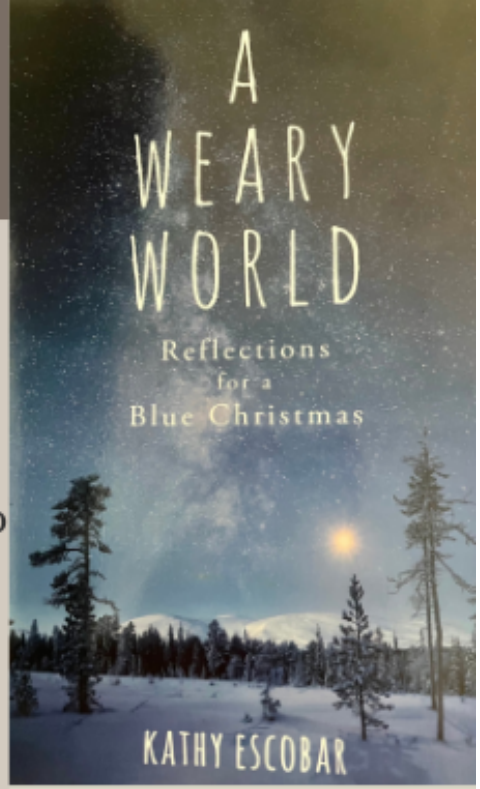
A WEARY WORLD: Week One
Tuesday & Wednesday



Tuesday: The Unimportant People

In this entry we are reminded that too many people are working to become more like God, but forget that God's revelation in the Christmas story is we need to be more human. When we face struggles our mind attempts to trick us into believing that we do not belong. That nobody cares or has the time to listen about what is going on in our life. The Christmas story reminds us that the "unimportant people" were at the center of it all. When you are struggling and facing doubt, remember this and never forget so many are truly in your corner.

Wednesday: Weary

Kathy Escobar explains the importance of self-care and taking the necessary steps to stay in your best mindset. However, she acknowledges the appropriate resources aren't always available instantly and it is ok to honor the fact you are simply trying to keep your head above water for the day. Even by blocking out the chaos surrounding us in the world, our daily realities can cause us to be weary. Financial issues, addiction, mental illness, family dysfunction, and plenty more are creating grief for millions of people a day. She uses the quote from Ruth Hogan, "The air was thick with stories" to raise awareness that many are facing issues we may not know about. Together we are stronger. Be the difference this holiday season!

"Parents, unwelcomed places they tried to find rest and shelter. A wailing baby born to nobodies with animals bleating all around. Lowly shepard kids the first to know...." Where are all the important people?
