

WHY RECOVERY BASE WILL SEEK FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR VICTIMS CURRENTLY IN NEW JERSEY FORECLOSURE AND BANKRUPTCY COURTS

The first state targeted by Recovery Base was New Jersey. Governor Phil Murphy recently signed a bill into law that promises to help New Jerseyans facing the prospect of foreclosure. Recovery Base is of the opinion that the new law does not protect families who are currently or have been victimized by banks, loan servicing companies, government officials, and the New Jersey Court system.

Recovery Base will not even attempt to contact Governor Phil Murphy since real estate and mortgage problems appear to extend through all state courts and governments. It is doubtful that the governor will move to address the problems of the individuals and families already victimized in New Jersey foreclosure courts within two years of a national election, since it could result in an immediate call across the state to reopen thousands of foreclosure cases where similar allegations of misconduct have been made against local, county and state officials, including judges. In addition, Governor Murphy's former employer, Goldman Sachs, is on the list of creditors who have abused Ms. McEwan. During his two decades with the firm the governor reportedly built up a fortune estimated at several hundred million dollars.

The Governor, the Attorney General and the Chief Justice of the New Jersey Supreme Court all have the power to do with the real foreclosure and bankruptcy crisis: official corruption. They can start in the state's Chancery Courts and county Sheriff's Offices.
