7. Pinewood Country Club Sold

Not many years after Pinewood Country Club celebrated its 50th anniversary in Slidell, the club hit on hard financial times that had the longtime club and golf course heading for bankruptcy. The city of Slidell stepped in to consider purchasing the land for $900,000, but council members initially rejected the idea in January of 2017. Two months later they reversed that vote and agreed to spend the money out of supplemental budget funds. However, a Slidell resident and a local businessman stepped in and saved Pinewood when they announced they were buying the entire layout. Chris Smith invested his retirement money to buy the golf course, then businessman Louis Ochoa agreed to purchase the rest of the property that included the club, pool and tennis courts. Together, Smith and Ochoa combined resources to purchase all of Pinewood and save it since their lenders were close to repossessing it all. Speculation at that time is that the bank would likely have sold the land to a real estate developer with the possibility of homes being built there.

Chris Smith is all smiles in front of Pinewood Country Club after the Board of Directors voted to accept the offer from him, and restaurant manager Louis Ochoa, to purchase the golf course and keep the facility operating.
