SOUL OF THE DOG

I have always been a creative person. Since I was a child, able to hold a pencil, I was drawing, painting, sculpting, and even spent many years creating all sorts of design in the creative field of marketing. My love for photography is a few years old and through self-challenge, my skills continue to grow. In the past, I have done corporate headshots, some portrait work, as well as events such as weddings and celebrations. With the pandemic, the opportunities to shoot have been less than I hoped. As a result, comes Soul of the Dog.

If you are a follower on our social media feeds and have had your dog stay with us, you may have seen your dog captured on camera during their stay. Several of these dogs were photographed separately in a studio setting and I am very excited to say that the photographs are currently on display at the Millbrook Library in Millbrook, NY.

This large collection of photographs highlights the thoughtfulness, intensity, and depth of emotion of the dog, our devoted companion. These one-light, Renaissance-inspired portraits beckon the viewer to connect with the spirit and mood of the subject. There are additional photographs that capture the magnificent rural setting of the 2+ acres in which the dogs run. And finally, there are several photos of the dogs engaged in the sport of play. I wish we could include many more photos but the library only has so much wall space.

Head over when you can. The exhibition is on display through April 30th. We invite all of you to please join us at the opening reception to be held on March 12th at 4 PM.

All photos are available for purchase and all profits will be donated to the Millbrook Library in gratitude for their continued support of arts in the community.

IS THERE A DOCTOR IN THE HOUSE?

One of the number one dangers in the home for pets is medications—either pet medications or human ones. Whether they're over-the-counter, prescription, or even vitamins, lots of them are often left out where dogs or cats can knock them down and find a way to eat what's inside.

One might also drop a pill or pills or supplements on the floor where pets can scarf them up quickly. Next thing you know, your pet is seriously ill, and you have to take him to the ER. Pain relievers like acetaminophen and ibuprofen, anti-depressants, and sleeping pills are of particular concern to both cats and dogs. Even something as seemingly harmless as cough drops can sicken a dog who eats too many.

Pill Pet Safety Precautions

Separate prescription pet medication from human medications so you don't mix them up. If you keep meds in a pillbox, shut it and stow it away; otherwise, your pet may think it's a toy since it makes a rattling noise.

Counters and night tables

Keep counters free of any medicine bottles. In general, it's a good rule to keep many things off counters, especially if your dog can easily place its paws on the counter. This goes for the bathroom counter as well. Place all medicine high in cabinets. Purchase a large container or recycle a box to keep them tidy. This way when you reach for them you can bring the box down instead of one by one. Don't keep any medicine on a night table. Night tables are much lower than a counter and easier to access by smaller dogs. Often a small dog is left alone on a bed only to later be found having gone into a medicine bottle.

Backpacks and purses

Don't leave bags or your purse on the floor—any drug or interesting item they find is fair game for curious furry critters. Children are notorious for stashing things in their backpacks and leaving them on the floor. Sometimes you have to take the time to "train" your kids.

Be careful when traveling

Take the same precautions when traveling or visiting someone as you would at home. Make others aware of the dangers that your pet may encounter. It isn't easy at times, but you'll find that most people will be more than happy to comply.

What we do at Dog Meadow

Safety is of the utmost importance at Dog Meadow. This is the reason why the dogs spend their indoor time specifically in the specially designed dog living room. There is not a chance in the world that any dog will have access to anything that may be a danger to them while in there. In fact, we don't even have toys for them to play with since some dogs will tear them and swallow them. We use indestructible kongs and always with supervision. Every now and then when someone can't be accommodated with a last-minute reservation they may find themselves seeking a friend or one of the services such as rover.com and we always recommend that they take the steps to ensure that they choose with care when it comes to this.
