

BREAKING NEWS

PHD PRODUCTS PUBLICLY SHAMED BY NM CANNACRITIC

What seemed like the end of a rivalry in the cannabis community escalated to an epic call out by the NM CannaCritic against Pharmicated (PhD); a company based out of Oklahoma. According to NMCC, after much due diligence, it has been determined that PhD is “falsely representing their ‘distillate-based’ Vape products, as ‘live’, or ‘cured’ resin”. In addition to conducting interviews of current and former staff members of PhD, the CannaCritic was able to uncover based on the labels alone, that the producer listed on all of the Pharmicated’s products does not produce live resin and has stated on the record they have “only provided PhD with Distillate and BHO(butane hash oil)” New Mexicans have long taken offense to out-of-state brands setting up a business here. “Give us a chance. We need jobs too”, a local budtender said. PhD has previously indicated they believe NM CannaCritic has some sort of vendetta against them. They claim he was responsible for their servers being hacked several months ago, but both employees have refuted that claim and stated it was never true. One of the employees also stated the owner of Pharmicated was responsible for hacking an Instagram page belonging to the CannaCritic. The FBI has classified this cyber-hacking investigation as “ongoing”. Pharmicated has not been reached for a comment on these particular accusations.

LIFT EQUATION RESPONDS TO BREACH OF CONTRACT LAWSUIT

NICHOLAS AQUILINO, CEO OF LIFT EQUATION, LLC FILED A LAST MINUTE RESPONSE TO THE BREACH OF CONTRACT CASE WHICH WAS BROUGHT AGAINST HIM BY THE NM CANNACRITIC.

According to the signed contract between the two parties, Lift Equation is in fact 100% responsible for the wages owed to NM CannaCritic. It is unknown at this time what type of defense Mr. Acquilino is attempting to create for trial.

Do the citizens of New Mexico approve of their tax dollars being wasted as a result of one’s over inflated ego and refusal to honor contracts? “I think it’s a total waste of time”, one cannabis consumer says. “Companies like Lift are giving New Mexico a bad name by wasting our tax dollars on litigious nonsense.”

A local dispensary owner who sells Cactus Confections, and therefore wishes to remain anonymous says “contracts are contracts. Period.”

THE ARRIVAL OF COOKIES, NEW MEXICO

Ready or not, New Mexico...
Cookies is headed this way!

Before the holidays New Mexicans should expect to see the grand opening of one of the most notorious brands in cannabis: Cookies. They are bringing jobs, products, and opportunities to New Mexico that will undoubtedly add positive change to the industry.

Ignore the conspiracies and come see for yourself...