paramount factor of consideration. An accused found not criminally responsible is subject to a period of indefinite detention regardless of how minor or serious the alleged offence. The gravity of the offence does not determine how long an accused remains under the control of the ORB. The ORB also considers the mental condition of the accused and the reintegration of the accused into society.

The following three dispositions are available at the initial disposition hearing and/or the annual disposition hearing for an accused who is not criminally responsible:

1. absolute discharge – where an NCR accused is found not to be a significant threat to the safety of the public, the person is no longer under the jurisdiction of the ORB and not subject to any conditions.

2. conditional discharge – where an accused is discharged from the hospital and given conditions to do (or not do) certain things. An accused on a conditional discharge cannot be forced to return and remain at the hospital unless the hospital applies to the ORB to conduct a new disposition hearing.
3. hospital detention order – where an accused is under the supervision of the hospital with conditions to do (or not do) certain things. An accused may reside at the hospital or in the community with the permission of the hospital. An accused on a hospital detention order is required to return to the hospital upon the request of the hospital.

Unfit disposition hearings

The trial of an accused found “unfit to stand trial” cannot proceed until they become fit to stand trial or until the charges are terminated in court by a stay of proceedings, a withdrawal of the charges or an acquittal. The Criminal Code requires that disposition hearings be conducted to determine where and under what conditions an accused should be held who is found “unfit to stand trial”.

The following findings are available at the initial disposition hearing and/or the annual disposition hearing for an accused that is unfit to stand trial:

1. fit to stand trial – the accused shall be sent back to court where the court will determine if the accused is fit to stand trial. If the accused is fit to stand trial, the trial may proceed.
2. unfit to stand trial – the accused can receive a disposition of either a conditional discharge or a Hospital Detention Order.
3. permanently unfit to stand trial – if the permanently unfit accused is determined not to pose a significant threat to society and it is in the interests of the proper administration of justice, a court may enter a stay of proceedings. Otherwise, the accused can receive a disposition of either a conditional discharge or a Hospital Detention Order.

Once the Review Board is of the opinion that the accused has returned to a fit state, the accused is returned to court. The court will hold another fitness hearing to determine the issue of fitness. If the court determines that the accused is fit to stand trial, the trial will recommence. The Prosecutor must notify the Ontario Review Board that the accused has been found fit to stand trial.

In this section

- Mentally Ill Accused: Alternatives to Prosecution
(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-a-mentally-ill-accused-alternatives-prosecution>)
- Mentally Ill Accused: Court Practices and Procedures
(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-b-mentally-ill-accused-court-practices-and-procedures>)
- Mentally Ill Accused: Post Verdict Issues

D. 27: Offences Against Children

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Offences against children include crimes of abandonment, abduction, neglect, physical abuse, sexual abuse and Internet child exploitation. These offences have devastating effects on the physical and psychological well-being of victims, their families and the community.

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made, at all stages of the criminal proceedings, to provide the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians, with whatever information or assistance is required to ensure full and fair participation in the criminal justice system. This includes the availability of the following:

- specialized victim's services facilitated by the Victim/Witness Assistance Program (V/WAP) or other similar victims' support services
- interpreters to assist the victim in communicating
- testimonial aids to assist the victim in providing evidence
- appointment of counsel to cross-examine the victim where the accused is self-represented
- access to independent legal representation for victims or witnesses on applications to access their private records under the Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>)

Reference should be made to the following directives: Internet Child Exploitation (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-22-internet-child-exploitation>), Victims (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>),

Publication Bans and Sealing Orders (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-32-publication-bans-and-sealing-orders>) , DNA Data Bank Orders (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-11-dna-data-bank-orders>) , Weapons Prohibitions and Forfeiture (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-37-weapons-prohibitions-and-forfeiture>) , High-Risk Offender National Flagging System (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-17-high-risk-offender-national-flagging-system>) , Judicial Interim Release (Bail) (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) , Testimonial Aids and Accessibility (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-35-testimonial-aids-and-accessibility>) .

Judicial interim release (bail)

In offences against children, the Prosecutor must take a position on judicial interim release applying the general principles set out in the Judicial Interim Release (Bail) Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) including the requirement for ongoing assessment of the strength of the Crown's case. The Prosecutor must be conscious of the potential risk of harm in these cases and must seek a detention order where she considers it necessary for the safety and security of the victim or the public.

Where the accused is remanded in custody pending a bail hearing, detained or released on conditions, the Prosecutor should seek an order from the Court prohibiting the accused from having any contact with the victim, or where appropriate, any witnesses. The Prosecutor must ensure that any conditions she recommends on a bail release are necessary and appropriate to the circumstances of the alleged offence and the accused.

In all cases involving a victim under the age of eighteen, the Prosecutor must seek a publication ban directing that the identity of the victim and any information that could disclose the identity of the victim not be published or transmitted in any way. Reference should be made to the Publication Bans and Sealing Orders Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-32-publication-bans-and-sealing-orders>) .

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made to notify the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians of any release order, the conditions of release, including non-communication and any order detaining the accused. In all cases where there is reason to have concern for a victim's safety, the Prosecutor must ensure that bail notification occurs as soon as possible. On request, the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians must be provided with a copy of the court order.

Reporting Concerns to the Children's Aid Society

Prosecutors have a statutory obligation to report to child protection agencies any case where they have reasonable suspicion that children are, or may be, in need of protection.

Child homicide investigation and prosecution

The death of a child under the age of 12 in suspicious circumstances raises many complex issues. The Child Homicide Resource Team provides advice during the investigation and prosecution of these cases. The assigned Prosecutor must consult with The Child Homicide Resource Team at the earliest opportunity.

Prosecution

Charge screening

The Prosecutor should determine whether the full gravity of the criminal act is reflected in the offence charged and recommend a more appropriate charge be laid if necessary.

The following factors should be considered when determining the offence charged is appropriate to the circumstances and whether to proceed summarily or by indictment:

- the circumstances of the offence e.g. protracted sexual abuse; significant physical, emotional or psychological harm to the victim
- whether the offence is alleged to have occurred within 6 months of reporting
- the circumstances of the offender e.g. history of similar offences, position of trust/authority in relation to victim
- the circumstances of the victim including the impact on the victim of testifying twice (at a preliminary inquiry and trial) and special vulnerabilities (disabilities, age of victim)
- the potential range of sentence.

The Prosecutor should consider whether the accused should be flagged as a High Risk Offender or the subject of a Long Term Offender or Dangerous Offender Application. In those cases, the Prosecutor should consult with her Regional High Risk Offender Crown.

Reference should be made to the Charge Screening Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-3-charge-screening>) ,

Dangerous/Long-term Offenders Directive (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown- prosecution-manual/d-8-dangerous-long-term-offenders) and High-Risk Offender National Flagging System Directive (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-17- high-risk-offender-national-flagging-system) .

Protecting the privacy of child victims

Prosecutors must be sensitive to the privacy interests and needs of child victims at every stage of the prosecution.

The Prosecutor should consider the directions set out in the Disclosure Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-10-disclosure>) concerning the disclosure of sensitive materials.

Publication bans and other restrictions on public access

In all cases involving a victim under the age of eighteen, the Prosecutor must seek a publication ban directing that the identity of the victim and any information that could disclose the identity of the victim not be published or transmitted in any way.

Where a concern exists that testifying publicly about a traumatic event may risk causing further trauma to a child victim, may inhibit testifying or may raise an issue respecting a victim's safety, the Prosecutor may apply for an order excluding the public. The Prosecutor should have regard to the direction provided in the Publication Bans and Sealing Orders Directive (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-32-publication-bans- and-sealing-orders) .

Production of private records (third party records)

In order to gain access to a victim's private information, such as their medical, psychiatric or personal records, the Criminal Code provides that the accused must establish that the private records are likely relevant to an issue at trial or to the competence of a victim to testify. The Prosecutor should engage V/WAP to assist the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians in obtaining independent legal counsel to provide advice and represent their interests on the third party records application. The Prosecutor must not disclose victim's records absent a court order.

Sexual abuse and/or activity

The Criminal Code provides that evidence that a victim has been sexually abused or engaged in prior sexual activity is not admissible. This evidence cannot be used to assess the victim's credibility nor support an inference that the victim consented to the sexual activity.

Should the accused bring an application to have evidence of the victim being previously sexually abused or engaged in prior sexual activity admitted, the Prosecutor must advise the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians that the victim is not required to testify at the hearing to determine the admissibility of the evidence. The Prosecutor must also advise the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians that the Criminal Code prohibits publication of information provided on the application.

Cross-examination by a self-represented accused

In cases where an accused person is self-represented, the Prosecutor must seek an order appointing counsel to conduct the cross-examination of the victim.

Expert evidence

Before engaging an expert witness, the Prosecutor must obtain the prior approval of the Crown Attorney. Reference should be made to the Expert Evidence Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-12-expert-evidence>) .

Testimonial aids

Prosecutors should ensure that victims and witnesses under the age of 18 years, or their parents/legal guardian are informed of the availability of testimonial aids to assist them to communicate their evidence. Where appropriate, Prosecutors should apply for an order permitting the use of a testimonial aid. Reference should be made to the Testimonial Aids and Accessibility Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-35-testimonial-aids-and-accessibility>) .

Resolution discussions and sentence

The Prosecutor must ensure reasonable steps are taken to inform the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians of a proposed resolution (e.g. guilty plea or proposed sentence) or that the charges will be withdrawn.

The Prosecutor must not negotiate a guilty plea in exchange for agreeing to forego a dangerous or long-term offender application without first consulting with the Regional High-Risk Offender Crown and her Crown Attorney.

Except with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate, the Prosecutor must not:

- withdraw or stay proceedings in cases involving sexual abuse
- in cases involving sexual abuse, accept a plea to a lesser charge or non-sexual offence
- reduce a charge or elect summarily solely to allow for the imposition of a conditional sentence
- reduce or withdraw charge solely to avoid a mandatory minimum sentence or any ancillary orders.

Victim impact statement

As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, the Prosecutor must ensure reasonable steps are taken to provide the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians with the opportunity to prepare a Victim Impact Statement, and inform the victim of their right to present it to the court and their other options.

Restitution

The Criminal Code directs the court to consider making a restitution order and to ask the Prosecutor if reasonable steps have been taken to provide the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians with an opportunity to indicate whether they are seeking restitution i.e. compensation for counselling. As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, the Prosecutor must ensure reasonable steps are taken to provide the victim and/or where appropriate their parents or legal guardians with an opportunity to indicate whether the victim is seeking restitution for their losses and damages.

Ancillary orders

The Prosecutor must seek the following orders if applicable and remind the court of all mandatory orders:

- DNA order

- Sex Offender Information Registration Act (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/S-8.7/>)
(SOIRA)

- Weapons Prohibition.

Depending on the circumstances of the offence and the offender, Prosecutors should consider making an application for a prohibition order that would restrict the offender's ability to interact with children under the age of 16, either in person or over the Internet.

Reference must be made to the following directives: DNA Data Bank Orders

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-11-dna-data-bank-orders#>) ,

Weapons Prohibitions and Forfeiture (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-37-weapons-prohibitions-and-forfeiture>) .

D. 28: Ontario's Witness Protection Program

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

The Ministry of the Attorney General operates Ontario's Witness Protection Program in cooperation with the Ontario Provincial Police and municipal police services in Ontario. The program represents one of the Ministry's most significant initiatives in the battle against serious and organized crime. It plays an important role in fulfilling the Ministry's commitment to improving support for victims of crime. The purpose of the program is to assist in protecting witnesses who have been (or may be) exposed to danger as a result of their cooperation in the investigation and prosecution of criminal offences in Ontario.

The need for witness protection often arises on an emergency basis. In such situations, police services have funds available to provide interim safety measures for the witness under the Police Services Act. Police services can apply to the program to receive reimbursement for protective measures implemented on behalf of a witness.

If there is an immediate concern for a witness's safety, the witness should call 911.

The disclosure of witness protection information is governed by a statutory privilege under the Crown Witnesses Act (<https://www.ontario.ca/laws/statute/90c52>). The privilege pertains only to witness protection programs designated by regulation under the Act. The inappropriate disclosure of confidential witness protection information puts protected witnesses at risk and compromises the program's integrity. A person who discloses confidential witness protection information is guilty of a provincial offence.

All applications for admission to Ontario's Witness Protection Program must be made to the Ministry of the Attorney General, Crown Law Office – Criminal.

Criteria for admission

Ontario's Witness Protection Program provides time-limited funding to assist in the protection, maintenance and relocation of a witness and/or family members where doing so is in the best interests of the administration of justice. Such an unusual measure may be appropriate where:

1. the life or health of the witness and/or family members is judged by the police to be in real danger as a result of the involvement of the witness in a prosecution
2. the case in which the witness is involved is a case of significance to the administration of justice e.g. murder, robbery, serious crimes of violence, organized crime
3. the witness is cooperating with the police and has agreed to provide truthful testimony that is a key element of the Crown's case
4. the witness's and/or their family members' circumstances allow them to freely participate in the program (e.g. not incarcerated, no longer an undercover agent etc.) and their behavior (e.g. ability and willingness to comply with program discipline) is such that they can benefit from protective measures without themselves posing a danger to the public while in the program.

As reflected in the criteria, the program exists to respond to the most serious of circumstances in very serious cases. It is designed as a last resort. Where alternatives are available, they should be utilized.

What the program provides

Ontario's Witness Protection Program does not provide long-term financial assistance. It is a temporary relocation and assistance program only. The program also does not provide rewards or benefits in return for testimony. Depending on the circumstances of the witness and/or family members, the program may provide security advice as well as the following:

1. funding to cover the costs of relocation to a safe environment
2. funding for temporary rent, utilities, food and maintenance
3. assistance in obtaining social assistance benefits under the new name and in the new locale
4. funding to cover the costs of specifically approved security measures
5. where appropriate, funding to cover exceptional medical expenses including, where appropriate, psychological counselling
6. where appropriate, assistance in changing names and obtaining new identification documents
7. where appropriate, funding for time-limited and specifically approved upgrades to employment skills or education.

Application process

Issues respecting the acceptance of a witness into the program, the determination of the nature and amount of assistance provided and the management of the witness are dealt with in an impartial and independent fashion by a local senior independent Prosecutor. The Prosecutor assigned to the prosecution must not be involved in this assessment and process except that she must confirm that the witness is willing and able to testify and that their anticipated testimony is a key element of the Crown's case.

The Prosecutor must not discuss witness protection matters with the witness except to the extent necessary to prepare them for their testimony. The level and type of assistance provided to the witness must not form part of any plea resolutions or other arrangements.

The senior independent Prosecutor will ensure that the Prosecutor and investigators have provided the witness protection officer with all of the information needed to complete an application for program assistance must review a witness protection application. The senior independent Prosecutor must certify, if appropriate, that the use of witness protection is in the best interests of the administration of justice.

The preparation of applications and handling of witnesses accepted into Ontario's Witness Protection Program, including the implementation of protective measures, is the responsibility of specialized provincial and municipal witness protection officers who are independent of the investigator of the underlying offence. Counsel in the Crown Law Office – Criminal with expertise in witness protection matters are assigned to review witness protection applications independent of the prosecution team. The approval of the Deputy Attorney General is required to enter the program.

The officer conducting an investigation involving a witness in need of protection will refer the witness's safety concerns to a designated witness protection officer within their police service. The witness protection officer will make an independent assessment of the witness's security needs.

Acceptance into program

A witness who has been accepted in the program must sign a standard Letter of Acknowledgement (describing the general nature of the financial and other assistance approved for the witness) before any funds (interim protection assistance funds excepted) are disbursed by the police. The Prosecutor will be advised by letter from the reviewing counsel in the Crown Law Office – Criminal that the witness has been accepted into the program and a copy of the Letter of Acknowledgement will be made available in the event that it is required as an exhibit.

D. 29: Police

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Public safety and effective prosecution are best achieved by a close working relationship between Prosecutors and police that recognizes the independence of each organization. Police officers have sole responsibility and discretion over the investigation of a criminal offence and the laying of criminal charges except where the consent of the Attorney General is required by statute. Prosecutors have sole responsibility and discretion over the prosecution of criminal offences, including deciding whether to continue with criminal proceedings.

While independence is of fundamental importance, there is also a need for co-operation at all stages of an investigation and court proceedings. Prosecutors should encourage the police to seek advice concerning legal issues or the sufficiency of evidence relating to a criminal offence. Prosecutors may require the assistance of police in conducting further investigations.

This cooperative relationship of mutual respect and professionalism recognizes the distinct functions of the police and the Prosecutor. Both parties exercise discretion independently and objectively. This independence and objectivity are essential elements of the Prosecutor's role as "Minister of Justice" which is fundamental to the proper administration of justice.

Advice to the police

General legal advice

Police often seek legal advice from Prosecutors in relation to general police investigative practices that could impact upon the admissibility of evidence in future prosecutions. In order to ensure consistence of advice, where the police seek a legal opinion on an issue that may have general application, the request for advice must be forwarded to the Crown Attorney, who may direct the request to the Director.

Case specific legal advice

Police often seek legal advice from Prosecutors concerning a specific investigation or an ongoing prosecution. It is appropriate for Prosecutors to provide this legal advice. Prosecutors should ensure they have received sufficient information before providing advice. Prosecutors should take care not to dictate to the police or purport to direct the police investigation. Generally speaking, legal advice provided to the police is not binding.

Prosecutors should avoid any conduct that blurs the distinction between the investigative and prosecutorial functions of the Prosecutor and the police, such as direct involvement in statement taking or attending a crime scene, in order to supervise the gathering of evidence. Prosecutors should avoid attending a crime scene until the investigation is complete.

Disclosure of advice provided to the police

As a general rule, the Prosecutor has an obligation to disclose all information in its possession or control unless that information is irrelevant or privileged. This rule includes communications between the Prosecutor and the police.

Legal advice provided by the Prosecutor to the police may not be disclosed based on a public interest privilege, solicitor-client privilege or other privilege. Therefore, care should be taken in vetting disclosure to ensure that privileged information is not inadvertently disclosed.

Any request or application to obtain disclosure of privileged information should be brought to the attention of the Crown Attorney.

Police as witness

Allegations of dishonesty

It is critical to the administration of justice that police officers' statements made under oath be truthful. The vast majority of police officers testify in an honest and straightforward manner and it is rare for judges to make negative comments about the truthfulness of a police officer's testimony. However, where concerns about the truthfulness of a police officer's statement arise, the Prosecutor has a responsibility to take action.

Where the Prosecutor becomes aware of credible and reliable information that an officer has been deliberately untruthful under oath, the Prosecutor must direct the matter to the Crown Attorney. Additionally, the Prosecutor must alert the Crown Attorney where there is a judicial finding or comment that an officer has been deliberately untruthful under oath.

The Crown Attorney must forward all cases where there has been a judicial finding or comment that an officer has been deliberately untruthful under oath to the Director within 30 days, unless the issue is under appeal. In circumstances where the Prosecutor has advised the Crown Attorney of credible and reliable information to believe an officer has been deliberately dishonest under oath, in cases other than those involving judicial comments, the Crown Attorney must assess the circumstances to determine if there are grounds to believe the officer has been deliberately untruthful under oath. If so, the matter should be forwarded to the Director.

The Director must consider all the circumstances in reviewing the information and decide whether the matter should be forwarded to the police. In that case, a copy of relevant transcripts and materials relied upon must be forwarded to the Chief of Police for the relevant police service. The Director may delegate to the Crown Attorney the ability to refer the matter directly to the police. The Crown Attorney must advise the Director prior to referring the matter to a police service. Whether or not a referral has been made to the police, the Director must advise the Assistant Deputy Attorney General - Criminal Law Division who will track the number of referrals and non-referrals.

Allegations of other police misconduct

The above reporting regime also applies where the Prosecutor becomes aware of credible and reliable information that the officer has engaged in criminal misconduct, such as excessive use of force or there has been a judicial finding or comment that an officer has engaged in criminal misconduct.

The Prosecutor must not herself conduct an investigation but may engage an independent officer to investigate the criminal misconduct. In some circumstances it will be appropriate for the Director to refer or have the file referred to the Special Investigations Unit (SIU) for investigation.

Disclosure of police disciplinary records

The police have an obligation to provide and the Prosecutor has a duty to disclose:

- findings or allegations of police misconduct that relates to the subject matter of the offence for which the accused is charged, and/or
- findings or allegations of serious police misconduct that could reasonably bear on the case against the accused.

Serious police misconduct that is not related to the incident for which the accused is charged or has no bearing on the case against the accused should be reviewed by the Prosecutor to determine whether it should be disclosed.

Police training

The involvement of Prosecutors in police training can best assist the police in their efforts to produce high quality investigations, to lay appropriate charges and to prepare thorough briefs. Prosecutors are encouraged to assist the police in their training on investigative procedures and emerging issues and developing areas of the law. Providing this guidance and training is beneficial to the administration of justice as a whole.

Prosecutors who receive requests to assist in police education and training should advise the Crown Attorney or Director of the request.

D. 30: Private Prosecutions

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

A person has the right to have criminal process issued from a Justice of the Peace by swearing an Information alleging reasonable and probable grounds that another person committed a criminal act.

The Crown Attorney's Act directs that the Crown watch over private criminal prosecutions and where necessary, assume the conduct of the proceedings, to ensure that they are pursued in the interests of the administration of justice. The statutory right of a person to lay an Information and the right and duty of the Attorney General to supervise a criminal prosecution and to intervene and take over a private prosecution are fundamental parts of the criminal justice system.

Process for private information

Step 1: receipt of the Information

A person who has reasonable grounds to believe that another person has committed a criminal offence may provide that information to a Justice of the Peace in order to have the person brought to court. A standard form is available for anyone to fill out and submit to the Justice of the Peace.

The person who completes the form should provide details of the alleged offence and the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of any witnesses whose evidence will be relied upon.

It is important that the person indicate if the police have been involved and if there were prior attempts made to commence related criminal proceedings.

The Justice of the Peace will review the completed form and determine whether it satisfies the statutory requirements. Where the Justice of the Peace is satisfied that these requirements have been met, they shall direct the preparation of the Information. The "Information" is a document that sets out the allegations of criminal conduct. The person laying the information will be asked to swear an oath or affirm the truth of the contents of the Information. Where the allegations of the person do not meet these requirements, an Information will not be prepared.

If an Information is prepared and sworn or affirmed, a Justice of the Peace will select a date for an ex-parte hearing, known as a pre-enquete. At the pre-enquete, the Justice of the Peace or a Judge of the Ontario Court of Justice will determine whether a summons or a warrant will issue to compel the appearance of the persons named in the information to answer the charge.

Step 2: notice of Pre-enquete Hearing

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) provides that in order for process to issue, or criminal proceedings to commence, the Crown Attorney's Office must receive a copy of the private Information and reasonable notice of the pre-enquete hearing. Further, a Prosecutor shall have an opportunity to attend the hearing. The Prosecutor does not have jurisdiction to withdraw an Information before the pre-enquete hearing.

Step 3: The pre-enquete Hearing

At the pre-enquete, the presiding Justice of the Peace or Judge of the Ontario Court of Justice shall hear and consider the allegations of the person, as well as the evidence of any witnesses. The court shall give the Prosecutor an opportunity to cross-examine the person's witnesses, to call witnesses and to present any relevant evidence at the hearing. The Prosecutor's appearance at the hearing does not mean that the Attorney General has intervened in the proceeding.

At the end of the pre-enquete hearing, the presiding justice will determine whether there was sufficient evidence for the case to proceed. If there is sufficient evidence for the case to proceed, the justice will issue a summons or warrant to compel the appearance of the accused to answer to the charge. If there is insufficient evidence for the case to proceed, the proceedings will be concluded.

Role of the Prosecutor at the pre-enquete hearing

Absent exceptional circumstances, the Prosecutor must attend the pre-enquete hearing. The Prosecutor's attendance is required for several reasons, including the following:

- preventing proceedings that are not in the interest of the administration of justice

- preventing the use of criminal proceedings for malicious or unfair purposes
- preventing potential abuses of the court system
- ensuring the efficient allocation of court resources
- to identify countercharge situations, where the police in a separate proceeding have criminally charged an individual and now that same person wishes to bring privately laid charges against the victim from the initial case
- to become aware of justice prosecutions, where the allegations are against a police officer, a Crown, or other justice official or public figure
- to identify intimate partner violence cases, whether as a new charge or as a charge related to an existing police laid charge
- to ensure that in cases where disclosure of the privately alleged information could cause irreparable harm to a person's reputation or livelihood, an appropriate publication ban is sought
- to identify cases that raise significant legal or policy issues
- to prevent cases proceeding where the law requires the Attorney General's consent to the laying of an Information, such as the laying of charges against a young person. A list of those offences may be found in the Attorney General Consent and Delegation Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-2-attorney-general-consents-and-delegations>) .

Carriage of the prosecution

If the justice issues Process, the Prosecutor must screen the charge according to the Charge Screening Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-3-charge-screening>) . The Prosecutor should contact the police prior to screening the charge to determine if there was a police investigation and if so whether the Prosecutor has all the material in the police's possession. The Prosecutor should determine whether further investigation is required. Once any further investigation has been completed, if the Prosecutor is of the view that there is no reasonable prospect of conviction, or that the prosecution is not in the public interest, the Prosecutor must withdraw the charge.

If the Prosecutor is of the view that the prosecution should continue, a decision should be made as to whether the prosecution should be conducted by the person who brought forward the proceeding or the Prosecutor. The Prosecutor must intervene if the prosecution involves allegations of intimate partner violence, allegations against a young person and indictable offences.

In all other cases, the Prosecutor may exercise discretion to take over the prosecution, having regard to the following factors:

- public interest
- interests of individual victims, witnesses and accused parties
- the need to make the best use of the valuable time and resources of all parties involved and courts
- the need for timely and ongoing disclosure to the accused person.

If the Prosecutor intervenes, the Prosecutor should follow the obligations set out in the Disclosure Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-10-disclosure>). The Prosecutor should remind the private prosecutor that the accused is entitled to disclosure of the evidence to be used against them including the evidence outlined during the pre-enquete hearing.

Charges laid against Crown agencies

Any allegations by private citizens of misconduct against Crown Ministries, agencies and their employees for violations of occupational health and safety, environmental protection and similar legislation must be referred to the Director who must advise the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

D. 31: Professionalism

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: January 2, 2018

Prosecutors are local Ministers of Justice and as such have an obligation to discharge their responsibilities with honour and integrity. A Prosecutor must act fairly and dispassionately. Prosecutors must make decisions in a manner that is objective and consistent with the highest standards of professionalism. A Prosecutor shall be courteous, civil, and act in good faith with all persons with whom she has dealings in the course of her professional responsibilities. The conduct of the Prosecutor should always reflect favourably on the administration of justice, and inspire the confidence, respect and trust of the community.

All Prosecutors in the province of Ontario are subject to the Rules of Professional Conduct of the Law Society of Ontario.

The independence of the prosecution service is fundamental to the justice system. It is important that Prosecutors avoid circumstances where the perception of their independence is undermined. Prosecutors must avoid real or perceived conflicts of interest. Conflicts may arise as a result of a connection to a person or entity, either in their personal life or at work.

Conflict of interest

A conflict of interest may arise in any situation where a Prosecutor's private interests are actually or may be reasonably perceived to be in conflict with her public service responsibilities. Prosecutors must not undertake any actions that would reasonably appear to be inconsistent with their professional obligations or the exercise of their prosecutorial discretion. Prosecutors must disclose to the ethics executive (Deputy Attorney General), any situation of actual or potential conflict of interest. Visit the Office of the Integrity Commissioner website. (<http://www.oico.on.ca/home/public-sector-ethics/conflict-of-interest>)

There may be times where a Prosecutor has a relationship with a participant in a case that may reasonably undermine the public's perception of the Prosecutor's independence. It is important to avoid any reasonable perception that a person being investigated or prosecuted might receive preferential treatment because of the relationship that person has with a Prosecutor or her office.

The Ministry of the Attorney General may retain independent counsel on a case-by-case basis when the administration of justice and public confidence in the administration of justice requires it. Where a Prosecutor becomes aware of a conflict or a reasonably perceived conflict involving a person being investigated or prosecuted or a witness in any such proceeding, the Prosecutor must bring the case to the attention of her Crown Attorney. The Crown Attorney must determine whether there is a conflict, and if so, whether the case will be prosecuted by another member of the office, a Prosecutor in another office from the same region, or whether to contact the Director to determine the most appropriate course of action. In some instances the Assistant Deputy Attorney General-Criminal Law Division will make arrangements for an independent Prosecutor to assume carriage of the case.

Complaints process

A member of the public who wishes to make a complaint about the conduct of a Prosecutor may write her Crown Attorney (or Director if the complaint is about the Crown Attorney). Upon receipt of the complaint about a Prosecutor's conduct, the Crown Attorney must record the information received and should acknowledge receipt within 5 business days. The complaint will be reviewed as soon as practicable. A full response should be provided in a timely manner. If the response cannot be provided in a timely way, a written explanation for the delay should be provided to the complainant.

Law Society complaints

A Prosecutor who is notified that a formal complaint has been made against her to the Law Society of Ontario must inform her Crown Attorney without delay. The Crown Attorney must inform the Director, who in turn must notify the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division. A formal response to the Law Society of Ontario should be provided by the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division. Prosecutors must keep their Crown Attorney apprised of the status of the complaint including the final disposition.

Conduct of defence counsel

If a Prosecutor believes that a formal complaint to the Law Society of Ontario is warranted in respect of conduct of a defence counsel, she must immediately inform the Crown Attorney who in turn must notify the Director. The Director must bring the matter to the attention of the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division. In appropriate circumstances, a formal complaint may be forwarded to the Law Society of Ontario by the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division.

Counsel as a witness

A Prosecutor who receives a subpoena, or has been asked to testify in any case, should immediately inform her Crown Attorney.

A circumstance may arise where a Prosecutor determines that the interests of justice require that counsel for the accused provide evidence. In these circumstances, the Prosecutor must obtain the prior approval of the Crown Attorney and Director before seeking that evidence.

Civil lawsuits or charges

Prosecutors who are the subject of a lawsuit, a charge under the Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) , other federal legislation, or a serious provincial offence (e.g. Part III offences under the Provincial Offences Act (<https://www.ontario.ca/laws/statute/90p33>)) must inform their Crown Attorney without delay. The Crown Attorney must inform the Director, who must notify the Assistant Deputy Attorney General – Criminal Law Division. Prosecutors must keep their Crown Attorney apprised of the status of the proceedings including the final disposition.

D. 32: Publication Bans and Sealing Orders

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Public access to the justice system is a hallmark of a democratic society. Open courts allow everyone to see that justice is administered in a principled manner in accordance with the rule of law.

The use of publication bans and sealing orders is an exception to the open court principle. Publication bans prevent information from being published in any document, broadcast or transmitted in any way. Sealing orders restrict access to courts and court documents in limited circumstances.

The appropriate use of publication bans, applications to prohibit or restrict access to court exhibits and to exclude the public may be necessary to maintain integrity of the process, ensure security, protect privacy or prevent trauma or intimidation of witnesses. A sealing order may be necessary to protect interests essential to the administration of justice such as the integrity of ongoing police investigations or confidential information.

Publication bans may be automatic, mandatory upon application or ordered at the discretion of the court. Sealing orders may be automatic or made at the discretion of the court.

Factors to consider

The Prosecutor should consider all the circumstances when determining whether to seek a publication ban, sealing order, or exclusion of the public. Relevant factors may include the following:

- encouraging the reporting of offences and the participation of victims and witnesses in the criminal justice system
- safeguarding the interests of witnesses under 18 years of age
- enabling witnesses to give a full and candid account when testifying
- protecting witnesses from intimidation or retaliation
- whether there are effective alternatives to making the order
- potential negative effects of an order.

Publication bans

Sexual offences

Identity of the victim

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) directs that in sexual offences the court shall make an order prohibiting the publication of any information that could identify the victim (or witness under the age of 18) upon application of the Prosecutor, the victim or any witness.

The Prosecutor must seek an order prohibiting the publication of any information that could identify a victim (or a witness under the age of eighteen) at the earliest opportunity. If the victim of a sexual offence wishes to have their identity known, the issue of revoking the publication ban can be revisited at any stage in the proceedings.

Sexual history

The Criminal Code prohibits publication of information and evidence tendered on an application to admit evidence of a victim's sexual history in cases involving sexual offences. Publication of the decision and reasons of the court is also prohibited unless the judge orders that they may be published, after taking into account the victim's right to privacy and the interests of justice or if the evidence is found to be admissible.

Production of private records (third party records)

The Criminal Code prohibits publication of information and evidence tendered on an application for production of records containing private information in relation to a victim or witness in cases involving sexual offences. Publication of the decision and reasons of court is also prohibited unless the judge orders that they may be published, after taking into account the interests of justice and the privacy interests of the person to whom the record relates.

Reference should be made to the Sexual Offences against Adults Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-34-sexual-offences-against-adults>)

.

Child pornography

The Criminal Code directs that the court shall make an order prohibiting the publication of any information that could identify a witness who is under the age of eighteen years or any person who is the subject of a representation, written material or a recording that constitutes child pornography. Prosecutors must apply for a sealing order in respect of any exhibit containing material alleged to be child pornography. Reference should be made to the Internet Child Exploitation Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-22-internet-child-exploitation>) .

Youth Criminal Justice

The Youth Criminal Justice Act prohibits the publication of any information that could identify any accused young person under 18 years of age. The Youth Criminal Justice Act also prohibits the publication of any information that could identify a person under 18 years of age who was a victim of, or appeared as a witness in connection with, an offence allegedly committed by a young person. Reference should be made to the Youth Criminal Justice: Resolution Discussions and Sentencing Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-c-youth-criminal-justice-resolution-discussions-and-sentencing>) .

Victim under age eighteen

The Criminal Code directs that in all offences involving a victim who is under the age of 18 the court shall make an order prohibiting the publication of any information that could identify the victim, upon application of the Prosecutor or the victim.

The Prosecutor must seek a court order prohibiting the publication of any information that could identify a victim who is under the age of eighteen at the earliest opportunity.

Reference should be made to the Offences against Children Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) .

Judicial interim release (bail)

Upon application of the accused, the Criminal Code directs that the court shall make an order prohibiting the publication of evidence taken, representations made and the decision of the court, until the accused has been discharged at a preliminary inquiry or the trial of the accused has ended.

Upon application of the Prosecutor, the Criminal Code directs that the court may make an order prohibiting the publication of evidence taken, until the accused has been discharged at the preliminary inquiry or the trial of the accused has ended.

Preliminary inquiry

The Criminal Code prohibits the publication of evidence pertaining to the existence or nature of any admission or confession tendered at a preliminary inquiry until an accused has been discharged after the preliminary inquiry or the trial has ended.

Upon application of the accused, the Criminal Code directs that the court shall make an order prohibiting the publication of evidence taken, until the accused has been discharged at the preliminary inquiry or the trial of the accused has ended.

Upon application of the Prosecutor, the Criminal Code directs that the court may make an order prohibiting the publication of evidence taken, until the accused has been discharged at the preliminary inquiry or the trial of the accused has ended.

Jury trials

The Criminal Code prohibits the publication of evidence heard in the absence of the jury prior to the commencement of the jury's deliberations.

Upon application by the Prosecutor or on its own motion, the court may prohibit publication of the identity of a juror or any information that could disclose the juror's identity.

Discretionary publication bans

In all other offences, the Criminal Code permits the court to consider banning publication of any information that could identify a victim over 18 years of age and a witness of any age at any stage of the prosecution. Further, publication bans may also be ordered in relation to justice system participants in cases involving criminal organization, terrorism, and certain Security of Information Act offences.

Prior to seeking a discretionary publication ban under the provisions of the Criminal Code, the Prosecutor should consider the open court principle and the factors as set out in the Criminal Code. Discretionary publication bans are only sought in exceptional circumstances where the grounds can be clearly articulated.

The Prosecutor, victim or witness shall make written application, with notice to the accused, the media and any other affected person. The court may make the order if the court is of the opinion that the order is in the interest of the proper administration of justice.

Similarly, with notice to the media and any other affected person, written applications for publication bans can also be made under the common law.

Requests by victim to revoke the publication ban

There may be occasions when a victim over the age of eighteen seeks to revoke the publication ban. A judge has the authority to lift the publication ban only when the Prosecutor and victim both consent to revoke the ban. Prior to consenting to revoke a publication ban, the Prosecutor should consider all the circumstances including the following:

- nature of the publication ban and circumstances of the case
- the wishes of the victim
- whether the victim has had an adequate opportunity to assess all of the ramifications of the publication of their identity
- publication of the victim's name might tend to identify other victims or witnesses, who want protection of the publication ban
- publication of the victim's identity might prejudice the prosecution or might otherwise have an adverse effect on the administration of justice.

Sealing orders

A sealing order prohibits access to information by anyone other than the parties identified in the order. A sealing order may be mandated by the Criminal Code or imposed at the discretion of the court.

The Criminal Code provides that all documents relating to an application for a wiretap authorization are subject to a mandatory sealing order. The Criminal Code provides that the court issuing a search warrant or other judicial order may seal the supporting material.

In determining if a sealing order should be requested or an existing sealing order lifted, the Prosecutor must consider if the order is necessary to:

- protect an ongoing police investigation
- protect the identity of a confidential informer (see: Confidential Informers Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-5-confidential-informers>))
- protect intelligence-gathering techniques
- protect the interests of innocent parties
- protect privacy interests.

The Prosecutor must also consider whether a partial or time limited sealing would be appropriate.

Court exhibits

Judicial documents and court exhibits, including Victim Impact Statements, are generally accessible to the public (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/access-court-files-documents-and-exhibits>) . The Prosecutor should seek to restrict access in any case where public access to court exhibits may undermine the right to a fair trial, violate privacy interests or interfere with the administration of justice. A sealing order must be sought to restrict access to exhibits containing child pornography.

Exclusion of the public

The Criminal Code permits the court to order the exclusion of the public from the courtroom for all or part of criminal proceedings. In determining if the public should be excluded from the courtroom, the court shall consider all the circumstances including society's interest in encouraging the reporting of offences and the participation of victims and witnesses in criminal proceedings and the ability of the witness to give a full and candid account.

Prior to seeking an order to exclude the public, the Prosecutor should consider whether effective alternatives to seeking the order are available in the circumstances. Reference should be made to the Testimonial Aids and Accessibility Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-35-testimonial-aids-and-accessibility>) .

D. 33: Serious Violent Crime Directive

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: January 31, 2024

Serious violent crime is a matter of grave public concern because of its devastating effects on victims, their families and their communities. In any prosecution involving serious violent crime, the protection of the public is the paramount consideration at all stages, from judicial interim release (bail) to sentencing.

This Directive applies to the following serious violent crimes:

- offences involving death
- attempt murder
- aggravated sexual assault
- robbery with a firearm
- home invasion robbery
- carjacking

When applying this Directive, the Prosecutor must also consider the direction and factors provided in the following Directives, where applicable: Firearms prosecution-manual/d-34-sexual-offences-against-adults) and Offences Against Children (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) .

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-14-firearms>) , Intimate Partner Violence (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>) , Sexual Offences against Adults (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown->

For young persons, reference should also be made to the Youth Criminal Justice Directives (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-38-youth-criminal-justice>) . For adults with a mental illness, reference should also be made to the Mentally Ill Accused Directives (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-26-mentally-ill-accused>) . For Indigenous peoples, reference should also be made to the Indigenous Peoples Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) .

Judicial interim release (bail)

In all cases to which this Directive applies, the Prosecutor must seek a detention order, absent exceptional circumstances, to ensure the safety and security of the public. If exceptional circumstances exist, the Prosecutor must obtain prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate before recommending or consenting to any form of judicial interim release. This decision should be made at the earliest reasonable opportunity having regard to the requirements of the Criminal Code (<https://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/c-46/>) .

Where the Prosecutor seeks a detention order and the accused person is granted judicial interim release, the Prosecutor must advise the Crown Attorney or designate. In these circumstances, the Crown Attorney or designate must consider whether a bail review is warranted.

Reference should be made to the following Directives, where applicable: Judicial Interim Release (Bail) (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) , Firearms (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-14-firearms>) and Indigenous Peoples (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) .

Estreatment proceedings

The Criminal Code (<https://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/c-46/>) provides that where an accused person has failed to appear in court or failed to comply with the conditions of a release order, and a surety and/or an accused person promised or deposited an amount of money, the Prosecutor may seek to have all or some of the money forfeited.

In all cases to which this Directive applies, if an accused person has failed to appear in court or has been convicted of failing to comply with the conditions of a release order, absent exceptional circumstances, the Prosecutor must seek the forfeiture of all or some of the amount promised or deposited by any surety and/or the accused person. If exceptional circumstances exist, the Prosecutor must obtain prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate not to seek forfeiture.

Charge screening

In all cases to which this Directive applies, the Prosecutor must consider whether the accused person should be flagged as a high-risk offender or, where applicable, whether a long-term offender or dangerous offender application should be pursued. In cases where the Prosecutor believes that such a step may be appropriate, they should consult with their Regional High-Risk Offender Crown.

In such cases, the Prosecutor should refer to the following Directives: Charge Screening (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-3-charge-screening>) , Dangerous/Long-term Offenders (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-8-dangerous-long-term-offenders>) and High-Risk Offender National Flagging System (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-17-high-risk-offender-national-flagging-system>) .

Where applicable, the Prosecutor should consider the following Directives: Firearms (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-14-firearms>) , Intimate Partner Violence (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>) , Sexual Offences against Adults (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-34-sexual-offences-against-adults>) , Offences Against Children (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) , Indigenous Peoples (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) and Direct Indictments (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-9-direct-indictments>) .

Resolution discussions and sentence

The Prosecutor must ensure that reasonable steps are taken to inform the victim of a proposed resolution (for example, guilty plea or proposed sentence) or that the charges will be withdrawn or stayed.

In all cases to which this Directive applies, except with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate, the Prosecutor must not:

- withdraw or stay proceedings
- advocate for, or agree to, a conditional sentence
- reduce or withdraw a charge to avoid a mandatory minimum term of imprisonment

Reference should be made to the following Directives, where applicable: Firearms (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-14-firearms>) , Intimate Partner Violence (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>) , Sexual Offences against Adults (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-34-sexual-offences-against-adults>) and Offences against Children (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) .

Support for victims

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made, at all stages of the criminal proceedings, to provide the victim with whatever information or assistance is required to ensure full and fair participation in the criminal justice system.

As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, the Prosecutor must ensure that reasonable steps are taken to provide the victim with the opportunity to prepare a Victim Impact Statement and inform the victim of their right to present it to the court and their other options.

Reference should be made to the Victims Directive. In all cases involving Indigenous victims, reference should also be made to the Indigenous Peoples Directive.

Ancillary orders

The Prosecutor must seek the following orders if applicable and remind the court of all mandatory orders:

- DNA orders

- Weapons prohibitions
- Sex Offender Information Registration Act (SOIRA) (<https://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/S-8.7/>)

Reference should be made to the following directives: DNA Data Bank Orders (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-11-dna-data-bank-orders>) and Weapons Prohibitions and Forfeiture (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-37-weapons-prohibitions-and-forfeiture>) .

D. 34: Sexual Offences against Adults

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: December 1, 2017

Sexual offences involve violations of sexual integrity, privacy and autonomy that can have enduring and substantial effects upon victims. These crimes pose a serious threat to individual and public safety and must be prosecuted vigorously.

Rape myths, misogyny and stereotypes about the nature of sexual offences and of victims of sexual offences must not influence any aspect of the criminal case. Prosecutors play an important role in preventing those distortions and harmful effects on victims and the integrity of the administration of justice. Each region has a designated “Sexual Violence Crown”, who is also a member of the Sexual Violence Advisory Group. The work of this group includes education, training, mentorship and enhanced community outreach.

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made, at all stages of the criminal proceedings, to provide the victim with whatever information or assistance is required to ensure full and fair participation in the criminal justice system. This includes the availability of the following:

- specialized victim’s services facilitated by the Victim/Witness Assistance Program (V/WAP) or other similar victims’ support services
- interpreters to assist the victim in communicating
- testimonial aids to assist the victim in providing evidence
- appointment of counsel to cross-examine the victim where the accused is self-represented

- access to independent legal representation for victims or witnesses on applications to access their private records under the Criminal Code.

Reference should be made to the following directives: Victims

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) , Publication Bans and Sealing Orders (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-32- publication-bans-and-sealing-orders) , DNA Data Bank Orders

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-11-dna-data-bank-orders>) ,

Weapons Prohibitions and Forfeiture (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution- manual/d-37-weapons-prohibitions-and-forfeiture) , High-Risk Offender National Flagging System (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-17-high-risk-offender- national-flagging-system) , Intimate Partner Violence (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown- prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence) , Judicial Interim Release (Bail)

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) ,

Testimonial Aids and Accessibility (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution- manual/d-35-testimonial-aids-and-accessibility) .

Sexually transmitted infections and HIV exposure cases

This section was added on December 1, 2017.

Cases dealing with sexually transmitted infections like HIV raise many complex and sensitive medical and legal issues. With diagnosis and treatment, HIV is a chronic, manageable condition.

Prosecutions for HIV exposure are guided by the law and the medical science. The Supreme Court of Canada has said that in certain circumstances a failure to disclose one's HIV status will be a criminal offence. The Supreme Court of Canada held that a person living with HIV has a legal obligation to disclose to their sexual partner their HIV status if there is a realistic possibility of transmission. Whether there is a realistic possibility of transmission will depend on the facts of the case. For example, there is no realistic possibility of transmission in cases where a condom is used and there is a low HIV viral load. In addition, according to a review by the Public Health Agency of Canada, if a person living with HIV is on antiretroviral therapy and has maintained a suppressed viral load for six months, there is also no realistic possibility of transmission. In these circumstances a failure to disclose does not result in criminal liability for exposure to HIV, and charges will not proceed.

The ministry has a group of experienced Prosecutors who are available to provide advice in this area. The STI Advisory Group is up-to-date on developments in the medical science and the risk of transmission. A Prosecutor assigned to a case involving HIV exposure must consult with the STI Advisory Group at the earliest stage possible.

Judicial interim release (bail)

In sexual offences against adults, the Prosecutor must take a position on judicial interim release applying the general principles set out in the Judicial Interim Release (Bail) Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) including the requirement for ongoing assessment of the strength of the Crown's case. The Prosecutor must be conscious of the potential risk of harm in these cases and must seek a detention order where she considers it necessary for the safety and security of the victim or the public.

Where the accused is remanded in custody pending a bail hearing, detained or released on conditions, the Prosecutor should seek an order from the Court prohibiting the accused from having any contact with the victim, or where appropriate, any witnesses. The Prosecutor must ensure that any conditions she recommends on a bail release are necessary and appropriate to the circumstances of the alleged offence and the accused.

At the bail stage, the Prosecutor must seek a publication ban directing that the identity of a victim or a witness and any information that could disclose the identity of the victim or witness not be published or transmitted in any way. If the victim wishes to have her identity known, the issue of lifting the publication ban can be revisited at any later stage in the proceedings. Reference should be made to the Publication Bans and Sealing Orders Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-32-publication-bans-and-sealing-orders>) .

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made to notify the victim of any release order, the conditions of release, including non-communication and any order detaining the accused. In all cases where there is reason to have concern for a victim's safety, the Prosecutor must ensure that bail notification occurs as soon as possible. On request, the victim must be provided with a copy of the court order.

Prosecution

Charge screening

The Prosecutor should determine whether the full gravity of the criminal act is reflected in the offence charged and recommend a more appropriate charge be laid if necessary.

The following factors should be considered when determining the offence charged is appropriate to the circumstances and whether to proceed summarily or by indictment:

- the circumstances of the offence e.g. protracted sexual abuse; significant physical, emotional or psychological harm to the victim
- whether the offence is alleged to have occurred within 6 months of reporting
- the circumstances of the offender e.g. history of similar offences, position of trust/authority in relation to victim
- the circumstances of the victim including the impact on the victim of testifying twice (at a preliminary inquiry and trial) and special vulnerabilities (disabilities, health, age of victim)
- the potential range of sentence.

The Prosecutor should consider whether the accused should be flagged as a High Risk Offender or the subject of a Long Term Offender or Dangerous Offender Application. In those cases, the Prosecutor should consult with her Regional High-Risk Offender Crown.

Reference should be made to the Charge Screening Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-3-charge-screening>) ,

Dangerous/Long-term Offender Directive (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown- prosecution-manual/d-8-dangerous-long-term-offenders) and High-Risk Offender National Flagging System Directive (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-17- high-risk-offender-national-flagging-system) .

Protecting privacy

Prosecutors must be sensitive to the privacy interests of victims at every stage of the prosecution. Privacy of victims of sexual offences is protected by publication bans and laws restricting access to their private records and sexual history.

The Prosecutor should consider the directions set out in the Disclosure Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-10-disclosure>) concerning the disclosure of sensitive materials.

Publication bans

The Criminal Code directs that the court shall prohibit the publication of any information that could identify the victim or witness, upon application. Reference should be made to the Publication Bans and Sealing Orders Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-32-publication-bans-and-sealing-orders>) .

Production of private records (third party records)

In order to gain access to a victim's private information, such as their medical, psychiatric or personal records, the Criminal Code provides that the accused must establish that the private records are likely relevant to an issue at trial or to the competence of a victim to testify. The Prosecutor should engage V/WAP to assist the victim in obtaining independent legal counsel to provide advice and represent their interests on the third party records application.

The Prosecutor must not disclose victim's records absent a court order unless the victim has expressly waived her right to privacy over those records. The victim is entitled to independent legal advice about their right to privacy. The validity of any waiver will depend on the circumstances.

If the victim chooses not to be represented by counsel, the Prosecutor should make the victim aware that the Criminal Code prohibits publication of information provided on the application.

Sexual history

The Criminal Code provides that evidence that a victim has engaged in prior sexual activity with the accused or with any other person is not admissible. This evidence cannot support an inference that the victim consented to the sexual activity nor can it be used to assess the victim's credibility.

Should the accused bring an application to have evidence of the victim's sexual history admitted, the Prosecutor must advise the victim that they are not required to testify at the hearing to determine the admissibility of their sexual history. The Prosecutor must also advise the victim that the Criminal Code prohibits publication of information provided on the application.

Cross-examination by a self-represented accused

In cases where an accused person is self-represented, the Prosecutor must seek an order appointing counsel to conduct the cross-examination of the victim.

Expert evidence

Before engaging an expert witness, the Prosecutor must obtain the prior approval of the Crown Attorney. Reference should be made to the Experts Evidence Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-12-expert-evidence>) .

Testimonial aids

Prosecutors should consider whether a victim's ability to communicate their evidence would be facilitated by the use of testimonial aids or other means that enable the evidence to be better understood. Where appropriate, Prosecutors should apply for an order permitting the use of a testimonial aid. Reference should be made to the Testimonial Aids and Accessibility Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-35-testimonial-aids-and-accessibility>) .

Resolution discussions and sentence

The Prosecutor must ensure reasonable steps are taken to inform the victim of a proposed resolution (e.g. guilty plea or proposed sentence) or that the charges will be withdrawn.

The Prosecutor must not negotiate a guilty plea in exchange for agreeing to forego a dangerous or long-term offender application without first consulting with the Regional High-Risk Offender Crown and her Crown Attorney.

Except with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate, the Prosecutor must not:

- withdraw or stay proceedings
- accept a plea to a lesser charge or non-sexual offence
- reduce or withdraw charge solely to avoid a mandatory minimum sentence or any ancillary orders.

Victim impact statement

As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, the Prosecutor must ensure reasonable steps are taken to provide the victim with the opportunity to prepare a Victim Impact Statement, and inform the victim of their right to present it to the court and their other options.

Restitution

The Criminal Code directs the court to consider making a restitution order and to ask the Prosecutor if reasonable steps have been taken to provide the victim with an opportunity to indicate whether they are seeking restitution i.e. compensation for counselling. As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, the Prosecutor must ensure reasonable steps are taken to provide the victim with an opportunity to indicate whether the victim is seeking restitution for their losses and damages.

Ancillary orders

The Prosecutor must seek the following orders if applicable and remind the court of all mandatory orders:

- DNA order

- Sex Offender Information Registration Act (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/S-8.7/>)
(SOIRA)

- Weapons Prohibition.

Reference should be made to the following directives: DNA Data Bank Orders

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-11-dna-data-bank-orders>) ,
Weapons Prohibitions and Forfeiture (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-37-weapons-prohibitions-and-forfeiture>) .

D. 35: Testimonial Aids and Accessibility

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

The justice system strives to foster the participation of victims and witnesses in the court process. Prosecutors have an important role to play in identifying those witnesses who may require assistance to fully access the criminal justice system, or to communicate their evidence to the court. Assistance may be provided to victims and witnesses who may not be able to fully access the criminal justice system, or to understand it or be understood by the other participants, due to language, age, or any impairment of an intellectual, emotional, physical or sensory nature.

Accessibility

Prosecutors must ensure that efforts are made so that victims and witnesses are provided with full and fair access to, and participation in, criminal proceedings. Prosecutors should be alive to barriers that may impede the involvement of victims or witnesses. Barriers might include:

- attitudinal barriers about people with disabilities
- communication barriers that occur because of a lack of accommodation
- informational barriers making available accommodations difficult to access or find
- physical barriers preventing people with physical disabilities from accessing the courthouse or courtroom
- sensory barriers preventing people who are blind or deaf, or who have a severe vision or hearing impairment from accessing court proceedings.

Prosecutors should consider whether victims and witnesses require assistance to communicate or otherwise participate in the court process. Where appropriate, the Prosecutor should ensure the victim or witness is informed about accommodations that are available at the earliest opportunity.

Prosecutors must bring accessibility and accommodation needs relating to criminal prosecutions and witnesses to the attention of the Accessibility Lead in their office. The Accessibility Lead is responsible for responding to accessibility requests and will facilitate contact with the Court Services Division Accessibility Coordinator.

Prosecutors should also ensure that interpreters are requested where appropriate. In all cases Prosecutors should seek to use language appropriate to the age and understanding of the victim or witness.

Testimonial aids

Victims have the right to request testimonial aids and publication bans. Prosecutors should consider whether a victim or witness's ability to communicate their evidence would be facilitated by the use of testimonial aids or other means that enable the evidence to be better understood. Where appropriate, Prosecutors should apply for an order permitting the use of a testimonial aid.

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) provides a number of measures that can be invoked in particular cases to increase the ability of a witness in a criminal proceeding to provide evidence. Depending on the circumstances of the offence, and the circumstances of a witness, including their age and ability, the measures may include:

- the services of a support person
- the use of a screen or closed circuit television
- the use of pre-recorded video evidence
- the use of affidavit evidence
- holding proceedings in camera
- an order banning publication that might identify the victim
- an order enabling witnesses to testify using a pseudonym
- preventing cross-examination by self-represented accused.

Reference should also be made to the Directives on Publication Bans and Sealing Orders (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-32-publication-bans-and-sealing-orders>) and Victims (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims#>)

D. 36: Victims

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Victims of crime should be treated with courtesy, candour, respect and dignity. The rights of victims to information, protection, participation and restitution are recognized by the Canadian Victims Bill of Rights (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-23.7/page-1.html>) and the Ontario Victims' Bill of Rights (<https://www.ontario.ca/laws/statute/95v06>). Prosecutors must display sensitivity, fairness and compassion in their dealings with victims.

A victim is a person who has suffered physical or emotional harm, property damage or economic loss as a result of the commission of a criminal offence. In cases where, the victim is deceased or incapable of acting on their own, the Prosecutor should deal with the individual who is acting on the victim's behalf.

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made to inform victims of available victim services. The Ministry of the Attorney General Victim/Witness Assistance Program provides information, assistance, and support to the most vulnerable victims of crime. The providing of information enhances their understanding of, and participation in, the criminal court process.

Victims have the right to convey their views about decisions to be made that affect their rights under the Canadian Victims Bill of Rights and to have those views considered.

Reference should also be made to the Sexual Offences against Adults (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-34-sexual-offences-against-adults>) , Offences against Children (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) and Intimate Partner Violence (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>) and Indigenous Peoples (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) Directives.

Information provided to the victim

Sensitivity to the perspective of victims, the nature of their victimization, their privacy interests, and their personal security must be considered at every stage of the prosecution.

Where necessary, the Prosecutor should be available to discuss the case with the victim. If the victim is required to testify, the Prosecutor should prepare the victim and determine whether any testimonial aids or accommodations are needed.

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made to advise the victim of significant information throughout the proceedings. This will include:

- the judicial interim release of an accused including the conditions of release
- the detention of the accused and any non-communication order
- the availability of publication bans to protect the victim's privacy

- the availability of testimonial aids to assist the victim in providing evidence
- the availability of interpreters
- a proposed resolution (e.g., a guilty plea and proposed sentence)
- that the charges will be withdrawn
- the availability of counsel to cross-examine the victim where the accused is self-represented
- an application brought by the accused to obtain the victim's private records and the victim's right to independent legal advice
- an application brought by the accused to admit evidence of the victim's previous sexual activity
- any appeals brought by the accused or the Prosecutor and the progress of those appeals.

Resolution discussions and sentencing

As soon as feasible, the Prosecutor must ensure reasonable steps are taken to inform the victim of a proposed resolution (e.g. a guilty plea or proposed sentence) or that the charges will be withdrawn.

Victim impact statements

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) directs the court to ask the Prosecutor if reasonable steps were taken to provide the victim with an opportunity to prepare a victim impact statement. As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, the Prosecutor must ensure reasonable steps are taken to provide the victim with the opportunity to prepare a Victim Impact Statement, and inform the victim of their right to present it to the court and their other options.

Community impact statements

The Criminal Code provides that in determining sentence the court must consider any statement prepared by an individual on a community's behalf describing the harm or loss suffered by the community as the result of the commission of the offence and the impact of the offence on the community.

Restitution

The Criminal Code directs the court to consider making a restitution order and to ask the Prosecutor if reasonable steps have been taken to provide the victim with an opportunity to indicate whether they are seeking restitution. As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, the Prosecutor must ensure reasonable steps are taken to provide the victim with an opportunity to indicate whether the victim is seeking restitution for their losses and damages.

D. 37: Weapons Prohibitions and Forfeiture

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

The Criminal Code (<http://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/>) prohibits the possession of certain weapons including firearms that are so inherently dangerous that their prohibition is mandatory and absolute. In addition to this general prohibition, the Criminal Code authorizes a court to specifically prohibit a person from possessing certain identifiable weapons, in certain circumstances. The Prosecutor should seek the imposition of terms and conditions necessary to protect public safety.

Reference should be made to the Firearms (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-14-firearms) and Criminal Asset Forfeiture (https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-7-criminal-asset-forfeiture) Directives.

Judicial interim release (bail)

A weapons prohibition may be imposed as a condition of a judicial interim release. The Criminal Code directs that in certain circumstances the court shall prohibit the accused from possessing any weapons while on a release order unless the court considers the condition is not required in the interests of the safety of the accused, the victim or the public. This is a presumptively mandatory condition and where it is not imposed, the Prosecutor must remind the court of its obligation in these circumstances to provide reasons for not adding the condition.

In any case where there is a concern for the safety and security of the victim or of any other person or the public, the Prosecutor must seek a condition prohibiting the accused from possessing any weapons.

Reference should be made to the Judicial Interim Release (Bail) Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) .

Section 810 recognizances (“Peace Bonds”)

The Prosecutor should determine whether the public interest requires the imposition of a separate weapons prohibition in addition to the conditions outlined in the section 810 recognizance.

Sentencing

Mandatory orders

The Criminal Code directs that the court shall make a mandatory prohibition order for an adult sentenced or discharged of certain offences. In these circumstances, the Prosecutor must remind the court of its obligation to make the order.

Discretionary orders

The Criminal Code directs that for some offences the imposition of a weapons prohibition order is discretionary. In these circumstances, the court shall consider if it is desirable in the interests of the safety of the accused or any other person to make a prohibition order. The Prosecutor must seek a discretionary prohibition order where concerns exist regarding the safety of the victim or the public.

Conditional sentence and probation orders

The Criminal Code directs that the court may make a condition prohibiting the possession of weapons in a conditional sentence or probation order. Prosecutors should also consider requesting a stand-alone prohibition order.

Exemptions to prohibition orders

The Criminal Code permits a court to vary a prohibition order where appropriate for employment or sustenance hunting. The offender who applies for this exemption is required to establish on a balance of probabilities that the weapons are necessary for one of these purposes.

The Prosecutor should request a police investigation of applications for exemption to weapons prohibition orders. The Prosecutor should consider the fruits of the investigation and all relevant circumstances in arriving at a position on the application. Ultimately, the court is required to consider the offender's application and criminal record, the circumstances of the offence and the safety of the public or any person.

Forfeiture or return of weapons

Upon the conclusion of a criminal case, property (including firearms, weapons or ammunition) may be returned to its lawful owner or be forfeited. The Prosecutor must seek the disposal of weapons, either by an order of forfeiture (and eventual destruction) or lawful return, to the appropriate person. If forfeiture or return of property is not addressed at the conclusion of the proceedings, the Prosecutor must seek an order to dispose of the weapons as soon as practicable.

Preventive prohibition orders

The Criminal Code allows a provincial court judge to issue a preventive weapons prohibition order where evidence discloses reasonable grounds to believe that public safety requires that a person should be prohibited from possessing firearms, other weapons or ammunition. The provincial court judge may issue the prohibition order whether or not an offence has been committed and whether or not the person currently possesses firearms, other weapons or ammunition.

Applications for preventive prohibition orders may be commenced by a peace officer, firearms officer or Chief Firearms Officer. The Prosecutor must assume carriage of these applications.

D. 38: Youth Criminal Justice

Prosecution directives

The Youth Criminal Justice Act (<http://www.laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/Y-1.5/index.html>) (YCJA) governs the prosecution of young persons aged 12 to 17 who are alleged to have committed criminal offences. The youth criminal justice system is intended to protect the public by:

1. holding young persons accountable through measures that are proportionate to the seriousness of the offence and the degree of responsibility of the young person

2. promoting the rehabilitation and reintegration of young persons who have committed offences
3. supporting the prevention of crime by referring young persons to programs or agencies in the community to address the circumstances underlying their offending behavior

Further the principles of the YCJA require that the criminal justice system for young persons be distinct from that of adults and must acknowledge a presumption of diminished moral blameworthiness or culpability of youth.

Prosecutors must ensure that all decisions taken at every stage of the youth justice system, from diversion to sentencing, conform to these and other principles in the YCJA and legal requirements of the YCJA.

In this section

- Youth Criminal Justice: Extrajudicial Sanctions (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-a-youth-criminal-justice-extrajudicial-sanctions>)
- Youth Criminal Justice: Court Practices and Procedures (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-b-youth-criminal-justice-court-practices-and-procedures>)
- Youth Criminal Justice: Resolution Discussions and Sentencing (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-c-youth-criminal-justice-resolution-discussions-and-sentencing>)

38 (a): Youth Criminal Justice - Extrajudicial Sanctions

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

The Youth Criminal Justice Act (<http://www.laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/Y-1.5/index.html>) includes extrajudicial sanctions (EJS), which are non-court measures used to hold a young person accountable for criminal conduct. These are post-charge programs designed to provide a timely method for young persons charged with a criminal offence to admit responsibility for their criminal behaviour and participate in meaningful interventions that hold them accountable. Young persons are entitled to different considerations flowing from the fact that, because of their age, they have heightened vulnerability, less maturity and a reduced capacity for moral judgment.

A notation of completion of EJS remains on a young person's youth court record for two years, and may be considered by a youth justice court in future proceedings including when assessing the appropriateness of a custodial disposition.

The local Youth Justice Committee or the Ministry of Children and Youth Services administers EJS programming. The programming will address the young person's offending behavior through the imposition of individually tailored meaningful consequences. In appropriate cases, young persons will make restitution or reconcile with the victims, without the necessity of formal judicial proceedings. Prosecutors must only consider EJS if a reasonable prospect of conviction exists and must not impose additional requirements on the accused person as a precondition to offering EJS.

This directive addresses diversion for young persons. For adults, please see Community Justice Programs for Adults (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-4-community-justice-programs-for-adults>) . For an adult suffering a mental illness, please see Mentally Ill Accused: Alternatives to Prosecution (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-a-mentally-ill-accused-alternatives-prosecution>) . For an Indigenous young person, please see Indigenous Peoples Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) .

Ineligible offences

Prosecutors must not refer any of the following offences for extrajudicial sanctions, regardless of the circumstances of the offence or the offender:

- murder, manslaughter, infanticide, criminal negligence causing death
- driving offences causing death or bodily harm
- aggravated assault
- simple impaired driving or driving with a prohibited blood alcohol concentration or refusing to provide a breath sample
- offences involving firearms

- criminal organization offences
- terrorism offences
- kidnapping
- voyeurism
- child abuse and child luring
- home invasions
- human trafficking offences
- robbery
- sexual assault cause bodily harm
- sexual interference and exploitation, invitation to sexual touching and incest
- any offences where the Attorney General's consent was obtained to initiate proceedings.

Presumptively ineligible offence

In exceptional cases, the Prosecutor may refer the following presumptively ineligible offences for extrajudicial sanctions with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate:

- hate-motivated offences [Hate Propaganda and Hate Motivated Offences Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-16-hate-propaganda-and-hate-motivated-offences>)]
- intimate partner violence offences [Intimate Partner Violence Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>)]
- criminal harassment
- offences involving child pornography
- publication etc., of intimate images without consent
- sexual assault.

Eligible offences

The Prosecutor may refer any other offence to extrajudicial sanctions.

Factors to consider

In determining if extrajudicial sanctions is an appropriate non-court measure to hold a young person accountable for a presumptively ineligible offence or eligible offence, the Prosecutor and Crown Attorney or designate must consider the following factors:

Background of the young person

1. the age of the young person
2. any prior findings of guilt or past involvement with EJS
3. the nature and number of any such previous offences
4. any outstanding charges
5. the role of the young person and their corresponding degree of responsibility in relation to the offence
6. whether the young person had been previously victimized
7. any remorse and willingness to engage in EJS or an appropriate treatment program
8. any mental health concerns, and the degree that the concerns can be said to have impacted the young person's behaviour
9. whether the young person comes from a disadvantaged group
10. whether the young person has been or is presently engaged with the child welfare system
11. whether the young person self-identifies as Métis, Inuit or First Nation.

The circumstances and nature of the offence

1. whether the offence is summary or indictable
2. whether the offence involves violence
3. whether the offence actually harmed the victim (physical, psychological or financial) and/or society
4. whether the incident affected the sexual integrity of a person

5. whether a weapon was used or threatened to be used
6. whether there was an intention to cause or attempt to cause substantial property damage or loss, and if so, whether the damage was reasonably foreseeable
7. whether the offence was against the administration of justice, such as breach of a court order, and, if so, the extent of non-compliance
8. whether the offence involved malice, extortion, exploitation or revenge
9. whether the offence involved a breach of trust
10. whether the offence was motivated by bias, prejudice or hate
11. whether the offence involved any type of bullying including cyber-bullying
12. the age of the victim
13. the views of the victim and/or their parents or legal guardians (if victim is a child), if available.

Administration of justice considerations

1. public confidence in the administration of justice
2. the length and expense of a trial when considered in relation to the seriousness of the offence
3. the likely sentence upon a finding of guilt
4. the availability of an appropriate sanction, including programming options, to hold the young person accountable for their offending behaviour and focus on correcting the offending behavior
5. frailties in the prosecution e.g. staleness of the case, or the technical nature of the offence
6. whether the consequences of the prosecution would be unduly harsh to the young person, the victim or any witnesses in the case, owing to such factors such as age, health or the relationship between the parties
7. whether a just result is accelerated by a referral to EJS.

In this section

- Youth Criminal Justice: Extrajudicial Sanctions
- Youth Criminal Justice: Court Practices and Procedures
(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-b-youth-criminal-justice-court-practices-and-procedures>)
- Youth Criminal Justice: Resolution Discussions and Sentencing
(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-c-youth-criminal-justice-resolution-discussions-and-sentencing>)

38 (b): Youth Criminal Justice - Court Practices and Procedures

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Judicial interim release (bail)

The Youth Criminal Justice Act (<http://www.laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/Y-1.5/index.html>) contains a unique bail regime, distinct from the Criminal Code regime for adults that recognizes the special circumstances and inherent vulnerability of youth.

Pre-trial detention should never be used as a substitute for child protection, mental health or other social measures. While protection of the public remains a paramount concern in any bail decision made by the Prosecutor, wherever possible, young persons should be managed in the community. At the same time, young persons who pose a risk to public safety may be detained.

The YCJA directs that a detention order may be lawfully imposed in only two situations:

1. the young person has been charged with a serious offence or
2. the young person has a history that indicates a pattern of conduct evidenced either by outstanding charges or by findings of guilt.

A young person is presumed innocent and the Prosecutor must be aware of the impact of even a brief period of detention in custody upon a young person. Even a brief period of detention in custody affects the mental, social and physical life of a young person and their family. The Prosecutor must consider the following additional factors when determining a position on bail:

1. the nature and seriousness of the offence
2. the young person's prior youth court record and/or any outstanding charges (or other relevant conduct)
3. whether the victim was a child
4. the safety of any witnesses or victims
5. concern that the young person will not appear in court if released in the community
6. evidence of a "substantial likelihood that the young person will, if released from custody, commit a serious offence"
7. public confidence in the administration of justice
8. the adequacy of the proposed plan of release, including the suitability of any proposed community support programs, a surety, or a responsible person
9. whether the Prosecutor will seek a custodial sentence if the young person is found guilty after trial
10. the needs of Indigenous young persons
11. young persons with special requirements and
12. the unique vulnerabilities of young persons presently engaged with the child welfare system, including their inability to access sureties or responsible persons, through no fault of their own.

The Prosecutor must ensure that efforts are made to notify the victim of any release order, the conditions of release, including non-communication and any order detaining the accused. In all cases where there is reason to have concern for a victim's safety, the Prosecutor must ensure that victim notification occurs as soon as possible. On request, the victim must be provided with a copy of the court order.

Reference should be made to the Judicial Interim Release (Bail) Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-24-judicial-interim-release-bail>) for further direction on Options and Conditions for Release.

Bail de novo

The YCJA provides that either the defence or the Prosecutor may bring an application for a new bail hearing before a youth justice court judge only if the original order was made by a justice of the peace. This application, for a bail de novo, is distinct from an application for a bail review. No new information is required and there is no deference to the justice of the peace.

The Prosecutor may bring an application for a bail de novo hearing before a youth justice court judge only with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate.

Referral to child welfare agencies

Prosecutors have an obligation under the Child and Family Services Act that directs them to immediately contact a Children's Aid Society when they have reasonable grounds to suspect a child has been or is likely to be a victim of physical, sexual or emotional harm.

In addition to this obligation, the Prosecutor should bring concerns about a young person's need for child protection to the court's attention at the earliest opportunity. The YCJA provides for the court at any stage of the proceedings to refer the young person to a child welfare agency for an assessment to determine whether the young person is in need of child welfare services.

Election as to mode of trial

In cases involving homicide or where an adult sentence is sought, the YCJA directs that a young person shall elect the mode of trial and have the option to have a trial in the Ontario Court of Justice before a judge without a jury or in the Superior Court of Justice with a judge alone or with a judge and jury.

The YCJA directs that if a young person elects to be tried by in the Ontario Court of Justice before a judge without a jury or in the Superior Court of Justice with a judge alone, the Attorney General may require the young person to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury in the Superior Court of Justice. If a Prosecutor determines a jury trial would be appropriate the Attorney General's consent must be obtained.

The Prosecutor must have the approval of her Crown Attorney or designate and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General - Criminal Law prior to commencing the process to seek the Attorney General's consent.

Appointment of counsel by court order

The YCJA states that a young person “has the right to retain and instruct counsel without delay, and to exercise that right personally, at any stage of proceedings against the young person.” It is important that young persons retain counsel as early as possible to ensure their rights are protected.

In addition to obtaining private counsel, there are three avenues for a young person to access publicly funded representation. First, they may utilize the services of duty counsel. Second, they may apply to Legal Aid Ontario for representation. Third, they may apply to a youth justice court judge for an order appointing publicly funded counsel if Legal Aid Ontario has denied their application.

When determining whether to accept an offer of extrajudicial sanctions, young persons are not entitled to court ordered publicly funded counsel and so may rely on the services of duty counsel. Prosecutors must oppose applications for court ordered publicly funded counsel when a decision on whether or not to accept an offer of EJS remains outstanding.

Prosecutors should remind the youth justice court of the following factors that should be considered when an application is made for court ordered publicly funded counsel:

- The financial circumstances of the young person and their parents or guardians and
- Whether the Prosecutor is seeking a custodial disposition if the young person is found guilty of the offences before the court.

Prosecutors should ensure that issues relating to the appointment of counsel are resolved quickly.

Mental health concerns

Where Prosecutors have concerns about the mental health needs of a young person, they should refer the young person to the local Youth Mental Health Court Worker or some other similar service at the earliest opportunity. These workers provide specialized support to young persons and their families and will assist them in connecting to community-based mental health resources and services.

Prosecutors should also consider whether a court-ordered mental health assessment is appropriate and request it without delay. These assessments are prepared by qualified medical professionals and provide the youth justice court with a comprehensive assessment of mental health needs that may be relevant to the young person’s offending behaviour. They assist Prosecutors and the youth justice court to identify the most appropriate resources available to foster the young person's rehabilitation and reintegration into society.

Accessing youth records

Youth records are protected by the privacy regime set out in Part VI of the YCJA. That regime establishes basic rules for protecting the identity of young persons, has prohibitions for the disclosure of records except as authorized by the YCJA. It also establishes timelines within which youth records may be accessed. Youth records may be disclosed only in accordance with these timeline provisions, to persons authorized by the YCJA.

Where the access period has expired, a formal application shall be brought before a youth justice court judge to access the records.

If within the access period a party requests youth records in the possession of the Prosecutor, the Prosecutor must determine if the records could be released if redacted. In determining whether to provide the documents requested the Prosecutor must also have regard to the following factors:

1. if the requester is lawfully entitled to access under the YCJA
2. the purpose for which the records are being requested
3. whether the records relate to an ongoing prosecution or a completed prosecution
4. whether disclosure of the records might adversely affect the ability of the Crown's office to continue an ongoing or pending prosecution
5. whether the records are necessary to make full answer and defence
6. the privacy interests of the affected parties contained in the records
7. safety concerns for any persons named in the records and
8. the nature of the offences to which the records relate.

In this section

- Youth Criminal Justice: Extrajudicial Sanctions (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-a-youth-criminal-justice-extrajudicial-sanctions>)
- Youth Criminal Justice: Court Practices and Procedures

- Youth Criminal Justice: Resolution Discussions and Sentencing
(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-c-youth-criminal-justice-resolution-discussions-and-sentencing>)

38 (c): Youth Criminal Justice - Resolution Discussions and Sentencing

Type of document: Prosecution Directive

Effective date: November 14, 2017

Resolution discussions and sentencing

The sentencing regime for young persons in the Youth Criminal Justice Act (<http://www.laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/Y-1.5/index.html>) , including specific sentencing principles, is distinct from that of adults. The YCJA places a general emphasis on community-based dispositions for young persons and adult sentencing provisions such as mandatory minimum sentences do not apply.

The YCJA further directs that a youth justice court shall not commit a young person to custody unless:

1. the young person has committed a violent offence
2. the young person has failed to comply with non-custodial sentences
3. the young person has committed an indictable offence for which an adult would be liable to imprisonment for a term of more than two years and has a history that indicates a pattern of either extrajudicial sanctions or of findings of guilt or both under this Act or
4. in exceptional cases where the young person has committed an indictable offence, the aggravating circumstances of the offence are such that the imposition of a non-custodial sentence would inconsistent with the purpose and principles of sentencing under the YCJA.

Where lawfully available, Prosecutors may seek a custodial sentence for a young person where a non-custodial sentence would be inadequate to hold the young person accountable for their actions. Prosecutors must consider the background of the young person and the circumstances and nature of the offence.

Other factors to be considered include the availability of appropriate programming options, both in the community and in custodial centres and the location of open and secure custody facilities and their proximity to the young person's family and support network.

Reference should be made to the Victims Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) .

Adult sentences

Young persons' found guilty of an offence committed when they were at least 14 years of age are eligible to be sentenced as an adult for offences punishable by a sentence of at least two years' incarceration.

The Prosecutor must seek an adult sentence for those serious violent offences defined in the YCJA as murder, attempted murder, manslaughter and aggravated sexual assault. If, in the opinion of the Prosecutor, a youth sentence would be appropriate, the Prosecutor must obtain the approval of the Crown Attorney and Director prior to agreeing to the youth sentence.

The Prosecutor may seek an adult sentence, with the prior approval of the Crown Attorney, for all other cases where the Prosecutor determines the maximum youth sentence would be insufficient to hold the young person accountable for their actions.

DNA orders

DNA orders are applicable to young persons' found guilty of criminal offences. For the purpose of DNA collections, the Criminal Code designates eligible offences as either compulsory primary offences, other primary offences or secondary offences.

Prosecutors must remind the youth justice court of its obligation to make a DNA order for each primary designated offence.

Prosecutors should request a DNA order for each secondary designated offence. In determining whether to seek a DNA order for these offences, the Prosecutor must consider the principles of the YCJA.

Weapons prohibition orders

A weapons prohibition order for a period not exceeding two years is mandatory for young persons' found guilty of certain offences in the Criminal Code. The Prosecutor must request such an order when the young person is found guilty of any of these offences.

A weapons prohibition order for a period not to exceed two years may be imposed if the young person is found guilty of some offences in the Criminal Code. The Prosecutor may request such an order when the young person is found guilty of any of these offences.

Lifting the ban on publication of a young person's identity

The YCJA prohibits the publication of information that would identify a young person dealt with under the act. However, the ban may be lifted in certain circumstances.

First, if the young person receives an adult sentence, the ban on publication is lifted automatically pursuant to the legislation.

Secondly, in exceptional circumstances, when a young person is found guilty of a violent offence, and is sentenced as a youth, Prosecutors may request the lifting of the ban on publication. The exception to lifting the ban on publication is available only where the young person is deemed a high risk to re-offend violently and lifting the ban is necessary to protect the public.

If, in the opinion of the Prosecutor, such exceptional circumstances exist, the Prosecutor must obtain the prior approval of the Crown Attorney or designate to request the lifting of the publication ban.

Reference should be made to the Victims Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-36-victims>) .

In this section

- Youth Criminal Justice: Extrajudicial Sanctions (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-a-youth-criminal-justice-extrajudicial-sanctions>)
- Youth Criminal Justice: Court Practices and Procedures (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-b-youth-criminal-justice-court-practices-and-procedures>)
- Youth Criminal Justice: Resolution Discussions and Sentencing

D. 39: COVID-19 Recovery

Type of document: COVID-19 Recovery

Effective date: October 7, 2021

COVID-19 Recovery

The effects of the COVID-19 pandemic, including a necessary reduction in court operations, have caused unprecedented challenges in the criminal justice system. These challenges have resulted in a substantial backlog of criminal cases in the courts. Balancing this backlog against incoming prosecutions means that Prosecutors must take steps to reduce the number of cases in the criminal justice system to ensure that priority is given to the prosecution of serious offences.

The Prosecutor must review each case in accordance with the overall direction of the Manual and make principled decisions that also address the backlog of cases in the courts due to the COVID-19 pandemic. In reviewing each case, the Prosecutor must:

- determine whether the prosecution is viable and appropriate, including whether it is in the public interest to proceed given the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the criminal justice system
- consider all available and appropriate sanctions, consistent with public safety, to resolve cases as early as possible
- make every effort possible to minimize delays caused by the COVID-19 pandemic, their impact on victims, witnesses and accused, and reduce the risk of cases being stayed for unreasonable delay

The community relies upon Prosecutors to pursue charges that enhance public safety and promote public confidence in the administration of justice and the rule of law.

Prosecutors must act with objectivity, independence and fairness in each case to ensure principled decisions are made. Decisions made by Prosecutors in the proper exercise of their discretion will be supported by the Attorney General.

Charge Screening

A charge may only proceed if there is a reasonable prospect of conviction and it is in the public interest. This standard must be applied to all cases and at all stages. Where there is no reasonable prospect of conviction or there is no public interest to proceed, the Prosecutor must withdraw the charge.

Reference should be made to the Charge Screening Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-3-charge-screening>) .

Reasonable prospect of conviction and the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic

In accordance with the Prosecutor's continuing obligation to assess reasonable prospect of conviction at all stages of the prosecution, the Prosecutor must consider any frailties in the prosecution that may have been exacerbated by the COVID-19 court restrictions or any other COVID-19 impacts.

For example, the Prosecutor must consider the impact of any lengthy delays, the ability of witnesses to participate in a hearing in-person or remotely and access to appropriate technology.

If there is a reasonable prospect of conviction, the Prosecutor must then consider whether it is in the public interest to continue the prosecution.

Public interest and the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic

Not all prosecutions that have a reasonable prospect of conviction will be in the public interest to continue. No one factor is determinative when assessing the public interest, but consideration must be given to both the seriousness of the offence including the harm done to victims and public balanced against the significant pressures on the criminal justice system caused by the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Prosecutor must also consider the following:

1. the length, delay and expense of a trial, and any COVID-19 court restrictions and limitations on court operations, and the need to reduce the number of cases in the criminal justice system, so that resources are available for the prosecution of serious offences
2. the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on an accused, victim or witness or a segment of the community in light of their age, physical health, mental health or special vulnerability (e.g. the frequency of intimate partner violence during the COVID-19 pandemic)

3. the disproportionate impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on racialized, marginalized, and Indigenous communities (e.g. an increase in the frequency of discriminatory or hate-related offences during the COVID-19 pandemic)
4. the disproportionate impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on vulnerable accused persons, including racialized, marginalized and Indigenous accused (e.g. not having access to accommodations or supports that normally exist or barriers aggravated by living in a remote First Nations or fly-in community)
5. whether the offence was motivated by the COVID-19 pandemic (e.g. taking advantage of closed businesses or people's fear of infection)
6. whether the charge is an offence against the administration of justice, such as a fail to comply offence, where the restrictions imposed by the COVID-19 pandemic impacted an accused's ability to comply with the court order
7. whether the experience of being arrested and charged (possibly held in custody pending release) with a criminal offence can, in itself, deter the accused person from being further involved in the criminal justice system
8. the public interest factors in the Charge Screening Directive, including the gravity or relative seriousness of the offence, the prevalence of the type of offence in the community, the criminal history of the accused and the circumstances and views of the victim including any safety concerns

Reference should be made to the Charge Screening Directive

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-3-charge-screening>) .

Public Interest Factors to Consider in Fail to Comply Offences

In determining whether it is in the public interest to proceed with a prosecution of a fail to comply offence, the Prosecutor must also consider the following public interest factors:

1. how long the accused was compliant with the terms of the release order, before and after failing to comply with the order, especially given the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the accused
2. any apparent reasons for failing to comply with the order, including whether the personal circumstances of the accused made it more challenging for them to understand the court order, or to comply with it
3. whether there are new criminal charges and whether the resolution of those charges can sufficiently hold the accused accountable without the need to proceed with the prosecution of the fail to comply offence

4. whether the accused failed to comply with a non-communication condition with a victim including a history of failing to comply with a non-communication condition or whether the accused initiated contact
5. whether the nature of the fail to comply impacts the appropriateness of the continued release of the accused in the community (e.g. failing to comply with a weapons prohibition)

Where it is in the public interest to proceed, the Prosecutor must consider all available and appropriate sanctions, including whether it would be appropriate to refer the accused to a community justice or Indigenous Restorative Justice program.

Reference should be made to the Charge Screening

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-3-charge-screening>) and Indigenous Peoples (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) Directives.

Community Justice or Indigenous Restorative Justice Programs

In some cases, the public interest can be better served through the exercise of prosecutorial discretion to withdraw or stay criminal charges after the completion of a community justice or Indigenous Restorative Justice program. Such programs allow the accused to take responsibility for their actions, address the root causes of the problem, and reintegrate them into the community in a positive way. A referral to one of these programs may be appropriate even for an accused who has previously completed one of these programs or been convicted of a criminal offence.

The following Directives identify offences that are ineligible and presumptively for community justice or Indigenous Restorative Justice programs, and set out factors the Prosecutor must consider in assessing the appropriateness of such programs for eligible offences: Community Justice Programs for Adults

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-4-community-justice-programs-for-adults>) , Indigenous Peoples (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) , Mentally Ill Accused: Alternatives to Prosecution (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/26-a-mentally-ill-accused-alternatives-prosecution>) and Youth Criminal Justice: Extrajudicial Sanctions (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/38-a-youth-criminal-justice-extrajudicial-sanctions>) .

Offences to be Presumptively Referred

Taking into account the impact of COVID-19 on the criminal justice system, and the need to reduce the number of cases in the courts to ensure that priority can be given to the prosecution of serious offences, the following offences are presumptively referable to a community justice or Indigenous Restorative Justice program:

- theft and possession under $5,000
- mischief under $5,000
- fraud under $5,000
- food, travel and accommodation frauds
- take motor vehicle without consent
- utter forged document
- possession of identity document
- causing a disturbance

Other Eligible Offences

In determining whether a referral to a community justice or Indigenous Restorative Justice program for other eligible offences is an effective alternative to a formal prosecution, the Prosecutor must consider the impact of COVID-19 on the criminal justice system and the need to reduce the number of cases in the courts to ensure that resources are directed to the prosecution of serious offences.

The Prosecutor must also consider the following factors:

1. the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the accused, including loss of job, health consequences, additional child-care and education responsibilities, working from home or significant financial constraints
2. the disproportionate impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on vulnerable accused persons, including racialized, marginalized and Indigenous accused (e.g. not having access to accommodations or supports that normally exist or barriers aggravated by living in a remote First Nations or fly-in community)
3. whether the offence was motivated by the COVID-19 pandemic (e.g. taking advantage of closed businesses or people's fear of infection)

4. frailties in the prosecution (e.g. staleness of the case, availability of witnesses, or the ability of witnesses to participate in-person in an in-person or remote hearing)
5. whether a just result is accelerated by a referral to a community justice or Indigenous Restorative Justice program taking into particular consideration any delays caused by the COVID-19 pandemic

Position on Sentence in Resolution Discussions

In determining a position on sentence in resolution discussions, the Prosecutor must consider all relevant factors, including the circumstances of the accused and alleged offence, the principles and purposes of sentencing, and the safety and security of the victim or public. The Prosecutor must also consider the impact of COVID-19 on the criminal justice system and the need to reduce the number of cases in the courts to ensure that resources are directed to the prosecution of serious offences.

The Prosecutor must consider, all available and appropriate sanctions, consistent with public safety, to resolve cases as early as possible. In some cases, the public interest can be better served by resolving a case for a sentence that will not result in a criminal conviction or a custodial sentence. Even for an accused who has previously been convicted of a criminal offence or received a custodial sentence, a sentence that will not result in a criminal conviction or a custodial sentence may still be appropriate.

Given the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the criminal justice system:

1. Where the established sentencing range would ordinarily support a suspended sentence, the Prosecutor must consider resolving the case for a discharge or referring the accused to a community justice or Indigenous Restorative Justice program unless the safety and security of the victim or public cannot be addressed by the proposed sanction or the proposed sanction would not adequately reflect the circumstances of the offence or offender.
2. Where the established sentencing range would ordinarily support a sentence up to 6 months in custody, the Prosecutor must consider resolving the case for a non-custodial sentence or a custodial sentence served in the community unless the safety and security of the victim or public cannot be addressed by the proposed sentence, the proposed sentence is not available in law, or the proposed sentence would not adequately reflect the circumstances of the offence or offender.

Reference should be made to the Indigenous Peoples

(<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-20-indigenous-peoples>) , Intimate Partner Violence (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-23-intimate-partner-violence>) , Offences Against Children (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-27-offences-against-children>) , Sexual Offences Against Adults (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-34-sexual-offences-against-adults>) and the Victims Directives (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-35-victims>) .

Alcohol Impaired Driving Resolutions

In reviewing alcohol impaired driving cases, Prosecutors must consider the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic as an exceptional circumstance justifying the withdrawal of the Criminal Code driving offence in exchange for a guilty plea to the Highway Traffic Act (<https://www.ontario.ca/laws/statute/90h08>) (HTA) offence of careless driving.

Where the exceptional circumstance justifying a careless driving resolution is the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, an accused is ineligible for the resolution if any of the following deemed aggravating factors under the Criminal Code (<https://laws-lois.justice.gc.ca/eng/acts/C-46/index.html>) and other factors are present:

- bodily harm or death resulted
- the accused's blood alcohol concentration is equal to or more than 120 mg within two hours after operating a vehicle
- the accused has a prior criminal or HTA record for similar offences
- the accused is prohibited or suspended from driving under a federal or provincial act
- a collision or significant bad driving was reported
- the accused has a prior HTA 'warn' or 'ADLS' licence suspension
- the accused was being paid for driving at the time
- a person under the age of 16 years was a passenger in the vehicle
- the accused refused to provide a breath or blood sample
- the accused was driving a large motor vehicle
- the impairment was caused by drugs or a combination of drugs and alcohol

A decision to accept a careless driving resolution must be approved by the Crown Attorney or designate. The protection of the public is the primary concern at every stage of the prosecution of impaired driving offences.

Where a careless driving resolution is approved, the Prosecutor should consider seeking a $1000 fine and a Provincial Offences Act (<https://www.ontario.ca/laws/statute/90p33#BK44>) (POA) probation order with a condition requiring that an ignition interlock device be installed in the offender's vehicle or other driving restrictions. The Prosecutor should also consider as a term of a probation order a condition requiring the accused to complete the Back on Track Program (<http://www.remedial.net/index.html>) remedial measures program.

Reference should be made to the Impaired Driving Directive (<https://www.ontario.ca/document/crown-prosecution-manual/d-18-impaired-driving>) .