32nd Sunday in Ordinary Time – Deacon Jerome Bettencourt

God loves us. This is the truth which constitutes our very existence. More than this, God wants us to be fulfilled and live joyful lives on this earth. Our Father wants us one day live with Him for eternity in heaven. We are all called home by our Creator and given the means to get us there in the person of Jesus Christ. Drawing close to God in our relationship with Jesus gives us access to God's guidance in our lives helping us to navigate the hazards of this world and allows us to see God's Grace in every aspect of our earthly lives. The scriptures for this Sunday highlight the foolishness of waiting to respond to the greatest opportunity we will ever know.

The first reading for today's celebration is taken from the Book of Wisdom. This book, attributed to King Solomon, personifies wisdom as a woman and identifies this image with the Spirit of God. Wisdom is described here as the one who initiates humanity into the divine mysteries. In today's passage wisdom is described as "readily perceived" by all who seek her. She is not hidden and above our grasp, but "hastens to make herself known" to us. Whoever seeks wisdom will not be disappointed and will find themselves free from care. This all begs the question, why would anyone hesitate in seeking wisdom? If you knew that the solution to your biggest problem was at your doorstep, why would you wait in opening the door? Whatever rationalizations we have constructed to hold us back from accepting this gift fully into our lives, we need to rise above them and grasp the truth that will set us free.

In Paul's first letter to the Thessalonians, the apostle reassures the Thessalonians that those who have died before the second coming of Christ will not be lost. In the first hundred years of Christianity, it was commonly believed that the second coming of Jesus and the end of the world would occur very soon. Early Christians believed that Jesus was coming back in their lifetimes. Therefore, it was upsetting when one of them died before Jesus' return. Paul teaches that the those who die while keeping vigil for the coming of Christ are not forgotten. The apostle is teaching us that even death cannot extinguish our hope for salvation in Jesus Christ. The death of a loved one, or facing our own eminent demise, is not required for us enjoy this gift from God, so why is it that many wait until such moments to embrace God's loving offer of friendship? As Paul notes, those who wait grieve because they have no hope. In a parable from Matthew's Gospel, Jesus teaches the disciples that they should stay awake because they do not know the day nor the hour of the apocalypse. This parable is part of Jesus's teachings about the end of time and the judgment of the world. This parable teaches us that the relationship we have with Christ requires maintenance. It is not enough to accept that God exists and acknowledge the role of Jesus in our personal salvation. Like all relationships, we must be attentive. Waiting to embrace God's offer of Grace in the Holy Spirit is an act of foolishness and could result in missing out on the opportunity of our lifetime. It may seem like life lived in obedience with the will of God is constraining. Many have fallen victim to the delusion that the Christian life lacks a sense of fun and is therefore boring. Being a Christian does not stop you from enjoying life, instead, it teaches you to find enjoyment in that which enhances your health and contributes to the well-being of others. So, if this life with God is as beneficial as it seems, and if God has surrounded us with all the tools to find and embrace his loving grace, why wait?
