

1 "Faith and Obedience"

6 "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." Matt. xix. 17.

7 LET a plain man read the Gospels with a serious and humble mind, and as in God's 8 presence, and I suppose he would be in no perplexity at all about the meaning of these 9 words. They are clear as the day at first reading, and the rest of our Saviour's teaching 10 does but corroborate their obvious meaning. I conceive that if such a man, after reading 11 them and the other similar passages which occur in the Gospels, were told that he had 12 not mastered the sense of them, and that in matter of fact to attempt to enter into life by 13 keeping the commandments, to attempt to keep the commandments in order to enter 14 into life, were suspicious and dangerous modes of expression, and that the use of them 15 showed an ignorance of the real spirit of Christ's doctrine, he would in despair say, 16 "Then truly Scripture is not a book for the multitude, but for those only who have 17 educated and refined understandings, so as to see things in a sense different from their 18 obvious meaning."

19 Or, again, supposing one, who disbelieved our Lord's divinity, fell in with persons who 20 did thus consider that to keep the commandments by way of entering into life, was a 21 sign of spiritual blindness in a man, not to say of pride and reprobation; do you suppose 22 there would be any possibility of their silencing him as regards his own particular 23 heresy, with Scripture proofs of the sacred truth which he denied? For can the doctrine 24 that Christ is God, be more clearly enunciated than the precept, that, to enter into life, 25 we must keep the commandments? and is it not the way to make men think that 26 Scripture has no definite meaning at all, and that each man may fairly put his own sense 27 upon it, when they see our Lord's plain directions thus explained away?

28 The occasion of this unreal interpretation of Scripture, which, in fact, does exist among 29 us to a great extent, is, that St. Paul, in some passages of his Epistles, teaches us that 30 we are accepted and saved by faith; and it is argued that, since he wrote under the 31 guidance of the promised Spirit, his is the true Gospel mode of Speech, and that the 32 language of Christ, the Eternal Word of God, must be drawn aside, however violently, 33 into that certain meaning which is assumed as the only true sense of St. Paul. How our 34 Divine Master's words are explained away, what ingenious refinements are used to 35 deprive us of the plain and solemn sense which they bear on their very front, it profits 36 not here to inquire; still no one, it may be presumed, can deny, that, whether rightly or 37 wrongly, they are turned aside in a very unexpected way, unless rather they are put out 38 of sight altogether, and forgotten, as if superseded by the Apostolic Epistles. Doubtless 39 those Epistles are inspired by the Holy Spirit: but He was sent from Christ to glorify and 40 illuminate the words of Christ. The two heavenly witnesses cannot speak diversely; faith 41 will listen to them both. Surely our duty is, neither to resist the One nor the Other; but 42 humbly to consider whether there is not some one substantial doctrine which they teach 43 in common; and that with God's blessing I will now attempt to do.

44 How are we sinners to be accepted by Almighty God? Doubtless the sacrifice of Christ 45 on the cross is the meritorious cause of our justification, and His Church is the ordained 46 instrument of conveying it to us. But our present question relates to another subject, 47 to our own part in appropriating it; and here I say Scripture makes two answers, saying 48 sometimes "Believe, and you shall be saved," and sometimes "Keep the 49 commandments, and you shall be saved." Let us consider whether these two modes of 50 speech are not reconcilable with each other.

51 What is meant by faith? it is to feel in good earnest that we are creatures of God; it is a 52 practical perception of the unseen world; it is to understand that this world is not enough 53 for our happiness, to look beyond it on towards God, to realize His presence, to wait 54 upon Him, to endeavour to learn and to do His will, and to seek our good from Him. It is 55 not a mere temporary strong act or impetuous feeling of the mind, an impression or a 56 view coming upon it, but it is a habit, a state of mind, lasting and consistent. To have 57 faith in God is to surrender one's-self to God, humbly to put one's interests, or to wish to 58 be allowed to put them into His hands who is the Sovereign Giver of all good.

59 Now, again, let me ask, what is obedience? it is the obvious mode, suggested by 60 nature, of a creature's conducting himself in God's sight, who fears Him as his Maker, 61 and knows that, as a sinner, he has especial cause for fearing him. Under such 62 circumstances he "will do what he can" to please Him, as the woman whom our Lord 63 commended. He will look every way to see how it is possible to approve himself to Him, 64 and will rejoice to find any service which may stand as a sort of proof that He is in 65 earnest. And he will find nothing better as an offering, or as an evidence, than 66 obedience to that Holy Law, which conscience tells him has been given us by God 67 Himself; that is, he will be diligent in doing all his duty as far as he knows it and can do 68 it.—Thus, as is evident, the two states of mind are altogether one and the same: it is 69 quite indifferent whether we say a man seeks God in faith, or say he seeks Him by 70 obedience; and whereas Almighty God has graciously declared He will receive and 71 bless all that seek Him, it is quite indifferent whether we say, He accepts those 72 who believe, or those who obey. To believe is to look beyond this world to God, and to 73 obey is to look beyond this world to God; to believe is of the heart, and to obey is of the 74 heart; to believe is not a solitary act, but a consistent habit of trust; and to obey is not a 75 solitary act, but a consistent habit of doing our duty in all things. I do not say that faith 76 and obedience do not stand for separate ideas in our minds, but they stand for nothing 77 more; they are not divided one from the other in fact. They are but one thing viewed 78 differently.

79 If it be said that a man may keep from sin and do good without thinking of God, and 80 therefore without being religious or having faith; this is true, but nothing to the purpose.
81 It is, alas! too true that men often do what is in itself right, not from the thought of God, 82 but for some purpose of this world; and all of us have our best doings sullied by the 83 intrusion of bad thoughts and motives. But all this, I say, is nothing to our present

84 purpose; for if a man does right, not for religion's sake but the world's sake, though he 85 happens to be doing right, that is, to perform outwardly good actions, this is in no 86 sense obedience, which is of the heart. And it was obedience, not mere outward good 87 conduct, which I said belonged to the same temper of mind as faith. And I repeat it, for 88 by obedience is meant obedience, not to the world, but to God—and habitually to obey 89 God, is to be constant in looking on to God—and to look on to Almighty God, is to have 90 faith; so that to "live by faith," or "walk by faith," (according to the Scripture phrases), 91 that is, to have a habit of faith, and to be obedient, are one and the same general 92 character of mind;—viewed as sitting at Jesus' feet, it is called faith; viewed as running 93 to do His will, it is called obedience.

94 If, again, it be said that a man may be obedient and yet proud of being so, that is,
95 obedient, without having faith, I would maintain, on the other hand, that in matter of fact 96 a man is proud, or (what is sometimes called) self-righteous, not when obedient, but in 97 proportion to his disobedience. To be proud is to rest on one's-self, which they are most 98 chargeable with who do least; but a really obedient mind is necessarily dissatisfied with 99 itself, and looks out of itself for help, from understanding the greatness of its task; in 100 other words, in proportion as a man obeys, is he driven to faith, in order to learn the 101 remedy of the imperfections of his obedience.

102 All this is clear and obvious to every thinking man; and this view of the subject was 103 surely present to the minds of the inspired writers of Scripture—for this reason, because 104 they use the two words, faith and obedience, indiscriminately, sometimes declaring we 105 shall be accepted, saved, by believing, sometimes by doing our duty. And they so 106 interchange these two conditions of God's favour, so quickly pass to and fro from the 107 one view to the other, as to show that in truth the two do not differ, except in idea. If 108 these apparently two conditions were merely connected, not substantially one, surely 109 the inspired writers would compare them one with the other—surely they would be 110 consistent in appropriating distinct offices to each. But, in very truth, from the beginning 111 to the end of Scripture, the one voice of inspiration consistently maintains, not an 112 uniform contrast between faith and obedience, but this onedoctrine, that the only way of 113 salvation open to us is the surrender of ourselves to our Maker in all things—supreme 114 devotion, resignation of our will, the turning with all our heart to God; and this state of 115 mind is ascribed in Scripture sometimes to the believing, sometimes to the obedient, 116 according to the particular passage; and it is no matter to which it is ascribed.

117 Now, I will cite some passages from Scripture in proof of what I have said. The Psalmist 118 says, "Lord, who shall abide in Thy tabernacle? who I shall dwell in Thy holy hill? He 119 that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart." 120 "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity 121 nor sworn deceitfully." [Ps. xv. 1, 2; xxiv. 4.] Here obedience is described as securing a 122 man's salvation. But, in another Psalm, we read, "How great is Thy goodness which 123 Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee; which Thou hast wrought for them that trust in 124 Thee!" [Ps. xxxi. 19; xxxiv. 12-14, 18, 22.] Here, trust or faith is the condition of God's 125 favour. Again, in other Psalms, first, "What man is he that desireth life? Keep thy tongue 126 from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile. Depart from evil and do good, seek peace

127 and pursue it." ... Next, it is said, "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, 128 and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit." Lastly, "None of them that trust in Him shall 129 be desolate." Here, obedience, repentance, and faith, are successively mentioned as 130 the means of obtaining God's favour; and why all of them, but because they are all 131 names for one and the same substantial character, only viewed on different sides of it, 132 that one character of mind which is pleasing and acceptable to Almighty God? Again, 133 the prophet Isaiah says, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on 134 Thee, because he trusteth in Thee." [Isaiah xxvi. 2, 3.] Yet, in the preceding verse he 135 had proclaimed, "Open ye the gates (of the heavenly city) that the righteous nation, 136 which keepeth the Truth, may enter in." In like manner Solomon says, "By mercy and 137 truth iniquity is purged:" Daniel, that "mercy to the poor" is a "breaking off of sin," and 138 "an healing of error:" Nehemiah prays God to "remember him," and "not wipe out 139 his good deeds for the House of his God;" yet Habakkuk says, the "just shall live by 140 his faith." [Prov. xvi. 6. Dan. iv. 27. Neh. xiii. 14. Hab. ii. 4.]

141 What honour our Saviour put on faith I need hardly remind you. He blessed Peter's 142 confession, and, in prospect, those who, though they saw Him not on earth, as Thomas, 143 yet believe; and in His miracles of mercy, faith was the condition He exacted for the 144 exertion of His powers of healing and restoration. On one occasion He says, "All 145 things are possible to him that believeth." [Mark ix. 23.] Yet, afterwards, in His solemn 146 account of the last judgment, He tells us that it is obedience to His will which will then 147 receive His blessing, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My 148 brethren, ye have done it unto Me." [Matt. xxv. 40.] Again, the Angel said to Cornelius, 149 "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God;" and Cornelius is 150 described as "a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave 151 much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway." [Acts x. 2.] Yet it is in the very 152 same {85} Book of Acts that we read St. Paul's words, "Believe, and thou shalt be 153 saved." [Acts xvi. 31.] The Epistles afford us still more striking instances of the intimate 154 association existing in the Apostle's thoughts between believing and obeying, as though 155 exhibitions of one and the same spiritual character of mind. For instance, he says 156 Abraham was accepted (not by ceremonial observances, but) by faith, yet St. James 157 says he was accepted by works of obedience. The meaning is clear, that Abraham 158 found favour in God's sight, because he gave himself up to Him: this is faith or 159 obedience, whichever we please to call it. No matter whether we say, Abraham was 160 favoured because his faith embraced God's promises, or because his obedience 161 cherished God's commands, for God's commands are promises, and His promises 162 commands to a heart devoted to Him; so that, as there is no substantial difference 163 between command and promise, so there is likewise none between obedience and 164 faith. Perhaps it is scarcely correct even to say that faith comes first and obedience 165 follows as an inseparable second step, and that faith, as being the first step, is 166 accepted. For not a single act of faith can be named but what has in it the nature of 167 obedience, that is, implies the making an effort and a consequent victory. What is the 168 faith which earns Baptism—the very faith which appropriates the free gift of grace—but 169 an acquiescence of the reason in the Gospel Mysteries? Even the thief upon the Cross 170 had (it would seem) to rule his reason, to struggle against sight, and to bring under pride 171 and obstinacy, {86} when he turned to Him as his Saviour, who seemed to mortal eyes

172 only his fellow-sufferer. A mere confession or prayer, which might not be really an act of 173 obedience in us, might be such in him. On the other hand, faith does not cease with the 174 first act, but continues. It works with obedience. In proportion as a man believes, so he 175 obeys; they come together, and grow together, and last through life. Neither are perfect; 176 both are on the same level of imperfection; they keep pace with each other; in 177 proportion to the imperfection of one, so is the imperfection of the other; and, as the one 178 advances, so does the other also.

179 And now I have described the temper of mind which has, in every age, been acceptable 180 to Almighty God, in its two aspects of faith and obedience. In every age "the righteous 181 shall live by faith." And it is remarkable that these words of the prophet Habakkuk, which 182 St. Paul quotes three several times, to show the identity of true religion under all 183 dispensations, do also represent it under these very two characteristics, Righteousness 184 and Faith.

185 Before closing the subject, however, it may be necessary, in a few words, to 186 explain why it is that, in some parts of St. Paul's Epistles, a certain stress is laid upon 187 faith over and above the other parts of a religious character, in our justification. The 188 reason seems to be as follows: the Gospel being pre-eminently a covenant of grace, 189 faith is so far of more excellence than other virtues, because it confesses this beyond all 190 others. Works of obedience witness to God's just claims upon us, not to His mercy: but 191 faith comes empty-handed, hides even its own worth, and does but point at that 192 precious scheme of redemption which God's love has devised for sinners. Hence, it is 193 the frame of mind especially suitable to us, and is said, in a special way, to justify us, 194 because it glorifies God, witnessing that He accepts those and those only, who confess 195 they are not worthy to be accepted.

196 On this account, faith has a certain prerogative of dignity under the Gospel. At the same 197 time we must never forget that the more usual mode of doctrine both with Christ and His 198 Apostles is to refer our acceptance to obedience to the commandments, not to faith; 199 and this, as it would appear, from a merciful anxiety in their teaching, lest, in 200 contemplating God's grace, we should forget our own duties.

201 To conclude. If, after all, to believe and to obey be but different characteristics of one 202 and the same state of mind, in what a most serious error are whole masses of men 203 involved at this day, who are commonly considered religious! It is undeniable that there 204 are multitudes who would avow with confidence and exultation that they put obedience 205 only in the second place in their religious scheme, as if it were rather a necessary 206 consequence of faith than requiring a direct attention for its own sake; a something 207 subordinate to it, rather than connatural and contemporaneous with it. It is certain, 208 however startling it is to reflect upon it, that numbers do not in any true sense believe 209 that they shall be judged; they believe in a coming judgment as regards the wicked, but 210 they do not believe that all men, that they themselves personally, will undergo it. I wish 211 from my heart that the persons in question could be persuaded to read Scripture with 212 their own eyes, and take it in a plain and natural way, instead of perplexing themselves 213 with their human systems, and measuring and arranging its inspired declarations by an

214 artificial rule. Are they quite sure that in the next world they will be able to remember 215 these strained interpretations in their greatest need? Then surely, while we wait for the 216 judgment, the luminous sentences of Divine Truth will come over us, first one and then 217 another, and we shall wonder how we ever misunderstood them! Then will they confront 218 us in their simplicity and entireness, and we shall understand that nothing can be added 219 to them, nothing taken away. Then at length, if not before, we shall comprehend our 220 Lord's assurance, that "He will reward every man according to his works;" St. Paul's, 221 that "we must all appear before the Judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive 222 the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad;"
223 St. Peter's, that "He is ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead;" St. James's, 224 that "a man is justified by works and not by faith only;" and St. John's, that "they are 225 blessed that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may 226 enter in through the gates into the city." [Matt. xvi. 27. 2 Cor. v. 10. Acts x. 42. James ii.
227 24. Rev. xxii. 14] Whatever else may be true, these declarations, so solemnly, so 228 repeatedly made, must hold good in their plain and obvious sense, and may not be 229 infringed or superseded. So many testimonies combined are "an anchor of the soul, 230 sure and steadfast," and if they mean something else than what they all say, what part 231 of Scripture can we dare trust in future as a guide and consolation?

232 "O Lord, Thy Word endureth for ever in heaven!" but the expositions of men are written 233 on the seashore, and are blotted out before the evening.
