MOTHERS DAY

No one could ever replace a mother's love. It is one of the clearest pictures of God's unconditional care that we will ever experience. A mother's love is special because she sees us through a lens unlike anyone else.

Growing up, my mom used to tell me I looked like Tom Cruise. Obviously, I don't. But if I'm honest, hearing that from her did boost my self-esteem when the world around me sometimes told me otherwise.

Has your mom ever told you something growing up that seemed completely ridiculous later in life, yet you believed it with all your heart?

"You're the fastest kid in the world."

"Your eyes shine brighter than the sun."

As far-fetched and silly as those comments may seem now, the truth is—we believed her. Why? Because she was our mom. And at that age, moms didn't lie, no matter what anyone else said.

As we grow older, we begin to realize our mothers are not perfect. No one is. Sometimes they nag us, repeat themselves, and we roll our eyes at their comments. We start noticing their flaws and shortcomings. Yet through it all, their love for us remains steadfast.

Maybe there was a season where you stopped taking her advice seriously. Maybe you talked back, ignored her calls, or kept your distance. Or maybe now, with time and maturity, you appreciate the sacrifices she made. You call more often. You listen more carefully. You honor and respect her in ways you didn't before.

Some are now caring for their aging mothers, fulfilling the commandment to honor their father and mother.

Others would give anything just to hear their mother's voice one more time. All they have left now are memories, photographs, and the lessons she passed down.

Whatever your story may be, we all share one thing in common—we are all someone's child.

And maybe your story wasn't filled with warmth and tenderness. Maybe your relationship with your mother wasn't everything you hoped it would be. Maybe you longed for a kind of love you never fully received.

Or maybe your mother cuddled you in, read stories, played dinosaurs or princesses, gave you bubble baths and listened to your worries.

Motherhood often happens quietly, the quiet prayers, the sacrifices no one notices, the tears, the stress, the constant pouring out of themselves.

Yet God sees it all.

You might feel exhausted, overlooked, or inadequate but scripture often reminds us that God honors faithfulness over perfection.

So today we honor mothers—not because they are perfect, but because they chose to love us the best way they knew how. Unconditionally. Sacrificially. Fiercely.

And for that, we should be everlastingly grateful.
