

The Declaration of Liberation

We, the descendants of Africa, forced to leave our homeland to be enslaved in the Americas, denounce the Jim Crow enforcement set in motion to keep us enslaved. We stand united in exposing systemic injustices, while working together to create enforceable remedies. We fully acknowledge the impact of multigenerational trauma on our mental, physical, emotional, social, and economic advancement.

We fully recognize our vast contributions to the building of this nation. We walk in peace and love with each other, declaring that our bloodline is now free from bitterness, self-hatred, jealousy, envy, and strife. We walk away from the dependence on Anglo approval, recognition, and validation of our personhood. We liberate ourselves from lack, poverty, negative thoughts, actions, and deeds. We declare and decree that we now walk in the promises of Genesis 15:13-14. We agree to use our right to vote to create equality. We use collective philanthropy and the recycling of our dollars to develop strong economic development and sustainability; with African American-owned enterprises. We stand united building stronger families, community involvement and fostering the "The Village" model with love and respect for one another. We honor our bodies with healthy nutrition to avoid dis-ease mentally, emotionally, physically, and spiritually which leads to early death. We live in a God-ordained season of abundance of wisdom, peace, love, forgiveness, wealth, and health.

I release the trapped trauma, anger, resentment, stress, and anxiety passed down from one generation to the next from my mind, body, soul, and spirit. I decree and declare that this year and every year is full of abundance and the transference of wealth—stolen from my ancestors, who were forced to surrender their God-given gift of procreation to build the "human machinery" that created the wealth of this country. I declare that my family is liberated from the constraints previously imposed upon us by Anglo Americans for the last 400 years. I am now present to my rightful place in the world as a beacon of life. I now stand in truth and am guided by the living God to my new journey of life, love, purpose, and liberty.

Our relationships will not see infidelity, abuse, or hopelessness. Our families will not suffer from physical or psychological abuse, molestation, incest, rape, abandonment, or drug addiction. Our children will not be killed in the streets or by drugs, they will not go hungry; they will not drop out of school or become helpless. We remain the salt of the earth.
