

August 2022 Market Report

Washington Metro

Washington Metro Market Key Findings

Homes Taking Longer to Sell in the Washington Area

Home sales activity continues to slow in the Washington metro area, with buyers holding back and homes remaining on the market longer. In August, there was a total of 5,323 home sales across the region, a 25.3% decline from last August, and 16.1% lower than 2019 levels. Pending sales also continue to decline, which indicates that fall sales will be lower than last year.

After increasing in July, the number of active listings declined in August with fewer sellers listing their properties. The number of new listings in the Washington area was down 26.0% compared to last year, the sixth consecutive month of year-over-year declines in new listings.

There is just 1.22 months of supply, which means the Washington area is still a seller's market. However, buyers have more leverage on price with less competition in the market.

While price growth has moderated, prices are still on the rise in most local markets in the Washington area. The regionwide median price was up 3.4% compared to a year ago.

Market Outlook

The frenetic pace of the housing market over the past two years was not sustainable. Cooler conditions in the Washington area housing market should be a welcome relief for prospective home buyers who will find more options, less competition, and more opportunities for negotiating with sellers. Sellers who price their properties to reflect today's market, and not last year's market, will still find eager buyers.

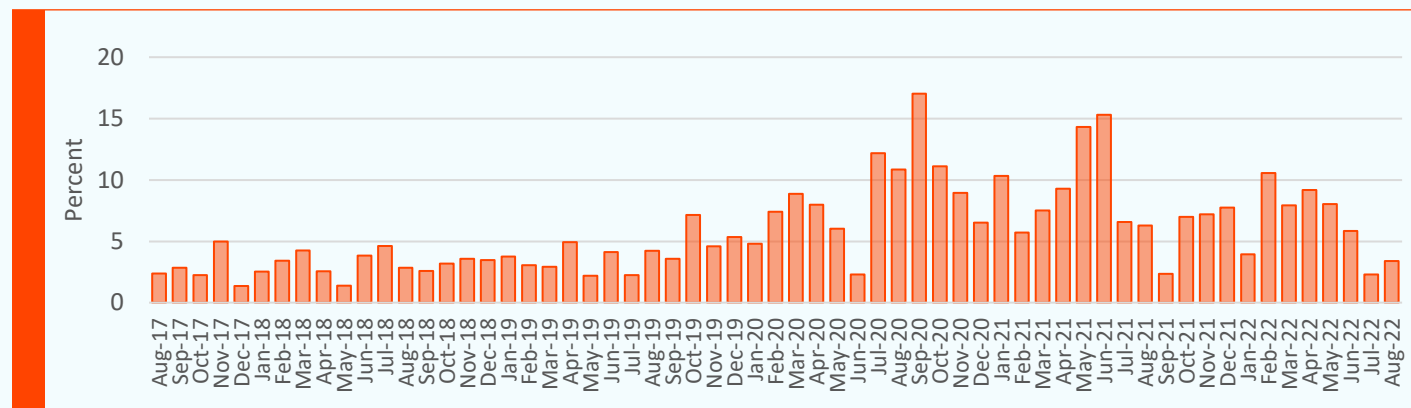

Closed Sales Year-Over-Year Change

Home sales activity continues to slow throughout the Washington region. In August, there were 5,323 home sales in the Washington metro area, which is a decline of 25.3% compared to last August. Sales fell 2.4% between July and August which is a slightly lower-than-typical monthly dip. Sales are down year-over-year across all housing types, with the biggest decline among townhomes.

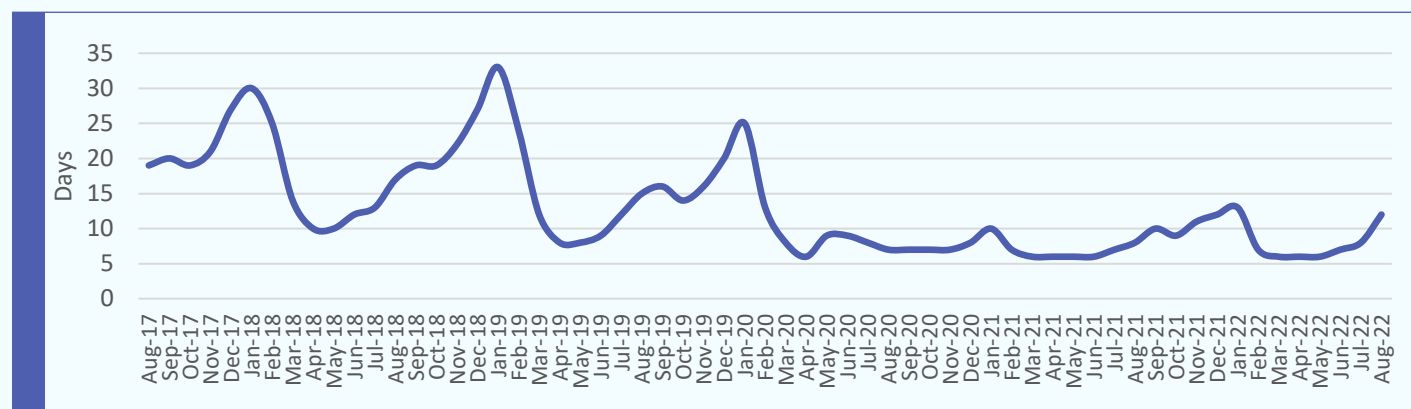

Median Sales Price Year-Over-Year Change

Prices continue to rise in the Washington area. In August, the median sales price was $555,000, which is up 3.4% compared to a year ago. Prices of single-family detached homes rose the most quickly in August (+5.8%), followed by townhomes (4.6%). Condo prices were flat in the region compared to a year ago.

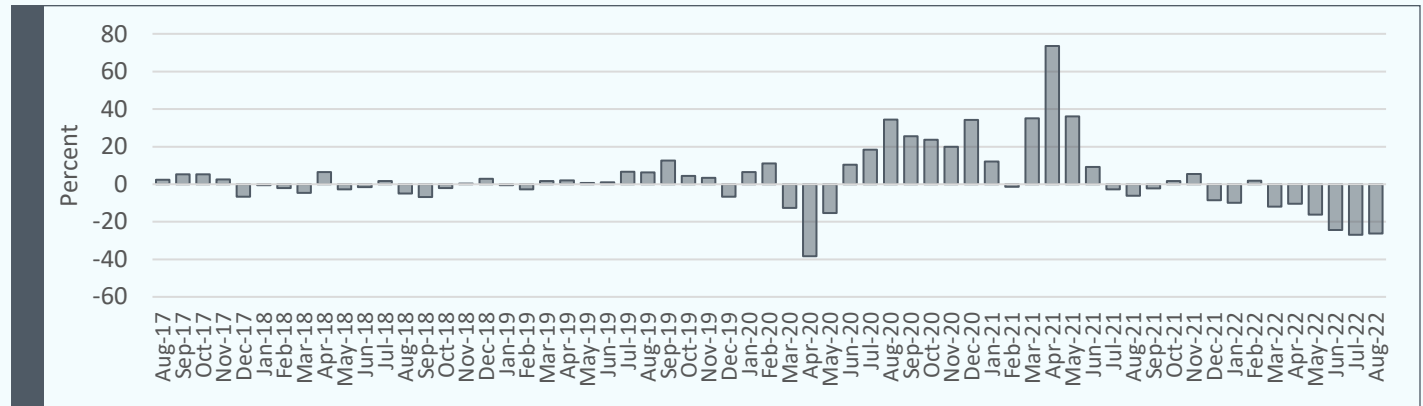

Median Days on Market

Homes are staying on the market longer in the Washington region. The median days on market was 12 in August, which is a 4 day increase from a year ago. This is the largest year-over-year increase in this metric since December 2021. The median days on market in the region is still significantly below where it was prior to the pandemic.

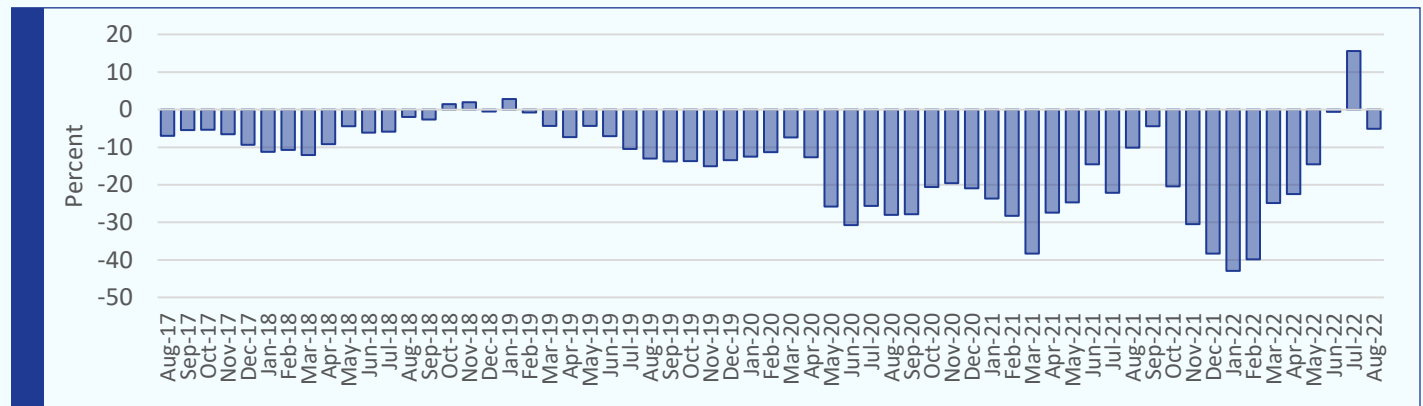

New Pending Sales Year-Over-Year Change

New pending sales declined by 26.3% in August, which is a bigger year-over-year drop in pending sales activity than in the other major metro areas in the Mid-Atlantic. Pending sales of single-family detached homes fell by 28.6% while townhome pending sales plummeted by 30.1%. The number of pending condo sales was off by 17.6% compared to a year ago.

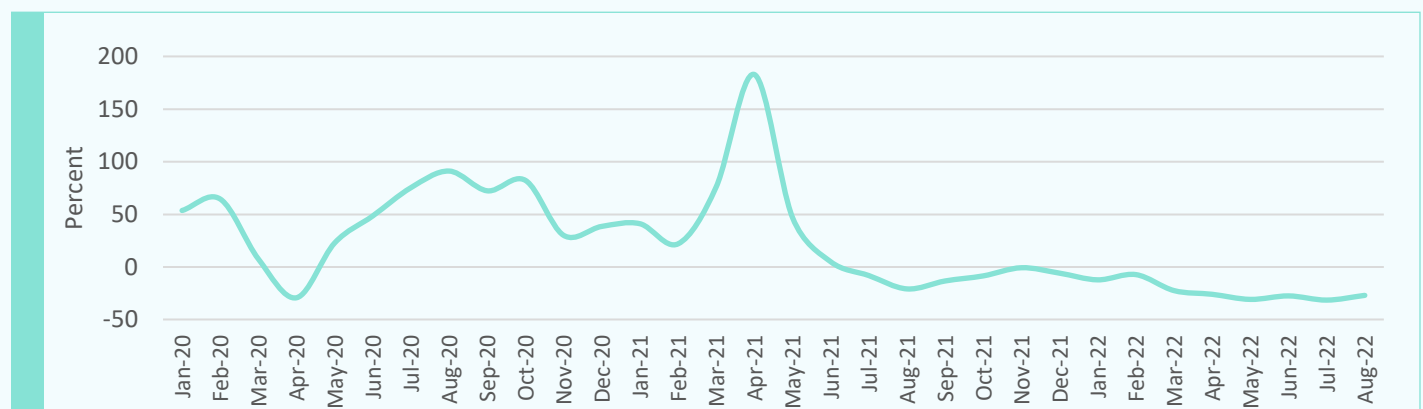

Active Listings Year-Over-Year Change

After spiking in July, the number of active listings at the end of August declined compared to a year ago. There were 7,285 total active listings at the end of the month, which is 5.1% compared to last August. Inventory fell 10.1% between July and August.

Showings Year-Over-Year Change

Showing activity continued to fall in the Washington area. In August, there were 107,089 showings regionwide, which is down 27.0% compared to a year ago. Showings dipped 4.2% between July and August.

Local Markets

Home sales fell across the Washington area, with the biggest year-over-year drops in Falls Church City (-35.3%) and Loudoun County, VA (-34.1%). New pending sales also fell compared to a year ago, which indicates that closed sales activity will continue to track below last year's levels during the fall.

Inventory increased overall in the Washington area in August. In close-in suburbs, supply declined the most compared to last year. However, there were notable exceptions where inventory expanded—Loudoun County, VA (+27.7%), Prince George's County, MD (+19.7%), and Washington, DC (+4.3%).

Even as buyer activity has slowed, low inventory has led to continued price growth throughout most of the Washington area. The median price rose most quickly in the suburban markets of Falls Church City (+9.9%), Loudoun County, VA (+7.3%), and Frederick County, MD (+6.4%). Median sales prices dipped in Washington, DC and Alexandria City, likely due to the change in the composition of home sales.

Supply is Still Low in the Region

Inventory is still very low across the Washington area. In August, there was just 1.22 months of supply regionwide. In some markets, there is less than a month's supply. Inventory is greatest in the city, where there is 2.07 months of supply.

Buyers may face less competition, but it is still a seller's market throughout most of the Washington metro area.
