To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing to wholeheartedly recommend Fentanyl Fathers as a powerful and transformative presentation for high schools and community organizations. We recently hosted them for an assembly at Reeths-Puffer High School, and it was, without question, one of the most impactful assemblies we have ever had.

The presentation focused on the very real and growing threat of fentanyl—a topic that can be difficult to approach with students, but one that this group handled with compassion, authenticity, and clarity. While our school is not currently facing a fentanyl crisis, we know this issue is not confined to headlines or other communities. Fentanyl is now the leading cause of death for Americans aged 18-45, and our responsibility as educators is to prepare our students—not just academically, but in the life choices they will face beyond our walls.

What makes Fentanyl Fathers stand out is that they do more than provide statistics or scare tactics. They open up space for real conversations. Each presenter has lost a child to Fentalyl. They bring humanity to the issue. Our students were visibly moved, deeply engaged, and have continued to reflect on the assembly beyond the event—a high level of sustained impact for a single event.

As our students prepare to head off to college, jobs, and a world that includes access to substances with deadly consequences, this kind of programming is not just relevant—it's essential. We do not need to wait for tragedy to strike before we act.

I strongly encourage any school or organization looking to educate and protect their students to bring in Fentanyl Fathers. This assembly could quite literally save lives.

Please feel free to reach out if you would like to discuss our experience further.

Sincerely,

Jennifer Anderson
