Which came first, the chicken or the egg? It's difficult to say regarding this father/ son pair of kinetic sculptors. Jeffrey Zachmann <http://www.zachmann.com/>brought his son

Carl Zachmann <https://carlzachmann.com/> on the road with him throughout his career as an independent artist. It is no wonder that Carl eventually followed step with his dad after exploring his interest in engineering and archeology. What seemed like a random collection of interests coalesced around his body of work involving gears and artifacts, encouraging the viewer to go internal. Conversely, Jeffrey's work is a lively experience that allows his collectors to actively engage in the movement within his pieces which disarms them and allows their natural and unfiltered reactions to emerge. These men are extremely creative, and their stories about their experiences on the road are truly entertaining.

In the preamble conversation, Douglas and Will discuss hiding from tornadoes, canceling a show, and mistaken identities.

Visual artists Douglas Sigwarth <https://www.sigwarthglass.com/> and Will Armstrong <http://www.willarmstrongart.com/> co-host and discuss topics affecting working artists. Each episode is a deep dive into a conversation with a guest artist who shares their unique experiences as an independent professional artist.
