To whom it may concern:

I have employed Marc-Anthoni Paul since January 1, 2015 as a contractor to renovate a house on the Tennessee River. Throughout the duration of this project he has demonstrated a remarkably strong work ethic, the ability to solve complex challenges, and a tremendous gift for organization. In three months of working in freezing temperatures with sheet rock dust everywhere I have never once heard him complain or engage in any form of conflict with his co-workers. In fact, his skills at conflict resolution and his natural abilities with interpersonal relationships were the key element to keeping the project going smoothly while keeping everyone happy.

While Marc-Anthoni is no stranger to intense physical work I would recommend that his best use would be in an area where his keen intellect and people skills are put to use. He is courteous, follows instruction without fail, and is not afraid to ask for the opinions of his management team when things take an unexpected detour. My only disappointment is that Marc-Anthoni will not agree to sell his Airstream and move here on a permanent basis. He is the kind of employee that every company would love to have and I intend to utilize his skills and service the next time he has room for me in his schedule. In sum, Marc-Anthoni Paul is really that good and will reflect very well on your decision to hire him for your program.

If you would like any more information on Marc-Anthoni Paul, you can telephone my project manager, Hugh D. Miller, at (256) 390-7974.

Sincerely
