

Innocent Lambs

I am not crying in my coffee (too early for beer) over the SCOTUS refusal to hear the Texas v Pennsylvania, et al. I am going to make a case that the election was stolen. It was stolen by technology. Before amplifying on that I must tell you that I do love technology and actually create web apps. Maybe that allows me to see and admit that technology needs to be corralled in our lives and society.

Our voting systems were not just changed for the sake of a pandemic, but were changed to allow for various methods of voter fraud. There was no need to mail out ballots. Almost every State has a secure method of absentee voting. Just mailing out ballots to households was fraught with the means that fostered fraudulent voting.

I have learned about the concept of fractional voting. At first I just didn't believe that the machine could be programmed to "weight" the votes. After some research I learned that it is true. A vote for one candidate may be weighted as 1.25 votes and the other candidate's vote have a weight of .75 votes. So much for "let every vote count"!

There is no reason to use technology for voting, or creating a new way to "count" ballots, we need paper ballots that are placed in locked boxes, sealed and opened and counted by election officials with observers present.

We have a nation that honors a sense of fairness and cringes at the abuse of the many by the few. We have experienced the power of the few to control our national dialogue, censor those that believe that someone was askew with the results of the Presidential vote, and attempt the keep votes from being reviewed or audited.

If Americans don't cry out for fairness and honesty I our voting the we will be like the innocent lambs about to be silenced.
