Tell me about the kind of accommodation you live in.

Karim: I live in a high-rise apartment with my parents. It has a joint living room-kitchen, two bedrooms, a bathroom, and a balcony. It's not a very big apartment, but it's just right for us.

James: I share an apartment with my roommate. We moved in about a year ago... To be frank, I don't like the apartment. It is too cramped and dingy. But we are planning to move out next year.

What do you like about living there?

Sergei: It's really comfortable. The living room is very cosy and I enjoy watching TV with my family in the evening. I also have my own room, so I am able to have some private time to myself.

What sort of accommodation would you most like to live in?

Wei Lin: If I could, I would buy a large, spacious house on the outskirts of the city, preferably with a garden... The air is fresher outside the city and it would be great to relax in a garden.

High-rise apartment: an apartment in a tall building.

Joint living room-kitchen: the living room and kitchen are one room.

Just right: perfect.

Roommate: someone that you live with (not family).

Cramped: not enough space.

Dingy: not enough light.

Move out: permanently leave your home.

Cosy: comfortable because a room is small and warm.

Spacious: has lots of space.

Outskirts: the outer parts of a city or town.
