

Lilli And The Peanut Butter & Jelly Elephant

A tiny and pretty little girl name Lilli is sitting quietly in the kitchen all by herself when an elephant comes up to the window from outside. Her eyes open wide, as the huge animal peeks his big head inside. Lilli admires animals of all shapes and sizes, so whether it was a cat, dog, horse or elephant, she didn't care, cause she wasn't scared.

Hi elephant! Come on in, she said happily as she opened the kitchen door. The elephant waddled in slowly but was so heavy he dented the floor. Woah, Lilli gasped. Hey elephant. Have a seat, get off your feet. I'm having a sandwich. Peanut butter and jelly. You must be hungry. It's way past lunch time already. The elephant looked at Lilli with his blue eyes and flapped his ears up and down. Are you saying yes? Lilli gasped and laughed. Then he stomped his big foot loudly and opened his mouth proudly.

Ok ok, she said. Geez. Don't break the house please. Or injure your knees. Here take my sandwich, I'll make another. Even though I don't make them as good as my mother. The elephant scooped up the sandwich with his huge trunk and popped it in his mouth with one big bite. Actually no bite. He just swallowed it all. It was quite a sight. Lilli yelled out.
That - was - amazing!

The elephant grabbed his glass of milk and gulped it down. Then he burped loudly. And then burped again! Silly elephant, Lilli said as she giggled. The elephant's ears wiggled. Silly, funny, crazy peanut butter elephant. You're my new best friend. Let's hide you in my room. But you definitely won't fit in my bed. Maybe the garage instead. I'll feed you peanut butter every day. What do you say? But if my parents catch you, they'll make you pay rent. Especially when they see the floor you bent.
