So you all left. Can you give me an expectation of what is next?
Give me some idea of where you are on this , please.

Please give me a call when you have a moment and are in a good position to talk.

I was concerned yesterday when you and your team left the property while we were still in the middle of reviewing the studio construction and discussing final sign-off. We've enjoyed working with you and your crew and have felt we had a solid, respectful working relationship, so the situation felt out of character and caught us by surprise.

As we reviewed the work being presented as complete, we raised a few areas of concern. Some were minor and likely cosmetic, but others warranted clarification. Regardless of the severity, our expectation was simply to understand how the final build would be addressed and completed. Based on the quality of workmanship you've delivered on prior jobs, we did not anticipate encountering any issues that couldn't be discussed and resolved collaboratively.

As with any contractor–client relationship, mutual respect and open communication are essential, and that's the standard we've always tried to maintain.

Let's have a team meeting and get on to other business.

Are we going to be able to meet up on this? Let's reach an understanding so we can move on with this project. Do you have current business in Quartzsite, if so, let's have a meeting to settle the studio build on this Monday at the project. Let me know.
