

Olivia Hargroder lives, works and studies in Brisbane. She loves public speaking and the performing arts, having been seduced by the spotlight in her first dance concert as a toddler.

She has studied with NIDA Open Young Actor's Studio and holds a Cert IV in Acting for Stage and Screen with The Canberra Academy of Dramatic Arts-Perform Australia.

Whilst undertaking an Open University course on child development and work experience in childcare, she became aware of a disparity between 'best practice' and 'actual practice' when it came to service delivery for children with Down syndrome. She has been keen to make people aware of her unique perspective and is passionate about improving outcomes for other people with disabilities. She speaks regularly at events to share her views on opportunities for people with Down syndrome.

In March 2017 she was invited to address the United Nations in New York, on World Down Syndrome Day. Her speech went live to a worldwide TV audience and has been shared extensively online. During her time at the UN her eyes were opened to the plight of babies born with Down syndrome in some countries. She was also impressed by the amount of positive support there was to include athletes with Down syndrome in the Paralympics. She saw this as a way to promote the profile of Down syndrome and has started her own Change.org petition. She has support from Minister Greg Hunt, Dame Quentin

Bryce, Olympic diving legend Greg Louganis and (more importantly according to Olivia), Harry and Niall from One Direction!

Olivia has appeared on TV, radio, newspapers, magazines and podiums across the world. In 2017 she was announced as a finalist in The Young Australian of the Year Awards. She became the 2018 Moreton Bay Young Citizen of the Year and has represented the Premier across central Queensland as an Australia Day Ambassador and as a Queensland Day Ambassador.

Olivia is an engaging, entertaining and eloquent speaker who confronts reflex attitudes to Down syndrome and challenges the current classification model. She is a tireless worker for change, equity, and opportunity. She is living proof of what can be achieved when these are made available.
