

Conveyance of prisoner

(8) An order under subsection (7) shall be addressed to the person who has custody of the prisoner and on receipt thereof that person shall deliver the prisoner to the peace officer who is named in the order to receive him.

Return

(9) When the purposes of any order made under this section have been carried out, the prisoner shall be returned to the place where he was confined at the time the order was made.

Endorsement of Warrant

Endorsing warrant

528 (1) Where a warrant for the arrest or committal of an accused, in any form set out in Part XXVIII in relation thereto, cannot be executed in accordance with section 514 or 703, a justice within whose jurisdiction the accused is or is believed to be shall, on application and proof on oath or by affidavit of the signature of the justice who issued the warrant, authorize the arrest of the accused within his jurisdiction by making an endorsement, which may be in Form 28, on the warrant.

Copy of affidavit or warrant

(1.1) A copy of an affidavit or warrant submitted by a means of telecommunication that produces a writing has the same probative force as the original for the purposes of subsection (1).

Effect of endorsement

(2) An endorsement that is made on a warrant pursuant to subsection (1) is sufficient authority to the peace officers to whom it was originally directed, and to all peace officers within the territorial jurisdiction of the justice by whom it is endorsed, to execute the warrant and to take the accused before the justice who issued the warrant or before any other justice for the same territorial division.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 528; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 93; 1994, c. 44, s. 51.

Powers to Enter Dwelling-houses to Carry out Arrests

Including authorization to enter in warrant of arrest

529 (1) A warrant to arrest or apprehend a person issued by a judge or justice under this or any other Act of Parliament may authorize a peace officer, subject to subsection (2), to enter a dwelling-house described in the warrant for the purpose of arresting or apprehending the person if the judge or justice is satisfied by information on oath in writing that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the person is or will be present in the dwelling-house.

Execution

(2) An authorization to enter a dwelling-house granted under subsection (1) is subject to the condition that the peace officer may not enter the dwelling-house unless the peace officer has, immediately before entering the dwelling-house, reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested or apprehended is present in the dwelling-house.

Warrant to enter dwelling-house

529.1 A judge or justice may issue a warrant in Form 7.1 authorizing a peace officer to enter a dwelling-house described in the warrant for the purpose of arresting or apprehending a person identified or identifiable by the warrant if the judge or justice is satisfied by information on oath that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the person is or will be present in the dwelling-house and that

(a) a warrant referred to in this or any other Act of Parliament to arrest or apprehend the person is in force anywhere in Canada;

(b) grounds exist to arrest the person without warrant under paragraph 495\(1\)\(a\) or \(b\) or section 672.91; or

(c) grounds exist to arrest or apprehend without warrant the person under an Act of Parliament, other than this Act.

1997, c. 39, s. 2; 2002, c. 13, s. 23.

Reasonable terms and conditions

529.2 Subject to section 529.4, the judge or justice shall include in a warrant referred to in section 529 or 529.1 any terms and conditions that the judge or justice considers advisable to ensure that the entry into the dwelling-house is reasonable in the circumstances.

1997, c. 39, s. 2.

Authority to enter dwelling without warrant

529.3 (1) Without limiting or restricting any power a peace officer may have to enter a dwelling-house under this or any other Act or law, the peace officer may enter the dwelling-house for the purpose of arresting or apprehending a person, without a warrant referred to in section 529 or 529.1 authorizing the entry, if the peace officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the person is present in the dwelling-house, and the conditions for obtaining a warrant under section 529.1 exist but by reason of exigent circumstances it would be impracticable to obtain a warrant.

Exigent circumstances

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), exigent circumstances include circumstances in which the peace officer

(a) has reasonable grounds to suspect that entry into the dwelling-house is necessary to prevent imminent bodily harm or death to any person; or

(b) has reasonable grounds to believe that evidence relating to the commission of an indictable offence is present in the dwelling-house and that entry into the dwelling-house is necessary to prevent the imminent loss or imminent destruction of the evidence.

1997, c. 39, s. 2.

Omitting announcement before entry

529.4 (1) A judge or justice who authorizes a peace officer to enter a dwelling-house under section 529 or 529.1, or any other judge or justice, may authorize the peace officer to enter the dwelling-house without prior announcement if the judge or justice is satisfied by information on oath that there are reasonable grounds to believe that prior announcement of the entry would

(a) expose the peace officer or any other person to imminent bodily harm or death; or

(b) result in the imminent loss or imminent destruction of evidence relating to the commission of an indictable offence.

Execution of authorization

(2) An authorization under this section is subject to the condition that the peace officer may not enter the dwelling-house without prior announcement despite being authorized to do so unless the peace officer has, immediately before entering the dwelling-house,

(a) reasonable grounds to suspect that prior announcement of the entry would expose the peace officer or any other person to imminent bodily harm or death; or

(b) reasonable grounds to believe that prior announcement of the entry would result in the imminent loss or imminent destruction of evidence relating to the commission of an indictable offence.

Exception

(3) A peace officer who enters a dwelling-house without a warrant under section 529.3 may not enter the dwelling-house without prior announcement unless the peace officer has, immediately before entering the dwelling-house,

(a) reasonable grounds to suspect that prior announcement of the entry would expose the peace officer or any other person to imminent bodily harm or death; or

(b) reasonable grounds to believe that prior announcement of the entry would result in the imminent loss or imminent destruction of evidence relating to the commission of an indictable offence.

1997, c. 39, s. 2.

Means of telecommunication

529.5 An application for a warrant under section 529.1 or an authorization under section 529 or 529.4 may be submitted, and the warrant or authorization may be issued, by a means of telecommunication, and section 487.1 applies for those purposes with any necessary modifications.

1997, c. 39, s. 2; 2022, c. 17, s. 34.

PART XVII

Language of Accused

Language of accused

530 (1) On application by an accused whose language is one of the official languages of Canada, made not later than the time of the appearance of the accused at which their trial date is set, a judge, provincial court judge, judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice or justice of the peace shall grant an order directing that the accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury, as the case may be, who speak the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or, if the circumstances warrant, who speak both official languages of Canada.

Idem

(2) On application by an accused whose language is not one of the official languages of Canada, made not later than the time of the appearance of the accused at which their trial date is set, a judge, provincial court judge, judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice or justice of the peace may grant an order directing that the accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury, as the case may be, who speak the official language of Canada in which the accused, in the opinion of the judge, provincial court judge, judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice or justice of the peace, can best give testimony or, if the circumstances warrant, who speak both official languages of Canada.

Accused to be advised of right

(3) The judge, provincial court judge, judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice or justice of the peace before whom an accused first appears shall ensure that they are advised of their right to apply for an order under subsection (1) or (2) and of the time before which such an application must be made.

Remand

(4) If an accused fails to apply for an order under subsection (1) or (2) and the judge, provincial court judge, judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice or justice of the peace before whom the accused is to be tried, in this Part referred to as “the court”, is satisfied that it is in the best interests of justice that the accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury who speak the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or, if the language of the accused is not one of the official languages of Canada, the official language of Canada in which the accused, in the opinion of the court, can best give testimony, the court may, if it does not speak that language, by order remand the accused to be tried by a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury, as the case may be, who speak that language or, if the circumstances warrant, who speak both official languages of Canada.

Variation of order

(5) An order under this section that a trial be held in one of the official languages of Canada may, if the circumstances warrant, be varied by the court to require that it be held in both official languages of Canada, and vice versa.

Circumstances warranting order directing trial in both official languages

(6) The facts that two or more accused who are to be tried together are each entitled to be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury who speak one of the official languages of Canada and that those official languages are different may constitute circumstances that warrant that an order be granted directing that they be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury who speak both official languages of Canada.

Translation of documents

530.01 (1) If an order is granted under section 530, a prosecutor — other than a private prosecutor — shall, on application by the accused,

(a) cause the portions of an information or indictment against the accused that are in an official language that is not that of the accused or that in which the accused can best give testimony to be translated into the other official language; and

(b) provide the accused with a written copy of the translated text at the earliest possible time.

Original version prevails

(2) In the case of a discrepancy between the original version of a document and the translated text, the original version shall prevail.

2008, c. 18, s. 19.

If order granted

530.1 If an order is granted under section 530,

(a) the accused and his counsel have the right to use either official language for all purposes during the preliminary inquiry and trial of the accused;

(b) the accused and his counsel may use either official language in written pleadings or other documents used in any proceedings relating to the preliminary inquiry or trial of the accused;

(c) any witness may give evidence in either official language during the preliminary inquiry or trial;

(c.1) the presiding justice or judge may, if the circumstances warrant, authorize the prosecutor to examine or cross-examine a witness in the official language of the witness even though it is not that of the accused or that in which the accused can best give testimony;

(d) the accused has a right to have a justice presiding over the preliminary inquiry who speaks the official language of the accused or both official languages, as the case may be;

(e) the accused has a right to have a prosecutor — other than a private prosecutor — who speaks the official language of the accused or both official languages, as the case may be;

(f) the court shall make interpreters available to assist the accused, his counsel or any witness during the preliminary inquiry or trial;

(g) the record of proceedings during the preliminary inquiry or trial shall include

(i) a transcript of everything that was said during those proceedings in the official language in which it was said,

(ii) a transcript of any interpretation into the other official language of what was said, and

(iii) any documentary evidence that was tendered during those proceedings in the official language in which it was tendered; and

(h) any trial judgment, including any reasons given therefor, issued in writing in either official language, shall be made available by the court in the official language that is the language of the accused.

R.S., 1985, c. 31 (4th Supp.), s. 94; 2008, c. 18, s. 20.

Language used in proceeding

530.2 (1) If an order is granted directing that an accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury who speak both official languages, the justice or judge presiding over a preliminary inquiry or trial may, at the start of the proceeding, make an order setting out the circumstances in which, and the extent to which, the prosecutor and the justice or judge may use each official language.

Right of the accused

(2) Any order granted under this section shall, to the extent possible, respect the right of the accused to be tried in his or her official language.

2008, c. 18, s. 21.

Change of venue

531 Despite any other provision of this Act but subject to any regulations made under section 533, if an order made under section 530 cannot be conveniently complied with in the territorial division in which the offence would otherwise be tried, the court shall, except if that territorial division is in the Province of New Brunswick, order that the trial of the accused be held in another territorial division in the same province.

Saving

532 Nothing in this Part or the Official Languages Act derogates from or otherwise adversely affects any right afforded by a law of a province in force on the coming into force of this Part in that province or thereafter coming into force relating to the language of proceedings or testimony in criminal matters that is not inconsistent with this Part or that Act.

1977-78, c. 36, s. 1.

Regulations

533 The Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province may make regulations generally for carrying into effect the purposes and provisions of this Part in the province and the Commissioner of Yukon, the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories and the Commissioner of Nunavut may make regulations generally for carrying into effect the purposes and provisions of this Part in Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, respectively.

Review

533.1 (1) Within three years after this section comes into force, a comprehensive review of the provisions and operation of this Part shall be undertaken by any committee of the Senate, of the House of Commons or of both Houses of Parliament that may be designated or established by the Senate or the House of Commons, or by both Houses of Parliament, as the case may be, for that purpose.

Report

(2) The committee referred to in subsection (1) shall, within a year after a review is undertaken under that subsection or within any further time that may be authorized by the Senate, the House of Commons or both Houses of Parliament, as the case may be, submit a report on the review to Parliament, including a statement of any changes that the committee recommends.

PART XVIII

Procedure on Preliminary Inquiry

Jurisdiction

Inquiry by justice

535 If an accused who is charged with an indictable offence that is punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment is before a justice and a request has been made for a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536\(4\) or 536.1\(3\), the justice shall, in accordance with this Part, inquire into the charge and any other indictable offence, in respect of the same transaction, founded on the facts that are disclosed by the evidence taken in accordance with this Part.

Remand by justice to provincial court judge in certain cases

536 (1) Where an accused is before a justice other than a provincial court judge charged with an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction under section 553, the justice shall remand the accused to appear before a provincial court judge having jurisdiction in the territorial division in which the offence is alleged to have been committed.

Election before justice — 14 years or more of imprisonment

(2) If an accused is before a justice, charged with an indictable offence that is punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment, other than an offence listed in section 469, the justice shall, after the information has been read to the accused, put the accused to an election in the following words:

You have the option to elect to be tried by a provincial court judge without a jury and without having had a preliminary inquiry; or you may elect to be tried by a judge without a jury; or you may elect to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you do not elect now, you are deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you elect to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or if you are deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, you will have a preliminary inquiry only if you or the prosecutor requests one. How do you elect to be tried?

(2.1) If an accused is before a justice, charged with an indictable offence — other than an offence that is punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment, an offence listed in section 469 that is not punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment or an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction under section 553 —, the justice shall, after the information has been read to the accused, put the accused to an election in the following words:

You have the option to elect to be tried by a provincial court judge without a jury; or you may elect to be tried by a judge without a jury; or you may elect to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you do not elect now, you are deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. How do you elect to be tried?

Procedure where accused elects trial by provincial court judge

(3) Where an accused elects to be tried by a provincial court judge, the justice shall endorse on the information a record of the election and shall

(a) where the justice is not a provincial court judge, remand the accused to appear and plead to the charge before a provincial court judge having jurisdiction in the territorial division in which the offence is alleged to have been committed; or

(b) where the justice is a provincial court judge, call on the accused to plead to the charge and if the accused does not plead guilty, proceed with the trial or fix a time for the trial.

Request for preliminary inquiry

(4) If an accused referred to in subsection (2) elects to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or does not elect when put to the election or is deemed under paragraph 565\(1\)\(a\) to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, or if an accused is charged with an offence listed in section 469 that is punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment, the justice shall, subject to section 577, on the request of the accused or the prosecutor made at that time or within the period fixed by rules of court made under section 482 or 482.1 or, if there are no such rules, by the justice, hold a preliminary inquiry into the charge.

Endorsement on the information — accused referred to in subsection (2)

(4.1) If an accused referred to in subsection (2) elects to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or does not elect when put to the election or is deemed under paragraph 565\(1\)\(a\) to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, the justice shall endorse on the information and, if the accused is in custody, on the warrant of remand, a statement showing

(a) the nature of the election or deemed election of the accused or that the accused did not elect, as the case may be; and

(b) whether the accused or the prosecutor has requested that a preliminary inquiry be held.

Endorsement on the information — other accused charged with an offence punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment

(4.11) If an accused is before a justice, charged with an offence listed in section 469 that is punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment, the justice shall endorse on the information and, if the accused is in custody, on the warrant of remand, a statement showing whether the accused or the prosecutor has requested that a preliminary inquiry be held.

Endorsement on the information — accused referred to in subsection (2.1)

(4.12) If an accused referred to in subsection (2.1) elects to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or does not elect when put to the election or is deemed under paragraph 565\(1\)\(a\) to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, the justice shall endorse on the information and, if the accused is in custody, on the warrant of remand, a statement showing the nature of the election or deemed election of the accused or that the accused did not elect, as the case may be.

Preliminary inquiry if two or more accused

(4.2) If two or more persons are jointly charged in an information and one or more of them make a request for a preliminary inquiry under subsection (4), a preliminary inquiry must be held with respect to all of them.

When no request for preliminary inquiry

(4.3) If no request for a preliminary inquiry is made under subsection (4), the justice shall fix the date for the trial or the date on which the accused must appear in the trial court to have the date fixed.

Jurisdiction

(5) Where a justice before whom a preliminary inquiry is being or is to be held has not commenced to take evidence, any justice having jurisdiction in the province where the offence with which the accused is charged is alleged to have been committed has jurisdiction for the purposes of subsection (4).

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 536; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 96; 2002, c. 13, s. 25; 2004, c. 12, s. 9; 2019, c. 25, s. 239.

Remand by justice — Nunavut

536.1 (1) If an accused is before a justice of the peace charged with an indictable offence mentioned in section 553, the justice of the peace shall remand the accused to appear before a judge.

Election before judge or justice of the peace in Nunavut — 14 years or more of imprisonment

(2) If an accused is before a judge or justice of the peace, charged with an indictable offence that is punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment, other than an offence mentioned in section 469, the judge or justice of the peace shall, after the information has been read to the accused, put the accused to an election in the following words:

You have the option to elect to be tried by a judge without a jury or to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you do not elect now, you are deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you elect to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or if you are deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, you will have a preliminary inquiry only if you or the prosecutor requests one. How do you elect to be tried?

Election before judge or justice of the peace in Nunavut — other indictable offences

(2.1) If an accused is before a judge or justice of the peace, charged with an indictable offence — other than an offence that is punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment, an offence listed in section 469 that is not punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment or an offence mentioned in section 553 —, the judge or justice of the peace shall, after the information has been read to the accused, put the accused to an election in the following words:

You have the option to elect to be tried by a judge without a jury or to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you do not elect now, you are deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. How do you elect to be tried?

(3) If an accused referred to in subsection (2) elects to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or does not elect when put to the election or is deemed under paragraph 565\(1\)\(a\) to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury or if an accused is charged with an offence listed in section 469 that is punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment, the justice or judge shall, subject to section 577, on the request of the accused or the prosecutor made at that time or within the period fixed by rules of court made under section 482 or 482.1 or, if there are no such rules, by the judge or justice, hold a preliminary inquiry into the charge.

Endorsement on the information — accused referred to in subsection (2)

(4) If an accused referred to in subsection (2) elects to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or does not elect when put to the election or is deemed under paragraph 565\(1\)\(a\) to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, the justice or judge shall endorse on the information and, if the accused is in custody, on the warrant of remand, a statement showing

- (a) the nature of the election or deemed election of the accused or that the accused did not elect, as the case may be; and
- (b) whether the accused or the prosecutor has requested that a preliminary inquiry be held.

Endorsement on the information — other accused charged with an offence punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment

(4.01) If an accused is before a judge or justice of the peace, charged with an offence listed in section 469 that is punishable by 14 years or more of imprisonment, the justice or judge shall endorse on the information and, if the accused is in custody, on the warrant of remand, a statement showing whether the accused or the prosecutor has requested that a preliminary inquiry be held.

Endorsement on the information — accused referred to in subsection (2.1)

(4.02) If an accused referred to in subsection (2.1) elects to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or does not elect when put to the election or is deemed under paragraph 565\(1\)\(a\) to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, the justice shall endorse on the information and, if the accused is in custody, on the warrant of remand, a statement showing the nature of the election or deemed election of the accused or that the accused did not elect, as the case may be.

Preliminary inquiry if two or more accused

(4.1) If two or more persons are jointly charged in an information and one or more of them make a request for a preliminary inquiry under subsection (3), a preliminary inquiry must be held with respect to all of them.

Procedure if accused elects trial by judge — Nunavut

(4.2) If no request for a preliminary inquiry is made under subsection (3),

(a) if the accused is before a justice of the peace, the justice of the peace shall remand the accused to appear and plead to the charge before a judge; or

(b) if the accused is before a judge, the judge shall

(i) if the accused elects to be tried by a judge without a jury, call on the accused to plead to the charge and if the accused does not plead guilty, proceed with the trial or fix a time for the trial, or

(ii) if the accused elects or is deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, fix a time for the trial.

Jurisdiction — Nunavut

(5) If a justice of the peace before whom a preliminary inquiry is being or is to be held has not commenced to take evidence, any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in Nunavut has jurisdiction for the purpose of subsection (3).

Application to Nunavut

(6) This section, and not section 536, applies in respect of criminal proceedings in Nunavut.

Elections and re-elections in writing

536.2 An election or a re-election by an accused in respect of a mode of trial may be made by submission of a document in writing without the personal appearance of the accused.

2002, c. 13, s. 27.

Procedures before Preliminary Inquiry

Statement of issues and witnesses

536.3 If a request for a preliminary inquiry is made, the prosecutor or, if the request was made by the accused, counsel for the accused shall, within the period fixed by rules of court made under section 482 or 482.1 or, if there are no such rules, by the justice, provide the court and the other party with a statement that identifies

(a) the issues on which the requesting party wants evidence to be given at the inquiry; and

(b) the witnesses that the requesting party wants to hear at the inquiry.

Order for hearing

536.4 (1) The justice before whom a preliminary inquiry is to be held may order, on application of the prosecutor or the accused or on the justice's own motion, that a hearing be held, within the period fixed by rules of court made under section 482 or 482.1 or, if there are no such rules, by the justice, to

(a) assist the parties to identify the issues on which evidence will be given at the inquiry;

(b) assist the parties to identify the witnesses to be heard at the inquiry, taking into account the witnesses' needs and circumstances; and

(c) encourage the parties to consider any other matters that would promote a fair and expeditious inquiry.

Agreement to be recorded

(2) When the hearing is completed, the justice shall record any admissions of fact agreed to by the parties and any agreement reached by the parties.

Agreement to limit scope of preliminary inquiry

536.5 Whether or not a hearing is held under section 536.4, the prosecutor and the accused may agree to limit the scope of the preliminary inquiry to specific issues. An agreement shall be filed with the court or recorded under subsection 536.4\(2\), as the case may be.

Powers of Justice

537 (1) A justice acting under this Part may

(a) adjourn an inquiry from time to time and change the place of hearing, where it appears to be desirable to do so by reason of the absence of a witness, the inability of a witness who is ill to attend at the place where the justice usually sits or for any other sufficient reason;

(b) remand the accused to custody for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act;

- (c) except where the accused is authorized pursuant to Part XVI to be at large, remand the accused to custody in a prison by warrant in Form 19;
- (d) resume an inquiry before the expiration of a period for which it has been adjourned with the consent of the prosecutor and the accused or his counsel;
- (e) order in writing, in Form 30, that the accused be brought before him, or any other justice for the same territorial division, at any time before the expiration of the time for which the accused has been remanded;
- (f) grant or refuse permission to the prosecutor or his counsel to address him in support of the charge, by way of opening or summing up or by way of reply on any evidence that is given on behalf of the accused;
- (g) receive evidence on the part of the prosecutor or the accused, as the case may be, after hearing any evidence that has been given on behalf of either of them;
- (h) order that no person other than the prosecutor, the accused and their counsel shall have access to or remain in the room in which the inquiry is held, where it appears to him that the ends of justice will be best served by so doing;
- (i) regulate the course of the inquiry in any way that appears to the justice to be desirable, including to promote a fair and expeditious inquiry, that is consistent with this Act and that, unless the justice is satisfied that to do so would be contrary to the best interests of the administration of justice, is in accordance with any admission of fact or agreement recorded under subsection 536.4\(2\) or agreement made under section 536.5;
- (j) if the prosecutor and the accused consent, allow the accused to appear by counsel for any part of the inquiry, other than a part in which the evidence of a witness is taken; and
- (j.1) permit, on the request of the accused, that the accused be out of court during the whole or any part of the inquiry on any conditions that the justice considers appropriate.
- (k) [Repealed, 2022, c. 17, s. 35]

Power provided under paragraph (1)(i)

(1.01) For the purpose of paragraph (1)(i), the justice may, among other things, limit the scope of the preliminary inquiry to specific issues and limit the witnesses to be heard on these issues.

Section 715 or 715.01

(1.02) If a justice grants a request under paragraph (1)(j.1), the Court must inform the accused that the evidence taken during their absence could still be admissible under section 715 or 715.01.

Inappropriate questioning

(1.1) A justice acting under this Part shall order the immediate cessation of any part of an examination or cross-examination of a witness that is, in the opinion of the justice, abusive, too repetitive or otherwise inappropriate.

Change of venue

(2) Where a justice changes the place of hearing under paragraph (1)(a) to a place in the same province, other than a place in a territorial division in which the justice has jurisdiction, any justice who has jurisdiction in the place to which the hearing is changed may continue the hearing.

Organization

538 Where an accused is an organization, subsections 556\(1\) and \(2\) apply with such modifications as the circumstances require.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 538; 2003, c. 21, s. 8.

Taking Evidence of Witnesses

Order restricting publication of evidence taken at preliminary inquiry

539 (1) Prior to the commencement of the taking of evidence at a preliminary inquiry, the justice holding the inquiry

(a) may, if application therefor is made by the prosecutor, and

(b) shall, if application therefor is made by any of the accused, make an order directing that the evidence taken at the inquiry shall not be published in any document or broadcast or transmitted in any way before such time as, in respect of each of the accused,

(c) he or she is discharged, or

(d) if he or she is ordered to stand trial, the trial is ended.

Accused to be informed of right to apply for order

(2) Where an accused is not represented by counsel at a preliminary inquiry, the justice holding the inquiry shall, prior to the commencement of the taking of evidence at the inquiry, inform the accused of his right to make application under subsection (1).

Failure to comply with order

(3) Every one who fails to comply with an order made pursuant to subsection (1) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(4) [Repealed, 2005, c. 32, s. 18]

Taking evidence

540 (1) Where an accused is before a justice holding a preliminary inquiry, the justice shall

- (a) take the evidence under oath of the witnesses called on the part of the prosecution, subject to subsection 537\(1.01\), and allow the accused or counsel for the accused to cross-examine them; and
- (b) cause a record of the evidence of each witness to be taken
 - (i) in legible writing in the form of a deposition, in Form 31, or by a stenographer appointed by him or pursuant to law, or
 - (ii) in a province where a sound recording apparatus is authorized by or under provincial legislation for use in civil cases, by the type of apparatus so authorized and in accordance with the requirements of the provincial legislation.

Reading and signing depositions

(2) Where a deposition is taken down in writing, the justice shall, in the presence of the accused, before asking the accused if he wishes to call witnesses,

- (a) cause the deposition to be read to the witness;
- (b) cause the deposition to be signed by the witness; and
- (c) sign the deposition himself.

Authentication by justice

(3) Where depositions are taken down in writing, the justice may sign

- (a) at the end of each deposition; or
- (b) at the end of several or of all the depositions in a manner that will indicate that his signature is intended to authenticate each deposition.

Stenographer to be sworn

(4) Where the stenographer appointed to take down the evidence is not a duly sworn court stenographer, he shall make oath that he will truly and faithfully report the evidence.

Authentication of transcript

(5) Where the evidence is taken down by a stenographer appointed by the justice or pursuant to law, it need not be read to or signed by the witnesses, but, on request of the justice or of one of the parties, shall be transcribed, in whole or in part, by the stenographer and the transcript shall be accompanied by

- (a) an affidavit of the stenographer that it is a true report of the evidence; or

(b) a certificate that it is a true report of the evidence if the stenographer is a duly sworn court stenographer.

Transcription of record taken by sound recording apparatus

(6) Where, in accordance with this Act, a record is taken in any proceedings under this Act by a sound recording apparatus, the record so taken shall, on request of the justice or of one of the parties, be dealt with and transcribed, in whole or in part, and the transcription certified and used in accordance with the provincial legislation, with such modifications as the circumstances require mentioned in subsection (1).

Evidence

(7) A justice acting under this Part may receive as evidence any information that would not otherwise be admissible but that the justice considers credible or trustworthy in the circumstances of the case, including a statement that is made by a witness in writing or otherwise recorded.

Notice of intention to tender

(8) Unless the justice orders otherwise, no information may be received as evidence under subsection (7) unless the party has given to each of the other parties reasonable notice of his or her intention to tender it, together with a copy of the statement, if any, referred to in that subsection.

Appearance for examination

(9) The justice shall, on application of a party, require any person whom the justice considers appropriate to appear for examination or cross-examination with respect to information intended to be tendered as evidence under subsection (7).

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 540; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 98; 1997, c. 18, s. 65; 2002, c. 13, s. 29; 2019, c. 25, s. 243.

Hearing of witnesses

541 (1) When the evidence of the witnesses called on the part of the prosecution has been taken down and, if required by this Part, has been read, the justice shall, subject to this section and subsection 537\(1.01\), hear the witnesses called by the accused.

Contents of address to accused

(2) Before hearing any witness called by an accused who is not represented by counsel, the justice shall address the accused as follows or to the like effect:

“Do you wish to say anything in answer to these charges or to any other charges which might have arisen from the evidence led by the prosecution? You are not obliged to say anything, but whatever you do say may be given in evidence against you at your trial. You should not make any confession or admission of guilt because of any promise or threat made to you but if you do make any statement it may be given in evidence against you at your trial in spite of the promise or threat.”

Statement of accused

(3) Where the accused who is not represented by counsel says anything in answer to the address made by the justice pursuant to subsection (2), the answer shall be taken down in writing and shall be signed by the justice and kept with the evidence of the witnesses and dealt with in accordance with this Part.

Witnesses for accused

(4) Where an accused is not represented by counsel, the justice shall ask the accused if he or she wishes to call any witnesses after subsections (2) and (3) have been complied with.

Depositions of witnesses

(5) Subject to subsection 537\(1.01\), the justice shall hear each witness called by the accused who testifies to any matter relevant to the inquiry, and for the purposes of this subsection, section 540 applies with any modifications that the circumstances require.

Confession or admission of accused

542 (1) Nothing in this Act prevents a prosecutor giving in evidence at a preliminary inquiry any admission, confession or statement made at any time by the accused that by law is admissible against him.

Restriction of publication of reports of preliminary inquiry

(2) Every one who publishes in any document, or broadcasts or transmits in any way, a report that any admission or confession was tendered in evidence at a preliminary inquiry or a report of the nature of such admission or confession so tendered in evidence unless

(a) the accused has been discharged, or

(b) if the accused has been ordered to stand trial, the trial has ended, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Remand Where Offence Committed in Another Jurisdiction

Order that accused appear or be taken before justice where offence alleged to have been committed

543 (1) If an accused is charged with an offence alleged to have been committed out of the limits of the jurisdiction in which they have been charged, the justice before whom they appear or are brought may, at any stage of the inquiry after hearing both parties, order the accused to appear or, if the accused is in custody, issue a warrant in Form 15 to convey the accused before a justice who, having jurisdiction in the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed, shall continue and complete the inquiry.

Transmission of transcript and documents and effect of order or warrant

(2) Where a justice makes an order or issues a warrant pursuant to subsection (1), he shall cause the transcript of any evidence given before him in the inquiry and all documents that were then before him and that are relevant to the inquiry to be transmitted to a justice having jurisdiction in the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed and

(a) any evidence the transcript of which is so transmitted shall be deemed to have been taken by the justice to whom it is transmitted; and

(b) any appearance notice, undertaking or release order issued to or given or entered into by the accused shall be deemed to have been issued, given or entered into in the jurisdiction where the offence is alleged to have been committed and to require the accused to appear before the justice to whom the transcript and documents are transmitted at the time provided in the order made in respect of the accused under paragraph (1)(a).

Absconding Accused

Accused absconding during inquiry

544 (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, where an accused, whether or not he is charged jointly with another, absconds during the course of a preliminary inquiry into an offence with which he is charged,

(a) he shall be deemed to have waived his right to be present at the inquiry, and

(b) the justice

(i) may continue the inquiry and, when all the evidence has been taken, shall dispose of the inquiry in accordance with section 548, or

(ii) if a warrant is issued for the arrest of the accused, may adjourn the inquiry to await his appearance, but where the inquiry is adjourned pursuant to subparagraph (b)(ii), the justice may continue it at any time pursuant to subparagraph (b)(i) if he is satisfied that it would no longer be in the interests of justice to await the appearance of the accused.

Adverse inference

(2) Where the justice continues a preliminary inquiry pursuant to subsection (1), he may draw an inference adverse to the accused from the fact that he has absconded.

Accused not entitled to re-opening

(3) Where an accused reappears at a preliminary inquiry that is continuing pursuant to subsection (1), he is not entitled to have any part of the proceedings that was conducted in his absence re-opened unless the justice is satisfied that because of exceptional circumstances it is in the interests of justice to re-open the inquiry.

Counsel for accused may continue to act

(4) Where an accused has absconded during the course of a preliminary inquiry and the justice continues the inquiry, counsel for the accused is not thereby deprived of any authority he may have to continue to act for the accused in the proceedings.

Accused calling witnesses

(5) If, at the conclusion of the evidence on the part of the prosecution at a preliminary inquiry that has been continued under subsection (1), the accused is absent but their counsel is present, the counsel shall be given an opportunity to call witnesses on behalf of the accused, subject to subsection 537\(1.01\), and subsection 541\(5\) applies with any modifications that the circumstances require.

Procedure where Witness Refuses to Testify

Witness refusing to be examined

545 (1) Where a person, being present at a preliminary inquiry and being required by the justice to give evidence,

- (a) refuses to be sworn,
- (b) having been sworn, refuses to answer the questions that are put to him,
- (c) fails to produce any writings that he is required to produce, or
- (d) refuses to sign his deposition,

without offering a reasonable excuse for his failure or refusal, the justice may adjourn the inquiry and may, by warrant in Form 20, commit the person to prison for a period not exceeding eight clear days or for the period during which the inquiry is adjourned, whichever is the lesser period.

Further commitment

(2) Where a person to whom subsection (1) applies is brought before the justice on the resumption of the adjourned inquiry and again refuses to do what is required of him, the justice may again adjourn the inquiry for a period not exceeding eight clear days and commit him to prison for the period of adjournment or any part thereof, and may adjourn the inquiry and commit the person to prison from time to time until the person consents to do what is required of him.

Saving

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent the justice from sending the case for trial on any other sufficient evidence taken by him.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 472.

Remedial Provisions

Irregularity or variance not to affect validity

546 The validity of any proceeding at or subsequent to a preliminary inquiry is not affected by

- (a) any irregularity or defect in the substance or form of the summons or warrant;
- (b) any variance between the charge set out in the summons or warrant and the charge set out in the information; or
- (c) any variance between the charge set out in the summons, warrant or information and the evidence adduced by the prosecution at the inquiry.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 473.

Adjournment if accused misled

547 Where it appears to the justice that the accused has been deceived or misled by any irregularity, defect or variance mentioned in section 546, he may adjourn the inquiry and may remand the accused or grant him interim release in accordance with Part XVI.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 474; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 59.1.

Inability of justice to continue

547.1 Where a justice acting under this Part has commenced to take evidence and dies or is unable to continue for any reason, another justice may

- (a) continue taking the evidence at the point at which the interruption in the taking of the evidence occurred, where the evidence was recorded pursuant to section 540 and is available; or
- (b) commence taking the evidence as if no evidence had been taken, where no evidence was recorded pursuant to section 540 or where the evidence is not available.

R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 100.

Adjudication and Recognizances

Order to stand trial or discharge

548 (1) When all the evidence has been taken by the justice, he shall

- (a) if in his opinion there is sufficient evidence to put the accused on trial for the offence charged or any other indictable offence in respect of the same transaction, order the accused to stand trial; or

(b) discharge the accused, if in his opinion on the whole of the evidence no sufficient case is made out to put the accused on trial for the offence charged or any other indictable offence in respect of the same transaction.

Endorsing charge

(2) Where the justice orders the accused to stand trial for an indictable offence, other than or in addition to the one with which the accused was charged, the justice shall endorse on the information the charges on which he orders the accused to stand trial.

Where accused ordered to stand trial

(2.1) A justice who orders that an accused is to stand trial has the power to fix the date for the trial or the date on which the accused must appear in the trial court to have that date fixed.

Defect not to affect validity

(3) The validity of an order to stand trial is not affected by any defect apparent on the face of the information in respect of which the preliminary inquiry is held or in respect of any charge on which the accused is ordered to stand trial unless, in the opinion of the court before which an objection to the information or charge is taken, the accused has been misled or prejudiced in his defence by reason of that defect.

Order to stand trial at any stage of inquiry with consent

549 (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the justice may, at any stage of a preliminary inquiry, with the consent of the accused and the prosecutor, order the accused to stand trial in the court having criminal jurisdiction, without taking or recording any evidence or further evidence.

Limited preliminary inquiry

(1.1) If the prosecutor and the accused agree under section 536.5 to limit the scope of a preliminary inquiry to specific issues, the justice, without taking or recording evidence on any other issues, may order the accused to stand trial in the court having criminal jurisdiction.

Procedure

(2) If an accused is ordered to stand trial under this section, the justice shall endorse on the information a statement of the consent of the accused and the prosecutor, and the accused shall after that be dealt with in all respects as if ordered to stand trial under section 548.

Recognizance of witness

550 (1) Where an accused is ordered to stand trial, the justice who held the preliminary inquiry may require any witness whose evidence is, in his opinion, material to enter into a recognizance to give evidence at the trial of the accused and to comply with such reasonable conditions prescribed in the recognizance as the justice considers desirable for securing the attendance of the witness to give evidence at the trial of the accused.

Clarification

(2) A recognizance entered into under this section may be set out at the end of a deposition or be separate from it.

Sureties or deposit for appearance of witness

(3) A justice may, for any reason satisfactory to him, require any witness entering into a recognizance pursuant to this section

(a) to produce one or more sureties in such amount as he may direct; or

(b) to deposit with him a sum of money sufficient in his opinion to ensure that the witness will appear and give evidence.

Witness refusing to be bound

(4) Where a witness does not comply with subsection (1) or (3) when required to do so by a justice, he may be committed by the justice, by warrant in Form 24, to a prison in the territorial division where the trial is to be held, there to be kept until he does what is required of him or until the trial is concluded.

Discharge

(5) Where a witness has been committed to prison pursuant to subsection (4), the court before which the witness appears or a justice having jurisdiction in the territorial division where the prison is situated may, by order in Form 39, discharge the witness from custody when the trial is concluded.

Transmission of Record

Transmission of record by justice

551 If a justice orders an accused to stand trial, the justice shall immediately send to the clerk or other proper officer of the court by which the accused is to be tried, any information, evidence, exhibits, or statement of the accused taken down in writing in accordance with section 541, any appearance notice, undertaking or release order given by or issued to the accused and any evidence taken before a coroner that is in the possession of the justice.

PART XVIII.1

Case Management Judge

Appointment

551.1 (1) On application by the prosecutor or the accused or on his or her own motion, the Chief Justice or the Chief Judge of the court before which a trial is to be or is being held or the judge that the Chief Justice or the Chief Judge designates may, if he or she is of the opinion that it is necessary for the proper administration of justice, appoint a judge as the case management judge for that trial at any time before the jury selection, if the trial is before a judge and jury, or before the stage at which the evidence on the merits is presented, if the trial is being heard by a judge without a jury or a provincial court judge.

Conference or hearing

(2) The Chief Justice or the Chief Judge or his or her designate may order that a conference between the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused or a hearing be held for the purpose of deciding if it is necessary for the proper administration of justice to proceed with the appointment.

(3) [Repealed, 2019, c. 25, s. 250]

Same judge

(4) The appointment of a judge as the case management judge does not prevent him or her from becoming the judge who hears the evidence on the merits.

2011, c. 16, s. 4; 2019, c. 25, s. 250.

Role

551.2 The case management judge shall assist in promoting a fair and efficient trial, including by ensuring that the evidence on the merits is presented, to the extent possible, without interruption.

2011, c. 16, s. 4.

Powers before evidence on merits presented

551.3 (1) In performing their duties before the stage of the presentation of the evidence on the merits, the case management judge, as a trial judge, exercises the powers that a trial judge has before that stage in order to assist in promoting a fair and efficient trial, including by

- (a) assisting the parties to identify the witnesses to be heard, taking into account the witnesses' needs and circumstances;
- (b) encouraging the parties to make admissions and reach agreements;
- (c) encouraging the parties to consider any other matters that would promote a fair and efficient trial;
- (d) establishing schedules and imposing deadlines on the parties;

- (e) hearing guilty pleas and imposing sentences;
- (f) assisting the parties to identify the issues that are to be dealt with at the stage at which the evidence on the merits is presented;
- (g) subject to section 551.7, adjudicating any issues that can be decided before that stage, including those related to
 - (i) the disclosure of evidence,
 - (ii) the admissibility of evidence,
 - (iii) the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms,
 - (iv) expert witnesses,
 - (v) the severance of counts, and
 - (vi) the separation of trials on one or more counts when there is more than one accused; and
- (h) ordering, in each case set out in subsection 599\(1\), that the trial be held in a territorial division in the same province other than that in which the offence would otherwise be tried.

Hearing

(2) The case management judge shall order that a hearing be held for the purpose of exercising the power referred to in paragraph (1)(g).

Power exercised at trial

(3) When the case management judge exercises the power referred to in paragraph (1)(g), he or she is doing so at trial.

Decision binding

(4) A decision that results from the exercise of the power referred to in paragraph (1)(g) is binding on the parties for the remainder of the trial — even if the judge who hears the evidence on the merits is not the same as the case management judge — unless the court is satisfied that it would not be in the interests of justice because, among other considerations, fresh evidence has been adduced.

2011, c. 16, s. 4; 2019, c. 25, s. 251.

Information relevant to presentation of evidence on merits to be part of court record

551.4 (1) When the case management judge is of the opinion that the measures to promote a fair and efficient trial that can be taken before the stage of the presentation of the evidence on the merits have been taken — including adjudicating the issues that can be decided — he or she shall ensure that the court record includes information that, in his or her opinion, may be relevant at the stage of the presentation of the evidence on the merits, including

- (a) the names of the witnesses to be heard that have been identified by the parties;
- (b) any admissions made and agreements reached by the parties;
- (c) the estimated time required to conclude the trial;
- (d) any orders and decisions; and
- (e) any issues identified by the parties that are to be dealt with at the stage of the presentation of the evidence on the merits.

Exception

(2) This section does not apply to a case management judge who also hears the evidence on the merits.

2011, c. 16, s. 4.

Trial continuous

551.5 Even if the judge who hears the evidence on the merits is not the same as the case management judge, the trial of an accused shall proceed continuously, subject to adjournment by the court.

2011, c. 16, s. 4.

Issues referred to case management judge

551.6 (1) During the presentation of the evidence on the merits, the case management judge shall adjudicate any issue referred to him or her by the judge hearing the evidence on the merits.

Powers at stage of presentation of evidence on merits

(2) For the purposes of adjudicating an issue, the case management judge may exercise the powers of a trial judge.

2011, c. 16, s. 4.

Decision whether to hold joint hearing

551.7 (1) If an issue referred to in any of subparagraphs 551.3\(1\)\(g\)\(i\) to \(iii\) is to be adjudicated in related trials that are to be or are being held in the same province before a court of the same jurisdiction, the Chief Justice or the Chief Judge of that court or his or her designate may, on application by the prosecutor or the accused or on his or her own motion, determine if it is in the interests of justice, including ensuring consistent decisions, to adjudicate that issue at a joint hearing for some or all of those trials.

Considerations

(2) To make the determination, the Chief Justice or the Chief Judge or his or her designate

- (a) shall take into account, among other considerations, the degree to which the evidence relating to the issue is similar in the related trials; and

(b) may order that a conference between the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused or a hearing be held.

Order for joint hearing

(3) If the Chief Justice or the Chief Judge or his or her designate determines that it is in the interests of justice to adjudicate the issue at a joint hearing for some or all of the related trials, he or she shall issue an order

(a) declaring that a joint hearing be held to adjudicate the issue in the related trials that he or she specifies;

(b) naming the parties who are to appear at the hearing;

(c) appointing a judge to adjudicate the issue; and

(d) designating the territorial division in which the hearing is to be held, if the trials are being held in different territorial divisions.

Limitation — indictable offence

(4) However, the order may only be made in respect of a trial for an indictable offence, other than a trial before a provincial court judge, if the indictment has been preferred.

Order in court record and transmission to parties

(5) The Chief Justice or the Chief Judge or his or her designate shall cause a copy of the order to be included in the court record of each of the trials specified in the order and to be provided to each of the parties named in it.

Transmission of court record

(6) If one of the specified trials is being held in a territorial division other than the one in which the joint hearing will be held, the officer in that territorial division who has custody of the indictment or information and the writings relating to the trial shall, when he or she receives the order, transmit the indictment or information and the writings without delay to the clerk of the court before which the joint hearing is to be held.

Order to appear at joint hearing

(7) The judge appointed under the order shall require the parties who are named in it to appear at the joint hearing.

Removal of prisoner

(8) The order made under subsection (2) or (3) is sufficient warrant, justification and authority to all sheriffs, keepers of prisons and peace officers for an accused's removal, disposal and reception in accordance with the terms of the order, and the sheriff may appoint and authorize any peace officer to convey the accused to a prison for the territorial division in which the hearing, as the case may be, is to be held.

Powers of judge

(9) The judge appointed under the order may, as a trial judge and for the purpose of adjudicating the issue at the joint hearing, exercise the powers of a trial judge.

Adjudication at trial

(10) When the judge adjudicates the issue, he or she is doing so at trial.

Decision in court records and return of documents

(11) Once the judge has adjudicated the issue, he or she shall cause his or her decision, with reasons, to be included in the court record of each of the related trials in respect of which the joint hearing was held and, in the case of a trial for which an indictment, information or writings were transmitted by an officer under subsection (6), the judge shall have the documents returned to the officer.

Provincial Court Judge's Jurisdiction with Consent

Trial by provincial court judge with consent

554 (1) Subject to subsection (2), if an accused is charged in an information with an indictable offence other than an offence that is mentioned in section 469, and the offence is not one over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction under section 553, a provincial court judge may try the accused if the accused elects to be tried by a provincial court judge.

Nunavut

(2) With respect to criminal proceedings in Nunavut, if an accused is charged in an information with an indictable offence other than an offence that is mentioned in section 469 and the offence is not one over which a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice has absolute jurisdiction under section 553, a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice may try the accused if the accused elects to be tried by a judge without a jury.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 554; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 105, 203; 1999, c. 3, s. 38; 2002, c. 13, s. 31.

If charge should be prosecuted by indictment

555 (1) If in any proceedings under this Part an accused is before a provincial court judge and it appears to the provincial court judge that for any reason the charge should be prosecuted by indictment, the provincial court judge may, at any time before the accused has entered a defence, decide not to adjudicate and shall then inform the accused of the decision.

Election before justice

(1.1) If the provincial court judge has decided not to adjudicate, the judge shall put the accused to an election in the following words:

You have the option to elect to be tried by a judge without a jury or you may elect to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you do not elect now, you are deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you elect to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or if you are deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, you will have a preliminary inquiry only if you are entitled to one and you or the prosecutor requests one. How do you elect to be tried?

Continuing proceedings

(1.2) If the accused is entitled to a preliminary inquiry and they or the prosecutor requests one, the provincial court judge shall continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry.

If subject matter is testamentary instrument or exceeds $5,000 in value

(2) If an accused is before a provincial court judge, charged with an offence prosecuted by indictment mentioned in paragraph 553\(a\) or subparagraph 553(b)(i), and, at any time before the provincial court judge makes an adjudication, the evidence establishes that the subject matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or that its value exceeds $5,000, the provincial court judge shall put the accused to their election in accordance with subsection 536\(2.1\).

Continuing proceedings

(3) If an accused is put to their election under subsection (1.1) or (2), the following provisions apply:

(a) if the accused elects to be tried by a judge without a jury or a court composed of a judge and jury or does not elect when put to their election, the provincial court judge shall endorse on the information a record of the nature of the election or deemed election; and

(b) if the accused elects to be tried by a provincial court judge, the provincial court judge shall endorse on the information a record of the election and continue with the trial.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 555; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 106, 203; 1994, c. 44, s. 58; 2002, c. 13, s. 32; 2019, c. 25, s. 252; 2022, c. 17, s. 36.

If charge should be prosecuted by indictment — Nunavut

555.1 (1) If in any criminal proceedings under this Part an accused is before a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice and it appears to the judge that for any reason the charge should be prosecuted by indictment, the judge may, at any time before the accused has entered a defence, decide not to adjudicate and shall then inform the accused of the decision.

(1.1) If the judge has decided not to adjudicate, the judge shall put the accused to an election in the following words:

You have the option to elect to be tried by a judge without a jury or to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you do not elect now, you are deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you elect to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or if you are deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, you will have a preliminary inquiry only if you are entitled to one and you or the prosecutor requests one. How do you elect to be tried?

Continuing proceedings

(1.2) If the accused is entitled to a preliminary inquiry and they or the prosecutor requests one, the judge shall endorse on the information a record of the nature of the election or deemed election and continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry.

If subject-matter is testamentary instrument or exceeds $5,000 in value — Nunavut

(2) If an accused is before a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice, charged with an offence prosecuted by indictment mentioned in paragraph 553\(a\) or subparagraph 553(b) (i), and, at any time before the judge makes an adjudication, the evidence establishes that the subject matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or that its value exceeds $5,000, the judge shall put the accused to their election in accordance with subsection 536.1\(2.1\).

Continuing proceedings — Nunavut

(3) If an accused is put to their election under subsection (1.1) and no preliminary inquiry is requested, or is put to an election under subsection (2), and elects to be tried by a judge without a jury or a court composed of a judge and jury or does not elect when put to the election, the judge shall endorse on the information a record of the nature of the election or deemed election and continue with the trial.

Application to Nunavut

(4) This section, and not section 555, applies in respect of criminal proceedings in Nunavut.

1999, c. 3, s. 39; 2002, c. 13, s. 33; 2019, c. 25, s. 253.

Organization

556 (1) An accused organization shall appear by counsel or agent.

Non-appearance

(2) Where an accused organization does not appear pursuant to a summons and service of the summons on the organization is proved, the provincial court judge or, in Nunavut, the judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice

(a) may, if the charge is one over which the judge has absolute jurisdiction, proceed with the trial of the charge in the absence of the accused organization; and

(b) shall, if the charge is not one over which the judge has absolute jurisdiction, fix the date for the trial or the date on which the accused organization must appear in the trial court to have that date fixed.

Preliminary inquiry not requested

(3) If an accused organization appears and a preliminary inquiry is not requested under subsection 536\(4\), the provincial court judge shall fix the date for the trial or the date on which the organization must appear in the trial court to have that date fixed.

Preliminary inquiry not requested — Nunavut

(4) If an accused organization appears and a preliminary inquiry is not requested under subsection 536.1\(3\), the justice of the peace or the judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice shall fix the date for the trial or the date on which the organization must appear in the trial court to have that date fixed.

Jurisdiction of Judges

Judge's Jurisdiction with Consent

Trial by judge without a jury

558 If an accused who is charged with an indictable offence, other than an offence mentioned in section 469, elects under section 536 or 536.1 or re-elects under section 561 or 561.1 to be tried by a judge without a jury, the accused shall, subject to this Part, be tried by a judge without a jury.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 558; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 108; 1999, c. 3, s. 41.

Court of record

559 (1) A judge who holds a trial under this Part shall, for all purposes thereof and proceedings connected therewith or relating thereto, be a court of record.

Custody of records

(2) The record of a trial that a judge holds under this Part shall be kept in the court over which the judge presides.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 489.

Election

Duty of judge

560 (1) If an accused elects, under section 536 or 536.1, to be tried by a judge without a jury, a judge having jurisdiction shall

(a) on receiving a written notice from the sheriff or other person having custody of the accused stating that the accused is in custody and setting out the nature of the charge against him, or

(b) on being notified by the clerk of the court that the accused is not in custody and of the nature of the charge against him, fix a time and place for the trial of the accused.

Notice by sheriff, when given

(2) The sheriff or other person having custody of the accused shall give the notice mentioned in paragraph (1)(a) within twenty-four hours after the accused is ordered to stand trial, if the accused is in custody pursuant to that order or if, at the time of the order, he is in custody for any other reason.

Duty of sheriff when date set for trial

(3) Where, pursuant to subsection (1), a time and place is fixed for the trial of an accused who is in custody, the accused

(a) shall be notified forthwith by the sheriff or other person having custody of the accused of the time and place so fixed; and

(b) shall be produced at the time and place so fixed.

Duty of accused when not in custody

(4) Where an accused is not in custody, the duty of ascertaining from the clerk of the court the time and place fixed for the trial, pursuant to subsection (1), is on the accused, and he shall attend for his trial at the time and place so fixed.

Right to re-elect

561 (1) An accused who elects or is deemed to have elected a mode of trial other than trial by a provincial court judge may re-elect,

(a) if the accused is charged with an offence for which a preliminary inquiry has been requested under subsection 536\(4\),

(i) at any time before or after the completion of the preliminary inquiry, with the written consent of the prosecutor, to be tried by a provincial court judge,

(ii) at any time before the completion of the preliminary inquiry or before the 60th day following the completion of the preliminary inquiry, as of right, another mode of trial other than trial by a provincial court judge, and

(iii) on or after the 60th day following the completion of the preliminary inquiry, any mode of trial with the written consent of the prosecutor; or

(b) if the accused is charged with an offence for which they are not entitled to request a preliminary inquiry or if they did not request a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536\(4\),

(i) as of right, not later than 60 days before the day first appointed for the trial, another mode of trial other than trial by a provincial court judge, or

(ii) any mode of trial with the written consent of the prosecutor.

Right to re-elect

(2) An accused who elects to be tried by a provincial court judge may, not later than 60 days before the day first appointed for the trial, re-elect as of right another mode of trial, and may do so after that time with the written consent of the prosecutor.

Notice of re-election under paragraph (1)(a)

(3) If an accused intends to re-elect under paragraph (1)(a) before the completion of the preliminary inquiry, they shall give notice in writing of their intention to re-elect, together with the written consent of the prosecutor, if that consent is required, to the justice presiding at the preliminary inquiry who shall on receipt of the notice,

(a) in the case of a re-election under subparagraph (1)(a)(ii), put the accused to their re-election in the manner set out in subsection (7); or

(b) if the accused intends to re-elect under subparagraph (1)(a)(i) and the justice is not a provincial court judge, notify a provincial court judge or clerk of the court of the accused's intention to re-elect and send to the provincial court judge or clerk any information, appearance notice, undertaking or release order given by or issued to the accused and any evidence taken before a coroner that is in the possession of the justice.

Notice of re-election under paragraph (1)(b) or subsection (2)

(4) If an accused intends to re-elect under paragraph (1)(b) or subsection (2), they shall give notice in writing that they intend to re-elect together with the written consent of the prosecutor, if that consent is required, to the provincial court judge before whom the accused appeared and pleaded or to a clerk of the court.

Notice and transmitting record

(5) If an accused intends to re-elect under paragraph (1)(a) after the completion of the preliminary inquiry, they shall give notice in writing, together with the written consent of the prosecutor, if that consent is required, to a judge or clerk of the court of the accused's original election. The judge or clerk shall, on receipt of the notice,

- (a) notify the judge or provincial court judge or clerk of the court by which the accused wishes to be tried of the accused's intention to re-elect; and
- (b) send to that judge or provincial court judge or clerk any information, evidence, exhibits and statement of the accused taken down in writing in accordance with section 541, any appearance notice, undertaking or release order given by or issued to the accused and any evidence taken before a coroner that is in the possession of the first-mentioned judge or clerk.

Time and place for re-election

(6) Where a provincial court judge or judge or clerk of the court is notified under paragraph (3)(b) or subsection (4) or (5) that the accused wishes to re-elect, the provincial court judge or judge shall forthwith appoint a time and place for the accused to re-elect and shall cause notice thereof to be given to the accused and the prosecutor.

Proceedings on re-election

(7) The accused shall attend or, if in custody, shall be produced at the time and place appointed under subsection (6) and shall be put to a re-election after

- (a) the charge on which the accused has been ordered to stand trial or the indictment, if an indictment has been preferred under section 566, 574 or 577 or is filed with the court before which the indictment is to be preferred under section 577, has been read to the accused; or
- (b) the information, in the case of a re-election under paragraph (1)(a), before the completion of the preliminary inquiry, or under paragraph (1)(b) or subsection (2), has been read to the accused.

The accused shall be put to their re-election in the following words or in words to the like effect:

You have given notice of your intention to re-elect the mode of your trial. You now have the option to do so. How do you intend to re-elect?

Right to re-elect with consent — Nunavut

561.1 (1) An accused who has elected or is deemed to have elected a mode of trial may re-elect any other mode of trial at any time with the written consent of the prosecutor.

Right to re-elect before trial — Nunavut

(2) An accused who has elected or is deemed to have elected a mode of trial but has not requested a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536.1\(3\) or is not entitled to make such a request under that subsection may, as of right, re-elect to be tried by any other mode of trial at any time up to 60 days before the day first appointed for the trial.

Right to re-elect at preliminary inquiry — Nunavut

(3) An accused who has elected or is deemed to have elected a mode of trial and has requested a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536.1\(3\) may, as of right, re-elect to be tried by the other mode of trial at any time before the completion of the preliminary inquiry or before the 60th day after its completion.

Notice of re-election under subsection (1) or (3) — Nunavut

(4) If an accused wishes to re-elect under subsection (1) or (3), before the completion of the preliminary inquiry, the accused shall give notice in writing of the wish to re-elect, together with the written consent of the prosecutor, if that consent is required, to the justice of the peace or judge presiding at the preliminary inquiry who shall on receipt of the notice put the accused to a re-election in the manner set out in subsection (9).

Notice at preliminary inquiry — Nunavut

(5) If at a preliminary inquiry an accused intends to re-elect under subsection (1) or (3) to be tried by a judge without a jury but does not intend to request a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536.1\(3\), the presiding justice of the peace shall notify a judge or a clerk of the Nunavut Court of Justice of the accused's intention to re-elect and send to the judge or clerk any information, appearance notice, undertaking or release order given by or issued to the accused and any evidence taken before a coroner that is in the possession of the justice of the peace.

Notice when no preliminary inquiry or preliminary inquiry completed — Nunavut

(6) If an accused who has not requested a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536.1\(3\), who has had one or who was not entitled to make such a request under that subsection intends to re-elect under this section, the accused shall give notice in writing of the intention to re-elect together with the written consent of the prosecutor, if that consent is required, to the judge before whom the accused appeared and pleaded or to a clerk of the Nunavut Court of Justice.

(7) [Repealed, 2002, c. 13, s. 38]

Time and place for re-election — Nunavut

(8) On receipt of a notice given under any of subsections (4) to (7) that the accused wishes to re-elect, a judge shall immediately appoint a time and place for the accused to re-elect and shall cause notice of the time and place to be given to the accused and the prosecutor.

Proceedings on re-election — Nunavut

(9) The accused shall attend or, if in custody, shall be produced at the time and place appointed under subsection (8) and shall be put to a re-election after

(a) the charge on which the accused has been ordered to stand trial has been read to the accused or, if an indictment has been preferred under section 566, 574 or 577 or is filed with the court before which the indictment is to be preferred under section 577, the indictment has been read to the accused; or

(b) the information — in the case of a re-election under subsection (1) or (3), before the completion of the preliminary inquiry, or under subsection (2) — has been read to the accused.

The accused shall be put to their re-election in the following words or in words to the like effect:

You have given notice of your intention to re-elect the mode of your trial. You now have the option to do so. How do you intend to re-elect?

(10) This section, and not section 561, applies in respect of criminal proceedings in Nunavut.

Proceedings following re-election

562 (1) If the accused re-elects under subparagraph 561\(1\)\(a\)\(i\) before the completion of the preliminary inquiry, under paragraph 561(1)(a) after the completion of the preliminary inquiry or under paragraph 561(1)(b), the provincial court judge or judge, as the case may be, shall proceed with the trial or appoint a time and place for the trial.

Proceedings following re-election

(2) If the accused re-elects under subparagraph 561\(1\)\(a\)\(ii\) before the completion of the preliminary inquiry, or under subsection 561\(2\), and requests a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536\(4\), the justice shall proceed with the preliminary inquiry.

Proceedings on re-election to be tried by judge without jury — Nunavut

563.1 (1) If an accused re-elects under section 561.1 to be tried by a judge without a jury and does not request a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536.1\(3\) or is not entitled to make such a request under that subsection,

(a) the accused shall be tried on the information that was before the justice of the peace or judge at the preliminary inquiry, if applicable, subject to any amendments that may be allowed by the judge by whom the accused is tried; and

(b) the judge before whom the re-election is made shall endorse on the information a record of the re-election.

Application to Nunavut

(2) This section, and not section 563, applies in respect of criminal proceedings in Nunavut.

Election deemed to have been made

565 (1) If an accused is ordered to stand trial for an offence that, under this Part, may be tried by a judge without a jury, the accused shall, for the purposes of the provisions of this Part relating to election and re-election, be deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury if

(a) the justice of the peace, provincial court judge or judge, as the case may be, declined to record the election or re-election of the accused under section 567 or

subsection 567.1\(1\); or

(b) the accused does not elect when put to an election under section 536 or 536.1.

When direct indictment preferred

(2) If an accused is to be tried after an indictment has been preferred against the accused on the basis of a consent or order given under section 577, the accused is, for the purposes of the provisions of this Part relating to election and re-election, deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury and not to have requested a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536\(4\) or 536.1\(3\), if they were entitled to make such a request, and may re-elect to be tried by a judge without a jury without a preliminary inquiry.

Notice of re-election

(3) If an accused intends to re-elect under subsection (2), the accused shall give notice in writing to a judge or clerk of the court where the indictment has been filed or preferred. The judge or clerk shall, on receipt of the notice, notify a judge having jurisdiction or clerk of the court by which the accused wishes to be tried of the accused's intention to re-elect and send to that judge or clerk any indictment, appearance notice, undertaking or release order given by or issued to the accused, any summons or warrant issued under section 578 and any evidence taken before a coroner that is in the possession of the first-mentioned judge or clerk.

Application

(4) Subsections 561\(6\) and \(7\), or subsections 561.1\(8\) and \(9\), as the case may be, apply to a re-election made under subsection (3).

Trial

Indictment

566 (1) The trial of an accused for an indictable offence, other than a trial before a provincial court judge, shall be on an indictment in writing setting forth the offence with which he is charged.

Preferring indictment

(2) Where an accused elects under section 536 or re-elects under section 561 to be tried by a judge without a jury, an indictment in Form 4 may be preferred.

What counts may be included and who may prefer indictment

(3) Section 574 and subsection 576\(1\) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to the preferring of an indictment pursuant to subsection (2).

Indictment — Nunavut

566.1 (1) The trial of an accused for an indictable offence, other than an indictable offence referred to in section 553 or an offence in respect of which the accused has elected or re-elected to be tried by a judge without a jury and in respect of which no party has requested a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536.1\(3\) or was not entitled to make such a request under that subsection, must be on an indictment in writing setting out the offence with which the accused is charged.

Preferring indictment — Nunavut

(2) If an accused elects under section 536.1 or re-elects under section 561.1 to be tried by a judge without a jury and one of the parties requests a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536.1\(3\), an indictment in Form 4 may be preferred.

What counts may be included and who may prefer indictment — Nunavut

(3) Section 574 and subsection 576\(1\) apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, to the preferring of an indictment under subsection (2).

Application to Nunavut

(4) This section, and not section 566, applies in respect of criminal proceedings in Nunavut.

Mode of trial if two or more accused — Nunavut

567.1 (1) Despite any other provision of this Part, if two or more persons are jointly charged in an information, unless all of them elect or re-elect or are deemed to have elected the same mode of trial, the justice of the peace or judge may decline to record any election, re-election or deemed election for trial by a judge without a jury.

Application to Nunavut

(2) This section, and not section 567, applies in respect of criminal proceedings in Nunavut.

Attorney General may require trial by jury

568 Even if an accused elects under section 536 or re-elects under section 561 or subsection 565\(2\) to be tried by a judge or provincial court judge, as the case may be, the Attorney General may require the accused to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury unless the alleged offence is one that is punishable with imprisonment for five years or less. If the Attorney General so requires, a judge or provincial court judge has no jurisdiction to try the accused under this Part and a preliminary inquiry must be held if requested under subsection 536\(4\), unless one has already been held or the re-election was made under subsection 565(2).

Attorney General may require trial by jury — Nunavut

569 (1) Even if an accused elects under section 536.1 or re-elects under section 561.1 or subsection 565\(2\) to be tried by a judge without a jury, the Attorney General may require the accused to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury unless the alleged offence is one that is punishable with imprisonment for five years or less. If the Attorney General so requires, a judge has no jurisdiction to try the accused under this Part and a preliminary inquiry must be held if requested under subsection 536.1\(3\), unless one has already been held or the re-election was made under subsection 565(2).

Application to Nunavut

(2) This section, and not section 568, applies in respect of criminal proceedings in Nunavut.

Record of conviction or order

570 (1) If an accused who is tried under this Part is determined by a judge or provincial court judge to be guilty of an offence on acceptance of a plea of guilty or on a finding of guilt, the judge or provincial court judge, as the case may be, shall endorse the information accordingly and shall sentence the accused or otherwise deal with the accused in the manner authorized by law and, on request by the accused, the prosecutor, a peace officer or any other person, a conviction in Form 35 and a certified copy of it, or an order in Form 36 and a certified copy of it, shall be drawn up and the certified copy shall be delivered to the person making the request.

Acquittal and record of acquittal

(2) If an accused who is tried under this Part is found not guilty of an offence with which the accused is charged, the judge or provincial court judge, as the case may be, shall immediately acquit the accused in respect of that offence, an order in Form 37 shall be drawn up and, on request, a certified copy shall be drawn up and delivered to the accused.

Transmission of record

(3) Where an accused elects to be tried by a provincial court judge under this Part, the provincial court judge shall transmit the written charge, the memorandum of adjudication and the conviction, if any, into such custody as the Attorney General may direct.

Proof of conviction, order or acquittal

(4) A copy of a conviction in Form 35 or of an order in Form 36 or 37, certified by the judge or by the clerk or other proper officer of the court, or by the provincial court judge, as the case may be, or proved to be a true copy, is, on proof of the identity of the person to whom the conviction or order relates, sufficient evidence in any legal proceedings to prove the conviction of that person or the making of the order against that person or his acquittal, as the case may be, for the offence mentioned in the copy of the conviction or order.

Warrant of committal

(5) If an accused other than an organization is convicted, the judge or provincial court judge, as the case may be, shall issue a warrant of committal in Form 21, and section 528 applies in respect of a warrant of committal issued under this subsection.

Admissibility of certified copy

(6) If a warrant of committal is signed by a clerk of a court, a copy of the warrant of committal, certified by the clerk, is admissible in evidence in any proceeding.

Application of Parts XVI, XVIII, XX and XXIII

572 The provisions of Part XVI, the provisions of Part XVIII relating to transmission of the record by a provincial court judge where he holds a preliminary inquiry, and the provisions of Parts XX and XXIII, in so far as they are not inconsistent with this Part, apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to proceedings under this Part.

PART XIX.1

Nunavut Court of Justice

Nunavut Court of Justice

573 (1) The powers to be exercised and the duties and functions to be performed under this Act by a court of criminal jurisdiction, a summary conviction court, a judge, a provincial court judge, a justice or a justice of the peace may be exercised or performed by a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice.

Status when exercising power

(2) A power exercised or a duty or function performed by a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice under subsection (1) is exercised or performed by that judge as a judge of a superior court.

Interpretation

(3) Subsection (2) does not authorize a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice who is presiding at a preliminary inquiry to grant a remedy under section 24 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 573; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 113; 1999, c. 3, s. 50.

Application for review — Nunavut

573.1 (1) An application for review may be made by the Attorney General or the accused, or by any person directly affected by the decision or order, to a judge of the Court of Appeal of Nunavut in respect of a decision or order of a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice

- (a) relating to a warrant or summons;
- (b) relating to the conduct of a preliminary inquiry, including an order under subsection 548\(1\);
- (c) relating to a subpoena;
- (d) relating to the publication or broadcasting of information or access to the court room for all or part of the proceedings;
- (e) to refuse to quash an information or indictment; or
- (f) relating to the detention, disposal or forfeiture of any thing seized under a warrant or order.

Limitation

(2) A decision or order may not be reviewed under this section if

- (a) the decision or order is of a kind that could only be made in a province or a territory other than Nunavut by a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552; or
- (b) another statutory right of review is available.

Grounds of review

(3) The judge of the Court of Appeal of Nunavut may grant relief under subsection (4) only if the judge is satisfied that

(a) in the case of any decision or order mentioned in subsection (1),

(i) the judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice failed to observe a principle of natural justice or failed or refused to exercise the judge's jurisdiction, or

(ii) the decision or order was made as a result of an irrelevant consideration or for an improper purpose;

(b) in the case of a decision or order mentioned in paragraph (1)(a), that

(i) the judge failed to comply with a statutory requirement for the making of the decision or order,

(ii) the decision or order was made in the absence of any evidence that a statutory requirement for the making of the decision or order was met,

(iii) the decision or order was made as a result of reckless disregard for the truth, fraud, intentional misrepresentation of material facts or intentional omission to state material facts,

(iv) the warrant is so vague or lacking in particularity that it authorizes an unreasonable search, or

(v) the warrant lacks a material term or condition that is required by law;

(c) in the case of a decision or order mentioned in paragraph (1)(b), that the judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice

(i) failed to follow a mandatory provision of this Act relating to the conduct of a preliminary inquiry,

(ii) ordered the accused to stand trial when there was no evidence adduced on which a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could convict, or

(iii) discharged the accused when there was some evidence adduced on which a properly instructed jury acting reasonably could convict;

(d) in the case of a decision or order mentioned in paragraph (1)(c) or (d), that the judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice erred in law;

(e) in the case of a decision or order mentioned in paragraph (1)(e), that

(i) the information or indictment failed to give the accused notice of the charge,

(ii) the judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice did not have jurisdiction to try the offence, or

(iii) the provision creating the offence alleged to have been committed by the accused is unconstitutional; or

(f) in the case of a decision or order mentioned in paragraph (1)(f), that

(i) the judge failed to comply with a statutory requirement for the making of the decision or order,

(ii) the decision or order was made in the absence of any evidence that a statutory requirement for the making of the decision or order was met, or

(iii) the decision or order was made as a result of reckless disregard for the truth, fraud, intentional misrepresentation of material facts or intentional omission to state material facts.

Powers of judge

(4) On the hearing of the application for review, the judge of the Court of Appeal of Nunavut may do one or more of the following:

(a) order a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice to do any act or thing that the judge or any other judge of that court failed or refused to do or has delayed in doing;

(b) prohibit or restrain a decision, order or proceeding of a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice;

(c) declare invalid or unlawful, quash or set aside, in whole or in part, a decision, order or proceeding of a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice;

(d) refer back for determination in accordance with any directions that the judge considers to be appropriate, a decision, order or proceeding of a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice;

(e) grant any remedy under subsection 24\(1\) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms;

(f) refuse to grant any relief if the judge is of the opinion that no substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice has occurred or that the subject-matter of the application should be determined at trial or on appeal; and

(g) dismiss the application.

Interim orders

(5) If an application for review is made, a judge of the Court of Appeal of Nunavut may make any interim order that the judge considers appropriate pending the final disposition of the application for review.

Rules

(6) A person who proposes to make an application for review shall do so in the manner and within the period that may be directed by rules of court, except that a judge of the Court of Appeal of Nunavut may at any time extend any period specified in the rules.

Appeal

(7) An appeal lies to the Court of Appeal of Nunavut against a decision or order made under subsection (4). The provisions of Part XXI apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, to the appeal.

Habeas corpus

573.2 (1) Habeas corpus proceedings may be brought before a judge of the Court of Appeal of Nunavut in respect of an order made or warrant issued by a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice, except where

- (a) the order or warrant is of a kind that could only be made or issued in a province or a territory other than Nunavut by a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552; or
- (b) another statutory right of review or appeal is available.

Exception

(2) Despite subsection (1), habeas corpus proceedings may be brought before a judge of the Court of Appeal of Nunavut with respect to an order or warrant of a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice if the proceedings are brought to challenge the constitutionality of a person's detention or confinement.

Provisions apply

(3) Subsections 784\(2\) to \(6\) apply in respect of any proceedings brought under subsection (1) or (2).

1999, c. 3, s. 50.

PART XX

Procedure in Jury Trials and General Provisions

Preferring Indictment

Prosecutor may prefer indictment

574 (1) Subject to subsection (3), the prosecutor may, whether the charges were included in one information or not, prefer an indictment against any person who has been ordered to stand trial in respect of

- (a) any charge on which that person was ordered to stand trial; or
- (b) any charge founded on the facts disclosed by the evidence taken on the preliminary inquiry, in addition to or in substitution for any charge on which that person was ordered to stand trial.

Preferring indictment when no preliminary inquiry

(1.1) If a person has not requested a preliminary inquiry under subsection 536\(4\) or 536.1\(3\) into the charge or was not entitled to make such a request, the prosecutor may, subject to subsection (3), prefer an indictment against a person in respect of a charge set out in an information or informations, or any included charge, at any time after the person has made an election, re-election or deemed election on the information or informations.

Preferring single indictment

(1.2) If indictments may be preferred under both subsections (1) and (1.1), the prosecutor may prefer a single indictment in respect of one or more charges referred to in subsection (1) combined with one or more charges or included charges referred to in subsection (1.1).

Consent to inclusion of other charges

(2) An indictment preferred under any of subsections (1) to (1.2) may, if the accused consents, include a charge that is not referred to in those subsections, and the offence charged may be dealt with, tried and determined and punished in all respects as if it were an offence in respect of which the accused had been ordered to stand trial. However, if the offence was committed wholly in a province other than that in which the accused is before the court, subsection 478\(3\) applies.

Private prosecutor requires consent

(3) In a prosecution conducted by a prosecutor other than the Attorney General and in which the Attorney General does not intervene, an indictment may not be preferred under any of subsections (1) to (1.2) before a court without the written order of a judge of that court.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 574; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 113; 2002, c. 13, s. 45; 2019, c. 25, s. 263.

575 [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 113]

Indictment

576 (1) Except as provided in this Act, no indictment shall be preferred.

Criminal information and bill of indictment

(2) No criminal information shall be laid or granted and no bill of indictment shall be preferred before a grand jury.

Coroner's inquisition

(3) No person shall be tried on a coroner's inquisition.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 576; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 114.

Direct indictments

577 Despite section 574, an indictment may be preferred even if the accused has not been given the opportunity to request a preliminary inquiry, a preliminary inquiry has been commenced but not concluded or a preliminary inquiry has been held and the accused has been discharged, if

(a) in the case of a prosecution conducted by the Attorney General or one in which the Attorney General intervenes, the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General is filed in court; or

(b) in any other case, a judge of the court so orders.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 577; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 115, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 18(F); 2002, c. 13, s. 46.

Summons or warrant

578 (1) Where notice of the recommencement of proceedings has been given pursuant to subsection 579\(2\) or an indictment has been filed with the court before which the proceedings are to commence or recommence, the court, if it considers it necessary, may issue

(a) a summons addressed to, or

(b) a warrant for the arrest of, the accused or defendant, as the case may be, to compel him to attend before the court to answer the charge described in the indictment.

Part XVI to apply

(2) The provisions of Part XVI apply with such modifications as the circumstances require where a summons or warrant is issued under subsection (1).

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 578; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 116.

Attorney General may direct stay

579 (1) The Attorney General or counsel instructed by the Attorney General for that purpose may, at any time after any proceedings in relation to an accused or a defendant are commenced and before judgment, direct the clerk or other proper officer of the court to make an entry on the record that the proceedings are stayed by the Attorney General's or counsel's direction, as the case may be, and the entry shall then be made, at which time the proceedings shall be stayed accordingly and any undertaking or release order relating to the proceedings is vacated.

Recommencement of proceedings

(2) Proceedings stayed in accordance with subsection (1) may be recommenced, without laying a new information or preferring a new indictment, as the case may be, by the Attorney General or counsel instructed by him for that purpose giving notice of the recommencement to the clerk of the court in which the stay of the proceedings was entered, but where no such notice is given within one year after the entry of the stay of proceedings, or before the expiration of the time within which the proceedings could have been commenced, whichever is the earlier, the proceedings shall be deemed never to have been commenced.

Instruction to stay

579.001 (1) The Attorney General or counsel instructed by him or her for that purpose shall, at any time after proceedings in relation to an act or omission of a preclearance officer, as defined in section 5 of the Preclearance Act, 2016, are commenced and before judgment, direct the clerk or other proper officer of the court to make an entry on the record that the proceedings are stayed by direction of the Attorney General if the Government of the United States has provided notice of the exercise of primary criminal jurisdiction under paragraph 14 of Article X of the Agreement.

Stay

(2) The clerk or other officer of the court shall make the entry immediately after being so directed, and on the entry being made the proceedings are stayed and any recognizance relating to the proceedings is vacated.

Recommencement

(3) The proceedings may be recommenced without laying a new information or preferring a new indictment, if the Attorney General or counsel instructed by him or her gives notice to the clerk or other officer of the court that

(a) the Government of the United States has provided notice of waiver under paragraph 15 of Article X of the Agreement; or

(b) the Government of the United States has declined, or is unable, to prosecute the accused and the accused has returned to Canada.

Proceedings deemed never commenced

(4) However, if the Attorney General or counsel does not give notice under subsection (3) on or before the first anniversary of the day on which the stay of proceedings was entered, the proceedings are deemed never to have been commenced.

Definition of Agreement

(5) In this section, Agreement means the Agreement on Land, Rail, Marine, and Air Transport Preclearance between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America, done at Washington on March 16, 2015.

2017, c. 27, s. 62.

When Attorney General does not stay proceedings

579.01 If the Attorney General intervenes in proceedings and does not stay them under section 579, he or she may, without conducting the proceedings, call witnesses, examine and cross-examine witnesses, present evidence and make submissions.

2002, c. 13, s. 47.

Intervention by Attorney General of Canada or Director of Public Prosecutions

579.1 (1) The Attorney General of Canada or the Director of Public Prosecutions appointed under subsection 3\(1\) of the Director of Public Prosecutions Act, or counsel instructed by him or her for that purpose, may intervene in proceedings in the following circumstances:

- (a) the proceedings are in respect of an offence for which he or she has the power to commence or to conduct a proceeding;
- (b) the proceedings have not been instituted by an Attorney General;
- (c) judgment has not been rendered; and
- (d) the Attorney General of the province in which the proceedings are taken has not intervened.

Sections 579 and 579.01 to apply

(2) Sections 579 and 579.01 apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, to proceedings in which the Attorney General of Canada or the Director of Public Prosecutions intervenes under this section.

1994, c. 44, s. 60; 2019, c. 25, s. 265.

Form of indictment

580 An indictment is sufficient if it is on paper and is in Form 4.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 580; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 117.

General Provisions respecting Counts

Substance of offence

581 (1) Each count in an indictment shall in general apply to a single transaction and shall contain in substance a statement that the accused or defendant committed an offence therein specified.

Form of statement

(2) The statement referred to in subsection (1) may be

- (a) in popular language without technical averments or allegations of matters that are not essential to be proved;
- (b) in the words of the enactment that describes the offence or declares the matters charged to be an indictable offence; or
- (c) in words that are sufficient to give to the accused notice of the offence with which he is charged.

Details of circumstances

(3) A count shall contain sufficient detail of the circumstances of the alleged offence to give to the accused reasonable information with respect to the act or omission to be proved against him and to identify the transaction referred to, but otherwise the absence or insufficiency of details does not vitiate the count.

Indictment for treason

(4) If an accused is charged with an offence under section 47 or sections 50 to 53, every overt act that is to be relied on shall be stated in the indictment.

Reference to section

(5) A count may refer to any section, subsection, paragraph or subparagraph of the enactment that creates the offence charged, and for the purpose of determining whether a count is sufficient, consideration shall be given to any such reference.

General provisions not restricted

(6) Nothing in this Part relating to matters that do not render a count insufficient shall be deemed to restrict or limit the application of this section.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 581; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 118; 2018, c. 29, s. 63.

High treason and first degree murder

582 No person shall be convicted for the offence of high treason or first degree murder unless in the indictment charging the offence he is specifically charged with that offence.

Certain omissions not grounds for objection

583 No count in an indictment is insufficient by reason of the absence of details where, in the opinion of the court, the count otherwise fulfils the requirements of section 581 and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, no count in an indictment is insufficient by reason only that

- (a) it does not name the person injured or intended or attempted to be injured;
- (b) it does not name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count;
- (c) it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud;
- (d) it does not set out any writing that is the subject of the charge;
- (e) it does not set out the words used where words that are alleged to have been used are the subject of the charge;
- (f) it does not specify the means by which the alleged offence was committed;
- (g) it does not name or describe with precision any person, place or thing; or
- (h) it does not, where the consent of a person, official or authority is required before proceedings may be instituted for an offence, state that the consent has been obtained.

Special Provisions respecting Counts

Sufficiency of count charging libel

584 (1) No count for publishing a seditious or defamatory libel, or for selling or exhibiting an obscene book, pamphlet, newspaper or other written matter, is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out the words that are alleged to be libellous or the writing that is alleged to be obscene.

Specifying sense

(2) A count for publishing a libel may charge that the published matter was written in a sense that by innuendo made the publication thereof criminal, and may specify that sense without any introductory assertion to show how the matter was written in that sense.

Proof

(3) It is sufficient, on the trial of a count for publishing a libel, to prove that the matter published was libellous, with or without innuendo.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 584; 2018, c. 29, s. 64.

Sufficiency of count charging perjury, etc.

585 No count that charges

- (a) perjury,
- (b) the making of a false oath or a false statement,
- (c) fabricating evidence, or
- (d) procuring the commission of an offence mentioned in paragraph (a), (b) or (c), is insufficient by reason only that it does not state the nature of the authority of the tribunal before which the oath or statement was taken or made, or the subject of the inquiry, or the words used or the evidence fabricated, or that it does not expressly negative the truth of the words used.

Sufficiency of count relating to fraud

586 No count that alleges false pretences, fraud or any attempt or conspiracy by fraudulent means is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the false pretence, fraud or fraudulent means.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 515.

Particulars

What may be ordered

587 (1) A court may, where it is satisfied that it is necessary for a fair trial, order the prosecutor to furnish particulars and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, may order the prosecutor to furnish particulars

- (a) of what is relied on in support of a charge of perjury, the making of a false oath or a false statement, fabricating evidence or counselling the commission of any of those offences;
- (b) of any false pretence or fraud that is alleged;
- (c) of any alleged attempt or conspiracy by fraudulent means;
- (d) setting out the passages in a book, pamphlet, newspaper or other printing or writing that are relied on in support of a charge of selling or exhibiting an obscene book, pamphlet, newspaper, printing or writing;
- (e) further describing any writing or words that are the subject of a charge;
- (f) further describing the means by which an offence is alleged to have been committed; or
- (g) further describing a person, place or thing referred to in an indictment.

Regard to evidence

(2) For the purpose of determining whether or not a particular is required, the court may give consideration to any evidence that has been taken.

Particular

- (3) Where a particular is delivered pursuant to this section,
- (a) a copy shall be given without charge to the accused or his counsel;
 - (b) the particular shall be entered in the record; and
 - (c) the trial shall proceed in all respects as if the indictment had been amended to conform with the particular.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 587; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 7.

Ownership of Property

Ownership

588 The real and personal property of which a person has, by law, the management, control or custody shall, for the purposes of an indictment or proceeding against any other person for an offence committed on or in respect of the property, be deemed to be the property of the person who has the management, control or custody of it.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 517.

Joinder or Severance of Counts

Count for murder

589 No count that charges an indictable offence other than murder shall be joined in an indictment to a count that charges murder unless

(a) the count that charges the offence other than murder arises out of the same transaction as a count that charges murder; or

(b) the accused signifies consent to the joinder of the counts.

Offences may be charged in the alternative

590 (1) A count is not objectionable by reason only that

(a) it charges in the alternative several different matters, acts or omissions that are stated in the alternative in an enactment that describes as an indictable offence the matters, acts or omissions charged in the count; or

(b) it is double or multifarious.

Application to amend or divide counts

(2) An accused may at any stage of his trial apply to the court to amend or to divide a count that

(a) charges in the alternative different matters, acts or omissions that are stated in the alternative in the enactment that describes the offence or declares that the matters, acts or omissions charged are an indictable offence, or on the ground that, as framed, it embarrasses him in his defence.

(b) is double or multifarious,

Order

(3) The court may, where it is satisfied that the ends of justice require it, order that a count be amended or divided into two or more counts, and thereupon a formal commencement may be inserted before each of the counts into which it is divided.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 519.

Joinder of counts

591 (1) Subject to section 589, any number of counts for any number of offences may be joined in the same indictment, but the counts shall be distinguished in the manner shown in Form 4.

Each count separate

(2) Where there is more than one count in an indictment, each count may be treated as a separate indictment.

Severance of accused and counts

- (3) The court may, where it is satisfied that the interests of justice so require, order
- (a) that the accused or defendant be tried separately on one or more of the counts; and
 - (b) where there is more than one accused or defendant, that one or more of them be tried separately on one or more of the counts.

Order for severance

(4) An order under subsection (3) may be made before or during the trial but, if the order is made during the trial, the jury shall be discharged from giving a verdict on the counts

- (a) on which the trial does not proceed; or
- (b) in respect of the accused or defendant who has been granted a separate trial.

Delayed enforcement

(4.1) The court may make an order under subsection (3) that takes effect either at a specified later date or on the occurrence of a specified event if, taking into account, among other considerations, the need to ensure consistent decisions, it is satisfied that it is in the interests of justice to do so.

Decisions binding on parties

(4.2) Unless the court is satisfied that it would not be in the interests of justice, the decisions relating to the disclosure or admissibility of evidence or the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms that are made before any order issued under subsection (3) takes effect continue to bind the parties if the decisions are made — or could have been made — before the stage at which the evidence on the merits is presented.

Subsequent procedure

(5) The counts in respect of which a jury is discharged pursuant to paragraph (4)(a) may subsequently be proceeded on in all respects as if they were contained in a separate indictment.

Idem

(6) Where an order is made in respect of an accused or defendant under paragraph (3) (b), the accused or defendant may be tried separately on the counts in relation to which the order was made as if they were contained in a separate indictment.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 591; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 119; 2011, c. 16, s. 5.

Joinder of Accused in Certain Cases

Accessories after the fact

592 Any one who is charged with being an accessory after the fact to any offence may be indicted, whether or not the principal or any other party to the offence has been indicted or convicted or is or is not amenable to justice.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 521.

Trial of persons jointly

593 (1) Any number of persons may be charged in the same indictment with an offence under section 354 or 355.4 or paragraph 356\(1\)\(b\), even though

(a) the property was had in possession at different times; or

(b) the person by whom the property was obtained

(i) is not indicted with them, or

(ii) is not in custody or is not amenable to justice.

Conviction of one or more

(2) Where, pursuant to subsection (1), two or more persons are charged in the same indictment with an offence referred to in that subsection, any one or more of those persons who separately committed the offence in respect of the property or any part of it may be convicted.

594 to 596 [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 120]

Proceedings when Person Indicted is at Large

Bench warrant

597 (1) Where an indictment has been preferred against a person who is at large, and that person does not appear or remain in attendance for his trial, the court before which the accused should have appeared or remained in attendance may issue a warrant in Form 7 for his arrest.

Execution

(2) A warrant issued under subsection (1) may be executed anywhere in Canada.

Interim release

(3) If an accused is arrested under a warrant issued under subsection (1), a judge of the court that issued the warrant may make a release order referred to in section 515.

Discretion to postpone execution

(4) A judge who issues a warrant may specify in the warrant the period before which the warrant shall not be executed, to allow the accused to appear voluntarily before a judge having jurisdiction in the territorial division in which the warrant was issued.

Deemed execution of warrant

(5) Where the accused appears voluntarily for the offence in respect of which the accused is charged, the warrant is deemed to be executed.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 597; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 121; 1997, c. 18, s. 68; 2019, c. 25, s. 266.

Election deemed to be waived

598 (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, where a person to whom subsection 597\(1\) applies has elected or is deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury and, at the time he failed to appear or to remain in attendance for his trial, he had not re-elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge without a jury or a provincial court judge without a jury, he shall not be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury unless

(a) he establishes to the satisfaction of a judge of the court in which he is indicted that there was a legitimate excuse for his failure to appear or remain in attendance for his trial; or

(b) the Attorney General requires pursuant to section 568 or 569 that the accused be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury.

Election deemed to be waived

(2) An accused who, under subsection (1), may not be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury is deemed to have elected under section 536 or 536.1 to be tried without a jury by a judge of the court where the accused was indicted and section 561 or 561.1, as the case may be, does not apply in respect of the accused.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 598; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 122, 185(F), 203(E); 1999, c. 3, s. 51; 2002, c. 13, s. 48\(E\).

Change of Venue

Reasons for change of venue

599 (1) A court before which an accused is or may be indicted, at any term or sittings thereof, or a judge who may hold or sit in that court, may at any time before or after an indictment is found, on the application of the prosecutor or the accused, order the trial to be held in a territorial division in the same province other than that in which the offence would otherwise be tried if

(a) it appears expedient to the ends of justice, including

(i) to promote a fair and efficient trial, and

(ii) to ensure the safety and security of a victim or witness or to protect their interests and those of society; or

(b) a competent authority has directed that a jury is not to be summoned at the time appointed in a territorial division where the trial would otherwise by law be held.

(2) [\[Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 1 \(4th Supp.\), s. 16\]](#)

Conditions respecting expense

(3) The court or judge may, in an order made on an application by the prosecutor under subsection (1), prescribe conditions that he thinks proper with respect to the payment of additional expenses caused to the accused as a result of the change of venue.

Transmission of record

(4) Where an order is made under subsection (1), the officer who has custody of the indictment, if any, and the writings and exhibits relating to the prosecution, shall transmit them forthwith to the clerk of the court before which the trial is ordered to be held, and all proceedings in the case shall be held or, if previously commenced, shall be continued in that court.

Idem

(5) Where the writings and exhibits referred to in subsection (4) have not been returned to the court in which the trial was to be held at the time an order is made to change the place of trial, the person who obtains the order shall serve a true copy thereof on the person in whose custody they are and that person shall thereupon transmit them to the clerk of the court before which the trial is to be held.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 599; R.S., 1985, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 16; 2019, c. 25, s. 267.

Order is authority to remove prisoner

600 An order that is made under section 599 is sufficient warrant, justification and authority to all sheriffs, keepers of prisons and peace officers for the removal, disposal and reception of an accused in accordance with the terms of the order, and the sheriff may appoint and authorize any peace officer to convey the accused to a prison in the territorial division in which the trial is ordered to be held.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 528.

Amendment

Amending defective indictment or count

601 (1) An objection to an indictment preferred under this Part or to a count in an indictment, for a defect apparent on its face, shall be taken by motion to quash the indictment or count before the accused enters a plea, and, after the accused has entered a plea, only by leave of the court before which the proceedings take place. The court before which an objection is taken under this section may, if it considers it necessary, order the indictment or count to be amended to cure the defect.

Amendment where variance

(2) Subject to this section, a court may, on the trial of an indictment, amend the indictment or a count therein or a particular that is furnished under section 587, to make the indictment, count or particular conform to the evidence, where there is a variance between the evidence and

- (a) a count in the indictment as preferred; or
- (b) a count in the indictment
 - (i) as amended, or
 - (ii) as it would have been if it had been amended in conformity with any particular that has been furnished pursuant to section 587.

Amending indictment

(3) Subject to this section, a court shall, at any stage of the proceedings, amend the indictment or a count therein as may be necessary where it appears

- (a) that the indictment has been preferred under a particular Act of Parliament instead of another Act of Parliament;
- (b) that the indictment or a count thereof
 - (i) fails to state or states defectively anything that is requisite to constitute the offence,
 - (ii) does not negative an exception that should be negated,
 - (iii) is in any way defective in substance, and the matters to be alleged in the proposed amendment are disclosed by the evidence taken on the preliminary inquiry or on the trial; or

- (c) that the indictment or a count thereof is in any way defective in form.

Matters to be considered by the court

(4) The court shall, in considering whether or not an amendment should be made to the indictment or a count in it, consider

- (a) the matters disclosed by the evidence taken on the preliminary inquiry;
- (b) the evidence taken on the trial, if any;
- (c) the circumstances of the case;
- (d) whether the accused has been misled or prejudiced in his defence by any variance, error or omission mentioned in subsection (2) or (3); and
- (e) whether, having regard to the merits of the case, the proposed amendment can be made without injustice being done.

Variance not material

(4.1) A variance between the indictment or a count therein and the evidence taken is not material with respect to

- (a) the time when the offence is alleged to have been committed, if it is proved that the indictment was preferred within the prescribed period of limitation, if any; or

(b) the place where the subject-matter of the proceedings is alleged to have arisen, if it is proved that it arose within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.

Adjournment if accused prejudiced

(5) Where, in the opinion of the court, the accused has been misled or prejudiced in his defence by a variance, error or omission in an indictment or a count therein, the court may, if it is of the opinion that the misleading or prejudice may be removed by an adjournment, adjourn the proceedings to a specified day or sittings of the court and may make such an order with respect to the payment of costs resulting from the necessity for amendment as it considers desirable.

Question of law

(6) The question whether an order to amend an indictment or a count thereof should be granted or refused is a question of law.

Endorsing indictment

(7) An order to amend an indictment or a count therein shall be endorsed on the indictment as part of the record and the proceedings shall continue as if the indictment or count had been originally preferred as amended.

Mistakes not material

(8) A mistake in the heading of an indictment shall be corrected as soon as it is discovered but, whether corrected or not, is not material.

Limitation

(9) The authority of a court to amend indictments does not authorize the court to add to the overt acts stated in an indictment for high treason or treason or for an offence against any provision in sections 50, 51 and 53.

Definition of court

(10) In this section, court means a court, judge, justice or provincial court judge acting in summary conviction proceedings or in proceedings on indictment.

Application

(11) This section applies to all proceedings, including preliminary inquiries, with such modifications as the circumstances require.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 601; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 123; 1999, c. 5, s. 23(E); 2011, c. 16, s. 6; 2018, c. 29, s. 65.

602 [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 124]

Inspection and Copies of Documents

Right of accused

603 An accused is entitled, after he has been ordered to stand trial or at his trial,

(a) to inspect without charge the indictment, his own statement, the evidence and the exhibits, if any; and

(b) to receive, on payment of a reasonable fee determined in accordance with a tariff of fees fixed or approved by the Attorney General of the province, a copy

(i) of the evidence,

(ii) of his own statement, if any, and

(iii) of the indictment;

but the trial shall not be postponed to enable the accused to secure copies unless the court is satisfied that the failure of the accused to secure them before the trial is not attributable to lack of diligence on the part of the accused.

604 [Repealed, 1997, c. 18, s. 69]

Release of exhibits for testing

605 (1) A judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a court of criminal jurisdiction may, on summary application on behalf of the accused or the prosecutor, after three days notice to the accused or prosecutor, as the case may be, order the release of any exhibit for the purpose of a scientific or other test or examination, subject to such terms as appear to be necessary or desirable to ensure the safeguarding of the exhibit and its preservation for use at the trial.

Disobeying orders

(2) Every one who fails to comply with the terms of an order made under subsection (1) is guilty of contempt of court and may be dealt with summarily by the judge or provincial court judge who made the order or before whom the trial of the accused takes place.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 605; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203.

Pleas

Pleas permitted

606 (1) An accused who is called on to plead may plead guilty or not guilty, or the special pleas authorized by this Part and no others.

Conditions for accepting guilty plea

(1.1) A court may accept a plea of guilty only if it is satisfied that

(a) the accused is making the plea voluntarily;

(b) the accused understands

(i) that the plea is an admission of the essential elements of the offence,

- (ii) the nature and consequences of the plea, and
- (iii) that the court is not bound by any agreement made between the accused and the prosecutor; and
- (c) the facts support the charge.

Validity of plea

(1.2) The failure of the court to fully inquire whether the conditions set out in subsection (1.1) are met does not affect the validity of the plea.

Refusal to plead

(2) Where an accused refuses to plead or does not answer directly, the court shall order the clerk of the court to enter a plea of not guilty.

Allowing time

(3) An accused is not entitled as of right to have his trial postponed but the court may, if it considers that the accused should be allowed further time to plead, move to quash or prepare for his defence or for any other reason, adjourn the trial to a later time in the session or sittings of the court, or to the next of any subsequent session or sittings of the court, on such terms as the court considers proper.

Included or other offence

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, where an accused or defendant pleads not guilty of the offence charged but guilty of any other offence arising out of the same transaction, whether or not it is an included offence, the court may, with the consent of the prosecutor, accept that plea of guilty and, if the plea is accepted, the court shall find the accused or defendant not guilty of the offence charged and find him guilty of the offence in respect of which the plea of guilty was accepted and enter those findings in the record of the court.

Inquiry of court — murder and serious personal injury offences

(4.1) If the accused is charged with a serious personal injury offence, as that expression is defined in section 752, or with the offence of murder, and the accused and the prosecutor have entered into an agreement under which the accused will enter a plea of guilty of the offence charged — or a plea of not guilty of the offence charged but guilty of any other offence arising out of the same transaction, whether or not it is an included offence — the court shall, after accepting the plea of guilty, inquire of the prosecutor if reasonable steps were taken to inform the victims of the agreement.

Inquiry of court — certain indictable offences

(4.2) If the accused is charged with an offence, as defined in section 2 of the Canadian Victims Bill of Rights, that is an indictable offence for which the maximum punishment is imprisonment for five years or more, and that is not an offence referred to in subsection (4.1), and the accused and the prosecutor have entered into an agreement referred to in subsection (4.1), the court shall, after accepting the plea of guilty, inquire of the prosecutor whether any of the victims had advised the prosecutor of their desire to be informed if such an agreement were entered into, and, if so, whether reasonable steps were taken to inform that victim of the agreement.

Duty to inform

(4.3) If subsection (4.1) or (4.2) applies, and any victim was not informed of the agreement before the plea of guilty was accepted, the prosecutor shall, as soon as feasible, take reasonable steps to inform the victim of the agreement and the acceptance of the plea.

Validity of plea

(4.4) Neither the failure of the court to inquire of the prosecutor, nor the failure of the prosecutor to take reasonable steps to inform the victims of the agreement, affects the validity of the plea.

Special pleas

607 (1) An accused may plead the special pleas of

- (a) autrefois acquit;
- (b) autrefois convict;
- (c) pardon; and
- (d) an expungement order under the Expungement of Historically Unjust Convictions Act.

In case of libel

(2) An accused who is charged with defamatory libel may plead in accordance with sections 611 and 612.

Disposal

(3) The pleas of autrefois acquit, autrefois convict, pardon and an expungement order under the Expungement of Historically Unjust Convictions Act shall be disposed of by the judge without a jury before the accused is called on to plead further.

Pleading over

(4) When the pleas referred to in subsection (3) are disposed of against the accused, he may plead guilty or not guilty.

Statement sufficient

- (5) Where an accused pleads autrefois acquit or autrefois convict, it is sufficient if he
- (a) states that he has been lawfully acquitted, convicted or discharged under subsection 730\(1\), as the case may be, of the offence charged in the count to which the plea relates; and
 - (b) indicates the time and place of the acquittal, conviction or discharge under subsection 730\(1\).

Exception — foreign trials in absentia

(6) A person who is alleged to have committed an act or omission outside Canada that is an offence in Canada by virtue of any of subsections 7\(2\) to \(3.1\) or \(3.7\), or an offence under the Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act, and in respect of which the person has been tried and convicted outside Canada, may not plead autrefois convict with respect to a count that charges that offence if

- (a) at the trial outside Canada the person was not present and was not represented by counsel acting under the person's instructions, and
- (b) the person was not punished in accordance with the sentence imposed on conviction in respect of the act or omission, notwithstanding that the person is deemed by virtue of subsection 7\(6\), or subsection 12\(1\) of the Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act, as the case may be, to have been tried and convicted in Canada in respect of the act or omission.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 607; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 126, c. 30 (3rd Supp.), s. 2, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 18(F); 1992, c. 1, s. 60(F); 1995, c. 22, s. 10; 2000, c. 24, s. 45; 2013, c. 13, s. 9; 2018, c. 11, s. 29.

Evidence of identity of charges

608 Where an issue on a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict is tried, the evidence and adjudication and the notes of the judge and official stenographer on the former trial and the record transmitted to the court pursuant to section 551 on the charge that is pending before that court are admissible in evidence to prove or to disprove the identity of the charges.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 536.

What determines identity

609 (1) Where an issue on a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict to a count is tried and it appears

- (a) that the matter on which the accused was given in charge on the former trial is the same in whole or in part as that on which it is proposed to give him in charge, and
- (b) that on the former trial, if all proper amendments had been made that might then have been made, he might have been convicted of all the offences of which he may be convicted on the count to which the plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict is pleaded, the judge shall give judgment discharging the accused in respect of that count.

Allowance of special plea in part

(2) The following provisions apply where an issue on a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict is tried:

(a) where it appears that the accused might on the former trial have been convicted of an offence of which he may be convicted on the count in issue, the judge shall direct that the accused shall not be found guilty of any offence of which he might have been convicted on the former trial; and

(b) where it appears that the accused may be convicted on the count in issue of an offence of which he could not have been convicted on the former trial, the accused shall plead guilty or not guilty with respect to that offence.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 537.

Circumstances of aggravation

610 (1) Where an indictment charges substantially the same offence as that charged in an indictment on which an accused was previously convicted or acquitted, but adds a statement of intention or circumstances of aggravation tending, if proved, to increase the punishment, the previous conviction or acquittal bars the subsequent indictment.

Effect of previous charge of murder or manslaughter

(2) A conviction or an acquittal on an indictment for murder bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as manslaughter or infanticide, and a conviction or acquittal on an indictment for manslaughter or infanticide bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as murder.

Previous charges of first degree murder

(3) A conviction or an acquittal on an indictment for first degree murder bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as second degree murder, and a conviction or acquittal on an indictment for second degree murder bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as first degree murder.

Effect of previous charge of infanticide or manslaughter

(4) A conviction or an acquittal on an indictment for infanticide bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as manslaughter, and a conviction or acquittal on an indictment for manslaughter bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as infanticide.

Libel, plea of justification

611 (1) An accused who is charged with publishing a defamatory libel may plead that the defamatory matter published by him was true, and that it was for the public benefit that the matter should have been published in the manner in which and at the time when it was published.

Where more than one sense alleged

(2) A plea that is made under subsection (1) may justify the defamatory matter in any sense in which it is specified in the count, or in the sense that the defamatory matter bears without being specified, or separate pleas justifying the defamatory matter in each sense may be pleaded separately to each count as if two libels had been charged in separate counts.

Plea in writing

(3) A plea that is made under subsection (1) shall be in writing and shall set out the particular facts by reason of which it is alleged to have been for the public good that the matter should have been published.

Reply

(4) The prosecutor may in his reply deny generally the truth of a plea that is made under this section.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 539.

Plea of justification necessary

612 (1) The truth of the matters charged in an alleged libel shall not be inquired into in the absence of a plea of justification under section 611 unless the accused is charged with publishing the libel knowing it to be false, in which case evidence of the truth may be given to negative the allegation that the accused knew that the libel was false.

Not guilty, in addition

(2) The accused may, in addition to a plea that is made under section 611, plead not guilty and the pleas shall be inquired into together.

Effect of plea on punishment

(3) Where a plea of justification is pleaded and the accused is convicted, the court may, in pronouncing sentence, consider whether the guilt of the accused is aggravated or mitigated by the plea.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 540.

Plea of not guilty

613 Any ground of defence for which a special plea is not provided by this Act may be relied on under the plea of not guilty.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 541.

614 to 619 [Repealed, 1991, c. 43, s. 3]

Organizations

Appearance by attorney

620 Every organization against which an indictment is filed shall appear and plead by counsel or agent.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 620; 1997, c. 18, s. 70; 2003, c. 21, s. 11.

Notice to organization

621 (1) The clerk of the court or the prosecutor may, where an indictment is filed against an organization, cause a notice of the indictment to be served on the organization.

Contents of notice

(2) A notice of an indictment referred to in subsection (1) shall set out the nature and purport of the indictment and advise that, unless the organization appears on the date set out in the notice or the date fixed under subsection 548\(2.1\), and enters a plea, a plea of not guilty will be entered for the accused by the court, and that the trial of the indictment will be proceeded with as though the organization had appeared and pleaded.

Procedure on default of appearance

622 Where an organization does not appear in accordance with the notice referred to in section 621, the presiding judge may, on proof of service of the notice, order the clerk of the court to enter a plea of not guilty on behalf of the organization, and the plea has the same force and effect as if the organization had appeared by its counsel or agent and pleaded that plea.

Trial of organization

623 Where an organization appears and pleads to an indictment or a plea of not guilty is entered by order of the court under section 622, the court shall proceed with the trial of the indictment and, where the organization is convicted, section 735 applies.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 623; 1995, c. 22, s. 10; 2003, c. 21, s. 11.

Record of Proceedings

How recorded

624 (1) It is sufficient, in making up the record of a conviction or acquittal on an indictment, to copy the indictment and the plea that was pleaded, without a formal caption or heading.

Record of proceedings

(2) The court shall keep a record of every arraignment and of proceedings subsequent to arraignment.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 552.

Form of record in case of amendment

625 Where it is necessary to draw up a formal record in proceedings in which the indictment has been amended, the record shall be drawn up in the form in which the indictment remained after the amendment, without reference to the fact that the indictment was amended.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 553.

Pre-hearing Conference

Pre-hearing conference

625.1 (1) Subject to subsection (2), on application by the prosecutor or the accused or on its own motion, the court, or a judge of the court, before which, or the judge, provincial court judge or justice before whom, any proceedings are to be held may order that a conference between the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused, to be presided over by the court, judge, provincial court judge or justice, be held prior to the proceedings to consider the matters that, to promote a fair and expeditious hearing, would be better decided before the start of the proceedings, and other similar matters, and to make arrangements for decisions on those matters.

Mandatory pre-trial hearing for jury trials

(2) In any case to be tried with a jury, a judge of the court before which the accused is to be tried shall, before the trial, order that a conference between the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused, to be presided over by a judge of that court, be held in accordance with the rules of court made under sections 482 and 482.1 to consider any matters that would promote a fair and expeditious trial.

R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 127, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 45(F); 1997, c. 18, s. 73; 2002, c. 13, s. 50.

Juries

Qualification of jurors

626 (1) A person who is qualified as a juror according to, and summoned as a juror in accordance with, the laws of a province is qualified to serve as a juror in criminal proceedings in that province.

No disqualification based on sex

(2) Notwithstanding any law of a province referred to in subsection (1), no person may be disqualified, exempted or excused from serving as a juror in criminal proceedings on the grounds of his or her sex.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 626; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 128.

Presiding judge

626.1 The judge before whom an accused is tried may be either the judge who presided over matters pertaining to the selection of a jury before the commencement of a trial or another judge of the same court.

2002, c. 13, s. 51.

Support for juror with physical disability

627 The judge may permit a juror with a physical disability who is otherwise qualified to serve as a juror to have technical, personal, interpretative or other support services.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 627; R.S., 1985, c. 2 (1st Supp.), s. 1; 1998, c. 9, s. 4.

Challenging the Array

628 [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 129]

Challenging the jury panel

629 (1) The accused or the prosecutor may challenge the jury panel only on the ground of partiality, fraud or wilful misconduct on the part of the sheriff or other officer by whom the panel was returned.

In writing

(2) A challenge under subsection (1) shall be in writing and shall state that the person who returned the panel was partial or fraudulent or that he wilfully misconducted himself, as the case may be.

Form

(3) A challenge under this section may be in Form 40.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 629; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 130.

Trying ground of challenge

630 Where a challenge is made under section 629, the judge shall determine whether the alleged ground of challenge is true or not, and where he is satisfied that the alleged ground of challenge is true, he shall direct a new panel to be returned.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 559.

Empanelling Jury

Names of jurors on cards

631 (1) The name of each juror on a panel of jurors that has been returned, his number on the panel and his address shall be written on a separate card, and all the cards shall, as far as possible, be of equal size.

To be placed in box

(2) The sheriff or other officer who returns the panel shall deliver the cards referred to in subsection (1) to the clerk of the court who shall cause them to be placed together in a box to be provided for the purpose and to be thoroughly shaken together.

Alternate jurors

(2.1) If the judge considers it advisable in the interests of justice to have one or two alternate jurors, the judge shall so order before the clerk of the court draws out the cards under subsection (3) or (3.1).

Additional jurors

(2.2) If the judge considers it advisable in the interests of justice, he or she may order that 13 or 14 jurors, instead of 12, be sworn in accordance with this Part before the clerk of the court draws out the cards under subsection (3) or (3.1).

Cards to be drawn by clerk of court

(3) If the array of jurors is not challenged or the array of jurors is challenged but the judge does not direct a new panel to be returned, the clerk of the court shall, in open court, draw out one after another the cards referred to in subsection (1), call out the number on each card as it is drawn and confirm with the person who responds that he or she is the person whose name appears on the card drawn, until the number of persons who have answered is, in the opinion of the judge, sufficient to provide a full jury and any alternate jurors ordered by the judge after allowing for orders to excuse, challenges and directions to stand by.

Exception

(3.1) The court, or a judge of the court, before which the jury trial is to be held may, if the court or judge is satisfied that it is necessary for the proper administration of justice, order the clerk of the court to call out the name and the number on each card.

Juror and other persons to be sworn

(4) The clerk of the court shall swear each member of the jury, and any alternate jurors, in the order in which his or her card was drawn and shall swear any other person providing technical, personal, interpretative or other support services to a juror with a physical disability.

Drawing additional cards if necessary

(5) If the number of persons who answer under subsection (3) or (3.1) is not sufficient to provide a full jury and the number of alternate jurors ordered by the judge, the clerk of the court shall proceed in accordance with subsections (3), (3.1) and (4) until 12 jurors — or 13 or 14 jurors, as the case may be, if the judge makes an order under subsection (2.2) — and any alternate jurors are sworn.

Ban on publication, limitation to access or use of information

(6) On application by the prosecutor or on its own motion, the court or judge before which a jury trial is to be held may, if the court or judge is satisfied that such an order is necessary for the proper administration of justice, make an order

(a) directing that the identity of a juror or any information that could disclose their identity shall not be published in any document or broadcast or transmitted in any way; or

(b) limiting access to or the use of that information.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 631; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 131; 1992, c. 41, s. 1; 1998, c. 9, s. 5; 2001, c. 32, ss. 38, 82; 2002, c. 13, s. 52; 2005, c. 32, s. 20; 2011, c. 16, s. 7.

Electronic or automated means

631.1 Any electronic or other automated means may be used to select jurors so long as the jurors would be randomly selected as required by the jury selection process described in subsections 631\(1\) to \(5\).

2022, c. 17, s. 38.

Excusing jurors

632 The judge may, at any time before the commencement of a trial, order that any juror be excused from jury service, whether or not the juror has been called pursuant to subsection 631\(3\) or \(3.1\) or any challenge has been made in relation to the juror, for reasons of

(a) personal interest in the matter to be tried;

(b) relationship with the judge presiding over the jury selection process, the judge before whom the accused is to be tried, the prosecutor, the accused, the counsel for the accused or a prospective witness; or

(c) personal hardship or any other reasonable cause that, in the opinion of the judge, warrants that the juror be excused.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 632; 1992, c. 41, s. 2; 2001, c. 32, s. 39; 2002, c. 13, s. 53.

Stand by 633 The judge may direct a juror who has been called under subsection 631\(3\) or \(3.1\) to stand by for reasons of personal hardship, maintaining public confidence in the administration of justice or any other reasonable cause.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 633; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 185(F); 1992, c. 41, s. 2; 2001, c. 32, s. 40; 2019, c. 25, s. 269.

634 [Repealed, 2019, c. 25, s. 269]

Order of challenges

635 (1) The accused shall be called on before the prosecutor is called on to declare whether the accused challenges the first juror for cause, and after that the prosecutor and the accused shall be called on alternately, in respect of each of the remaining jurors, to first make such a declaration.

Where there are joint trials

(2) Subsection (1) applies where two or more accused are to be tried together, but all of the accused shall exercise the challenges of the defence in turn, in the order in which their names appear in the indictment or in any other order agreed on by them,

(a) in respect of the first juror, before the prosecutor; and

(b) in respect of each of the remaining jurors, either before or after the prosecutor, in accordance with subsection (1).

636 and 637 [Repealed, 1992, c. 41, s. 2]

Challenge for cause

638 (1) A prosecutor or an accused is entitled to any number of challenges on the ground that

(a) the name of a juror does not appear on the panel, but no misnomer or misdescription is a ground of challenge where it appears to the court that the description given on the panel sufficiently designates the person referred to;

(b) a juror is not impartial;

(c) a juror has been convicted of an offence for which they were sentenced to a term of imprisonment of two years or more and for which no pardon or record suspension is in effect;

(d) a juror is not a Canadian citizen;

(e) a juror, even with the aid of technical, personal, interpretative or other support services provided to the juror under section 627, is physically unable to perform properly the duties of a juror; or

(f) a juror does not speak the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or the official language of Canada in which the accused can best give testimony or both official languages of Canada, where the accused is required by reason of an order under section 530 to be tried before a judge and jury who speak the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or the official language of Canada in which the accused can best give testimony or who speak both official languages of Canada, as the case may be.

No other ground

(2) No challenge for cause shall be allowed on a ground not mentioned in subsection (1).

(3) and (4) [Repealed, 1997, c. 18, s. 74]

(5) [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 31 (4th Supp.), s. 96]

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 638; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 132, c. 31 (4th Supp.), s. 96; 1997, c. 18, s. 74; 1998, c. 9, s. 6; 2019, c. 25, s. 271.

Challenge in writing

639 (1) Where a challenge is made on a ground mentioned in section 638, the court may, in its discretion, require the party that challenges to put the challenge in writing.

Form

(2) A challenge may be in Form 41.

Denial

(3) A challenge may be denied by the other party to the proceedings on the ground that it is not true.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 568.

Determination of challenge for cause

640 (1) If a challenge is made on a ground mentioned in section 638, the judge shall determine whether the alleged ground is true or not and, if the judge is satisfied that it is true, the juror shall not be sworn.

Exclusion order

(2) On the application of the accused or prosecutor or on the judge's own motion, the judge may order the exclusion of all jurors, sworn and unsworn, from the court room until it is determined whether the ground of challenge is true if the judge is of the opinion that the order is necessary to preserve the impartiality of the jurors.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 640; 2008, c. 18, s. 26; 2011, c. 16, s. 9; 2019, c. 25, s. 272.

Calling persons who have stood by 641 (1) If a full jury and any alternate jurors have not been sworn and no cards remain to be drawn, the persons who have been directed to stand by shall be called again in the order in which their cards were drawn and shall be sworn, unless excused by the judge or challenged by the accused or the prosecutor.

Other persons becoming available

(2) If, before a person is sworn as a juror under subsection (1), other persons in the panel become available, the prosecutor may require the cards of those persons to be put into and drawn from the box in accordance with section 631, and those persons shall be challenged, directed to stand by, excused or sworn, as the case may be, before the persons who were originally directed to stand by are called again.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 641; 1992, c. 41, s. 3; 2001, c. 32, s. 41; 2002, c. 13, s. 55; 2011, c. 16, s. 10.

Summoning other jurors when panel exhausted

642 (1) If a full jury and any alternate jurors considered advisable cannot be provided notwithstanding that the relevant provisions of this Part have been complied with, the court may, at the request of the prosecutor, order the sheriff or other proper officer to summon without delay as many persons, whether qualified jurors or not, as the court directs for the purpose of providing a full jury and alternate jurors.

Orally

(2) Jurors may be summoned under subsection (1) by word of mouth, if necessary.

Adding names to panel

(3) The names of the persons who are summoned under this section shall be added to the general panel for the purposes of the trial, and the same proceedings shall be taken with respect to calling and challenging those persons, excusing them and directing them to stand by as are provided in this Part with respect to the persons named in the original panel.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 642; 1992, c. 41, s. 4; 2002, c. 13, s. 56.

Substitution of alternate jurors

642.1 (1) Alternate jurors shall attend at the commencement of the presentation of the evidence on the merits and, if there is not a full jury present, shall replace any absent juror, in the order in which their cards were drawn under subsection 631\(3\).

Excusing of alternate jurors

(2) An alternate juror who is not required as a substitute shall be excused.

2002, c. 13, s. 57; 2011, c. 16, s. 11.

Who shall be the jury

643 (1) The 12, 13 or 14 jurors who are sworn in accordance with this Part and present at the commencement of the presentation of the evidence on the merits shall be the jury to hear the evidence on the merits.

Names of jurors

(1.1) The name of each juror, including alternate jurors, who is sworn shall be kept apart until the juror is excused or the jury gives its verdict or is discharged, at which time the name shall be returned to the box as often as occasion arises, as long as an issue remains to be tried before a jury.

Same jury may try another issue by consent

(2) The court may try an issue with the same jury in whole or in part that previously tried or was drawn to try another issue, without the jurors being sworn again, but if the prosecutor or the accused objects to any of the jurors or the court excuses any of the jurors, the court shall order those persons to withdraw and shall direct that the required number of cards to make up a full jury be drawn and, subject to the provisions of this Part relating to challenges, orders to excuse and directions to stand by, the persons whose cards are drawn shall be sworn.

Sections directory

(3) Failure to comply with the directions of this section or section 631, 635 or 641 does not affect the validity of a proceeding.

Discharge of juror

644 (1) Where in the course of a trial the judge is satisfied that a juror should not, by reason of illness or other reasonable cause, continue to act, the judge may discharge the juror.

Replacement of juror

(1.1) A judge may select another juror to take the place of a juror who by reason of illness or other reasonable cause cannot continue to act, if the jury has not yet begun to hear evidence, either by drawing a name from a panel of persons who were summoned to act as jurors and who are available at the court at the time of replacing the juror or by using the procedure referred to in section 642.

Trial may continue

(2) Where in the course of a trial a member of the jury dies or is discharged pursuant to subsection (1), the jury shall, unless the judge otherwise directs and if the number of jurors is not reduced below ten, be deemed to remain properly constituted for all purposes of the trial and the trial shall proceed and a verdict may be given accordingly.

Trial may continue without jury

(3) If in the course of a trial the number of jurors is reduced below 10, the judge may, with the consent of the parties, discharge the jurors, continue the trial without a jury and render a verdict.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 644; 1992, c. 41, s. 6; 1997, c. 18, s. 75; 2019, c. 25, s. 273.

Trial

Trial continuous

645 (1) The trial of an accused shall proceed continuously subject to adjournment by the court.

Adjournment

(2) A judge may adjourn a trial from time to time in the same sittings.

Formal adjournment unnecessary

(3) For the purpose of subsection (2), no formal adjournment of trial or entry thereof is required.

Questions reserved for decision

(4) A judge, in any case tried without a jury, may reserve final decision on any question raised at the trial, or any matter raised further to a pre-hearing conference, and the decision, when given, shall be deemed to have been given at the trial.

Questions reserved for decision in a trial with a jury

(5) In any case to be tried with a jury, the judge before whom an accused is or is to be tried has jurisdiction, before any juror on a panel of jurors is called pursuant to subsection 631\(3\) or \(3.1\) and in the absence of any such juror, to deal with any matter that would ordinarily or necessarily be dealt with in the absence of the jury after it has been sworn.

Taking evidence

646 On the trial of an accused for an indictable offence, the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecutor and the accused and the addresses of the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused by way of summing up shall be taken in accordance with the provisions of Part XVIII, other than subsections 540\(7\) to \(9\), relating to the taking of evidence at preliminary inquiries.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 646; 2002, c. 13, s. 59.

Separation of jurors

647 (1) The judge may, at any time before the jury retires to consider its verdict, permit the members of the jury to separate.

Keeping in charge

(2) Where permission to separate under subsection (1) cannot be given or is not given, the jury shall be kept under the charge of an officer of the court as the judge directs, and that officer shall prevent the jurors from communicating with anyone other than himself or another member of the jury without leave of the judge.

Non-compliance with subsection (2)

(3) Failure to comply with subsection (2) does not affect the validity of the proceedings.

Empanelling new jury in certain cases

(4) Where the fact that there has been a failure to comply with this section or section 648 is discovered before the verdict of the jury is returned, the judge may, if he considers that the failure to comply might lead to a miscarriage of justice, discharge the jury and

(a) direct that the accused be tried with a new jury during the same session or sittings of the court; or

(b) postpone the trial on such terms as justice may require.

Refreshment and accommodation

(5) The judge shall direct the sheriff to provide the jurors who are sworn with suitable and sufficient refreshment, food and lodging while they are together until they have given their verdict.

Restriction on publication

648 (1) After permission to separate is given to members of a jury under subsection 647(1), no information regarding any portion of the trial at which the jury is not present shall be published in any document or broadcast or transmitted in any way before the jury retires to consider its verdict.

Offence

(2) Every one who fails to comply with subsection (1) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) [Repealed, 2005, c. 32, s. 21]

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 648; 2005, c. 32, s. 21.

Disclosure of jury proceedings

649 (1) Every member of a jury, and every person providing technical, personal, interpretative or other support services to a juror with a physical disability, who discloses any information relating to the proceedings of the jury when it was absent from the courtroom that was not subsequently disclosed in open court is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Exceptions

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of the disclosure of information for the purposes of

(a) an investigation of an alleged offence under subsection 139\(2\) in relation to a juror;

(b) giving evidence in criminal proceedings in relation to such an offence; or

(c) any medical or psychiatric treatment or any therapy or counselling that a person referred to in subsection (1) receives from a health care professional after the completion of the trial in relation to health issues arising out of or related to the person's service at the trial as a juror or as a person who provided support services to a juror.

Health care professional

(3) For the purpose of paragraph (2)(c), the health care professional who provides any medical or psychiatric treatment or any therapy or counselling must be entitled to do so under the laws of a province.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 649; 1998, c. 9, s. 7; 2022, c. 12, s. 1.

Accused to be present

650 (1) Subject to subsections (1.1) and (2) and section 650.01, an accused, other than an organization, shall be present in court during the whole of their trial, either in person or, if authorized under any of sections 715.231 to 715.241, by audioconference or videoconference.

Appearance by counsel

(1.1) The court may, with the consent of the prosecutor and the accused, allow the accused to appear by counsel for any part of the trial, other than a part in which the evidence of a witness is taken.

(1.2) [\[Repealed, 2022, c. 17, s. 39\]](#)

Exceptions

(2) The court may

- (a) cause the accused to be removed and to be kept out of court, where he misconducts himself by interrupting the proceedings so that to continue the proceedings in his presence would not be feasible;
- (b) permit the accused to be out of court during the whole or any part of his trial on such conditions as the court considers proper; or
- (c) cause the accused to be removed and to be kept out of court during the trial of an issue as to whether the accused is unfit to stand trial, where it is satisfied that failure to do so might have an adverse effect on the mental condition of the accused.

To make defence

(3) An accused is entitled, after the close of the case for the prosecution, to make full answer and defence personally or by counsel.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 650; 1991, c. 43, s. 9; 1994, c. 44, s. 61; 1997, c. 18, s. 77; 2002, c. 13, s. 60; 2003, c. 21, s. 12; 2019, c. 25, s. 274; 2022, c. 17, s. 39.

Designation of counsel of record

650.01 (1) An accused may appoint counsel to represent the accused for any proceedings under this Act by filing a designation with the court.

Contents of designation

(2) The designation must contain the name and address of the counsel and be signed by the accused and the designated counsel.

Effect of designation

(3) If a designation is filed,

- (a) the accused may appear by the designated counsel without being present for any part of the proceedings, other than
 - (i) a part during which oral evidence of a witness is taken,
 - (ii) a part during which jurors are being selected, and

(iii) an application for a writ of habeas corpus;

(b) an appearance by the designated counsel is equivalent to the accused's being present, unless the court orders otherwise; and

(c) a plea of guilty may be made, and a sentence may be pronounced, only if the accused is present, unless the court orders otherwise.

When court orders presence of accused

(4) If the court orders the accused to be present otherwise than by appearance by the designated counsel, the court may

(a) issue a summons to compel the presence of the accused and order that it be served by leaving a copy at the address contained in the designation; or

(b) issue a warrant to compel the presence of the accused.

2002, c. 13, s. 61.

Remote appearance

650.02 The prosecutor or the counsel designated under section 650.01 may appear before the court by audioconference or videoconference, if the technological means is satisfactory to the court.

2002, c. 13, s. 61; 2019, c. 25, s. 275.

Pre-charge conference

650.1 A judge in a jury trial may, before the charge to the jury, confer with the accused or counsel for the accused and the prosecutor with respect to the matters that should be explained to the jury and with respect to the choice of instructions to the jury.

1997, c. 18, s. 78.

Summing up by prosecutor

651 (1) Where an accused, or any one of several accused being tried together, is defended by counsel, the counsel shall, at the end of the case for the prosecution, declare whether or not he intends to adduce evidence on behalf of the accused for whom he appears and if he does not announce his intention to adduce evidence, the prosecutor may address the jury by way of summing up.

Summing up by accused

(2) Counsel for the accused or the accused, where he is not defended by counsel, is entitled, if he thinks fit, to open the case for the defence, and after the conclusion of that opening to examine such witnesses as he thinks fit, and when all the evidence is concluded to sum up the evidence.

Accused's right of reply

(3) Where no witnesses are examined for an accused, he or his counsel is entitled to address the jury last, but otherwise counsel for the prosecution is entitled to address the jury last.

Prosecutor's right of reply where more than one accused

(4) Where two or more accused are tried jointly and witnesses are examined for any of them, all the accused or their respective counsel are required to address the jury before it is addressed by the prosecutor.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 578.

View

652 (1) The judge may, where it appears to be in the interests of justice, at any time after the jury has been sworn and before it gives its verdict, direct the jury to have a view of any place, thing or person, and shall give directions respecting the manner in which, and the persons by whom, the place, thing or person shall be shown to the jury, and may for that purpose adjourn the trial.

Directions to prevent communication

(2) Where a view is ordered under subsection (1), the judge shall give any directions that he considers necessary for the purpose of preventing undue communication by any person with members of the jury, but failure to comply with any directions given under this subsection does not affect the validity of the proceedings.

Who shall attend

(3) Where a view is ordered under subsection (1), the accused and the judge shall attend.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 579.

Trying of issues of indictment by jury

652.1 (1) After the charge to the jury, the jury shall retire to try the issues of the indictment.

Reduction of number of jurors to 12

(2) However, if there are more than 12 jurors remaining, the judge shall identify the 12 jurors who are to retire to consider the verdict by having the number of each juror written on a card that is of equal size, by causing the cards to be placed together in a box that is to be thoroughly shaken together and by drawing one card if 13 jurors remain or two cards if 14 jurors remain. The judge shall then discharge any juror whose number is drawn.

2011, c. 16, s. 13.

Disagreement of jury

653 (1) Where the judge is satisfied that the jury is unable to agree on its verdict and that further detention of the jury would be useless, he may in his discretion discharge that jury and direct a new jury to be empanelled during the sittings of the court, or may adjourn the trial on such terms as justice may require.

Discretion not reviewable

(2) A discretion that is exercised under subsection (1) by a judge is not reviewable.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 580.

Mistrial — rulings binding at new trial

653.1 In the case of a mistrial, unless the court is satisfied that it would not be in the interests of justice, rulings relating to the disclosure or admissibility of evidence or the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms that were made during the trial are binding on the parties in any new trial if the rulings are made — or could have been made — before the stage at which the evidence on the merits is presented.

2011, c. 16, s. 14.

Proceeding on Sunday, etc., not invalid

654 The taking of the verdict of a jury and any proceeding incidental thereto is not invalid by reason only that it is done on Sunday or on a holiday.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 581.

Evidence on Trial

Admissions at trial

655 Where an accused is on trial for an indictable offence, he or his counsel may admit any fact alleged against him for the purpose of dispensing with proof thereof.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 582.

Presumption — valuable minerals

656 In any proceeding in relation to theft or possession of a valuable mineral that is unrefined, partly refined, uncut or otherwise unprocessed by any person actively engaged in or on a mine, if it is established that the person possesses the valuable mineral, the person is presumed, in the absence of evidence raising a reasonable doubt to the contrary, to have stolen or unlawfully possessed the valuable mineral.

Use in evidence of statement by accused

657 A statement made by an accused under subsection 541\(3\) and purporting to be signed by the justice before whom it was made may be given in evidence against the accused at his or her trial without proof of the signature of the justice, unless it is proved that the justice by whom the statement purports to be signed did not sign it.

Proof of ownership and value of property

657.1 (1) In any proceedings, an affidavit or a solemn declaration of a person who claims to be the lawful owner of, or the person lawfully entitled to possession of, property that was the subject-matter of the offence, or any other person who has specialized knowledge of the property or of that type of property, containing the statements referred to in subsection (2), shall be admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is evidence of the statements contained in the affidavit or solemn declaration without proof of the signature of the person appearing to have signed the affidavit or solemn declaration.

Statements to be made

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), a person shall state in an affidavit or a solemn declaration

(a) that the person is the lawful owner of, or is lawfully entitled to possession of, the property, or otherwise has specialized knowledge of the property or of property of the same type as that property;

(b) the value of the property;

(c) in the case of a person who is the lawful owner of or is lawfully entitled to possession of the property, that the person has been deprived of the property by fraudulent means or otherwise without the lawful consent of the person;

(c.1) in the case of proceedings in respect of an offence under section 342, that the credit card had been revoked or cancelled, is a false document within the meaning of section 321 or that no credit card that meets the exact description of that credit card was ever issued; and

(d) any facts within the personal knowledge of the person relied on to justify the statements referred to in paragraphs (a) to (c.1).

Notice of intention to produce affidavit or solemn declaration

(3) Unless the court orders otherwise, no affidavit or solemn declaration shall be received in evidence pursuant to subsection (1) unless the prosecutor has, before the trial or other proceeding, given to the accused a copy of the affidavit or solemn declaration and reasonable notice of intention to produce it in evidence.

Attendance for examination

(4) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the court may require the person who appears to have signed an affidavit or solemn declaration referred to in that subsection to appear before it for examination or cross-examination in respect of the issue of proof of any of the statements contained in the affidavit or solemn declaration.

R.S., 1985, c. 23 (4th Supp.), s. 3; 1994, c. 44, s. 63; 1997, c. 18, s. 79.

Theft and possession

657.2 (1) Where an accused is charged with possession of any property obtained by the commission of an offence, evidence of the conviction or discharge of another person of theft of the property is admissible against the accused, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary is proof that the property was stolen.

Accessory after the fact

(2) Where an accused is charged with being an accessory after the fact to the commission of an offence, evidence of the conviction or discharge of another person of the offence is admissible against the accused, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary is proof that the offence was committed.

1997, c. 18, s. 80.

Expert testimony

657.3 (1) In any proceedings, the evidence of a person as an expert may be given by means of a report accompanied by the affidavit or solemn declaration of the person, setting out, in particular, the qualifications of the person as an expert if

- (a) the court recognizes that person as an expert; and
- (b) the party intending to produce the report in evidence has, before the proceeding, given to the other party a copy of the affidavit or solemn declaration and the report and reasonable notice of the intention to produce it in evidence.

Attendance for examination

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the court may require the person who appears to have signed an affidavit or solemn declaration referred to in that subsection to appear before it for examination or cross-examination in respect of the issue of proof of any of the statements contained in the affidavit or solemn declaration or report.

Notice for expert testimony

(3) For the purpose of promoting the fair, orderly and efficient presentation of the testimony of witnesses,

- (a) a party who intends to call a person as an expert witness shall, at least thirty days before the commencement of the trial or within any other period fixed by the justice or judge, give notice to the other party or parties of his or her intention to do so, accompanied by
 - (i) the name of the proposed witness,
 - (ii) a description of the area of expertise of the proposed witness that is sufficient to permit the other parties to inform themselves about that area of expertise, and
 - (iii) a statement of the qualifications of the proposed witness as an expert;
- (b) in addition to complying with paragraph (a), a prosecutor who intends to call a person as an expert witness shall, within a reasonable period before trial, provide to the other party or parties

- (i) a copy of the report, if any, prepared by the proposed witness for the case, and
- (ii) if no report is prepared, a summary of the opinion anticipated to be given by the proposed witness and the grounds on which it is based; and
- (c) in addition to complying with paragraph (a), an accused, or his or her counsel, who intends to call a person as an expert witness shall, not later than the close of the case for the prosecution, provide to the other party or parties the material referred to in paragraph (b).

If notices not given

- (4) If a party calls a person as an expert witness without complying with subsection (3), the court shall, at the request of any other party,
- (a) grant an adjournment of the proceedings to the party who requests it to allow him or her to prepare for cross-examination of the expert witness;
 - (b) order the party who called the expert witness to provide that other party and any other party with the material referred to in paragraph (3)(b); and
 - (c) order the calling or recalling of any witness for the purpose of giving testimony on matters related to those raised in the expert witness's testimony, unless the court considers it inappropriate to do so.

Additional court orders

- (5) If, in the opinion of the court, a party who has received the notice and material referred to in subsection (3) has not been able to prepare for the evidence of the proposed witness, the court may do one or more of the following:
- (a) adjourn the proceedings;
 - (b) order that further particulars be given of the evidence of the proposed witness; and
 - (c) order the calling or recalling of any witness for the purpose of giving testimony on matters related to those raised in the expert witness's testimony.

Use of material by prosecution

- (6) If the proposed witness does not testify, the prosecutor may not produce material provided to him or her under paragraph (3)(c) in evidence without the consent of the accused.

No further disclosure

- (7) Unless otherwise ordered by a court, information disclosed under this section in relation to a proceeding may only be used for the purpose of that proceeding.

Children and Young Persons

Testimony as to date of birth

658 (1) In any proceedings to which this Act applies, the testimony of a person as to the date of his or her birth is admissible as evidence of that date.

Testimony of a parent

(2) In any proceedings to which this Act applies, the testimony of a parent as to the age of a person of whom he or she is a parent is admissible as evidence of the age of that person.

Proof of age

(3) In any proceedings to which this Act applies,

(a) a birth or baptismal certificate or a copy of such a certificate purporting to be certified under the hand of the person in whose custody the certificate is held is evidence of the age of that person; and

(b) an entry or record of an incorporated society or its officers who have had the control or care of a child or young person at or about the time the child or young person was brought to Canada is evidence of the age of the child or young person if the entry or record was made before the time when the offence is alleged to have been committed.

Other evidence

(4) In the absence of any certificate, copy, entry or record mentioned in subsection (3), or in corroboration of any such certificate, copy, entry or record, a jury, judge, justice or provincial court judge, as the case may be, may receive and act on any other information relating to age that they consider reliable.

Inference from appearance

(5) In the absence of other evidence, or by way of corroboration of other evidence, a jury, judge, justice or provincial court judge, as the case may be, may infer the age of a child or young person from his or her appearance.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 658; 1994, c. 44, s. 64.

Corroboration

Children's evidence

659 Any requirement whereby it is mandatory for a court to give the jury a warning about convicting an accused on the evidence of a child is abrogated.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 659; R.S., 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 15; 1993, c. 45, s. 9.

Verdicts

Full offence charged, attempt proved

660 Where the complete commission of an offence charged is not proved but the evidence establishes an attempt to commit the offence, the accused may be convicted of the attempt.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 587.

Attempt charged, full offence proved

661 (1) Where an attempt to commit an offence is charged but the evidence establishes the commission of the complete offence, the accused is not entitled to be acquitted, but the jury may convict him of the attempt unless the judge presiding at the trial, in his discretion, discharges the jury from giving a verdict and directs that the accused be indicted for the complete offence.

Conviction a bar

(2) An accused who is convicted under this section is not liable to be tried again for the offence that he was charged with attempting to commit.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 588.

Offence charged, part only proved

662 (1) A count in an indictment is divisible and where the commission of the offence charged, as described in the enactment creating it or as charged in the count, includes the commission of another offence, whether punishable by indictment or on summary conviction, the accused may be convicted

(a) of an offence so included that is proved, notwithstanding that the whole offence that is charged is not proved; or

(b) of an attempt to commit an offence so included.

First degree murder charged

(2) For greater certainty and without limiting the generality of subsection (1), where a count charges first degree murder and the evidence does not prove first degree murder but proves second degree murder or an attempt to commit second degree murder, the jury may find the accused not guilty of first degree murder but guilty of second degree murder or an attempt to commit second degree murder, as the case may be.

Conviction for infanticide or manslaughter on charge of murder

(3) Subject to subsection (4), where a count charges murder and the evidence proves manslaughter or infanticide but does not prove murder, the jury may find the accused not guilty of murder but guilty of manslaughter or infanticide, but shall not on that count find the accused guilty of any other offence.

Conviction for concealing body of child where murder or infanticide charged

(4) Where a count charges the murder of a child or infanticide and the evidence proves the commission of an offence under section 243 but does not prove murder or infanticide, the jury may find the accused not guilty of murder or infanticide, as the case may be, but guilty of an offence under section 243.

Conviction for dangerous operation when another offence charged

(5) For greater certainty, when a count charges an offence under section 220, 221 or 236 arising out of the operation of a conveyance, and the evidence does not prove that offence but proves an offence under section 320.13, the accused may be convicted of an offence under that section.

Conviction for break and enter with intent

(6) Where a count charges an offence under paragraph 98\(1\)\(b\) or 348\(1\)\(b\) and the evidence does not prove that offence but does prove an offence under, respectively, paragraph 98\(1\)\(a\) or 348\(1\)\(a\), the accused may be convicted of an offence under that latter paragraph.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 662; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 134; 2000, c. 2, s. 3; 2008, c. 6, s. 38; 2018, c. 21, s. 20.

No acquittal unless act or omission not wilful

663 Where a female person is charged with infanticide and the evidence establishes that she caused the death of her child but does not establish that, at the time of the act or omission by which she caused the death of the child,

(a) she was not fully recovered from the effects of giving birth to the child or from the effect of lactation consequent on the birth of the child, and

(b) the balance of her mind was, at that time, disturbed by reason of the effect of giving birth to the child or of the effect of lactation consequent on the birth of the child, she may be convicted unless the evidence establishes that the act or omission was not wilful.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 590.

Previous Convictions

No reference to previous conviction

664 No indictment in respect of an offence for which, by reason of previous convictions, a greater punishment may be imposed shall contain any reference to previous convictions.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 591.

665 [Repealed, 1995, c. 22, s. 3]

Evidence of character

666 Where, at a trial, the accused adduces evidence of his good character, the prosecutor may, in answer thereto, before a verdict is returned, adduce evidence of the previous conviction of the accused for any offences, including any previous conviction by reason of which a greater punishment may be imposed.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 593.

Proof of previous conviction

667 (1) In any proceedings,

(a) a certificate setting out with reasonable particularity the conviction or discharge under section 730, the finding of guilt under the Young Offenders Act, chapter Y-1 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, the finding of guilt under the Youth Criminal Justice Act or the conviction and sentence or finding of guilt and sentence in Canada of an offender is, on proof that the accused or defendant is the offender referred to in the certificate, evidence that the accused or defendant was so convicted, so discharged or so convicted and sentenced or found guilty and sentenced, without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate, if it is signed by

- (i) the person who made the conviction, order for the discharge or finding of guilt,
- (ii) the clerk of the court in which the conviction, order for the discharge or finding of guilt was made, or
- (iii) a fingerprint examiner;

(b) evidence that the fingerprints of the accused or defendant are the same as the fingerprints of the offender whose fingerprints are reproduced in or attached to a certificate issued under subparagraph (a)(iii) is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that the accused or defendant is the offender referred to in that certificate;

(c) a certificate of a fingerprint examiner stating that he has compared the fingerprints reproduced in or attached to that certificate with the fingerprints reproduced in or attached to a certificate issued under subparagraph (a)(iii) and that they are those of the same person is evidence of the statements contained in the certificate without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate; and

(d) a certificate under subparagraph (a)(iii) may be in Form 44, and a certificate under paragraph (c) may be in Form 45.

Idem

(2) In any proceedings, a copy of the summary conviction or discharge under section 730 in Canada of an offender, signed by the person who made the conviction or order for the discharge or by the clerk of the court in which the conviction or order for the discharge was made, is, on proof that the accused or defendant is the offender referred to in the copy of the summary conviction, evidence of the conviction or discharge under section 730 of the accused or defendant, without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed it.

Proof of identity

(2.1) In any summary conviction proceedings, where the name of a defendant is similar to the name of an offender referred to in a certificate made under subparagraph (1)(a)(i) or (ii) in respect of a summary conviction or referred to in a copy of a summary conviction mentioned in subsection (2), that similarity of name is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, evidence that the defendant is the offender referred to in the certificate or the copy of the summary conviction.

Attendance and right to cross-examine

(3) An accused against whom a certificate issued under subparagraph (1)(a)(iii) or paragraph (1)(c) is produced may, with leave of the court, require the attendance of the person who signed the certificate for the purposes of cross-examination.

Notice of intention to produce certificate

(4) No certificate issued under subparagraph (1)(a)(iii) or paragraph (1)(c) shall be received in evidence unless the party intending to produce it has given to the accused reasonable notice of his intention together with a copy of the certificate.

Definition of fingerprint examiner

(5) In this section, fingerprint examiner means a person designated as such for the purposes of this section by the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness.

Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction

669.1 (1) Where any judge, court or provincial court judge by whom or which the plea of the accused or defendant to an offence was taken has not commenced to hear evidence, any judge, court or provincial court judge having jurisdiction to try the accused or defendant has jurisdiction for the purpose of the hearing and adjudication.

Adjournment

(2) Any court, judge or provincial court judge having jurisdiction to try an accused or a defendant, or any clerk or other proper officer of the court, or in the case of an offence punishable on summary conviction, any justice, may, at any time before or after the plea of the accused or defendant is taken, adjourn the proceedings.

R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 137.

Continuation of proceedings

669.2 (1) Subject to this section, where an accused or a defendant is being tried by

(a) a judge or provincial court judge,

(b) a justice or other person who is, or is a member of, a summary conviction court, or

(c) a court composed of a judge and jury,

as the case may be, and the judge, provincial court judge, justice or other person dies or is for any reason unable to continue, the proceedings may be continued before another judge, provincial court judge, justice or other person, as the case may be, who has jurisdiction to try the accused or defendant.

Where adjudication is made

(2) Where a verdict was rendered by a jury or an adjudication was made by a judge, provincial court judge, justice or other person before whom the trial was commenced, the judge, provincial court judge, justice or other person before whom the proceedings are continued shall, without further election by an accused, impose the punishment or make the order that is authorized by law in the circumstances.

If no adjudication made

(3) Subject to subsections (4) and (5), if the trial was commenced but no adjudication was made or verdict rendered, the judge, provincial court judge, justice or other person before whom the proceedings are continued shall, without further election by an accused, commence the trial again as if no evidence on the merits had been taken.

If no adjudication made — jury trials

(4) If a trial that is before a court composed of a judge and a jury was commenced but no adjudication was made or verdict rendered, the judge before whom the proceedings are continued may, without further election by an accused, continue the trial or commence the trial again as if no evidence on the merits had been taken.

(5) Where a trial is continued under subsection (4), any evidence that was adduced before a judge referred to in paragraph (1)(c) is deemed to have been adduced before the judge before whom the trial is continued but, if the prosecutor and the accused consent, any part of that evidence may be adduced again before the judge before whom the trial is continued.

R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 137; 1994, c. 44, s. 65; 2011, c. 16, s. 15; 2022, c. 17, s. 40\(E\).

Jurisdiction when appointment to another court

669.3 Where a court composed of a judge and a jury, a judge or a provincial court judge is conducting a trial and the judge or provincial court judge is appointed to another court, he or she continues to have jurisdiction in respect of the trial until its completion.

1994, c. 44, s. 66.

Formal Defects in Jury Process

Judgment not to be stayed on certain grounds

670 Judgment shall not be stayed or reversed after verdict on an indictment

- (a) by reason of any irregularity in the summoning or empanelling of the jury; or
- (b) for the reason that a person who served on the jury was not returned as a juror by a sheriff or other officer.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 598.

Directions respecting jury or jurors directory

671 No omission to observe the directions contained in any Act with respect to the qualification, selection, balloting or distribution of jurors, the preparation of the jurors' book, the selecting of jury lists or the drafting of panels from the jury lists is a ground for impeaching or quashing a verdict rendered in criminal proceedings.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 599.

Saving powers of court

672 Nothing in this Act alters, abridges or affects any power or authority that a court or judge had immediately before April 1, 1955, or any practice or form that existed immediately before April 1, 1955, with respect to trials by jury, jury process, juries or jurors, except where the power or authority, practice or form is expressly altered by or is inconsistent with this Act.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 600.

Assessment Orders

Assessment order

672.11 A court having jurisdiction over an accused in respect of an offence may order an assessment of the mental condition of the accused, if it has reasonable grounds to believe that such evidence is necessary to determine

- (a) whether the accused is unfit to stand trial;
- (b) whether the accused was, at the time of the commission of the alleged offence, suffering from a mental disorder so as to be exempt from criminal responsibility by virtue of subsection 16\(1\);
- (c) whether the balance of the mind of the accused was disturbed at the time of commission of the alleged offence, where the accused is a female person charged with an offence arising out of the death of her newly-born child;
- (d) the appropriate disposition to be made, where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial has been rendered in respect of the accused;
- (d.1) whether a finding that the accused is a high-risk accused should be revoked under subsection 672.84\(3\); or
- (e) whether an order should be made under section 672.851 for a stay of proceedings, where a verdict of unfit to stand trial has been rendered against the accused.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1995, c. 22, s. 10; 2005, c. 22, s. 2; 2014, c. 6, s. 3.

Where court may order assessment

672.12 (1) The court may make an assessment order at any stage of proceedings against the accused of its own motion, on application of the accused or, subject to subsections (2) and (3), on application of the prosecutor.

Limitation on prosecutor's application for assessment of fitness

(2) Where the prosecutor applies for an assessment in order to determine whether the accused is unfit to stand trial for an offence that is prosecuted by way of summary conviction, the court may only order the assessment if

- (a) the accused raised the issue of fitness; or
- (b) the prosecutor satisfies the court that there are reasonable grounds to doubt that the accused is fit to stand trial.

Limitation on prosecutor's application for assessment

(3) Where the prosecutor applies for an assessment in order to determine whether the accused was suffering from a mental disorder at the time of the offence so as to be exempt from criminal responsibility, the court may only order the assessment if

- (a) the accused puts his or her mental capacity for criminal intent into issue; or
- (b) the prosecutor satisfies the court that there are reasonable grounds to doubt that the accused is criminally responsible for the alleged offence, on account of mental disorder.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Review Board may order assessment

672.121 The Review Board that has jurisdiction over an accused found not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial may order an assessment of the mental condition of the accused of its own motion or on application of the prosecutor or the accused, if it has reasonable grounds to believe that such evidence is necessary to

- (a) make a recommendation to the court under subsection 672.851\(1\);
- (b) make a disposition under section 672.54 in one of the following circumstances:
 - (i) no assessment report on the mental condition of the accused is available,
 - (ii) no assessment of the mental condition of the accused has been conducted in the last twelve months, or
 - (iii) the accused has been transferred from another province under section 672.86;or
- (c) determine whether to refer to the court for review under subsection 672.84\(1\) a finding that an accused is a high-risk accused.

2005, c. 22, s. 3; 2014, c. 6, s. 4.

Contents of assessment order

672.13 (1) An assessment order must specify

- (a) the service that or the person who is to make the assessment, or the hospital where it is to be made;
- (b) whether the accused is to be detained in custody while the order is in force; and

(c) the period that the order is to be in force, including the time required for the assessment and for the accused to travel to and from the place where the assessment is to be made.

Form

(2) An assessment order may be in Form 48 or 48.1.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 4.

General rule for period

672.14 (1) An assessment order shall not be in force for more than thirty days.

Exception in fitness cases

(2) No assessment order to determine whether the accused is unfit to stand trial shall be in force for more than five days, excluding holidays and the time required for the accused to travel to and from the place where the assessment is to be made, unless the accused and the prosecutor agree to a longer period not exceeding thirty days.

Exception for compelling circumstances

(3) Despite subsections (1) and (2), a court or Review Board may make an assessment order that remains in force for sixty days if the court or Review Board is satisfied that compelling circumstances exist that warrant it.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 5.

Extension

672.15 (1) Subject to subsection (2), a court or Review Board may extend an assessment order, of its own motion or on the application of the accused or the prosecutor made during or at the end of the period during which the order is in force, for any further period that is required, in its opinion, to complete the assessment of the accused.

Maximum duration of extensions

(2) No extension of an assessment order shall exceed thirty days, and the period of the initial order together with all extensions shall not exceed sixty days.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 6.

Presumption against custody

672.16 (1) Subject to subsection (3), an accused shall not be detained in custody under an assessment order of a court unless

(a) the court is satisfied that on the evidence custody is necessary to assess the accused, or that on the evidence of a medical practitioner custody is desirable to assess the accused and the accused consents to custody;

(b) custody of the accused is required in respect of any other matter or by virtue of any other provision of this Act; or

(c) the prosecutor, having been given a reasonable opportunity to do so, shows that detention of the accused in custody is justified on either of the grounds set out in subsection 515\(10\).

Presumption against custody — Review Board

(1.1) If the Review Board makes an order for an assessment of an accused under section 672.121, the accused shall not be detained in custody under the order unless

(a) the accused is currently subject to a disposition made under paragraph 672.54\(c\);

(b) the Review Board is satisfied on the evidence that custody is necessary to assess the accused, or that on the evidence of a medical practitioner custody is desirable to assess the accused and the accused consents to custody; or

(c) custody of the accused is required in respect of any other matter or by virtue of any other provision of this Act.

Residency as a condition of disposition

(1.2) Subject to paragraphs (1.1)(b) and (c), if the accused is subject to a disposition made under paragraph 672.54\(b\) that requires the accused to reside at a specified place, an assessment ordered under section 672.121 shall require the accused to reside at the same place.

Report of medical practitioner

(2) For the purposes of paragraphs (1)(a) and (1.1)(b), if the prosecutor and the accused agree, the evidence of a medical practitioner may be received in the form of a report in writing.

Presumption of custody in certain circumstances

(3) An assessment order made in respect of an accused who is detained under subsection 515\(6\) or 522\(2\) shall order that the accused be detained in custody under the same circumstances referred to in that subsection, unless the accused shows that custody is not justified under the terms of that subsection.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 7.

Assessment order takes precedence over bail hearing

672.17 During the period that an assessment order made by a court in respect of an accused charged with an offence is in force, no order for the interim release or detention of the accused may be made by virtue of Part XVI or section 679 in respect of that offence or an included offence.

Application to vary assessment order

672.18 Where at any time while an assessment order made by a court is in force the prosecutor or an accused shows cause, the court may vary the terms of the order respecting the interim release or detention of the accused in such manner as it considers appropriate in the circumstances.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 9\(F\).

No treatment order on assessment

672.19 No assessment order may direct that psychiatric or any other treatment of the accused be carried out, or direct the accused to submit to such treatment.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

When assessment completed

672.191 An accused in respect of whom an assessment order is made shall appear before the court or Review Board that made the order as soon as practicable after the assessment is completed and not later than the last day of the period that the order is to be in force.

1997, c. 18, s. 81; 2005, c. 22, s. 10.

Assessment Reports

Assessment report

672.2 (1) An assessment order may require the person who makes the assessment to submit in writing an assessment report on the mental condition of the accused.

Assessment report to be filed

(2) An assessment report shall be filed with the court or Review Board that ordered it, within the period fixed by the court or Review Board, as the case may be.

Court to send assessment report to Review Board

(3) The court shall send to the Review Board without delay a copy of any report filed with it pursuant to subsection (2), to assist in determining the appropriate disposition to be made in respect of the accused.

Copies of reports to accused and prosecutor

(4) Subject to subsection 672.51\(3\), copies of any report filed with a court or Review Board under subsection (2) shall be provided without delay to the prosecutor, the accused and any counsel representing the accused.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 11.

Protected Statements

Definition of protected statement

672.21 (1) In this section, protected statement means a statement made by the accused during the course and for the purposes of an assessment or treatment directed by a disposition, to the person specified in the assessment order or the disposition, or to anyone acting under that person's direction.

Protected statements not admissible against accused

(2) No protected statement or reference to a protected statement made by an accused is admissible in evidence, without the consent of the accused, in any proceeding before a court, tribunal, body or person with jurisdiction to compel the production of evidence.

Exceptions

(3) Notwithstanding subsection (2), evidence of a protected statement is admissible for the purpose of

- (a) determining whether the accused is unfit to stand trial;
- (b) making a disposition or placement decision respecting the accused;
- (c) determining, under section 672.84, whether to refer to the court for review a finding that an accused is a high-risk accused or whether to revoke such a finding;
- (d) determining whether the balance of the mind of the accused was disturbed at the time of commission of the alleged offence, where the accused is a female person charged with an offence arising out of the death of her newly-born child;
- (e) determining whether the accused was, at the time of the commission of an alleged offence, suffering from automatism or a mental disorder so as to be exempt from criminal responsibility by virtue of subsection 16\(1\), if the accused puts his or her mental capacity for criminal intent into issue, or if the prosecutor raises the issue after verdict;
- (f) challenging the credibility of an accused in any proceeding where the testimony of the accused is inconsistent in a material particular with a protected statement that the accused made previously; or
- (g) establishing the perjury of an accused who is charged with perjury in respect of a statement made in any proceeding.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 12; 2014, c. 6, s. 5.

Fitness to Stand Trial

Presumption of fitness

672.22 An accused is presumed fit to stand trial unless the court is satisfied on the balance of probabilities that the accused is unfit to stand trial.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Court may direct issue to be tried

672.23 (1) Where the court has reasonable grounds, at any stage of the proceedings before a verdict is rendered, to believe that the accused is unfit to stand trial, the court may direct, of its own motion or on application of the accused or the prosecutor, that the issue of fitness of the accused be tried.

Burden of proof

(2) An accused or a prosecutor who makes an application under subsection (1) has the burden of proof that the accused is unfit to stand trial.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Counsel

672.24 (1) Where the court has reasonable grounds to believe that an accused is unfit to stand trial and the accused is not represented by counsel, the court shall order that the accused be represented by counsel.

Counsel fees and disbursements

(2) Where counsel is assigned pursuant to subsection (1) and legal aid is not granted to the accused pursuant to a provincial legal aid program, the fees and disbursements of counsel shall be paid by the Attorney General to the extent that the accused is unable to pay them.

Taxation of fees and disbursements

(3) Where counsel and the Attorney General cannot agree on the fees or disbursements of counsel, the Attorney General or the counsel may apply to the registrar of the court and the registrar may tax the disputed fees and disbursements.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1997, c. 18, s. 82.

Postponing trial of issue

672.25 (1) The court shall postpone directing the trial of the issue of fitness of an accused in proceedings for an offence for which the accused may be prosecuted by indictment or that is punishable on summary conviction, until the prosecutor has elected to proceed by way of indictment or summary conviction.

Idem

(2) The court may postpone directing the trial of the issue of fitness of an accused

(a) where the issue arises before the close of the case for the prosecution at a preliminary inquiry, until a time that is not later than the time the accused is called on to answer to the charge; or

(b) where the issue arises before the close of the case for the prosecution at trial, until a time not later than the opening of the case for the defence or, on motion of the accused, any later time that the court may direct.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Trial of issue by judge and jury

672.26 Where an accused is tried or is to be tried before a court composed of a judge and jury,

(a) if the judge directs that the issue of fitness of the accused be tried before the accused is given in charge to a jury for trial on the indictment, a jury composed of the number of jurors required in respect of the indictment in the province where the trial is to be held shall be sworn to try that issue and, with the consent of the accused, the issues to be tried on the indictment; and

(b) if the judge directs that the issue of fitness of the accused be tried after the accused has been given in charge to a jury for trial on the indictment, the jury shall be sworn to try that issue in addition to the issues in respect of which it is already sworn.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Trial of issue by court

672.27 The court shall try the issue of fitness of an accused and render a verdict where the issue arises

(a) in respect of an accused who is tried or is to be tried before a court other than a court composed of a judge and jury; or

(b) before a court at a preliminary inquiry or at any other stage of the proceedings.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Proceeding continues where accused is fit

672.28 Where the verdict on trial of the issue is that an accused is fit to stand trial, the arraignment, preliminary inquiry, trial or other stage of the proceeding shall continue as if the issue of fitness of the accused had never arisen.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Where continued detention in custody

672.29 Where an accused is detained in custody on delivery of a verdict that the accused is fit to stand trial, the court may order the accused to be detained in a hospital until the completion of the trial, if the court has reasonable grounds to believe that the accused would become unfit to stand trial if released.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Acquittal

672.3 Where the court has postponed directing the trial of the issue of fitness of an accused pursuant to subsection 672.25\(2\) and the accused is discharged or acquitted before the issue is tried, it shall not be tried.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Verdict of unfit to stand trial

672.31 Where the verdict on trial of the issue is that an accused is unfit to stand trial, any plea that has been made shall be set aside and any jury shall be discharged.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Subsequent proceedings

672.32 (1) A verdict of unfit to stand trial shall not prevent the accused from being tried subsequently where the accused becomes fit to stand trial.

Burden of proof

(2) The burden of proof that the accused has subsequently become fit to stand trial is on the party who asserts it, and is discharged by proof on the balance of probabilities.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Prima facie* case to be made every two years

672.33 (1) The court that has jurisdiction in respect of the offence charged against an accused who is found unfit to stand trial shall hold an inquiry, not later than two years after the verdict is rendered and every two years thereafter until the accused is acquitted pursuant to subsection (6) or tried, to decide whether sufficient evidence can be adduced at that time to put the accused on trial.

Extension of time for holding inquiry

(1.1) Despite subsection (1), the court may extend the period for holding an inquiry where it is satisfied on the basis of an application by the prosecutor or the accused that the extension is necessary for the proper administration of justice.

Court may order inquiry to be held

(2) On application of the accused, the court may order an inquiry under this section to be held at any time if it is satisfied, on the basis of the application and any written material submitted by the accused, that there is reason to doubt that there is a prima facie case against the accused.

Burden of proof

(3) At an inquiry under this section, the burden of proof that sufficient evidence can be adduced to put the accused on trial is on the prosecutor.

Admissible evidence at an inquiry

(4) In an inquiry under this section, the court shall admit as evidence

(a) any affidavit containing evidence that would be admissible if given by the person making the affidavit as a witness in court; or

(b) any certified copy of the oral testimony given at a previous inquiry or hearing held before a court in respect of the offence with which the accused is charged.

Conduct of inquiry

(5) The court may determine the manner in which an inquiry under this section is conducted and may follow the practices and procedures in respect of a preliminary inquiry under Part XVIII where it concludes that the interests of justice so require.

Where prima facie case not made

(6) Where, on the completion of an inquiry under this section, the court is satisfied that sufficient evidence cannot be adduced to put the accused on trial, the court shall acquit the accused.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, ss. 13, 42(F).

Verdict of Not Criminally Responsible on Account of Mental Disorder

Verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder

672.34 Where the jury, or the judge or provincial court judge where there is no jury, finds that an accused committed the act or made the omission that formed the basis of the offence charged, but was at the time suffering from mental disorder so as to be exempt from criminal responsibility by virtue of subsection 16\(1\), the jury or the judge shall render a verdict that the accused committed the act or made the omission but is not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Effect of verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder

672.35 Where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder is rendered, the accused shall not be found guilty or convicted of the offence, but

- (a) the accused may plead autrefois acquit in respect of any subsequent charge relating to that offence;
- (b) any court may take the verdict into account in considering an application for judicial interim release or in considering what dispositions to make or sentence to impose for any other offence; and
- (c) the Parole Board of Canada or any provincial parole board may take the verdict into account in considering an application by the accused for parole or for a record suspension under the Criminal Records Act in respect of any other offence.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2012, c. 1, ss. 145, 160.

Verdict not a previous conviction

672.36 A verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder is not a previous conviction for the purposes of any offence under any Act of Parliament for which a greater punishment is provided by reason of previous convictions.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Definition of application for federal employment

672.37 (1) In this section, application for federal employment means an application form relating to

- (a) employment in any department, as defined in section 2 of the Financial Administration Act;
- (b) employment by any Crown corporation as defined in subsection 83\(1\) of the Financial Administration Act;
- (c) enrolment in the Canadian Forces; or
- (d) employment in connection with the operation of any work, undertaking or business that is within the legislative authority of Parliament.

Application for federal employment

(2) No application for federal employment shall contain any question that requires the applicant to disclose any charge or finding that the applicant committed an offence that resulted in a finding or a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder if the applicant was discharged absolutely or is no longer subject to any disposition in respect of that offence.

Punishment

(3) Any person who uses or authorizes the use of an application for federal employment that contravenes subsection (2) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Review Boards

Review Boards to be established

672.38 (1) A Review Board shall be established or designated for each province to make or review dispositions concerning any accused in respect of whom a verdict of not criminally responsible by reason of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered, and shall consist of not fewer than five members appointed by the lieutenant governor in council of the province.

Treated as provincial Board

(2) A Review Board shall be treated as having been established under the laws of the province.

Personal liability

(3) No member of a Review Board is personally liable for any act done in good faith in the exercise of the member's powers or the performance of the member's duties and functions or for any default or neglect in good faith in the exercise of those powers or the performance of those duties and functions.

Members of Review Board

672.39 A Review Board must have at least one member who is entitled under the laws of a province to practise psychiatry and, where only one member is so entitled, at least one other member must have training and experience in the field of mental health, and be entitled under the laws of a province to practise medicine or psychology.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Chairperson of a Review Board

672.4 (1) Subject to subsection (2), the chairperson of a Review Board shall be a judge of the Federal Court or of a superior, district or county court of a province, or a person who is qualified for appointment to, or has retired from, such a judicial office.

Transitional

(2) Where the chairperson of a Review Board that was established before the coming into force of subsection (1) is not a judge or other person referred to therein, the chairperson may continue to act until the expiration of his or her term of office if at least one other member of the Review Board is a judge or other person referred to in subsection (1) or is a member of the bar of the province.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Quorum of Review Board

672.41 (1) Subject to subsection (2), the quorum of a Review Board is constituted by the chairperson, a member who is entitled under the laws of a province to practise psychiatry, and any other member.

Transitional

(2) Where the chairperson of a Review Board that was established before the coming into force of this section is not a judge or other person referred to in subsection 672.4\(1\), the quorum of the Review Board is constituted by the chairperson, a member who is entitled under the laws of a province to practise psychiatry, and a member who is a person referred to in that subsection or a member of the bar of the province.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Majority vote

672.42 A decision of a majority of the members present and voting is the decision of a Review Board.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Powers of Review Boards

672.43 At a hearing held by a Review Board to make a disposition or review a disposition in respect of an accused, the chairperson has all the powers that are conferred by sections 4 and 5 of the Inquiries Act on persons appointed as commissioners under Part I of that Act.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 42(F).

Rules of Review Board

672.44 (1) A Review Board may, subject to the approval of the lieutenant governor in council of the province, make rules providing for the practice and procedure before the Review Board.

Application and publication of rules

(2) The rules made by a Review Board under subsection (1) apply to any proceeding within its jurisdiction, and shall be published in the Canada Gazette.

Regulations

(3) Notwithstanding anything in this section, the Governor in Council may make regulations to provide for the practice and procedure before Review Boards, in particular to make the rules of Review Boards uniform, and all regulations made under this subsection prevail over any rules made under subsection (1).

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Disposition Hearings

Hearing to be held by a court

672.45 (1) Where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered in respect of an accused, the court may of its own motion, and shall on application by the accused or the prosecutor, hold a disposition hearing.

Transmittal of transcript to Review Board

(1.1) If the court does not hold a hearing under subsection (1), it shall send without delay, following the verdict, in original or copied form, any transcript of the court proceedings in respect of the accused, any other document or information related to the proceedings, and all exhibits filed with it, to the Review Board that has jurisdiction in respect of the matter, if the transcript, document, information or exhibits are in its possession.

Disposition to be made

(2) At a disposition hearing, the court shall make a disposition in respect of the accused, if it is satisfied that it can readily do so and that a disposition should be made without delay.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, ss. 14, 42(F).

Status quo pending Review Board hearing

672.46 (1) If the court does not make a disposition in respect of the accused at a disposition hearing, any order for the detention of the accused or any release order, appearance notice, summons or undertaking in respect of the accused that is in force at the time the verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered continues in force, subject to its terms, until the Review Board makes a disposition.

Variation

(2) Despite subsection (1), a court may, pending a disposition by the Review Board in respect of the accused, on cause being shown, vacate the detention order, release order, appearance notice, summons or undertaking referred to in that subsection, and make any other order for the detention of the accused or any other release order that the court considers to be appropriate in the circumstances, including an order directing that the accused be detained in custody in a hospital.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 42\(F\); 2019, c. 25, s. 276.

Review Board to make disposition where court does not 672.47 (1) Where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered and the court makes no disposition in respect of an accused, the Review Board shall, as soon as is practicable but not later than forty-five days after the verdict was rendered, hold a hearing and make a disposition.

Extension of time for hearing

(2) Where the court is satisfied that there are exceptional circumstances that warrant it, the court may extend the time for holding a hearing under subsection (1) to a maximum of ninety days after the verdict was rendered.

Disposition made by court

(3) Where a court makes a disposition under section 672.54 other than an absolute discharge in respect of an accused, the Review Board shall, not later than ninety days after the disposition was made, hold a hearing and make a disposition in respect of the accused.

Exception — high-risk accused

(4) Despite subsections (1) to (3), if the court makes a disposition under subsection 672.64\(3\), the Review Board shall, not later than 45 days after the day on which the disposition is made, hold a hearing and make a disposition under paragraph 672.54\(c\), subject to the restrictions set out in that subsection.

Extension of time for hearing

(5) If the court is satisfied that there are exceptional circumstances that warrant it, the court may extend the time for holding a hearing under subsection (4) to a maximum of 90 days after the day on which the disposition is made.

Review Board to determine fitness

672.48 (1) Where a Review Board holds a hearing to make or review a disposition in respect of an accused who has been found unfit to stand trial, it shall determine whether in its opinion the accused is fit to stand trial at the time of the hearing.

Review Board shall send accused to court

(2) If a Review Board determines that the accused is fit to stand trial, it shall order that the accused be sent back to court, and the court shall try the issue and render a verdict.

Chairperson may send accused to court

(3) The chairperson of a Review Board may, with the consent of the accused and the person in charge of the hospital where an accused is being detained, order that the accused be sent back to court for trial of the issue of whether the accused is unfit to stand trial, where the chairperson is of the opinion that

(a) the accused is fit to stand trial; and

(b) the Review Board will not hold a hearing to make or review a disposition in respect of the accused within a reasonable period.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 42(F).

Continued detention in hospital

672.49 (1) In a disposition made pursuant to section 672.47 the Review Board or chairperson may require the accused to continue to be detained in a hospital until the court determines whether the accused is fit to stand trial, if the Review Board or chairperson has reasonable grounds to believe that the accused would become unfit to stand trial if released.

Copy of disposition to be sent to court

(2) The Review Board or chairperson shall send a copy of a disposition made pursuant to section 672.47 without delay to the court having jurisdiction over the accused and to the Attorney General of the province where the accused is to be tried.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Procedure at disposition hearing

672.5 (1) A hearing held by a court or Review Board to make or review a disposition in respect of an accused, including a hearing referred to in subsection 672.84\(1\) or \(3\), shall be held in accordance with this section.

Hearing to be informal

(2) The hearing may be conducted in as informal a manner as is appropriate in the circumstances.

Attorneys General may be parties

(3) On application, the court or Review Board shall designate as a party the Attorney General of the province where the disposition is to be made and, where an accused is transferred from another province, the Attorney General of the province from which the accused is transferred.

Interested person may be a party

(4) The court or Review Board may designate as a party any person who has a substantial interest in protecting the interests of the accused, if the court or Review Board is of the opinion that it is just to do so.

Notice of hearing

(5) Notice of the hearing shall be given to the parties, the Attorney General of the province where the disposition is to be made and, where the accused is transferred to another province, the Attorney General of the province from which the accused is transferred, within the time and in the manner prescribed, or within the time and in the manner fixed by the rules of the court or Review Board.

Notice

(5.1) At the victim's request, notice of the hearing and of the relevant provisions of the Act shall be given to the victim within the time and in the manner fixed by the rules of the court or Review Board.

Notice of discharge and intended place of residence

(5.2) If the accused is discharged absolutely under paragraph 672.54\(a\) or conditionally under paragraph 672.54(b), a notice of the discharge and accused's intended place of residence shall, at the victim's request, be given to the victim within the time and in the manner fixed by the rules of the court or Review Board.

Order excluding the public

(6) Where the court or Review Board considers it to be in the best interests of the accused and not contrary to the public interest, the court or Review Board may order the public or any members of the public to be excluded from the hearing or any part of the hearing.

Right to counsel

(7) The accused or any other party has the right to be represented by counsel.

Assigning counsel

(8) If an accused is not represented by counsel, the court or Review Board shall, either before or at the time of the hearing, assign counsel to act for any accused

(a) who has been found unfit to stand trial; or

(b) wherever the interests of justice so require.

Counsel fees and disbursements

(8.1) Where counsel is assigned pursuant to subsection (8) and legal aid is not granted to the accused pursuant to a provincial legal aid program, the fees and disbursements of counsel shall be paid by the Attorney General to the extent that the accused is unable to pay them.

Taxation of fees and disbursements

(8.2) Where counsel and the Attorney General cannot agree on the fees or disbursements of counsel, the Attorney General or the counsel may apply to the registrar of the court and the registrar may tax the disputed fees and disbursements.

Right of accused to be present

(9) Subject to subsection (10), the accused has the right to be present during the whole of the hearing.

Removal or absence of accused

(10) The court or the chairperson of the Review Board may

(a) permit the accused to be absent during the whole or any part of the hearing on such conditions as the court or chairperson considers proper; or

(b) cause the accused to be removed and barred from re-entry for the whole or any part of the hearing

(i) where the accused interrupts the hearing so that to continue in the presence of the accused would not be feasible,

(ii) on being satisfied that failure to do so would likely endanger the life or safety of another person or would seriously impair the treatment or recovery of the accused, or

(iii) in order to hear, in the absence of the accused, evidence, oral or written submissions, or the cross-examination of any witness concerning whether grounds exist for removing the accused pursuant to subparagraph (ii).

Rights of parties at hearing

(11) Any party may adduce evidence, make oral or written submissions, call witnesses and cross-examine any witness called by any other party and, on application, cross-examine any person who made an assessment report that was submitted to the court or Review Board in writing.

Request to compel attendance of witnesses

(12) A party may not compel the attendance of witnesses, but may request the court or the chairperson of the Review Board to do so.

Video links

(13) If the accused so agrees, the court or the chairperson of the Review Board may permit the accused to appear by closed-circuit television or videoconference for any part of the hearing.

Adjournment

(13.1) The Review Board may adjourn the hearing for a period not exceeding thirty days if necessary for the purpose of ensuring that relevant information is available to permit it to make or review a disposition or for any other sufficient reason.

Determination of mental condition of the accused

(13.2) On receiving an assessment report, the court or Review Board shall determine whether, since the last time the disposition in respect of the accused was made or reviewed there has been any change in the mental condition of the accused that may provide grounds for the discharge of the accused under paragraph 672.54\(a\) or (b) and, if there has been such a change, the court or Review Board shall notify every victim of the offence that they are entitled to file a statement in accordance with subsection (14).

Notice to victims — referral of finding to court

(13.3) If the Review Board refers to the court for review under subsection 672.84\(1\) a finding that an accused is a high-risk accused, it shall notify every victim of the offence that they are entitled to file a statement with the court in accordance with subsection (14).

Victim impact statement

(14) A victim of the offence may prepare and file with the court or Review Board a written statement describing the physical or emotional harm, property damage or economic loss suffered by the victim as the result of the commission of the offence and the impact of the offence on the victim. Form 48.2 in Part XXVIII, or a form approved by the lieutenant governor in council of the province in which the court or Review Board is exercising its jurisdiction, must be used for this purpose.

Copy of statement

(15) The court or Review Board shall ensure that a copy of any statement filed in accordance with subsection (14) is provided to the accused or counsel for the accused, and the prosecutor, as soon as practicable after a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder is rendered in respect of the offence.

Presentation of victim statement

(15.1) The court or Review Board shall, at the request of a victim, permit the victim to read a statement prepared and filed in accordance with subsection (14), or to present the statement in any other manner that the court or Review Board considers appropriate, unless the court or Review Board is of the opinion that the reading or presentation of the statement would interfere with the proper administration of justice.

Inquiry by court or Review Board

(15.2) The court or Review Board shall, as soon as practicable after a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder is rendered in respect of an offence and before making a disposition under section 672.45, 672.47 or 672.64, inquire of the prosecutor or a victim of the offence, or any person representing a victim of the offence, whether the victim has been advised of the opportunity to prepare a statement referred to in subsection (14).

Adjournment

(15.3) On application of the prosecutor or a victim or of its own motion, the court or Review Board may adjourn the hearing held under section 672.45, 672.47 or 672.64 to permit the victim to prepare a statement referred to in subsection (14) if the court or Review Board is satisfied that the adjournment would not interfere with the proper administration of justice.

Order restricting publication — sexual offences

672.501 (1) Where a Review Board holds a hearing referred to in section 672.5 in respect of an accused who has been declared not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial for an offence referred to in subsection 486.4\(1\), the Review Board shall make an order directing that any information that could identify a victim, or a witness who is under the age of eighteen years, shall not be published in any document or broadcast or transmitted in any way.

Order restricting publication — child sexual abuse and exploitation material

(2) Where a Review Board holds a hearing referred to in section 672.5 in respect of an accused who has been declared not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial for an offence referred to in section 163.1, a Review Board shall make an order directing that any information that could identify a witness who is under the age of eighteen years, or any person who is the subject of a representation, written material or a recording that constitutes child sexual abuse and exploitation material within the meaning of section 163.1, shall not be published in any document or broadcast or transmitted in any way.

Order restricting publication — other offences

(3) Where a Review Board holds a hearing referred to in section 672.5 in respect of an accused who has been declared not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial for an offence other than the offences referred to in subsection (1) or (2), on application of the prosecutor, a victim or a witness, the Review Board may make an order directing that any information that could identify the victim or witness shall not be published in any document or broadcast or transmitted in any way if the Review Board is satisfied that the order is necessary for the proper administration of justice.

Order restricting publication

(4) An order made under any of subsections (1) to (3) does not apply in respect of the disclosure of information in the course of the administration of justice if it is not the purpose of the disclosure to make the information known in the community.

Application and notice

(5) An applicant for an order under subsection (3) shall

- (a) apply in writing to the Review Board; and
- (b) provide notice of the application to the prosecutor, the accused and any other person affected by the order that the Review Board specifies.

Grounds

(6) An applicant for an order under subsection (3) shall set out the grounds on which the applicant relies to establish that the order is necessary for the proper administration of justice.

Hearing may be held

(7) The Review Board may hold a hearing to determine whether an order under subsection (3) should be made, and the hearing may be in private.

Factors to be considered

(8) In determining whether to make an order under subsection (3), the Review Board shall consider

- (a) the right to a fair and public hearing;
- (b) whether there is a real and substantial risk that the victim or witness would suffer significant harm if their identity were disclosed;
- (c) whether the victim or witness needs the order for their security or to protect them from intimidation or retaliation;
- (d) society's interest in encouraging the reporting of offences and the participation of victims and witnesses in the criminal justice process;
- (e) whether effective alternatives are available to protect the identity of the victim or witness;
- (f) the salutary and deleterious effects of the proposed order;
- (g) the impact of the proposed order on the freedom of expression of those affected by it; and

(h) any other factor that the Review Board considers relevant.

Conditions

(9) An order made under subsection (3) may be subject to any conditions that the Review Board thinks fit.

Publication of application prohibited

(10) Unless the Review Board refuses to make an order under subsection (3), no person shall publish in any document or broadcast or transmit in any way

(a) the contents of an application;

(b) any evidence taken, information given or submissions made at a hearing under subsection (7); or

(c) any other information that could identify the person to whom the application relates as a victim or witness in the proceedings.

Offence

(11) Every person who fails to comply with an order made under any of subsections (1) to (3) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Application of order

(12) For greater certainty, an order referred to in subsection (11) also prohibits, in relation to proceedings taken against any person who fails to comply with the order, the publication in any document or the broadcasting or transmission in any way of information that could identify a victim or witness whose identity is protected by the order.

Definition of disposition information

672.51 (1) In this section, disposition information means all or part of an assessment report submitted to the court or Review Board and any other written information before the court or Review Board about the accused that is relevant to making or reviewing a disposition.

Disposition information to be made available to parties

(2) Subject to this section, all disposition information shall be made available for inspection by, and the court or Review Board shall provide a copy of it to, each party and any counsel representing the accused.

Exception where disclosure dangerous to any person

(3) The court or Review Board shall withhold some or all of the disposition information from an accused where it is satisfied, on the basis of that information and the evidence or report of the medical practitioner responsible for the assessment or treatment of the accused, that disclosure of the information would be likely to endanger the life or safety of another person or would seriously impair the treatment or recovery of the accused.

Idem

(4) Notwithstanding subsection (3), the court or Review Board may release some or all of the disposition information to an accused where the interests of justice make disclosure essential in its opinion.

Exception where disclosure unnecessary or prejudicial

(5) The court or Review Board shall withhold disposition information from a party other than the accused or an Attorney General, where disclosure to that party, in the opinion of the court or Review Board, is not necessary to the proceeding and may be prejudicial to the accused.

Exclusion of certain persons from hearing

(6) A court or Review Board that withholds disposition information from the accused or any other party pursuant to subsection (3) or (5) shall exclude the accused or the other party, as the case may be, from the hearing during

(a) the oral presentation of that disposition information; or

(b) the questioning by the court or Review Board or the cross-examination of any person concerning that disposition information.

Prohibition of disclosure in certain cases

(7) No disposition information shall be made available for inspection or disclosed to any person who is not a party to the proceedings

(a) where the disposition information has been withheld from the accused or any other party pursuant to subsection (3) or (5); or

(b) where the court or Review Board is of the opinion that disclosure of the disposition information would be seriously prejudicial to the accused and that, in the circumstances, protection of the accused takes precedence over the public interest in disclosure.

Idem

(8) No part of the record of the proceedings in respect of which the accused was excluded pursuant to subparagraph 672.5\(10\)\(b\)\(ii\) or (iii) shall be made available for inspection to the accused or to any person who is not a party to the proceedings.

Information to be made available to specified persons

(9) Notwithstanding subsections (7) and (8), the court or Review Board may make any disposition information, or a copy of it, available on request to any person or member of a class of persons

(a) that has a valid interest in the information for research or statistical purposes, where the court or Review Board is satisfied that disclosure is in the public interest;

(b) that has a valid interest in the information for the purposes of the proper administration of justice; or

(c) that the accused requests or authorizes in writing to inspect it, where the court or Review Board is satisfied that the person will not disclose or give to the accused a copy of any disposition information withheld from the accused pursuant to subsection (3), or of any part of the record of proceedings referred to in subsection (8), or that the reasons for withholding that information from the accused no longer exist.

Disclosure for research or statistical purposes

(10) A person to whom the court or Review Board makes disposition information available under paragraph (9)(a) may disclose it for research or statistical purposes, but not in any form or manner that could reasonably be expected to identify any person to whom it relates.

Prohibition on publication

(11) No person shall publish in any document or broadcast or transmit in any way

(a) any disposition information that is prohibited from being disclosed pursuant to subsection (7); or

(b) any part of the record of the proceedings in respect of which the accused was excluded pursuant to subparagraph 672.5\(10\)\(b\)\(ii\) or (iii).

Powers of courts not limited

(12) Except as otherwise provided in this section, nothing in this section limits the powers that a court may exercise apart from this section.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1997, c. 18, s. 85; 2005, c. 22, ss. 18, 42\(F\), c. 32, s. 22; 2014, c. 6, s. 8.

Record of proceedings

672.52 (1) The court or Review Board shall cause a record of the proceedings of its disposition hearings to be kept, and include in the record any assessment report submitted.

Transmittal of transcript to Review Board

(2) If a court holds a disposition hearing under subsection 672.45\(1\), whether or not it makes a disposition, it shall send without delay to the Review Board that has jurisdiction in respect of the matter, in original or copied form, a transcript of the hearing, any other document or information related to the hearing, and all exhibits filed with it, if the transcript, document, information or exhibits are in its possession.

Reasons for disposition and copies to be provided

(3) The court or Review Board shall state its reasons for making a disposition in the record of the proceedings, and shall provide every party with a copy of the disposition and those reasons.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, ss. 19, 42\(F\).

Proceedings not invalid

672.53 Any procedural irregularity in relation to a disposition hearing does not affect the validity of the hearing unless it causes the accused substantial prejudice.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Dispositions by a Court or Review Board

Terms of Dispositions

Dispositions that may be made

672.54 When a court or Review Board makes a disposition under subsection 672.45\(2\), section 672.47, subsection 672.64\(3\) or section 672.83 or 672.84, it shall, taking into account the safety of the public, which is the paramount consideration, the mental condition of the accused, the reintegration of the accused into society and the other needs of the accused, make one of the following dispositions that is necessary and appropriate in the circumstances:

(a) where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder has been rendered in respect of the accused and, in the opinion of the court or Review Board, the accused is not a significant threat to the safety of the public, by order, direct that the accused be discharged absolutely;

(b) by order, direct that the accused be discharged subject to such conditions as the court or Review Board considers appropriate; or

(c) by order, direct that the accused be detained in custody in a hospital, subject to such conditions as the court or Review Board considers appropriate.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 20; 2014, c. 6, s. 9.

Significant threat to safety of public

672.5401 For the purposes of section 672.54, a significant threat to the safety of the public means a risk of serious physical or psychological harm to members of the public — including any victim of or witness to the offence, or any person under the age of 18 years — resulting from conduct that is criminal in nature but not necessarily violent.

2014, c. 6, s. 10.

Victim impact statement

672.541 If a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder has been rendered in respect of an accused, the court or Review Board shall

(a) at a hearing held under section 672.45, 672.47, 672.64, 672.81 or 672.82 or subsection 672.84\(5\), take into consideration any statement filed by a victim in accordance with subsection 672.5\(14\) in determining the appropriate disposition or conditions under section 672.54, to the extent that the statement is relevant to its consideration of the criteria set out in section 672.54;

(b) at a hearing held under section 672.64 or subsection 672.84\(3\), take into consideration any statement filed by a victim in accordance with subsection 672.5\(14\), to the extent that the statement is relevant to its consideration of the criteria set out in subsection 672.64\(1\) or 672.84\(3\), as the case may be, in deciding whether to find that the accused is a high-risk accused, or to revoke such a finding; and

(c) at a hearing held under section 672.81 or 672.82 in respect of a high-risk accused, take into consideration any statement filed by a victim in accordance with subsection 672.5\(14\) in determining whether to refer to the court for review the finding that the accused is a high-risk accused, to the extent that the statement is relevant to its consideration of the criteria set out in subsection 672.84\(1\).

1999, c. 25, s. 12(Preamble); 2005, c. 22, s. 21; 2014, c. 6, s. 10.

Additional conditions — safety and security

672.542 When a court or Review Board holds a hearing referred to in section 672.5, the court or Review Board shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the safety and security of any person, particularly a victim of or witness to the offence or a justice system participant, to include as a condition of the disposition that the accused

(a) abstain from communicating, directly or indirectly, with any victim, witness or other person identified in the disposition, or refrain from going to any place specified in the disposition; or

(b) comply with any other condition specified in the disposition that the court or Review Board considers necessary to ensure the safety and security of those persons.

Treatment not a condition

672.55 (1) No disposition made under section 672.54 shall direct that any psychiatric or other treatment of the accused be carried out or that the accused submit to such treatment except that the disposition may include a condition regarding psychiatric or other treatment where the accused has consented to the condition and the court or Review Board considers the condition to be reasonable and necessary in the interests of the accused.

(2) [\[Repealed, 2005, c. 22, s. 22\]](#)

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1997, c. 18, s. 86; 2005, c. 22, s. 22.

Delegated authority to vary restrictions on liberty of accused

672.56 (1) A Review Board that makes a disposition in respect of an accused under paragraph 672.54\(b\) or (c) may delegate to the person in charge of the hospital authority to direct that the restrictions on the liberty of the accused be increased or decreased within any limits and subject to any conditions set out in that disposition, and any direction so made is deemed for the purposes of this Act to be a disposition made by the Review Board.

Exception — high-risk accused

(1.1) If the accused is a high-risk accused, any direction is subject to the restrictions set out in subsection 672.64\(3\).

Notice to accused and Review Board of increase in restrictions

(2) A person who increases the restrictions on the liberty of the accused significantly pursuant to authority delegated to the person by a Review Board shall

- (a) make a record of the increased restrictions on the file of the accused; and
- (b) give notice of the increase as soon as is practicable to the accused and, if the increased restrictions remain in force for a period exceeding seven days, to the Review Board.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2014, c. 6, s. 11.

Warrant of committal

672.57 Where the court or Review Board makes a disposition under paragraph 672.54\(c\), it shall issue a warrant of committal of the accused, which may be in Form 49.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Treatment disposition

672.58 Where a verdict of unfit to stand trial is rendered and the court has not made a disposition under section 672.54 in respect of an accused, the court may, on application by the prosecutor, by order, direct that treatment of the accused be carried out for a specified period not exceeding sixty days, subject to such conditions as the court considers appropriate and, where the accused is not detained in custody, direct that the accused submit to that treatment by the person or at the hospital specified.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Criteria for disposition

672.59 (1) No disposition may be made under section 672.58 unless the court is satisfied, on the basis of the testimony of a medical practitioner, that a specific treatment should be administered to the accused for the purpose of making the accused fit to stand trial.

Evidence required

(2) The testimony required by the court for the purposes of subsection (1) shall include a statement that the medical practitioner has made an assessment of the accused and is of the opinion, based on the grounds specified, that

- (a) the accused, at the time of the assessment, was unfit to stand trial;
- (b) the psychiatric treatment and any other related medical treatment specified by the medical practitioner will likely make the accused fit to stand trial within a period not exceeding sixty days and that without that treatment the accused is likely to remain unfit to stand trial;
- (c) the risk of harm to the accused from the psychiatric and other related medical treatment specified is not disproportionate to the benefit anticipated to be derived from it; and
- (d) the psychiatric and other related medical treatment specified is the least restrictive and least intrusive treatment that could, in the circumstances, be specified for the purpose referred to in subsection (1), considering the opinions referred to in paragraphs (b) and (c).

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Notice required

672.6 (1) The court shall not make a disposition under section 672.58 unless the prosecutor notifies the accused, in writing and as soon as practicable, of the application.

Challenge by accused

(2) On receiving the notice referred to in subsection (1), the accused may challenge the application and adduce evidence for that purpose.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1997, c. 18, s. 87.

Exception

672.61 (1) The court shall not direct, and no disposition made under section 672.58 shall include, the performance of psychosurgery or electro-convulsive therapy or any other prohibited treatment that is prescribed.

Definitions

(2) In this section,

electro-convulsive therapy means a procedure for the treatment of certain mental disorders that induces, by electrical stimulation of the brain, a series of generalized convulsions; (sismothérapie)

psychosurgery means any procedure that by direct or indirect access to the brain removes, destroys or interrupts the continuity of histologically normal brain tissue, or inserts indwelling electrodes for pulsed electrical stimulation for the purpose of altering behaviour or treating psychiatric illness, but does not include neurological procedures used to diagnose or treat intractable physical pain, organic brain conditions, or epilepsy, where any of those conditions is clearly demonstrable. (psychochirurgie)

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Consent of hospital required for treatment

672.62 (1) No court shall make a disposition under section 672.58 without the consent of

- (a) the person in charge of the hospital where the accused is to be treated; or
- (b) the person to whom responsibility for the treatment of the accused is assigned by the court.

Consent of accused not required for treatment

(2) The court may direct that treatment of an accused be carried out pursuant to a disposition made under section 672.58 without the consent of the accused or a person who, according to the laws of the province where the disposition is made, is authorized to consent for the accused.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Effective date of disposition

672.63 A disposition shall come into force on the day on which it is made or on any later day that the court or Review Board specifies in it, and shall remain in force until the Review Board holds a hearing to review the disposition and makes another disposition.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 23.

High-Risk Accused

Finding

672.64 (1) On application made by the prosecutor before any disposition to discharge an accused absolutely, the court may, at the conclusion of a hearing, find the accused to be a high-risk accused if the accused has been found not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder for a serious personal injury offence, as defined in subsection 672.81\(1.3\), the accused was 18 years of age or more at the time of the commission of the offence and

- (a) the court is satisfied that there is a substantial likelihood that the accused will use violence that could endanger the life or safety of another person; or
- (b) the court is of the opinion that the acts that constitute the offence were of such a brutal nature as to indicate a risk of grave physical or psychological harm to another person.

Factors to consider

(2) In deciding whether to find that the accused is a high-risk accused, the court shall consider all relevant evidence, including

- (a) the nature and circumstances of the offence;
- (b) any pattern of repetitive behaviour of which the offence forms a part;
- (c) the accused's current mental condition;

(d) the past and expected course of the accused's treatment, including the accused's willingness to follow treatment; and

(e) the opinions of experts who have examined the accused.

Detention of high-risk accused

(3) If the court finds the accused to be a high-risk accused, the court shall make a disposition under paragraph 672.54\(c\), but the accused's detention must not be subject to any condition that would permit the accused to be absent from the hospital unless

(a) it is appropriate, in the opinion of the person in charge of the hospital, for the accused to be absent from the hospital for medical reasons or for any purpose that is necessary for the accused's treatment, if the accused is escorted by a person who is authorized by the person in charge of the hospital; and

(b) a structured plan has been prepared to address any risk related to the accused's absence and, as a result, that absence will not present an undue risk to the public.

Appeal

(4) A decision not to find an accused to be a high-risk accused is deemed to be a disposition for the purpose of sections 672.72 to 672.78.

For greater certainty

(5) For greater certainty, a finding that an accused is a high-risk accused is a disposition and sections 672.72 to 672.78 apply to it.

Dual Status Offenders

Where court imposes a sentence

672.67 (1) Where a court imposes a sentence of imprisonment on an offender who is, or thereby becomes, a dual status offender, that sentence takes precedence over any prior custodial disposition, pending any placement decision by the Review Board.

Custodial disposition by court

(2) Where a court imposes a custodial disposition on an accused who is, or thereby becomes, a dual status offender, the disposition takes precedence over any prior sentence of imprisonment pending any placement decision by the Review Board.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1995, c. 22, s. 10; 2005, c. 22, s. 25.

Definition of Minister

672.68 (1) In this section and in sections 672.69 and 672.7, Minister means the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness or the Minister responsible for correctional services of the province to which a dual status offender may be sent pursuant to a sentence of imprisonment.

Placement decision by Review Board

(2) On application by the Minister or of its own motion, where the Review Board is of the opinion that the place of custody of a dual status offender pursuant to a sentence or custodial disposition made by the court is inappropriate to meet the mental health needs of the offender or to safeguard the well-being of other persons, the Review Board shall, after giving the offender and the Minister reasonable notice, decide whether to place the offender in custody in a hospital or in a prison.

Idem

(3) In making a placement decision, the Review Board shall take into consideration

- (a) the need to protect the public from dangerous persons;
- (b) the treatment needs of the offender and the availability of suitable treatment resources to address those needs;
- (c) whether the offender would consent to or is a suitable candidate for treatment;
- (d) any submissions made to the Review Board by the offender or any other party to the proceedings and any assessment report submitted in writing to the Review Board; and
- (e) any other factors that the Review Board considers relevant.

Time for making placement decision

(4) The Review Board shall make its placement decision as soon as practicable but not later than thirty days after receiving an application from, or giving notice to, the Minister under subsection (2), unless the Review Board and the Minister agree to a longer period not exceeding sixty days.

Effects of placement decision

(5) Where the offender is detained in a prison pursuant to the placement decision of the Review Board, the Minister is responsible for the supervision and control of the offender.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 10, s. 34.

Minister and Review Board entitled to access

672.69 (1) The Minister and the Review Board are entitled to have access to any dual status offender in respect of whom a placement decision has been made, for the purpose of conducting a review of the sentence or disposition imposed.

Review of placement decisions

(2) The Review Board shall hold a hearing as soon as is practicable to review a placement decision, on application by the Minister or the dual status offender who is the subject of the decision, where the Review Board is satisfied that a significant change in circumstances requires it.

Idem

(3) The Review Board may of its own motion hold a hearing to review a placement decision after giving the Minister and the dual status offender who is subject to it reasonable notice.

Minister shall be a party

(4) The Minister shall be a party in any proceedings relating to the placement of a dual status offender.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 42\(F\).

Notice of discharge

672.7 (1) Where the Minister or the Review Board intends to discharge a dual status offender from custody, each shall give written notice to the other indicating the time, place and conditions of the discharge.

Warrant of committal

(2) A Review Board that makes a placement decision shall issue a warrant of committal of the accused, which may be in Form 50.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Detention to count as service of term

672.71 (1) Each day of detention of a dual status offender pursuant to a placement decision or a custodial disposition shall be treated as a day of service of the term of imprisonment, and the accused shall be deemed, for all purposes, to be lawfully confined in a prison.

Disposition takes precedence over probation orders

(2) When a dual status offender is convicted or discharged on the conditions set out in a probation order made under section 730 in respect of an offence but is not sentenced to a term of imprisonment, the custodial disposition in respect of the accused comes into force and, notwithstanding subsection 732.2\(1\), takes precedence over any probation order made in respect of the offence.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1995, c. 22, s. 10.

Appeals

Grounds for appeal

672.72 (1) Any party may appeal against a disposition made by a court or a Review Board, or a placement decision made by a Review Board, to the court of appeal of the province where the disposition or placement decision was made on any ground of appeal that raises a question of law or fact alone or of mixed law and fact.

Limitation period for appeal

(2) An appellant shall give notice of an appeal against a disposition or placement decision in the manner directed by the applicable rules of court within fifteen days after the day on which the appellant receives a copy of the placement decision or disposition and the reasons for it or within any further time that the court of appeal, or a judge of that court, may direct.

Appeal to be heard expeditiously

(3) The court of appeal shall hear an appeal against a disposition or placement decision in or out of the regular sessions of the court, as soon as practicable after the day on which the notice of appeal is given, within any period that may be fixed by the court of appeal, a judge of the court of appeal, or the rules of that court.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1997, c. 18, s. 88.

Appeal on the transcript

672.73 (1) An appeal against a disposition by a court or Review Board or placement decision by a Review Board shall be based on a transcript of the proceedings and any other evidence that the court of appeal finds necessary to admit in the interests of justice.

Additional evidence

(2) For the purpose of admitting additional evidence under this section, subsections 683\(1\) and \(2\) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Notice of appeal to be given to court or Review Board

672.74 (1) The clerk of the court of appeal, on receiving notice of an appeal against a disposition or placement decision, shall notify the court or Review Board that made the disposition.

Transmission of records to court of appeal

(2) On receipt of notification under subsection (1), the court or Review Board shall transmit to the court of appeal, before the time that the appeal is to be heard or within any time that the court of appeal or a judge of that court may direct,

- (a) a copy of the disposition or placement decision;
- (b) all exhibits filed with the court or Review Board or a copy of them; and
- (c) all other material in its possession respecting the hearing.

Record to be kept by court of appeal

(3) The clerk of the court of appeal shall keep the material referred to in subsection (2) with the records of the court of appeal.

Appellant to provide transcript of evidence

(4) Unless it is contrary to an order of the court of appeal or any applicable rules of court, the appellant shall provide the court of appeal and the respondent with a transcript of any evidence taken before a court or Review Board by a stenographer or a sound recording apparatus, certified by the stenographer or in accordance with subsection 540\(6\), as the case may be.

Saving

(5) An appeal shall not be dismissed by the court of appeal by reason only that a person other than the appellant failed to comply with this section.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 42\(F\).

Automatic suspension of certain dispositions

672.75 The filing of a notice of appeal against a disposition made under section 672.58 suspends the application of the disposition pending the determination of the appeal.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2014, c. 6, s. 13.

Application respecting dispositions under appeal

672.76 (1) Any party who gives notice to each of the other parties, within the time and in the manner prescribed, may apply to a judge of the court of appeal for an order under this section respecting a disposition or placement decision that is under appeal.

Discretionary powers respecting suspension of dispositions

(2) On receipt of an application made pursuant to subsection (1) a judge of the court of appeal may, if satisfied that the mental condition of the accused justifies it,

(a) by order, direct that a disposition made under section 672.58 be carried out pending the determination of the appeal, despite section 672.75;

(a.1) by order, direct that a disposition made under paragraph 672.54\(a\) be suspended pending the determination of the appeal;

(b) by order, direct that the application of a placement decision or a disposition made under paragraph 672.54\(b\) or (c) be suspended pending the determination of the appeal;

(c) where the application of a disposition is suspended pursuant to section 672.75 or paragraph (b), make any other disposition in respect of the accused that is appropriate in the circumstances, other than a disposition under paragraph 672.54\(a\) or section 672.58, pending the determination of the appeal;

(d) where the application of a placement decision is suspended pursuant to an order made under paragraph (b), make any other placement decision that is appropriate in the circumstances, pending the determination of the appeal; and

(e) give any directions that the judge considers necessary for expediting the appeal.

Copy of order to parties

(3) A judge of the court of appeal who makes an order under this section shall send a copy of the order to each of the parties without delay.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2014, c. 6, s. 14.

Effect of suspension of disposition

672.77 Where the application of a disposition or placement decision appealed from is suspended, a disposition, or in the absence of a disposition any order for the interim release or detention of the accused, that was in effect immediately before the disposition or placement decision appealed from took effect, shall be in force pending the determination of the appeal, subject to any disposition made under paragraph 672.76\(2\) (c).

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Powers of court of appeal

672.78 (1) The court of appeal may allow an appeal against a disposition or placement decision and set aside an order made by the court or Review Board, where the court of appeal is of the opinion that

- (a) it is unreasonable or cannot be supported by the evidence;
- (b) it is based on a wrong decision on a question of law; or
- (c) there was a miscarriage of justice.

Idem

(2) The court of appeal may dismiss an appeal against a disposition or placement decision where the court is of the opinion

- (a) that paragraphs (1)(a), (b) and (c) do not apply; or
- (b) that paragraph (1)(b) may apply, but the court finds that no substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice has occurred.

Orders that the court may make

(3) Where the court of appeal allows an appeal against a disposition or placement decision, it may

- (a) make any disposition under section 672.54 or any placement decision that the Review Board could have made;
- (b) refer the matter back to the court or Review Board for re-hearing, in whole or in part, in accordance with any directions that the court of appeal considers appropriate; or
- (c) make any other order that justice requires.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1997, c. 18, s. 89.

672.79 [Repealed, 2005, c. 22, s. 26]

Review of Dispositions

Mandatory review of dispositions

672.81 (1) A Review Board shall hold a hearing not later than twelve months after making a disposition and every twelve months thereafter for as long as the disposition remains in force, to review any disposition that it has made in respect of an accused, other than an absolute discharge under paragraph 672.54\(a\).

Extension on consent

(1.1) Despite subsection (1), the Review Board may extend the time for holding a hearing to a maximum of twenty-four months after the making or reviewing of a disposition if the accused is represented by counsel and the accused and the Attorney General consent to the extension.

Extension for serious personal violence offence

(1.2) Despite subsection (1), at the conclusion of a hearing under this section the Review Board may, after making a disposition, extend the time for holding a subsequent hearing under this section to a maximum of twenty-four months if

- (a) the accused has been found not criminally responsible for a serious personal injury offence;
- (b) the accused is subject to a disposition made under paragraph 672.54\(c\); and
- (c) the Review Board is satisfied on the basis of any relevant information, including disposition information within the meaning of subsection 672.51(1) and an assessment report made under an assessment ordered under paragraph 672.121\(a\), that the condition of the accused is not likely to improve and that detention remains necessary for the period of the extension.

Definition of serious personal injury offence

(1.3) For the purposes of subsection (1.2), serious personal injury offence means

- (a) an indictable offence involving
 - (i) the use or attempted use of violence against another person, or
 - (ii) conduct endangering or likely to endanger the life or safety of another person or inflicting or likely to inflict severe psychological damage upon another person; or
- (b) an indictable offence referred to in section 151, 152, 153, 153.1, 155, 160, 170, 171, 172, 271, 272 or 273 or an attempt to commit such an offence.

Extension on consent — high-risk accused

(1.31) Despite subsections (1) to (1.2), the Review Board may extend the time for holding a hearing in respect of a high-risk accused to a maximum of 36 months after making or reviewing a disposition if the accused is represented by counsel and the accused and the Attorney General consent to the extension.

Extension — no likely improvement

(1.32) Despite subsections (1) to (1.2), at the conclusion of a hearing under subsection 672.47\(4\) or this section in respect of a high-risk accused, the Review Board may, after making a disposition, extend the time for holding a subsequent hearing under this section to a maximum of 36 months if the Review Board is satisfied on the basis of any relevant information, including disposition information as defined in subsection 672.51(1) and an assessment report made under an assessment ordered under paragraph 672.121\(c\), that the accused's condition is not likely to improve and that detention remains necessary for the period of the extension.

Notice

(1.4) If the Review Board extends the time for holding a hearing under subsection (1.2) or (1.32), it shall provide notice of the extension to the accused, the prosecutor and the person in charge of the hospital where the accused is detained.

Appeal

(1.5) A decision by the Review Board to extend the time for holding a hearing under subsection (1.2) or (1.32) is deemed to be a disposition for the purpose of sections 672.72 to 672.78.

Additional mandatory reviews in custody cases

(2) The Review Board shall hold a hearing to review any disposition made under paragraph 672.54\(b\) or (c) as soon as practicable after receiving notice that the person in charge of the place where the accused is detained or directed to attend requests the review.

Review in case of increase on restrictions on liberty

(2.1) The Review Board shall hold a hearing to review a decision to significantly increase the restrictions on the liberty of the accused, as soon as practicable after receiving the notice referred to in subsection 672.56\(2\).

Idem

(3) Where an accused is detained in custody pursuant to a disposition made under paragraph 672.54\(c\) and a sentence of imprisonment is subsequently imposed on the accused in respect of another offence, the Review Board shall hold a hearing to review the disposition as soon as is practicable after receiving notice of that sentence.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, ss. 27, 42(F); 2014, c. 6, s. 15.

Discretionary review

672.82 (1) A Review Board may hold a hearing to review any of its dispositions at any time, of its own motion or at the request of the accused or any other party.

Review Board to provide notice

(1.1) Where a Review Board holds a hearing under subsection (1) of its own motion, it shall provide notice to the prosecutor, the accused and any other party.

Review cancels appeal

(2) Where a party requests a review of a disposition under this section, the party is deemed to abandon any appeal against the disposition taken under section 672.72.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 28.

Disposition by Review Board

672.83 (1) At a hearing held pursuant to section 672.81 or 672.82, the Review Board shall, except where a determination is made under subsection 672.48\(1\) that the accused is fit to stand trial, review the disposition made in respect of the accused and make any other disposition that the Review Board considers to be appropriate in the circumstances.

(2) [\[Repealed, 2005, c. 22, s. 29\]](#)

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1997, c. 18, s. 90; 2005, c. 22, ss. 29, 42\(F\).

Review of finding — high-risk accused

672.84 (1) If a Review Board holds a hearing under section 672.81 or 672.82 in respect of a high-risk accused, it shall, on the basis of any relevant information, including disposition information as defined in subsection 672.51(1) and an assessment report made under an assessment ordered under paragraph 672.121\(c\), if it is satisfied that there is not a substantial likelihood that the accused — whether found to be a high-risk accused under paragraph 672.64\(1\)\(a\) or (b) — will use violence that could endanger the life or safety of another person, refer the finding for review to the superior court of criminal jurisdiction.

Review of conditions

(2) If the Review Board is not so satisfied, it shall review the conditions of detention imposed under paragraph 672.54\(c\), subject to the restrictions set out in subsection 672.64\(3\).

Review of finding by court

(3) If the Review Board refers the finding to the superior court of criminal jurisdiction for review, the court shall, at the conclusion of a hearing, revoke the finding if the court is satisfied that there is not a substantial likelihood that the accused will use violence that could endanger the life or safety of another person, in which case the court or the Review Board shall make a disposition under any of paragraphs 672.54\(a\) to \(c\).

Hearing and disposition

(4) Any disposition referred to in subsection (3) is subject to sections 672.45 to 672.47 as if the revocation is a verdict.

Review of conditions

(5) If the court does not revoke the finding, it shall immediately send to the Review Board, in original or copied form, a transcript of the hearing, any other document or information related to the hearing, and all exhibits filed with it, if the transcript, document, information or exhibits are in its possession. The Review Board shall, as soon as practicable but not later than 45 days after the day on which the court decides not to revoke the finding, hold a hearing and review the conditions of detention imposed under paragraph 672.54\(c\), subject to the restrictions set out in subsection 672.64\(3\).

Appeal

(6) A decision under subsection (1) about referring the finding to the court for review and a decision under subsection (3) about revoking the finding are deemed to be dispositions for the purpose of sections 672.72 to 672.78.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 30; 2014, c. 6, s. 16.

Power to Compel Appearance

Bringing accused before Review Board

672.85 For the purpose of bringing the accused in respect of whom a hearing is to be held before the Review Board, including in circumstances in which the accused did not attend a previous hearing in contravention of a summons or warrant, the chairperson

(a) shall order the person having custody of the accused to bring the accused to the hearing at the time and place fixed for it; or

(b) may, if the accused is not in custody, issue a summons or warrant to compel the accused to appear at the hearing at the time and place fixed for it.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, ss. 32, 42\(F\).

Stay of Proceedings

Recommendation by Review Board

672.851 (1) The Review Board may, of its own motion, make a recommendation to the court that has jurisdiction in respect of the offence charged against an accused found unfit to stand trial to hold an inquiry to determine whether a stay of proceedings should be ordered if

(a) the Review Board has held a hearing under section 672.81 or 672.82 in respect of the accused; and

(b) on the basis of any relevant information, including disposition information within the meaning of subsection 672.51(1) and an assessment report made under an assessment ordered under paragraph 672.121\(a\), the Review Board is of the opinion that

(i) the accused remains unfit to stand trial and is not likely to ever become fit to stand trial, and

(ii) the accused does not pose a significant threat to the safety of the public.

Notice

(2) If the Review Board makes a recommendation to the court to hold an inquiry, the Review Board shall provide notice to the accused, the prosecutor and any party who, in the opinion of the Review Board, has a substantial interest in protecting the interests of the accused.

Inquiry

(3) As soon as practicable after receiving the recommendation referred to in subsection (1), the court may hold an inquiry to determine whether a stay of proceedings should be ordered.

Court may act on own motion

(4) A court may, of its own motion, conduct an inquiry to determine whether a stay of proceedings should be ordered if the court is of the opinion, on the basis of any relevant information, that

(a) the accused remains unfit to stand trial and is not likely to ever become fit to stand trial; and

(b) the accused does not pose a significant threat to the safety of the public.

Assessment order

(5) If the court holds an inquiry under subsection (3) or (4), it shall order an assessment of the accused.

Application

(6) Section 672.51 applies to an inquiry of the court under this section.

Stay

(7) The court may, on completion of an inquiry under this section, order a stay of proceedings if it is satisfied

(a) on the basis of clear information, that the accused remains unfit to stand trial and is not likely to ever become fit to stand trial;

(b) that the accused does not pose a significant threat to the safety of the public; and

(c) that a stay is in the interests of the proper administration of justice.

Proper administration of justice

(8) In order to determine whether a stay of proceedings is in the interests of the proper administration of justice, the court shall consider any submissions of the prosecutor, the accused and all other parties and the following factors:

- (a) the nature and seriousness of the alleged offence;
- (b) the salutary and deleterious effects of the order for a stay of proceedings, including any effect on public confidence in the administration of justice;
- (c) the time that has elapsed since the commission of the alleged offence and whether an inquiry has been held under section 672.33 to decide whether sufficient evidence can be adduced to put the accused on trial; and
- (d) any other factor that the court considers relevant.

Effect of stay

(9) If a stay of proceedings is ordered by the court, any disposition made in respect of the accused ceases to have effect. If a stay of proceedings is not ordered, the finding of unfit to stand trial and any disposition made in respect of the accused remain in force, until the Review Board holds a disposition hearing and makes a disposition in respect of the accused under section 672.83.

2005, c. 22, s. 33.

Appeal

672.852 (1) The Court of Appeal may allow an appeal against an order made under subsection 672.851\(7\) for a stay of proceedings, if the Court of Appeal is of the opinion that the order is unreasonable or cannot be supported by the evidence.

Effect

(2) If the Court of Appeal allows the appeal, it may set aside the order for a stay of proceedings and restore the finding that the accused is unfit to stand trial and the disposition made in respect of the accused.

2005, c. 22, s. 33.

Interprovincial Transfers

Interprovincial transfers

672.86 (1) An accused who is detained in custody or directed to attend at a hospital pursuant to a disposition made by a court or Review Board under paragraph 672.54\(c\) or a court under section 672.58 may be transferred to any other place in Canada where

- (a) the Review Board of the province where the accused is detained or directed to attend recommends a transfer for the purpose of the reintegration of the accused into society or the recovery, treatment or custody of the accused; and

(b) the Attorney General of the province to which the accused is being transferred, or an officer authorized by that Attorney General, and the Attorney General of the province from which the accused is being transferred, or an officer authorized by that Attorney General, give their consent.

Transfer where accused in custody

(2) Where an accused who is detained in custody is to be transferred, an officer authorized by the Attorney General of the province where the accused is being detained shall sign a warrant specifying the place in Canada to which the accused is to be transferred.

Transfer if accused not in custody

(2.1) An accused who is not detained in custody may be transferred to any other place in Canada where

(a) the Review Board of the province from which the accused is being transferred recommends a transfer for the purpose of the reintegration of the accused into society or the recovery or treatment of the accused; and

(b) the Attorney General of the province to which the accused is being transferred, or an officer authorized by that Attorney General, and the Attorney General of the province from which the accused is being transferred, or an officer authorized by that Attorney General, give their consent.

Order

(3) Where an accused is being transferred in accordance with subsection (2.1), the Review Board of the province from which the accused is being transferred shall, by order,

(a) direct that the accused be taken into custody and transferred pursuant to a warrant under subsection (2); or

(b) direct that the accused attend at a specified place in Canada, subject to any conditions that the Review Board of the province to or from which the accused is being transferred considers appropriate.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 34.

Delivery and detention of accused

672.87 A warrant described in subsection 672.86\(2\) is sufficient authority

(a) for any person who is responsible for the custody of an accused to have the accused taken into custody and conveyed to the person in charge of the place specified in the warrant; and

(b) for the person specified in the warrant to detain the accused in accordance with any disposition made in respect of the accused under paragraph 672.54\(c\).

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Review Board of receiving province

672.88 (1) The Review Board of the province to which an accused is transferred under section 672.86 has exclusive jurisdiction over the accused, and may exercise the powers and shall perform the duties mentioned in sections 672.5 and 672.81 to 672.84 as if that Review Board had made the disposition in respect of the accused.

Agreement

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the Attorney General of the province to which an accused is transferred may enter into an agreement subject to this Act with the Attorney General of the province from which the accused is transferred, enabling the Review Board of that province to exercise the powers and perform the duties referred to in subsection (1) in respect of the accused, in the circumstances and subject to the terms and conditions set out in the agreement.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2014, c. 6, s. 17.

Other interprovincial transfers

672.89 (1) If an accused who is detained in custody under a disposition made by a Review Board is transferred to another province otherwise than under section 672.86, the Review Board of the province from which the accused is transferred has exclusive jurisdiction over the accused and may continue to exercise the powers and shall continue to perform the duties mentioned in sections 672.5 and 672.81 to 672.84.

Agreement

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the Attorneys General of the provinces to and from which the accused is to be transferred as described in that subsection may, after the transfer is made, enter into an agreement subject to this Act, enabling the Review Board of the province to which an accused is transferred to exercise the powers and perform the duties referred to in subsection (1) in respect of the accused, subject to the terms and conditions and in the circumstances set out in the agreement.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2014, c. 6, s. 18.

Enforcement of Orders and Regulations

Execution of warrant anywhere in Canada

672.9 Any warrant or process issued in relation to an assessment order or disposition made in respect of an accused may be executed or served in any place in Canada outside the province where the order or disposition was made as if it had been issued in that province.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 1997, c. 18, s. 91; 2005, c. 22, s. 35\(F\).

Arrest without warrant for contravention of disposition

672.91 A peace officer may arrest an accused without a warrant at any place in Canada if the peace officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has contravened or wilfully failed to comply with the assessment order or disposition or any condition of it, or is about to do so.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 36.

Release or delivery of accused subject to paragraph 672.54\(b\) disposition order

672.92 (1) If a peace officer arrests an accused under section 672.91 who is subject to a disposition made under paragraph 672.54(b) or an assessment order, the peace officer, as soon as practicable, may release the accused from custody and

- (a) issue a summons or appearance notice compelling the accused's appearance before a justice; and
- (b) deliver the accused to the place specified in the disposition or assessment order.

No release

(2) A peace officer shall not release an accused under subsection (1) if the peace officer believes, on reasonable grounds,

- (a) that it is necessary in the public interest that the accused be detained in custody having regard to all the circumstances, including the need to
 - (i) establish the identity of the accused,
 - (ii) establish the terms and conditions of a disposition made under section 672.54 or of an assessment order,
 - (iii) prevent the commission of an offence, or
 - (iv) prevent the accused from contravening or failing to comply with the disposition or assessment order;
- (b) that the accused is subject to a disposition or an assessment order of a court, or Review Board, of another province; or
- (c) that, if the accused is released from custody, the accused will fail to attend, as required, before a justice.

Accused to be brought before justice

(3) If a peace officer does not release the accused, the accused shall be taken before a justice having jurisdiction in the territorial division in which the accused is arrested, without unreasonable delay and in any event within twenty-four hours after the arrest.

Accused subject to paragraph 672.54\(c\) disposition order

(4) If a peace officer arrests an accused under section 672.91 who is subject to a disposition under paragraph 672.54\(c\), the accused shall be taken before a justice having jurisdiction in the territorial division in which the accused is arrested without unreasonable delay and, in any event, within twenty-four hours.

Justice not available

(5) If a justice described in subsection (3) or (4) is not available within twenty-four hours after the arrest, the accused shall be taken before a justice as soon as practicable.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 36.

Where justice to release accused

672.93 (1) A justice shall release an accused who is brought before the justice under section 672.92 unless the justice is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has contravened or failed to comply with a disposition or an assessment order.

Notice

(1.1) If the justice releases the accused, notice shall be given to the court or Review Board, as the case may be, that made the disposition or assessment order.

Order of justice pending decision of Review Board

(2) If the justice is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has contravened or failed to comply with a disposition or an assessment order, the justice, pending a hearing of a Review Board with respect to the disposition or a hearing of a court or Review Board with respect to the assessment order, may make an order that is appropriate in the circumstances in relation to the accused, including an order that the accused be returned to a place that is specified in the disposition or assessment order. If the justice makes an order under this subsection, notice shall be given to the court or Review Board, as the case may be, that made the disposition or assessment order.

Powers of Review Board

672.94 Where a Review Board receives a notice given under subsection 672.93\(1.1\) or \(2\), it may exercise the powers and shall perform the duties mentioned in sections 672.5 and 672.81 to 672.83 as if the Review Board were reviewing a disposition.

1991, c. 43, s. 4; 2005, c. 22, s. 36.

Regulations

672.95 The Governor in Council may make regulations

- (a) prescribing anything that may be prescribed under this Part; and
- (b) generally to carry out the purposes and provisions of this Part.

1991, c. 43, s. 4.

Right of Appeal

Procedure abolished

674 No proceedings other than those authorized by this Part and Part XXVI shall be taken by way of appeal in proceedings in respect of indictable offences.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 602.

Right of appeal of person convicted

675 (1) A person who is convicted by a trial court in proceedings by indictment may appeal to the court of appeal

(a) against his conviction

(i) on any ground of appeal that involves a question of law alone,

(ii) on any ground of appeal that involves a question of fact or a question of mixed law and fact, with leave of the court of appeal or a judge thereof or on the certificate of the trial judge that the case is a proper case for appeal, or

(iii) on any ground of appeal not mentioned in subparagraph (i) or (ii) that appears to the court of appeal to be a sufficient ground of appeal, with leave of the court of appeal; or

(b) against the sentence passed by the trial court, with leave of the court of appeal or a judge thereof unless that sentence is one fixed by law.

Summary conviction appeals

(1.1) A person may appeal, pursuant to subsection (1), with leave of the court of appeal or a judge of that court, to that court in respect of a summary conviction or a sentence passed with respect to a summary conviction as if the summary conviction had been a conviction in proceedings by indictment if

(a) there has not been an appeal with respect to the summary conviction;

(b) the summary conviction offence was tried with an indictable offence; and

(c) there is an appeal in respect of the indictable offence.

Appeal against absolute term in excess of 10 years

(2) A person who has been convicted of second degree murder and sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for a specified number of years in excess of ten may appeal to the court of appeal against the number of years in excess of ten of his imprisonment without eligibility for parole.

Appeal against section 743.6 order

(2.1) A person against whom an order under section 743.6 has been made may appeal to the court of appeal against the order.

Persons under eighteen

(2.2) A person who was under the age of eighteen at the time of the commission of the offence for which the person was convicted of first degree murder or second degree murder and sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole until the person has served the period specified by the judge presiding at the trial may appeal to the court of appeal against the number of years in excess of the minimum number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole that are required to be served in respect of that person's case.

Appeal against s. 745.51(1) order

(2.3) A person against whom an order under subsection 745.51\(1\) has been made may appeal to the court of appeal against the order.

Appeals against verdicts based on mental disorder

(3) Where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered in respect of a person, that person may appeal to the court of appeal against that verdict on any ground of appeal mentioned in subparagraph (1)(a)(i), (ii) or (iii) and subject to the conditions described therein.

Where application for leave to appeal refused by judge

(4) Where a judge of the court of appeal refuses leave to appeal under this section otherwise than under paragraph (1)(b), the appellant may, by filing notice in writing with the court of appeal within seven days after the refusal, have the application for leave to appeal determined by the court of appeal.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 675; 1991, c. 43, s. 9; 1995, c. 42, s. 73; 1997, c. 18, s. 92; 1999, c. 31, s. 68; 2002, c. 13, s. 64; 2011, c. 5, s. 2.

Right of Attorney General to appeal

676 (1) The Attorney General or counsel instructed by him for the purpose may appeal to the court of appeal

(a) against a judgment or verdict of acquittal or a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder of a trial court in proceedings by indictment on any ground of appeal that involves a question of law alone;

(b) against an order of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction that quashes an indictment or in any manner refuses or fails to exercise jurisdiction on an indictment;

(c) against an order of a trial court that stays proceedings on an indictment or quashes an indictment; or

(d) with leave of the court of appeal or a judge thereof, against the sentence passed by a trial court in proceedings by indictment, unless that sentence is one fixed by law.

Summary conviction appeals

(1.1) The Attorney General or counsel instructed by the Attorney General may appeal, pursuant to subsection (1), with leave of the court of appeal or a judge of that court, to that court in respect of a verdict of acquittal in a summary offence proceeding or a sentence passed with respect to a summary conviction as if the summary offence proceeding was a proceeding by indictment if

(a) there has not been an appeal with respect to the summary conviction;

(b) the summary conviction offence was tried with an indictable offence; and

(c) there is an appeal in respect of the indictable offence.

Acquittal

(2) For the purposes of this section, a judgment or verdict of acquittal includes an acquittal in respect of an offence specifically charged where the accused has, on the trial thereof, been convicted or discharged under section 730 of any other offence.

Appeal against verdict of unfit to stand trial

(3) The Attorney General or counsel instructed by the Attorney General for the purpose may appeal to the court of appeal against a verdict that an accused is unfit to stand trial, on any ground of appeal that involves a question of law alone.

Appeal against ineligible parole period

(4) The Attorney General or counsel instructed by him for the purpose may appeal to the court of appeal in respect of a conviction for second degree murder, against the number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole, being less than twenty-five, that has been imposed as a result of that conviction.

Appeal against decision not to make section 743.6 order

(5) The Attorney General or counsel instructed by the Attorney General for the purpose may appeal to the court of appeal against the decision of the court not to make an order under section 743.6.

Appeal against decision not to make s. 745.51\(1\) order

(6) The Attorney General or counsel instructed by the Attorney General for the purpose may appeal to the court of appeal against the decision of the court not to make an order under subsection 745.51\(1\).

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 676; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 139, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 18(F); 1991, c. 43, s. 9; 1995, c. 22, s. 10, c. 42, s. 74; 1997, c. 18, s. 93; 2002, c. 13, s. 65; 2008, c. 18, s. 28; 2011, c. 5, s. 3.

Appeal re costs

676.1 A party who is ordered to pay costs may, with leave of the court of appeal or a judge of a court of appeal, appeal the order or the amount of costs ordered.

1997, c. 18, s. 94.

Specifying grounds of dissent

677 Where a judge of the court of appeal expresses an opinion dissenting from the judgment of the court, the judgment of the court shall specify any grounds in law on which the dissent, in whole or in part, is based.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 677; 1994, c. 44, s. 67.

Procedure on Appeals

Notice of appeal

678 (1) An appellant who proposes to appeal to the court of appeal or to obtain the leave of that court to appeal shall give notice of appeal or notice of his application for leave to appeal in such manner and within such period as may be directed by rules of court.

Extension of time

(2) The court of appeal or a judge thereof may at any time extend the time within which notice of appeal or notice of an application for leave to appeal may be given.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 607; 1972, c. 13, s. 53; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 16.

Service where respondent cannot be found

678.1 Where a respondent cannot be found after reasonable efforts have been made to serve the respondent with a notice of appeal or notice of an application for leave to appeal, service of the notice of appeal or the notice of the application for leave to appeal may be effected substitutionally in the manner and within the period directed by a judge of the court of appeal.

R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 140; 1992, c. 1, s. 60(F).

Release pending determination of appeal

679 (1) A judge of the court of appeal may, in accordance with this section, release an appellant from custody pending the determination of his appeal if,

- (a) in the case of an appeal to the court of appeal against conviction, the appellant has given notice of appeal or, where leave is required, notice of his application for leave to appeal pursuant to section 678;
- (b) in the case of an appeal to the court of appeal against sentence only, the appellant has been granted leave to appeal; or
- (c) in the case of an appeal or an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, the appellant has filed and served his notice of appeal or, where leave is required, his application for leave to appeal.

Notice of application for release

(2) Where an appellant applies to a judge of the court of appeal to be released pending the determination of his appeal, he shall give written notice of the application to the prosecutor or to such other person as a judge of the court of appeal directs.

Circumstances in which appellant may be released

(3) In the case of an appeal referred to in paragraph (1)(a) or (c), the judge of the court of appeal may order that the appellant be released pending the determination of his appeal if the appellant establishes that

- (a) the appeal or application for leave to appeal is not frivolous;
 - (b) he will surrender himself into custody in accordance with the terms of the order;
- and

(c) his detention is not necessary in the public interest.

Idem

(4) In the case of an appeal referred to in paragraph (1)(b), the judge of the court of appeal may order that the appellant be released pending the determination of his appeal or until otherwise ordered by a judge of the court of appeal if the appellant establishes that

(a) the appeal has sufficient merit that, in the circumstances, it would cause unnecessary hardship if he were detained in custody;

(b) he will surrender himself into custody in accordance with the terms of the order; and

(c) his detention is not necessary in the public interest.

Conditions of release order

(5) If the judge of the court of appeal does not refuse the appellant's application, the judge shall make a release order referred to in section 515, the form of which may be adapted to suit the circumstances, which must include a condition that the accused surrender themselves into custody in accordance with the order.

Immediate release of appellant

(5.1) The person having the custody of the appellant shall, if the appellant complies with the release order, immediately release the appellant.

Applicable provisions

(6) Sections 495.1, 512.3 and 524 apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, in respect of any proceedings under this section.

Release or detention pending hearing of reference

(7) If, with respect to any person, the Minister of Justice gives a direction or makes a reference under section 696.3, this section applies to the release or detention of that person pending the hearing and determination of the reference as though that person were an appellant in an appeal described in paragraph (1)(a).

Release or detention pending new trial or new hearing

(7.1) Where, with respect to any person, the court of appeal or the Supreme Court of Canada orders a new trial, section 515 or 522, as the case may be, applies to the release or detention of that person pending the new trial or new hearing as though that person were charged with the offence for the first time, except that the powers of a justice under section 515 or of a judge under section 522 are exercised by a judge of the court of appeal.

Application to appeals on summary conviction proceedings

(8) This section applies to applications for leave to appeal and appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada in summary conviction proceedings.

(9) [Repealed, 2019, c. 25, s. 279]

Directions for expediting appeal, new trial, etc.

(10) A judge of the court of appeal, where on the application of an appellant he does not make an order under subsection (5) or where he cancels an order previously made under this section, or a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada on application by an appellant in the case of an appeal to that Court, may give such directions as he thinks necessary for expediting the hearing of the appellant's appeal or for expediting the new trial or new hearing or the hearing of the reference, as the case may be.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 679; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 141; 1997, c. 18, s. 95; 1999, c. 25, s. 14(Preamble); 2002, c. 13, s. 66; 2019, c. 25, s. 279.

Review by court of appeal

680 (1) A decision made by a judge under section 522, a decision made under subsections 524\(3\) to \(5\) with respect to an accused referred to in paragraph 524\(1\)\(a\) or a decision made by a judge of the court of appeal under section 320.25 or 679 may, on the direction of the chief justice or acting chief justice of the court of appeal, be reviewed by that court and that court may, if it does not confirm the decision,

(a) vary the decision; or

(b) substitute another decision that, in its opinion, should have been made.

Single judge acting

(2) On consent of the parties, the powers of the court of appeal under subsection (1) may be exercised by a judge of that court.

Enforcement of decision

(3) A decision as varied or substituted under this section shall have effect and may be enforced in all respects as though it were the decision originally made.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 680; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 142; 1994, c. 44, s. 68; 2018, c. 21, s. 22; 2019, c. 25, s. 280; 2019, c. 25, s. 402; 2022, c. 17, s. 42.

681 [Repealed, 1991, c. 43, s. 9]

Report by judge

682 (1) Where, under this Part, an appeal is taken or an application for leave to appeal is made, the judge or provincial court judge who presided at the trial shall, at the request of the court of appeal or a judge thereof, in accordance with rules of court, furnish it or him with a report on the case or on any matter relating to the case that is specified in the request.

Transcript of evidence

(2) A copy or transcript of

- (a) the evidence taken at the trial,
- (b) any charge to the jury and any objections that were made to a charge to the jury,
- (c) the reasons for judgment, if any, and
- (d) the addresses of the prosecutor and the accused, if a ground for the appeal is based on either of the addresses, shall be furnished to the court of appeal, except in so far as it is dispensed with by order of a judge of that court.

(3) [Repealed, 1997, c. 18, s. 96]

Copies to interested parties

(4) A party to an appeal is entitled to receive, on payment of any charges that are fixed by rules of court, a copy or transcript of any material that is prepared under subsections (1) and (2).

Copy for Minister of Justice

(5) The Minister of Justice is entitled, on request, to receive a copy or transcript of any material that is prepared under subsections (1) and (2).

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 682; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 143, 203; 1997, c. 18, s. 96.

Powers of court of appeal

683 (1) For the purposes of an appeal under this Part, the court of appeal may, where it considers it in the interests of justice,

- (a) order the production of any writing, exhibit or other thing connected with the proceedings;
- (b) order any witness who would have been a compellable witness at the trial, whether or not he was called at the trial,
 - (i) to attend and be examined before the court of appeal, or
 - (ii) to be examined in the manner provided by rules of court before a judge of the court of appeal, or before any officer of the court of appeal or justice of the peace or other person appointed by the court of appeal for the purpose;
- (c) admit, as evidence, an examination that is taken under subparagraph (b)(ii);
- (d) receive the evidence, if tendered, of any witness, including the appellant, who is a competent but not compellable witness;
- (e) order that any question arising on the appeal that
 - (i) involves prolonged examination of writings or accounts, or scientific or local investigation, and

(ii) cannot in the opinion of the court of appeal conveniently be inquired into before the court of appeal, be referred for inquiry and report, in the manner provided by rules of court, to a special commissioner appointed by the court of appeal;

(f) act on the report of a commissioner who is appointed under paragraph (e) in so far as the court of appeal thinks fit to do so; and

(g) amend the indictment, unless it is of the opinion that the accused has been misled or prejudiced in his defence or appeal.

Parties entitled to adduce evidence and be heard

(2) In proceedings under this section, the parties or their counsel are entitled to examine or cross-examine witnesses and, in an inquiry under paragraph (1)(e), are entitled to be present during the inquiry, to adduce evidence and to be heard.

Remote appearance

(2.1) In proceedings under this section, the court of appeal may order that a party appear by audioconference or videoconference, if the technological means is satisfactory to the court.

Virtual presence of witnesses

(2.2) Sections 714.1 to 714.8 apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, to examinations and cross-examinations of witnesses under this section.

Application of sections 715.25 and 715.26

(2.3) Sections 715.25 and 715.26 apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, to proceedings under this section.

Other powers

(3) A court of appeal may exercise, in relation to proceedings in the court, any powers not mentioned in subsection (1) that may be exercised by the court on appeals in civil matters, and may issue any process that is necessary to enforce the orders or sentences of the court, but no costs shall be allowed to the appellant or respondent on the hearing and determination of an appeal or on any proceedings preliminary or incidental thereto.

Execution of process

(4) Any process that is issued by the court of appeal under this section may be executed anywhere in Canada.

Power to order suspension

(5) If an appeal or an application for leave to appeal has been filed in the court of appeal, that court, or a judge of that court, may, when the court, or the judge, considers it to be in the interests of justice, order that any of the following be suspended until the appeal has been determined:

- (a) an obligation to pay a fine;
- (b) an order of forfeiture or disposition of forfeited property;
- (c) an order to make restitution under section 738 or 739;
- (d) an obligation to pay a victim surcharge under section 737;
- (e) a probation order under section 731; and
- (f) a conditional sentence order under section 742.1.

Release order or recognizance

(5.1) Before making an order under paragraph (5)(e) or (f), the court of appeal, or a judge of that court, may make a release order or order the offender to enter into a recognizance.

Revocation of suspension order

(6) The court of appeal may revoke any order it makes under subsection (5) where it considers the revocation to be in the interests of justice.

Release order to be taken into account

(7) If the offender is subject to a release order under subsection (5.1), the court of appeal shall, in determining whether to vary the sentence of the offender, take into account the conditions of that order and the period for which they were imposed on the offender.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 683; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 144, c. 23 (4th Supp.), s. 5; 1995, c. 22, s. 10; 1997, c. 18, ss. 97, 141; 1999, c. 25, s. 15(Preamble); 2002, c. 13, s. 67; 2008, c. 18, s. 29; 2019, c. 25, s. 281.

Legal assistance for appellant

684 (1) A court of appeal or a judge of that court may, at any time, assign counsel to act on behalf of an accused who is a party to an appeal or to proceedings preliminary or incidental to an appeal where, in the opinion of the court or judge, it appears desirable in the interests of justice that the accused should have legal assistance and where it appears that the accused has not sufficient means to obtain that assistance.

Counsel fees and disbursements

(2) Where counsel is assigned pursuant to subsection (1) and legal aid is not granted to the accused pursuant to a provincial legal aid program, the fees and disbursements of counsel shall be paid by the Attorney General who is the appellant or respondent, as the case may be, in the appeal.

Taxation of fees and disbursements

(3) Where subsection (2) applies and counsel and the Attorney General cannot agree on fees or disbursements of counsel, the Attorney General or the counsel may apply to the registrar of the court of appeal and the registrar may tax the disputed fees and disbursements.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 684; R.S., 1985, c. 34 (3rd Supp.), s. 9.

Summary determination of frivolous appeals

685 (1) Where it appears to the registrar that a notice of appeal, which purports to be on a ground of appeal that involves a question of law alone, does not show a substantial ground of appeal, the registrar may refer the appeal to the court of appeal for summary determination, and, where an appeal is referred under this section, the court of appeal may, if it considers that the appeal is frivolous or vexatious and can be determined without being adjourned for a full hearing, dismiss the appeal summarily, without calling on any person to attend the hearing or to appear for the respondent on the hearing.

Summary determination of appeals filed in error

(2) If it appears to the registrar that a notice of appeal should have been filed with another court, the registrar may refer the appeal to a judge of the court of appeal for summary determination, and the judge may dismiss the appeal summarily without calling on any person to attend the hearing or to appear for the respondent on the hearing.

Powers of the Court of Appeal

Powers

686 (1) On the hearing of an appeal against a conviction or against a verdict that the appellant is unfit to stand trial or not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder, the court of appeal

(a) may allow the appeal where it is of the opinion that

(i) the verdict should be set aside on the ground that it is unreasonable or cannot be supported by the evidence,

(ii) the judgment of the trial court should be set aside on the ground of a wrong decision on a question of law, or

(iii) on any ground there was a miscarriage of justice;

(b) may dismiss the appeal where

(i) the court is of the opinion that the appellant, although he was not properly convicted on a count or part of the indictment, was properly convicted on another count or part of the indictment,

(ii) the appeal is not decided in favour of the appellant on any ground mentioned in paragraph (a),

(iii) notwithstanding that the court is of the opinion that on any ground mentioned in subparagraph (a)(ii) the appeal might be decided in favour of the appellant, it is of the opinion that no substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice has occurred, or

(iv) notwithstanding any procedural irregularity at trial, the trial court had jurisdiction over the class of offence of which the appellant was convicted and the court of appeal is of the opinion that the appellant suffered no prejudice thereby;

(c) may refuse to allow the appeal where it is of the opinion that the trial court arrived at a wrong conclusion respecting the effect of a special verdict, may order the conclusion to be recorded that appears to the court to be required by the verdict and may pass a sentence that is warranted in law in substitution for the sentence passed by the trial court; or

(d) may set aside a conviction and find the appellant unfit to stand trial or not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder and may exercise any of the powers of the trial court conferred by or referred to in section 672.45 in any manner deemed appropriate to the court of appeal in the circumstances.

(e) [Repealed, 1991, c. 43, s. 9]

Order to be made

(2) Where a court of appeal allows an appeal under paragraph (1)(a), it shall quash the conviction and

(a) direct a judgment or verdict of acquittal to be entered; or

(b) order a new trial.

Substituting verdict

(3) Where a court of appeal dismisses an appeal under subparagraph (1)(b)(i), it may substitute the verdict that in its opinion should have been found and

(a) affirm the sentence passed by the trial court; or

(b) impose a sentence that is warranted in law or remit the matter to the trial court and direct the trial court to impose a sentence that is warranted in law.

Appeal from acquittal

(4) If an appeal is from an acquittal or verdict that the appellant or respondent was unfit to stand trial or not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder, the court of appeal may

(a) dismiss the appeal; or

(b) allow the appeal, set aside the verdict and

(i) order a new trial, or

(ii) except where the verdict is that of a court composed of a judge and jury, enter a verdict of guilty with respect to the offence of which, in its opinion, the accused should have been found guilty but for the error in law, and pass a sentence that is warranted in law, or remit the matter to the trial court and direct the trial court to impose a sentence that is warranted in law.

New trial under Part XIX

(5) Subject to subsection (5.01), if an appeal is taken in respect of proceedings under Part XIX and the court of appeal orders a new trial under this Part, the following provisions apply:

- (a) if the accused, in his notice of appeal or notice of application for leave to appeal, requested that the new trial, if ordered, should be held before a court composed of a judge and jury, the new trial shall be held accordingly;
- (b) if the accused, in his notice of appeal or notice of application for leave to appeal, did not request that the new trial, if ordered, should be held before a court composed of a judge and jury, the new trial shall, without further election by the accused, be held before a judge or provincial court judge, as the case may be, acting under Part XIX, other than a judge or provincial court judge who tried the accused in the first instance, unless the court of appeal directs that the new trial be held before the judge or provincial court judge who tried the accused in the first instance;
- (c) if the court of appeal orders that the new trial shall be held before a court composed of a judge and jury, the new trial shall be commenced by an indictment in writing setting forth the offence in respect of which the new trial was ordered; and
- (d) notwithstanding paragraph (a), if the conviction against which the accused appealed was for an offence mentioned in section 553 and was made by a provincial court judge, the new trial shall be held before a provincial court judge acting under Part XIX, other than the provincial court judge who tried the accused in the first instance, unless the court of appeal directs that the new trial be held before the provincial court judge who tried the accused in the first instance.

New trial under Part XIX — Nunavut

(5.01) If an appeal is taken in respect of proceedings under Part XIX and the Court of Appeal of Nunavut orders a new trial under Part XXI, the following provisions apply:

- (a) if the accused, in the notice of appeal or notice of application for leave to appeal, requested that the new trial, if ordered, should be held before a court composed of a judge and jury, the new trial shall be held accordingly;
- (b) if the accused, in the notice of appeal or notice of application for leave to appeal, did not request that the new trial, if ordered, should be held before a court composed of a judge and jury, the new trial shall, without further election by the accused, and without a preliminary inquiry, be held before a judge, acting under Part XIX, other than a judge who tried the accused in the first instance, unless the Court of Appeal of Nunavut directs that the new trial be held before the judge who tried the accused in the first instance;

(c) if the Court of Appeal of Nunavut orders that the new trial shall be held before a court composed of a judge and jury, the new trial shall be commenced by an indictment in writing setting forth the offence in respect of which the new trial was ordered; and

(d) despite paragraph (a), if the conviction against which the accused appealed was for an indictable offence mentioned in section 553, the new trial shall be held before a judge acting under Part XIX, other than the judge who tried the accused in the first instance, unless the Court of Appeal of Nunavut directs that the new trial be held before the judge who tried the accused in the first instance.

Election if new trial a jury trial

(5.1) Subject to subsection (5.2), if a new trial ordered by the court of appeal is to be held before a court composed of a judge and jury,

(a) the accused may, with the consent of the prosecutor, elect to have the trial heard before a judge without a jury or a provincial court judge;

(b) the election shall be deemed to be a re-election within the meaning of subsection 561\(5\); and

(c) subsection 561\(5\) applies, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to the election.

Election if new trial a jury trial — Nunavut

(5.2) If a new trial ordered by the Court of Appeal of Nunavut is to be held before a court composed of a judge and jury, the accused may, with the consent of the prosecutor, elect to have the trial heard before a judge without a jury. The election shall be deemed to be a re-election within the meaning of subsection 561.1\(1\), and subsection 561.1\(6\) applies, with any modifications that the circumstances require, to the election.

Where appeal allowed against verdict of unfit to stand trial

(6) Where a court of appeal allows an appeal against a verdict that the accused is unfit to stand trial, it shall, subject to subsection (7), order a new trial.

Appeal court may set aside verdict of unfit to stand trial

(7) Where the verdict that the accused is unfit to stand trial was returned after the close of the case for the prosecution, the court of appeal may, notwithstanding that the verdict is proper, if it is of the opinion that the accused should have been acquitted at the close of the case for the prosecution, allow the appeal, set aside the verdict and direct a judgment or verdict of acquittal to be entered.

Additional powers

(8) Where a court of appeal exercises any of the powers conferred by subsection (2), (4), (6) or (7), it may make any order, in addition, that justice requires.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 686; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 145, 203; 1991, c. 43, s. 9; 1997, c. 18, s. 98; 1999, c. 3, s. 52, c. 5, s. 26; 2015, c. 3, s. 54\(F\); 2019, c. 25, s. 282\(E\).

Powers of court on appeal against sentence

687 (1) Where an appeal is taken against sentence, the court of appeal shall, unless the sentence is one fixed by law, consider the fitness of the sentence appealed against, and may on such evidence, if any, as it thinks fit to require or to receive,

- (a) vary the sentence within the limits prescribed by law for the offence of which the accused was convicted; or
- (b) dismiss the appeal.

Effect of judgment

(2) A judgment of a court of appeal that varies the sentence of an accused who was convicted has the same force and effect as if it were a sentence passed by the trial court.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 614.

Right of appellant to attend

688 (1) Subject to subsection (2), an appellant who is in custody is entitled, if he desires, to be present at the hearing of the appeal.

Appellant represented by counsel

(2) An appellant who is in custody and who is represented by counsel is not entitled to be present

- (a) at the hearing of the appeal, where the appeal is on a ground involving a question of law alone,
- (b) on an application for leave to appeal, or
- (c) on any proceedings that are preliminary or incidental to an appeal, unless rules of court provide that he is entitled to be present or the court of appeal or a judge thereof gives him leave to be present.

Manner of appearance

(2.1) In the case of an appellant who is in custody and who is entitled to be present at any proceedings on an appeal, the court may order that, instead of the appellant appearing in person,

- (a) at an application for leave to appeal or at any proceedings that are preliminary or incidental to an appeal, the appellant appear by audioconference or videoconference, if the technological means is satisfactory to the court; and
- (b) at the hearing of the appeal, if the appellant has access to legal advice, they appear by closed-circuit television or videoconference.

Argument may be oral or in writing

(3) An appellant may present his case on appeal and his argument in writing instead of orally, and the court of appeal shall consider any case of argument so presented.

Sentence in absence of appellant

(4) A court of appeal may exercise its power to impose sentence notwithstanding that the appellant is not present.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 688; 2002, c. 13, s. 68; 2019, c. 25, s. 283; 2022, c. 17, s. 43(E).

Restitution or forfeiture of property

689 (1) If the trial court makes an order for compensation or for the restitution of property under section 738 or 739 or an order of forfeiture of property under subsection 164.2\(1\) or 462.37\(1\) or \(2.01\), the operation of the order is suspended

(a) until the expiration of the period prescribed by rules of court for the giving of notice of appeal or of notice of application for leave to appeal, unless the accused waives an appeal; and

(b) until the appeal or application for leave to appeal has been determined, where an appeal is taken or application for leave to appeal is made.

Annulling or varying order

(2) The court of appeal may by order annul or vary an order made by the trial court with respect to compensation or the restitution of property within the limits prescribed by the provision under which the order was made by the trial court, whether or not the conviction is quashed.

Appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada

Appeal from conviction

691 (1) A person who is convicted of an indictable offence and whose conviction is affirmed by the court of appeal may appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada

(a) on any question of law on which a judge of the court of appeal dissents; or

(b) on any question of law, if leave to appeal is granted by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Appeal where acquittal set aside

(2) A person who is acquitted of an indictable offence other than by reason of a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder and whose acquittal is set aside by the court of appeal may appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada

(a) on any question of law on which a judge of the court of appeal dissents;

(b) on any question of law, if the Court of Appeal enters a verdict of guilty against the person; or

(c) on any question of law, if leave to appeal is granted by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Appeal against affirmation of verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder

692 (1) A person who has been found not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder and

(a) whose verdict is affirmed on that ground by the court of appeal, or

(b) against whom a verdict of guilty is entered by the court of appeal under subparagraph 686\(4\)\(b\)\(ii\), may appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Appeal against affirmation of verdict of unfit to stand trial

(2) A person who is found unfit to stand trial and against whom that verdict is affirmed by the court of appeal may appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Grounds of appeal

(3) An appeal under subsection (1) or (2) may be

(a) on any question of law on which a judge of the court of appeal dissents; or

(b) on any question of law, if leave to appeal is granted by the Supreme Court of Canada.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 692; R.S., 1985, c. 34 (3rd Supp.), s. 11; 1991, c. 43, s. 9.

Appeal by Attorney General

693 (1) Where a judgment of a court of appeal sets aside a conviction pursuant to an appeal taken under section 675 or dismisses an appeal taken pursuant to paragraph 676\(1\)\(a\), (b) or (c) or subsection 676\(3\), the Attorney General may appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada

(a) on any question of law on which a judge of the court of appeal dissents; or

(b) on any question of law, if leave to appeal is granted by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Terms

(2) Where leave to appeal is granted under paragraph (1)(b), the Supreme Court of Canada may impose such terms as it sees fit.

Legal assistance for accused

694.1 (1) The Supreme Court of Canada or a judge thereof may, at any time, assign counsel to act on behalf of an accused who is a party to an appeal to the Court or to proceedings preliminary or incidental to an appeal to the Court where, in the opinion of the Court or judge, it appears desirable in the interests of justice that the accused should have legal assistance and where it appears that the accused has not sufficient means to obtain that assistance.

Counsel fees and disbursements

(2) Where counsel is assigned pursuant to subsection (1) and legal aid is not granted to the accused pursuant to a provincial legal aid program, the fees and disbursements of counsel shall be paid by the Attorney General who is the appellant or respondent, as the case may be, in the appeal.

Taxation of fees and disbursements

(3) Where subsection (2) applies and counsel and the Attorney General cannot agree on fees or disbursements of counsel, the Attorney General or the counsel may apply to the Registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada, and the Registrar may tax the disputed fees and disbursements.

R.S., 1985, c. 34 (3rd Supp.), s. 13; 1992, c. 1, s. 60(F).

Right of appellant to attend

694.2 (1) Subject to subsection (2), an appellant who is in custody and who desires to be present at the hearing of the appeal before the Supreme Court of Canada is entitled to be present at it.

Appellant represented by counsel

(2) An appellant who is in custody and who is represented by counsel is not entitled to be present before the Supreme Court of Canada

- (a) on an application for leave to appeal,
- (b) on any proceedings that are preliminary or incidental to an appeal, or
- (c) at the hearing of the appeal,

unless rules of court provide that entitlement or the Supreme Court of Canada or a judge thereof gives the appellant leave to be present.

R.S., 1985, c. 34 (3rd Supp.), s. 13.

Order of Supreme Court of Canada

695 (1) The Supreme Court of Canada may, on an appeal under this Part, make any order that the court of appeal might have made and may make any rule or order that is necessary to give effect to its judgment.

Election if new trial

(2) Subject to subsection (3), if a new trial ordered by the Supreme Court of Canada is to be held before a court composed of a judge and jury, the accused may, with the consent of the prosecutor, elect to have the trial heard before a judge without a jury or a provincial court judge. The election is deemed to be a re-election within the meaning of subsection 561\(5\) and subsections 561(5) to \(7\) apply to it with any modifications that the circumstances require.

Nunavut

(3) If a new trial ordered by the Supreme Court of Canada is to be held before a court composed of a judge and jury in Nunavut, the accused may, with the consent of the prosecutor, elect to have the trial heard before a judge without a jury. The election is deemed to be a re-election within the meaning of subsection 561.1\(6\) and subsections 561.1(6) to \(9\) apply to it with any modifications that the circumstances require.

Appeals by Attorney General of Canada

Right of Attorney General of Canada to appeal

696 The Attorney General of Canada has the same rights of appeal in proceedings instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of that Government as the Attorney General of a province has under this Part.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 624.

PART XXI.1

Applications for Ministerial Review — Miscarriages of Justice

Application

696.1 (1) An application for ministerial review on the grounds of miscarriage of justice may be made to the Minister of Justice by or on behalf of a person who has been convicted of an offence under an Act of Parliament or a regulation made under an Act of Parliament or has been found to be a dangerous offender or a long-term offender under Part XXIV and whose rights of judicial review or appeal with respect to the conviction or finding have been exhausted.

Form of application

(2) The application must be in the form, contain the information and be accompanied by any documents prescribed by the regulations.

2002, c. 13, s. 71.

Review of applications

696.2 (1) On receipt of an application under this Part, the Minister of Justice shall review it in accordance with the regulations.

Powers of investigation

(2) For the purpose of any investigation in relation to an application under this Part, the Minister of Justice has and may exercise the powers of a commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act and the powers that may be conferred on a commissioner under section 11 of that Act.

Delegation

(3) Despite subsection 11(3) of the Inquiries Act, the Minister of Justice may delegate in writing to any member in good standing of the bar of a province, retired judge or any other individual who, in the opinion of the Minister, has similar background or experience the powers of the Minister to take evidence, issue subpoenas, enforce the attendance of witnesses, compel them to give evidence and otherwise conduct an investigation under subsection (2).

2002, c. 13, s. 71.

Definition of court of appeal

696.3 (1) In this section, the court of appeal means the court of appeal, as defined by the definition court of appeal in section 2, for the province in which the person to whom an application under this Part relates was tried.

Power to refer

(2) The Minister of Justice may, at any time, refer to the court of appeal, for its opinion, any question in relation to an application under this Part on which the Minister desires the assistance of that court, and the court shall furnish its opinion accordingly.

Powers of Minister of Justice

(3) On an application under this Part, the Minister of Justice may

(a) if the Minister is satisfied that there is a reasonable basis to conclude that a miscarriage of justice likely occurred,

(i) direct, by order in writing, a new trial before any court that the Minister thinks proper or, in the case of a person found to be a dangerous offender or a long-term offender under Part XXIV, a new hearing under that Part, or

(ii) refer the matter at any time to the court of appeal for hearing and determination by that court as if it were an appeal by the convicted person or the person found to be a dangerous offender or a long-term offender under Part XXIV, as the case may be; or

(b) dismiss the application.

No appeal

(4) A decision of the Minister of Justice made under subsection (3) is final and is not subject to appeal.

2002, c. 13, s. 71.

Considerations

696.4 In making a decision under subsection 696.3\(3\), the Minister of Justice shall take into account all matters that the Minister considers relevant, including

(a) whether the application is supported by new matters of significance that were not considered by the courts or previously considered by the Minister in an application in relation to the same conviction or finding under Part XXIV;

(b) the relevance and reliability of information that is presented in connection with the application; and

(c) the fact that an application under this Part is not intended to serve as a further appeal and any remedy available on such an application is an extraordinary remedy.

2002, c. 13, s. 71.

Annual report

696.5 The Minister of Justice shall within six months after the end of each financial year submit an annual report to Parliament in relation to applications under this Part.

2002, c. 13, s. 71.

Regulations

696.6 The Governor in Council may make regulations

(a) prescribing the form of, the information required to be contained in and any documents that must accompany an application under this Part;

(b) prescribing the process of review in relation to applications under this Part, which may include the following stages, namely, preliminary assessment, investigation, reporting on investigation and decision; and

(c) respecting the form and content of the annual report under section 696.5.

2002, c. 13, s. 71.

The authorized commissioner is not, however, authorized to act as Chief Commissioner for more than 90 days without the Governor in Council's approval.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Term of office

696.77 (1) A commissioner is to be appointed to hold office for a term not exceeding seven years such that, to the extent possible, the terms of office of more than one half of the commissioners do not end in any one calendar year.

Reappointment

(2) A commissioner may be reappointed.

Removal

(3) A commissioner may be removed for cause by the Governor in Council.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Remuneration

696.78 (1) A commissioner is to receive the remuneration that is fixed by the Governor in Council.

Expenses

(2) A commissioner is entitled to be paid, in accordance with Treasury Board directives, reasonable travel and living expenses incurred while absent in the course of their duties and functions from, in the case of a full-time commissioner, their ordinary place of work and, in the case of a part-time commissioner, their ordinary place of residence.

Compensation

(3) A commissioner is deemed to be an employee for the purposes of the Government Employees Compensation Act and to be employed in the federal public administration for the purposes of any regulations made under section 9 of the Aeronautics Act.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Meetings

696.79 (1) The Chief Commissioner convenes and presides at meetings of the Commission.

Quorum

(2) One half of the commissioners holding office constitutes a quorum.

Decisions

(3) A decision of a majority of the commissioners at a meeting is a decision of the Commission.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Powers, Duties and Functions

Accessibility

696.8 The Commission must ensure that applicants and potential applicants are able to communicate readily with the Commission from any place in Canada.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Outreach

696.81 The Commission must publish information about its mandate on its website and must provide the public, including potential applicants, with information about its mandate and about miscarriages of justice.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Transparency

696.82 (1) The Commission must carry out its mandate in a transparent manner.

Publication of decisions

(2) The Commission must publish its decisions on its website in a manner that

- (a) protects confidential information; and
- (b) is not likely to interfere with the proper administration of justice in relation to a matter that the Commission directs to a court for a new trial or hearing or a matter that the Commission refers to a court of appeal for a hearing and determination.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Policies

696.83 (1) The Commission may adopt policies generally for the carrying out of its work and the management of its affairs, including policies respecting its procedures and practices.

Duty to adopt certain policies

(2) The Commission must adopt policies respecting

- (a) the making of applications;
- (b) each stage of the review process;
- (c) applications that are made on behalf of persons;
- (d) the provision of notices and other information to applicants, to their representatives, to attorneys general and to other interested persons, including victims; and
- (e) meetings of the Commission.

Publication

(3) The Commission must publish its policies on its website.

Statutory Instruments Act

(4) The Statutory Instruments Act does not apply to policies adopted by the Commission.
2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Powers

696.84 (1) The Commission may, in carrying out its mandate,

- (a) direct employees to provide applicants and potential applicants with general information and guidance on applications and each stage of the review process;
- (a.1) direct employees to notify the Correctional Service of Canada and the Parole Board of Canada of the importance of ensuring that applicants and potential applicants do not experience barriers to or exclusion from programs, services or conditional release processes as a result of making an application for a review on the grounds of a miscarriage of justice;
- (b) enter into contracts in its own name;
- (c) provide supports to applicants in need, including by entering into contracts with service providers for the provision of those supports; and
- (d) enter into contracts with persons who have technical or specialized knowledge to assist in the Commission's work.

Supports to applicants in need

(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1)(c), supports to applicants in need include

- (a) directing them to services in their communities for persons in need or helping them access those services;
- (b) providing them with translation and interpretation services;
- (c) assisting them, if they are without means, in relation to necessities such as food and housing; and
- (d) assisting them, if they are without means, in obtaining legal assistance in relation to making an application or providing a written response to an investigation report prepared by the Commission.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Security requirements

696.85 The Commission and its employees must follow established procedures and practices, including any requirement found in a Treasury Board policy or directive, for the secure handling, storage, transportation and transmission of information or documents.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Staff

Public Service Employment Act

696.86 The employees necessary for the proper conduct of the work of the Commission are to be appointed in accordance with the Public Service Employment Act.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

Annual Report

Annual report

696.87 (1) The Chief Commissioner must, within five months after the end of each fiscal year, submit to the Minister a report that contains the following information for that fiscal year:

- (a) the number of applications received;
- (b) statistics on applicants that, to the extent possible, are disaggregated by gender identity, age, race, ethnic origin, language, disability, income and any other identity factor that is considered in the course of a gender-based analysis;
- (c) the number of investigations started and the number of investigations completed;
- (d) the number of matters that the Commission directed to courts for new trials or hearings;
- (e) the number of matters that the Commission referred to courts of appeal for hearings and determinations;
- (f) the number of applications dismissed;
- (g) the outcomes of matters that the Commission directed to courts for new trials or hearings;
- (h) the outcomes of matters that the Commission referred to courts of appeal for hearings and determinations;
- (i) the average length of time between the receipt of an application and the Commission's final decision;
- (j) the number of applicants in need who received supports;
- (k) the amounts paid to service providers under paragraph 696.84\(1\)\(c\), disaggregated, to the extent possible, by the nature of the supports provided by the service providers; and
- (l) any other information on the Commission's activities that the Chief Commissioner considers relevant.

Tabling

(2) The Minister must cause the report to be laid before each House of Parliament on any of the first 30 days on which that House is sitting after the day on which the report is received.

Publication

(3) The Commission must publish the annual report on its website after it has been tabled.

2024, c. 33, s. 4.

PART XXII

Procuring Attendance

Application

Application

697 Except where section 527 applies, this Part applies where a person is required to attend to give evidence in a proceeding to which this Act applies.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 625.

Process

Subpoena

698 (1) Where a person is likely to give material evidence in a proceeding to which this Act applies, a subpoena may be issued in accordance with this Part requiring that person to attend to give evidence.

Warrant in Form 17

(2) Where it is made to appear that a person who is likely to give material evidence

(a) will not attend in response to a subpoena if a subpoena is issued, or

(b) is evading service of a subpoena, a court, justice or provincial court judge having power to issue a subpoena to require the attendance of that person to give evidence may issue a warrant in Form 17 to cause that person to be arrested and to be brought to give evidence.

Subpoena issued first

(3) Except where paragraph (2)(a) applies, a warrant in Form 17 shall not be issued unless a subpoena has first been issued.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 698; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203.

Who may issue

699 (1) If a person is required to attend to give evidence before a superior court of criminal jurisdiction, a court of appeal, an appeal court or a court of criminal jurisdiction other than a provincial court judge acting under Part XIX, a subpoena directed to that person shall be issued out of the court before which the attendance of that person is required.

Order of judge

(2) If a person is required to attend to give evidence before a provincial court judge acting under Part XIX or a summary conviction court under Part XXVII or in proceedings over which a justice has jurisdiction, a subpoena directed to the person shall be issued

(a) by a provincial court judge or a justice, where the person whose attendance is required is within the province in which the proceedings were instituted; or

(b) by a provincial court judge or out of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction of the province in which the proceedings were instituted, where the person whose attendance is required is not within the province.

Order of judge

(3) A subpoena shall not be issued out of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction pursuant to paragraph (2)(b), except pursuant to an order of a judge of the court made on application by a party to the proceedings.

Seal

(4) A subpoena or warrant that is issued by a court under this Part shall be under the seal of the court and shall be signed by a judge of the court or by the clerk of the court.

Signature

(5) A subpoena or warrant that is issued by a justice or provincial court judge under this Part must be signed by the justice, provincial court judge or the clerk of the court.

Sexual offences

(5.1) Despite anything in subsections (1) to (5), in the case of an offence referred to in subsection 278.2\(1\), a subpoena requiring a witness to bring to the court a record, the production of which is governed by sections 278.1 to 278.91, must be issued by a judge and signed by the judge or the clerk of the court.

Form of subpoena

(6) Subject to subsection (7), a subpoena issued under this Part may be in Form 16.

Form of subpoena in sexual offences

(7) In the case of an offence referred to in subsection 278.2\(1\), a subpoena requiring a witness to bring anything to the court shall be in Form 16.1.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 699; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203; 1994, c. 44, s. 69; 1997, c. 30, s. 2; 1999, c. 5, s. 28; 2019, c. 25, s. 284.

Contents of subpoena

700 (1) A subpoena shall require the person to whom it is directed to attend, at a time and place to be stated in the subpoena, to give evidence and, if required, to bring with him anything that he has in his possession or under his control relating to the subject-matter of the proceedings.

Witness to appear and remain

(2) A person who is served with a subpoena issued under this Part shall attend and shall remain in attendance throughout the proceedings unless he is excused by the presiding judge, justice or provincial court judge.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 700; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 148, 203.

Video links

700.1 (1) If a person is to give evidence under section 714.1 or under subsection 46\(2\) of the Canada Evidence Act — or is to give evidence or a statement under an order made under section 22.2 of the Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters Act — at a place within the jurisdiction of a court referred to in subsection 699\(1\) or \(2\) where the technology is available, a subpoena shall be issued out of the court to order the person to give that evidence at that place.

Sections of Criminal Code

(2) Sections 699, 700 and 701 to 703.2 apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, to a subpoena issued under this section.

Service in accordance with provincial laws

701.1 Despite section 701, in any province, service of a document may be made in accordance with the laws of the province relating to offences created by the laws of that province.

1997, c. 18, s. 100; 2008, c. 18, s. 33.

Subpoena effective throughout Canada

702 (1) A subpoena that is issued by a provincial court judge or out of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction, a court of appeal, an appeal court or a court of criminal jurisdiction has effect anywhere in Canada according to its terms.

Subpoena effective throughout province

(2) A subpoena that is issued by a justice has effect anywhere in the province in which it is issued.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 702; 1994, c. 44, s. 71.

Warrant effective throughout Canada

703 (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, a warrant of arrest or committal that is issued out of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction, a court of appeal, an appeal court within the meaning of section 812 or a court of criminal jurisdiction other than a provincial court judge acting under Part XIX may be executed anywhere in Canada.

Warrant effective in a province

(2) Despite any other provision of this Act but subject to subsections 487.0551(2), 490.03121(3) and 705(3), a warrant of arrest or committal that is issued by a justice or provincial court judge may be executed anywhere in the province in which it is issued.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 703; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 149; 2007, c. 22, s. 22; 2023, c. 28, s. 33.

Summons effective throughout Canada

703.1 A summons may be served anywhere in Canada and, if served, is effective notwithstanding the territorial jurisdiction of the authority that issued the summons.

R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 149.

Service of process on an organization

703.2 Where any summons, notice or other process is required to be or may be served on an organization, and no other method of service is provided, service may be effected by delivery

(a) in the case of a municipality, to the mayor, warden, reeve or other chief officer of the municipality, or to the secretary, treasurer or clerk of the municipality; and

(b) in the case of any other organization, to the manager, secretary or other senior officer of the organization or one of its branches.

R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 149; 2003, c. 21, s. 13.

Defaulting or Absconding Witness

Warrant for absconding witness

704 (1) Where a person is bound by recognizance to give evidence in any proceedings, a justice who is satisfied on information being made before him in writing and under oath that the person is about to abscond or has absconded may issue his warrant in Form 18 directing a peace officer to arrest that person and to bring him before the court, judge, justice or provincial court judge before whom he is bound to appear.

Endorsement of warrant

(2) Section 528 applies, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to a warrant issued under this section.

Copy of information

(3) A person who is arrested under this section is entitled, on request, to receive a copy of the information on which the warrant for his arrest was issued.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 704; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203.

Warrant if witness does not attend

705 (1) If a person who has been served with a subpoena to give evidence in a proceeding does not attend or remain in attendance, the court, judge, justice or provincial court judge before whom that person was required to attend may issue a warrant in Form 17 for the arrest of that person if it is established

(a) that the subpoena has been served in accordance with this Part, and

(b) that the person is likely to give material evidence.

Warrant if witness bound by recognizance

(2) If a person who has been bound by a recognizance to attend to give evidence in any proceeding does not attend or does not remain in attendance, the court, judge, justice or provincial court judge before whom that person was bound to attend may issue a warrant in Form 17 for the arrest of that person.

Warrant effective throughout Canada

(3) A warrant that is issued by a justice or provincial court judge pursuant to subsection (1) or (2) may be executed anywhere in Canada.

If witness arrested under warrant

706 If a person is brought before a court, judge, provincial court judge or justice under a warrant issued under subsection 698\(2\) or section 704 or 705, the court, judge, provincial court judge or justice may, so that the person will appear and give evidence when required, order that the person be detained in custody or be released on recognizance, with or without sureties.

Maximum period for detention of witness

707 (1) No person shall be detained in custody under the authority of any provision of this Act, for the purpose only of appearing and giving evidence when required as a witness, for any period exceeding thirty days unless prior to the expiration of those thirty days he has been brought before a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction in the province in which he is being detained.

Application by witness to judge

(2) Where at any time prior to the expiration of the thirty days referred to in subsection (1), a witness being detained in custody as described in that subsection applies to be brought before a judge of a court described therein, the judge before whom the application is brought shall fix a time prior to the expiration of those thirty days for the hearing of the application and shall cause notice of the time so fixed to be given to the witness, the person having custody of the witness and such other persons as the judge may specify, and at the time so fixed for the hearing of the application the person having custody of the witness shall cause the witness to be brought before a judge of the court for that purpose.

Review of detention

(3) If the judge before whom a witness is brought under this section is not satisfied that the continued detention of the witness is justified, the judge shall order them to be discharged or to be released on recognizance, with or without sureties, so that the witness will appear and give evidence when required. However, if the judge is satisfied that the continued detention of the witness is justified, the judge may order their continued detention until they do what is required of them under section 550 or the trial is concluded, or until they appear and give evidence when required, except that the total period of detention of the witness from the time they were first detained in custody shall not in any case exceed 90 days.

Contempt

708 (1) A person who, being required by law to attend or remain in attendance for the purpose of giving evidence, fails, without lawful excuse, to attend or remain in attendance accordingly is guilty of contempt of court.

Punishment

(2) A court, judge, justice or provincial court judge may deal summarily with a person who is guilty of contempt of court under this section and that person is liable to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ninety days or to both, and may be ordered to pay the costs that are incident to the service of any process under this Part and to his detention, if any.

Form

(3) A conviction under this section may be in Form 38 and a warrant of committal in respect of a conviction under this section may be in Form 25.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 708; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203; 2019, c. 25, s. 289\(F\).

Electronically Transmitted Copies

Electronically transmitted copies

708.1 A copy of a summons, warrant or subpoena transmitted by a means of telecommunication that produces a writing has the same probative force as the original for the purposes of this Act.

1997, c. 18, s. 101.

Evidence on Commission

Order appointing commissioner

709 (1) A party to proceedings by way of indictment or summary conviction may apply for an order appointing a commissioner to take the evidence of a witness who

(a) is, by reason of

(i) physical disability arising out of illness, or

(ii) any other good and sufficient cause, not likely to be able to attend at the time the trial is held; or

(b) is out of Canada.

Idem

(2) A decision under subsection (1) is deemed to have been made at the trial held in relation to the proceedings mentioned in that subsection.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 709; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 150; 1994, c. 44, s. 72.

Application where witness is ill

710 (1) An application under paragraph 709\(1\)\(a\) shall be made

(a) to a judge of a superior court of the province in which the proceedings are taken;

(b) to a judge of a county or district court in the territorial division in which the proceedings are taken; or

(c) to a provincial court judge, where

(i) at the time the application is made, the accused is before a provincial court judge presiding over a preliminary inquiry under Part XVIII, or

(ii) the accused or defendant is to be tried by a provincial court judge acting under Part XIX or XXVII.

Evidence of medical practitioner

(2) An application under subparagraph 709\(1\)\(a\)\(i\) may be granted on the evidence of a registered medical practitioner.

Admitting evidence of witness who is ill

711 Where the evidence of a witness mentioned in paragraph 709\(1\)\(a\) is taken by a commissioner appointed under section 710, it may be admitted in evidence in the proceedings if

- (a) it is proved by oral evidence or by affidavit that the witness is unable to attend by reason of death or physical disability arising out of illness or some other good and sufficient cause;
- (b) the transcript of the evidence is signed by the commissioner by or before whom it purports to have been taken; and
- (c) it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that reasonable notice of the time for taking the evidence was given to the other party, and that the accused or his counsel, or the prosecutor or his counsel, as the case may be, had or might have had full opportunity to cross-examine the witness.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 711; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 152; 1994, c. 44, s. 74; 1997, c. 18, s. 102.

Application for order when witness out of Canada

712 (1) An application that is made under paragraph 709\(1\)\(b\) shall be made

- (a) to a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or of a court of criminal jurisdiction before which the accused is to be tried; or
- (b) to a provincial court judge, where the accused or defendant is to be tried by a provincial court judge acting under Part XIX or XXVII.

Admitting evidence of witness out of Canada

(2) Where the evidence of a witness is taken by a commissioner appointed under this section, it may be admitted in evidence in the proceedings.

(3) [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 153]

Providing for presence of accused counsel

713 (1) A judge or provincial court judge who appoints a commissioner may make provision in the order to enable an accused to be present or represented by counsel when the evidence is taken, but failure of the accused to be present or to be represented by counsel in accordance with the order does not prevent the admission of the evidence in the proceedings if the evidence has otherwise been taken in accordance with the order and with this Part.

Return of evidence

(2) An order for the taking of evidence by commission shall indicate the officer of the court to whom the evidence that is taken under the order shall be returned.

Evidence not excluded

713.1 Evidence taken by a commissioner appointed under section 712 shall not be excluded by reason only that it would have been taken differently in Canada, provided that the process used to take the evidence is consistent with the law of the country where it was taken and that the process used to take the evidence was not contrary to the principles of fundamental justice.

Rules and practice same as in civil cases

714 Except where otherwise provided by this Part or by rules of court, the practice and procedure in connection with the appointment of commissioners under this Part, the taking of evidence by commissioners, the certifying and return thereof and the use of the evidence in the proceedings shall, as far as possible, be the same as those that govern like matters in civil proceedings in the superior court of the province in which the proceedings are taken.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 642.

Video and Audio Evidence

Audioconference and videoconference — witness in Canada

714.1 A court may order that a witness in Canada give evidence by audioconference or videoconference, if the court is of the opinion that it would be appropriate having regard to all the circumstances, including

- (a) the location and personal circumstances of the witness;
- (b) the costs that would be incurred if the witness were to appear in person;
- (c) the nature of the witness' anticipated evidence;
- (d) the suitability of the location from where the witness will give evidence;
- (e) the accused's right to a fair and public hearing;
- (f) the nature and seriousness of the offence; and
- (g) any potential prejudice to the parties caused by the fact that the witness would not be seen by them, if the court were to order the evidence to be given by audioconference.

1999, c. 18, s. 95; 2019, c. 25, s. 290; 2022, c. 17, s. 44\(E\).

Videoconference — witness outside Canada

714.2 (1) A court shall receive evidence given by a witness outside Canada by videoconference, unless one of the parties satisfies the court that the reception of such testimony would be contrary to the principles of fundamental justice.

Notice

(2) A party who wishes to call a witness to give evidence under subsection (1) shall give notice to the court before which the evidence is to be given and the other parties of their intention to do so not less than 10 days before the witness is scheduled to testify.

1999, c. 18, s. 95; 2019, c. 25, s. 290.

Audioconference — witness outside Canada

714.3 The court may receive evidence given by a witness outside Canada by audioconference, if the court is of the opinion that it would be appropriate having regard to all the circumstances, including those set out in paragraphs 714.1\(a\) to \(g\).

1999, c. 18, s. 95; 2019, c. 25, s. 290.

Reasons

714.4 If the court does not make an order under section 714.1 or does not receive evidence under section 714.2 or 714.3, it shall include in the record a statement of the reasons for not doing so.

1999, c. 18, s. 95; 2019, c. 25, s. 290.

Cessation

714.41 The court may, at any time, cease the use of the technological means referred to in section 714.1, 714.2 or 714.3 and take any measure that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances to have the witness give evidence.

2019, c. 25, s. 290.

Oath or affirmation

714.5 The evidence referred to in section 714.2 or 714.3, that is given by a witness who is outside of Canada, shall be given

- (a) under oath or affirmation in accordance with Canadian law;
- (b) under oath or affirmation in accordance with the law in the place where the witness is physically present; or
- (c) in any other manner that demonstrates that the witness understands that they must tell the truth.

1999, c. 18, s. 95; 2019, c. 25, s. 290.

Other laws about witnesses to apply

714.6 When a witness who is outside Canada gives evidence under section 714.2 or 714.3, the evidence is deemed to be given in Canada, and given under oath or affirmation in accordance with Canadian law, for the purposes of the laws relating to evidence, procedure, perjury and contempt of court.

1999, c. 18, s. 95; 2019, c. 25, s. 290.

Costs of technology

714.7 Unless the court orders otherwise, a party who calls a witness to give evidence by means of the technology referred to in section 714.1, 714.2 or 714.3 shall pay any costs associated with the use of the technology.

1999, c. 18, s. 95; 2019, c. 25, s. 290.

Consent

714.8 Nothing in sections 714.1 to 714.7 is to be construed as preventing a court from receiving evidence by audioconference or videoconference, if the parties so consent.

1999, c. 18, s. 95; 2019, c. 25, s. 290.

Evidence Previously Taken

Evidence at preliminary inquiry may be read at trial in certain cases

715 (1) Where, at the trial of an accused, a person whose evidence was given at a previous trial on the same charge, or whose evidence was taken in the investigation of the charge against the accused or on the preliminary inquiry into the charge, refuses to be sworn or to give evidence, or if facts are proved on oath from which it can be inferred reasonably that the person

- (a) is dead,
- (b) has since become and is insane,
- (c) is so ill that he is unable to travel or testify, or
- (d) is absent from Canada, and where it is proved that the evidence was taken in the presence of the accused, it may be admitted as evidence in the proceedings without further proof, unless the accused proves that the accused did not have full opportunity to cross-examine the witness.

Admission of evidence

(2) Evidence that has been taken on the preliminary inquiry or other investigation of a charge against an accused may be admitted as evidence in the prosecution of the accused for any other offence on the same proof and in the same manner in all respects, as it might, according to law, be admitted as evidence in the prosecution of the offence with which the accused was charged when the evidence was taken.

Admission of evidence

(2.1) Despite subsections (1) and (2), evidence that has been taken at a preliminary inquiry in the absence of the accused may be admitted as evidence for the purposes referred to in those subsections if the accused was absent further to the permission of a justice granted under paragraph 537\(1\)\(j.1\).

Absconding accused deemed present

(3) For the purposes of this section, where evidence was taken at a previous trial or preliminary hearing or other proceeding in respect of an accused in the absence of the accused, who was absent by reason of having absconded, the accused is deemed to have been present during the taking of the evidence and to have had full opportunity to cross-examine the witness.

Exception

(4) Subsections (1) to (3) do not apply in respect of evidence received under subsection 540\(7\).

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 715; 1994, c. 44, s. 77; 1997, c. 18, s. 105; 2002, c. 13, s. 72; 2008, c. 18, s. 34.

Transcript of evidence

715.01 (1) Despite section 715, the transcript of testimony given by a police officer, as defined in section 183, in the presence of an accused during a voir dire or preliminary inquiry held in relation to the accused's trial may be received in evidence at that trial.

Notice of intention to produce evidence

(2) No transcript is to be received in evidence unless the party intending to produce it has given to the party against whom it is intended to be produced reasonable notice of that intention together with a copy of the transcript.

Attendance of police officer

(3) The court may require the attendance of the police officer for the purposes of examination or cross-examination, as the case may be.

Admission of evidence

(4) Despite subsection (1), evidence that has been taken at a preliminary inquiry in the absence of an accused may be received in evidence for the purposes referred to in that subsection if the accused's absence was authorized by a justice under paragraph 537\(1\)\(j.1\).

Absconding accused deemed present

(5) For the purposes of this section, if evidence was taken during a voir dire or preliminary inquiry in the absence of an accused, who was absent by reason of having absconded, the accused is deemed to have been present during the taking of the evidence and to have had full opportunity to cross-examine the witness.

Exception

(6) This section does not apply to any evidence received under subsection 540\(7\).

Video-recorded Evidence

Evidence of victim or witness under 18

715.1 (1) In any proceeding against an accused in which a victim or other witness was under the age of eighteen years at the time the offence is alleged to have been committed, a video recording made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the victim or witness describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the victim or witness, while testifying, adopts the contents of the video recording, unless the presiding judge or justice is of the opinion that admission of the video recording in evidence would interfere with the proper administration of justice.

Order prohibiting use

(2) The presiding judge or justice may prohibit any other use of a video recording referred to in subsection (1).

Evidence of victim or witness who has a disability

715.2 (1) In any proceeding against an accused in which a victim or other witness is able to communicate evidence but may have difficulty doing so by reason of a mental or physical disability, a video recording made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the victim or witness describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the victim or witness, while testifying, adopts the contents of the video recording, unless the presiding judge or justice is of the opinion that admission of the video recording in evidence would interfere with the proper administration of justice.

Order prohibiting use

(2) The presiding judge or justice may prohibit any other use of a video recording referred to in subsection (1).

PART XXII.01

Remote Attendance by Certain Persons

Principles

Attendance

715.21 Except as otherwise provided in this Act, a person who appears at, participates in or presides at a proceeding shall do so in person.

2019, c. 25, s. 292; 2022, c. 17, s. 45\(E\).

Provisions providing for audioconference or videoconference

715.22 The purpose of the provisions of this Act that allow a person to appear at, participate in or preside at a proceeding by audioconference or videoconference, in accordance with the rules of court, is to serve the proper administration of justice, including by ensuring fair and efficient proceedings and enhancing access to justice.

2019, c. 25, s. 292.

General

Reasons

715.221 If the court denies a request respecting a person's appearance or participation by audioconference or videoconference under this Part, it shall include in the record a statement of the reasons for the denial.

2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Cessation

715.222 If the court allows or requires a person's appearance or participation by audioconference or videoconference under this Part, it may, at any time, cease the use of those technological means and take any measure that it considers appropriate in the circumstances to have the person appear at or participate in the proceedings.

2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Accused and Offenders

Considerations — appearance by audioconference or videoconference

715.23 Before making a determination to allow or require an accused or offender to appear by audioconference or videoconference under any of sections 715.231 to 715.241, the court must be of the opinion that the appearance by those means would be appropriate having regard to all the circumstances, including

- (a) the location and personal circumstances of the accused or offender;
- (b) the costs that would be incurred if the accused or offender were to appear in person;
- (c) the suitability of the location from where the accused or offender will appear;
- (d) the accused's or offender's right to a fair and public hearing; and
- (e) the nature and seriousness of the offence.

2019, c. 25, s. 292; 2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Preliminary inquiry

715.231 The court may, with the consent of the prosecutor and the accused, allow an accused to appear by videoconference at the preliminary inquiry.

2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Trial — summary conviction offence

715.232 The court may allow an accused to appear by videoconference at a trial for a summary conviction offence

(a) if the accused is not in custody, with the consent of the accused and the prosecutor; and

(b) if the accused is in custody, with the consent of the accused.

2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Trial — indictable offence

715.233 The court may, with the consent of the prosecutor and the accused, allow an accused to appear by videoconference at a trial for an indictable offence. However, an accused must not appear by videoconference during a jury trial when evidence is being presented to the jury.

2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Plea

715.234 (1) The court may, with the consent of the prosecutor and the accused, allow an accused to appear by audioconference or videoconference for the purpose of making a plea.

Limitation

(2) The court may allow the accused to appear by audioconference only if it is satisfied that

(a) videoconferencing is not readily available; and

(b) the appearance by audioconference would permit the court to inquire into the conditions for accepting a plea of guilty under subsection 606\(1.1\) despite the fact that the court would not be able to see the accused.

2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Sentencing

715.235 (1) The court may, with the consent of the prosecutor and the offender, allow an offender to appear by audioconference or videoconference for sentencing purposes.

Limitation

(2) The court may allow the offender to appear by audioconference only if videoconferencing is not readily available.

2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Proceedings not expressly provided for 715.24 In any proceedings in respect of which this Act does not expressly authorize the court to allow an accused or offender to appear by audioconference or videoconference or limit or prohibit their appearance by those means, the court may allow the accused or offender to appear by either of those means.

2019, c. 25, s. 292; 2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Accused in custody — no evidence taken

715.241 Despite sections 715.231 to 715.233, the court may allow or require an accused who is in custody and who has access to legal advice to appear by videoconference in any proceeding referred to in those sections, other than a part in which the evidence of a witness is taken.

2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Conditions — no access to legal advice

715.242 Despite anything in this Act, before allowing an accused or offender who does not have access to legal advice during the proceedings to appear by audioconference or videoconference, the court must be satisfied that they will be able to understand the proceedings and that any decisions made by them during the proceedings will be voluntary.

2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Communication with counsel

715.243 An accused or offender who appears by audioconference or videoconference must be given the opportunity to communicate privately with counsel if they are represented by counsel.

2022, c. 17, s. 46.

Participants

Definition of participant

715.25 (1) In this section, participant means any person, other than an accused, an offender, a witness, a juror, a judge or a justice, who may participate in a proceeding.

Participation by audioconference or videoconference

(2) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the court may allow a participant to participate in a proceeding by audioconference or videoconference, if the court is of the opinion that it would be appropriate having regard to all the circumstances, including

- (a) the location and personal circumstances of the participant;
- (b) the costs that would be incurred if the participant were to participate in person;
- (c) the nature of the participation;
- (d) the suitability of the location from where the participant will participate;
- (e) the accused's right to a fair and public hearing; and
- (f) the nature and seriousness of the offence.

(3) [Repealed, 2022, c. 17, s. 47]

(4) [Repealed, 2022, c. 17, s. 47]

Costs

(5) Unless the court orders otherwise, a party who has a participant participate by audioconference or videoconference shall pay any costs associated with the use of that technology.

2019, c. 25, s. 292; 2022, c. 17, s. 47.

Judge or Justice

Presiding by audioconference or videoconference

715.26 (1) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the judge or justice may preside at the proceeding by audioconference or videoconference, if the judge or justice considers it necessary having regard to all the circumstances, including

- (a) the accused's right to a fair and public hearing;
- (b) the nature of the witness' anticipated evidence;
- (c) the nature and seriousness of the offence; and
- (d) the suitability of the location from where the judge or justice will preside.

Reasons

(2) The judge or justice shall include in the record a statement of the judge or justice's reasons for the decision to preside at the proceeding by audioconference or videoconference.

Cessation

(3) The judge or justice may, at any time, cease the use of the technological means referred to in subsection (1) and take any measure that the judge or justice considers appropriate in the circumstances to preside at the proceeding.

2019, c. 25, s. 292.

Prospective Jurors

Definition of prospective juror

715.27 (1) In this section, prospective juror means a person who has been summoned as a juror and who has not yet been sworn in accordance with Part XX.

Participation by videoconference

(2) The court may, with the consent of the prosecutor and the accused, allow or require any or all prospective jurors to participate in the jury selection process by videoconference if the court is of the opinion that it would be appropriate having regard to all the circumstances, including

- (a) the challenges related to the in-person participation of prospective jurors;
- (b) the nature of the participation;
- (c) the suitability of the location from where the prospective jurors will participate;
- (d) the privacy and security of the prospective jurors;
- (e) the accused's right to a fair and public hearing; and
- (f) the nature and seriousness of the offence.

Location provided

(3) The court may require prospective jurors to participate by videoconference only if the court has approved a location that will be provided for their participation where the technology for videoconferencing is available.

No location provided

(4) The court shall give prospective jurors the option to participate in person if it allows for their participation by videoconference but no location approved by the court is provided for their participation by those means.

PART XXII.1

Remediation Agreements

Definitions

715.3 (1) The following definitions apply in this Part.

court means a superior court of criminal jurisdiction but does not include a court of appeal. (tribunal)

offence means any offence listed in the schedule to this Part. (infraction) organization has the same meaning as in section 2 but does not include a public body, trade union or municipality. (organisation) remediation agreement means an agreement, between an organization accused of having committed an offence and a prosecutor, to stay any proceedings related to that offence if the organization complies with the terms of the agreement. (accord de réparation) victim has the same meaning as in section 2 but, with respect to an offence under section 3 or 4 of the Corruption of Foreign Public Officials Act, it includes any person outside Canada. (victime)

Acting on victim's behalf

(2) For the purposes of this Part, a third party not referred to in section 2.2 may also act on a victim's behalf when authorized to do so by the court, if the victim requests it or the prosecutor deems it appropriate.

2018, c. 12, s. 404.

Purpose

715.31 The purpose of this Part is to establish a remediation agreement regime that is applicable to organizations alleged to have committed an offence and that has the following objectives:

- (a) to denounce an organization's wrongdoing and the harm that the wrongdoing has caused to victims or to the community;
- (b) to hold the organization accountable for its wrongdoing through effective, proportionate and dissuasive penalties;
- (c) to contribute to respect for the law by imposing an obligation on the organization to put in place corrective measures and promote a compliance culture;
- (d) to encourage voluntary disclosure of the wrongdoing;
- (e) to provide reparations for harm done to victims or to the community; and
- (f) to reduce the negative consequences of the wrongdoing for persons — employees, customers, pensioners and others — who did not engage in the wrongdoing, while holding responsible those individuals who did engage in that wrongdoing.

2018, c. 12, s. 404.

Conditions for remediation agreement

715.32 (1) The prosecutor may enter into negotiations for a remediation agreement with an organization alleged to have committed an offence if the following conditions are met:

- (a) the prosecutor is of the opinion that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction with respect to the offence;
- (b) the prosecutor is of the opinion that the act or omission that forms the basis of the offence did not cause and was not likely to have caused serious bodily harm or death, or injury to national defence or national security, and was not committed for the benefit of, at the direction of, or in association with, a criminal organization or terrorist group;
- (c) the prosecutor is of the opinion that negotiating the agreement is in the public interest and appropriate in the circumstances; and
- (d) the Attorney General has consented to the negotiation of the agreement.

Factors to consider

(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1)(c), the prosecutor must consider the following factors:

- (a) the circumstances in which the act or omission that forms the basis of the offence was brought to the attention of investigative authorities;
- (b) the nature and gravity of the act or omission and its impact on any victim;
- (c) the degree of involvement of senior officers of the organization in the act or omission;
- (d) whether the organization has taken disciplinary action, including termination of employment, against any person who was involved in the act or omission;
- (e) whether the organization has made reparations or taken other measures to remedy the harm caused by the act or omission and to prevent the commission of similar acts or omissions;
- (f) whether the organization has identified or expressed a willingness to identify any person involved in wrongdoing related to the act or omission;
- (g) whether the organization — or any of its representatives — was convicted of an offence or sanctioned by a regulatory body, or whether it entered into a previous remediation agreement or other settlement, in Canada or elsewhere, for similar acts or omissions;
- (h) whether the organization — or any of its representatives — is alleged to have committed any other offences, including those not listed in the schedule to this Part; and
- (i) any other factor that the prosecutor considers relevant.

Factors not to consider

(3) Despite paragraph (2)(i), if the organization is alleged to have committed an offence under section 3 or 4 of the Corruption of Foreign Public Officials Act, the prosecutor must not consider the national economic interest, the potential effect on relations with a state other than Canada or the identity of the organization or individual involved.

2018, c. 12, s. 404.

Notice to organization — invitation to negotiate

715.33 (1) If the prosecutor wishes to negotiate a remediation agreement, they must give the organization written notice of the offer to enter into negotiations and the notice must include

- (a) a summary description of the offence to which the agreement would apply;
- (b) an indication of the voluntary nature of the negotiation process;
- (c) an indication of the legal effects of the agreement;
- (d) an indication that, by agreeing to the terms of this notice, the organization explicitly waives the inclusion of the negotiation period and the period during which the agreement is in force in any assessment of the reasonableness of the delay between the day on which the charge is laid and the end of trial;

(e) an indication that negotiations must be carried out in good faith and that the organization must provide all information requested by the prosecutor that the organization is aware of or can obtain through reasonable efforts, including information enabling the identification of any person involved in the act or omission that forms the basis of the offence or any wrongdoing related to that act or omission;

(f) an indication of how the information disclosed by the organization during the negotiations may be used, subject to subsection (2);

(g) a warning that knowingly making false or misleading statements or knowingly providing false or misleading information during the negotiations may lead to the recommencement of proceedings or prosecution for obstruction of justice;

(h) an indication that either party may withdraw from the negotiations by providing written notice to the other party;

(i) an indication that reasonable efforts must be made by both parties to identify any victim as soon as practicable; and

(j) a deadline to accept the offer to negotiate according to the terms of the notice.

Admissions not admissible in evidence

(2) No admission, confession or statement accepting responsibility for a given act or omission made by the organization during the negotiations is admissible in evidence against that organization in any civil or criminal proceedings related to that act or omission, except those contained in the statement of facts or admission of responsibility referred to in paragraphs 715.34\(1\)\(a\) and \(b\), if the parties reach an agreement and it is approved by the court.

2018, c. 12, s. 404.

Mandatory contents of agreement

715.34 (1) A remediation agreement must include

(a) a statement of facts related to the offence that the organization is alleged to have committed and an undertaking by the organization not to make or condone any public statement that contradicts those facts;

(b) the organization's admission of responsibility for the act or omission that forms the basis of the offence;

(c) an indication of the obligation for the organization to provide any other information that will assist in identifying any person involved in the act or omission, or any wrongdoing related to that act or omission, that the organization becomes aware of, or can obtain through reasonable efforts, after the agreement has been entered into;

(d) an indication of the obligation for the organization to cooperate in any investigation, prosecution or other proceeding in Canada — or elsewhere if the prosecutor considers it appropriate — resulting from the act or omission, including by providing information or testimony;

(e) with respect to any property, benefit or advantage identified in the agreement that was obtained or derived directly or indirectly from the act or omission, an obligation for the organization to

(i) forfeit it to Her Majesty in right of Canada, to be disposed of in accordance with paragraph 4\(1\)\(b.2\) of the Seized Property Management Act,

(ii) forfeit it to Her Majesty in right of a province, to be disposed of as the Attorney General directs, or

(iii) otherwise deal with it, as the prosecutor directs;

(f) an indication of the obligation for the organization to pay a penalty to the Receiver General or to the treasurer of a province, as the case may be, for each offence to which the agreement applies, the amount to be paid and any other terms respecting payment;

(g) an indication of any reparations, including restitution consistent with paragraph 738\(1\)\(a\) or \(b\), that the organization is required to make to a victim or a statement by the prosecutor of the reasons why reparations to a victim are not appropriate in the circumstances and an indication of any measure required in lieu of reparations to a victim;

(h) an indication of the obligation for the organization to pay a victim surcharge for each offence to which the agreement applies, other than an offence under section 3 or 4 of the Corruption of Foreign Public Officials Act, the amount to be paid and any other terms respecting payment;

(i) an indication of the obligation for the organization to report to the prosecutor on the implementation of the agreement and an indication of the manner in which the report is to be made and any other terms respecting reporting;

(j) an indication of the legal effects of the agreement;

(k) an acknowledgement by the organization that the agreement has been made in good faith and that the information it has provided during the negotiation is accurate and complete and a commitment that it will continue to provide accurate and complete information while the agreement is in force;

(l) an indication of the use that can be made of information obtained as a result of the agreement, subject to subsection (2);

(m) a warning that the breach of any term of the agreement may lead to an application by the prosecutor for termination of the agreement and a recommencement of proceedings;

(n) an indication of the obligation for the organization not to deduct, for income tax purposes, the costs of any reparations or other measures referred to in paragraph (g) or any other costs incurred to fulfil the terms of the agreement;

(o) a notice of the prosecutor's right to vary or terminate the agreement with the approval of the court; and

(p) an indication of the deadline by which the organization must meet the terms of the agreement.

Admissions not admissible in evidence

(2) No admission, confession or statement accepting responsibility for a given act or omission made by the organization as a result of the agreement is admissible in evidence against that organization in any civil or criminal proceedings related to that act or omission, except those contained in the statement of facts and admission of responsibility referred to in paragraphs (1)(a) and (b), if the agreement is approved by the court.

Optional content of agreement

(3) A remediation agreement may include, among other things,

(a) an indication of the obligation for the organization to establish, implement or enhance compliance measures to address any deficiencies in the organization's policies, standards or procedures — including those related to internal control procedures and employee training — that may have allowed the act or omission;

(b) an indication of the obligation for the organization to reimburse the prosecutor for any costs identified in the agreement that are related to its administration and that have or will be incurred by the prosecutor; and

(c) an indication of the fact that an independent monitor has been appointed, as selected with the prosecutor's approval, to verify and report to the prosecutor on the organization's compliance with the obligation referred to in paragraph (a), or any other obligation in the agreement identified by the prosecutor, as well as an indication of the organization's obligations with respect to that monitor, including the obligations to cooperate with the monitor and pay the monitor's costs.

Independent monitor — conflict of interest

715.35 A candidate for appointment as an independent monitor must notify the prosecutor in writing of any previous or ongoing relationship, in particular with the organization or any of its representatives, that may have a real or perceived impact on the candidate's ability to provide an independent verification.

Duty to inform victims

715.36 (1) After an organization has accepted the offer to negotiate according to the terms of the notice referred to in section 715.33, the prosecutor must take reasonable steps to inform any victim, or any third party that is acting on the victim's behalf, that a remediation agreement may be entered into.

Interpretation

(2) The duty to inform any victim is to be construed and applied in a manner that is reasonable in the circumstances and not likely to interfere with the proper administration of justice, including by causing interference with prosecutorial discretion or compromising, hindering or causing excessive delay to the negotiation of an agreement or its conclusion.

Reasons

(3) If the prosecutor elects not to inform a victim or third party under subsection (1), they must provide the court, when applying for approval of the agreement, with a statement of the reasons why it was not appropriate to do so in the circumstances.

2018, c. 12, s. 404.

Application for court approval

715.37 (1) When the prosecutor and the organization have agreed to the terms of a remediation agreement, the prosecutor must apply to the court in writing for an order approving the agreement.

Coming into force

(2) The coming into force of the agreement is subject to the approval of the court.

Consideration of victims

(3) To determine whether to approve the agreement, the court hearing an application must consider

- (a) any reparations, statement and other measure referred to in paragraph 715.34\(1\)\(g\);
- (b) any statement made by the prosecutor under subsection 715.36\(3\);
- (c) any victim or community impact statement presented to the court; and
- (d) any victim surcharge referred to in paragraph 715.34\(1\)\(h\).

Victim or community impact statement

(4) For the purpose of paragraph (3)(c), the rules provided for in sections 722 to 722.2 apply, other than subsection 722\(6\), with any necessary modifications and, in particular,

- (a) a victim or community impact statement, or any other evidence concerning any victim, must be considered when determining whether to approve the agreement under subsection (6);
- (b) the inquiry referred to in subsection 722\(2\) must be made at the hearing of the application; and
- (c) the duty of the clerk under section 722.1 or subsection 722.2\(5\) is deemed to be the duty of the prosecutor to make reasonable efforts to provide a copy of the statement to the organization or counsel for the organization as soon as feasible after the prosecutor obtains it.

Victim surcharge

(5) For the purpose of paragraph 715.34\(1\)\(h\), the amount of the victim surcharge is 30% of any penalty referred to in paragraph 715.34\(1\)\(f\), or any other percentage that the prosecutor deems appropriate in the circumstances, and is payable to the treasurer of the province in which the application for approval referred to in section 715.37 is made.

Approval order

(6) The court must, by order, approve the agreement if it is satisfied that

- (a) the organization is charged with an offence to which the agreement applies;
- (b) the agreement is in the public interest; and
- (c) the terms of the agreement are fair, reasonable and proportionate to the gravity of the offence.

Stay of proceedings

(7) As soon as practicable after the court approves the agreement, the prosecutor must direct the clerk or other proper officer of the court to make an entry on the record that the proceedings against the organization in respect of any offence to which the agreement applies are stayed by that direction and that entry must be made immediately, after which time the proceedings shall be stayed accordingly.

Other proceedings

(8) No other proceedings may be initiated against the organization for the same offence while the agreement is in force.

Limitation period

(9) The running of a limitation period in respect of any offence to which the agreement applies is suspended while the agreement is in force.

2018, c. 12, s. 404.

Variation order

715.38 On application by the prosecutor, the court must, by order, approve any modification to a remediation agreement if the court is satisfied that the agreement continues to meet the conditions set out in subsection 715.37\(6\). On approval, the modification is deemed to form part of the agreement.

2018, c. 12, s. 404.

Termination order

715.39 (1) On application by the prosecutor, the court must, by order, terminate the agreement if it is satisfied that the organization has breached a term of the agreement.

Recommendation of proceedings

(2) As soon as the order is made, proceedings stayed in accordance with subsection 715.37\(7\) may be recommenced, without a new information or a new indictment, as the case may be, by the prosecutor giving notice of the recommencement to the clerk of the court in which the stay of the proceedings was entered.

Stay of proceedings

(3) If no notice is given within one year after the order is made under subsection (1), or before the expiry of the time within which the proceedings could have been commenced, whichever is earlier, the proceedings are deemed never to have been commenced.

2018, c. 12, s. 404.

Order declaring successful completion

715.4 (1) On application by the prosecutor, the court must, by order, declare that the terms of the agreement were met if it is satisfied that the organization has complied with the agreement.

Stay of proceedings

(2) The order stays the proceedings against the organization for any offence to which the agreement applies, the proceedings are deemed never to have been commenced and no other proceedings may be initiated against the organization for the same offence.

2018, c. 12, s. 404.

Deadline

715.41 (1) The prosecutor must, as soon as practicable after the deadline referred to in paragraph 715.34\(1\)\(p\), apply to the court in writing for a variation order under section 715.38, including to extend the deadline, an order terminating the agreement under section 715.39 or an order under section 715.4 declaring that its terms were met and the court may issue any of these orders as it deems appropriate.

Deeming

(2) The agreement is deemed to remain in force until a court issues an order terminating it or declaring that its terms were met.

2018, c. 12, s. 404.

Publication

715.42 (1) Subject to subsection (2), the following must be published by the court as soon as practicable:

- (a) the remediation agreement approved by the court;
- (b) an order made under any of sections 715.37 to 715.41 and the reasons for that order or the reasons for the decision not to make that order; and

(c) a decision made under subsection (2) or (5) and the reasons for that decision.

Decision not to publish

(2) The court may decide not to publish the agreement or any order or reasons referred to in paragraph (1)(b), in whole or in part, if it is satisfied that the non-publication is necessary for the proper administration of justice.

Factors to be considered

(3) To decide whether the proper administration of justice requires making the decision referred to in subsection (2), the court must consider

(a) society's interest in encouraging the reporting of offences and the participation of victims in the criminal justice process;

(b) whether it is necessary to protect the identity of any victims, any person not engaged in the wrongdoing and any person who brought the wrongdoing to the attention of investigative authorities;

(c) the prevention of any adverse effect to any ongoing investigation or prosecution;

(d) whether effective alternatives to the decision referred to in subsection (2) are available in the circumstances;

(e) the salutary and deleterious effects of making the decision referred to in subsection (2); and

(f) any other factor that the court considers relevant.

Conditions

(4) The court may make its decision subject to any conditions that it considers appropriate, including a condition related to the duration of non-publication.

Review of decision

(5) On application by any person, the court must review the decision made under subsection (2) to determine whether the non-publication continues to be necessary for the proper administration of justice. If the court is satisfied that the non-publication is no longer necessary, it must publish the agreement, order or reasons, as the case may be, in whole or in part, as soon as practicable.

Regulations

715.43 (1) On the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, the Governor in Council may make regulations generally for the purposes of carrying out this Part, including regulations respecting

(a) the form of the remediation agreement; and

(b) the verification of compliance by an independent monitor, including

- (i) the qualifications for monitors,
- (ii) the process to select a monitor,
- (iii) the form and content of a conflict of interest notification, and
- (iv) reporting requirements.

Amendment of schedule

(2) On the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, the Governor in Council may, by order, amend the schedule by adding or deleting any offence to which a remediation agreement may apply.

Deleting offence

(3) If the Governor in Council orders the deletion of an offence from the schedule to this Part, this Part continues to apply to an organization alleged to have committed that offence if a notice referred to in section 715.33 respecting that offence was sent to the organization before the day on which the order comes into force.

PART XXIII

Sentencing

Interpretation

Definitions

716 In this Part,

accused includes a defendant; (accusé)

alternative measures means measures other than judicial proceedings under this Act used to deal with a person who is eighteen years of age or over and alleged to have committed an offence; (mesures de rechange) court means

- (a) a superior court of criminal jurisdiction,
- (b) a court of criminal jurisdiction,
- (c) a justice or provincial court judge acting as a summary conviction court under Part XXVII, or
- (d) a court that hears an appeal; (tribunal)

fine includes a pecuniary penalty or other sum of money, but does not include restitution. (amende)

Alternative Measures

When alternative measures may be used

717 (1) Alternative measures may be used to deal with a person alleged to have committed an offence only if it is not inconsistent with the protection of society and the following conditions are met:

- (a) the measures are part of a program of alternative measures authorized by the Attorney General or the Attorney General's delegate or authorized by a person, or a person within a class of persons, designated by the lieutenant governor in council of a province;
- (b) the person who is considering whether to use the measures is satisfied that they would be appropriate, having regard to the needs of the person alleged to have committed the offence and the interests of society and of the victim;
- (c) the person, having been informed of the alternative measures, fully and freely consents to participate therein;
- (d) the person has, before consenting to participate in the alternative measures, been advised of the right to be represented by counsel;
- (e) the person accepts responsibility for the act or omission that forms the basis of the offence that the person is alleged to have committed;
- (f) there is, in the opinion of the Attorney General or the Attorney General's agent, sufficient evidence to proceed with the prosecution of the offence; and
- (g) the prosecution of the offence is not in any way barred at law.

Restriction on use

(2) Alternative measures shall not be used to deal with a person alleged to have committed an offence if the person

- (a) denies participation or involvement in the commission of the offence; or
- (b) expresses the wish to have any charge against the person dealt with by the court.

Admissions not admissible in evidence

(3) No admission, confession or statement accepting responsibility for a given act or omission made by a person alleged to have committed an offence as a condition of the person being dealt with by alternative measures is admissible in evidence against that person in any civil or criminal proceedings.

No bar to proceedings

(4) The use of alternative measures in respect of a person alleged to have committed an offence is not a bar to proceedings against the person under this Act, but, if a charge is laid against that person in respect of that offence,

(a) where the court is satisfied on a balance of probabilities that the person has totally complied with the terms and conditions of the alternative measures, the court shall dismiss the charge; and

(b) where the court is satisfied on a balance of probabilities that the person has partially complied with the terms and conditions of the alternative measures, the court may dismiss the charge if, in the opinion of the court, the prosecution of the charge would be unfair, having regard to the circumstances and that person's performance with respect to the alternative measures.

Laying of information, etc.

(5) Subject to subsection (4), nothing in this section shall be construed as preventing any person from laying an information, obtaining the issue or confirmation of any process, or proceeding with the prosecution of any offence, in accordance with law.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 717; 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Records of persons dealt with 717.1 Sections 717.2 to 717.4 apply only in respect of persons who have been dealt with by alternative measures, regardless of the degree of their compliance with the terms and conditions of the alternative measures.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Police records

717.2 (1) A record relating to any offence alleged to have been committed by a person, including the original or a copy of any fingerprints or photographs of the person, may be kept by any police force responsible for, or participating in, the investigation of the offence.

Disclosure by peace officer

(2) A peace officer may disclose to any person any information in a record kept pursuant to this section that it is necessary to disclose in the conduct of the investigation of an offence.

Idem

(3) A peace officer may disclose to an insurance company any information in a record kept pursuant to this section for the purpose of investigating any claim arising out of an offence committed or alleged to have been committed by the person to whom the record relates.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Government records

717.3 (1) A department or agency of any government in Canada may keep records containing information obtained by the department or agency

- (a) for the purposes of an investigation of an offence alleged to have been committed by a person;
- (b) for use in proceedings against a person under this Act; or
- (c) as a result of the use of alternative measures to deal with a person.

Private records

(2) Any person or organization may keep records containing information obtained by the person or organization as a result of the use of alternative measures to deal with a person alleged to have committed an offence.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Disclosure of records

717.4 (1) Any record that is kept pursuant to section 717.2 or 717.3 may be made available to

- (a) any judge or court for any purpose relating to proceedings relating to offences committed or alleged to have been committed by the person to whom the record relates;
- (b) any peace officer
 - (i) for the purpose of investigating any offence that the person is suspected on reasonable grounds of having committed, or in respect of which the person has been arrested or charged, or
 - (ii) for any purpose related to the administration of the case to which the record relates;
- (c) any member of a department or agency of a government in Canada, or any agent thereof, that is
 - (i) engaged in the administration of alternative measures in respect of the person, or
 - (ii) preparing a report in respect of the person pursuant to this Act; or
- (d) any other person who is deemed, or any person within a class of persons that is deemed, by a judge of a court to have a valid interest in the record, to the extent directed by the judge, if the judge is satisfied that the disclosure is
 - (i) desirable in the public interest for research or statistical purposes, or
 - (ii) desirable in the interest of the proper administration of justice.

Subsequent disclosure

(2) Where a record is made available for inspection to any person under subparagraph (1)(d)(i), that person may subsequently disclose information contained in the record, but may not disclose the information in any form that would reasonably be expected to identify the person to whom it relates.

Information, copies

(3) Any person to whom a record is authorized to be made available under this section may be given any information contained in the record and may be given a copy of any part of the record.

Evidence

(4) Nothing in this section authorizes the introduction into evidence of any part of a record that would not otherwise be admissible in evidence.

Idem

(5) A record kept pursuant to section 717.2 or 717.3 may not be introduced into evidence, except for the purposes set out in paragraph 721\(3\)\(c\), more than two years after the end of the period for which the person agreed to participate in the alternative measures.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Purpose and Principles of Sentencing

Purpose

718 The fundamental purpose of sentencing is to protect society and to contribute, along with crime prevention initiatives, to respect for the law and the maintenance of a just, peaceful and safe society by imposing just sanctions that have one or more of the following objectives:

- (a) to denounce unlawful conduct and the harm done to victims or to the community that is caused by unlawful conduct;
- (b) to deter the offender and other persons from committing offences;
- (c) to separate offenders from society, where necessary;
- (d) to assist in rehabilitating offenders;
- (e) to provide reparations for harm done to victims or to the community; and
- (f) to promote a sense of responsibility in offenders, and acknowledgment of the harm done to victims or to the community.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 718; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 155; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 2015, c. 13, s. 23.

Objectives — offences against children

718.01 When a court imposes a sentence for an offence that involved the abuse of a person under the age of eighteen years, it shall give primary consideration to the objectives of denunciation and deterrence of such conduct.

2005, c. 32, s. 24.

Objectives — offence against peace officer or other justice system participant

718.02 When a court imposes a sentence for an offence under subsection 270\(1\), section 270.01 or 270.02 or paragraph 423.1\(1\)\(b\), the court shall give primary consideration to the objectives of denunciation and deterrence of the conduct that forms the basis of the offence.

2009, c. 22, s. 18.

Objectives — offence against certain animals

718.03 When a court imposes a sentence for an offence under subsection 445.01\(1\), the court shall give primary consideration to the objectives of denunciation and deterrence of the conduct that forms the basis of the offence.

2015, c. 34, s. 4.

Objectives — offence against vulnerable person

718.04 When a court imposes a sentence for an offence that involved the abuse of a person who is vulnerable because of personal circumstances — including because the person is Aboriginal and female — the court shall give primary consideration to the objectives of denunciation and deterrence of the conduct that forms the basis of the offence.

2019, c. 25, s. 292.1.

Fundamental principle

718.1 A sentence must be proportionate to the gravity of the offence and the degree of responsibility of the offender.

R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 156; 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Other sentencing principles

718.2 A court that imposes a sentence shall also take into consideration the following principles:

(a) a sentence should be increased or reduced to account for any relevant aggravating or mitigating circumstances relating to the offence or the offender, and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing,

(i) evidence that the offence was motivated by bias, prejudice or hate based on race, national or ethnic origin, language, colour, religion, sex, age, mental or physical disability, sexual orientation, or gender identity or expression, or on any other similar factor,

(ii) evidence that the offender, in committing the offence, abused the offender's intimate partner or a member of the victim or the offender's family,

(ii.1) evidence that the offender, in committing the offence, abused a person under the age of eighteen years,

(ii.2) evidence that the offender involved a person under the age of 18 years in the commission of the offence,

(iii) evidence that the offender, in committing the offence, abused a position of trust or authority in relation to the victim,

(iii.1) evidence that the offence had a significant impact on the victim, considering their age and other personal circumstances, including their health and financial situation,

(iii.2) evidence that the offence was committed against a person who, in the performance of their duties and functions, was providing health services, including personal care services,

(iv) evidence that the offence was committed for the benefit of, at the direction of or in association with a criminal organization,

(v) evidence that the offence was a terrorism offence,

(vi) evidence that the offence was committed while the offender was subject to a conditional sentence order made under section 742.1 or released on parole, statutory release or unescorted temporary absence under the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, and

(vii) evidence that the commission of the offence had the effect of impeding another person from obtaining health services, including personal care services, shall be deemed to be aggravating circumstances;

(b) a sentence should be similar to sentences imposed on similar offenders for similar offences committed in similar circumstances;

(c) where consecutive sentences are imposed, the combined sentence should not be unduly long or harsh;

(d) an offender should not be deprived of liberty, if less restrictive sanctions may be appropriate in the circumstances; and

(e) all available sanctions, other than imprisonment, that are reasonable in the circumstances and consistent with the harm done to victims or to the community should be considered for all offenders, with particular attention to the circumstances of Aboriginal offenders.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1997, c. 23, s. 17; 2000, c. 12, s. 95; 2001, c. 32, s. 44\(F\), c. 41, s. 20; 2005, c. 32, s. 25; 2012, c. 29, s. 2; 2015, c. 13, s. 24, c. 23, s. 16; 2017, c. 13, s. 4; 2019, c. 25, s. 293; 2021, c. 27, s. 5; 2024, c. 17, s. 374.

Additional consideration — increased vulnerability

718.201 A court that imposes a sentence in respect of an offence that involved the abuse of an intimate partner shall consider the increased vulnerability of female persons who are victims, giving particular attention to the circumstances of Aboriginal female victims.

2019, c. 25, s. 293.1.

Organizations

Additional factors

718.21 A court that imposes a sentence on an organization shall also take into consideration the following factors:

- (a) any advantage realized by the organization as a result of the offence;
- (b) the degree of planning involved in carrying out the offence and the duration and complexity of the offence;
- (c) whether the organization has attempted to conceal its assets, or convert them, in order to show that it is not able to pay a fine or make restitution;
- (d) the impact that the sentence would have on the economic viability of the organization and the continued employment of its employees;
- (e) the cost to public authorities of the investigation and prosecution of the offence;
- (f) any regulatory penalty imposed on the organization or one of its representatives in respect of the conduct that formed the basis of the offence;
- (g) whether the organization was — or any of its representatives who were involved in the commission of the offence were — convicted of a similar offence or sanctioned by a regulatory body for similar conduct;
- (h) any penalty imposed by the organization on a representative for their role in the commission of the offence;
- (i) any restitution that the organization is ordered to make or any amount that the organization has paid to a victim of the offence; and
- (j) any measures that the organization has taken to reduce the likelihood of it committing a subsequent offence.

2003, c. 21, s. 14.

Punishment Generally

Degrees of punishment

718.3 (1) Where an enactment prescribes different degrees or kinds of punishment in respect of an offence, the punishment to be imposed is, subject to the limitations prescribed in the enactment, in the discretion of the court that convicts a person who commits the offence.

Discretion respecting punishment

(2) Where an enactment prescribes a punishment in respect of an offence, the punishment to be imposed is, subject to the limitations prescribed in the enactment, in the discretion of the court that convicts a person who commits the offence, but no punishment is a minimum punishment unless it is declared to be a minimum punishment.

Imprisonment in default where term not specified

(3) Where an accused is convicted of an offence punishable with both fine and imprisonment and a term of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine is not specified in the enactment that prescribes the punishment to be imposed, the imprisonment that may be imposed in default of payment shall not exceed the term of imprisonment that is prescribed in respect of the offence.

Cumulative punishments

(4) The court that sentences an accused shall consider directing

- (a) that the term of imprisonment that it imposes be served consecutively to a sentence of imprisonment to which the accused is subject at the time of sentencing; and
- (b) that the terms of imprisonment that it imposes at the same time for more than one offence be served consecutively, including when
 - (i) the offences do not arise out of the same event or series of events,
 - (ii) one of the offences was committed while the accused was on judicial interim release, including pending the determination of an appeal, or
 - (iii) one of the offences was committed while the accused was fleeing from a peace officer.

Cumulative punishments — fines

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4), a term of imprisonment includes imprisonment that results from the operation of subsection 734\(4\).

Cumulative punishments — youth

(6) For the purposes of subsection (4), a sentence of imprisonment includes

- (a) a disposition made under paragraph 20(1)(k) or (k.1) of the Young Offenders Act, chapter Y-1 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985;
- (b) a youth sentence imposed under paragraph 42\(2\)\(n\), (o), (q) or (r) of the Youth Criminal Justice Act; and
- (c) a sentence that results from the operation of subsection 743.5(1) or (2).

Cumulative punishments — sexual offences against children

(7) When a court sentences an accused at the same time for more than one sexual offence committed against a child, the court shall direct

- (a) that a sentence of imprisonment it imposes for an offence under section 163.1 be served consecutively to a sentence of imprisonment it imposes for a sexual offence under another section of this Act committed against a child; and

(b) that a sentence of imprisonment it imposes for a sexual offence committed against a child, other than an offence under section 163.1, be served consecutively to a sentence of imprisonment it imposes for a sexual offence committed against another child other than an offence under section 163.1.

Maximum penalty — intimate partner

(8) If an accused is convicted of an indictable offence in the commission of which violence was used, threatened or attempted against an intimate partner and the accused has been previously convicted of an offence in the commission of which violence was used, threatened or attempted against an intimate partner, the court may impose a term of imprisonment that is more than the maximum term of imprisonment provided for that offence but not more than

(a) five years, if the maximum term of imprisonment for the offence is two years or more but less than five years;

(b) 10 years, if the maximum term of imprisonment for the offence is five years or more but less than 10 years;

(c) 14 years, if the maximum term of imprisonment for the offence is 10 years or more but less than 14 years; or

(d) life, if the maximum term of imprisonment for the offence is 14 years or more and up to imprisonment for life.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1997, c. 18, s. 141; 2002, c. 1, s. 182; 2015, c. 23, s. 17; 2019, c. 25, s. 294.

Commencement of sentence

719 (1) A sentence commences when it is imposed, except where a relevant enactment otherwise provides.

Time at large excluded from term of imprisonment

(2) Any time during which a convicted person is unlawfully at large or is lawfully at large on interim release granted pursuant to any provision of this Act does not count as part of any term of imprisonment imposed on the person.

Determination of sentence

(3) In determining the sentence to be imposed on a person convicted of an offence, a court may take into account any time spent in custody by the person as a result of the offence but the court shall limit any credit for that time to a maximum of one day for each day spent in custody.

Exception

(3.1) Despite subsection (3), if the circumstances justify it, the maximum is one and one-half days for each day spent in custody.

Reasons

(3.2) The court shall give reasons for any credit granted and shall cause those reasons to be stated in the record.

Record of proceedings

(3.3) The court shall cause to be stated in the record and on the warrant of committal the offence, the amount of time spent in custody, the term of imprisonment that would have been imposed before any credit was granted, the amount of time credited, if any, and the sentence imposed.

Validity not affected

(3.4) Failure to comply with subsection (3.2) or (3.3) does not affect the validity of the sentence imposed by the court.

When time begins to run

(4) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a term of imprisonment, whether imposed by a trial court or the court appealed to, commences or shall be deemed to be resumed, as the case may be, on the day on which the convicted person is arrested and taken into custody under the sentence.

When fine imposed

(5) Notwithstanding subsection (1), where the sentence that is imposed is a fine with a term of imprisonment in default of payment, no time prior to the day of execution of the warrant of committal counts as part of the term of imprisonment.

Application for leave to appeal

(6) An application for leave to appeal is an appeal for the purposes of this section.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 719; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 157; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 2009, c. 29, s. 3; 2018, c. 29, s. 66.

Procedure and Evidence

Sentencing proceedings

720 (1) A court shall, as soon as practicable after an offender has been found guilty, conduct proceedings to determine the appropriate sentence to be imposed.

Court-supervised programs

(2) The court may, with the consent of the Attorney General and the offender and after considering the interests of justice and of any victim of the offence, delay sentencing to enable the offender to attend a treatment program approved by the province under the supervision of the court, such as an addiction treatment program or a domestic violence counselling program.

Report by probation officer

721 (1) Subject to regulations made under subsection (2), where an accused, other than an organization, pleads guilty to or is found guilty of an offence, a probation officer shall, if required to do so by a court, prepare and file with the court a report in writing relating to the accused for the purpose of assisting the court in imposing a sentence or in determining whether the accused should be discharged under section 730.

Provincial regulations

(2) The lieutenant governor in council of a province may make regulations respecting the types of offences for which a court may require a report, and respecting the content and form of the report.

Content of report

(3) Unless otherwise specified by the court, the report must, wherever possible, contain information on the following matters:

- (a) the offender's age, maturity, character, behaviour, attitude and willingness to make amends;
- (b) subject to subsection 119\(2\) of the Youth Criminal Justice Act, the history of previous dispositions under the Young Offenders Act, chapter Y-1 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, the history of previous sentences under the Youth Criminal Justice Act, and of previous findings of guilt under this Act and any other Act of Parliament;
- (c) the history of any alternative measures used to deal with the offender, and the offender's response to those measures; and
- (d) any matter required, by any regulation made under subsection (2), to be included in the report.

Idem

(4) The report must also contain information on any other matter required by the court, after hearing argument from the prosecutor and the offender, to be included in the report, subject to any contrary regulation made under subsection (2).

Copy of report

(5) The clerk of the court shall provide a copy of the report, as soon as practicable after filing, to the offender or counsel for the offender, as directed by the court, and to the prosecutor.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 721; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 25, s. 16(Preamble); 2002, c. 1, s. 183; 2003, c. 21, s. 15.

Victim impact statement

722 (1) When determining the sentence to be imposed on an offender or determining whether the offender should be discharged under section 730 in respect of any offence, the court shall consider any statement of a victim prepared in accordance with this section and filed with the court describing the physical or emotional harm, property damage or economic loss suffered by the victim as the result of the commission of the offence and the impact of the offence on the victim.

Inquiry by court

(2) As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt and in any event before imposing sentence, the court shall inquire of the prosecutor if reasonable steps have been taken to provide the victim with an opportunity to prepare a statement referred to in subsection (1).

Adjournment

(3) On application of the prosecutor or a victim or on its own motion, the court may adjourn the proceedings to permit the victim to prepare a statement referred to in subsection (1) or to present evidence in accordance with subsection (9), if the court is satisfied that the adjournment would not interfere with the proper administration of justice.

Form

(4) The statement must be prepared in writing, using Form 34.2 in Part XXVIII, in accordance with the procedures established by a program designated for that purpose by the lieutenant governor in council of the province in which the court is exercising its jurisdiction.

Presentation of statement

(5) The court shall, on the request of a victim, permit the victim to present the statement by

- (a) reading it;
- (b) reading it in the presence and close proximity of any support person of the victim's choice;
- (c) reading it outside the court room or behind a screen or other device that would allow the victim not to see the offender; or
- (d) presenting it in any other manner that the court considers appropriate.

Photograph

(6) During the presentation

- (a) the victim may have with them a photograph of themselves taken before the commission of the offence if it would not, in the opinion of the court, disrupt the proceedings; or
- (b) if the statement is presented by someone acting on the victim's behalf, that individual may have with them a photograph of the victim taken before the commission of the offence if it would not, in the opinion of the court, disrupt the proceedings.

Conditions of exclusion

(7) The victim shall not present the statement outside the court room unless arrangements are made for the offender and the judge or justice to watch the presentation by means of closed-circuit television or otherwise and the offender is permitted to communicate with counsel while watching the presentation.

Consideration of statement

(8) In considering the statement, the court shall take into account the portions of the statement that it considers relevant to the determination referred to in subsection (1) and disregard any other portion.

Evidence concerning victim admissible

(9) Whether or not a statement has been prepared and filed in accordance with this section, the court may consider any other evidence concerning any victim of the offence for the purpose of determining the sentence to be imposed on the offender or whether the offender should be discharged under section 730.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 722; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 25, s. 17(Preamble); 2000, c. 12, s. 95; 2015, c. 13, s. 25.

Copy of statement

722.1 The clerk of the court shall provide a copy of a statement referred to in subsection 722\(1\), as soon as practicable after a finding of guilt, to the offender or counsel for the offender, and to the prosecutor.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 25, s. 18(Preamble).

Community impact statement

722.2 (1) When determining the sentence to be imposed on an offender or determining whether the offender should be discharged under section 730 in respect of any offence, the court shall consider any statement made by an individual on a community's behalf that was prepared in accordance with this section and filed with the court describing the harm or loss suffered by the community as the result of the commission of the offence and the impact of the offence on the community.

Form

(2) The statement must be prepared in writing, using Form 34.3 in Part XXVIII, in accordance with the procedures established by a program designated for that purpose by the lieutenant governor in council of the province in which the court is exercising its jurisdiction.

Presentation of statement

(3) The court shall, on the request of the individual making the statement, permit the individual to present the statement by

(a) reading it;

(b) reading it in the presence and close proximity of any support person of the individual's choice;

(c) reading it outside the court room or behind a screen or other device that would allow the individual not to see the offender; or

(d) presenting it in any other manner that the court considers appropriate.

Conditions of exclusion

(4) The individual making the statement shall not present it outside the court room unless arrangements are made for the offender and the judge or justice to watch the presentation by means of closed-circuit television or otherwise and the offender is permitted to communicate with counsel while watching the presentation.

Copy of statement

(5) The clerk of the court shall, as soon as feasible after a finding of guilt, provide a copy of the statement to the offender or counsel for the offender, and to the prosecutor.

1999, c. 25, s. 18(Preamble); 2015, c. 13, s. 26.

Submissions on facts

723 (1) Before determining the sentence, a court shall give the prosecutor and the offender an opportunity to make submissions with respect to any facts relevant to the sentence to be imposed.

Submission of evidence

(2) The court shall hear any relevant evidence presented by the prosecutor or the offender.

Production of evidence

(3) The court may, on its own motion, after hearing argument from the prosecutor and the offender, require the production of evidence that would assist it in determining the appropriate sentence.

Compel appearance

(4) Where it is necessary in the interests of justice, the court may, after consulting the parties, compel the appearance of any person who is a compellable witness to assist the court in determining the appropriate sentence.

Hearsay evidence

(5) Hearsay evidence is admissible at sentencing proceedings, but the court may, if the court considers it to be in the interests of justice, compel a person to testify where the person

(a) has personal knowledge of the matter;

(b) is reasonably available; and

(c) is a compellable witness.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 723; 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Information accepted

724 (1) In determining a sentence, a court may accept as proved any information disclosed at the trial or at the sentencing proceedings and any facts agreed on by the prosecutor and the offender.

Jury

(2) Where the court is composed of a judge and jury, the court

(a) shall accept as proven all facts, express or implied, that are essential to the jury's verdict of guilty; and

(b) may find any other relevant fact that was disclosed by evidence at the trial to be proven, or hear evidence presented by either party with respect to that fact.

Disputed facts

(3) Where there is a dispute with respect to any fact that is relevant to the determination of a sentence,

(a) the court shall request that evidence be adduced as to the existence of the fact unless the court is satisfied that sufficient evidence was adduced at the trial;

(b) the party wishing to rely on a relevant fact, including a fact contained in a presentence report, has the burden of proving it;

(c) either party may cross-examine any witness called by the other party;

(d) subject to paragraph (e), the court must be satisfied on a balance of probabilities of the existence of the disputed fact before relying on it in determining the sentence; and

(e) the prosecutor must establish, by proof beyond a reasonable doubt, the existence of any aggravating fact or any previous conviction by the offender.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 724; 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Other offences

725 (1) In determining the sentence, a court

(a) shall consider, if it is possible and appropriate to do so, any other offences of which the offender was found guilty by the same court, and shall determine the sentence to be imposed for each of those offences;

(b) shall consider, if the Attorney General and the offender consent, any outstanding charges against the offender to which the offender consents to plead guilty and pleads guilty, if the court has jurisdiction to try those charges, and shall determine the sentence to be imposed for each charge unless the court is of the opinion that a separate prosecution for the other offence is necessary in the public interest;

(b.1) shall consider any outstanding charges against the offender, unless the court is of the opinion that a separate prosecution for one or more of the other offences is necessary in the public interest, subject to the following conditions:

(i) the Attorney General and the offender consent,

(ii) the court has jurisdiction to try each charge,

(iii) each charge has been described in open court,

(iv) the offender has agreed with the facts asserted in the description of each charge, and

(v) the offender has acknowledged having committed the offence described in each charge; and

(c) may consider any facts forming part of the circumstances of the offence that could constitute the basis for a separate charge.

Attorney General's consent

(1.1) For the purpose of paragraphs (1)(b) and (b.1), the Attorney General shall take the public interest into account before consenting.

No further proceedings

(2) The court shall, on the information or indictment, note

(a) any outstanding charges considered in determining the sentence under paragraph (1)(b.1), and

(b) any facts considered in determining the sentence under paragraph (1)(c), and no further proceedings may be taken with respect to any offence described in those charges or disclosed by those facts unless the conviction for the offence of which the offender has been found guilty is set aside or quashed on appeal.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 725; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 158, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 18(F); 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 31.

Offender may speak to sentence

726 Before determining the sentence to be imposed, the court shall ask whether the offender, if present, has anything to say.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 726; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 159, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 18(F); 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Relevant information

726.1 In determining the sentence, a court shall consider any relevant information placed before it, including any representations or submissions made by or on behalf of the prosecutor or the offender.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Reasons for sentence

726.2 When imposing a sentence, a court shall state the terms of the sentence imposed, and the reasons for it, and enter those terms and reasons into the record of the proceedings.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Inquiry by court

726.3 When imposing a sentence, a court must inquire of the prosecutor if reasonable steps were taken to determine whether the victim wishes to receive information regarding the sentence and its administration and must, if known, enter the victim's wishes into the record of the proceedings.

2023, c. 28, s. 34.

Previous conviction

727 (1) Subject to subsections (3) and (4), where an offender is convicted of an offence for which a greater punishment may be imposed by reason of previous convictions, no greater punishment shall be imposed on the offender by reason thereof unless the prosecutor satisfies the court that the offender, before making a plea, was notified that a greater punishment would be sought by reason thereof.

Procedure

(2) Where an offender is convicted of an offence for which a greater punishment may be imposed by reason of previous convictions, the court shall, on application by the prosecutor and on being satisfied that the offender was notified in accordance with subsection (1), ask whether the offender was previously convicted and, if the offender does not admit to any previous convictions, evidence of previous convictions may be adduced.

Where hearing ex parte

(3) Where a summary conviction court holds a trial pursuant to subsection 803\(2\) and convicts the offender, the court may, whether or not the offender was notified that a greater punishment would be sought by reason of a previous conviction, make inquiries and hear evidence with respect to previous convictions of the offender and, if any such conviction is proved, may impose a greater punishment by reason thereof.

Organizations

(4) If, under section 623, the court proceeds with the trial of an organization that has not appeared and pleaded and convicts the organization, the court may, whether or not the organization was notified that a greater punishment would be sought by reason of a previous conviction, make inquiries and hear evidence with respect to previous convictions of the organization and, if any such conviction is proved, may impose a greater punishment by reason of that conviction.

Section does not apply

(5) This section does not apply to a person referred to in paragraph 745\(b\).

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 727; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 160; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 2003, c. 21, s. 16.

Sentence justified by any count

728 Where one sentence is passed on a verdict of guilty on two or more counts of an indictment, the sentence is good if any of the counts would have justified the sentence.

Proof of certificate of analyst

729 (1) In

(a) a prosecution for failure to comply with a condition in a probation order that the accused not have in possession or use drugs, or

(b) a hearing to determine whether the offender breached a condition of a conditional sentence order that the offender not have in possession or use drugs, a certificate purporting to be signed by an analyst stating that the analyst has analyzed or examined a substance and stating the result of the analysis or examination is admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is proof of the statements contained in the certificate without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate.

Definition of analyst

(2) In this section, analyst means a person designated as an analyst under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act or the Cannabis Act.

Notice of intention to produce certificate

(3) No certificate shall be admitted in evidence unless the party intending to produce it has, before the trial or hearing, as the case may be, given reasonable notice and a copy of the certificate to the party against whom it is to be produced.

(4) and (5) [\[Repealed, 2008, c. 18, s. 36\]](#)

Requiring attendance of analyst

(6) The party against whom a certificate of an analyst is produced may, with leave of the court, require the attendance of the analyst for cross-examination.

Proof of certificate of analyst — bodily substance

729.1 (1) In a prosecution for failure to comply with a condition in a probation order that the accused not consume drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance, or in a hearing to determine whether the offender breached such a condition of a conditional sentence order, a certificate purporting to be signed by an analyst that states that the analyst has analyzed a sample of a bodily substance and that states the result of the analysis is admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is proof of the statements contained in the certificate without proof of the signature or official character of the person who appears to have signed the certificate.

Definition of analyst

(2) In this section, analyst has the same meaning as in section 320.11.

Notice of intention to produce certificate

(3) No certificate shall be admitted in evidence unless the party intending to produce it has, before the trial or hearing, as the case may be, given reasonable notice and a copy of the certificate to the party against whom it is to be produced.

Requiring attendance of analyst

(4) The party against whom a certificate of an analyst is produced may, with leave of the court, require the attendance of the analyst for cross-examination.

Absolute and Conditional Discharges

Conditional and absolute discharge

730 (1) Where an accused, other than an organization, pleads guilty to or is found guilty of an offence, other than an offence for which a minimum punishment is prescribed by law or an offence punishable by imprisonment for fourteen years or for life, the court before which the accused appears may, if it considers it to be in the best interests of the accused and not contrary to the public interest, instead of convicting the accused, by order direct that the accused be discharged absolutely or on the conditions prescribed in a probation order made under subsection 731\(2\).

Period for which appearance notice, etc., continues in force

(2) Subject to Part XVI, if an accused who has not been taken into custody or who has been released from custody under any provision of that Part pleads guilty to or is found guilty of an offence but is not convicted, the appearance notice, summons, undertaking or release order issued to, given or entered into by the accused continues in force, subject to its terms, until a disposition in respect of the accused is made under subsection (1) unless, at the time the accused pleads guilty or is found guilty, the court, judge or justice orders that the accused be taken into custody pending such a disposition.

Effect of discharge

(3) Where a court directs under subsection (1) that an offender be discharged of an offence, the offender shall be deemed not to have been convicted of the offence except that

- (a) the offender may appeal from the determination of guilt as if it were a conviction in respect of the offence;
- (b) the Attorney General and, in the case of summary conviction proceedings, the informant or the informant's agent may appeal from the decision of the court not to convict the offender of the offence as if that decision were a judgment or verdict of acquittal of the offence or a dismissal of the information against the offender; and
- (c) the offender may plead autrefois convict in respect of any subsequent charge relating to the offence.

Where person bound by probation order convicted of offence

(4) Where an offender who is bound by the conditions of a probation order made at a time when the offender was directed to be discharged under this section is convicted of an offence, including an offence under section 733.1, the court that made the probation order may, in addition to or in lieu of exercising its authority under subsection 732.2\(5\), at any time when it may take action under that subsection, revoke the discharge, convict the offender of the offence to which the discharge relates and impose any sentence that could have been imposed if the offender had been convicted at the time of discharge, and no appeal lies from a conviction under this subsection where an appeal was taken from the order directing that the offender be discharged.

Probation

Making of probation order

731 (1) Where a person is convicted of an offence, a court may, having regard to the age and character of the offender, the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission,

- (a) if no minimum punishment is prescribed by law, suspend the passing of sentence and direct that the offender be released on the conditions prescribed in a probation order; or
- (b) in addition to fining or sentencing the offender to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, direct that the offender comply with the conditions prescribed in a probation order.

Idem

(2) A court may also make a probation order where it discharges an accused under subsection 730\(1\).

Firearm, etc., prohibitions

731.1 (1) Before making a probation order, the court shall consider whether section 109 or 110 is applicable.

Application of section 109 or 110

(2) For greater certainty, a condition of a probation order referred to in paragraph 732.1\(3\)\(d\) does not affect the operation of section 109 or 110.

Intermittent sentence

732 (1) Where the court imposes a sentence of imprisonment of ninety days or less on an offender convicted of an offence, whether in default of payment of a fine or otherwise, the court may, having regard to the age and character of the offender, the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission, and the availability of appropriate accommodation to ensure compliance with the sentence, order

(a) that the sentence be served intermittently at such times as are specified in the order; and

(b) that the offender comply with the conditions prescribed in a probation order when not in confinement during the period that the sentence is being served and, if the court so orders, on release from prison after completing the intermittent sentence.

Application to vary intermittent sentence

(2) An offender who is ordered to serve a sentence of imprisonment intermittently may, on giving notice to the prosecutor, apply to the court that imposed the sentence to allow it to be served on consecutive days.

Court may vary intermittent sentence if subsequent offence

(3) Where a court imposes a sentence of imprisonment on a person who is subject to an intermittent sentence in respect of another offence, the unexpired portion of the intermittent sentence shall be served on consecutive days unless the court otherwise orders.

Definitions

732.1 (1) In this section and section 732.2, change, in relation to optional conditions, includes deletions and additions; (modification)

optional conditions means the conditions referred to in subsection (3) or (3.1).
(conditions facultatives)

Compulsory conditions of probation order

(2) The court shall prescribe, as conditions of a probation order, that the offender do all of the following:

(a) keep the peace and be of good behaviour;

(a.1) [Repealed, 2019, c. 25, s. 297]

(b) appear before the court when required to do so by the court; and

(c) notify the court or the probation officer in advance of any change of name or address, and promptly notify the court or the probation officer of any change of employment or occupation.

(2.1) [Repealed, 2019, c. 25, s. 297]

(2.2) [Repealed, 2019, c. 25, s. 297]

Optional conditions of probation order

(3) The court may prescribe, as additional conditions of a probation order, that the offender do one or more of the following:

(a) report to a probation officer

(i) within two working days, or such longer period as the court directs, after the making of the probation order, and

(ii) thereafter, when required by the probation officer and in the manner directed by the probation officer;

(a.1) abstain from communicating, directly or indirectly, with any victim, witness or other person identified in the order or from going to any place or geographic area specified in the order, except in accordance with any specified conditions that the court considers necessary;

(b) remain within the jurisdiction of the court unless written permission to go outside that jurisdiction is obtained from the court or the probation officer;

(c) abstain from the consumption of drugs except in accordance with a medical prescription, of alcohol or of any other intoxicating substance;

(c.1) provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation on the demand of a peace officer, a probation officer or someone designated under subsection (9) to make a demand, at the place and time and on the day specified by the person making the demand, if that person has reasonable grounds to believe that the offender has breached a condition of the order that requires them to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance;

(c.2) provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation at regular intervals that are specified by a probation officer in a notice in Form 51 served on the offender, if a condition of the order requires the offender to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance;

(d) abstain from owning, possessing or carrying a weapon;

(e) provide for the support or care of dependants;

(f) perform up to 240 hours of community service over a period not exceeding eighteen months;

(g) if the offender agrees, and subject to the program director's acceptance of the offender, participate actively in a treatment program approved by the province;

(g.1) where the lieutenant governor in council of the province in which the probation order is made has established a program for curative treatment in relation to the consumption of alcohol or drugs, attend at a treatment facility, designated by the lieutenant governor in council of the province, for assessment and curative treatment in relation to the consumption by the offender of alcohol or drugs that is recommended pursuant to the program;

(g.2) where the lieutenant governor in council of the province in which the probation order is made has established a program governing the use of an alcohol ignition interlock device by an offender and if the offender agrees to participate in the program, comply with the program; and

(h) comply with such other reasonable conditions as the court considers desirable, subject to any regulations made under subsection 738\(2\), for protecting society and for facilitating the offender's successful reintegration into the community.

Optional conditions — organization

(3.1) The court may prescribe, as additional conditions of a probation order made in respect of an organization, that the offender do one or more of the following:

(a) make restitution to a person for any loss or damage that they suffered as a result of the offence;

(b) establish policies, standards and procedures to reduce the likelihood of the organization committing a subsequent offence;

(c) communicate those policies, standards and procedures to its representatives;

(d) report to the court on the implementation of those policies, standards and procedures;

(e) identify the senior officer who is responsible for compliance with those policies, standards and procedures;

(f) provide, in the manner specified by the court, the following information to the public, namely,

(i) the offence of which the organization was convicted,

(ii) the sentence imposed by the court, and

(iii) any measures that the organization is taking — including any policies, standards and procedures established under paragraph (b) — to reduce the likelihood of it committing a subsequent offence; and

(g) comply with any other reasonable conditions that the court considers desirable to prevent the organization from committing subsequent offences or to remedy the harm caused by the offence.

Consideration — organizations

(3.2) Before making an order under paragraph (3.1)(b), a court shall consider whether it would be more appropriate for another regulatory body to supervise the development or implementation of the policies, standards and procedures referred to in that paragraph.

Form and period of order

(4) A probation order may be in Form 46, and the court that makes the probation order shall specify therein the period for which it is to remain in force.

Obligations of court

(5) The court that makes a probation order shall

(a) cause a copy of the order to be given to the offender and, on request, to the victim;

(b) explain the conditions of the order set under subsections (2) to (3.1) and the substance of section 733.1 to the offender;

(c) cause an explanation to be given to the offender of the procedure for applying under subsection 732.2\(3\) for a change to the optional conditions and of the substance of subsections 732.2(3) and \(5\); and

(d) take reasonable measures to ensure that the offender understands the order and the explanations.

For greater certainty

(6) For greater certainty, a failure to comply with subsection (5) does not affect the validity of the probation order.

Notice — samples at regular intervals

(7) The notice referred to in paragraph (3)(c.2) must specify the places and times at which and the days on which the offender must provide samples of a bodily substance under a condition described in that paragraph. The first sample may not be taken earlier than 24 hours after the offender is served with the notice, and subsequent samples must be taken at regular intervals of at least seven days.

Designations and specifications

(8) For the purposes of paragraphs (3)(c.1) and (c.2) and subject to the regulations, the Attorney General of a province or the minister of justice of a territory shall, with respect to the province or territory,

- (a) designate the persons or classes of persons that may take samples of bodily substances;
- (b) designate the places or classes of places at which the samples are to be taken;
- (c) specify the manner in which the samples are to be taken;
- (d) specify the manner in which the samples are to be analyzed;
- (e) specify the manner in which the samples are to be stored, handled and destroyed;
- (f) specify the manner in which the records of the results of the analysis of the samples are to be protected and destroyed;
- (g) designate the persons or classes of persons that may destroy the samples; and
- (h) designate the persons or classes of persons that may destroy the records of the results of the analysis of the samples.

Further designations

(9) For the purpose of paragraph (3)(c.1) and subject to the regulations, the Attorney General of a province or the minister of justice of a territory may, with respect to the province or territory, designate persons or classes of persons to make a demand for a sample of a bodily substance.

Restriction

(10) Samples of bodily substances referred to in paragraphs (3)(c.1) and (c.2) may not be taken, analyzed, stored, handled or destroyed, and the records of the results of the analysis of the samples may not be protected or destroyed, except in accordance with the designations and specifications made under subsection (8).

Destruction of samples

(11) The Attorney General of a province or the minister of justice of a territory, or a person authorized by the Attorney General or minister, shall cause all samples of bodily substances provided under a probation order to be destroyed within the periods prescribed by regulation unless the samples are reasonably expected to be used as evidence in a proceeding for an offence under section 733.1.

Regulations

(12) The Governor in Council may make regulations

- (a) prescribing bodily substances for the purposes of paragraphs (3)(c.1) and (c.2);
- (b) respecting the designations and specifications referred to in subsections (8) and (9);
- (c) prescribing the periods within which samples of bodily substances are to be destroyed under subsection (11); and
- (d) respecting any other matters relating to the samples of bodily substances.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 32, s. 6(Preamble); 2003, c. 21, s. 18; 2008, c. 18, s. 37; 2011, c. 7, s. 3; 2014, c. 21, s. 2; 2015, c. 13, s. 27; 2018, c. 21, s. 24\(F\); 2019, c. 25, s. 297.

Prohibition on use of bodily substance

732.11 (1) No person shall use a bodily substance provided under a probation order except for the purpose of determining whether an offender is complying with a condition of the order that they abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance.

Prohibition on use or disclosure of result

(2) Subject to subsection (3), no person shall use, disclose or allow the disclosure of the results of the analysis of a bodily substance provided under a probation order.

Exception

(3) The results of the analysis of a bodily substance provided under a probation order may be disclosed to the offender to whom they relate, and may also be used or disclosed in the course of an investigation of, or in a proceeding for, an offence under section 733.1 or, if the results are made anonymous, for statistical or other research purposes.

Offence

(4) Every person who contravenes subsection (1) or (2) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

2011, c. 7, s. 4.

Coming into force of order

732.2 (1) A probation order comes into force

- (a) on the date on which the order is made;
- (b) where the offender is sentenced to imprisonment under paragraph 731\(1\)\(b\) or was previously sentenced to imprisonment for another offence, as soon as the offender is released from prison or, if released from prison on conditional release, at the expiration of the sentence of imprisonment; or
- (c) where the offender is under a conditional sentence order, at the expiration of the conditional sentence order.

Duration of order and limit on term of order

(2) Subject to subsection (5),

(a) where an offender who is bound by a probation order is convicted of an offence, including an offence under section 733.1, or is imprisoned under paragraph 731\(1\)\(b\) in default of payment of a fine, the order continues in force except in so far as the sentence renders it impossible for the offender for the time being to comply with the order; and

(b) no probation order shall continue in force for more than three years after the date on which the order came into force.

Changes to probation order

(3) A court that makes a probation order may at any time, on application by the offender, the probation officer or the prosecutor, require the offender to appear before it and, after hearing the offender and one or both of the probation officer and the prosecutor,

(a) make any changes to the optional conditions that in the opinion of the court are rendered desirable by a change in the circumstances since those conditions were prescribed,

(b) relieve the offender, either absolutely or on such terms or for such period as the court deems desirable, of compliance with any optional condition, or

(c) decrease the period for which the probation order is to remain in force, and the court shall thereupon endorse the probation order accordingly and, if it changes the optional conditions, inform the offender of its action and give the offender a copy of the order so endorsed.

Judge may act in chambers

(4) All the functions of the court under subsection (3) may be exercised in chambers.

Where person convicted of offence

(5) Where an offender who is bound by a probation order is convicted of an offence, including an offence under section 733.1, and

(a) the time within which an appeal may be taken against that conviction has expired and the offender has not taken an appeal,

(b) the offender has taken an appeal against that conviction and the appeal has been dismissed, or

(c) the offender has given written notice to the court that convicted the offender that the offender elects not to appeal the conviction or has abandoned the appeal, as the case may be,

in addition to any punishment that may be imposed for that offence, the court that made the probation order may, on application by the prosecutor, require the offender to appear before it and, after hearing the prosecutor and the offender,

(d) where the probation order was made under paragraph 731\(1\)\(a\), revoke the order and impose any sentence that could have been imposed if the passing of sentence had not been suspended, or

(e) make such changes to the optional conditions as the court deems desirable, or extend the period for which the order is to remain in force for such period, not exceeding one year, as the court deems desirable, and the court shall thereupon endorse the probation order accordingly and, if it changes the optional conditions or extends the period for which the order is to remain in force, inform the offender of its action and give the offender a copy of the order so endorsed.

Compelling appearance of person bound

(6) The provisions of Parts XVI and XVIII with respect to compelling the appearance of an accused before a justice apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to proceedings under subsections (3) and (5).

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 2004, c. 12, s. 12\(E\).

Transfer of order

733 (1) Where an offender who is bound by a probation order becomes a resident of, or is convicted or discharged under section 730 of an offence including an offence under section 733.1 in, a territorial division other than the territorial division where the order was made, on the application of a probation officer, the court that made the order may, subject to subsection (1.1), transfer the order to a court in that other territorial division that would, having regard to the mode of trial of the offender, have had jurisdiction to make the order in that other territorial division if the offender had been tried and convicted there of the offence in respect of which the order was made, and the order may thereafter be dealt with and enforced by the court to which it is so transferred in all respects as if that court had made the order.

Attorney General's consent

(1.1) The transfer may be granted only with

(a) the consent of the Attorney General of the province in which the probation order was made, if the two territorial divisions are not in the same province; or

(b) the consent of the Attorney General of Canada, if the proceedings that led to the issuance of the probation order were instituted by or on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada.

Where court unable to act

(2) Where a court that has made a probation order or to which a probation order has been transferred pursuant to subsection (1) is for any reason unable to act, the powers of that court in relation to the probation order may be exercised by any other court that has equivalent jurisdiction in the same province.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 733; R.S., 1985, c. 24 (2nd Supp.), s. 46; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 32.

Failure to comply with probation order

733.1 (1) An offender who is bound by a probation order and who, without reasonable excuse, fails or refuses to comply with that order is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term of not more than four years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Where accused may be tried and punished

(2) An accused who is charged with an offence under subsection (1) may be tried and punished by any court having jurisdiction to try that offence in the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed or in the place where the accused is found, is arrested or is in custody, but where the place where the accused is found, is arrested or is in custody is outside the province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, no proceedings in respect of that offence shall be instituted in that place without the consent of the Attorney General of that province.

Fines and Forfeiture

Power of court to impose fine

734 (1) Subject to subsection (2), a court that convicts a person, other than an organization, of an offence may fine the offender by making an order under section 734.1

- (a) if the punishment for the offence does not include a minimum term of imprisonment, in addition to or in lieu of any other sanction that the court is authorized to impose; or
- (b) if the punishment for the offence includes a minimum term of imprisonment, in addition to any other sanction that the court is required or authorized to impose.

Offender's ability to pay

(2) Except when the punishment for an offence includes a minimum fine or a fine is imposed in lieu of a forfeiture order, a court may fine an offender under this section only if the court is satisfied that the offender is able to pay the fine or discharge it under section 736.

Meaning of default of payment

(3) For the purposes of this section and sections 734.1 to 737, a person is in default of payment of a fine if the fine has not been paid in full by the time set out in the order made under section 734.1.

Imprisonment in default of payment

(4) Where an offender is fined under this section, a term of imprisonment, determined in accordance with subsection (5), shall be deemed to be imposed in default of payment of the fine.

Determination of term

(5) The term of imprisonment referred to in subsection (4) is the lesser of

(a) the number of days that corresponds to a fraction, rounded down to the nearest whole number, of which

(i) the numerator is the unpaid amount of the fine plus the costs and charges of committing and conveying the defaulter to prison, calculated in accordance with regulations made under subsection (7), and

(ii) the denominator is equal to eight times the provincial minimum hourly wage, at the time of default, in the province in which the fine was imposed, and

(b) the maximum term of imprisonment that the court could itself impose on conviction or, if the punishment for the offence does not include a term of imprisonment, five years in the case of an indictable offence or two years less a day in the case of a summary conviction offence.

Moneys found on offender

(6) All or any part of a fine imposed under this section may be taken out of moneys found in the possession of the offender at the time of the arrest of the offender if the court making the order, on being satisfied that ownership of or right to possession of those moneys is not disputed by claimants other than the offender, so directs.

Provincial regulations

(7) The lieutenant governor in council of a province may make regulations respecting the calculation of the costs and charges referred to in subparagraph (5)(a)(i) and in paragraph 734.8(1)(b).

Application to other law

(8) This section and sections 734.1 to 734.8 and 736 apply to a fine imposed under any Act of Parliament, except that subsections (4) and (5) do not apply if the term of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine provided for in that Act or regulation is

(a) calculated by a different method; or

(b) specified, either as a minimum or a maximum.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 734; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 161; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 33; 2003, c. 21, s. 19; 2008, c. 18, s. 38; 2019, c. 25, s. 299.

Terms of order imposing fine

734.1 A court that fines an offender under section 734 shall do so by making an order that clearly sets out

- (a) the amount of the fine;
- (b) the manner in which the fine is to be paid;
- (c) the time or times by which the fine, or any portion thereof, must be paid; and
- (d) such other terms respecting the payment of the fine as the court deems appropriate.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Obligations of court

734.2 (1) A court that makes an order under section 734.1 shall

- (a) cause a copy of the order to be given to the offender;
- (b) explain the substance of sections 734 to 734.8 and 736 to the offender;
- (c) cause an explanation to be given to the offender of the procedure for applying under section 734.3 for a change to the optional conditions and of any available fine option programs referred to in section 736 as well as the procedure to apply for admission to them; and
- (d) take reasonable measures to ensure that the offender understands the order and the explanations.

For greater certainty

(2) For greater certainty, a failure to comply with subsection (1) does not affect the validity of the order.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 2008, c. 18, s. 39.

Change in terms of order

734.3 A court that makes an order under section 734.1, or a person designated either by name or by title of office by that court, may, on application by or on behalf of the offender, subject to any rules made by the court under section 482 or 482.1, change any term of the order except the amount of the fine, and any reference in this section and sections 734, 734.1, 734.2 and 734.6 to an order shall be read as including a reference to the order as changed under this section.

Proceeds to go to provincial treasurer

734.4 (1) If a fine or forfeiture is imposed or an amount set out in an undertaking, release order or recognizance is forfeited and no provision, other than this section, is made by law for the application of the proceeds, the proceeds belong to Her Majesty in right of the province in which the fine or forfeiture was imposed or the amount was forfeited, and shall be paid by the person who receives them to the treasurer of that province.

Proceeds to go to Receiver General for Canada

(2) The proceeds described in subsection (1) belong to Her Majesty in right of Canada and must be paid by the person who receives them to the Receiver General if, as the case may be,

(a) the fine or forfeiture is imposed

(i) in respect of a contravention of a revenue law of Canada,

(ii) in respect of a breach of duty or malfeasance in office by an officer or employee of the Government of Canada, or

(iii) in respect of any proceedings instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada in which that government bears the costs of prosecution; or

(b) an amount set out in an undertaking, release order or recognizance is forfeited in connection with proceedings mentioned in paragraph (a).

Direction for payment to municipality

(3) If a provincial, municipal or local authority bears, in whole or in part, the expense of administering the law under which a fine or forfeiture is imposed or under which proceedings are taken in which an amount set out in an undertaking, release order or recognizance is forfeited,

(a) the lieutenant governor in council of a province may direct that the proceeds that belong to Her Majesty in right of the province shall be paid to that authority; and

(b) the Governor in Council may direct that the proceeds that belong to Her Majesty in right of Canada shall be paid to that authority.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 2019, c. 25, s. 300.

Licences, permits, etc.

734.5 If an offender is in default of payment of a fine,

(a) where the proceeds of the fine belong to Her Majesty in right of a province by virtue of subsection 734.4\(1\), the person responsible, by or under an Act of the legislature of the province, for issuing, renewing or suspending a licence, permit or other similar instrument in relation to the offender may refuse to issue or renew or may suspend the licence, permit or other instrument until the fine is paid in full, proof of which lies on the offender; or

(b) where the proceeds of the fine belong to Her Majesty in right of Canada by virtue of subsection 734.4\(2\), the person responsible, by or under an Act of Parliament, for issuing or renewing a licence, permit or other similar instrument in relation to the offender may refuse to issue or renew or may suspend the licence, permit or other instrument until the fine is paid in full, proof of which lies on the offender.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 34.

Civil enforcement of fines, forfeiture

734.6 (1) Where

(a) an offender is in default of payment of a fine, or

(b) a forfeiture imposed by law is not paid as required by the order imposing it, then, in addition to any other method provided by law for recovering the fine or forfeiture,

(c) the Attorney General of the province to whom the proceeds of the fine or forfeiture belong, or

(d) the Attorney General of Canada, where the proceeds of the fine or forfeiture belong to Her Majesty in right of Canada, may, by filing the order, enter as a judgment the amount of the fine or forfeiture, and costs, if any, in any civil court in Canada that has jurisdiction to enter a judgment for that amount.

Effect of filing order

(2) An order that is entered as a judgment under this section is enforceable in the same manner as if it were a judgment obtained by the Attorney General of the province or the Attorney General of Canada, as the case may be, in civil proceedings.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Warrant of committal

734.7 (1) Where time has been allowed for payment of a fine, the court shall not issue a warrant of committal in default of payment of the fine

(a) until the expiration of the time allowed for payment of the fine in full; and

(b) unless the court is satisfied

(i) that the mechanisms provided by sections 734.5 and 734.6 are not appropriate in the circumstances, or

(ii) that the offender has, without reasonable excuse, refused to pay the fine or discharge it under section 736.

Reasons for committal

(2) Where no time has been allowed for payment of a fine and a warrant committing the offender to prison for default of payment of the fine is issued, the court shall state in the warrant the reason for immediate committal.

Period of imprisonment

(2.1) The period of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine shall be specified in a warrant of committal referred to in subsection (1) or (2).

Compelling appearance of person bound

(3) The provisions of Parts XVI and XVIII with respect to compelling the appearance of an accused before a justice apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to proceedings under paragraph (1)(b).

Effect of imprisonment

(4) The imprisonment of an offender for default of payment of a fine terminates the operation of sections 734.5 and 734.6 in relation to that fine.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 35.

Definition of penalty

734.8 (1) In this section, penalty means the aggregate of

(a) the fine, and

(b) the costs and charges of committing and conveying the defaulter to prison, calculated in accordance with regulations made under subsection 734\(7\).

Reduction of imprisonment on part payment

(2) The term of imprisonment in default of payment of a fine shall, on payment of a part of the penalty, whether the payment was made before or after the execution of a warrant of committal, be reduced by the number of days that bears the same proportion to the number of days in the term as the part paid bears to the total penalty.

Minimum that can be accepted

(3) No amount offered in part payment of a penalty shall be accepted after the execution of a warrant of committal unless it is sufficient to secure a reduction of sentence of one day, or a whole number multiple of one day, and no part payment shall be accepted until any fee that is payable in respect of the warrant or its execution has been paid.

To whom payment made

(4) Payment may be made under this section to the person that the Attorney General directs or, if the offender is imprisoned, to the person who has lawful custody of the prisoner or to any other person that the Attorney General directs.

Application of money paid

(5) A payment under this section shall be applied firstly to the payment in full of costs and charges, secondly to the payment in full of any victim surcharge imposed under section 737, and then to payment of any part of the fine that remains unpaid.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 36, c. 25, s. 19(Preamble).

Fines on organizations

735 (1) An organization that is convicted of an offence is liable, in lieu of any imprisonment that is prescribed as punishment for that offence, to be fined in an amount, except where otherwise provided by law,

(a) that is in the discretion of the court, where the offence is an indictable offence; or

(b) not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars, where the offence is a summary conviction offence.

Application of certain provisions — fines

(1.1) A court that imposes a fine under subsection (1) or under any other Act of Parliament shall make an order that clearly sets out

- (a) the amount of the fine;
- (b) the manner in which the fine is to be paid;
- (c) the time or times by which the fine, or any portion of it, must be paid; and
- (d) any other terms respecting the payment of the fine that the court deems appropriate.

Effect of filing order

(2) Section 734.6 applies, with any modifications that are required, when an organization fails to pay the fine in accordance with the terms of the order.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 735; R.S., 1985, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 18(F), c. 23 (4th Supp.), s. 7; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 37; 2003, c. 21, s. 20.

Fine option program

736 (1) An offender who is fined under section 734 may, whether or not the offender is serving a term of imprisonment imposed in default of payment of the fine, discharge the fine in whole or in part by earning credits for work performed during a period not greater than two years in a program established for that purpose by the lieutenant governor in council

- (a) of the province in which the fine was imposed, or
- (b) of the province in which the offender resides, where an appropriate agreement is in effect between the government of that province and the government of the province in which the fine was imposed, if the offender is admissible to such a program.

Credits and other matters

(2) A program referred to in subsection (1) shall determine the rate at which credits are earned and may provide for the manner of crediting any amounts earned against the fine and any other matters necessary for or incidental to carrying out the program.

Deemed payment

(3) Credits earned for work performed as provided by subsection (1) shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be payment in respect of a fine.

Federal-provincial agreement

(4) Where, by virtue of subsection 734.4\(2\), the proceeds of a fine belong to Her Majesty in right of Canada, an offender may discharge the fine in whole or in part in a fine option program of a province pursuant to subsection (1), where an appropriate agreement is in effect between the government of the province and the Government of Canada.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 736; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 162, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 18(F); 1992, c. 1, s. 60(F); 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Victim surcharge

737 (1) An offender who is convicted, or discharged under section 730, of an offence under this Act, the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act or the Cannabis Act shall pay a victim surcharge for each offence, in addition to any other punishment imposed on the offender.

Amount of surcharge

(2) Subject to subsections (2.1) and (3), the amount of the victim surcharge in respect of an offence is

- (a) 30% of any fine that is imposed on the offender for the offence; or
- (b) if no fine is imposed on the offender for the offence,
 - (i) $100 in the case of an offence punishable by summary conviction, and
 - (ii) $200 in the case of an offence punishable by indictment.

Exception

(2.1) Despite subsection (1), the court may, on application of the offender or on its own motion, order an offender to pay no victim surcharge, or to pay a reduced amount, if it is satisfied that the victim surcharge

- (a) would cause undue hardship to the offender; or
- (b) would not cause undue hardship to the offender but would be disproportionate to the gravity of the offence or the degree of responsibility of the offender.

Definition of undue hardship

(2.2) For the purposes of subsection (2.1), undue hardship means the offender is unable to pay a victim surcharge on account of the offender's precarious financial circumstances, including because of their unemployment, homelessness, lack of assets or significant financial obligations towards their dependants.

For greater certainty

(2.3) For greater certainty, for the purposes of subsection (2.2), the imprisonment of the offender alone does not constitute undue hardship.

Reasons

(2.4) When the court makes an order under subsection (2.1), the court shall state its reasons in the record of the proceedings.

Increase in surcharge

(3) The court may order an offender to pay a victim surcharge in an amount exceeding that set out in subsection (2) if the court considers it appropriate in the circumstances and is satisfied that the offender is able to pay the higher amount.

Time for payment

(4) The victim surcharge imposed in respect of an offence is payable within the time established by the lieutenant governor in council of the province in which the surcharge is imposed. If no time has been so established, the surcharge is payable within a reasonable time after its imposition.

Amounts applied to aid victims

(5) A victim surcharge shall be applied for the purposes of providing such assistance to victims of offences as the lieutenant governor in council of the province in which the surcharge is imposed may direct from time to time.

Notice

(6) The court shall cause to be given to the offender a written notice setting out

- (a) the amount of the victim surcharge;
- (b) the manner in which the victim surcharge is to be paid;
- (c) the time by which the victim surcharge must be paid; and
- (d) the procedure for applying for a change in any terms referred to in paragraphs (b) and (c) in accordance with section 734.3.

Enforcement

(7) Subsections 734\(3\) to \(7\) and sections 734.3, 734.5, 734.7, 734.8 and 736 apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, in respect of a victim surcharge imposed under this section and, in particular,

- (a) a reference in any of those provisions to “fine”, other than in subsection 734.8\(5\), must be read as if it were a reference to “victim surcharge”; and
- (b) the notice provided under subsection (6) is deemed to be an order made under section 734.1.

Application — subsections (2.1) to (2.4)

(8) Subsections (2.1) to (2.4) apply to any offender who is sentenced for an offence under this Act, the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act or the Cannabis Act that was committed after the day on which those subsections come into force.

Restitution

Court to consider restitution order

737.1 (1) If an offender is convicted or is discharged under section 730 of an offence, the court that sentences or discharges the offender, in addition to any other measure imposed on the offender, shall consider making a restitution order under section 738 or 739.

Inquiry by court

(2) As soon as feasible after a finding of guilt and in any event before imposing the sentence, the court shall inquire of the prosecutor if reasonable steps have been taken to provide the victims with an opportunity to indicate whether they are seeking restitution for their losses and damages, the amount of which must be readily ascertainable.

Adjournment

(3) On application of the prosecutor or on its own motion, the court may adjourn the proceedings to permit the victims to indicate whether they are seeking restitution or to establish their losses and damages, if the court is satisfied that the adjournment would not interfere with the proper administration of justice.

Form

(4) Victims and other persons may indicate whether they are seeking restitution by completing Form 34.1 in Part XXVIII or a form approved for that purpose by the lieutenant governor in council of the province in which the court is exercising its jurisdiction or by using any other method approved by the court, and, if they are seeking restitution, shall establish their losses and damages, the amount of which must be readily ascertainable, in the same manner.

Reasons

(5) If a victim seeks restitution and the court does not make a restitution order, it shall include in the record a statement of the court's reasons for not doing so.

2015, c. 13, s. 29.

Restitution to victims of offences

738 (1) Where an offender is convicted or discharged under section 730 of an offence, the court imposing sentence on or discharging the offender may, on application of the Attorney General or on its own motion, in addition to any other measure imposed on the offender, order that the offender make restitution to another person as follows:

- (a) in the case of damage to, or the loss or destruction of, the property of any person as a result of the commission of the offence or the arrest or attempted arrest of the offender, by paying to the person an amount not exceeding the replacement value of the property as of the date the order is imposed, less the value of any part of the property that is returned to that person as of the date it is returned, where the amount is readily ascertainable;

(b) in the case of bodily or psychological harm to any person as a result of the commission of the offence or the arrest or attempted arrest of the offender, by paying to the person an amount not exceeding all pecuniary damages incurred as a result of the harm, including loss of income or support, if the amount is readily ascertainable;

(c) in the case of bodily harm or threat of bodily harm to the offender's intimate partner or child, or any other person, as a result of the commission of the offence or the arrest or attempted arrest of the offender, where the intimate partner, child or other person was a member of the offender's household at the relevant time, by paying to the person in question, independently of any amount ordered to be paid under paragraphs (a) and (b), an amount not exceeding actual and reasonable expenses incurred by that person, as a result of moving out of the offender's household, for temporary housing, food, child care and transportation, where the amount is readily ascertainable;

(d) in the case of an offence under section 402.2 or 403, by paying to a person who, as a result of the offence, incurs expenses to re-establish their identity, including expenses to replace their identity documents and to correct their credit history and credit rating, an amount that is not more than the amount of those expenses, to the extent that they are reasonable, if the amount is readily ascertainable; and

(e) in the case of an offence under subsection 162.1\(1\), by paying to a person who, as a result of the offence, incurs expenses to remove the intimate image from the Internet or other digital network, an amount that is not more than the amount of those expenses, to the extent that they are reasonable, if the amount is readily ascertainable.

Regulations

(2) The lieutenant governor in council of a province may make regulations precluding the inclusion of provisions on enforcement of restitution orders as an optional condition of a probation order or of a conditional sentence order.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 738; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 2000, c. 12, s. 95; 2005, c. 43, s. 7; 2009, c. 28, s. 11; 2014, c. 31, s. 24; 2019, c. 25, s. 302.

Restitution to persons acting in good faith

739 Where an offender is convicted or discharged under section 730 of an offence and

(a) any property obtained as a result of the commission of the offence has been conveyed or transferred for valuable consideration to a person acting in good faith and without notice, or

(b) the offender has borrowed money on the security of that property from a person acting in good faith and without notice, the court may, where that property has been returned to the lawful owner or the person who had lawful possession of that property at the time the offence was committed, order the offender to pay as restitution to the person referred to in paragraph (a) or (b) an amount not exceeding the amount of consideration for that property or the total amount outstanding in respect of the loan, as the case may be.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 739; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 163, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 18(F); 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Ability to pay

739.1 The offender's financial means or ability to pay does not prevent the court from making an order under section 738 or 739.

2015, c. 13, s. 30.

Payment under order

739.2 In making an order under section 738 or 739, the court shall require the offender to pay the full amount specified in the order by the day specified in the order, unless the court is of the opinion that the amount should be paid in instalments, in which case the court shall set out a periodic payment scheme in the order.

2015, c. 13, s. 30.

More than one person

739.3 An order under section 738 or 739 may be made in respect of more than one person, in which case the order must specify the amount that is payable to each person. The order may also specify the order of priority in which those persons are to be paid.

2015, c. 13, s. 30.

Public authority

739.4 (1) On the request of a person in whose favour an order under section 738 or 739 would be made, the court may make the order in favour of a public authority, designated by the regulations, who is to be responsible for enforcing the order and remitting to the person making the request all amounts received under it.

Orders

(2) The lieutenant governor in council of a province may, by order, designate any person or body as a public authority for the purpose of subsection (1).

2015, c. 13, s. 30.

Priority to restitution

740 Where the court finds it applicable and appropriate in the circumstances of a case to make, in relation to an offender, an order of restitution under section 738 or 739, and

(a) an order of forfeiture under this or any other Act of Parliament may be made in respect of property that is the same as property in respect of which the order of restitution may be made, or

(b) the court is considering ordering the offender to pay a fine and it appears to the court that the offender would not have the means or ability to comply with both the order of restitution and the order to pay the fine, the court shall first make the order of restitution and shall then consider whether and to what extent an order of forfeiture or an order to pay a fine is appropriate in the circumstances.

Enforcing restitution order

741 (1) An offender who fails to pay all of the amount that is ordered to be paid under section 732.1, 738, 739 or 742.3 by the day specified in the order or who fails to make a periodic payment required under the order is in default of the order and the person to whom the amount, or the periodic payment, as the case may be, was to be made may, by filing the order, enter as a judgment any amount ordered to be paid that remains unpaid under the order in any civil court in Canada that has jurisdiction to enter a judgment for that amount, and that judgment is enforceable against the offender in the same manner as if it were a judgment rendered against the offender in that court in civil proceedings.

Moneys found on offender

(2) All or any part of an amount that is ordered to be paid under section 738 or 739 may be taken out of moneys found in the possession of the offender at the time of the arrest of the offender if the court making the order, on being satisfied that ownership of or right to possession of those moneys is not disputed by claimants other than the offender, so directs.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 741; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 164; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 2004, c. 12, s. 13; 2015, c. 13, s. 31.

Notice of orders of restitution

741.1 If a court makes an order of restitution under section 738 or 739, it shall cause notice of the content of the order, or a copy of the order, to be given to the person to whom the restitution is ordered to be paid, and if it is to be paid to a public authority designated by regulations made under subsection 739.4\(2\), to the public authority and the person to whom the public authority is to remit amounts received under the order.

Imposing of conditional sentence

742.1 If a person is convicted of an offence and the court imposes a sentence of imprisonment of less than two years, the court may, for the purpose of supervising the offender's behaviour in the community, order that the offender serve the sentence in the community, subject to the conditions imposed under section 742.3, if

(a) the court is satisfied that the service of the sentence in the community would not endanger the safety of the community and would be consistent with the fundamental purpose and principles of sentencing set out in sections 718 to 718.2;

(b) the offence is not an offence punishable by a minimum term of imprisonment;

(c) the offence is not an offence under any of the following provisions:

(i) section 239, for which a sentence is imposed under paragraph 239\(1\)\(b\) (attempt to commit murder),

(ii) section 269.1 (torture), or

(iii) section 318 (advocating genocide); and

(d) the offence is not a terrorism offence, or a criminal organization offence, prosecuted by way of indictment, for which the maximum term of imprisonment is 10 years or more.

Compulsory conditions of conditional sentence order

742.3 (1) The court shall prescribe, as conditions of a conditional sentence order, that the offender do all of the following:

- (a) keep the peace and be of good behaviour;
- (b) appear before the court when required to do so by the court;
- (c) report to a supervisor
 - (i) within two working days, or such longer period as the court directs, after the making of the conditional sentence order, and
 - (ii) thereafter, when required by the supervisor and in the manner directed by the supervisor;
- (d) remain within the jurisdiction of the court unless written permission to go outside that jurisdiction is obtained from the court or the supervisor; and
- (e) notify the court or the supervisor in advance of any change of name or address, and promptly notify the court or the supervisor of any change of employment or occupation.

Optional conditions of conditional sentence order

(2) The court may prescribe, as additional conditions of a conditional sentence order, that the offender do one or more of the following:

- (a) abstain from the consumption of drugs except in accordance with a medical prescription, of alcohol or of any other intoxicating substance;
 - (a.1) provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation on the demand of a peace officer, the supervisor or someone designated under subsection (7) to make a demand, at the place and time and on the day specified by the person making the demand, if that person has reasonable grounds to suspect that the offender has breached a condition of the order that requires them to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance;
 - (a.2) provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation at regular intervals that are specified by the supervisor in a notice in Form 51 served on the offender, if a condition of the order requires the offender to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance;

(a.3) abstain from communicating, directly or indirectly, with any victim, witness or other person identified in the order or from going to any place or geographic area specified in the order, except in accordance with any specified conditions that the justice considers necessary;

(b) abstain from owning, possessing or carrying a weapon;

(c) provide for the support or care of dependants;

(d) perform up to 240 hours of community service over a period not exceeding eighteen months;

(e) attend a treatment program approved by the province; and

(f) comply with such other reasonable conditions as the court considers desirable, subject to any regulations made under subsection 738\(2\), for securing the good conduct of the offender and for preventing a repetition by the offender of the same offence or the commission of other offences.

Obligations of court

(3) A court that makes an order under this section shall

(a) cause a copy of the order to be given to the offender and, on request, to the victim;

(b) explain the substance of subsection (1) and sections 742.4 and 742.6 to the offender;

(c) cause an explanation to be given to the offender of the procedure for applying under section 742.4 for a change to the optional conditions; and

(d) take reasonable measures to ensure that the offender understands the order and the explanations.

For greater certainty

(4) For greater certainty, a failure to comply with subsection (3) does not affect the validity of the order.

Notice — samples at regular intervals

(5) The notice referred to in paragraph (2)(a.2) must specify the places and times at which and the days on which the offender must provide samples of a bodily substance under a condition described in that paragraph. The first sample may not be taken earlier than 24 hours after the offender is served with the notice, and subsequent samples must be taken at regular intervals of at least seven days.

Designations and specifications

(6) For the purposes of paragraphs (2)(a.1) and (a.2) and subject to the regulations, the Attorney General of a province or the minister of justice of a territory shall, with respect to the province or territory,

- (a) designate the persons or classes of persons that may take samples of bodily substances;
- (b) designate the places or classes of places at which the samples are to be taken;
- (c) specify the manner in which the samples are to be taken;
- (d) specify the manner in which the samples are to be analyzed;
- (e) specify the manner in which the samples are to be stored, handled and destroyed;
- (f) specify the manner in which the records of the results of the analysis of the samples are to be protected and destroyed;
- (g) designate the persons or classes of persons that may destroy the samples; and
- (h) designate the persons or classes of persons that may destroy the records of the results of the analysis of the samples.

Further designations

(7) For the purpose of paragraph (2)(a.1) and subject to the regulations, the Attorney General of a province or the minister of justice of a territory may, with respect to the province or territory, designate persons or classes of persons to make a demand for a sample of a bodily substance.

Restriction

(8) Samples of bodily substances referred to in paragraphs (2)(a.1) and (a.2) may not be taken, analyzed, stored, handled or destroyed, and the records of the results of the analysis of the samples may not be protected or destroyed, except in accordance with the designations and specifications made under subsection (6).

Destruction of samples

(9) The Attorney General of a province or the minister of justice of a territory, or a person authorized by the Attorney General or minister, shall cause all samples of bodily substances provided under a conditional sentence order to be destroyed within the periods prescribed by regulation, unless the samples are reasonably expected to be used as evidence in proceedings under section 742.6.

Regulations

(10) The Governor in Council may make regulations

- (a) prescribing bodily substances for the purposes of paragraphs (2)(a.1) and (a.2);
- (b) respecting the designations and specifications referred to in subsections (6) and (7);
- (c) prescribing the periods within which samples of bodily substances are to be destroyed under subsection (9); and
- (d) respecting any other matters relating to the samples of bodily substances.

Prohibition on use of bodily substance

742.31 (1) No person shall use a bodily substance provided under a conditional sentence order except for the purpose of determining whether an offender is complying with a condition of the order that they abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance.

Prohibition on use or disclosure of result

(2) Subject to subsection (3), no person shall use, disclose or allow the disclosure of the results of the analysis of a bodily substance provided under a conditional sentence order.

Exception

(3) The results of the analysis of a bodily substance provided under a conditional sentence order may be disclosed to the offender to whom they relate, and may also be used or disclosed in the course of proceedings under section 742.6 or, if the results are made anonymous, for statistical or other research purposes.

Offence

(4) Every person who contravenes subsection (1) or (2) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

2011, c. 7, s. 6.

Supervisor may propose changes to optional conditions

742.4 (1) Where an offender's supervisor is of the opinion that a change in circumstances makes a change to the optional conditions desirable, the supervisor shall give written notification of the proposed change, and the reasons for it, to the offender, to the prosecutor and to the court.

Hearing

(2) Within seven days after receiving a notification referred to in subsection (1),

(a) the offender or the prosecutor may request the court to hold a hearing to consider the proposed change, or

(b) the court may, of its own initiative, order that a hearing be held to consider the proposed change, and a hearing so requested or ordered shall be held within thirty days after the receipt by the court of the notification referred to in subsection (1).

Decision at hearing

(3) At a hearing held pursuant to subsection (2), the court

(a) shall approve or refuse to approve the proposed change; and

(b) may make any other change to the optional conditions that the court deems appropriate.

Where no hearing requested or ordered

(4) Where no request or order for a hearing is made within the time period stipulated in subsection (2), the proposed change takes effect fourteen days after the receipt by the court of the notification referred to in subsection (1), and the supervisor shall so notify the offender and file proof of that notification with the court.

Changes proposed by offender or prosecutor

(5) Subsections (1) and (3) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of a change proposed by the offender or the prosecutor to the optional conditions, and in all such cases a hearing must be held, and must be held within thirty days after the receipt by the court of the notification referred to in subsection (1).

Judge may act in chambers

(6) All the functions of the court under this section may be exercised in chambers.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 39.

Transfer of order

742.5 (1) Where an offender who is bound by a conditional sentence order becomes a resident of a territorial division, other than the territorial division where the order was made, on the application of a supervisor, the court that made the order may, subject to subsection (1.1), transfer the order to a court in that other territorial division that would, having regard to the mode of trial of the offender, have had jurisdiction to make the order in that other territorial division if the offender had been tried and convicted there of the offence in respect of which the order was made, and the order may thereafter be dealt with and enforced by the court to which it is so transferred in all respects as if that court had made the order.

Attorney General's consent

(1.1) The transfer may be granted only with

(a) the consent of the Attorney General of the province in which the conditional sentence order was made, if the two territorial divisions are not in the same province; or

(b) the consent of the Attorney General of Canada, if the proceedings that led to the issuance of the conditional sentence order were instituted by or on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada.

Where court unable to act

(2) Where a court that has made a conditional sentence order or to which a conditional sentence order has been transferred pursuant to subsection (1) is for any reason unable to act, the powers of that court in relation to the conditional sentence order may be exercised by any other court that has equivalent jurisdiction in the same province.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 40.

Procedure on breach of condition

742.6 (1) For the purpose of proceedings under this section,

(a) the provisions of Parts XVI and XVIII with respect to compelling the appearance of an accused before a justice apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, and any reference in those Parts to committing an offence shall be read as a reference to breaching a condition of a conditional sentence order;

(b) the powers of arrest for breach of a condition are those that apply to an indictable offence, with any modifications that the circumstances require, and subsection 495\(2\) does not apply;

(c) despite paragraph (a), if an allegation of breach of condition is made, the proceeding is commenced by

(i) the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of the offender for the alleged breach,

(ii) the arrest without warrant of the offender for the alleged breach, or

(iii) the compelling of the offender's appearance in accordance with paragraph (d);

(d) if the offender is already detained or before a court, the offender's appearance may be compelled under the provisions referred to in paragraph (a);

(e) if an offender is arrested for the alleged breach, the peace officer who makes the arrest or a judge or justice may release the offender and the offender's appearance may be compelled under the provisions referred to in paragraph (a); and

(f) any judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or of a court of criminal jurisdiction or any justice of the peace may issue a warrant to arrest no matter which court, judge or justice sentenced the offender.

Warrant — means of telecommunication

(1.1) A warrant may be issued under paragraph (1)(f) by a means of telecommunication, and the provisions in section 487.1 on the issuance of a warrant apply for those purposes, with any necessary modifications.

Interim release

(2) For the purpose of the application of section 515, the release from custody of an offender who is detained on the basis of an alleged breach of a condition of a conditional sentence order shall be governed by subsection 515\(6\).

Hearing

(3) The hearing of an allegation of a breach of condition shall be commenced within thirty days, or as soon thereafter as is practicable, after

(a) the offender's arrest; or

(b) the compelling of the offender's appearance in accordance with paragraph (1)(d).

Place

(3.1) The allegation may be heard by any court having jurisdiction to hear that allegation in the place where the breach is alleged to have been committed or the offender is found, arrested or in custody.

Attorney General's consent

(3.2) If the place where the offender is found, arrested or in custody is outside the province in which the breach is alleged to have been committed, no proceedings in respect of that breach shall be instituted in that place without

(a) the consent of the Attorney General of the province in which the breach is alleged to have been committed; or

(b) the consent of the Attorney General of Canada, if the proceedings that led to the issuance of the conditional sentence order were instituted by or on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada.

Adjournment

(3.3) A judge may, at any time during a hearing of an allegation of breach of condition, adjourn the hearing for a reasonable period.

Report of supervisor

(4) An allegation of a breach of condition must be supported by a written report of the supervisor, which report must include, where appropriate, signed statements of witnesses.

Admission of report on notice of intent

(5) The report is admissible in evidence if the party intending to produce it has, before the hearing, given the offender reasonable notice and a copy of the report.

(6) and (7) [Repealed, 2008, c. 18, s. 41]

Requiring attendance of supervisor or witness

(8) The offender may, with leave of the court, require the attendance, for cross-examination, of the supervisor or of any witness whose signed statement is included in the report.

Powers of court

(9) Where the court is satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, that the offender has without reasonable excuse, the proof of which lies on the offender, breached a condition of the conditional sentence order, the court may

- (a) take no action;
- (b) change the optional conditions;
- (c) suspend the conditional sentence order and direct
 - (i) that the offender serve in custody a portion of the unexpired sentence, and
 - (ii) that the conditional sentence order resume on the offender's release from custody, either with or without changes to the optional conditions; or
- (d) terminate the conditional sentence order and direct that the offender be committed to custody until the expiration of the sentence.

Warrant or arrest — suspension of running of conditional sentence order

(10) The running of a conditional sentence order imposed on an offender is suspended during the period that ends with the determination of whether a breach of condition had occurred and begins with the earliest of

- (a) the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of the offender for the alleged breach,
- (b) the arrest without warrant of the offender for the alleged breach, and
- (c) the compelling of the offender's appearance in accordance with paragraph (1)(d).

Conditions continue

(11) If the offender is not detained in custody during any period referred to in subsection (10), the conditions of the order continue to apply, with any changes made to them under section 742.4, and any subsequent breach of those conditions may be dealt with in accordance with this section.

Detention under s. 515\(6\)

(12) A conditional sentence order referred to in subsection (10) starts running again on the making of an order to detain the offender in custody under subsection 515\(6\) and, unless section 742.7 applies, continues running while the offender is detained under the order.

Earned remission does not apply

(13) Section 6 of the Prisons and Reformatories Act does not apply to the period of detention in custody under subsection 515\(6\).

Unreasonable delay in execution

(14) Despite subsection (10), if there was unreasonable delay in the execution of a warrant, the court may, at any time, order that any period between the issuance and execution of the warrant that it considers appropriate in the interests of justice is deemed to be time served under the conditional sentence order unless the period has been so deemed under subsection (15).

Allegation dismissed or reasonable excuse

(15) If the allegation is withdrawn or dismissed or the offender is found to have had a reasonable excuse for the breach, the sum of the following periods is deemed to be time served under the conditional sentence order:

- (a) any period for which the running of the conditional sentence order was suspended; and
- (b) if subsection (12) applies, a period equal to one half of the period that the conditional sentence order runs while the offender is detained under an order referred to in that subsection.

Powers of court

(16) If a court is satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, that the offender has without reasonable excuse, the proof of which lies on the offender, breached a condition of the conditional sentence order, the court may, in exceptional cases and in the interests of justice, order that some or all of the period of suspension referred to in subsection (10) is deemed to be time served under the conditional sentence order.

Considerations

(17) In exercising its discretion under subsection (16), a court shall consider

- (a) the circumstances and seriousness of the breach;
- (b) whether not making the order would cause the offender undue hardship based on the offender's individual circumstances; and
- (c) the period for which the offender was subject to conditions while the running of the conditional sentence order was suspended and whether the offender complied with those conditions during that period.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 41; 2004, c. 12, s. 15\(E\); 2008, c. 18, s. 41; 2019, c. 25, s. 304; 2022, c. 17, s. 49.

If person imprisoned for new offence

742.7 (1) If an offender who is subject to a conditional sentence order is imprisoned as a result of a sentence imposed for another offence, whenever committed, the running of the conditional sentence order is suspended during the period of imprisonment for that other offence.

Breach of condition

(2) If an order is made under paragraph 742.6\(9\)\(c\) or (d) to commit an offender to custody, the custodial period ordered shall, unless the court considers that it would not be in the interests of justice, be served consecutively to any other period of imprisonment that the offender is serving when that order is made.

Multiple sentences

(3) If an offender is serving both a custodial period referred to in subsection (2) and any other period of imprisonment, the periods shall, for the purpose of section 743.1 and section 139 of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, be deemed to constitute one sentence of imprisonment.

Conditional sentence order resumes

(4) The running of any period of the conditional sentence order that is to be served in the community resumes upon the release of the offender from prison on parole, on statutory release, on earned remission, or at the expiration of the sentence.

1995, c. 22, s. 6; 1999, c. 5, s. 42; 2004, c. 12, s. 16\(E\).

Imprisonment

Imprisonment when no other provision

743 Every one who is convicted of an indictable offence for which no punishment is specially provided is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 743; 1992, c. 11, s. 16; 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Imprisonment for life or more than two years

743.1 (1) Except where otherwise provided, a person who is sentenced to imprisonment for

- (a) life,
- (b) a term of two years or more, or
- (c) two or more terms of less than two years each that are to be served one after the other and that, in the aggregate, amount to two years or more, shall be sentenced to imprisonment in a penitentiary.

Subsequent term less than two years

(2) Where a person who is sentenced to imprisonment in a penitentiary is, before the expiration of that sentence, sentenced to imprisonment for a term of less than two years, the person shall serve that term in a penitentiary, but if the previous sentence of imprisonment in a penitentiary is set aside, that person shall serve that term in accordance with subsection (3).

Imprisonment for term less than two years

(3) A person who is sentenced to imprisonment and who is not required to be sentenced as provided in subsection (1) or (2) shall, unless a special prison is prescribed by law, be sentenced to imprisonment in a prison or other place of confinement, other than a penitentiary, within the province in which the person is convicted, in which the sentence of imprisonment may be lawfully executed.

Long-term supervision

(3.1) Despite subsection (3), an offender who is subject to long-term supervision under Part XXIV and is sentenced for another offence during the period of the supervision shall be sentenced to imprisonment in a penitentiary.

Sentence to penitentiary of person serving sentence elsewhere

(4) Where a person is sentenced to imprisonment in a penitentiary while the person is lawfully imprisoned in a place other than a penitentiary, that person shall, except where otherwise provided, be sent immediately to the penitentiary, and shall serve in the penitentiary the unexpired portion of the term of imprisonment that that person was serving when sentenced to the penitentiary as well as the term of imprisonment for which that person was sentenced to the penitentiary.

Transfer to penitentiary

(5) Where, at any time, a person who is imprisoned in a prison or place of confinement other than a penitentiary is subject to two or more terms of imprisonment, each of which is for less than two years, that are to be served one after the other, and the aggregate of the unexpired portions of those terms at that time amounts to two years or more, the person shall be transferred to a penitentiary to serve those terms, but if any one or more of such terms is set aside or reduced and the unexpired portions of the remaining term or terms on the day on which that person was transferred under this section amounted to less than two years, that person shall serve that term or terms in accordance with subsection (3).

Newfoundland

(6) For the purposes of subsection (3), “penitentiary” does not, until a day to be fixed by order of the Governor in Council, include the facility mentioned in subsection 15\(2\) of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act.

1992, c. 11, s. 16; 1995, c. 19, s. 39, c. 22, s. 6; 1997, c. 17, s. 1; 2008, c. 6, s. 39.

Report by court to Correctional Service

743.2 A court that sentences or commits a person to penitentiary shall forward to the Correctional Service of Canada its reasons and recommendation relating to the sentence or committal, any relevant reports that were submitted to the court, and any other information relevant to administering the sentence or committal.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Non-communication order

743.21 (1) The sentencing judge may issue an order prohibiting the offender from communicating, directly or indirectly, with any victim, witness or other person identified in the order during the custodial period of the sentence, except in accordance with any conditions specified in the order that the sentencing judge considers necessary.

Failure to comply with order

(2) Every person who fails, without lawful excuse, to comply with the order

(a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or

(b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

2008, c. 18, s. 42; 2018, c. 29, s. 67; 2019, c. 25, s. 305.

Sentence served according to regulations

743.3 A sentence of imprisonment shall be served in accordance with the enactments and rules that govern the institution to which the prisoner is sentenced.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

743.4 [Repealed, 2002, c. 1, s. 184]

Transfer of jurisdiction when person already sentenced under Youth Criminal Justice Act

743.5 (1) If a young person or an adult is or has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment for an offence while subject to a disposition made under paragraph 20(1)(k) or (k.1) of the Young Offenders Act, chapter Y-1 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, or a youth sentence imposed under paragraph 42(2)(n), (o), (q) or (r) of the Youth Criminal Justice Act, the remaining portion of the disposition or youth sentence shall be dealt with, for all purposes under this Act or any other Act of Parliament, as if it had been a sentence imposed under this Act.

Transfer of jurisdiction when youth sentence imposed under Youth Criminal Justice Act

(2) If a disposition is made under paragraph 20(1)(k) or (k.1) of the Young Offenders Act, chapter Y-1 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, with respect to a person or a youth sentence is imposed on a person under paragraph 42(2)(n), (o), (q) or (r) of the Youth Criminal Justice Act while the young person or adult is under sentence of imprisonment imposed under an Act of Parliament other than the Youth Criminal Justice Act, the disposition or youth sentence shall be dealt with, for all purposes under this Act or any other Act of Parliament, as if it had been a sentence imposed under this Act.

Sentences deemed to constitute one sentence — section 743.1

(3) For greater certainty, the following are deemed to constitute one sentence of imprisonment for the purposes of section 139 of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act:

(a) for the purposes of subsection (1), the remainder of the youth sentence or disposition and the subsequent term of imprisonment; and

(b) for the purposes of subsection (2), the term of imprisonment and the subsequent youth sentence or disposition.

1995, c. 22, ss. 6, 19, 20; 2002, c. 1, s. 184; 2008, c. 18, s. 43.

Eligibility for Parole

Power of court to delay parole

743.6 (1) Notwithstanding subsection 120(1) of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, where an offender receives, on or after November 1, 1992, a sentence of imprisonment of two years or more, including a sentence of imprisonment for life imposed otherwise than as a minimum punishment, on conviction for an offence set out in Schedule I or II to that Act that was prosecuted by way of indictment, the court may, if satisfied, having regard to the circumstances of the commission of the offence and the character and circumstances of the offender, that the expression of society's denunciation of the offence or the objective of specific or general deterrence so requires, order that the portion of the sentence that must be served before the offender may be released on full parole is one half of the sentence or ten years, whichever is less.

Power of court to delay parole

(1.1) Notwithstanding section 120 of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, where an offender receives a sentence of imprisonment of two years or more, including a sentence of imprisonment for life imposed otherwise than as a minimum punishment, on conviction for a criminal organization offence other than an offence under section 467.11, 467.111, 467.12 or 467.13, the court may order that the portion of the sentence that must be served before the offender may be released on full parole is one half of the sentence or ten years, whichever is less.

Power of court to delay parole

(1.2) Notwithstanding section 120 of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, where an offender receives a sentence of imprisonment of two years or more, including a sentence of imprisonment for life, on conviction for a terrorism offence or an offence under section 467.11, 467.111, 467.12 or 467.13, the court shall order that the portion of the sentence that must be served before the offender may be released on full parole is one half of the sentence or ten years, whichever is less, unless the court is satisfied, having regard to the circumstances of the commission of the offence and the character and circumstances of the offender, that the expression of society's denunciation of the offence and the objectives of specific and general deterrence would be adequately served by a period of parole ineligibility determined in accordance with the Corrections and Conditional Release Act.

Principles that are to guide the court

(2) For greater certainty, the paramount principles which are to guide the court under this section are denunciation and specific or general deterrence, with rehabilitation of the offender, in all cases, being subordinate to these paramount principles.

Imprisonment for Life

Sentence of life imprisonment

745 Subject to section 745.1, the sentence to be pronounced against a person who is to be sentenced to imprisonment for life shall be

(a) in respect of a person who has been convicted of high treason or first degree murder, that the person be sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole until the person has served twenty-five years of the sentence;

(b) in respect of a person who has been convicted of second degree murder where that person has previously been convicted of culpable homicide that is murder, however described in this Act, that that person be sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole until the person has served twenty-five years of the sentence;

(b.1) in respect of a person who has been convicted of second degree murder where that person has previously been convicted of an offence under section 4 or 6 of the Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act that had as its basis an intentional killing, whether or not it was planned and deliberate, that that person be sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole until the person has served twenty-five years of the sentence;

(c) in respect of a person who has been convicted of second degree murder, that the person be sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole until the person has served at least ten years of the sentence or such greater number of years, not being more than twenty-five years, as has been substituted therefor pursuant to section 745.4; and

(d) in respect of a person who has been convicted of any other offence, that the person be sentenced to imprisonment for life with normal eligibility for parole.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 745; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (2nd Supp.), s. 10; 1990, c. 17, s. 14; 1992, c. 51, s. 39; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 2000, c. 24, s. 46.

Information in respect of parole

745.01 (1) Except where subsection 745.6\(2\) applies, at the time of sentencing under paragraph 745\(a\), (b) or (c), the judge who presided at the trial of the offender shall state the following, for the record:

The offender has been found guilty of (state offence) and sentenced to imprisonment for life. The offender is not eligible for parole until (state date). However, after serving at least 15 years of the sentence, the offender may apply under section 745.6 of the Criminal Code for a reduction in the number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole. If the jury hearing the application reduces the period of parole ineligibility, the offender may then make an application for parole under the Corrections and Conditional Release Act at the end of that reduced period.

Exception

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply if the offender is convicted of an offence committed on or after the day on which this subsection comes into force.

1999, c. 25, s. 21(Preamble); 2011, c. 2, s. 2.

Persons under eighteen

745.1 The sentence to be pronounced against a person who was under the age of eighteen at the time of the commission of the offence for which the person was convicted of first degree murder or second degree murder and who is to be sentenced to imprisonment for life shall be that the person be sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole until the person has served

(a) such period between five and seven years of the sentence as is specified by the judge presiding at the trial, or if no period is specified by the judge presiding at the trial, five years, in the case of a person who was under the age of sixteen at the time of the commission of the offence;

(b) ten years, in the case of a person convicted of first degree murder who was sixteen or seventeen years of age at the time of the commission of the offence; and

(c) seven years, in the case of a person convicted of second degree murder who was sixteen or seventeen years of age at the time of the commission of the offence.

1995, c. 22, ss. 6, 21.

Recommendation by jury

745.2 Subject to section 745.3, where a jury finds an accused guilty of second degree murder, the judge presiding at the trial shall, before discharging the jury, put to them the following question:

You have found the accused guilty of second degree murder and the law requires that I now pronounce a sentence of imprisonment for life against the accused. Do you wish to make any recommendation with respect to the number of years that the accused must serve before the accused is eligible for release on parole? You are not required to make any recommendation but if you do, your recommendation will be considered by me when I am determining whether I should substitute for the ten year period, which the law would otherwise require the accused to serve before the accused is eligible to be considered for release on parole, a number of years that is more than ten but not more than twenty-five.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Recommendation by jury — multiple murders

745.21 (1) Where a jury finds an accused guilty of murder and that accused has previously been convicted of murder, the judge presiding at the trial shall, before discharging the jury, put to them the following question:

You have found the accused guilty of murder. The law requires that I now pronounce a sentence of imprisonment for life against the accused. Do you wish to make any recommendation with respect to the period without eligibility for parole to be served for this murder consecutively to the period without eligibility for parole imposed for the previous murder? You are not required to make any recommendation, but if you do, your recommendation will be considered by me when I make my determination.

Application

(2) Subsection (1) applies to an offender who is convicted of murders committed on a day after the day on which this section comes into force and for which the offender is sentenced under this Act, the National Defence Act or the Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act.

2011, c. 5, s. 4.

Persons under sixteen

745.3 Where a jury finds an accused guilty of first degree murder or second degree murder and the accused was under the age of sixteen at the time of the commission of the offence, the judge presiding at the trial shall, before discharging the jury, put to them the following question:

You have found the accused guilty of first degree murder (or second degree murder) and the law requires that I now pronounce a sentence of imprisonment for life against the accused. Do you wish to make any recommendation with respect to the period of imprisonment that the accused must serve before the accused is eligible for release on parole? You are not required to make any recommendation but if you do, your recommendation will be considered by me when I am determining the period of imprisonment that is between five years and seven years that the law would require the accused to serve before the accused is eligible to be considered for release on parole.

1995, c. 22, ss. 6, 22.

Ineligibility for parole

745.4 Subject to section 745.5, at the time of the sentencing under section 745 of an offender who is convicted of second degree murder, the judge who presided at the trial of the offender or, if that judge is unable to do so, any judge of the same court may, having regard to the character of the offender, the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission, and to the recommendation, if any, made pursuant to section 745.2, by order, substitute for ten years a number of years of imprisonment (being more than ten but not more than twenty-five) without eligibility for parole, as the judge deems fit in the circumstances.

Idem

745.5 At the time of the sentencing under section 745.1 of an offender who is convicted of first degree murder or second degree murder and who was under the age of sixteen at the time of the commission of the offence, the judge who presided at the trial of the offender or, if that judge is unable to do so, any judge of the same court, may, having regard to the age and character of the offender, the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission, and to the recommendation, if any, made pursuant to section 745.3, by order, decide the period of imprisonment the offender is to serve that is between five years and seven years without eligibility for parole, as the judge deems fit in the circumstances.

1995, c. 22, ss. 6, 23.

Ineligibility for parole — multiple murders

745.51 (1) At the time of the sentencing under section 745 of an offender who is convicted of murder and who has already been convicted of one or more other murders, the judge who presided at the trial of the offender or, if that judge is unable to do so, any judge of the same court may, having regard to the character of the offender, the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission, and the recommendation, if any, made pursuant to section 745.21, by order, decide that the periods without eligibility for parole for each murder conviction are to be served consecutively.

Reasons

(2) The judge shall give, either orally or in writing, reasons for the decision to make or not to make an order under subsection (1).

Application

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) apply to an offender who is convicted of murders committed on a day after the day on which this section comes into force and for which the offender is sentenced under this Act, the National Defence Act or the Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act.

2011, c. 5, s. 5.

Application for judicial review

745.6 (1) Subject to subsections (2) to (2.6), a person may apply, in writing, to the appropriate Chief Justice in the province in which their conviction took place for a reduction in the number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole if the person

(a) has been convicted of murder or high treason;

(a.1) committed the murder or high treason before the day on which this paragraph comes into force;

(b) has been sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole until more than fifteen years of their sentence has been served; and

(c) has served at least fifteen years of their sentence.

Exception — multiple murderers

(2) A person who has been convicted of more than one murder may not make an application under subsection (1), whether or not proceedings were commenced in respect of any of the murders before another murder was committed.

Less than 15 years of sentence served

(2.1) A person who is convicted of murder or high treason and who has served less than 15 years of their sentence on the day on which this subsection comes into force may, within 90 days after the day on which they have served 15 years of their sentence, make an application under subsection (1).

At least 15 years of sentence served

(2.2) A person who is convicted of murder or high treason and who has served at least 15 years of their sentence on the day on which this subsection comes into force may make an application under subsection (1) within 90 days after

(a) the end of five years after the day on which the person was the subject of a determination made under subsection 745.61\(4\) or a determination or conclusion to which subsection 745.63\(8\) applies; or

(b) the day on which this subsection comes into force, if the person has not made an application under subsection (1).

Non-application of subsection (2.2)

(2.3) Subsection (2.2) has no effect on a determination or decision made under subsection 745.61\(3\) or \(5\) or 745.63\(3\), \(5\) or \(6\) as it read immediately before the day on which this subsection comes into force. A person in respect of whom a time is set under paragraph 745.61(3)(a) or 745.63(6)(a) as it read immediately before that day may make an application under subsection (1) within 90 days after the end of that time.

Further five-year period if no application made

(2.4) If the person does not make an application in accordance with subsection (2.1), (2.2) or (2.3), as the case may be, they may make an application within 90 days after the day on which they have served a further five years of their sentence following the 90-day period referred to in that subsection, as the case may be.

Subsequent applications

(2.5) A person who makes an application in accordance with subsection (2.1), (2.2) or (2.3), as the case may be, may make another application under subsection (1) within 90 days after

- (a) the end of the time set under paragraph 745.61\(3\)\(a\) or 745.63\(6\)\(a\), if a time is set under that paragraph; or
- (b) the end of five years after the day on which the person is the subject of a determination made under subsection 745.61\(4\) or a determination or conclusion to which subsection 745.63\(8\) applies, if the person is the subject of such a determination or conclusion.

Subsequent applications

(2.6) A person who had made an application under subsection (1) as it read immediately before the day on which this subsection comes into force, whose application was finally disposed of on or after that day and who has then made a subsequent application may make a further application in accordance with subsection (2.5), if either paragraph (2.5) (a) or (b) is applicable.

(2.7) The 90-day time limits for the making of any application referred to in subsections (2.1) to (2.5) may be extended by the appropriate Chief Justice, or his or her designate, to a maximum of 180 days if the person, due to circumstances beyond their control, is unable to make an application within the 90-day time limit.

(2.8) If a person convicted of murder does not make an application under subsection (1) within the maximum time period allowed by this section, the Commissioner of Correctional Service Canada, or his or her designate, shall immediately notify in writing a parent, child, spouse or common-law partner of the victim that the convicted person did not make an application. If it is not possible to notify one of the aforementioned relatives, then the notification shall be given to another relative of the victim. The notification shall specify the next date on which the convicted person will be eligible to make an application under subsection (1).

Definition of appropriate Chief Justice

(3) For the purposes of this section and sections 745.61 to 745.64, the appropriate Chief Justice is

- (a) in relation to the Province of Ontario, the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court;
- (b) in relation to the Province of Quebec, the Chief Justice of the Superior Court;
- (c) in relation to the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Trial Division;
- (d) in relation to the Provinces of New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench;
- (e) in relation to the Provinces of Nova Scotia, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; and
- (f) in relation to Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal.

Judicial screening

745.61 (1) On receipt of an application under subsection 745.6\(1\), the appropriate Chief Justice shall determine, or shall designate a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction to determine, on the basis of the following written material, whether the applicant has shown, on a balance of probabilities, that there is a substantial likelihood that the application will succeed:

- (a) the application;
- (b) any report provided by the Correctional Service of Canada or other correctional authorities; and
- (c) any other written evidence presented to the Chief Justice or judge by the applicant or the Attorney General.

Criteria

(2) In determining whether the applicant has shown that there is a substantial likelihood that the application will succeed, the Chief Justice or judge shall consider the criteria set out in paragraphs 745.63\(1\)\(a\) to \(e\), with any modifications that the circumstances require.

Decision re new application

(3) If the Chief Justice or judge determines that the applicant has not shown that there is a substantial likelihood that the application will succeed, the Chief Justice or judge may

- (a) set a time, no earlier than five years after the date of the determination, at or after which the applicant may make another application under subsection 745.6\(1\); or
- (b) decide that the applicant may not make another application under that subsection.

If no decision re new application

(4) If the Chief Justice or judge determines that the applicant has not shown that there is a substantial likelihood that the application will succeed but does not set a time for another application or decide that such an application may not be made, the applicant may make another application no earlier than five years after the date of the determination.

Designation of judge to empanel jury

(5) If the Chief Justice or judge determines that the applicant has shown that there is a substantial likelihood that the application will succeed, the Chief Justice shall designate a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction to empanel a jury to hear the application.

1996, c. 34, s. 2; 2011, c. 2, s. 4.

Appeal

745.62 (1) The applicant or the Attorney General may appeal to the Court of Appeal from a determination or a decision made under section 745.61 on any question of law or fact or mixed law and fact.

Documents to be considered

(2) The appeal shall be determined on the basis of the documents presented to the Chief Justice or judge who made the determination or decision, any reasons for the determination or decision and any other documents that the Court of Appeal requires.

Sections to apply

(3) Sections 673 to 696 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require.

1996, c. 34, s. 2.

Hearing of application

745.63 (1) The jury empanelled under subsection 745.61\(5\) to hear the application shall consider the following criteria and determine whether the applicant's number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole ought to be reduced:

- (a) the character of the applicant;
- (b) the applicant's conduct while serving the sentence;
- (c) the nature of the offence for which the applicant was convicted;
- (d) any information provided by a victim at the time of the imposition of the sentence or at the time of the hearing under this section; and
- (e) any other matters that the judge considers relevant in the circumstances.

Information provided by victim

(1.1) Information provided by a victim referred to in paragraph (1)(d) may be provided either orally or in writing, at the discretion of the victim, or in any other manner that the judge considers appropriate.

(2) [\[Repealed, 2015, c. 13, s. 34\]](#)

Reduction

(3) The jury hearing an application under subsection (1) may determine that the applicant's number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole ought to be reduced. The determination to reduce the number of years must be by unanimous vote.

No reduction

(4) The applicant's number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole is not reduced if

- (a) the jury hearing an application under subsection (1) determines that the number of years ought not to be reduced;

- (b) the jury hearing an application under subsection (1) concludes that it cannot unanimously determine that the number of years ought to be reduced; or
- (c) the presiding judge, after the jury has deliberated for a reasonable period, concludes that the jury is unable to unanimously determine that the number of years ought to be reduced.

Where determination to reduce number of years

(5) If the jury determines that the number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole ought to be reduced, the jury may, by a vote of not less than two thirds of the members of the jury,

- (a) substitute a lesser number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole than that then applicable; or
- (b) terminate the ineligibility for parole.

Decision re new application

(6) If the applicant's number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole is not reduced, the jury may

- (a) set a time, no earlier than five years after the date of the determination or conclusion under subsection (4), at or after which the applicant may make another application under subsection 745.6\(1\); or
- (b) decide that the applicant may not make another application under that subsection.

Two-thirds decision

(7) The decision of the jury under paragraph (6)(a) or (b) must be made by not less than two thirds of its members.

If no decision re new application

(8) If the jury does not set a date on or after which another application may be made or decide that such an application may not be made, the applicant may make another application no earlier than five years after the date of the determination or conclusion under subsection (4).

1996, c. 34, s. 2; 1999, c. 25, s. 22(Preamble); 2011, c. 2, s. 5; 2015, c. 13, s. 34.

Rules

745.64 (1) The appropriate Chief Justice in each province or territory may make such rules as are required for the purposes of sections 745.6 to 745.63.

Statutory Instruments Act

(1.1) The Statutory Instruments Act does not apply to those rules.

Territories

(2) When the appropriate Chief Justice is designating a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction, for the purpose of a judicial screening under subsection 745.61\(1\) or to empanel a jury to hear an application under subsection 745.61\(5\), in respect of a conviction that took place in Yukon, the Northwest Territories or Nunavut, the appropriate Chief Justice may designate the judge from the Court of Appeal of Yukon, the Northwest Territories or Nunavut, or the Supreme Court of Yukon or the Northwest Territories or the Nunavut Court of Justice, as the case may be.

1996, c. 34, s. 2; 1999, c. 3, s. 53; 2002, c. 7, s. 147\(E\); 2019, c. 25, s. 306.

Time spent in custody

746 In calculating the period of imprisonment served for the purposes of section 745, 745.1, 745.4, 745.5 or 745.6, there shall be included any time spent in custody between

(a) in the case of a sentence of imprisonment for life after July 25, 1976, the day on which the person was arrested and taken into custody in respect of the offence for which that person was sentenced to imprisonment for life and the day the sentence was imposed; or

(b) in the case of a sentence of death that has been or is deemed to have been commuted to a sentence of imprisonment for life, the day on which the person was arrested and taken into custody in respect of the offence for which that person was sentenced to death and the day the sentence was commuted or deemed to have been commuted to a sentence of imprisonment for life.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 746; 1995, c. 19, s. 41, c. 22, ss. 6, 24.

Parole prohibited

746.1 (1) Unless Parliament otherwise provides by an enactment making express reference to this section, a person who has been sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for a specified number of years pursuant to this Act shall not be considered for parole or released pursuant to a grant of parole under the Corrections and Conditional Release Act or any other Act of Parliament until the expiration or termination of the specified number of years of imprisonment.

Absence with or without escort and day parole

(2) Subject to subsection (3), in respect of a person sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for a specified number of years pursuant to this Act, until the expiration of all but three years of the specified number of years of imprisonment,

(a) no day parole may be granted under the Corrections and Conditional Release Act;

(b) no absence without escort may be authorized under that Act or the Prisons and Reformatories Act; and

(c) except with the approval of the Parole Board of Canada, no absence with escort otherwise than for medical reasons or in order to attend judicial proceedings or a coroner's inquest may be authorized under either of those Acts.

Young offenders

(3) In the case of any person convicted of first degree murder or second degree murder who was under the age of eighteen at the time of the commission of the offence and who is sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for a specified number of years pursuant to this Act, until the expiration of all but one fifth of the period of imprisonment the person is to serve without eligibility for parole,

(a) no day parole may be granted under the Corrections and Conditional Release Act;

(b) no absence without escort may be authorized under that Act or the Prisons and Reformatories Act; and

(c) except with the approval of the Parole Board of Canada, no absence with escort otherwise than for medical reasons or in order to attend judicial proceedings or a coroner's inquest may be authorized under either of those Acts.

1995, c. 22, s. 6, c. 42, s. 87; 1997, c. 17, s. 2; 2012, c. 1, ss. 160, 201.

Pardons and Remissions

To whom pardon may be granted

748 (1) Her Majesty may extend the royal mercy to a person who is sentenced to imprisonment under the authority of an Act of Parliament, even if the person is imprisoned for failure to pay money to another person.

Free or conditional pardon

(2) The Governor in Council may grant a free pardon or a conditional pardon to any person who has been convicted of an offence.

Effect of free pardon

(3) Where the Governor in Council grants a free pardon to a person, that person shall be deemed thereafter never to have committed the offence in respect of which the pardon is granted.

Punishment for subsequent offence not affected

(4) No free pardon or conditional pardon prevents or mitigates the punishment to which the person might otherwise be lawfully sentenced on a subsequent conviction for an offence other than that for which the pardon was granted.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 748; 1992, c. 22, s. 12; 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Remission by Governor in Council

748.1 (1) The Governor in Council may order the remission, in whole or in part, of a fine or forfeiture imposed under an Act of Parliament, whoever the person may be to whom it is payable or however it may be recoverable.

Terms of remission

(2) An order for remission under subsection (1) may include the remission of costs incurred in the proceedings, but no costs to which a private prosecutor is entitled shall be remitted.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Royal prerogative

749 Nothing in this Act in any manner limits or affects Her Majesty's royal prerogative of mercy.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 749; 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

Disabilities

Public office vacated for conviction

750 (1) Where a person is convicted of an indictable offence for which the person is sentenced to imprisonment for two years or more and holds, at the time that person is convicted, an office under the Crown or other public employment, the office or employment forthwith becomes vacant.

When disability ceases

(2) A person to whom subsection (1) applies is, until undergoing the punishment imposed on the person or the punishment substituted therefor by competent authority or receives a free pardon from Her Majesty, incapable of holding any office under the Crown or other public employment, or of being elected or sitting or voting as a member of Parliament or of a legislature or of exercising any right of suffrage.

Disability to contract

(3) No person who is convicted of

- (a) an offence under section 121, 124 or 418,
- (b) an offence under section 380 committed against Her Majesty, or
- (c) an offence under paragraph 80\(1\)\(d\), subsection 80\(2\) or section 154.01 of the Financial Administration Act, has, after that conviction, capacity to contract with Her Majesty or to receive any benefit under a contract between Her Majesty and any other person or to hold office under Her Majesty.

Application for restoration of privileges

(4) A person to whom subsection (3) applies may, at any time before a record suspension for which he or she has applied is ordered under the Criminal Records Act, apply to the Governor in Council for the restoration of one or more of the capacities lost by the person by virtue of that subsection.

Order of restoration

(5) Where an application is made under subsection (4), the Governor in Council may order that the capacities lost by the applicant by virtue of subsection (3) be restored to that applicant in whole or in part and subject to such conditions as the Governor in Council considers desirable in the public interest.

Removal of disability

(6) Where a conviction is set aside by competent authority, any disability imposed by this section is removed.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 750; 1995, c. 22, s. 6; 2000, c. 1, s. 9; 2006, c. 9, s. 246; 2012, c. 1, s. 146.

Miscellaneous Provisions

Costs to successful party in case of libel

751 The person in whose favour judgment is given in proceedings by indictment for defamatory libel is entitled to recover from the opposite party costs in a reasonable amount to be fixed by order of the court.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 751; 1995, c. 22, s. 6.

How recovered

751.1 Where costs that are fixed under section 751 are not paid forthwith, the party in whose favour judgment is given may enter judgment for the amount of the costs by filing the order in any civil court of the province in which the trial was held that has jurisdiction to enter a judgment for that amount, and that judgment is enforceable against the opposite party in the same manner as if it were a judgment rendered against that opposite party in that court in civil proceedings.

1995, c. 22, s. 6.

PART XXIV

Dangerous Offenders and Long-term Offenders

- (xxiv) section 344 (robbery), and
- (xxv) section 348 (breaking and entering with intent, committing offence or breaking out),

(c) an offence under any of the following provisions of the Criminal Code, chapter C-34 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, as they read from time to time before January 1, 1988:

- (i) subsection 146(2) (sexual intercourse with female between ages of 14 and 16),
- (ii) section 148 (sexual intercourse with feeble-minded),
- (iii) section 166 (parent or guardian procuring defilement), and
- (iv) section 167 (householder permitting defilement),

(c.1) an offence under any of the following provisions of this Act, as they read from time to time before the day on which this paragraph comes into force:

- (i) subsection 212(1) (procuring),
- (ii) subsection 212(2) (living on the avails of prostitution of person under 18 years),
- (iii) subsection 212(2.1) (aggravated offence in relation to living on the avails of prostitution of person under 18 years), and
- (iv) subsection 212(4) (prostitution of person under 18 years); or

(d) an attempt or conspiracy to commit an offence referred to in paragraph (b), (c) or (c.1); (infraction désignée) long-term supervision means long-term supervision ordered under subsection 753\(4\), 753.01\(5\) or \(6\) or 753.1\(3\) or subparagraph 759\(3\)\(a\)\(i\); (surveillance de longue durée) primary designated offence means

(a) an offence under any of the following provisions:

- (i) section 151 (sexual interference),
- (ii) section 152 (invitation to sexual touching),

- (iii) section 153 (sexual exploitation),
- (iv) section 155 (incest),
- (v) section 239 (attempt to commit murder),
- (vi) section 244 (discharging firearm with intent),
- (vii) section 267 (assault with weapon or causing bodily harm),
- (viii) section 268 (aggravated assault),
- (ix) section 271 (sexual assault),
- (x) section 272 (sexual assault with weapon, threats to third party or causing bodily harm),
- (xi) section 273 (aggravated sexual assault), and
- (xii) subsection 279\(1\) (kidnapping),

(b) an offence under any of the following provisions of the Criminal Code, chapter C-34 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, as they read from time to time before January 4, 1983:

- (i) section 144 (rape),
- (ii) section 145 (attempt to commit rape),
- (iii) section 149 (indecent assault on female),
- (iv) section 156 (indecent assault on male),
- (v) subsection 245\(2\) (assault causing bodily harm), and
- (vi) subsection 246\(1\) (assault with intent) if the intent is to commit an offence referred to in any of subparagraphs (i) to (v) of this paragraph,

(c) an offence under any of the following provisions of the Criminal Code, chapter C-34 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, as enacted by section 19 of An Act to amend the Criminal Code in relation to sexual offences and other offences against the person and to amend certain other Acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof, chapter 125 of the Statutes of Canada, 1980-81-82-83:

- (i) section 246.1 (sexual assault),
- (ii) section 246.2 (sexual assault with weapon, threats to third party or causing bodily harm), and
- (iii) section 246.3 (aggravated sexual assault),

(d) an offence under any of the following provisions of the Criminal Code, chapter C-34 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, as they read from time to time before January 1, 1988:

- (i) subsection 146\(1\) (sexual intercourse with female under age of 14), and
- (ii) paragraph 153\(1\)\(a\) (sexual intercourse with step-daughter), or

(e) an attempt or conspiracy to commit an offence referred to in any of paragraphs (a) to (d); (infraction primaire) serious personal injury offence means

(a) an indictable offence, other than high treason, treason, first degree murder or second degree murder, involving

(i) the use or attempted use of violence against another person, or

(ii) conduct endangering or likely to endanger the life or safety of another person or inflicting or likely to inflict severe psychological damage on another person, and for which the offender may be sentenced to imprisonment for ten years or more, or

(b) an offence or attempt to commit an offence mentioned in section 271 (sexual assault), 272 (sexual assault with a weapon, threats to a third party or causing bodily harm) or 273 (aggravated sexual assault). (sérvices graves à la personne)

Dangerous Offenders and Long-Term Offenders

Prosecutor's duty to advise court

752.01 If the prosecutor is of the opinion that an offence for which an offender is convicted is a serious personal injury offence that is a designated offence and that the offender was convicted previously at least twice of a designated offence and was sentenced to at least two years of imprisonment for each of those convictions, the prosecutor shall advise the court, as soon as feasible after the finding of guilt and in any event before sentence is imposed, whether the prosecutor intends to make an application under subsection 752.1\(1\).

Application for remand for assessment

752.1 (1) On application by the prosecutor, if the court is of the opinion that there are reasonable grounds to believe that an offender who is convicted of a serious personal injury offence or an offence referred to in paragraph 753.1\(2\)\(a\) might be found to be a dangerous offender under section 753 or a long-term offender under section 753.1, the court shall, by order in writing, before sentence is imposed, remand the offender, for a period not exceeding 60 days, to the custody of a person designated by the court who can perform an assessment or have an assessment performed by experts for use as evidence in an application under section 753 or 753.1.

Report

(2) The person to whom the offender is remanded shall file a report of the assessment with the court not later than 30 days after the end of the assessment period and make copies of it available to the prosecutor and counsel for the offender.

Extension of time

(3) On application by the prosecutor, the court may extend the period within which the report must be filed by a maximum of 30 days if the court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to do so.

1997, c. 17, s. 4; 2008, c. 6, s. 41.

Application for finding that an offender is a dangerous offender

753 (1) On application made under this Part after an assessment report is filed under subsection 752.1\(2\), the court shall find the offender to be a dangerous offender if it is satisfied

(a) that the offence for which the offender has been convicted is a serious personal injury offence described in paragraph (a) of the definition of that expression in section 752 and the offender constitutes a threat to the life, safety or physical or mental well-being of other persons on the basis of evidence establishing

(i) a pattern of repetitive behaviour by the offender, of which the offence for which he or she has been convicted forms a part, showing a failure to restrain his or her behaviour and a likelihood of causing death or injury to other persons, or inflicting severe psychological damage on other persons, through failure in the future to restrain his or her behaviour,

(ii) a pattern of persistent aggressive behaviour by the offender, of which the offence for which he or she has been convicted forms a part, showing a substantial degree of indifference on the part of the offender respecting the reasonably foreseeable consequences to other persons of his or her behaviour, or

(iii) any behaviour by the offender, associated with the offence for which he or she has been convicted, that is of such a brutal nature as to compel the conclusion that the offender's behaviour in the future is unlikely to be inhibited by normal standards of behavioural restraint; or

(b) that the offence for which the offender has been convicted is a serious personal injury offence described in paragraph (b) of the definition of that expression in section 752 and the offender, by his or her conduct in any sexual matter including that involved in the commission of the offence for which he or she has been convicted, has shown a failure to control his or her sexual impulses and a likelihood of causing injury, pain or other evil to other persons through failure in the future to control his or her sexual impulses.

Presumption

(1.1) If the court is satisfied that the offence for which the offender is convicted is a primary designated offence for which it would be appropriate to impose a sentence of imprisonment of two years or more and that the offender was convicted previously at least twice of a primary designated offence and was sentenced to at least two years of imprisonment for each of those convictions, the conditions in paragraph (1)(a) or (b), as the case may be, are presumed to have been met unless the contrary is proved on a balance of probabilities.

Time for making application

(2) An application under subsection (1) must be made before sentence is imposed on the offender unless

(a) before the imposition of sentence, the prosecutor gives notice to the offender of a possible intention to make an application under section 752.1 and an application under subsection (1) not later than six months after that imposition; and

(b) at the time of the application under subsection (1) that is not later than six months after the imposition of sentence, it is shown that relevant evidence that was not reasonably available to the prosecutor at the time of the imposition of sentence became available in the interim.

Application for remand for assessment after imposition of sentence

(3) Notwithstanding subsection 752.1\(1\), an application under that subsection may be made after the imposition of sentence or after an offender begins to serve the sentence in a case to which paragraphs (2)(a) and (b) apply.

Sentence for dangerous offender

(4) If the court finds an offender to be a dangerous offender, it shall

(a) impose a sentence of detention in a penitentiary for an indeterminate period;

(b) impose a sentence for the offence for which the offender has been convicted — which must be a minimum punishment of imprisonment for a term of two years — and order that the offender be subject to long-term supervision for a period that does not exceed 10 years; or

(c) impose a sentence for the offence for which the offender has been convicted.

Sentence of indeterminate detention

(4.1) The court shall impose a sentence of detention in a penitentiary for an indeterminate period unless it is satisfied by the evidence adduced during the hearing of the application that there is a reasonable expectation that a lesser measure under paragraph (4)(b) or (c) will adequately protect the public against the commission by the offender of murder or a serious personal injury offence.

If application made after sentencing

(4.2) If the application is made after the offender begins to serve the sentence in a case to which paragraphs (2)(a) and (b) apply, a sentence imposed under paragraph (4)(a), or a sentence imposed and an order made under paragraph 4\(b\), replaces the sentence that was imposed for the offence for which the offender was convicted.

If offender not found to be dangerous offender

(5) If the court does not find an offender to be a dangerous offender,

(a) the court may treat the application as an application to find the offender to be a long-term offender, section 753.1 applies to the application and the court may either find that the offender is a long-term offender or hold another hearing for that purpose; or

(b) the court may impose sentence for the offence for which the offender has been convicted.

(6) [Repealed, 2008, c. 6, s. 42]

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 753; 1997, c. 17, s. 4; 2008, c. 6, s. 42.

Application for remand for assessment — later conviction

753.01 (1) If an offender who is found to be a dangerous offender is later convicted of a serious personal injury offence or an offence under subsection 753.3\(1\), on application by the prosecutor, the court shall, by order in writing, before sentence is imposed, remand the offender, for a period not exceeding 60 days, to the custody of a person designated by the court who can perform an assessment or have an assessment performed by experts for use as evidence in an application under subsection (4).

Report

(2) The person to whom the offender is remanded shall file a report of the assessment with the court not later than 30 days after the end of the assessment period and make copies of it available to the prosecutor and counsel for the offender.

Extension of time

(3) On application by the prosecutor, the court may extend the period within which the report must be filed by a maximum of 30 days if the court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to do so.

Application for new sentence or order

(4) After the report is filed, the prosecutor may apply for a sentence of detention in a penitentiary for an indeterminate period, or for an order that the offender be subject to a new period of long-term supervision in addition to any other sentence that may be imposed for the offence.

Sentence of indeterminate detention

(5) If the application is for a sentence of detention in a penitentiary for an indeterminate period, the court shall impose that sentence unless it is satisfied by the evidence adduced during the hearing of the application that there is a reasonable expectation that a sentence for the offence for which the offender has been convicted — with or without a new period of long-term supervision — will adequately protect the public against the commission by the offender of murder or a serious personal injury offence.

New long-term supervision

(6) If the application is for a new period of long-term supervision, the court shall order that the offender be subject to a new period of long-term supervision in addition to a sentence for the offence for which they have been convicted unless it is satisfied by the evidence adduced during the hearing of the application that there is a reasonable expectation that the sentence alone will adequately protect the public against the commission by the offender of murder or a serious personal injury offence.

2008, c. 6, s. 43.

Victim evidence

753.02 Any evidence given during the hearing of an application made under subsection 753\(1\) by a victim of an offence for which the offender was convicted is deemed also to have been given during any hearing held with respect to the offender under paragraph 753\(5\)\(a\) or subsection 753.01\(5\) or \(6\).

2008, c. 6, s. 43.

Application for finding that an offender is a long-term offender

753.1 (1) The court may, on application made under this Part following the filing of an assessment report under subsection 752.1\(2\), find an offender to be a long-term offender if it is satisfied that

- (a) it would be appropriate to impose a sentence of imprisonment of two years or more for the offence for which the offender has been convicted;
- (b) there is a substantial risk that the offender will reoffend; and
- (c) there is a reasonable possibility of eventual control of the risk in the community.

Substantial risk

(2) The court shall be satisfied that there is a substantial risk that the offender will reoffend if

- (a) the offender has been convicted of an offence under section 151 (sexual interference), 152 (invitation to sexual touching) or 153 (sexual exploitation), subsection 163.1\(2\) (making child sexual abuse and exploitation material), 163.1\(3\) (distribution, etc., of child sexual abuse and exploitation material), 163.1\(4\) (possession of child sexual abuse and exploitation material) or 163.1\(4.1\) (accessing child sexual abuse and exploitation material), section 170 (parent or guardian procuring sexual activity), 171 (householder permitting sexual activity), 171.1 (making sexually explicit material available to child), 172.1 (luring a child) or 172.2 (agreement or arrangement — sexual offence against child), subsection 173\(2\) (exposure) or section 271 (sexual assault), 272 (sexual assault with a weapon), 273 (aggravated sexual assault) or 279.011 (trafficking — person under 18 years) or subsection 279.02\(2\) (material benefit — trafficking of person under 18 years), 279.03\(2\) (withholding or destroying documents — trafficking of person under 18 years), 286.1\(2\) (obtaining sexual services for consideration from person under 18 years), 286.2(2) (material benefit from sexual services provided by person under 18 years) or 286.3(2) (procuring — person under 18 years), or has engaged in serious conduct of a sexual nature in the commission of another offence of which the offender has been convicted; and

(b) the offender

(i) has shown a pattern of repetitive behaviour, of which the offence for which he or she has been convicted forms a part, that shows a likelihood of the offender's causing death or injury to other persons or inflicting severe psychological damage on other persons, or

(ii) by conduct in any sexual matter including that involved in the commission of the offence for which the offender has been convicted, has shown a likelihood of causing injury, pain or other evil to other persons in the future through similar offences.

Sentence for long-term offender

(3) If the court finds an offender to be a long-term offender, it shall

(a) impose a sentence for the offence for which the offender has been convicted, which must be a minimum punishment of imprisonment for a term of two years; and

(b) order that the offender be subject to long-term supervision for a period that does not exceed 10 years.

Exception — if application made after sentencing

(3.1) The court may not impose a sentence under paragraph (3)(a) and the sentence that was imposed for the offence for which the offender was convicted stands despite the offender's being found to be a long-term offender, if the application was one that

(a) was made after the offender begins to serve the sentence in a case to which paragraphs 753\(2\)\(a\) and \(b\) apply; and

(b) was treated as an application under this section further to the court deciding to do so under paragraph 753\(5\)\(a\).

(4) and (5) [\[Repealed, 2008, c. 6, s. 44\]](#)

If offender not found to be long-term offender

(6) If the court does not find an offender to be a long-term offender, the court shall impose sentence for the offence for which the offender has been convicted.

1997, c. 17, s. 4; 2002, c. 13, s. 76; 2008, c. 6, s. 44; 2012, c. 1, s. 36; 2014, c. 25, s. 30; 2024, c. 23, s. 11.

Long-term supervision

753.2 (1) Subject to subsection (2), an offender who is subject to long-term supervision shall be supervised in the community in accordance with the Corrections and Conditional Release Act when the offender has finished serving

- (a) the sentence for the offence for which the offender has been convicted; and
- (b) all other sentences for offences for which the offender is convicted and for which sentence of a term of imprisonment is imposed on the offender, either before or after the conviction for the offence referred to in paragraph (a).

Sentence served concurrently with supervision

(2) A sentence imposed on an offender referred to in subsection (1), other than a sentence that requires imprisonment, is to be served concurrently with the long-term supervision.

Application for reduction in period of long-term supervision

(3) An offender who is required to be supervised, a member of the Parole Board of Canada or, on approval of that Board, the offender's parole supervisor, as defined in subsection 99\(1\) of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, may apply to a superior court of criminal jurisdiction for an order reducing the period of long-term supervision or terminating it on the ground that the offender no longer presents a substantial risk of reoffending and thereby being a danger to the community. The onus of proving that ground is on the applicant.

Notice to Attorney General

(4) The applicant must give notice of an application under subsection (3) to the Attorney General at the time the application is made.

1997, c. 17, s. 4; 2008, c. 6, s. 45; 2012, c. 1, ss. 147, 160.

Breach of long-term supervision

753.3 (1) An offender who, without reasonable excuse, fails or refuses to comply with long-term supervision is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term of not more than 10 years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Where accused may be tried and punished

(2) An accused who is charged with an offence under subsection (1) may be tried and punished by any court having jurisdiction to try that offence in the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed or in the place where the accused is found, is arrested or is in custody, but if the place where the accused is found, is arrested or is in custody is outside the province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, no proceedings in respect of that offence shall be instituted in that place without the consent of the Attorney General of that province.

1997, c. 17, s. 4; 2008, c. 6, s. 46; 2019, c. 25, s. 307.

New offence

753.4 (1) If an offender who is subject to long-term supervision commits one or more offences under this or any other Act and a court imposes a sentence of imprisonment for the offence or offences, the long-term supervision is interrupted until the offender has finished serving all the sentences, unless the court orders its termination.

Reduction in term of long-term supervision

(2) A court that imposes a sentence of imprisonment under subsection (1) may order a reduction in the length of the period of the offender's long-term supervision.

1997, c. 17, s. 4; 2008, c. 6, s. 47.

Hearing of application

754 (1) With the exception of an application for remand for assessment, the court may not hear an application made under this Part unless

(a) the Attorney General of the province in which the offender was tried has, either before or after the making of the application, consented to the application;

(b) at least seven days notice has been given to the offender by the prosecutor, following the making of the application, outlining the basis on which it is intended to found the application; and

(c) a copy of the notice has been filed with the clerk of the court or the provincial court judge, as the case may be.

By court alone

(2) An application under this Part shall be heard and determined by the court without a jury.

When proof unnecessary

(3) For the purposes of an application under this Part, where an offender admits any allegations contained in the notice referred to in paragraph (1)(b), no proof of those allegations is required.

Proof of consent

(4) The production of a document purporting to contain any nomination or consent that may be made or given by the Attorney General under this Part and purporting to be signed by the Attorney General is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof of that nomination or consent without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the document.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 754; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203; 2008, c. 6, s. 48.

Exception to long-term supervision — life sentence

755 (1) The court shall not order that an offender be subject to long-term supervision if they have been sentenced to life imprisonment.

Maximum length of long-term supervision

(2) The periods of long-term supervision to which an offender is subject at any particular time must not total more than 10 years.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 755; 1997, c. 17, s. 5; 2008, c. 6, s. 49.

756 [Repealed, 1997, c. 17, s. 5]

Evidence of character

757 Without prejudice to the right of the offender to tender evidence as to their character and repute, if the court thinks fit, evidence of character and repute may be admitted

(a) on the question of whether the offender is or is not a dangerous offender or a long-term offender; and

(b) in connection with a sentence to be imposed or an order to be made under this Part.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 757; 1997, c. 17, s. 5; 2008, c. 6, s. 50.

Presence of accused at hearing of application

758 (1) The offender shall be present at the hearing of the application under this Part and if at the time the application is to be heard

(a) he is confined in a prison, the court may order, in writing, the person having the custody of the accused to bring him before the court; or

(b) he is not confined in a prison, the court shall issue a summons or a warrant to compel the accused to attend before the court and the provisions of Part XVI relating to summons and warrant are applicable with such modifications as the circumstances require.

Exception

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the court may

(a) cause the offender to be removed and to be kept out of court, where he misconducts himself by interrupting the proceedings so that to continue the proceedings in his presence would not be feasible; or

(b) permit the offender to be out of court during the whole or any part of the hearing on such conditions as the court considers proper.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 693; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 14.

Appeal — offender

759 (1) An offender who is found to be a dangerous offender or a long-term offender may appeal to the court of appeal from a decision made under this Part on any ground of law or fact or mixed law and fact.

(1.1) Repealed, [2008, c. 6, s. 51]

Appeal — Attorney General

(2) The Attorney General may appeal to the court of appeal from a decision made under this Part on any ground of law.

Disposition of appeal

(3) The court of appeal may

(a) allow the appeal and

(i) find that an offender is or is not a dangerous offender or a long-term offender or impose a sentence that may be imposed or an order that may be made by the trial court under this Part, or

(ii) order a new hearing, with any directions that the court considers appropriate; or

(b) dismiss the appeal.

(3.1) and (3.2) [Repealed, 2008, c. 6, s. 51]

Effect of decision

(4) A decision of the court of appeal has the same force and effect as if it were a decision of the trial court.

(4.1) to (5) [Repealed, 2008, c. 6, s. 51]

Commencement of sentence

(6) Notwithstanding subsection 719\(1\), a sentence imposed on an offender by the court of appeal pursuant to this section shall be deemed to have commenced when the offender was sentenced by the court by which he was convicted.

Part XXI applies re appeals

(7) The provisions of Part XXI with respect to procedure on appeals apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to appeals under this section.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 759; 1995, c. 22, s. 10; 1997, c. 17, s. 6; 2008, c. 6, s. 51.

Disclosure to Correctional Service of Canada

760 Where a court finds an offender to be a dangerous offender or a long-term offender, the court shall order that a copy of all reports and testimony given by psychiatrists, psychologists, criminologists and other experts and any observations of the court with respect to the reasons for the finding, together with a transcript of the trial of the offender, be forwarded to the Correctional Service of Canada for information.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 760; 1997, c. 17, s. 7.

Review for parole

761 (1) Subject to subsection (2), where a person is in custody under a sentence of detention in a penitentiary for an indeterminate period, the Parole Board of Canada shall, as soon as possible after the expiration of seven years from the day on which that person was taken into custody and not later than every two years after the previous review, review the condition, history and circumstances of that person for the purpose of determining whether he or she should be granted parole under Part II of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act and, if so, on what conditions.

Idem

(2) Where a person is in custody under a sentence of detention in a penitentiary for an indeterminate period that was imposed before October 15, 1977, the Parole Board of Canada shall, at least once in every year, review the condition, history and circumstances of that person for the purpose of determining whether he should be granted parole under Part II of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act and, if so, on what conditions.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 761; 1992, c. 20, s. 215; 1997, c. 17, s. 8; 2012, c. 1, s. 160.

PART XXV

Effect and Enforcement of Undertakings, Release Orders and Recognizances

Applications for forfeiture

762 (1) Applications for the forfeiture of an amount set out in an undertaking, release order or recognizance must be made to the courts designated in column II of the schedule of the respective provinces designated in column I of the schedule.

Definitions

(2) In this Part,

clerk of the court means the officer designated in column III of the schedule in respect of the court designated in column II of the schedule; (greffier du tribunal)

schedule means the schedule to this Part. (annexe)

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 762; 2019, c. 25, s. 309.

Undertaking or release order binding on person

763 (1) If a person is bound by an undertaking, release order or recognizance to appear before a court, provincial court judge or justice for any purpose and the session or sittings of that court or the proceedings are adjourned or an order is made changing the place of trial, that person and their sureties continue to be bound by the undertaking, release order or recognizance as if it had been entered into or issued with respect to the resumed proceedings or the trial at the time and place at which the proceedings are ordered to be resumed or the trial is ordered to be held.

Summary of certain provisions

(2) A summary of section 763 must be set out in any undertaking, release order or recognizance.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 763; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203; 2019, c. 25, s. 310.

Undertaking or release order binding on accused

764 (1) If an accused is bound by an undertaking or release order to appear for trial, their arraignment or conviction does not cancel the undertaking or release order, and it continues to bind them and their sureties for their appearance until the accused is discharged or sentenced, as the case may be.

Committal or new sureties

(2) Despite subsection (1), the court, provincial court judge or justice may commit an accused to prison or may require them to furnish new or additional sureties for their appearance until the accused is discharged or sentenced, as the case may be.

Effect of committal

(3) The sureties of an accused who is bound by a release order to appear for trial are discharged if the accused is committed to prison under subsection (2).

Summary of certain provisions

(4) A summary of subsections (1) to (3) must be set out in any undertaking or release order.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 764; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203; 2019, c. 25, s. 310.

Effect of subsequent arrest

765 If an accused is bound by an undertaking or a release order to appear for trial, their arrest on another charge does not cancel the undertaking or release order, and it continues to bind them and their sureties for their appearance until the accused is discharged or sentenced, as the case may be, in respect of the offence to which the undertaking or release order relates.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 765; 2019, c. 25, s. 310.

Render of accused by sureties

766 (1) A surety for a person who is subject to a release order or recognizance may, by an application in writing to a court, provincial court judge or justice, apply to be relieved of their obligation under the release order or recognizance, and the court, provincial court judge or justice shall then make an order in writing for committal of that person to the prison named in that order.

Arrest

(2) An order issued by a court, provincial court judge or justice under subsection (1) must be given to the surety and, on receipt of it, the surety or any peace officer may arrest the person named in the order and deliver that person with the order to the keeper of the prison named in the order, and the keeper shall receive and imprison that person until the person is discharged according to law.

Certificate and entry of render

(3) If a court, provincial court judge or justice issues an order under subsection (1) and receives from the sheriff a certificate that the person named in the order has been committed to prison under subsection (2), the court, provincial court judge or justice shall order an entry of the committal to be endorsed on the release order or recognizance, as the case may be.

Discharge of sureties

(4) An endorsement under subsection (3) cancels the release order or recognizance, as the case may be, and discharges the sureties.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 766; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203; 2019, c. 25, s. 310.

Render of accused in court by sureties

767 A surety for a person who is subject to a release order or recognizance may bring that person before the court where the person is required to appear or where the person entered into the recognizance at any time during the sittings of that court and before the person's trial, and the surety may discharge their obligation under the release order or recognizance by giving that person into the custody of the court. The court shall then commit that person to prison until the person is discharged according to law.

Substitution of surety

767.1 (1) If a surety for a person who is subject to a release order or recognizance has given the person into the custody of a court under section 767, or a surety applies to be relieved of their obligation under the release order or recognizance under subsection 766\(1\), the court, justice or provincial court judge, as the case may be, may, instead of committing or issuing an order for the committal of the person to prison, substitute any other suitable person for the surety under the release order or recognizance.

Signing of release order or recognizance by new sureties

(2) If a person substituted for a surety under a release order or recognizance under subsection (1) signs the release order or recognizance, the original surety is discharged, but the release order or recognizance is not otherwise affected.

R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 167; 2019, c. 25, s. 310.

Rights of surety preserved

768 Nothing in this Part limits any right that a surety has of taking and giving into custody any person for whom they are a surety under a release order or recognizance.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 768; 2019, c. 25, s. 310.

Application of judicial interim release provisions

769 Where a surety for a person has rendered him into custody and that person has been committed to prison, the provisions of Parts XVI, XXI and XXVII relating to judicial interim release apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of him and he shall forthwith be taken before a justice or judge as an accused charged with an offence or as an appellant, as the case may be, for the purposes of those provisions.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 703; R.S., c. 2(2nd Supp.), s. 14.

Default to be endorsed

770 (1) If, in proceedings to which this Act applies, a person who is subject to an undertaking, release order or recognizance does not comply with any of its conditions, a court, provincial court judge or justice having knowledge of the facts shall endorse or cause to be endorsed on the undertaking, release order or recognizance a certificate in Form 33 setting out

- (a) the nature of the default;
- (b) the reason for the default, if it is known;
- (c) whether the ends of justice have been defeated or delayed by reason of the default; and
- (d) the names and addresses of the principal and sureties.

Transmission to clerk of court

(2) Once endorsed, the undertaking, release order or recognizance must be sent to the clerk of the court and shall be kept by them with the records of the court.

Certificate is evidence

(3) A certificate that has been endorsed on the undertaking, release order or recognizance is evidence of the default to which it relates.

Transmission of deposit

(4) If, in proceedings to which this section applies, the principal or surety has deposited money as security for the performance of a condition of an undertaking, release order or recognizance, that money must be sent to the clerk of the court with the defaulted undertaking, release order or recognizance, to be dealt with in accordance with this Part.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 770; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203; 1997, c. 18, s. 108; 2019, c. 25, s. 311.

Proceedings in case of default

771 (1) If an undertaking, release order or recognizance has been endorsed with a certificate and has been received by the clerk of the court,

(a) a judge of the court shall, on the request of the clerk of the court or the Attorney General or counsel acting on the Attorney General's or counsel's behalf, as the case may be, fix a time and place for the hearing of an application for the forfeiture of the amount set out in the undertaking, release order or recognizance; and

(b) the clerk of the court shall, not less than 10 days before the time fixed under paragraph (a) for the hearing, send by registered mail, or have served in the manner directed by the court or prescribed by the rules of court, to each principal and surety, at the address set out in the certificate, a notice requiring the person to appear at the time and place fixed by the judge to show cause why the amount set out in the undertaking, release order or recognizance should not be forfeited.

Order of judge

(2) If subsection (1) has been complied with, the judge may, after giving the parties an opportunity to be heard, in the judge's discretion grant or refuse the application and make any order with respect to the forfeiture of the amount that the judge considers proper.

Judgment debtors of the Crown

(3) If a judge orders forfeiture of the amount set out in the undertaking, release order or recognizance, the principal and their sureties become judgment debtors of the Crown, each in the amount that the judge orders them to pay.

Order may be filed

(3.1) An order made under subsection (2) may be filed with the clerk of the superior court and if one is filed, the clerk shall issue a writ of fiери facias in Form 34 and deliver it to the sheriff of each of the territorial divisions in which the principal or any surety resides, carries on business or has property.

Transfer of deposit

(4) If a deposit has been made by a person against whom an order for forfeiture has been made, no writ of fiери facias may be issued, but the amount of the deposit must be transferred by the person who has custody of it to the person who is entitled by law to receive it.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 771; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 168; 1994, c. 44, s. 78; 1999, c. 5, s. 43; 2019, c. 25, s. 311.

Levy under writ

772 (1) Where a writ of fiери facias is issued pursuant to section 771, the sheriff to whom it is delivered shall execute the writ and deal with the proceeds thereof in the same manner in which he is authorized to execute and deal with the proceeds of writs of fiери facias issued out of superior courts in the province in civil proceedings.

Costs

(2) Where this section applies, the Crown is entitled to the costs of execution and of proceedings incidental thereto that are fixed, in the Province of Quebec, by any tariff applicable in the Superior Court in civil proceedings, and in any other province, by any tariff applicable in the superior court of the province in civil proceedings, as the judge may direct.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 706.

Committal when writ not satisfied

773 (1) Where a writ of fiери facias has been issued under this Part and it appears from a certificate in a return made by the sheriff that sufficient goods and chattels, lands and tenements cannot be found to satisfy the writ, or that the proceeds of the execution of the writ are not sufficient to satisfy it, a judge of the court may, upon the application of the Attorney General or counsel acting on his behalf, fix a time and place for the sureties to show cause why a warrant of committal should not be issued in respect of them.

Notice

(2) Seven clear days notice of the time and place fixed for the hearing pursuant to subsection (1) shall be given to the sureties.

Hearing

(3) The judge shall, at the hearing held pursuant to subsection (1), inquire into the circumstances of the case and may in his discretion

- (a) order the discharge of the amount for which the surety is liable; or
- (b) make any order with respect to the surety and to his imprisonment that he considers proper in the circumstances and issue a warrant of committal in Form 27.

Warrant to committal

(4) A warrant of committal issued pursuant to this section authorizes the sheriff to take into custody the person in respect of whom the warrant was issued and to confine him in a prison in the territorial division in which the writ was issued or in the prison nearest to the court, until satisfaction is made or until the period of imprisonment fixed by the judge has expired.

Definition of Attorney General

(5) In this section and in section 771, Attorney General means, where subsection 734.4\(2\) applies, the Attorney General of Canada.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 773; 1995, c. 22, s. 10.

PART XXVI

Extraordinary Remedies

Application of Part

774 This Part applies to proceedings in criminal matters by way of certiorari, habeas corpus, mandamus, procedendo and prohibition.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 774; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 169.

Appearance in person — habeas corpus

774.1 Despite any other provision of this Act, the person who is the subject of a writ of habeas corpus must appear in court in person.

2002, c. 13, s. 77; 2022, c. 17, s. 50\(E\).

Detention on inquiry to determine legality of imprisonment

775 Where proceedings to which this Part applies have been instituted before a judge or court having jurisdiction, by or in respect of a person who is in custody by reason that he is charged with or has been convicted of an offence, to have the legality of his imprisonment determined, the judge or court may, without determining the question, make an order for the further detention of that person and direct the judge, justice or provincial court judge under whose warrant he is in custody, or any other judge, justice or provincial court judge, to take any proceedings, hear such evidence or do any other thing that, in the opinion of the judge or court, will best further the ends of justice.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 775; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203.

Where conviction or order not reviewable

776 No conviction or order shall be removed by certiorari

- (a) where an appeal was taken, whether or not the appeal has been carried to a conclusion; or
- (b) where the defendant appeared and pleaded and the merits were tried, and an appeal might have been taken, but the defendant did not appeal.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 710.

Conviction or order remediable, when

777 (1) No conviction, order or warrant for enforcing a conviction or order shall, on being removed by certiorari, be held to be invalid by reason of any irregularity, informality or insufficiency therein, where the court before which or the judge before whom the question is raised, on perusal of the evidence, is satisfied

- (a) that an offence of the nature described in the conviction, order or warrant, as the case may be, was committed,
- (b) that there was jurisdiction to make the conviction or order or issue the warrant, as the case may be, and
- (c) that the punishment imposed, if any, was not in excess of the punishment that might lawfully have been imposed, but the court or judge has the same powers to deal with the proceedings in the manner that the court or judge considers proper that are conferred on a court to which an appeal might have been taken.

Correcting punishment

(2) Where, in proceedings to which subsection (1) applies, the court or judge is satisfied that a person was properly convicted of an offence but the punishment that was imposed is greater than the punishment that might lawfully have been imposed, the court or judge

(a) shall correct the sentence,

(i) where the punishment is a fine, by imposing a fine that does not exceed the maximum fine that might lawfully have been imposed,

(ii) where the punishment is imprisonment, and the person has not served a term of imprisonment under the sentence that is equal to or greater than the term of imprisonment that might lawfully have been imposed, by imposing a term of imprisonment that does not exceed the maximum term of imprisonment that might lawfully have been imposed, or

(iii) where the punishment is a fine and imprisonment, by imposing a punishment in accordance with subparagraph (i) or (ii), as the case requires; or

(b) shall remit the matter to the convicting judge, justice or provincial court judge and direct him to impose a punishment that is not greater than the punishment that may be lawfully imposed.

Amendment

(3) Where an adjudication is varied pursuant to subsection (1) or (2), the conviction and warrant of committal, if any, shall be amended to conform to the adjudication as varied.

Sufficiency of statement

(4) Any statement that appears in a conviction and is sufficient for the purpose of the conviction is sufficient for the purposes of an information, summons, order or warrant in which it appears in the proceedings.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 777; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203.

Irregularities within section 777

778 Without restricting the generality of section 777, that section shall be deemed to apply where

(a) the statement of the adjudication or of any other matter or thing is in the past tense instead of in the present tense;

(b) the punishment imposed is less than the punishment that might by law have been imposed for the offence that appears by the evidence to have been committed; or

(c) there has been an omission to negative circumstances, the existence of which would make the act complained of lawful, whether those circumstances are stated by way of exception or otherwise in the provision under which the offence is charged or are stated in another provision.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 712.

General order for security by recognizance

779 (1) A court that has authority to quash a conviction, order or other proceeding on certiorari may prescribe by general order that no motion to quash any such conviction, order or other proceeding removed to the court by certiorari shall be heard unless the defendant has entered into a recognizance with one or more sufficient sureties, before one or more justices of the territorial division in which the conviction or order was made or before a judge or other officer, or has made a deposit to be prescribed with a condition that the defendant will prosecute the writ of certiorari at his own expense, without wilful delay, and, if ordered, will pay to the person in whose favour the conviction, order or other proceeding is affirmed his full costs and charges to be taxed according to the practice of the court where the conviction, order or proceeding is affirmed.

Provisions of Part XXV

(2) The provisions of Part XXV relating to forfeiture of an amount set out in a recognizance apply to a recognizance entered into under this section.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 779; 2019, c. 25, s. 313.

Effect of order dismissing application to quash

780 Where a motion to quash a conviction, order or other proceeding is refused, the order of the court refusing the application is sufficient authority for the clerk of the court forthwith to return the conviction, order or proceeding to the court from which or the person from whom it was removed, and for proceedings to be taken with respect thereto for the enforcement thereof.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 714.

Want of proof of order in council

781 (1) No order, conviction or other proceeding shall be quashed or set aside, and no defendant shall be discharged, by reason only that evidence has not been given

(a) of a proclamation or order of the Governor in Council or the lieutenant governor in council;

(b) of rules, regulations or by-laws made by the Governor in Council under an Act of Parliament or by the lieutenant governor in council under an Act of the legislature of the province; or

(c) of the publication of a proclamation, order, rule, regulation or by-law in the Canada Gazette or in the official gazette for the province.

Judicial notice

(2) Proclamations, orders, rules, regulations and by-laws mentioned in subsection (1) and the publication thereof shall be judicially noticed.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 715.

Defect in form

782 No warrant of committal shall, on certiorari or habeas corpus, be held to be void by reason only of any defect therein, where

(a) it is alleged in the warrant that the defendant was convicted; and

(b) there is a valid conviction to sustain the warrant.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 716.

No action against official when conviction, etc., quashed

783 Where an application is made to quash a conviction, order or other proceeding made or held by a provincial court judge acting under Part XIX or a justice on the ground that he exceeded his jurisdiction, the court to which or the judge to whom the application is made may, in quashing the conviction, order or other proceeding, order that no civil proceedings shall be taken against the justice or provincial court judge or against any officer who acted under the conviction, order or other proceeding or under any warrant issued to enforce it.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 783; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203.

Appeal in mandamus, etc.

784 (1) An appeal lies to the court of appeal from a decision granting or refusing the relief sought in proceedings by way of mandamus, certiorari or prohibition.

Application of Part XXI

(2) Except as provided in this section, Part XXI applies, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to appeals under this section.

Refusal of application, and appeal

(3) Where an application for a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum is refused by a judge of a court having jurisdiction therein, no application may again be made on the same grounds, whether to the same or to another court or judge, unless fresh evidence is adduced, but an appeal from that refusal shall lie to the court of appeal, and where on the appeal the application is refused a further appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court of Canada, with leave of that Court.

Where writ granted

(4) Where a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum is granted by any judge, no appeal therefrom shall lie at the instance of any party including the Attorney General of the province concerned or the Attorney General of Canada.

Appeal from judgment on return of writ

(5) Where a judgment is issued on the return of a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, an appeal therefrom lies to the court of appeal, and from a judgment of the court of appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, with the leave of that Court, at the instance of the applicant or the Attorney General of the province concerned or the Attorney General of Canada, but not at the instance of any other party.

Hearing of appeal

(6) An appeal in habeas corpus matters shall be heard by the court to which the appeal is directed at an early date, whether in or out of the prescribed sessions of the court.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 784; 1997, c. 18, s. 109.

Application of Part

786 (1) Except where otherwise provided by law, this Part applies to proceedings as defined in this Part.

Limitation

(2) No proceedings shall be instituted more than 12 months after the time when the subject matter of the proceedings arose, unless the prosecutor and the defendant so agree.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 786; 1997, c. 18, s. 110; 2019, c. 25, s. 315.

Punishment

General penalty

787 (1) Unless otherwise provided by law, every person who is convicted of an offence punishable on summary conviction is liable to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to a term of imprisonment of not more than two years less a day, or to both.

Imprisonment in default if not otherwise specified

(2) If the imposition of a fine or the making of an order for the payment of money is authorized by law, but the law does not provide that imprisonment may be imposed in default of payment of the fine or compliance with the order, the court may order that in default of payment of the fine or compliance with the order, as the case may be, the defendant shall be imprisoned for a term of not more than two years less a day.

Information

Commencement of proceedings

788 (1) Proceedings under this Part shall be commenced by laying an information in Form 2.

One justice may act before the trial

(2) Notwithstanding any other law that requires an information to be laid before or to be tried by two or more justices, one justice may

- (a) receive the information;
- (b) issue a summons or warrant with respect to the information; and
- (c) do all other things preliminary to the trial.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 723.

Formalities of information

789 (1) In proceedings to which this Part applies, an information

- (a) shall be in writing and under oath; and
- (b) may charge more than one offence or relate to more than one matter of complaint, but where more than one offence is charged or the information relates to more than one matter of complaint, each offence or matter of complaint, as the case may be, shall be set out in a separate count.

No reference to previous convictions

(2) No information in respect of an offence for which, by reason of previous convictions, a greater punishment may be imposed shall contain any reference to previous convictions.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 724.

Any justice may act before and after trial

790 (1) Nothing in this Act or any other law shall be deemed to require a justice before whom proceedings are commenced or who issues process before or after the trial to be the justice or one of the justices before whom the trial is held.

Two or more justices

(2) Where two or more justices have jurisdiction with respect to proceedings, they shall be present and act together at the trial, but one justice may thereafter do anything that is required or is authorized to be done in connection with the proceedings.

Defects and Objections

793 [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 175]

No need to negative exception, etc.

794 (1) No exception, exemption, proviso, excuse or qualification prescribed by law is required to be set out or negated, as the case may be, in an information.

Application

Application of Parts XVI, XVIII, XVIII.1, XX, XX.1 and XXII.01

795 The provisions of Parts XVI and XVIII with respect to compelling the appearance of an accused before a justice, the provisions of Parts XVIII.1, XX and XX.1, insofar as they are not inconsistent with this Part, and the provisions of Part XXII.01, apply, with any necessary modifications, to proceedings under this Part.

796 and 797 [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 176]

Trial

Jurisdiction

798 Every summary conviction court has jurisdiction to try, determine and adjudge proceedings to which this Part applies in the territorial division over which the person who constitutes that court has jurisdiction.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 733.

Non-appearance of prosecutor

799 Where, in proceedings to which this Part applies, the defendant appears for the trial and the prosecutor, having had due notice, does not appear, the summary conviction court may dismiss the information or may adjourn the trial to some other time on such terms as it considers proper.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 734.

When both parties appear

800 (1) Where the prosecutor and defendant appear for the trial, the summary conviction court shall proceed to hold the trial.

Counsel or agent

(2) A defendant may appear personally or by counsel or agent, but the summary conviction court may require the defendant to appear personally and may, if it thinks fit, issue a warrant in Form 7 for the arrest of the defendant and adjourn the trial to await his appearance pursuant thereto.

(2.1) [Repealed, 2022, c. 17, s. 53]

Appearance by organization

(3) Where the defendant is an organization, it shall appear by counsel or agent and, if it does not appear, the summary conviction court may, on proof of service of the summons, proceed ex parte to hold the trial.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 800; 1997, c. 18, s. 111; 2003, c. 21, s. 21; 2019, c. 25, s. 317; 2022, c. 17, s. 53.

Arraignment

801 (1) Where the defendant appears for the trial, the substance of the information laid against him shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked,

(a) whether he pleads guilty or not guilty to the information, where the proceedings are in respect of an offence that is punishable on summary conviction; or

(b) whether he has cause to show why an order should not be made against him, in proceedings where a justice is authorized by law to make an order.

Finding of guilt, conviction or order if charge admitted

(2) Where the defendant pleads guilty or does not show sufficient cause why an order should not be made against him, as the case may be, the summary conviction court shall convict the defendant, discharge the defendant under section 730 or make an order against the defendant accordingly.

Procedure if charge not admitted

(3) Where the defendant pleads not guilty or states that he has cause to show why an order should not be made against him, as the case may be, the summary conviction court shall proceed with the trial, and shall take the evidence of witnesses for the prosecutor and the defendant in accordance with the provisions of Part XVIII relating to preliminary inquiries.

(4) and (5) [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 177]

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 801; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 177, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 18(F); 1995, c. 22, s. 10.

Right to make full answer and defence

802 (1) The prosecutor is entitled personally to conduct his case and the defendant is entitled to make his full answer and defence.

Examination of witnesses

(2) The prosecutor or defendant, as the case may be, may examine and cross-examine witnesses personally or by counsel or agent.

On oath

(3) Every witness at a trial in proceedings to which this Part applies shall be examined under oath.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 737.

Limitation on the use of agents

802.1 Despite subsections 800\(2\) and 802\(2\), a defendant may not appear or examine or cross-examine witnesses by agent if he or she is liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term of more than six months, unless

- (a) the defendant is an organization;
- (b) the defendant is appearing to request an adjournment of the proceedings; or
- (c) the agent is authorized to do so under a program approved — or criteria established — by the lieutenant governor in council of the province.

2002, c. 13, s. 79; 2019, c. 25, s. 317.1.

Adjournment

803 (1) The summary conviction court may, in its discretion, before or during the trial, adjourn the trial to a time and place to be appointed and stated in the presence of the parties or their counsel or agents.

Non-appearance of defendant

(2) If a defendant who is tried alone or together with others does not appear at the time and place appointed for the trial after having been notified of that time and place, or does not appear for the resumption of a trial that has been adjourned in accordance with subsection (1), the summary conviction court

- (a) may proceed ex parte to hear and determine the proceedings in the absence of that defendant as if they had appeared; or
- (b) may, if it thinks fit, issue a warrant in Form 7 for the arrest of that defendant and adjourn the trial to await their appearance under the warrant.

Consent of Attorney General required

(3) If the summary conviction court proceeds in the manner described in paragraph (2) (a), no proceedings under section 145 arising out of the defendant's failure to appear at the time and place appointed for the trial or for the resumption of the trial shall, without the consent of the Attorney General, be instituted or be proceeded with.

Non-appearance of prosecutor

(4) Where the prosecutor does not appear at the time and place appointed for the resumption of an adjourned trial, the summary conviction court may dismiss the information with or without costs.

(5) to (8) [Repealed, 1991, c. 43, s. 9]

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 803; 1991, c. 43, s. 9; 1994, c. 44, s. 79; 1997, c. 18, s. 112; 2008, c. 18, s. 45.

Adjudication

Finding of guilt, conviction, order or dismissal

804 When the summary conviction court has heard the prosecutor, defendant and witnesses, it shall, after considering the matter, convict the defendant, discharge the defendant under section 730, make an order against the defendant or dismiss the information, as the case may be.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 804; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 178, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 18(F); 1995, c. 22, s. 10.

805 [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 179]

Memo of conviction or order

806 (1) If a defendant is convicted or an order is made in relation to the defendant, a minute or memorandum of the conviction or order must be made by the summary conviction court indicating that the matter was dealt with under this Part and, on request by the defendant, the prosecutor or any other person, a conviction or order in Form 35 or 36, as the case may be, and a certified copy of the conviction or order must be drawn up and the certified copy must be delivered to the person making the request.

Warrant of committal

(2) Where a defendant is convicted or an order is made against him, the summary conviction court shall issue a warrant of committal in Form 21 or 22, and section 528 applies in respect of a warrant of committal issued under this subsection.

Admissibility of certified copy

(3) If a warrant of committal in Form 21 is signed by a clerk of a court, a copy of the warrant of committal, certified by the clerk, is admissible in evidence in any proceeding.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 806; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 185(F); 1994, c. 44, s. 80; 2019, c. 25, s. 318.

Disposal of penalties when joint offenders

807 Where several persons join in committing the same offence and on conviction each is adjudged to pay an amount to a person aggrieved, no more shall be paid to that person than an amount equal to the value of the property destroyed or injured or the amount of the injury done, together with costs, if any, and the residue of the amount adjudged to be paid shall be applied in the manner in which other penalties imposed by law are directed to be applied.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 742.

Order of dismissal

808 (1) Where the summary conviction court dismisses an information, it may, if requested by the defendant, draw up an order of dismissal and shall give to the defendant a certified copy of the order of dismissal.

Effect of certificate

(2) A copy of an order of dismissal, certified in accordance with subsection (1) is, without further proof, a bar to any subsequent proceedings against the defendant in respect of the same cause.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 743.

Costs

809 (1) The summary conviction court may in its discretion award and order such costs as it considers reasonable and not inconsistent with such of the fees established by section 840 as may be taken or allowed in proceedings before that summary conviction court, to be paid

(a) to the informant by the defendant, where the summary conviction court convicts or makes an order against the defendant; or

(b) to the defendant by the informant, where the summary conviction court dismisses an information.

Order set out

(2) An order under subsection (1) shall be set out in the conviction, order or order of dismissal, as the case may be.

Costs are part of fine

(3) Where a fine or sum of money or both are adjudged to be paid by a defendant and a term of imprisonment in default of payment is imposed, the defendant is, in default of payment, liable to serve the term of imprisonment imposed, and for the purposes of this subsection, any costs that are awarded against the defendant shall be deemed to be part of the fine or sum of money adjudged to be paid.

Where no fine imposed

(4) Where no fine or sum of money is adjudged to be paid by a defendant, but costs are awarded against the defendant or informant, the person who is liable to pay them is, in default of payment, liable to imprisonment for one month.

Definition of costs

(5) In this section, costs includes the costs and charges, after they have been ascertained, of committing and conveying to prison the person against whom costs have been awarded.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 744.

Sureties to Keep the Peace

If injury or damage feared

810 (1) An information may be laid before a justice by or on behalf of any person who fears on reasonable grounds that another person

(a) will cause personal injury to them or to their intimate partner or child or will damage their property; or

(b) will commit an offence under section 162.1.

Duty of justice

(2) A justice who receives an information under subsection (1) shall cause the parties to appear before him or before a summary conviction court having jurisdiction in the same territorial division.

Adjudication

(3) If the justice or summary conviction court before which the parties appear is satisfied by the evidence adduced that the person on whose behalf the information was laid has reasonable grounds for the fear, the justice or court may order that the defendant enter into a recognizance, with or without sureties, to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for a period of not more than 12 months.

Refusal to enter into recognizance

(3.01) The justice or summary conviction court may commit the defendant to prison for a term of not more than 12 months if the defendant fails or refuses to enter into the recognizance.

Conditions in recognizance

(3.02) The justice or summary conviction court may add any reasonable conditions to the recognizance that the justice or court considers desirable to secure the good conduct of the defendant, including conditions that require the defendant

(a) to abstain from the consumption of drugs except in accordance with a medical prescription, of alcohol or of any other intoxicating substance;

(b) to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation on the demand of a peace officer, a probation officer or someone designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(a\) to make a demand, at the place and time and on the day specified by the person making the demand, if that person has reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant has breached a condition of the recognizance that requires them to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance; or

(c) to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation at regular intervals that are specified, in a notice in Form 51 served on the defendant, by a probation officer or a person designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(b\) to specify them, if a condition of the recognizance requires the defendant to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance.

Conditions

(3.1) Before making an order under subsection (3), the justice or the summary conviction court shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the safety of the defendant or of any other person, to include as a condition of the recognizance that the defendant be prohibited from possessing any firearm, cross-bow, prohibited weapon, restricted weapon, prohibited device, firearm part, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or explosive substance, or all such things, for any period specified in the recognizance and, if the justice or summary conviction court decides that it is so desirable, the justice or summary conviction court shall add such a condition to the recognizance.

Surrender, etc.

(3.11) Where the justice or summary conviction court adds a condition described in subsection (3.1) to a recognizance order, the justice or summary conviction court shall specify in the order the manner and method by which

(a) the things referred to in that subsection that are in the possession of the accused shall be surrendered, disposed of, detained, stored or dealt with; and

(b) the authorizations, licences and registration certificates held by the person shall be surrendered.

Reasons

(3.12) Where the justice or summary conviction court does not add a condition described in subsection (3.1) to a recognizance order, the justice or summary conviction court shall include in the record a statement of the reasons for not adding the condition.

Supplementary conditions

(3.2) Before making an order under subsection (3), the justice or the summary conviction court shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the safety of the informant, of the person on whose behalf the information was laid or of that person's intimate partner or child, as the case may be, to add either or both of the following conditions to the recognizance,

(a) a condition prohibiting the defendant from being at, or within a distance specified in the recognizance from, a place specified in the recognizance where the person on whose behalf the information was laid or that person's intimate partner or child, as the case may be, is regularly found; or

(b) a condition prohibiting the defendant from communicating, in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, with the person on whose behalf the information was laid or that person's intimate partner or child, as the case may be.

Form — warrant of committal

(4) A warrant of committal to prison for failure or refusal to enter into the recognizance under subsection (3) may be in Form 23.

Modification of recognizance

(4.1) The justice or the summary conviction court may, on application of the informant or the defendant, vary the conditions fixed in the recognizance.

Procedure

(5) The provisions of this Part apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to proceedings under this section.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 810; 1991, c. 40, s. 33; 1994, c. 44, s. 81; 1995, c. 22, s. 8, c. 39, s. 157; 2000, c. 12, s. 95; 2011, c. 7, s. 7; 2014, c. 31, s. 25; 2019, c. 25, s. 319; 2023, c. 32, s. 13.4.

Fear of certain offences

810.01 (1) A person who fears on reasonable grounds that another person will commit an offence under section 423.1 or a criminal organization offence may, with the Attorney General's consent, lay an information before a provincial court judge.

Appearances

(2) A provincial court judge who receives an information under subsection (1) may cause the parties to appear before a provincial court judge.

Adjudication

(3) If the provincial court judge before whom the parties appear is satisfied by the evidence adduced that the informant has reasonable grounds for the fear, the judge may order that the defendant enter into a recognizance to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for a period of not more than 12 months.

Duration extended

(3.1) However, if the provincial court judge is also satisfied that the defendant was convicted previously of an offence referred to in subsection (1), the judge may order that the defendant enter into the recognizance for a period of not more than two years.

Refusal to enter into recognizance

(4) The provincial court judge may commit the defendant to prison for a term not exceeding twelve months if the defendant fails or refuses to enter into the recognizance.

Conditions in recognizance

(4.1) The provincial court judge may add any reasonable conditions to the recognizance that the judge considers desirable for preventing the commission of an offence referred to in subsection (1), including conditions that require the defendant

(a) to participate in a treatment program;

(b) to wear an electronic monitoring device, if the Attorney General makes the request;

(c) to remain within a specified geographic area unless written permission to leave that area is obtained from the judge;

(d) to return to and remain at their place of residence at specified times;

(e) to abstain from the consumption of drugs, except in accordance with a medical prescription, of alcohol or of any other intoxicating substance;

(f) to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation on the demand of a peace officer, a probation officer or someone designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(a\) to make a demand, at the place and time and on the day specified by the person making the demand, if that person has reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant has breached a condition of the recognizance that requires them to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance; or

(g) to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation at regular intervals that are specified, in a notice in Form 51 served on the defendant, by a probation officer or a person designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(b\) to specify them, if a condition of the recognizance requires the defendant to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance.

Conditions — firearms

(5) The provincial court judge shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the defendant's safety or that of any other person, to prohibit the defendant from possessing any firearm, cross-bow, prohibited weapon, restricted weapon, prohibited device, firearm part, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or explosive substance, or all of those things. If the judge decides that it is desirable to do so, the judge shall add that condition to the recognizance and specify the period during which the condition applies.

Surrender, etc.

(5.1) If the provincial court judge adds a condition described in subsection (5) to a recognizance, the judge shall specify in the recognizance how the things referred to in that subsection that are in the defendant's possession shall be surrendered, disposed of, detained, stored or dealt with and how the authorizations, licences and registration certificates that are held by the defendant shall be surrendered.

Reasons

(5.2) If the provincial court judge does not add a condition described in subsection (5) to a recognizance, the judge shall include in the record a statement of the reasons for not adding the condition.

Variance of conditions

(6) A provincial court judge may, on application of the informant, the Attorney General or the defendant, vary the conditions fixed in the recognizance.

Other provisions to apply

(7) Subsections 810\(4\) and \(5\) apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, to recognizances made under this section.

Definition of Attorney General

(8) With respect to proceedings under this section, Attorney General means either the Attorney General of Canada or the Attorney General of the province in which those proceedings are taken and includes the lawful deputy of any of them.

1997, c. 23, ss. 19, 26; 2001, c. 32, s. 46, c. 41, ss. 22, 133; 2002, c. 13, s. 80; 2009, c. 22, s. 19; 2011, c. 7, s. 8; 2015, c. 20, s. 24; 2023, c. 32, s. 13.5.

Fear of terrorism offence

810.011 (1) A person who fears on reasonable grounds that another person may commit a terrorism offence may, with the Attorney General's consent, lay an information before a provincial court judge.

Appearances

(2) The provincial court judge who receives an information under subsection (1) may cause the parties to appear before a provincial court judge.

Adjudication

(3) If the provincial court judge before whom the parties appear is satisfied by the evidence adduced that the informant has reasonable grounds for the fear, the judge may order that the defendant enter into a recognizance, with or without sureties, to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for a period of not more than 12 months.

Duration extended

(4) However, if the provincial court judge is also satisfied that the defendant was convicted previously of a terrorism offence, the judge may order that the defendant enter into the recognizance for a period of not more than five years.

Refusal to enter into recognizance

(5) The provincial court judge may commit the defendant to prison for a term of not more than 12 months if the defendant fails or refuses to enter into the recognizance.

Conditions in recognizance

(6) The provincial court judge may add any reasonable conditions to the recognizance that the judge considers desirable to secure the good conduct of the defendant, including conditions that require the defendant

- (a) to participate in a treatment program;
- (b) to wear an electronic monitoring device, if the Attorney General makes that request;
- (c) to return to and remain at their place of residence at specified times;
- (d) to abstain from the consumption of drugs, except in accordance with a medical prescription, of alcohol or of any other intoxicating substance;
- (e) to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation on the demand of a peace officer, a probation officer or someone designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(a\) to make a demand, at the place and time and on the day specified by the person making the demand, if that person has reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant has breached a condition of the recognizance that requires them to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance; or
- (f) to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation at regular intervals that are specified, in a notice in Form 51 served on the defendant, by a probation officer or a person designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(b\) to specify them, if a condition of the recognizance requires the defendant to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance.

Conditions — firearms

(7) The provincial court judge shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the defendant's safety or that of any other person, to prohibit the defendant from possessing any firearm, cross-bow, prohibited weapon, restricted weapon, prohibited device, firearm part, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or explosive substance, or all of those things. If the judge decides that it is desirable to do so, the judge shall add that condition to the recognizance and specify the period during which it applies.

Surrender, etc.

(8) If the provincial court judge adds a condition described in subsection (7) to a recognizance, the judge shall specify in the recognizance how the things referred to in that subsection that are in the defendant's possession shall be surrendered, disposed of, detained, stored or dealt with and how the authorizations, licences and registration certificates that are held by the defendant shall be surrendered.

Condition — passport

(9) The provincial court judge shall consider whether it is desirable, to secure the good conduct of the defendant, to include in the recognizance a condition that the defendant deposit, in the specified manner, any passport or other travel document issued in their name that is in their possession or control. If the judge decides that it is desirable, the judge shall add the condition to the recognizance and specify the period during which it applies.

Condition — specified geographic area

(10) The provincial court judge shall consider whether it is desirable, to secure the good conduct of the defendant, to include in the recognizance a condition that the defendant remain within a specified geographic area unless written permission to leave that area is obtained from the judge or any individual designated by the judge. If the judge decides that it is desirable, the judge shall add the condition to the recognizance and specify the period during which it applies.

Reasons

(11) If the provincial court judge does not add a condition described in subsection (7), (9) or (10) to a recognizance, the judge shall include in the record a statement of the reasons for not adding it.

Variance of conditions

(12) A provincial court judge may, on application of the informant, the Attorney General or the defendant, vary the conditions fixed in the recognizance.

Other provisions to apply

(13) Subsections 810\(4\) and \(5\) apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, to recognizances made under this section.

Definition of Attorney General

(14) With respect to proceedings under this section, Attorney General means either the Attorney General of Canada or the Attorney General of the province in which those proceedings are taken and includes the lawful deputy of any of them.

Annual report

(15) Each year, the Attorney General of Canada shall prepare and cause to be laid before each House of Parliament a report setting out the number of recognizances entered into under this section in the previous year.

2015, c. 20, s. 25; 2019, c. 13, s. 153; 2023, c. 32, s. 13.6.

Fear of forced marriage or marriage under age of 16 years

810.02 (1) A person who fears on reasonable grounds that another person will commit an offence under paragraph 273.3\(1\)\(d\) or section 293.1 or 293.2 may lay an information before a provincial court judge.

Appearances

(2) The judge who receives the information may cause the parties to appear before a provincial court judge.

Adjudication

(3) If the provincial court judge before whom the parties appear is satisfied by the evidence adduced that the informant has reasonable grounds for the fear, the judge may order that the defendant enter into a recognizance to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for a period of not more than 12 months.

Duration extended

(4) However, if the provincial court judge is also satisfied that the defendant was convicted previously of an offence referred to in subsection (1), the judge may order that the defendant enter into the recognizance for a period of not more than two years.

Refusal to enter into recognizance

(5) The provincial court judge may commit the defendant to prison for a term not exceeding 12 months if the defendant fails or refuses to enter into the recognizance.

Conditions in recognizance

(6) The provincial court judge may add any reasonable conditions to the recognizance that the judge considers desirable to secure the good conduct of the defendant, including conditions that

- (a) prohibit the defendant from making agreements or arrangements for the marriage, whether in or outside Canada, of the person in respect of whom it is feared that the offence will be committed;
- (b) prohibit the defendant from taking steps to cause the person in respect of whom it is feared that the offence will be committed to leave the jurisdiction of the court;
- (c) require the defendant to deposit, in the specified manner, any passport or any other travel document that is in their possession or control, whether or not such passport or document is in their name or in the name of any other specified person;
- (d) prohibit the defendant from communicating, directly or indirectly, with any specified person, or refrain from going to any specified place, except in accordance with any specified conditions that the judge considers necessary;
- (e) require the defendant to participate in a treatment program, including a family violence counselling program;
- (f) require the defendant to remain within a specified geographic area unless written permission to leave that area is obtained from the provincial court judge; and
- (g) require the defendant to return to and remain at their place of residence at specified times.

Conditions — firearms

(7) The provincial court judge shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the defendant's safety or that of any other person, to prohibit the defendant from possessing any firearm, cross-bow, prohibited weapon, restricted weapon, prohibited device, firearm part, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or explosive substance, or all of those things. If the judge decides that it is desirable to do so, the judge shall add that condition to the recognizance and specify the period during which the condition applies.

Surrender, etc.

(8) If the provincial court judge adds a condition described in subsection (7) to a recognizance, the judge shall specify in the recognizance how the things referred to in that subsection that are in the defendant's possession are to be surrendered, disposed of, detained, stored or dealt with and how the authorizations, licences and registration certificates that are held by the defendant are to be surrendered.

Variance of conditions

(9) A provincial court judge may, on application of the informant or the defendant, vary the conditions fixed in the recognizance.

2015, c. 29, s. 11; 2023, c. 32, s. 13.7.

Fear of domestic violence

810.03 (1) Any person who fears on reasonable grounds that another person will commit an offence that will cause personal injury to the intimate partner or a child of the other person, or to a child of the other person's intimate partner, may lay an information before a provincial court judge.

Appearances

(2) The provincial judge who receives an information under subsection (1) may cause the parties to appear before a provincial court judge.

Recognizance order

(3) If the provincial court judge before whom the parties appear is satisfied by the evidence adduced that the informant has reasonable grounds for the fear, the judge may order the defendant to enter into a recognizance to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for a period of not more than 12 months.

Duration extended

(4) If the provincial court judge is satisfied that the defendant was previously convicted of an offence in the commission of which violence was used against any former or current intimate partner of the defendant or any child of any former or current intimate partner or of the defendant, the judge may order the defendant to enter into the recognizance for a period of not more than two years.

Indigenous informant or defendant

(4.1) If the informant or the defendant is Indigenous, the provincial court judge shall consider whether, instead of making an order under subsection (3) or (4), it would be more appropriate to recommend that Indigenous support services, if any are available, be provided.

Refusal to enter into recognizance

(5) The provincial court judge may commit the defendant to prison for a term not exceeding 12 months if the defendant fails or refuses to enter into the recognizance.

Conditions in recognizance

(6) The provincial court judge may add any reasonable conditions to the recognizance that the judge considers desirable to ensure the good conduct of the defendant or to secure the safety and security of the intimate partner or a child of the defendant, or a child of the defendant's intimate partner, including conditions requiring the defendant

(a) to attend, under the supervision of the court, a treatment program approved by the province where the accused resides, such as an addiction treatment program or a domestic violence counselling program;

(b) to remain within a specified geographic area unless written permission to leave that area is obtained from the judge;

(c) to refrain from going to any specified place or being within a specified distance of any specified place, except in accordance with any specified conditions that the judge considers necessary;

(d) to wear an electronic monitoring device, with the consent of the Attorney General;

(e) to abstain from communicating, directly or indirectly, with the intimate partner, a child of the intimate partner or of the defendant or any relative or close friend of the intimate partner, except in accordance with any specified conditions that the judge considers necessary;

(f) to abstain from the consumption of drugs — except in accordance with a medical prescription — of alcohol or of any other intoxicating substance;

(g) to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation on the demand of a peace officer, a probation officer or someone designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(a\) to make a demand, at the place and time and on the day specified by the person making the demand, if that person has reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant has breached a condition of the recognizance requiring them to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance; or

(h) to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation at regular intervals that are specified, in a notice in Form 51 served on the defendant, by a probation officer or a person designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(b\) to specify them, if a condition of the recognizance requires the defendant to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance.

Conditions — firearms

(7) The provincial court judge shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the intimate partner's safety or that of any other person, to prohibit the defendant from possessing any firearm, crossbow, prohibited weapon, restricted weapon, prohibited device, firearm part, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or explosive substance, or all of those things. If the judge decides that it is desirable to do so, the judge shall add that condition to the recognizance and specify the period during which the condition applies.

Surrender, etc.

(8) If the provincial court judge adds a condition described in subsection (7) to a recognizance, the judge shall specify in the recognizance how the things referred to in that subsection that are in the defendant's possession shall be surrendered, disposed of, detained, stored or dealt with and how the authorizations, licences and registration certificates held by the defendant shall be surrendered.

Reasons

(9) If the provincial court judge does not add a condition described in subsection (7) to a recognizance, the judge shall include in the record a statement of the reasons for not adding the condition.

Variance of conditions

(10) A provincial court judge may, on application of the Attorney General, the informant, the person on whose behalf the information is laid or the defendant, vary the conditions fixed in the recognizance.

Safety and security of informant

(11) When the defendant makes an application under subsection (10), the provincial court judge must, before varying any conditions, consult the informant and the person on whose behalf the information is laid about their safety and security needs.

Form — warrant of committal

(12) A warrant of committal to prison for failure or refusal to enter into the recognizance under subsection (3) may be in Form 23.

2024, c. 22, s. 2; 2024, c. 22, s. 11.

Where fear of sexual offence

810.1 (1) Any person who fears on reasonable grounds that another person will commit an offence under section 151 or 152, subsection 153\(1\), section 155, subsection 160\(2\) or \(3\), section 163.1, 170, 171, 171.1, 172.1 or 172.2, subsection 173\(2\), section 271, 272, 273 or 279.011, subsection 279.02\(2\) or 279.03\(2\), section 280 or 281 or subsection 286.1\(2\), 286.2\(2\) or 286.3\(2\), in respect of one or more persons who are under the age of 16 years, may lay an information before a provincial court judge, whether or not the person or persons in respect of whom it is feared that the offence will be committed are named.

Appearances

(2) A provincial court judge who receives an information under subsection (1) may cause the parties to appear before a provincial court judge.

Adjudication

(3) If the provincial court judge before whom the parties appear is satisfied by the evidence adduced that the informant has reasonable grounds for the fear, the judge may order that the defendant enter into a recognizance to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for a period that does not exceed 12 months.

Duration extended

(3.01) However, if the provincial court judge is also satisfied that the defendant was convicted previously of a sexual offence in respect of a person who is under the age of 16 years, the judge may order that the defendant enter into the recognizance for a period that does not exceed two years.

Conditions in recognizance

(3.02) The provincial court judge may add any reasonable conditions to the recognizance that the judge considers desirable to secure the good conduct of the defendant, including conditions that

(a) prohibit the defendant from having any contact — including communicating by any means — with a person under the age of 16 years, unless the defendant does so under the supervision of a person whom the judge considers appropriate;

(a.1) prohibit the defendant from using the Internet or other digital network, unless the defendant does so in accordance with conditions set by the judge;

(b) prohibit the defendant from attending a public park or public swimming area where persons under the age of 16 years are present or can reasonably be expected to be present, or a daycare centre, schoolground or playground;

(b.1) prohibit the defendant from communicating, directly or indirectly, with any person identified in the recognizance, or refrain from going to any place specified in the recognizance, except in accordance with the conditions specified in the recognizance that the judge considers necessary;

(c) require the defendant to participate in a treatment program;

(d) require the defendant to wear an electronic monitoring device, if the Attorney General makes the request;

(e) require the defendant to remain within a specified geographic area unless written permission to leave that area is obtained from the provincial court judge;

(f) require the defendant to return to and remain at his or her place of residence at specified times;

(g) require the defendant to abstain from the consumption of drugs except in accordance with a medical prescription, of alcohol or of any other intoxicating substance;

(h) require the defendant to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation on the demand of a peace officer, a probation officer or someone designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(a\) to make a demand, at the place and time and on the day specified by the person making the demand, if that person has reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant has breached a condition of the recognizance that requires them to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance; or

(i) require the defendant to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation at regular intervals that are specified, in a notice in Form 51 served on the defendant, by a probation officer or a person designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(b\) to specify them, if a condition of the recognizance requires the defendant to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance.

Conditions — firearms

(3.03) The provincial court judge shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the defendant's safety or that of any other person, to prohibit the defendant from possessing any firearm, cross-bow, prohibited weapon, restricted weapon, prohibited device, firearm part, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or explosive substance, or all of those things. If the judge decides that it is desirable to do so, the judge shall add that condition to the recognizance and specify the period during which the condition applies.

Surrender, etc.

(3.04) If the provincial court judge adds a condition described in subsection (3.03) to a recognizance, the judge shall specify in the recognizance how the things referred to in that subsection that are in the defendant's possession should be surrendered, disposed of, detained, stored or dealt with and how the authorizations, licences and registration certificates that are held by the defendant should be surrendered.

Condition — reporting

(3.05) The provincial court judge shall consider whether it is desirable to require the defendant to report to the correctional authority of a province or to an appropriate police authority. If the judge decides that it is desirable to do so, the judge shall add that condition to the recognizance.

Refusal to enter into recognizance

(3.1) The provincial court judge may commit the defendant to prison for a term not exceeding twelve months if the defendant fails or refuses to enter into the recognizance.

Judge may vary recognizance

(4) A provincial court judge may, on application of the informant or the defendant, vary the conditions fixed in the recognizance.

Other provisions to apply

(5) Subsections 810\(4\) and \(5\) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to recognizances made under this section.

1993, c. 45, s. 11; 1997, c. 18, s. 113; 2002, c. 13, s. 81; 2008, c. 6, ss. 52, 54, 62; 2011, c. 7, s. 9; 2012, c. 1, s. 37; 2014, c. 21, s. 4, c. 25, s. 31; 2019, c. 25, s. 320; 2023, c. 32, s. 13.8.

Where fear of serious personal injury offence

810.2 (1) Any person who fears on reasonable grounds that another person will commit a serious personal injury offence, as that expression is defined in section 752, may, with the consent of the Attorney General, lay an information before a provincial court judge, whether or not the person or persons in respect of whom it is feared that the offence will be committed are named.

Appearances

(2) A provincial court judge who receives an information under subsection (1) may cause the parties to appear before a provincial court judge.

Adjudication

(3) If the provincial court judge before whom the parties appear is satisfied by the evidence adduced that the informant has reasonable grounds for the fear, the judge may order that the defendant enter into a recognizance to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for a period that does not exceed 12 months.

Duration extended

(3.1) However, if the provincial court judge is also satisfied that the defendant was convicted previously of an offence referred to in subsection (1), the judge may order that the defendant enter into the recognizance for a period that does not exceed two years.

Refusal to enter into recognizance

(4) The provincial court judge may commit the defendant to prison for a term not exceeding twelve months if the defendant fails or refuses to enter into the recognizance.

Conditions in recognizance

(4.1) The provincial court judge may add any reasonable conditions to the recognizance that the judge considers desirable to secure the good conduct of the defendant, including conditions that require the defendant

(a) to participate in a treatment program;

- (b) to wear an electronic monitoring device, if the Attorney General makes the request;
- (c) to remain within a specified geographic area unless written permission to leave that area is obtained from the provincial court judge;
- (d) to return to and remain at his or her place of residence at specified times;
- (e) to abstain from the consumption of drugs except in accordance with a medical prescription, of alcohol or of any other intoxicating substance;
- (f) to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation on the demand of a peace officer, a probation officer or someone designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(a\) to make a demand, at the place and time and on the day specified by the person making the demand, if that person has reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant has breached a condition of the recognizance that requires them to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance; or
- (g) to provide, for the purpose of analysis, a sample of a bodily substance prescribed by regulation at regular intervals that are specified, in a notice in Form 51 served on the defendant, by a probation officer or a person designated under paragraph 810.3\(2\)\(b\) to specify them, if a condition of the recognizance requires the defendant to abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance.

Conditions — firearms

(5) The provincial court judge shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the defendant's safety or that of any other person, to prohibit the defendant from possessing any firearm, cross-bow, prohibited weapon, restricted weapon, prohibited device, firearm part, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or explosive substance, or all of those things. If the judge decides that it is desirable to do so, the judge shall add that condition to the recognizance and specify the period during which the condition applies.

Surrender, etc.

(5.1) If the provincial court judge adds a condition described in subsection (5) to a recognizance, the judge shall specify in the recognizance how the things referred to in that subsection that are in the defendant's possession should be surrendered, disposed of, detained, stored or dealt with and how the authorizations, licences and registration certificates that are held by the defendant should be surrendered.

Reasons

(5.2) If the provincial court judge does not add a condition described in subsection (5) to a recognizance, the judge shall include in the record a statement of the reasons for not adding the condition.

Condition — reporting

(6) The provincial court judge shall consider whether it is desirable to require the defendant to report to the correctional authority of a province or to an appropriate police authority. If the judge decides that it is desirable to do so, the judge shall add that condition to the recognizance.

Variance of conditions

(7) A provincial court judge may, on application of the informant, of the Attorney General or of the defendant, vary the conditions fixed in the recognizance.

Other provisions to apply

(8) Subsections 810\(4\) and \(5\) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to recognizances made under this section.

1997, c. 17, s. 9; 2002, c. 13, s. 82; 2008, c. 6, s. 53; 2011, c. 7, s. 10; 2023, c. 32, s. 13.9.

Audioconference or videoconference

810.21 (1) If a defendant is required to appear under any of sections 83.3 and 810 to 810.2, a provincial court judge may, on application of the prosecutor, order that the defendant appear by audioconference or videoconference.

Application

(2) Despite section 769, sections 714.1 to 714.8 and Part XXII.01 apply, with any necessary modifications, to proceedings under this section.

2015, c. 20, s. 26; 2019, c. 25, s. 321.

Transfer of order

810.22 (1) If a person who is bound by an order under any of sections 83.3 and 810 to 810.2 becomes a resident of — or is charged with, convicted of or discharged under section 730 of an offence, including an offence under section 811, in — a territorial division other than the territorial division in which the order was made, on application of a peace officer or the Attorney General, a provincial court judge may, subject to subsection (2), transfer the order to a provincial court judge in that other territorial division and the order may then be dealt with and enforced by the provincial court judge to whom it is transferred in all respects as if that provincial court judge had made the order.

Attorney General's consent

(2) The transfer may be granted only with

(a) the consent of the Attorney General of the province in which the order was made, if the two territorial divisions are not in the same province; or

(b) the consent of the Attorney General of Canada, if the information that led to the issuance of the order was laid with the consent of the Attorney General of Canada.

If judge unable to act

(3) If the judge who made the order or a judge to whom an order has been transferred is for any reason unable to act, the powers of that judge in relation to the order may be exercised by any other judge of the same court.

2015, c. 20, s. 26.

Samples — designations and specifications

810.3 (1) For the purposes of sections 810, 810.01, 810.03, 810.011, 810.1 and 810.2 and subject to the regulations, the Attorney General of a province or the minister of justice of a territory shall, with respect to the province or territory,

- (a) designate the persons or classes of persons that may take samples of bodily substances;
- (b) designate the places or classes of places at which the samples are to be taken;
- (c) specify the manner in which the samples are to be taken;
- (d) specify the manner in which the samples are to be analyzed;
- (e) specify the manner in which the samples are to be stored, handled and destroyed;
- (f) specify the manner in which the records of the results of the analysis of the samples are to be protected and destroyed;
- (g) designate the persons or classes of persons that may destroy the samples; and
- (h) designate the persons or classes of persons that may destroy the records of the results of the analysis of the samples.

Further designations

(2) Subject to the regulations, the Attorney General of a province or the minister of justice of a territory may, with respect to the province or territory, designate the persons or classes of persons

- (a) to make a demand for a sample of a bodily substance for the purposes of paragraphs 810\(3.02\)\(b\), 810.01\(4.1\)\(f\), 810.011\(6\)\(e\), 810.03\(7\)\(g\), 810.1\(3.02\)\(h\) and 810.2\(4.1\)\(f\); and
- (b) to specify the regular intervals at which a defendant must provide a sample of a bodily substance for the purposes of paragraphs 810\(3.02\)\(c\), 810.01\(4.1\)\(g\), 810.011\(6\)\(f\), 810.03\(7\)\(h\), 810.1\(3.02\)\(i\) and 810.2\(4.1\)\(g\).

Restriction

(3) Samples of bodily substances referred to in sections 810, 810.01, 810.011, 810.03, 810.1 and 810.2 may not be taken, analyzed, stored, handled or destroyed, and the records of the results of the analysis of the samples may not be protected or destroyed, except in accordance with the designations and specifications made under subsection (1).

Destruction of samples

(4) The Attorney General of a province or the minister of justice of a territory, or a person authorized by the Attorney General or minister, shall cause all samples of bodily substances provided under a recognizance under section 810, 810.01, 810.011, 810.03, 810.1 or 810.2 to be destroyed within the period prescribed by regulation unless the samples are reasonably expected to be used as evidence in a proceeding for an offence under section 811.

Regulations

(5) The Governor in Council may make regulations

(a) prescribing bodily substances for the purposes of sections 810, 810.01, 810.011, 810.03, 810.1 and 810.2;

(b) respecting the designations and specifications referred to in subsections (1) and (2);

(c) prescribing the periods within which samples of bodily substances are to be destroyed under subsection (4); and

(d) respecting any other matters relating to the samples of bodily substances.

Notice — samples at regular intervals

(6) The notice referred to in paragraph 810\(3.02\)\(c\), 810.01\(4.1\)\(g\), 810.011\(6\)\(f\), 810.03\(7\)\(h\), 810.1\(3.02\)\(i\) or 810.2\(4.1\)\(g\) must specify the places and times at which and the days on which the defendant must provide samples of a bodily substance under a condition described in that paragraph. The first sample may not be taken earlier than 24 hours after the defendant is served with the notice, and subsequent samples must be taken at regular intervals of at least seven days.

Prohibition on use of bodily substance

810.4 (1) No person shall use a bodily substance provided under a recognizance under section 810, 810.01, 810.011, 810.03, 810.1 or 810.2 except for the purpose of determining whether a defendant is complying with a condition in the recognizance that they abstain from the consumption of drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance.

Prohibition on use or disclosure of result

(2) Subject to subsection (3), no person shall use, disclose or allow the disclosure of the results of the analysis of a bodily substance provided under a recognizance under section 810, 810.01, 810.011, 810.03, 810.1 or 810.2.

Exception

(3) The results of the analysis of a bodily substance provided under a recognizance under section 810, 810.01, 810.011, 810.03, 810.1 or 810.2 may be disclosed to the defendant to whom they relate, and may also be used or disclosed in the course of an investigation of, or in a proceeding for, an offence under section 811 or, if the results are made anonymous, for statistical or other research purposes.

Offence

(4) Every person who contravenes subsection (1) or (2) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

2011, c. 7, s. 11; 2015, c. 20, s. 34; 2024, c. 22, s. 4.

Orders under sections 486 to 486.5 and 486.7

810.5 (1) Sections 486 to 486.5 and 486.7 apply, with any necessary modifications, to proceedings under any of sections 83.3 and 810 to 810.2.

Offence — order restricting publication

(2) Every person who fails to comply with an order made under any of subsections 486.4\(1\) to \(3\) or subsection 486.5\(1\) or \(2\) in proceedings referred to in subsection (1) is guilty of an offence under section 486.6.

2019, c. 13, s. 154.

Breach of recognizance

811 A person bound by a recognizance under any of sections 83.3 and 810 to 810.2 who commits a breach of the recognizance is guilty of

(a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term of not more than four years; or

(b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 811; 1993, c. 45, s. 11; 1994, c. 44, s. 82; 1997, c. 17, s. 10, c. 23, ss. 20, 27; 2001, c. 41, s. 23; 2015, c. 20, s. 27, c. 23, s. 19, c. 29, s. 12; 2019, c. 25, s. 322.

Proof of certificate of analyst — bodily substance

811.1 (1) In a prosecution for breach of a condition in a recognizance under section 810, 810.01, 810.011, 810.03, 810.1 or 810.2 that a defendant not consume drugs, alcohol or any other intoxicating substance, a certificate purporting to be signed by an analyst that states that the analyst has analyzed a sample of a bodily substance and that states the result of the analysis is admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is proof of the statements contained in the certificate without proof of the signature or official character of the person who appears to have signed the certificate.

Definition of analyst

(2) In this section, analyst has the same meaning as in section 320.11.

Notice of intention to produce certificate

(3) No certificate shall be admitted in evidence unless the party intending to produce it has, before the trial, given reasonable notice and a copy of the certificate to the party against whom it is to be produced.

Requiring attendance of analyst

(4) The party against whom a certificate of an analyst is produced may, with leave of the court, require the attendance of the analyst for cross-examination.

Appeal by defendant, informant or Attorney General

813 Except where otherwise provided by law,

- (a) the defendant in proceedings under this Part may appeal to the appeal court
 - (i) from a conviction or order made against him,
 - (ii) against a sentence passed on him, or
 - (iii) against a verdict of unfit to stand trial or not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder; and

(b) the informant, the Attorney General or his agent in proceedings under this Part may appeal to the appeal court

(i) from an order that stays proceedings on an information or dismisses an information,

(ii) against a sentence passed on a defendant, or

(iii) against a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial, and the Attorney General of Canada or his agent has the same rights of appeal in proceedings instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of that Government as the Attorney General of a province or his agent has under this paragraph.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 813; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 180; 1991, c. 43, s. 9.

Manitoba and Alberta

814 (1) In the Provinces of Manitoba and Alberta, an appeal under section 813 shall be heard at the sittings of the appeal court that is held nearest to the place where the cause of the proceedings arose, but the judge of the appeal court may, on the application of one of the parties, appoint another place for the hearing of the appeal.

Saskatchewan

(2) In the Province of Saskatchewan, an appeal under section 813 shall be heard at the sittings of the appeal court at the judicial centre nearest to the place where the adjudication was made, but the judge of the appeal court may, on the application of one of the parties, appoint another place for the hearing of the appeal.

British Columbia

(3) In the Province of British Columbia, an appeal under section 813 shall be heard at the sittings of the appeal court that is held nearest to the place where the adjudication was made, but the judge of the appeal court may, on the application of one of the parties, appoint another place for the hearing of the appeal.

Territories

(4) In Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, an appeal under section 813 shall be heard at the place where the cause of the proceedings arose or at the place nearest to it where a court is appointed to be held.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 814; 1993, c. 28, s. 78; 2002, c. 7, s. 150.

Notice of appeal

815 (1) An appellant who proposes to appeal to the appeal court shall give notice of appeal in such manner and within such period as may be directed by rules of court.

Extension of time

(2) The appeal court or a judge thereof may extend the time within which notice of appeal may be given.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 750; 1972, c. 13, s. 66; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 89.

Interim Release of Appellant

Release order — appellant

816 (1) A person who was the defendant in proceedings before a summary conviction court and who is an appellant under section 813 shall, if they are in custody, remain in custody unless the appeal court at which the appeal is to be heard makes a release order referred to in section 515, the form of which may be adapted to suit the circumstances, which must include the condition that the person surrender themselves into custody in accordance with the order.

Release of appellant

(1.1) The person having the custody of the appellant shall, if the appellant complies with the order, immediately release the appellant.

Applicable provisions

(2) Sections 495.1, 512.3 and 524 apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require, in respect of any proceedings under this section.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 816; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 181(E); 2019, c. 25, s. 323.

Recognizance of prosecutor

817 (1) The prosecutor in proceedings before a summary conviction court by whom an appeal is taken under section 813 shall, immediately after filing the notice of appeal and proof of service of the notice in accordance with section 815, appear before a justice, and the justice shall, after giving the prosecutor and the respondent a reasonable opportunity to be heard, order that the prosecutor enter into a recognizance, with or without sureties, in the amount that the justice directs and with or without the deposit of money or other valuable security that the justice directs.

Condition

(2) The condition of a recognizance entered into under this section is that the prosecutor will appear personally or by counsel at the sittings of the appeal court at which the appeal is to be heard.

Appeals by Attorney General

(3) This section does not apply in respect of an appeal taken by the Attorney General or by counsel acting on behalf of the Attorney General.

(4) [\[Repealed, 2019, c. 25, s. 324\]](#)

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 817; 2019, c. 25, s. 324; 2022, c. 17, s. 54\(F\).

Application to appeal court for review

818 (1) Where a justice makes an order under section 817, either the appellant or the respondent may, before or at any time during the hearing of the appeal, apply to the appeal court for a review of the order made by the justice.

Disposition of application by appeal court

(2) On the hearing of an application under this section, the appeal court, after giving the appellant and the respondent a reasonable opportunity to be heard, shall

(a) dismiss the application; or

(b) if the person applying for the review shows cause, allow the application, vacate the order made by the justice and make the order that in the opinion of the appeal court should have been made.

Effect of order

(3) An order made under this section shall have the same force and effect as if it had been made by the justice.

R.S., c. 2(2nd Supp.), s. 16; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 91.1.

Application to fix date for hearing of appeal

819 (1) Where, in the case of an appellant who has been convicted by a summary conviction court and who is in custody pending the hearing of his appeal, the hearing of his appeal has not commenced within thirty days from the day on which notice of his appeal was given in accordance with the rules referred to in section 815, the person having the custody of the appellant shall, forthwith on the expiration of those thirty days, apply to the appeal court to fix a date for the hearing of the appeal.

Order fixing date

(2) On receiving an application under subsection (1), the appeal court shall, after giving the prosecutor a reasonable opportunity to be heard, fix a date for the hearing of the appeal and give such directions as it thinks necessary for expediting the hearing of the appeal.

R.S., c. 2(2nd Supp.), s. 16; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 92.

Payment of fine not a waiver of appeal

820 (1) A person does not waive his right of appeal under section 813 by reason only that he pays the fine imposed on conviction, without in any way indicating an intention to appeal or reserving the right to appeal.

Presumption

(2) A conviction, order or sentence shall be deemed not to have been appealed against until the contrary is shown.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 753.

Procedure on Appeal

Notification and transmission of conviction, etc.

821 (1) Where a notice of appeal has been given in accordance with the rules referred to in section 815, the clerk of the appeal court shall notify the summary conviction court that made the conviction or order appealed from or imposed the sentence appealed against of the appeal and on receipt of the notification that summary conviction court shall transmit the conviction, order or order of dismissal and all other material in its possession in connection with the proceedings to the appeal court before the time when the appeal is to be heard, or within such further time as the appeal court may direct, and the material shall be kept by the clerk of the appeal court with the records of the appeal court.

Saving

(2) An appeal shall not be dismissed by the appeal court by reason only that a person other than the appellant failed to comply with the provisions of this Part relating to appeals.

Appellant to furnish transcript of evidence

(3) Where the evidence on a trial before a summary conviction court has been taken by a stenographer duly sworn or by a sound recording apparatus, the appellant shall, unless the appeal court otherwise orders or the rules referred to in section 815 otherwise provide, cause a transcript thereof, certified by the stenographer or in accordance with subsection 540\(6\), as the case may be, to be furnished to the appeal court and the respondent for use on the appeal.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 754; 1972, c. 13, s. 67; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 93.

Certain sections applicable to appeals

822 (1) Where an appeal is taken under section 813 in respect of any conviction, acquittal, sentence, verdict or order, sections 683 to 689, with the exception of subsections 683\(3\) and 686\(5\), apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require.

New trial

(2) Where an appeal court orders a new trial, it shall be held before a summary conviction court other than the court that tried the defendant in the first instance, unless the appeal court directs that the new trial be held before the summary conviction court that tried the accused in the first instance.

Order of detention or release

(3) Where an appeal court orders a new trial, it may make such order for the release or detention of the appellant pending the trial as may be made by a justice pursuant to section 515 and the order may be enforced in the same manner as if it had been made by a justice under that section, and the provisions of Part XVI apply with such modifications as the circumstances require to the order.

Trial de novo

(4) Despite subsections (1) to (3), if an appeal is taken under section 813 and because of the condition of the record of the trial in the summary conviction court or for any other reason, the appeal court, on application of the defendant, the informant, the Attorney General or the Attorney General's agent, is of the opinion that the interests of justice would be better served by hearing and determining the appeal by holding a trial de novo, the appeal court may order that the appeal shall be heard by way of trial de novo in accordance with any rules that may be made under section 482 or 482.1, and for that purpose the provisions of sections 793 to 809 apply, with any modifications that the circumstances require.

Former evidence

(5) The appeal court may, for the purpose of hearing and determining an appeal under subsection (4), permit the evidence of any witness taken before the summary conviction court to be read if that evidence has been authenticated in accordance with section 540 and if

- (a) the appellant and respondent consent,
- (b) the appeal court is satisfied that the attendance of the witness cannot reasonably be obtained, or
- (c) by reason of the formal nature of the evidence or otherwise the court is satisfied that the opposite party will not be prejudiced, and any evidence that is read under the authority of this subsection has the same force and effect as if the witness had given the evidence before the appeal court.

Appeal against sentence

(6) Where an appeal is taken under subsection (4) against sentence, the appeal court shall, unless the sentence is one fixed by law, consider the fitness of the sentence appealed against and may, on such evidence, if any, as it thinks fit to require or receive, by order,

- (a) dismiss the appeal, or
- (b) vary the sentence within the limits prescribed by law for the offence of which the defendant was convicted, and in making any order under paragraph (b), the appeal court may take into account any time spent in custody by the defendant as a result of the offence.

General provisions re appeals

(7) The following provisions apply in respect of appeals under subsection (4):

(a) where an appeal is based on an objection to an information or any process, judgment shall not be given in favour of the appellant

(i) for any alleged defect therein in substance or in form, or

(ii) for any variance between the information or process and the evidence adduced at the trial, unless it is shown

(iii) that the objection was taken at the trial, and

(iv) that an adjournment of the trial was refused notwithstanding that the variance referred to in subparagraph (ii) had deceived or misled the appellant; and

(b) where an appeal is based on a defect in a conviction or an order, judgment shall not be given in favour of the appellant, but the court shall make an order curing the defect.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 822; 1991, c. 43, s. 9; 2002, c. 13, s. 83.

823 [Repealed, 1991, c. 43, s. 9]

Adjournment

824 The appeal court may adjourn the hearing of an appeal from time to time as may be necessary.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 756.

Dismissal for failure to appear or want of prosecution

825 The appeal court may, on proof that notice of an appeal has been given and that

(a) the appellant has failed to comply with the conditions of a release order made under section 816 or of a recognizance entered into under section 817; or

(b) the appeal has not been proceeded with or has been abandoned, order that the appeal be dismissed.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 825; 2019, c. 25, s. 325.

Costs

826 Where an appeal is heard and determined or is abandoned or is dismissed for want of prosecution, the appeal court may make any order with respect to costs that it considers just and reasonable.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 758.

To whom costs payable, and when 827 (1) Where the appeal court orders the appellant or respondent to pay costs, the order shall direct that the costs be paid to the clerk of the court, to be paid by him to the person entitled to them, and shall fix the period within which the costs shall be paid.

Certificate of non-payment of costs

(2) Where costs are not paid in full within the period fixed for payment and the person who has been ordered to pay them has not been bound by a recognizance to pay them, the clerk of the court shall, on application by the person entitled to the costs, or by any person on his behalf, and on payment of any fee to which the clerk of the court is entitled, issue a certificate in Form 42 certifying that the costs or a part thereof, as the case may be, have not been paid.

Committal

(3) A justice having jurisdiction in the territorial division in which a certificate has been issued under subsection (2) may, on production of the certificate, by warrant in Form 26, commit the defaulter to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month, unless the amount of the costs and, where the justice thinks fit so to order, the costs of the committal and of conveying the defaulter to prison are sooner paid.

R.S., c. C-34, s. 759.

Enforcement of conviction or order by court of appeal

828 (1) A conviction or order made by the appeal court may be enforced

- (a) in the same manner as if it had been made by the summary conviction court; or
- (b) by process of the appeal court.

Enforcement by justice

(2) Where an appeal taken against a conviction or order adjudging payment of a sum of money is dismissed, the summary conviction court that made the conviction or order or a justice for the same territorial division may issue a warrant of committal as if no appeal had been taken.

Duty of clerk of court

(3) When a conviction or order that has been made by an appeal court is to be enforced by a justice, the clerk of the appeal court shall send to the justice the conviction or order and all writings relating to that conviction or order, except the notice of intention to appeal and any undertaking, release order or recognizance.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 828; 2019, c. 25, s. 326.

Summary Appeal on Transcript or Agreed Statement of Facts

Definition of appeal court

829 (1) Subject to subsection (2), for the purposes of sections 830 to 838, appeal court means, in any province, the superior court of criminal jurisdiction for the province.

Nunavut

(2) If the appeal is from a conviction, judgment, verdict or other final order or determination of a summary conviction court consisting of a judge of the Nunavut Court of Justice, appeal court means a judge of the Court of Appeal of Nunavut.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 829; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 182; 1999, c. 3, s. 56.

Appeals

830 (1) A party to proceedings to which this Part applies or the Attorney General may appeal against a conviction, judgment, verdict of acquittal or verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or of unfit to stand trial or other final order or determination of a summary conviction court on the ground that

- (a) it is erroneous in point of law;
- (b) it is in excess of jurisdiction; or
- (c) it constitutes a refusal or failure to exercise jurisdiction.

Form of appeal

(2) An appeal under this section shall be based on a transcript of the proceedings appealed from unless the appellant files with the appeal court, within fifteen days of the filing of the notice of appeal, a statement of facts agreed to in writing by the respondent.

Rules for appeals

(3) An appeal under this section shall be made within the period and in the manner directed by any applicable rules of court and where there are no such rules otherwise providing, a notice of appeal in writing shall be served on the respondent and a copy thereof, together with proof of service, shall be filed with the appeal court within thirty days after the date of the conviction, judgment or verdict of acquittal or other final order or determination that is the subject of the appeal.

Rights of Attorney General of Canada

(4) The Attorney General of Canada has the same rights of appeal in proceedings instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of that Government as the Attorney General of a province has under this section.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 830; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 182; 1991, c. 43, s. 9.

Application

831 The provisions of sections 816, 817, 819 and 825 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of an appeal under section 830, except that on receiving an application by the person having the custody of an appellant described in section 819 to appoint a date for the hearing of the appeal, the appeal court shall, after giving the prosecutor a reasonable opportunity to be heard, give such directions as it thinks necessary for expediting the hearing of the appeal.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 831; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 182.

Release order or recognizance

832 (1) If a notice of appeal is filed under section 830, the appeal court may, if the defendant is the appellant, make a release order as provided in section 816 or, in any other case, order that the appellant appear before a justice and enter into a recognizance as provided in section 817.

Attorney General

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply where the appellant is the Attorney General or counsel acting on behalf of the Attorney General.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 832; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 182; 2019, c. 25, s. 327.

No writ required

833 No writ of certiorari or other writ is required to remove any conviction, judgment, verdict or other final order or determination of a summary conviction court for the purpose of obtaining the judgment, determination or opinion of the appeal court.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 833; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 182; 1991, c. 43, s. 9.

Powers of appeal court

834 (1) When a notice of appeal is filed pursuant to section 830, the appeal court shall hear and determine the grounds of appeal and may

(a) affirm, reverse or modify the conviction, judgment, verdict or other final order or determination, or

(b) remit the matter to the summary conviction court with the opinion of the appeal court, and may make any other order in relation to the matter or with respect to costs that it considers proper.

Authority of judge

(2) Where the authority and jurisdiction of the appeal court may be exercised by a judge of that court, the authority and jurisdiction may, subject to any applicable rules of court, be exercised by a judge of the court sitting in chambers as well in vacation as in term time.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 834; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 182; 1991, c. 43, s. 9.

Enforcement

835 (1) Where the appeal court renders its decision on an appeal, the summary conviction court from which the appeal was taken or a justice exercising the same jurisdiction has the same authority to enforce a conviction, order or determination that has been affirmed, modified or made by the appeal court as the summary conviction court would have had if no appeal had been taken.

Idem

(2) An order of the appeal court may be enforced by its own process.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 835; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 182.

Appeal under section 830

836 Every person who appeals under section 830 from any conviction, judgment, verdict or other final order or determination in respect of which that person is entitled to an appeal under section 813 shall be taken to have abandoned all the person's rights of appeal under section 813.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 836; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 182; 1991, c. 43, s. 9.

Appeal barred

837 Where it is provided by law that no appeal lies from a conviction or order, no appeal under section 830 lies from such a conviction or order.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 837; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 182.

Extension of time

838 The appeal court or a judge thereof may at any time extend any time period referred to in section 830, 831 or 832.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 838; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 182.

Appeals to Court of Appeal

Appeal on question of law

839 (1) Subject to subsection (1.1), an appeal to the court of appeal as defined in section 673 may, with leave of that court or a judge thereof, be taken on any ground that involves a question of law alone, against

(a) a decision of a court in respect of an appeal under section 822; or

(b) a decision of an appeal court under section 834, except where that court is the court of appeal.

Nunavut

(1.1) An appeal to the Court of Appeal of Nunavut may, with leave of that court or a judge of that court, be taken on any ground that involves a question of law alone, against a decision of a judge of the Court of Appeal of Nunavut acting as an appeal court under subsection 812\(2\) or 829\(2\).

Sections applicable

(2) Sections 673 to 689 apply with such modifications as the circumstances require to an appeal under this section.

Costs

(3) Notwithstanding subsection (2), the court of appeal may make any order with respect to costs that it considers proper in relation to an appeal under this section.

Enforcement of decision

(4) The decision of the court of appeal may be enforced in the same manner as if it had been made by the summary conviction court before which the proceedings were originally heard and determined.

Right of Attorney General of Canada to appeal

(5) The Attorney General of Canada has the same rights of appeal in proceedings instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of that Government as the Attorney General of a province has under this Part.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 839; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 183; 1999, c. 3, s. 57.

Fees and Allowances

Fees and allowances

840 (1) Subject to subsection (2), the fees and allowances mentioned in the schedule to this Part are the fees and allowances that may be taken or allowed in proceedings before summary conviction courts and justices under this Part.

Order of lieutenant governor in council

(2) The lieutenant governor in council of a province may order that all or any of the fees and allowances mentioned in the schedule to this Part shall not be taken or allowed in proceedings before summary conviction courts and justices under this Part in that province and, when the lieutenant governor in council so orders, he or she may fix any other fees and allowances for any items similar to those mentioned in the schedule, or any other items, to be taken or allowed instead.

R.S., 1985, c. C-46, s. 840; 1994, c. 44, s. 83; 1997, c. 18, s. 114.

Dealing with data in court

842 Despite anything in this Act, a court may create, collect, receive, store, transfer, distribute, publish or otherwise deal with electronic documents if it does so in accordance with an Act or with the rules of court.

2002, c. 13, s. 84.

Transfer of data

843 (1) Despite anything in this Act, a court may accept the transfer of data by electronic means if the transfer is made in accordance with the laws of the place where the transfer originates or the laws of the place where the data is received.

Time of filing

(2) If a document is required to be filed in a court and the filing is done by transfer of data by electronic means, the filing is complete when the transfer is accepted by the court.

2002, c. 13, s. 84.

Documents in writing

844 A requirement under this Act that a document be made in writing is satisfied by the making of the document in electronic form in accordance with an Act or the rules of court.

2002, c. 13, s. 84.

Signatures

845 If this Act requires a document to be signed, the court may accept a signature in an electronic document if the signature is made in accordance with an Act or the rules of court.

2002, c. 13, s. 84.

Oaths

846 If under this Act an information, an affidavit or a solemn declaration or a statement under oath or solemn affirmation is to be made by a person, the court may accept it in the form of an electronic document if

- (a) the person states in the electronic document that all matters contained in the information, affidavit, solemn declaration or statement are true to his or her knowledge and belief;

(b) the person before whom it is made or sworn is authorized to take or receive informations, affidavits, solemn declarations or statements and he or she states in the electronic document that the information, affidavit, solemn declaration or statement was made under oath, solemn declaration or solemn affirmation, as the case may be; and

(c) the electronic document was made in accordance with the laws of the place where it was made.

Because I have reasonable grounds to suspect that the computer data specified below is in your possession or control and that that computer data will assist in the investigation of an offence that has been or will be committed under (specify the provision of the Criminal Code or other Act of Parliament), will assist in the investigation of an offence that has been committed under (specify the provision of the law of the foreign state) that is being conducted by a person or authority, (name of person or authority), with responsibility in (specify the name of the foreign state) for the investigation of such offences, you are required to preserve (specify the computer data) that is in your possession or control when you receive this demand until (insert date) unless, before that date, this demand is revoked or a document that contains that data is obtained under a warrant or an order.

(or)

This demand is subject to the following conditions:

If you contravene this demand without lawful excuse, you may be subject to a fine.

You are required to destroy the computer data that would not be retained in the ordinary course of business, and any document that is prepared for the purpose of preserving the computer data, in accordance with section 487.0194 of the Criminal Code. If you contravene that provision without lawful excuse, you may be subject to a fine, to imprisonment or to both.

Information To Obtain a Warrant To Take Bodily Substances for Forensic DNA Analysis

Canada,

Province of

(territorial division)

This is the information of (name of peace officer), (occupation), of in the said (territorial division), hereinafter called the informant, taken before me.

The informant says that he or she has reasonable grounds to believe

(a) that (offence), a designated offence within the meaning of section 487.04 of the Criminal Code, has been committed;

(b) that a bodily substance has been found

(i) at the place where the offence was committed,

(ii) on or within the body of the victim of the offence,

(iii) on anything worn or carried by the victim at the time when the offence was committed, or

(iv) on or within the body of any person or thing or at any place associated with the commission of the offence;

(c) that (name of person) was a party to the offence; and

(d) that forensic DNA analysis of a bodily substance from (name of person) will provide evidence about whether the bodily substance referred to in paragraph (b) was from that person.

The reasonable grounds are:

The informant therefore requests that a warrant be issued authorizing the taking from (name of person) of the number of samples of bodily substances that are reasonably required for forensic DNA analysis, provided that the person taking the samples is able by virtue of training or experience to take them by means of the investigative procedures described in subsection 487.06\(1\) of the Criminal Code and provided that, if the person taking the samples is not a peace officer, he or she take the samples under the direction of a peace officer.

Warrant Authorizing the Taking of Bodily Substances for Forensic DNA Analysis

Canada,

Province of

(territorial division)

To the peace officers in (territorial division):

Whereas it appears on the oath of (name of peace officer) of in the said (territorial division), that there are reasonable grounds to believe

(a) that (offence), a designated offence within the meaning of section 487.04 of the Criminal Code, has been committed,

(b) that a bodily substance has been found

(i) at the place where the offence was committed,

(ii) on or within the body of the victim of the offence,

(iii) on anything worn or carried by the victim at the time when the offence was committed, or

(iv) on or within the body of any person or thing or at any place associated with the commission of the offence,

(c) that (name of person) was a party to the offence, and

(d) that forensic DNA analysis of a bodily substance from (name of person) will provide evidence about whether the bodily substance referred to in paragraph (b) was from that person;

And whereas I am satisfied that it is in the best interests of the administration of justice to issue this warrant;

This is therefore to authorize and require you to take from (name of person) or cause to be taken by a person acting under your direction, the number of samples of bodily substances that are reasonably required for forensic DNA analysis, provided that the person taking the samples is able by virtue of training or experience to take them by means of the investigative procedures described in subsection 487.06\(1\) of the Criminal Code and provided that, if the person taking the samples is not a peace officer, he or she take the samples under the direction of a peace officer. (b) the information or bodily substances required by regulations made under the DNA Identification Act were not transmitted in accordance with the requirements of the regulations or were lost for the following reasons:

And whereas (name of peace officer), a peace officer in (territorial division), has applied for an authorization to take the number of additional samples of bodily substances from (name of offender) that is reasonably required for forensic DNA analysis by means of the investigative procedures described in subsection 487.06\(1\) of the Criminal Code;

Therefore, you are authorized to take those additional samples, or cause them to be taken, from (name of offender), provided that the person taking the samples is able, by virtue of training or experience, to take them by means of the investigative procedures described in subsection 487.06\(1\) of the Criminal Code and that, if the person taking the samples is not a peace officer, they take them under the direction of a peace officer.

This authorization is subject to the following terms and conditions that I consider advisable to ensure that the taking of the samples is reasonable in the circumstances:

(Sections 475, 493, 597, 800 and 803)

Warrant for Arrest

Canada,

Province of,

(territorial division).

To the peace officers in the (territorial division):

This warrant is issued for the arrest of (name of person), of, born on (date of birth), referred to in this warrant as the accused.

Because the accused has been charged with (set out briefly the offence in respect of which the accused is charged);

And because (check those that are applicable):

- ☐ (a) there are reasonable grounds to believe that it is necessary in the public interest to issue this warrant for the arrest of the accused [507(4), 512(1)];
- ☐ (b) the accused failed to attend court in accordance with the summons served on the accused [512(2)];
- ☐ (c) (an appearance notice or undertaking) was confirmed and the accused failed to attend court in accordance with it [512(2)];
- ☐ (d) it appears that a summons cannot be served because the accused is evading service [512(2)];
- ☐ (e) the accused was ordered to be present at the hearing of an application for a review of an order made by a justice and did not attend the hearing [520(5), 521(5)];

- (f) there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has contravened or is about to contravene the (summons or appearance notice or undertaking or release order) on which the accused was released [512.3];
- (g) there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has committed an indictable offence since their release from custody on (summons or appearance notice or undertaking or release order) [512.3];
- (h) the accused was required by (appearance notice or undertaking or summons) to attend at a time and place stated in it for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act and did not appear at that time and place [512.1, 512.2];
- (i) an indictment has been found against the accused and the accused has not appeared or remained in attendance before the court for their trial [597];
- (j) (if none of the above applies, reproduce the provisions of the statute that authorize this warrant).

Therefore, you are ordered, in Her Majesty's name, to immediately arrest the accused and to bring them before (state court, judge or justice), to be dealt with according to law.

□ (Check if applicable) Because there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused is or will be present in (specify dwelling-house), this warrant is also issued to authorize you to enter the dwelling-house for the purpose of arresting the accused, subject to the condition that you may not enter the dwelling-house unless you have, immediately before entering the dwelling-house, reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested is present in the dwelling-house.

To the peace officers in the (territorial division) and to the keeper of the (prison) at _____:

This warrant is issued for the committal of (name of person), of _____, born on (date of birth), referred to in this warrant as the accused.

Because the accused has been charged with (set out briefly the offence in respect of which the accused is charged);

And because (check those that are applicable):

- ☐ (a) the prosecutor has shown cause why the detention of the accused in custody is justified [515(5)];
- ☐ (b) a release order has been issued but the accused has not yet complied with the conditions of the order [519(1), 520(9), 521(10), 524(8), 525(6)];^{*}
- ☐ (c) the application by the prosecutor for a review of the release order has been allowed and that release order has been vacated, and the prosecutor has shown cause why the detention of the accused in custody is justified [521];
- ☐ (d) the accused has contravened or was about to contravene a (summons or appearance notice or undertaking or release order) and it was cancelled, and the detention of the accused in custody is justified [515(10), 523.1(3), 524(3) and (4)];
- ☐ (e) there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has committed an indictable offence after having become subject to the (summons or appearance notice or undertaking or release order) and the detention of the accused in custody is justified [515(10), 524(3) and (4)];
- ☐ (f) (if none of the above applies, reproduce the provisions of the statute that authorize this warrant).

Therefore, you are ordered, in Her Majesty's name, to arrest the accused and convey them safely to the (prison) at, and there deliver them to its keeper, with the following order:

The conditions of this release order may be varied with the written consent of the prosecutor, yourself and your sureties, if any. In addition, you or the prosecutor may apply to a judge to have any condition in this release order cancelled or changed.

7 Conditions in effect

The conditions indicated by a check mark on this release order (including any obligations imposed on your sureties) remain in effect until they are cancelled or changed or until you have been discharged, sentenced or otherwise detained by the court (sections 763 and 764 of the Criminal Code).

8 Consequence for non-compliance

You are warned that, unless you have a lawful excuse, you commit an offence under section 145 of the Criminal Code if you fail to follow any of the conditions set out in this release order, including if you fail to attend court as required.

If you commit an offence under section 145 of the Criminal Code, a warrant for your arrest may be issued (sections 512 and 512.3 of the Criminal Code) and you may be liable to a fine or to imprisonment, or to both.

If you do not comply with this release order or are charged with committing an indictable offence after you have been released, this release order may be cancelled and, as a result, you may be detained in custody (subsection 524\(4\) of the Criminal Code).

If you do not comply with this release order, the money or other valuable security promised or deposited by you or your surety could be forfeited (subsection 771\(2\) of the Criminal Code).

FORM 48.2

Victim Impact Statement — Not Criminally Responsible

This form may be used to provide a description of the physical or emotional harm, property damage or economic loss suffered by you arising from the conduct for which the accused person was found not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder, as well as a description of the impact that the conduct has had on you. You may attach additional pages if you need more space.

Your statement must not include

- any statement about the conduct of the accused that is not relevant to the harm or loss suffered by you;
- any unproven allegations;
- any comments about any conduct for which the accused was not found not criminally responsible;
- any complaint about any individual, other than the accused, who was involved in the investigation or prosecution of the offence; or
- except with the court's or Review Board's approval, an opinion or recommendation about the disposition.

The following sections are examples of information you may wish to include in your statement. You are not required to include all of this information.

Emotional impact

Describe how the accused's conduct has affected you emotionally. For example, think of

- your lifestyle and activities;
- your relationships with others such as your spouse, family and friends;
- your ability to work, attend school or study; and
- your feelings, emotions and reactions as these relate to the conduct.

Physical impact

Describe how the accused's conduct has affected you physically. For example, think of

- ongoing physical pain, discomfort, illness, scarring, disfigurement or physical limitation;
- hospitalization or surgery you have had because of the conduct of the accused;
- treatment, physiotherapy or medication you have been prescribed;
- the need for any further treatment or the expectation that you will receive further treatment; and
- any permanent or long-term disability.

Economic impact

Describe how the accused's conduct has affected you financially. For example, think of

- the value of any property that was lost or damaged and the cost of repairs or replacement;
- any financial loss due to missed time from work;
- the cost of any medical expenses, therapy or counselling; and
- any costs or losses that are not covered by insurance.

Please note that this is not an application for compensation or restitution.

Fears for security

Describe any fears you have for your security or that of your family and friends. For example, think of

- concerns with respect to contact with the accused; and
- concerns with respect to contact between the accused and members of your family or close friends.

Drawing, poem or letter

You may use this space to draw a picture or write a poem or letter if it will help you express the impact that the accused's conduct has had on you.

- ☐ I would like to read or present my statement (in court or before the Review Board).
- ☐ I would like to receive information respecting any hearings held to make or review a disposition in respect of the accused.
- ☐ I would like to receive information respecting any disposition made in respect of the accused.
- ☐ If the accused is discharged absolutely or conditionally, I would like to receive notice of that discharge and of the accused's intended place of residence.

To the best of my knowledge, the information contained in this statement is true.

Canada Evidence Act

R.S.C., 1985, c. C-5

An Act respecting witnesses and evidence

Short Title

Short title

1 This Act may be cited as the Canada Evidence Act.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 1.

Part I

Application

Application

2 This Part applies to all criminal proceedings and to all civil proceedings and other matters whatever respecting which Parliament has jurisdiction.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 2.

Witnesses

Interest or crime

3 A person is not incompetent to give evidence by reason of interest or crime.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 3.

Accused and spouse

4 (1) Every person charged with an offence, and, except as otherwise provided in this section, the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, is a competent witness for the defence, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person.

Spouse of accused

(2) No person is incompetent, or uncompellable, to testify for the prosecution by reason only that they are married to the accused.

Communications during marriage

(3) No husband is compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during their marriage, and no wife is compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during their marriage.

(4) and (5) [Repealed, 2015, c. 13, s. 52]

Failure to testify

(6) The failure of the person charged, or of the wife or husband of that person, to testify shall not be made the subject of comment by the judge or by counsel for the prosecution.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 4; R.S., 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 17; 2002, c. 1, s. 166; 2014, c. 25, s. 34, c. 31, s. 27; 2015, c. 13, s. 52.

Incriminating questions

5 (1) No witness shall be excused from answering any question on the ground that the answer to the question may tend to criminate him, or may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any person.

Answer not admissible against witness

(2) Where with respect to any question a witness objects to answer on the ground that his answer may tend to criminate him, or may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any person, and if but for this Act, or the Act of any provincial legislature, the witness would therefore have been excused from answering the question, then although the witness is by reason of this Act or the provincial Act compelled to answer, the answer so given shall not be used or admissible in evidence against him in any criminal trial or other criminal proceeding against him thereafter taking place, other than a prosecution for perjury in the giving of that evidence or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 5; 1997, c. 18, s. 116.

Evidence of person with physical disability

6 (1) If a witness has difficulty communicating by reason of a physical disability, the court may order that the witness be permitted to give evidence by any means that enables the evidence to be intelligible.

Evidence of person with mental disability

(2) If a witness with a mental disability is determined under section 16 to have the capacity to give evidence and has difficulty communicating by reason of a disability, the court may order that the witness be permitted to give evidence by any means that enables the evidence to be intelligible.

Inquiry

(3) The court may conduct an inquiry to determine if the means by which a witness may be permitted to give evidence under subsection (1) or (2) is necessary and reliable.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 6; 1998, c. 9, s. 1.

Identification of accused

6.1 For greater certainty, a witness may give evidence as to the identity of an accused whom the witness is able to identify visually or in any other sensory manner.

1998, c. 9, s. 1.

Expert witnesses

7 Where, in any trial or other proceeding, criminal or civil, it is intended by the prosecution or the defence, or by any party, to examine as witnesses professional or other experts entitled according to the law or practice to give opinion evidence, not more than five of such witnesses may be called on either side without the leave of the court or judge or person presiding.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 7.

Handwriting comparison

8 Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the court to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by witnesses, and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting those writings, may be submitted to the court and jury as proof of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 8.

Adverse witnesses

9 (1) A party producing a witness shall not be allowed to impeach his credit by general evidence of bad character, but if the witness, in the opinion of the court, proves adverse, the party may contradict him by other evidence, or, by leave of the court, may prove that the witness made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony, but before the last mentioned proof can be given the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, shall be mentioned to the witness, and he shall be asked whether or not he did make the statement.

Previous statements by witness not proved adverse

(2) Where the party producing a witness alleges that the witness made at other times a statement in writing, reduced to writing, or recorded on audio tape or video tape or otherwise, inconsistent with the witness' present testimony, the court may, without proof that the witness is adverse, grant leave to that party to cross-examine the witness as to the statement and the court may consider the cross-examination in determining whether in the opinion of the court the witness is adverse.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 9; 1994, c. 44, s. 85.

Cross-examination as to previous statements

10 (1) On any trial a witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements that the witness made in writing, or that have been reduced to writing, or recorded on audio tape or video tape or otherwise, relative to the subject-matter of the case, without the writing being shown to the witness or the witness being given the opportunity to listen to the audio tape or view the video tape or otherwise take cognizance of the statements, but, if it is intended to contradict the witness, the witness' attention must, before the contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the statement that are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting the witness, and the judge, at any time during the trial, may require the production of the writing or tape or other medium for inspection, and thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as the judge thinks fit.

Deposition of witness in criminal investigation

(2) A deposition of a witness, purporting to have been taken before a justice on the investigation of a criminal charge and to be signed by the witness and the justice, returned to and produced from the custody of the proper officer shall be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have been signed by the witness.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 10; 1994, c. 44, s. 86.

Cross-examination as to previous oral statements

11 Where a witness, on cross-examination as to a former statement made by him relative to the subject-matter of the case and inconsistent with his present testimony, does not distinctly admit that he did make the statement, proof may be given that he did in fact make it, but before that proof can be given the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, shall be mentioned to the witness, and he shall be asked whether or not he did make the statement.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 11.

Examination as to previous convictions

12 (1) A witness may be questioned as to whether the witness has been convicted of any offence, excluding any offence designated as a contravention under the Contraventions Act, but including such an offence where the conviction was entered after a trial on an indictment.

Proof of previous convictions

(1.1) If the witness either denies the fact or refuses to answer, the opposite party may prove the conviction.

How conviction proved

(2) A conviction may be proved by producing

(a) a certificate containing the substance and effect only, omitting the formal part, of the indictment and conviction, if it is for an indictable offence, or a copy of the summary conviction, if it is for an offence punishable on summary conviction, purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court or other officer having the custody of the records of the court in which the conviction, if on indictment, was had, or to which the conviction, if summary, was returned; and

(b) proof of identity.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 12; 1992, c. 47, s. 66.

Oaths and Solemn Affirmations

Who may administer oaths

13 Every court and judge, and every person having, by law or consent of parties, authority to hear and receive evidence, has power to administer an oath to every witness who is legally called to give evidence before that court, judge or person.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 13.

Solemn affirmation by witness instead of oath

14 (1) A person may, instead of taking an oath, make the following solemn affirmation:

I solemnly affirm that the evidence to be given by me shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Effect

(2) Where a person makes a solemn affirmation in accordance with subsection (1), his evidence shall be taken and have the same effect as if taken under oath.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 14; 1994, c. 44, s. 87.

Solemn affirmation by deponent

15 (1) Where a person who is required or who desires to make an affidavit or deposition in a proceeding or on an occasion on which or concerning a matter respecting which an oath is required or is lawful, whether on the taking of office or otherwise, does not wish to take an oath, the court or judge, or other officer or person qualified to take affidavits or depositions, shall permit the person to make a solemn affirmation in the words following, namely, "I, ..., do solemnly affirm, etc.", and that solemn affirmation has the same force and effect as if that person had taken an oath.

Effect

(2) Any witness whose evidence is admitted or who makes a solemn affirmation under this section or section 14 is liable to indictment and punishment for perjury in all respects as if he had been sworn.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 15; 1994, c. 44, s. 88.

Witness whose capacity is in question

16 (1) If a proposed witness is a person of fourteen years of age or older whose mental capacity is challenged, the court shall, before permitting the person to give evidence, conduct an inquiry to determine

(a) whether the person understands the nature of an oath or a solemn affirmation;
and

(b) whether the person is able to communicate the evidence.

Testimony under oath or solemn affirmation

(2) A person referred to in subsection (1) who understands the nature of an oath or a solemn affirmation and is able to communicate the evidence shall testify under oath or solemn affirmation.

Testimony on promise to tell truth

(3) A person referred to in subsection (1) who does not understand the nature of an oath or a solemn affirmation but is able to communicate the evidence may, notwithstanding any provision of any Act requiring an oath or a solemn affirmation, testify on promising to tell the truth.

No questions regarding understanding of promise

(3.1) A person referred to in subsection (3) shall not be asked any questions regarding their understanding of the nature of the promise to tell the truth for the purpose of determining whether their evidence shall be received by the court.

Inability to testify

(4) A person referred to in subsection (1) who neither understands the nature of an oath or a solemn affirmation nor is able to communicate the evidence shall not testify.

Burden as to capacity of witness

(5) A party who challenges the mental capacity of a proposed witness of fourteen years of age or more has the burden of satisfying the court that there is an issue as to the capacity of the proposed witness to testify under an oath or a solemn affirmation.

Person under fourteen years of age

16.1 (1) A person under fourteen years of age is presumed to have the capacity to testify.

No oath or solemn affirmation

(2) A proposed witness under fourteen years of age shall not take an oath or make a solemn affirmation despite a provision of any Act that requires an oath or a solemn affirmation.

Evidence shall be received

(3) The evidence of a proposed witness under fourteen years of age shall be received if they are able to understand and respond to questions.

Burden as to capacity of witness

(4) A party who challenges the capacity of a proposed witness under fourteen years of age has the burden of satisfying the court that there is an issue as to the capacity of the proposed witness to understand and respond to questions.

Court inquiry

(5) If the court is satisfied that there is an issue as to the capacity of a proposed witness under fourteen years of age to understand and respond to questions, it shall, before permitting them to give evidence, conduct an inquiry to determine whether they are able to understand and respond to questions.

Promise to tell truth

(6) The court shall, before permitting a proposed witness under fourteen years of age to give evidence, require them to promise to tell the truth.

Understanding of promise

(7) No proposed witness under fourteen years of age shall be asked any questions regarding their understanding of the nature of the promise to tell the truth for the purpose of determining whether their evidence shall be received by the court.

Effect

(8) For greater certainty, if the evidence of a witness under fourteen years of age is received by the court, it shall have the same effect as if it were taken under oath.

2005, c. 32, s. 27.

Judicial Notice

Imperial Acts, etc.

17 Judicial notice shall be taken of all Acts of the Imperial Parliament, of all ordinances made by the Governor in Council, or the lieutenant governor in council of any province or colony that, or some portion of which, now forms or hereafter may form part of Canada, and of all the Acts of the legislature of any such province or colony, whether enacted before or after the passing of the Constitution Act, 1867.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 17.

Acts of Canada

18 Judicial notice shall be taken of all Acts of Parliament, public or private, without being specially pleaded.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 18.

Documentary Evidence

Copies by Queen's Printer

19 Every copy of any Act of Parliament, public or private, published by the Queen's Printer, is evidence of that Act and of its contents, and every copy purporting to be published by the Queen's Printer shall be deemed to be so published, unless the contrary is shown.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 19; 2000, c. 5, s. 52.

Imperial proclamations, etc.

20 Imperial proclamations, orders in council, treaties, orders, warrants, licences, certificates, rules, regulations or other Imperial official records, Acts or documents may be proved

(a) in the same manner as they may from time to time be provable in any court in England;

(b) by the production of a copy of the Canada Gazette, or a volume of the Acts of Parliament purporting to contain a copy of the same or a notice thereof; or

(c) by the production of a copy of them purporting to be published by the Queen's Printer.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 20; 2000, c. 5, s. 53.

Proclamations, etc., of Governor General

21 Evidence of any proclamation, order, regulation or appointment, made or issued by the Governor General or by the Governor in Council, or by or under the authority of any minister or head of any department of the Government of Canada and evidence of a treaty to which Canada is a party, may be given in all or any of the following ways:

(a) by the production of a copy of the Canada Gazette, or a volume of the Acts of Parliament purporting to contain a copy of the treaty, proclamation, order, regulation or appointment, or a notice thereof;

(b) by the production of a copy of the proclamation, order, regulation or appointment, purporting to be published by the Queen's Printer;

(c) by the production of a copy of the treaty purporting to be published by the Queen's Printer;

(d) by the production, in the case of any proclamation, order, regulation or appointment made or issued by the Governor General or by the Governor in Council, of a copy or extract purporting to be certified to be true by the clerk or assistant or acting clerk of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada; and

(e) by the production, in the case of any order, regulation or appointment made or issued by or under the authority of any minister or head of a department of the Government of Canada, of a copy or extract purporting to be certified to be true by the minister, by his deputy or acting deputy, or by the secretary or acting secretary of the department over which he presides.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 21; 2000, c. 5, s. 54.

Proclamations, etc., of lieutenant governor

22 (1) Evidence of any proclamation, order, regulation or appointment made or issued by a lieutenant governor or lieutenant governor in council of any province, or by or under the authority of any member of the executive council, being the head of any department of the government of the province, may be given in all or any of the following ways:

(a) by the production of a copy of the official gazette for the province purporting to contain a copy of the proclamation, order, regulation or appointment, or a notice thereof;

(b) by the production of a copy of the proclamation, order, regulation or appointment purporting to be published by the government or Queen's Printer for the province; and

(c) by the production of a copy or extract of the proclamation, order, regulation or appointment purporting to be certified to be true by the clerk or assistant or acting clerk of the executive council, by the head of any department of the government of a province, or by his deputy or acting deputy, as the case may be.

Territories

(2) Evidence of any proclamation, order, regulation or appointment made by the Lieutenant Governor or Lieutenant Governor in Council of the Northwest Territories, as constituted prior to September 1, 1905, or by the Legislature of Yukon, of the Northwest Territories or for Nunavut, may be given by the production of a copy of the Canada Gazette purporting to contain a copy of the proclamation, order, regulation or appointment, or a notice of it.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 22; 1993, c. 28, s. 78; 2000, c. 5, s. 55; 2002, c. 7, s. 96; 2014, c. 2, s. 5.

Evidence of judicial proceedings, etc.

23 (1) Evidence of any proceeding or record whatever of, in or before any court in Great Britain, the Supreme Court, the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada, any court in a province, any court in a British colony or possession or any court of record of the United States, of a state of the United States or of any other foreign country, or before any justice of the peace or coroner in a province, may be given in any action or proceeding by an exemplification or certified copy of the proceeding or record, purporting to be under the seal of the court or under the hand or seal of the justice, coroner or court stenographer, as the case may be, without any proof of the authenticity of the seal or of the signature of the justice, coroner or court stenographer or other proof whatever.

Certificate where court has no seal

(2) Where any court, justice or coroner or court stenographer referred to in subsection (1) has no seal, or so certifies, the evidence may be given by a copy purporting to be certified under the signature of a judge or presiding provincial court judge or of the justice or coroner or court stenographer, without any proof of the authenticity of the signature or other proof whatever.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 23; R.S., 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 203; 1993, c. 34, s. 15; 1997, c. 18, s. 117; 2002, c. 8, s. 118.

Certified copies

24 In every case in which the original record could be admitted in evidence,

(a) a copy of any official or public document of Canada or of any province, purporting to be certified under the hand of the proper officer or person in whose custody the official or public document is placed, or

(b) a copy of a document, by-law, rule, regulation or proceeding, or a copy of any entry in any register or other book of any municipal or other corporation, created by charter or Act of Parliament or the legislature of any province, purporting to be certified under the seal of the corporation, and the hand of the presiding officer, clerk or secretary thereof, is admissible in evidence without proof of the seal of the corporation, or of the signature or official character of the person or persons appearing to have signed it, and without further proof thereof.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 24.

Books and documents

25 Where a book or other document is of so public a nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody, and no other Act exists that renders its contents provable by means of a copy, a copy thereof or extract therefrom is admissible in evidence in any court of justice or before a person having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive and examine evidence, if it is proved that it is a copy or extract purporting to be certified to be true by the officer to whose custody the original has been entrusted.

Books kept in offices under Government of Canada

26 (1) A copy of any entry in any book kept in any office or department of the Government of Canada, or in any commission, board or other branch in the federal public administration, shall be admitted as evidence of that entry, and of the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded, if it is proved by the oath or affidavit of an officer of the office or department, commission, board or other branch in the federal public administration that the book was, at the time of the making of the entry, one of the ordinary books kept in the office, department, commission, board or other branch in the federal public administration, that the entry was made in the usual and ordinary course of business of the office, department, commission, board or other branch in the federal public administration and that the copy is a true copy thereof.

Proof of non-issue of licence or document

(2) Where by any Act of Parliament or regulation made under an Act of Parliament provision is made for the issue by a department, commission, board or other branch in the federal public administration of a licence requisite to the doing or having of any act or thing or for the issue of any other document, an affidavit of an officer of the department, commission, board or other branch in the federal public administration, sworn before any commissioner or other person authorized to take affidavits, setting out that he or she has charge of the appropriate records and that after careful examination and search of those records he or she has been unable to find in any given case that any such licence or other document has been issued, shall be admitted in evidence as proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that in that case no licence or other document has been issued.

Proof of mailing departmental matter

(3) Where by any Act of Parliament or regulation made under an Act of Parliament provision is made for sending by mail any request for information, notice or demand by a department or other branch in the federal public administration, an affidavit of an officer of the department or other branch in the federal public administration, sworn before any commissioner or other person authorized to take affidavits, setting out that he or she has charge of the appropriate records, that he or she has a knowledge of the facts in the particular case, that the request, notice or demand was sent by registered letter on a named date to the person or firm to whom it was addressed (indicating that address) and that he or she identifies as exhibits attached to the affidavit the post office certificate of registration of the letter and a true copy of the request, notice or demand, shall, on production and proof of the post office receipt for the delivery of the registered letter to the addressee, be admitted in evidence as proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, of the sending and of the request, notice or demand.

Proof of official character

(4) Where proof is offered by affidavit pursuant to this section, it is not necessary to prove the official character of the person making the affidavit if that information is set out in the body of the affidavit.

Notarial acts in Quebec

27 Any document purporting to be a copy of a notarial act or instrument made, filed or registered in the Province of Quebec, and to be certified by a notary or prothonotary to be a true copy of the original in his possession as such notary or prothonotary, shall be admitted in evidence in the place and stead of the original and has the same force and effect as the original would have if produced and proved, but it may be proved in rebuttal that there is no original, that the copy is not a true copy of the original in some material particular or that the original is not an instrument of such nature as may, by the law of the Province of Quebec, be taken before a notary or be filed, enrolled or registered by a notary in that Province.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 27.

Notice of production of book or document

28 (1) No copy of any book or other document shall be admitted in evidence, under the authority of section 23, 24, 25, 26 or 27, on any trial, unless the party intending to produce the copy has before the trial given to the party against whom it is intended to be produced reasonable notice of that intention.

Not less than 7 days

(2) The reasonableness of the notice referred to in subsection (1) shall be determined by the court, judge or other person presiding, but the notice shall not in any case be less than seven days.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 28.

Copies of entries

29 (1) Subject to this section, a copy of any entry in any book or record kept in any financial institution shall in all legal proceedings be admitted in evidence as proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, of the entry and of the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded.

Admission in evidence

(2) A copy of an entry in the book or record described in subsection (1) shall not be admitted in evidence under this section unless it is first proved that the book or record was, at the time of the making of the entry, one of the ordinary books or records of the financial institution, that the entry was made in the usual and ordinary course of business, that the book or record is in the custody or control of the financial institution and that the copy is a true copy of it, and such proof may be given by any person employed by the financial institution who has knowledge of the book or record or the manager or accountant of the financial institution, and may be given orally or by affidavit sworn before any commissioner or other person authorized to take affidavits.

Cheques, proof of “no account”

(3) Where a cheque has been drawn on any financial institution or branch thereof by any person, an affidavit of the manager or accountant of the financial institution or branch, sworn before any commissioner or other person authorized to take affidavits, setting out that he is the manager or accountant, that he has made a careful examination and search of the books and records for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not that person has an account with the financial institution or branch and that he has been unable to find such an account, shall be admitted in evidence as proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that that person has no account in the financial institution or branch.

Proof of official character

(4) Where evidence is offered by affidavit pursuant to this section, it is not necessary to prove the signature or official character of the person making the affidavit if the official character of that person is set out in the body of the affidavit.

Compulsion of production or appearance

(5) A financial institution or officer of a financial institution is not in any legal proceedings to which the financial institution is not a party compellable to produce any book or record, the contents of which can be proved under this section, or to appear as a witness to prove the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded unless by order of the court made for special cause.

Order to inspect and copy

(6) On the application of any party to a legal proceeding, the court may order that that party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in the books or records of a financial institution for the purposes of the legal proceeding, and the person whose account is to be inspected shall be notified of the application at least two clear days before the hearing thereof, and if it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that he cannot be notified personally, the notice may be given by addressing it to the financial institution.

Warrants to search

(7) Nothing in this section shall be construed as prohibiting any search of the premises of a financial institution under the authority of a warrant to search issued under any other Act of Parliament, but unless the warrant is expressly endorsed by the person under whose hand it is issued as not being limited by this section, the authority conferred by any such warrant to search the premises of a financial institution and to seize and take away anything in it shall, with respect to the books or records of the institution, be construed as limited to the searching of those premises for the purpose of inspecting and taking copies of entries in those books or records, and section 490 of the Criminal Code does not apply in respect of the copies of those books or records obtained under a warrant referred to in this section.

Computation of time

(8) Holidays shall be excluded from the computation of time under this section.

Definitions

(9) In this section,

court means the court, judge, arbitrator or person before whom a legal proceeding is held or taken; (tribunal)

financial institution means the Bank of Canada, the Business Development Bank of Canada and any institution that accepts in Canada deposits of money from its members or the public, and includes a branch, agency or office of any of those Banks or institutions; (institution financière)

legal proceeding means any civil or criminal proceeding or inquiry in which evidence is or may be given, and includes an arbitration. (procédure judiciaire)

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 29; 1994, c. 44, s. 90; 1995, c. 28, s. 47; 1999, c. 28, s. 149.

Business records to be admitted in evidence

30 (1) Where oral evidence in respect of a matter would be admissible in a legal proceeding, a record made in the usual and ordinary course of business that contains information in respect of that matter is admissible in evidence under this section in the legal proceeding on production of the record.

Inference where information not in business record

(2) Where a record made in the usual and ordinary course of business does not contain information in respect of a matter the occurrence or existence of which might reasonably be expected to be recorded in that record, the court may on production of the record admit the record for the purpose of establishing that fact and may draw the inference that the matter did not occur or exist.

Copy of records

(3) Where it is not possible or reasonably practicable to produce any record described in subsection (1) or (2), a copy of the record accompanied by two documents, one that is made by a person who states why it is not possible or reasonably practicable to produce the record and one that sets out the source from which the copy was made, that attests to the copy's authenticity and that is made by the person who made the copy, is admissible in evidence under this section in the same manner as if it were the original of the record if each document is

(a) an affidavit of each of those persons sworn before a commissioner or other person authorized to take affidavits; or

(b) a certificate or other statement pertaining to the record in which the person attests that the certificate or statement is made in conformity with the laws of a foreign state, whether or not the certificate or statement is in the form of an affidavit attested to before an official of the foreign state.

Where record kept in form requiring explanation

(4) Where production of any record or of a copy of any record described in subsection (1) or (2) would not convey to the court the information contained in the record by reason of its having been kept in a form that requires explanation, a transcript of the explanation of the record or copy prepared by a person qualified to make the explanation is admissible in evidence under this section in the same manner as if it were the original of the record if it is accompanied by a document that sets out the person's qualifications to make the explanation, attests to the accuracy of the explanation, and is

(a) an affidavit of that person sworn before a commissioner or other person authorized to take affidavits; or

(b) a certificate or other statement pertaining to the record in which the person attests that the certificate or statement is made in conformity with the laws of a foreign state, whether or not the certificate or statement is in the form of an affidavit attested to before an official of the foreign state.

Court may order other part of record to be produced

(5) Where part only of a record is produced under this section by any party, the court may examine any other part of the record and direct that, together with the part of the record previously so produced, the whole or any part of the other part thereof be produced by that party as the record produced by him.

Court may examine record and hear evidence

(6) For the purpose of determining whether any provision of this section applies, or for the purpose of determining the probative value, if any, to be given to information contained in any record admitted in evidence under this section, the court may, on production of any record, examine the record, admit any evidence in respect thereof given orally or by affidavit including evidence as to the circumstances in which the information contained in the record was written, recorded, stored or reproduced, and draw any reasonable inference from the form or content of the record.

Notice of intention to produce record or affidavit

(7) Unless the court orders otherwise, no record or affidavit shall be admitted in evidence under this section unless the party producing the record or affidavit has, at least seven days before its production, given notice of his intention to produce it to each other party to the legal proceeding and has, within five days after receiving any notice in that behalf given by any such party, produced it for inspection by that party.

Not necessary to prove signature and official character

(8) Where evidence is offered by affidavit under this section, it is not necessary to prove the signature or official character of the person making the affidavit if the official character of that person is set out in the body of the affidavit.

Examination on record with leave of court

(9) Subject to section 4, any person who has or may reasonably be expected to have knowledge of the making or contents of any record produced or received in evidence under this section may, with leave of the court, be examined or cross-examined thereon by any party to the legal proceeding.

Evidence inadmissible under this section

(10) Nothing in this section renders admissible in evidence in any legal proceeding

- (a) such part of any record as is proved to be
 - (i) a record made in the course of an investigation or inquiry,
 - (ii) a record made in the course of obtaining or giving legal advice or in contemplation of a legal proceeding,
 - (iii) a record in respect of the production of which any privilege exists and is claimed, or
 - (iv) a record of or alluding to a statement made by a person who is not, or if he were living and of sound mind would not be, competent and compellable to disclose in the legal proceeding a matter disclosed in the record;
- (b) any record the production of which would be contrary to public policy; or
- (c) any transcript or recording of evidence taken in the course of another legal proceeding.

Construction of this section

(11) The provisions of this section shall be deemed to be in addition to and not in derogation of

- (a) any other provision of this or any other Act of Parliament respecting the admissibility in evidence of any record or the proof of any matter; or
- (b) any existing rule of law under which any record is admissible in evidence or any matter may be proved.

Definitions

(12) In this section,

business means any business, profession, trade, calling, manufacture or undertaking of any kind carried on in Canada or elsewhere whether for profit or otherwise, including any activity or operation carried on or performed in Canada or elsewhere by any government, by any department, branch, board, commission or agency of any government, by any court or other tribunal or by any other body or authority performing a function of government; (affaires) copy and photographic film, in relation to any record, includes a print, whether enlarged or not, from a photographic film of the record, and photographic film includes a photographic plate, microphotographic film or photostatic negative; (copie et pellicule photographique)

court means the court, judge, arbitrator or person before whom a legal proceeding is held or taken; (tribunal)

legal proceeding means any civil or criminal proceeding or inquiry in which evidence is or may be given, and includes an arbitration; (procédure judiciaire)

record includes the whole or any part of any book, document, paper, card, tape or other thing on or in which information is written, recorded, stored or reproduced, and, except for the purposes of subsections (3) and (4), any copy or transcript admitted in evidence under this section pursuant to subsection (3) or (4). (pièce)

Definitions

31 (1) In this section,

corporation means any bank, including the Bank of Canada and the Business Development Bank of Canada, any authorized foreign bank within the meaning of section 2 of the Bank Act and each of the following carrying on business in Canada, namely, every railway, express, telegraph and telephone company (except a street railway and tramway company), insurance company or society, trust company and loan company; (personne morale) government means the government of Canada or of any province and includes any department, commission, board or branch of any such government; (gouvernement) photographic film includes any photographic plate, microphotographic film and photostatic negative. (pellicule photographique)

When print admissible in evidence

(2) A print, whether enlarged or not, from any photographic film of

- (a) an entry in any book or record kept by any government or corporation and destroyed, lost or delivered to a customer after the film was taken,
- (b) any bill of exchange, promissory note, cheque, receipt, instrument or document held by any government or corporation and destroyed, lost or delivered to a customer after the film was taken, or
- (c) any record, document, plan, book or paper belonging to or deposited with any government or corporation, is admissible in evidence in all cases in which and for all purposes for which the object photographed would have been admitted on proof that

- (d) while the book, record, bill of exchange, promissory note, cheque, receipt, instrument or document, plan, book or paper was in the custody or control of the government or corporation, the photographic film was taken thereof in order to keep a permanent record thereof, and

(e) the object photographed was subsequently destroyed by or in the presence of one or more of the employees of the government or corporation, or was lost or was delivered to a customer.

Evidence of compliance with conditions

(3) Evidence of compliance with the conditions prescribed by this section may be given by any one or more of the employees of the government or corporation, having knowledge of the taking of the photographic film, of the destruction, loss or delivery to a customer, or of the making of the print, as the case may be, either orally or by affidavit sworn in any part of Canada before any notary public or commissioner for oaths.

Proof by notarial copy

(4) Unless the court otherwise orders, a notarial copy of an affidavit under subsection (3) is admissible in evidence in lieu of the original affidavit.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 31; 1992, c. 1, s. 142; 1995, c. 28, s. 47; 1999, c. 28, s. 150.

Authentication of electronic documents

31.1 Any person seeking to admit an electronic document as evidence has the burden of proving its authenticity by evidence capable of supporting a finding that the electronic document is that which it is purported to be.

2000, c. 5, s. 56.

Application of best evidence rule — electronic documents

31.2 (1) The best evidence rule in respect of an electronic document is satisfied

(a) on proof of the integrity of the electronic documents system by or in which the electronic document was recorded or stored; or

(b) if an evidentiary presumption established under section 31.4 applies.

Printouts

(2) Despite subsection (1), in the absence of evidence to the contrary, an electronic document in the form of a printout satisfies the best evidence rule if the printout has been manifestly or consistently acted on, relied on or used as a record of the information recorded or stored in the printout.

2000, c. 5, s. 56.

Presumption of integrity

31.3 For the purposes of subsection 31.2(1), in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the integrity of an electronic documents system by or in which an electronic document is recorded or stored is proven

(a) by evidence capable of supporting a finding that at all material times the computer system or other similar device used by the electronic documents system was operating properly or, if it was not, the fact of its not operating properly did not affect the integrity of the electronic document and there are no other reasonable grounds to doubt the integrity of the electronic documents system;

(b) if it is established that the electronic document was recorded or stored by a party who is adverse in interest to the party seeking to introduce it; or

(c) if it is established that the electronic document was recorded or stored in the usual and ordinary course of business by a person who is not a party and who did not record or store it under the control of the party seeking to introduce it.

2000, c. 5, s. 56.

Presumptions regarding secure electronic signatures

31.4 The Governor in Council may make regulations establishing evidentiary presumptions in relation to electronic documents signed with secure electronic signatures, including regulations respecting

(a) the association of secure electronic signatures with persons; and

(b) the integrity of information contained in electronic documents signed with secure electronic signatures.

2000, c. 5, s. 56.

Standards may be considered

31.5 For the purpose of determining under any rule of law whether an electronic document is admissible, evidence may be presented in respect of any standard, procedure, usage or practice concerning the manner in which electronic documents are to be recorded or stored, having regard to the type of business, enterprise or endeavour that used, recorded or stored the electronic document and the nature and purpose of the electronic document.

2000, c. 5, s. 56.

Proof by affidavit

31.6 (1) The matters referred to in subsection 31.2\(2\) and sections 31.3 and 31.5 and in regulations made under section 31.4 may be established by affidavit.

Cross-examination

(2) A party may cross-examine a deponent of an affidavit referred to in subsection (1) that has been introduced in evidence

(a) as of right, if the deponent is an adverse party or is under the control of an adverse party; and

(b) with leave of the court, in the case of any other deponent.

2000, c. 5, s. 56.

Application

31.7 Sections 31.1 to 31.4 do not affect any rule of law relating to the admissibility of evidence, except the rules relating to authentication and best evidence.

Interpretation

Definition of official

36.1 In sections 37 to 38.43, official has the same meaning as in section 118 of the Criminal Code.

2001, c. 41, s. 43; 2024, c. 16, s. 76.

Specified Public Interest

Objection to disclosure of information

37 (1) Subject to sections 38 to 38.16, a Minister of the Crown in right of Canada or other official may object to the disclosure of information before a court, person or body with jurisdiction to compel the production of information by certifying orally or in writing to the court, person or body that the information should not be disclosed on the grounds of a specified public interest.

Obligation of court, person or body

(1.1) If an objection is made under subsection (1), the court, person or body shall ensure that the information is not disclosed other than in accordance with this Act.

Objection made to superior court

(2) If an objection to the disclosure of information is made before a superior court, that court may determine the objection.

Objection not made to superior court

(3) If an objection to the disclosure of information is made before a court, person or body other than a superior court, the objection may be determined, on application, by

(a) the Federal Court, in the case of a person or body vested with power to compel production by or under an Act of Parliament if the person or body is not a court established under a law of a province; or

(b) the trial division or trial court of the superior court of the province within which the court, person or body exercises its jurisdiction, in any other case.

Limitation period

(4) An application under subsection (3) shall be made within 10 days after the objection is made or within any further or lesser time that the court having jurisdiction to hear the application considers appropriate in the circumstances.

Disclosure order

(4.1) Unless the court having jurisdiction to hear the application concludes that the disclosure of the information to which the objection was made under subsection (1) would encroach upon a specified public interest, the court may authorize by order the disclosure of the information.

Disclosure order

(5) If the court having jurisdiction to hear the application concludes that the disclosure of the information to which the objection was made under subsection (1) would encroach upon a specified public interest, but that the public interest in disclosure outweighs in importance the specified public interest, the court may, by order, after considering both the public interest in disclosure and the form of and conditions to disclosure that are most likely to limit any encroachment upon the specified public interest resulting from disclosure, authorize the disclosure, subject to any conditions that the court considers appropriate, of all of the information, a part or summary of the information, or a written admission of facts relating to the information.

Prohibition order

(6) If the court does not authorize disclosure under subsection (4.1) or (5), the court shall, by order, prohibit disclosure of the information.

Evidence

(6.1) The court may receive into evidence anything that, in the opinion of the court, is reliable and appropriate, even if it would not otherwise be admissible under Canadian law, and may base its decision on that evidence.

When determination takes effect

(7) An order of the court that authorizes disclosure does not take effect until the time provided or granted to appeal the order has expired or, if the order is appealed, the time provided or granted to appeal a judgment of an appeal court that confirms the order has expired and no further appeal from a judgment that confirms the order is available.

Introduction into evidence

(8) A person who wishes to introduce into evidence material the disclosure of which is authorized under subsection (5), but who may not be able to do so by reason of the rules of admissibility that apply before the court, person or body with jurisdiction to compel the production of information, may request from the court having jurisdiction under subsection (2) or (3) an order permitting the introduction into evidence of the material in a form or subject to any conditions fixed by that court, as long as that form and those conditions comply with the order made under subsection (5).

Relevant factors

(9) For the purpose of subsection (8), the court having jurisdiction under subsection (2) or (3) shall consider all the factors that would be relevant for a determination of admissibility before the court, person or body.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 37; 2001, c. 41, ss. 43, 140; 2002, c. 8, s. 183; 2013, c. 9, s. 17\(E\).

Appeal to court of appeal

37.1 (1) Subject to subsection (1.1), an appeal lies from a determination under any of subsections 37\(4.1\) to \(6\)

- (a) to the Federal Court of Appeal from a determination of the Federal Court; or
- (b) to the court of appeal of a province from a determination of a trial division or trial court of a superior court of the province.

Limitation — person charged with offence

(1.1) A person who is charged with an offence may appeal a determination referred to in subsection (1) that is made in relation to a criminal trial or other criminal proceeding only if they are convicted of the offence.

Limitation period for appeal

(2) An appeal under this section shall be brought

(a) in the case of an appeal permitted under subsection (1.1), after conviction and within the same period in which the accused may appeal from their conviction or any further time that the court referred to in subsection (1) considers appropriate in the circumstances; or

(b) in any other case, within 15 days after the day on which the determination appealed from is made or any further time that the court referred to in subsection (1) considers appropriate in the circumstances.

Exceptional circumstances

(3) Despite subsection (1.1) and paragraph (2)(a), the court referred to in subsection (1) may, on application by the person charged with the offence, permit the appeal to be brought before conviction if the court is satisfied that there are exceptional circumstances that justify doing so.

2001, c. 41, ss. 43, 141; 2024, c. 16, s. 77.

Limitation periods for appeals to Supreme Court of Canada

37.2 Notwithstanding any other Act of Parliament,

(a) an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from a judgment made under subsection 37.1(1) shall be made within 10 days after the date of the judgment appealed from or within any further time that the court having jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal considers appropriate in the circumstances; and

(b) if leave to appeal is granted, the appeal shall be brought in the manner set out in subsection 60\(1\) of the Supreme Court Act but within the time specified by the court that grants leave.

2001, c. 41, s. 43.

37.21 [Repealed, 2004, c. 12, s. 18]

Protection of right to a fair trial

37.3 (1) A judge presiding at a criminal trial or other criminal proceeding may make any order that he or she considers appropriate in the circumstances to protect the right of the accused to a fair trial, as long as that order complies with the terms of any order made under any of subsections 37\(4.1\) to \(6\) in relation to that trial or proceeding or any judgment made on appeal of an order made under any of those subsections.

Potential orders

(2) The orders that may be made under subsection (1) include, but are not limited to, the following orders:

(a) an order dismissing specified counts of the indictment or information, or permitting the indictment or information to proceed only in respect of a lesser or included offence;

(b) an order effecting a stay of the proceedings; and

(c) an order finding against any party on any issue relating to information the disclosure of which is prohibited.

Provisions of General Application

Definitions

38 The following definitions apply in this section and in sections 38.01 to 38.15.

judge means the Chief Justice of the Federal Court or a judge of that Court designated by the Chief Justice to conduct hearings under section 38.04. (juge) participant means a person who, in connection with a proceeding, is required to disclose, or expects to disclose or cause the disclosure of, information. (participant) potentially injurious information means information of a type that, if it were disclosed to the public, could injure international relations or national defence or national security. (renseignements potentiellement préjudiciables) proceeding means a proceeding before a court, person or body with jurisdiction to compel the production of information, but does not include a federal proceeding, as defined in section 38.2. (instance) prosecutor means an agent of the Attorney General of Canada or of the Attorney General of a province, the Director of Military Prosecutions under the National Defence Act or an individual who acts as a prosecutor in a proceeding. (poursuivant)

sensitive information means information relating to international relations or national defence or national security that is in the possession of the Government of Canada, whether originating from inside or outside Canada, and is of a type that the Government of Canada is taking measures to safeguard. (renseignements sensibles)

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 38; 2001, c. 41, ss. 43, 141; 2013, c. 9, s. 18\(F\); 2024, c. 16, s. 79.

Notice to Attorney General of Canada

38.01 (1) Every participant who, in connection with a proceeding, is required to disclose, or expects to disclose or cause the disclosure of, information that the participant believes is sensitive information or potentially injurious information shall, as soon as possible, notify the Attorney General of Canada in writing of the possibility of the disclosure, and of the nature, date and place of the proceeding.

During a proceeding

(2) Every participant who believes that sensitive information or potentially injurious information is about to be disclosed, whether by the participant or another person, in the course of a proceeding shall raise the matter with the person presiding at the proceeding and notify the Attorney General of Canada in writing of the matter as soon as possible, whether or not notice has been given under subsection (1). In such circumstances, the person presiding at the proceeding shall ensure that the information is not disclosed other than in accordance with this Act.

Notice of disclosure from official

(3) An official, other than a participant, who believes that sensitive information or potentially injurious information may be disclosed in connection with a proceeding may notify the Attorney General of Canada in writing of the possibility of the disclosure, and of the nature, date and place of the proceeding.

During a proceeding

(4) An official, other than a participant, who believes that sensitive information or potentially injurious information is about to be disclosed in the course of a proceeding may raise the matter with the person presiding at the proceeding. If the official raises the matter, he or she shall notify the Attorney General of Canada in writing of the matter as soon as possible, whether or not notice has been given under subsection (3), and the person presiding at the proceeding shall ensure that the information is not disclosed other than in accordance with this Act.

Military proceedings

(5) In the case of a proceeding under Part III of the National Defence Act, other than a summary hearing as defined in subsection 2(1) of that Act, notice under any of subsections (1) to (4) shall be given to both the Attorney General of Canada and the Minister of National Defence.

Exception

(6) This section does not apply when

- (a) the information is disclosed by a person to their solicitor in connection with a proceeding, if the information is relevant to that proceeding;
- (b) the information is disclosed to enable the Attorney General of Canada, the Minister of National Defence, a judge or a court hearing an appeal from, or a review of, an order of the judge to discharge their responsibilities under section 38, this section and sections 38.02 to 38.13, 38.15 and 38.16;
- (c) disclosure of the information is authorized by the government institution in which or for which the information was produced or, if the information was not produced in or for a government institution, the government institution in which it was first received; or

(d) the information is disclosed to an entity and, where applicable, for a purpose listed in the schedule.

Exception

(7) Subsections (1) and (2) do not apply to a participant if a government institution referred to in paragraph (6)(c) advises the participant that it is not necessary, in order to prevent disclosure of the information referred to in that paragraph, to give notice to the Attorney General of Canada under subsection (1) or to raise the matter with the person presiding under subsection (2).

Schedule

(8) The Governor in Council may, by order, add to or delete from the schedule a reference to any entity or purpose, or amend such a reference.

2001, c. 41, s. 43; 2019, c. 15, s. 48.

Disclosure prohibited

38.02 (1) Subject to subsection 38.01\(6\), no person shall disclose in connection with a proceeding

(a) information about which notice is given under any of subsections 38.01(1) to (4);

(b) the fact that notice is given to the Attorney General of Canada under any of subsections 38.01(1) to (4), or to the Attorney General of Canada and the Minister of National Defence under subsection 38.01\(5\);

(c) the fact that an application is made to the Federal Court under section 38.04 or that an appeal or review of an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) in connection with the application is instituted; or

(d) the fact that an agreement is entered into under section 38.031 or subsection 38.04\(6\).

Entities

(1.1) When an entity listed in the schedule, for any purpose listed there in relation to that entity, makes a decision or order that would result in the disclosure of sensitive information or potentially injurious information, the entity shall not disclose the information or cause it to be disclosed until notice of intention to disclose the information has been given to the Attorney General of Canada and a period of 10 days has elapsed after notice was given.

Exceptions

(2) Disclosure of the information or the facts referred to in subsection (1) is not prohibited if

(a) the Attorney General of Canada authorizes the disclosure in writing under section 38.03 or by agreement under section 38.031 or subsection 38.04\(6\); or

(b) a judge authorizes the disclosure under subsection 38.06(1) or (2) or a court hearing an appeal from, or a review of, the order of the judge authorizes the disclosure, and either the time provided to appeal the order or judgment has expired or no further appeal is available.

2001, c. 41, ss. 43, 141.

Authorization by Attorney General of Canada

38.03 (1) The Attorney General of Canada may, at any time and subject to any conditions that he or she considers appropriate, authorize the disclosure of all or part of the information and facts the disclosure of which is prohibited under subsection 38.02(1).

Military proceedings

(2) In the case of a proceeding under Part III of the National Defence Act, other than a summary hearing as defined in subsection 2(1) of that Act, the Attorney General of Canada may authorize disclosure only with the agreement of the Minister of National Defence.

Notice

(3) The Attorney General of Canada shall, within 30 days after the day on which they first receive a notice about information under any of subsections 38.01(1) to (4), notify in writing every person who provided notice under section 38.01 about that information of their decision with respect to disclosure of the information.

2001, c. 41, s. 43; 2019, c. 15, s. 49; 2024, c. 16, s. 80.

Disclosure agreement

38.031 (1) The Attorney General of Canada and a person who has given notice under subsection 38.01(1) or (2) and is not required to disclose information but wishes, in connection with a proceeding, to disclose any facts referred to in paragraphs 38.02(1)(b) to (d) or information about which he or she gave the notice, or to cause that disclosure, may, before the person applies to the Federal Court under paragraph 38.04\(2\)\(c\), enter into an agreement that permits the disclosure of part of the facts or information or disclosure of the facts or information subject to conditions.

No application to Federal Court

(2) If an agreement is entered into under subsection (1), the person may not apply to the Federal Court under paragraph 38.04\(2\)\(c\) with respect to the information about which he or she gave notice to the Attorney General of Canada under subsection 38.01(1) or (2).

2001, c. 41, ss. 43, 141.

Application to Federal Court — Attorney General of Canada

38.04 (1) The Attorney General of Canada may, at any time and in any circumstances, apply to the Federal Court for an order with respect to the disclosure of information about which notice was given under any of subsections 38.01(1) to (4).

Application to Federal Court — general

(2) If, with respect to information about which notice was given under any of subsections 38.01(1) to (4), the Attorney General of Canada does not provide notice of a decision in accordance with subsection 38.03\(3\) or, other than by an agreement under section 38.031, does not authorize the disclosure of the information or authorizes the disclosure of only part of the information or authorizes the disclosure subject to any conditions,

(a) the Attorney General of Canada shall apply to the Federal Court for an order with respect to disclosure of the information if a person who gave notice under subsection 38.01(1) or (2) is a witness;

(b) a person, other than a witness, who is required to disclose information in connection with a proceeding shall apply to the Federal Court for an order with respect to disclosure of the information; and

(c) a person who is not required to disclose information in connection with a proceeding but who wishes to disclose it or to cause its disclosure may apply to the Federal Court for an order with respect to disclosure of the information.

Notice to Attorney General of Canada

(3) A person who applies to the Federal Court under paragraph (2)(b) or (c) shall provide notice of the application to the Attorney General of Canada.

Court records

(4) Subject to paragraph (5)(a.1), an application under this section is confidential. During the period when an application is confidential, the Chief Administrator of the Courts Administration Service may, subject to section 38.12, take any measure that he or she considers appropriate to protect the confidentiality of the application and the information to which it relates.

Procedure

(5) As soon as the Federal Court is seized of an application under this section, the judge

(a) shall hear the representations of the Attorney General of Canada and, in the case of a proceeding under Part III of the National Defence Act, other than a summary hearing as defined in subsection 2(1) of that Act, the Minister of National Defence, with respect to making the application public;

(a.1) shall, if he or she decides that the application should be made public, make an order to that effect;

(a.2) shall hear the representations of the Attorney General of Canada and, in the case of a proceeding under Part III of the National Defence Act, other than a summary hearing as defined in subsection 2(1) of that Act, the Minister of National Defence, concerning the identity of all parties or witnesses whose interests may be affected by either the prohibition of disclosure or the conditions to which disclosure is subject, and concerning the persons who should be given notice of any hearing of the matter;

(b) shall decide whether it is necessary to hold any hearing of the matter;

(c) if he or she decides that a hearing should be held, shall

(i) determine who should be given notice of the hearing,

(ii) order the Attorney General of Canada to notify those persons, and

(iii) determine the content and form of the notice; and

(d) if he or she considers it appropriate in the circumstances, may give any person the opportunity to make representations.

Disclosure agreement

(6) After the Federal Court is seized of an application made under paragraph (2)(c) or, in the case of an appeal from, or a review of, an order of the judge made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) in connection with that application, before the appeal or review is disposed of,

(a) the Attorney General of Canada and the person who made the application may enter into an agreement that permits the disclosure of part of the facts referred to in paragraphs 38.02(1)(b) to (d) or part of the information or disclosure of the facts or information subject to conditions; and

(b) if an agreement is entered into, the Court's consideration of the application or any hearing, review or appeal shall be terminated.

Termination of Court consideration, hearing, review or appeal

(7) Subject to subsection (6), after the Federal Court is seized of an application made under this section or, in the case of an appeal from, or a review of, an order of the judge made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3), before the appeal or review is disposed of, if the Attorney General of Canada authorizes the disclosure of all or part of the information or withdraws conditions to which the disclosure is subject, the Court's consideration of the application or any hearing, appeal or review shall be terminated in relation to that information, to the extent of the authorization or the withdrawal.

2001, c. 41, ss. 43, 141; 2013, c. 9, s. 19; 2019, c. 15, s. 50.

Report relating to proceedings

38.05 If he or she receives notice of a hearing under paragraph 38.04\(5\)\(c\), a person presiding or designated to preside at the proceeding to which the information relates or, if no person is designated, the person who has the authority to designate a person to preside may, within 10 days after the day on which he or she receives the notice, provide the judge with a report concerning any matter relating to the proceeding that the person considers may be of assistance to the judge.

2001, c. 41, s. 43.

Disclosure order

38.06 (1) Unless the judge concludes that the disclosure of the information or facts referred to in subsection 38.02(1) would be injurious to international relations or national defence or national security, the judge may, by order, authorize the disclosure of the information or facts.

Disclosure — conditions

(2) If the judge concludes that the disclosure of the information or facts would be injurious to international relations or national defence or national security but that the public interest in disclosure outweighs in importance the public interest in non-disclosure, the judge may by order, after considering both the public interest in disclosure and the form of and conditions to disclosure that are most likely to limit any injury to international relations or national defence or national security resulting from disclosure, authorize the disclosure, subject to any conditions that the judge considers appropriate, of all or part of the information or facts, a summary of the information or a written admission of facts relating to the information.

Order confirming prohibition

(3) If the judge does not authorize disclosure under subsection (1) or (2), the judge shall, by order, confirm the prohibition of disclosure.

When determination takes effect

(3.01) An order of the judge that authorizes disclosure does not take effect until the time provided or granted to appeal the order has expired or, if the order is appealed, the time provided or granted to appeal a judgment of an appeal court that confirms the order has expired and no further appeal from a judgment that confirms the order is available.

Evidence

(3.1) The judge may receive into evidence anything that, in the opinion of the judge, is reliable and appropriate, even if it would not otherwise be admissible under Canadian law, and may base his or her decision on that evidence.

Introduction into evidence

(4) A person who wishes to introduce into evidence material the disclosure of which is authorized under subsection (2) but who may not be able to do so in a proceeding by reason of the rules of admissibility that apply in the proceeding may request from a judge an order permitting the introduction into evidence of the material in a form or subject to any conditions fixed by that judge, as long as that form and those conditions comply with the order made under subsection (2).

Relevant factors

(5) For the purpose of subsection (4), the judge shall consider all the factors that would be relevant for a determination of admissibility in the proceeding.

Notice of order

38.07 The judge may order the Attorney General of Canada to give notice of an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) to any person who, in the opinion of the judge, should be notified.

2001, c. 41, s. 43.

Automatic review

38.08 If the judge determines that a party to the proceeding whose interests are adversely affected by an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) was not given the opportunity to make representations under paragraph 38.04\(5\)\(d\), the judge shall refer the order to the Federal Court of Appeal for review.

2001, c. 41, s. 43.

Appeal to Federal Court of Appeal

38.09 (1) Subject to subsection (1.1), an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) may be appealed to the Federal Court of Appeal.

Limitation — person charged with offence

(1.1) A person who is charged with an offence may appeal an order referred to in subsection (1) that is made in relation to a criminal trial or other criminal proceeding only if they are convicted of the offence.

Limitation period for appeal

(2) An appeal under this section shall be brought

(a) in the case of an appeal permitted under subsection (1.1), after conviction and within the same period in which the accused may appeal from their conviction or any further time that the Court considers appropriate in the circumstances; or

(b) in any other case, within 15 days after the day on which the order is made or any further time that the Court considers appropriate in the circumstances.

Exceptional circumstances

(3) Despite subsection (1.1) and paragraph (2)(a), the Court may, on application by the person charged with the offence, permit the appeal to be brought before conviction if the Court is satisfied that there are exceptional circumstances that justify doing so.

2001, c. 41, s. 43; 2024, c. 16, s. 81.

Limitation periods for appeals to Supreme Court of Canada

38.1 Notwithstanding any other Act of Parliament,

(a) an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from a judgment made on appeal shall be made within 15 days after the day on which the judgment appealed from is made or within any further time that the Supreme Court of Canada considers appropriate in the circumstances; and

(b) if leave to appeal is granted, the appeal shall be brought in the manner set out in subsection 60\(1\) of the Supreme Court Act but within the time specified by the Supreme Court of Canada.

2001, c. 41, s. 43; 2024, c. 16, s. 82.

Special rules — hearing in private

38.11 (1) The judge conducting a hearing under subsection 38.04\(5\) or the court hearing an appeal or review of an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) may make an order that the hearing be held, or the appeal or review be heard, in private.

Special rules — hearing in National Capital Region

(1.1) A hearing under subsection 38.04\(5\) or an appeal or review of an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) shall, at the request of either the Attorney General of Canada or, in the case of a proceeding under Part III of the National Defence Act, other than a summary hearing as defined in subsection 2(1) of that Act, the Minister of National Defence, be held or heard, as the case may be, in the National Capital Region, as described in the schedule to the National Capital Act.

Ex parte representations

(2) The judge conducting a hearing under subsection 38.04\(5\) or the court hearing an appeal or review of an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) may give any person who makes representations under paragraph 38.04(5)(d), and shall give the Attorney General of Canada and, in the case of a proceeding under Part III of the National Defence Act, other than a summary hearing as defined in subsection 2(1) of that Act, the Minister of National Defence, the opportunity to make representations ex parte.

Ex parte representations — public hearing

(3) If a hearing under subsection 38.04\(5\) is held, or an appeal or review of an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) is heard, in public, any ex parte representations made in that hearing, appeal or review shall be made in private.

Protective order

38.12 (1) The judge conducting a hearing under subsection 38.04\(5\) or the court hearing an appeal or review of an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) may make any order that the judge or the court considers appropriate in the circumstances to protect the confidentiality of any information to which the hearing, appeal or review relates.

Court records

(2) The court records relating to a hearing that is held, or an appeal or review that is heard, in private or to any ex parte representations are confidential. The judge or the court may order that the court records, or any part of them, relating to a private or public hearing, appeal or review be sealed and kept in a location to which the public has no access.

2001, c. 41, s. 43; 2013, c. 9, s. 22.

Certificate of Attorney General of Canada

38.13 (1) The Attorney General of Canada may personally issue a certificate that prohibits the disclosure of information in connection with a proceeding for the purpose of protecting information obtained in confidence from, or in relation to, a foreign entity as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Foreign Interference and Security of Information Act or for the purpose of protecting national defence or national security. The certificate may only be issued after an order or decision that would result in the disclosure of the information to be subject to the certificate has been made under this or any other Act of Parliament.

Military proceedings

(2) In the case of a proceeding under Part III of the National Defence Act, other than a summary hearing as defined in subsection 2(1) of that Act, the Attorney General of Canada may issue the certificate only with the agreement, given personally, of the Minister of National Defence.

Service of certificate

(3) The Attorney General of Canada shall cause a copy of the certificate to be served on

- (a) the person presiding or designated to preside at the proceeding to which the information relates or, if no person is designated, the person who has the authority to designate a person to preside;
- (b) every party to the proceeding;
- (c) every person who gives notice under section 38.01 in connection with the proceeding;
- (d) every person who, in connection with the proceeding, may disclose, is required to disclose or may cause the disclosure of the information about which the Attorney General of Canada has received notice under section 38.01;
- (e) every party to a hearing under subsection 38.04\(5\) or to an appeal of an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) in relation to the information;
- (f) the judge who conducts a hearing under subsection 38.04\(5\) and any court that hears an appeal from, or review of, an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) in relation to the information; and
- (g) any other person who, in the opinion of the Attorney General of Canada, should be served.

Filing of certificate

- (4) The Attorney General of Canada shall cause a copy of the certificate to be filed
- (a) with the person responsible for the records of the proceeding to which the information relates; and
 - (b) in the Registry of the Federal Court and the registry of any court that hears an appeal from, or review of, an order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3).

Effect of certificate

- (5) If the Attorney General of Canada issues a certificate, then, notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, disclosure of the information shall be prohibited in accordance with the terms of the certificate.

Statutory Instruments Act* does not apply

- (6) The Statutory Instruments Act does not apply to a certificate issued under subsection (1).

Publication

- (7) The Attorney General of Canada shall, without delay after a certificate is issued, cause the certificate to be published in the Canada Gazette.

Restriction

- (8) The certificate and any matters arising out of it are not subject to review or to be restrained, prohibited, removed, set aside or otherwise dealt with, except in accordance with section 38.131.

Expiry

- (9) The certificate expires 10 years after the day on which it is issued and may be reissued.

2001, c. 41, s. 43; 2013, c. 9, s. 23; 2019, c. 15, s. 52; 2024, c. 16, s. 57.

Application for review of certificate

38.131 (1) A party to the proceeding referred to in section 38.13 may apply to the Federal Court of Appeal for an order varying or cancelling a certificate issued under that section on the grounds referred to in subsection (8) or (9), as the case may be.

Notice to Attorney General of Canada

- (2) The applicant shall give notice of the application to the Attorney General of Canada.

Military proceedings

- (3) In the case of proceedings under Part III of the National Defence Act, other than a summary hearing as defined in subsection 2(1) of that Act, notice under subsection (2)

shall be given to both the Attorney General of Canada and the Minister of National Defence.

Single judge

(4) Despite section 16 of the Federal Courts Act, for the purposes of the application, the Federal Court of Appeal consists of a single judge of that Court.

Admissible information

(5) In considering the application, the judge may receive into evidence anything that, in the opinion of the judge, is reliable and appropriate, even if it would not otherwise be admissible under Canadian law, and may base a determination made under any of subsections (8) to (10) on that evidence.

Special rules and protective order

(6) Sections 38.11 and 38.12 apply, with any necessary modifications, to an application made under subsection (1).

Expedited consideration

(7) The judge shall consider the application as soon as reasonably possible, but not later than 10 days after the application is made under subsection (1).

Varying the certificate

(8) If the judge determines that some of the information subject to the certificate does not relate either to information obtained in confidence from, or in relation to, a foreign entity as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Foreign Interference and Security of Information Act, or to national defence or national security, the judge shall make an order varying the certificate accordingly.

Cancelling the certificate

(9) If the judge determines that none of the information subject to the certificate relates to information obtained in confidence from, or in relation to, a foreign entity as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Foreign Interference and Security of Information Act, or to national defence or national security, the judge shall make an order cancelling the certificate.

Confirming the certificate

(10) If the judge determines that all of the information subject to the certificate relates to information obtained in confidence from, or in relation to, a foreign entity as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Foreign Interference and Security of Information Act, or to national defence or national security, the judge shall make an order confirming the certificate.

Determination is final

(11) Notwithstanding any other Act of Parliament, a determination of a judge under any of subsections (8) to (10) is final and is not subject to review or appeal by any court.

Publication

(12) If a certificate is varied or cancelled under this section, the Attorney General of Canada shall, as soon as possible after the decision of the judge and in a manner that mentions the original publication of the certificate, cause to be published in the Canada Gazette

(a) the certificate as varied under subsection (8); or

(b) a notice of the cancellation of the certificate under subsection (9).

Protection of right to a fair trial

38.14 (1) The person presiding at a criminal proceeding may make any order that he or she considers appropriate in the circumstances to protect the right of the accused to a fair trial, as long as that order complies with the terms of any order made under any of subsections 38.06(1) to (3) in relation to that proceeding, any judgment made on appeal from, or review of, the order, or any certificate issued under section 38.13.

Potential orders

(2) The orders that may be made under subsection (1) include, but are not limited to, the following orders:

(a) an order dismissing specified counts of the indictment or information, or permitting the indictment or information to proceed only in respect of a lesser or included offence;

(b) an order effecting a stay of the proceedings; and

(c) an order finding against any party on any issue relating to information the disclosure of which is prohibited.

2001, c. 41, s. 43.

Fiat

38.15 (1) If sensitive information or potentially injurious information may be disclosed in connection with a prosecution that is not instituted by the Attorney General of Canada or on his or her behalf, the Attorney General of Canada may issue a fiat and serve the fiat on the prosecutor.

Effect of fiat

(2) When a fiat is served on a prosecutor, the fiat establishes the exclusive authority of the Attorney General of Canada with respect to the conduct of the prosecution described in the fiat or any related process.

Fiat filed in court

(3) If a prosecution described in the fiat or any related process is conducted by or on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada, the fiat or a copy of the fiat shall be filed with the court in which the prosecution or process is conducted.

Fiat constitutes conclusive proof

(4) The fiat or a copy of the fiat

(a) is conclusive proof that the prosecution described in the fiat or any related process may be conducted by or on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada; and

(b) is admissible in evidence without proof of the signature or official character of the Attorney General of Canada.

Secure Administrative Review Proceedings

Definitions

38.2 The following definitions apply in this section and in sections 38.21 to 38.45.

federal proceeding means

(a) an application for judicial review or an appeal in the Federal Court of a decision of a federal board, commission or other tribunal, as defined in subsection 2\(1\) of the Federal Courts Act;

(b) an appeal in the Federal Court of Appeal from a decision of the Federal Court in a proceeding referred to in paragraph (a);

(c) an application for judicial review or an appeal in the Federal Court of Appeal of a decision of a federal board, commission or other tribunal referred to in paragraph (a);

or

(d) a proceeding referred to in section 6 or 11 of the Charities Registration (Security Information) Act.

It does not include any proceeding in the Federal Court or the Federal Court of Appeal that is in respect of a matter under the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act and does not include a proceeding in which information may be disclosed to either of those courts for a purpose listed in the schedule. (instance fédérale)

judge means

(a) in relation to a federal proceeding in the Federal Court of Appeal, not fewer than three judges of that court, each of whom is either the Chief Justice or a judge designated by the Chief Justice to conduct hearings under section 38.25, sitting together in an uneven number; and

(b) in relation to a federal proceeding in the Federal Court, the Chief Justice of that court or a judge designated by the Chief Justice to conduct hearings under section 38.25. (juge)

non-governmental party means a party to a federal proceeding who is neither the Attorney General of Canada nor represented by the Attorney General of Canada. (partie non gouvernementale) participant means a person who, in connection with a federal proceeding, is required to disclose, or expects to disclose or cause the disclosure of, information. (participant) potentially injurious information has the same meaning as in section 38. (renseignements potentiellement préjudiciables) sensitive information has the same meaning as in section 38. (renseignements sensibles) special counsel means a person appointed as a special counsel under section 38.34. (conseiller juridique spécial)

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Notice to Attorney General of Canada

38.21 (1) Every participant who, in connection with a federal proceeding, is required to disclose, or expects to disclose or cause the disclosure of, information that the participant believes is sensitive information or potentially injurious information must, as soon as possible, notify the Attorney General of Canada in writing of the possibility of the disclosure, and of the nature, date and place of the federal proceeding.

During federal proceeding

(2) Every participant who believes that sensitive information or potentially injurious information is about to be disclosed, whether by the participant or another person, in the course of a federal proceeding must raise the matter with the person presiding at the federal proceeding and notify the Attorney General of Canada in writing of the matter as soon as possible, whether or not notice has been given under subsection (1). In such circumstances, the person presiding at the federal proceeding must ensure that the information is not disclosed other than in accordance with this Act.

Notice of disclosure from official

(3) An official, other than a participant, who believes that sensitive information or potentially injurious information may be disclosed in connection with a federal proceeding may notify the Attorney General of Canada in writing of the possibility of the disclosure, and of the nature, date and place of the federal proceeding.

During federal proceeding

(4) An official, other than a participant, who believes that sensitive information or potentially injurious information is about to be disclosed in the course of a federal proceeding may raise the matter with the person presiding at the federal proceeding. If the official raises the matter, they must notify the Attorney General of Canada in writing of the matter as soon as possible, whether or not notice has been given under subsection (3), and the person presiding at the federal proceeding must ensure that the information is not disclosed other than in accordance with this Act.

Exception

(5) This section does not apply when

- (a) the information is disclosed by a person to their lawyer in connection with a federal proceeding, if the information is relevant to that proceeding;
- (b) the information is disclosed to enable the Attorney General of Canada, special counsel, a judge, or a court hearing an appeal from an order of the judge, to exercise their powers and perform their duties and functions under this section and sections 38.22 to 38.41 and 38.43; or
- (c) disclosure of the information is authorized by the government institution in which or for which the information was produced or, if the information was not produced in or for a government institution, the government institution in which it was first received.

Exception

(6) Subsections (1) and (2) do not apply to a participant if a government institution referred to in paragraph (5)(c) advises the participant that it is not necessary, in order to prevent disclosure of the information referred to in that paragraph, to give notice to the Attorney General of Canada under subsection (1) or to raise the matter under subsection (2) with the person presiding at the federal proceeding.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Disclosure prohibited

38.22 (1) Subject to subsection 38.21\(5\), it is prohibited for a person to disclose in connection with a federal proceeding

- (a) information about which notice is given under any of subsections 38.21(1) to (4);
- (b) the fact that notice is given to the Attorney General of Canada under any of subsections 38.21(1) to (4);
- (c) the fact that a motion is made under section 38.25 or that an appeal of an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) in connection with the motion is instituted; or
- (d) the fact that an agreement is entered into under section 38.24 or subsection 38.25\(6\).

Exceptions

(2) Disclosure of the information or the facts referred to in subsection (1) is not prohibited if

- (a) the Attorney General of Canada authorizes the disclosure in writing under section 38.23 or by agreement under section 38.24 or subsection 38.25\(6\); or
- (b) a judge authorizes the disclosure under subsection 38.26(1) or (2) or a court hearing an appeal from the order of the judge authorizes the disclosure, and either the time provided to appeal the order or the appeal court's judgment has expired or no further appeal is available.

Authorization by Attorney General of Canada

38.23 (1) The Attorney General of Canada may, at any time and subject to any conditions that they consider appropriate, authorize the disclosure of all or part of the information and facts the disclosure of which is prohibited under subsection 38.22(1).

Notice

(2) The Attorney General of Canada must, within 30 days after the day on which they first receive a notice about information under any of subsections 38.21(1) to (4), notify in writing every person who provided notice under those subsections about that information of their decision with respect to disclosure of the information.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Disclosure agreement

38.24 (1) The Attorney General of Canada and a person who has given notice under subsection 38.21(1) or (2) and is not required to disclose information but wishes, in connection with a federal proceeding, to disclose any facts referred to in paragraphs 38.22(1)(b) to (d) or information about which the person gave the notice, or to cause that disclosure, may, before the person brings a motion under paragraph 38.25\(2\)\(c\), enter into an agreement that permits the disclosure of part of the facts or information or disclosure of the facts or information subject to conditions.

No motion

(2) If an agreement is entered into under subsection (1), the person may not bring a motion under paragraph 38.25\(2\)\(c\) with respect to the information about which they gave notice to the Attorney General of Canada under subsection 38.21(1) or (2).

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Motion — Attorney General of Canada

38.25 (1) The Attorney General of Canada may, at any time and under any circumstances during a federal proceeding, bring a motion to a judge for an order with respect to the disclosure of information about which notice was given under any of subsections 38.21(1) to (4).

Motion — general

(2) If, with respect to information about which notice was given under any of subsections 38.21(1) to (4), the Attorney General of Canada does not provide notice of a decision in accordance with subsection 38.23\(2\) or, other than by an agreement under section 38.24, does not authorize the disclosure of the information or authorizes the disclosure of only part of the information or authorizes the disclosure subject to any conditions,

(a) the Attorney General of Canada must bring a motion to a judge for an order with respect to disclosure of the information if a person who gave notice under subsection 38.21(1) or (2) is a witness;

(b) a person, other than a witness, who is required to disclose information in connection with a federal proceeding must bring a motion to a judge for an order with respect to disclosure of the information; and

(c) a person who is not required to disclose information in connection with a federal proceeding but who wishes to disclose it or to cause its disclosure may bring a motion to a judge for an order with respect to disclosure of the information.

Notice to Attorney General of Canada

(3) A person who makes a motion under paragraph (2)(b) or (c) must provide notice of the motion to the Attorney General of Canada.

Court records

(4) Subject to paragraph (5)(b), a motion under this section is confidential. During the period when a motion is confidential, the Chief Administrator of the Courts Administration Service may, subject to section 38.31, take any measure that they consider appropriate to protect the confidentiality of the motion and the information to which it relates.

Procedure

- (5) As soon as they are seized of a motion under this section, the judge
- (a) must hear the representations of the Attorney General of Canada with respect to making the motion public;
 - (b) must, if they decide that the motion should be made public, make an order to that effect;
 - (c) must hear the representations of the Attorney General of Canada concerning the identity of all parties or witnesses whose interests may be affected by either the prohibition of disclosure or the conditions to which disclosure is subject and concerning the persons who should be given notice of any hearing of the matter;
 - (d) must decide whether it is necessary to hold any hearing of the matter;
 - (e) if they decide that a hearing should be held, must
 - (i) determine who should be given notice of the hearing,
 - (ii) order the Attorney General of Canada to notify those persons, and
 - (iii) determine the content and form of the notice; and
 - (f) may, if they consider it appropriate in the circumstances, give any person the opportunity to make representations.

Disclosure agreement

- (6) After the judge is seized of a motion made under paragraph (2)(c) or, in the case of an appeal from an order of the judge made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) in connection with that motion, before the appeal is disposed of,
- (a) the Attorney General of Canada and the person who made the motion may enter into an agreement that permits the disclosure of part of the facts referred to in paragraphs 38.22(1)(b) to (d) or part of the information or disclosure of the facts or information subject to conditions; and
 - (b) if an agreement is entered into, the judge's consideration of the motion or any hearing or appeal must be terminated.

Termination

- (7) Subject to subsection (6), after the judge is seized of a motion made under this section — or, in the case of an appeal from an order of the judge made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3), before the appeal is disposed of — and if the Attorney General of Canada authorizes the disclosure of all or part of the information or withdraws conditions to which the disclosure is subject, the judge's consideration of the motion or any hearing or appeal must be terminated in relation to that information, to the extent of the authorization or the withdrawal.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Disclosure order

38.26 (1) Unless the judge concludes that the disclosure of the information or facts referred to in subsection 38.22(1) would be injurious to international relations or national defence or national security, the judge may, by order, authorize the disclosure of the information or facts.

Disclosure — conditions

(2) If the judge concludes that the disclosure of the information or facts would be injurious to international relations or national defence or national security but that the public interest in disclosure outweighs in importance the public interest in non-disclosure, the judge may by order, after considering both the public interest in disclosure and the form of and conditions to disclosure that are most likely to limit any injury to international relations or national defence or national security resulting from disclosure, authorize the disclosure, subject to any conditions that the judge considers appropriate, of all or part of the information or facts, a summary of the information or a written admission of facts relating to the information.

Order confirming prohibition

(3) If the judge does not authorize disclosure under subsection (1) or (2), the judge must, by order, confirm the prohibition of disclosure.

When determination takes effect

(4) An order of the judge that authorizes disclosure does not take effect until the time provided or granted to appeal the order has expired or, if the order is appealed, the time provided or granted to appeal a judgment of an appeal court that confirms the order has expired and no further appeal from a judgment that confirms the order is available.

Evidence

(5) The judge may receive into evidence anything that, in the opinion of the judge, is reliable and appropriate, even if it would not otherwise be admissible under Canadian law, and may base their decision on that evidence.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Notice of order

38.27 The judge may order the Attorney General of Canada to give notice of an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) to any person who, in the opinion of the judge, should be notified.

Appeal to Federal Court of Appeal

38.28 (1) An order made by a judge of the Federal Court under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) may be appealed to the Federal Court of Appeal.

Limitation period for appeal

(2) An appeal must be brought within 15 days after the day on which the order is made or within any further time that the Federal Court of Appeal considers appropriate in the circumstances.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Limitation periods for appeals to Supreme Court of Canada

38.29 Despite any other Act of Parliament,

(a) an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) by the Federal Court of Appeal, or from a judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal in an appeal of such an order made by the Federal Court, must be made within 15 days after the day on which the order or judgment appealed from is made or within any further time that the Supreme Court of Canada considers appropriate in the circumstances; and

(b) if leave to appeal is granted, the appeal must be brought in the manner set out in subsection 60\(1\) of the Supreme Court Act but within the time specified by the Supreme Court of Canada.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Special rules — hearing in private

38.3 (1) The judge conducting a hearing under subsection 38.25\(5\) or the court hearing an appeal of an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) may make an order that the hearing be held, or the appeal be heard, in private.

Special rules — hearing in National Capital Region

(2) A hearing under subsection 38.25\(5\) or an appeal of an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) must, at the request of the Attorney General of Canada, be held or heard, as the case may be, in the National Capital Region, as described in the schedule to the National Capital Act.

Ex parte* representations

(3) The judge conducting a hearing under subsection 38.25\(5\) or the court hearing an appeal of an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) may give any person who makes representations under paragraph 38.25(5)(f), and must give the Attorney General of Canada, the opportunity to make representations ex parte.

Ex parte* representations — public hearing

(4) If a hearing under subsection 38.25\(5\) is held, or an appeal of an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) is heard, in public, any ex parte representations made in that hearing or appeal must be made in private.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Protective order

38.31 (1) The judge conducting a hearing under subsection 38.25\(5\) or the court hearing an appeal of an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) may make any order that the judge or the court considers appropriate in the circumstances to protect the confidentiality of any information to which the hearing or appeal relates.

Court records

(2) The court records relating to a hearing that is held, or an appeal that is heard, in private or to any ex parte representations are confidential. The judge or the court may order that the court records, or any part of them, relating to a private or public hearing or appeal be sealed and kept in a location to which the public has no access.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Judge seized

38.32 The judge who hears the motion brought under subsection 38.25(1) or (2) becomes seized of all matters in the federal proceeding.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Undisclosed information — federal proceeding

38.33 (1) In considering the merits of the federal proceeding, the judge may receive into evidence, and may base their decision on, any information the disclosure of which is prohibited as a result of the application of sections 38.21 to 38.26.

Representations and private hearing

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), the judge may — or, if the Attorney General of Canada so requests, the judge must —

- (a) receive ex parte representations; and
- (b) conduct a hearing in private and in the absence of the non-governmental party and their counsel.

Procedure

(3) In conducting a hearing under paragraph (2)(b), the judge must

- (a) deal with all matters as informally and expeditiously as the circumstances and considerations of fairness and natural justice permit;
- (b) without disclosing the information referred to in subsection (1), ensure that the non-governmental party to the federal proceeding is provided with a summary of the information that enables that party to be reasonably informed of the case; and
- (c) at the request of the Attorney General of Canada, hold the hearing in the National Capital Region, as described in the schedule to the National Capital Act.

Decision

(4) The judge may base any decision on the information referred to in subsection (1) even if a summary of that information has not been provided to the non-governmental party.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Special counsel

38.34 (1) The judge, in consideration of the principles of fairness and natural justice, may appoint a special counsel for the purposes of

- (a) a motion made under section 38.25 and the federal proceeding as a whole; and
- (b) any appeal of the motion or of the federal proceeding.

List

(2) The special counsel may be appointed from the list of persons referred to in subsection 85\(1\) of the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Special counsel's role

38.35 (1) A special counsel's role is to protect the interests of the non-governmental party when information and other evidence is presented, or representations are made in private and in the absence of the non-governmental party and their counsel.

Responsibilities

(2) A special counsel may

- (a) make oral and written representations with respect to the information or other evidence that has been filed with the court but has not been disclosed to the non-governmental party and their counsel;
- (b) participate in, and cross-examine witnesses who testify during, any part of the proceeding that is held in private and in the absence of the non-governmental party and their counsel; and
- (c) exercise, with the judge's authorization, any other powers that are necessary to protect the interests of the non-governmental party.

For greater certainty

(3) For greater certainty, the special counsel is not a party to the federal proceeding and the relationship between the special counsel and the non-governmental party is not that of lawyer and client.

Protection of communications with special counsel

(4) However, a communication between the non-governmental party or their counsel and the special counsel that, if the relationship were one of lawyer and client, would be subject to solicitor-client privilege or the professional secrecy of advocates is deemed to be subject to that privilege or professional secrecy. For greater certainty, in respect of that communication, the special counsel is not a compellable witness in any proceeding.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Immunity

38.36 A special counsel is not personally liable for anything they do or omit to do in good faith under this Act.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Obligation to provide information

38.37 The Attorney General of Canada must, within a period set by the judge, provide the special counsel with a copy of the information or other evidence that has been filed with the court in relation to the federal proceeding, including any information or other evidence that is not disclosed to the non-governmental party and their counsel.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Restrictions on communications — special counsel

38.38 (1) After the information or other evidence is received by the special counsel, the special counsel may, during the remainder of the federal proceeding and any appeal in respect of it, communicate with another person about the federal proceeding or the appeal only with the judge's or appeal court's authorization and subject to any conditions that the judge or appeal court considers appropriate.

Restrictions on communications — other persons

(2) If the special counsel is authorized to communicate with a person, the judge or appeal court may prohibit that person from communicating with anyone else about the federal proceeding or appeal during its remainder or may impose conditions with respect to such a communication during that period.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Disclosure and communication prohibited

38.39 With the exception of communications authorized by a judge or disclosures permitted under section 38.22, it is prohibited for a person to

(a) disclose information or other evidence that is disclosed to them under section 38.37 or 38.38 and that is treated as confidential by the judge; or

(b) communicate with another person about the content of any part of a federal proceeding, or an appeal in respect of it, that is heard in private and in the absence of the non-governmental party and their counsel.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Fairness

38.4 (1) The judge may, if they are of the opinion that they are unable to conduct a fair hearing because the non-governmental party is not reasonably informed of the case, make an order granting an appropriate remedy to the non-governmental party.

Potential orders

(2) The orders that may be made under subsection (1) include, but are not limited to, the following:

- (a) an order allowing or dismissing the federal proceeding; and
- (b) an order finding against any party on any issue relating to information the disclosure of which is prohibited.

For greater certainty

(3) For greater certainty, a remedy referred to in subsection (1) must not include the disclosure of information ordered not to be disclosed under subsection 38.26\(3\) or 38.41\(4\).

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Certificate of Attorney General of Canada

38.41 (1) The Attorney General of Canada may personally issue a certificate that prohibits the disclosure of information in connection with a federal proceeding for the purpose of protecting information obtained in confidence from, or in relation to, a foreign entity as defined in subsection 2(1) of the Foreign Interference and Security of Information Act or for the purpose of protecting national defence or national security. The certificate may only be issued after an order or decision that would result in the disclosure of the information to be subject to the certificate has been made under this or any other Act of Parliament.

Service of certificate

(2) The Attorney General of Canada must cause a copy of the certificate to be served on

- (a) the person presiding or designated to preside at the federal proceeding to which the information relates or, if no person is designated, the person who has the authority to designate a person to preside;
- (b) every party to the federal proceeding;
- (c) every person who gives notice under section 38.21 in connection with the federal proceeding;
- (d) every person who, in connection with the federal proceeding, may disclose, is required to disclose or may cause the disclosure of the information about which the Attorney General of Canada has received notice under section 38.21;
- (e) every party to a hearing under subsection 38.25\(5\) or to an appeal of an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) in relation to the information;

- (f) any court that hears an appeal from an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3) in relation to the information; and
- (g) any other person who, in the opinion of the Attorney General of Canada, should be served.

Filing of certificate

(3) The Attorney General of Canada must cause a copy of the certificate to be filed in the registry of the Federal Court of Appeal or the Federal Court, as the case may be, and the registry of any court that hears an appeal from an order made under any of subsections 38.26(1) to (3).

Effect of certificate

(4) If the Attorney General of Canada issues a certificate, then, despite any other provision of this Act, disclosure of the information is prohibited in accordance with the terms of the certificate.

Statutory Instruments Act does not apply

(5) The Statutory Instruments Act does not apply to a certificate issued under subsection (1).

Publication

(6) The Attorney General of Canada must, without delay after a certificate is issued, cause the certificate to be published in the Canada Gazette.

Restriction

(7) The certificate and any matters arising out of it are not subject to review or to be restrained, prohibited, removed, set aside or otherwise dealt with, except in accordance with section 38.42.

Expiry

(8) The certificate expires 10 years after the day on which it is issued and may be reissued.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Application for review of certificate

38.42 (1) A party to the federal proceeding referred to in section 38.41 may apply to the Federal Court of Appeal for an order varying or cancelling a certificate issued under that section on the grounds referred to in subsection (7) or (8), as the case may be.

Notice to Attorney General of Canada

(2) The applicant must give notice of the application to the Attorney General of Canada.

Single judge

(3) Despite paragraph (a) of the definition judge in section 38.2 and section 16 of the Federal Courts Act, for the purposes of the application, the Federal Court of Appeal consists of a single judge of that Court.

Admissible information

(4) In considering the application, the judge may receive into evidence anything that, in the opinion of the judge, is reliable and appropriate, even if it would not otherwise be admissible under Canadian law, and may base a determination made under any of subsections (7) to (9) on that evidence.

Special rules and protective order

(5) Sections 38.3 and 38.31 apply, with any necessary modifications, to an application made under subsection (1).

Expedited consideration

(6) The judge must consider the application as soon as reasonably possible, but not later than 10 days after the application is made under subsection (1).

Varying certificate

(7) If the judge determines that some of the information subject to the certificate does not relate either to information obtained in confidence from, or in relation to, a foreign entity, or to national defence or national security, the judge must make an order varying the certificate accordingly.

Cancelling certificate

(8) If the judge determines that none of the information subject to the certificate relates to information obtained in confidence from, or in relation to, a foreign entity, or to national defence or national security, the judge must make an order cancelling the certificate.

Confirming certificate

(9) If the judge determines that all of the information subject to the certificate relates to information obtained in confidence from, or in relation to, a foreign entity, or to national defence or national security, the judge must make an order confirming the certificate.

Determination is final

(10) Despite any other Act of Parliament, a determination of a judge under any of subsections (7) to (9) is final and is not subject to review or appeal by any court.

Publication

(11) If a certificate is varied or cancelled under this section, the Attorney General of Canada must, as soon as possible after the decision of the judge and in a manner that mentions the original publication of the certificate, cause to be published in the Canada Gazette

(a) the certificate as varied under subsection (7); or

(b) a notice of the cancellation of the certificate under subsection (8).

Definition of foreign entity

(12) In this section, foreign entity has the same meaning as in subsection 2(1) of the Foreign Interference and Security of Information Act.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Regulations

38.43 The Governor in Council may make any regulations that the Governor in Council considers necessary for carrying out the purposes and provisions of sections 38.2 to 38.42, including regulations respecting the notices and certificates.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Annual report

38.44 The report referred to in section 38.17 must also set out the operation of section 38.41 for the previous year and include the number of certificates issued under that section.

2024, c. 16, s. 84.

Rules

38.45 (1) The Chief Justice of the Federal Court of Appeal and the Chief Justice of the Federal Court may each establish a committee to make rules governing the practice and procedure in relation to the participation of special counsel in federal proceedings before the court over which they preside. The rules are binding despite any rule of practice that would otherwise apply.

Composition of committees

(2) Each committee established is to be composed of the appropriate Chief Justice, the Attorney General of Canada or one or more representatives of the Attorney General of Canada, and one or more members of the bar of any province who have experience in a field of law relevant to federal proceedings. Each Chief Justice may also designate additional members of their committee.

Chief Justice to preside

(3) Each Chief Justice, or a member designated by them, is to preside over their committee.

Confidences of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada

Objection relating to a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council

39 (1) Where a minister of the Crown or the Clerk of the Privy Council objects to the disclosure of information before a court, person or body with jurisdiction to compel the production of information by certifying in writing that the information constitutes a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, disclosure of the information shall be refused without examination or hearing of the information by the court, person or body.

Definition

(2) For the purpose of subsection (1), a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada includes, without restricting the generality thereof, information contained in

(a) a memorandum the purpose of which is to present proposals or recommendations to Council;

(b) a discussion paper the purpose of which is to present background explanations, analyses of problems or policy options to Council for consideration by Council in making decisions;

(c) an agenda of Council or a record recording deliberations or decisions of Council;

(d) a record used for or reflecting communications or discussions between ministers of the Crown on matters relating to the making of government decisions or the formulation of government policy;

(e) a record the purpose of which is to brief Ministers of the Crown in relation to matters that are brought before, or are proposed to be brought before, Council or that are the subject of communications or discussions referred to in paragraph (d); and

(f) draft legislation.

Definition of Council

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), Council means the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, committees of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Cabinet and committees of Cabinet.

Exception

(4) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of

(a) a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada that has been in existence for more than twenty years; or

(b) a discussion paper described in paragraph (2)(b)

(i) if the decisions to which the discussion paper relates have been made public, or

(ii) where the decisions have not been made public, if four years have passed since the decisions were made.

Journalistic Sources

Definitions

39.1 (1) The following definitions apply in this section.

document has the same meaning as in section 487.011 of the Criminal Code.
(document)

journalist means a person whose main occupation is to contribute directly, either regularly or occasionally, for consideration, to the collection, writing or production of information for dissemination by the media, or anyone who assists such a person.
(journaliste) journalistic source means a source that confidentially transmits information to a journalist on the journalist's undertaking not to divulge the identity of the source, whose anonymity is essential to the relationship between the journalist and the source. (source journalistique)

Objection

(2) Subject to subsection (7), a journalist may object to the disclosure of information or a document before a court, person or body with the authority to compel the disclosure of information on the grounds that the information or document identifies or is likely to identify a journalistic source.

Former journalist

(3) For the purposes of subsections (2) and (7), journalist includes an individual who was a journalist when information that identifies or is likely to identify the journalistic source was transmitted to that individual.

Power of court, person or body

(4) The court, person or body may raise the application of subsection (2) on their own initiative.

Objection of court, person or body

(5) When an objection or the application of subsection (2) is raised, the court, person or body shall ensure that the information or document is not disclosed other than in accordance with this section.

Observations

(6) Before determining the question, the court, person or body must give the parties and interested persons a reasonable opportunity to present observations.

Authorization

(7) The court, person or body may authorize the disclosure of information or a document only if they consider that

(a) the information or document cannot be produced in evidence by any other reasonable means; and

(b) the public interest in the administration of justice outweighs the public interest in preserving the confidentiality of the journalistic source, having regard to, among other things,

(i) the importance of the information or document to a central issue in the proceeding,

(ii) freedom of the press, and

(iii) the impact of disclosure on the journalistic source and the journalist.

Conditions

(8) An authorization under subsection (7) may contain any conditions that the court, person or body considers appropriate to protect the identity of the journalistic source.

Burden of proof

(9) A person who requests the disclosure has the burden of proving that the conditions set out in subsection (7) are fulfilled.

Appeal

(10) An appeal lies from a determination under subsection (7)

(a) to the Federal Court of Appeal from a determination of the Federal Court;

(b) to the court of appeal of a province from a determination of a superior court of the province;

(c) to the Federal Court from a determination of a court, person or body vested with power to compel production by or under an Act of Parliament if the court, person or body is not established under a law of a province; or

(d) to the trial division or trial court of the superior court of the province within which the court, person or body exercises its jurisdiction, in any other case.

Limitation period for appeal

(11) An appeal under subsection (10) shall be brought within 10 days after the date of the determination appealed from or within any further time that the court having jurisdiction to hear the appeal considers appropriate in the circumstances.

Hearing in summary way

(12) An appeal under subsection (10) shall be heard and determined without delay and in a summary way.

Provincial Laws of Evidence

How applicable

40 In all proceedings over which Parliament has legislative authority, the laws of evidence in force in the province in which those proceedings are taken, including the laws of proof of service of any warrant, summons, subpoena or other document, subject to this Act and other Acts of Parliament, apply to those proceedings.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 37.

Statutory Declarations

Solemn declaration

41 Any judge, notary public, justice of the peace, provincial court judge, recorder, mayor or commissioner authorized to take affidavits to be used either in the provincial or federal courts, or any other functionary authorized by law to administer an oath in any matter, may receive the solemn declaration of any person voluntarily making the declaration before him, in the following form, in attestation of the execution of any writing, deed or instrument, or of the truth of any fact, or of any account rendered in writing:

I, _____, solemnly declare that (state the fact or facts declared to), and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath.

Declared before me _____ at _____ this _____ day of _____ 19_____

Insurance Proofs

Affidavits, etc.

42 Any affidavit, solemn affirmation or declaration required by any insurance company authorized by law to do business in Canada, in regard to any loss of or injury to person, property or life insured or assured therein, may be taken before any commissioner or other person authorized to take affidavits, before any justice of the peace or before any notary public for any province, and the commissioner, person, justice of the peace or notary public is required to take the affidavit, solemn affirmation or declaration.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 39.

Part II

Application

Foreign courts

43 This Part applies to the taking of evidence relating to proceedings in courts out of Canada.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 40.

Interpretation

Definitions

44 In this Part,

cause includes a proceeding against a criminal; (cause)

court means any superior court in any province; (tribunal)

judge means any judge of any superior court in any province; (juge)

oath includes a solemn affirmation in cases in which, by the law of Canada, or of a province, as the case may be, a solemn affirmation is allowed instead of an oath. (serment)

R.S., c. E-10, s. 41; 1984, c. 40, s. 27.

Construction

45 This Part shall not be so construed as to interfere with the right of legislation of the legislature of any province requisite or desirable for the carrying out of the objects hereof.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 42.

Procedure

Order for examination of witness in Canada

46 (1) If, on an application for that purpose, it is made to appear to any court or judge that any court or tribunal outside Canada, before which any civil, commercial or criminal matter is pending, is desirous of obtaining the testimony in relation to that matter of a party or witness within the jurisdiction of the first mentioned court, of the court to which the judge belongs or of the judge, the court or judge may, in its or their discretion, order the examination on oath on interrogatories, or otherwise, before any person or persons named in the order, of that party or witness accordingly, and by the same or any subsequent order may command the attendance of that party or witness for the purpose of being examined, and for the production of any writings or other documents mentioned in the order and of any other writings or documents relating to the matter in question that are in the possession or power of that party or witness.

Video links, etc.

(2) For greater certainty, testimony for the purposes of subsection (1) may be given by means of technology that permits the virtual presence of the party or witness before the court or tribunal outside Canada or that permits that court or tribunal, and the parties, to hear and examine the party or witness.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 46; 1999, c. 18, s. 89.

Enforcement of the order

47 On the service on the party or witness of an order referred to in section 46, and of an appointment of a time and place for the examination of the party or witness signed by the person named in the order for taking the examination, or, if more than one person is named, by one of the persons named, and on payment or tender of the like conduct money as is properly payable on attendance at a trial, the order may be enforced in like manner as an order made by the court or judge in a cause pending in that court or before that judge.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 44.

Expenses and conduct money

48 Every person whose attendance is required in the manner described in section 47 is entitled to the like conduct money and payment for expenses and loss of time as on attendance at a trial.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 45.

Administering oath

49 On any examination of parties or witnesses, under the authority of any order made in pursuance of this Part, the oath shall be administered by the person authorized to take the examination, or, if more than one person is authorized, by one of those persons.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 46.

Right of refusal to answer or produce document

50 (1) Any person examined under any order made under this Part has the like right to refuse to answer questions tending to criminate himself, or other questions, as a party or witness, as the case may be, would have in any cause pending in the court by which, or by a judge whereof, the order is made.

Laws about witnesses to apply — video links etc.

(1.1) Despite subsection (1), when a party or witness gives evidence under subsection 46\(2\), the evidence shall be given as though they were physically before the court or tribunal outside Canada, for the purposes of the laws relating to evidence and procedure but only to the extent that giving the evidence would not disclose information otherwise protected by the Canadian law of non-disclosure of information or privilege.

Contempt of court in Canada

(1.2) When a party or witness gives evidence under subsection 46\(2\), the Canadian law relating to contempt of court applies with respect to a refusal by the party or witness to answer a question or to produce a writing or document referred to in subsection 46(1), as ordered under that subsection by the court or judge.

Nature of right

(2) No person shall be compelled to produce, under any order referred to in subsection (1), any writing or other document that he could not be compelled to produce at a trial of such a cause.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 50; 1999, c. 18, s. 90.

Rules of court

51 (1) The court may frame rules and orders in relation to procedure and to the evidence to be produced in support of the application for an order for examination of parties and witnesses under this Part, and generally for carrying this Part into effect.

Letters rogatory

(2) In the absence of any order in relation to the evidence to be produced in support of the application referred to in subsection (1), letters rogatory from a court or tribunal outside Canada in which the civil, commercial or criminal matter is pending, are deemed and taken to be sufficient evidence in support of the application.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 51; 1999, c. 18, s. 91.

Part III

Application

Application of this Part

52 This Part extends to the following classes of persons:

- (a) officers of any of Her Majesty's diplomatic or consular services while performing their functions in any foreign country, including ambassadors, envoys, ministers, charges d'affaires, counsellors, secretaries, attaches, consuls general, consuls, vice-consuls, pro-consuls, consular agents, acting consuls general, acting consuls, acting vice-consuls and acting consular agents;
- (b) officers of the Canadian diplomatic, consular and representative services while performing their functions in any foreign country or in any part of the Commonwealth and Dependent Territories other than Canada, including, in addition to the diplomatic and consular officers mentioned in paragraph (a), high commissioners, permanent delegates, acting high commissioners, acting permanent delegates, counsellors and secretaries;
- (c) Canadian Government Trade Commissioners and Assistant Canadian Government Trade Commissioners while performing their functions in any foreign country or in any part of the Commonwealth and Dependent Territories other than Canada;

(d) honorary consular officers of Canada while performing their functions in any foreign country or in any part of the Commonwealth and Dependent Territories other than Canada;

(e) judicial officials in a foreign country in respect of oaths, affidavits, solemn affirmations, declarations or similar documents that the official is authorized to administer, take or receive; and

(f) persons locally engaged and designated by the Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs or any other person authorized by that Deputy Minister while performing their functions in any foreign country or in any part of the Commonwealth and Dependent Territories other than Canada.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 52; 1994, c. 44, s. 92; 1997, c. 18, s. 118.

Oaths and Solemn Affirmations

Oaths taken abroad

53 Oaths, affidavits, solemn affirmations or declarations administered, taken or received outside Canada by any person mentioned in section 52 are as valid and effectual and are of the like force and effect to all intents and purposes as if they had been administered, taken or received in Canada by a person authorized to administer, take or receive oaths, affidavits, solemn affirmations or declarations therein that are valid and effectual under this Act.

R.S., c. E-10, s. 50.

Documentary Evidence

Documents to be admitted in evidence

54 (1) Any document that purports to have affixed, impressed or subscribed on it or to it the signature of any person authorized by any of paragraphs 52\(a\) to \(d\) to administer, take or receive oaths, affidavits, solemn affirmations or declarations, together with their seal or with the seal or stamp of their office, or the office to which the person is attached, in testimony of any oath, affidavit, solemn affirmation or declaration being administered, taken or received by the person, shall be admitted in evidence, without proof of the seal or stamp or of the person's signature or official character.

Status of statements

(2) An affidavit, solemn affirmation, declaration or other similar statement taken or received in a foreign country by an official referred to in paragraph 52\(e\) shall be admitted in evidence without proof of the signature or official character of the official appearing to have signed the affidavit, solemn affirmation, declaration or other statement.

R.S., 1985, c. C-5, s. 54; 1994, c. 44, s. 93.

Commission

26 (1) The Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission is hereby established to inquire into the adequacy of the salaries and other amounts payable under this Act and into the adequacy of judges' benefits generally.

Factors to be considered

(1.1) In conducting its inquiry, the Commission shall consider

(a) the prevailing economic conditions in Canada, including the cost of living, and the overall economic and current financial position of the federal government;

(b) the role of financial security of the judiciary in ensuring judicial independence;

(c) the need to attract outstanding candidates to the judiciary; and

(d) any other objective criteria that the Commission considers relevant.

Quadrennial inquiry

(2) The Commission shall commence an inquiry on June 1, 2020, and on June 1 of every fourth year after 2020, and shall submit a report containing its recommendations to the Minister within nine months after the date of commencement.

Postponement

(3) The Commission may, with the consent of the Minister and the judiciary, postpone the date of commencement of a quadrennial inquiry.

Other reports

(4) In addition to its quadrennial inquiry, the Minister may at any time refer to the Commission for its inquiry a matter mentioned in subsection (1). The Commission shall submit to that Minister a report containing its recommendations within a period fixed by the Minister after consultation with the Commission.

Extension of time

(5) The Governor in Council may, on the request of the Commission, extend the time for submission of a report under subsection (2) or (4).

Report of Commission

(6) The Minister shall table a copy of the report in each House of Parliament on any of the first ten days on which that House is sitting after the Minister receives the report.

Referral to Committee

(6.1) A report that is tabled in each House of Parliament under subsection (6) shall, on the day it is tabled or, if the House is not sitting on that day, on the day that House next sits, be referred by that House to a committee of that House that is designated or established by that House for the purpose of considering matters relating to justice.

Report by Committee

(6.2) A committee referred to in subsection (6.1) may conduct inquiries or public hearings in respect of a report referred to it under that subsection, and if it does so, the committee shall, not later than ninety sitting days after the report is referred to it, report its findings to the House that designated or established the committee.

Definition of sitting day

(6.3) For the purpose of subsection (6.2), sitting day means a day on which the House of Commons or the Senate, as the case may be, sits.

Response to report

(7) The Minister shall respond to a report of the Commission within four months after receiving it. Following that response, if applicable, he or she shall, within a reasonable period, cause to be prepared and introduced a bill to implement the response.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 26; 1996, c. 2, s. 1; 1998, c. 30, s. 5; 2001, c. 7, s. 17\(F\); 2012, c. 31, s. 212; 2017, c. 20, s. 213; 2023, c. 18, s. 13.

Nomination

26.1 (1) The Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission consists of three members appointed by the Governor in Council as follows:

- (a) one person nominated by the judiciary;
- (b) one person nominated by the Minister; and
- (c) one person, who shall act as chairperson, nominated by the members who are nominated under paragraphs (a) and (b).

Tenure and removal

(2) Each member holds office during good behaviour, and may be removed for cause at any time by the Governor in Council.

Term of office

(3) The term of office for the initial members appointed to the Commission ends on August 31, 2003. The members subsequently appointed hold office for a term of four years.

Continuance of duties

(4) Where the term of a member ends, other than in the case of removal for cause, the member may carry out and complete any duties of the members in respect of a matter that was referred to the Commission under subsection 26\(4\) while he or she was a member.

Reappointment

(5) A member is eligible to be reappointed for one further term if re-nominated in accordance with subsection (1).

Absence or incapacity

(6) In the event of the absence or incapacity of a member, the Governor in Council may appoint as a substitute temporary member a person nominated in accordance with subsection (1) to hold office during the absence or incapacity.

Vacancy

(7) If the office of a member becomes vacant during the term of the member, the Governor in Council shall appoint a person nominated in accordance with subsection (1) to hold office as a member for the remainder of the term.

Quorum

(8) A quorum of the Commission consists of all three members.

Remuneration

(9) The members of the Commission and persons carrying out duties under subsection (4) shall be paid

- (a) the fees fixed by the Governor in Council; and

(b) such travel and living expenses incurred in the course of their duties while away from their ordinary place of residence as are fixed by the Governor in Council.

Compensation

(10) The members of the Commission and persons carrying out duties under subsection (4) are deemed to be employed in the federal public administration for the purposes of the Government Employees Compensation Act and any regulations made under section 9 of the Aeronautics Act.

Definition of judiciary

26.11 In sections 26 and 26.1, judiciary includes associate judges.

2017, c. 20, s. 214; 2022, c. 10, s. 353; 2022, c. 10, s. 371.

Personnel

26.2 (1) The Commission may engage the services of any persons necessary for the proper conduct of the Commission.

Presumption

(2) No person engaged under subsection (1) shall, as a result, be considered to be employed in the federal public administration.

1998, c. 30, s. 5; 2003, c. 22, s. 224\(E\).

Costs payable

26.3 (1) The Commission may identify those representatives of the judiciary participating in an inquiry of the Commission to whom costs shall be paid in accordance with this section.

Entitlement to payment of costs

(2) A representative of the judiciary identified under subsection (1) who participates in an inquiry of the Commission is entitled to be paid, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, two thirds of the costs determined under subsection (3) in respect of his or her participation.

Determination of costs

(3) An assessment officer of the Federal Court, other than a judge or an associate judge, shall determine the amount of costs, on a solicitor-and-client basis, in accordance with the Federal Courts Rules.

Application

(4) This section applies to costs incurred in relation to participation in any inquiry of the Commission conducted after September 1, 1999.

Costs payable to representative of associate judges

26.4 (1) The Commission may identify one representative of the associate judges of the Federal Court and one representative of the associate judges of the Tax Court of Canada participating in an inquiry of the Commission to whom costs shall be paid in accordance with this section.

Entitlement to payment of costs

(2) The representatives identified under subsection (1) are entitled to be paid, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, 95% of the costs determined under subsection (3) in respect of their participation.

Determination of costs

(3) An assessment officer of the Federal Court, other than a judge or an associate judge, shall determine the amount of costs, on a solicitor-and-client basis, in accordance with the Federal Courts Rules.

Application

(4) This section applies to costs incurred as of April 1, 2015 in relation to participation in any inquiry of the Commission.

2014, c. 39, s. 321; 2017, c. 20, s. 215; 2022, c. 10, s. 354; 2022, c. 10, s. 371.

Special and Representational Allowances

Allowance for incidental expenditures actually incurred

27 (1) On and after April 1, 2020, every judge in receipt of a salary under this Act is entitled to be paid, up to a maximum of $7,500 for each year, for reasonable incidental expenditures that the fit and proper execution of the office of judge may require, to the extent that the judge has actually incurred the expenditures and is not entitled to be reimbursed for them under any other provision of this Act.

Allowance for incidental expenditures by associate judges

(1.1) On and after April 1, 2020, every associate judge is entitled to be paid, up to a maximum of $7,500 for each year, for reasonable incidental expenditures that the fit and proper execution of the office of associate judge may require, to the extent that the associate judge has actually incurred the expenditures and is not entitled to be reimbursed for them under any other provision of this Act.

Additional allowance for northern judges

(2) On and after April 1, 2004, there shall be paid to each judge of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and Labrador resident in Labrador and each judge of the Supreme Court of Yukon, the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories and the Nunavut Court of Justice who is in receipt of a salary under this Act, in addition to the allowance provided by subsection (1), a non-accountable yearly allowance of $12,000 as compensation for the higher cost of living in Labrador and in the territories.

Allowance — medical or dental treatment

(2.1) If a judge referred to in subsection (2) is required to travel for the purpose of receiving a non-elective medical or dental treatment that is required without delay and unavailable at or in the immediate vicinity of the place where the judge resides, the judge is entitled to be paid an allowance for reasonable expenses actually incurred while travelling for that purpose, to the extent that the judge may not be reimbursed for them under any other provision of this Act.

Additional allowance — Federal Courts and Tax Court of Canada

(3) There shall be paid to every judge of the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court and the Tax Court of Canada who is in receipt of a salary under this Act, in addition to the allowance provided by subsection (1), a non-accountable yearly allowance of $2,000 as compensation for special incidental expenditures inherent in the exercise of their office as judge.

(3.1) [Repealed, 2002, c. 8, s. 86]

Continuance in force of subsection (3)

(4) Subsection (3) shall continue in force for so long as subsection 57\(2\) continues in force in relation to judges of superior courts in the provinces.

Idem

(5) The additional allowances described in subsections (2) and (3) are deemed not to be travel or personal or living expense allowances expressly fixed by this Act.

Representational allowance

(6) On and after April 1, 2020, each of the following judges is entitled to be paid, as a representational allowance, reasonable travel and other expenses actually incurred by the judge or the spouse or common-law partner of the judge in discharging the special extra-judicial obligations and responsibilities that devolve on the judge, to the extent that those expenses may not be reimbursed under any other provision of this Act and their aggregate amount does not exceed in any year the maximum amount indicated below in respect of the judge:

- (a) the Chief Justice of Canada, $25,000;
- (b) each puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, $15,000;
- (c) the Chief Justice of the Federal Court of Appeal and each chief justice described in sections 12 to 21 as the chief justice of a province, $17,500;
- (d) each other chief justice referred to in sections 10 to 21, $15,000;

(e) the Chief Justices of the Court of Appeal of Yukon, the Court of Appeal of the Northwest Territories, the Court of Appeal of Nunavut, the Supreme Court of Yukon, the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories and the Nunavut Court of Justice, $15,000 each;

(f) the Chief Justice of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada, $15,000; and

(g) the Senior Judge of the Family Court, and each regional senior judge, of the Superior Court of Justice in and for the Province of Ontario, $7,500.

(7) [Repealed, 2006, c. 11, s. 6]

Judge acting in place of recipient

(8) Where any justice or judge mentioned in subsection (6), other than a puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, is unable to discharge the obligations and responsibilities referred to in that subsection or the office of that justice or judge is vacant, the judge who acts in the place of that justice or judge is entitled to be paid the representational allowance provided for that justice or judge.

Definition of chief justice

(9) In this section, except in paragraphs (6)(a) and (c), chief justice includes a senior associate chief justice and an associate chief justice.

Supernumerary Judges and Associate Judges

Federal Courts and Tax Court

28 (1) If a judge of the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada notifies the Minister of his or her election to give up regular judicial duties and hold office only as a supernumerary judge, the judge shall hold the office of supernumerary judge of that Court from the time notice is given until he or she reaches the age of retirement, resigns or is removed from or otherwise ceases to hold office, or until the expiry of 10 years from the date of the election, whichever occurs earlier, and shall be paid the salary annexed to that office.

Restriction on election

(2) An election may be made under subsection (1) only by a judge

(a) who has continued in judicial office for at least 15 years and whose combined age and number of years in judicial office is not less than 80; or

(b) who has attained the age of 70 years and has continued in judicial office for at least 10 years.

Duties of judge

(3) A judge who has made the election referred to in subsection (1) shall hold himself or herself available to perform such special judicial duties as may be assigned to the judge

(a) by the Chief Justice of the Federal Court of Appeal, if the judge is a judge of that Court;

(b) by the Chief Justice or the Associate Chief Justice of the Federal Court, if the judge is a judge of that Court; or

(c) by the Chief Justice or the Associate Chief Justice of the Tax Court of Canada, if the judge is a judge of that Court.

Salary of supernumerary judge

(4) The salary of each supernumerary judge of the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada is the salary annexed to the office of a judge of that Court, other than the office of a Chief Justice or Associate Chief Justice.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 28; R.S., 1985, c. 16 (3rd Supp.), s. 3; 2002, c. 8, s. 87; 2006, c. 11, s. 7; 2018, c. 12, s. 301; 2023, c. 18, s. 13.

Provincial superior courts

29 (1) If the legislature of a province has enacted legislation establishing for each office of judge of a superior court of the province the additional office of supernumerary judge of the court, and a judge of that court notifies the Minister and the attorney general of the province of the judge's election to give up regular judicial duties and hold office only as a supernumerary judge, the judge shall hold the office of supernumerary judge from the time notice is given until he or she reaches the age of retirement, resigns or is removed from or otherwise ceases to hold office, or until the expiry of 10 years from the date of the election, whichever occurs earlier, and shall be paid the salary annexed to that office.

Conditions

(2) An election under subsection (1) may only be made by a judge

(a) who has continued in judicial office for at least 15 years and whose combined age and number of years in judicial office is not less than 80; or

(b) who has attained the age of 70 years and has continued in judicial office for at least 10 years.

Duties of judge

(3) A judge who has made the election referred to in subsection (1) shall hold himself or herself available to perform such special judicial duties as may be assigned to the judge

(a) by the chief justice, senior associate chief justice or associate chief justice, as the case may be, of the court of which the judge is a member or, where that court is constituted with divisions, of the division of which the judge is a member; or

(b) in the case of a supernumerary judge of the Supreme Court of Yukon, the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories or the Nunavut Court of Justice, by the Chief Justice of that Court.

Salary of supernumerary judge

(4) The salary of each supernumerary judge of a superior court is the salary annexed to the office of a judge of that court other than a chief justice, senior associate chief justice or associate chief justice.

Reference to attorney general of a province

(5) In this section, a reference to the attorney general of a province shall be construed in relation to Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut as a reference to the Commissioner of that territory.

(6) [Repealed, 2017, c. 33, s. 234]

Supernumerary associate judges

30 (1) If an associate judge notifies the Minister of his or her election to give up regular judicial duties and hold office only as a supernumerary associate judge, the associate judge shall hold the office of supernumerary associate judge from the time notice is given until he or she reaches the age of retirement, resigns or is removed from or otherwise ceases to hold office, or until the end of five years from the date of the election, whichever occurs earlier, and shall be paid the salary annexed to that office.

Restriction on election

(2) An election may be made under subsection (1) only by an associate judge

(a) who has continued in judicial office for at least 15 years and whose combined age and number of years in judicial office is not less than 80; or

(b) who has attained the age of 70 years and has continued in judicial office for at least 10 years.

Duties of associate judge

(3) An associate judge who has made the election referred to in subsection (1) shall hold himself or herself available to perform such special judicial duties as may be assigned to the associate judge by the chief justice or the associate chief justice of the court to which he or she is appointed.

Salary of supernumerary associate judge

(4) The salary of each supernumerary associate judge is the salary annexed to the office of an associate judge.

Deemed election and notice

(5) For the purposes of subsection (1), if an associate judge gives notice to the Minister of the associate judge's election to be effective on a future day specified in the notice, being a day on which the associate judge will be eligible to make the election, the associate judge is, effective on that day, deemed to have elected and given notice of the election on that day.

Chief Justice Continuing as Judge

Election of Chief or Associate Chief to change to duties of judge only

31 (1) If the Chief Justice of the Federal Court of Appeal or the Chief Justice or Associate Chief Justice of the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada has notified the Minister of his or her election to cease to perform the duties of that office and to perform only the duties of a judge, he or she shall then hold only the office of a judge of the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada, as the case may be, and shall be paid the salary annexed to the office of a judge of that Court, until he or she reaches the age of retirement, resigns or is removed from or otherwise ceases to hold office.

Restriction on election

(2) The Chief Justice of the Federal Court of Appeal or the Chief Justice or Associate Chief Justice of the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada may make the election referred to in subsection (1) only if he or she has continued in the office for at least five years or has continued in the office and another office referred to in this subsection for a total of at least five years.

Duties of judge

(3) The Chief Justice of the Federal Court of Appeal or the Chief Justice or Associate Chief Justice of the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada who has made the election referred to in subsection (1) shall perform all of the judicial duties normally performed by a judge of the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada, as the case may be.

Salary of judge

(4) The salary of the Chief Justice of the Federal Court of Appeal or the Chief Justice or Associate Chief Justice of the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada who has made the election referred to in subsection (1) is the salary annexed to the office of a judge (other than the Chief Justice) of the Federal Court of Appeal, a judge (other than the Chief Justice or the Associate Chief Justice) of the Federal Court or a judge (other than the Chief Justice or the Associate Chief Justice) of the Tax Court of Canada, as the case may be.

Election of Chief Justice of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada

31.1 If the Chief Justice of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada notifies the Minister of their election to cease to perform the duties of that office and to perform only the duties of a judge of the court on which they serve, they shall, after giving that notice, hold only the office of a judge and shall be paid the salary annexed to the office of a judge, until they reach the age of retirement, resign or are removed from or otherwise cease to hold office.

2017, c. 20, s. 218; 2023, c. 18, s. 13.

Election to cease to perform duties of chief justice of provincial superior court

32 (1) Where the legislature of a province has enacted legislation establishing for each office of chief justice of a superior court of the province such additional offices of judge of that court as are required for the purposes of this section, and a chief justice of that court has notified the Minister and the attorney general of the province of his or her election to cease to perform the duties of chief justice and to perform only the duties of a judge, the chief justice shall thereupon hold only the office of a judge, other than a chief justice, of that court and shall be paid the salary annexed to the office of a judge, other than a chief justice, of that court until he or she reaches the age of retirement, resigns or is removed from or otherwise ceases to hold office.

Restriction on election

(2) A chief justice of a superior court of a province may make the election referred to in subsection (1) only if the chief justice has continued in the office of chief justice, senior associate chief justice or associate chief justice of a superior court of the province or a division thereof, or in two or more such offices, for at least five years.

Duties of judge

(3) A chief justice of a superior court of a province who has made the election referred to in subsection (1) shall perform all of the judicial duties normally performed by a judge, other than the chief justice, of that court.

Salary of judge

(4) The salary of each chief justice of a superior court of a province who has made the election referred to in subsection (1) is the salary annexed to the office of a judge of that court, other than a chief justice.

Definition of chief justice and chief justice of a superior court of a province

(5) In this section, chief justice or chief justice of a superior court of a province means a chief justice, senior associate chief justice or associate chief justice of such a court or, where the court is constituted with divisions, of a division thereof.

Judges of the Superior Court of Justice of Ontario

38 A judge of the Superior Court of Justice in and for the Province of Ontario who, for the purpose of performing any function or duty in that capacity, attends at any judicial centre within the region for which the judge was appointed or assigned, other than the judicial centre at which or in the immediate vicinity of which the judge resides, is entitled to be paid, as a travel allowance, moving or transportation expenses and the reasonable travel and other expenses incurred by the judge in so attending.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 38; R.S., 1985, c. 11 (1st Supp.), s. 2; 1990, c. 17, s. 33; 1998, c. 30, s. 6.

Certificate of judge

39 Every application for payment of a travel allowance shall be accompanied by a certificate of the judge applying for it showing the number of days for which a travel allowance is claimed and the amount of the actual expenses incurred.

R.S., c. J-1, s. 21.

Removal allowance

40 (1) A removal allowance shall be paid to

(a) a person who is appointed a judge of a superior court and who, for the purposes of assuming the functions and duties of that office, is required to move from his or her place of residence to a place outside the immediate vicinity of the place where the person resided at the time of the appointment;

(b) a judge of a superior court who, during tenure and for the purposes of performing the functions and duties of that office, is required to change the place of residence of the judge to a place other than that at which or in the immediate vicinity of which the judge was required to reside immediately before being required to change the place of residence of that judge;

(c) a judge of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and Labrador resident in Labrador, the Supreme Court of Yukon, the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories or the Nunavut Court of Justice who moves to a place of residence in one of the 10 provinces or in another territory during the period of two years

(i) beginning two years before the judge's date of eligibility to retire, or

(ii) if no removal allowance is paid in respect of a move made during the period described in subparagraph (i), beginning on the judge's date of retirement or resignation from office;

(d) a survivor or child, as defined in subsection 47(1), of a judge of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and Labrador resident in Labrador, the Supreme Court of Yukon, the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories or the Nunavut Court of Justice who dies while holding office as such, if the survivor or child lives with the judge at the time of the judge's death and, within two years after the death, moves to a place of residence in one of the 10 provinces or in another territory;

(e) a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada who moves to a place of residence in Canada outside the area within which the judge was required to reside by the Act establishing that Court, during the period of two years

(i) beginning two years before the judge's date of eligibility to retire, or

(ii) if no removal allowance is paid in respect of a move made during the period described in subparagraph (i), beginning on the judge's date of retirement or resignation from office; and

(f) a survivor or child, as defined in subsection 47(1), of a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada who dies while holding office as such, if the survivor or child lives with the judge at the time of the judge's death and, within two years after the death, moves to a place of residence in Canada outside the area within which the judge was required to reside by the Act establishing that Court.

Limitation

(1.1) Paragraphs (1)(c) and (d) apply only in respect of

(a) a judge who resided in one of the 10 provinces or in another territory at the time of appointment to the Supreme Court of Yukon, the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories or the Nunavut Court of Justice, as the case may be; or

(b) a judge of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and Labrador resident in Labrador who at the time of appointment did not reside there.

Limitation

(1.2) Paragraphs (1)(e) and (f) apply only in respect of a judge who, at the time of appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada, as the case may be, resided outside the area within which the judge was required to reside by the Act establishing that Court.

Idem

(2) A removal allowance referred to in subsection (1) shall be paid for moving and other expenses of such kinds as are prescribed by or under the authority of the Governor in Council and on such terms and conditions as are so prescribed.

Expenses of spouse or common-law partner

(2.1) Where a removal allowance is payable to a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada under paragraph (1)(a), an employment assistance allowance shall be paid to the judge's spouse or common-law partner up to a maximum of $5,000 for expenses actually incurred by the spouse or common-law partner in pursuing employment in the judge's new place of residence.

Meeting, conference and seminar expenses

41 (1) A judge of a superior court who attends a meeting, conference or seminar that is held for a purpose relating to the administration of justice and that the judge in the capacity of a judge is required by law to attend, or who, with the approval of the chief justice of that court, attends any such meeting, conference or seminar that the judge in that capacity is expressly authorized by law to attend, is entitled to be paid, as a conference allowance, reasonable travel and other expenses actually incurred by the judge in so attending.

Expenses for other meetings, conferences or seminars

(2) Subject to subsection (3), a judge of a superior court who, with the approval of the chief justice of that court,

(a) attends a meeting, conference or seminar that the judge in the capacity of a judge is not expressly authorized by law or is not required by law to attend but that is certified by the chief justice to be a meeting, conference or seminar having as its object or as one of its objects the promotion of efficiency or uniformity in the superior courts, or the improvement of the quality of judicial service in those courts, or

(b) in lieu of attending a meeting, conference or seminar referred to in paragraph (a) that is certified as provided in that paragraph, acquires written or recorded materials distributed for the purpose of, or written or recorded proceedings of, any such meeting, conference or seminar, is entitled to be paid, as a conference allowance, reasonable travel and other expenses actually incurred by the judge in so attending or the cost of acquiring the materials or proceedings, as the case may be.

Limitation

(3) Where the aggregate amount of conference allowances that have been paid under subsection (2) in any year

(a) to the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada exceeds the product obtained by multiplying the number of judges of that Court by one thousand dollars, or

(b) to the judges of any other particular superior court exceeds the greater of $5,000 and the product obtained by multiplying the number of judges of that court by $500, no additional amount may be paid under that subsection in that year as a conference allowance to any judge of that court except with the approval of the Minister.

Definitions

(4) For the purposes of this section,

chief justice of any court of which a particular judge is a member means the chief justice or other person recognized by law as having rank or status senior to all other members of, or having the supervision of, that court, but if that court is constituted with divisions, then it means the person having that rank or status in relation to all other members of the division of which the particular judge is a member; (juge en chef) superior court, in the case of a superior court constituted with divisions, means a division thereof. (juridiction supérieure)

Special Retirement Provision — Supreme Court of Canada Judges

Retired judge may continue to hold office

41.1 (1) A judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who has retired may, with the approval of the Chief Justice of Canada, continue to participate in judgments in which he or she participated before retiring, for a period not greater than six months after the date of the retirement.

Salary, etc.

(2) A retired judge participating in judgments shall receive

- (a) the salary annexed to the office during that period less any amount otherwise payable to him or her under this Act in respect of the period, other than those amounts described in paragraphs (b) and (c);
- (b) an amount that bears the same ratio to the allowance for incidental expenditures actually incurred referred to in subsection 27(1) that the number of months in the period bears to twelve; and
- (c) the representational allowance referred to in subsection 27\(6\) for the period, as though the appropriate maximum referred to in that subsection were an amount that bears the same ratio to that allowance that the number of months in the period bears to twelve.

No extra remuneration

(3) Section 57 applies with respect to a judge to whom this section applies.

Benefits

Life insurance

41.2 (1) The Treasury Board shall establish, or enter into a contract to acquire, an insurance program for judges covering the following, on terms and conditions similar to those contained in the Public Service Management Insurance Plan and the public service management insurance directives that apply to executives:

- (a) basic life insurance;
- (b) supplementary life insurance;

- (c) post-retirement life insurance;
- (d) dependants' insurance; and
- (e) accidental death and dismemberment insurance.

Administration

(2) The Treasury Board may

- (a) set terms and conditions in respect of the program, including those respecting premiums or contributions payable, benefits, and management and control of the program;
- (b) make contributions and pay premiums or benefits, as required, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund; and
- (c) undertake and do all things it considers appropriate for the purpose of administering or supervising the program.

Non-application of certain regulations

(3) A contract entered into under this section is not subject to any regulation with respect to contracts made by the Treasury Board under the Financial Administration Act.

Compulsory participation

(4) Participation in basic life insurance under paragraph (1)(a) is compulsory for all judges.

Transitional

(5) A judge who holds office on the day on which this section comes into force may, despite subsection (4), elect, at any time within ninety days after that day,

- (a) to participate in basic life insurance under paragraph (1)(a) but have his or her coverage under it limited to 100 per cent of salary at the time of his or her death; or
- (b) not to participate in basic life insurance.

Transitional

(6) Subject to subsection (7), on the coming into force of this section, judges shall no longer be eligible for coverage under any other life insurance program established by the Treasury Board.

Supplementary life insurance

(7) Those judges covered by supplementary life insurance on the coming into force of this section may have their coverage continued under the insurance program for judges, unless they have made an election under paragraph (5)(b).

Health and dental care benefits

41.3 (1) Judges shall be eligible to participate in the Public Service Health Care Plan and the Public Service Dental Care Plan established by the Treasury Board, on the same terms and conditions as apply to employees in the executive group.

Health and dental care benefits for retired judges

(2) Judges who are in receipt of an annuity under this Act shall be eligible to participate in the Public Service Health Care Plan and the Pensioners' Dental Services Plan established by the Treasury Board, on the same terms and conditions as apply to pensioners.

Administration

(3) Subject to subsections (1) and (2), the Treasury Board may

- (a) set any terms and conditions in respect of those plans, including those respecting premiums or contributions payable, benefits, and management and control of the plans;
- (b) make contributions and pay premiums or benefits, as required, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund; and
- (c) undertake and do all things it considers appropriate for the purpose of administering or supervising the plans.

2001, c. 7, s. 20.

Accidental death in the exercise of duties

41.4 (1) Compensation, within the meaning of the Government Employees Compensation Act, shall be paid to the dependants of a judge whose death results from an accident arising out of or in the performance of judicial duties, on the same basis as that paid to dependants eligible for compensation under that Act.

Flying accidents causing death

(2) Regulations made under section 9 of the Aeronautics Act apply with respect to a judge whose death results from an accident arising out of or in the performance of judicial duties.

Death resulting from act of violence

(3) Compensation shall be paid to the survivors of a judge whose death results from an act of violence unlawfully committed by another person or persons that occurs while the judge is performing judicial duties, on the same basis as that paid to the survivors of employees slain on duty within the meaning of the Public Service Income Benefit Plan for Survivors of Employees Slain on Duty, with any modifications that the circumstances require.

Application

(4) Subsections (1) to (3) apply to deaths that occur on or after April 1, 2000.

2001, c. 7, s. 20.

Delegation

41.5 (1) The Treasury Board may authorize the President or Secretary of the Treasury Board to exercise and perform, in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions as the Treasury Board directs, any of the powers and functions of the Treasury Board under sections 41.2 and 41.3 and may, from time to time as it sees fit, revise or rescind and reinstate the authority so granted.

Subdelegation

(2) The President or Secretary of the Treasury Board may, subject to and in accordance with the authorization, authorize one or more persons under his or her jurisdiction or any other person to exercise or perform any of those powers or functions.

2001, c. 7, s. 20.

Annuities for Judges

Payment of annuities

42 (1) A judge shall be paid an annuity equal to two thirds of the salary annexed to the office held by the judge at the time of his or her resignation, removal or attaining the age of retirement, as the case may be, if the judge

(a) has continued in judicial office for at least 15 years, has a combined age and number of years in judicial office that is not less than 80 and resigns from office;

(b) has attained the age of retirement and has held judicial office for at least 10 years; or

(c) has continued in judicial office on the Supreme Court of Canada for at least 10 years and resigns from office.

Grant of annuities

(1.1) The Governor in Council shall grant to a judge an annuity equal to two thirds of the salary annexed to the office held by the judge at the time of his or her resignation, removal or attaining the age of retirement, as the case may be, if the judge

(a) has continued in judicial office for at least 15 years and resigns his or her office, if in the opinion of the Governor in Council the resignation is conducive to the better administration of justice or is in the national interest; or

(b) has become afflicted with a permanent infirmity disabling him or her from the due execution of the office of judge and resigns his or her office or by reason of that infirmity is removed from office.

Prorated annuity

(2) If a judge who has attained the age of retirement has held judicial office for less than 10 years, an annuity shall be paid to that judge that bears the same ratio to the annuity described in subsection (1) as the number of years the judge has held judicial office, to the nearest one tenth of a year, bears to 10 years.

Duration of annuities

(3) An annuity granted or paid to a judge under this section shall commence on the day of his or her resignation, removal or attaining the age of retirement and shall continue during the life of the judge.

Definition of judicial office

(4) In this section, judicial office means the office of a judge of a superior or county court or the office of an associate judge.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 42; 1998, c. 30, s. 7; 2002, c. 8, ss. 95, 111(E); 2006, c. 11, s. 11; 2014, c. 39, s. 322; 2017, c. 33, s. 238; 2022, c. 10, s. 359; 2022, c. 10, s. 371.

Annuity payable to supernumerary judge

43 (1) If a supernumerary judge, before becoming one, held the office of chief justice, senior associate chief justice or associate chief justice, the annuity payable to the judge under section 42 is an annuity equal to two thirds of the salary annexed, at the time of his or her resignation, removal or attaining the age of retirement, to the office of chief justice, senior associate chief justice or associate chief justice previously held by him or her.

Annuity for former supernumerary judge

(1.1) If a supernumerary judge to whom subsection (1) applies is appointed to a different court to perform only the duties of a judge, the annuity payable to the judge under section 42 is an annuity equal to two thirds of the salary annexed, at the time of his or her resignation, removal or attaining the age of retirement, to the office of chief justice, senior associate chief justice or associate chief justice previously held by him or her.

Annuity — election under section 31, 32 or 32.1

(2) If the Chief Justice of the Federal Court of Appeal or the Chief Justice or Associate Chief Justice of the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada, in accordance with section 31, or a chief justice of a superior court of a province, in accordance with section 32, or the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Yukon, the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories or the Nunavut Court of Justice, in accordance with section 32.1, has elected to cease to perform his or her duties and to perform only the duties of a judge, the annuity payable to him or her under section 42 is an annuity equal to two thirds of the salary annexed, at the time of his or her resignation, removal or attainment of the age of retirement, to the office held by him or her immediately before his or her election.

Annuity — election under section 31.1

(2.1) If the Chief Justice of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada, in accordance with section 31.1, has elected to cease to perform his or her duties as such and to perform only the duties of a judge, the annuity payable to him or her under section 42 is an annuity equal to two thirds of the salary annexed, at the time of his or her resignation, removal or attaining the age of retirement, to the office held by him or her immediately before his or her election, if he or she had continued in that office for at least five years or had continued in that office and any other office of chief justice for a total of at least five years.

Annuity payable to chief justice

(2.2) If a chief justice is appointed to a different court to perform only the duties of a judge, the annuity payable to him or her under section 42 is an annuity equal to two thirds of the salary annexed, at the time of his or her resignation, removal or attaining the age of retirement, to the office of chief justice, if he or she had continued in that office for at least five years or had continued in that office and any other office of chief justice for at least five years.

Definition of chief justice and chief justice of a superior court of a province

(3) In subsections (2) to (2.2), chief justice or chief justice of a superior court of a province means a chief justice, senior associate chief justice or associate chief justice of that court, or, if that court is constituted with divisions, of a division of that court.

Application of subsections (1) and (2)

(4) Subsections (1) and (2) are deemed to have come into force on April 1, 2012.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 43; 1992, c. 51, s. 19; 2002, c. 8, s. 96; 2012, c. 31, s. 217; 2017, c. 20, s. 221, c. 33, s. 239; 2018, c. 12, ss. 303, 308.

Prorated Annuities — Early Retirement

55 years of age and 10 years in office

43.1 (1) A judge who has attained the age of 55 years, has continued in judicial office for at least 10 years and elects early retirement shall be paid an immediate annuity or a deferred annuity, at the option of the judge, calculated in accordance with this section.

Calculation of amount of deferred annuity

(2) The amount of the deferred annuity shall be two thirds of the amount of the salary annexed to the judge's office at the time of the election multiplied by a fraction of which

(a) the numerator is the number of years, to the nearest one tenth of a year, during which the judge has continued in judicial office, and

(b) the denominator is the number of years, to the nearest one tenth of a year, during which the judge would have been required to continue in judicial office in order to be eligible to be paid an annuity under paragraph 42(1)(a) or (b).

Immediate annuity

(3) If a judge exercises the option to receive an immediate annuity, the amount of that annuity is equal to the amount of the deferred annuity, reduced by the product obtained by multiplying

(a) five per cent of the amount of the deferred annuity

by

(b) the difference between sixty and his or her age in years, to the nearest one-tenth of a year, at the time he or she exercises the option.

Second exercise of option

(4) A judge whose option was to receive a deferred annuity may, between the date of that option and the date on which the deferred annuity would be payable, opt for an immediate annuity. An immediate annuity shall be paid to the judge from the date of the second option.

Survivor's annuity

(5) On the death of a judge who has been paid an immediate annuity or a deferred annuity under subsection (1) or (4), the annuity paid to a survivor under subsection 44\(2\) shall be determined as if the judge were in receipt of a deferred annuity.

Definitions

(6) The definitions in this subsection apply in this section.

deferred annuity means an annuity that becomes payable to a judge at the time that he or she reaches sixty years of age and that continues to be paid during the life of the judge. (pension différée) immediate annuity means an annuity that becomes payable to a judge at the time that he or she exercises an option to receive the annuity and that continues to be paid during the life of the judge. (pension immédiate) judicial office includes the office of an associate judge. (magistrature)

Annuities for Survivors

Annuity for surviving spouse

44 (1) Subject to this section, if a judge of a superior court while holding office died or dies after July 10, 1955, the survivor of the judge shall be paid, commencing on July 18, 1983 or immediately after the death of the judge, whichever is later, and continuing during the life of the survivor, an annuity equal to one third of

(a) the salary of the judge at the date of the death of the judge, or

(b) the salary annexed, at the date of death, to the office previously held by the judge of chief justice, senior associate chief justice or associate chief justice, if one of subsections 43(1), (1.1), (2), (2.1) or (2.2) would have applied to the judge if he or she had resigned, been removed or attained the age of retirement, on the day of death.

Judge receiving annuity

(2) Subject to this section, if a judge who, before, on or after July 11, 1955, was granted or paid a pension or annuity under this Act or any other Act of Parliament providing for pensions or annuities to be granted or paid to judges, died or dies after July 10, 1955, the survivor of the judge shall be paid

(a) an annuity equal to one half of the pension or annuity granted or paid to the judge, commencing on July 18, 1983 or immediately after the death of the judge, whichever is later, and continuing during the life of the survivor; or

(b) if a division of the judge's annuity benefits has been made under section 52.14, an annuity equal to one half of the annuity that would have been granted or paid to the judge had the annuity benefits not been divided, commencing immediately after the death of the judge and continuing during the life of the survivor.

Prothonotaries

(3) No annuity shall be paid under this section to the survivor of a prothonotary of the Federal Court if the prothonotary ceased to hold the office of prothonotary before the day on which this subsection comes into force.

Limitation on annuity for survivor

(4) No annuity shall be paid under this section to the survivor of a judge if the survivor became the spouse or began to cohabit with the judge in a conjugal relationship after the judge ceased to hold office.

(5) and (6) [Repealed, R.S., 1985, c. 39 (3rd Supp.), s. 2]

Election for enhanced annuity for survivor

44.01 (1) Subject to the regulations, a judge may elect to have the annuity to be paid to his or her survivor increased so that it is calculated as if the reference to "one half" in subsection 44\(2\) were read as a reference to "60%" or "75%".

Reduction of annuity

(2) If a judge makes the election, the amount of the annuity granted or paid to the judge shall be reduced in accordance with the regulations as of the date the election takes effect, but the combined actuarial present value of the reduced annuity and the annuity that would be paid to the survivor must not be less than the combined actuarial present value of the annuity granted or paid to the judge and the annuity that would be paid to the survivor, immediately before the reduction is made.

Election to take effect at time of retirement

(3) Subject to subsection (6), an election under this section takes effect on the date that the judge ceases to hold office.

Death within one year after election

(4) Despite anything in this section, when a judge dies within one year after the election takes effect, the annuity payable to the survivor remains that payable under subsection 44\(2\) and the amount representing the reduction that was made in the amount of the judge's annuity under subsection (2) shall be repaid to the judge's estate or succession, together with interest at the rate prescribed under the Income Tax Act for amounts payable by the Minister of National Revenue as refunds of overpayments of tax under that Act.

Regulations

(5) The Governor in Council may make regulations respecting

- (a) the time, manner and circumstances in which an election is made, is deemed to have been made or is deemed not to have been made, is revoked or is deemed to have been revoked, or ceases to have effect, and the retroactive application of that making, revocation or cessation;
- (b) the reduction to be made in the amount of a judge's annuity when the election is made;
- (c) the calculation of the amount of the annuity to be paid to the judge and the survivor under subsection (2);
- (d) the time, manner and circumstances in which a reduction of a judge's annuity may be returned and interest may be paid; and
- (e) any other matter that the Governor in Council considers necessary for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this section.

Transitional

(6) A judge who is in receipt of an annuity on the day on which this section comes into force may make his or her election in accordance with the regulations, and the election takes effect on the day this section comes into force.

Limitation on annuity to survivor

(7) Despite anything in this section, no election may be made under this section for the benefit of a spouse or common-law partner of a judge unless that person was the spouse or common-law partner at the date the judge ceased to hold office.

Annuity to be prorated between the two survivors

44.1 (1) Notwithstanding section 44, if there are two persons who are entitled to an annuity under that section, each survivor shall receive a share of the annuity prorated in accordance with subsection (2) for his or her life.

Determination of prorated share

(2) The prorated share of each survivor is equal to the product obtained by multiplying the annuity by a fraction of which the numerator is the number of years that the survivor cohabited with the judge, whether before or after his or her appointment as a judge, and the denominator is the total obtained by adding the number of years that each of the survivors so cohabited with the judge.

Years

(3) In determining a number of years for the purpose of subsection (2), a part of a year shall be counted as a full year if the part is six or more months and shall be ignored if it is less.

Waiver

(4) A survivor is not entitled to receive an annuity under section 44 or this section if the survivor has waived his or her entitlement to the annuity under an agreement entered into in accordance with applicable provincial law.

2000, c. 12, s. 163.

Election for former judges

44.2 (1) Subject to the regulations, a judge to whom an annuity has been granted or paid may elect to reduce his or her annuity so that an annuity may be paid to a person who, at the time of the election, is the spouse or common-law partner of the judge but to whom an annuity under section 44 must not be paid.

Reduction of annuity

(2) If a judge makes the election, the amount of the annuity granted or paid to the judge shall be reduced in accordance with the regulations, but the combined actuarial present value of the reduced annuity and the annuity that would be paid to the spouse or common-law partner under subsection (3) must not be less than the actuarial present value of the annuity granted or paid to the judge immediately before the reduction is made.

Payment to person in respect of whom election is made

(3) When the judge dies, the spouse or common-law partner in respect of whom an election was made shall be paid an annuity in an amount determined in accordance with the election, subsection (2) and the regulations.

Death within one year after election

(3.1) Despite anything in this section, when a judge dies within one year after making the election, the election is deemed not to have been made and the amount representing the reduction that was made in the amount of the judge's annuity under subsection (2) shall be repaid to the judge's estate or succession, together with interest at the rate prescribed under the Income Tax Act for amounts payable by the Minister of National Revenue as refunds of overpayments of tax under that Act.

Regulations

(4) The Governor in Council may make regulations respecting

- (a) the time, manner and circumstances in which an election is made, is deemed to have been made or is deemed not to have been made, is revoked or is deemed to have been revoked, or ceases to have effect, and the retroactive application of that making, revocation or cessation;
- (b) the reduction to be made in the amount of a judge's annuity when an election is made;
- (c) the amount of the annuity to be paid under subsection (3);
- (d) the time, manner and circumstances in which a reduction of a judge's annuity may be returned and interest may be paid; and
- (e) any other matter that the Governor in Council considers necessary for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this section.

Annuities for Surviving Children

Definition of child

47 (1) For the purposes of this section and sections 48 and 49, child means a child of a judge, including a child adopted legally or in fact, who

- (a) is less than eighteen years of age; or
- (b) is eighteen or more years of age but less than twenty-five years of age and is in full-time attendance at a school or university, having been in such attendance substantially without interruption since the child of the judge reached eighteen years of age or the judge died, whichever occurred later.

Regulations respecting school attendance

(2) The Governor in Council may make regulations

- (a) defining, for the purposes of this Act, the expression “full-time attendance at a school or university” as applied to a child of a judge; and
- (b) specifying, for the purposes of this Act, the circumstances under which attendance at a school or university shall be determined to be substantially without interruption.

Annuity for surviving children

(3) If a judge of a superior or county court dies while holding office, or a judge who was granted or paid an annuity after October 5, 1971 dies, an annuity shall be paid to each surviving child of that judge as provided in subsections (4) and (5).

Annuity for children if survivor

(4) Each child of a judge described in subsection (3) shall be paid

- (a) if the judge leaves a survivor, an annuity equal to one-fifth of the annuity that is provided for a survivor under subsection 44(1) or (2); and
- (b) if there is no survivor or the survivor dies, an annuity equal to two-fifths of the annuity that is provided for a survivor under subsection 44(1) or (2).

Maximum of annuities to children

(5) The total amount of the annuities paid under subsection (4) shall not exceed four-fifths, in the case described in paragraph (4)(a), and eight-fifths, in the case described in paragraph (4)(b), of the annuity that is provided for a survivor under subsection 44(1) or (2).

Apportionment of annuities among surviving children

48 (1) If, in computing the annuities to be paid under subsection 47\(3\) to the children of a judge referred to in that subsection, it is determined that there are more than four children of the judge to whom an annuity shall be paid, the total amount of the annuities paid shall be apportioned among the children in the shares that the Minister considers just and proper under the circumstances.

Children’s annuities, to whom paid

(2) If an annuity under this Act is paid to a child of a judge, payment shall, if the child is less than 18 years of age, be made to the person having the custody and control of the child or, if there is no person having the custody and control of the child, to any person that the Minister directs and, for the purposes of this subsection, the survivor of the judge, except if the child is living apart from the survivor, shall be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be the person having the custody and control of the child.

Judges' Contributions toward Annuities

Judges appointed before February 17, 1975

50 (1) Every judge appointed before February 17, 1975 to hold office as a judge of a superior or county court shall, by reservation from the judge's salary under this Act, contribute to the Consolidated Revenue Fund one and one-half per cent of that salary.

Judges appointed after February 16, 1975

(2) Every judge appointed after February 16, 1975 to whom subsection (1) does not apply, shall, by reservation from the judge's salary under this Act, contribute

(a) to the Consolidated Revenue Fund an amount equal to six per cent of that salary; and

(b) to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account established in the accounts of Canada pursuant to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act,

(i) prior to 1977, an amount equal to one-half of one per cent of that salary, and

(ii) commencing with the month of January 1977, an amount equal to one per cent of that salary.

Adjustment of contributions

(2.1) A supernumerary judge, a judge who continues in judicial office after having been in judicial office for at least 15 years and whose combined age and number of years in judicial office is not less than 80, a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who has continued in judicial office on that Court for at least 10 years, or a judge referred to in section 41.1 is not required to contribute under subsections (1) and (2) but is required to contribute, by reservation from salary, to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account at a rate of one per cent of his or her salary.

Interest

(2.2) Interest is payable on all contributions refunded as a result of the application of subsection (2.1) at the rate prescribed under the Income Tax Act for amounts payable by the Minister of National Revenue as refunds of overpayments of tax under that Act.

Income Tax Act

(3) For the purposes of the Income Tax Act, the amounts contributed by a judge pursuant to subsection (1), (2) or (2.1) are deemed to be contributed to or under a registered pension plan.

Amounts to be credited to S.R.B. Account

(4) Where any amount is paid into the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account pursuant to paragraph (2)(b), an amount equal to the amount so paid shall be credited to that Account.

Definition of judicial office

(5) In this section, judicial office includes the office of an associate judge.

Return of contributions if no annuity

51 (1) If a judge has ceased to hold office otherwise than by reason of death and, at the time he or she ceased to hold office, no annuity under this Act was granted or could be paid to that judge, there shall be paid to the judge, in respect of his or her having ceased to hold that office, an amount equal to the total contributions made by him or her under subsection 50(1) or paragraph 50(2)(a), together with interest, if any, calculated in accordance with subsection (4).

Return of contributions if annuity

(2) If a judge to whom subsection 50(1) applies has ceased to hold office otherwise than by reason of death and that judge is granted or paid an annuity under this Act, there shall be paid to the judge in respect of his or her having ceased to hold that office an amount equal to the total contributions made by the judge under subsection 50(1), together with interest, if any, calculated in accordance with subsection (4), if,

(a) at the time the judge ceased to hold office, there is no person to whom an annuity under this Act could be paid in respect of the judge on his or her death; or

(b) at any time after the judge ceased to hold office but before his or her death, all persons to whom an annuity under this Act could be paid in respect of the judge on his or her death have died or ceased to be eligible to be paid an annuity.

Death benefit

(3) Where, on or at any time after the death of a judge who died while holding office, or the death of a judge who died after ceasing to hold office but to whom no amount has been paid under subsection (1) or (2), there is no person or there is no longer any person to whom an annuity under this Act may be paid in respect of the judge, any amount by which

(a) the total contributions made by the judge under subsection 50(1) or paragraph 50(2)(a), together with interest, if any, calculated pursuant to subsection (4), exceeds

(b) the total amount, if any, paid to or in respect of the judge as annuity payments under this Act, shall thereupon be paid as a death benefit to the estate of the judge or, if less than one thousand dollars, as the Minister may direct.

Interest on payments and amounts of contributions

(4) Where an amount becomes payable under subsection (1), (2) or (3) in respect of contributions made by a judge under subsection 50(1) or paragraph 50(2)(a), the Minister shall

(a) determine the total amount of contributions that have been made under that provision by the judge in respect of each year, in this subsection called a “contribution year”, in which contributions were made by the judge; and

(b) calculate interest on the amount determined under paragraph (a) in respect of each contribution year, compounded annually,

(i) in respect of each contribution year before 1997,

(A) at the rate of four per cent from December 31 of the contribution year to December 31, 1996, and

(B) at the rate prescribed under the Income Tax Act for amounts payable by the Minister of National Revenue as refunds of overpayments of tax under that Act in effect from time to time, from December 31, 1996 to December 31 of the year immediately before the year in which the amount in respect of contributions made by the judge becomes payable, and

(ii) in respect of the 1997 contribution year and each contribution year after 1997, at the rate mentioned in clause (i)(B) from December 31 of the contribution year to December 31 of the year immediately before the year in which the amount in respect of contributions made by the judge becomes payable.

Application for division

52.11 (1) A judge or a spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner of a judge may, in the circumstances described in subsection (2), apply in accordance with the regulations for the division of the judge's annuity benefits between the judge and the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner.

When application may be made

(2) An application may be made under the following circumstances:

(a) where a court of competent jurisdiction in Canada, in proceedings in relation to divorce, annulment of marriage or separation, has made an order that provides for the annuity benefits to be divided between the interested parties; or

(b) where the interested parties have been living separate and apart for a period of one year or more and, either before or after they began to live separate and apart,

(i) a court of competent jurisdiction in Canada has made an order that provides for the annuity benefits to be divided between them, or

(ii) the interested parties have entered into a written agreement that provides for the annuity benefits to be divided between them.

Notice to interested parties

(3) The Minister shall send to each interested party in accordance with the regulations a notice of the receipt of an application.

2006, c. 11, s. 15.

Objections by interested parties

52.12 (1) An interested party who objects to the division of annuity benefits on any of the grounds described in subsection (2) may submit a notice of objection in writing in accordance with the regulations within 90 days after the day on which notice of the receipt of the application is sent to the interested party under subsection 52.11\(3\).

Grounds for objection

(2) The grounds for objection are as follows:

(a) the court order or agreement on which the application is based has been varied or is of no force or effect;

(b) the terms of the court order or agreement have been or are being satisfied by other means; or

(c) proceedings have been commenced in a court of competent jurisdiction in Canada to appeal or review the court order or challenge the terms of the agreement.

Documentary evidence

(3) An interested party who submits a notice of objection shall include with that notice documentary evidence to establish the grounds for objection.

2006, c. 11, s. 15.

Approval of division

52.13 (1) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), the Minister shall, as soon as is practicable after the Minister is satisfied that an application meets the requirements of this Act, approve the division of annuity benefits in respect of which the application is made.

When decision to be deferred

(2) When an interested party submits a notice of objection in accordance with section 52.12, the Minister shall

- (a) if the objection is made on the grounds referred to in paragraph 52.12\(2\)\(a\) or (b), defer a decision on the application until the Minister is able to ascertain to his or her satisfaction whether those grounds have been established; and
- (b) if the objection is made on the grounds referred to in paragraph 52.12\(2\)\(c\), defer a decision on the application until the final disposition of the proceedings on which those grounds are based.

Refusal of division

(3) The Minister shall refuse to approve the division of annuity benefits if

- (a) the application is withdrawn in accordance with the regulations;
- (b) a notice of objection has been submitted on grounds referred to in paragraph 52.12\(2\)\(a\) or (b) and the Minister is satisfied that those grounds have been established and constitute sufficient reason to refuse the division;
- (c) a notice of objection has been submitted on grounds referred to in paragraph 52.12\(2\)\(c\) and the court order or agreement is of no force or effect as a result of the proceedings referred to in that paragraph;
- (d) the period of cohabitation of the judge and the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner cannot be determined under subsection 52.14\(6\); or
- (e) the Minister is satisfied, based on evidence submitted by any person, that it would not be just to approve the division.

Exception

(4) Notwithstanding subsection (3), the Minister may approve the division of annuity benefits on the basis of an order of a court issued pursuant to any proceedings referred to in paragraph 52.12\(2\)\(c\).

Transitional

(5) The Minister may approve the division of the annuity benefits even though the court order or agreement on which the application is based was made or entered into before the day on which subsection 52.11(1) comes into force.

2006, c. 11, s. 15.

Division of annuity benefits

52.14 (1) Subject to subsections (3) and (3.1), where the Minister approves the division of the annuity benefits of a judge, the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner shall be accorded a share of the annuity benefits consisting of

- (a) an amount representing 50% of a proportion, determined in accordance with subsection (2), of the value of the annuity that is attributed, in accordance with the regulations, to the period subject to division; or
- (b) if the terms of the court order or agreement on which the application for division is based provide for the payment to the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner of a share of annuity benefits that is less than the amount determined under paragraph (a), that lesser share.

Proportion of annuity value

(2) The proportion of the value of an annuity referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is

- (a) subject to paragraph (b), the period subject to division divided by the judge's number of years of service until the judge's actual date of retirement or, in the case of a judge who has not yet retired, until the judge's expected date of retirement determined in accordance with the regulations; or
 - (b) in the case of a judge who had resigned or been removed from office by reason of an infirmity, the quotient obtained by dividing
 - (i) the period, measured to the nearest one tenth of a year, from the beginning of the period subject to division to the earlier of the end of the period of cohabitation and the judge's expected date of retirement if the infirmity had not occurred, determined in accordance with the regulations,
- by
- (ii) the judge's number of years of service up to the judge's expected date of retirement if the infirmity had not occurred, determined in accordance with the regulations.

Return of contributions

(3) Subject to subsections (3.1) and (4), if the Minister approves the division of the annuity benefits of a judge who was not eligible to be paid an annuity at the end of the period subject to division, the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner shall be accorded a share of the annuity benefits consisting of

- (a) an amount equal to 50% of the contributions made by the judge under section 50 during the period subject to division plus 50% of any interest payable on those contributions; or
- (b) if the terms of the court order or agreement on which the application for division is based provide for the payment to the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner of a share of annuity benefits that is less than the amount determined under paragraph (a), that lesser share.

Return of contributions — infirm annuitant

(3.1) Subject to subsection (4), if the Minister approves the division of the annuity benefits of a judge who had been granted an annuity by reason of an infirmity but was not otherwise eligible to be paid an annuity at the end of the period subject to division, the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner shall be accorded a share of the annuity benefits consisting of

- (a) an amount equal to 50% of the contributions that would have been made during the period described in subparagraph (2)(b)(i) if the judge had continued in office, on the basis of the salary annexed to the office held by the judge at the time the judge ceased to hold office, plus 50% of any interest payable on those contributions; or
- (b) if the terms of the court order or agreement on which the application for division is based provide for the payment to the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner of a share of annuity benefits that is less than the amount determined under paragraph (a), that lesser share.

Election by spouse

(4) A judge's spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner who is entitled to be accorded a share of the judge's annuity benefits under subsection (3) or (3.1) may elect in the manner prescribed by the regulations, in lieu of receiving that share, to receive — at the time the judge becomes eligible to be granted or paid an annuity, or at the time the judge would have become eligible to be paid an annuity had the judge not resigned or been removed from office by reason of an infirmity — a share of the annuity benefits for which the judge is or would have been eligible, determined as provided in subsection (1).

Death or resignation of judge

(5) If an election has been made under subsection (4) and, before becoming eligible to be paid an annuity, the judge dies, resigns, is removed from office or otherwise ceases to hold office, the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner shall instead be paid immediately the portion of the judge's contributions to which the spouse was otherwise entitled under subsection (3) or (3.1).

Determination of periods of division and cohabitation

(6) For the purposes of this section and sections 52.15 and 52.16,

- (a) a period subject to division is the portion of a period of cohabitation during which a judge held office under this Act, measured in years to the nearest one tenth of a year; and
- (b) a period of cohabitation is the period during which interested parties cohabited, as specified by the court order or agreement on which an application for division is based or, if none is specified, as determined in accordance with the regulations on the basis of evidence submitted by either or both of the interested parties.

Death of spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner

(7) A share of annuity benefits that cannot be accorded under subsection (1) by reason only of the death of the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner shall be paid to that person's estate or succession.

Adjustment of accrued benefits

(8) Where the Minister approves the division of a judge's annuity benefits, the annuity benefits payable to the judge under this Act shall be adjusted in accordance with the regulations.

Notice of division

(9) The Minister shall send a notice of the division of annuity benefits in the prescribed manner to each interested party.

2006, c. 11, s. 15; 2015, c. 3, s. 128(F); 2017, c. 20, s. 225; 2017, c. 33, s. 251(E).

Transfer and payment of share

52.15 (1) The spouse's, former spouse's or former common-law partner's share of a judge's annuity benefits shall be accorded by

(a) the transfer of the specified portion of that share to a retirement savings plan established for the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner that is of the prescribed kind for the purposes of section 26 of the Pension Benefits Standards Act, 1985; and

(b) the payment of the remainder of that share, if any, to the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner.

Calculation of specified portion

(2) For the purpose of paragraph (1)(a), the specified portion of a spouse's, former spouse's or former common-law partner's share of a judge's annuity benefits is

(a) if that share consists of a portion of the judge's contributions, that portion; or

(b) in any other case, the amount determined by the formula

$$(A \times B \times C) / D$$

where

A is the share of the annuity benefits,

B is the period subject to division,

C is the defined benefit limit, within the meaning of regulations made under the Income Tax Act, for the calendar year in which the share is accorded, and

D is the portion of the annuity that is attributed, in accordance with the regulations, to the period subject to division.

Tax treatment

(3) For the purposes of the Income Tax Act, an amount transferred to a retirement savings plan in accordance with paragraph (1)(a) is deemed to be an amount transferred from a registered pension plan in accordance with subsection 147.3\(5\) of that Act.

2006, c. 11, s. 15.

Further divisions precluded

52.16 Where a division of annuity benefits is made in respect of a period subject to division under section 52.14, no further divisions may be made under that section in respect of that period.

2006, c. 11, s. 15.

Amounts transferred in error

52.17 Where the amount transferred or paid in respect of a spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner, or paid to the estate or succession of a deceased spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner, under section 52.14 or 52.15 exceeds the amount that the spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner was entitled to have transferred or paid or the estate or succession was entitled to be paid, the amount in excess constitutes a debt due to Her Majesty in right of Canada by that spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner or that estate or succession.

2006, c. 11, s. 15.

Amounts paid before adjustment

52.18 Where an adjustment is made under subsection 52.14\(8\) and an amount is or has been paid to a judge that exceeds the amount to which the judge is or would have been entitled under this Act after the effective date of that adjustment, the amount in excess constitutes a debt due to Her Majesty in right of Canada by the judge and may be recovered at any time by set-off against any annuity benefit that is payable to the judge under this Act, without prejudice to any other recourse available to Her Majesty in right of Canada with respect to its recovery.

2006, c. 11, s. 15.

Void transactions

52.19 (1) Amounts that a spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner is or may become entitled to under section 52.14 are not capable of being assigned, charged, anticipated or given as security, and any transaction that purports to assign, charge, anticipate or give as security any such amount is void.

Exemption from attachment, etc.

(2) Amounts that a spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner is or may become entitled to under section 52.14 are exempt from attachment, seizure and execution, either at law or in equity.

2006, c. 11, s. 15.

Access of spouse, etc. to division of benefits

52.2 Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, a court of competent jurisdiction may order, for any period that the court determines, that no action be taken by the Minister under this Act that may prejudice the ability of the spouse, common-law partner, former spouse or former common-law partner to make an application or obtain the division of the judge's annuity benefits under this Act.

2006, c. 11, s. 15.

Information for spouse, etc. re benefits

52.21 Subject to the regulations, the Minister shall, at the request of a spouse, common-law partner, former spouse or former common-law partner of a judge, provide that person with information prescribed by the regulations concerning the benefits that are or may become payable to or in respect of that judge under this Act.

2006, c. 11, s. 15.

Regulations

52.22 The Governor in Council may make regulations

- (a) respecting the manner of making an application, the information that is to be provided in it and the documents that are to accompany it;
- (b) prescribing the circumstances in which interested parties are deemed to have been living separate and apart for the purposes of paragraph 52.11\(2\)\(b\);
- (c) prescribing circumstances in which a person may make an application or object to an application on behalf of another person, or may act on behalf of another person in proceeding with an application made by that other person;
- (d) prescribing circumstances in which, the manner in which and the conditions under which the personal representative or the liquidator of the succession of a deceased judge or of a deceased spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner of a judge may make or object to an application or may proceed with an application that was made by or on behalf of the judge, spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner;
- (e) when regulations are made under paragraph (c) or (d), respecting the manner in which and the extent to which any provision of this Act applies to a person referred to in that paragraph or in the circumstances prescribed by those regulations, and adapting any provision of this Act to those persons or circumstances;
- (f) prescribing circumstances in which, the manner in which and the conditions under which a spouse, former spouse or former common-law partner of a judge may make an application after the death of the judge;
- (g) respecting the notice of receipt of applications to be given to interested parties under subsection 52.11\(3\);

Payment of Salaries, Allowances, Annuities and Other Amounts

Amounts payable out of C.R.F.

53 (1) The salaries, allowances and annuities payable under Parts I to III and the amounts payable under sections 46.1, 51 and 52.15 shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Prorating

(2) For any period less than a year, the salaries and annuities payable shall be paid pro rata.

Monthly instalments

(3) The salaries and annuities payable shall be paid by monthly instalments.

First payment

(4) The first payment of salary of any judge shall be made pro rata on the first day of the month that occurs next after the appointment of the judge.

Legal representatives

(5) If a judge resigns the office of judge or dies, the judge or his or her legal representatives are entitled to receive such proportionate part of the judge's salary as has accrued during the time that the judge executed the office since the last payment.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 53; 1989, c. 8, s. 13; 2002, c. 8, s. 111\(E\); 2006, c. 11, s. 16; 2023, c. 18, s. 4.

Absence from Judicial Duties

Leave of absence

54 (1) No judge of a superior court shall be granted leave of absence from his or her judicial duties for a period

(a) of six months or less, except with the approval of the chief justice of the superior court; or

(b) of more than six months, except with the approval of the Governor in Council.

Notification of leave by chief justice

(1.1) Whenever a leave of absence is granted under paragraph (1)(a), the chief justice of the superior court shall, without delay, notify the Minister and, in the case of provincial or territorial courts, the minister of justice or the attorney general of the province or territory.

Notification of leave by Minister

(1.2) Whenever a leave of absence is granted under paragraph (1)(b), the Minister shall, without delay, notify the chief justice of the superior court and, in the case of provincial or territorial courts, the minister of justice or the attorney general of the province or territory.

Report by chief justice of absence

(2) If it appears to the chief justice of a superior court that a judge of the court is absent from the judge's judicial duties without the approval required by subsection (1), the chief justice shall report the absence to the Minister.

Absentee judge to report

(3) Whenever a judge of a superior court is absent from the judge's judicial duties for a period of more than 30 days, the judge shall report the absence and the reasons for it to the Minister.

(4) [Repealed, 2017, c. 33, s. 252]

Extra-judicial Employment

Judicial duties exclusively

55 No judge shall, either directly or indirectly, for himself or herself or others, engage in any occupation or business other than his or her judicial duties, but every judge shall devote himself or herself exclusively to those judicial duties.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 55; 2002, c. 8, s. 102(E).

Acting as commissioner, etc.

56 (1) No judge shall act as commissioner, arbitrator, adjudicator, referee, conciliator or mediator on any commission or on any inquiry or other proceeding unless

(a) in the case of any matter within the legislative authority of Parliament, the judge is by an Act of Parliament expressly authorized so to act or the judge is thereunto appointed or so authorized by the Governor in Council; or

(b) in the case of any matter within the legislative authority of the legislature of a province, the judge is by an Act of the legislature of the province expressly authorized so to act or the judge is thereunto appointed or so authorized by the lieutenant governor in council of the province.

Acting as statutory assessor or arbitrator

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to judges acting as arbitrators or assessors of compensation or damages under any public Act, whether of general or local application, of Canada or of a province, whereby a judge is required or authorized without authority from the Governor in Council or lieutenant governor in council to assess or ascertain compensation or damages.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 56; 1996, c. 10, s. 233.

Authorization

56.1 (1) Notwithstanding section 55, Madam Justice Louise Arbour of the Ontario Court of Appeal is authorized to take a leave from her judicial duties to serve as Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia and of the International Tribunal for Rwanda.

Expenses

(2) Madam Justice Louise Arbour may receive moving or transportation expenses and reasonable travel and other expenses, in connection with her service as Prosecutor, from the United Nations.

Leave without pay

(3) Madam Justice Louise Arbour may elect to take a leave of absence without pay for the purpose described in subsection (1), in which case she is not entitled to receive any salary or allowances under this Act for the duration of the leave, but may receive remuneration from the United Nations for her service as Prosecutor.

Ceasing contributions

(4) If Madam Justice Louise Arbour elects to take a leave of absence without pay under subsection (3), she shall not continue the contributions required by section 50 for the duration of the leave and that section does not apply to her for the duration of the leave, which duration shall not be counted as time during which she held judicial office for the purposes of sections 28, 29 and 42.

Deemed salary in event of death

(5) For the purposes of subsections 44(1) and (2), section 46.1 and subsection 47(3), if Madam Justice Louise Arbour dies while on a leave of absence without pay, she is deemed to be in receipt at the time of death of the salary that she would have been receiving if she had not been absent on leave without pay.

1996, c. 30, s. 5.

Extra Remuneration

No extra remuneration

57 (1) Except as provided in subsection (3), no judge shall accept any salary, fee, remuneration or other emolument or any expenses or allowances for acting in any capacity described in subsection 56(1) or as administrator or deputy of the Governor General or for performing any duty or service, whether judicial or executive, that the judge may be required to perform for or on behalf of the Government of Canada or the government of a province.

Exception

(2) The right of a judge to receive remuneration under any Act of the legislature of a province, other than for acting in any capacity described in subsection 56(1), is not affected by subsection (1), but no judge is entitled to receive remuneration under any such Act or Acts in an aggregate amount exceeding $3,000 per annum.

Expenses excepted

(3) In the cases described in subsection (1), a judge may receive his or her moving or transportation expenses and the reasonable travel and other expenses incurred by him or her away from his or her ordinary place of residence while acting in any such capacity or in the performance of any such duty or service, in the same amount and under the same conditions as if the judge were performing a function or duty as such judge, if those expenses are paid in respect of any matter within the legislative authority of Parliament, by the Government of Canada, and in respect of any matter within the legislative authority of the legislature of a province, by the government of the province.

PART II

Canadian Judicial Council

58 [\[Repealed, 2023, c. 18, s. 5\]](#)

Constitution of the Council

Council established

59 (1) There is hereby established a Council, to be known as the Canadian Judicial Council, consisting of

- (a) the Chief Justice of Canada, who shall be the chairperson of the Council;
- (b) the chief justice and any senior associate chief justice and associate chief justice of each superior court or branch or division thereof; and
- (c) [\[Repealed, 2017, c. 33, s. 253\]](#)
- (d) the Chief Justice of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada.
- (e) [\[Repealed, 2002, c. 8, s. 104\]](#)

(2) and (3) [\[Repealed, 1999, c. 3, s. 77\]](#)

Substitute member

(4) Each member of the Council may appoint a judge of that member's court to be a substitute member of the Council and the substitute member shall act as a member of the Council during any period in which he or she is appointed to act, but the Chief Justice of Canada may, in lieu of appointing a member of the Supreme Court of Canada, appoint any former member of that Court to be a substitute member of the Council.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 59; 1992, c. 51, s. 25; 1996, c. 30, s. 6; 1999, c. 3, s. 77; 2002, c. 7, s. 195, c. 8, s. 104; 2017, c. 33, s. 253; 2023, c. 18, s. 6(E).

Objects of Council

60 (1) The objects of the Council are to promote efficiency and uniformity, and to improve the quality of judicial service, in superior courts.

Powers of Council

(2) In furtherance of its objects, the Council may

- (a) establish conferences of chief justices and associate chief justices; and
- (b) establish seminars for the continuing education of judges, including seminars on matters related to sexual assault law, intimate partner violence, coercive control in intimate partner and family relationships and social context, which includes systemic racism and systemic discrimination.
- (c) [Repealed, 2023, c. 18, s. 7]
- (d) [Repealed, 2023, c. 18, s. 7]

Seminars related to sexual assault law

(3) The Council should ensure that seminars on matters related to sexual assault law established under paragraph (2)(b)

- (a) are developed after consultation with persons, groups or organizations the Council considers appropriate, such as sexual assault survivors and persons, groups and organizations that support them, including Indigenous leaders and representatives of Indigenous communities; and
- (b) include, where the Council finds appropriate, instruction in evidentiary prohibitions, principles of consent and the conduct of sexual assault proceedings, as well as education regarding myths and stereotypes associated with sexual assault complainants.

Meetings of Council

61 (1) The Council shall meet at least once a year.

Work of Council

(2) Subject to this Act, the work of the Council shall be carried on in such manner as the Council may direct.

By-laws

(3) The Council may make by-laws

- (a) respecting the calling of meetings of the Council;

(b) respecting the conduct of business at meetings of the Council, including the fixing of quorums for such meetings, the establishment of committees of the Council and the delegation of duties to any such committees; and

(c) respecting the processes and proceedings under Part IV.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 61; 2023, c. 18, s. 8.

Employment of counsel and assistants

62 The Council may engage the services of any persons that it considers necessary for carrying out its objects and duties, and also the services of counsel to assist the Council in the processes and proceedings under Part IV.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 62; 2023, c. 18, s. 9.

Report — seminars

62.1 (1) Within 60 days after the end of each calendar year, the Council should submit to the Minister a report on the seminars referred to in paragraph 60\(2\)\(b\) on matters related to sexual assault law, intimate partner violence, coercive control in intimate partner and family relationships and social context, which includes systemic racism and systemic discrimination, that were offered in the preceding calendar year. The report should include the following information:

(a) the title and a description of the content of each seminar, its duration and the dates on which it was offered; and

(b) the number of judges who attended each seminar.

Tabling of report

(2) The Minister shall cause a copy of any report received to be tabled in each House of Parliament on any of the first 10 days on which that House is sitting after the Minister receives the report.

PART III

Administration of Federal Judicial Affairs

72 [Repealed, 2023, c. 18, s. 11]

Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs

Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs

73 There shall be an officer, called the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs, who shall have the rank and status of a deputy head of a department and who shall be appointed by the Governor in Council after consultation by the Minister with the Council or such committee thereof as is named for the purpose by the Council.

1976-77, c. 25, s. 17.

Duties and functions of Commissioner

74 (1) It shall be the duty and function of the Commissioner, under the Minister, to

- (a) act as the deputy of the Minister in performing all such duties and functions in relation to the administration of Part I as fall, by law, within the responsibility of the Minister;
- (b) prepare budgetary submissions for the requirements of the Council;
- (c) be responsible for any other administrative arrangements that are necessary to ensure that all reasonable requirements, including those for premises, equipment and other supplies and services and for officers, clerks and employees of the Council for the carrying out of its operations, are provided for in accordance with law; and
- (d) do such other things as the Minister may require in connection with any matter or matters falling, by law, within the Minister's responsibilities for the proper functioning of the judicial system in Canada.

Interpretation of subsection (1)

(2) It is hereby declared for greater certainty that such of the duties and functions of the Minister as are, by paragraphs (1)(a) to (d), subject to be performed by the Commissioner do not form part of the duties and functions assigned to the Minister by the Department of Justice Act.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 74; 2002, c. 8, s. 108.

Registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada

Duties and functions

75 (1) The duties and functions described in paragraphs 74(1)(a) to (c) shall, in relation to the Supreme Court of Canada and the judges thereof, be carried out by the Registrar of the Court, who may, for that purpose, utilize the services of other persons on the staff of the Court.

Registrar deemed deputy head

(2) The Registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada shall, for the purposes of the Public Service Employment Act and other Acts of Parliament and for purposes relating to the duties and functions of the Registrar under this section, be deemed to be the deputy head of the portion of the federal public administration appointed under subsection 12\(2\) of the Supreme Court Act.

Commissioner is deputy head

78 The Commissioner and the officers, clerks and employees appointed under section 77 shall be a portion of the federal public administration that is separate from the Department of Justice and of which the Commissioner shall be the deputy head.

R.S., 1985, c. J-1, s. 78; 2002, c. 8, s. 110; 2003, c. 22, s. 224\(E\).

PART IV

Conduct Review Process

DIVISION 1

Complaints Concerning Judges

Definition

Definition of judicial office

79 In this Division, judicial office includes the office of an associate judge.

2023, c. 18, s. 12; 2022, c. 10, s. 375.

Removal from Office

Justification

80 For the purposes of this Division, the removal from office of a judge is justified only if, for any of the following reasons, the judge's continuation in office would undermine public confidence in the impartiality, integrity or independence of the judge or of their office to such an extent that it would render the judge incapable of executing the functions of judicial office:

- (a) infirmity;
- (b) misconduct;
- (c) failure in the due execution of judicial office;
- (d) the judge is in a position that a reasonable, fair-minded and informed observer would consider to be incompatible with the due execution of judicial office.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Rosters

Establishment of roster of judges

81 (1) The Council shall establish a roster of superior court judges who may be designated as members of a panel established under this Division. The judges on the roster must not be members of the Council.

Number

(2) The number of judges on the roster is set at the discretion of the Council.

Recommendation

(3) The naming of a judge to the roster must be made on the recommendation of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association.

Term

(4) A judge named to the roster remains on it for four years unless they cease to hold judicial office or request to be removed from the roster. When the four-year term ends, the judge may be renamed to the roster on the recommendation of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Establishment of lay persons

82 (1) The Council shall establish a roster of lay persons who may be designated as members of a review panel or full hearing panel established under this Division.

Number

(2) The number of persons on the roster is set at the discretion of the Council.

Conditions

(3) To be named to the roster, a person must

- (a) never have been admitted to the bar of any province or to the Chambre des notaires du Québec;
- (b) never have worked as a paralegal in Canada; and
- (c) meet the other selection criteria established by the Council.

Selection criteria made public

(4) The Council shall make public the selection criteria that it has established for the purpose of paragraph (3)(c).

Term

(5) A person named to the roster of lay persons remains on it for four years unless they request to be removed from the roster or, in the opinion of the Council, they cease to meet the conditions set out in subsection (3). When the four-year term ends, the person may be renamed to the roster.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Official languages

83 In naming persons to the roster of judges and to the roster of lay persons, the Council shall take into account the fact that the proceedings of panels established under this Division will be in either or both official languages.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Diversity

84 The Council shall name persons who reflect the diversity of the Canadian population to the roster of judges and to the roster of lay persons.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Rosters available to public

85 The Council shall make the roster of judges and the roster of lay persons available to the public.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Complaints

Complaints

86 (1) Complaints may be made to the Council, in the form specified by the Council, in respect of a judge of a superior court for any reason referred to in paragraphs 80\(a\) to \(d\).

Complaint by Council

(2) The Council may make a complaint only if two of its members have reasonable grounds to believe that the public's confidence in the impartiality, integrity or independence of the judge or of the judicial office of the judge could be undermined for any reason referred to in paragraphs 80\(a\) to \(d\).

Anonymous complaints

(3) A complaint may be made anonymously, but such a complaint may be dealt with only if two members of the Council have reasonable grounds to believe that the public's confidence in the impartiality, integrity or independence of the judge or of the judicial office of the judge could be undermined for any reason referred to in paragraphs 80\(a\) to \(d\).

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Notice to complainant

87 The Council shall establish policies respecting the notifying of complainants of any decisions made under this Division.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Screening Officer

Designation

88 The Council may designate as a screening officer one or more persons, including a judge, who meets the criteria specified by the Council.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Referral to screening officer

89 The Council shall refer every complaint to a screening officer, other than a complaint made by the Council itself or an anonymous complaint.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Dismissal of complaint

90 (1) Subject to subsection (2), a screening officer may dismiss a complaint if they are of the opinion that it

- (a) is frivolous, vexatious or made for an improper purpose or is an abuse of process;
- (b) was not made for a reason referred to in paragraphs 80\(a\) to \(d\); or
- (c) does not meet the other screening criteria specified by the Council.

Screening criteria to be made public

(2) The Council shall make public the screening criteria that it has established for the purpose of paragraph (1)(c).

Restriction

(3) A screening officer shall not dismiss a complaint that alleges sexual misconduct or sexual harassment or that alleges discrimination on a prohibited ground of discrimination within the meaning of the Canadian Human Rights Act.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Referral to Council

91 If a screening officer does not dismiss a complaint, they shall refer it to the Council for the designation of a reviewing member.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Reviewing Member

Designation

92 In the case of a complaint made by the Council itself or an anonymous complaint, or on receipt of a complaint referred to it under section 91, the Council shall designate one of its members to review the complaint.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Written submissions

93 The reviewing member shall give the judge who is the subject of the complaint an opportunity to make written submissions about the complaint within the time limit established by the Council for the purpose of this section.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Dismissal of complaint

94 (1) The reviewing member shall dismiss the complaint if they are of the opinion that it should be dismissed for any reason set out in paragraphs 90(1)(a) to (c) or that it is wholly without merit.

Communication of dismissal

(2) If the reviewing member dismisses the complaint, they shall inform the complainant in writing of their decision and the reasons for it.

Exclusion

(3) The reasons shall not include information that is confidential or personal, or that is not in the public interest to disclose.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Referral to Council

95 If the reviewing member does not dismiss the complaint, they shall refer it to the Council for the establishment of a review panel.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Notice of decision

96 The reviewing member shall give notice of their decision to the judge who is the subject of the complaint and to the chief justice of the court of which the judge is a member.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Provision of information

97 After the review panel is established, the reviewing member shall provide it with every document in their possession that relates to the complaint. The reviewing member may also provide the review panel with their observations about the complaint and their recommendations about how it should be resolved.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Review Panel

Establishment

98 (1) Subject to subsection (2), on receipt of a complaint referred to it under section 95, the Council shall establish a review panel consisting of the following persons designated by the Council to review the complaint:

- (a) a member of the Council;
- (b) a judge named in the roster of judges; and
- (c) a person named in the roster of lay persons.

Direction to review new complaint

(2) If a complaint is referred to the Council under section 95 and a review panel established to review a previous complaint involving the same judge has not yet made a decision in respect of that complaint, the Council may direct the review panel to also review the new complaint.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Written submissions

99 The review panel shall give the judge who is the subject of the complaint and chief justice of the court of which the judge is a member an opportunity to provide written submissions within the time limit established by the Council for the purpose of this section.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Basis of decisions

100 The review panel shall make its decision only on the basis of the substance of the complaint, any information provided under section 97, any written submissions provided under section 99 and any other document that it considers relevant.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Referral to Council

101 The review panel shall refer the complaint to the Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel if it determines that the judge's removal from office could be justified.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Dismissal of complaint or action

102 If the review panel does not refer the complaint to the Council under section 101, it may dismiss the complaint or take one or more of the following actions if it considers it appropriate to do so in the circumstances:

- (a) issue a private or public expression of concern;
- (b) issue a private or public warning;
- (c) issue a private or public reprimand;
- (d) order the judge to apologize, either privately or publicly, by whatever means the panel considers appropriate in the circumstances;
- (e) order the judge to take specific measures, including attending counselling or a continuing education course;
- (f) take any action that the panel considers to be equivalent to any of the actions referred to in paragraphs (a) to (e);
- (g) with the consent of the judge, take any other action that the panel considers appropriate in the circumstances.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Notice of decision and reasons

103 (1) The review panel shall give notice of its decision and the reasons for it to

- (a) the judge who is the subject of the complaint;
- (b) the chief justice of the court of which that judge is a member; and
- (c) the Council.

Communication of dismissal

(2) If the review panel dismisses the complaint, it shall inform the complainant in writing of its decision and the reasons for it.

Exclusion

(3) The reasons shall not include information that is confidential or personal, or that is not in the public interest to disclose.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Request to establish panel

104 If the review panel takes any action under section 102, the judge who is the subject of the complaint may, within 30 days after the day on which the review panel sends the judge a notice informing the judge of its decision, request that the Council establish a reduced hearing panel to review the complaint.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Provision of information

105 If a reduced hearing panel or a full hearing panel is established in respect of a complaint that was before a review panel, the review panel shall provide to the presenting counsel in respect of the hearing panel all the information that was before it and the decision and reasons it provided under section 103.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Hearing Panels

Presenting Counsel

Designation

106 (1) When it establishes a reduced hearing panel or a full hearing panel, the Council shall designate one of its members to designate a lawyer of at least 10 years' standing at the bar of any province to act as presenting counsel in respect of the hearing panel.

Restriction

(2) The member of the Council who designates the presenting counsel shall not be designated as any of the following:

- (a) a member of the reduced hearing panel or the full hearing panel;
- (b) a member of any appeal panel established in respect of any decision of the reduced hearing panel or the full hearing panel.

Replacement

(3) The presenting counsel may at any time be replaced by another presenting counsel designated in accordance with subsection (1).

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Role

107 The role of the presenting counsel consists of preparing a statement of allegations against a judge who is the subject of a complaint before a reduced hearing panel or full hearing panel, as the case may be, and presenting evidence. The presenting counsel is also responsible for bringing an appeal and presenting arguments in an appeal.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Instructions

108 (1) The presenting council shall take instructions from the Council member who designated them.

Absence or incapacity

(2) In the event of the absence or incapacity of the Council member who designated the presenting counsel, the Council may designate another Council member to give instructions to the presenting counsel.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Standards of conduct

109 In fulfilling their responsibilities, the presenting counsel shall conduct themselves in accordance with the standards and principles that govern the conduct of Crown prosecutors, with any modifications that may be necessary.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Reduced Hearing Panel

Establishment

110 (1) Subject to subsection (2), on receipt of a request made under section 104, the Council shall establish a reduced hearing panel consisting of the following persons designated by it to review the complaint to which the request relates:

- (a) a member of the Council;
- (b) a judge named in the roster of judges; and
- (c) a lawyer of at least 10 years' standing at the bar of any province.

Direction to review new complaint

(2) If a request is made under section 104 by a judge who has previously made a request under that section and the reduced hearing panel established in respect of the previous request has not yet made a decision in respect of the complaint to which the previous request relates, the Council may direct the reduced hearing panel to also review the new complaint.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Decision and reasons not considered

111 In considering the complaint, the reduced hearing panel shall not consider the decision of the review panel that caused the judge who is the subject of the complaint to make the request under section 104 or the reasons for that decision.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Referral of complaint to Council

112 The reduced hearing panel shall refer the complaint to the Council for the establishment of a full hearing panel if it determines that the removal from office of the judge who is the subject of the complaint could be justified.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Dismissal or actions

113 If the reduced hearing panel does not refer the complaint to the Council under section 112, it may dismiss the complaint or take one or more of the actions referred to in paragraphs 102\(a\) to \(g\) if it considers it appropriate to do so in the circumstances.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Notice of decision and reasons

114 The reduced hearing panel shall give notice of its decision and the reasons for it to

- (a) the judge who is the subject of the complaint;
- (b) the chief justice of the court of which that judge is a member;
- (c) the Council; and
- (d) the presenting counsel.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Decision and reasons made public

115 The Council shall make public the reduced hearing panel's decision and the reasons for it, as soon as feasible after receiving them, if the reduced hearing panel's hearings were public. If they were not public, the Council shall make public as much of the decision and reasons as possible having regard to the reasons for holding the hearings, or part of them, in private.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Right of appeal

116 The judge to whom the complaint relates and the presenting counsel may respectively, within 30 days after the day on which the reduced hearing panel sends them a notice of its decision, file with the Council a notice appealing the decision.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Full Hearing Panel

Establishment

117 (1) Subject to subsection (3), on receipt of a referral of a complaint made under section 101 or 112, the Council shall establish a full hearing panel consisting of the following persons to review the complaint:

- (a) two members of the Council who are designated by it;
- (b) a judge named in the roster of judges who is designated by it;

- (c) a person named in the roster of lay persons who is designated by it; and
- (d) a lawyer who is a member of the bar of a province and who is designated in accordance with subsection (2).

Designation of lawyer

(2) The lawyer referred to in paragraph (1)(d) is to be designated by the Minister. However, if the full hearing panel is being established as the result of a request by the Minister under section 148 or the Minister does not designate a lawyer within 30 days after the day on which the Minister receives written notice from the Council that a full hearing panel is to be established, the lawyer is to be designated by the Council.

Direction to review new complaint

(3) If a complaint is referred to the Council under section 101 or 112, and a full hearing panel established to review a previous complaint or to consider a request made under section 148 involving the same judge has not yet made a decision in respect of the previous complaint or the request, the Council may direct the full hearing panel to also review the new complaint.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Decision and reasons not considered

118 In considering the complaint, the full hearing panel shall not consider the decision of the review panel or reduced hearing panel, as the case may be, that led to the establishment of the full hearing panel, or the reasons for that decision.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Removal justified

119 If the full hearing panel determines, on a balance of probabilities, that the judge's removal from office is justified, it shall make a decision to that effect.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Dismissal or action

120 If the full hearing panel determines, on a balance of probabilities, that the judge's removal is not justified, it may dismiss the complaint or take one or more of the actions referred to in paragraphs 102\(a\) to \(g\) if the full hearing panel considers that it is appropriate to do so in the circumstances.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Notice of decision and reasons

121 The full hearing panel shall give notice of its decision and the reasons for it to

- (a) the judge who is the subject of the complaint;
- (b) the chief justice of the court of which that judge is a member;

(c) the Council; and

(d) the presenting counsel.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Decision and reasons made public

122 The Council shall make public the full hearing panel's decision and the reasons for it, as soon as feasible after receiving the decision, if the full hearing panel's hearings were public. If they were not public, the Council shall make public as much of the decision and reasons as possible having regard to the reasons for holding the hearings, or part of them, in private.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Right of appeal

123 The judge who is the subject of the complaint and the presenting counsel may respectively, within 30 days after the day on which the full hearing panel sends them a notice of its decision, file with the Council a notice appealing the decision.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Rights of Judge

Rights

124 The judge who is the subject of a complaint that is before a hearing panel has the right to be heard, to cross-examine witnesses and to adduce evidence, in person or by counsel.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Statement of allegation and notice

125 The judge who is the subject of a complaint that is before a hearing panel is to be provided with a copy of the statement of allegations prepared by the presenting counsel and given reasonable notice of the subject matter and the date, time and place of the hearings.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Salaries and Annuities

Time in judicial office and salary

126 (1) For the purposes of calculating an annuity under Part I, if a full hearing panel decides that the removal from office of a judge who is the subject of a complaint is justified, the day after the day on which the judge is given notice of the full hearing panel's decision is the day to be used to determine the number of years the judge has been in judicial office and the salary annexed to the office held by the judge at the time of his or her resignation, removal or attaining the age of retirement unless

- (a) the decision is set aside by a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, or by the decision of an appeal panel if the appeal panel's decision is final;
- (b) the Minister's response under subsection 140(1) provides that no action is to be taken to remove the judge from office; or
- (c) the matter of removal of the judge from office is put to one or both Houses of Parliament and is rejected by either of them.

Contributions toward annuities

(2) No reservations are to be made under section 50 from the judge's salary in respect of the period that begins on the day after the day on which the judge is given notice of the full hearing panel's decision, unless one of paragraphs (1)(a) to (c) applies, in which case the judge shall contribute an amount equal to the amount that would have been reserved from the judge's salary had subsection (1) not applied.

Salary increases

(3) For greater certainty, nothing in subsection (1) is to be construed as removing from the judge any entitlement to a salary increase that takes effect on or after the day on which the judge is given notice of the full hearing panel's decision.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

General

Powers

127 A hearing panel has all the powers vested in a superior court of the province in which the judge who is the subject of the complaint resides, including

- (a) the power to summon before it any witness and require them to give evidence on oath, orally or in writing or on solemn affirmation if they are entitled to affirm in civil matters, and to produce any documents and evidence that it considers necessary; and
- (b) the power to enforce the attendance of any witness and compel them to give evidence.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Rules of evidence

128 A hearing panel is not bound by any legal or technical rules of evidence and may receive and base a decision on evidence presented in its hearings that it considers credible or trustworthy in the circumstances of the case.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Hearings public

129 (1) A hearing panel's hearings are to be public, but it may hold all or any part of its hearings in private if it considers doing so to be in the public interest.

Prohibition of publication

(2) A hearing panel may prohibit the publication of any information or documents placed before it, if it is of the opinion that such a publication is not in the public interest.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Appeals

Appeal Panel

Establishment

130 On receipt of a notice of appeal filed under section 116 or 123, the Council shall establish an appeal panel consisting of the following persons designated by it:

- (a) three members of the Council; and
- (b) two judges named in the roster of judges.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Power

131 The appeal panel has all the powers vested in the court of appeal of the province in which the judge who is the subject of the complaint resides. It may, among other things, reverse, vary or affirm any decision of the reduced hearing panel or full hearing panel, as the case may be, and make any decision the hearing panel could have made.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Hearings public

132 (1) The appeal panel's hearings are to be public, but it may conduct all or any part of its hearings in private if it considers doing so to be in the public interest.

Prohibition of publication

(2) The appeal panel may prohibit the publication of any information or documents placed before it if it is of the opinion that such a publication is not in the public interest.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Right to make submissions

133 The judge who is the subject of the appeal and the presenting counsel are each entitled to make oral and written submissions to the appeal panel.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Nature of appeal

134 The appeal is to be heard on the basis of the record of the hearing panel whose decision was appealed and on any submissions made by the judge who is the subject of the appeal and the presenting counsel. The appeal panel may, in exceptional circumstances, admit additional evidence or testimony if, in its opinion, it is essential in the interests of justice to do so.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Notice of decision and reasons

135 The appeal panel shall give notice of its decision and the reasons for it to

- (a) the judge who is the subject of the appeal;
- (b) the chief justice of the court of which that judge is a member;
- (c) the Council; and
- (d) the presenting counsel.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Decision and reasons made public

136 The Council shall make public the appeal panel's decision and the reasons for it, as soon as feasible after receiving them, if the appeal panel's hearings were public. If they were not public, the Council shall make public as much of the decision and reasons as possible having regard to the reasons for holding the hearings, or part of them, in private.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Supreme Court of Canada

Notice of application for leave to appeal

137 The judge who is the subject of a decision of an appeal panel and the presenting counsel may respectively, within 30 days after the day on which the appeal panel sends them a notice of its decision, file a notice of application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Right of attorneys general

138 If leave to appeal is granted by the Supreme Court of Canada, the Attorney General of Canada and the attorney general of a province may intervene in the appeal.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Report to Minister

Report with recommendation

139 (1) If a full hearing panel is established in respect of a complaint, the full hearing panel shall, as soon as feasible after the earliest of the following, provide to the Minister a report setting out a recommendation, consistent with the final decision in respect of the complaint, as to whether or not the judge who is the subject of the complaint should be removed from office:

- (a) the judge and the presenting counsel have both waived their rights under section 123 or 137,
- (b) the time limit for exercising those rights has expired, and
- (c) the Supreme Court of Canada has not granted leave to appeal or, if it has, it has made a decision in respect of the appeal panel's decision.

Decisions and reasons

(2) The report must also set out the full hearing panel's decision and any decision of the appeal panel and the Supreme Court of Canada, as well as the reasons, if any, for those decisions.

Copy of report

(3) The full hearing panel shall as soon as feasible give a copy of the report to the judge, the presenting counsel and the Council.

Report made public

(4) The Council shall make public as much of the report as it considers appropriate taking into account the extent to which the decisions and reasons set out in the report were made public.

Absence or incapacity

(5) In the event of the absence or incapacity of all three judges of the full hearing panel, the Council shall designate one of its members to assist the other members of the full hearing panel in preparing the report or, if the others are also absent or incapacitated, to provide the report.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Minister's response

140 (1) The Minister shall respond publicly to the report.

Information

(2) For the purpose of responding publicly, the Minister may seek information from the full hearing panel on any matter that the Minister considers necessary.

Obligation to provide information

(3) The full hearing panel shall provide the judge who is the subject of the report and the presenting counsel with any information that it provides to the Minister.

Absence or incapacity

(4) In the event of the absence or incapacity of all three judges of the full hearing panel, the Council shall designate one of its members to assist the other members of the full hearing panel in providing the information to the Minister or, if the others are also absent or incapacitated, to provide the information.

Ineligibility

Ineligibility

141 (1) A member of the Council and a judge named in the roster of judges is not eligible to be designated

(a) as a reviewing member under section 92, or as a member of any panel established under this Division, in respect of any complaint involving a judge of the court of which they are a member; or

(b) more than once under this Division in respect of the same complaint or the same judge.

Subsections 86(2) and (3)

(2) A member of the Council who is referred to in subsection 86\(2\) or \(3\) whose belief led to the Council making a complaint in respect of a judge or to an anonymous complaint being dealt with is not eligible to be designated, in their capacity as a member of the Council or in any other capacity, as a reviewing member under section 92 or as a member of any panel established under this Division, in respect of the complaint.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Designation

Designation from roster of judges

142 The Council may designate a judge named in the roster of judges to be a member of a panel established under section 98, 110, 117 or 130 instead of designating a member of the Council as the section in question requires.

Amounts payable out of C.R.F.

146 (1) Subject to the regulations made under section 144 and the guidelines made under subsection 145(1), there shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund all amounts payable in respect of the following:

- (a) the expenses incurred by members of the Council and judges named in the roster of judges in the course of carrying out their duties under this Division or Division 2;
- (b) the expenses incurred by and the allowances payable to panel members, other than judges, in the course of carrying out their duties under this Division or Division 2;
- (c) the fees of and the expenses incurred by presenting counsel in the course of carrying out their duties under this Division or Division 2;
- (d) subject to subsection (2), the fees of and the expenses incurred by lawyers representing judges who are the subject of a complaint under this Division or Division 2;
- (e) the fees and expenses of lawyers and experts engaged by panels established under this Division or Division 2; and
- (f) the expenses incidental to the conduct of meetings and hearings under this Division or Division 2, including the renting of rooms, the recording and transcription of proceedings, translation services and security.

Restriction

(2) Fees and expenses of lawyers representing judges may be paid only in respect of proceedings under this Division or Division 2 or in respect of appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada relating to those proceedings. For greater certainty, no payments to lawyers representing judges are to be made in respect of any judicial review of any decision made under this Division or Division 2.

Independent review of financial provisions

147 (1) Within 18 months after the day on which the first report is submitted under section 160 and on every fifth anniversary of that day, the Council shall cause an independent review of the application of sections 144 to 146 to be conducted. The review is to be conducted by a person or body designated by the Commissioner in consultation with the Council.

Report

(2) The person or body conducting the review shall provide a report of their findings and recommendations to the Minister, the chairperson of the Council and the Commissioner. The report shall include a finding on whether sections 144 to 146 have been applied in a manner consistent with best practices regarding financial controls.

Report to be made public

(3) The Council shall make the report public with any redactions that the Commissioner and chairperson of the Council jointly consider necessary to protect confidential or personal information.

DIVISION 3

Requests Concerning Office Holders

Removal from office

151 For the purposes of this Division, the removal from office of a person appointed under an Act of Parliament to hold office during good behaviour, other than a judge, is justified only if, for any of the following reasons, the person's continuation in office would undermine public confidence in the integrity of the person or of their office to such an extent that it would render the person incapable of executing the functions of their office:

- (a) infirmity;
- (b) misconduct;
- (c) failure in the due execution of their office;
- (d) the person has been placed in a position that a reasonable, fair-minded and informed observer would consider to be incompatible with the due execution of their office.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Request

Application of sections 119 to 125 and 127 to 143

154 Sections 119 to 125 and 127 to 143 apply, with any necessary modifications, in respect of the request and all proceedings arising from it.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Removal from office

155 (1) On receipt of a report provided under subsection 139(1) containing a recommendation that a person be removed from office, the Governor in Council, may, on the recommendation of the Minister, by order, remove the person from office if the person is a person who may be removed from office by the Governor in Council other than on address of the Senate or House of Commons or joint address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Orders and reports laid before Parliament

(2) If an order is made under subsection (1), a copy of the order and a copy of the report relating to the order must be laid before each House of Parliament within 15 days after the day on which the order is made or, if either House is not then sitting, on any of the first 15 days on which that House is sitting.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Leave of absence with salary

156 The Governor in Council may, for any period that the Governor in Council considers appropriate, grant leave of absence to any person, other than a judge, whose removal from office is recommended because of infirmity in a report provided under subsection 139(1) and, if leave of absence is granted, the person's salary is to continue to be paid during the period of leave of absence.

DIVISION 4

General

Powers, rights and duties not affected

157 Nothing in, or done or omitted to be done under the authority of, this Part affects any power, right or duty of the Senate, the House of Commons or the Governor in Council in relation to the removal from office of a judge or any other person.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Decision final

158 A decision made by a member of the Council under any of Divisions 1 to 3 or by a member of a panel established under any of those Divisions is final and is not to be questioned or reviewed in any court other than provided for in this Part.

2023, c. 18, s. 12.

Remote appearance

159 For greater certainty, any proceedings or hearings under this Part may take place by remote appearance.

Annual report

160 (1) The Council shall, within three months after the end of each calendar year, submit a report to the Minister setting out, in respect of the year, the number of

- (a) complaints received;
- (b) complaints dismissed by a screening officer;
- (c) complaints dismissed by a reviewing member;
- (d) complaints reviewed by review panels, hearing panels and appeal panels; and
- (e) complaints in respect of which any of the actions referred to in paragraphs 102\(a\) to \(g\) were taken.

Report to be made public

(2) After the annual report is submitted to the Minister, the Council shall make it public.

senior member means, in relation to a complaint or allegation, the longest-serving eligible member of the Judicial Conduct Committee who has not previously considered the matter or, if no Judicial Conduct Committee member is available, the longest-serving member of the Council who has not previously considered the matter. (doyen)

Establishment and Powers of a Judicial Conduct Review Panel

Establishment of Judicial Conduct Review Panel

2 (1) The Chairperson or Vice-Chairperson of the Judicial Conduct Committee, established by the Council in order to consider complaints or allegations made in respect of a judge of a superior court may, if they determine that a complaint or allegation on its face might be serious enough to warrant the removal of the judge, establish a Judicial Conduct Review Panel to decide whether an Inquiry Committee should be constituted in accordance with subsection 63\(3\) of the Act.

Designation of members

(2) The senior member designates the members of the Judicial Conduct Review Panel.

Composition of Judicial Conduct Review Panel

(3) The Judicial Conduct Review Panel is to be composed of five persons of which three are members of the Council, one is a puisne judge and one is a person who is neither a judge nor a member of the bar of a province.

Serious matter

(4) The Judicial Conduct Review Panel may decide that an Inquiry Committee is to be constituted only if it determines that the matter might be serious enough to warrant the removal of the judge.

Matter sent back to Chairperson or Vice-Chairperson

(5) If the Judicial Conduct Review Panel decides that no Inquiry Committee is to be constituted, it must send the matter back to the Chairperson or Vice-Chairperson of the Judicial Conduct Committee for them to make a decision on the most appropriate way to resolve it.

Complainant informed

(6) If the Judicial Conduct Review Panel decides that an Inquiry Committee is to be constituted, the Council's Executive Director must inform the complainant, if any, by letter.

Decision, reasons and statement of issues

(7) The Judicial Conduct Review Panel must prepare written reasons and a statement of issues to be considered by the Inquiry Committee. The Council's Executive Director must send a copy of the Judicial Conduct Review Panel's decision, reasons and statement of issues to

- (a) the judge and their Chief Justice;
- (b) the Minister; and
- (c) the Inquiry Committee, once it is constituted.

Notice inviting Minister to designate members

(8) The Council's Executive Director must also send a notice to the Minister inviting that Minister to designate members of the bar of a province to the Inquiry Committee in accordance with subsection 63\(3\) of the Act.

Designating Members to Inquiry Committee

Designation of members

3 (1) An Inquiry Committee constituted in accordance with subsection 63\(3\) of the Act is composed of an uneven number of members designated by the senior member, the majority of whom are from the Council.

Additional members

(2) If the Minister does not designate any members within 60 days after the day on which the notice is received under paragraph 2\(8\), the senior member may designate additional Council members to the Inquiry Committee to complete its composition.

Senior member chooses chair

(3) The senior member also designates one of the members of the Inquiry Committee to chair the Committee.

Persons not eligible to be members

(4) The following persons are not eligible to be members of the Inquiry Committee:

- (a) the Chairperson or Vice-Chairperson of the Judicial Conduct Committee who referred the matter to the Judicial Conduct Review Panel;

(b) a member of the same court as that of the judge who is the subject of the inquiry or investigation; and

(c) a member of the Judicial Conduct Review Panel who participated in the deliberations to decide whether an Inquiry Committee must be constituted.

Legal Counsel and Advisors

Persons to advise and assist

4 The Inquiry Committee may engage legal counsel and other persons to provide advice and to assist in the conduct of the inquiry.

Inquiry Committee Proceedings

Complaint or allegation

5 (1) The Inquiry Committee may consider any complaint or allegation pertaining to the judge that is brought to its attention. In so doing, it must take into account the Judicial Conduct Review Panel's written reasons and statement of issues.

Sufficient notice to respond

(2) The Inquiry Committee must inform the judge of all complaints or allegations pertaining to the judge and must give them sufficient time to respond fully to them.

Comments from judge

(3) The Inquiry Committee may set a time limit to receive comments from the judge that is reasonable in the circumstances, it must notify the judge of that time limit, and, if any comments are received within that time limit, it must consider them.

Public or private hearing

6 (1) Subject to subsection 63\(6\) of the Act, hearings of the Inquiry Committee must be conducted in public unless, the Inquiry Committee determines that the public interest and the due administration of justice require that all or any part of a hearing be conducted in private.

Prohibition of publication if not in public interest

(2) The Inquiry Committee may prohibit the publication of any information or documents placed before it if it determines that publication is not in the public interest and may take any measures that it considers necessary to protect the identity of persons, including persons who have received assurances of confidentiality as part of the consideration of a complaint or allegation made in respect of the judge.

Principle of fairness

7 The Inquiry Committee must conduct its inquiry or investigation in accordance with the principle of fairness.

Inquiry Committee Report

Report of findings and conclusions

8 (1) The Inquiry Committee must submit a report to the Council setting out its findings and its conclusions about whether to recommend the removal of the judge from office.

Copy of report and notice to complainant

(2) After the report has been submitted to the Council, its Executive Director must provide a copy to the judge and to any other persons or bodies who had standing in the hearing. He or she must also notify the complainant, if any, when the Inquiry Committee has made the report.

Hearing conducted in public

(3) If the hearing was conducted in public, the report must be made available to the public and a copy provided to the complainant, if any.

Judge's Response to Inquiry Committee Report

Written submission by judge

9 (1) Within 30 days after the day on which the Inquiry Committee's report is received, the judge may make a written submission to the Council regarding the report.

Extension

(2) On the judge's request, the Council must grant an extension of time for making the submission if it considers that the extension is in the public interest.

Deliberations of Council Concerning Removal of Judges from office

Senior member chairs meetings

10 (1) The senior member who is available to participate in deliberations concerning the removal from office of a judge is to chair any meetings of Council related to those deliberations.

Quorum

(2) A quorum of 17 members of the Council is required when it meets to deliberate the removal from office of a judge.

Quorum — death, incapacity, resignation or retirement

(3) In the event of the death, incapacity, resignation or retirement of a member during the deliberations, the remaining members constitute a quorum.

Vote in event of tie

(4) During the deliberations of the Council concerning the removal from office of a judge, the member chairing the meeting may vote in respect of a report of the Council's conclusions on the matter only in the event of a tie.

Deliberations

(5) Deliberations of the Council concerning the removal from office of a judge may also be held by audio-conference or by video conference.

Consideration of Inquiry Committee Report by Council

Consideration of report and written submissions

11 (1) The Council must consider the Inquiry Committee's report and any written submission made by the judge.

Who must not participate

(2) Persons referred to in subsection 3\(4\) and members of the Inquiry Committee must not participate in the Council's consideration of the report or in any other deliberations of the Council related to the matter.

Clarification

12 If the Council is of the opinion that the Inquiry Committee's report requires a clarification or that a supplementary inquiry or investigation is necessary, it may refer all or part of the matter back to the Inquiry Committee with directions.

Council Report

Report of conclusions to Minister

13 The Council's Executive Director must provide the judge with a copy of the report of its conclusions that the Council presented to the Minister in accordance with section 65 of the Act.

Transitional Provision

14 Despite these By-laws, the Canadian Judicial Council Inquiries and Investigations By-laws, as they read immediately before the day on which these By-laws come into force, continue to apply in respect of any inquiries or investigations being conducted by a Review Panel or an Inquiry Committee or the Council acting under section 11 or 12, that were commenced under those By-laws.

PART III
EMPLOYMENT BY THE CROWN

APPOINTMENT BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

Appointment by the Public Service Commission

Employment in a ministry

32 (1) The Public Service Commission may appoint persons to employment by the Crown to work in a ministry, other than in a minister's office. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 32 (1).

Employment in a Commission public body

(2) The Public Service Commission may appoint persons to employment by the Crown to work in a Commission public body. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 32 (2).

Fixed term or otherwise

(3) An appointment by the Public Service Commission may be for a fixed term or otherwise. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 32 (3).

Same

(4) A person appointed by the Public Service Commission for a fixed term may be reappointed for one or more further terms. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 32 (4).

Creation of positions

33 (1) The Management Board of Cabinet may, by directive, create classes of position for public servants appointed by the Public Service Commission and determine the duties of and qualifications for the positions. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 33 (1).

Salary or wage ranges

(2) The Management Board of Cabinet may, by directive, determine salary ranges or wage ranges for public servants appointed by the Public Service Commission. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 33 (2).

Other remuneration

(3) The Management Board of Cabinet may, by directive, determine other remuneration, including benefits, for public servants appointed by the Public Service Commission. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 33 (3).

Other terms, conditions of employment

(4) The Management Board of Cabinet may, by directive, establish other terms and conditions of employment for public servants appointed by the Public Service Commission and for deputy ministers. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 33 (4); 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (5).

General or particular

(5) Directives issued under this section may be general or particular in their application. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 33 (5).

Non-application

(6) Part III (Regulations) of the Legislation Act, 2006 does not apply to a directive issued under this section. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, ss. 33 (6), 157.

Archive

(7) The Management Board of Cabinet shall maintain an archive of all directives issued by it under this section indicating the period during which each directive applies. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 33 (7).

Discipline and dismissal

34 The Public Service Commission may for cause,

- (a) impose disciplinary measures, including suspension, on a public servant appointed by it, as the Commission considers appropriate; and
- (b) dismiss from employment a public servant appointed by it, as the Commission considers appropriate. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (6).

Suspension, maximum period

35 A suspension under section 34 by the Public Service Commission may continue for a period not exceeding one month and, during the suspension, the public servant is not entitled to receive a salary, wages or any other remuneration, including benefits. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 35.

Commission may investigate

36 (1) The Public Service Commission may conduct an investigation in order to determine whether there is cause for the purposes of section 34. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 36 (1).

Suspension pending an investigation

(2) The Public Service Commission may, pending the conclusion of an investigation, suspend the public servant for a period not exceeding the period prescribed under clause 55 (1) (a). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 36 (2).

Same

(3) The Public Service Commission may withhold the public servant's salary, wages or any other remuneration, including benefits, during the suspension under this section if it considers it appropriate to do so, and may, at the end of the investigation, reimburse amounts that were withheld if it considers it appropriate to do so. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 36 (3).

Probationary period

37 (1) Where the Public Service Commission appoints a public servant to employment for a term that is not fixed, the Commission may direct that the public servant be on probation for a period of not more than one year. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 37 (1).

Same

(2) While on probation under subsection (1), the public servant may be dismissed for failure to meet the requirements of his or her position. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 37 (2).

Dismissal without cause

38 (1) The Public Service Commission may without cause dismiss a public servant appointed by it who is employed in a class of position that is prescribed under clause 55 (1) (b) by giving the public servant reasonable notice or by giving the public servant compensation in lieu of notice. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 38 (1).

Reinstatement

(2) An order to reinstate a public servant who is dismissed under subsection (1) shall not be made by any court, tribunal or other arbitrator. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 38 (2).

Dismissal for certain reasons

39 The Public Service Commission may dismiss a public servant appointed by it for the following reasons:

1. A shortage of work.
2. A shortage of funds.
3. The elimination of the public servant's position.
4. A material change in the ministry or Commission public body in which the public servant works. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 39.

Effect of dismissal

40 When the dismissal of a public servant takes effect, he or she ceases to be employed by the Crown. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 40.

Resignation

41 (1) A public servant appointed by the Public Service Commission may resign from his or her position by giving at least two weeks notice in writing of the intention to resign to the Commission. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 41 (1).

Withdrawal

(2) A public servant may, by giving notice in writing to the Public Service Commission, withdraw the notice of intention to resign at any time before its effective date if,

- (a) no person has been appointed or selected for appointment by the Commission to the position held by the public servant; and
- (b) the Commission approves the withdrawal. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 41 (2).

Effect of resignation

(3) When the resignation of a public servant takes effect, he or she ceases to be employed by the Crown. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 41 (3).

Abandonment

42 (1) If a public servant appointed by the Public Service Commission is absent from work without approved leave for a period of two weeks or more, the Commission may declare, in writing, that the public servant has abandoned the position and that his or her employment by the Crown is terminated. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 42 (1).

Effect of termination

(2) When a declaration with respect to a public servant is made under subsection (1), the termination takes effect and the public servant ceases to be employed by the Crown. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 42 (2).

Directives, human resources

43 (1) The Public Service Commission may issue directives for effective management and administration of human resources in relation to public servants appointed by it and in relation to deputy ministers. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 43 (1); 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (7).

Directives, non-partisan

(2) The Public Service Commission shall ensure by directive that the recruitment and employment of public servants appointed by it are non-partisan. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 43 (2).

Conflict

(3) In the case of a conflict between a directive issued by the Public Service Commission under subsection (1) and a policy, procedure or directive of the Management Board of Cabinet under the Management Board of Cabinet Act or under this Act, the latter prevails. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 43 (3).

Same

(4) The Management Board of Cabinet shall not set a policy or procedure under the Management Board of Cabinet Act or issue a directive under that Act or under this Act that would be inconsistent with the non-partisan nature of the public service of Ontario. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 43 (4).

General or particular

(5) Directives issued under this section may be general or particular in their application. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 43 (5).

Non-application

(6) Part III (Regulations) of the Legislation Act, 2006 does not apply to a directive issued under this section. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, ss. 43 (6), 157.

Archive

(7) The Public Service Commission shall maintain an archive of all directives issued by it under this section indicating the period during which each directive applies. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 43 (7).

Delegation by CommissionDelegation, public servants appointed to work in a ministry

44 (1) The Public Service Commission may delegate any of its powers, duties or functions under subsection 32 (1) and sections 34 to 42 in respect of public servants appointed by it to work in a ministry to the deputy minister of the ministry. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 44 (1).

Subdelegation by deputy minister

(2) A deputy minister may subdelegate any of the powers, duties or functions delegated to him or her under subsection (1) to one or more public servants employed under this Part who work in his or her ministry. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 44 (2).

Same

(3) With the permission of the Public Service Commission, a deputy minister may subdelegate to one or more persons any of the powers, duties or functions delegated to him or her under subsection (1), other than the power to dismiss a public servant and the power to make a declaration under subsection 42 (1). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 44 (3).

Delegation, public servants appointed to work in Commission public body

(4) Subject to subsection (5), the Public Service Commission may delegate any of its powers, duties or functions under subsection 32 (2) and sections 34 to 42 in respect of public servants appointed by it to work in a Commission public body to a deputy minister or to,

- (a) an individual who is prescribed under subsection 55 (1.1) for the body; or
- (b) the chair of the body, if no individual is prescribed under subsection 55 (1.1) for the body. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 44 (4); 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (8).

Limitation

(5) The power to dismiss a public servant and the power to make a declaration under subsection 42 (1) may only be delegated under subsection (4) by the Public Service Commission to a deputy minister. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 44 (5).

(2) Regulations made under this section may be general or particular in their application. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 55 (2).

PART IV ETHICAL CONDUCT

APPLICATION OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST RULES TO PUBLIC SERVANTS AND FORMER PUBLIC SERVANTS

Application

56 (1) Sections 57 to 65 apply to public servants and former public servants other than public servants who work or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a minister's office. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 56 (1).

Same, ministers' offices

(2) Sections 66 to 69 apply to public servants and former public servants who work or who, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a minister's office. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 56 (2).

MINISTRIES (OTHER THAN MINISTERS' OFFICES) AND PUBLIC BODIES

Rules for ministries

57 Every public servant and every former public servant who works or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a ministry shall comply with the conflict of interest rules prescribed under clause 71 (1) (a) that apply in respect of the ministry. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 57.

Rules for public bodies

58 (1) Every public servant and every former public servant who works or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a public body shall comply with the conflict of interest rules that apply to him or her, determined as follows:

1. The conflict of interest rules that apply to the public servant or former public servant are the rules, if any, approved and published by the Integrity Commissioner under section 59 or 60 for the public body.

2. During the year beginning on the day on which this section comes into force, if no conflict of interest rules are approved and published by the Conflict of Interest Commissioner under section 59 or 60 for a Commission public body, the conflict of interest rules prescribed under clause 71 (1) (a) apply to the public servant or former public servant, with necessary modifications.
3. During the year beginning on the day on which this section comes into force, if no conflict of interest rules are approved and published by the Conflict of Interest Commissioner under section 59 or 60 for a public body that is not a Commission public body, the conflict of interest rules that apply to the public servant or former public servant are the rules that applied to him or her immediately before this section comes into force.
4. On and after August 21, 2008 and before the day section 2 of Schedule 35 to the Restoring Trust, Transparency and Accountability Act, 2018 comes into force, if no conflict of interest rules are approved and published by the Conflict of Interest Commissioner for a public body, the conflict of interest rules prescribed under clause 71 (1) (a) of this Act apply to the public servant or former public servant, with necessary modifications.
5. On and after the day section 2 of Schedule 35 to the Restoring Trust, Transparency and Accountability Act, 2018 comes into force, if no conflict of interest rules are approved and published by the Integrity Commissioner for a public body, the conflict of interest rules prescribed under clause 71 (1) (a) of this Act apply to the public servant or former public servant, with necessary modifications. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 58; 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 5 (1), 14.

Transition

(2) Subject to subsection 59 (3), rules approved and published by the Conflict of Interest Commissioner before the day section 2 of Schedule 35 to the Restoring Trust, Transparency and Accountability Act, 2018 comes into force are deemed to be approved by the Integrity Commissioner under section 59 of this Act until they are amended or revoked. 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 5 (2).

Rules prepared by public bodies

59 (1) A public body may submit proposed conflict of interest rules with respect to the body to the Integrity Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 59 (1); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Approval of proposed rules

(2) The Integrity Commissioner shall approve, in writing, the rules proposed for a public body under subsection (1) if, in the Commissioner's opinion, the proposed rules establish a degree of ethical conduct that is at least equivalent to the degree of ethical conduct established by the conflict of interest rules prescribed under clause 71 (1) (a), having regard to the powers, duties and functions of the public body. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 59 (2); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(3) Conflict of interest rules approved by the Integrity Commissioner have no effect unless the rules are published in accordance with subsection (4). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 59 (3); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(4) The Integrity Commissioner shall publish approved conflict of interest rules on the Commissioner's website, and shall indicate on the rules the date on which they were so published. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 59 (4); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(5) Conflict of interest rules published in accordance with subsection (4) take effect on the date of publication indicated under subsection (4) or on such later date as may be specified on the website by the Integrity Commissioner in respect of the published rules. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 59 (5); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Non-application

(6) Part III (Regulations) of the Legislation Act, 2006 does not apply to rules made by a public body and approved by the Commissioner under subsection (2). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, ss. 59 (6), 157.

Change in rules

60 (1) If the rules prescribed under clause 71 (1) (a) change and, in the Integrity Commissioner's opinion, rules approved and published under section 59 for a public body no longer meet the test set out in subsection 59 (2), the Commissioner may request that the body amend its rules and submit the amended rules to the Commissioner within a time period specified by him or her. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 60 (1); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 6.

Same

(2) The Integrity Commissioner may extend the time period within which the amended rules may be submitted, either before or after the expiry of the period. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 60 (2); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(3) Subsections 59 (2) to (6) apply, with necessary modifications, to rules submitted under subsection (1). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 60 (3).

Change in rules

61 (1) Subsections (2) and (3) apply if,

- (a) a public body fails to submit amended rules within the time period specified under subsection 60 (1) or (2);
- (b) the Integrity Commissioner notifies a public body that amended rules submitted by it under subsection 60 (1) do not meet the test set out in subsection 59 (2); or
- (c) the public body rescinds the rules made by it under section 59 or 60 and notifies the Integrity Commissioner of the rescission in writing. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 61 (1); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(2) The conflict of interest rules that were in effect for the public body cease to apply to the body and the conflict of interest rules prescribed under clause 71 (1) (a) apply to the body with such modifications as are necessary having regard to the body's powers, duties and functions, on and after the date specified by the Integrity Commissioner under subsection (3). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 61 (2); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(3) The Integrity Commissioner shall publish a notice on the Commissioner's website specifying a date for the purposes of subsection (2). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 61 (3); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Ethics executive for public servants

62 (1) The ethics executive for a public servant is determined as follows:

1. The ethics executive for a public servant employed under Part III who works in a ministry, other than in a minister's office, is the deputy minister.
2. The ethics executive for a deputy minister is the Secretary of the Cabinet.
3. The ethics executive for a public servant who works in a public body, whether as a government appointee, as an employee under Part III or as an employee of the public body is the individual who is prescribed under subsection 71 (1.1) for the public servant or, if no individual is prescribed under that clause for the public servant, the chair of the body.
4. The ethics executive for the Secretary of the Cabinet, the chairs of public bodies and any individuals prescribed under subsections 55 (1.1) and 71 (1.1) is the Integrity Commissioner.
5. Repealed: 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 7.

2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 62 (1); 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (11); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 7, 14.

Delegation, O.P.P.

(2) The deputy minister of the Ministry of Community Safety and Correctional Services may delegate any of his or her powers, duties and functions as ethics executive with respect to members of the Ontario Provincial Police to the Commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 62 (2).

Ethics executive for former public servant

63 The ethics executive for a former public servant is determined as follows:

1. The ethics executive for a former public servant who, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, was a public servant employed under Part III who worked in a ministry, other than in a minister's office, is the Public Service Commission.
2. The ethics executive for a former public servant who, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a public body, whether as a government appointee, as an employee under Part III or as an employee of the public body, is the Integrity Commissioner.
3. The ethics executive for a former deputy minister or a former Secretary of the Cabinet is the Integrity Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 63; 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Promotion of ethical conduct

64 The ethics executive for a public servant who works in a ministry, other than in a minister's office, or who works in a public body shall,

- (a) ensure that public servants who work in the ministry or the public body are familiar with the conflict of interest rules that apply in respect of the ministry or the public body; and
- (b) promote ethical conduct by public servants who work in the ministry or the public body. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 64.

Role of ethics executive

Questions for ethics executive

65 (1) A public servant or former public servant may request that his or her ethics executive determine a question about the application of conflict of interest rules to the public servant or former public servant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 65 (1).

Same

(2) A supervisor of a public servant may request that the public servant's ethics executive determine a question about the application of conflict of interest rules to the public servant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 65 (2).

Duty to notify

(3) If a public servant or a former public servant has personal or pecuniary interests that could raise an issue under the conflict of interest rules that apply to him or her, the public servant or former public servant shall notify his or her ethics executive. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 65 (3).

Inquiries

(4) The ethics executive may make such inquiries as he or she considers appropriate in response to a request, a notification or where the ethics executive has concerns that a conflict of interest rule has been or is about to be contravened by a public servant or former public servant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 65 (4).

Determinations and directions

(5) An ethics executive shall,

- (a) make a determination with respect to any matter that is brought to the attention of the ethics executive under subsections (1) to (3) or that is the subject of inquiry under subsection (4); and
- (b) in the case of a determination that there is a conflict of interest or potential conflict of interest, give the public servant or former public servant directions, if any, that the ethics executive considers appropriate to address the conflict of interest or potential conflict of interest. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 65 (5).

Same

(6) If an ethics executive, other than the Integrity Commissioner, considers it appropriate to do so, the ethics executive may refer any matter that is brought to the ethics executive's attention under subsections (1) to (3) or that is the subject of inquiry under subsection (4) to the Integrity Commissioner, to be dealt with by the Commissioner under subsection (5). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 65 (6); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 8, 14.

Same

(7) Where an ethics executive has referred a matter to the Integrity Commissioner under subsection (6), the Commissioner shall inform the ethics executive of any determination made or direction given by the Commissioner under subsection (5) as a result of the referral. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 65 (7); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Compliance with direction

(8) A public servant or former public servant shall comply with a direction of the ethics executive or the Integrity Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 65 (8); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Contravention by government appointee

(9) If an ethics executive or the Integrity Commissioner makes a determination under subsection (5) that a government appointee has contravened a conflict of interest rule, the ethics executive or the Integrity Commissioner, as the case may be, shall notify the minister responsible for the body to which the government appointee is appointed of the contravention. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 65 (9); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(10) If the Integrity Commissioner makes a determination under subsection (5) that a former public servant who, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a public body as a government appointee has contravened a conflict of interest rule, the Commissioner shall notify the minister responsible for the body to which the government appointee was appointed of the contravention. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 65 (10); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

MINISTERS' OFFICES

Rules for ministers' offices

66 Every public servant and every former public servant who works or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a minister's office shall comply with the conflict of interest rules prescribed under clause 71 (1) (c) that apply in respect of the minister's office. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 66.

Promotion of ethical conduct

67 A minister shall,

- (a) ensure that public servants who work in the minister's office are familiar with the conflict of interest rules that apply in respect of the minister's office; and

A, s. 69 (3).

Inquiries

(4) The ethics executive may make such inquiries as he or she considers appropriate in response to a request, a notification or where the ethics executive has concerns that a conflict of interest rule has been or is about to be contravened by a public servant or a former public servant who works or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a minister's office. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 69 (4).

Determinations and directions

(5) The ethics executive shall,

- (a) make a determination with respect to any matter that is brought to his or her attention under subsections (1) to (3) or that is the subject of inquiry under subsection (4); and
- (b) in the case of a determination that there is a conflict of interest or potential conflict of interest, give the public servant or former public servant who works or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a minister's office directions, if any, that the ethics executive considers appropriate to address the conflict of interest or potential conflict of interest. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 69 (5).

Compliance with direction

(6) A public servant or former public servant who works or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a minister's office shall comply with a direction of the ethics executive. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 69 (6).

Notice to minister

(7) The ethics executive shall notify the minister if the ethics executive,

- (a) makes a determination under subsection (5) that a public servant or former public servant who works or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a minister's office has a conflict of interest or potential conflict of interest; or
- (b) gives a direction under subsection (5) to a public servant or former public servant who works or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a minister's office. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 69 (7).

PENALTYPenalty

70 A public servant who contravenes a conflict of interest rule applicable to him or her or who contravenes a direction under section 65 or 69 is subject to disciplinary measures, including suspension and dismissal. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 70.

REGULATIONSRegulations, Part IV

71 (1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations,

- (a) establishing conflict of interest rules for public servants and former public servants who work or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a ministry, other than in a minister's office, for the purposes of section 57;
- (b) Repealed: 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (12).
- (c) establishing conflict of interest rules for public servants and former public servants who work or, immediately before ceasing to be a public servant, worked in a minister's office, for the purposes of section 66;
- (d) prescribing powers, duties and functions of an ethics executive in relation to conflict of interest matters, in addition to those provided under this Act;

- (e) respecting procedures to be followed in connection with this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 71 (1); 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (12).

Same, Minister

(1.1) The minister responsible for the administration of this Act may make regulations prescribing individuals for the purposes of paragraph 3 of subsection 62 (1). 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (13).

Scope of regulations

(2) Regulations made under this section may be general or particular in their application. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 71 (2).

PART V POLITICAL ACTIVITY

INTERPRETATION

Political activity

72 For the purposes of this Part, a public servant engages in political activity when,

- (a) the public servant does anything in support of or in opposition to a federal or provincial political party;
- (b) the public servant does anything in support of or in opposition to a candidate in a federal, provincial or municipal election;
- (c) the public servant is or seeks to become a candidate in a federal, provincial or municipal election; or
- (d) the public servant comments publicly and outside the scope of the duties of his or her position on matters that are directly related to those duties and that are dealt with in the positions or policies of a federal or provincial political party or in the positions or policies publicly expressed by a candidate in a federal, provincial or municipal election. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 72.

Ethics executive

73 (1) For the purposes of this Part, the ethics executive for a public servant is,

- (a) in the case of a public servant who works in a minister's office, the Integrity Commissioner;
- (b) in the case of any other public servant, his or her ethics executive determined under subsection 62 (1). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 73 (1).

Same

(2) Subsection 62 (2) applies to the deputy minister of the Ministry of Community Safety and Correctional Services as ethics executive with respect to members of the Ontario Provincial Police. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 73 (2).

RULES FOR POLITICAL ACTIVITY OF MOST PUBLIC SERVANTS

Application

74 Sections 75 to 84 apply to public servants other than,

- (a) specially restricted public servants within the meaning of subsection 85 (2); or
- (b) public servants who work in a minister's office. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 74.

Right to engage

75 A public servant is entitled to engage in political activity, subject to the restrictions set out under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 75.

Right to decline

76 A public servant is entitled to decline to engage in political activity. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 76.

Prohibited political activities

77 A public servant shall not,

- (a) engage in political activity in the workplace;
- (b) engage in political activity while wearing a uniform associated with a position in the public service of Ontario;
- (c) use government premises, equipment or supplies when engaging in political activity; or
- (d) associate his or her position with political activity, except if the public servant is or is seeking to become a candidate in a federal, provincial or municipal election, and then only to the extent necessary to identify the public servant's position and work experience. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 77.

Definition, “election period”

78 In sections 79 to 82,

“election period” means,

- (a) in respect of a political activity that relates to a federal or provincial election, the period starting on the day that a writ is issued for the election and ending on the polling day for the election,
- (b) in respect of a political activity that relates to a municipal election, the period starting 60 days before the polling day for the election and ending on the polling day for the election. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 78.

Restricted political activities

79 (1) Subject to subsection (2), unless a public servant has been granted an unpaid leave of absence under section 80, he or she shall not,

- (a) be or seek to become a candidate in a federal or provincial election;
- (b) solicit funds on behalf of a federal or provincial party or a federal, provincial or municipal candidate if his or her duties include,
 - (i) supervising other public servants, or
 - (ii) dealing directly with members of the public if those members of the public may perceive him or her as a person able to exercise power over them;
- (c) comment publicly, outside the scope of his or her duties as a public servant, on matters that are directly related to those duties and that are addressed in the policies of a federal or provincial party or in the policies of a candidate in a federal, provincial or municipal election;
- (d) engage in political activity if doing so could interfere with the performance of his or her duties as a public servant; or
- (e) engage in political activity if doing so could conflict with,
 - (i) in the case of a public servant who works in a ministry, the interests of the Crown,
 - (ii) in the case of a public servant who works in a public body, the interests of the public body. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 79 (1).

Exception

(2) A public servant who is or seeks to become a candidate in a federal or provincial election at any time other than during an election period is not required to be on an unpaid leave of absence to do so, if his or her ethics executive determines under subsection 80 (3) that a leave is not necessary in the circumstances. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 79 (2).

Application to engage in restricted political activity

80 (1) A public servant who wishes to engage in political activity described in subsection 79 (1) may apply under this section to his or her ethics executive and the application shall specify the political activity. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 80 (1).

Same

(2) Subject to subsection (3), on receiving the application, the ethics executive,

- (a) shall grant the public servant an unpaid leave of absence, in the case of an application to engage in political activity during an election period; and

- (b) may grant the public servant an unpaid leave of absence, in the case of an application to engage in political activity at a time other than during an election period, if the ethics executive considers it appropriate to do so. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 80 (2).

Same

(3) In the case of an application to be or seek to become a candidate in a federal or provincial election at a time other than during an election period, the ethics executive shall determine whether an unpaid leave of absence is necessary in the circumstances and, if it is necessary, shall grant the leave. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 80 (3).

Leave of absence for other political activity

81 (1) A public servant may apply under this section to his or her ethics executive for an unpaid leave of absence for the purposes of engaging in political activity other than political activity that is prohibited under section 77 or restricted under subsection 79 (1). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 81 (1).

Same

(2) On receiving the application, the ethics executive,

- (a) shall grant the public servant an unpaid leave of absence, in the case of an application to engage in political activity during an election period; and
- (b) may grant the public servant an unpaid leave of absence, in the case of an application to engage in political activity at a time other than during an election period, if the ethics executive considers it appropriate to do so. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 81 (2).

Length of leave

82 If an unpaid leave of absence is granted under section 80 or 81, the following rules apply to the length of the leave:

1. A leave of absence granted to enable a public servant to engage in political activity during an election period shall not begin earlier than the beginning of the election period and shall not end later than the end of the election period.
2. A leave of absence granted to enable a public servant to engage in political activity other than during an election period shall begin and end in accordance with the regulations under clause 107 (1) (a) or, if no regulation applies in respect of the leave, on dates determined by the ethics executive to be appropriate in the circumstances. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 82.

Continuous service

83 The period of an unpaid leave granted under section 80 or 81 shall not be counted in determining the length of the public servant's service, but the service before and after the period of leave is deemed to be continuous for all purposes. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 83.

Role of ethics executive

Questions for ethics executive

84 (1) A public servant or his or her supervisor may request that the public servant's ethics executive determine a question about the political activity rights that apply in respect of the public servant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 84 (1).

Duty to notify

(2) A public servant shall notify his or her ethics executive if the public servant's political activities could conflict with,

- (a) in the case of a public servant who works in a ministry, the interests of the Crown;
- (b) in the case of a public servant who works in a public body, the interests of the public body. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 84 (2).

Inquiries

(3) The ethics executive may make such inquiries as he or she considers appropriate in response to a request, a notification or where the ethics executive has concerns that a public servant has engaged or is about to engage in political activity in contravention of this Part or a direction or regulation under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 84 (3).

Determinations and directions

(4) An ethics executive shall,

- (a) make a determination with respect to any matter that is brought to the attention of the ethics executive under subsection (1) or (2) or that is the subject of inquiry under subsection (3); and
- (b) in the case of a determination that a public servant has or is about to engage in political activity in contravention of this Part or a direction or regulation under this Part, give the public servant directions, if any, that the ethics executive considers appropriate to address the matter. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 84 (4).

Same

(5) If an ethics executive, other than the Integrity Commissioner, considers it appropriate to do so, the ethics executive may refer any matter that is brought to the ethics executive's attention under subsection (1) or (2) or that is the subject of inquiry under subsection (3) to the Integrity Commissioner to be dealt with by the Commissioner under subsection (4). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 84 (5); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 9, 14.

Same

(6) Where an ethics executive has referred a matter to the Integrity Commissioner under subsection (5), the Commissioner shall inform the ethics executive of any determination made or direction given by the Commissioner under subsection (4) as a result of the referral. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 84 (6); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Compliance with direction

(7) A public servant shall comply with a direction of the ethics executive or the Integrity Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 84 (7); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Contravention by government appointee

(8) If an ethics executive or the Integrity Commissioner makes a determination under subsection (4) that a government appointee has engaged in political activity in contravention of this Part or of a direction or regulation under this Part, the ethics executive or the Commissioner, as the case may be, shall notify the minister responsible for the body to which the government appointee is appointed regarding the matter. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 84 (8); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

RULES FOR POLITICAL ACTIVITY OF SPECIALLY RESTRICTED PUBLIC SERVANTS

Application

85 (1) Sections 86 to 93 apply to specially restricted public servants within the meaning of subsection (2). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 85 (1).

6. Every deputy director of a legal services branch of a ministry.
7. Every Crown Attorney.
8. Every commissioned officer and detachment commander in the Ontario Provincial Police.
9. Every government appointee who is a member of a tribunal prescribed under clause 107 (1) (b).
10. A public servant in a class prescribed under clause 107 (1) (c). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 85 (2); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 10.

No political activity except as permitted

86 A specially restricted public servant shall not engage in political activity except as permitted under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 86.

Right to decline

87 A specially restricted public servant is entitled to decline to engage in political activity. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 87.

Prohibited political activities

88 In engaging in political activity that is permitted under section 89, 90 or 92, a specially restricted public servant shall not,

- (a) engage in political activity in the workplace;
- (b) engage in political activity while wearing a uniform associated with a position in the public service of Ontario;
- (c) use government premises, equipment or supplies when engaging in political activity;
- (d) associate his or her position with political activity, except if the public servant is or is seeking to become a candidate in a federal, provincial or municipal election, and then only to the extent necessary to identify the public servant's position and work experience; or
- (e) engage in political activity if doing so could interfere with the performance of his or her duties as a public servant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 88.

Permitted political activities

89 (1) A specially restricted public servant may,

- (a) vote in a federal, provincial or municipal election;
- (b) contribute money to a federal or provincial party or to a federal, provincial or municipal candidate;
- (c) be a member of a federal or provincial party; and
- (d) attend an all-candidates meeting. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 89 (1).

Limitation

(2) Clauses (1) (b) and (c) do not apply to the Secretary of the Cabinet or a deputy minister. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 89 (2); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 11.

Permitted political activities if authorized

90 (1) A specially restricted public servant, if authorized under subsection (4), may,

- (a) be or seek to become a candidate in a municipal election;
- (b) campaign on behalf of a candidate in a municipal election. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 90 (1).

Authorization

(2) A specially restricted public servant who wishes to engage in political activity described in subsection (1) may apply under this section for authorization. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 90 (2).

Same

(3) The application shall specify the political activity for which authorization is sought and shall be made to the ethics executive for the specially restricted public servant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 90 (3).

Same

(4) On receiving the application, the ethics executive shall make such inquiries as he or she considers appropriate and shall authorize the specially restricted public servant to engage in all or some of the political activity specified in the application if, in the opinion of the ethics executive, the activities would not interfere with the performance of the public servant's duties and,

- (a) in the case of a public servant who works in a ministry, would not conflict with the interests of the Crown;
 - (b) in the case of a public servant who works in a public body, would not conflict with the interests of the body.
- 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 90 (4).

Same

(5) In granting an authorization, an ethics executive may impose any conditions and restrictions that he or she considers appropriate in the circumstances, including requiring the specially restricted public servant to be on an unpaid leave of absence. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 90 (5).

Same

(6) If, in granting an authorization, an ethics executive requires that a specially restricted public servant be on an unpaid leave of absence, the leave of absence shall begin and end in accordance with the regulations under clause 107 (1) (a) or, if no regulation applies in respect of the leave, on dates determined by the ethics executive to be appropriate in the circumstances. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 90 (6).

Continuous service

91 The period of an unpaid leave granted under section 90 shall not be counted in determining the length of the public servant's service, but the service before and after the period of leave is deemed to be continuous for all purposes. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 91.

Part-time government appointees

92 (1) This section applies to specially restricted public servants who are part-time government appointees. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 92 (1).

Authorization

(2) A public servant described in subsection (1) may apply under this section for authorization to engage in any political activity that is not permitted to him or her under section 89, other than,

- (a) political activity that is prohibited under section 88; or
- (b) political activity for which he or she may seek authorization under section 90. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 92 (2).

Same

(3) The application shall specify the political activity and shall be made to the Integrity Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 92 (3); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(4) On receiving the application, the Integrity Commissioner shall make such inquiries as he or she considers appropriate and shall authorize the public servant to engage in all or some of the political activity specified in the application if in the opinion of the Commissioner the activities would not,

- (a) interfere with the performance of the public servant's duties; or
- (b) conflict with the interests of the public body to which the public servant is appointed. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 92 (4); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(5) In forming an opinion under subsection (4), the Integrity Commissioner shall consider the following:

1. The nature of the political activity specified in the application.
2. The scope of the discretion exercised by the public servant in his or her work, if the exercise of the discretion could reasonably be perceived to be affected by political considerations.
3. The visibility of the public servant's position.
4. Such other factors as the Commissioner considers appropriate. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 92 (5); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(6) In granting an authorization, the Integrity Commissioner may impose any conditions and restrictions that he or she considers appropriate in the circumstances, including requiring the public servant to be on an unpaid leave of absence. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 92 (6); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(7) If in granting an authorization the Integrity Commissioner requires that a public servant be on an unpaid leave of absence, the leave shall begin and end,

- (a) in accordance with the regulations under clause 107 (1) (a); or
- (b) if no regulation applies in respect of the leave, on dates determined by the Integrity Commissioner to be appropriate in the circumstances. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 92 (7); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Role of ethics executiveQuestions for ethics executive

93 (1) A specially restricted public servant or his or her supervisor may request that the public servant's ethics executive determine a question about the political activity rights that apply in respect of the public servant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 93 (1).

Duty to notify

(2) A specially restricted public servant shall notify his or her ethics executive if the public servant's political activities could conflict with,

- (a) in the case of a public servant who works in a ministry, the interests of the Crown;
- (b) in the case of a public servant who works in a public body, the interests of the public body. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 93 (2).

Inquiries

(3) The ethics executive may make such inquiries as he or she considers appropriate in response to a request, a notification or where the ethics executive has concerns that a specially restricted public servant has engaged or is about to engage in political activity in contravention of this Part or a direction or regulation under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 93 (3).

Determinations and directions

(4) An ethics executive shall,

- (a) make a determination with respect to any matter that is brought to the attention of the ethics executive under subsection (1) or (2) or that is the subject of inquiry under subsection (3); and
- (b) in the case of a determination that a public servant has or is about to engage in political activity in contravention of this Part or a direction or regulation under this Part, give the public servant directions, if any, that the ethics executive considers appropriate to address the matter. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 93 (4).

Same

(5) If an ethics executive, other than the Integrity Commissioner, considers it appropriate to do so, the ethics executive may refer any matter that is brought to the ethics executive's attention under subsection (1) or (2) or that is the subject of inquiry under subsection (3) to the Integrity Commissioner to be dealt with by the Commissioner under subsection (4). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 93 (5); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 12, 14.

Same

(6) Where an ethics executive has referred a matter to the Integrity Commissioner under subsection (5), the Commissioner shall inform the ethics executive of any determination made or direction given by the Commissioner under subsection (4) as a result of the referral. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 93 (6); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Compliance with direction

(7) A specially restricted public servant shall comply with a direction of the ethics executive or the Integrity Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 93 (7); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Contravention by government appointee

(8) If an ethics executive or the Integrity Commissioner makes a determination under subsection (4) that a government appointee has engaged in a political activity in contravention of this Part or a direction or regulation under this Part, the ethics executive or the Integrity Commissioner, as the case may be, shall notify the minister responsible for the body to which the government appointee is appointed regarding the matter. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 93 (8); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

RULES FOR POLITICAL ACTIVITY OF PUBLIC SERVANTS IN MINISTERS' OFFICESApplication

94 Sections 95 to 98 apply to public servants who work in a minister's office. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 94.

Right to engage

95 A public servant who works in a minister's office is entitled to engage in political activity, subject to the restrictions set out under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 95.

Right to decline

96 A public servant who works in a minister's office is entitled to decline to engage in political activity, unless the political activity is related to the performance of a ministerial power, duty or function. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 96.

Prohibited political activities

97 A public servant who works in a minister's office shall not,

- (a) engage in a political activity in the workplace that is unrelated to the performance of a ministerial power, duty or function;
- (b) use government premises, equipment or supplies when engaging in political activity that is unrelated to the performance of a ministerial power, duty or function; or
- (c) engage in political activity that could conflict with the interests of the Crown. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 97.

Role of ethics executiveQuestions for ethics executive

98 (1) A public servant who works in a minister's office or his or her supervisor may request that the public servant's ethics executive determine a question about the political activity rights that apply in respect of the public servant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 98 (1).

Duty to notify

(2) A public servant who works in a minister's office shall notify his or her ethics executive if the public servant's political activities could conflict with the interests of the Crown. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 98 (2).

Inquiries

(3) The ethics executive may make such inquiries as he or she considers appropriate in response to a request, a notification or where the ethics executive has concerns that a public servant who works in a minister's office has engaged or is about to engage in political activity in contravention of this Part or a direction or regulation under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 98 (3).

Determinations and directions

(4) The ethics executive shall,

- (a) make a determination with respect to any matter that is brought to his or her attention under subsection (1) or (2) or that is the subject of inquiry under subsection (3); and

- (b) in the case of a determination that a public servant who works in a minister's office has or is about to engage in political activity in contravention of this Part or a direction or regulation under this Part, give the public servant directions, if any, that the ethics executive considers appropriate to address the matter. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 98 (4).

Compliance with direction

(5) A public servant who works in a minister's office shall comply with a direction of the ethics executive. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 98 (5).

Notice to minister

(6) If the ethics executive makes a determination under subsection (4) that a public servant who works in a minister's office has or is about to engage in political activity in contravention of this Part or a direction or regulation under this Part, or gives a direction to a public servant who works in a minister's office under subsection (4), the ethics executive shall notify the minister. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 98 (6).

PENALTY

Penalty

99 A public servant who engages in political activity in contravention of this Part or a direction or regulation under this Part is subject to disciplinary measures, including suspension and dismissal. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 99.

EFFECT OF ELECTION TO OFFICE

Effect of election, provincial or federal 100 If a public servant is elected to the Parliament of Canada or to a provincial Assembly, his or her employment by the Crown or by a public body, or his or her appointment to a public body, is terminated. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 100.

Effect of election, municipal

101 (1) If a public servant is elected to a municipal office, his or her employment by the Crown or by a public body, or his or her appointment to a public body, is terminated if it is determined under subsection (3) that termination is warranted. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 101 (1).

Same

(2) A public servant who is considering seeking election to a municipal office may ask his or her ethics executive to make the determination under subsection (3) before the election. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 101 (2).

Determination by ethics executive

(3) The ethics executive shall determine that termination is warranted if, in the opinion of the ethics executive, the public servant's responsibilities in the municipal office,

- (a) would interfere with the performance of his or her duties as a public servant; or
- (b) would,
 - (i) in the case of a public servant who works in a ministry, conflict with the interests of the Crown, or
 - (ii) in the case of a public servant who works in a public body, conflict with the interests of the body. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 101 (3).

Referral by ethics executive

(4) If an ethics executive, other than the Integrity Commissioner, considers it appropriate to do so, the ethics executive may refer the making of the determination under subsection (3) to the Integrity Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 101 (4); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 13, 14.

Same

(5) Where an ethics executive has referred the making of the determination under subsection (3) to the Integrity Commissioner, the Commissioner shall inform the ethics executive of his or her determination. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 101 (5); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Notice to minister

(6) Where a determination under subsection (3) relates to a government appointee to a public body, the ethics executive or the Integrity Commissioner, as the case may be, shall inform the minister responsible for the public body of the determination. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 101 (6); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Reinstatement

102 (1) This section does not apply to the following:

1. A former public servant whose employment was terminated under section 100 or 101 and whose employment immediately before the termination was for a fixed term.
2. A former government appointee whose appointment was terminated under section 100 or 101. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 102 (1).

Same

(2) If a former public servant ceases to be a member of the Parliament of Canada within five years after his or her employment is terminated by section 100, the former public servant may apply to be reinstated. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 102 (2).

Same

(3) If a former public servant ceases to be a member of a provincial Assembly within five years after his or her employment is terminated by section 100, the former public servant may apply to be reinstated. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 102 (3).

Same

(4) If a former public servant ceases to hold a municipal office within four years after his or her employment is terminated by section 101, the former public servant may apply to be reinstated. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 102 (4).

Same

(5) An application for reinstatement must be made within 12 months after the applicant ceases to be a member of the Parliament of Canada, a member of a provincial Assembly or the holder of a municipal office, as the case may be. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 102 (5).

Same

(6) A former public servant appointed by the Public Service Commission whose employment was terminated under section 100 or 101 may apply to the Commission for reinstatement. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 102 (6).

Same

(7) A former public servant whose employment by a public body was terminated under section 100 or 101 may apply for reinstatement to the public body. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 102 (7).

Same

(8) An application under subsection (6) or (7) shall be granted if a position for which the applicant is qualified is vacant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 102 (8).

Same

(9) Another person's right to be appointed or assigned to the vacant position by virtue of a collective agreement or under a directive issued under section 43 prevails over the right conferred by subsection (8). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 102 (9).

Continuous service

(10) The period during which the applicant's employment is terminated shall not be counted in determining the length of the public servant's service, but the service before and after the termination is deemed to be continuous for all purposes. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 102 (10).

PROTECTION FROM REPRISALS

No reprisals

103 (1) No person shall take a reprisal against a public servant because he or she has,

- (a) engaged in political activity in accordance with this Part or the regulations; or
- (b) exercised his or her right under this Part to decline to engage in political activity. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 103 (1).

Same

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), a reprisal is any measure taken against a public servant that adversely affects his or her employment or appointment and includes but is not limited to,

- (a) ending or threatening to end a public servant's employment or appointment;
- (b) disciplining or suspending or threatening to discipline or suspend a public servant;
- (c) imposing or threatening to impose a penalty related to the employment or appointment of a public servant;
- (d) intimidating or coercing a public servant in relation to his or her employment or appointment. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 103 (2).

Complaint about reprisal, discipline

104 (1) A public servant described in subsection (2), (3) or (4) may complain under this section that he or she,

- (a) has suffered a reprisal prohibited by section 103; or
- (b) is disciplined for a contravention of this Part or a direction or regulation under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 104 (1).

Public servant subject to collective agreement

(2) A public servant who is subject to the terms and conditions of a collective agreement may have the complaint dealt with by final and binding settlement by arbitration in accordance with the agreement. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (14).

Public servant not subject to collective agreement

(3) A public servant employed under Part III who is not subject to the terms and conditions of a collective agreement may file the complaint with the Public Service Grievance Board. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (14).

Other public servant

(4) A public servant employed by a public body who is not subject to the terms and conditions of a collective agreement may file the complaint with the Ontario Labour Relations Board. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (14).

Inquiry by Board

(5) The Ontario Labour Relations Board may inquire into a complaint filed under subsection (4) and section 96 of the Labour Relations Act, 1995, except subsection (5), applies with necessary modifications as if such section, except subsection (5), is enacted in and forms part of this Act. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 104 (5).

Same

(6) On an inquiry by the Ontario Labour Relations Board into a complaint filed under subsection (4), sections 110, 111, 114 and 116 of the Labour Relations Act, 1995 apply with necessary modifications. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 104 (6).

Exception

(7) Despite anything in this section, a person who is a police officer under the Community Safety and Policing Act, 2019 shall have his or her complaint dealt with under section 191 of that Act. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 104 (7); 2019, c. 1, Sched. 4, s. 52 (1).

Order

(8) If the Public Service Grievance Board, the Ontario Labour Relations Board or the Grievance Settlement Board determines, on the completion of an inquiry into a complaint made under subsection (2), (3) or (4), that a reprisal has been taken in contravention of subsection 103 (1), or that the employee should not be disciplined or that a lesser penalty would be more appropriate, the Board may make an order that it considers just and reasonable in the circumstances, directing the relevant ministry or public body or a person acting on behalf of the ministry or public body to do or refrain from doing anything in relation to the contravention. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 104 (8).

Same

(9) Without limiting the generality of subsection (8), an order under that subsection may direct the ministry or public body, or person acting on behalf of the ministry or public body, to do one or more of the following:

1. Cease doing an action that is the subject of a complaint under subsection (1).
2. Take steps to rectify harm related to a complaint under subsection (1).
3. Reinstatement of the employment of a public servant whose employment was terminated.
4. Compensate the public servant for loss of any remuneration, including benefits. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 104 (9).

Same

(10) A board may not make an order under subsection (8) for punitive damages or for costs. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 104 (10).

Settlements may be filed with board

105 (1) A written and signed settlement of a complaint made under subsection 104 (1) may, if a party to the settlement believes that the settlement has been breached, be filed,

- (a) in the case of a settlement of a complaint by a public servant described in subsection 104 (2), if the collective agreement is governed by the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act, 1993, with the Grievance Settlement Board;
- (b) in the case of a settlement of a complaint by a public servant described in subsection 104 (3), with the Public Service Grievance Board;
- (c) in the case of a settlement of a complaint by a public servant described in subsection 104 (4), with the Ontario Labour Relations Board. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 105 (1).

Same

(2) Where a settlement of a complaint is filed with a board under this section, the board shall inquire into the matter and, if the board concludes that the settlement has been breached, the board may,

- (a) make an order requiring compliance with the settlement; or
- (b) make an order respecting the complaint that could have been made in respect of that complaint under subsection 104 (8). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 105 (2).

Same

(3) Subsections 104 (5) and (6) apply with necessary modifications to the Ontario Labour Relations Board acting under subsection (2). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 105 (3).

Order may be filed in court

106 (1) An order of the Grievance Settlement Board, the Public Service Grievance Board or the Ontario Labour Relations Board under subsection 104 (8) or 105 (2) may be filed in the Superior Court of Justice. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 106 (1).

Same

(2) An order that is filed under subsection (1) is enforceable as if it were an order of the Superior Court of Justice. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 106 (2).

Same

(3) Section 129 of the Courts of Justice Act applies in respect of an order filed with the Superior Court of Justice under subsection (1) and, for the purpose, the date on which the order is filed is deemed to be the date of the order. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 106 (3).

REGULATIONSRegulations, Part V

107 (1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations,

- (a) respecting the length of unpaid leaves of absence granted under section 82, subsection 90 (6) or clause 92 (7)
 - (a), including specifying dates on which a leave may begin and end and establishing maximum periods for a leave;
- (b) prescribing tribunals for the purposes of paragraph 9 of subsection 85 (2);
- (c) on the recommendation of the Public Service Commission, prescribing classes of public servants for the purposes of paragraph 10 of subsection 85 (2);
- (d) governing political activities of public servants who work in a minister's office;
- (e) prescribing powers, duties and functions of an ethics executive in relation to political activity matters, in addition to those provided under this Act;
- (f) respecting procedures to be followed in connection with this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 107 (1).

Delegation

(2) The Public Service Commission may delegate any of its advisory responsibilities associated with clause (1) (c) to the Integrity Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 107 (2); 2018, c. 17, Sched. 35, s. 14.

Same

(3) In prescribing classes under clause (1) (c), the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall consider,

- (a) the extent to which public servants in a prescribed class are likely to be involved in providing policy advice directly to a minister;
- (b) the scope of discretion likely to be exercised by public servants in a prescribed class, where the exercise of the discretion could reasonably be perceived to be affected by political considerations;
- (c) the visibility of public servants in a prescribed class; and
- (d) any other matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers appropriate. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 107 (3).

Scope of regulations

(4) Regulations made under this section may be general or particular in their application. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 107 (4).

PART VIDISCLOSING AND INVESTIGATING WRONGDOING*INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION*Interpretation

108 (1) In this Part,

“wrongdoing” means,

- (a) a contravention by a public servant, a minister or parliamentary assistant of an Act of the Assembly or of the Parliament of Canada, or of a regulation made under such an Act,
- (b) an act or omission of a public servant, a minister or parliamentary assistant that creates a grave danger to the life, health or safety of persons or to the environment, where the danger is unreasonable having regard to his or her duties, powers and functions and any other relevant circumstance,
- (c) gross mismanagement by a public servant, a minister or parliamentary assistant in the work of the public service of Ontario,
- (d) directing or counselling wrongdoing within the meaning of clauses (a) to (c) by a public servant, a minister or parliamentary assistant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 108 (1).

Same

(2) A reference in clauses (a) to (d) of the definition of “wrongdoing” in subsection (1),

- (a) to an act or omission of a public servant includes an act or omission of a former public servant if the act or omission occurred while the individual was a public servant;
- (b) to an act or omission of a minister or parliamentary assistant includes an act or omission of a former minister or a former parliamentary assistant if the act or omission occurred while the individual was a minister or a parliamentary assistant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 108 (2).

Interpretation, former public servants

109 In this Part, despite section 3, a reference to a former public servant includes a person who ceased, before the day on which this section comes into force, to be,

- (a) a public servant within the meaning of the Public Service Act;
- (b) an employee of a public body within the meaning of this Act;
- (c) a government appointee within the meaning of this Act. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 109.

Application of Part

110 This Part applies to wrongdoing associated with the public service of Ontario and its work. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 110.

DISCLOSURE PROCEDURES

Public servants to be informed

111 (1) A deputy minister of a ministry shall ensure that public servants who work in the ministry are familiar with the procedures for disclosure of wrongdoing under this Part and the protections from reprisals for disclosing wrongdoing under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 111 (1).

Same

(2) The chair of a public body shall ensure that public servants who work in the body are familiar with the procedures for disclosure of wrongdoing under this Part and the protections from reprisals for disclosing wrongdoing under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 111 (2).

Fair and expeditious

112 The Integrity Commissioner and every person or body to whom a matter is referred under subsection 118 (2), 122 (2) or 123 (1) shall carry out their functions under this Part in a manner that,

- (a) is fair and is as informal and expeditious as possible; and
- (b) protects the identities of persons involved in disclosures of wrongdoing, including persons who make disclosures, witnesses and persons alleged to be responsible for wrongdoing except where the interests of fairness require that a person’s identity be disclosed to one or more persons. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 112.

Disclosure despite conflict with other Acts

113 (1) Subject to subsection (2), a right under this Part to make a disclosure prevails over anything provided under any other Act or otherwise at law that prohibits the disclosure. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 113 (1).

Restrictions on disclosure

(2) Nothing in this Part authorizes a public servant or former public servant to make a disclosure to the Integrity Commissioner of anything,

- (a) that would reveal the substance of deliberations of the Executive Council or any of its Committees without authority to do so;
- (b) that is subject to solicitor-client privilege; or
- (c) that is prepared by or for counsel for a Ministry or a public body for use in giving legal advice or in contemplation of or for use in litigation. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 113 (2).

Same

(3) Nothing in this Part shall be interpreted to limit any right that any public servant may have under any other Act or otherwise at law to disclose information about wrongdoing in the public service of Ontario. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 113 (3).

Disclosure, procedures

114 Where a public servant or former public servant has reason to believe that there has been wrongdoing, he or she may disclose the wrongdoing in accordance with the procedures established under section 115. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 114.

DirectivesDirectives, Public Service Commission

115 (1) The Public Service Commission may by directive establish procedures to deal with disclosures of wrongdoing by,

- (a) a public servant who works in a ministry; and
- (b) a former public servant who worked in a ministry immediately before ceasing to be a public servant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 115 (1).

Directives, Management Board of Cabinet

(2) The Management Board of Cabinet may by directive establish procedures to deal with disclosures of wrongdoing by,

- (a) public servants who work in a public body; and
- (b) former public servants who worked in a public body immediately before ceasing to be a public servant. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 115 (2).

Same

(3) Without limiting the generality of subsections (1) and (2), directives issued under those subsections may,

- (a) establish procedures by which a public servant or former public servant may make disclosures of wrongdoing, including directions as to the persons to whom disclosures may be made;
- (b) establish procedures to protect the identities of persons involved in the disclosure process, including persons who make disclosures, witnesses and persons alleged to be responsible for wrongdoing; and
- (c) provide for exceptions to be made to procedures described in clause (b) where the interests of fairness require that a person's identity be disclosed to one or more persons. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 115 (3).

Same

(4) Directives issued under this section may be general or particular in their application. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 115 (4).

Same

(5) Part III (Regulations) of the Legislation Act, 2006 does not apply to a directive issued under this section. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, ss. 115 (5), 157.

Archive

(6) The Public Service Commission shall maintain an archive of all directives issued under subsection (1) indicating the period during which each directive applies. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 115 (6).

Same

(7) The Management Board of Cabinet shall maintain an archive of all directives issued under subsection (2) indicating the period during which each directive applies. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 115 (7).

DISCLOSURE TO THE INTEGRITY COMMISSIONERDisclosure to Integrity Commissioner

116 A public servant or former public servant may disclose wrongdoing to the Integrity Commissioner if,

- (a) the public servant or former public servant has reason to believe that it would not be appropriate to disclose the wrongdoing in accordance with the directives issued under section 115;
- (b) the public servant or former public servant has already disclosed the wrongdoing in accordance with the directives issued under section 115 and has concerns that the matter is not being dealt with appropriately; or
- (c) directives applying to the public servant or former public servant have not been issued under section 115. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 116.

Initial assessment by Integrity Commissioner

117 Where the Integrity Commissioner receives a disclosure of wrongdoing under section 116, the Commissioner shall refuse to deal with the disclosure if one or more of the following circumstances apply:

1. The subject matter of the disclosure is being dealt with by another person or body as a matter of law enforcement or in accordance with a procedure established under this or any other Act.
2. The subject matter of the disclosure is an employment or labour relations matter that could be dealt with through a dispute resolution mechanism, including a grievance procedure, established under this or any other Act, under a collective agreement or under an agreement of another kind.
3. The subject matter of the disclosure is a matter that could be dealt with under Part XII of the Community Safety and Policing Act, 2019.
4. The subject matter of the disclosure is the subject of,
 - i. a decision made in the exercise of an adjudicative function by a court or other tribunal under this or any other Act, or
 - ii. deliberations that have led or may lead to a decision made in the exercise of an adjudicative function by a court or other tribunal under this or any other Act.
5. The subject matter of the disclosure is related to the exercise of discretion by a prosecutor in relation to the prosecution of an offence.
6. The subject matter of the disclosure is not sufficiently important or the disclosure is frivolous, vexatious or made in bad faith.
7. There has been a substantial delay between the disclosure and the incidents that are the subject matter of the disclosure and because of the delay the proceeding would serve no useful purpose.
8. The subject matter of the disclosure relates solely to a public policy decision.
9. There is a valid reason, other than a circumstance described in paragraphs 1 to 8, for not proceeding with the disclosure. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 117; 2019, c. 1, Sched. 4, s. 52 (2).

Referral by Integrity Commissioner

118 (1) This section applies where the Integrity Commissioner receives a disclosure of wrongdoing under section 116 and does not refuse to deal with the disclosure under section 117. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 118 (1).

Same

(2) The Integrity Commissioner shall determine, from among the persons mentioned in subsection (3), the person who, in the opinion of the Commissioner, is in the best position to investigate the disclosure and shall,

- (a) provide the person with a written summary of the disclosure and any other information that the Commissioner has received in relation to the matter that the Commissioner considers may assist the person in dealing with the matter;
- (b) direct the person to cause an investigation to be conducted into the subject matter of the disclosure; and
- (c) direct the person to report the results of the investigation to the Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 118 (2).

Same

(3) The persons to whom the Integrity Commissioner may refer a matter under subsection (2) are:

- 1. A deputy minister.
- 2. Any individual prescribed under subsection 71 (1.1).
- 3. The chair of a public body.
- 4. The Secretary of the Cabinet.
- 5. An individual designated by the Premier for the purposes of this section. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 118 (3).

Same

(4) Where a matter respecting the Ontario Provincial Police is referred to the deputy minister of the Ministry of Community Safety and Correctional Services under subsection (2), the deputy minister may delegate any of his or her powers, duties and functions associated with the referral to the Commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 118 (4).

Same

(5) Subject to subsections (6) and (7), a person who receives a referral under subsection (2) shall deliver the report mentioned in clause (2) (c) to the Integrity Commissioner within 30 days of receiving the direction under clause (2) (b). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 118 (5).

Same

(6) On request from the person who receives a referral under subsection (2), the Integrity Commissioner may extend the time period within which the report must be delivered, either before or after the expiry of the period. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 118 (6).

Same

(7) The Integrity Commissioner may reduce the time period within which the report must be delivered if in his or her opinion circumstances make it appropriate to do so. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 118 (7).

Referral not appropriate

119 A person who has received a referral under subsection 118 (2) shall refer the disclosure of wrongdoing back to the Integrity Commissioner if, in the opinion of that person, it is not appropriate for him or her to investigate the disclosure because of lack of appropriate resources, actual or apparent conflict of interest or other reason. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 119.

Report after referral

120 (1) A report from a person who has received a referral under subsection 118 (2) shall be in writing and shall include:

1. A summary of the subject matter of the disclosure.
2. A description of the steps taken in the investigation conducted by the person to whom the referral is made.
3. A summary of the evidence obtained during the investigation.
4. A statement of the findings resulting from the investigation of the disclosure, including a statement about any wrongdoing that was discovered.
5. A description of any corrective action that has been taken or that is proposed to be taken as a result of the investigation. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 120 (1).

Same

(2) The Integrity Commissioner may waive or abridge a requirement of this section in order to expedite the report if in his or her opinion circumstances make it appropriate to do so. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 120 (2).

Receipt of report by Integrity Commissioner

121 (1) On receiving a report from a person who has received a referral under subsection 118 (2), the Integrity Commissioner may,

- (a) require the person to provide a written report to the Commissioner containing such further information as the Commissioner specifies;
- (b) make recommendations to the person;
- (c) require the person to provide a written report to the Commissioner respecting the implementation of any recommendations made under clause (b) and, to the extent that a recommendation has not been implemented, explain why that is the case. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 121 (1).

Time periods

(2) The Integrity Commissioner shall specify time periods for meeting the requirements of subsection (1). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 121 (2).

Same

(3) On request, the Integrity Commissioner may extend the time periods within which requirements under subsection (1) must be met, either before or after the expiry of the period. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 121 (3).

Same

(4) The Integrity Commissioner may reduce the time periods within which requirements under subsection (1) must be met if in his or her opinion circumstances make it appropriate to do so. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 121 (4).

INVESTIGATION BY INTEGRITY COMMISSIONER

Investigation by Integrity Commissioner

122 (1) The Integrity Commissioner may initiate an investigation of a disclosure of wrongdoing only if,

- (a) the Commissioner is not satisfied with a report about the disclosure received under section 118 or 121;
- (b) a person who has received a referral under subsection 118 (2) has referred the disclosure back to the Commissioner under section 119; or
- (c) a person who has received a referral under subsection 118 (2) has not delivered a report about the disclosure within the time period required under section 118 or 121. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 122 (1).

Referral instead of investigation

(2) Instead of initiating an investigation under subsection (1), the Integrity Commissioner may refer the matter to another person or body so that it may be dealt with as a matter of law enforcement or in accordance with a procedure established under this or any other Act if, in the opinion of the Commissioner, this would be more appropriate than initiating an investigation under subsection (1). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 122 (2).

Same

(3) When referring a matter to another person or body under subsection (2), the Integrity Commissioner shall provide the person or body with a written summary of the disclosure and any other information that the Commissioner has received in relation to the matter that the Commissioner considers may assist the person or body in dealing with the matter. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 122 (3).

Same

(4) Where the Integrity Commissioner has referred a matter to a person or body under subsection (2), the Commissioner shall not initiate an investigation unless the person or body has informed the Commissioner,

- (a) that it will not proceed with an investigation of the matter;
- (b) that it has concluded its investigation of the matter; or
- (c) that it will not provide information referred to in subsection (6). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 122 (4).

Exception

(5) Despite subsection (4), the Integrity Commissioner may initiate an investigation under subsection (1) if, in the opinion of the Commissioner, doing so is in the public interest and would not interfere with or impede the other person or body in dealing with the matter. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 122 (5).

Same

(6) A person or body to which a matter is referred under subsection (2) shall promptly inform the Integrity Commissioner if it decides not to proceed with an investigation or when it concludes an investigation. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 122 (6).

Same

(7) Where the person or body decides that informing the Integrity Commissioner in accordance with subsection (6) would be contrary to the public interest, it shall instead promptly inform the Commissioner that it will not provide information referred to in that subsection. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 122 (7).

Referral in course of investigation

123 (1) At any time during the course of an investigation by the Integrity Commissioner under this Part, he or she may refer the matter to another person or body so that it may be dealt with as a matter of law enforcement or in accordance with a procedure established under this or any other Act if, in the opinion of the Commissioner, this would be more appropriate than continuing the investigation. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 123 (1).

Same

(2) When referring a matter to another person or body under subsection (1), the Integrity Commissioner shall provide the person or body with a written summary of the disclosure and any other information that the Commissioner has received in relation to the matter that the Commissioner considers may assist the person or body in dealing with the matter. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 123 (2).

Same

(3) Where the Integrity Commissioner has referred a matter to a person or body under subsection (1), the Commissioner shall suspend the investigation and may continue it only if the person or body has informed the Commissioner,

- (a) that it will not proceed with an investigation of the matter;
- (b) that it has concluded its investigation of the matter; or
- (c) that it will not provide information referred to in subsection (5). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 123 (3).

Same

(4) Despite subsection (3), the Integrity Commissioner may continue an investigation under subsection (1) if, in the opinion of the Commissioner, doing so is in the public interest and would not interfere with or impede the other person or body in dealing with the matter. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 123 (4).

Same

(5) A person or body to which a matter is referred under subsection (1) shall promptly inform the Integrity Commissioner if it decides not to proceed with an investigation or when it concludes an investigation. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 123 (5).

Same

(6) Where the person or body decides that informing the Integrity Commissioner in accordance with subsection (5) would be contrary to the public interest, it shall instead promptly inform the Commissioner that it will not provide information referred to in that subsection. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 123 (6).

Investigation to cease in certain circumstances

124 The Integrity Commissioner shall cease his or her investigation under this Part of a disclosure if, in his or her opinion, one or more of the circumstances described in paragraphs 2 to 9 of section 117 apply. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 124.

Right to answer allegation

125 (1) If, at any time during the course of an investigation by the Integrity Commissioner under this Part, it appears to the Integrity Commissioner that there may be grounds to make a report under section 129 that might adversely affect a person or body, the Commissioner shall take reasonable measures to provide that person or body with an opportunity to be heard on the relevant matters. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 125 (1).

Same

(2) The person or body may be represented by a person authorized to practise law or provide legal services under the Law Society Act. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 156.

Same

(3) Except as provided in this section, the Commissioner need not hold a hearing and no person or body has a right to be heard by the Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 125 (3).

Powers on investigation

126 (1) The Integrity Commissioner may require any public servant or former public servant to,

- (a) provide any information that he or she may have if, in the opinion of the Commissioner, the information may be relevant to the investigation;
- (b) produce any relevant document or thing that may be in his or her possession or under his or her control if, in the opinion of the Commissioner, the document or thing may be relevant to the investigation. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 126 (1).

Oral evidence

(2) The Integrity Commissioner may summon any public servant or former public servant who, in the Commissioner's opinion, is able to give evidence about any matter that may be relevant to the investigation and may examine him or her, on oath or affirmation. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 126 (2).

Inspection of premises

(3) The Integrity Commissioner may enter and inspect any premises of the public service of Ontario, at any reasonable time, for the purposes of the investigation. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 126 (3).

Same

(4) Before entering premises under subsection (3), the Integrity Commissioner shall notify the head of the organization occupying the premises of his or her intention to do so. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 126 (4).

Restriction on powers

127 (1) The Integrity Commissioner may not require the provision of information, the production of a document or thing or the giving of an answer if the Deputy Attorney General certifies that the provision, production or answer,

- (a) might interfere with or impede the detection, investigation or prosecution of an offence; or
- (b) might reveal the substance of deliberations of the Executive Council or any of its Committees without authority to do so. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 127 (1).

Same

(2) The Integrity Commissioner may not require the provision of information, the production of a document or thing or the giving of an answer if the Commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police certifies that the provision, production or answer might interfere with or impede the detection or investigation of an offence. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 127 (2).

Same

(3) The Integrity Commissioner may not require the provision of information, the production of a document or thing or the giving of an answer if the provision, production or answer might disclose,

- (a) information that is subject to solicitor-client privilege; or
- (b) information prepared by or for counsel for a Ministry or a public body for use in giving legal advice or in contemplation of or for use in litigation. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 127 (3).

Same

(4) Unless the disclosure is required by law or permitted under this Act, the Integrity Commissioner and every person acting on behalf of or under the direction of the Commissioner shall not disclose any information that comes to their attention in the performance of their duties, powers or functions under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 127 (4).

Privilege

128 (1) A person who is required to provide information, produce a document or thing or give an answer in the course of an investigation by the Integrity Commissioner has the same privileges in relation to the provision of information, the production of documents or things and the answering of questions as witnesses have in any court proceeding. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 128 (1).

Protection

(2) Except on the trial of a person for perjury, no statement made or answer given by that or any other person in the course of an investigation by the Integrity Commissioner is admissible in evidence against any person in a court or at an inquiry or in any other proceeding, and no evidence in respect of the investigation by the Integrity Commissioner shall be given against any person. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 128 (2).

Right to object to answer

(3) A person giving a statement or answer in the course of an investigation by the Integrity Commissioner under this Part shall be informed by the person presiding over the investigation or proceeding of the right to object to answer a question under section 5 of the Canada Evidence Act. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 128 (3).

Prosecution

(4) No person is liable for prosecution for an offence under any Act by reason of his or her compliance with a requirement under this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 128 (4).

REPORT ON CONCLUSION OF INVESTIGATION BY INTEGRITY COMMISSIONER

Report on conclusion of investigation

129 (1) On concluding an investigation of a disclosure under this Part, the Integrity Commissioner shall make a report to the person to whom the Commissioner made the referral under subsection 118 (2). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 129 (1).

Same

(2) If the person to whom the Integrity Commissioner made the referral under subsection 118 (2) referred the matter back to the Commissioner under section 119 and the Integrity Commissioner considers that it would be inappropriate to make the report required by subsection (1) to that person, the Commissioner shall make the report to such other public servant as the Commissioner considers appropriate in the circumstances. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 129 (2).

Same

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) apply whether or not the Integrity Commissioner has made a finding of wrongdoing. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 129 (3).

Same

(4) A report required by subsection (1) shall be in writing and shall include,

- (a) findings of wrongdoing, if any;
- (b) reasons to support any findings;
- (c) any recommendations that the Commissioner considers appropriate. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 129 (4).

Copy to Minister

(5) The Integrity Commissioner shall provide a copy of the report to a minister where the disclosure alleged wrongdoing,

- (a) in the ministry of the minister; or
- (b) in a public body for which the minister has responsibility. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 129 (5).

Further report

(6) If the report includes recommendations under clause (4) (c), the Integrity Commissioner may require the person to whom the Commissioner made the report under subsection (1) or (2), as the case may be, to provide a further report to the Commissioner, in writing and within a time period specified by the Commissioner,

- (a) describing any action taken or proposed to be taken in response to the recommendations; and
- (b) explaining why a recommended action was not taken or is not proposed to be taken. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 129 (6).

Same

(7) On request from the person to whom the Integrity Commissioner made the referral under subsection 118 (2), the Commissioner may extend the time period within which the further report must be provided, either before or after the expiry of the period. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 129 (7).

Copy to Minister

(8) The Integrity Commissioner shall provide a copy of the further report under subsection (6) to the minister entitled to receive a copy of the report under subsection (5). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 129 (8).

PUBLIC REPORTS BY INTEGRITY COMMISSIONERPublic report

130 (1) This section applies where the Integrity Commissioner has made a report respecting a disclosure of wrongdoing under section 129 and is of the opinion that it is in the public interest that a public report be made. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 130 (1).

Same

(2) In the circumstances described in subsection (1), the Integrity Commissioner shall make a public report respecting the disclosure. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 130 (2).

Same

(3) If the Integrity Commissioner has required a further report under subsection 129 (6), the Commissioner shall not make a public report until,

- (a) the further report has been delivered to the Commissioner; or
- (b) the time period specified under subsection 129 (6) has expired or, if the Commissioner has extended the time period under subsection 129 (7), the extended period has expired and no further report has been delivered to the Commissioner. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 130 (3).

Same

(4) The Integrity Commissioner shall ensure that the public report is readily accessible to the public by ensuring that the public report is published on one or more Internet sites and by such other means as the Commissioner considers appropriate. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 130 (4).

Same

(5) Where the Integrity Commissioner makes a public report, he or she shall also deliver the report to the Speaker of the Assembly, who shall lay the report before the Assembly at the earliest reasonable opportunity. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 130 (5).

Contents of public report

131 (1) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), the Integrity Commissioner shall not include, in a public report under section 130,

- (a) information that would be subject to an exemption under sections 12 to 21.1 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act;
- (b) information that would be excluded under section 65 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act; or
- (c) information to which subsection 67 (2) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act would apply. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 131 (1).

Same

(2) With the consent of the person who received the Integrity Commissioner's report under subsection 129 (1) or (2), the Commissioner may disclose, in a public report under section 130,

- (a) information that would be subject to an exemption under sections 13, 14, 18, 19, 20 or 21.1 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act; or
- (b) information that would be excluded under subsection 65 (6) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 131 (2).

Same

(3) The Commissioner may disclose, in a public report under section 130, information that would be subject to an exemption under section 13, 17, 18, 20, 21 or 21.1 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act or that would be excluded under subsection 65 (6) of that Act if, in his or her opinion,

- (a) disclosure of the information is necessary to establish the grounds for the Commissioner's findings of wrongdoing or recommendations; and
- (b) there is a compelling public interest in the disclosure that outweighs the harm that the disclosure may cause. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 131 (3).

Same

(4) The Integrity Commissioner, rather than the head, shall determine whether information would be subject to an exemption or an exclusion under a provision of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 131 (4).

Same

(5) Before making the determination under subsection (4), the Integrity Commissioner shall make reasonable efforts to obtain advice on the matter from the head. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 131 (5).

Before making public report

132 (1) Before making the determination under subsection 131 (4), the Integrity Commissioner,

- (a) shall ask the person to whom the report was made under subsection 129 (1) or (2) for submissions as to the making of the determination under subsection 131 (4); and

(b) shall, if the Commissioner considers it appropriate to do so in the interests of fairness, provide any information contained in the report to a person to whom the information relates and ask the person for submissions as to the making of the determination under subsection 131 (4). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 132 (1).

Same

(2) The Integrity Commissioner shall specify time periods within which submissions may be made under subsection (1). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 132 (2).

Same

(3) On request from a person referred to in clause (1) (a) or (b), the Integrity Commissioner may extend the time periods within which the submissions must be made, either before or after the expiry of the period. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 132 (3).

Same

(4) The Integrity Commissioner shall not make a public report or deliver it to the Speaker of the Assembly until the time periods specified for submissions under subsection (2) or (3) has expired. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 132 (4).

Annual report, activities under this Part

133 (1) The annual report of the Integrity Commissioner required by section 24 of the Members' Integrity Act, 1994 shall include,

- (a) the number of disclosures received by the Commissioner under section 116 during the year;
- (b) the number of refusals made by the Commissioner under section 117 during the year;
- (c) the number of referrals made by the Commissioner under subsection 118 (2) during the year;
- (d) the number of reports in which the Commissioner makes recommendations under section 121 during the year;
- (e) a summary of what the Commissioner knows respecting responses to recommendations under section 121 during the year;
- (f) the number of investigations initiated by the Commissioner under section 122 during the year;
- (g) a summary of what the Commissioner knows respecting the outcomes during the year of findings of reprisals under this Part;
- (h) anything else that the Commissioner considers relevant in respect of his or her activities under this Part during the year. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 133 (1).

Same

(2) Sections 131 and 132 apply, with necessary modifications, to the contents of the annual report that are required by subsection (1). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 133 (2).

INTEGRITY COMMISSIONER'S DUTY TO INFORM PERSON WHO MADE DISCLOSURE

Duty to inform discloser, refusal to deal

134 (1) Where the Integrity Commissioner refuses to deal with a disclosure under section 117, he or she shall so inform the person who made the disclosure under section 116. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 134 (1).

Same

(2) Subject to section 137, the Integrity Commissioner may inform the person of his or her reasons for refusing to deal with the disclosure under section 117. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 134 (2).

Duty to inform discloser, no investigation

135 (1) Where the Integrity Commissioner receives a report under section 118 or 121 and does not initiate an investigation under section 122, the Commissioner shall so inform the person who made the disclosure under section 116. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 135 (1).

Same

(2) Subject to section 137, the Integrity Commissioner may give the person who made the disclosure such information respecting the investigation and findings as the Commissioner considers appropriate in the circumstances. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 135 (2).

Duty to inform discloser, no public report

136 (1) Where the Integrity Commissioner has a duty to report under section 129 but does not have a duty to make a public report under section 130, the Commissioner shall inform the person who made the disclosure under section 116 that he or she has concluded the investigation. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 136 (1).

Same

(2) Subject to section 137, the Integrity Commissioner may give the person who made the disclosure such information respecting the investigation and findings as the Commissioner considers appropriate in the circumstances. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 136 (2).

Limitation on duty to inform

137 (1) The Integrity Commissioner shall not give the person who made the disclosure,

- (a) information that would be subject to an exemption under sections 12 to 21.1 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act;
- (b) information that would be excluded under section 65 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act; or
- (c) information to which subsection 67 (2) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act applies. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 137 (1).

Same

(2) In determining whether information would be subject to an exemption or an exclusion under a provision of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, the Integrity Commissioner shall exercise the discretion that the head has under the provision. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 137 (2).

Same

(3) Before exercising discretion under subsection (2), the Integrity Commissioner shall make reasonable efforts to obtain advice on the matter from the head. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 137 (3).

Duty to inform discloser, public report

138 Where the Integrity Commissioner has a duty to make a public report under section 130, he or she shall provide the report to the person who made the disclosure under section 116. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 138.

PROTECTION FROM REPRISALSNo reprisals

139 (1) No person shall take a reprisal against a public servant because he or she has,

- (a) sought advice about making a disclosure about wrongdoing in accordance with this Part;
- (b) made a disclosure about wrongdoing in accordance with this Part;
- (c) co-operated in an investigation or other process related to a disclosure of wrongdoing made in accordance with this Part;
- (d) acted in compliance with this Part; or
- (e) sought enforcement of this Part. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 139 (1).

Same

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), a reprisal is any measure taken against a public servant that adversely affects his or her employment or appointment and includes but is not limited to,

- (a) ending or threatening to end a public servant's employment or appointment;
- (b) disciplining or suspending or threatening to discipline or suspend a public servant;
- (c) imposing or threatening to impose a penalty related to the employment or appointment of a public servant;
- (d) intimidating or coercing a public servant in relation to his or her employment or appointment. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 139 (2).

Complaint about reprisal

140 (1) A public servant described in subsection (2), (3) or (4) may complain under this section that he or she has suffered a reprisal prohibited by section 139. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 140 (1).

Public servant subject to collective agreement

(2) A public servant who is subject to the terms and conditions of a collective agreement may have the complaint dealt with by final and binding settlement by arbitration in accordance with the agreement or may file the complaint with the Ontario Labour Relations Board. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (15).

Public servant not subject to collective agreement

(3) A public servant employed under Part III who is not subject to the terms and conditions of a collective agreement may file the complaint with the Public Service Grievance Board. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (15).

Other public servant

(4) A public servant employed by a public body who is not subject to the terms and conditions of a collective agreement may file the complaint with the Ontario Labour Relations Board. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 17, s. 10 (15).

Inquiry by Board

(5) The Ontario Labour Relations Board may inquire into a complaint filed under subsection (2) or (4) and section 96 of the Labour Relations Act, 1995, except subsection (5), applies with necessary modifications as if such section, except subsection (5), is enacted in and forms part of this Act. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 140 (5).

Same

(6) On an inquiry by the Ontario Labour Relations Board into a complaint filed under subsection (2) or (4), sections 110, 111, 114 and 116 of the Labour Relations Act, 1995 apply with necessary modifications. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 140 (6).

Exception

(7) Despite anything in this section, a person who is a police officer under the Community Safety and Policing Act, 2019 shall have his or her complaint dealt with under section 191 of that Act. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 140 (7); 2019, c. 1, Sched. 4, s. 52 (3).

Order

(8) If the Public Service Grievance Board, the Ontario Labour Relations Board or the Grievance Settlement Board determines, on the completion of an inquiry into a complaint filed under subsection (2), (3) or (4), that a reprisal has been taken in contravention of subsection 139 (1), the Board may make an order that it considers just and reasonable in the circumstances, directing the relevant ministry or public body or a person acting on behalf of the ministry or public body to do or refrain from doing anything in relation to the contravention. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 140 (8).

Same

(9) Without limiting the generality of subsection (8), an order under that subsection may direct that the ministry or public body, or a person acting on behalf of the ministry or public body, do one or more of the following:

1. Cease doing an act or acts complained of under subsection (1).
2. Take steps to rectify harm related to a complaint under subsection (1).
3. Reinstate the employment of a public servant whose employment was terminated.

4. Compensate the public servant for loss of any remuneration, including benefits. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 140 (9).

Same

(10) Without limiting the generality of subsection (8), where the board is of the view that continuation of the employment relationship is inappropriate, the board may direct the ministry or public body, or person acting on behalf of the ministry or public body to terminate the public servant's employment and provide compensation in lieu of reasonable notice of the termination. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 140 (10).

Same

(11) A board may not make an order under subsection (8) for punitive damages or for costs. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 140 (11).

Same

(12) Where a board has made a finding under subsection (8) that a reprisal has been taken, the board shall inform the Integrity Commissioner of the finding. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 140 (12).

Onus of proof

(13) On an inquiry into a complaint filed with the Public Service Grievance Board, the Ontario Labour Relations Board or the Grievance Settlement Board under this section, the burden of proof that an employer or a person acting on behalf of an employer did not act contrary to subsection 139 (1) lies on the employer or the person acting on behalf of the employer. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 140 (13).

Settlements may be filed with Board

141 (1) A written and signed settlement of a complaint made under subsection 140 (1) may, if a party to the settlement believes that the settlement has been breached, be filed,

- (a) in the case of a settlement of a complaint by a public servant described in subsection 140 (2) where the complaint is filed with the Ontario Labour Relations Board under that subsection, with the Ontario Labour Relations Board;
- (b) in the case of a complaint by a public servant described in subsection 140 (2) that is not filed with the Ontario Labour Relations Board under that subsection and that was settled by the parties to a collective agreement governed by the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act, 1993, with the Grievance Settlement Board;
- (c) in the case of a settlement of a complaint by a public servant described in subsection 140 (3), with the Public Service Grievance Board;
- (d) in the case of a settlement of a complaint by a public servant described in subsection 140 (4), with the Ontario Labour Relations Board. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 141 (1).

Same

(2) Where a settlement is filed with a board under this section, the board shall inquire into the matter and, if the board concludes that the settlement has been breached, the Board may,

- (a) make an order requiring compliance with the settlement; or
- (b) make an order respecting the complaint that could have been made in respect of that complaint under subsection 140 (8). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 141 (2).

Same

(3) Subsections 140 (5) and (6) apply with necessary modifications to the Ontario Labour Relations Board acting under subsection (2). 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 141 (3).

Order may be filed in court

142 (1) An order of the Grievance Settlement Board, the Public Service Grievance Board or the Ontario Labour Relations Board under subsection 140 (8) or 141 (2) may be filed in the Superior Court of Justice. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 142 (1).

Same

(2) An order that is filed under subsection (1) is enforceable as if it were an order of the Superior Court of Justice. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 142 (2).

Same

(3) Section 129 of the Courts of Justice Act applies in respect of an order filed with the Superior Court of Justice under subsection (1) and, for the purpose, the date on which the order is filed is deemed to be the date of the order. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 142 (3).

PENALTIES, PROHIBITIONS AND OFFENCESPenalties

143 A public servant who contravenes subsection 139 (1) or any of subsections 144 (1) to (4) is subject to disciplinary measures, including suspension or dismissal. 2006, c. 35, Sched. A, s. 143.

Advice, education and training

1. The Integrity Commissioner has the following additional powers, duties and functions:

1. Upon request, to advise the Public Service Commission or its delegate in respect of conflict of interest matters relating to the appointment or proposed appointment of a person under subsection 32 (1) or (2) of the Act to employment by the Crown.
2. Upon request, to advise the Public Service Commission and ethics executives about conflict of interest matters affecting the public service of Ontario.
3. Upon the request of the Public Service Commission or an ethics executive, to act as a conflict of interest advisor to consultants or other independent contractors who provide services to a ministry or a Commission public body and to persons who are seconded to a position in a ministry or a Commission public body from a position outside the public service of Ontario.
4. Upon request, to provide advice about conflicts of interest to a minister or to the Director of the Public Appointments Secretariat in respect of the proposed appointment of a person to a public body.

5. If a public servant makes the declaration to the Commissioner respecting the public servant's financial interests that is required by the conflict of interest rules established under Part IV of the Act, to advise the public servant's ethics executive about the actions that may be taken by the public servant in order to avoid contravening the conflict of interest rules, including advice concerning the transfer of ownership or control of an asset to a neutral third party.
6. To educate and train ethics executives about their responsibilities under the Act. O. Reg. 384/07, s. 1; O. Reg. 83/19, s. 2.

Decisions under subsection 65 (5) of the Act

2. (1) This section applies with respect to matters referred to the Integrity Commissioner under subsection 65 (6) of the Act. O. Reg. 384/07, s. 2 (1); O. Reg. 83/19, s. 3.

(2) Without limiting the generality of the Commissioner's powers under subsection 65 (5) of the Act, he or she may take any of the following actions in respect of a matter referred to him or her under subsection 65 (6) of the Act:

1. Recommend that the Crown not do business with a person or entity that employs or uses the services of a former public servant whose employment or services would contravene the conflict of interest rules.
2. Require a public servant to take or refrain from taking specified actions in order to avoid contravening the conflict of interest rules, including requiring the public servant to transfer ownership or control of an asset to a neutral third party.
3. Require a public servant to notify his or her supervisor of decisions that the public servant proposes to make that could result in a contravention of the conflict of interest rules, and require the public servant to obtain the supervisor's approval for the proposed decisions.
4. Recommend disciplinary measures that may be imposed on a public servant, including suspension or dismissal, or recommend that the public servant's resignation be accepted.
5. Recommend that a public servant be transferred to another position or assigned to perform other duties in order to avoid or remedy a contravention of the conflict of interest rules.
6. Recommend that a public servant be temporarily relieved from duties that have resulted in a contravention of the conflict of interest rules or that may result in such a contravention. O. Reg. 384/07, s. 2 (2).

Collection, use and disclosure of personal information

3. (1) The Integrity Commissioner shall collect and use the personal information that is necessary to enable him or her to perform his or her duties under section 65 of the Act and under the conflict of interest rules established under Part IV of the Act. O. Reg. 384/07, s. 3 (1); O. Reg. 83/19, s. 4.

(2) The Commissioner shall not disclose personal information collected under subsection (1) unless one or more of the following circumstances exist:

1. The person to whom the information relates consents to the disclosure.
2. The disclosure is required in connection with a legal proceeding relating to the Act or a regulation made under it.
3. The disclosure is made for the purpose of complying with an Act of the Legislature or an Act of Parliament or a treaty, agreement or arrangement made thereunder.
4. The disclosure is made to a law enforcement agency in Canada to aid an investigation undertaken with a view to a law enforcement proceeding or from which a law enforcement proceeding is likely to result.
5. The Commissioner considers it to be reasonably necessary to disclose the information to a person or entity in order to verify information given to the Commissioner or to an ethics executive by the public servant.
6. The Commissioner considers it to be reasonably necessary to disclose the information to a person or entity in order to determine whether the public servant has contravened, or may have contravened, the conflict of interest rules.
7. The Commissioner considers it to be reasonably necessary to disclose the information to a person or entity in order to enable the person or entity to perform his, her or its duties under the Act. O. Reg. 384/07, s. 3 (2).

Oath or affirmation of allegiance

1. (1) The following oath or affirmation of allegiance to the Crown is prescribed for the purposes of subsection 5 (1) of the Act:

“I swear (or solemnly affirm) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second (or the reigning sovereign for the time being), her heirs and successors according to law. So help me God. (Omit this phrase in an affirmation.)”

O. Reg. 373/07, s. 1 (1).

(2) The public servant may make the oath or affirmation in either English or French. O. Reg. 373/07, s. 1 (2).

Exemptions, oath or affirmation of allegiance

2. (1) A public servant who is not a citizen of Canada but is a citizen of another country is exempt from the requirement under subsection 5 (1) of the Act to swear or affirm his or her allegiance to the Crown if the public servant asserts that making the oath or affirmation could result in the loss of that citizenship. O. Reg. 373/07, s. 2.

(2) A public servant who identifies as an Indigenous person is exempt from the requirement under subsection 5 (1) of the Act to swear or affirm his or her allegiance to the Crown if the public servant asserts that making the oath or affirmation would be inconsistent with his or her views regarding the relationship between the Crown and Indigenous peoples. O. Reg. 385/17, s. 2.

Oath or affirmation of office

3. (1) The following oath or affirmation of office is prescribed for the purposes of section 6 of the Act:

"I swear (or solemnly affirm) that I will faithfully discharge my duties as a public servant; I will respect the laws of Canada and Ontario, including the recognition and affirmation of the aboriginal and treaty rights of Indigenous peoples in the Constitution; and, except as I may be legally authorized or required, I will not disclose or give to any person any information or document that comes to my knowledge or possession by reason of my being a public servant. So help me God. (Omit this phrase in an affirmation.)"

O. Reg. 385/17, s. 3 (1).

(2) The public servant may make the oath or affirmation in either English or French. O. Reg. 373/07, s. 3 (2).

(3) Subsection (1), as remade by Ontario Regulation 385/17, applies to a public servant who is making the oath or affirmation on or after the day that that Regulation comes into force. O. Reg. 385/17, s. 3 (2).

Administration of oath or affirmation

4. (1) Any of the persons described in Column 2 of the Table to this section is authorized to administer an oath or affirmation by a public servant who is appointed to a position described in Column 1 in the same row. O. Reg. 111/08, s. 1.

(2) In the Table to this section,

"appointed commissioner for taking affidavits" means a person who is appointed under subsection 4 (1) of the Commissioners for taking Affidavits Act as a commissioner for taking affidavits; ("commissaire aux affidavits nommé")

"lawyer in the public service of Ontario" means a person employed as legal counsel,

(a) under subsection 32 (1) of the Act to work in a ministry, other than in a minister's office,

(b) under subsection 32 (2) of the Act to work in a Commission public body, or

(c) by a public body that is not a Commission public body. ("avocat de la fonction publique de l'Ontario")

Restrictions on eligibility

1. (1) The Integrity Commissioner is not permitted to arrange or pay for the provision of legal services under section 147 of the Act to a public servant or former public servant involved in any investigation or other proceeding under Part VI of the Act unless,

- (a) the investigation or other proceeding relates to a disclosure that has been received by the Commissioner under section 116 of the Act, other than a disclosure which the Commissioner has refused under section 117 of the Act to deal with; or

(b) the investigation or other proceeding relates to a complaint that has been made under section 140 of the Act. O. Reg. 385/07, s. 1 (1).

(2) The Integrity Commissioner is not permitted to arrange or pay for the provision of legal services under section 147 of the Act to a public servant or former public servant if the Crown, another employer or a bargaining agent has offered to provide or pay for legal services in whole or in part but the offer has not been accepted. O. Reg. 385/07, s. 1 (2).

(3) The Integrity Commissioner is not permitted to arrange or pay for the provision of legal services under section 147 of the Act to a person who is not a public servant or former public servant. O. Reg. 385/07, s. 1 (3).

Limit on amount

2. (1) The maximum amount that the Integrity Commissioner is permitted to pay for legal services under section 147 of the Act provided to a public servant or former public servant is $3,000 for a disclosure received under section 116 of the Act and $3,000 for a complaint made under section 140 of the Act. O. Reg. 385/07, s. 2 (1).

(2) If any legal services for a public servant or former public servant are being paid for by the Crown, another employer or a bargaining agent, the maximum amount that the Integrity Commissioner is permitted by subsection (1) to pay is reduced by the amount paid by the Crown, the employer or the bargaining agent, as the case may be, for the legal services. O. Reg. 385/07, s. 2 (2).

Factors

3. When deciding whether to arrange and pay for the provision of legal services under section 147 of the Act to a public servant or former public servant, the Integrity Commissioner shall consider the following factors and such other matters as the Commissioner considers relevant:

1. The ability of the public servant or former public servant to pay for legal services.
2. The degree to which the public interest may be affected by the alleged wrongdoing or reprisal. O. Reg. 385/07, s. 3.

Recommendation

4. Two years after this Regulation comes into force, the Integrity Commissioner shall give a recommendation about the efficacy of this Regulation to the minister responsible for the administration of the Act. O. Reg. 385/07, s. 4.

5. Omitted (provides for coming into force of provisions of this Regulation). O. Reg. 385/07, s. 5.

ORDER PO-2739

Appeal PA07-37

Ministry of the Attorney General

NATURE OF THE APPEAL:

Request and Exchange of Representations

A request was submitted, by a member of the media, to the Ministry of the Attorney General (the Ministry) under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act (the Act) for access to annual and monthly reports generated by the Ontario Ministry of the Attorney General entitled “Offence Type Statistics by Location” for the period from 2000 to the date of the request.

The requester (now the appellant) appealed the Ministry’s decision to this office. During mediation, a sample copy of the responsive records was provided to this office. Mediation did not resolve the issues in this appeal so the matter was moved to the adjudication stage of the appeal process.

I began my inquiry by issuing a Notice of Inquiry to the Ministry inviting it to make representations on the issues identified in the notice and on any other relevant issues. Among other things, the notice invited the Ministry to make representations in the alternative, on the possible application of any exemptions, in the event that I find that the requested records are within its custody or control. I received representations from the Ministry in which it stated, among other things, that it claims no alternate exemptions in the event that it is found to have custody or control of the record.

Subsequently, I issued a modified Notice of Inquiry to the appellant inviting him to submit representations on the issues in the notice and in response to the representations of the Ministry, which were shared in full. I also decided to invite the Office of the Chief Justice of Ontario (the CJO) to submit representations on the basis that it may have an interest in the records at issue in this appeal. I provided the CJO with a complete copy of the Ministry representations.

I received correspondence from the CJO in which it stated that it would not be submitting representations in this appeal. I also received representations from the appellant. In his representations, in addition to addressing the issues in the appeal, the appellant requested that the record be disclosed to him at no charge. Staff in this office contacted the appellant and advised him that if he wished to claim a fee waiver in this appeal, he must make his request for such directly to the Ministry. As a result, the appellant then wrote to the Ministry requesting a fee estimate and a fee waiver.

Following my review of the appellant's representations, I provided a complete copy to the Ministry and invited it to submit representations in reply. I received reply representations from the Ministry.

I had a number of questions arising out of my review of the Ministry's reply representations and decided to write to the Ministry and invite further representations in response to my specific questions. The Ministry submitted further representations.

Subsequent Release by the Ministry

In June of 2008, the Ministry issued a press release announcing its Justice on Target strategy and announcing the disclosure to the public of criminal court statistics. That press release read in part:

Under the province's new Justice on Target strategy, Ontario is setting targets to reduce court delays and appearances by 30 per cent over the next four years.

This is the first time the province has set targets to reduce the provincial average of days and court appearances needed to complete a criminal case.

To ensure transparency and accountability, the province is also making available criminal court statistics to the public for the first time. The public will be able to follow the progress of the strategy and see the impact on courthouses in their local communities.

The multi disciplinary Justice on Target implementation team will be led by Regional Senior Justice Bruce Durno and Senior Crown Attorney Kenneth Anthony. The team will work with justice sector partners in local courthouses to develop and implement new initiatives that improve coordination, focus justice resources and move cases through the justice system faster.

The first two initiatives being implemented as part of the Justice on Target Strategy are expansions of programs that have proven successful in reducing court appearances and delays.

A copy of the press release was posted on the Ministry website and a link was provided to "the criminal court statistics" referred to in the release. The criminal court statistics disclosed on the website include information and statistics that are also contained in the records at issue in this appeal.

Shortly after the date of the press release, the Ministry wrote to the appellant and advised him that it was prepared to disclose portions of the responsive records to him. Other portions were being withheld on the basis that the disclosure of the withheld information “would compromise the independence of the judiciary.” In its letter, the Ministry explained:

I am now pleased to inform you that the Office of the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice has consented to the release of most of the available data you have requested. The only information for which consent was denied is data that would compromise the independence of the judiciary.

Enclosed please find copies, and a CD in PDF format, of the Offence Type Statistics by Location report. This information consists of yearly reports for the period 2000 to 2004, and quarterly reports for the period 2005 to December 2007. Please note that the report was never issued on a monthly basis and so quarterly reports are provided instead. No quarterly reports were created prior to 2005 and so annual reports are provided for this period....

A copy of the information disclosed to the appellant on CD was provided to this office.

I instructed staff in this office to contact the appellant and determine whether he wished to pursue access to the information that was severed from the responsive records. The appellant advised that he wished to pursue access to this information.

As the Ministry had not responded to the appellant’s request for a fee waiver in this appeal, staff in this office contacted the Ministry to determine what its position was with respect to the fee waiver request. The Ministry advised that if it was ordered to disclose the information remaining at issue from the database to the appellant it would waive the fee. Therefore, fee waiver is not at issue in this appeal.

RECORDS:

The responsive records are statistical reports entitled “Offence Type Statistics by Location”. They include provincial, regional and local level statistical information about criminal law proceedings. All of the information in the database at the provincial and regional level was disclosed to the appellant in June of 2008. The information severed was statistical information at the local level namely, information in a field headed “Disposed At Trial With Trial.” This field includes 5 separate columns of information, entitled:

1. Total
2. Dismissed at Trial
3. Stayed at Trial
4. Committed for Trial at Preliminary Hearing
5. Plead Not Guilty/Found Guilty at Trial

The information under the column entitled “Total” was disclosed to the appellant therefore the information remaining undisclosed is the information under the other four columns. However, I intend to make a determination as to whether the entire report is in the custody or under the control of the Ministry as that is the issue before me.

DISCUSSION:

CUSTODY OR CONTROL

Where a request is made to a body recognized as an institution under the Act, the threshold question for the application of the Act is whether the institution (in this case, the Ministry) has custody or control of the records within the meaning of section 10(1). This section reads:

Every person has a right of access to a record or a part of a record in the custody or under the control of an institution unless the record or the part of the record falls within one of the exemptions under sections 12 to 22.

If the answer to that question is yes, then this office has jurisdiction to make a determination regarding the records.

Previous orders of this office have found that the courts are not institutions under the Act and therefore, applying section 10(1), if records are found to be in the custody or under the control of the courts and not in the custody and/or under the control of the Ministry, then the Act does not apply. [Order P-994]. In this appeal, the Ministry claims that while its employees may have possession of the responsive records, the records are not in its custody or under its control because the records are “judicial information” which is in the custody or under the control of the courts.

As noted above, the Ministry indicates that if the Act is found to apply, it does not claim that any exemptions under the Act apply in the alternative to its argument that the records are not in its custody or under its control. Therefore, the only issue before me is whether the Ministry has custody or control of the records. Subject to the application of any mandatory exemptions, I will order that the information be disclosed to the appellant, if I find that the records are within the custody or under the control of the Ministry.

The courts and this office have applied a broad and liberal interpretation to the custody and control issue. In Order 120, former Commissioner Sidney Linden stated that the concepts of custody and control should be given a broad and liberal interpretation in order to give effect to the purposes and principles of the Act. A purposive interpretative approach was found to be appropriate in Ontario (Criminal Code Review Board) v. Ontario (Information and Privacy Commissioner), 1999 CanLII 3805 (ON CA), [1999] O.J. No. 4072 where the Court of Appeal for Ontario adopted the following passage from the Federal Court of Appeal judgement in Canada Post Corp. v. Canada (Minister of Public Works) (1995), 1995 CanLII 3574 (FCA), 30 Admin. L. R. (2d) 242 (Fed. C.A.), at 244-245:

The notion of control referred to in subsection 4(1) of the Access to Information Act is left undefined and unlimited. Parliament did not see fit to distinguish between ultimate and immediate, full and partial, transient and lasting or de jure and de facto control. Had Parliament intended to qualify and restrict the notion of control to the power to dispose of the information, as suggested by the appellant, it could certainly have done so by limiting the citizen’s right of access only to those documents that the Government can dispose of or which are under the lasting or ultimate control of the Government.

It is, in my view, as much the duty of courts to give subsection 4(1) of the Access to Information Act a liberal and purposive construction, without reading in limiting words not found in the Act or otherwise circumventing the intention of the legislature as “it is the duty of boards and courts,” as Chief Justice Lamer of the Supreme Court of Canada reminded us in relation to the Canadian Human Rights Act “to give s. 3 a liberal interpretation and purposive construction, without reading limiting words out of the Act or otherwise circumventing the intention of the legislature.” It is not in the power of this court to cut down the broad meaning of the word “control” as there is nothing in the Act which indicates that the word should not be given its broad meaning. On the contrary, it was Parliament’s intention to give the citizen a meaningful right of access under the Act to government information.

A “purposive” interpretation of section 10(1) is therefore mandated by the Court of Appeal’s decision in Criminal Code Review Board (cited above). This requires a consideration of section 1 of the Act, which states:

The purposes of this Act are,

- (a) to provide a right of access to information under the control of institutions in accordance with the principles that,
 - (i) information should be available to the public,
 - (ii) necessary exemptions from the right of access should be limited and specific, and
 - (iii) decisions on the disclosure of government information should be reviewed independently of government; and
- (b) to protect the privacy of individuals with respect to personal information about themselves held by institutions and to provide individuals with a right of access to that information.

Applying this approach, this office has developed a list of factors to consider in determining whether or not a record is in the custody or under the control of an institution [Orders 120, MO-1251]. The list is not intended to be exhaustive. Some of the listed factors may not apply in a specific case, while other unlisted factors may apply.

- Were the records created by an officer or employee of the institution? [Order P-120]
- What use did the creator intend to make of the records? [Orders P-120, P-239]
- Does the institution have a statutory power or duty to carry out the activity that resulted in the creation of the records? [Order P-912, upheld in Ontario (Criminal Code Review Board) v. Ontario (Information and Privacy Commissioner), above]
- Is the activity in question a “core”, “central” or “basic” function of the institution? [Order P-912]
- Does the content of the records relate to the institution’s mandate and functions? [Orders P-120, P-239]
- Does the institution have physical possession of the records, either because it has been voluntarily provided by the creator or pursuant to a mandatory statutory or employment requirement? [Orders P-120, P-239]
- If the institution does not have possession of the records, are they being held by an officer or employee of the institution for the purposes of his or her duties as an officer or employee? [Orders P-120, P-239]

- Does the institution have a right to possession of the records? [Orders P-120, P-239]
- Does the institution have the authority to regulate the records' use and disposal? [Orders P-120, P-239]
- Are there any limits on the use to which the institution may put the records, what are those limits, and why do they apply to the record?
- To what extent has the institution relied upon the records? [Orders P-120, P-239]
- How closely are the records integrated with other records held by the institution? [Orders P-120, P-239]
- What is the customary practice of the institution and institutions similar to the institution in relation to possession or control of records of this nature, in similar circumstances? [Order MO-1251]

The following factors may apply where an individual or organization other than the institution holds the record:

- If the records are not in the physical possession of the institution, who has possession of the records, and why?
- Is the individual, agency or group who or which has physical possession of the records an "institution" for the purposes of the Act?
- Who owns the records? [Order M-315]
- Who paid for the creation of the records? [Order M-506]
- What are the circumstances surrounding the creation, use and retention of the records?
- Are there any provisions in any contracts between the institution and the individual who created the records in relation to the activity that resulted in the creation of the records, which expressly or by implication give the institution the right to possess or otherwise control the records? [Greater Vancouver Mental Health Service Society v. British Columbia (Information and Privacy Commissioner), [1999] B.C.J. No. 198 (S.C.)]
- Was there an understanding or agreement between the institution, the individual who created the record or any other party that the records were not to be disclosed to the Institution? [Order M-165] If so, what were the precise undertakings of confidentiality given by the individual who created the records, to whom were they given, when, why and in what form?
- Is there any other contract, practice, procedure or circumstance that affects the control, retention or disposal of the records by the institution?
- Was the individual who created the records an agent of the institution for the purposes of the activity in question? If so, what was the scope of that agency, and did it carry with it a right of the institution to possess or otherwise control the records? Walmsley v. Ontario (Attorney General) (1997), [1997 CanLII 3017 \(ON CA\), 34 O.R. (3d) 611 (C.A.)]

- What is the customary practice of the individual who created the records and others in a similar trace, calling or profession in relation to possession or control of records of this nature, in similar circumstances? [Order MO-1251]
- To what extent, if any, should the fact that the individual or organization that created the records has refused to provide the institution with a copy of the records determine the control issue? [Order MO-1251]

Previous orders of this office have considered the question of whether or not the Ministry has custody or control of “court records”. For example, Order P-994 dealt with an application to the Ministry for access to a copy of the “Information” regarding an assault charge initiated by the appellant against a named individual. The Ministry argued that the records were “court records” in the custody or under the control of the courts. Adjudicator Laurel Cropley noted that “court records” are not specifically identified as a category of records to which the Act does not apply. For that reason, she concluded that the relevant question is whether the records are within the custody or under the control of the Ministry.

In Order P-994, Adjudicator Cropley began her analysis of the issues with a consideration of whether the courts are institutions under the Act. She stated:

In my view, the discussions surrounding the evolution of the Act clearly contemplate that the courts and the judiciary (that is, the judicial branch of government) are to be set apart from other types of institutions and from the other branches of government generally. The unique function the courts fulfil within our society is distinct from the usual perception of “government.” Accordingly, I find that the courts are not part of any Ministry and are not included in paragraph (a) of the definition of “institution.”

Since I have found that the courts are not included in either paragraph (a) or (b) of the definition of “institution,” they are not institutions under the Act.

Having found that the courts are not “institutions” under the Act, Adjudicator Cropley states:

In its representations, the Ministry [of the Attorney General] has acknowledged that it has a special relationship with the courts. In my view, this special relationship impacts on the issue of whether or not records in a court file are in the custody and/or control of an institution.

With respect to the relationship between the Ministry and the courts, Adjudicator Cropley noted:

I have found that the courts are not institutions under the Act. Moreover, I recognize that the independence of the judiciary is well established in the common law and reflected in the [Courts of Justice Act]. In my view, the objectives of the Act as set out in section 1 are, to a certain degree, met by the “public” nature of court proceedings and the ability of the judiciary to control the dissemination of sensitive information. In order for the judiciary to maintain its independence with respect to its adjudicative function, this must necessarily entail the ability to control those records which are directly related to this function. However, because of the administrative relationship of the Ministry to records in a court file, the question remains, does the Ministry have custody and/or control over these records for the purposes of the Act. [Emphasis added.]

After reviewing the indicia of custody and control set out by former Commissioner Linden in Order 120, and the representations of the parties, Adjudicator Cropley stated:

The record at issue was generated by the appellant, not the Ministry, for the purpose of placing the matter before a court. Although the Ministry may become involved once process is issued, in this case, process was not issued, and the Ministry had no role to play in the matter.

As I indicated above, the Ministry submits that it has possession of the record as a "custodian" only and any authority it has over the record's use is subject to supervision by the courts.

Moreover, the Ministry submits that the record does not relate to its mandate and functions, but rather relates to the court proceedings for which the record was created. Further, the record is not integrated with Ministry records in any way.

With respect to the disposition of the record, section 95a of the Courts of Justice Amendment Act, 1989, S.O. 1989, c.55 [section 79, Courts of Justice Act, 1990] provides that court records are to be disposed of in accordance with the directions of the Deputy Attorney General. However, these directions are subject to the approval of the chief judge of the relevant court.

Further, in this regard, the Ministry indicates that the responsibility for making decisions about access is vested in the "head". The head of the Ministry is the Attorney General. The Ministry submits that if court records were subject to the access requirements of the Act, the Attorney General would be responsible for making access decisions and this would alter the common law approach, which vests judges with this authority. This could, the Ministry argues, impair the constitutional separation between the courts and the executive branch of government.

I have carefully considered the Ministry's representations, and I find that although the Ministry is in "possession" of records relating to a court action in a court file, its limited ability to use, maintain, care for, dispose of and disseminate them does not amount to "custody" for the purposes of the Act. Nor do I find, in applying the factors set out in Order 120 to the evidence before me, that there are indicia of "control" over these records by the Ministry.

For these reasons, I find that the Ministry does not have custody or control over records relating to a court action in a court file within the meaning of section 10(1) of the Act and, accordingly, to the extent that such records are located in a "court file", they cannot be subject to an access request under the Act.

I am not satisfied, however, that this conclusion extends to copies of such records which exist independently of the "court file". Accordingly, to the extent that copies of these records also exist independently of the "court file", they would fall within the custody and/or control of the Ministry and, therefore, would be subject to the Act.

This office has considered the issue of custody or control of "court records" in a number of other orders, including: Order PO-2446 (informations); Orders P-995, P-1397 (tape recordings of testimony and evidence); and Order P-1151 (jury roll information). With the exception of Order P-1151, the records at issue in these orders were all records that related to specific proceedings in the courts and were contained in the court file relating to the proceeding, and for those reasons the records were found not to be in the custody or under the control of the Ministry.

The information at issue in Order P-1151 was postal code information of jurors that was located in a Ministry database relating to the jury roll. In that order, former Assistant Commissioner Tom Mitchinson found that the information contained in the jury roll was prepared under the Juries Act by the Sheriff who was an employee of the courts. He also found that the responsibility for the preparation and the administration of the jury list, and the supervision and management of the jury selection process is under judicial control. Most significantly, he found that the information contained in the database was not integrated with other records held by the Ministry. Having regard to all of these circumstances, Assistant Commissioner Mitchinson found that the information requested was not in the custody and/or under the control of the Ministry. This order is an important illustration of the manner in which the Act respects judicial independence over court records and over administrative matters under judicial control.

I adopt the approach taken in these previous decisions, including Order P-994, and will apply it in this appeal.

Representations

In its representations, the Ministry provided the following background information regarding the responsive records:

The Offence Type Statistics by Location report (“the report”) was produced at the request of the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice in 2004.

During discussions in 2003 between the ministry and the Ontario Court of Justice about court activity statistics and tracking of cases in the Ontario Court of Justice, the judiciary expressed a desire to have a comprehensive report that integrated specific data measures by offence type. No such reports existed. The Office of the Chief Justice required more detailed reporting of offence data by court location for its own purposes.

Instructions on the desired data elements and format for the report were provided by the Office of the Chief Justice to ministry staff who maintained the databases of court based information.

Ministry Court Services Division staff are responsible for maintaining court activity information databases as part of the ministry responsibility to support the judiciary and the administration of the courts. To minimize duplication of resources, ministry staff provide support to the constitutionally independent judiciary and to the ministry.

The ministry submits that the preparation of this report is an example of “judicial information”, in this case judicial management information, which the constitutionally independent judiciary requires in order to properly and effectively fulfill its role in the administration of the court system in Ontario.

The first report was produced for the Chief Justice in 2004 and is produced on a quarterly basis. No reports exist for the period 2000-2004, although such reports could be prepared at the direction of the judiciary.

In order to properly monitor and effectively administer the operation of the Ontario Court of Justice, the Chief Justice has agreed to the report being made available to senior court staff and senior Crown Attorneys in order to inform their planning and management decision-making to support court operations.

As noted above, the Ministry states that the record is “judicial information of the Ontario Court of Justice” and therefore is not “in the custody” or “under the control of an institution” as the courts are not an institution under the Act.

The Ministry argues that the constitutional independence of the judiciary is of paramount importance in its consideration of the appellant’s request. It refers to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Valente v. R. [1985] S.C. R. 673 where the court considered the relationship between the provincial criminal court and the Ministry, and identified three essential conditions of judicial independence for the purposes of s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. One of the conditions is institutional independence “with respect to matters of administration bearing directly on the exercise of its judicial function.” The Ministry states:

The “fine line” between interference and management controls in court administration is often quite nuanced but it must be based on a fundamental respect for the constitutional independence of judiciary, including the protections afforded judicial information required by the court to effectively and appropriately fulfill its separate role in the administration of the court system.

The Ministry also refers to Attorney General of Nova Scotia v. MacIntyre, 1982 CanLII 14 (SCC), [1982] 1 S.C.R. 175 and Vickery v. Nova Scotia Supreme Court (Prothonotary), 1991 CanLII 90 (SCC), [1991] 1 S.C.R. 671 which the Ministry states “recognize the overall protecting and supervisory power of the court over all court records and documents.”

The Ministry describes the information at issue in this appeal as “judicial information.” It states:

Judicial information is a kind of court record that is information gathered, produced or used for judicial purposes, but does not include, for example, exhibits, affidavits and other written evidence filed with the court or judgments and reasons for judgment that have been issued. Judicial information is created by judges or judicial staff. (Canadian Judicial Council Blueprint for the Security of Judicial Information, November 2004, pp. 10 and 11)

In support, the Ministry refers to the Canadian Judicial Council's Model Policy for Access to Court Records in Canada (2005), (the CJC Model Policy). The Ministry states:

The Council’s Model Policy also makes clear that access to court records policies and over all control over court records and documents rests with the judiciary alone.

Any access policy developed by the judiciary on the basis of this model policy will be founded upon the inherent jurisdiction of the judiciary to maintain supervisory and protective power over its own records. Thus, it must be clear that any reference made in this policy to the “court” does not include the administrative aspects of the court for which the executive branch of the government is responsible, but only the judiciary in the exercise of a judicial function such as its supervisory and protective powers regarding court records. [Emphasis added.] (p.1)

Elsewhere in its representations, the Ministry characterizes the responsive records as “court activity data” and seems to suggest that although it had the “implied right” to use and disclose this information in the past, its rights are now subject to the terms of an “implied consent to use this information” as the information is now in the control of the courts. The Ministry states:

Following the release of the Council's model policy and as a result of a national and international trend among courts to more closely consider the use of court based information, the ministry and the courts have instituted active discussions concerning access to court records, including electronic access and access to court information and data, such as this record. The courts have asked that the terms of the implied consent to use this information be documented.

The Ontario Court of Justice takes the position that all information and statistics based on court information is in the control of the courts. In the past it was not explicitly understood by the ministry that the information held by the ministry was not in its custody and control nor were the terms of any implied consent documented.

The ministry exercised responsible judgment in handling past requests for court activity data.

Since engaging in the recent discussions with the courts on this issue and having the court's position clearly articulated, the ministry has been careful to respect the court's position and the independence of the judiciary. As a result the ministry does not currently provide access to data or records that previously the ministry felt it had implicit judicial consent to release or distribute, without explicit judicial consent.

The ministry submits that it is exclusively within the constitutional jurisdiction of the judiciary to develop policies and practices with respect to both court records and judicial information. While respecting openness as the core principle in determining access to court record policies (balanced with protection of privacy and the administration of justice), the court is likely to be more protective about policies related to access to judicial information.

Regarding the Ministry's role in court administration, the Ministry refers to section 71 of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43 which provides "statutory authority to the Attorney General to superintend the administration of the courts '...other than matters that are assigned by law to the judiciary.'" It states:

The Supreme Court in Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, supra, confirms that provincial jurisdiction over court administration contains "an implied limitation that the independence of those courts cannot be undermined." (para. 108)

The Ministry also states:

Inappropriate release of judicial information would seriously jeopardize the ministry's relationship with the courts and would likely be perceived as a breach of the judiciary's constitutionally protected independence.

[T]he courts alone are free to determine policies concerning release of judicial information – or to agree to the release of individual requests. Inappropriate ministry sharing of judicial information could have serious long-term consequences on the court's willingness to rely on, or share information with, the ministry, which would have a serious negative impact on the effective operation of the courts.

The Ministry provided the following representations in response to the specific questions set out in the Notice of Inquiry:

Was the record created by an officer or employee of the institution? (OrderP-120)

Ministry staff created the report under the specific direction of, and for the use of, the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice. As noted above, Canadian jurisprudence recognizes the delicate and nuanced role ministry staff have in working for both the executive branch of government but also serving the needs and providing services for the constitutionally independent judiciary. Employees of the ministry routinely undertake tasks under the direction of the judiciary. The mere fact that an employee of the ministry undertakes a task cannot be considered evidence that the ministry (institution) has directed the task or controls the resulting document, report or information.

What use did the creator intend to make of the record?

The creator intended to provide the report for the use of the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice. The ministry is not aware of the Chief Justice's specific intentions for the use of the report. The ministry considers the report to be judicial information, specifically judicial management information, for the use of the Chief Justice.

Does the institution have a statutory power or duty to carry out the activity that resulted in the creation of the records?

The Ministry of the Attorney General Act, supra, gives the Attorney General the duty to "superintend all matters connected with the administration of justice in Ontario". Further the Courts of Justice Act, supra, provides the authority to the Attorney General to superintend the administration of the courts "...other than matters that are assigned by law to the judiciary."

...

The ministry's statutory authority to provide support to the judiciary means that ministry staff routinely provide services and undertake tasks under the direction and control of the constitutionally independent judiciary. The preparation of judicial information based on court records and data is one such service the ministry provides to the courts.

Is the activity in question a "core", "central" or "basic" function of the institution?

The administration of justice and the courts are core, central and basic functions of the institution. However, as noted above, Canadian jurisprudence is very clear that any provincial statutory authority to carry out the ministry's duty for the administration of justice and courts administration must be exercised within the context of constitutionally protected judicial independence, including court control over court records and documents. Any suggestion that ministry staff exercising their core function in support of the judiciary might be interpreted to compromise the institutional independence of the judiciary would have grave consequences for the ministry and the administration of the court system in the province.

Does the content of the record relate to the institution's mandate and functions?

The report relates to the ministry's mandate and function to provide support to the independent judiciary in their administration of the courts in Ontario.

Does the institution have possession of the record either because it has been voluntarily provided by the creator or pursuant to a mandatory, statutory or employment requirement?

The ministry has possession of the report as ministry staff are responsible for compiling the report for the Chief Justice. The Office of the Chief Justice has also agreed to the report being made available to senior court staff and Crown Attorneys for the purpose of planning and decision-making to support court operations.

...

Employees of the ministry routinely undertake tasks, including the preparation of handling of judicial information, under the direction of the judiciary.

...

Possession of the report is with the consent of the court, whose report it is. The ministry submits that mere possession of the report by the ministry does not place the report in the custody or under the control of the ministry.

If the institution does have possession of the record, is it being held by an officer or employee of the institution for the purposes of his or her duties as an officer or an employee?

Employees of the ministry have access to the report to assist the court in the effective administration of justice and court administration in Ontario. The court does not consider the ministry's possession of the report to interfere with its definition as constitutionally protected judicial information.

Does the institution have a right to possession of the record?

The ministry has no right to possess the report.

The ministry has possession of the report in one instance as staff support to the courts (as compiler of the report) and in another capacity (senior court staff and senior Crown Attorneys in order to support their planning and decision making to support court operations) at the discretion of the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice.

Does the institution have the authority to regulate the record's use and disposal?

The ministry does not have the authority to regulate the use or disposal of the report. The report was created for, and at the direction of, the Office of the Chief Justice. Only the court can regulate the use or disposal of the report.

Are there any limits on the use to which the institution may put the record, what are those limits, and why do they apply to the records?

The ministry is not free to independently determine uses of or limits on the report. Only the court can determine any limits on the use of the report.

As noted above, the ministry is actively engaged in discussions with the judiciary on a range of issues related to access to court records and information. The discussions will assist in determining principles and approaches to be used in making court records and court based information publicly available.

To what extent has the record been relied upon by the institution?

Senior court officials and Crown Attorneys use the report, in conjunction with the judiciary, to support the effective administration of justice in the province.

The report is considered an effective tool, among others, to support senior ministry staff in their planning and decision making to support court operations.

How closely is the record integrated with other records held by the institution?

The report is independent of other records the ministry holds. The report is available to a limited set of senior court officials and Crown Attorneys. Data used to compile the report is used by the ministry for other court administration purposes.

What is the customary practice of the institution and the institutions similar to the institution in relation to the possession or control of records of this nature, in similar circumstances?

As noted above the ministry respects the overall protecting and supervisory power of the court over all court records and documents, including judicial information.

Prior to the current discussions with the court, initiated in 2006, the ministry believed it had the implied consent of the courts to share the court based information and data on a limited basis. As noted above in paragraph 31, the courts have taken the position that court based information and statistics based on court information is in the control of the courts. As a result of these discussions, the ministry has been careful to respect the court's position and does not currently provide access to data or reports, without explicit judicial consent.

The Ministry adds:

The report is in the possession of the judiciary and selected ministry staff, with the implied consent of the judiciary. No other individual or organization has possession of the report.

...

The report has no distinct costs associated with it. Ministry staff undertakes the compilation of the data and the report itself in their capacity supporting the constitutionally independent judiciary. Ministry funding supports the staff cost associated with the data and report compilation, as it does for all court staff. The ministry submits that given the previously noted unique role ministry staff play in both supporting the judiciary in their independent administration of the courts, as well as functioning as part of the executive branch of government, the funding of the staff positions ought not to be a significant factor in establishing ministry care [sic] or control of the report.

In conclusion, the Ministry states:

The ministry submits that the impact of finding judicial information being within the scope of the Act, would have far reaching implications for the administration of the court system and the ministry's relationship with the constitutionally independent judiciary.

The courts alone are constitutionally charged with determining access to judicial information, including court records, data and statistics. Administrative information and data about court administration that is in the custody and control of the ministry is publicly available and is routinely made available through the Act.

The appellant submitted representations in response. He states:

The data in those reports are housed by, controlled by, updated by, administered by, relied on by, crunched by, acted on by, and reflective of the work of the Crown (Ministry). Both the data, and the reports, are in the Ministry's custody and possession, given that senior managers in MAG prosecutions and Ministry staff with the Court Services division rely on this information.

In paragraph 14, the Ministry contends that the "preparation of this report is an example of judicial information" thus placing it beyond the reach of the public. ... The act of collating Ministry data does not fundamentally change the information. It is all well and good the judiciary will use the MAG statistics to better manage the courts. But that ought not make it beyond the reach of me, or [named media outlet] (as the "eyes and ears of the public") for our purposes – which are journalistic – to observe, expose, cast light on, call in to account the issues raised by the information.

The appellant argues that although the judiciary has an interest in the objective measurement of how caseloads and prosecutions are being handled, the Ministry also has an interest. He states:

The Ministry has both a statutory power and a duty to collect these data and monitor them.

The monitoring function is a core, central and basic function of the Ministry, relating directly to the Ministry's prosecutions, and Court Services mandates and responsibilities.

The Ministry has physical possession of both the data, and the reports in question, and has a right to possess both. (The data is collected by Court Services, regardless of whether the judiciary requests the creation of specific reports. There is nothing stopping the Ministry from generating its own similar reports from its databases, or for members of the public requesting the information.)

The Ministry relies heavily on this data to better manage prosecutions and court staffing in Ontario.

The Ministry has the right to regulate the data (if not the records), subject to its legal, ethical and moral obligations as a public institution – including the Freedom of Information Act.

This is a matter of common sense. The Ministry gathers data in the course of its work supporting the administration of justice in Ontario. Whether the Judiciary asked for some of that data, or the CBC asks for a version of similar information – it is the Ministry's to provide.

...[T]his is not about 'court documents' or data about the judiciary, or trends in judicial findings. It is about access to the Ministry's own tracking data of court prosecutions

As noted above, following receipt of the appellant's representations, I invited the Ministry to submit representations in reply. In its reply, the Ministry repeated that, although its staff may have possession of the reports, the Ministry does not have custody and control of the report. It also acknowledged that Ministry staff do make use of the report, without providing details, but it argued that they do so under the control and direction of the Ontario Court of Justice.

Following my review of the reply representations, I wrote to the Ministry and asked it to provide me with answers to a number of questions. In response, the Ministry stated:

The Ministry has been producing court activity statistical reports for over a decade in order to support management decision making about the justice system and to support the Chief Justices of the Ontario Court of Justice and the Superior Court of Justice. The reports based on these earlier statistics were not satisfactory, however, and were terminated. Subsequently in 2004, the "Offence Type Statistics by Location" report was prepared at the request of Chief Justice Lennox.

Prior to 2004, the Ministry gathered and used statistical data about offences to support management decision-making by the judiciary and the Ministry.

The report is available to management in the Court Services Division and the Criminal Law Division and to senior Crown Attorneys to support management decision making such as resource planning and allocation.

Crown and court staff use statistics on a local basis for planning and scheduling purposes to support timely case processing.

Crown Attorneys use the statistical data and reports to monitor trends such as increases/decreases in charges and court activities over time. Statistical data and reports are also used to assist in allocating resources.

Criminal Law Division posts this report on its intranet with restricted access to Divisional Management Committee, Directors of Crown Operations, Crown Attorneys (not Assistant Crown Attorneys) and a few analysts in the Corporate Branch Divisional Planning and Administration. The Court Services Division posts the report on its intranet site and it is available to directors, Managers and Supervisors of Court Operation and to the 7 Managers of Business Support.....
[Emphasis added.]

I also asked whether the Ministry had any written correspondence between the courts and the Ministry relating to the collection, maintenance and use of the statistical information and/or the report. The Ministry responded that it did not understand the question and it sought clarification. Staff in this office provided Ministry staff with the clarification. The Ministry responded that it frequently exchanges electronic communications with the court about specific requests for access to court information; however, it did not provide me with copies of any communications regarding the collection, maintenance and use of the reports and/or the statistical information in the reports at issue here with the exception of a blank template that it uses when consulting with the CJO about access requests.

Analysis and Findings

Having carefully reviewed the representations of the parties and the records, I find that the records are in the custody of the Ministry and also under its control. The reasons for my decision follow.

Ministry Role and Mandate

One of the factors to be considered in an analysis of the custody and control issue is whether there is a relationship between the core, basic and central functions of the Ministry and the record at issue. I will therefore begin my analysis with a review of the Ministry's mandate.

The Ministry has the responsibility for, among other things, the support of and administration of the constitutionally independent courts, as well as responsibility for other aspects of the administration of justice in Ontario, and the conduct of litigation for and against the Crown. As the Ministry supports the statutory mandate of the Attorney General, it derives its authority through the Attorney General. The statutory responsibilities of the Attorney General are set out in section 5 of the Ministry of the Attorney General Act, which states:

The Attorney General,

- (a) is the Law Officer of the Executive Council;
- (b) shall see that the administration of public affairs is in accordance with the law;
- (c) shall superintend all matters connected with the administration of justice in Ontario;
- (d) shall perform the duties and have the powers that belong to the Attorney General and Solicitor General of England by law or usage, so far as those duties and powers are applicable to Ontario, and also shall perform the duties and have the powers that, until the Constitution Act, 1867 came into effect, belonged to the offices of the Attorney General and Solicitor General in the provinces of Canada and Upper Canada and which, under the provisions of that Act, are within the scope of the powers of the Legislature;

(e) shall advise the Government upon all matters of law connected with legislative enactments and upon all matters of law referred to him or her by the Government;

(f) shall advise the Government upon all matters of a legislative nature and superintend all Government measures of a legislative nature;

(g) shall advise the heads of the ministries and agencies of Government upon all matters of law connected with such ministries and agencies;

(h) shall conduct and regulate all litigation for and against the Crown or any ministry or agency of Government in respect of any subject within the authority or jurisdiction of the Legislature;

(i) shall superintend all matters connected with judicial offices;

(j) shall perform such other functions as are assigned to him or her by the Legislature or by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The organizational chart that is available on the Ministry website reveals that the Ministry is divided into eight distinct divisions: Court Services, Criminal Law, Legal Services, Corporate Services, Family Justice Services, Victim Services Secretariat, Policy and Communications.

The information at issue in this record includes information relating to the timely processing of criminal proceedings, the types of charges under consideration and the disposition of the charges. This is all information that relates to the Ministry's mandate to superintend matters connected with the administration of justice (5(c)) and the conduct and regulation of litigation for and against the Crown (4(h)). Accordingly, I find that the information contained in the records does relate to the Ministry's core, central and basic functions. I also find that the information is relevant to the mandate and functions of both the Court Services division and the Criminal Law division, a factor which I will discuss in more detail below.

Characterization of the Records

The Ministry acknowledges that the records at issue here are not "court records" (that is, they are not records found in a court file relating to a particular proceeding – or, put slightly differently, "court records in a court file" as referred to in Order P-994) and I agree with that position.

In Order P-994 Adjudicator Cropley distinguished between records that were located in the court file and that related to the court proceeding and records that might have been copied from the court file that exist independently in another location. She stated:

For these reasons, I find that the Ministry does not have custody or control over records relating to a court action in a court file within the meaning of section 10(1) of the Act and, accordingly, to the extent that such records are located in a "court file", they cannot be subject to an access request under the Act.

I am not satisfied, however, that this conclusion extends to copies of such records which exist independently of the "court file". Accordingly, to the extent that copies of these records also exist independently of the "court file", they would fall within the custody and/or control of the Ministry and, therefore, would be subject to the Act.

In British Columbia, “record[s] in a court file” are expressly excluded from the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act (BC FOIPPA). In the Alberta legislation (Alberta FOIPPA), “information in a court file” is excluded. While these terms are neither defined nor used in the Act, a review of the definitions and the treatments of these records in British Columbia and Alberta is of some guidance. Adjudicator Cropley noted:

Both the Alberta and British Columbia Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Acts (FOIPPA) contain similarly worded sections which outline the types of records that are subject to their legislation. Section 3(1)(a) of the British Columbia FOIPPA provides, for example, that:

This Act applies to all records in the custody or under the control of a public body, including court administration records, but does not apply to the following:

a record in a court file, a record of a judge of the Court of Appeal, Supreme Court or Provincial Court, a record of a master of the Supreme Court, a record of a justice of the peace, a judicial administration record or a record relating to support services provided to the judges of those courts. [emphasis added]

Both Alberta and British Columbia distinguish between “court administration records” and records in “court files”. British Columbia defines court administration records in its Policy and Procedures Manual, Volume I, produced by the Information and Privacy Branch of the Ministry of Government Services as those files pertaining to non-judicial staffing which deal with personnel issues, position competitions and office management. Although what constitutes a “court file” has not been defined and is, therefore, not clear, I agree, in general, with the distinction between court administration records and other court records.

Alberta and British Columbia have expressly excluded records in a court file from the application of their respective legislation. Although this may provide some guidance in analyzing this issue in the current appeal, it is not, in my view, determinative of the issue.

It is possible that a “court file” may contain many types of records, such as administrative records, records directly related to the action, and records relating to enforcement of orders. The factual circumstances of this appeal do not facilitate extensive discussion of the scope of what constitutes a record in a court file. This issue may, in fact, have to be determined on a case by case basis depending on the nature of the records requested. In my view, future decisions regarding this issue might also include discussion of the distinction between court administration records and records which are normally found in court files, as well as other types of records that find their way into a court file. Generally speaking, however, I am prepared to accept that, what the Ministry refers to as “court records”, consist of those records which relate to a court action and which are found in a court file.

Consistent with the comments of Adjudicator Cropley in Order P-994 quoted above, the British Columbia Information and Privacy Commissioner has found that copies of records in the possession of other government institutions that are also located in a court file, are not “record[s] in a court file” and therefore are within the scope of the British Columbia FOIPPA [see Orders 234, Order 01-27].

These provisions are not determinative of the issue before me, but these approaches to the characterization of records provide some guidance in analyzing the custody and control issue in this appeal.

I agree with the approach taken in British Colombia and suggested by Adjudicator Cropley in Order P-994, that copies of records contained in a court file but found in a different location within the Ministry’s records should be treated differently from the actual records in the court file. In my view, generally, copies of records found in the possession of the Ministry should not be treated in the same way as records that are located in a court file that directly relate to the court proceedings and the adjudicative function.

Turning to the records before me, I note that the “Offence Type Statistics by Location” report includes statistics, by offence and location, relating to the number of charges received, charges disposed of, average number of appearances, the disposition of the charges and the time involved to process criminal cases. In my view, the best description of the information in the report is the one used by the Ministry in its press release of June 3, 2008 in which it described this information as “criminal court statistics” since the information in the records is general statistical information gathered or obtained from the processing of criminal cases.

Although the precise source of the information contained in the records is not clear, the Ministry submits:

Ministry Court Services Division staff are responsible for maintaining court activity information databases as part of the ministry responsibility to support the judiciary and the administration of the courts.

Elsewhere the Ministry suggests that the information in the records is based on information contained in court records. It states:

The preparation of judicial information based on court records and data is one such service the ministry provides to the courts.

In my view, the records at issue here are analogous to copies of court records outside the “court file” that are in the custody of the Ministry and found in its other record holdings. Although they are prepared based on information that may be contained in the court files, they are prepared, maintained, manipulated, produced and used by the Ministry staff whose responsibility is the administration of the courts. They are also used by other Ministry staff whose responsibility is the administration of justice and the prosecution of offences. Although they are analogous to copies of court records, they are even farther removed from the actual contents of any court file because they are not in fact copies. They consist of aggregate information and data relating to the progress of criminal cases that might originate from information that is also located in court files, but this information has been manipulated and formatted to create a statistical report.

I do not agree with the Ministry’s position that the information at issue here falls within the term “judicial information” as defined by the Canadian Judicial Council Blueprint for the Security of Judicial Information (the CJC Blueprint) which states, at page 10, that “judicial information” is information that is “gathered, produced or used for judicial purposes.” Given that there is a significant amount of evidence, reviewed in detail below, that the information in the records is gathered, produced and used for purposes other than judicial purposes, I do not agree that, in the hands of the Ministry, the information falls within this definition.

Moreover, in my view, the definition of “judicial information” used in the CJC Blueprint is not helpful in analysing the issues in this appeal. The CJC Blueprint describes its purpose as “provid[ing] guidelines to improve the security, accessibility and integrity of computer systems containing judicial information” (at page 5). Its recommendations address issues such as the security of remote access technologies, encryption, and anti-virus protections. In addition, the threshold for the application of the Act is custody or control, and as demonstrated in Order P-994, the principle of judicial independence is a factor to be taken into account in assessing whether that threshold has been met. This is discussed in more detail below. In my view, the definition of “judicial information” relied on by the Ministry is not applicable in the context of the Act.

As part of its argument in relation to “judicial information”, the Ministry also states that, although the records were created by Ministry staff, they were created on the instructions of the CJO, given in 2004, for “judicial management purposes.” However, the Ministry also acknowledges that the information contained in the records at issue has been collected and maintained by the Ministry since 2000 (elsewhere the Ministry states that it has been collecting this information for a decade) and that it was not until 2004 that the CJO requested that the existing information be compiled and formatted in a different manner. In other words, although the statistical information was placed in its current format at the request of the CJO in 2004, that information has been collected, and was available to Ministry staff, since 2000. In my view, the format of the records is not relevant to the determination of whether they are in the Ministry’s custody or control in the circumstances of this appeal.

The Ministry has also relied on the CJC Model Policy regarding access to court records. As the purpose of the CJC Model Policy is to “define principles of access to court records,” it is also not relevant to the issues before me which, as I have previously stated, relate to records other than “court records.”

More importantly, any access scheme that the courts may have to records in their custody or under their control exists independently of the access scheme under the Act. Accordingly, although the courts have developed a policy regarding access to what they have defined as “court records”, that policy does not override the application of the Act to those records which may also be in the custody or under the control of the Ministry.

I give significant weight to the fact that the statistical information in these records does not reveal in any way the substance or content of records that Adjudicator Cropley and previous orders of this office have described as “court records”. Nor is the information in the report directly related to a specific court proceeding or more generally to the adjudicative function of the courts. In addition, although the contents of the records relate to the mandate of the Ministry to support the administration of the courts, the contents of the records also relate to the Ministry’s mandate to manage the criminal justice system and to conduct litigation on behalf of the Crown which is in the purview of the Criminal Law Division.

Having reviewed the records and the representations of the parties, I am satisfied that they are properly characterized as relating to the management of the courts and the prosecution of offences by the Crown, and therefore relate to administrative and prosecutorial functions of the Ministry.

Other Factors

I accept the position of the Ministry that mere possession of the reports by senior employees of the Ministry does not place the reports within the scope of the Act. However, the evidence before me is that staff at the Ministry have more than mere possession of the report. As analysed above, and discussed in more detail below, the records are relied on by the Ministry for its own independent purposes and relate to its core functions. Also, as previously stated, the information contained in the reports at issue has been collected, prepared and maintained by the Ministry since at least 2000, long before the CJO made its request in 2004 for a copy of this report in its current format. Although the Ministry states that it was not until 2004 that it began to prepare the report in its current format based on instructions provided by the CJO to Ministry staff, in fact, it acknowledges that it had the ability to generate the report based on the data previously collected and maintained by its staff.

Previous orders of this office (P-267, PO-1725) have found that where the records at issue have been integrated into the operations of the institution, they are in the custody of the institution for the purposes of the Act. I agree with this approach and adopt it here.

I find that there is a high degree of integration and co-mingling of this report in Ministry operations across divisions and among staff involved in other aspects of the administration of justice. Although I accept that many Ministry staff provide support to the constitutionally independent judiciary, the Ministry representations state that the primary responsibility for the support of the judiciary and the administration of the courts lies with the Court Services Division of the Ministry. Indeed, the Ministry acknowledges that this division is responsible for maintaining court activity information databases.

Most significantly, and as alluded to previously, the Ministry acknowledges that the report is also available to management in the Criminal Law Division and to senior Crown Attorneys to assist with their staff and other resource planning and allocation. The Criminal Law Division posts this report on its intranet and access is given to staff including the Directors of Crown Operations and to the Corporate Branch Divisional Planning and Administration. The Ministry's representations acknowledge that "the report is an effective tool, among others, to support senior ministry staff in their planning and decision making to support court operations." For example, these court statistics would be a valuable tool in deciding where and when to construct new court houses, a decision that would be made by the Ministry in supporting court operations and which would entail fiscal, administrative and political considerations. This is not the kind of decision that would be made by the courts. In my view, it is very significant that other staff in the Ministry who are not directly involved in the administration of the courts have access to this information and use the information for purposes unrelated to the exercise of judicial functions or the administration of court proceedings.

The Ministry states that its use and distribution of this report was based on an "implied consent" to do so. In this regard, I found the Ministry's representations to be vague and confusing. In addition, I have not been provided with any documentation, other than the bald assertions in the representations, to demonstrate that these activities were undertaken with the judiciary's consent, nor that the judiciary was of the view that it had the authority to give or withhold consent regarding such uses of the information. I also note that the Ministry was not able to provide me with evidence of any written communication between the courts and the Ministry regarding the preparation, maintenance and use of these records, which I would have expected to exist if the courts had the degree of control over the records that is alleged by the Ministry. I find that there is not sufficient evidence before me to support a finding that the courts have exclusive control over the records in a manner that would prevent the Ministry from having custody or control of them for the purposes of the Act.

For these reasons, I find that the findings of Adjudicator Cropley in Order P-994 that the Ministry had "limited ability to use, maintain, care for, dispose of and disseminate" the court records, do not apply in the circumstances of the records at issue in this appeal.

I have also taken into account the fact that the press release that was issued in June of 2008 announcing the disclosure to the public of some of the information contained in this report was issued by the Ministry as part of its Justice on Target Strategy. This evidence weighs in favour of a finding that the Ministry has custody or control of the record.

Independence of the Judiciary

The Ministry appears to argue that the application of the Act to the records would violate the constitutional principle of judicial independence. For example, the Ministry states:

The courts alone are constitutionally charged with determining access to judicial information, including court records, data and statistics.

Elsewhere the Ministry states:

Inappropriate release of judicial information would seriously jeopardize the ministry's relationship with the courts and would likely be perceived as a breach of the judiciary's constitutionally protected independence.

The Ministry's constitutional arguments are included in its representations on custody and/or control of the records. In one aspect of this argument, the Ministry suggests that in the exercise of its role and mandate, it has only bare possession of records that are not in its custody and/or under its control but are in the custody and control of the courts due to its administrative relationship with the courts. I have already addressed this argument. In addition, however, the Ministry appears to make the additional argument that, regardless of my view of the evidence of custody and control under the Act, a finding that the Ministry has custody and/or control of these records would violate the constitutional independence of the judiciary.

However, I note that the Ministry stops short of arguing that the Act is constitutionally inapplicable to the records based on the principle of judicial independence, an argument that would require a Notice of Constitutional Question under section 109 of the Courts of Justice Act. As stated in Order P-994, the Ministry's special relationship with the courts "impacts on the issue" of custody and/or control because the relationship with the judiciary may result in "a limited ability to use, maintain, care for, dispose of and disseminate the records." Put slightly differently, the principle of judicial independence may have a bearing on the issue of custody or control, as I have already noted above. However, the principle of the independence of the judiciary is not engaged where the records are not directly related to the courts' adjudicative functions, and where the evidence about the ability to use, maintain, care for, dispose of and disseminate the records, along with evidence of the integration and co-mingling of the records across Ministry divisions, supports a finding that the records are in the custody and/or under the control of the Ministry.

It should be noted at the outset that the relationship between the judiciary and the Ministry is a factor that I have taken into account in my analysis of the issues in this appeal. However, in the circumstances of this appeal, and for the reasons that follow, I am not persuaded that a finding that the Ministry has custody and control of these records would interfere with the independence of the judiciary.

In this regard, the Ministry refers in its representations to the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Valente v. R, 1985 CanLII 25 \(SCC\), [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673 in support of its position that disclosure of the statistics comprising the record would meet the test developed for infringing on judicial independence. In Valente, LeDain J. states the following:

Howland C.J.O. drew a distinction, for the purposes of the issues in the appeal, between adjudicative independence and administrative independence, which is reflected in the following passages from his reasons for judgment at pp. 432-33:

...

When considering the independence of the judiciary, it is necessary to draw a careful distinction between independent adjudication and independent administration. It is independent adjudication about which the Court is concerned in this appeal.

...

In Ontario, the primary role of the judiciary is adjudication. The Executive on the other hand is responsible for providing the court rooms and the court staff. The assignment of judges, the sittings of the court, and the court lists are all matters for the judiciary. The Executive must not interfere with, or attempt to influence the adjudicative function of the judiciary. However, there must necessarily be reasonable management constraints. At times there may be a fine line between interference with adjudication and proper management controls. The heads of the judiciary have to work closely with the representatives of the Executive unless the judiciary is given full responsibility for judicial administration.

With respect to the elements of judicial independence, LeDain stated:

The third essential condition of judicial independence for purposes of s. 11(d) is in my opinion the institutional independence of the tribunal with respect to matters of administration bearing directly on the exercise of its judicial function. The degree to which the judiciary should ideally have control over the administration of the courts is a major issue with respect to judicial independence today. (emphasis added)

In my view, the analysis in Valente supports a finding that the Ministry has custody or control of the records at issue in this appeal. As the Court notes, “[i]n Ontario, the primary role of the judiciary is adjudication.” Having carefully considered the representations and the records, I am not persuaded that the information contained in this report relates to or impacts the independence of the judiciary, judicial functions and the adjudicative role. On the contrary, I believe that copies of this report would not be distributed as it is to senior Crown Attorneys who appear before the judiciary in the role as prosecutors of criminal proceedings if it was felt that the information in the report affected in any way the independence of the judiciary.

In Order P-994, the Ministry argued that records in a court file are central to the adjudicative process and intimately related to the judicial function of the courts. In response to this position Adjudicator Cropley recognized that:

In order for the judiciary to maintain its independence with respect to its adjudicative function, this must necessarily entail the ability to control those records which are directly related to this function.

However, the records at issue in Orders P-994 and P-2446, referred to by the Ministry, are different from the record at issue in this appeal. The Offence Type Statistics by Location reports are not “central to” and “intimately related to” the judicial function, nor are they contained in a court file as was the case in both of these orders. Therefore, although these orders do reflect the balancing referred to by the Ministry and sensitivity to the relationship between the Ministry and the courts, in my view their conclusions are confined to the unique circumstances of the records at issue in those appeals.

Based on my assessment of all of the factors referred to in the parties’ representations, and bearing in mind the character of the information, its lack of specific connection to the adjudicative function of the courts, its use by Ministry staff in performing administrative functions that are not the province of the courts, and its evident integration into Ministry records, I find that the Ministry has both custody and control of the “Offence Type Statistics by Location” reports requested by the appellant. The Ministry has not claimed that the information severed is subject to any exemptions in the Act, and in my view, none of the mandatory exemptions apply to this information. Accordingly, I will order that it be disclosed.

ORDER:

I find that the Ministry has custody and control of the Offence Type Statistics by Location reports.

I order the Ministry to disclose to the appellant the severed portions of the “Offence Type Statistics by Location” reports for the periods from 2000 to the date of the request by January 5, 2009

The respondent Society, an Alberta environmental group, brought applications for certiorari and mandamus in the Federal Court seeking to compel the federal departments of Transport and Fisheries and Oceans to conduct an environmental assessment, pursuant to the federal Environmental Assessment and Review Process Guidelines Order, in respect of a dam constructed on the Oldman River by the province of Alberta -- a project which affects several federal interests, in particular navigable waters, fisheries, Indians and Indian lands. The Guidelines Order was established under s. 6 of the federal Department of the Environment Act and requires all federal departments and agencies that have a decision-making authority for any proposal (i.e., any initiative, undertaking or activity) that may have an environmental effect on an area of federal responsibility to initially screen such proposal to determine whether it may give rise to any potentially adverse environmental effects. The province had itself conducted extensive environmental studies over the years which took into account public views, including the views of Indian bands and environmental groups, and, in September 1987, had obtained from the Minister of Transport an approval for the work under s. 5 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. This section provides that no work is to be built in navigable waters without the prior approval of the Minister. In assessing Alberta's application, the Minister considered only the project's effect on navigation and no assessment under the Guidelines Order was made. Respondent's attempts to stop the project in the Alberta courts failed and both the federal Ministers of the Environment and of Fisheries and Oceans declined requests to subject the project to the Guidelines Order. The contract for the construction of the dam was awarded in 1988 and the project was 40 per cent complete when the respondent commenced its action in the Federal Court in April 1989. The Trial Division dismissed the applications. On appeal, the Court of Appeal reversed the judgment, quashed the approval under s. 5 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and ordered the Ministers of Transport and of Fisheries and Oceans to comply with the Guidelines Order. This appeal raises the constitutional and statutory validity of the Guidelines Order as well as its nature and applicability. It also raises the question whether the motions judge properly exercised his discretion in deciding not to grant the remedy sought on grounds of unreasonable delay and futility.

Held (Stevenson J. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed, with the exception that there should be no order in the nature of mandamus directing the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to comply with the Guidelines Order.

Statutory Validity of the Guidelines Order

The Guidelines Order was validly enacted pursuant to s. 6 of the Department of the Environment Act, and is mandatory in nature. When one reads s. 6 as a whole, rather than focusing on the word "guidelines" in isolation, it is clear that Parliament has elected to adopt a regulatory scheme that is "law", and amenable to enforcement through prerogative relief. The "guidelines" are not merely authorized by statute but must be formally enacted by "order" with the approval of the Governor in Council. That is in striking contrast with the usual internal ministerial policy guidelines intended for the control of public servants under the minister's authority.

The Guidelines Order, which requires the decision maker to take socio-economic considerations into account in the environmental impact assessment, does not go beyond what is authorized by the Department of the Environment Act. The concept of "environmental quality" in s. 6 of the Act is not confined to the biophysical environment alone. The environment is a diffuse subject matter and, subject to the constitutional imperatives, the potential consequences for a community's livelihood, health and other social matters from environmental change, are integral to decision making on matters affecting environmental quality.

The Guidelines Order is consistent with the Navigable Waters Protection Act. There is nothing in the Act which explicitly or implicitly precludes the Minister of Transport from taking into consideration any matters other than marine navigation in exercising his power of approval under s. 5 of the Act. The Minister's duty under the Order is supplemental to his responsibility under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and he cannot resort to an excessively narrow interpretation of his existing statutory powers to avoid compliance with the Order. There is also no conflict between the requirement for an initial assessment "as early in the planning process as possible and before irrevocable decisions are taken" in s. 3 of the Guidelines Order, and the remedial power under s. 6(4) of the Act to grant approval after the commencement of construction. That power is an exception to the general rule in s. 5 of the Act requiring approval prior to construction, and in exercising his discretion to grant approval after commencement, the Minister is not precluded from applying the Order.

Applicability of the Guidelines Order

The scope of the Guidelines Order is not restricted to "new federal projects, programs and activities"; the Order is not engaged every time a project may have an environmental effect on an area of federal jurisdiction. However, there must first be a "proposal" which requires an "initiative, undertaking or activity for which the Government of Canada has a decision making responsibility". The proper construction to be placed on the term "responsibility" is that the federal government, having entered the field in a subject matter assigned to it under s. 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, must have an affirmative regulatory duty pursuant to an Act of Parliament which relates to the proposed initiative, undertaking or activity. "Responsibility" within the definition of "proposal" means a legal duty or obligation and should not be read as connoting matters falling generally within federal jurisdiction. Once such a duty exists, it is a matter of identifying the "initiating department" assigned responsibility for its performance, for it then becomes the "decision making authority" for the proposal and thus responsible for initiating the process under the Guidelines Order.

The Oldman River Dam project falls within the ambit of the Guidelines Order. The project qualifies as a proposal for which the Minister of Transport alone is the "initiating department" under s. 2 of the Order. The Navigable Waters Protection Act, in particular s. 5, places an affirmative regulatory duty on the Minister of Transport. Under that Act there is a legislatively entrenched regulatory scheme in place in which the approval of the Minister is required before any work that substantially interferes with navigation may be placed in, upon, over or under, through or across any navigable water.

The Guidelines Order does not apply to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, however, because there is no equivalent regulatory scheme under the Fisheries Act which is applicable to this project. The discretionary power to request or not to request information to assist a Minister in the exercise of a legislative function does not constitute a "decision making responsibility" within the meaning of the Order. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans under s. 37 of the Fisheries Act has only been given a limited ad hoc legislative power which does not constitute an affirmative regulatory duty.

The scope of assessment under the Guidelines Order is not confined to the particular head of power under which the Government of Canada has a decision-making responsibility within the meaning of the term "proposal". Under the Order, the initiating department which has been given authority to embark on an assessment must consider the environmental effect on all areas of federal jurisdiction. The Minister of Transport, in his capacity of decision maker under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, must thus consider the environmental impact of the dam on such areas of federal jurisdiction as navigable waters, fisheries, Indians and Indian lands.

Crown Immunity

Per Lamer C.J. and La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé, Sopinka, Gonthier, Cory, McLachlin and Iacobucci JJ.: The Crown in right of Alberta is bound by the Navigable Waters Protection Act by necessary implication. The proprietary right the province may have in the bed of the Oldman River is subject to the public right of navigation, legislative jurisdiction over which has been exclusively vested in Parliament. Alberta requires statutory authorization from Parliament to erect any obstruction that substantially interferes with navigation in the Oldman River, and the Navigable Waters Protection Act is the means by which it must be obtained. The Crown in right of Alberta is bound by the Act, for it is the only practicable procedure available for getting approval. The purpose of the Act would be wholly frustrated if the province was not bound by the Act. The provinces are among the bodies that are likely to engage in projects that may interfere with navigation. Were the Crown in right of a province permitted to undermine the integrity of the essential navigational networks in Canadian waters, the legislative purpose of the Navigable Waters Protection Act would effectively be emasculated.

Per Stevenson J. (dissenting): The province of Alberta is not bound by the Navigable Waters Protection Act. The Crown is not bound by legislation unless it is mentioned or referred to in the legislation. Here, there are no words in the Act "expressly binding" the Crown and no clear intention to bind "is manifest from the very terms of the statute". As well, the failure to include the Crown would not wholly frustrate the purpose of the Act or produce an absurdity. There are many non-governmental agencies whose activities are subject to the Act and there is thus no emasculation of the Act. If the Crown interferes with a public right of navigation, that wrong is remediable by action. There is no significant benefit in approval under the Act. Tort actions may still lie.

Constitutional Validity of the Guidelines Order

The "environment" is not an independent matter of legislation under the Constitution Act, 1867. Understood in its generic sense, it encompasses the physical, economic and social environment and touches upon several of the heads of power assigned to the respective levels of government. While both levels may act in relation to the environment, the exercise of legislative power affecting environmental concerns must be linked to an appropriate head of power. Local projects will generally fall within provincial responsibility, but federal participation will be required if, as in this case, the project impinges on an area of federal jurisdiction.

The Guidelines Order is intra vires Parliament. The Order does not attempt to regulate the environmental effects of matters within the control of the province but merely makes environmental impact assessment an essential component of federal decision making. The Order is in pith and substance nothing more than an instrument that regulates the manner in which federal institutions must administer their multifarious duties and functions. In essence, the Order has two fundamental aspects. First, there is the substance of the Order dealing with environmental impact assessment to facilitate decision making under the federal head of power through which a proposal is regulated. This aspect of the Order can be sustained on the basis that it is legislation in relation to the relevant subject matters enumerated in s. 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867. The second aspect of the Order is its procedural or organizational element that coordinates the process of assessment, which can in any given case touch upon several areas of federal responsibility, under the auspices of a designated decision maker (the "initiating department"). This facet of the Order has as its object the regulation of the institutions and agencies of the Government of Canada as to the manner in which they perform their administrative functions and duties. This is unquestionably intra vires Parliament. It may be viewed either as an adjunct of the particular legislative powers involved, or, in any event, be justifiable under the residuary power in s. 91.

The Guidelines Order cannot be used as a colourable device to invade areas of provincial jurisdiction which are unconnected to the relevant heads of federal power. The "initiating department" is only given a mandate to examine matters directly related to the areas of federal responsibility potentially affected. Any intrusion under the Order into provincial matters is merely incidental to the pith and substance of the legislation.

Discretion

Per Lamer C.J. and La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé, Sopinka, Gonthier, Cory, McLachlin and Iacobucci JJ.: The Federal Court of Appeal did not err in interfering with the motions judge's discretion not to grant the remedies sought on the grounds of unreasonable delay and futility. Respondent made a sustained effort, through legal proceedings in the Alberta courts and through correspondence with federal departments, to challenge the legality of the process followed by the province to build the dam and the acquiescence of the appellant Ministers, and there is no evidence that Alberta has suffered any prejudice from any delay in taking the present action. Despite ongoing legal proceedings, the construction of the dam continued. The province was not prepared to accede to an environmental impact assessment under the Order until it had exhausted all legal avenues. The motions judge did not weigh these considerations adequately, giving the Court of Appeal no choice but to intervene. Futility was also not a proper ground to refuse a remedy in the present circumstances. Prerogative relief should only be refused on that ground in those few instances where the issuance of a prerogative writ would be effectively nugatory. It is not obvious in this case that the implementation of the Order even at this late stage will not have some influence over the mitigative measures that may be taken to ameliorate any deleterious environmental impact from the dam on an area of federal jurisdiction.

Per Stevenson J. (dissenting): The Federal Court of Appeal erred in interfering with the motions judge's discretion to refuse the prerogative remedy. The court was clearly wrong in overruling his conclusion on the question of delay. The common law has always imposed a duty on an applicant to act promptly in seeking prerogative relief. Given the enormity of the project and the interests at stake, it was unreasonable for the respondent Society to wait 14 months before challenging the Minister of Transport's approval. It is impossible to conclude that Alberta was not prejudiced by the delay. The legal proceedings in the Alberta courts brought by the respondent and others need not have been taken into account by the motions judge. These proceedings were separate and distinct from the relief sought in this case and were irrelevant to the issues at hand. The present action centres on the constitutionality and applicability of the Guidelines Order. It raises new and different issues. In determining whether he should exercise his discretion against the respondent, the motions judge was obliged to look only at those factors which he considered were directly connected to the application before him. Interference with his exercise of discretion is not warranted unless it can be said with certainty that he was wrong in doing what he did. The test has not been met in this case.

Costs

Per Lamer C.J. and La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé, Sopinka, Gonthier, Cory, McLachlin and Iacobucci JJ.: It is a proper case for awarding costs on a solicitor-client basis to the respondent, given the Society's circumstances and the fact that the federal Ministers were joined as appellants even though they did earlier not seek leave to appeal to this Court.

Per Stevenson J. (dissenting): The appellants should not be called upon to pay costs on a solicitor and client basis. There is no justification in departing from our own general rule that a successful party should recover costs on the usual party and party basis. Public interest groups must be prepared to abide by the same principles as apply to other litigants and be prepared to accept some responsibility for the costs.

The judgment of Lamer C.J. and La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé, Sopinka, Gonthier, Cory, McLachlin and Iacobucci JJ. was delivered by

LA FOREST J. -- The protection of the environment has become one of the major challenges of our time. To respond to this challenge, governments and international organizations have been engaged in the creation of a wide variety of legislative schemes and administrative structures. In Canada, both the federal and provincial governments have established Departments of the Environment, which have been in place for about twenty years. More recently, however, it was realized that a department of the environment was one among many other departments, many of which pursued policies that came into conflict with its goals. Accordingly at the federal level steps were taken to give a central role to that department, and to expand the role of other government departments and agencies so as to ensure that they took account of environmental concerns in taking decisions that could have an environmental impact.

To that end, s. 6 of the Department of the Environment Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. E-10, empowered the Minister for the purposes of carrying out his duties relating to environmental quality, by order, with the approval of the Governor in Council, to establish guidelines for use by federal departments, agencies and regulatory bodies in carrying out their duties, functions and powers. Pursuant to this provision the Environmental Assessment and Review Process Guidelines Order ("Guidelines Order") was established and approved in June 1984, SOR/84-467. In general terms, these guidelines require all federal departments and agencies that have a decision-making authority for any proposal, i.e., any initiative, undertaking or activity that may have an environmental effect on an area of federal responsibility, to initially screen such proposal to determine whether it may give rise to any potentially adverse environmental effects. If a proposal could have a significant adverse effect on the environment, provision is made for public review by an environmental assessment panel whose members must be unbiased, free of political influence and possessed of special knowledge and experience relevant to the technical, environmental and social effects of the proposal.

The present case raises the constitutional and statutory validity of the Guidelines Order as well as its nature and applicability. These issues arise in a context where the respondent Society, an environmental group from Alberta, by applications for certiorari and mandamus, seeks to compel two federal departments, the Department of Transport and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, to conduct a public environmental assessment pursuant to the Guidelines Order in respect of a dam constructed on the Oldman River by the Government of Alberta. That government had itself conducted extensive environmental studies which took into account public views. However, since the project affects navigable waters, fisheries, Indians and Indian lands, federal interests are involved. Specifically, the Society argues that the Minister of Transport must approve the project under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. N-22, and in doing so is required to provide for public assessment of the project pursuant to the Guidelines Order. It also argues that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has a similar duty in the performance of his functions under the Fisheries Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. F-14.

The case also raises the question whether the motions judge properly exercised his discretion in deciding whether or not to grant certiorari or mandamus. Accordingly the material background must be set forth in some detail.

Background

The history of the project begins in May 1958 when Alberta asked the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration ("P.F.R.A.") of the federal Department of Agriculture to determine the feasibility of constructing a storage reservoir on the Oldman River, at a site called Livingstone Gap. In December 1966 the P.F.R.A. submitted its report and proposed another location, the Three Rivers site on the Oldman River, for further study. There followed a federal-provincial water supply study which lasted from 1966 to 1974. After this, in July 1974, the Alberta Department of the Environment initiated an examination of water demand and potential storage sites on the Oldman River and its tributaries, to be conducted in two phases.

The first phase consisted of an initial evaluation of sites in the Oldman basin for water storage carried out by a Technical Advisory Committee comprised of representatives from several provincial government departments including Environment, Culture and Multiculturalism, Energy Resources Conservation Board, Fish and Wildlife Division, Agriculture, as well as representatives from local municipal districts and industry. The Committee's report was released on July 14, 1976 and was followed by a series of public consultations with local authorities and other groups and individuals. The responses received were evaluated and issues arising from them were identified for further study in the second phase.

The second phase began on February 4, 1977 when the Minister of the Environment announced the creation of the Oldman River Study Management Committee consisting of six representatives of the public and three representatives of the provincial government. Its task was to address the issues raised by the public during the first study, and to make recommendations concerning overall water management in the river basin, including the incorporation of the concerns of area residents. This it was required to do in a more comprehensive way than the first phase by, inter alia, studying issues affecting the whole of the river basin such as salinization, sedimentation, recreation, fish habitat and other environmental issues. Public participation was encouraged, a series of public meetings and public workshops was held, and oral and written submissions were made by a variety of interest groups including Indian bands and environmental groups. The Management Committee released its final report in 1978.

That same year, a panel of the Environment Council of Alberta was constituted to hold public hearings on the management of water resources within the Oldman basin. Again, several public hearings were held throughout southern Alberta and the Council received briefs from a wide cross-section of Albertans representing the interests of business, agriculture, local governments, Indian bands and others. The Council submitted its report to the Minister of the Environment in August 1979 and recommended yet another location, the Brocket site on the Peigan Indian Reserve, should a dam be needed.

The provincial government then reviewed this report and the 1978 report and on August 29, 1980 announced its decision to build a dam on the Oldman River. It also stated that the Three Rivers site was the preferred location, but added that the final decision would be deferred until the Peigan Indian Band had an opportunity to submit a proposal for construction at the Brocket site. In November 1983 the Peigan Band presented a position to the Minister of the Environment describing its expected economic compensation if the dam were to be built at the Brocket site.

On August 8, 1984 the Premier of Alberta announced the government's decision to proceed with construction of the dam at the Three Rivers site. Before that announcement was made, however, the dam proposal was reviewed by the Regional Screening and Co-ordinating Committee ("R.S.C.C."), a committee of the federal Department of the Environment. The purpose of the R.S.C.C. was to ensure that proposals that may affect federal areas of concern are subjected to environmental review, and it actively followed the progress of the dam proposal until it was decided that the dam would not be built on Indian land.

Following the Three Rivers site announcement, Alberta commenced the design of the dam and launched an "Environmental Mitigation/Opportunities Action Plan" which spawned further environmental studies and public meetings. The provincial Department of the Environment opened a project information office close to the Three Rivers site to answer public enquiries. Several subcommittees were established by the Municipal District of Pincher Creek to provide input to the Alberta Department of the Environment on areas of local concern, including land use, fish and wildlife, recreation, and agriculture. In addition, the provincial Minister of the Environment ordered the appointment of a Local Advisory Committee to advise the Minister on such matters as road relocation, fish and wildlife concerns, and recreational opportunities. After gathering information from public meetings, the Committee submitted a report to the Minister with recommendations concerning fisheries, wildlife, historical resources, agriculture, recreation and transportation systems.

In 1987 the federal R.S.C.C. once again became involved in the project at the request of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs to study its impact on federal interests, particularly on the Peigan Indian Reserve located approximately 12 kilometres downstream from the dam site. Alberta had already provided the Peigans with funding to conduct an independent study of the project's effect on the Reserve and its inhabitants. The Peigan report was submitted to the provincial Minister of the Environment in February 1987. It addressed such subjects as irrigation, surface and ground water considerations, dam safety, fisheries assessment, and spiritual and cultural assessment. The report prepared at the behest of the R.S.C.C. in July 1987 concluded that the project's effects on the Reserve would be either favourable or mitigable, but did note the possibility of negative environmental impacts affecting the Reserve -- i.e., increased dust storms, increased mercury levels in fish and the extinction of flood plain cottonwood forests.

I come now to a step of prime importance in this action. On March 10, 1986 the Alberta Department of the Environment applied to the federal Minister of Transport for approval of the work under s. 5 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. That provision provides that no work is to be built in navigable waters without the prior approval of the Minister. In assessing the application, the Minister considered the project's effect on marine navigation and approved the application on September 18, 1987 subject to certain conditions relating to marine navigation. I underline, however, that he did not subject the application to an assessment under the Guidelines Order. As we shall see, whether he should have done so raises several of the major issues in this appeal.

It is not until after this transpired that the respondent Society came into the picture. The Society was incorporated on September 8, 1987 to oppose the project and became aware of the approval granted by the Minister of Transport on February 16, 1988. However, earlier efforts to check the progress of the development had been made by certain individuals who later became members of the Society on its formation. Thus in the summer of 1987 the Southern Alberta Environmental Group had written a letter to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans asking that an initial assessment be conducted under the Guidelines Order. The request was refused for the reason that the potential problems were being addressed and because of the "long-standing administrative arrangements that are in place for the management of fisheries in Alberta". This, like the Minister of Transport's action described earlier, plays an important part in the legal arguments that were subsequently made. Another early effort came on December 3, 1987 when the respondent Society wrote to the Minister of the Environment asking that the matter be subjected to the Guidelines Order but again the request was declined, this time principally on the grounds that the dam project fell primarily within provincial jurisdiction and that Environment Canada was satisfied that Alberta's proposed mitigation plan would remedy any detrimental effects on the fisheries. The Society tried once again to have the Minister of the Environment invoke the Guidelines Order on February 22, 1988, but was turned down in June 1988 for the same jurisdictional reason.

The Society was also busy on the provincial front to have the project stopped. On October 26, 1987 it brought an application in the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta to quash an interim licence granted under the Water Resources Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. W-5. The licence was, in fact, quashed by order on December 8, 1987. A second interim licence was granted on February 5, 1988 and the Society applied in the Court of Queen's Bench to have that one quashed as well. However, that application was dismissed on April 21, 1988. The Society also asked the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board to conduct a public hearing under the Hydro and Electric Energy Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. H-13, but its request was refused. That decision was affirmed by the Alberta Court of Appeal. In August 1988 the vice-president of the Society swore an information before a justice of the peace alleging that an offence had been committed against the federal Fisheries Act but the Attorney General for Alberta stayed the proceedings.

The contract for construction of the dam was awarded in February 1988, and as of March 31, 1989 the dam was 40 percent complete. The present action was commenced on April 21, 1989 in the Trial Division of the Federal Court, 1989 CanLII 7289 \(FC\), [1990] 1 F.C. 248. In the action, the Society sought an order in the nature of certiorari to quash the approval granted by the Minister of Transport as well as an order in the nature of mandamus requiring the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to comply with the Guidelines Order. Jerome A.C.J. dismissed the application but the Society's appeal to the Federal Court of Appeal was successful, 1990 CanLII 8039 \(FCA\), [1990] 2 F.C. 18. This Court granted leave to appeal on September 13, 1990, [1990] 2 S.C.R. x.

Legislation

Before going further, it will be useful to set forth the major parts of the relevant legislation.

The Department of the Environment Act reads in relevant part:

4. (1) The powers, duties and functions of the Minister extend to and include all matters over which Parliament has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, board or agency of the Government of Canada, relating to
 - (a) the preservation and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment, including water, air and soil quality;

5. The Minister, in exercising his powers and carrying out his duties and functions under section 4, shall

(a) initiate, recommend and undertake programs, and coordinate programs of the Government of Canada that are designed

(i) to promote the establishment or adoption of objectives or standards relating to environmental quality, or to control pollution,

(ii) to ensure that new federal projects, programs and activities are assessed early in the planning process for potential adverse effects on the quality of the natural environment and that a further review is carried out of those projects, programs, and activities that are found to have probable significant adverse effects, and the results thereof taken into account, and

(iii) to provide to Canadians environmental information in the public interest;

(b) promote and encourage the institution of practices and conduct leading to the better preservation and enhancement of environmental quality, and cooperate with provincial governments or agencies thereof, or any bodies, organization or persons, in any programs having similar objects; and

(c) advise the heads of departments, boards and agencies of the Government of Canada on all matters pertaining to the preservation and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment.

6. For the purposes of carrying out his duties and functions related to environmental quality, the Minister may, by order, with the approval of the Governor in Council, establish guidelines for use by departments, boards and agencies of the Government of Canada and, where appropriate, by corporations named in Schedule III to the Financial Administration Act and regulatory bodies in the exercise of their powers and the carrying out of their duties and functions.

Pursuant to s. 6, the Minister, by order, with the approval of the Governor in Council, established the Guidelines Order. It reads in relevant part as follows:

2. In these Guidelines,

...

"initiating department" means any department that is, on behalf of the Government of Canada, the decision making authority for a proposal;

...

"proponent" means the organization or the initiating department intending to undertake a proposal;

"proposal" includes any initiative, undertaking or activity for which the Government of Canada has a decision making responsibility.

3. The Process shall be a self assessment process under which the initiating department shall, as early in the planning process as possible and before irrevocable decisions are taken, ensure that the environmental implications of all proposals for which it is the decision making authority are fully considered and where the implications are significant, refer the proposal to the Minister for public review by a Panel.

...

6. These Guidelines shall apply to any proposal

(a) that is to be undertaken directly by an initiating department;

(b) that may have an environmental effect on an area of federal responsibility;

(c) for which the Government of Canada makes a financial commitment; or

(d) that is located on lands, including the offshore, that are administered by the Government of Canada.

Reference must also be made to s. 5 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act which reads as follows:

5. (1) No work shall be built or placed in, on, over, under, through or across any navigable water unless

(a) the work and the site and plans thereof have been approved by the Minister, on such terms and conditions as the Minister deems fit, prior to commencement of construction;

(b) the construction of the work is commenced within six months and completed within three years after the approval referred to in paragraph (a) or within such further period as the Minister may fix; and

(c) the work is built, placed and maintained in accordance with the plans, the regulations and the terms and conditions set out in the approval referred to in paragraph (a).

Judicial History

Trial Division

Jerome A.C.J. identified the four main issues in the action as follows: (1) the standing of the applicant to bring the application; (2) whether the federal Ministers named were bound to invoke the Guidelines Order; (3) the applicability of Canadian Wildlife Federation Inc. v. Canada (Minister of the Environment), 1989 CanLII 7273 \(FC\), [1989] 3 F.C. 309 (T.D.), aff'd (1989), 99 N.R. 72 (F.C.A.), to the facts of this case; and (4) whether he should exercise his discretion to grant the remedies sought. He dealt with the first issue by simply assuming, without deciding, that the Society had the requisite standing to bring the application.

With respect to the Guidelines Order, Jerome A.C.J. first held that the Minister of Transport was not bound to apply it in assessing the application under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and indeed he found that the Minister would have exceeded his jurisdiction had he invoked the Guidelines Order. The reasoning was that the Act sets out no requirement for environmental review but instead confines the Minister to consider only factors affecting marine navigation. Similarly, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was without jurisdiction to apply the Guidelines Order because his department had not undertaken a project. In the alternative, if the Guidelines Order could be said to apply to provincially initiated projects, it would only apply where a federal department received a "proposal" requiring its approval. As the Fisheries Act did not contemplate an approval procedure for a permit or licence, the Guidelines Order did not apply. Nor were environmental factors raised under either the Fisheries Act or the Department of Fisheries and Oceans Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. F-15.

Jerome A.C.J. then turned to the Canadian Wildlife case. In that case, which I shall discuss with more particularity later, the Federal Court of Appeal had held that before the project in question there, the Rafferty-Alameda Dam, could be undertaken, it was necessary to obtain the approval of the Minister of the Environment. Jerome A.C.J. distinguished that case on two grounds. First, the case involved authorization under the International River Improvements Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. I-20, which required prior approval from the Minister of the Environment, as opposed to the instant case where approval may be granted under the Navigable Waters Protection Act after the project is commenced. Second, the Rafferty-Alameda project involved the Minister of the Environment whose statutory duties under the Department of the Environment Act included consideration of environmental factors.

Lastly, on the issue of the discretionary nature of the relief sought, Jerome A.C.J. found against the Society because of delay and the unnecessary duplication that would result. Between the grant of approval on September 18, 1987 and the commencement of this action on April 21, 1989, he noted, no steps had been taken to quash the approval and compel the application of the Guidelines

Order. By the time the action was started the project was 40 percent complete. Furthermore, Alberta had already conducted an extensive environmental review of the project and had "identified every possible area of environmental social concern and ha[d] given every citizen, including the members of the applicant organization, ample opportunity to voice their views and to mobilize their opposition" (pp. 273-74). That being so, applying the Guidelines Order would be needlessly repetitive. Accordingly, he dismissed the application.

The Society then launched an appeal to the Federal Court of Appeal.

Court of Appeal

Stone J.A., writing for the court, began by noting that the Oldman River Dam may have an environmental effect on at least three areas of federal responsibility, namely fisheries, Indians and Indian lands. He disagreed with the view that the Minister of Transport was restricted to considering matters affecting marine navigation only. He found that the dam project fell within the ambit of the Guidelines Order and that the Department of Transport was an "initiating department" for the purposes of the Guidelines Order thereby engaging the application of the Guidelines Order. Stone J.A. referred to the Canadian Wildlife case for authority that the Guidelines Order was a law of general application, and as such imposed on the Minister a "superadded" duty over and above his other statutory powers. Nor was there any conflict between the requirement for an initial assessment "as early in the planning process as possible and before irrevocable decisions are taken" in the Guidelines Order, and the remedial power under s. 6 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act to grant approval after the commencement of construction. That power, he held, is an exception to the general rule in s. 5 of the Act requiring approval prior to construction, and in exercising his discretion to grant approval after commencement, the Minister is not precluded from applying the Guidelines Order.

Stone J.A. next turned to the question whether the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was compelled to apply the Guidelines Order. He first considered whether the Minister had been seized with a "proposal" as defined in the Act so as to make him subject to the Guidelines Order. He concluded in the affirmative. "Proposal", in Stone J.A.'s view, is there used in a far broader sense than its ordinary meaning. In particular it is not limited to something in the nature of an application. An application is but one way in which an "initiative, undertaking or activity" can come to the attention of the Minister but it is not the only way. Another way is for an individual to request that the Minister take action under the appropriate statute, as was done here, and since the Minister was aware of an initiative within a federal area of responsibility, there was a "proposal" as defined in the Guidelines Order. Moreover, the Minister's decision not to intervene constituted him as a "decision making authority" and thus triggered his obligations under the Guidelines Order.

Stone J.A. then dealt with the issue of discretion and reviewed the relevant principles which apply to an appellate court interfering with a trial judge's exercise of discretion. Shortly put, such interference is not warranted absent a finding that the trial judge proceeded on an erroneous principle or a misapprehension of the facts, or where the order is not just and reasonable. Parenthetically, and by way of footnote, Stone J.A. was of the view that refusing to grant prerogative relief on the ground of delay was not "well-founded in principle", because the delay was explained by the facts, especially that the respondent did not become aware of the approval granted by the Minister of Transport until only two months before the action was commenced. Further, the respondent was otherwise engaged in challenging the provincial licence issued, and it was not until the eve of this action that the Trial Division of the Federal Court handed down its decision in the Canadian Wildlife case holding that the Guidelines Order was binding on the Minister of the Environment.

As to the unnecessary duplication that could result from granting the relief sought, Stone J.A. found that the provincial environmental review process was deficient in two respects when contrasted with the environmental impact assessment required by the Guidelines Order. First, the provincial legislation did not place the same emphasis on public participation in the process as the Guidelines Order. Secondly, there was nothing in the provincial legislation requiring the same degree of independence of the review panel.

The last issue addressed by Stone J.A. that has been raised in this appeal is whether the Navigable Waters Protection Act binds the Crown in right of Alberta. Referring to this Court's decision in Alberta Government Telephones v. Canada (Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission), 1989 CanLII 78 (SCC), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 225, he held that the Act, especially s. 4 when read in context, evidenced an intention to bind the Crown. Furthermore, the purpose of the Act would be wholly frustrated if the Crown were not bound, it being well known that many obstructions placed in navigable waters are sponsored by government.

As a result the appeal was allowed, the approval was quashed and the Ministers of Transport and Fisheries and Oceans ordered to comply with the Guidelines Order.

The Appeal to this Court

As earlier noted, leave to appeal to this Court was sought and granted, and the Chief Justice stated the following constitutional question on October 29, 1990:

Is the Environmental Assessment and Review Process Guidelines Order, SOR/84-467, so broad as to offend ss. 92 and 92A of the Constitution Act, 1867 and therefore constitutionally inapplicable to the Oldman River Dam owned by the appellant, Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta?

Interventions were then filed by the Attorneys General of Quebec, New Brunswick, Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland and the Minister of Justice of the Northwest Territories, and a number of environmental groups, namely the Sierra Legal Defence Fund, the Canadian Environmental Law Association, the Sierra Club of Western Canada, the Cultural Survival (Canada), Friends of the Earth and the Alberta Wilderness Association, as well as several Indian organizations, namely, the National Indian Brotherhood and the Assembly of First Nations, the Dene Nation and the Metis Association of the Northwest Territories, and the Native Council of Canada (Alberta).

Issues

The many issues arising in this appeal have been variously ordered by the parties in their written submissions, but I prefer to deal with them as follows:

1. Statutory Validity of the Guidelines Order

a. Is the Guidelines Order authorized by s. 6 of the Department of the Environment Act?

b. Is the Guidelines Order inconsistent with the Navigable Waters Protection Act and the Fisheries Act?

2. Obligation of the Ministers to Comply with the Guidelines Order

a. Does s. 4(1) of the Department of the Environment Act preclude the application of the Guidelines Order to the Ministers?

b. Does the Guidelines Order apply to projects other than new federal projects?

c. Are the Ministers "initiating departments"?

d. Is the Navigable Waters Protection Act binding on the Crown in right of Alberta?

3. Constitutional Question

Is the Guidelines Order so broad as to offend ss. 92 and 92A of the Constitution Act, 1867 and therefore constitutionally inapplicable to the Oldman River Dam owned by Alberta?

4. Discretion

Did the Federal Court of Appeal err in interfering with the discretion of Jerome A.C.J. whereby he declined to grant the remedies sought?

Statutory Validity of the Guidelines Order

Is the Guidelines Order Authorized by s. 6 of the Department of the Environment Act?

The appellant Alberta argued that the Guidelines Order is ultra vires because it does not fall within the scope of the powers conferred under its enabling legislation, s. 6 of the Department of the Environment Act. For convenience, I shall repeat this provision:

6. For the purposes of carrying out his duties and functions related to environmental quality, the Minister may, by order, with the approval of the Governor in Council, establish guidelines for use by departments, boards and agencies of the Government of Canada and, where appropriate, by corporations named in Schedule III to the Financial Administration Act and regulatory bodies in the exercise of their powers and the carrying out of their duties and functions.

The principal ground on which it is contended that the Guidelines Order is invalid is that by using the term "guidelines" s. 6 does not empower the enactment of mandatory subordinate legislation, but instead only contemplates a purely administrative directive not intended to be legally binding on those to whom it is addressed. There is of course no doubt that the power to make subordinate legislation must be found within the four corners of its enabling statute, and it is there that one must turn to determine if the Act can support delegated legislation of a mandatory nature, the non-compliance with which can found prerogative relief.

This issue was addressed in Canadian Wildlife, supra. In that case the applicant challenged the issuance of a licence by the Minister of the Environment under the International River Improvements Act and sought an order in the nature of certiorari quashing the licence, and mandamus requiring the Minister to comply with the Guidelines Order. In the Trial Division, Cullen J. found that the Guidelines Order is an enactment or regulation as defined in s. 2(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. I-21, which provides:

2. (1) In this Act,

...

"enactment" means an Act or regulation or any portion of an Act or regulation;

...

"regulation" includes an order, regulation, rule, rule of court, form, tariff of costs or fees, letters patent, commission, warrant, proclamation, by-law, resolution or other instrument issued, made or established

(a) in the execution of a power conferred by or under the authority of an Act, or

(b) by or under the authority of the Governor in Council;

Cullen J. then concluded, at p. 322:

Therefore, EARP Guidelines Order is not a mere description of a policy or programme; it may create rights which may be enforceable by way of mandamus (see Young v. Minister of Employment and Immigration (1987), 8 F.T.R. 218 (F.C.T.D.) at page 221).

In the Court of Appeal, Hugessen J.A. relied on both the English and French versions of s. 6 of the Department of the Environment Act to find that it was capable of supporting a power to enact binding subordinate legislation. "The word 'guidelines'", he stated, "in itself is neutral in this regard." Turning then, to the question whether the Guidelines were so written as to make them mandatory, he observed, at pp. 73-74:

Finally, there is nothing in the text of the Guidelines themselves which indicates that they are not mandatory; on the contrary, the repeated use of the word "shall" . . . throughout, and particularly in ss. 6, 13 and 20, indicates a clear intention that the Guidelines shall bind all those to whom they are addressed, including the Minister of the Environment himself.

I would agree with him on both points. The first question depends on legislative intent. The guidelines under the Act reviewed by this Court in the Reference re Anti-Inflation Act, 1976 CanLII 16 (SCC), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 373, for example, were clearly mandatory in nature. I am satisfied that s. 6 of the Act can sustain the enactment of mandatory guidelines, and that the Guidelines as framed are mandatory in nature.

There is nothing here to indicate that the Guidelines Order is merely another form of administrative directive which cannot confer enforceable rights, as was the case in Martineau v. Matsqui Institution Inmate Disciplinary Board, 1977 CanLII 4 (SCC), [1978] 1 S.C.R. 118. In Martineau the issue was whether a directive concerning the discipline of inmates, authorized by s. 29(3) of the Penitentiary Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. P-6, was "law" within the wording of s. 28 of the Federal Court Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 1, and thus gave the Federal Court jurisdiction to review a disciplinary order made by the Board. This Court, by majority, held that the directive was not "law" within s. 28, Pigeon J. noting, at p. 129:

It is significant that there is no provision for penalty and, while they are authorized by statute, they are clearly of an administrative, not a legislative, nature. It is not in any legislative capacity that the Commissioner is authorized to issue directives but in his administrative capacity. I have no doubt that he would have the power of doing it by virtue of his authority without express legislative enactment. [Emphasis added.]

There is little doubt that ordinarily a Minister has an implicit power to issue directives to implement the administration of a statute for which he is responsible; see for example Maple Lodge Farms Ltd. v. Government of Canada, 1982 CanLII 24 (SCC), [1982] 2 S.C.R. 2. It is also clear that a violation of such directives will only give rise to administrative rather than judicial sanction because they do not have the full force of law.

Here though we are dealing with a directive that is not merely authorized by statute, but one that is required to be formally enacted by "order", and promulgated under s. 6 of the Department of the Environment Act, with the approval of the Governor in Council. That is in striking contrast with the usual internal ministerial policy guidelines intended for the control of public servants under the minister's authority. To my mind this is a vital distinction. Its effect is thus described by R. Dussault and L. Borgeat in Administrative Law (2nd ed. 1985), vol. 1, at pp. 338-39:

When a government considers it necessary to regulate a situation through norms of behaviour, it may have a law passed or make a regulation itself, or act administratively by means of directives. In the first case, it is bound by the formalities surrounding the legislative or regulatory process; conversely, it knows that once these formalities have been observed, the new norms will come within a framework of "law" and that by virtue of the Rule of Law they will be applied by the courts. In the second case, that is, when it chooses to proceed by way of directives, whether or not they are authorized by legislation, it opts instead for a less formalized means based upon hierarchical authority, to which the courts do not have to ensure obedience. To confer upon a directive the force of a regulation is to exceed legislative intent. It is said that the Legislature does not speak without a purpose; its implicit wish to leave a situation outside the strict framework of "law" must be respected.

The word "guidelines" cannot be construed in isolation; s. 6 must be read as a whole. When so read it becomes clear that Parliament has elected to adopt a regulatory scheme that is "law", and thus amenable to enforcement through prerogative relief.

Alberta also argues that the Guidelines Order is ultra vires on the ground that the scope of the subject matter covered in the delegated legislation goes far beyond that authorized by the Department of the Environment Act. More specifically, it contends that the authority to establish guidelines for the purposes of carrying out the Minister's duties related to "environmental quality" does not comprehend a process of environmental impact assessment, such as found in the Guidelines Order, in which the decision maker is required to take into account socio-economic considerations. Rather, it is argued, the Act only permits the enactment of delegated legislation that is strictly concerned with matters relating to environmental quality as understood in a physical sense.

I cannot accept that the concept of environmental quality is confined to the biophysical environment alone; such an interpretation is unduly myopic and contrary to the generally held view that the "environment" is a diffuse subject matter; see R. v. Crown Zellerbach Canada Ltd., 1988 CanLII 63 (SCC), [1988] 1 S.C.R. 401. The point was made by the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, following the "Brundtland Report" of the World Commission on Environment and Development, in the Report of the National Task Force on Environment and Economy, September 24, 1987, at p. 2:

Our recommendations reflect the principles that we hold in common with the World Commission on Environment and Development (WCED). These include the fundamental belief that environmental and economic planning cannot proceed in separate spheres. Long-term economic growth depends on a healthy environment. It also affects the environment in many ways. Ensuring environmentally sound and sustainable economic development requires the technology and wealth that is generated by continued economic growth. Economic and environmental planning and management must therefore be integrated.

Surely the potential consequences for a community's livelihood, health and other social matters from environmental change are integral to decision-making on matters affecting environmental quality, subject, of course, to the constitutional imperatives, an issue I will address later.

I have therefore concluded that the Guidelines Order has been validly enacted pursuant to the Department of the Environment Act, and is mandatory in nature.

Inconsistency With the Navigable Waters Protection Act and Fisheries Act

The appellants Alberta and the federal Ministers argue that the Guidelines Order is inconsistent with and therefore must yield to the requirements of the Navigable Waters Protection Act for obtaining an approval under s. 5 of that Act. Specifically, they say, the Minister of Transport is confined by the Act to a consideration of matters pertaining to marine navigation alone, and that the Guidelines Order cannot displace or add to the criteria mentioned in the Act. Alberta also submits that the Guidelines Order is similarly inconsistent with the Fisheries Act, but for the reasons set out later I do not find it necessary to address that issue.

The basic principles of law are not in doubt. Just as subordinate legislation cannot conflict with its parent legislation (Belanger v. The King (1916), 1916 CanLII 87 (SCC), 54 S.C.R. 265), so too it cannot conflict with other Acts of Parliament (R. & W. Paul, Ltd. v. Wheat Commission, [1937] A.C. 139 (H.L.)), unless a statute so authorizes (Re George Edwin Gray (1918), 1918 CanLII 533 (SCC), 57 S.C.R. 150). Ordinarily, then, an Act of Parliament must prevail over inconsistent or conflicting subordinate legislation. However, as a matter of construction a court will, where possible, prefer an interpretation that permits reconciliation of the two. "Inconsistency" in this context refers to a situation where two legislative enactments cannot stand together; see Daniels v. White, 1968 CanLII 67 (SCC), [1968] S.C.R. 517. The rule in that case was stated in respect of two inconsistent statutes where one was deemed to repeal the other by virtue of the inconsistency. However, the underlying rationale is the same as where subordinate legislation is said to be inconsistent with another Act of Parliament -- there is a presumption that the legislature did not intend to make or empower the making of contradictory enactments. There is also some doctrinal similarity to the principle of paramountcy in constitutional division of powers cases where inconsistency has also been defined in terms of contradiction -- i.e., "compliance with one law involves breach of the other"; see Smith v. The Queen, 1960 CanLII 12 (SCC), [1960] S.C.R. 776, at p. 800.

The inconsistency contended for is that the Navigable Waters Protection Act implicitly precludes the Minister of Transport from taking into consideration any matters other than marine navigation in exercising his power of approval under s. 5 of the Act, whereas the Guidelines Order requires, at a minimum, an initial environmental impact assessment. The appellant Ministers concede that there is no explicit prohibition against his taking into account environmental factors, but argue that the focus and scheme of the Act limit him to considering nothing other than the potential effects on marine navigation. If the appellants are correct, it seems to me that the Minister would approve of very few works because several of the "works" falling within the ambit of s. 5 do not assist navigation at all, but by their very nature interfere with, or impede navigation, for example bridges, booms, dams and the like. If the significance of the impact on marine navigation were the sole criterion, it is difficult to conceive of a dam of this sort ever being approved. It is clear, then, that the Minister must factor several elements into any cost-benefit analysis to determine if a substantial interference with navigation is warranted in the circumstances.

It is likely that the Minister of Transport in exercising his functions under s. 5 always did take into account the environmental impact of a work, at least as regards other federal areas of jurisdiction, such as Indians or Indian land. However that may be, the Guidelines Order now formally mandates him to do so, and I see nothing in this that is inconsistent with his duties under s. 5. As Stone J.A. put it in the Court of Appeal, it created a duty which is "superadded" to any other statutory power residing in him which can stand with that power. In my view the Minister's duty under the Guidelines Order is indeed supplemental to his responsibility under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and he cannot resort to an excessively narrow interpretation of his existing statutory powers to avoid compliance with the Guidelines Order.

Section 8 of the Guidelines Order already recognizes that the environmental impact assessment thereunder will not apply where it would conflict with other statutory provisions. It reads:

8. Where a board or an agency of the Government of Canada or a regulatory body has a regulatory function in respect of a proposal, these Guidelines shall apply to that board, agency or body only if there is no legal impediment to or duplication resulting from the application of these Guidelines.

A broad interpretation of the application of the Guidelines Order is consistent with the objectives stated in both the Order itself and its parent legislation -- to make environmental impact assessment an essential component of federal decision-making. A similar approach has been followed in the United States with respect to their National Environmental Policy Act. As Pratt J. put it in Environmental Defense Fund, Inc. v. Mathews, 410 F.Supp. 336 (D.D.C. 1976), at p. 337:

NEPA does not supersede other statutory duties, but, to the extent that it is reconcilable with those duties, it supplements them. Full compliance with its requirements cannot be avoided unless such compliance directly conflicts with other existing statutory duties.

To hold otherwise would, in my view, set at naught the legislative scheme for the protection of the environment envisaged by Parliament in enacting the Department of the Environment Act, and in particular s. 6.

Nor do I think s. 3 of the Guidelines Order, which requires that the assessment process be initiated "as early in the planning process as possible and before irrevocable decisions are taken", is in any way inconsistent with s. 6 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Section 6 is largely concerned with empowering the Minister to remove or take other remedial action in relation to works constructed without complying with s. 5, but the appellants draw attention to s. 6(4) which permits the Minister to approve of a work that has already been built. On this point, I am in complete agreement with Stone J.A. where, at p. 41, he stated:

As I see it, the provisions of section 6 of that Act pertain to the remedial powers of the Minister in deciding what action he might take in the event of a failure to secure a section 5 approval prior to the commencement of construction. Subsection (4) thereof is an exception to the general rule, is entirely discretionary and clearly subservient to the fundamental requirement set out in paragraph 5(1)(a) that an approval be obtained prior to the commencement of construction. Nor can I see anything in the Guidelines Order that would prevent the Minister from complying with its terms to the fullest extent possible in exercising his discretion under subsection 6(4) of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. That being so, I can find no inconsistency or conflict between these two pieces of federal legislation.

It is thus clear to me that the Guidelines Order not only falls within the powers given by the Department of the Environment Act, but is completely consistent with the Navigable Waters Protection Act. It therefore falls to be decided whether the order applies in the instant case.

Obligation of the Ministers to Comply with the Guidelines Order

Section 4(1) of the Department of the Environment Act

Section 4(1)(a) of the Department of the Environment Act reads as follows:

4. (1) The powers, duties and functions of the Minister extend to and include all matters over which Parliament has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, board or agency of the Government of Canada, relating to

(a) the preservation and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment, including water, air and soil quality;

Alberta contends that by restricting the Minister of the Environment's jurisdiction to "matters over which Parliament has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, board or agency of the Government of Canada" (emphasis added), s. 4 has rendered the Guidelines Order inoperative in the present case. Because the Fisheries Act regulates the management of Canada's fisheries resource, it is argued, the Minister of the Environment's jurisdiction has been ousted in respect of all matters affecting fish habitat. This argument can be dealt with shortly. Its premise entirely misapprehends the "matters" covered by the respective pieces of legislation. The Guidelines Order establishes an environmental assessment process for use by all federal departments in the exercise of their powers and the performance of their duties and functions, whereas the Fisheries Act embraces the substantive matter of protecting fish and fish habitat. There is, of course, a connection between the two, but the crucial difference is that one is fundamentally procedural while the other is substantive in nature. Again, the approach suggested by the appellants would make the power given by s. 6 of the Department of the Environment Act virtually meaningless.

New Federal Projects

Alberta next takes issue with the purported application of the Guidelines Order to proposals other than "new federal projects, programs and activities" mentioned in s. 5(a)(ii) of the Department of the Environment Act. That provision reads:

5. The Minister, in exercising his powers and carrying out his duties and functions under section 4, shall

(a) initiate, recommend and undertake programs, and coordinate programs of the Government of Canada that are designed

...

- (ii) to ensure that new federal projects, programs and activities are assessed early in the planning process for potential adverse effects on the quality of the natural environment and that a further review is carried out of those projects, programs, and activities that are found to have probable significant adverse effects, and the results thereof taken into account [Emphasis added.]

The wording of that subparagraph, it is argued, is determinative of Parliament's intention to restrict the scope of the Guidelines Order to new federal projects, and consequently cannot apply to any project that is provincially sponsored. Here again, as I see it, Alberta seeks to place an unduly narrow construction on the extent of the Minister of the Environment's duties and functions under s. 6 of the Act. The Guidelines Order was enacted under s. 6, not s. 5, and the powers, duties and functions of the Minister there referred to encompass matters found in s. 4 as well as s. 5, including, inter alia, "the preservation and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment" (s. 4(1)(a)). Section 6 is thus not confined to new projects, programs and activities. Section 5 merely defines the Minister's minimum duties under s. 4. Section 4 is much broader. It is there that one finds the true range of the Minister's duties and functions related to environmental quality for which guidelines may be established.

Initiating Departments

Central to the arguments of the appellant Ministers is whether the Guidelines Order by its own terms has any application to the Oldman River Dam project. That question was not addressed by Alberta, and the Ministers concede that the Minister of Transport is an "initiating" department but argue that the Guidelines Order is inconsistent with and thus cannot stand with the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I have found the two enactments compatible for reasons already given, so there remains no issue between the parties that the provisions of the Guidelines Order govern the Minister of Transport. For the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, it is argued that he is not bound to invoke the Guidelines Order in the instant case because he does not have "decision making authority" pursuant to the relevant provisions of the Fisheries Act. Because the matter of the Guidelines Order's application was the subject of profound disagreement in the courts below, I feel that it is necessary to first consider the terms of the Guidelines Order to construe its general application provisions.

The starting point, in my view, must be s. 6 of the Guidelines Order which sets out its governing principle of application. It bears repeating here:

6. These Guidelines shall apply to any proposal

(a) that is to be undertaken directly by an initiating department;

(b) that may have an environmental effect on an area of federal responsibility;

(c) for which the Government of Canada makes a financial commitment; or

(d) that is located on lands, including the offshore, that are administered by the Government of Canada. [Emphasis added.]

There can be no serious doubt that the Oldman River Dam project may have an environmental effect on an area of federal responsibility, including the matters falling within s. 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867 already identified -- i.e., navigation, Indians, lands reserved for the Indians and inland fisheries. Thus, the Guidelines Order applies if the project here is a "proposal" within the meaning of s. 2, which defines that term as follows:

2. In these Guidelines,

...

"proposal" includes any initiative, undertaking or activity for which the Government of Canada has a decision making responsibility. [Emphasis added.]

If there is such a proposal, the Guidelines Order under ss. 3 and 10 allocates responsibility for the application of the process to the "initiating department" to ensure that it fully considers the environmental implications of a proposal properly before it and subjects such proposal to an initial assessment to determine whether there may be any potentially adverse environmental effects from it. The entity designated as an "initiating department" is also defined by s. 2. It provides that an:

2. In these Guidelines,

"initiating department" means any department that is, on behalf of the Government of Canada, the decision making authority for a proposal; [Emphasis added.]

It has been argued that the definite article "the" in the definition of "initiating department", as contrasted with the indefinite article "a" used in the definition of "proposal", may evince an intention to narrow the scope of the application of the Guidelines Order to projects where the federal government is the predominant or sole decision-making authority; see for example C. J. Gillespie, "Enforceable Rights from Administrative Guidelines?" (1989-1990), 3 C.J.A.L.P. 204. I do not agree. As I see it, the only consequence of shifting from the indefinite in "proposal" to the definite in "initiating department" is to designate the particular emanation of the Government of Canada that is charged with the implementation of the Guidelines Order once it has been determined that the federal government has a decision-making responsibility.

In Angus v. Canada, 1990 CanLII 7938 (FCA), [1990] 3 F.C. 410 (C.A.), Décary J.A. adopted a similar approach to construing the Guidelines Order but in a different context. There the issue was whether the Guidelines Order applied to an order in council issued by the Governor in Council under s. 64 of the National Transportation Act, 1987, R.S.C., 1985, c. 28 (3rd Supp.), which required VIA Rail to eliminate or reduce certain passenger services. Although the case turned on the narrow issue of whether the Guidelines Order was binding on the Governor in Council, which does not arise here, and Décary J.A. was dissenting on this point, his overall analysis of the application of the Guidelines Order is helpful where he stated, at p. 434:

The emphasis has been put by the learned Trial Judge and by the respondents on the words "initiating department" which relate to the administration of the Guidelines. I would rather put the emphasis on the words "proposal" and "Government of Canada", which relate to the "application" of the Guidelines. There is no requirement, in the definition of "proposal", that it be made by an initiating department within the meaning of the Guidelines. The intention of the drafter seems to be that whenever there is an activity that may have an environmental effect on an area of federal responsibility and whoever the decision-maker may be on behalf of the Government of Canada, be it a department, a Minister, the Governor in Council, the Guidelines apply and it then becomes a matter of practical consideration, when the final decision-maker is not a department, to find which department or Minister is the effective original decision-maker or the effective decision-undertaker, for there is always a department or a Minister involved "in the planning process" and "before irrevocable decisions are taken" or in the "direct undertaking" of a proposal.

Since the issue does not arise, I do not wish to comment on the application of the Guidelines Order to the Governor in Council, but the foregoing passage does capture the essence of its framework.

That is not to say that the Guidelines Order is engaged every time a project may have an environmental effect on an area of federal jurisdiction. There must first be a "proposal" which requires an "initiative, undertaking or activity for which the Government of Canada has a decision making responsibility". (Emphasis added.) In my view the proper construction to be placed on the term "responsibility" is that the federal government, having entered the field in a subject matter assigned to it under s. 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, must have an affirmative regulatory duty pursuant to an Act of Parliament which relates to the proposed initiative, undertaking or activity. It cannot have been intended that the Guidelines Order would be invoked every time there is some potential environmental effect on a matter of federal jurisdiction. Therefore, "responsibility" within the definition of "proposal" should not be read as connoting matters falling generally within federal jurisdiction. Rather, it is meant to signify a legal duty or obligation. Once such duty exists, it is a matter of identifying the "initiating department" assigned responsibility for its performance, for it then becomes the decision-making authority for the proposal and thus responsible for initiating the process under the Guidelines Order.

That there must be an affirmative regulatory duty for a "decision making responsibility" to exist is evident from other provisions found in the Guidelines Order which suggest that the initiating department must have some degree of regulatory power over the project. For example s. 12 provides:

12. Every initiating department shall screen or assess each proposal for which it is the decision making authority to determine if

...

(f) the potentially adverse environmental effects that may be caused by the proposal are unacceptable, in which case the proposal shall either be modified and subsequently rescreened or reassessed or be abandoned.

Again, s. 14 reads:

14. Where, in any case, the initiating department determines that mitigation or compensation measures could prevent any of the potentially adverse environmental effects of a proposal from becoming significant, the initiating department shall ensure that such measures are implemented.

Those provisions amplify the regulatory authority with which the Government of Canada must have clothed itself under an Act of Parliament before it will have the requisite decision-making responsibility.

Applying that interpretation to the present case, it will be seen that the Oldman River Dam project qualifies as a proposal for which the Minister of Transport alone is the initiating department. In my view the Navigable Waters Protection Act does place an affirmative regulatory duty on the Minister of Transport. Under that Act there is a legislatively entrenched regulatory scheme in place in which the approval of the Minister is required before any work that substantially interferes with navigation may be placed in, upon, over or under, through or across any navigable water. Section 5 gives the Minister the power to impose such terms and conditions as he deems fit on any approval granted, and if those terms are not complied with the Minister may order the owner to remove or alter the work. For these reasons I would hold that this is a "proposal" for which the Minister of Transport is an "initiating department".

There is, however, no equivalent regulatory scheme under the Fisheries Act which is applicable to this project. Section 35 prohibits the carrying on of any work or undertaking that results in the harmful alteration, disruption or destruction of fish habitat, and s. 40 lends its weight to that prohibition by penal sanction. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is given a discretion under s. 37(1) to request information from any person who carries on or proposes to carry on any work or undertaking that will or may result in the alteration, disruption or destruction of fish habitat. However, the purpose of making such a request is not to further a regulatory procedure, but is merely to assist the Minister in exercising an ad hoc delegated legislative power granted under s. 37(2) to allow an exemption from the general prohibition. That provision reads:

37. . . .

(2) If, after reviewing any material or information provided under subsection (1) and affording the persons who provided it a reasonable opportunity to make representations, the Minister or a person designated by the Minister is of the opinion that an offence under subsection 40(1) or (2) is being or is likely to be committed, the Minister or a person designated by the Minister may, by order, subject to regulations made pursuant to paragraph (3)(b), or, if there are no such regulations in force, with the approval of the Governor in Council,

(a) require such modifications or additions to the work or undertaking or such modifications to any plans, specifications, procedures or schedules relating thereto as the Minister or a person designated by the Minister considers necessary in the circumstances, or

(b) restrict the operation of the work or undertaking, and, with the approval of the Governor in Council in any case, direct the closing of the work or undertaking for such period as the Minister or a person designated by the Minister considers necessary in the circumstances. [Emphasis added.]

In my view a discretionary power to request or not to request information to assist a Minister in the exercise of a legislative function does not constitute a decision-making responsibility within the meaning of the Guidelines Order. Whereas the Minister of Transport is responsible under the terms of the Navigable Waters Protection Act in his capacity as regulator, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans under s. 37 of the Fisheries Act has been given a limited ad hoc legislative power which does not constitute an affirmative regulatory duty. For that reason, I do not think the application for mandamus to compel the Minister to act is well founded.

Crown Immunity

Alberta takes the position that even if the Guidelines Order could be said to apply to the project in its own terms, the Crown in right of Alberta is not bound by the Navigable Waters Protection Act and hence there can be no "decision making responsibility" on the part of the Government of Canada within the meaning of the Guidelines Order which could affect the province. The appellant Ministers agree that the Act is not binding on the Crown in right of a province, but argue that Alberta has waived its immunity by making application for approval under the Act.

The starting point on this issue is s. 17 of the Interpretation Act which codifies the presumption that the Crown is not bound by statute:

17. No enactment is binding on Her Majesty or affects Her Majesty or Her Majesty's rights or prerogatives in any manner, except as mentioned or referred to in the enactment.

It is agreed by all concerned that there are no express words in the Navigable Waters Protection Act binding the Crown, and it therefore remains to be decided whether the Crown is bound by necessary implication.

It is helpful to turn first to the common law. The leading case is the Privy Council decision in Province of Bombay v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay, [1947] A.C. 58. The issue there was whether the province of Bombay was exempt from the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, which conferred power on the city to lay water-mains "into, through or under any land whatsoever within the city". The province owned land under which it was proposed to lay a water-main and it objected to the city's plans, unless the city complied with certain conditions which the city found unacceptable. Although there were no express words in the statute binding the Crown, the High Court of Bombay held that the Crown was bound by necessary implication because the statute "cannot operate with reasonable efficiency unless the Crown is bound".

The Privy Council agreed that the rule of Crown immunity admitted of at least one exception, necessary implication. Lord du Parc explained the exception as follows, at p. 61:

If, that is to say, it is manifest from the very terms of the statute, that it was the intention of the legislature that the Crown should be bound, then the result is the same as if the Crown had been expressly named. It must then be inferred that the Crown, by assenting to the law, agreed to be bound by its provisions.

Their Lordships then went on to consider the argument, supported by some early authority, that a statute enacted for the public good must be held to bind the Crown, because the Act was manifestly intended to secure the public welfare. That contention was rejected on the simple ground that all statutes are presumptively for the public good. That, however, did not necessarily mean that the purpose of an enactment is altogether irrelevant. At page 63, it is stated:

Their Lordships prefer to say that the apparent purpose of the statute is one element, and may be an important element, to be considered when an intention to bind the Crown is alleged. If it can be affirmed that, at the time when the statute was passed and received the royal sanction, it was apparent from its terms that its beneficent purpose must be wholly frustrated unless the Crown were bound, then it may be inferred that the Crown has agreed to be bound.

As I mentioned in Sparling v. Quebec (Caisse de dépôt et placement du Québec), 1988 CanLII 26 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 1015, at p. 1022, some doubt was expressed in R. v. Eldorado

Nuclear Ltd., 1983 CanLII 34 (SCC), [1983] 2 S.C.R. 551, and Her Majesty in right of Alberta v. Canadian Transport Commission, 1977 CanLII 150 (SCC), [1978] 1 S.C.R. 61 (cf. R. v. Ouellette, 1980 CanLII 9 (SCC), [1980] 1 S.C.R. 568), as to whether the necessary implication exception survived the 1967 revision of what is now s. 17 of the Interpretation Act. There may also have been room for doubt as to whether the "wholly frustrated" test articulated in Bombay was determinative in finding the Crown bound by necessary implication. Professor Hogg in his text Liability of the Crown (2nd ed. 1989), argues that the necessary implication exception set out at the beginning of Bombay refers to a contextual analysis of the statute whereby one may discern an intention to bind the Crown by logical implication, and is thus a different species of necessary implication from that which arises when the purpose of the statute is wholly frustrated. He states, at p. 210:

What is contemplated in this passage is that a statute, while lacking an express statement that the Crown is bound, may contain references to the Crown or to governmental activity which make no sense unless the Crown is bound. If these textual indications are sufficiently clear, the courts will hold that the presumption is rebutted and the Crown is bound.

However, any uncertainty in the law on these points was put to rest by this Court's recent decision in Alberta Government Telephones, supra. After reviewing the authorities, Dickson C.J. concluded, at p. 281:

In my view, in light of PWA and Eldorado, the scope of the words "mentioned or referred to" must be given an interpretation independent of the supplanted common law. However, the qualifications in Bombay, supra, are based on sound principles of interpretation which have not entirely disappeared over time. It seems to me that the words "mentioned or referred to" in s. 16 [now s. 17 of the Interpretation Act] are capable of encompassing: (1) expressly binding words ("Her Majesty is bound"); (2) a clear intention to bind which, in Bombay terminology, "is manifest from the very terms of the statute", in other words, an intention revealed when provisions are read in the context of other textual provisions, as in Ouellette, supra; and, (3) an intention to bind where the purpose of the statute would be "wholly frustrated" if the government were not bound, or, in other words, if an absurdity (as opposed to simply an undesirable result) were produced. These three points should provide a guideline for when a statute has clearly conveyed an intention to bind the Crown.

In my view, this passage makes it abundantly clear that a contextual analysis of a statute may reveal an intention to bind the Crown if one is irresistibly drawn to that conclusion through logical inference.

That analysis however cannot be made in a vacuum. Accordingly, the relevant "context" should not be too narrowly construed. Rather the context must include the circumstances which led to the enactment of the statute and the mischief to which it was directed. This view is consistent with the reasoning in Bombay as is evident from the passages quoted above where the test for necessary implication is expressed in terms of the time of enactment. In fact the approach taken by the High Court of Bombay in that case was criticized by the Privy Council for that very reason, at p. 62:

Even if the High Court were correct in its interpretation of the principle, its method of applying it would be open to the objection that regard should have been had, not to the conditions which it found to be in existence many years after the passing of the Act, but to the state of things which existed, or could be shown to have been within the contemplation of the legislature, in the year 1888.

I begin then by examining the circumstances that existed when the legislation was first enacted, bearing in mind that the general subject matter of the statute concerns navigation.

In so doing, it is useful to return to some of the fundamental principles of water law in this area, particularly those pertaining to navigable waters. It is important to recall that the law of navigation in Canada has two fundamental dimensions -- the ancient common law public right of navigation and the constitutional authority over the subject matter of navigation -- both of which are necessarily interrelated by virtue of s. 91\(10\) of the Constitution Act, 1867 which assigns exclusive legislative authority over navigation to Parliament.

The common law of England has long been that the public has a right to navigate in tidal waters, but though non-tidal waters may be navigable in fact the public has no right to navigate in them, subject to certain exceptions not material here. Except in the Atlantic provinces, where different considerations may well apply, in Canada the distinction between tidal and non-tidal waters was abandoned long ago; see In Re Provincial Fisheries (1896), 1896 CanLII 76 \(SCC\), 26 S.C.R. 444; for a summary of the cases, see my book on Water Law in Canada (1973), at pp. 178-80. Instead the rule is that if waters are navigable in fact, whether or not the waters are tidal or non-tidal, the public right of navigation exists. That is the case in Alberta where the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, applying the North-West Territories Act, R.S.C. 1886, c. 50, rightly held in Flewelling

v. Johnston (1921), 1921 CanLII 357 (AB CA), 59 D.L.R. 419, that the English rule was not suitable to the conditions of the province. There is no issue between the parties that the Oldman River is in fact navigable.

The nature of the public right of navigation has been the subject of considerable judicial comment over time, but certain principles have held fast. First, the right of navigation is not a property right, but simply a public right of way; see Orr Ewing v. Colquhoun (1877), 2 App. Cas. 839 (H.L.), at p. 846. It is not an absolute right, but must be exercised reasonably so as not to interfere with the equal rights of others. Of particular significance for this case is that the right of navigation is paramount to the rights of the owner of the bed, even when the owner is the Crown. For example, in Attorney-General v. Johnson (1819), 2 Wils. Ch. 87, 37 E.R. 240, a relator action to enjoin a public nuisance causing an obstruction in the River Thames and an adjoining thoroughfare along its bank, the Lord Chancellor said, at p. 246:

I consider it to be quite immaterial whether the title to the soil between high and low water-mark be in the Crown, or in the City of London, or whether the City of London has the right of conservancy, operating as a check on an improper use of the soil, the title being in the Crown, or whether either Lord Grosvenor or Mr. Johnson have any derivative title by grant from any one having the power to grant. . . . It is my present opinion, that the Crown has not the right either itself to use its title to the soil between high and low water-mark as a nuisance, or to place upon that soil what will be a nuisance to the Crown's subjects. If the Crown has not such a right, it could not give it to the City of London, nor could the City transfer it to any other person.

This Court later came to the same conclusion in Wood v. Esson (1884), 1884 CanLII 44 (SCC), 9 S.C.R. 239. There, the plaintiffs had extended their wharf so as to interfere with access to the defendant's wharf. The defendant pulled up the piles and removed the obstruction to allow passage to his wharf, and the plaintiffs then brought an action in trespass on the ground that they enjoyed title under a grant from the province of Nova Scotia to the soil of the harbour on which the wharf was constructed. The Court held that the defendant was entitled to abate the nuisance created by the obstruction to navigation in the harbour. Strong J. remarked, at p. 243:

The title to the soil did not authorize the plaintiffs to, extend their wharf so as to be a public nuisance, which upon the evidence, such an obstruction of the harbour amounted to, for the Crown cannot grant the right so to obstruct navigable waters; nothing short of legislative sanction can take from anything which hinders navigation the character of a nuisance. [Emphasis added.]

This passage also underscores another aspect of the paramountcy of the public right of navigation -- that it can only be modified or extinguished by an authorizing statute, and as such a Crown grant of land of itself does not and cannot confer a right to interfere with navigation; see also The Queen v. Fisher (1891), 1891 CanLII 202 (CA EXC), 2 Ex. C.R. 365; In Re Provincial Fisheries, supra, at p. 549, per Girouard J.; and Reference re Waters and Water-Powers, 1929 CanLII 72 (SCC), [1929] S.C.R. 200.

What is more, the provinces are constitutionally incapable of enacting legislation authorizing an interference with navigation, since s. 91(10) of the Constitution Act, 1867 gives Parliament exclusive jurisdiction to legislate respecting navigation. That was made clear by this Court in Queddy River Driving Boom Co. v. Davidson (1883), 1883 CanLII 60 (SCC), 10 S.C.R. 222, where an injunction was sought to restrain the defendant company from erecting piers and booms in the Queddy River in New Brunswick. The defendant relied on its constituent legislation, passed by the provincial legislature, which permitted a certain degree of interference with navigation. The only issue before the Court was the authority of the legislature to pass the Act incorporating the defendant. Ritchie C.J. concluded, at p. 232:

. . . the legal question in this case, which is, to which legislative power, that of the Dominion Parliament or the Assembly of New Brunswick, belongs the right to authorize the obstruction by piers or booms of a public tidal and navigable river, and thereby injuriously interfere with and abridge the public right of navigation in such tidal navigable waters. It is not disputed that this legislation interfered with the navigation of the river . . .

I think there can be no doubt that the legislative control of navigable waters, such as are in question in this case, belongs exclusively to the Dominion Parliament. Everything connected with navigation and shipping seems to have been carefully confided to the Dominion Parliament, by the B.N.A. Act.

These cases served as an impetus for the enactment of what ultimately became the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Of relevance here is the enactment of one of the antecedent pieces of legislation -- An Act respecting booms and other works constructed in navigable waters whether under the authority of Provincial Acts or otherwise, S.C. 1883, c. 43 -- preceding the consolidated Act which was to govern all aspects of the protection of navigable waters. Section 1 provided:

1. No boom, dam or aboiteau shall be constructed whether under the authority of an Act of a Legislature of a Province of Canada, or under the authority of an Ordinance of the North-West Territories or of the District of Keewatin or otherwise, so as to interfere with navigation, unless the site thereof has been approved, and unless the boom, dam or aboiteau has been built and is maintained in accordance with plans approved by the Governor General in Council.

The Act also provided a means whereby existing structures which interfered with navigation, and thus created a public nuisance, could be legalized by seeking approval from the Governor General in Council.

That statute was but one enactment in which Parliament exercised its jurisdiction to prevent the erection or continuation of impediments to navigation. It had already legislated, inter alia, in respect of bridges (An Act respecting Bridges over navigable waters, constructed under the authority of Provincial Acts, S.C. 1882, c. 37); the removal of obstructions and wrecks from navigable waters (An Act for the removal of obstructions, by wreck and like causes, in Navigable Waters of Canada, and other purposes relative to wrecks, S.C. 1874, c. 29); and effluent from sawmills into navigable waters (An Act for the better protection of Navigable Streams and Rivers, S.C. 1873, c. 65).

The consolidation process began with the passage of An Act respecting certain works constructed in or over Navigable Waters, S.C. 1886, c. 35, dealing with construction of any "work" in navigable waters, and its companion legislation An Act respecting the protection of Navigable Waters, S.C. 1886, c. 36, concerning obstruction of navigable waters by wrecks. Section 1 of the former compendiously defined the term "work" to mean:

1. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression "work" means and includes any bridge, boom, dam, aboiteau, wharf, dock, pier or other structure, and the approaches or other works necessary or appurtenant thereto; . . .

The definition was far more comprehensive in scope than its predecessors, and this aspect of the law, coupled with the requirement for approval from the Governor in Council of all such works, caused considerable consternation at the time as to the breadth of its potential retrospective effect for existing structures erected in navigable waters.

However, the statute was merely declaratory of the common law. To the extent that a structure interfered with the public right of navigation, it was a public nuisance, and the provinces were constitutionally powerless to authorize an interference of that nature. The retrospective effect of the law with respect to works built under the statutory authority of a provincial legislature, however, only went back as far as the time the province joined Confederation. Section 7 provided:

7. Nothing hereinbefore contained, except the provisions of the first and fifth sections hereof, shall apply to any work constructed under the authority of any Act of the Parliament of Canada, or of the legislature of the late Province of Canada, or of the legislature of any Province now forming part of Canada, passed before such Province became a part thereof.

Thus, no permission would be required for a work authorized by the legislature of a province before it joined Canada. That is because the province would then have had the constitutional jurisdiction to authorize the work. Similarly, the Act did not apply to works constructed under any other Act of Parliament so that it was clear which Act governed. Parliament had already passed legislation authorizing certain works of that nature; see for example An Act to authorize the Corporation of the Town of Emerson to construct a Free Passenger and Traffic Bridge over the Red River in the Province of Manitoba, S.C. 1880, c. 44.

The 1886 Acts were re-enacted in R.S.C. 1886, cc. 91 and 92, and consolidated in R.S.C. 1906, c. 115, when they were given the short title Navigable Waters' Protection Act. The Act has remained substantially the same since. In particular, s. 7 of c. 35 of the 1886 statute has remained materially unaltered, and is now found in s. 4 of the present Act. It was this provision that the Court of Appeal relied upon to find that the Crown in right of Alberta was bound by necessary implication. I agree with this position. By expressly excepting from the operation of the Act works authorized by Parliament since Confederation and by pre-Confederation provincial legislatures, at a time these bodies had power to interfere with navigation, the statute by necessary implication must be taken to provide that post-Confederation works undertaken by the provinces are subject to the Act. There are, however, even more fundamental considerations that lead to the view that the conclusion arrived at by the Court of Appeal was correct. To these I now turn.

In my view, the circumstances surrounding the passage of the legislation, informing as they must the context of the statute, do lead to the logical inference that the Crown in right of a province is bound by the Act by necessary implication. Neither the Crown nor a grantee of the Crown may interfere with the public right of navigation without legislative authorization. The proprietary right the Crown in right of Alberta may have in the bed of the Oldman River is subject to that right of navigation, legislative jurisdiction over which has been exclusively vested in Parliament. Parliament has entered the field principally through the passage of the Navigable Waters Protection Act which delegated to the Governor General in Council, and now the Minister of Transport, authority to permit construction of what would otherwise be a public nuisance in navigable waters. The Crown in right of Alberta requires statutory authorization from Parliament to erect any obstruction that substantially interferes with navigation in the Oldman River, and the Navigable Waters Protection Act is the means by which it must be obtained. It follows that the Crown in right of Alberta is bound by the Act, for it is the only practicable procedure available for getting approval.

My colleague, Stevenson J., has however referred to the statement of Fitzpatrick C.J. in Champion v. City of Vancouver, 1917 CanLII 693 (SCC), [1918] 1 W.W.R. 216 (S.C.C.), to the effect that the Act was merely permissive and did not prevent a third party from bringing action for an interference with the public right of navigation despite the Minister's approval of the work. This statement, however, was mere dicta. The issue there was whether the structure concerned interfered with the plaintiffs' private right of access. The other two majority judges confined their remarks to this matter, and the two minority judges a fortiori did not agree with the statement. For my part, I prefer the view expressed in Isherwood v. Ontario and Minnesota Power Co. (1911), 18 O.W.R. 459 (Div. Ct.), that the Act does permit interference with the public right of navigation but does not interfere with the private rights of individuals. That is the proposition for which Champion is authority.

For these reasons I have concluded that the Crown in right of Alberta is, as a matter of necessary or logical implication, bound by the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I am also of the view that the purpose of the Act would be wholly frustrated if this were not the case. I am affected by the considerations referred to by Stone J.A. that the provinces are among the bodies that are likely to engage in projects -- bridges, for example -- that may interfere with navigation, and that this was the case in this country well before the passage of the Act, but here again I am affected as well by even more fundamental considerations, namely the nature of navigation in this country and of Parliament's legislative power over this activity.

Certain navigable systems form a critical part of the interprovincial transportation networks which are essential for international trade and commercial activity in Canada. With respect to the contrary view, it makes little sense to suggest that any semblance of Parliament's legislative objective in exercising its jurisdiction for the conservancy of navigable waters would be achieved were the Crown to be excluded from the operation of the Act. The regulation of navigable waters must be viewed functionally as an integrated whole, and when so viewed it would result in an absurdity if the Crown in right of a province was left to obstruct navigation with impunity at one point along a navigational system, while Parliament assiduously worked to preserve its navigability at another point.

The practical necessity for a uniform regulatory regime for navigable waters has already been recognized by this Court in Whitbread v. Walley, 1990 CanLII 33 \(SCC\), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 1273, and the reasoning given there in support of a single body of maritime law within federal jurisdiction is equally applicable to this case. At pages 1294-95, it is stated:

Quite apart from judicial authority, the very nature of the activities of navigation and shipping, at least as they are practised in this country, makes a uniform maritime law which encompasses navigable inland waterways a practical necessity. Much of the navigational and shipping activity that takes place on Canada's inland waterways is closely connected with that which takes place within the traditional geographic sphere of maritime law. This is most obviously the case when one looks to the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence Seaway, which are to a very large degree an extension, or alternatively the beginning, of the shipping lanes by which this country does business with the world. But it is also apparent when one looks to the many smaller rivers and waterways that serve as ports of call for ocean going vessels and as the points of departure for some of Canada's most important exports. This is undoubtedly one of the considerations that led the courts of British North America to rule that the public right of navigation, in contradistinction to the English position, extended to all navigable rivers regardless of whether or not they were within the ebb and flow of the tide It probably also explains why the Fathers of Confederation thought it necessary to assign the broad and general power over navigation and shipping to the central rather than the provincial governments

Were the Crown in right of a province permitted to undermine the integrity of the essential navigational networks in Canadian waters, the legislative purpose of the Navigable Waters Protection Act would, in my view, effectively be emasculated. In light of these findings, it is unnecessary to comment on the issue of waiver that was raised by the appellant Ministers.

Constitutional Question

The constitutional question asks whether the Guidelines Order is so broad as to offend ss. 92 and 92A of the Constitution Act, 1867. However, no argument was made with respect to s. 92A for the apparent reason that the Oldman River Dam project does not, in the appellants' view, fall within the ambit of that provision. At all events, the matter is of no moment. The process of judicial review of legislation which is impugned as ultra vires Parliament was recently elaborated on in Whitbread v. Walley, supra, and does not bear repetition here, save to remark that if the Guidelines Order is found to be legislation that is in pith and substance in relation to matters within Parliament's exclusive jurisdiction, that is the end of the matter. It would be immaterial that it also affects matters of property and civil rights (Whitbread, at p. 1286). The analysis proceeds first by identifying whether in pith and substance the legislation falls within a matter assigned to one or more of the heads of legislative power.

While various expressions have been used to describe what is meant by the "pith and substance" of a legislative provision, in Whitbread v. Walley I expressed a preference for the description "the dominant or most important characteristic of the challenged law". Naturally, the parties have advanced quite different features of the Guidelines Order as representing its most important characteristic. For Alberta, it is the manner in which it is said to encroach on provincial rights, although no specific matter has been identified other than general references to the environment. Alberta argues that Parliament has no plenary jurisdiction over the environment, it being a matter of legislative jurisdiction shared by both levels of government, and that the Guidelines Order has crossed the line which circumscribes Parliament's authority over the environment. The appellant Ministers argue that in pith and substance the Guidelines Order is merely a process to facilitate federal decision-making on matters that fall within Parliament's jurisdiction -- a proposition with which the respondent substantially agrees.

The substance of Alberta's argument is that the Guidelines Order purports to give the Government of Canada general authority over the environment in such a way as to trench on the province's exclusive legislative domain. Alberta argues that the Guidelines Order attempts to regulate the environmental effects of matters largely within the control of the province and, consequently, cannot constitutionally be a concern of Parliament. In particular, it is said that Parliament is incompetent to deal with the environmental effects of provincial works such as the Oldman River Dam.

I agree that the Constitution Act, 1867 has not assigned the matter of "environment" sui generis to either the provinces or Parliament. The environment, as understood in its generic sense, encompasses the physical, economic and social environment touching several of the heads of power assigned to the respective levels of government. Professor Gibson put it succinctly several years ago in his article "Constitutional Jurisdiction over Environmental Management in Canada" (1973), 23 U.T.L.J. 54, at p. 85:

. . . "environmental management" does not, under the existing situation, constitute a homogeneous constitutional unit. Instead, it cuts across many different areas of constitutional responsibility, some federal and some provincial. And it is no less obvious that "environmental management" could never be treated as a constitutional unit under one order of government in any constitution that claimed to be federal, because no system in which one government was so powerful would be federal.

I earlier referred to the environment as a diffuse subject, echoing what I said in R. v. Crown Zellerbach Canada Ltd., supra, to the effect that environmental control, as a subject matter, does not have the requisite distinctiveness to meet the test under the "national concern" doctrine as articulated by Beetz J. in Reference re Anti-Inflation Act, supra. Although I was writing for the minority in Crown Zellerbach, this opinion was not contested by the majority. The majority simply decided that marine pollution was a matter of national concern because it was predominately extra-provincial and international in character and implications, and possessed sufficiently distinct and separate characteristics as to make it subject to Parliament's residual power.

It must be recognized that the environment is not an independent matter of legislation under the Constitution Act, 1867 and that it is a constitutionally abstruse matter which does not comfortably fit within the existing division of powers without considerable overlap and uncertainty. A variety of analytical constructs have been developed to grapple with the problem, although no single method will be suitable in every instance. Some have taken a functional approach by describing specific environmental concerns and then allocating responsibility by reference to the different heads of power; see, for example, Gibson, supra. Others have looked at the problem from the perspective of testing the ambit of federal powers according to their general description as "conceptual" or "global" (e.g., criminal law, taxation, trade and commerce, spending and the general residuary power) as opposed to "functional" (e.g., navigation and fisheries); see P. Emond, "The Case for a Greater Federal Role in the Environmental Protection Field: An Examination of the Pollution Problem and the Constitution" (1972), 10 Osgoode Hall L.J. 647, and M. E. Hatherly, Constitutional Jurisdiction in Relation to Environmental Law, background paper prepared for the Protection of Life Project, Law Reform Commission of Canada (1984).

In my view the solution to this case can more readily be found by looking first at the catalogue of powers in the Constitution Act, 1867 and considering how they may be employed to meet or avoid environmental concerns. When viewed in this manner it will be seen that in exercising their respective legislative powers, both levels of government may affect the environment, either by acting or not acting. This can best be understood by looking at specific powers. A revealing example is the federal Parliament's exclusive legislative power over interprovincial railways under ss. 92(10)(a) and 91(29) of the Constitution Act, 1867. The regulation of federal railways has been entrusted to the National Transportation Agency pursuant to the National Transportation Act, 1987, which enjoys a broad mandate as summarized in the declaration found in s. 3, which reads in part:

3. (1) It is hereby declared that a safe, economic, efficient and adequate network of viable and effective transportation services making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest total cost is essential to serve the transportation needs of shippers and travellers and to maintain the economic well-being and growth of Canada and its regions and that those objectives are most likely to be achieved when all carriers are able to compete, both within and among the various modes of transportation, under conditions ensuring that, having due regard to national policy and to legal and constitutional requirements,

(d) transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development and commercial viability of transportation links is balanced with regional economic development objectives in order that the potential economic strengths of each region may be realized, . . .

This gives some insight into the scope of Parliament's legislative jurisdiction over railways and the manner in which it is charged with the responsibility of weighing both the national and local socio-economic ramifications of its decisions. Moreover, it cannot be seriously questioned that Parliament may deal with biophysical environmental concerns touching upon the operation of railways so long as it is legislation relating to railways. This could involve issues such as emission standards or noise abatement provisions.

To continue with the example, one might postulate the location and construction of a new line which would require approval under the relevant provisions of the Railway Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. R-3. That line may cut through ecologically sensitive habitats such as wetlands and forests. The possibility of derailment may pose a serious hazard to the health and safety of nearby communities if dangerous commodities are to be carried on the line. On the other hand, it may bring considerable economic benefit to those communities through job creation and the multiplier effect that will have in the local economy. The regulatory authority might require that the line circumvent residential districts in the interests of noise abatement and safety. In my view, all of these considerations may validly be taken into account in arriving at a final decision on whether or not to grant the necessary approval. To suggest otherwise would lead to the most astonishing results, and it defies reason to assert that Parliament is constitutionally barred from weighing the broad environmental repercussions, including socio-economic concerns, when legislating with respect to decisions of this nature.

The same can be said for several other subject matters of legislation, including one of those before the Court, namely navigation and shipping. Some provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act are aimed directly at biophysical environmental concerns that affect navigation. Sections 21 and 22 read:

21. No person shall throw or deposit or cause, suffer or permit to be thrown or deposited any sawdust, edgings, slabs, bark or like rubbish of any description whatever that is liable to interfere with navigation in any water, any part of which is navigable or that flows into any navigable water.

22. No person shall throw or deposit or cause, suffer or permit to be thrown or deposited any stone, gravel, earth, cinders, ashes or other material or rubbish that is liable to sink to the bottom in any water, any part of which is navigable or that flows into any navigable water, where there are not at least twenty fathoms of water at all times, but nothing in this section shall be construed so as to permit the throwing or depositing of any substance in any part of a navigable water where that throwing or depositing is prohibited by or under any other Act.

As I mentioned earlier in these reasons, the Act has a more expansive environmental dimension, given the common law context in which it was enacted. The common law proscribed obstructions that interfered with the paramount right of public navigation. Several of the "works" referred to in the Act do not in any way improve navigation. Bridges do not assist navigation, nor do many dams. Thus, in deciding whether a work of that nature is to be permitted, the Minister would almost surely have to weigh the advantages and disadvantages resulting from the interference with navigation. This could involve environmental concerns such as the destruction to fisheries, and all the Guidelines Order does then is to extend the ambit of his concerns.

It must be noted that the exercise of legislative power, as it affects concerns relating to the environment, must, as with other concerns, be linked to the appropriate head of power, and since the nature of the various heads of power under the Constitution Act, 1867 differ, the extent to which environmental concerns may be taken into account in the exercise of a power may vary from one power to another. For example, a somewhat different environmental role can be played by Parliament in the exercise of its jurisdiction over fisheries than under its powers concerning railways or navigation since the former involves the management of a resource, the others activities. The foregoing observations may be demonstrated by reference to two cases involving fisheries. In Fowler v. The Queen, 1980 CanLII 201 (SCC), [1980] 2 S.C.R. 213, the Court found that s. 33(3) of the Fisheries Act was ultra vires Parliament because its broad prohibition enjoining the deposit of "slash, stumps or other debris" into water frequented by fish was not sufficiently linked to any actual or potential harm to fisheries. However, s. 33(2), prohibiting the deposit of deleterious substances in any place where they might enter waters frequented by fish, was found intra vires Parliament under s.

91(12) in Northwest Falling Contractors Ltd. v. The Queen, 1980 CanLII 210 (SCC), [1980] 2 S.C.R. 292.

The provinces may similarly act in relation to the environment under any legislative power in s. 92. Legislation in relation to local works or undertakings, for example, will often take into account environmental concerns. What is not particularly helpful in sorting out the respective levels of constitutional authority over a work such as the Oldman River dam, however, is the characterization of it as a "provincial project" or an undertaking "primarily subject to provincial regulation" as the appellant Alberta sought to do. That begs the question and posits an erroneous principle that seems to hold that there exists a general doctrine of interjurisdictional immunity to shield provincial works or undertakings from otherwise valid federal legislation. As Dickson C.J. remarked in Alberta Government Telephones, supra, at p. 275:

It should be remembered that one aspect of the pith and substance doctrine is that a law in relation to a matter within the competence of one level of government may validly affect a matter within the competence of the other. Canadian federalism has evolved in a way which tolerates overlapping federal and provincial legislation in many respects, and in my view a constitutional immunity doctrine is neither desirable nor necessary to accommodate valid provincial objectives.

What is important is to determine whether either level of government may legislate. One may legislate in regard to provincial aspects, the other federal aspects. Although local projects will generally fall within provincial responsibility, federal participation will be required if the project impinges on an area of federal jurisdiction as is the case here.

There is, however, an even more fundamental fallacy in Alberta's argument, and that concerns the manner in which constitutional powers may be exercised. In legislating regarding a subject, it is sufficient that the legislative body legislate on that subject. The practical purpose that inspires the legislation and the implications that body must consider in making its decision are another thing. Absent a colourable purpose or a lack of bona fides, these considerations will not detract from the fundamental nature of the legislation. A railway line may be required to locate so as to avoid a nuisance resulting from smoke or noise in a municipality, but it is nonetheless railway regulation.

An Australian case, Murphyores Incorporated Pty. Ltd. v. Commonwealth of Australia (1976), 136 C.L.R. 1 (H.C.), illustrates the point well in a context similar to the present. There the plaintiffs carried on the business of mining for mineral sands from which they produced zircon and rutile concentrates. The export of those substances was regulated by the Customs (Prohibited Exports) Regulations (passed pursuant to the Commonwealth's trade and commerce power) and approval from the Minister of Minerals and Energy was required for their export. The issue in the case arose when an inquiry was directed to be made under the Environment Protection (Impact of Proposals) Act 1974-1975 (Cth), into the environmental impact of mineral extraction from the area in which the plaintiffs had their mining leases. The Minister responsible informed the plaintiffs that the report of that inquiry would have to be considered before allowing any further export of concentrates.

The plaintiffs contended that the Minister could only consider matters relevant to "trading policy" within the scope of the Commonwealth's trade and commerce power, rather than the environmental concerns arising from the anterior mining activity which was predominantly a state interest. That argument was unanimously rejected, Stephen J. putting it as follows, at p. 12:

The administrative decision whether or not to relax a prohibition against the export of goods will necessarily be made in the light of considerations affecting the mind of the administrator; but whatever their nature the consequence will necessarily be expressed in terms of trade and commerce, consisting of the approval or rejection of an application to relax the prohibition on exports. It will therefore fall within constitutional power. The considerations in the light of which the decision is made may not themselves relate to matters of trade and commerce but that will not deprive the decision which they induce of its inherent constitutionality for the decision will be directly on the subject matter of exportation and the considerations actuating that decision will not detract from the character which its subject matter confers upon it.

I hasten to add that I do not mean to draw any parallels between the Commonwealth's trade and commerce power as framed in the Australian Constitution and that found in the Canadian Constitution. Obviously there are important differences in the two documents, but the general point made in Murphyores is nonetheless valid in the present case. The case points out the danger of falling into the conceptual trap of thinking of the environment as an extraneous matter in making legislative choices or administrative decisions. Clearly, this cannot be the case. Quite simply, the environment is comprised of all that is around us and as such must be a part of what actuates many decisions of any moment.

Environmental impact assessment is, in its simplest form, a planning tool that is now generally regarded as an integral component of sound decision-making. Its fundamental purpose is summarized by R. Cotton and D. P. Emond in "Environmental Impact Assessment", in J. Swaigen, ed., Environmental Rights in Canada (1981), 245, at p. 247:

The basic concepts behind environmental assessment are simply stated: (1) early identification and evaluation of all potential environmental consequences of a proposed undertaking; (2) decision making that both guarantees the adequacy of this process and reconciles, to the greatest extent possible, the proponent's development desires with environmental protection and preservation.

As a planning tool it has both an information-gathering and a decision-making component which provide the decision maker with an objective basis for granting or denying approval for a proposed development; see M. I. Jeffery, Environmental Approvals in Canada (1989), at p. 1.2, {SS} 1.4; D. P. Emond, Environmental Assessment Law in Canada (1978), at p. 5. In short, environmental impact assessment is simply descriptive of a process of decision-making.

The Guidelines Order has merely added to the matters that federal decision makers should consider. If the Minister of Transport was specifically assigned the task of weighing concerns regarding fisheries in weighing applications to construct works in navigable waters, could there be any complaint that this was ultra vires? All that it would mean is that a decision maker charged with making one decision must also consider other matters that fall within federal power. I am not unmindful of what was said by counsel for the Attorney General for Saskatchewan who sought to characterize the Guidelines Order as a constitutional Trojan horse enabling the federal government, on the pretext of some narrow ground of federal jurisdiction, to conduct a far ranging inquiry into matters that are exclusively within provincial jurisdiction. However, on my reading of the Guidelines Order the "initiating department" assigned responsibility for conducting an initial assessment, and if required, the environmental review panel, are only given a mandate to examine matters directly related to the areas of federal responsibility affected. Thus, an initiating department or panel cannot use the Guidelines Order as a colourable device to invade areas of provincial jurisdiction which are unconnected to the relevant heads of federal power.

Because of its auxiliary nature, environmental impact assessment can only affect matters that are "truly in relation to an institution or activity that is otherwise within [federal] legislative jurisdiction"; see Devine v. Quebec (Attorney General), 1988 CanLII 20 \(SCC\), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 790, at p. 808. Given the necessary element of proximity that must exist between the impact assessment process and the subject matter of federal jurisdiction involved, this legislation can, in my view, be supported by the particular head of federal power invoked in each instance. In particular, the Guidelines Order prescribes a close nexus between the social effects that may be examined and the environmental effects generally. Section 4 requires that the social effects examined at the initial assessment stage be "directly related" to the potential environmental effects of a proposal, as does s. 25 in respect of the terms of reference under which an environmental assessment panel may operate. Moreover, where the Guidelines Order has application to a proposal because it affects an area of federal jurisdiction, as opposed to the other three bases for application enumerated in s. 6, the environmental effects to be studied can only be those which may have an impact on the areas of federal responsibility affected.

I should make it clear, however, that the scope of assessment is not confined to the particular head of power under which the Government of Canada has a decision-making responsibility within the meaning of the term "proposal". Such a responsibility, as I stated earlier, is a necessary condition to engage the process, but once the initiating department has thus been given authority to embark on an assessment, that review must consider the environmental effect on all areas of federal jurisdiction. There is no constitutional obstacle preventing Parliament from enacting legislation under several heads of power at the same time; see Jones v. Attorney General of New Brunswick, 1974 CanLII 164 \(SCC\), [1975] 2 S.C.R. 182, and Knox Contracting Ltd. v. Canada, 1990 CanLII 71 \(SCC\), [1990] 2 S.C.R. 338, at p. 350. In the case of the Guidelines Order, Parliament has conferred upon one institution (the "initiating department") the responsibility, in the exercise of its decision-making authority, for assessing the environmental implications on all areas of federal jurisdiction potentially affected. Here, the Minister of Transport, in his capacity of decision maker under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, is directed to consider the environmental impact of the dam on such areas of federal responsibility as navigable waters, fisheries, Indians and Indian lands, to name those most obviously relevant in the circumstances here.

In essence, then, the Guidelines Order has two fundamental aspects. First, there is the substance of the Guidelines Order dealing with environmental impact assessment to facilitate decision-making under the federal head of power through which a proposal is regulated. As I mentioned earlier, this aspect of the Guidelines Order can be sustained on the basis that it is legislation in relation to the relevant subject matters enumerated in s. 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867. The second aspect of the legislation is its procedural or organizational element that coordinates the process of assessment, which can in any given case touch upon several areas of federal responsibility, under the auspices of a designated decision maker, or in the vernacular of the Guidelines Order, the "initiating department". This facet of the legislation has as its object the regulation of the institutions and agencies of the Government of Canada as to the manner in which they perform their administrative functions and duties. This, in my view, is unquestionably intra vires Parliament. It may be viewed either as an adjunct of the particular legislative powers involved, or, in any event, be justifiable under the residuary power in s. 91.

The Court adopted a similar approach in the related situation that arose in Jones v. Attorney General of New Brunswick, supra. There this Court dealt with the constitutional validity, on a division of powers basis, of certain provisions of the Official Languages Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. O-2, the Evidence Act of New Brunswick, R.S.N.B. 1952, c. 74, and the Official Languages of New Brunswick Act, S.N.B. 1969, c. 14. The federal legislation made English and French the official languages of Canada, and the impugned provisions recognized both languages in the federal courts and in criminal proceedings. Laskin C.J. held, at p. 189:

. . . I am in no doubt that it was open to the Parliament of Canada to enact the Official Languages Act (limited as it is to the purposes of the Parliament and Government of Canada and to the institutions of that Parliament and Government) as being a law "for the peace, order and good government of Canada in relation to [a matter] not coming within the classes of subjects . . . assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces". The quoted words are in the opening paragraph of s. 91 of the British North America Act; and, in relying on them as constitutional support for the Official Languages Act, I do so on the basis of the purely residuary character of the legislative power thereby conferred. No authority need be cited for the exclusive power of the Parliament of Canada to legislate in relation to the operation and administration of the institutions and agencies of the Parliament and Government of Canada. Those institutions and agencies are clearly beyond provincial reach. [Emphasis added.]

The Court went on to uphold the federal legislation on the additional grounds that it was valid under Parliament's criminal jurisdiction (s. 91(27)) and federal power over federal courts (s. 101). Laskin C.J. also remarked that there was no constitutional impediment preventing Parliament from adding to the range of privileged or obligatory use of English and French in institutions or activities that are subject to federal control. For similar reasons, the provincial legislation providing for the use of both official languages in the courts of New Brunswick was upheld on the basis of its power over the administration of justice in the province (s. 92(14)).

In the end, I am satisfied that the Guidelines Order is in pith and substance nothing more than an instrument that regulates the manner in which federal institutions must administer their multifarious duties and functions. Consequently, it is nothing more than an adjunct of the federal legislative powers affected. In any event, it falls within the purely residuary aspect of the "Peace, Order, and good Government" power under s. 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Any intrusion into provincial matters is merely incidental to the pith and substance of the legislation. It must also be remembered that what is involved is essentially an information gathering process in furtherance of a decision-making function within federal jurisdiction, and the recommendations made at the conclusion of the information gathering stage are not binding on the decision maker. Neither the initiating department nor the panel are given power to subpoena witnesses, as was the case in Canadian National Railway Co. v. Courtois, 1988 CanLII 82 (SCC), [1988] 1 S.C.R. 868, where the Court held that certain provisions of the Act respecting occupational health and safety, S.Q. 1979, c. 63, which, inter alia, allowed the province to investigate accidents and issue remedial orders, were inapplicable to an interprovincial railway undertaking. I should add that Alberta's extensive reliance on that decision is misplaced. It is wholly distinguishable from the present case on several grounds, most importantly that the impugned provincial legislation there was made compulsory against a federal undertaking and was interpreted by the Court as regulating the undertaking.

For the foregoing reasons I find that the Guidelines Order is intra vires Parliament and would thus answer the constitutional question in the negative.

Discretion

The last substantive issue raised in this appeal is whether the Federal Court of Appeal erred in interfering with the motions judge's discretion not to grant the remedies sought, namely orders in the nature of certiorari and mandamus, on the grounds of unreasonable delay and futility. Stone J.A. found that the motions judge had erred in a way that warranted interference with the exercise of his discretion on both grounds.

The principles governing appellate review of a lower court's exercise of discretion were not extensively considered, only their application to this case. Stone J.A. cited Polylok Corp. v. Montreal Fast Print (1975) Ltd., 1983 CanLII 4999 (FCA), [1984] 1 F.C. 713 (C.A.), which in turn approved of the following statement of Viscount Simon L.C. in Charles Osenton & Co. v. Johnston, [1942] A.C. 130, at p. 138:

The law as to the reversal by a court of appeal of an order made by the judge below in the exercise of his discretion is well-established, and any difficulty that arises is due only to the application of well-settled principles in an individual case. The appellate tribunal is not at liberty merely to substitute its own exercise of discretion for the discretion already exercised by the judge. In other words, appellate authorities ought not to reverse the order merely because they would themselves have exercised the original discretion, had it attached to them, in a different way. But if the appellate tribunal reaches the clear conclusion that there has been a wrongful exercise of discretion in that no weight, or no sufficient weight, has been given to relevant considerations such as those urged before us by the appellant, then the reversal of the order on appeal may be justified.

That was essentially the standard adopted by this Court in Harekin v. University of Regina, 1979 CanLII 18 (SCC), [1979] 2 S.C.R. 561, where Beetz J. said, at p. 588:

Second, in declining to evaluate, difficult as it may have been, whether or not the failure to render natural justice could be cured in the appeal, the learned trial judge refused to take into consideration a major element for the determination of the case, thereby failing to exercise his discretion on relevant grounds and giving no choice to the Court of Appeal but to intervene. [Emphasis added.]

What, then, are the relevant considerations that should have been weighed by the motions judge in exercising his discretion? The first ground on which the motions judge exercised his discretion to refuse prerogative relief was delay. There is no question that unreasonable delay may bar an applicant from obtaining a discretionary remedy, particularly where that delay would result in prejudice to other parties who have relied on the challenged decision to their detriment, and the question of unreasonableness will turn on the facts of each case; see S. A. de Smith, Judicial Review of Administrative Action (4th ed. 1980), at p. 423, and D. P. Jones and A. S. de Villars, Principles of Administrative Law (1985), at pp. 373-74. The motions judge took cognizance of the period of time that elapsed between approval being granted by the Minister of Transport on September 18, 1987 and the filing of the notice of motion in this action on April 21, 1989, and the fact that the project was approximately 40 percent complete by that time. With respect, however, he ignored a considerable amount of activity undertaken by the respondent Society before taking this action, some of which was referred to by Stone J.A. I should note at this point that Stone J.A. was mistaken when he stated that this action was taken only two months after the Society became aware that approval had been granted. During cross-examination on her affidavit in support of the application, Ms. Kostuch, the vice-president of the Society, admitted that the Society became aware of the approval on February 16, 1988, some fourteen months before the present action was launched.

This was not the only action taken by the Society in opposition to the dam, however. The Society first brought an action in October 1987 seeking certiorari with prohibition in aid to quash an interim licence issued by the Minister of the Environment of Alberta pursuant to the Water Resources Act. On December 8, 1987 Moore C.J.Q.B. quashed all licences and permits issued by the Minister on the grounds that the department had not filed the requisite approvals with its application, that it had not referred the matter to the Energy Resources Conservation Board as required by s. 17 of the Act, and that the Minister's delegate had wrongfully exercised his discretion in waiving the public notice requirements set out in the Act: Friends of the Oldman River Society v. Alberta (Minister of the Environment) (1987), 1987 CanLII 3224 \(AB KB\), 85 A.R. 321. Another interim licence was issued on February 5, 1988 and again the respondent brought an application to quash that licence, principally on the ground that the requirement for giving public notice had been improperly waived. The application was dismissed by Picard J. who held that the appropriate material had been filed with the application for the licence and that the Minister's delegate had acted within his jurisdiction in waiving public notice: Friends of Oldman River Society v. Alberta (Minister of the Environment) (1988), 1988 CanLII 3884 \(AB KB\), 89 A.R. 339 (Q.B).

In the meantime, the respondent Society had been petitioning the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board to conduct a public hearing into the hydro-electric aspects of the dam pursuant to the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. The Board replied on December 18, 1987 refusing the Society's request for the reason that the dam did not constitute a "hydro development" within the meaning of the Act. An application was taken for leave to appeal that decision to the Alberta Court of Appeal which refused leave, agreeing with the Board that the project was not a hydro development, even though it was designed to allow for the future installation of a power generating facility: Friends of the Old Man River Society v. Energy Resources Conservation Board (Alta.) (1988), 1988 ABCA 63 \(CanLII\), 89 A.R. 280. Finally, Ms. Kostuch swore an information before a justice of the peace alleging that an offence had been committed under s. 35 of the Fisheries Act. After summonses were issued, the Attorney General for Alberta intervened and stayed the proceedings on August 19, 1988. I have already documented the correspondence directed to the federal Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries and Oceans through 1987 and 1988 in which members of the Society sought to have the Guidelines Order invoked, all to no avail. This action was taken shortly after the Trial Division of the Federal Court in Canadian Wildlife held that the Guidelines Order was binding on the Minister of the Environment.

In my view, this chronology of events represents a concerted and sustained effort on the part of the Society to challenge the legality of the process followed by Alberta to build this dam and the acquiescence of the appellant Ministers. While these events were taking place, construction of the dam continued, despite ongoing legal proceedings, and as at the date of the hearing before this Court, counsel for Alberta advised that the dam had been substantially completed. I can find no evidence that Alberta has suffered any prejudice from any delay in taking this action; there is no indication whatever that the province was prepared to accede to an environmental impact assessment under the Guidelines Order until it had exhausted all legal avenues, including an appeal to this Court. The motions judge did not weigh these considerations adequately or at all. Accordingly, the Court of Appeal was justified in interfering with the exercise of his discretion on this point.

The remaining ground for refusing to grant prerogative relief was on the basis of futility, namely that environmental impact assessment under the Guidelines Order would be needlessly repetitive in view of the studies that were conducted in the past. In my view this was not a proper ground to refuse a remedy in these circumstances. Prerogative relief should only be refused on the ground of futility in those few instances where the issuance of a prerogative writ would be effectively nugatory. For example, a case where the order could not possibly be implemented, such as an order of prohibition to a tribunal if nothing is left for it to do that can be prohibited; see de Smith, supra, at pp. 427-28. It is a different matter, though, where it cannot be determined a priori that an order in the nature of prerogative relief will have no practical effect. In the present case, aside from what Stone J.A. has already said concerning the qualitative differences between the process mandated by the Guidelines Order and what has gone before, it is not at all obvious that the implementation of the Guidelines Order even at this late stage will not have some influence over the mitigative measures that may be taken to ameliorate any deleterious environmental impact from the dam on an area of federal jurisdiction. I have therefore concluded that the Court of Appeal did not err in interfering with the motions judge's exercise of discretion to deny the relief sought.

On the matter of costs, it is my view that this is a proper case for awarding costs on a solicitor-client basis to the respondent Society, given the Society's circumstances and the fact that the federal Ministers were joined as appellants even though they did not earlier seek leave to appeal to this Court.

Disposition

For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal, with the exception that there shall be no order in the nature of mandamus directing the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to comply with the Guidelines Order, with solicitor and client costs to the respondent throughout. I would answer the constitutional question in the negative.

//Stevenson//

The following are the reasons delivered by

STEVENSON J. (dissenting) -- I have had the benefit of reading the judgment of my colleague La Forest J. and respectfully disagree with him on three points. In my view,

1. The Crown is not bound by the Navigable Waters Protection Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. N-22 ("N.W.P.A.").
2. The Federal Court of Appeal, 1990 CanLII 8039 (FCA), [1990] 2 F.C. 18, wrongly interfered with the discretion exercised by the motions judge in refusing the prerogative remedy.
3. The appellants should not be called upon to pay costs on a solicitor and client basis.

I agree with his analysis of the constitutional questions and with his interpretation of the provisions implementing the Environmental Assessment and Review Process Guidelines Order, SOR/84-467.

1. Crown Immunity

The question here is a simple one: is the Crown bound by the N.W.P.A.? For the purposes of this discussion, no distinction is to be drawn between the federal and provincial Crowns. The Crown is indivisible for this purpose: Alberta Government Telephones v. Canada (Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission), 1989 CanLII 78 (SCC), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 225, at pp. 272-73.

Pursuant to the Interpretation Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. I-21 (formerly R.S.C. 1970, c. I-23), the Crown is not bound by legislation unless it is mentioned or referred to in the legislation. This has been interpreted in Alberta Government Telephones, at p. 281, as follows:

It seems to me that the words "mentioned or referred to" in s. 16 [now s. 17] are capable of encompassing: (1) expressly binding words ("Her Majesty is bound"); (2) a clear intention to bind which, in Bombay terminology, "is manifest from the very terms of the statute", in other words, an intention revealed when provisions are read in the context of other textual provisions, as in Ouellette, supra; and, (3) an intention to bind where the purpose of the statute would be "wholly frustrated" if the government were not bound, or, in other words, if an absurdity (as opposed to simply an undesirable result) were produced. These three points should provide a guideline for when a statute has clearly conveyed an intention to bind the Crown.

All parties agree that there are no words in the N.W.P.A. "expressly binding" the Crown. In my view, it also cannot be said that a clear intention to bind the Crown "is manifest from the very terms of the statute". In making that determination, one is confined to the four corners of the statute. We must not forget that Province of Bombay v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay, [1947] A.C. 58 (P.C.), is no longer applicable in light of the express provisions of the Interpretation Act, except to the extent that it is adopted as it was in Alberta Government Telephones, which I take to be governing.

The respondent Society must therefore show that excluding the Crown would wholly frustrate the purpose of the N.W.P.A. or produce an absurdity. I am reminded by the Privy Council in Bombay that if the intention is to bind the Crown, "nothing is easier than to say so in plain words" (p. 63).

Does the failure to include the Crown work an absurdity? It is not enough that there be a gap: Alberta Government Telephones, at p. 283. The N.W.P.A. applies to private and municipal undertakings and a moment's reflection reveals that there are many non-governmental agencies whose activities are thus subject to the N.W.P.A. There is thus no emasculation of the N.W.P.A.

Nor are the courts to assume bad faith on the part of the Crown in carrying out activities which might otherwise be regulated.

If the Crown interferes with public rights of navigation, that wrong is remediable by action. In short, there is no ground for saying that the N.W.P.A. will be frustrated by actions of government. There is ample scope in the regulation of non-governmental activities, and it cannot be said the object of the N.W.P.A. is frustrated.

I must mention briefly an argument that in invoking the N.W.P.A., the appellant Alberta accepted the burden of the environmental regulation regime. There is no significant benefit in approval under the N.W.P.A. Tort actions may still lie. The N.W.P.A. does not expressly confer benefits of any type. Moreover, it is not clear that approval under s. 5 of the N.W.P.A. would necessarily provide any protection from possible actions in tort. In Champion v. City of Vancouver, 1917 CanLII 693 (SCC), [1918] 1 W.W.R. 216 (S.C.C.), Fitzpatrick C.J. of this Court held at pp. 218-19 that:

In considering the interpretation to be put upon this Act [the N.W.P.A., R.S.C. 1906, c. 115], it must be borne in mind that every work constructed in navigable waters is not necessarily such an interference with navigation as to constitute an illegal obstruction. It may, however, be so and, as such, liable to be removed by the proper authority. It is therefore of great advantage to persons proposing to construct works for which there is no sanction to be able to obtain beforehand the approval of the Governor-in-Council under sec. 7; the provision is, however, purely permissive and the section does not provide for any consequences following upon the approval, certainly not that it shall render legal anything which would be illegal. Any interference with a public right of navigation is a nuisance which the Courts can order abated notwithstanding any approval by the Governor-in-Council under sec. 7. [Emphasis added.]

2. Discretion

The remedies sought by the respondent Society are discretionary: Harekin v. University of Regina, 1979 CanLII 18 (SCC), [1979] 2 S.C.R. 561, at p. 574: "The principle that certiorari and mandamus are discretionary remedies by nature cannot be disputed", and D. P. Jones and A. S. de Villars, Principles of Administrative Law (1985), at pp. 372-73.

Interference by an appellate court is only warranted when a lower court has "gone wrong in principle" or "has given no weight (or no sufficient weight) to those considerations which ought to have weighed with [it]": Polylok Corp. v. Montreal Fast Print (1975) Ltd., 1983 CanLII 4999 (FCA), [1984] 1 F.C. 713 (C.A.), at p. 724.

The Federal Court of Appeal was clearly wrong in dismissing the motions judge's conclusion on the question of delay, which it was "not persuaded" was well-founded in principle. The Court of Appeal says the respondent Society did not become aware of the grant of the approval under the N.W.P.A. until some two months before the proceedings were actually launched. In fact, it knew of the approval some 14 months beforehand and the principal promoters of the Society knew even before then.

The common law has always imposed a duty on an applicant to act promptly in seeking extraordinary remedies:

Owing to their discretionary nature, extraordinary and ordinary review remedies must be exercised promptly. Donaldson J. of the Court of Appeal of England aptly explained the principle in R. v. Aston University Senate [[1969] 2 Q.B. 538, at p. 555]: "The prerogative remedies are exceptional in their nature and should not be made available to those who sleep upon their rights".

(R. Dussault and L. Borgeat, Administrative Law (2nd ed. 1990), vol. 4, at pp. 468-69.)

That duty was recognized by Laskin C.J. on behalf of this Court in P.P.G. Industries Canada Ltd. v. Attorney General of Canada, 1975 CanLII 204 \(SCC\), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 739, at p. 749:

In my opinion, discretionary bars are as applicable to the Attorney General on motions to quash as they admittedly are on motions by him for prohibition or in actions for declaratory orders. The present case is an eminently proper one for the exercise of discretion to refuse the relief sought by the Attorney General. Foremost among the factors which persuade me to this view is the unexplained two year delay in moving against the Anti-dumping Tribunal's decision. [Emphasis added.]

The importance of acting promptly when seeking prerogative relief has also been recognized in much of the legislation now governing judicial review. For example, Ontario's Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. J.1, empowers a court to extend the prescribed time for initiating an application for judicial review, but only where it is satisfied that there are prima facie grounds for relief and no substantial prejudice or hardship will result to those who would be affected by the delay (s. 5). Under British Columbia's Judicial Review Procedure Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 209, an application for judicial review may be barred by the affluxion of time if a court considers that substantial prejudice or hardship will result by reason of the delay (s. 11). The Federal Court Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. F-7, s. 28(2) stipulates that an application for judicial review before the Federal Court of Appeal must be made within ten days from the time the impugned decision or order is first communicated. That time limit can only be extended with leave of the court. In Alberta, Rule 753.11(1) of the Alberta Rules of Court (Alta. Reg. 390/68) stipulates that where the relief sought is the setting aside of a decision or act, the application for judicial review must be filed and served within six months after that decision or act. Finally, in art. 835.1 of Quebec's Code of Civil Procedure, R.S.Q., c. C-25, which applies to all extraordinary remedies, it is stipulated that motions must be served "within a reasonable time". The Court of Appeal of Quebec held in Syndicat des employés du commerce de Rivière-du-Loup (section Émilio Boucher, C.S.N.) v. Turcotte, 1984 CanLII 2812 (QC CA), [1984] C.A. 316, at p. 318, that: [TRANSLATION] "This article [835.1] merely codified the common law rule that the remedy must be exercised within a reasonable time".

By the time this application was brought, the dam was 40 per cent complete. A significant amount of public money had already been spent. It is a matter of public record that individual members of the respondent Society were aware of the approval issued under the N.W.P.A. prior to February, 1988. Even if such were not the case, the respondent Society still could have launched its action in early 1988. At that time, major construction had not yet taken place. Had the respondent Society initiated proceedings then as compared to April of 1989, the appellant Alberta would have been in a much better position objectively to assess any potential legal risk associated with continuing. Faced with the possibility of invalid federal approval, it may well have chosen at that point not to put out the public funds that it did.

After years of extensive planning, innumerable public hearings, environmental studies and reports, and after the establishment of various councils and committees for the purpose of reviewing proposals that were put forward, the appellant Alberta embarked upon an enormous undertaking to meet the needs of its constituents. It did so at the expense of the public. And it did so after having been advised by the federal government that it could legitimately proceed. The Oldman River dam no doubt necessitates comprehensive administration. Its construction also involves a significant number of contracts with third parties. Given the enormity of the project and the interests at stake, it was unreasonable for the respondent Society to wait 14 months before challenging the decision of the Minister of Transport. In the context of this case, it was imperative that the respondent Society respect the common law duty to act promptly.

Had the respondent Society acted more promptly, the appellant Alberta would have been able to assess its position without regard to the economic and administrative commitment that was a reality by the time these proceedings were launched. It is impossible to conclude that the appellant Alberta was not prejudiced by the delay. Moreover, the motions judge made a finding on prejudice, and found that there was no justification for waiting to launch the attack until the dam was nearly 40 per cent completed.

The rationale for requiring applicants for prerogative relief to act promptly is to enable their erstwhile respondents to act upon the authority given to them. The applicant cannot invoke the fact that the respondent did what he or she was legally entitled to do as an answer to its own delay. Such a view would put a premium on delay and deliver the wrong message to those who plan prerogative challenges.

My colleague, La Forest J., would also give some weight to the fact that the appellant Alberta was aware of the opposition of the respondent Society and others because of the other unsuccessful challenges by the Society and others. In my view, those challenges are completely irrelevant to this question. Those attacks were all ill-founded, and the appellant Alberta was not bound to expect that these peripheral and collateral proceedings presaged a fundamental attack on the original permit. The fact that detractors are harassing a travelling train does not put one on guard against the proposition that they are going to attack the authority to depart in the first instance. In my opinion, those activities need not have been taken into consideration by the motions judge. None of the activities undertaken by the Society or its members precluded the respondent Society from undertaking this challenge.

The activities referred to by my colleague were qualitatively different from that which is sought in this action, and irrelevant to the issue at hand. The applications for certiorari brought by the respondent Society in October 1987 and early 1988 respectively, were directed at interim licences issued by Alberta's Minister of Environment pursuant to that province's Water Resources Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. W-5. The petitioning of the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board focused on the hydro-electric aspects of the dam. The information sworn before a justice of the peace alleged an offence pursuant to the federal Fisheries Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. F-14.

This action centres on the constitutionality and applicability of the Environmental Assessment and Review Process Guidelines Order. It raises new and different issues. The previous efforts of the respondent Society were not necessary preliminaries; they were separate and distinct from the relief sought here. It is my view that in determining whether he should exercise his discretion against the respondent Society, Jerome A.C.J. was obliged to look only at those factors which he considered were directly connected to the application before him. He was clearly in the best position to assess the relevancy of that put forward by the parties. Interference with his exercise of discretion is not warranted unless it can be said with certainty that he was wrong in doing what he did. For the reasons stated above, I am of the opinion that the test has not been met in this case.

3. Costs

I see no justification for awarding the respondent Society costs on a solicitor and client basis. The general rule in this Court is that a successful party recovers costs on the usual party and party basis. That was the rule applied by the courts below. My colleague proposes an award of solicitor and client costs extending to the courts below. I see no ground for suggesting they were in error, and I see no ground for our departing from our own general rule. Public interest groups must be prepared to abide by the same principles as apply to other litigants. Were we to produce special rules for such litigants, we would jeopardize an important principle: those undertaking litigation must be prepared to accept some responsibility for the costs. I see nothing here to justify calling upon the taxpayers to meet the solicitor and client costs of this party.

4. Conclusion

I would allow the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed, with the exception that there should be no order in the nature of mandamus directing the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to comply with the Guidelines Order.

Appellant's and respondent's separation was marked by a protracted series of court battles. Appellant was awarded custody of the couple's three daughters and respondent was granted access subject to court imposed restrictions arising from appellant's objection to his religious activity with the children. Respondent was ordered not to discuss the Jehovah's Witness religion with the children, take them to any religious services, canvassing or meetings, or expose them to religious discussions with third parties without appellant's prior consent. Organized religion was not important to appellant although she wanted the children to be raised within the United Church.

The two older daughters liked their father but came to dislike his religious instruction to the extent that it was damaging his relationship with them and was contributing to the stress the children were experiencing in adjusting to their parents' separation.

The trial judge also made orders for the distribution of property and for costs. The respondent's interest in the matrimonial home was ordered transferred to the appellant because any remaining interest in the house, after respondent paid what was already owing to appellant, was to be transferred in the form of lump sum maintenance. Respondent was found responsible for debts incurred by the appellant for the support of herself and the children pending maintenance and for a debt made to a family corporation. Costs were awarded on a solicitor-client basis against respondent, his lawyer and a religious society not a party to the proceedings.

Respondent appealed. The Court of Appeal set aside the limitations on religious discussion and attendance, on the ground that it was in the best interests of the children that they come to know their non-custodial parent fully, including his religious beliefs, unless the evidence established the existence of or the potential for real harm or the child did not consent to being subject to the access parent's views or practices. The Court of Appeal also altered the division of property and the awards of costs made by the trial judge. Appellant appealed these rulings to this Court.

Four constitutional questions queried (1) whether ss. 16(8) and 17(5) of the Divorce Act (requiring that judicial decisions regarding custody and access be made "in the best interests of the child") denied the Charter guarantees of freedom of religion, of expression and of association (s. 2(a), (b), and (d)), and if so, (2) were they justified under s. 1; (3) whether ss. 16(8) and 17(5) violated the equality guarantee of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (s. 15(1)), and (4) if so, were they justified under s. 1. The Court considered the requirements of the "best interests of the child" and whether this standard infringed the guarantees of freedom of religion and expression under the Charter. A main consideration was unrestricted access by a non-custodial parent and the conditions necessary to curtail that access.

Held (L'Heureux-Dubé J. dissenting in the result): The appeal should be allowed in part.

The issues should be decided as follows:

1. The test regarding access is the best interests of the child (L'Heureux-Dubé J., La Forest and Gonthier JJ., and Iacobucci and Cory JJ.). McLachlin J. suggests that in cases such as this harm is usually an important element in determining the best interests of the child. Sopinka J. would recognize a threshold element of harm.

2. Sections 16(8) and 17(5) of the Divorce Act do not violate ss. 2(a), (b), (d) or 15(1) of the Charter. L'Heureux-Dubé J. (and La Forest and Gonthier JJ.) found the Charter to be inapplicable. McLachlin J. found the impugned legislation did not violate the Charter. Cory and Iacobucci JJ. agreed that there was no Charter violation. Sopinka J. found that the Charter applied and could only be overridden in limited circumstances.

3. The restrictions on access should be removed (L'Heureux-Dubé J. and La Forest and Gonthier JJ. dissenting).

4. The judgment dealing with property and financial matters and the award of costs should be varied (L'Heureux-Dubé J. dissenting).

Best Interest of the Child, Charter Considerations and Access

Per L'Heureux-Dubé J.: The power of the custodial parent is not a "right" with independent value granted by courts for the benefit of the parent. Rather, the child has a right to a parent who will look after his or her best interests and the custodial parent a duty to ensure, protect and promote the child's best interests. That duty includes the sole and primary responsibility to oversee all aspects of day-to-day life and long-term well-being, as well as major decisions with respect to education, religion, health and well-being. The non-custodial parent retains certain residual rights over the child as one of his or her two natural guardians.

Child placement decisions should safeguard the child's need for continuity of relationships, reflect the child's (not the adult's) sense of time, and take into account the law's inability to supervise interpersonal relationships and the limits of knowledge to make long-range predictions. This need for continuity generally requires that the custodial parent have the autonomy to raise the child as he or she sees fit without interference with that authority by the state or the non-custodial parent. A custody award is a matter of whose decisions to prefer, as opposed to which decisions to prefer. Courts cannot make the necessary day-to-day decisions which affect the best interests of the child. Once a court has determined who is the appropriate custodial parent, it must presume that that parent will act in the best interests of the child.

Decisions are made according to the best interests of the child without the benefit of a presumption in favour of either parent. The Act envisages contact between the child and each of his or her parents as a worthy goal which should be in the best interests of the child. Maximum contact, however, is not an unbridled objective and must be curtailed wherever the welfare of the child requires it.

The right to access is limited in scope and is conditioned and governed by the best interests of the child. The legislation makes it quite explicit that only the best interests of the child as it is comprehensively understood should be considered in custody and access orders. The role of the access parent is that of a very interested observer, giving love and support to the child in the background. He or she has the right to know but not the right to be consulted. Access rights recognize that the best interests of the child normally require that the relationship developed with both parents prior to the divorce or separation be continued and fostered. The right to access and the circumstances in which it takes place must be perceived from the vantage point of the child. Wherever the relationship to the non-custodial parent conflicts with the best interests of the child, the furtherance and protection of the child's best interests must take priority over the desires and interests of the parent.

As the ultimate goal of access is the continuation of a relationship which is of significance and support to the child, access must be crafted to preserve and promote that which is healthy and helpful in that relationship so that it may survive to achieve its purpose. Sources of ongoing conflict which threaten to damage or prevent the continuation of a meaningful relationship should be removed or mitigated. Notwithstanding a general concern about the vulnerability of access rights to the caprices of a vengeful custodial parent, courts should not be too quick to presume that the access concerns of the custodial parent are unrelated to the best interests of the child. Courts should also not be blind to issues, such as financial support, which form part of the broader context in which these rights are exercised. The access parent has no obligation to exercise those rights and cannot be forced to comply with such an order even if that contact has been determined to be in the child's best interest.

Where there is a genuine problem with access, the non-custodial parent is not without recourse in any case. This stems from the statutory directive to facilitate access where it is in the child's best interests and the role of the judge as the arbiter of those interests in the case of a dispute between the parents. Generally, courts will grant liberal access to the non-custodial parent and usually this is consistent with the best interests of the child. Parents will also normally respect their children's wishes and best interests with regard to access. When disagreements between parents do reach the courts, the judge must always draw the line in favour of the best interests of the child, from a child-centred perspective.

The best interests of the child cannot be equated with the mere absence of harm: it encompasses a myriad of considerations. Courts must attempt to balance such considerations as the age, physical and emotional constitution and psychology of both the child and his or her parents and the particular milieu in which the child will live. One of the most significant factors in many cases will be the relationship that the child entertains with his or her parents. Since custody and access decisions are pre-eminently exercises in discretion, the wide latitude under the best interests test permits courts to respond to the spectrum of factors which can both positively and negatively affect a child. What may constitute stressful or damaging circumstances for one child may not necessarily have the same effect on another.

The most common presumption now governing the best interests test is the primary caregiver presumption. It explicitly restores the values of commitment and demonstrated ability to nurture the child and recognizes the obligations and supports the authority of the parent engaged in day to day tasks of childrearing.

The order of the trial judge is not subject to the Charter. Even if it were, the best interests test is nevertheless value neutral and does not, on its face, violate any Charter right. Its objective, the protection of a vulnerable segment of society, is completely consonant with the Charter's values. Broad judicial discretion is crucial to the proper implementation of the legislative objective of securing the best interests of the child. Such discretion in a legislative provision does not of itself give rise to an inference of Charter infringement. It cannot be considered in the absence of an examination of the legislative objectives and must be rationally tied to those objectives.

The standard for finding a legislative provision unconstitutional because of vagueness is high. The provisions need only permit the framing of an intelligible legal debate with respect to the objectives contained in the legislation. The best interests test is not so uncertain as to be incapable of guiding a consideration of the factors relevant to custody and access determinations. The fact that it must be applied to the facts of each case does not militate in favour of its unconstitutionality.

The vagueness of a legislative provision cannot be examined in the abstract but must be considered within the context of the particular legislative objectives in question, bearing in mind that some objectives will require a panoply of judicial remedies for their meaningful fulfilment. Among the factors with which courts should be concerned when the vagueness of a law is at issue are: (a) the need for flexibility and the interpretive role of the courts, (b) the impossibility of achieving absolute certainty, a standard of intelligibility being more appropriate and (c) the possibility that many varying judicial interpretations of a given disposition may exist and perhaps coexist.

The custodial parent need not show harm in order to restrict access to the children by the non-custodial parent. There is no rationale for defining the best interests of the child with the absence of harm. Nothing in the Act mandates or even suggests that "real danger of significant harm to the child" be the sole consideration in matters of custody and access. Indeed, the harm test would require courts to ignore the very factors which are set out in the Act and invert the basic focus of the inquiry into custody and access. The welfare of children is put at considerable risk if the prospect of harm becomes the sole prerequisite for restrictions on access. The best interests of the child is not simply the right to be free of demonstrable harm; it is the positive right to the best possible arrangements in the circumstances of the parties. The harm test cannot meet the legal system's primary goal in divorce situations -- minimizing the adverse effects of children. This goal requires a vision of the best interests of the child that is more than neutral to the conditions under which custody and access occur. Judges must exercise their discretion to prevent harm to the child rather than merely identify or establish its presence after the damage is done.

Expert evidence should not be routinely required to establish the best interests of the child. Expert testimony, while helpful in some circumstances, is often inconclusive and contradictory because such assessments are both speculative and may be affected by the professional values and biases of the assessors themselves. Experts are not always better placed than parents to assess the needs of the child. The person involved in day to day care may observe changes in the child that could go unnoticed by anyone else and normally has the best vantage point from which to assess the interests of the child. The custodial parent, therefore, will often provide the most reliable and complete source of information to the judge on the needs and interests of that child. The importance of the evidence of children in custody and access disputes, too, must be emphasized.

Restrictions on access do not necessarily prevent children from coming to know their parents in meaningful ways. Interpreting the goal of maximum contact as requiring unrestricted access may defeat the Act's objective if the pre-eminence of unlimited "knowledge" results in the ultimate destruction of the relationship. In this case, the purpose of the restrictions was to ensure that the children will continue to know their father "at all".

Freedom of religion and freedom of expression are public in nature and encompass the freedom of the individual from state compulsion or restraints. The state's role in custody and access decisions does not transform the essentially private character of parent-child interchanges into activity subject to Charter scrutiny. Legitimate questions may arise about the role of the state, and hence the application of the Charter in regulating other aspects of family law. A valid purpose can hardly be served, however, by importing the discourse of freedom of expression and religion into orders made in the resolution of custody and access disputes. Once the best interests test itself has been found to accord with Charter values, the trial judge's order itself is not subject to further constitutional review, as the necessary state infringement of religious rights required to sustain a Charter challenge is not present. The principles enunciated in Dolphin Delivery apply as custody and access matters are essentially private in nature and there exists no state action to be impugned.

Decisions regarding custody and access must not be based on the parents' faith. The religion of the parties, however, may be relevant as one of the circumstances to be assessed in the determination of the best interests of the child. Where there is conflict over religion, the court is not engaged in adjudicating a "war of religion" and the religious beliefs of the parties themselves are not on trial. Rather, it is the manner in which such beliefs are practised together with the impact and effect they have on the child which must be considered. In all cases where the effects of religious practices are at issue, the best interests of the child must prevail.

Ordinarily, the exposure of a child to different religions or beliefs may be of value to the child. Where religion becomes a source of conflict between the parents or is the very cause of the marriage breakdown, it is generally not in the best interests of the child and may in some circumstances be very detrimental for the child to be drawn into the controversy over religious matters. Where there is conflict over religion, courts must secure the longstanding authority of the custodial parent to make decisions over religious activities. This ensures that stress occasioned by such issues does not become a continuing and ultimately destructive feature in the life of the child after divorce.

Freedom of religion is not an absolute value. Here, powerful competing interests must also be recognized, not the least of which, in addition to the best interests of the children, are the freedoms of expression and religion of the children themselves.

Respondent's religious beliefs and practices and his general rights of access were not threatened. The restrictions were aimed at reducing the area of conflict which had arisen on account of the respondent's behaviour with his children during access and the effects of that behaviour on their best interests. Much of the stress the children were experiencing was related to their resistance to becoming involved in their father's religious practices. The restrictions were to further the best interests of these children by removing the source of conflict, particularly as the ultimate purpose of the restrictions was to preserve the relationship between the respondent and his children. Evidence supported the conclusion that the respondent would not respect the wishes of the children without an order to do so.

Per La Forest and Gonthier JJ.: Agreement was expressed for the reasons of L'Heureux-Dubé J. holding that access be determined on the basis of what is in the best interests of the child and for her resolution of the constitutional issue.

Per Iacobucci and Cory JJ.: The best interests of the child standard does not violate in ss. 2(a), (b), (d) and 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms substantially for the reasons given by L'Heureux-Dubé and McLachlin JJ. No opinion was expressed on the questions of whether a Charter infringement, if found, would be so trivial as not to warrant Charter protection and of whether or not the Charter applies to judicial orders made in custody or access proceedings.

For many of the reasons advanced by L'Heureux-Dubé J., access to children should be determined on the basis of what is in the best interests of the child. Expert evidence, while sometimes helpful, is not always necessary to establish the best interests of the child; that question can be determined normally from the evidence of parties themselves and the testimony, where appropriate, of the children concerned.

The matters of the children's attending religious services with the respondent and accompanying him on his proselytizing activities were resolved by the respondent's undertaking to respect his children's wishes in this regard. The order forbidding the respondent from discussing his religion was not supported by a proper application of the best interests of the child test. Indeed, curtailment of explanatory or discursive conversations between a parent and his or her child should only be rarely ordered.

Per McLachlin J.: The Divorce Act mandates that, on matters of access, the ultimate test in all cases is the best interest of the child. This is a positive test, encompassing a wide variety of factors, including the desirability of maximizing contact between the child and each parent if compatible with the best interests of the child. The custodial parent has no "right" to limit access. The judge must consider all factors relevant to determining what is in the child's best interests. The risk of harm to the child, while not the ultimate legal test, may also be a factor to be considered. This is particularly so where the issue is the quality of access -- what the access parent may say or do with the child. In such cases, it will generally be relevant to consider whether the conduct in question poses a risk of harm to the child which outweighs the benefits of a free and open relationship which permits the child to know the access parent as he or she is. The judge must act not on his or her personal views but on the evidence.

The legislative provision for the "best interests of the child" does not limit and therefore does not violate the Charter right to religious and expressive freedom. Religious expression not in the best interests of the child is not protected by the Charter because the guarantee of freedom of religion is not absolute and does not extend to religious activity which harms or interferes with the parallel rights of other people. Conduct not in the best interests of the child, even absent the risk of harm, amounts to an "injury" or intrusion on the rights of others and is clearly not protected by this Charter guarantee. "Injure" in this context is a broad concept. To deprive a child of what a court has found to be in his or her best interests is to "injure", in the sense of not doing what is best for the child. A child's vulnerability heightens the need for protection and any error should be made in favour of the child's best interests and not in favour of the exercise of the alleged parental right. An additional factor which may come into play in the case of older children is the "parallel right" of others to hold and manifest beliefs and opinions of their own.

The ambit of freedom of expression is broader than that of freedom of conscience and religion because even harmful expression may be protected. Some forms of harmful expression, however, are not constitutionally protected: violence or threats of violence or a direct attack on the physical integrity and liberty of another. Criminal conduct is an indication, although not a conclusive one, that expressive conduct is constitutionally unprotected.

A prima facie case for protection under the guarantee of freedom of expression can be made out here. The expression challenged does not take the form of the non-protected categories of expression. The harm done, if any, is of a psychological nature.

A purposive approach to Charter interpretation requires that associated rights -- religious freedom and freedom of expression -- be interpreted in a consistent and coherent manner. The ambit of a particular right or freedom, moreover, cannot be defined in the abstract but rather should be defined in the context of the particular activity in question.

The teaching of religious beliefs and practices to one's children, while it has an expressive aspect, is predominantly religious. In seeking to reconcile the rights of freedom of religion and freedom of expression in this context, it is the religious aspect which must dominate. Reading the two guarantees together, the limits of the guarantee of freedom of expression should govern in the context of religious instruction of children.

The custodial parent does not have the "right" to determine limits on access. The only question to be considered, where limitation of access is in issue, is what is in the best interests of the child. The custodial parent's obligation to make certain basic decisions as to how the child is educated (which may extend to religious matters) does not automatically mean that religious contacts with the access parent of a different faith are to be excluded. The failure of the child to consent to instruction on the part of the access parent does not necessarily preclude such instruction's being in the child's best interests.

The benefits which might enure to the children from coming to know their father as he was -- as a devoutly religious man devoted to the Jehovah's Witness faith -- were not considered at trial and no reference was made to Parliament's instruction that a child have as much contact with both parents as is compatible with his or her best interests. The question of whether there was any evidence of a risk of harm to the children which might offset the benefit of full access to their father's values, including those related to religion, was not adequately considered. While access may be limited in some circumstances on grounds unrelated to harm, where the issue is whether entirely lawful discussions and activities between the access parent and the child should be curtailed, the judge should enquire into whether the conduct poses a risk of harming the child. The evidence did not establish that harm was being caused to the children.

The order restricting respondent's access was unnecessary given his undertaking and the order enjoining him from preventing blood transfusions was unnecessary from a practical point of view. Parents should not make disparaging comments about the other parent's religion, but the matter might best be left to the parents' good sense.

Per Sopinka J.: While the "best interests of the child" test is the ultimate determination in deciding issues of custody and access, it must be reconciled with the Charter. General language in a statute which, in its breadth, potentially confers the power to override Charter values must be interpreted to respect those values. Here, the best interests test must be interpreted to allow the Charter right to freedom of religious expression to be overridden only if its exercise would occasion consequences that involve more than inconvenience, upset or disruption to the child and incidentally to the custodial parent.

The long-term value to a child of a meaningful relationship with both parents is a policy that is affirmed in the Divorce Act. Each parent, therefore, can engage in those activities which contribute to identify the parent for what he or she really is. The access parent is not expected to act out a part or assume a phony lifestyle during access periods. The policy favouring activities that promote a meaningful relationship is not displaced unless there is a substantial risk of harm to the child.

The best interests of a child are more aptly served by a law which recognizes the right of that child to a meaningful post-divorce relationship with both parents. The "rights" must be distributed between the custodial and the access parent so as to encourage such a relationship. The traditional notion of guardianship giving the custodial parent the absolute right to exercise full control over the child, even when the other parent is exercising his or her right of access, is at odds with this concept.

"Harm", in this context, connotes an adverse effect on the child's upbringing that is more than transitory. The impugned exercise by the access parent must be shown to create a substantial risk that the child's physical, psychological or moral well-being will be adversely affected. Exposure to new experiences and ideas may upset children and cause them considerable discomfort but these experiences are not necessarily in the long-term best interests of the child. Similarly, conflict between parents on many matters including religion is not uncommon, but in itself cannot be assumed to be harmful unless it produces a prolonged acrimonious atmosphere.

Risk of substantial harm must be shown if religious expression is to be restricted in applying the best interests of the child test. The statutory test in s. 16\(10\) of the Divorce Act does not constitute a limitation on freedom of religious expression. This freedom does not extend to protect conduct which is harmful to others. However, the concept of harm should not be expanded to reach the conclusion that anything which is not in the best interests of the children is injurious within the meaning of s. 2\(b\) and thus not protected by the Charter.

Financial Considerations and Costs

Per McLachlin J.: A judge, to fix lump sum maintenance, must fix it in a sum certain with reference to the principles applicable to such an award. The goal of conveying the entire interest in the matrimonial home to the wife did not support an award of lump sum maintenance; more was required. There was ample basis here for an order under s. 51 of the Family Relations Act awarding appellant a greater portion of the family assets because respondent, for a considerable time, paid little or nothing for the support of the family. The debts incurred during this period can serve as a consideration supporting reduction of respondent's interest in the family property. The equity in the home was not substantial and respondent was permitted to retain other assets.

The trial judge, in effecting a de facto reapportionment of the interest in the family assets to do justice, as was permitted on the facts and the law, did not expressly allude to the factors for reallocation. This omission should not result in a new trial being ordered because of the length and cost of the current litigation. The result achieved by the trial judge should be endorsed because the evidence was capable of supporting an order for reallocation of the parties' interest in the family assets to the extent required to give the appellant the entire interest in the matrimonial home.

The money owed by the family's jewelry corporation was not, in law, a debt for which respondent was personally liable. Only the corporation was liable. The debt appellant incurred to support herself and the children before she applied for maintenance is similarly unenforceable against respondent as a debt, although it could be taken into consideration in an order for reduction of his interest in the family assets.

Solicitor-client costs are generally awarded only where there has been reprehensible, scandalous or outrageous conduct on the part of one of the parties. The facts that an application has little merit and that part of the cost of the litigation may have been paid for by others do not justify awarding solicitor-client costs.

No order for costs should have been made against respondent's barrister. Costs are awarded as compensation for the successful party, not to punish a lawyer. Any member of the legal profession might be subject to a compensatory order for costs if it is shown that repetitive and irrelevant material, and excessive motions and applications, characterized the proceedings in which he or she was involved, and that the lawyer acted in bad faith in encouraging this abuse and delay. The courts have jurisdiction to make such an award, often under statute and as part of their inherent jurisdiction to control abuse of process and contempt of court. The proceedings here, despite their length and acrimonious progress, did not fall within these characterizations. Courts, moreover, must be extremely cautious in awarding costs personally against a lawyer, given the duties upon a lawyer to guard confidentiality of instructions and to bring forward with courage even unpopular causes. A lawyer should not be placed in a situation where his or her fear of an adverse order of costs may conflict with these fundamental duties of his or her profession.

Since the Society did not appear as a party, the costs awarded against it must be taken to be the equivalent of an award for the tort of maintenance. A person must intervene "officially or improperly" to be liable for the tort of maintenance. Provision of financial assistance to a litigant by a non-party will not always constitute maintenance. Funding by a relative or out of charity must be distinguished from cases where a person wilfully and improperly stirs up litigation and strife. The society's support was "out of charity and religious sympathy" and so did not constitute maintenance. It did not put forward respondent in an attempt to escape liability for costs. Its interest in the constitutional issue was insufficient to distinguish it from interveners who appear on constitutional cases and who have never been liable for costs.

Per La Forest and Gonthier JJ.: The reasons of McLachlin J. were agreed with on the property and monetary issues and on the principles governing costs.

Per Iacobucci and Cory JJ.: The reasons of McLachlin J. were agreed with on the property, monetary and costs issues.

Per L'Heureux-Dubé J. (dissenting): The reasons of the trial judge on the issues of maintenance, division of property and costs were agreed with.

The reasons of La Forest and Gonthier JJ. were delivered by LA FOREST J. -- I have had the advantage of reading the reasons of my colleagues. I am in agreement with the reasons of Justice L'Heureux-Dubé that the issue of access should be determined on the basis of what is in the best interest of the child. I also agree with her on the constitutional issue.

On the property and monetary issues, I am in agreement with the reasons of Justice McLachlin. I also agree with her on the principles that should govern costs and accordingly with the order of the Court of Appeal respecting the costs at trial. However, since the appellant was largely successful in the final result, I would allow her costs on this appeal and the Court of Appeal.

Accordingly, I would allow the appeal and restore the order of the trial judge on all matters except the monetary issues, which I would dispose of in the manner proposed by McLachlin J. I would award the appellant her costs at trial as set forth by the Court of Appeal, as well as costs on a party and party basis in this Court and in the Court of Appeal.

The following are the reasons delivered by

L'HEUREUX-DUBÉ J. (dissenting in result) -- I have had the advantage of reading the opinion of my colleague, Justice McLachlin. With great deference, I disagree both with her reasons and the result she has reached. Since I do not characterize the issue quite as my colleague does, I will pursue my own analysis.

The main issue in this case, in my view, concerns access by a non-custodial parent to his children whose custody was granted to the other parent. More precisely, this Court must determine whether curtailment of access is warranted in the circumstances of this case. The focus of the inquiry is the standard applicable to such a determination. According to the Court of Appeal, the test is one of harm to the children. I disagree. In my view, the only applicable test is the best interests of the children, assessed from a child-centred perspective, a test which is mandated by the Divorce Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 3 (2nd Supp.) (the "Act"), as well as provincial legislation and which is universally applied and constitutionally sound. While the respondent, the father in this case, raises the issues of freedom of religion and expression and the infringement of his guarantees under s. 2(a) and (b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (the "Charter") due to the trial judge's order restricting access to his children, these questions simply do not arise in the circumstances of this case. If they do, I agree with my colleague that there is no infringement of the Charter.

On the related issues of maintenance, division of property and costs, I agree with the trial judge for the reasons that she expressed at length, given her privileged vantage point and her findings of fact. Accordingly, I will deal only with the main issue: access.

Facts and Judgments

Since the facts leading to the dispute between the parties have been set out by my colleague, I will only point out those most relevant to my subsequent discussion.

The parties, who had two children when they first separated in February, 1987, resumed cohabitation and finally separated in August, 1987, shortly after the birth of their third child. It appears from the evidence that the breakdown of their marriage was due, to a great extent, to religious differences between the parties. The respondent became involved, unbeknownst to the appellant, in the Jehovah's Witnesses faith some two years before the separation. The children had been baptized in the United Church, and the appellant, an Anglican, apparently did not favour any involvement for herself or the children in her husband's new faith. At the time, the older children were six and eight years of age.

Upon separation, it was common ground between the parties that the appellant should have custody of the children and they have remained at all times since in the care of their mother. On July 12, 1988, the appellant brought an application for divorce and sought spousal and child support, interim and permanent custody of the children and an order enjoining the respondent from inculcating the children in the Jehovah's Witness faith or involving them in church activities. The respondent brought a cross-application for interim joint custody with care and control to the appellant and a declaration that the restrictions sought by his wife violated his and the children's rights under the Charter.

In the interim order of August 16, 1988, Scarth L.J.S.C. dismissed the respondent's motion for a declaration and order pursuant to s. 24 of the Charter. He granted custody to the appellant, awarded her $3,500 a month in spousal and child support and specified the following restrictions on the respondent's access:

- a) the Respondent will not take the said children of the marriage to the Respondent's church without the Petitioner's consent and if the Petitioner withholds consent, the Respondent may make application to this court;
- b) the Respondent will not suggest that the three children of the marriage will have to separate from the Petitioner if she does not convert to the Jehovah's Witnesses [sic] faith, or that the Petitioner will be punished by God for failing to adhere to that faith;
- c) the Respondent will not deprecate the Petitioner's religion in the presence of the three infant children of the marriage;
- d) the Respondent is enjoined from preventing the said infants from having blood transfusions in the event blood transfusions are required and the Petitioner shall be solely responsible for all health care decisions and choices relative to the said infant children of the marriage.

The respondent appealed the order and instituted a number of further applications in which he sought to vary the interim custody order and the terms and conditions imposed on access. He also applied to set the dates and times of access and sought overnight access. The appeal of the interim order was dismissed by the B.C. Court of Appeal on September 23, 1988 and the applications for interim and permanent custody of the children and variation of the restrictions were rejected by Scarth L.J.S.C. on October 7, 1988. The respondent then appealed the order of October 7, 1988 and sought a declaration that both the order and s. 16(1), (2), (6) and (8) of the Act violated his Charter rights. This appeal was dismissed on November 15, 1988. Prior to trial, the respondent also unsuccessfully contested the amount of support to be paid and applied to list the matrimonial home for sale and have the arrears of support accumulated to that date cancelled.

At trial (1989), 1989 CanLII 8903 (BC SC), 24 R.F.L. (3d) 193, on the issue of custody and access, Proudfoot J. (now J.A.) found that the respondent's attempts to argue loss of freedom of religion were but a guise under which he was attempting to gain control of the children's religious upbringing. She held that the respondent would not be denied custody or access because of his religious beliefs and that his freedom of religion had not been infringed. Rather, custody and access would be decided only according to the best interests of the children. She found that the appellant did not oppose access by the respondent, and that the difficulty was created solely by their religious differences. Distinguishing the decision of the Divisional Court of the Supreme Court of Ontario in Hockey v. Hockey (1989), 1989 CanLII 4299 \(ON SC\), 21 R.F.L. (3d) 105, and relying on Anson v. Anson (1987), 10 B.C.L.R. (2d) 357 (Co. Ct.), and Andrews v. Andrews, B.C.S.C., June 9, 1983, unreported, Proudfoot J. found that both the right and the responsibility to determine a child's education, health care and religion rest with the custodial parent. Citing the decision of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Brown v. Brown (1983), 1983 CanLII 2311 \(SK CA\), 39 R.F.L. (2d) 396, she found that the Charter has not affected the general principle enunciated in DeLaurier v. Jackson, 1934 CanLII 2 \(SCC\), [1934] S.C.R. 149, that the father's rights in respect of the religious upbringing of his child must yield to the welfare of the child.

Proudfoot J. noted that the original custody order had been made with the respondent's consent and that all the experts agreed that custody should remain with the appellant. The children had indicated in letters written to the judge that they wished to remain with their mother. The evidence was clear that they were opposed to any involvement in the respondent's religious activities and that there had been total disregard for their wishes. The reports of both court experts indicated that the two older children's relationship with their father was deteriorating, that they were under increasing pressure regarding family issues and needed to settle the conflict so they could proceed with their lives. Proudfoot J. found that there was no doubt on the evidence that the religious conflict was causing a problem for the children and that it should be resolved. She granted the appellant custody and guardianship of the children with sole responsibility for their religious upbringing, health care and education and granted the respondent access subject to the following conditions:

- a) that the Respondent shall not discuss the Jehovah's Witness religion with the children and shall not take any of the children to any religious services, canvassing or meetings, without the written consent of the Petitioner and shall not expose the children to religious discussions with a third party or parties without the written consent of the Petitioner;

- b) that the Respondent is enjoined from preventing any of the three infant children of the marriage from having blood transfusions in the event blood transfusions are required;
- c) and that the Respondent shall not make any adverse remarks with respect to the religious beliefs of the Petitioner....

She further declared that neither the custody order nor the access restrictions infringed the respondent's freedom of religion under the Charter and made other incidental findings as to support, the division of matrimonial property and costs, with which I agree as already indicated.

On appeal (1990), 1990 CanLII 3813 \(BC CA\), 50 B.C.L.R. (2d) 1, the respondent abandoned his custody claim but sought an order for joint guardianship of the children, unrestricted access and a declaration that the restrictions on access violated his and the children's Charter rights. Upon reviewing the rights of custodial parents and the historical development of access, Wood J.A. for the majority (Cummings J.A. concurring on this issue) noted that the concept of access did not receive statutory recognition until the Act. Wood J.A. found that the terms of s. 16 of the Act, when taken as a whole, indicate an intention by Parliament to foster substantial changes in the law of custody and access and to facilitate a meaningful and continuing relationship with the children of the marriage and the access parent. In his opinion, the word "contact" within s. 16(10) should be given a broad meaning, and a proper construction of the Act requires the distribution of "rights" between the custodial and the access parent. He found that an order for custody under s. 16(1) of the Act necessarily gives the custodial parent the power to determine the religious upbringing of the child, but does not give that parent the right to prevent the other from sharing his or her views with the child, whether that takes the form of discussions, observances or other related activities. The right of the access parent to share those beliefs is subject only to two limitations: (a) the unwillingness of the child to participate and (b) the power of the court to restrict the access if exposure to the beliefs or practices is, or is likely to be, harmful to the well-being of the child. Such harm must be "real psychological or physical harm", established on a civil standard of proof and must be distinguished from the general emotional distress which every child experiences upon divorce.

As to freedom of religion, Wood J.A. was of the view that the issue was whether or not the access parent's fundamental freedom of religion under s. 2(a) of the Charter is infringed by the long-standing common law rule which would give the custodial parent, as guardian of the child of the marriage, the absolute right to control the extent to which the access parent can expose that child to his or her religious beliefs. After considering the nature of freedom of religion set out in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., 1985 CanLII 69 (SCC), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295, Wood J.A. held that an important element of the right to teach and disseminate one's beliefs must be the right to share those beliefs with one's children. In his view, it would be a rare case in which a court would be required to determine whether or not the exposure to conflicting religious beliefs or the beliefs themselves was threatening real physical or psychological harm to the child. Before embarking on such an inquiry, a court would require the evidence of an independent expert.

Applying these principles to the facts of the case, Wood J.A. concluded at p. 109 that:

No such harm was diagnosed or anticipated by either of the expert witnesses which the learned trial judge found to be credible. Nor did the evidence establish that the conflict in the religious beliefs of the parents was causing, or likely to cause, such harm.

The evidence went no further than to establish that the children were under some stress, the cause of which was "multi-factorial", but which obviously included some component related to the religious dispute between the parents. As I have attempted to show such evidence would not even justify the court embarking on any inquiry into the religious beliefs of a parent. It is therefore axiomatic that it would not support any interference with Mr. Young's fundamental freedom of religion under s. 2(a) of the Charter, in the form of the restrictions imposed.

Nonetheless, Wood J.A. held that the respondent was bound to respect the girls' wishes not to accompany him to his place of worship or on his proselytization efforts. Finding no reason to disbelieve the respondent's willingness to do so, Wood J.A. held that there was no basis for the imposition of any restrictions on his rights of access. In the result, he struck out the restrictions on access, found the declaration that the appellant have sole responsibility for the religious upbringing, health care and education of the children unnecessary and struck out the order that neither party make adverse remarks with reference to the religious beliefs of the other.

Southin J.A., dissenting on this issue, after a comprehensive review of parental authority, concluded that the custodial parent today enjoys the "full plenitude" of parental powers historically enjoyed by a guardian even during the time that the child is with the access parent. In her view, nothing in either the Act or the B.C. Family Relations Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 121, was intended to limit the long-standing rule that the custodial parent is entitled to "lay down the law" concerning all matters relating to the children even during the time of access. In her view, the word "contact" in s. 16\(10\) of the Act did not contemplate a right in anyone granted access to disregard the determinations of the custodial parent, as it is a principle of statutory interpretation that (at p. 32) "if Parliament intends to set at naught a long-standing concept of the common law, it does so plainly and not by woolly words capable of more than one interpretation." With respect to the Charter, Southin J.A. held that the rights within s. 2 must not be construed in such a way as to deny the existence of parental rights, which are preserved by s. 26 of the Charter. She concluded that the appellant may control the children's activities but that she may not control the conversations which take place during the time of access. In her view, the appellant was entitled to establish that it would not be in the best interests of the children to be exposed to the religious observances of the respondent. In the result, she would have ordered that the respondent not take the children to any religious service or have the children accompany him in any religious activity without the written consent of the Petitioner.

Relevant Statutory Provisions

In the present case, the Court is concerned with the statutory criteria which guide courts in matters of custody and access. A proper starting point, then, is to spell out those provisions of the Divorce Act, which are relevant to a discussion of custody and access:

16. (1) A court of competent jurisdiction may, on application by either or both spouses or by any other person, make an order respecting the custody of or the access to, or the custody of and access to, any or all children of the marriage.

(4) The court may make an order under this section granting custody of, or access to, any or all children of the marriage to any one or more persons.

(5) Unless the court orders otherwise, a spouse who is granted access to a child of the marriage has the right to make inquiries, and to be given information, as to the health, education and welfare of the child.

(6) The court may make an order under this section for a definite or indefinite period or until the happening of a specified event and may impose such other terms, conditions or restrictions in connection therewith as it thinks fit and just.

(8) In making an order under this section, the court shall take into consideration only the best interests of the child of the marriage as determined by reference to the condition, means, needs and other circumstances of the child.

(9) In making an order under this section, the court shall not take into consideration the past conduct of any person unless the conduct is relevant to the ability of that person to act as a parent of a child.

(10) In making an order under this section, the court shall give effect to the principle that a child of the marriage should have as much contact with each spouse as is consistent with the best interests of the child and, for that purpose, shall take into consideration the willingness of the person for whom custody is sought to facilitate such contact.

17. . . .

(5) Before the court makes a variation order in respect of a custody order, the court shall satisfy itself that there has been a change in the condition, means, needs or other circumstances of the child of the marriage occurring since the making of the custody order or the last variation order made in respect of that order, as the case may be, and, in making the variation order, the court shall take into consideration only the best interests of the child as determined by reference to that change. [Emphasis added.]

Custody

Leaving aside for the moment the constitutional questions stated by Lamer C.J., I wish to focus on the matter of custody and access. While the issue of custody is no longer in dispute, the parties having agreed that the appellant should retain custody of their three children, it is still necessary, to set the stage fully, to examine the rationale underlying the granting of custody.

At common law, the right to custody of children was originally incontestable and reposed with the father to the exclusion of any claims of the mother. The father possessed the full bundle of rights which are an inherent feature of the relationship between parent and child. This right reflected the dominant ideology of the family before this century and was composed of several interrelated concepts. The patriarchal family was the preferred, indeed the only recognized family structure. Fathers were regarded as possessing a natural right to their children, which flowed from the belief that they knew best about the interests of their children and that those interests were best served by upholding their proprietary rights (see S. Maidment, Child Custody and Divorce (1984), at pp. 5-6; In re Agar-Ellis, [1883] Ch. D. 317). Thus, the sole concern in custody matters was for the rights of the father with little regard for the effect of such decisions on the child. As the famous case of R. v. De

Manneville (1804), 5 East. 221, 102 E.R. 1054, illustrates, under such a regime, a mother could be denied custody and even access to a child still breast-feeding notwithstanding that the undisputed cause of the marriage breakdown was the cruelty of the father.

Since the 19th century, along with a gradual move toward equality of the sexes in custody presumptions, the focus has shifted from the rights of the parents to those of the child. The first statutory inroads were made in England with the passage of Talfourd's Act in 1839 (An Act to amend the Law relating to the Custody of Infants (U.K.), 2 & 3 Vict., c. 54) which allowed courts to make an order of access to the mother, and even to award her the custody of children of "tender years", those under the age of seven. However, fathers still retained the presumptive right to custody, a right which would only be disturbed where there was serious reason to believe that his behaviour would be detrimental to the child. In contrast, mothers who engaged in adulterous behaviour were deemed to have threatened the family structure and were presumed unfit to protect the interests of the child and routinely denied custody.

The best interests of the child gained ascendancy as the proper focus of custody decisions at the same time as courts moved toward the equality of women in custody decisions. The power of courts to rule in the best interests of the child was originally found in the equitable parens patriae jurisdiction of the Courts of Chancery. Although this power was at first only exercised in respect of the property rights of the child, the concept of the best interests of the child was gradually expanded to include the emotional, physical and spiritual welfare of the child. Changes in the social landscape affecting both the nature of work and the family and growing recognition of the needs of children began to inform custody decisions. With the merger of the courts of equity and common law in the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (U.K.), 36 & 37 Vict., c. 66, the ability of courts to overrule any common law parental right where found to be in the best interests of the child was confirmed, as s. 25(10) of the Act specifically provided that "In questions relating to the custody and education of infants the rules of equity shall prevail". In England, Parliament specifically recognized as important a consideration of the welfare of the child in the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (U.K.), 49 & 50 Vict., c. 27. Upon the passage of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (U.K.), 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 45, the welfare of the child became the "the first and paramount consideration". The welfare, or what is now called the best interests, of the child thus prevailed over any potential rights that parents previously held at common law.

A number of rules were developed by courts, presumably predicated on the best interests test, which made the outcome of custody matters dependent upon assumptions as to parents' suitability. The most important of these rules was the tender years doctrine, which was described by an Ontario court in 1933 as the common sense proposition that, in general, children under the age of seven needed the care of their mothers (Re Orr, 1933 CanLII 110 \(ON CA\), [1933] O.R. 212 (C.A.)). A related presumption favoured the placement of older children with the parent of the same sex. The Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, granted women equal rights to custody over their children in England. In Canada, statutes providing for equality in entitlement to custody were passed in some provinces as early as 1923, although the process of legislative entrenchment was not completed until 1977 (see R. S. Abella, "Family Law in Ontario: Changing Assumptions" (1981), 13 Ottawa L. Rev. 1, at p. 13). The net effect of both legislative enactments and judicially developed presumptions was that women were granted custody of children in the majority of cases.

Although the welfare principle long predates the 1970s, it was at that time that the emerging focus on the rights of children began to supplant the tender years doctrine, as courts adopted the principle expressed by de Grandpré J. in Talsky v. Talsky, 1975 CanLII 29 \(SCC\), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 292, at p. 293, that "the paramount consideration in custody matters is the welfare of the infants". Concurrent with this shift was the dissociation of notions of matrimonial fault from assumptions about parenting ability. Following the Law Reform Commission of Canada's report on Family Law in 1976, the best interests test was entrenched as the sole criterion for the determination of custody and access in the Divorce Act. Since then, not only has the best interests of the child become the paramount consideration, legislation has dictated that it be the sole consideration.

Despite these changes over time with respect to who is regarded as the appropriate custodial parent, the nature and scope of custody itself have remained relatively constant. The chief feature of such orders was, and still is, the implied, if not explicit, conferral of parental authority on the person granted custody. The long-standing rule at common law is that an order of custody entails the right to exercise full parental authority. In the case of a sole custody order, that authority is vested in one parent to the exclusion of the other.

The power of the custodial parent is not a "right" with independent value which is granted by courts for the benefit of the parent, but is designed to enable that parent to discharge his or her responsibilities and obligations to the child. It is, in fact, the child's right to a parent who will look after his or her best interests. Indeed, courts have recognized that there is no magic to the parental tie and will, when the best interests of the child warrant, grant custody to a third party. As Dubin J.A. (now C.J.O.) held in Re Moores and Feldstein, 1973 CanLII 535 \(ON CA\), [1973] 3 O.R. 921, at p. 928:

. . . it is the duty of the Court to view all the circumstances relevant to what is in the interest of the child, including a consideration as to whether the evidence disclosed that the child would benefit from the tie of a child to its mother.

It has long been recognized that the custodial parent has a duty to ensure, protect and promote the best interests of the child. That duty includes the sole and primary responsibility to oversee all aspects of day to day life and long-term well-being, as well as major decisions with respect to education, religion, health and well-being. This is reflected in the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Kruger v. Kruger (1979), 1979 CanLII 1663 \(ON CA\), 25 O.R. (2d) 673, at p. 677, in which Thorson J.A. stated:

In my view, to award one parent the exclusive custody of a child is to clothe that parent, for whatever period he or she is awarded the custody, with full parental control over, and ultimate parental responsibility for, the care, upbringing and education of the child, generally to the exclusion of the right of the other parent to interfere in the decisions that are made in exercising that control or in carrying out that responsibility.

See also Baker v. Baker (1979), 1979 CanLII 1962 \(ON CA\), 8 R.F.L. (2d) 236 (Ont. C.A.).

A parallel situation exists with respect to the exercise of parental authority on separation or divorce under the Civil Code of Quebec. Article 647 of the C.C.Q. grants equal rights to parents in the exercise of authority over their children, stating that "[t]he father and mother have the rights and duties of custody, supervision and education of their children". However, art. 569 requires courts to decide questions of custody, maintenance and education of children "in their interest and in the respect of their rights", and art. 570 preserves only the right of the non-custodial parent to surveillance over such matters. As Beetz J., writing for this Court, held in C.(G.) v. V.-F.(T.), 1987 CanLII 20 \(SCC\), [1987] 2 S.C.R. 244, at p. 280, the effect of a custody award is to remove the right of the non-custodial parent to exercise his or her parental authority.

The rationale for granting this authority to the custodial parent is described by Gendreau J.A. in Dussault v. Ladouceur (1987), 1987 CanLII 876 \(QC CA\), 14 R.F.L. (3d) 185 (Que. C.A.), at p. 191, as follows:

[TRANSLATION] It goes without saying that as a general rule, when custody of a child is granted to one parent, he or she then exercises all the attributes of parental authority and the other parent does not normally interfere in the custodial parent's way of doing things, except in the exercise of his or her supervising role. The child's unity of development is preserved in this manner and any scatterings or dislocations that might be harmful to him or her are avoided.

Ct.), reversed on other grounds (1972), 1972 CanLII 1936 \(ON CA\), 10 R.F.L. 282 (Ont. C.A.). Similarly, under the B.C. Family Relations Act, the custodial parent has the full bundle of rights over the child (Charlton v. Charlton (1980), 1980 CanLII 545 \(BC SC\), 15 R.F.L. (2d) 220 (B.C.S.C.); Anson v. Anson, supra).

As Professor Julien Payne has observed in Payne on Divorce (2nd ed. 1988), at p. 144, it has, at times, been thought, both in Canada and elsewhere, that custody and guardianship of a child were different in scope. While the case law is not consistent on this point, the term "custody" has been used in two senses. When used in its wider sense, custody is akin to the concept of guardianship and encompasses the full bundle of parental rights. In its narrower sense, the term refers only to the right to physical custody or day to day care and control of the child (see Hewer v. Bryant, [1970] 1 Q.B. 357; Anson v. Anson, supra, at p. 363). However, as Payne notes at pp. 144-45, at this point in time, the wider concept of custody is well entrenched in Canadian law:

In the context of Canadian divorce proceedings, the case law tends to support the conclusion that, in the absence of directions to the contrary, an order granting "sole custody" to one parent signifies that the custodial parent shall exercise all the powers of the legal guardian of the child. The non-custodial parent with access privileges is thus deprived of the rights and responsibilities that previously vested in that parent as a joint custodian of the child.

This view is reflected in the decision of Huddart Co. Ct. J. in Anson v. Anson, supra, at p. 366:

There seems to be no limit other than that of the imagination of the bar and bench to the variety of orders that can be devised to ensure the best interests of a child are served by the distribution of custodial rights and duties between the interested adults. The law reports resound with examples. Key, however, is where the residual authority lies. It seems too late to suggest that the term custody be confined to physical care and control with guardianship of the person being the residual concept, including general supervision of the upbringing of the child. The wide meaning is entrenched in federal legislation and in the case law here and elsewhere. [Emphasis added.]

Southin J.A., the dissenting judge on this issue in the Court of Appeal, dealt at p. 31 with the question of custody under the B.C. provincial legislation in the following terms:

I can find nothing in the 1978 Act which warrants an inference that the Legislature intended by it to cut down the powers of guardians as those powers have long been understood. It follows that, if the order giving custody to Mrs. Young is sustained, she has under the Family Relations Act the full right to lay down the law concerning all matters relating to the children even during the time they are with their father for the purpose of his exercise of access.

The non-custodial parent retains certain residual rights over the child as one of its two natural guardians, among which is the right to apply to the court for variation of custody and access terms. Various other entitlements have been recognized at common law, including, subject to the best interests of the child, the right to access, the right to contest the child's adoption, the right to claim guardianship of the person of the child upon the death of the custodial parent and the right to succeed to the child's property among others (see Maidment, supra, at p. 34; Dussault v. Ladouceur, supra; Law Reform Commission of Canada, report on Family Law, supra; Law Reform Commission of Canada, The Custody, Care and Upbringing of Children of Divorcing Spouses, 1973).

The traditional decision-making power of the custodial parent recognized by law is intimately connected to the welfare of the child, as the need for a secure and constant source of parental responsibility in the life of the child is well understood among those who are knowledgeable in the psychology of children. J. Goldstein, A. Freud and A. J. Solnit in Beyond the Best Interests of the Child (1979) identified three imperatives that must govern child placement decisions such as custody arrangements. Such decisions should: safeguard the child's need for continuity of relationships, reflect the child's, not the adult's, sense of time, and take into account the law's inability to supervise interpersonal relationships and the limits of knowledge to make long-range predictions (supra, at pp. 31, 40 and 49). The need for continuity generally requires that the custodial parent have the autonomy to raise the child as he or she sees fit without interference with that authority by the state or the non-custodial parent, as it is the inability of the custodial parent to protect those interests sufficiently which poses the real threat to the welfare of the child. A custody award can thus be regarded as a matter of whose decisions to prefer, as opposed to which decisions to prefer. In the words of B. M. Dickens, "The Modern Function and Limits of Parental Rights" (1981), 97 L.Q. Rev. 462, at p. 473 "the identification of who is allowed to decide is no less important in theory, and more important in practice, than how choice is to be exercised between options". (See also J. Goldstein, "In Whose Best Interest?", in R. S. Abella and C. L'Heureux-Dubé, eds., Family Law: Dimensions of Justice (1983), at p. 124.)

As Goldstein, Freud and Solnit stress, an important function of the law on divorce or separation is to reinforce the remainder of the family unit so that children may get on with their lives with as little disruption as possible. Courts are not in a position, nor do they presume to be able, to make the necessary day-to-day decisions which affect the best interests of the child. That task must rest with the custodial parent, as he or she is the person best placed to assess the needs of the child in all its dimensions. In my view, this was eloquently expressed by Weatherston J. (later J.A.) in McCahill v. Robertson (1974), 1974 CanLII 2225 \(ON SC\), 17 R.F.L. 23 (Ont. S.C), at pp. 23-24:

A child must know where its home is and to whom it must look for guidance and admonition and the person having custody and having that responsibility must have the opportunity to exercise it without any feeling by the infant that it can look elsewhere. It may be an unfortunate thing for the spouse who does not have custody that he or she does lose a great deal of the authority and indeed to some extent the love and affection of the child that might otherwise be gained, but this is one of the things which is inherent in separation and divorce. The parents cannot have it both ways. As I say, in my view, it is vitally necessary that the child know where its home is, to whom it is responsible and that there be no doubt in the mind of the child as to that. Within those limits, the parent who does not have custody should, of course, have access to the child under terms which are as reasonably generous as possible, but without interfering with that basic responsibility on the parent having custody. [Emphasis added.]

Once a court has determined who is the appropriate custodial parent, it must, indeed it can do no more than, presume that that parent will act in the best interests of the child. As the New Brunswick Court of Appeal stated in Fougere v. Fougere (1987), 1987 CanLII 7842 \(NB CA\), 77 N.B.R. (2d) 381, at p. 384:

Once courts award custody they must, in our view, support the custodial parent in that parent's reasonable efforts to bring up the children, including the right of the custodial parent to decide questions relating to the religious upbringing of the children.

As has been widely observed by those studying the nature and sources of changes in family institutions, popular notions of parenthood and parenting roles have undergone a profound evolution both in Canada and elsewhere in the world in recent years (see generally M. A. Fineman, The Illusion of Equality: The Rhetoric and Reality of Divorce Reform (1991); L. J. Weitzman, The Divorce Revolution (1985); J. Drakich, "In Whose Best Interests? The Politics of Joint Custody", in B. Fox, ed., Family Bonds and Gender Divisions: Readings in the Sociology of the Family (1988); C. Smart and S. Sevenhuijsen, Child Custody and the Politics of Gender (1989), and S. B. Boyd, "Women, Men and Relationships with Children: Is Equality Possible?", in K. Busby, L. Fainstein and H. Penner, eds., Equality Issues in Family Law: Considerations for Test Case Litigation (1990)). One of the central tenets of this new vision is that child care both is no longer and should no longer be exclusively or primarily the preserve of women. Society has largely moved away from the assumptions embodied in the tender years doctrine that women are inherently imbued with characteristics which render them better custodial parents (for a discussion, see D. L. Chambers, "Rethinking the Substantive Rules for Custody Disputes in Divorce" (1984), 83 Mich. L. Rev. 477). Moreover, both economic necessity and the movement toward social and economic equality for women have resulted in an increase in the number of women in the paid workforce. Many people have tended to assume that a natural result of this change would be the concurrent sharing of household and childcare responsibilities with spouses, companions and, of course, fathers. In addition, the increased emphasis on the participation of fathers in the raising of children and financial support after divorce gave rise to claims by fathers and fathers' rights groups for legislative changes that would entitle them to the benefit of neutral presumptions in custody decisions.

A corollary of the acceptance of neutral parenting roles is the notion that children after divorce need to maintain contact with both parents. It is now widely assumed to be self-evident in the child's best interests to ensure the non-custodial parent's involvement in the life of the child. One result of these changes has been the emergence of joint custody awards which are predicated explicitly on equality of parental responsibilities and the belief that children's interests are served by maximizing the involvement of both parents in decisions concerning the child.

The custody provisions of the Act reflect, to some degree, this evolving view of parental roles. Under the best interests test, courts no longer automatically grant custody according to the tender years doctrine. Instead, decisions are made according to the best interests of the child without the benefit of a presumption in favour of the mother, or, for that matter, the father. Subsection 16\(4\) of the Act, for the first time, specifies that a court may make joint custody orders. Subsection 16\(10\) of the Act contains the "friendly parent" rule which directs courts when granting custody to take into account the willingness of the parent seeking custody to maximize the contact of the other parent with the child of the marriage. It is clear, then, that the Act envisages contact between the child and each of its parents as a worthy goal which should be, all other things being equal, in the best interests of the child. This is a value which courts have always recognized in generally granting generous access to the non-custodial parent.

Wood J.A., however, has interpreted the Act as reflecting significant changes to the traditional law of custody and access. More specifically, he expressed the view that s. 16\(10\) of the Act indicates a desire on the part of Parliament to enlarge the concept of access beyond its traditional scope. Therefore, according to him, the traditional decision-making power of custodial parents has been curtailed by s. 16 which, taken as a whole, requires a distribution of rights between the parents.

To that end, Wood J.A. relies on the views expressed about the nature of custody in the English decision of Dipper v. Dipper, [1980] 2 All E.R. 722, as approximating the philosophy found in the Act. In that case, the English Court of Appeal held at p. 733:

. . . it [is] a fallacy which continues to raise its ugly head that, on making a custody order, the custodial parent has a right to take all the decisions about the education of the children in spite of the disagreements of the other parent. That is quite wrong. The parent is always entitled, whatever his custodial status, to know and be consulted about the future education of the children and any other major matters. If he disagrees with the course proposed by the custodial parent he has the right to come to the court in order that the difference may be determined by the court.

The "right to know" is, of course, embodied in the Act, but the "right to be consulted" and to have disagreements aired in Court is not. The only ground set out in the Act on which to contest a decision of the custodial parent is to show that the decision is contrary to the best interests of the child. Courts in Canada have never adopted the view that the custodial parent's decisions are subject to the approval of the non-custodial parent, and that such disagreements must be resolved in court.

Furthermore, in my view, there is nothing in the Act which mandates such a reversal in the philosophy of custody as held up to now. The Law Reform Commission of Canada, report on Family Law, supra, on which the Act is based, defines custody at p. 46 in the following manner:

4.4 "Custody" has several legal meanings. It stands for the whole collection of legal powers (many of which connote parental obligations as much as "rights") of fathers and mothers over their children: the power to raise and control the child, to determine the nature and amount of the child's education, to determine his or her religious upbringing, to administer the child's property, to grant or withhold consent to the marriage of an under-age child, to apply to the courts on his or her behalf, and so on. In its narrower sense, it means simply "care and upbringing" or, to use a more vivid but unfortunate phrase, "possession".

4.5 Where custody is granted to one parent, the courts afford the other the right to "reasonable access" -- usually worked out between the parents, but where they cannot agree, as directed by the judge.

This description of custody mirrors the traditional elements of parental authority and in no way suggests a blending of the rights of the access parent with those of the custodial parent. While the Act specifies that access is a value to be preserved, the objective in s. 16(10) that a child have "as much contact with each spouse" is immediately qualified by the proviso "as is consistent with the best interests of the child" (emphasis added). Thus, it is clear that maximum contact is not an unbridled objective, and that it must be curtailed wherever the welfare of the child requires it. The best interests of the child remain the prism through which all other considerations are refracted.

Professor Payne, in Payne on Divorce, supra, at p. 144, shares the view that the access provisions in the Act do not confer any authority on the non-custodial parent to participate in the major decisions of a child's life. Rather, s. 16(5) of the Act provides that "[u]nless the court orders otherwise, a spouse who is granted access to a child of the marriage has the right to make inquiries, and to be given information, as to the health, education and welfare of the child". It does not mandate that the custodial parent consult with the access spouse when making such decisions with respect to the child. (See also Anson v. Anson, supra). Custody as defined in s. 2\(1\) of the Act "includes care, upbringing and any other incident of custody". Payne states at pp. 145-46:

The provisions of the Divorce Act, 1985, and particularly the definitions of "custody" and "accès" in subsection 2\(1\) of the Act, apparently preclude Canadian courts from reverting to a narrow definition of custody. The word "includes" in the definition of custody necessarily implies that the term embraces a wider range of powers than those specifically designated in subsection 2(1).... The opinions expressed in Kruger v. Kruger, supra, have thus been statutorily endorsed by the Divorce Act, 1985. Consequently, in the absence of a successful application to vary an unqualified sole custody disposition with respect to all or any of the incidents of custody, the non-custodial spouse with access privileges is a passive bystander who is excluded from the decision-making process in matters relating to the child's welfare, growth and development. This remains true notwithstanding that subsection 16(10) of the Divorce Act, 1985 provides that the court shall promote "maximum contact" between the child and the non-custodial parent to the extent that this is consistent with the best interests of the child. [Emphasis added.]

I could not agree more, given the wording of the Act itself and the generally accepted view of custody both before and since its enactment. The Act neither suggests nor requires the division of parental responsibilities between the custodial and access parent. If Parliament had intended such a result, it would have used much clearer and less ambiguous language.

It goes without saying that I do not share the assertion of my colleague that "the proposition, put to us in argument, that the custodial parent should have the right to forbid certain types of contact between the access parent and the child, must fail" (p. 119). The proposition is not one of "rights"; it is one of duty and obligation to the child's best interests. For example, a custodial parent, aware of sexual or other abuse by the non-custodial parent would be remiss in his or her duty to the child not to cut off access by the abuser immediately, with or without a court order. One cannot stress enough that it is from the perspective of the child's interests that these powers and responsibilities must be assessed, as the "rights" of the parent are not a criterion.

The arguments in favour of increased authority over the child by the access parent are closely related to those which support a presumption in favour of joint custody (see J. Folberg, "Joint Custody", in R.S. Abella and C. L'Heureux-Dubé, eds., supra, at p. 185). They rest on the premise that the relationship of authority and obligation that existed between each of the parents and the child during the marriage should and can continue, despite the fact that the parents may no longer be willing or able to cooperate on its exercise. While joint custody may remain an ideal solution in proper cases, particularly when parents are willing and able to cooperate, such premises are often based on illusion rather than reality and may, in the words of Thorson J.A., amount to "a triumph of optimism over prudence" (Kruger v. Kruger, supra, at p. 681).

Unlike in other jurisdictions, the Act contains no presumption in favour of joint custody. Nor have Canadian courts generally accepted the view that joint custody is to be preferred in judicial orders as to custody and access. Beside the fact that the term "joint custody" is a misnomer (see C. L'Heureux-Dubé, "La garde conjointe, concept acceptable ou non?" (1979), 39 R. du B. 835), courts have demonstrated a strong hesitation to making joint custody orders, since in those custody disputes which end up before the courts, the animosity between parents does not generally favour such dispositions. Thorson J.A. observed in Kruger v. Kruger, supra, at p. 678 that:

Above all, [joint custody] requires a willingness by both parents to work together to ensure the success of the arrangement. Such a willingness must be sincere and genuine; by its very nature it is not something that can be imposed by a Court on two persons, one or both of whom may be unwilling or reluctant to accept it in all its implications. Like marriage itself if it is to succeed, it is an arrangement that has to be worked out by two persons who are determined, or their own will and in good faith, to make it work. [Emphasis in original.]

When parents are willing and able to share parenting responsibilities, they usually do so by agreement, which courts generally uphold (Kruger v. Kruger, supra; Baker v. Baker, supra; Keyes v. Gordon (1985), 1985 CanLII 123 \(NS CA\), 45 R.F.L. (2d) 177 (N.S.C.A.); Dussault v. Ladouceur, supra; Droit de la famille -- 316, [1986] R.D.F. 651 (Que. C.A.)). Courts are also reluctant to interfere with shared parenting arrangements that have survived for a period of time after parental separation or divorce (see J. D. Payne and B. Edwards, "Co-operative Parenting After Divorce: A Canadian Perspective" (1989), 11 Advocates' Q. 1, at pp. 13-15; S. M. Holmes, "Imposed Joint Legal Custody: Children's Interests or Parental Rights?" (1987), 45 U.T. Fac. L. Rev. 300).

But the reality of divorce and the circumstances of the parties cannot easily be dismissed. When implementing the objectives of the Act, whether considering joint custody or fashioning access orders, courts, in my view, must be conscious of the gap between the ideals of shared parenting and the social reality of custody and childcare decisions. Despite the neutrality of the Act, forces such as wage rates, job ghettos and socialization about care giving still operate in a manner that cause many women to "choose" to take on the care giving role both during marriage and after divorce. Hence, "we remain a good distance away from the kind of equality which would make decisions between mothers and fathers as to who is going to leave the workforce to care for young children truly gender neutral" (S.B. Boyd, "Women, Men and Relationships with Children: Is Equality Possible?", supra, at p. 76; S. B. Boyd, "Child Custody Law and the Invisibility of Women's Work" (1989), 96 Queen's Q. 831). Moreover, research uniformly shows that men as a group have not yet embraced responsibility for childcare. The vast majority of such labour, both before and after divorce, is still performed by women, whether those women work outside the home or not, and women remain the sole custodial parent in the majority of cases by mutual consent of the parties (see Evaluation of the Divorce Act -- Phase II: Monitoring and Evaluation, at p. 99; J. Drakich, "In Search of the Better Parent: The Social Construction of Ideologies of Fatherhood" (1989), 3 C.J.W.L. 69). Nor does a joint custody order in most cases result in truly shared custody. Rather, in day-to-day practice, joint custody tends to resemble remarkably sole custody, as in many such orders care and control remain with one person (C. J. Richardson, Court-based Divorce Mediation in Four Canadian Cities: An Overview of Research Results (1988), at p. 35; S.B. Boyd, "Women, Men and Relationships with Children: Is Equality Possible?", supra, at p. 72; M. Fineman, "Dominant Discourse, Professional Language and Legal Change in Child Custody Decisionmaking" (1988), 101 Harv. L. Rev. 727). The person who has performed the primary care giving role within the marriage as a rule retains that obligation upon separation and divorce. Thus, the lived experience of childcare for both women and children after divorce has changed much less than we might suppose or wish. As J. D. Payne and B. Edwards advise, "[i]n light of such empirical data, which encompass the Divorce Act of 1968 and the Divorce Act, 1985, popular assumptions that public attitudes towards sexual stereotyping and parenting roles after divorce have undergone radical change must be viewed with caution" ("Co-operative Parenting After Divorce: A Canadian Perspective", supra, at p. 8. See also F. Furstenberg and A. J. Cherlin, Divided Families: What Happens to Children When Parents Part (1991), at p. 74).

Since in the present case, the respondent requested joint custody at trial but abandoned this claim on appeal and since his claim for joint guardianship also failed, it is not necessary to labour the point. One can only note that the trial judge made a finding of fact that the respondent desired custody simply in order to control the religious upbringing of the children.

Support for the decisions of the custodial parent in the discharge of his or her responsibilities remains crucial if the child is to flourish. The conferral of decision-making authority on the custodial parent acknowledges and reflects the actual day-to-day reality of this task. It is well documented that the single parent bearing primary responsibility for the care of children often labours under increased social, economic and emotional burdens that far exceed those of the intact family. That burden is acutely felt by the children, who typically experience a myriad of hardships in this situation (see M. Grassby, "Women in Their Forties: The Extent of Their Rights to Alimentary Support" (1991), 30 R.F.L. (3d) 369). These may include a reduction in the standard of living, fewer resources for discretionary activities such as sports, artistic and leisure activities, frequent changes of residence, disruptions of friendships and often less parental attention, as the custodial parent is commonly required to devise new ways of fulfilling continuing needs with diminished resources. In the face of the enduring tasks and obligations of the custodial parent, courts must be wary of any expansion of the traditional rights of the non-custodial parent. The clear risk is that such changes will simply reduce the decision-making power of the custodial parent, without any parallel reduction in the responsibilities. This creates no benefit, and may amount to pure disturbance, both to the women who, as a rule, provide the primary care and to the children who must function within such a regime.

The perception that upholding the authority of the custodial parent emphasizes the rights of the parent at the expense of the interests of the child misconceives the problem. It is precisely to ensure the best interests of the child that the decision-making power is granted to the custodial parent, as that person is uniquely situated to assess, understand, ensure and promote the needs of the child. This, of course, is also consistent with the fact that the custodial parent bears both the legal obligation to care for the child and the legal liability for the child's acts.

As a practical matter, the unending litigation occasioned by disputes over parental authority exacts a financial cost that few custodial parents can bear. It is no secret that the vast majority of such parents are women. As emphasized in Moge v. Moge, 1992 CanLII 25 \(SCC\), [1992] 3 S.C.R. 813, women are often severely disadvantaged economically upon separation and divorce. Both women and, of necessity, the children under their care often suffer a dramatic fall in the standard of living upon divorce. The cost of ongoing litigation can only exacerbate this decline by diverting whatever scarce resources exist away from day-to-day needs of the remaining family.

As I stated at the outset, the custodial parent remains the decision-maker in all aspects of the child's life. It is to avoid the spectre of the child as the field upon which the battle of competing parental rights is played out that the law confirms the authority of the custodial parent. This policy serves two functions: it precludes such contests entirely and it provides the necessary support to the parent who bears the responsibility for the child. The wisdom of this approach lies in recognizing the ease with which the interests of the child could be obscured or forgotten were courts to get into the business of parcelling out jurisdiction over the emotional, spiritual and physical welfare of the child between parents who no longer agree. This brings us to the heart of this case, a consideration of the nature of access.

Access

As indicated previously, the Act specifies the powers of courts in matters of access. Under s. 16(6), the trial judge possesses broad discretion to "impose such other terms, conditions or restrictions in connection therewith" as he or she thinks "fit and just". However, that discretion is to be exercised strictly from the perspective of the interests of the child, as s. 16(8) requires courts to "take into consideration only the best interests of the child of the marriage as determined by reference to the condition, means, needs and other circumstances of the child". Section 16(5) confers on a parent granted access, again subject to the discretion of the judge, the right to be informed about the child. Finally, s. 16(10) directs courts to give effect to the principle that "a child of the marriage should have as much contact with each spouse as is consistent with the best interests of the child".

I am in agreement with my colleague that s. 16(10) indicates that Parliament has expressed its opinion that contact with each parent is valuable. On the other hand, it must also be recognized that the goal of maximum contact is not absolute and that access may be restricted where there is evidence that such contact would otherwise conflict with the best interests of the child. This limitation on maximum contact is both abundantly clear on a straightforward reading of the section and consistent with the spirit of the Act and its focus on the best interests of the child. In my view, the analysis may and should stop at this point. However, the Court of Appeal adopts quite a different test, that of "real psychological or physical harm" as the proper criterion which should govern access. Given McLachlin J.'s assertion, at p. 127, that:

The majority of the Court of Appeal, by contrast, saw the matter less in terms of the custodial parent's "right" to decide all religious matters affecting the children, and more in terms of the best interests of the children. Unfettered by notions of the custodial parent's rights, the majority of the Court of Appeal asked simply what was in the best interests of the child.

Thus, for the majority in the Court of Appeal, the prime concern was the best interests of the child.

I find it useful to contrast such analysis with what, in fact Wood J.A., for the majority of the Court of Appeal, said in the following extract:

at p. 98:

The right of the access parent to share his or her religious beliefs with the child flows from the provisions of s. 16\(10\) of the Divorce Act of 1985. In my view it is subject to only two limitations:

(a) the unwillingness of the child to participate in such sharing, and

(b) the powers of the court to restrict that right on the grounds that exposure to the religious beliefs or practices of the access parents is, or is likely to be, harmful to the well being of the child.

The second [limitation] also seems straightforward, but it contains a complexity that requires discussion. Obviously if it can be established, on a civil standard of proof, that exposure to conflicting religious doctrines is causing the child psychological harm, or that by engaging in the observance of, or activities associated with, the religious beliefs of the access parent, the child is suffering real psychological or physical harm, the well being of that child would clearly require the court to intervene by way of an order which would eliminate the potential for such harm to continue. In those cases where such harm could be anticipated on a balance of probabilities, there would be grounds for an order that would avoid the problems before it begins.

But, in the exercise of the court's duty to protect the well being of the child, care must be taken to ensure that real harm of the sort, and arising in the manner, just described is distinguished from the general emotional distress which every child experiences when confronted with both the reality of divorce and the turmoil which characterizes the post-divorce relationship of many ex-spouses. The former can properly be addressed by judicial intervention. The latter is inevitable, and in most cases lies beyond the influence of any order of the court.

at p. 103:

Obviously, if the exercise by each [parent] of their individual freedom of religion, caused or threatened the probability of real psychological or physical harm to their children, state sanctioned intervention to preserve those interests would be justified under s. 1 of the Charter, but such action would only be justified to the extent that its purpose was accomplished in the manner* least intrusive to the fundamental freedoms of each parent.

While I do not share the doubt which Southin J.A. has expressed concerning the existence of the parens patriae jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of this province, I do agree that any interference with the exercise of parental judgement, on what constitutes the best interests of their children, could only be justified on the basis of evidence establishing the probability of real harm, either physical or psychological. The jurisdiction to interfere, of course, exists in connection with any matter which creates, or threatens such real harm, and does not depend upon the harm originating in any disagreement between the parents. Thus any such harm occasioned by a religious doctrine or practice in which both parents joined would equally justify state sanctioned interference with their freedom of religion.

at pp. 104-5:

Of necessity, however, there are limitations to the exercise of that freedom. From what has been said so far, the obvious limitations are:

(a) the consent of the child to participate in the process of teaching or dissemination, and

(b) the power of the court to restrict the right of the access parent to teach and disseminate his or her religious beliefs to the child on the grounds that exposure to the religious beliefs or practices of the access parent is, or is likely to be, harmful to the well being of the child.

at p. 105:

. . . I do not believe that it can be invoked as a rule which would oblige the court to shrink from its duty to determine whether or not the exposure to conflicting religious beliefs, or the content of a religious doctrine, is threatening real harm to the welfare of a child of the marriage.

But it will be a rare case where such an issue could legitimately arise. As has been noted, it could arise in those few cases where it could credibly be asserted that exposure either to conflicting religious doctrines, or to the doctrines of the religious belief of one of the parents, is causing or is likely to cause the child real harm of a physical or psychological nature.

In such cases the evidence which will establish such harm will not come from a critical evaluation of the religious beliefs of either parent. That sort of evidence takes its force exclusively from the personal value judgments of either person whose evaluation is offered or the judge who hears it. Rather the threshold evidence, which will justify the court embarking on an inquiry into real physical or psychological harm caused by a religious doctrine, will be that of an independent expert whose opinion is based upon generally accepted, objective, scientific criteria for the diagnosis and evaluation of the harm alleged.

at pp. 107-8:

It reinforces my view that the following principles of law are applicable to the issue of access restrictions which this case presents:

(g) Mr. Young's fundamental freedom of religion under s. 2\(a\) of the Charter, to teach and disseminate his religious beliefs to his children, is limited only to the extent that the exercise of that freedom causes, or threatens the probability of, real physical or psychological harm to the children.

at p. 108:

In my view both [Huddart J. and Proudfoot J.] correctly perceived that no issue of real harm, either physical or psychological, arose in this case. If any such issue had presented itself, it would have been manifest from the evidence of the expert witnesses who examined the children on a number of occasions, and who undoubtedly would have identified the existence of, or the potential for, real harm to the children arising from their father's religious beliefs, if such existed. In the absence of any such evidence, there was no basis upon which the court could legitimately entertain any inquiry into the substance of his religious beliefs.

At no time did the learned trial judge refuse to admit any evidence relevant to the issue of the children's best interests. Her decision not to admit any evidence related to the tenets of the Jehovah's Witness faith was the natural and irresistible result of the fact that the dispute between these two parents had its genesis in the intolerance of each for the religious beliefs of the other. Theirs was a dispute between beliefs, not a dispute over whether real harm would befall their children as a result of the religious beliefs of one or the other.

and, finally, at p. 109:

I have reviewed the evidence which was offered in support of those restrictions. In my view it fell far short of establishing that any real harm would befall the children from Mr. Young's exercise of his fundamental freedom to teach and disseminate his religious beliefs to them. No such harm was diagnosed or anticipated by either of the expert witnesses which the learned trial judge found to be credible. Nor did the evidence establish that the conflict in the religious beliefs of the parents was causing, or was likely to cause, such harm.

The evidence went no further than to establish that the children were under some stress, the cause of which was "multi-factorial", but which obviously included some component related to the religious dispute between the parents. [Emphasis (by underlining) added.]

This, in my view, leaves absolutely no doubt that the only basis for the Court of Appeal's reversal of the orders of the trial judge, which the court could not have said more clearly, was the absence of harm, which, in their view, was not established in evidence. We are far from the best interests of children test. Affirming the Court of Appeal's judgment on this point, my colleague, while repeating profusely that the best interests of children is the sole test, is in fact applying the harm test, which is the only basis on which the Court of Appeal reversed the trial judge who, in their opinion, did not apply that test.

Neither logic, necessity nor the terms of the Act mandate such an equation. As I will discuss later, the best interests of the child encompasses more than the absence of harm and I cannot agree that this objective compels the conclusion that there must be evidence of "real and significant harm to the child" before contact with the access parent can be limited in any manner.

In contrast to custody, there is little jurisprudence or doctrine on the nature of access rights, probably because access has never been understood to confer entitlements on the non-custodial parent other than those which are specified in court orders. The fundamental principle, however, that has always been recognized by courts is that the right to access is limited in scope and is conditioned and governed by the best interests of the child. Anson v. Anson, supra, at p. 368, in my view, properly circumscribes the right of access at this stage in time as follows:

Access can thus be regarded as a form of temporary possession with the powers granted by an access order being limited to those necessary to ensure the well-being of the child during the visitation periods. Access confers no right in the parent to influence the upbringing of the child -- that is for the parent with custody or guardianship. . . . However, under the Divorce Act, 1985 s. 16(5), a parent granted access has a right to make inquiries and to be given information as to the health, education and welfare of the child, unless otherwise ordered by a court.

Thus, the role of the access parent is "that of a very interested observer, giving love and support to [the child] in the background" (Pierce v. Pierce, 1977 CanLII 2206 \(BC SC\), [1977] 5 W.W.R. 572 (B.C.S.C. in chambers), at p. 575. See also Gubody v. Gubody, 1955 CanLII 405 \(ON SC\), [1955] O.W.N. 548 (H.C.), and Sudeyko v. Sudeyko (1974), 1974 CanLII 2223 \(BC SC\), 18 R.F.L. 273 (B.C.S.C.)).

In the words of Wilson J., "there is considerable support for the view that access as a distinct juridical concept is purely a creature of statute" (Frame v. Smith, 1987 CanLII 74 \(SCC\), [1987] 2 S.C.R. 99, at p. 130). Apart from legislative provisions, there are no pre-existing or parallel rights of access at common law.

The Civil Code of Quebec for its part recognizes no right of access but states simply:

570 Whether custody is entrusted to one of the spouses or to a third person, the father and mother retain the right of watching over the maintenance and education of the children, and are obliged to contribute thereto in proportion to their means.

However, art. 30 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada provides that "[i]n every decision concerning a child, the child's interest and the respect of his rights must be the determining factors". Article 543 of the Civil Code of Quebec obliges courts "to see to the interests of the child, at all stages of divorce proceedings". Article 569 directs courts to decide matters of custody, maintenance and education of the children, in their interest and in the respect of their rights. Thus, in both civil and common law jurisdictions, access exists only to the extent it is provided by statute and where it is in the best interests of the child.

One can find in both case law and doctrine discussion and debate as to whether access is more properly understood as a right of the parent or of the child. (See Weitzman, supra, at p. 230; R.

Deech, "The Unmarried Father and Human Rights" (1992), 4 J. Child L. 3; and Maidment, supra, at p. 40. See also Frame v. Smith, supra). Some have regarded access as an entitlement which belongs to the parent absent any compelling reason to disallow it, such as the safety of the child (Tocco v. Tocco (1977), 1977 CanLII 2628 (ON CA), 4 R.F.L. (2d) 174 (Ont. C.A.)). However, as is consistent with the focus on the best interests of the child in the Act, the more perceptive view at this time both in the literature and case law is that access is more properly regarded as a right of the child, not a right of the parent. As Bernard Dickens has stated, the modern function of parental rights is not to enforce powers of custody and control parents enjoy over their children, but to permit parents to discharge their duties to their children (supra, at p. 471). This view accords with the decision of this Court in Racine v. Woods, 1983 CanLII 27 (SCC), [1983] 2 S.C.R. 173, in which Wilson J. summarized the proper focus in the following words, at p. 185:

... it is the parental tie as a meaningful and positive force in the life of the child and not in the life of the parent that the court has to be concerned about. As has been emphasized many times in custody cases, a child is not a chattel in which its parents have a proprietary interest; it is a human being to whom they owe serious obligations.

Some years later, in Frame v. Smith, supra, at p. 132, Wilson J., although dissenting on another point, clearly said that:

The access right has become the child's right, not the parent's right, and it would be a regressive step to recognize today a cause of action in the parent based on an outmoded concept of parental rights in children....

Access rights exist in recognition of the fact that it is normally in the interests of the child to continue and foster the relationship developed with both parents prior to the divorce or separation. This being said, the right to access and the circumstances in which it takes place must be perceived from the vantage point of the child. Wherever the relationship to the non-custodial parent conflicts with the best interests of the child, the furtherance and protection of the child's best interests must take priority over the desires and interests of the parent.

As the ultimate goal of access is the continuation of a relationship which is of significance and support to the child, access must be crafted to preserve and promote that which is healthy and helpful in that relationship so that it may survive to achieve its purpose. Accordingly, it is in the interests of the child, and arguably also in the interests of the access parent, to remove or mitigate the sources of ongoing conflict which threaten to damage or prevent the continuation of a meaningful relationship.

Wood J.A. expressed the general concern that access rights remain vulnerable to the caprices of a vengeful custodial parent. In my view, courts should not be too quick to presume that the access concerns of the custodial parent are unrelated to the best interests of the child. Although the myth is that the custodial parent typically attempts to obstruct access of the other parent, studies in Canada, England and the United States indicate that the problem tends to be quite the reverse (see Richardson, supra; Weitzman, supra, at p. 230; and Maidment, supra, at p. 68). At the outset, it must not be forgotten that a parent who is granted access has no obligation to exercise those rights, and neither the child nor the custodial parent can force an access parent to comply with such an order, even though access might have been determined to be in the best interests of the child.

In Canada, the Evaluation of the Divorce Act -- Phase II: Monitoring and Evaluation, supra, at p. 111, discloses that access is denied to non-custodial parents by courts in only 2.4 percent of cases. However, those access rights which are granted by courts are often not exercised, and over the long run there is a process of gradual disengagement of many non-custodial parents from active involvement with their children, particularly if they remarry or become part of new family constellations (see N. Weisman, "On Access After Parental Separation" (1992), 36 R.F.L. (3d) 35). The authors of the Evaluation report at pp. 114-15 that over 40 percent of parents granted access either never see their children or see them no more than once a month. Moreover, those parents who exercise access do so less frequently than in the previous study (Evaluation of the Divorce Act, 1985 -- Phase I: Collection of Baseline Data (1987)), and the level and involvement of access parents is low and appears to be worsening over time. By contrast, many custodial parents express concern about the effects on their children of fathers' absence and the most commonly voiced complaint concerning access is that such rights are not exercised, or are exercised irregularly (Richardson, supra, at p. 36). Thus, as the authors of the Evaluation conclude, any lack of contact between non-custodial parents and their children can rarely be attributed to a denial of access (pp. 134-35). (Similar results were

Furthermore, when considering the role of access parents with respect to their children, courts should not be blind to the broader context in which custody and access are exercised. A vast number of non-custodial parents are in default of their most serious obligations to their children, as is the respondent in this appeal: the responsibility to provide economic support. In 1985, E. Finnbogason and M. Townson reported in The Benefits and Cost- Effectiveness of a Central Registry of Maintenance and Custody Orders (1985), that all existing studies indicated default rates in child support payments of over 50 percent, and the Law Reform Commission estimated the true rate to be as high as 75 percent. (See also A. M. Delorey, "Joint Legal Custody: A Reversion to Patriarchal Power" (1989) 3 C.J.W.L. 33, at p. 43, and Drakich, "In Whose Best Interests? The Politics of Joint Custody", supra). The most pressing issue in child custody and access is the burden borne by women and children as a consequence of the failure of men to accept their responsibilities to their children. As Ruth Deech noted, supra, at p. 6, "[t]he reality is the call on fathers to pay more, not to enjoy more rights." There is a certain irony in the claim to greater contact and control on the part of access parents in the face of such widespread neglect of children's basic needs.

Where there is a genuine problem with access, the non-custodial parent is not without recourse in any case. This stems from the statutory directive to facilitate access where it is in the child's best interests and the role of the judge as the arbiter of those interests in the case of a dispute between the parents. Generally, courts will grant liberal access to the non-custodial parent and usually this is consistent with the best interests of the child. Parents will also normally respect their children's wishes and best interests with regard to access. Most of the time, parents are able to reach an agreement as to custody and access without the intervention of courts, sometimes with the help of psycho-social services attached to courts or elsewhere. This, of course, is to be encouraged as it is in the best interests of children to minimize conflict in this area. Unfortunately, however, disagreements between parents do reach the courts and in such cases the judge must draw the line. That line must always be drawn in favour of the best interests of the child, from a child-centred perspective.

The difficulty, of course, always lies in determining what does constitute the best interests of the child, which brings us to the next issue.

Best Interests of the Child

The issue of the best interests of the child raises considerations at a number of different levels. First, the content of the rule must be discussed. Second, its constitutionality must be determined. Finally, the appropriate standard for its application must be established. All of these issues form the basis of the respondent's arguments in support of the Court of Appeal's ruling as to access.

1. Content of the Rule

As I discussed in the context of custody, the statutory recognition of the best interests of the child in the Act marks the culmination of a long evolution of the focus in custody and access decisions. From the era in which the enforcement of paternal rights was at the forefront of the courts' concern, through a time where the merits of each parent's claims were weighed, we have now reached the point where the sole question to be determined in custody and access arrangements is the best interests of the child. Indeed, the legislation makes it quite explicit that only the best interests of the child as they are comprehensively understood should be considered in such adjudications. This evolution was recognized by Wilson J. in Frame v. Smith, supra, at p. 132:

At first the courts were much more comfortable assessing the competing claims of parents than they were in trying to decide what was in the best interests of children. But over time the best interest of children increasingly became an important concern of the court and today it is the paramount concern. ... In light of these developments it can be said with some assurance that the concept of "parental rights" has fallen into disfavour. Parental responsibilities yes, but rights no.

The courts have moved inevitably and steadfastly in this direction since the 19th century. In In re McGrath (Infants), [1893] 1 Ch. 143, at p. 148, the English Court of Appeal determined that a court should have unfettered scope to consider the best interests of the child, even where it interfered with the father's rights with respect to religion, holding:

The dominant matter for the consideration of the Court is the welfare of the child. But the welfare of a child is not to be measured by money only, nor by physical comfort only. The word welfare must be taken in its widest sense. The moral and religious welfare of the child must be considered as well as its physical well-being.

This Court has followed suit and unremittingly endorsed the position that in the face of any threat to the welfare of the child, parental interests must give way. As long ago as DeLaurier v. Jackson, supra, at pp. 153-54, Crocket J. held:

If the general welfare of the child requires that the father's rights in respect of the religious faith in which his offspring is to be reared, should be suspended or superseded, the courts in the exercise of their equitable jurisdiction have undoubted power to override them, as they have the power to override all other parental rights, though in doing so they must act cautiously. . . .

Due consideration is, of course, to be given in all cases to the father's wishes but if the court is satisfied in any case upon a consideration of all the facts and circumstances, as shown by the evidence, that the father's wishes conflict with the child's own best interests, viewed from all angles -- material, physical, moral, emotional and intellectual as well as religious -- then the father's wishes must yield to the welfare of the child.

The Court reached the same conclusion in King v. Low, 1985 CanLII 59 \(SCC\), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 87, finding that such a result was consistent with both modern authority in other jurisdictions and previous decisions of this Court in Racine v. Woods, supra, and Beson v. Director of Child Welfare (Nfld.), 1982 CanLII 32 \(SCC\), [1982] 2 S.C.R. 716. The nature of the judicial determination of the best interests was described by McIntyre J. in King v. Low at p. 101 as follows:

. . . the dominant consideration to which all other considerations must remain subordinate must be the welfare of the child. This is not to say that the question of custody will be determined by weighing the economic circumstances of the contending parties. The matter will not be determined solely on the basis of the physical comfort and material advantages that may be available in the home of one contender or the other. The welfare of the child must be decided on a consideration of these and all other relevant factors, including the general psychological, spiritual and emotional welfare of the child. It must be the aim of the Court, when resolving disputes between rival claimants for the custody of a child, to choose the course which will best provide for the healthy growth, development and education of the child so that he will be equipped to face the problems of life as a mature adult. Parental claims must not be lightly set aside, and they are entitled to serious consideration in reaching any conclusion. Where it is clear that the welfare of the child requires it, however, they must be set aside. [Emphasis added].

These words express the important notion that courts must be directed to create or support the conditions which are most conducive to the flourishing of the child. They are, in my view, as applicable in the context of access arrangements as they are in the determination of custody.

A determination of the best interests of the child encompasses a myriad of considerations, as child custody and access decisions have been described as "ones of human relations in their most intense and complex form". In contrast to most issues that come before the courts, such decisions are "person-oriented" rather than "act-oriented" and require an evaluation of "the whole person viewed as a social being" (L. LaFave, "Origins and Evolution of the 'Best Interests of the Child' Standard" (1989), 34 S.D.L. Rev. 459; R. H. Mnookin, "Child-Custody Adjudication: Judicial Functions in the Face of Indeterminacy" (1975), 39 Law & Contemp. Probs. 226). Courts are required to predict the happening of future events rather than to assess the legal import of past acts and judge the effect of various relationships on the best interests of the child, all the while weighing innumerable variables without the benefit of a simple formula.

In making a determination as to the best interests of the child, courts must attempt to balance such considerations as the age, physical and emotional constitution and psychology of both the child and his or her parents and the particular milieu in which the child will live. These considerations, which underlie the common law, are clearly set out in art. 30 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada:

30 In every decision concerning a child, the child's interest and the respect of his rights must be the determining factors.

Consideration may be given in particular to the child's age, sex, religion, language, character and family surroundings, and the other circumstances in which he lives.
[Emphasis added.]

Probably one of the most significant factors in many cases will be the relationship that the child entertains with his or her parents. This must necessarily encompass such considerations as the strength of the emotional ties and the role of the person who has provided primary care in the life of the child.

Goldstein, Freud and Solnit's Beyond the Best Interests of the Child, supra, while perhaps lacking in empirical data, remains an influential analysis of the psychological needs of children following divorce. The authors emphasize, among other factors, the importance of continuity in the child's relationships and conclude that the major focus of custody decisions should be to preserve and protect the relationship between the child and his or her psychological parent. As Weisman reports, supra, at p. 47, there is some consensus in favour of this view in recent research. Goldstein later went as far as to say that, while continuing access is normally in the best interests of the child, this is the case only where there is agreement between parents and no court order to effect access is required (Goldstein, "In Whose Best Interests?", in R.S. Abella and C. L'Heureux-Dubé, eds., supra). While the Act places the emphasis on the best interests of the child rather than the wishes of the custodial parent, Weisman observes at p. 62, supra, that research indicates that "the child's relationship with the custodial parent may well be the most important factor affecting long-term outcome. Judges should therefore exercise caution before intervening in any manner that may introduce added stress to this relationship".

Custody and access decisions are pre-eminently exercises in discretion. Case by case consideration of the unique circumstances of each child is the hallmark of this process. This Court recognized in Moge v. Moge, supra, in the context of spousal support decisions, that the discretion vested in the trial judge is essential to effect the very purposes outlined in the Act. The wide latitude under the best interests test permits courts to respond to the spectrum of factors which can both positively and negatively affect a child. Such discretion also permits the judge to focus on the needs of the particular child before him or her, recognizing that what may constitute stressful or damaging circumstances for one child may not necessarily have the same effect on another.

While the best interests test provides the focus and perspective from which to assess custody and access decisions, the test has nonetheless been subject to evaluation and criticism from various sources. The most common concern is that it is essentially indeterminate and fails to provide the necessary direction and criteria with which to make custody and access decisions (Mnookin, supra). Some commentators have observed that the broad scope of the test may permit the best interests of the child to become hostage to parental rights rhetoric (K. M. Munro, "The Inapplicability of Rights Analysis in Post-Divorce Child Custody Decision Making" (1992), 30 Alta. L. Rev. 852). Others note that, devoid of presumptions, the test becomes a competition between psychological experts and lawyers concerning the prevailing psychological notions of child rearing (Fineman, The Illusion of Equality: The Rhetoric and Reality of Divorce Reform, supra). Women in particular have become concerned that the importance of women's work in caring for young children can be devalued under the best interests test, as judges consider such factors as the superior financial position of most fathers when deciding custody matters (S. B. Boyd, "Potentialities and Perils of the Primary Caregiver Presumption" (1991), 7 C.F.L.Q. 1). Others claim that the test permits cultural bias in custody and access decisions and is a recipe for the abuse of judicial discretion (S. J. Toope, "Riding the Fences: Courts, Charter Rights and Family Law" (1991), 9 Can. J. Fam. L. 55, at p. 67). See also A. Ehrcke, "Limiting Judicial Discretion in Custody Proceedings on Divorce" (1987), 6 Can. J. Fam. L. 211; J. P. Ryan, "Joint Custody in Canada: Time for a Second Look" (1986), 49 R.F.L. (2d) 119; Department of Justice of Canada, Custody and Access: Public Discussion Paper (1993).

In my view, without minimizing these concerns and risks, it is crucial to distinguish between the criticism of the best interests test and the best interests of the child as an objective. Despite concerns about the application of the test, no one has questioned the best interests of the child as the proper focus of custody and access determinations. In the words of Maidment, supra, at p. 161:

. . . the welfare of the child holds the central position in the resolution of custody cases. Whatever the practice, the law places the child protection or nurturance philosophy at the centre of the decision-making process, and whatever interpretations are given to the welfare principle, nowadays the pre-eminence of the child-centred approach receives universal support.

Furthermore, it is significant that no other test has been broadly endorsed to replace it. At the end of the day, the test has been described as "the least detrimental available alternative for safeguarding the child's growth and development" and most of the suggested guidelines or presumptions are in fact designed to give content to the test in furtherance of the welfare of the child. (See Goldstein, Freud and Solnit, supra, at p. 53. See also Mnookin, supra.)

It is also worthwhile to recall that the best interests test initially fulfilled its purpose because the presumptions such as the tender years doctrine provided the necessary content on which to base custody and access decisions (Fineman, The Illusion of Equality: The Rhetoric and Reality of Divorce Reform, supra, at p. 84). Courts not only presumed that mothers were naturally better custodial parents, but also relied on the parent who had since the beginning provided primary care to the child to continue to act in its best interests. As this Court noted in Talsky v. Talsky, supra, at p. 293, the tender years doctrine was not so much a rule of law as "purely . . . a principle of common sense".

With the removal of such presumptions however, courts are now faced with competing claims concerning the best interests of the child. In the result, a number of presumptions have been suggested to govern the best interests test in custody decisions, the most common of which is the primary caregiver presumption. (See Boyd, "Potentialities and Perils of the Primary Caregiver Presumption", supra). This presumption has developed in response to the trend toward joint custody, and the resultant erosion in both the financial resources and the authority of the parent with day-to-day obligations for child rearing. Boyd expresses the concerns underlying this presumption as follows at p. 6:

. . . a misplaced application of "equality" is evident in legislative and judicial trends toward entrenching fathers' rights in child custody law, such as joint custody and access enforcement. The importance of ensuring "equal" fatherly input into children's lives after family breakdown even if they were not "equally" involved before, has been elevated to arguably too high a level in recent years. The form which this trend often takes -- retaining an active and full role for both father and mother in making decisions concerning the child (joint legal custody) -- potentially inhibits the autonomy and exercise of discretion by the parent with physical care of the child.

However, as she points out, one of the principal rationales for endorsing this presumption is not to supplant the best interests of the child as the ultimate objective but to ensure that those interests are protected. The presumption explicitly restores the values of commitment and demonstrated ability to nurture as well as continued psychological parenting to the child, factors which may be overshadowed by other considerations in custody disputes. The primary caregiver presumption thus recognizes the obligations and supports the authority of the parent engaged in day-to-day tasks of child rearing.

In assessing all the relevant considerations, courts must be careful that the ideals of parental sharing and equality do not overcome the lived reality of custody and access arrangements and that the child's needs and concerns are accommodated and not obscured by abstract claims of parental rights. This is not to say that the parent's interests may not coincide with the child's interests or that a court may never validly take a parent's interests into consideration. However, to further the best interests of the child, a recognition of the close relationship between the needs of the child and the needs of the remaining family unit of which he or she is a part is essential. As Abella J.A. held in M. (B.P.) v. M. (B.L.D.E.), (1992), 1992 CanLII 8642 \(ON CA\), 97 D.L.R. (4th) 437, for the majority, at p. 459:

[The best interests of the child] by no means excludes the parental perspective. The needs of children and their parents are obviously inextricable, particularly between children and the parent on whom they depend for their day-to-day care, where only one parent has this primary responsibility. The structure of an environment that fits the child's interests would undoubtedly be reinforced if the economic and emotional needs, especially of custodial parents, were factored in, given the symbiosis of their sense of well-being.

Moreover, as Weisman, supra, concludes at p. 36:

. . . access issues often present the most intractable problems in all family law. On occasion, fairness and enforceability are impossible to achieve, and the most for which one can hope is the least detrimental alternative for the child.

In the final analysis, when considering the best interests of the child, it may be a virtue rather than a sin for the judge to be pragmatic and take into consideration both the strengths and shortcomings of the parties and the limits of human nature. To do so is only to recognize that, in some circumstances, the perfect may be the enemy of the good. Courts must always be mindful that not only the benefit but also the real cost and burden of all custody and access arrangements ultimately falls on the children themselves.

2. Constitutionality of the Best Interests Test

It would seem to be self-evident that the best interests test is value neutral, and cannot be seen on its face to violate any right protected by the Charter. Indeed, as an objective, the legislative focus on the best interests of the child is completely consonant with the articulated values and underlying concerns of the Charter, as it aims to protect a vulnerable segment of society by ensuring that the interests and needs of the child take precedence over any competing considerations in custody and access decisions.

Nonetheless, in his claim that the access order infringes his freedom of religion under the Charter, the respondent challenges the constitutionality of the best interests test on a number of grounds. First, he alleges that the discretion conferred on judges under the best interests test violates the Charter. Second, he claims that the test is so vague that it cannot be said to be "prescribed by law" and, accordingly, any violation of his freedom of religion, cannot be justified by the test under s. 1 of the Charter. Leaving aside for the moment the alleged infringement of freedom of religion of the respondent and his children under the Charter, in my opinion, both of these contentions must fail.

As I observed in R. v. Swain, 1991 CanLII 104 (SCC), [1991] 1 S.C.R. 933, this Court has previously found that the mere existence of broad judicial discretion in a legislative provision is not in itself sufficient to attract the application of the Charter, nor can the presence or scope of such discretion alone give rise to an inference that Charter rights are thereby infringed. One such instance was the decision in R. v. Beare, 1988 CanLII 126 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 387, where the issue arose in the context of a challenge to the wide discretion of the police to fingerprint suspects. In that case, La Forest J., writing for the Court, stated at p. 410:

The existence of the discretion conferred by the statutory provisions does not, in my view, offend principles of fundamental justice.

Indeed, this Court recently held in Baron v. Canada, 1993 CanLII 154 (SCC), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 416, that the presence of the residual discretion of a judge may itself be a constitutional requirement in some instances, in order that there be a means of balancing the competing rights and interests of the individual and the state.

In R. v. Morales, 1992 CanLII 53 (SCC), [1992] 3 S.C.R. 711, Gonthier J., dissenting, observed at p. 754 that:

. . . the identification of a measure of discretion conferred by means of a legislative provision cannot alone provide the basis for a constitutional evaluation of that provision. Nor can the identification of possible parameters of that discretion, for a discretion which is referred to as being fettered can be one which is limited not only by appropriate constraints but also by those which are inappropriate or unsuitable. The more important issue which remains, therefore, is what kind of discretion is conferred, and the capacity of the words of the legislative provision to support the type of reasoning which the matter under adjudication requires. [Emphasis added.]

Thus, discretion cannot be considered in the absence of an examination of the legislative objectives, and the important question is whether the presence of such discretion can be rationally tied to those objectives. For the reasons which I shall delineate hereinafter when considering the vagueness of the best interests test, it is clear that broad judicial discretion is crucial to the proper implementation of the legislative objective of securing the best interests of the child.

This Court has had occasion to consider the concept of vagueness of legislative provisions in the context of the Charter on a number of occasions in recent years (see R. v. Morgentaler, 1988 CanLII 90 (SCC), [1988] 1 S.C.R. 30; Irwin Toy Ltd. v. Quebec (Attorney General), 1989 CanLII 87 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 927; Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (Man.), 1990 CanLII 105 (SCC), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1123; R. v. Keegstra, 1990 CanLII 24 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 697; Canada (Human Rights Commission) v. Taylor, 1990 CanLII 26 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 892; Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada v. Canada, 1991 CanLII 119 (SCC), [1991] 1 S.C.R. 139; Osborne v. Canada (Treasury Board), 1991 CanLII 60 (SCC), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 69; R. v. Butler, 1992 CanLII 124 (SCC), [1992] 1 S.C.R. 452; R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, 1992 CanLII 72 (SCC), [1992] 2 S.C.R. 606). While these cases all dealt with vagueness in the criminal context, a number of principles may be derived from this jurisprudence which are useful in the present context. The underlying concern is that a legislative provision be capable of providing a framework or guide within which judicial decisions can be made. The threshold for constitutional violation due to vagueness in legislative provisions is relatively high, and it is not necessary that such provisions carry a precise technical meaning or provide certainty as to the result (R. v. Butler, supra; Osborne v. Canada (Treasury Board), supra, and R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, supra). Rather, the standard requires that the provisions permit the framing of an intelligible legal debate with respect to the objectives contained in the legislation.

The doctrine of vagueness was defined most recently by Gonthier J. for this Court in R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, supra, at p. 643 as follows:

. . . a law will be found unconstitutionally vague if it so lacks in precision as not to give sufficient guidance for legal debate.

The question which arises, then, under the vagueness requirements of constitutional validity, is whether the best interests test is so uncertain as to be incapable of guiding a consideration of the factors relevant to custody and access determinations. In my opinion, it is not.

A similar question arose concerning the concept of the "public interest" in the recent decision of this Court in R. v. Morales, supra, where Gonthier J., while dissenting on this issue, set out a framework for considering the constitutional validity of broad legislative concepts which are nonetheless designed to encompass a specific set of concerns and interests. He described "public interest" in the following manner at p. 751:

. . . a notion which has traditionally been recognized as affording a means of referring to the special set of considerations which are relevant to those legal determinations concerned with the relationship of the represented private interest or interests and the broader interest of the public.

The same type of characterization is appropriate to the best interests test. The "best interests of the child" can be regarded as the term employed to refer to the spectrum of considerations encompassed by the needs of the child, as distinct from those of any other party, in the determination of custody and access disputes. The fact that it must be applied to the facts of each case does not militate in favour of its unconstitutionality. Rather, this feature is part and parcel of what makes decisions in the best interests of the child possible at all.

As its widespread adoption and application suggest, the best interests of the child standard cannot be regarded as unconstitutionally vague. On the contrary, the best interests test is universally recognized as the foundation of modern family law around the world and is legislatively entrenched in both common law and civil jurisdictions in the United States, Australia and Europe. Moreover, the need to make the best interests of the child the primary consideration in all actions concerning children, including legal proceedings, is specifically recognized in international human rights documents such as the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, Can. T.S. 1992 No. 3, Art. 3(1). In my view, this amply demonstrates both the enduring value of the best interests test as a legal norm capable of meaningful application and the broad recognition of the interests of children in the field of human rights.

It is important to recall that the vagueness of a legislative provision cannot be examined in the abstract but must be considered within the context of the particular legislative objectives in question, bearing in mind that some objectives will require a panoply of judicial remedies for their meaningful fulfilment. As Beetz J. observed in R. v. Morgentaler, supra, at p. 107, "[f]lexibility and vagueness are not synonymous". Nor should the vagueness of a provision be considered solely with reference to the words of the statute. The Ontario Court of Appeal held in R. v. LeBeau (1988), 1988 CanLII 3271 (ON CA), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 163, at p. 173:

It has been recognized that the void for vagueness doctrine is not to be applied to the bare words of the statutory provision but, rather, to the provision as interpreted and applied in judicial decisions.

See also Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (Man.), supra, at p. 1157.

This Court held recently in R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, supra, at p. 627 that, among the factors with which courts should be concerned when the vagueness of a law is at issue are:

- . . . (a) the need for flexibility and the interpretive role of the courts, (b) the impossibility of achieving absolute certainty, a standard of intelligibility being more appropriate and (c) the possibility that many varying judicial interpretations of a given disposition may exist and perhaps coexist. . . .

Child custody and access decisions engage all of these considerations, as the best interests of the child remain, in the words of Abella J.A., "as fluid as each child's circumstances" (M. (B.P.) v. M. (B.L.D.E.), supra, at p. 459). As I have discussed earlier in these reasons, when fashioning custody and access orders, courts are concerned with the design of future living arrangements which may be affected by a multitude of different factors. In establishing this modus vivendi, courts must consider not only the circumstances which might ideally be in the best interests of the child, but must also weigh the capacity of the parties to fulfil and endure the conditions which are set for custody and access. Thus, family law statutes, and child custody provisions in particular, probably best exemplify the type of legislation in which broad judicial discretion is necessary to fulfil the legislative purpose effectively.

Furthermore, the best interests test has been judicially applied for decades, and the case law provides a large body of jurisprudence to which courts may resort when considering factors relevant to the best interests test.

In my opinion, the prophetic caution of Gonthier J. in R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, supra, at p. 642, is particularly apposite in the circumstances of this case:

One must be wary of using the doctrine of vagueness to prevent or impede State action in furtherance of valid social objectives, by requiring the law to achieve a degree of precision to which the subject-matter does not lend itself.

It should not be assumed that a grant of discretion is an invitation to exercise personal prejudice, as it is well established in the jurisprudence that discretion in every instance must be exercised judicially and in conformity with the objectives and standards of the legislation. The application of the best interests test, if done in an individual case according to irrelevant or improper criteria, remains subject to the normal process of review on appeal.

Having analyzed the content of the best interests of the child standard prescribed in the Act in matters of custody and access and determined its constitutionality, what burden of proof must the custodial parent meet to obtain an order restricting access?

3. Evidence

One might have thought that the clear and unequivocal language of the Act makes the best interests of the child the only consideration in matters of custody and access, and that the only evidence required for an order limiting access would be evidence indicating that the exercise of access in a particular manner is in the best interests of the child. This is the test which was applied in this case by all of the judges, including those at the Court of Appeal, who were seized of the matter at the interim stage, as well as the trial judge. The Court of Appeal, however, relying in particular on the decision of the Ontario Supreme Court in Hockey v. Hockey, supra, would elevate the test to one of harm which the custodial parent must show in order to restrict access to the children by the non-custodial parent. I say at the outset that, even under such a severe test, the appellant has established that restrictions are required. However, the question is whether harm is the test. My answer is a clear no for the reasons that follow.

As I noted above, the Court of Appeal has equated the alleged absence of harm in this case with the best interests of the child. However, no rationale is proposed for so defining the best interests of the child. Moreover, nothing in the Act mandates or even suggests that "real danger of significant harm to the child" be the sole consideration in matters of custody and access.

Subsection 16\(8\) of the Act directs that the best interests of the child are to be determined "by reference to the condition, means, needs and other circumstances of the child". There is no mention of harm at all in this list of considerations, and nothing supports the inference that the best interests of the child not only can but also should be encompassed by the simple concept of absence of harm, thus making harm the controlling factor in custody and access decisions. On the contrary, the adoption of the harm test would require courts to ignore the very factors which are set out in the Act and which have guided the courts up until now in custody and access decisions. While it is self-evident that if the exercise of access by the non-custodial parent harms the child, access must be curtailed; even in the absence of harm the best interests of the child may also warrant such curtailment.

The harm test by which the Court of Appeal proposes to qualify the best interests test inverts the basic focus of the inquiry into custody and access. Under the best interests test, courts must consider how to best foster the child's overall development and protect the child from conflict and the disruptive effects of divorce at a vulnerable point in his or her life. In contrast, the harm test essentially requires a court to determine how much conflict and stress a child should be required to endure in order that the parent's wishes may prevail. Once the pendulum swings in that direction, it is difficult to control. If not this much stress, why not a little more? If one type of conflict, why not that? Moreover, it may be difficult if not impossible, even for an expert, to determine with any degree of accuracy whether the child has been harmed or will be harmed in the long run. However, the most serious deficiency of the harm test is the following. While the effects of custody and access decisions always remain uncertain to some degree, the harm test places any risk of miscalculation in the degree of stress or conflict occasioned by such decisions squarely on the back of the child, depriving the child of any presumption in his or her favour. Obviously this cannot be correct from the perspective of the interests of the child. To wait until harm has occurred to correct the situation is not only to waive the benefit of prevention, but also to increase the possibility of error. Instead of minimizing the risks, the harm test would maximize them.

A discussion of the research data on the long-term effects of divorce, as well as custody and access decisions, on children is helpful at this point to assess the consequences of adopting the harm standard as regards the welfare of children and the importance of adhering to the best interests of the child as the overarching goal in custody and access determinations. While this remains an area of social science that has yet to be comprehensively researched, studies of both the effects of divorce and the role of conflict in the subsequent family life indicate that children often suffer more extensively than is generally acknowledged on divorce, and that those who must endure continuing conflict after divorce stand at serious risk of harm down the road. The resounding message is that courts must pay more, not less, attention to the needs of children on divorce.

I acknowledge at the outset the limits in applying such research to the wider population, as the studies to date have tended to focus on groups within a particular social class or locale. Furthermore, the conclusions of some studies, for example those by J. S. Wallerstein and J. B. Kelly, Surviving the Breakup: How Children and Parents Cope with Divorce (1980), have been used to support a number of different propositions concerning the best interests of the child on divorce. (See Fineman, The Illusion of Equality: The Rhetoric and Reality of Divorce Reform, supra, at p. 118.) In addition, notions concerning the optimum child rearing conditions on the breakdown of the marriage are subject to a degree of difference and controversy between professionals working in the field. This is illustrated, for example, in the contrasting conclusions reached by Goldstein, Freud and Solnit, supra, and those of Wallerstein and Kelly, supra.

Nonetheless, a number of conclusions about the effects of divorce on children emerge with remarkable consistency in all of the major studies and psychological literature on children after divorce. One of the most important of these is the role of conflict in the welfare of the child. Along with the quality of the relationship with the custodial parent and the ability to maintain contact with the non-custodial parent, there is substantial evidence that continuing conflict is the most important factor affecting the ability of children to readjust to the new family situation after divorce (Weisman, supra, at pp. 47-48). It appears that, above and beyond the disruption caused by divorce or separation itself, it is the discord and disharmony within the family which are most damaging to children in the aftermath of divorce.

Two of the major studies on divorce and the effects of conflict on the emotional and psychological well-being of children forcefully make the point that the ability to reduce conflict is crucial to the welfare of children. The study of Wallerstein and Kelly, supra, although limited to white middle class families in California without previous clinical histories who volunteered to participate in the study, is the most comprehensive long-term study on the effects of divorce on children. A ten-year follow up of the same subjects is reported in J. S. Wallerstein and S. Blakeslee, Second Chances: Men, Women and Children a Decade After Divorce (1989). Among the most significant findings of these two reports is that separation or divorce cannot be regarded as a discrete event to be dealt with once and for all, but is most often the beginning in a continuum of disruptive events in the life of the child. The stress resulting from changing family structures and reduced financial support following divorce in many cases continues to be experienced by children long after the divorce is final. While many children do adjust in such situations, the notion that children automatically can and do "get used to" new family situations in a relatively short period of time is not borne out by the results of the study. By all such indicators as success at educational endeavours and the later ability to establish stable personal and professional lives, children of divorce appear in general to be subject to more stresses than their counterparts in intact families. While the authors found considerable evidence that divorce was beneficial to the parents, there was no comparable evidence regarding children. The majority of such children neither experienced relief at the time of the divorce nor felt it had resulted in an improvement in their lives five years later. Moreover,

Wallerstein and Blakeslee reported in the later study that problems and conflicts in some children resulting from divorce did not manifest themselves until much later, particularly in the case of girls who in the earlier study had generally appeared to cope better with divorce than boys. Rather, it appears that the long-term effects of divorce cannot always be predicted from the reactions of children at the outset. (See Wallerstein and Blakeslee, supra, at p. 15.)

At the five-year point, Wallerstein and Kelly concluded that, while no factor could in every case be associated with a good outcome, the extent to which conflict between the parents had been resolved was the single most important factor in the well-being of the child. Following interviews ten years after their initial contact with the subjects, Wallerstein and Blakeslee again identified prolonged hostility between the parents as the single most destructive outcome for the children on divorce. Children subject to fierce legal battles between parents appear to be the most vulnerable group, and ongoing litigation is consistently identified as detrimental to the welfare of children (Wallerstein and Blakeslee, supra, at p. 196). Wallerstein and Kelly also determined, as have other researchers, that children generally fare best when they are able to maintain a continuing relationship with both parents. However, an equally important corollary to this conclusion is often ignored. That is, continued contact may only be in the best interests of the child where parents are not adversarial and where interaction between the child and the access parent is not beset by conflict. Where conflict cannot be resolved or minimized, the detriment of continued contact may outweigh the benefit, as forced cooperation between hostile parents may lead to further litigation and conflict, which itself extends and increases the difficulties faced by children. (See also Weitzman, supra, at pp. 253-54.)

These findings are largely corroborated in another U.S. study of the impact of divorce on children. E. M. Hetherington, M. Cox and R. Cox in "Effects of Divorce on Parents and Children" in M. E. Lamb, ed., Nontraditional Families: Parenting and Child Development (1982), in a study of white middle class pre-school children in the custody of their mothers, focused on the effects of conflict on children by comparing its effects in both divorced and intact families. The role of conflict in the welfare of children is highly visible in this study, as the authors determined that two years after divorce, children in low conflict divorced families actually fared better than those in high conflict intact families. Other studies which have come to similar conclusions about the role of conflict in the adjustment of the child after divorce include: E. S. Ellison, "Issues Concerning Parental Harmony and Children's Psychosocial Adjustment" (1983), 53 Amer. J. Orthopsychiat. 73; R. E. Emery, "Interparental Conflict and the Children of Discord and Divorce" (1982), 92 Psych. Bull. 310; M. Rutter, "Protective Factors in Children's Responses to Stress and Disadvantage", in M. W. Kent and J. E. Rolf, eds., Primary Prevention of Psychopathology: Social Competence in Children, vol. III (1979); J. R. Johnston, M. Kline and J. M. Tschann, "Ongoing Postdivorce Conflict: Effects on Children of Joint Custody and Frequent Access" (1989), 59 Amer. J. Orthopsychiat. 576. For further discussion, see also Boyd, "Women, Men and Relationships with Children: Is Equality Possible?" supra; Drakich, "In Whose Best Interests? The Politics of Joint Custody", supra; Weitzman, supra, at pp. 248, 254; LaFave, supra, at p. 489; J. F. Burrett, Child Access and Modern Family Law (1988); Weisman, supra.

Thus, while most research discloses that continued contact with both parents after divorce is normally in the best interests of the child, that finding cannot be separated from a consideration of the degree of conflict to which the child will be subject (Weisman, supra). Ironically, unrestricted access may, in some circumstances, cause the continuation of the very stresses from which the parties sought relief when they divorced, and the desire to maintain the pre-existing roles of each parent may in fact result in no ending at all. (See Fineman, The Illusion of Equality: The Rhetoric and Reality of Divorce Reform, supra, at p. 164.)

Bearing in mind these concerns, in particular the fact that harm to a child may only become perceptible at a much later date, it is evident that the welfare of children is put at considerable risk if the prospect of harm becomes the sole prerequisite for restrictions on access. In my view, the proper approach to access was stated by Abella J.A. in M. (B.P.) v. M. (B.L.D.E.), supra, at p. 461.

It is not a question of what standard should be used to deprive a parent of access, it is a question of what standard should be used in deciding what form of access, if any, should be ordered. The answer is clear from the statute: the standard is the child's best interests.

The best interests of the child is not simply the right to be free of demonstrable harm. It is the positive right to the best possible arrangements in the circumstances of the parties. This could not be more clearly indicated than in the report on Family Law, supra, as the Law Reform Commission of Canada begins its recommendations on children and the dissolution of marriage with the following words at p. 63:

1. Children should have two fundamental rights when their parents' marriage ends:
 - (a) the right to social and psychological support by having the most suitable arrangements possible in the circumstances made for their custody, care and upbringing; and
 - (b) the right to economic support.

Without disregarding the disruption inherent in divorce, courts must do whatever is within their power to alleviate rather than disregard, minimize or normalize difficulties, and should beware of adopting a needlessly cavalier attitude where solutions can be seen to exist. The fact that many children experience stress and disruption upon the breakdown of the marriage, in my view, only increases the obligation of courts to focus their attention on the best interests of the child. The primary goal of the legal system on divorce must be to minimize the adverse effects on children. However, this requires a vision of the best interests of the child that is more than neutral to the conditions under which custody and access occur. The harm test clearly cannot meet this objective.

The Court of Appeal concedes that a court could be obliged to determine whether or not either the content of religious beliefs or conflict arising from exposure to conflicting beliefs is threatening "real harm" to the child. However, in the view of the majority, at p. 105, "it will be a rare case where such an issue could legitimately arise". The Court of Appeal also concludes that restrictions on access should only be allowed where harm can be demonstrated by independent experts.

It is clear that the proposed test falls far short of protecting the best interests of the child, as it may well be impossible to demonstrate the high level of harm the test envisions in many cases even where there are real concerns for the welfare of the child. It is unrealistic to expect that the accumulated evidence of ill effects engendered by separation or divorce will be immediate or readily demonstrable to a court as, in the usual case, custody decisions are made shortly after separation. However this does not mean that such concerns should therefore be readily dismissed. Rather, judges must exercise their discretion in order to prevent harm to the child, rather than merely to identify or establish its presence after the damage is done.

I would also point out that to adopt the harm test would be a regression back to the era when the interests of the child were subjugated to those of the parents. Despite the fact that the test purports to further the best interests of the child by promoting unfettered contact between non-custodial parents and their children, in reality the test subordinates the best interests of children to a presumptive right of the non-custodial parent to unrestricted access.

Finally, it is important to place this issue in its proper context by noting that the vast majority of access orders contain no restrictions on access. Over 96 percent of divorces are now finalized with either an uncontested hearing or no court hearing at all (Evaluation of the Divorce Act -- Phase II, supra, at p. 44). Of the remainder that are contested, most result in orders for liberal or reasonable access without restrictions. As a practical matter then, the question of restrictions only arises where something in the evidence or the circumstances of the parties suggests a concern or a potential problem. Where those concerns emanate from the custodial parent, that parent will, of course, bear the evidentiary burden of establishing that access should be curtailed. However, the standard that must be met is not the harm standard but evidence that restrictions are in the best interests of the child or, to put it otherwise, that unlimited access is not in the best interests of the child.

I agree with my colleague that expert evidence should not be routinely required to establish the best interests of the child. In my view, it is a modern day myth that experts are always better placed than parents to assess the needs of the child. Common sense requires us to acknowledge that the person involved in day to day care may observe changes in the behaviour, mood, attitude and development of a child that could go unnoticed by anyone else. The custodial parent normally has the best vantage point from which to assess the interests of the child, and thus will often provide the most reliable and complete source of information to the judge on the needs and interests of that child.

Furthermore, it is important to emphasize the importance of the evidence of children in custody and access disputes, and I would not wish to suggest that their testimony alone might not be a sufficient evidentiary basis upon which to restrict access. Courts have increasingly come to accept and understand in the criminal context that children themselves can be a reliable source of evidence to the judge (R. v. Khan, 1990 CanLII 77 (SCC), [1990] 2 S.C.R. 531). To disregard their evidence when their own interests are directly at issue would, in my opinion, be at odds with this clear evolutionary trend in the law.

Many legal commentators have noted the degree to which custody and access disputes have become a contest between experts, involving increasing amounts of time and money. (See N. Bala, "Assessing the Assessor: Legal Issues" (1990), 6 C.F.L.Q. 179; P. J. Caplan and J. Wilson, "Assessing the Child Custody Assessors" (1990), 27 R.F.L. (3d) 121; L. G  linas and B. M. Knoppers, "Le r  le des experts en droit qu  b  cois en mati  re de garde, d'acc  s et de protection" (1993), 53 R. du B. 3; Fineman, The Illusion of Equality: The Rhetoric and Reality of Divorce Reform, supra.) In the absence of clear legal presumptions about the best interests of children, judges have increasingly come to rely on the recommendations of experts to determine custody and access issues, believing that such experts possess objective, scientific knowledge and can in fact "know" what is in the best interests of the child. However, expert testimony, while helpful in some and perhaps many circumstances, is often inconclusive and contradictory (G  linas and Knoppers, supra, at p. 17). That this should be so is not surprising, since such assessments are both speculative and may be affected by the professional values and biases of the assessors themselves.

Even where such expertise is valuable, there are impediments in such reliance. Assessments may occasion delays in resolving proceedings and may at times constitute a significant disruption in the lives of both parents and children. The cost involved in routinely hiring experts to establish the best interests of the child only increases the expense of custody litigation and is far beyond the resources of most divorcing couples. Furthermore, as Professor Bala, supra, points out, at p. 224, "much of what assessors ultimately recommend may simply be a matter of 'common experience and common sense'".

Given these concerns, while the evidence of experts may form a valuable and necessary part of some custody and access decisions, most of the time they are unnecessary to an ordinary determination of the best interests of the child. Nor does the prospect of access restrictions inevitably require resort to expert opinion, as it may be apparent to the judge from the evidence of the parties and often the children themselves that access should only be granted subject to certain conditions.

I am compelled to address the issue of the right of the children to "know" their father, as Wood J.A. suggested at several points that "contact" in s. 16\(10\) of the Act encompasses the opportunity for the access parent and the child to know each other well and to appreciate each other as individuals. My colleague has also found that the trial judge erred in failing to consider the interest of the children in coming to "know" their father as he is, and is of the view that unrestricted access, even if it causes the deterioration of the relationship, is preferable to the alternative which prevents them from "knowing" him as he is. In my view, the reproaches addressed by my colleague to the trial judge are totally unfounded. The trial judge carefully assessed all the interests at play and not only did she not ignore the best interest of the children involved but also her whole decision is based on their best interest. That is, in fact, what the Court of Appeal reproached her for since, in their view, she should have applied the harm test.

However, to find that unrestricted access is the only available means by which a child may know a parent is to construct a false choice. Restrictions on access, in general or in the particular circumstances of this case, do not necessarily prevent children from coming to know their parents in meaningful ways. In this case, the purpose of the restrictions is to ensure that the children will continue to know their father "at all". The restrictions only affect the area of religious activities involving the children. Many other activities and topics of communication remain open to the respondent and his children. The children already "know" who their father is and are well aware of the significance of his religious beliefs in his life. Should they choose to, it remains open to them to investigate those beliefs further at some later point when they are ready and able to do so in a manner that is non-threatening to them.

Furthermore, to interpret the goal of maximum contact in such a way as to require unrestricted access may be to defeat the very objective that the Act itself seeks to promote, if the pre-eminence of unlimited "knowledge" results in the ultimate destruction of the relationship. Once the long-term interest of children in the maintenance of a relationship with the non-custodial parent is acknowledged, it is difficult to see the logic or the value in this approach. For example, a non-custodial parent, during access, may prevent on personal, philosophical or religious grounds, his or her child from attending school. Restricting access may be in the best interests of the child even if such an order impinges on the child's ability to "know" the parent.

In brief, the content of the rule, its constitutionality and the applicable standard of proof do not favour the respondent's position. The respondent's main argument, however, which I will now discuss, relates to the infringement of his freedom of religion under s. 2\(a\) of the Charter due to the trial judge's access order.

Freedom of Religion

This Court has held on occasions too numerous to require mention at this point that it will consider both the purpose and the context of a right when determining whether there has been an infringement of the Charter. I must state at the outset that the purposes underlying the protection of religious and expressive freedoms have little if anything to do with regulating activities between family members. Such rights are public in nature and have typically referred to and encompassed freedom of the individual from state compulsion or restraints. Even the most ardent liberal theorists and advocates of rights have never pretended that these fundamental freedoms should provide a basis on which an individual could, for example, claim the protection of the state either to say or refrain from saying something to a spouse or child. The mere fact that the state plays a role in custody and access decisions in formalizing the circumstances of parent-child interaction does not transform the essentially private character of such interchanges into activity which should be subject to Charter scrutiny.

An examination of our traditional understanding of freedom of religion and expression reveals that those notions are inappropriate and ill-suited to the family, if only because of the differences in power and development and the nature of rights and obligations between parent and child. While legitimate questions may arise about the role of the state, and hence the application of the Charter, in regulating other aspects of family law, in my view, it is difficult to imagine that any valid purpose is served by importing the discourse of freedom of expression and religion into orders made in the resolution of custody and access disputes.

It follows that, once the best interests test itself has been found to accord with Charter values, the trial judge's order itself is not subject to further constitutional review, as the necessary state infringement of religious rights required to sustain a challenge based on the Charter is no longer present.

As s. 32 dictates, the Charter applies to governments and legislatures. Its purpose is to provide a measure of protection from the coercive power of the state and a mechanism of review to persons who find themselves unjustly burdened or affected by the actions of government. It is not meant to provide a means to regulate the affairs of private citizens. Thus, the sine qua non to any application of the Charter is the presence of state action, whether by legislation or other means.

In RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., 1986 CanLII 5 (SCC), [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573, this Court first considered the meaning of "government action", and articulated the principle which established the threshold for judicial review under the Charter: the Charter applies to the legislative, executive and administrative branches of government but does not apply to judicial orders made in the resolution of private disputes. The issue arose again in Tremblay v. Daigle, 1989 CanLII 33 (SCC), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 530, when the appellant sought to uphold an injunction preventing his former girlfriend from obtaining an abortion, relying on, among other grounds, the alleged rights of the foetus under s. 7 of the Charter. The Court held that, as there was no state action to be impugned and the Charter could not be invoked in a civil action between two parties, the principle outlined in Dolphin Delivery provided a complete answer to the Charter argument.

Exceptions to this rule have been recognized in certain specific circumstances. The first such instance arose in B.C.G.E.U. v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 1988 CanLII 3 (SCC), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 214, when the Court considered the application of the Charter to the order of a judge who, acting on his own motion, issued an injunction restraining picketing outside a court house. Dickson C.J. in that case found the order subject to the Charter, on the basis that the ruling was entirely public in nature and was required to ensure continuing access to the courts and the protection of the rule of law and the Charter rights of others. In Slaight Communications Inc. v. Davidson, 1989 CanLII 92 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1038, the Court found the order of an adjudicator pursuant to the Canada Labour Code properly subject to Charter review. The Court distinguished the exercise of the arbitrator's powers in that case from judicial decision-making on the basis that the adjudicator was appointed pursuant to a legislative provision and derived all his powers from the statute.

The present case clearly falls to be decided under the principles enunciated in Dolphin Delivery as custody and access matters are essentially private in nature and there exists no state action to be impugned. In contradistinction to the situation in Slaight Communications, the powers of a judge making an order under the Act cannot be equated with those of an adjudicator who derives his authority from a legislative enactment. The judiciary is a separate branch of the government, and possesses the inherent jurisdiction under its parens patriae power to rule in the interests of the child. This power is both distinct from and long predates the statutory entrenchment of the best interests test. In the result, the Charter will not apply to the order.

As the Court has stressed on previous occasions, Charter values nonetheless remain an important consideration in judicial decision-making. Courts must strive to uphold Charter values, and preference should be given to such values in the interpretation of legislation over those which run contrary to them (Slaight Communications, supra; Hills v. Canada (Attorney General), 1988 CanLII 67 (SCC), [1988] 1 S.C.R. 513, at p. 558; Canada (Attorney General) v. Mossop, 1993 CanLII 164 (SCC), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 554).

There is no question that, had the order been based on the sole fact that the respondent adheres to the Jehovah's Witness faith, the order could not be legitimized, as it has long been a tenet of the common law that courts will not prefer one religion over another in the adjudication of custody disputes. (See In re McGrath (Infants), supra; Re Bennett Infants, 1952 CanLII 293 \(ON CA\), [1952] O.W.N. 621 (Ont. C.A.) at p. 624; Delvenne v. Nabbie (1977), 1977 CanLII 2270 \(MB CA\), 4 R.F.L. (2d) 21 (Man. C.A.); Irmert v. Irmert (1984), 1984 ABCA 286 \(CanLII\), 64 A.R. 342 (C.A.); Harvey v. Lapointe (1988), 1988 CanLII 8787 \(QC CS\), 13 R.F.L. (3d) 134 (Que. C.A.).) Nor is a court authorized to dictate to a parent his or her religious philosophy (McQuillan v. McQuillan (1975), 1975 CanLII 1946 \(ON SC\), 21 R.F.L. 324 (Ont. H.C.)). Decisions regarding custody and access must not be based on the parents' faith, whether or not that religion is that of the majority. However, the religion of the parties may be relevant as one of the circumstances to be assessed along with all the others in the determination of the best interests of the child, as it is in this case.

In instances where there is conflict over religion, it is important to emphasize that the court is not engaged in adjudicating a "war of religion" nor are the religious beliefs of the parties themselves on trial. Rather, as courts have often recognized, it is the manner in which such beliefs are practised together with the impact and effect they have on the child which must be considered (Struncova v. Guay (1984), 1984 CanLII 4817 \(QC CS\), 39 R.F.L. (2d) 298 (Que. S.C.); Brown v. Brown, supra; Irmert v. Irmert, supra; Harvey v. Lapointe, supra; Fougere v. Fougere, supra). In all cases where the effects of religious practices are at issue, the best interests of the child must prevail (Sullivan v. Fox (1984), 1984 CanLII 4805 \(PE PC\), 38 R.F.L. (2d) 293 (P.E.I.S.C.)). See also C. E. Schneider, "Religion and Child Custody" (1992), 25 U. Mich. J.L. Ref. 879.

In the vast majority of cases, social values such as religion are shared between the parents and pose no threat to the exercise of access. It is when such values clash, whether over religion, education, ethnic traditions, mores or the lifestyles of the parents that problems arise. It is probably safe to say that in the "best case" scenario, courts would prefer to avoid orders which touch on peoples' beliefs and religion, as few issues are more likely to evoke the passions of both the parties and the wider community. However, it must be remembered that courts are only called to adjudicate such issues when the differences between the parties themselves have become irreconcilable. At this point, courts have no choice but to resolve the matter according to the best interests of the child.

Moreover, even if the Charter were to apply to custody and access orders, no infringement of religious freedoms would occur where such orders are made in the best interests of the child. As this Court recognized in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, at pp. 336-37:

The essence of the concept of freedom of religion is the right to entertain such religious beliefs as a person chooses, the right to declare religious beliefs openly and without fear of hindrance or reprisal, and the right to manifest religious belief by worship and practice or by teaching and dissemination. But the concept means more than that.

Freedom can primarily be characterized by the absence of coercion or constraint. . . . Freedom means that, subject to such limitations as are necessary to protect public safety, order, health, or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others, no one is to be forced to act in a way contrary to his beliefs or his conscience. [Emphasis added.]

Thus, freedom of religion is inherently limited by a number of considerations, including the rights and freedoms of others. While parents are free to engage in religious practices themselves, those activities may be curtailed where they interfere with the best interests of the child without thereby infringing the parent's religious freedoms.

There is no dispute in the case law as regards this principle since, even where the religious rights of the non-custodial parent in access disputes have been recognized, courts have nonetheless imposed conditions on their exercise where warranted by the interests of the child. As Malouf J.A. for the Quebec Court of Appeal held in Droit de la famille -- 955, 1991 CanLII 3838 \(QC CA\), [1991] R.J.Q. 599 (C.A.), at p. 606:

Such constraints, provided they are reasonable in their content and application, do not interfere in any way with a particular parent's freedom of religion. They simply reaffirm the principle that the best interest of the child must be protected. They are not inconsistent with the basic freedoms referred to in the Charter.

(See also Droit de la famille -- 353, 1987 CanLII 398 \(QC CA\), [1987] R.J.Q. 545 (C.A.).)

The only question is the applicable standard for imposing such conditions. As I have indicated above, that standard is not one of harm but must at all times be the best interests of the child.

Both the Court of Appeal and the respondent rely on the decision of Hockey v. Hockey, supra, for the proposition that access orders which restrict the ability of non-custodial parents to involve their children in religious activities contrary to the wishes of the custodial parent violate freedom of religion. In that case, the custodial parent's solicitor had sent a letter to the access parent which included the following statement: "[t]o ensure that there is no misunderstanding let me state unequivocally that the restrictions of your exercise of access to the children has been precipitated primarily because of your acceptance of the Jehovah's Witness faith" (p. 106). Not surprisingly, the court found the subsequent denial of access by the custodial parent for a period of six months, despite a court order permitting access, to be a form of religious discrimination. The court concluded in those circumstances that, in the absence of any finding that the sharing of beliefs or practices with the children by the non-custodial parent was contrary to the best interests of the children, the Act must be interpreted in a manner compatible with the religious freedom of the access parent.

It appears that the basis of that particular decision was the absence of any evidence before the court of adverse effects on the children. Moreover, the court in Hockey v. Hockey explicitly recognized that the religious rights of the access parent could be curtailed in the interests of the child. Despite a contrary interpretation by the Court of Appeal in the present case, in my view that case does not support the conclusion that restrictions on religious activities during access cannot be sustained unless harm, or the threat of harm, to the child has been established.

The respondent also invokes the decision of Zummo v. Zummo, 574 A.2d 1130 (Pa. 1990), in support of his submissions that the religious freedom of an access parent may only be curtailed where harm can be conclusively demonstrated. In Zummo v. Zummo, the Pennsylvania Superior Court engaged in a comprehensive historical review of the protection of freedom of religion under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. On that basis, Kelly J. concluded that limits to the non-custodial parent's involvement in the religious upbringing of the child could not be sustained in the absence of clear evidence that access without restrictions would pose a substantial threat of present or future harm to the child.

In my view, it is important, when considering the applicability of such a standard in Canadian jurisprudence, to be conscious of the differences in both the history and the constitutional protection of freedom of religion in Canada and the United States. Without delving into the development of freedom of religion in the United States, it is sufficient to note that American courts have strictly interpreted the requirement of non-interference by the state in any matter touching on religion. In addition, we must recall that under the Charter, a court order pursuant to the litigation of a private issue such as access does not constitute state infringement of religious freedoms.

In Zummo v. Zummo, the court accepted the conclusions of a number of studies which demonstrated that exposure to conflicting religious doctrines should not give rise to a presumption of harm to the child. I am in complete agreement that there is ordinarily nothing wrong with the exposure of a child to different religions or beliefs and that such exposure may be of value to the child. However, it is crucial to acknowledge that there may at times be important differences between intermarried intact families and those in the process of separation or divorce. Indeed, the authors of two of the studies relied on in Zummo v. Zummo later expressly disavowed the application and relevance of their findings where parents were not in agreement or where children were, by virtue of divorce, thrust into two religions. (See M. Weiss and R. Abramoff, "The Enforceability of Religious Upbringing Agreements" (1991), 25 J. Mar. L. Rev. 655, at pp. 714-15). The missing element is conflict. In intact families, parents are normally in agreement about how to raise their children and have accommodated the presence of two religions. However, where religion becomes a source of conflict between the parents or is the very cause of the marriage breakdown, it is generally not in the best interests of the child and may in some circumstances be very detrimental for the child to be drawn into the controversy over religious matters.

As one commentator has pointed out, it is precisely the cases in which children become embroiled in religious conflict that cast doubt on the wisdom of the decisions which have allowed the religious rights of the access parent to prevail (J. T. Syrtash, Religion and Culture in Canadian Family Law (1992), at p. 90). Where there is conflict over religion, courts must secure the longstanding authority of the custodial parent to make decisions over religious activities. This ensures that stress occasioned by such issues does not become a continuing and ultimately destructive feature in the life of the child after divorce. (See S. M. Zarowny, "The Religious Upbringing of Children After Divorce" (1980), 56 Notre Dame Law 160, at p. 173; Weiss and Abramoff, supra.)

Freedom of Expression

The respondent also argues that the restrictions on communicating his religious views to his children infringe his rights to expressive freedom. Wood J.A. agreed, although he subsumed this right under the rubric of freedom of religion, holding that an important part of the right to teach and disseminate religious beliefs is the right to share those beliefs with one's children. Southin J.A., for her part, was of the view that the appellant does not have the right to control the conversations which take place between the respondent and his children during access, reasoning that the child has a right to know anyone to whom the court grants access and that a child cannot know anyone unless he or she is able to speak freely to that person.

I have no quarrel with these conclusions as general principles, and would observe that they normally reflect and enhance the very purpose of access itself. In the overwhelming majority of cases, courts do in fact recognize and give effect to them, if only through the absence of any restrictions regarding communication between the child and the access parent. However, it is beyond contention that rights do not exist in a vacuum but are shaped and formed both by the particular context in which they are exercised and the rights of others (Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), 1989 CanLII 20 (SCC), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326). Dickson C.J. in Fraser v. Public Service Staff Relations Board, 1985 CanLII 14 (SCC), [1985] 2 S.C.R. 455, at p. 463, after acknowledging the centrality and importance of freedom of expression in our society, observed:

But it is not an absolute value. Probably no values are absolute. All important values must be qualified, and balanced against, other important, and often competing, values.

In this case, there are other powerful competing interests which must be recognized, not the least of which, in addition to the best interests of the children, are the freedoms of expression and religion of the children themselves. There is cogent, persuasive evidence, found credible by the trial judge, that the children themselves do not want to discuss religion with their father or be subject to his comments about beliefs which are at odds with their own religious upbringing, whether they take the form of indoctrination, instruction or mere observations. Indeed, the letters written to the trial judge disclose that, not only do they not want it, but also that the prospect of such discussions has so profoundly disturbed the children and coloured the periods of access that they no longer wish to continue to see the respondent according to a schedule.

In such circumstances, it is obviously inadequate merely to invoke freedom of religion or expression of an access parent without considering the effect on the children and their inability to assert their own desires and rights. Rather, both the best interests of the children and a respect for their rights may require restrictions on communication, if only so that the larger interest, maintenance and development of the relationship between the access parent and child, is not frustrated by the means by which it is carried out.

In the result, I would dismiss the respondent's argument that his freedoms of religion and expression have been infringed by the trial judge's order. He remains totally free to practise his religion. I also reject his submission that he has the right to engage his children in religious observances with him where it is determined that such observances are detrimental to their best interests.

In summary, as a matter of statutory interpretation, the Divorce Act mandates that, in decisions of custody and access, the sole consideration be the best interests of the child. The focus must remain at all times on the child, not the needs or interests of the parents, and parental rights play no role in such decisions except in so far as they are necessary to ensure the best interests of the child.

The custodial parent is responsible for the care and upbringing of the child, including decisions concerning the education, religion, health and well-being of the child. Parental authority rests with the custodial parent, not for his or her own benefit, but in order to enable that parent to discharge effectively the obligations and responsibilities owed to the child.

As set out in the Act, maximum contact between the child and the non-custodial parent is a worthwhile goal which should be pursued to the extent that it is in the best interests of the child. Generous and unrestricted access, which is the norm, should be favoured except when such access would not be in the best interests of the child. However, ongoing conflict between parents which adversely affects the child must be minimized or avoided, as it is the single factor which has consistently proven to be severely detrimental to children upon separation or divorce.

The best interests of the child must be approached from a child-centred perspective. It is not simply the right to be free of significant harm. It is the right of the particular child in question to the best possible arrangements in the circumstances of the parties, taking into consideration the wide spectrum of factors which may affect the child's physical, spiritual, moral and emotional well-being and the milieu in which the child lives.

Where the question of restrictions on access arises, the best interests of the child must be determined by considering the "condition, means, needs and other circumstances of the child" as required by the Act. The totality of these circumstances must be considered. Nothing in the Act suggests that harm should be the controlling factor. To adopt the harm standard would be to invert the focus of the best interests test and place the risk of error on the child, contrary to the objectives of the Act.

Expert evidence, while helpful in some cases, is not routinely required to establish the best interests of the child. That determination is normally possible from the evidence of the parties themselves and, in some cases, the testimony of the children involved.

Freedom of religion and expression are fundamental values protected by the Charter. However, the best interests of the child standard in the Divorce Act does not offend Charter values, but is completely consonant with the underlying objectives of the Charter. The Charter has no application to private disputes between parents in the family context, nor does it apply to court orders in the area of custody and access. While a child's exposure to different parental faiths or beliefs may be of value, when such exposure is a source of conflict and is not in the best interests of the child, such exposure may be curtailed.

This brings us to the evidence in this case which led to the trial judge's order restricting the respondent's access.

Application to the Case

At the outset, it must be remembered that this Court has always emphasized the caution with which an appellate court should interfere with the decision of a trial judge in custody matters. (See Talsky v. Talsky, supra; Adams v. McLeod, 1978 CanLII 5 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 621; Novic v. Novic, 1983 CanLII 55 (SCC), [1983] 1 S.C.R. 696.) Because the trial judge has the inestimable advantage of observing the parties and assessing the witnesses first hand, such decisions should not be interfered with unless there is a gross distortion of the evidence or misapprehension of the relevant legal principles. As the foregoing discussion demonstrates, Proudfoot J. did not err in law as to the proper standard applicable to the case. She was entirely correct in holding that the only relevant consideration is the best interests of the child. The sole remaining question therefore, is whether there is evidence that the best interests of the children would be jeopardized by the respondent's unrestricted access to his children.

The majority of the Court of Appeal found no evidence of harm which would support the order made at trial. Even if I were to agree that some measure of harm must be demonstrated before the trial judge is entitled to restrict the respondent's religious activities with the children, a view I do not share, the evidence amply demonstrates the harm such religious activity has brought about. While the rationale underlying the right of access and the objective of maximum contact is to permit the relationship to flourish, in this case the contrary result has occurred, as it has antagonized the children.

I would begin by noting that the appellant has always favoured access by the respondent to his children. This is not an iota of evidence that the respondent's general rights of access were threatened. Rather, the only restrictions that were requested were aimed at reducing the area of conflict which had arisen on account of the respondent's behaviour with his children during access.

Although the respondent characterizes this litigation as an attack on his religious freedom, those beliefs are not at risk, as the restrictions place no limits on the respondent's ability to engage in religious practices himself. It is the effect of his practices on the best interests of his three daughters that is in question here.

In reaching her decision about the impact of these practices on the children, the trial judge relied in large measure on the reports of the two witnesses for the court, Donna MacLean, the family court counsellor whom she found to be thorough and highly credible in both her reports and testimony, and Dr. Williams, a psychologist.

In his first report, dated November 28, 1988, Dr. Williams found that the major obstacle to smooth access was the matter of religion. He found that the children were not significantly distressed by the issue at that time, but regarded it as a potential problem in the future. He stated:

I see Natalie as being particularly vulnerable to such issues in light of the dynamics of her personality as well as her age. As such, in my judgement some agreement and/or understanding will need to be arrived at as to the degree of religious dogma to which Mr. Young can expose the children, bearing in mind that such beliefs and related activities are anathema to Mrs. Young.

In his assessment the following year (September 22, 1989), he reported that, although they were continuing to deal with the separation adequately, the children were under increasing pressure regarding family issues. They expressed antagonism to their father, no longer trusted him and generally did not view him in a positive light. They were firmly opposed to attending religious services or being schooled in the tenets of his beliefs. The expert found that they were under stress from the religious issue and ongoing litigation and conveyed a need to get it settled in order to get on with their lives. Dr. Williams found, with respect to the children's emotional and social foundation, that:

. . . I am of the opinion that it is in the best interests of the children that the dispute over tangible and philosophical/religious issues be settled conclusively . . . nothing has been broken and thus there is no apparent need for repair. If, however, the children are obliged to labor at length under the pressures they are presently experiencing a destabilizing influence -- particularly in the case of Natalie -- will likely be exerted.

Donna MacLean, in her report of January 30, 1989 essentially corroborated this finding. In the updated report of April 18, 1989, she noted that the children were unhappy with the access visits and that their relationship with their father was deteriorating because he was making the children feel guilty and uncomfortable by questioning them.

The trial judge also had access to the direct testimony of the two older children who wrote letters to the judge which are most revealing of their state of mind. From the letters, it is evident that both are afraid to disclose their thoughts about the visits to their father for fear that he will make them feel guilty. Adrienne, the eldest, wrote that she did not want to visit him or sleep overnight because she thinks he will trick her into doing things and quiz her about the Jehovah's Witness religion. She expressed frustration regarding access, visitation and the court proceedings, saying "It's driving me crazy." Natalie, the middle child, evinced considerable distress about the family situation, stating that her father makes her feel guilty and makes her cry when she wants to go home from access visits, and that she is afraid to tell him. She repeated that she wanted the court proceedings to be over.

In my opinion, this evidence amply demonstrates the stress the children were under, much of it related to the children's resistance to becoming involved in their father's religious practices. The trial judge can in no way be said to have erred in finding that the best interests of these children were served by removing the source of conflict, particularly as the ultimate purpose of the restrictions was to preserve the relationship between the respondent and his children.

Moreover, there was evidence leading the trial judge to conclude that the respondent would not respect the wishes of the children without an order to do so. As the family court counsellor reported, "it is of concern that Mr. Young does not acknowledge the choice of the older children to remain with their mother". Proudfoot J. found as a fact that the respondent wanted custody in order to control the religious upbringing of the children. In other words, she found that his interest was not simply to share or communicate these beliefs; rather he fundamentally disagreed with allowing the appellant control over religious matters. This finding of fact is difficult to reconcile with the Court of Appeal's ruling that the trial judge was in error since, in their view, the respondent was bound to respect his children's wishes not to attend at his place of worship or accompany him on his proselytization efforts, which is exactly what the trial judge ordered. However, they discarded the evidence that the respondent was not willing to do so voluntarily. The trial judge had made a finding that the respondent could not be relied upon to act in the best interests of the children as regards his religious practices when exercising access. That finding should have been respected by the Court of Appeal.

In my opinion, the fact that the circumstances in this case were found by the Court of Appeal not to meet the harm threshold clearly demonstrates the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of reconciling such a standard with the best interests of the child even where experts testify, as they did in this case.

As the trial judge observed, the respondent was quite unconcerned with the conflict and stress on the children caused by the pursuit of his own religious interests. At the same time as he found the resources to press his claims to religious rights, he apparently did not find the payment of maintenance a top priority. Upon reading the evidence, I cannot disagree with the trial judge that the respondent's concern with religious rights had clearly overtaken the practical realities of parenthood and overshadowed his larger responsibilities to his children in this case.

Since writing these reasons, I have had the opportunity to read the joint reasons of my colleagues Justices Cory and Iacobucci. They invite the following comments.

First, as to the first part of the trial judge's order, contrary to their affirmation, the issue is not moot. It is precisely because the trial judge found, as a fact, that the respondent could not be trusted for the reasons she outlined, that she issued that order. How can a court of appeal reverse those findings of fact, and yet, on the same facts, affirm that such an order is no longer necessary, particularly when the court of appeal has not indicated where the trial judge has erred in her assessment of those facts?

As to the second part of the order, my colleagues assert that the best interests test does not support an order preventing the respondent from discussing religion with his children, on the ground that it is (at p. 110) "difficult to accept that any genuine and otherwise proper discussion between a parent and his or her child should be curtailed by court orders". Otherwise, they suggest, a non-custodial parent who espouses a theory of evolution would be ordered, under the best interests test, not to discuss or explain his or her views to a child in the custody of a parent who is a member of a fundamentalist religion.

However, this scenario has nothing to do with the facts of this case. With respect, to equate the two scenarios is to misapprehend fundamentally the focus of the best interests test. It is not the fact that the parents differ in their fundamental beliefs that warrants the restrictions in this case. It is the finding of fact made by the trial judge, on the basis of evidence she found credible, that continuing conflict over religion, including the respondent's repeated attempts to discuss religious matters with the children against their clearly expressed desires, profoundly disturbed the children and was contrary to their best interests. At the time of trial, the respondent was not engaging in other religious activities with the children, as they had already been curtailed by the interim order almost a year and a half earlier. Therefore, it is precisely these continuing "discussions" that were disturbing the children, causing the deterioration of their relationship with their father and which, therefore, had to be curtailed.

I wish to emphasize two points. As I thought I made clear earlier in my reasons, a child's exposure to different parental faiths or beliefs may generally be of value and even of great value; there is no presumption that such exposure is not in the best interests of the child. Rather, the contrary is true. Second, as I also emphasized earlier, generous and unrestricted access should be favoured except where it is not in the best interests of the child. Hence, restrictions such as the trial judge found to be required in the second part of her order will be rare indeed and there is no reason to suppose that, absent a threat to the best interests of the child, any question of such restrictions will arise. However, it is important to acknowledge that in those rare cases where parents cross the line and engage in conduct which constitutes, in the words of my colleagues at p. 110, "indoctrination, enlistment or harassment", courts have a duty to intervene in the best interests of children. The evidence strongly suggests that this is just such a case and that is the finding of the trial judge. In my view, these findings of fact must be respected absent, as here, an error in the applicable principles.

In the result, I would allow the appeal and restore the order at trial, the whole with costs throughout. I would answer the constitutional questions in the negative.

The following are the reasons delivered by

SOPINKA J. -- I have read the reasons of my colleagues Justice L'Heureux-Dubé and Justice McLachlin and I find myself in agreement with McLachlin J. as to the disposition of the appeal and with most of her reasons. While I agree with McLachlin J. that the ultimate determination in deciding issues of custody and access is the "best interests of the child test", it must be reconciled with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. General language in a statute which, in its breadth, potentially confers the power to override Charter values must be interpreted to respect those values. See Slaight Communications Inc. v. Davidson, 1989 CanLII 92 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1038. It cannot be done the other way around and allow the best interests test in its broadest interpretation to read down Charter rights so as to accommodate this interpretation.

In my view, the test in s. 16(10) of the Divorce Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 3 (2nd Supp.), and the Charter right involved in this case, namely freedom of religious expression, can best be reconciled by interpreting the best interests test to allow the right to be overridden only if its exercise would occasion consequences that involve more than inconvenience, upset or disruption to the child and incidentally to the custodial parent. The long-term value to a child of a meaningful relationship with both parents is a policy that is affirmed in the Divorce Act. This means allowing each to engage in those activities which contribute to identify the parent for what he or she really is. The access parent is not expected to act out a part or assume a phony lifestyle during access periods. The policy favouring activities that promote a meaningful relationship is not displaced unless there is a substantial risk of harm to the child.

In this regard, I agree with Wood J.A. in the Court of Appeal (1990), 1990 CanLII 3813 \(BC CA\), 50 B.C.L.R. (2d) 1. In his reasons he states, at p. 96:

I believe the whole of s. 16 of the Divorce Act of 1985, when properly construed, reflects the modern view that the best interests of a child are more aptly served by a law which recognizes the right of that child to a meaningful post-divorce relationship with both parents. That construction in turn requires that the distribution of "rights", between the custodial and the access parent, be such as to encourage such a relationship. And such a construction is inconsistent with the full-blooded traditional notion of guardianship which would give the custodial parent the absolute right to exercise full control over the child even when the other parent is exercising his or her right of access.

"Harm" is a term which in this context connotes an adverse effect on the child's upbringing that is more than transitory. The impugned exercise by the access parent must be shown to create a substantial risk that the child's physical, psychological or moral well-being will be adversely affected. Exposure to new experiences and ideas may upset children and cause them considerable discomfort. Anything from starting school to having to go to bed may evoke a strong emotional response. This does not mean that these experiences are not in the long-term best interests of the child. Similarly, conflict between parents on many matters including religion is not uncommon, but in itself cannot be assumed to be harmful unless it produces a prolonged acrimonious atmosphere.

I would, therefore, go a step further than my colleague McLachlin J. and conclude that what is in the best interests of the child is the generally applicable test, but in its application to restrict religious expression, risk of substantial harm is not only an important factor but also must be shown.

Interpreted in this way, the statutory test in s. 16\(10\) of the Divorce Act does not constitute a limitation on freedom of religious expression. As my colleague points out, this freedom does not extend to protect conduct which is harmful to others. I would not, however, adopt her expansion of the term "injure" as used in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., 1985 CanLII 69 \(SCC\), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295, to arrive at the conclusion that anything that is not in the best interests of the child (on the basis of her definition of this test) is subtracted from the Charter right involved.

I would dispose of the appeal and the constitutional questions as proposed by McLachlin J.

The following are the reasons delivered by

CORY AND IACOBUCCI JJ. -- We have read with great interest the excellent reasons of Justice L'Heureux-Dubé and Justice McLachlin. We are in agreement with their conclusions that the best interests of the child standard provided in ss. 16(8) and 17(5) of the Divorce Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 3 (2nd Supp.), does not violate ss. 2(a), (b) and (d), and s. 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms substantially for the reasons given by our colleagues. In this respect, however, we wish to refrain from expressing any opinion on McLachlin J.'s discussion of whether, if an infringement of the Charter were found, such an infringement would be so trivial as not to warrant Charter protection. We similarly wish to reserve our views on the question discussed by L'Heureux-Dubé J. of whether or not the Charter applies to judicial orders made in custody or access proceedings.

We agree, again for many of the reasons she advances, with L'Heureux-Dubé J. that the issue of access to children should be determined on the basis of what is in the best interests of the child. In that respect, we also agree with both our colleagues that expert evidence is, while admittedly helpful in some cases, not always necessary to establish the best interests of the child; that question can be determined normally from the evidence of parties themselves and the testimony, where appropriate, of the children concerned.

We note that the majority of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (1990), 1990 CanLII 3813 (BC CA), 50 B.C.L.R. (2d) 1, held that the matters of the children attending religious services with the respondent and accompanying him on his proselytizing activities were resolved by the respondent's undertaking to respect his children's wishes in this regard. This leaves as the only remaining issue, whether the order forbidding the respondent from discussing his religion is valid. On this point, we agree with McLachlin J. that a proper application of the best interests of the child test does not support such an order. We find it difficult to accept that any genuine and otherwise proper discussion between a parent and his or her child should be curtailed by court orders. Indeed, curtailment of explanatory or discursive conversations or exchanges between a parent and child should be rarely ordered in our view. To take an example, suppose custodial Parent A is a member of a fundamentalist religion and access Parent B is a scientist who espouses the pure Darwinian theory of evolution. We find it unacceptable that Parent B should be ordered, under the rubric of the best interests of the child test, not to discuss or explain his views to his child as opposed to being forbidden from indoctrinating or otherwise undermining the religious choice made by the custodial parent for the child or children involved. Surely the best interests of the child test embraces genuine discussion of religious belief as opposed to indoctrination, enlistment or harassment having the aim or effect of undermining the religious decision made by the custodial parent.

On the property, monetary, and costs issues, we agree with the reasons of McLachlin J. and would dispose of the appeal in the manner proposed by her.

The following is the judgment delivered by

MCLACHLIN J. -- This case raises the question whether a divorced parent, who does not have custody, should be able to offer his children his religious views over the objection of the custodial parent. This issue raises, in turn, the question of the place of the "best interests of the child" standard in the Canadian constitutional system.

The Background

Mr. and Mrs. Young were married in 1974. They had three daughters. In 1987 the Youngs separated. Mrs. Young took custody of the children; Mr. Young had access, subject to court-imposed restrictions following from Mrs. Young's objection to his religious activity with the children.

The separation was marked by a protracted series of court battles. It is unnecessary to detail the many disputes over which the parties joined issue before the case finally came on for trial. Suffice it to say that one of those issues was the disagreement between the parents over which religious activities Mr. Young might appropriately undertake with his daughters. Mrs. Young was brought up in the Anglican church. She expressed a wish that her children be brought up in the United Church, although the evidence suggests that religion, particularly organized religion, does not play an important role in the life of Mrs. Young. Mr. Young converted to the Jehovah's Witness faith two years prior to separation from his spouse. He wished, at the very least, to communicate his faith to his children. To this end, he read bible stories, and discussed his beliefs with his children during his periods of access. He also questioned them about religious matters during these periods.

The evidence shows that the elder two daughters like their father but, as time went on, came to dislike his religious instruction. There was evidence that by exposing his elder children to his religious beliefs, Mr. Young was damaging his relationship with his children and contributing to the stress the children were experiencing in adjusting to their parent's separation. On the other hand, the evidence also established that the children were functioning in an entirely normal fashion, suggesting that neither their mental nor physical health had been adversely affected by the dispute between their parents over Mr. Young's religious instruction, or by that instruction itself.

The trial judge granted custody of the children to Mrs. Young and access to Mr. Young. But Mr. Young's access was again restricted by court order. The order provided that Mr. Young not discuss the Jehovah's Witness religion with the children, not take them to any religious services, canvassing or meetings, and not expose the children to religious discussions with third parties without the prior consent of Mrs. Young. Both parties were ordered not to make adverse remarks about the other's beliefs. Mr. Young was also enjoined from preventing blood transfusions for the children, should the need arise. The basis of the order was the trial judge's finding (1989), 1989 CanLII 8903 \(BC SC\), 24 R.F.L. (3d) 193, at p. 211, that "the religious conflict [between the parents] was causing a problem for the children." She wrote at p. 215:

There will be certain restrictions because that is necessary to protect the best interests of these children. That can only be done by putting an end to this religious conflict. The respondent has become so involved in enforcing his rights he has completely overlooked the welfare of the children. The respondent can have a meaningful relationship with his children without promoting his religious beliefs If the respondent is seriously interested in retaining a relationship with his children, he will have no difficulty abiding by the restrictions I propose to place on him when he has access.

The trial judge also made orders for the distribution of property and for costs which are considered later in these reasons.

Mr. Young appealed. The Court of Appeal (1990), 1990 CanLII 3813 \(BC CA\), 50 B.C.L.R. (2d) 1, Southin J.A. dissenting in part, set aside the limitations on religious discussion and attendance, on the ground that it is in the best interests of children that they come to know their non-custodial parent fully, including his or her religious beliefs. The majority concluded, at p. 108, that restrictions should not be placed on the freedom of an access parent to discuss religion with his or her child, or to involve the child in religious activities, unless either "the existence of, or the potential for, real harm" to the child was established on the evidence, or the evidence established that the child did not consent to being subject to the access parent's views or practices. The Court of Appeal also altered the division of property and the awards of costs made by the trial judge. Mrs. Young appeals these rulings to this Court. I will consider each issue in turn.

A. The Limitations on Mr. Young's Access

1. The Constitutional Validity of the Best Interest of the Child Standard

The Divorce Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 3 (2nd Supp.), provides that a court shall abide by the following matters in deciding questions of custody and access:

16. . . .

(8) In making an order under this section, the court shall take into consideration only the best interests of the child of the marriage as determined by reference to the condition, means, needs and other circumstances of the child.

(10) In making an order under this section, the court shall give effect to the principle that a child of the marriage should have as much contact with each spouse as is consistent with the best interests of the child and, for that purpose, shall take into consideration the willingness of the person for whom custody is sought to facilitate such contact. [Emphasis added.]

The courts are to heed the following provision in s. 17 when varying a custody order made under s. 16:

17. . . .

(5) Before the court makes a variation order in respect of a custody order, the court shall satisfy itself that there has been a change in the condition, means, needs or other circumstances of the child of the marriage occurring since the making of the custody order or the last variation order made in respect of that order, as the case may be, and, in making the variation order, the court shall take into consideration only the best interests of the child as determined by reference to that change. [Emphasis added.]

Two questions arise. First, what does the "best interests of the child" test require? Second, does this test, properly understood, infringe upon the guarantees of freedom of religion, expression, association and equality under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms? The sections of the Charter relevant to the case at bar read as follows:

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

- (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
- (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

- (d) freedom of association.

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

The answers to the questions set out above depend upon an examination of what is meant by the "best interests of the child" test and the constitutional guarantees which are put in issue.

(a) The Best Interests of the Child Test

The Historical Perspective

The express rule that matters of custody and access should be resolved in accordance with the "best interests of the child" is of relatively recent origin. Under the common law regime of the 18th and 19th centuries the governing principle in a custody dispute was the rule of near-absolute paternal preference: see R. v. De Manneville (1804), 5 East. 221, 102 E.R. 1054; In re Taylor (1876), 4 Ch. D. 157. The rule was defended on pragmatic grounds, including what was thought to be the general interest of children: see In re Agar-Ellis (1883), 24 Ch. D. 317. In truth, the rule probably had more to do with the acceptance of the father's dominant right in all family matters, which in turn found its roots in the notion of the inherent superiority of men over women.

The rule of paternal preference was displaced by a rule establishing in the mother a primary right to custody of a child of tender years: see, for instance, An Act to Amend the Law relating to the custody of Infants, S. Prov. Can. 1855, c. 126, s. 1. Later still there arose a presumption, in many foreign jurisdictions and to a more limited extent in Canada, of maternal preference: Talsky v. Talsky, 1975 CanLII 29 (SCC), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 292, Kades v. Kades (1961), 35 A.L.J.R. 251 (Aust. H.C.); see also Susan Maidment, Child Custody and Divorce (1984), Robert H. Mnookin, "Child-Custody Adjudication: Judicial Functions in the Face of Indeterminacy" (1975), 39 Law & Contemp. Probs. 226, and Allan Roth, "The Tender Years Presumption in Child Custody Disputes" (1976-77), 15 J. Fam. L. 423. This presumption, like the paternal preference rule, was justified on pragmatic grounds; the welfare of the child was the often cited reason for the presumption. So justified, the presumption carried the seeds of its own demise. Courts increasingly looked behind the preference to focus directly upon what was in the child's interest, which was sometimes found to conflict with a maternal preference.

By the 1970s, a number of western countries had accorded statutory recognition to a "best interests" or "welfare of the child" test. Questions relating to the weight to be given these interests, and the proper means of understanding these interests, remained. In England, the child's welfare is stipulated as the "first and paramount" consideration: Guardianship of Minors Act, 1971 (U.K.), 1971, c. 3, s. 1. English jurisprudence indicates that the child's welfare has, in fact, become the sole consideration: J. v. C., [1970] A.C. 668; Re K. (minors), [1977] 1 All E.R. 647. In Norway, decisions in respect of custody shall "mainly" (or "primarily") consider the interests of the child: Lov 8 April nr

7 om barn og foreldre, s. 34 (Law about Children and Parents, of April 7, 1981, no. 7, s. 34). In practice it appears that other criteria do not simply function as "tiebreakers" where the interests of the child would be equally well served by either parent, but can, in certain cases, determine the issue: see Jon Elster, "Solomonic Judgments: Against the Best Interest of the Child" (1987), 54 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1; also Lucy Smith and Peter Lødrup, "The Child in the Divorce Situation -- Factors Determining the Custody Question and the Use of Experts in Custody Cases in Norway", in Ian F. G. Baxter and Mary A. Eberts, eds., The Child and the Courts (1978).

Some variant of the best interests of the child test is in place in most American states, although in certain states the application of the test is delimited by a renewed concern that the debate be organized by certain presumptions, either a "primary caregiver" presumption, or a presumption in favour of the mother of a child of tender years: see David L. Chambers, "Rethinking the Substantive Rules for Custody Disputes in Divorce" (1984), 83 Mich. L. Rev. 477, and Roth, "The Tender Years Presumption in Child Custody Disputes", supra.

The Wording of the Act

Parliament has adopted the "best interests of the child" test as the basis upon which custody and access disputes are to be resolved. Three aspects of the way Parliament has done this merit comment.

First, the "best interests of the child" test is the only test. The express wording of s. 16\(8\) of the Divorce Act requires the court to look only at the best interests of the child in making orders of custody and access. This means that parental preferences and "rights" play no role.

Second, the test is broad. Parliament has recognized that the variety of circumstances which may arise in disputes over custody and access is so diverse that predetermined rules, designed to resolve certain types of disputes in advance, may not be useful. Rather, it has been left to the judge to decide what is in the "best interests of the child", by reference to the "condition, means, needs and other circumstances" of the child. Nevertheless, the judicial task is not one of pure discretion. By embodying the "best interests" test in legislation and by setting out general factors to be considered, Parliament has established a legal test, albeit a flexible one. Like all legal tests, it is to be applied according to the evidence in the case, viewed objectively. There is no room for the judge's personal predilections and prejudices. The judge's duty is to apply the law. He or she must not do what he or she wants to do but what he or she ought to do.

Third, s. 16(10) provides that in making an order, the court shall give effect "to the principle that a child of the marriage should have as much contact with each spouse as is consistent with the best interests of the child." This is significant. It stands as the only specific factor which Parliament has seen fit to single out as being something which the judge must consider. By mentioning this factor, Parliament has expressed its opinion that contact with each parent is valuable, and that the judge should ensure that this contact is maximized. The modifying phrase "as is consistent with the best interests of the child" means that the goal of maximum contact of each parent with the child is not absolute. To the extent that contact conflicts with the best interests of the child, it may be restricted. But only to that extent. Parliament's decision to maintain maximum contact between the child and both parents is amply supported by the literature, which suggests that children benefit from continued access: Michael Rutter, Maternal Deprivation Reassessed (1981), Robin Benians, "Preserving Parental Contact: a Factor in Promoting Healthy Growth and Development in Children", in Jo Tunnard, ed., Fostering Parental Contact: Arguments in Favour of Preserving Contact Between Children in Care and Their Families (1982).

Wood J.A. in the Court of Appeal, put the matter as follows at p. 93:

It seems to me that at the very least, by enacting this subsection [s. 16\(10\) of the Divorce Act], Parliament intended to facilitate a meaningful, as well as a continuing, post-divorce relationship between the children of the marriage and the access parent.

Without limiting the generality of the adjective "meaningful", such a relationship would surely include the opportunity on the part of the child to know that parent well and to enjoy the benefit of those attributes of parenthood which such person has to share. In most cases that would clearly be in the best interests of the child, and the best interests of the child, not parental rights, are the focus of the whole of s. 16 of the Act.

I would summarize the effect of the provisions of the Divorce Act on matters of access as follows. The ultimate test in all cases is the best interests of the child. This is a positive test, encompassing a wide variety of factors. One of the factors which the judge seeking to determine what is in the best interests of the child must have regard to is the desirability of maximizing contact between the child and each parent. But in the final analysis, decisions on access must reflect what is in the best interests of the child.

It follows from this that the proposition, put to us in argument, that the custodial parent should have the right to forbid certain types of contact between the access parent and the child, must fail. The custodial parent's wishes are not the ultimate criterion for limitations on access: see King v. Low, 1985 CanLII 59 (SCC), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 87, at p. 101. The only circumstance in which contact with either parent can be limited is where the contact is shown to conflict with the best interests of the child.

Risk of harm to the child is not a condition precedent for limitations on access. The ultimate determinant in every case must be the best interests of the child. Many decisions on access may involve no reference to harm. For example, a judge might conclude that it is not in the best interests of a child that he or she see the access parent every day on the ground that this would result in undue disruption to the child's schedule of activities. Again, a judge might conclude that it is in the best interests of the child that he or she move with the custodial parent to a distant location, notwithstanding that this will limit the access of the other parent. Optimum access may simply not be in the best interests of the child for a variety of circumstances.

On the other hand, in some cases the risk of harm may be a factor to be considered in determining what is in the child's best interests. For example, where the limits on access relate to the quality of the access -- what the access parent may say or do with the child -- the question of harm may become highly relevant. Given the interest of the child in coming to know his or her access parent as fully as possible, judges may well be reluctant to impose limits on what the access parent may say or do with the child in the absence of some evidence suggesting that the activity may harm the child. The legal test is not harm; the Divorce Act makes this clear. However, in some circumstances, the risk of harm to the child or the absence thereof may become an important factor to be considered. To this extent I agree with the Court of Appeal that, in determining whether religious discussions and activities between parent and child should be curtailed, it may well behoove the judge to enquire whether the proposed conduct poses a risk of harming the child. In doing so, the judge should bear in mind that conflict between parents over the access issue does not necessarily indicate harm, nor does the objection of the child necessarily impose that conclusion. In some circumstances they may; in some they may not.

I conclude that the ultimate criterion for determining limits on access to a child is the best interests of the child. The custodial parent has no "right" to limit access. The judge must consider all factors relevant to determining what is in the child's best interests; a factor which must be considered in all cases is Parliament's view that contact with each parent is to be maximized to the extent that this is compatible with the best interests of the child. The risk of harm to the child, while not the ultimate legal test, may also be a factor to be considered. This is particularly so where the issue is the quality of access -- what the access parent may say or do with the child. In such cases, it will generally be relevant to consider whether the conduct in question poses a risk of harm to the child which outweighs the benefits of a free and open relationship which permits the child to know the access parent as he or she is. It goes without saying that, as for any other legal test, the judge, in determining what is in the best interests of the child, must act not on his or her personal views, but on the evidence.

(b) The Constitutionality of the Test

The first question is whether the Charter applies. Because of my conclusion later in these reasons that valid orders under the "best interests of the child" standard cannot violate the Charter, I find it unnecessary to decide whether the Charter applies to an action for access under the Divorce Act between two parents. For the purposes of this section, I assume that it does.

The constitutional focus in this case centres on the guarantee of freedom of religion in s. 2(a) of the Charter and the guarantee of freedom of expression in s. 2(b) of the Charter. The guarantees of freedom of association and equality apply only tangentially, if at all, and were not emphasized in argument.

The respondent says that legislative provision for the "best interests of the child" violates his religious and expressive freedom. The argument is that in some cases the "best interests of the child" will require a judge to make an order limiting expressive or religious freedom. Therefore, it is submitted, the test is unconstitutional, unless it can be saved under s. 1.

In my view, this argument cannot stand. The reason is that the guarantees of religious freedom and expressive freedom in the Charter do not protect conduct which violates the best interests of the child test.

*Whether Application of the Best Interests Standard Violates the *Charter

Does the Charter protect religious expression which is not in the best interests of the child? In my view, the answer to this question is no.

It is established that the guarantee of freedom of religion does not extend to religious activity which harms other people. In R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., 1985 CanLII 69 (SCC), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295, this Court held that freedom of religion is not absolute; in particular, it does not extend to conduct that would injure or interfere with the parallel rights of others. Dickson J., (as he then was), after a lengthy historical review of freedom of religion in our society and legal system, concluded at p. 346:

Viewed in this context, the purpose of freedom of conscience and religion becomes clear. The values that underlie our political and philosophic traditions demand that every individual be free to hold and to manifest whatever beliefs and opinions his or her conscience dictates, provided inter alia only that such manifestations do not injure his or her neighbours or their parallel rights to hold and manifest beliefs and opinions of their own. [Emphasis added.]

The next question is whether conduct which is not in the best interests of the child amounts to an "injury" or intrusion on the rights of others within the meaning of this comment. If so, the guarantee of freedom of religion will not protect such conduct.

It is clear that conduct which poses a risk of harm to the child would not be protected. As noted earlier, religious expression and comment of a parent which is found to violate the best interests of a child will often do so because it poses a risk of harm to the child. If so, it is clear that the guarantee of religious freedom can offer no protection. But I think a case can be made that even in cases where a risk of harm may not have been established, the guarantee of freedom of religion should not be understood to extend to protecting conduct which is not in the best interests of the child. I understand "injure" in the passage cited from R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, to be a broad concept. To deprive a child of what a court has found to be in his or her best interests is to "injure", in the sense of not doing what is best for the child. The vulnerable situation of the child heightens the need for protection; if one is to err, it should not be in favour of the exercise of the alleged parental right, but in favour of the interests of the child. An additional factor which may come into play in the case of older children is the "parallel right" of others referred to by Dickson J., "to hold and manifest beliefs and opinions of their own". For these reasons, I conclude that the Charter guarantee of freedom of religion does not extend to protect conduct which is not in the best interests of the child under the Divorce Act.

I come then to freedom of expression. The ambit of this right has been more broadly drawn than freedom of conscience and religion, in that even harmful expression may be protected: Irwin Toy Ltd. v. Quebec (Attorney General), 1989 CanLII 87 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 927; R. v. Keegstra, 1990 CanLII 24 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 697; Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (Man.), 1990 CanLII 105 (SCC), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1123. On the other hand, some forms of harmful expression are not constitutionally protected. Violence or threats of violence are not protected: see RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., 1986 CanLII 5 (SCC), [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573, Keegstra, supra, at p. 733. Nor is expression which takes the form of "direct attacks by violent means on the physical liberty and integrity of another person" protected: Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (Man.), supra, at p. 1186. The fact that conduct has been criminalized by Parliament is an indication, although not a conclusive one, that expressive conduct falls in the latter category: Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (Man.), supra, at p. 1185.

The expression challenged in the case at bar does not take the form of violence or threats of violence, nor does it constitute a direct attack on the physical integrity or liberty of another. The harm done, if any, is of a psychological nature. (In saying this, I do not overlook the fact that some religious practices or forms of expression may involve psychological violence or physical violence.) Thus a prima facie case for protection under the guarantee of freedom of expression can be made out.

This poses a problem. Virtually every form of religious practice is expressive. Interpreting freedom of expression broadly, in the religious context, will nullify the principle that freedom of religion does not protect conduct which injures others or which conflicts with their parallel rights to hold and manifest beliefs of their own.

The answer to this apparent dilemma is found in the admonition of Dickson J. in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, at p. 344, that a purposive approach to Charter interpretation requires that associated rights -- in this case religious freedom and freedom of expression -- be interpreted in a consistent and coherent manner:

. . . the purpose of the right or freedom in question is to be sought by reference to the character and the larger objects of the Charter itself, to the language chosen to articulate the specific right or freedom, to the historical origins of the concepts enshrined, and where applicable, to the meaning and purpose of the other specific rights and freedoms with which it is associated within the text of the Charter. [Emphasis added.]

This admonition must be coupled with the canon that the ambit of a particular right or freedom cannot be defined in the abstract but should rather be defined in the context of the particular activity in question: Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), 1989 CanLII 20 (SCC), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326. Taking these two injunctions together, one arrives at the conclusion that the court, focusing on the context of the particular case, must strive to interpret the related rights in a coherent manner.

The conduct with which this appeal is concerned -- the teaching of religious beliefs and practices to one's children -- while it has an expressive aspect, is predominantly religious. In seeking to reconcile the rights of freedom of religion and freedom of expression in this context, it is the religious aspect which must dominate. Reading the two guarantees together, it is my view that the limits of the guarantee of freedom of expression should govern in the context of religious instruction of children.

For these reasons, I conclude that the best interests of the child test under the Divorce Act does not violate the Charter and is constitutionally valid.

Whether the Order of the Trial Judge is Valid Under the Divorce Act

The question is whether the trial judge correctly applied the "best interests of the child" test set out in s. 16(8) and (10) of the Divorce Act.

The trial judge took a custody-oriented approach to the question of whether the father should be allowed to discuss and practise his religion with the children. For her the first question (at p. 205) was "who gets custody and guardianship of the children and what flows from that." She concluded that custody confers on the custodial parent the exclusive "right" to make all decisions with respect to the child's education, health care and religion. It followed inevitably from this (at p. 205) that she saw the custodial parent as possessing the "sole responsibility for . . . the religious instruction of the child." This exclusive right in Mrs. Young to determine the child's religious instruction led directly to her conclusion that Mr. Young should be prevented from discussing his religious ideas with the children. Having concluded that the religious conflict "must stop", she ordered it stopped in the manner which the custodial parent desired, without further discussion of whether another alternative might better serve the interests of the children.

This reasoning departs from the best interests of the child test as outlined earlier in these reasons in three respects. First, it places undue emphasis on the wishes of the custodial parent. The custodial parent is viewed as having the "right" to determine limits on access. In my respectful opinion, this rights-based approach is erroneous. The only question to be considered where limitation of access is in issue is what is in the best interests of the child. While the custodial parent has the obligation to make certain basic decisions as to how the child is educated, which may extend to religious matters, this does not automatically mean that religious contacts with the access parent of a different faith are to be excluded. It is not the wishes of the custodial parent that govern terms of access, but the best interests of the child.

Second, the trial judge failed to consider the benefits which might enure to the children from coming to know their father as he was -- that is, as a devoutly religious man devoted to the Jehovah's Witness faith. She made no reference to Parliament's instruction in s. 16(10) that the child shall have as much contact with both parents as is compatible with her best interests.

Thirdly, the trial judge failed to consider adequately whether there was any evidence of a risk of harm to the children which might offset the benefit of full access to their father's values, including those related to religion. While in some circumstances access may be limited on grounds unrelated to harm, in cases such as this, where the issue is whether entirely lawful discussions and activities between the access parent and the child should be curtailed, it behooves the judge to enquire whether the conduct poses a risk of harming the child.

While the trial judge alluded to the possibility that if Mr. Young continued to share his religion with the children, he would damage his relationship with the elder two, she failed to allude to any other suggestion of harm and failed to consider whether such harm might outweigh the benefit to be gained from a freer, fuller relationship with their father.

The trial judge's undue emphasis on the "rights" of the custodial parent, coupled with her failure to consider the benefits to be gained from unrestricted contact with the access parent or whether those benefits were offset by a greater risk of harm to the children, may have clouded her appreciation of what was in their best interests. It was therefore open to the Court of Appeal to reconsider the matter and seek to give further guidance as to the factors to be considered in determining what is in the child's best interests in cases such as these.

Southin J.A. in the Court of Appeal took a similar but less absolute view of the rights conferred by custody. The custodial parent, according to her, has the "final say" on all matters of religion, although the "right to know" the access parent and the problems with the enforceability of any order restricting the conversation of the access parent, led her to conclude that the trial judge's restriction in respect of religious conversations could not stand.

The majority of the Court of Appeal, by contrast, saw the matter less in terms of the custodial parent's "right" to decide all religious matters affecting the children, and more in terms of the best interests of the children. Unfettered by notions of the custodial parent's rights, the majority of the Court of Appeal asked simply what was in the best interests of the child. Wood J.A. began by noting at p. 92 that "the provisions of s. 16 of the Divorce Act of 1985 must be applied in a manner which is both consistent with the intentions of Parliament and relevant to the evolving role of parents in the modern structure of today's society". He found s. 16(10) to be particularly important in determining Parliament's intent in respect of access, stating at p. 93:

Viewed in that way, real contact would necessarily include the opportunity for an access parent to whom a religious belief is important to share that belief, at least in a consensual way, with his or her children.

Thus, for the majority in the Court of Appeal, the prime concern was the best interests of the child. An order for custody vests the custodial parent with the power to determine the child's religious upbringing, to the extent that this parent can require the child to observe a faith until the age of discretion; this is in the child's best interests where the parents cannot agree. A custody order does not, however, give the custodial parent the "right" to limit the access parent's ability to share his or her religious views with the child, unless that is shown on the evidence not to be in the child's best interests. Viewed thus, the notions of custody and access unite in a common purpose of promoting the child's best interests.

The majority held that an access parent's conduct with his child may be limited where the evidence shows the existence of, or potential for, real harm to the child, or where the child does not consent to the instruction. On the latter point, Wood J.A. noted that while it may be in the best interests of the child that the custodial parent be allowed to enforce religious practices against the child's wishes, that rationale did not extend to the access parent. Both limitations on the right to access found by the Court of Appeal are grounded in the best interests of the child. The majority also held that expert evidence, based on scientific criteria, is required to show harm. While, for the reasons discussed earlier, I would not agree as a general proposition that in every case the risk of harm to the child must be established to justify limitations on access, in the context of the dispute in this case, I do not think that the majority of the Court of Appeal erred in placing considerable emphasis on the absence on the evidence of a risk of harm to the child.

I do not share the view of the majority of the Court of Appeal that expert evidence is required in all cases. Nor am I convinced that the failure of the child to consent to instruction necessarily precludes the conclusion that such instruction by the access parent is in the best interests of the child. Apart from these caveats, I substantially subscribe to the views expressed by Wood J.A.

The majority of the Court of Appeal held that the evidence did not establish that harm was being caused to the children. On the issue of the children's consent, Wood J.A. concluded that no order was necessary because Mr. Young had confirmed under oath that he would respect his children's wishes with respect to the activities they objected to -- attending services with him and accompanying him on his proselytizing missions. In the end, the majority did not find that it was in the best interests of the children, all factors considered, that even this limited form of religious activity by the access parent be restricted.

If one accepts, as did the majority of the Court of Appeal, that the issue of the children's accompanying Mr. Young to services and in his evangelical efforts is resolved by Mr. Young's undertaking -- and I see no reason not to do so given his record of compliance to date -- the only issue is whether the order forbidding Mr. Young to discuss religion with his children is valid. Apart from the value of getting to know their father and the difficulty of enforcement which led Southin J.A. to reject this restriction, it is questionable that a proper application of the "best interests of the child" test supports it. Conflict between the parents is, in and of itself, not a sufficient basis for assuming that the child's interests will not be served. There was, in this case, evidence that the children were functioning in an entirely normal fashion, and had not been adversely affected by the dispute between their parents or by their father's religious instruction. We are left then with the trial judge's concern that Mr. Young's relationship with his children would deteriorate if he persisted in his religious instruction during his periods of access.

With the greatest respect to the trial judge, this was not on the record in this case a sufficient reason for restricting access. In so far as the possible deterioration of Mr. Young's relationship with his daughters can be considered unfortunate, the alternative -- a relationship which prevents them from knowing him as he is -- is also undesirable. In these circumstances, any perceived harm to the children cannot be said to outweigh the benefits of unrestricted access. In short, this is not a case where the evidence supports the view that the best interests of the children requires further curtailment of the father's communication of religious views and practices than already had been agreed to.

I conclude that the trial judge's orders preventing Mr. Young from discussing religion with his children were not supportable on the evidence. In view of Mr. Young's undertakings, the orders relating to church attendance and proselytizing were unnecessary. The order enjoining the respondent from preventing blood transfusions was unnecessary from a practical point of view. Parents should, of course, not make disparaging comments about the other parent's religion, but the matter might, on the record here, best have been left to the parents' good sense.

B. Financial Matters

The trial judge found that each party initially had a one-half interest in the family home where the wife was living with the three children of the marriage. She held that the husband's half interest was extinguished by the costs ordered against him, half the value of the family car which he kept, arrears of maintenance, and lump sum maintenance over and above the monthly maintenance awarded to the wife. As the trial judge put it, at p. 202, "[a]ny further interest that the [husband] has in the matrimonial home will be transferred to the petitioner in the form of lump sum maintenance to assist in the petitioner's efforts to become self-sufficient."

The trial judge ordered that $80,000 owed to the wife's mother by a corporation, which the parties had formed to begin a jewellery business, was a family debt for which the husband and wife were jointly liable. She also held that the sum of $27,586.57 which the appellant had borrowed to support herself before she obtained an order for interim maintenance was a family debt for half of which the respondent was liable.

The trial judge ordered that the husband pay to the wife monthly maintenance in the sum of $1400, and $400 a month support for each of his children.

Two aspects of these orders are appealed to this Court. The first is the trial judge's determination that whatever interest the husband might have in the matrimonial home, after setting off costs and arrears of maintenance, should be absorbed by an order for lump sum maintenance. The Court of Appeal set this order aside. The power to award lump sum maintenance is found in the Divorce Act, s. 15(2):

15. . . .

(2) A court of competent jurisdiction may, on application by either or both spouses, make an order requiring one spouse to secure or pay, or to secure and pay, such lump sum or periodic sums, or such lump sum and periodic sums, as the court thinks reasonable for the support of

- (a) the other spouse;
- (b) any or all children of the marriage; or
- (c) the other spouse and any or all children of the marriage.

Southin J.A. stated at p. 41:

If the learned judge wished to fix lump sum maintenance, she was obliged to fix it in a sum certain and to fix it with reference to the principles applicable to such an award.

I agree that she was obliged to fix the maintenance with reference to the principles applicable to such an award. The trial judge did not express any jurisprudential or evidentiary basis for awarding the lump sum maintenance. The goal was no doubt to achieve the end of conveying the entire interest in the matrimonial home to the wife. But this justification does not support an award of lump sum maintenance; more is required.

That said, the fact remains that the trial judge was convinced that a fair allocation of the assets of the marriage required that the house be transferred entirely to the wife. The British Columbia Family Relations Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c. 121, permits an unequal division of family assets where the trial judge is satisfied that this is required having regard to various enumerated factors. The relevant sections are ss. 51 and 52 of this Act. Section 51 reads:

51. Where the provisions for division of property between spouses under section 43 or their marriage agreement, as the case may be, would be unfair having regard to

- (a) the duration of the marriage;
- (b) the duration of the period during which the spouses have lived separate and apart;
- (c) the date when property was acquired or disposed of;
- (d) the extent to which property was acquired by one spouse through inheritance or gift;
- (e) the needs of each spouse to become or remain economically independent and self sufficient; or
- (f) any other circumstances relating to the acquisition, preservation, maintenance, improvement or use of property or the capacity or liabilities of a spouse, the Supreme Court, on application, may order that the property covered by section 43 or the marriage agreement, as the case may be, be divided into shares fixed by the court. Additionally or alternatively the court may order that other property not covered by section 43 or the marriage agreement, as the case may be, of one spouse be vested in the other spouse.

Section 52 of the Act provides that where a determination of an unequal allocation has been made, the trial judge may, by way of remedy, make an order as to the ownership of property.

In the case at bar there was ample basis for an order under s. 51 awarding Mrs. Young a greater portion of the family assets on the ground that, for a considerable period of time, Mr. Young had paid little or nothing for the support of his family. As will be seen below, I do not agree that the debts incurred during this period can, in law, be attributed to Mr. Young. However, they can serve as a consideration supporting reduction of his interest in the family property. It may also be noted that the equity in the home was not substantial and that Mr. Young was permitted to retain other assets. It is on these grounds that I depart from Southin J.A.'s view that there were insufficient reasons to order a reapportionment. Although the matter is not free from difficulty, I incline to the view that a trial judge, looking at all the circumstances, could have made such an order.

The problem, as noted by Southin J.A., is that the trial judge made no reference to s. 51 of the Family Relations Act or the factors on which reapportionment of the presumed equal interest in family assets can be made. This presents this Court with two alternatives: return the matter for a new trial or make the order which it thinks the trial judge should have made. The Court of Appeal chose the latter, and I think they were right in so doing. In this case it is open to inference that the trial judge concluded that a de facto reapportionment of the interest in the family assets was required to do justice. It also appears that there was, on the facts and the law, a method of achieving this end. The fact that the trial judge did not expressly allude to the factors for reallocation under s. 51, which in other circumstances might be sufficient reason for ordering a new trial, must here be weighed against the fact that this litigation has already gone on far too long and cost far too much. Like the Court of Appeal, I am loath to send the matter back to the trial division for further proceedings. In these circumstances, it seems to me that the better course is to endorse the result achieved by the trial judge on the ground that the evidence is capable of supporting an order for reallocation of the parties' interest in the family assets to the extent required to give Mrs. Young the entire interest in the matrimonial home.

I come finally to the matter of the family debts. The $80,000 owed by the corporation to Mrs. Young's mother cannot in law be characterized as a debt for which Mr. Young is personally liable, as ordered by the trial judge. The only entity liable for repayment is the corporation. There is no legal basis on which either Mr. or Mrs. Young can be said to be legally liable to repay the money borrowed by the company. The debt incurred by Mrs. Young to support herself and the children before she applied for maintenance is similarly unenforceable against Mr. Young as a debt, although it can be taken into consideration in an order for reduction of his interest in the family assets, as suggested above. I agree with Southin J.A., at p. 39, that "[t]he court cannot make a spouse jointly liable to a creditor for a debt of the other spouse, no matter for what purpose it was incurred, or, in the absence of some contractual foundation, make one spouse liable to indemnify the other, either in whole or in part, for a liability of the latter." Accordingly, the paragraphs of the order making Mr. Young liable for one-half of these debts must be struck out.

C. Costs

1. Costs Against the Respondent

The trial judge ordered solicitor-client costs against the respondent. This award was made on the basis that the custody claim had "little merit", that the respondent attempted to mislead the court, that the respondent was recalcitrant on matters of custody and maintenance and, finally, on the basis that unnecessary proceedings had resulted. The trial judge also referred to the fact that someone else was promoting and paying for the legal action and that repetitive and irrelevant evidence was tendered.

The Court of Appeal, per Cumming J.A., upheld the imposition of solicitor-client costs for four days of the trial and for four days of the interlocutory proceedings concerned with financial issues, on the basis of the husband's non-disclosure of financial information. Otherwise, costs against the respondent were reduced to party-and-party costs.

The Court of Appeal's order was based on the following principles, with which I agree. Solicitor-client costs are generally awarded only where there has been reprehensible, scandalous or outrageous conduct on the part of one of the parties. Accordingly, the fact that an application has little merit is no basis for awarding solicitor-client costs; nor is the fact that part of the cost of the litigation may have been paid for by others. The Court of Appeal meticulously considered all the proceedings in the light of these principles to arrive at its conclusion that only partial solicitor-client costs were justified.

Finding no error in the reasoning or conclusion of the Court of Appeal on this question, I conclude that its order for costs should remain, save to the extent different conclusions on the merits in this Court require that an adjustment be made. As I have made clear, the only respect in which I would vary the order of the Court of Appeal is that instead of ordering lump sum maintenance and a moratorium on the sale of the matrimonial home, I would restore the trial judge's order that the entire interest in the home be conferred on the wife. In my view, this difference does not warrant altering the award of costs against the respondent made below.

2. Costs Against the Respondent's Counsel

The trial judge ordered solicitor-client costs against counsel for the husband, Mr. How. For the reasons recited above in connection with costs against the respondent, she concluded that the proceedings had been unnecessarily lengthened. She also referred, at p. 216, to the fact that "[c]ounsel for the respondent had a forum and a cause to pursue. Unfortunately, what was in the best interests of the children, their welfare, was totally lost by the respondent and his counsel in these protracted proceedings. . . . The court was subjected to unwarranted abuse, criticism and insult." She made no finding, however, that Mr. How had been in contempt of court.

The Court of Appeal held that no order for costs should have been made against Mr. How. There is no need to repeat that entirely satisfactory analysis. The basic principle on which costs are awarded is as compensation for the successful party, not in order to punish a barrister. Any member of the legal profession might be subject to a compensatory order for costs if it is shown that repetitive and irrelevant material, and excessive motions and applications, characterized the proceedings in which they were involved, and that the lawyer acted in bad faith in encouraging this abuse and delay. It is clear that the courts possess jurisdiction to make such an award, often under statute and, in any event, as part of their inherent jurisdiction to control abuse of process and contempt of court. But the fault that might give rise to a costs award against Mr. How does not characterize these proceedings, despite their great length and acrimonious progress. Moreover, courts must be extremely cautious in awarding costs personally against a lawyer, given the duties upon a lawyer to guard confidentiality of instructions and to bring forward with courage even unpopular causes. A lawyer should not be placed in a situation where his or her fear of an adverse order of costs may conflict with these fundamental duties of his or her calling.

The Court of Appeal found that the trial judge's criticism of Mr. How related to his conduct in bringing the action. Assuming that costs might, in certain circumstances, be imposed for contempt of court, none was found. Accordingly, no order for costs should have been made against Mr. How. I see no error in the conclusion of the Court of Appeal in this regard.

3. Costs Against Burnaby Unit (Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society)

Since the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society (the Society) did not appear as a party, the costs awarded against it must be taken to have been premised on the fact that it supported the litigation financially. In effect, this was equivalent to an award for the tort of maintenance: see Re Sturmer and Town of Beaverton (1912), 1912 CanLII 588 \(ON SCDC\), 25 O.L.R. 566 (Div. Ct.), at pp. 568-69. To be liable for maintenance, a person must intervene "officiously or improperly": Goodman v. The King, 1939 CanLII 21 \(SCC\), [1939] S.C.R. 446. Provision of financial assistance to a litigant by a non-party will not always constitute maintenance. Funding by a relative or out of charity must be distinguished from cases where a person wilfully and improperly stirs up litigation and strife: Newswander v. Giegerich (1907), 1907 CanLII 33 \(SCC\), 39 S.C.R. 354.

In this case there was no evidence that the respondent had been induced to allow the Society to use his name in order that it might avoid liability for costs while advancing its own interests, that he would not have advanced his own interests in the absence of its help, that the Society's funding was for other than charitable motives, or that it controlled or directed the proceedings. Its support was "out of charity and religious sympathy" and did not constitute maintenance. The fact that the Society had a common interest with the respondent (as followers of the same religion) did not affect this.

Cumming J.A. so found, and then qualified his position at p. 85 by stating:

I hasten to add that it does not follow that the resources of the Watch Tower Bible & Tract Society can be brought to bear in every dispute between a Jehovah's Witness parent and a non-Jehovah's Witness parent. Once an issue of constitutional law of the kind raised here is settled then, if further litigation of the point between other litigants is supported, another question might arise. It may be that the right to assist without facing an award of costs cannot itself be used by the rich and powerful, no matter how great their interest in the issue, as an instrument of the oppression of those who must fight their battles alone.

I find again that no error has been made in the Court of Appeal's reasoning or conclusion.

The evidence established that the respondent paid for a considerable portion of the cost of the proceedings personally, that the dispute was instigated at least in part by the appellant, and that the Society could not be considered to have stirred up the litigation, much less to have done so wilfully or improperly.

One argument, however, was not touched on by the Court of Appeal. This is the argument that the Society was an unnamed party to the litigation and, as such, should properly bear its portion of the costs. I would not discount the possibility that a court might properly hold an unnamed party liable for costs. The rule is that a non-party who has put forward another person in whose name the proceedings are taken cannot escape liability for costs in putting forward another: R. v. Sturmer and Town of Beaverton, supra. However, it seems to me that the evidence here falls short of establishing that the society was a party in this sense. Even on the constitutional issue, it cannot be said that the Society put Mr. Young forward, in effect bringing its own action in his name. The constitutional issue was first raised by Mrs. Young's objection to Mr. Young's communicating his religious beliefs to the children and was validly pursued by Mr. Young in his own interest. The Society's interest in the constitutional issue is insufficient, as I see it, to distinguish it from interveners who appear on constitutional cases and who have never been liable for costs.

Disposition

I would affirm the order of the Court of Appeal, except in respect of the matrimonial home, which should be transferred to Mrs. Young. In the circumstances of this case, I would order that each party bear his or her own costs on this appeal.

I would answer the constitutional questions as follows:

1. Do ss. 16(8) and 17(5) of the Divorce Act, 1985, which provide that judicial decisions regarding custody and access be made "in the best interests of the child", deny the rights and freedoms guaranteed in s. 2(a), (b), and (d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

No.

2.If the answer to question 1 is affirmative, are ss. 16(8) and 17(5) of the Divorce Act, 1985, justified as reasonable limits by s. 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and therefore not inconsistent with the Constitution Act, 1982?

Given my answer to question 1, it is unnecessary that I answer this question.

3.Do ss. 16(8) and 17(5) of the Divorce Act, 1985, violate the guarantees to equality set out in s. 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

No.

4.If the answer to question 3 is affirmative, are ss. 16(8) and 17(5) of the Divorce Act, 1985, justified as reasonable limits by s. 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and therefore not inconsistent with the Constitution Act, 1982?

Given my answer to question 3, it is unnecessary that I answer this question.

Appeal allowed in part, L'HEUREUX-DUBÉ J. dissenting in the result. Sections 16(8) and 17(5) of the Divorce Act, 1985 did not violate ss. 2(a), (b), (d) or 15(1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Reasons for Judgment of the Honourable Madam Justice Neilson:

Introduction

[1] On September 23, 2011, the appellant, Lynn Temoin, who is the daughter of the respondent, Llewellyn John Martin, brought a petition under s. 3 of the Patients Property Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 349, for a declaration that her father is incapable of managing his financial and personal affairs by reason of mental infirmity arising from disease or age. The petition also sought the appointment of Wolridge Mahon Ltd., an accounting firm, as committee of Mr. Martin's estate, and of Ms. Temoin as committee of his person. As well, Ms. Temoin sought a declaration that any will or other transaction made by her father after June 2, 2011 was void.

[2] A precondition for a hearing under s. 3 is affidavits from two medical practitioners setting out their opinions that the person who is the subject of the hearing is incapable. Ms. Temoin asked Mr. Martin to see two physicians for that purpose, and he refused. As a result, her petition also sought an interlocutory order requiring her father to attend two medical examinations by geriatric psychiatrists selected by a third party.

[3] Ms. Temoin's application for those examinations was heard in Supreme Court chambers and dismissed on December 16, 2011, on the basis the evidence was insufficient to establish Mr. Martin was prima facie incompetent, or in need of protection: 2011 BCSC 1727. Ms. Temoin now appeals that order. Both parties seek to lead new evidence on the appeal.

Background

[4] Mr. Martin is 87 years old. His first marriage ended in divorce in 1964. He had two daughters of that marriage, Ms. Temoin, and her sister, Jo-Anne Gordon, who passed away in 1990. They produced three grandchildren. Mr. Martin married his second wife, Freda Martin, in 1965. She brought four children from her first marriage into the family. Like the chambers judge, I will refer to these two family groups as the first and second families.

[5] Mr. Martin has been a successful businessman, and has amassed a substantial fortune from his business activities. He has been generous to both families over the years, giving gifts of cash and company shares of $34,775,385 to the first family and $29,781,572 to the second family. His remaining assets are valued in the range of $30 million.

[6] In 1997 Mr. Martin developed an estate plan with professional assistance from his long-time lawyer, Mr. Belsher. This included an estate freeze through an entity referred to as “Freezeco” under which Mr. Martin retained 100 percent of the voting shares of his business interests, as well as preference shares valued at over $6 million. Each of the two families received 50 percent of the non-voting participating shares. On February 12, 1997 Mr. Martin signed a will that left 51 percent of his voting shares to the first family and 49 percent to the second family. The residue of his estate was divided equally between the two families after a gift of $2.5 million to the first family.

[7] Mrs. Martin was not involved in the estate planning process in 1997, and did not know about Mr. Martin’s 1997 will until October 2010, when they were discussing gifts for both families. She became upset and reminded Mr. Martin he had promised when they married that he would treat the children from both families equally. She understood this meant each of the six children from both families or, if deceased, their offspring, would receive an equal share in his estate.

[8] As a result, the Martins agreed to embark on a review and revision of their estate plans and wills. To assist them they retained Lisa Collins, a lawyer, and Aileen Collings, a chartered accountant, of Sustainable Family Wealth Partners Inc., a company that provides wealth planning consulting to high net worth business owners. Over the next nine months these professionals worked extensively with both Mr. Martin and Mrs. Martin. They collected the records and documents necessary to understand and value their current assets and Mr. Martin’s past gifts to both families, and prepared a detailed picture of the complex business and financial affairs of both Mr. Martin and Mrs. Martin, to provide a basis for recommendations with respect to their estate plans. In the course of these activities Ms. Collins and Ms. Collings met with the Martins seven times, sometimes for many hours, and reviewed with them in detail their progress, the results of their investigations, and their recommendations. They indicated that throughout these dealings they were alive to the advanced age of their clients and the family tensions caused by their activities, and adapted their work accordingly. Ms. Collings says at each step they ensured Mr. Martin had the “capacity, knowledge, and understanding to implement the estate and inter vivos estate planning”, including the transfers they intended to make through wills, life insurance beneficiaries and inter vivos gifts.

[9] As a result of these consultations, Mr. Martin agreed to revise his estate plan and he and Mrs. Martin agreed to execute new wills. The trial judge summarized the impact of these steps on both families as follows:

[9] ... Very generally, in this will, the residue of his estate will be distributed more equally among the children of both families and each family group will receive 50% of the voting shares of Freezeco. Part of the estate plan also involves a gift to Mrs. Martin of $3.3 million and the transfer of an investment account, worth approximately $10 million, from Mr. Martin's sole name into joint names with Mrs. Martin. There is evidence that the transfer to the joint account is intended to be an interim measure to effect the $3.3 million gift, and the balance in that account is to be divided under the will. According to the evidence, the lifetime and estate totals under the old plan gave the first family group about $10 million more than the second family; under the new plan the first family group receives about $6 million less than the second family. The division under the will, however, reduces the first family's portion by about $8 million and increases the second family's portion by about $8 million.

[10] The purpose of the $3.3 million gift to Mrs. Martin was to provide her estate with funds to pay capital gains taxes due on her death with respect to corporate shares she has owned for many years. The executors of Mr. Martin's will were Ms. Temoin, Ms. Collins, and one of Mrs. Martin's daughters.

[11] The evidence indicated that although Mr. Martin continued to be active in his business, he had experienced diminished cognition in recent years preceding these developments. Ms. Temoin and Mr. Legge, the general manager of Mr. Martin's business, indicated he had begun to demonstrate noticeable memory loss, and his ability to understand and retain information had declined. At one point during the estate planning activities Mr. Martin contacted Mr. Belsher, his lawyer, to obtain copies of relevant documents. Mr. Belsher sent these with a covering letter that included this comment:

... I think it is important, given the recent issues you have had with your memory, that you attend at your physician and obtain his views with respect to your ability to make amendments to your Will.

[12] On April 8, 2011 Ms. Collins and Ms. Collings, with the Martins, held a family meeting at which they explained Mr. Martin's revised estate plans to Ms. Temoin and other family members. Ms. Temoin deposes it was obvious to her that her father did not understand or retain anything that was said at the meeting. As a result, she approached her father's family physician, Dr. Carswell, and asked him to refer Mr. Martin for an assessment of his testamentary capacity.

[13] On April 12, 2011 Dr. Carswell arranged an appointment with Dr. Schovanek, a geriatric psychiatrist. Nicole McAllister, a registered nurse, met with Mr. and Mrs. Martin to do an assessment in anticipation of that appointment. Her report includes these comments:

Mr. Martin describes more difficulty with his cognition in the context of his business. He reports more short term memory loss, with loss of focus and concentration. He is currently working four days per week, mainly working with his managers discussing ongoing projects. He is finding it more difficult to remember the process of tasks and keeping the thread of conversations. On assessment, client deferred many questions to his wife Freda. His thought form was slow, with poverty of content and word finding difficulties. Client is very aware of these deficits [sic].

He is aware of his deficits [sic], and adjusts what he says around his managers. He is very willing to have a psychiatric evaluation to determine if he is capable of signing off on projects and specifically wills and other legal documents.

[14] On June 2, 2011 Dr. Schovanek examined and tested Mr. Martin to assess his testamentary capacity. He initially met with both Mr. and Mrs. Martin, who told him they were restructuring Mr. Martin's estate because Mrs. Martin felt it did not represent what he had initially told her. She reported her concern that under the 1997 will she would be left with very little after a marriage of almost 50 years. Dr. Schovanek then interviewed Mr. Martin alone and reported:

We interviewed Pat on his own regarding his testamentary capacity: He has difficulty actually describing what a will is, other than "its something for when I die." He was not able to specifically name his executors. He did consistently repeat that his current will leaves half to his former family and half to his current family. He was able to specifically name who the people are affected. Mr. Martin was not able to explain what would happen if he died intestate. He estimated the value of his estate as between "20 and 30 million dollars." He was able to list some of the assets but, later, Freda mentioned several others that he had omitted.

When I ask what changes Mr. Martin would like to make to his will, he goes on to describe exactly the same arrangement as is in his current will, i.e. "50% for my first family and 50% for this family." When asked specifically about what shifts he wants to make, he states "not a bit." When I inquire if he is feeling any pressure to make changes, he says that both his daughter from his first marriage, Lynn, and Freda do not get along and this causes him great duress. He feels that his estate is expansive enough that "everyone will be looked after just fine."

[15] Dr. Schovanek reported Mr. Martin had variable performance on his mental status examination, doing well on some aspects and struggling with others. He concluded Mr. Martin had "cognitive and functional impairment consistent with a mild/moderate, primarily degenerative dementia". It was his opinion Mr. Martin should no longer drive. As to testamentary capacity he stated:

5. It is my opinion that Mr. Pat Martin no longer possesses testamentary capacity based on the findings above. I have communicated this to Freda, who is understandably upset. I have both of their permission to discuss this with their estate planners as the conundrum appears to be that, if Freda is to get her "fair share" of the estate that grew during their marriage, she may have no choice but to divorce Pat. Perhaps there is some other interim measure.
6. As of now, however, the will that Pat drew up when capable in the 90s, has to prevail.

[16] At the conclusion of his report, Dr. Schovanek mentioned Ms. Temoin had already attempted to contact him with respect to the results of his examination.

[17] On June 8, 2011 Dr. Schovanek sent Ms. Collins an email advising that in his opinion Mr. Martin lacked testamentary capacity. Ms. Collins forwarded this to Brenda Milbrath, an estate lawyer who had been retained to provide the legal services required in the restructuring process for both Mr. and Mrs. Martin. Because she acted for both of them, Ms. Milbrath contacted Fiona Hunter, another estate lawyer, to obtain an independent assessment of Mr. Martin's capacity to undertake estate planning.

[18] On June 30, 2011 Ms. Milbrath met with both Mr. and Mrs. Martin to confirm their instructions and review drafts of the wills she had prepared. The will had some complexity, given the extent and nature of Mr. Martin's assets. She spent about 1 1/2 hours with Mr. Martin, questioning him, reviewing his estate plan, and going through the draft will. She deposes that at the conclusion of that meeting she was satisfied that Mr. Martin:

- a) understood the nature of a will and specifically the nature and consequence of the draft will I reviewed with him;
- b) was able to identify his next of kin and those individuals to whom he owes an obligation to provide for from his estate;
- c) had a good understanding of what his assets are, including describing what assets his various companies own;
- d) had a good understanding of the extent of the assets which would be given to each of his beneficiaries under his draft will; and
- e) did not appear to be suffering from any delusions that would affect his ability to choose beneficiaries of his will.

[19] On July 13, 2011 Ms. Hunter, who was aware of Dr. Schovanek's opinion, met with Mr. Martin alone at his home for approximately 1 3/4 hours to conduct an assessment of his testamentary capacity. In her affidavit she states that at the conclusion of that meeting she was satisfied that Mr. Martin:

- a) was aware that Ms. Collins, Ms. Collings, and Ms. Milbrath were assisting him with revising his will;
- b) was aware of the nature of a will in general and in particular that his will would govern the disposition of his assets after his death;
- c) was able to identify his next of kin and those to whom he owes an obligation to provide for from his estate;
- d) had a good grasp of what his assets are overall, identifying them and offering approximate values for them; and
- e) did not appear to be suffering from any delusions which would affect his ability to choose beneficiaries to include in his will.

[20] Ms. Collins, Ms. Collings, and the Martins held another family meeting on July 21, 2011, the day before the wills were signed. Several family members, including Ms. Temoin, attended and had their lawyers present by telephone.

[21] On July 22, 2011 Mr. and Mrs. Martin met with Ms. Hunter, Ms. Milbrath, and Ms. Collins to review and sign their wills. Ms. Hunter deposes it was clear to her from Mr. Martin's statements during the meeting that he understood its purpose and understood the terms of his will would govern the disposition of his estate. He identified his next of kin, and the general nature and approximate value of his assets. He also confirmed he trusted Ms. Milbrath to carry out the instructions he had given to Ms. Collins and Ms. Collings with respect to the terms of his will. As well, he requested and made a final change to the will, requiring decisions of his executors to be unanimous rather than by majority.

[22] Ms. Temoin says that on July 28, 2011 she telephoned Mr. Martin about aspects of his estate plan and he was unable to answer her questions cogently. This affirmed her view that Mrs. Martin was taking advantage of his vulnerability to have him sign documents that he would not have agreed to when he established his 1997 estate plan. As a result, she had her lawyer raise concerns about Mr. Martin's choice of executors and whether he had been unduly influenced by Mrs. Martin.

[23] Ms. Hunter and Ms. Collings met with Mr. Martin in early August to address these issues. The meeting lasted approximately 2 hours and 40 minutes. At its conclusion Ms. Hunter was satisfied that Mr. Martin knew and approved his choice of executors, that he had not been coerced by his wife, and that the contents of the will accurately expressed his wishes. Ms. Collings provided similar evidence, and also said Mr. Martin told her he was satisfied with the wealth split between the two families and that it would end up being "close enough" to an overall 50/50 plan when prior gifts were taken into account. She also ensured that Mr. Martin had continued capacity to execute the documents necessary to implement the estate plan. She deposed:

16. During the August 4, 2011 meeting Pat demonstrated to me that he understood what he and Freda owned, what those assets were worth, who he wished to receive what assets, and that he comprehended intricacies of his business affairs and his estate plan. During the meeting Pat also demonstrated to me that he understood his July 22, 2011 will and his estate planning, which takes into account his life time giving to his "first family" line of Lynn and his deceased daughter's two children. He said that he was satisfied with the wealth split between the two family lines and that it would end up being "close enough" to the overall "50/50 plan" after the prior gifting was taken into account. I have no doubt that Pat understands his July 22, 2011 will and how the members of his extended family will benefit from his July 22, 2011 will and his over-all estate planning.

17. During the August 4, 2011 meeting Pat and I discussed the gift of $3.3 million to Freda which is part of their current estate plan. This money will provide Freda's estate with liquidity to pay the taxes that will become payable when she dies as a result of the increase in value of corporate shares which she has owned for many years. During the meeting Pat was able to assess the capital gains tax which will become payable on those shares when Freda dies and he acknowledged that his prior estate plan had not provided for this eventuality. On this point he stated, "she's entitled to it". Pat also said there are aspects of his revised estate plan that Lynn is not going to be happy with but nevertheless he and Freda were satisfied with their revised estate plan. He thanked me effusively on departure that day for the work which Ms. Collins and I had done to help them reach agreement as to how their estates were to be distributed.

[24] Both Ms. Milbrath and Ms. Hunter stated that Mr. Martin was capable of instructing legal counsel and handling or directing his financial affairs. As well, during the hearing of this appeal, in response to a question from the bench, Mr. Martin's counsel advised us that he was receiving instructions directly from Mr. Martin, and he was satisfied Mr. Martin was capable of giving him those instructions.

[25] Ms. Collings and Ms. Collins continued to work with Mr. and Mrs. Martin to complete various aspects of their estate plans. Ms. Temoin continued to be concerned about her father's competence and testamentary capacity. On September 7, 2011 her lawyer wrote to Ms. Milbrath suggesting this issue would continue to linger and affect the integrity of the will and other documents Mr. Martin had signed unless his capacity to effect his estate plan was properly supported by medical opinions. He proposed Mr. Martin undergo assessments by two independent geriatric psychiatrists, who would provide opinions on whether he had testamentary capacity and capacity to manage his financial affairs.

[26] When Mr. Martin rejected that proposal, Ms. Temoin commenced this petition on September 23, 2011. In support, she filed an affidavit from Dr. Schovanek that appended his earlier report on testamentary capacity and also addressed Mr. Martin's capacity to manage his affairs. This affidavit states in part:

5. It is my opinion that Mr. Martin no longer possesses testamentary capacity and is very likely to lack the capacity to manage his personal finances and affairs. However, in order to conduct a medically informed assessment of financial capacity, the following must take place:

- a. The person must be assessed on their own in a healthy state (i.e. free of acute illness) for a period of approximately 2 hours;
- b. The reviewing physician must be provided with accurate information regarding:
 - i. the patient's current financial affairs (assets, debts, monthly budget information, corporate holdings and responsibilities) and current banking records are usually helpful in such an assessment;
 - ii. current contracts, wills, powers of attorney, estate plans, trusts, representation agreements and the like.

6. The principal aspects of financial capacity that must be reviewed include the abilities to make decisions, appreciate risks and benefits and consequences of the said decisions and to consider pre-existing values and expressed wishes, all taking into consideration the complexity of the patient's financial affairs. I have not conducted the full amount of investigations that, according to recognized protocols, are required to make a fully considered assessment of his financial capacity. However, based on my observations and subject to what a full examination of financial capacity would demonstrate, it is my opinion that:

- a. Mr. Martin is, as I have concluded in accordance with recognized protocols, unable to take care of an important part of his financial affairs, namely estate planning;
- b. Mr. Martin is currently under considerable pressure on the part of his wife Freda Martin to change the estate planning arrangements he has previously made and Freda Martin has expressed to me considerable distress at my conclusion that he is unable to do so (as described in my June 2, 2011 Report).
- c. Mr. Martin no longer takes care of the day to day family finances and very likely does not properly understand his financial affairs or the administration of his estate;
- d. Mr. Martin is very likely incapable, because of his mental infirmity, of managing his affairs and requires care and supervision and control for the protection of himself and his property;
- e. Mr. Martin suffers from significant cognitive impairment, memory impairment and has a diminished ability to learn new information;
- f. Mr. Martin has evidenced progressive cognitive deterioration since 2000 and, in particular, he has dropped 5 points on the Folstein examination within the year preceding my examination, which is the expected rate of decline;

- g. Mr. Martin is extremely unlikely to demonstrate improved cognitive function in the future.

The Legislative Framework Governing the Petition

[27] The applicable legislation reflects the tension between the right to personal autonomy and the protection of vulnerable individuals that lies at the root of this litigation.

[28] Section 3\(1\) of the Adult Guardianship Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 6, enacts a presumption of capability:

- 3(1) Until the contrary is demonstrated, every adult is presumed to be capable of making decisions about the adult's personal care, health care and financial affairs.

[29] Sections 3 and 5 of the Patients Property Act set out the procedure to obtain a declaration of incapability. The relevant parts of these provisions state:

3 (1) If, on

(a) hearing an application, and

(b) reading the affidavits of 2 medical practitioners setting out their opinion that the person who is the subject of the application is, because of

(i) mental infirmity arising from disease, age or otherwise, ...

incapable of managing his or her affairs or incapable of managing himself or herself, or incapable of managing himself or herself or his or her affairs,

the court is satisfied that the person is, because of

(c) mental infirmity arising from disease, age or otherwise, ...

incapable of managing his or her affairs or incapable of managing himself or herself, or incapable of managing himself or herself or his or her affairs, it must, by order, declare the person

(e) incapable of managing his or her affairs, ...

5 (1) If

(a) an application is made or an issue is tried under section 3, [or]

(b) an appeal is taken from an order under section 3, ...

the court hearing the appeal or application or trying the issue may order the person who is the subject of the application or the patient to attend and submit at the time and place the order directs to examination.

(2) An examination under this section must be made by

(a) one or more medical practitioners other than those whose affidavits were before the court on the appeal, application or trial, or

(b) a board of 3 or more medical practitioners designated by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia at the request of the court.

The Reasons for Judgment of the Chambers Judge

[30] The chambers judge reviewed the evidence and the relief sought by Ms. Temoin in her petition. After summarizing the requirements of ss. 3 and 5 of the Patients Property Act she observed, “It has been settled law for many years that the court cannot order a medical examination under the Act before two medical affidavits have been produced”, referring to the decision of this Court in McNeal v. Few (1975), 1975 CanLII 216 (BC CA), 63 B.C.L.R. 281 (C.A.). She also acknowledged that in Re Scow (1985), 63 B.C.L.R. 286 (S.C.), the Supreme Court found this principle was not altered by the introduction of R. 30(1) of the Rules of Court, which permitted the court to order an examination where the mental or physical condition of a party was in issue.

[31] The chambers judge, however, accepted Ms. Temoin’s argument that neither of these decisions had considered whether the court’s inherent or parens patriae jurisdiction might permit an order for the medical examinations she sought. The judge therefore accepted it was open to her to do so, and addressed the characteristics of these concepts. She described the principles governing the court’s parens patriae jurisdiction in these terms:

[45] In a case such as this, I consider the Court’s parens patriae jurisdiction to be more appropriate to the issues raised by the Petitioner. Its origins, while unclear, stem from the need to protect those who are unable to make decisions or to care for themselves. In Re Eve, 1986 CanLII 36 (SCC), [1986] 2 SCR 388, LaForest J. (for the Court) noted that the jurisdiction is founded in necessity and is to be exercised in the best interest of the protected person. He stated that the situations under which it can be exercised are “legion” and never closed. He described the jurisdiction as “of a very broad nature”, which can be invoked in matters such as custody, protection of property, health problems and protection against harmful associations. He went on to say (at para. 75):

What is more ... a court may act not only on the ground that injury to person or property has occurred, but also on the ground that such injury is apprehended. I might add that the jurisdiction is a carefully guarded one. The courts will not readily assume that it has been removed by legislation where a necessity arises to protect a person who cannot protect himself.
[emphasis added]

[46] Overriding all of this is the requirement of proof of incompetency: Re Eve at para. 36.

[47] As with the Court’s inherent jurisdiction, parens patriae jurisdiction can only be exercised where legislation has not “occupied the field” and where the exercise would not conflict with the governing statute. There must be is [sic] a gap in the legislative framework that provides for the protection of incompetent persons. Even if there is a gap, the jurisdiction must only be exercised in the best interests of the incompetent person: Johnston v Johnston, 2003 BCSC 110 at para. 20, citing L.M. v D.F. (1999) 1999 CanLII 6429 (BC SC), 68 BCLR (3d) 132 (SC).

[32] The chambers judge then considered whether the framework of the Patients Property Act revealed a legislative gap that would permit her to exercise her parens patriae jurisdiction to order the medical examinations sought by Ms. Temoin. She found no assistance in the authorities, and so viewed this as a matter of first instance. She acknowledged the presumption of capacity, and found that a person should not be forced to undergo a medical examination directed at establishing incapacity unless there is evidence of incompetence. She accepted the Patients Property Act requires such evidence from two medical practitioners, at a minimum, but found it does not prohibit other evidence of incompetence, nor provide that the medical evidence will be decisive. She found this Court's decision in Kartsonas v. Kartsonas, 2009 BCCA 218, 93 B.C.L.R. (4th) 287, of interest because when the Court detected deficiencies in one of the two physician's affidavits submitted under s. 3 of the Patients Property Act it did not dismiss the application, but instead ordered an assessment under s. 5(1)(b). The chambers judge viewed this as support for the proposition that further evidence may be adduced if one or both of the required medical affidavits are deficient, and then considered the implications of this for the application before her:

[62] The application in this case takes this issue a step further. The Petitioner has filed only one medical affidavit which is deficient and no other medical evidence is available because Mr. Martin has not agreed to submit to any further assessments. She has also produced lay evidence attesting to Mr. Martin's memory and cognitive problems. The Patients Property Act does not specifically address this kind of situation. I view this as a legislative gap. Provided there is evidence of incompetence, and evidence that the person who is the subject of the application needs protection, there must be some way for the Court to ensure that adequate medical evidence is brought before it to determine the issue of capacity. As LaForest J. said in Re Eve, the courts will not readily assume that parens patriae jurisdiction has been removed by legislation where a necessity arises to protect a person who cannot protect himself.

[63] There is no question that compelling a person to submit to a medical examination is intrusive to personal autonomy and any order doing so would have to respect the values of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is an order that should be made in rare circumstances, where there is "proof of incompetence" and where there is a compelling need for protection. The need for protection may be based on evidence that the person is personally or financially vulnerable due to things such as dangerous or erratic behaviour or abuse by others. The exercise of parens patriae jurisdiction requires that any order made is in the best interests of the person requiring protection.

[33] The chambers judge next considered whether it would be appropriate to exercise her parens patriae jurisdiction to order medical examinations of Mr. Martin. She considered the evidentiary requirements, and found they were not met in this case:

[64] Re Eve is not instructive about what "proof of incompetence" means. In my view, there must be evidence which establishes that the person who is the subject of the application is prima facie incompetent. For the purpose of ordering a medical examination, this will be something less than the court being satisfied that the person is incapable of managing himself or his affairs. There must be some medical evidence. There may also be evidence from family, caregivers and close friends, which may provide important insight into the condition of the individual and any need for protection. I agree with the comments of Vickers J. in Batiuk #1 (at para. 35) that "proper assessments are multi-disciplinary in nature and they will include the observations of persons close to the individual concerned." This is consistent with the commentary in G. B. Robertson, Mental Disability and the Law in Canada, 2nd. Ed. at 27.

[65] In this case, I am not satisfied that the evidence is sufficient to establish that Mr. Martin is prima facie incompetent or that he is in need of protection. There is evidence that Mr. Martin has memory problems and some cognitive deficits. However, there is little evidence that he is incapable of managing his affairs, and there is conflicting evidence on his ability to make financial decisions. There is no evidence that Mrs. Martin has taken advantage of her husband in any way that requires this Court's protection.

[34] The judge was of the view Ms. Temoin's focus on Mr. Martin's testamentary capacity, rather than his capacity to manage his financial affairs, had complicated the case. It was her opinion these were not the same, and so the evidence about Mr. Martin's testamentary capacity was of little assistance. She described the tests for each as follows:

[68] In my opinion, these tests are not the same. Testamentary capacity is assessed according to a legal test tailored to the issues pertinent to making a will. The test was established long ago in Banks v Goodfellow (1870), LR 5 QB 549 (Eng QB) at 565:

It is essential to the exercise of such power that a testator shall understand the nature of the act and its effects; shall understand the extent of the property of which he is disposing; shall be able to comprehend and appreciate the claims to which he ought to give effect; and, with a view to the latter object, that no disorder of the mind shall poison his affections, pervert his sense of right, or prevent the exercise of his natural faculties – that no insane delusion shall influence his will in disposing of his property and bring about a disposal of it which, if the mind had been sound, would not have been made.

[69] There is a line of authority which establishes that the capacity to manage financial affairs is not the same as testamentary capacity. It is possible, depending on the circumstances, that an individual may be incapable of managing his affairs yet still be capable of making a will: see, for example, Canada Permanent Toronto General Trust Co. v Whitton (1965), 1965 CanLII 791 \(BC SC\), 51 WWR 484 (BCSC); Royal Trust Co. v Rampone, 1974 CanLII 1771 \(BC SC\), [1974] 4 WWR 735 (BCSC). Declarations of incapacity are generally questions of fact based on an individual's circumstances and medical opinions. It may be that the more complicated or complex the financial situation, the higher the level of cognition will be required to have the necessary capacity.

[35] The chambers judge then reviewed the evidence relevant to Mr. Martin's capacity to manage his financial affairs. She observed Dr. Schovanek had not conducted a full investigation of Mr. Martin's financial capacity. She found his opinion that Mr. Martin was "very likely" incapable of managing his affairs conditional and incomplete, since his focus had been testamentary capacity. She concluded the information in his report fell short of supporting his opinion that Mr. Martin required care and supervision for the protection of himself and his property.

[36] As to Ms. Temoin's evidence, the chambers judge accepted she sincerely believed Mrs. Martin was taking advantage of her father in securing changes to the disposition of his estate that were inconsistent with his earlier wishes. The judge observed, however, that this was not a case of a stranger preying on a person in need of protection.

[37] The judge gave considerable weight to the evidence of Ms. Collings and Ms. Collins that Mr. Martin had been able to engage in detailed discussions with respect to his estate plans. She observed they had spent considerable time with him and Mrs. Martin over several months, conducting a detailed review of his assets and engaging in extensive dealings about his assets and estate.

[38] She gave little weight to the evidence of the two lawyers, Ms. Milbrath and Ms. Hunter, since their testimony was directed solely to testamentary capacity, a matter she found irrelevant to a determination of capacity to manage financial affairs. She concluded:

[82] ... The most that I can take from their evidence is that it may be inconsistent with the notion that Mr. Martin is unable to make financial decisions and manage his financial affairs. The same applies to Dr. Schovanek's opinion that Mr. Martin lacks testamentary capacity. This evidence may or may not be consistent with the notion that Mr. Martin is incapable of managing his financial affairs. I do not consider it appropriate in the context of this application to assess any of these opinions regarding Mr. Martin's testamentary capacity.

[83] It is apparent to me that the basis for this application was ill conceived. In addition to the declarations that Mr. Martin is incapable of managing himself and his affairs, the Petition seeks a declaration that "any will, gift, grant, alienation, conveyance or transfer of property or other transaction" made by Mr. Martin after June 2, 2011 (the date of Dr. Schovanek's consultation report) is void as against the committee. Although Ms. Temoin is concerned about her father's current financial decisions, her primary focus has been on his new will and whether he had testamentary capacity to make it. To make an order requiring Mr. Martin to submit to a medical examination in these circumstances would serve an attempt to elicit evidence to bolster Ms. Temoin's view that her father lacks testamentary capacity. This is clearly not the purpose of any order that this Court could make under parens patriae jurisdiction in the context of an application under s. 3 of the Patients Property Act.
