Bio

Breanda Lanyel Kuhler entered the world in the year 1990 bringing bright energy with her. She was an inquisitive little human interested in all the world had to offer. The first time she spoke a comprehensible word was to say "hi" to a ladybug who landed on her blanket in the yard. Ladybug would become the nickname for this unique person. The sixth year of her existence proved challenging with the diagnosis of a brain tumor, Medulloblastoma posterior fossa. The unwelcome intruder only occurs in children of high IQ's. I was left with temporarily one-sided paralysis (regained most through therapy). The simple task of dressing my beloved barbies became unbearable, ergo the computer became my outlet. I was born with inert artist talent and knew an occupation with this skill was something I desired. The opportunity to attend fine art school presented itself, it was logical to combine my knowledge of computers with my artistic talent. A BFA in Graphic Design was a great decision.
