

No Good War, or a Bad Peace — The World Has Run Out of Good News

Look around you.
Open a newspaper.
Turn on the television.
Scroll through your phone.

There is no longer good news anywhere. The world has become a theatre of pain. Ukraine still shakes. Gaza still cries. Sudan still bleeds. Haiti still pleads for breath. Myanmar still suffocates. Kidnappings in Nigeria....

And every day, the headlines grow darker. Wars, terrorism, kidnapping, unrest — these are the stories that now go viral. These are the stories we share, repost, retweet, and forward. Humanity has turned suffering into content.

And in the middle of all this noise, one truth refuses to die: There is no good war, or a bad peace. None. War is never noble. Peace is never shameful. Peace is never weak. Peace is never a mistake.

World leaders — Donald Trump, Vladimir Putin, Volodymyr Zelenskyy, Benjamin Netanyahu, leaders across the African Union — they hold the levers that can calm this storm. They can choose dialogue instead of dominance. They can shut down the pipelines that fund terrorism and violent extremist groups responsible for severe harm and human rights violations. They can open doors for negotiation instead of opening new fronts for conflict. They can decide that saving lives matters more than proving a point.

They can choose peace today.
