2024 has been an exciting year for Wild Arts.

We have performed to over 9,000 people at 54 venues nationwide, worked with 500 primary school students and their teachers, received our first International Opera Award nomination, and made our first steps into Europe – with three performances of The Magic Flute in the Neuer Garten, Potsdam.

All this from a company in just its second full year of operation.

The year also saw us offer perhaps our most convincing answer yet to the question that sparked our work: what does sustainable opera look like?

In June, Theatre Green Book UK launched their second edition, including a clarified plan to transition groups to net zero across all areas – productions, operations, and buildings. The guidelines offer an incredible guide to organisations, and one we have now instigated throughout Wild Arts, achieving a gold standard of sustainability.

However, while valuable, these standards are defined by what actions are taken, and what materials are used – whereas our focus is on what is not used. On reducing the set and scenery that contributes so greatly both to opera's initial environmental impact, and to the subsequent impacts of touring. Where others have grand scenes, we rely on costume and the magnetism of our performers; where others have lorries full of equipment, we have the boot of an electric car.

The more people we perform to, and the larger the scale of our productions and venues, the more noticeable this approach becomes, and the more pleasing its positive reception.

Our work is unique. We bring truly world-class singers to culturally underserved areas around the UK, alongside a full chamber orchestra of internationally renowned performers; we create new, heartbreaking, witty translations and arrangements; we give emerging artists an opportunity not just to understudy a production or perform in a chorus, but to take a leading role, both on and off stage; and our small-scale sets and productions offer a sustainable avenue for touring music in an environmentally-aware age.

These creative goals come hand in hand with promoting and improving the appreciation of performing and visual arts in young people through our schools outreach projects and subsidised ticket offers.

As you look through this summary of our impact in 2024, we hope that you can share in our pride for all we have achieved, and we are incredibly grateful for the support of all of our Friends, Patrons, and supporters, who have made this work possible. Looking ahead to Eugene Onegin and The Elixir of Love next summer, The Marriage of Figaro in 2026, and La bohème the following year, this support matters more than ever – helping us to underpin the next ambitious years of our programme.

Thank you for joining us on this journey.

Working with schools, partners, and young artists to foster future talent

Now at the end of its second year, Wild Arts' primary school programme sees us working alongside music teachers to create a series of diverse, creative, and dynamic music lessons constructed around our Summer Opera (this year, Mozart's The Magic Flute).

These lessons, taught over the summer term, were designed to aid and empower teachers, and to give students the tools to learn, create, and explore all aspects of opera – from the music to the plot, characters, and even stage design – with each activity complementing a different part of the national music curriculum.

Our outreach team and wonderful Young Artists then attended each school to deliver in-person singing and acting workshops, before bringing everything together with a 45-minute performance of The Magic Flute for schools.

"The children absolutely loved the programme. The lesson plans are fun, stretching, and incredibly easy to follow."

"It was fantastic – from lessons, through the workshops, to the amazing show. A really, really exciting thing to be a part of."

– Schoolteachers of participating schools

The Wild Arts Young Artists Programme gives several musicians each year the opportunity to hone their craft in a professional production setting, gaining confidence through vocal, language, and acting coaching, and through rehearsals and performances with an experienced ensemble of established artists.

4 young singers participated in our second annual Young Artists Programme, giving 3 recitals/showcases across the Essex Summer Opera Festival, as well as singing in all 24 performances of *The Magic Flute.

Eleanor Oldfield, one of our 2024 Young Artists, in costume for The Magic Flute.

“Wild Arts’ Young Artist Programme was a wonderful opportunity that I am immensely grateful for. The programme was my first professional role, and it gave me the experience of travelling and working with an amazing team of creatives and musicians, whom I am lucky enough to count as friends, as well as helping me learn, and push myself. This is how careers start – a good chance given by a brilliant group who become like a family. I would wholeheartedly recommend it for any emerging singer.”

– Henry Wright, our Baritone Young Artist, 2024

Rethinking accepted environmental practice and demonstrating a commitment to our natural world

According to the work done by Julie's Bicycle, a single city-based theatrical show can expect to produce 2.48kgCO<sub>2</sub>e per audience member even before creating its sets and costumes – which traditionally more than double this total.

This year, our opera tours produced a total of less than 1.5kgCO<sub>2</sub>e per audience member, while also offering an example to other companies: creating reduced-set, minimalist performances, without sacrificing enjoyability or impact.

As well as renewably sourcing and reusing materials, much of this stemmed from hyper-local audiences. Our audience travelled an average of less than 10 miles to see our shows, with just 5% travelling more than 30 miles (fewer than the number who walked).

"We humans, alone on earth, are powerful enough to create worlds, and then to destroy them. But we have one more thing – an ability, perhaps unique among the living creatures on the planet – to imagine a future and work towards achieving it."

Reviews

"Phenomenally inventive, entertaining, and full of insight.
 Wild Arts makes magic happen."

– Colin Clarke, Classical Explorer ★★★★★

"With an exceptional company, Mozart's wonderful music played with verve by orchestra and singers, this Magic Flute is, well... magical."

– Mark Aspen ★★★★★

"I saw Wild Arts before and they were sensational. They were again tonight in a production that was innovative,
 fresh and delightful."

Critics' Reviews

"Here is a Messiah that speaks... It is a triumph!"
– Mark Aspen ★★★★★

"The jewel in Wild Arts' crown. A supple, energetic interpretation that thrillingly delivers the story as if the performers have just discovered it... Exquisite, moving, and exuberant."
– Rachel Halliburton ★★★★★

"Riveting: a real dramatic response which is constantly lifted by the full-blooded, sometimes even angry, way in which each solo number is tackled."
– Richard Morrison, The Times

Audience Reviews

"You have collectively raised the bar so high on the Messiah performance that I can never go back to an ordinary concert version. It was outstanding."

"A faultless and intimate delight... Inclusive and uplifting."

"Totally out of this world. It made my heart leap and the hairs stand up on the back of my neck!"
