WHAT IS CBD?

Cannabidiol (CBD), is a phytocannabinoid found in agricultural hemp. This phytocannabinoid has endless potential and has been recognized for its benefits on human and animal health, with the capability of affecting nearly every biological process. CBD is non-psychoactive, meaning it does not have the psychological affects that are associated with other substances of the same plant group. Using CBD does not result in a feeling of euphoria, and has an impressive safety profile. Come see what CBD can do for you today!

HOW DOES CBD WORK?

CBD is one of over 80 chemical compounds known as cannabinoids. Cannabinoids are agonists that bind to special receptors in your cells known as cannabinoid receptors. Some of these receptors are heavily concentrated in the central nervous system while others are found in almost every organ. Cannabinoid receptors are found in the digestive tract, skin and even reproductive organs.

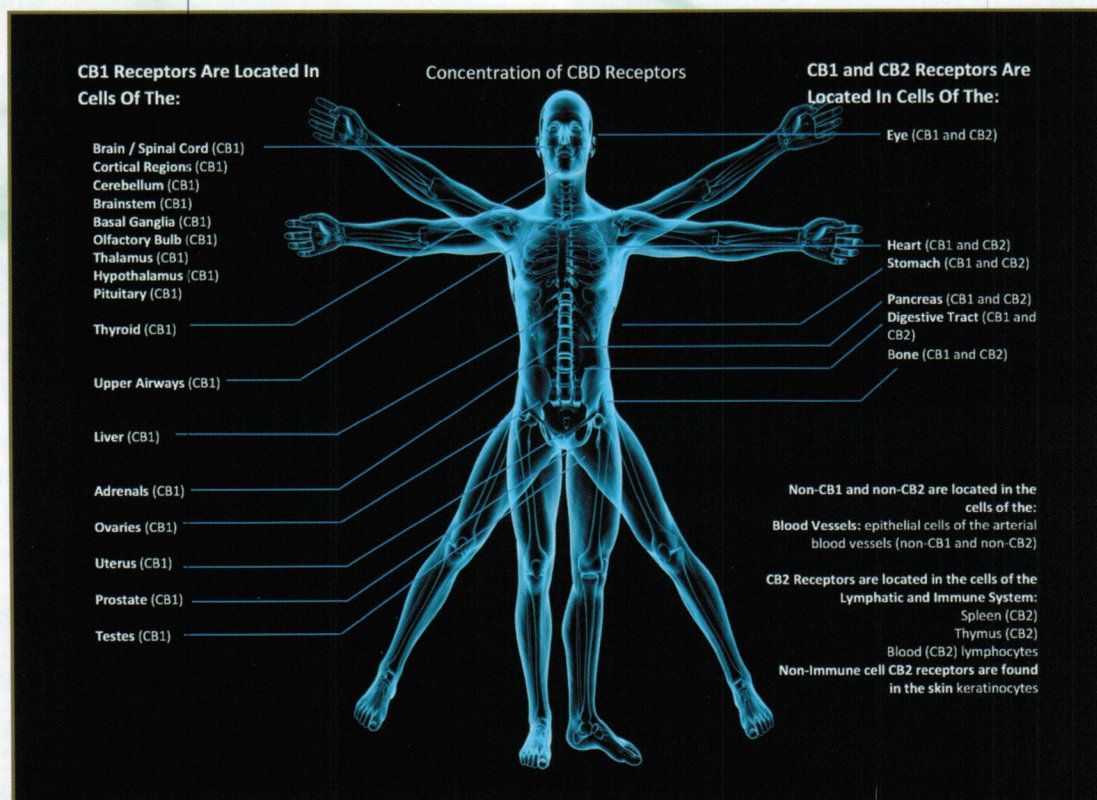

By taking CBD you are taking the agonists that interacts with cannabinoid receptors that make your body react. Together, these cell receptors make up a larger endocannabinoid system (ECS).

THE ENDOCANNABINOID SYSTEM

The ECS is a vast network of cell receptor proteins with many functions. The ECS is arguably the greatest neurotransmitter system in the body. It has the potential to effect the following and much more:

- Appetite
- Bone Development
- Immune Function
- Memory
- Mood
- Motor Control
- Pain Perception
- Sleep
- Reproduction

The ECS or endocannabinoid system has four primary functions which include; neuroprotection, stress recovery, immune balance and homeostatic regulation. CBD is able to interact with cells in our bodies because the molecule has a similar composition to a chemical that our body produces naturally called endocannabinoids. Which studies have proven can help ease stress, decrease inflammation, reduce anxiety and increase overall well-being.
