

Why La Paz Valley, Arizona, Is the Ideal Escape

For decades, Southwest Arizona has drawn thousands of snowbirds—RVers escaping harsh northern winters—seeking sunshine, warmth, and a strong sense of community. Many return year after year, eventually becoming “reverse snowbirds,” spending summers up north and winters in the desert they now call home.

Today, this beloved destination is also attracting a new crowd: off-road and adventure enthusiasts. Thanks to its wide-open terrain, mild climate, and proximity to Southern California, the La Paz Valley has become a favorite for toy hauler owners and weekend warriors looking for quick, frequent getaways. The addition of the Arizona Peace Trail—a multi-county off-road network built through private and public partnerships—has only increased its popularity.

Yet despite the rising interest, private land here is extremely limited. La Paz Valley has just 320 acres of privately owned land. While surrounding BLM areas allow boondocking, they lack the hookups, comfort, and infrastructure needed for extended stays.

That’s precisely what makes KOFA CREST unique.

Spanning 10 acres of a 40-acre parcel, KOFA CREST offers rare fee-simple ownership of improved RV acreage—complete with water, power, easy road access, and thoughtfully built amenities. This property provides both privacy and practicality, making it ideal for RVers, off-roaders, and anyone seeking a low-maintenance desert lifestyle without sacrificing comfort.

Plus, its location couldn’t be better. From KOFA CREST, you’re minutes from:

- The KOFA National Wildlife Refuge, home to desert bighorn sheep
- The Colorado River for boating and fishing
- Casino gaming in Parker, AZ
- Quartzsite’s famous RV Tent Show, gem and rock expos, and flea markets
- Day trips into Mexico
- Just 90 minutes to Phoenix or Palm Springs
