

ALUMINATE ALLEY

Aluminate Alley is located in the charming Old Town Fort Collins, branching off from the Old Firehouse Alley system. This space will be transformed into a pocket park, offering abundant bicycle parking for the numerous downtown events. The park's design highlights the link between the cycling community and the breweries that have made Fort Collins famous. Sustainability plays a significant role in breweries, with aluminum being a key recycled material. Aluminate Alley demonstrates the diverse ways aluminum can be repurposed from beverage cans into benches, solar light fixtures, and even bicycles.

