A new vision to reclaim our lives

HOLD THE LINE, AMERICA

Massive events and developments are happening at an increasingly rapid pace because we are on the cusp of a revolution. Yes, revolutionary change is at our doorstep. The global world order is throwing one massive diversion after another at the general population in order to hide the even bigger developments happening behind the scenes. Everyone at some level can sense it, but it is more evident to those that are tapped into the spiritual realm and energy force of life; those that are capable of clearing out all the white noise and fog that may be clouding for some, what is inevitable.

The powerful forces at play are monumental. Our global elite have brought us to the brink of World War 3 and potential nuclear annihilation on two fronts in both Eastern Europe and in Asia. We are still battling through a multi-year “once in a lifetime” pandemic shutdown, with further pandemic-type shutdowns waiting in the wings to be implemented. A former President’s residence has been raided for the first time in our history, and we are still trying to grapple with the aftermath of massive public protest events that have occurred the past couple of years. Our economy is in a very dangerous zone called stagflation, with record pricing increases at the same time the economy is seeing negative rates of growth.

While some of the major challenges we are facing are the result of our leaders simply losing control of our system and global order, other events and negative trends were knowingly set in place. Is it more of an issue of corruption, ignorance, or incompetence of the establishment? I often debate this question, but in the end, it doesn’t matter why we are where we are, all that matters is what comes next.

Globalization as we know it—which has ruled the global order for several decades—is collapsing. It is impossible to predict how it will all exactly go down, as it is beyond the ability of anyone to fully grasp all the consequences and changes that will take place in the years to come, but they will be massive. Our cabal of global elite are essentially throwing a toddler-like temper tantrum because of all the uncertainty and fear that is growing in them. Power-hungry people will continue to be impossible to work with and will destroy as many innocent lives as possible while their safe global order collapses around them.

At the same time that the global economic system is crashing, we are experiencing a spiritual awakening in the general population that increasingly will not tolerate the “business as usual” mindset. These massive twin forces of a spiritual shift in humanity and the collapse of our global economic system are the principal drivers of all the headline grabbing news events we have been seeing and will continue to see. The longer our current standard leadership is allowed to remain in place, the more destruction they will create both knowingly and unknowingly at a massive global scale, as they try to cling to power and the old way of doing business until the bitter end. Their big Hail Mary effort is clearly to try and prep humanity for a “Great Reset” type of existence in the very near future where the concept of ownership of any property whatsoever (including our own bodies all the way down to the level of our DNA) and any traditional freedoms such as freedom of speech or freedom to protect ourselves and our own families, is eliminated. This grand effort to establish a nightmare Orwellian world order will be defeated and it will fail.

NOW MORE THAN EVER GOOD PEOPLE NEED TO HUNKER DOWN AND HAVE THE MENTALITY OF
HOLDING THE LINE NO MATTER
WHAT, ON WHAT IS SACRED IN LIFE AND SACRED WITH THE FOUNDING IDEALS OF OUR COUNTRY.

At this point, people need to fight head on and withdraw all support for the entire establishment at all levels: at the local, state, national, and international levels. Support only independent candidates and independent political thought. Fully refuse to play the lesser of evil game because if you are willing to vote for the lesser evil, you are willing to settle for nothing. We are seeing the results of this attitude that folks have had for far too long, with our economy, ecosystem, and health suffering as a result.

Forget about a big loss this fall in the midterms for the Democratic Party, which some people are expecting; the Democratic Party may not even exist anymore by the time of the 2028 Presidential election cycle because of the great amount of upheaval still to come. The Dem. Party is dying because it is first and foremost killing any genuine grassroots energy and talent within. Think about the disgraceful treatment by “The Party” of people like India Walton in Buffalo or Alex Morse in Massachusetts. These are but two of an endless list of examples of intolerance for anyone who steps out of line in the slightest. Only complete sellouts are allowed to rise. The Republican Party establishment ultimately needs to be defeated as well, but the Democratic Party establishment clearly is the more atrophied and weaker party at the grassroots level.

Massive change can happen; it happens all the time. The two parties have switched sides on key issues throughout history. For example, because of constant mainstream propaganda, I’m sure it is hard for many to believe or remember that it was only a few years ago that the Democratic Party was much more the anti-illegal immigration party. And why? You can find endless clips of politicians such as Bernie Sanders arguing passionately about how illegal immigration harms American workers and unions and is something that the evil Republican Party supports because immigration helps keeps wages down and is good for big business. The narrative on this issue has clearly switched sides and it didn’t take very long for it to happen either.

THE GLOBAL ELITE’S ATTEMPT TO ESTABLISH A NIGHTMARE ORWELLIAN WORLD ORDER WILL BE DEFEATED BY A RISING RESOLVE AND SPIRITUAL
AWAKENING THAT IS NOW
BURGEONING AMONGST THE MASSES.

Republicans have smartly allowed factions of its Party to pick up the mantle of certain freedoms and policy positions that used to be associated with liberals but are increasingly in the purview of the “right wing,” such as freedom of thought, speech, anti-war, anti NSA/CIA/FBI/spying/ etc. Even issues such as health care choice and promoting alternative medicine and healing; worker rights; and homesteading and organic farming activities, seem to suddenly be discussed increasingly now by the so-called right than the so-called left. The Democratic Party establishment seems hellbent on going fully and narrowly down the dangerous road of authoritarianism, centralization, censorship, and global warfare. It is for these reasons the Democratic establishment must be eliminated first.

I am not a Republican (for example, I have never voted for a Republican President in my near 30 years of voting eligibility). I never thought I’d see the day when I was rooting for a Republican rout, but the Democratic Party establishment has left us no choice. This is a perfect example of the requirement sometimes to take a big step backwards in the near-term in order to be able to take a huge step forward in the longer term. It is the only way to be able to advance in a positive way and put us on the right track to a healthier future. If the old Democratic Party guard is fully killed off, it would be the best thing that could ever happen to true progressives and liberals. It would usher in the biggest and most exciting political movement this country has ever seen and it could happen by the time of the 2028 Presidential election cycle if the Democratic Party fully loses control of Congress this fall and then the Presidency in 2024.

According to Gallup, around 30% identify as Democrat, 30% identify as Republican, while a majority at about 40% identify as Independent, and yet Independents have no real representation of their own in the political process. How is this okay? The best way to honor our Founding Fathers and those who paid the ultimate sacrifice is to get involved, take action, and demand real solutions to reclaim our country, our personal lives, and our destiny. There are endless actions that can and need to be taken.

The intent of the past 70-80 years has largely been to develop a distant fake plastic existence, but it was not designed to be sustainable. It was a good run, but in the long run we’ll be much healthier and happier focusing on living in a locally-driven, small-scale capitalistic system.

Now more than ever good people need to hunker down and have the mentality of holding the line no matter what, on what is sacred in life and sacred with the founding ideals of our country, and always do and act what we know deep inside is the morally right thing to do. We are only in the beginning stages of a great storm and battle that must be fought down to the level of the soul.

THE EMBODIMENT OF THE RECLAIM MOVEMENT: LIAM MADDEN FOR UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Reclaim Party is not an official political party. Reclaim Party is an idea centered on attitude that promotes and encourages individual acts of bravery and defiance, which when done in a strategic way adds up to a beautifully shared effort for positive change. This newsletter is all about encouraging people to take initiative in all aspects of life to feel truly free to shape our own lives and communities.

In this vein, The Unapologetic Truth Newsletter and Reclaim Party not only fully endorses but is proud to be volunteering for the fully independent Liam Madden campaign from Vermont for the United States House of Representatives.

Not only are Liam's policy positions and philosophies perfectly in line with our views, he brilliantly worked the stifling two-party system to get elected by the people of Vermont in the Republican Primary this August to take on the establishment Democratic candidate in the general election this November. Liam was successful in the Primary even though (or perhaps because) he has emphatically stated and has made clear from the beginning he is not a Republican but is rather a pure Independent to the point that the Vermont Republican Party has fully disavowed itself from supporting their own elected representative. As a pure independent should, Liam has very clearly stated his policy positions on a whole host of issues and has been extremely upfront about his desire to help blow up the corrupt two-party system and the way the system churns out drone-like candidates for political office. If Liam wins and is sent to Washington DC, it would be an immensely positive shock to the system. It cannot be understated the importance of his movement and effort. Still, win or lose this November, he has already greatly helped solidify the growing web of resistance and added to the critical effort to establish a baseline foundation for institutional change toward a powerful new small-scaled and localized political and economic reality to reclaim our democracy.

Liam has the perfect background, with a strong history of real leadership and bravery. He embodies the circle reality of politics (please see Issue #5 of this newsletter for full explanation). The circle model explains that our political system is not actually the straight line that is relentlessly propagandized by the establishment, which conveniently keeps the people artificially divided and the elite perpetually in charge. The straight-line model of politics falsely promotes the idea that regular folks on the “left” and “right” have nothing in common and cannot work together to obtain shared goals for the benefit of all, when in reality, the opposite is true. It is much more accurate to view politics as a circle and not a straight line, with those who wish to maintain the status quo—mainly for their own benefit—on one side of the equator, with most Americans who rightly have a low opinion of politics as usual, on the other side. Ordinary people on the “left” and “right” have a lot more in common with each other than with either of the main political parties.

Check out Liam Madden's website at <https://rebirthdemocracy.com/>. Consider donating and volunteering. Be inspired, as we greatly need many more people like him running for office at all levels of government. This is the future of politics. This is now.

WHEN GOOD NEWS IS BAD NEWS

On August 5th, a somewhat bombshell economic data report was released by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. It was the latest monthly jobs report and it showed that for the month of July, 528,000 jobs were created and the unemployment rate was at 3.5%. These numbers were far stronger than predicted and sent a shockwave through the economic analysis community.

In more “normal” times, this report would be viewed as good news. Lots of new jobs is always good news, right? Wrong. We are not living in normal times and the rules have all been turned upside down. The crux of the issue is that our sky-high inflation rate is the primary concern of our Federal Reserve. In essence, we've reached a dead-end in our economy. We've run out of tools to be able to sustain a healthy economy and we've boxed ourselves into a situation where we have to force a severe slowdown in economic activity in order to have a chance at slowing the very destructive phenomenon of out-of-control pricing growth. Thus, it has been generally accepted that the only way to do this is via demand destruction and to lower the amount of demand pressure in the economy. The government currently does not appear to have the capability of fixing the myriad of issues on the supply side. Thus, it needs to pursue a policy of purposely increasing the number of unemployed people and lower the amount of money available to American individuals and families in our day-to-day living.

The Federal Reserve had already noticeably raised interest rates in an attempt to adjust this by the time of the July jobs report. This strong jobs report was viewed negatively by the stock market and economic observers because it confirmed the Federal Reserve will have to further aggressively increase interest rates, which will greatly increase the risk to the stock market and raise borrowing costs across the board. While no one really wants to have an increase in the number of unemployed people, runaway inflation is generally viewed as a scarier proposition than high unemployment rates.

Still, when looking deeper at the actual July Jobs report, several signs of additional layers of trouble crop up that show that at a fundamental level, the job market is not as healthy as it seems. Many of these new jobs created were second or even third jobs taken on by individuals, which is a sign of increasing stress on the budgets of people. Also, a sizeable number of the jobs were part time jobs.

WE ARE IN NEED OF REVOLUTIONARY CHANGE TO OUR CAPITALISTIC SYSTEM AND MODEL.

Looking at the rate side and not the raw number of jobs, a huge reason the unemployment rate is so low is because of the long-standing trend of a declining labor force participation rate, which measures the percentage of people in the labor force that are either working or actively looking for work. It peaked above 67% around the turn of the century right before 9/11. It has been on a steady decline since. The most recent month of data for July 2022 showed a level of 62.1%. On the surface that may not seem like huge drop, but that translates close to an 8% decline. In other words, over a span of around two decades, there are 8% fewer people of working age willing and looking to work. That is a pretty significant drop over a relatively short twenty-year period, which is having a significant impact on our society and economy. In order to keep up the charade of never-ending economic growth and expansion (which mainly benefits and goes towards the insatiable appetite and greed of the 1%) those workers remaining in the workforce have to work that much harder to keep the system going and support everything.

Still, the raw figure is not necessarily a problem. During what is generally considered the boom times of the 1950s and 1960s, the workforce participation rate was under 60%. It was during the 1970s/80s it trended much higher, coinciding with more women entering the labor force.

Coming back to the last twenty years, you can find many storylines. There has been a decline in the participation rate in virtually all combinations of age groups, genders, and races. The big exception is a positive growth rate for those 55 and over. Other than that, women from age 25-34 saw a slight increase during this time period. The biggest declines by far of those working are aged 16 to 24 and more likely to be male than female. Certainly, a lot of this makes sense. With more people getting college degrees and more individuals living longer compared to decades ago (although average life expectancy is now clearly declining, but that is for another article), it is not surprising to see some of these trends. The main consideration is at what point do the trends become a problem? Other than above 55 years old, pretty much every other group is seeing less people in the workforce. Why is this the case? There are several reasons but I would say a completely underreported reason is the mental and physical breakdown of people, combined with the increased complexities of living.

It should not be a surprise to see we are increasingly seeing vacant job openings and worker shortages, which are issues likely to get worse, as more people continue to look to drop out of the labor force. An easy example to see why this is occurring are the myriad of challenges introduced by the lockdowns from Covid, with trying to find schooling to educate children being the obvious example. Still, on a longer-term basis, more fundamental issues are making it harder for rising numbers of people to hold down regular jobs and stay mentally sharp. Issues such as the spiking numbers of people trying to juggle divorce households with kids; rising cases of chronic drug addiction; much higher rates of depression; etc.

There are some real heavy-duty structural issues we need to do a much better job of facing head on. Nevertheless, there could be some positive reasons that there are less people in the workforce. Perhaps more families and couples are trying to make a go of it at living in a one income household, which can be viewed as a positive if the reason is to try and live a more balanced and happier life. Perhaps more people are rejecting the concept of living out their lives in the corporate rat race. Life is short and precious and perhaps more people are looking to live simpler lives with perhaps only one person in the couple working in the traditional economy.

The ultimate story is likely more complex and layered, with some good reasons and some bad. The bottom line, though, is that society needs a healthy level of young and primed aged people contributing to the welfare of society, but it is becoming much more difficult for this to occur, with issues such as mental capacity increasingly becoming a problem. You can see it all around, with people mentally breaking down from the impossible contradictions of the rules of modern life. That's what a society ruled by a corrupt ruling class eventually leads to; it eats itself alive and devours good people and good work.

This is why I don't trust the push to massively beef up the power of the IRS. Yes, there is a problem with tax cheating (much of it is driven by the insane complexities of the tax code) and if we had the right movement in charge of our country, hiring 87,000 new IRS agents would be good, but does anyone really believe these new agents are going to take down the big fish, the ruling class tax cheats? Of course not. They are going to train their eyes on the easy wins that come from going after lower- and middle-class people for small mistakes (those who can't afford lawyers to fight back and are not connected).

There are more people working for the US federal government than the entire population of a substantial number of countries in the world. The amount of bureaucracy coming from federal and state government, as well as bloated-too-big-to-fail private corporations is hard to fathom. There are whole big departments in federal and state governments filled with "workers" who literally have no actual work to do. They are given a cubicle and a computer and are housed in a sort of pathetic adult daycare. There are less and less people carrying the load of real work in the world and trying to maintain our civil society and freedoms, but I digress.

Coming back full circle on this article: even if we become successful in lowering inflation (which will take an extended period of time), we are still trapped because our global economic system has reached a dead-end. We are in need of revolutionary change to our capitalistic system and model. If nothing else changes other than lowering our inflation rate over the next couple of years, this would allow consumers to resume purchasing and our GDP to resume growing, which would make the broken global supply and demand dynamics even worse, leading to an even bigger eventual collapse. In other words, there is no way to escape our predicament, as we are now essentially trapped in a feedback loop. We have entered the dangerous zone called stagflation, which is when we have high inflation and declining economic growth prospects at the same time. This last occurred in the late 70s/early 80s. We eventually were able to get out of it but only after several painful years. Will we be able to get out of it this time? Number one, at best, it will take many years.

Because everything is spun these days, we are already in a technical recession, but our leaders are using all sorts of twisted logic and word salads to claim we are not....at least not yet. Even the biggest deniers of our current situation are admitting that a full-blown recession is inevitable, which begs the question: what good does it do to find loopholes in the data to claim we are not currently in a recession when it is facing us right around the corner? It is the equivalent to screaming at everyone that they should be happy and celebrate that we are not at the moment being annihilated by a nuclear bomb, even though everyone can clearly see the nuclear bomb approaching rapidly in the sky towards us.

As part of the current bizarre denial of our economy by the establishment, they insist we are not in a recession, but will concede things such as our housing sector is now in a recession. Do you remember what triggered the Great Recession 15 years ago? Oh yeah, that is right, the bubble in the housing market bursting. The problem now is that there are many additional bubbles this time around and not just in America, but importantly around the world. Europe is a mess, with the destructive war in Ukraine, along with severe energy shortages and recession facing all of Europe. However, Europe pales in comparison to the danger of what could be triggered via the potential collapse of the Chinese economy. Given that China is the biggest commodity market by far in the world, it is hard to understate the peril. Like in the West, the Chinese authorities are desperately trying to keep their population distracted from the bigger dangers behind the scenes, and their insane insistence on holding onto a zero Covid policy is exactly because the Communist rulers are deathly afraid of an economic collapse and what would happen to their grip on power.

China doesn't have to look very far to their neighbor Russia to see what could happen when they lose control and the system collapses. The problem for us and the rest of the world is that unlike when the Soviet Empire collapsed 30 years ago, the Chinese economy is more intimately intertwined with our modern economic system. The supply chain nightmares the world has experienced the past couple of years is just a small preview of what could happen very soon if the Chinese economy fully implodes, which cannot be ruled out as a possibility. Their real estate market appears to be teetering on the edge of dangerous territory, especially given how much China has investments in things such as real estate and buildings. Think about all those stories you've seen over the years of entire Chinese cities built that are almost completely empty of activity and people because they were built simply for investment reasons and as part of the strategy by the Chinese authorities to keep up the charade of strong economic and GDP growth. Still, as difficult as it is to predict trends in places like the United States, it is nearly impossible for China because of the level that information is suppressed and distorted, plus the power of the communist regime to manipulate. For example, there could very well already be a massive desire by the population in China to try and unload their potentially increasingly worthless investment housing units, however, the government might essentially be making it impossible through various rules to buy and sell or at least greatly slow it down. This may be preventing a collapse in the near-term, but only fully guarantees it will happen eventually in the longer term. Where are we in that process? Impossible to say, but no doubt the risks are growing, as China's various economic problems are rapidly rising to the surface.

NO LUBE REQUIRED

Everything in life is connected to the universe. When problems pop up in one place, impacts are felt in seemingly distant and unrelated areas. Judging from the number of advertisements everywhere on the subject, Americans apparently need a lot of assistance performing in the bedroom. Clearly, not nearly enough blood appears to be flowing to the right areas.

As always, many look at the problem on the surface level and race to get the latest prescription medicine, but it really shouldn't be a surprise that this unpleasant side-effect of modern life seems to be a growing (perhaps that is the wrong word to use here) problem. Stress, anxiety, unhappiness, and a need for immediate and easy gratification are certainly going to play a role but we can plunge deeper than that, can't we?

There is fear and danger around every corner we are constantly told, resulting in a fear of life, fear of living, and fear of being bold for many. Admittedly, trying to understand the sexes is a dangerous road to go down, but wouldn't it be safe to say that at a deep level, most individuals are seeking a few major things from their partner: to feel protected, respected, and supported.

Don't we all want to feel that when push comes to shove, the chips are down, and things get serious, that our partner will defend us in every sense of the word no matter what? That the person we are with will gladly put themselves in harm's way to protect their significant other? That our partner will fully support our hopes and dreams no matter how outlandish? That our partner will indeed view us as an equal, not someone to diminish or try to control? Not to mention, that our significant other has a zest for life and not only passionately believes in certain ideas, but will fight for those beliefs to come to fruition as best as they can? Don't we also want to be with a well-rounded partner who can challenge us and provide a more engaging and thrilling life to live?

DON'T WE ALL WANT TO FEEL THAT WHEN PUSH COMES TO SHOVE, THE CHIPS ARE DOWN, AND THINGS GET SERIOUS, THAT OUR PARTNER WILL DEFEND US IN EVERY SENSE OF THE
WORD NO MATTER WHAT? THAT OUR PARTNER WILL FULLY SUPPORT OUR HOPES AND DREAMS NO MATTER
HOW OUTLANDISH?

I don't have any hard evidence to make this claim, but it appears that the number of people willing to lead brave and passionate lives as opposed to timid and fear-filled lives has dwindled. Cooperation is all well and good but the number of folks willing to step out from the herd and not only call things out, but take action when things go astray, seems to be declining as well. I am convinced that the increasing need for artificial lubrication is highly correlated with the rapid rise in the modern sedentary lifestyle and everything said sedentary lifestyle represents.

Being attracted to your partner is not just about physical attraction—although important, physical attraction can only keep you tethered for so long. There needs to be a deeper level of connectedness for a couple to withstand the harsh realities of life. Added mental and emotional support, tied with open communication can all be natural lubricants that may withstand a dry spell of any kind.

LITIGATION NATION

The Devil's Advocate starring Al Pacino as Satan and released in 1997, overcomes some cringe-worthy acting from Keanu Reeves as the main character and some over the top cinematography to brilliantly hammer home the concept that the devil has found the perfect playground in the modern American legal system because as Al Pacino so poignantly, simply, and matter-of-factly states,

“The law, my boy, puts us into everything. It's the ultimate backstage pass. It's the new priesthood, baby.”

This movie foreshadowed where we are headed; further down the road of a nation increasingly reliant on gameplaying and litigation to deal with more and more of our issues. Evil forces are using the courts and our legal system to slowly snuff out the good souls and the positive experiences in life. It's easy to focus—and I'm sure many do—on the individualistic story of how the main character (Keanu Reeves) allowed ruin to be brought to his life via his hyper-focus pursuit of power and “success” at all cost. The sin of focusing on one's own needs and ego—at the cost of everything and every loved one—is certainly an important warning from the story as well, but I like to focus on the movie's bigger picture.

As Al Pacino rings out in the climactic final scene, “I take the bricks out of the briefcase. I give you pleasure. No strings! Freedom baby.....is never having to say you're sorry.” This is the warning on the individualistic level, but another warning of the movie as Al Pacino also stated, “Did you know there are more students in law school than lawyers walking the Earth? We're coming out!.....guns blazing!!”

Other than a major medical emergency, the court system is the quickest way to ruin the vast majority of people financially. But it goes much deeper; places such as family and divorce court have the ability to quickly ruin people spiritually and bring on wave after wave of unnecessary anxiety and conflict.

The State of Massachusetts recently released yet another report after the latest string of tragic deadly endings for neglected children that “slipped through the cracks of the system.” Funny how concerns of people in family court with high-priced lawyers never have their concerns “fall thru the cracks” no matter how petty and small the issue.

If you truly want to know why everything in society seems to be collapsing, the quickest and most informative way to educate yourself, is to spend just a couple of hours in family court. It is a public venue and anybody can sit and listen to the endless head shaking antics and reasons people will drag others to court for. It will all start to make sense why anxiety and depression are skyrocketing for children and parents alike.

Many are well aware of the skyrocketing crisis of childhood anxiety, depression, and suicide. As with everything, the mainstream response is to always throw more money at the problem. In the end, a child who is suffering mentally, for example, from an emotionally abusive parent in a divorced household, may not ultimately gain relief and help unless not only a therapist is found—which is increasingly very hard to secure because of the steeply rising demand for therapists—but also the “right” therapist is found who is fully willing to fight for the child. This may require a therapist willing to stand up to an abusive parent and stand up to and be heard in front of the judge and court system. Unfortunately, many theorists are not willing to take the step of risking taking on a “difficult” case of a child that may, for example, require taking the stand in a trial—willing to take on the child who may have a difficult and unwilling parent but is also ready to truly fight for the child, their mental and emotional well-being, and in some cases be ready to take the stand in a trial and speak the truth about the abusive parent.

THERE ARE CLOSE TO 90,000

When one parent is clearly playing games and throwing roadblocks up in the process, but the court treating every single road block as a separate and individual act, with no ability or willingness to look at a case comprehensively. Instead, the system puts both parents in the default position of equally guilty of not being able to co-parent. Ultimately, the system will fall on the side of the bullying parent, the difficult parent that is hampering the child unless the support layers of therapists, school teachers, family members, neighbors, friends, etc. are willing to put themselves out there and potentially put themselves in professional danger in defense of the innocent child. Increasingly, therapists and others are not willing to get involved in such “difficult” cases and thus, the children who need the most support will fall by the wayside, no matter how much people talk about the crisis, think it should be addressed, or throw money at the issue. In the end like most things, things will only improve when a sufficient number of people rise up and take a stand to do the right thing and not think solely about their personal career and desire to stay out of personal danger as much as possible. Until then, the asylum will continue to be run and dictated by the opportunists and those seeking gain at the expense of children and society.

PROBLEMS IN SOCIETY ARE ALWAYS SOLVED BY THE HUMAN SPIRIT, WHICH TRUMPS ALL THE MONEY IN THE WORLD, ALL THE THOUGHTS AND PRAYERS, AND ALL THE CAREFUL PLANNING. PLANS, MONEY, THOUGHTS, AND PRAYERS DON'T MEAN JACK SHIT UNLESS YOU HAVE A SUFFICIENT NUMBER OF PEOPLE WILLING TO STAND UP TO POWER.

We are all so twisted and tied up in contradictory rules and regulations imposed on us in modern society that to do the morally right thing now, almost always means having to break all the rules (and risk being sued and/or thrown in jail) in order to act in a decent and moral way. There is no better example for all of this in recent time than the Uvalde school shooting tragedy. By all accounts, the school spent a massive amount of money and time on police officers, lockdown planning, and training, which supposedly should have prevented this type of shooting but of course it did not. I guarantee every single police officer and person in charge can point to a plethora of various rules and regulations that instructed them to act exactly as they did, which ultimately led them to not act at all when needed but to focus instead on the least important things. The rules dictated that yes, it may have been appropriate for some of the police officers to turn their attention and rage on the horrified onlooking parents who wanted to run in and save their child. These officers, in their eyes, acted “appropriately” in not helping the parents get their children out, but instead kept “order” by harassing the parents that dared to step out of line even in this horrific developing tragedy.

The disgusting hallway video of the whole army of officers in the school standing around for an endless period of time while waiting for instruction of what to do—waiting for all the proper protocols to take place before acting, just like good minions and just like they were likely taught in bubble-like training courses—sadly is not surprising to see any more for anyone who is paying attention to what is happening to the general population: fear and inaction leading the way and always being able to point to a random rule, regulation, and protocol for said inaction. In the end, the mountains of money, planning documents, rules, regulations, and number of “safety” officers was never going to save those poor souls that perished in that elementary school—the only thing that could have saved them in that moment was an unencumbered human spirit deciding in an instant to do what is morally right and to act immediately without hesitation. Via the most horrific example, the Uvalde shooting shows that common sense is completely dead, killed off by our litigation nation. To be a good person and do the right thing in the modern world means breaking norms and rules. This is the case in every segment of modern society. Covid and the lockdowns have provided us with a plethora of additional examples of this, but that is for yet another article.

In other words, like everything, problems in society are always improved and solved by the human spirit, which trumps all the money in the world, all the thoughts and prayers, and all the careful planning. Plans, money, thoughts, and prayers don't mean jack shit unless you have a sufficient number of people willing to stand up to power and negative forces and willing to do the right thing. This spirit is precisely what evil is trying to snuff out of people. It is this spirit of independent thought and action that allows a society to evolve in a positive way.

Unfortunately, we are going headlong in the opposite direction, a society increasingly dictated by litigation. We are litigating our souls and spirit to death. A Few Good Men is another fantastic movie—with legendary acting from Jack Nicholson—to highlight key points in the argument. A key takeaway that is perhaps easy to miss amidst the great entertainment from the film is that there were two defendants innocent of the murder charge against them that happened to luckily be represented by a brilliant and generational talent of a lawyer played by Tom Cruise; however, the only way this gifted lawyer was able to save these innocent men from being found guilty and thrown in jail by the system for a long time was because this lawyer took an extreme risk (in other words broke the rules and norms) that threatened to completely ruin his own life.

Among many points, the movie showed how easy it is for evidence to be both made up and covered up as well as how declared experts who are supposed to know better, will help cover up the truth to protect themselves and their own egos and protect those in power instead of the prosecuted. In addition, the movie conveys how some people who know the truth and can help set things right understandably crumble under the pressures and are not willing to fully come forward. Finally, how the system can work to protect entrenched interests and how there is also the seeking of easy scapegoats to bear the cross for everyone's convenient benefit.

If you've never been embroiled in the legal system, you may not realize the significance of the point in the movie that even the most exceptional of lawyers had to essentially break all the rules and put himself and his career in extreme danger in order for truth and justice to ultimately prevail. How often and how many people in real life do you think are willing to do this? Not nearly enough of course, which is a main reason there is so much injustice in our world. Of course the courtroom drama is not a completely factual story and is just a movie after all; nevertheless, anyone who has faced the system head on or is willing to see what is going on around us with eyes wide open knows that this how things play out all too often in the real world.

There is zero consideration in mainstream thought of doing the one thing that would help put our society on a better track: finding ways to free the human spirit instead of entrapping it. We need to free people from fears of being outed, of being sued, fined, or thrown in jail for acting morally, ethically, and doing what is right. We need to spend less time focusing on increasingly contradictory rules and regulations, of doing what you are told, and acting with a herd mentality so as to never step out of bounds to shake up conventional thought and wisdom. We need to stop living with fragility, stop assuming that establishment thought is the correct default position, and think that it is normal and acceptable to never take ownership for mistakes.

We keep going further and further down this road to hell and now in 2022 we have a new phenomenon that only creatures like Al Pacino's character could come up with: Texas' Bounty Hunter Abortion Ban. This is not a commentary on whether abortion itself is right or wrong; this commentary is focused on the very sinister path of this particular scheme to enforce the law, which will open up a whole new frontier of ordinary citizens turning on each other and further tearing apart our social fabric. The Texas law encourages ordinary citizens to seek out anyone who may have helped a person get an illegal abortion via the incentive of a cash payout "bounty" if they succeed in suing anyone, opening up a can of worms reminiscent of the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850. This "brilliant" new litigation scheme surely will now spread like wildfire in popularity into other issues in society, which will further suffocate our lives.

The point of this article is not to say all lawyers and judges are evil. This is definitely not the case. There are certainly plenty of lawyers and judges who got into the field because they truly wanted to make a positive change and to help others, but like most things, the good-hearted professional class of lawyers, teachers, therapists, judges, etc. are all being systematically crushed just like the kids and parents. We need to understand the big picture fight and fully appreciate the critical need to have people inside, out, and throughout the legal system producing consistent acts of braving to stand up to evil and bullies. Brave actions are the only things that matter in the end no matter the number of resources, planning, or education degrees. This often means standing next to and defending the oppressed against mob and mainstream mentalities.

VS "RIGHT," WHICH IS THE CONSTANT
FALSE PROPAGANDA. THE FIGHT IS HEART AND SOUL AMERICANS OF ALL
WALKS OF LIFE AND FROM ALL PARTS OF THE POLITICAL SPECTRUM VS.
THOSE WALKING AROUND
SPELLBOUND SEEKING COMPLETE
POWER AND CONTROL AT ALL COST.

Not enough good people were willing to defend and fight for people who were unjustly fired for not getting vaxxed or defend small business owners who were ruined for not following impossible to follow and contradictory rules and regulations during the lockdowns; not enough people in the journalism field have risen holy hell over the fact that Julian Assange is being tortured to death, rotting in prison and solitary confinement for speaking truth to power. If enough journalists and ordinary people had banded together the past ten years over the completely unjust and dystopian persecution of Julian Assange we would not be as close to the dark and scary place we are now in 2022 where so much speech has essentially been criminalized as it is now; etc. etc. the list can go on and on. There is no more time for excuse of inaction. People need to rise up and take positive, proactive actions, draw a line in the sand and say enough is enough; refuse to play the game, walk away from it and develop parallel forms of existence and most importantly build up parallel institutions and foundations.

Evil only reigns when good people and good spirits stand down and allow it to prevail. We are rapidly entering a major scene in the play called life and human existence: which side will triumph in this act? It should be clear that we are rapidly entering a dangerous place when we've reached the point when our sitting President is openly and emphatically claiming that a huge segment of our own citizenry are the biggest terrorists on the planet and largest challenge we face as a country. That is evil talk and not only proves we are entering a major scene in the movie of real life, but that kind of talk proves the establishment is frightened and knows deep-down that their time is up. They will try to generate as much chaos while they are being dragged down to the bottom of the ocean by the boulder of bad blood shackled to them that they created.

Our political class and the elites could not be clearer if they tried with their words and actions. They have openly declared war on the common person and good spirits. The world order is collapsing and the only way for the traditional elites to maintain control is to instill a global totalitarian oppressive system. The response to the pandemic has certainly gone a long way in their attempt to groom people to accept this level of control in our lives. They are looking to implement control over every single action, word, and even personal thought within a person's own head. Everything needs to be controlled in order for the elites to maintain their vision of the world.

A big part of the fight is to try and shake up the bureaucrats in the machine who just go with the tide and do what they are told and never rise up to try and reform the systems they run and control. This is because of the deep-seated fear they carry with them. The fight is against those clinging to power at all cost in the mainstream establishment in both major parties; the corporate-controlled mindsets; the small minds terrorizing good souls at the local and individual level. Any talk of the "left" being evil or "right" or "MAGA" being evil is itself evil talk and nonsense. The battle ground is not left vs right, which is the constant false propaganda. The fight is heart and soul Americans of all walks of life and from all parts of the political spectrum vs. those walking around spellbound seeking absolute power and control at all cost.

WHO'S LISTENING?

You do the right thing, the by the book kinda thing....

But who's listening?

You live in truth, dignity, and rationale....

But who's listening?

You present the facts and figures, dates and times, reasons, and explanations....

But who's listening?

You hold your strength and composure and exercise your voice.....

But still, is anyone listening? Who hears you? Who sees you? Who actually cares?

Your words are trampled, twisted, and used against you....

The facts are skewed, omitted and the lies are brought forth

And now who's listening? Everyone

AWAKENING IN THE MAKING

You may be hearing more and more about a great awakening occurring in the population and that is something this newsletter certainly believes and believes is a good thing, but what exactly are we awakening from? On a surface level, part of the story certainly is the general population awakening to the deep systematic level of corruption and rot that there is in our ruling class and how hopeless the establishment of both the Democratic and Republican party is, but it goes much, much deeper than this. The battle we are seeing and the awakening goes very deep, thousands of years of teaching all the way to the base assumptions of religion, God, and capitalism. The base assumptions of organized religion and capitalism assumes the worst of people. Our mainstream capitalistic model literally assumes that everyone walking the earth is a narcissistic sociopath, and, as result, our system of commerce is set up this way. A simple example is that "healthcare" companies are rewarded in the stock market and other avenues not by any actual health outcome of the population, but by how much profit is made. How fucked up is that? Of course, complete defenders of the “free market” will claim the stock market will ultimately only reward healthcare companies that actually provide long-term improvements to the health of the population. If you’ve made it into adulthood truly believing this, God bless you for being able to live in such a rosy bubble. As discussed in issue #3 of this newsletter, if we lived in a world of perfect information sharing and access, it would indeed be the case that only the actual best healthcare companies and products would be rewarded and promoted. However, this theoretical assumption does not exist in the real world. Monopoly-like power is basically how our entire modern economy and society is run, which is killing true capitalism and true democracy. This effectively allows powerful individuals and entrenched institutions to alter reality and pull up the ladder behind them. In other words, rigging the game and system to their advantage and putting up roadblock after roadblock for the majority. Consideration for anyone but the individual is essentially considered an afterthought in our mainstream capitalistic model. The same is true for any sort of environmental impact of our actions.

Jesus died for our sins and we are born sinners we are taught. Yes, humans are certainly flawed and we are sinners no doubt, but I believe many in society are awakening from the focus on how humans need to be saved from their bad tendencies and are seeking a more positive starting point for the assumption of all things.

THE AWAKENING GOES VERY DEEP,
THOUSANDS OF YEARS OF TEACHING
ALL THE WAY TO THE BASE
ASSUMPTIONS OF RELIGION, GOD, AND CAPITALISM.

It is all about high expectations surrounded by genuine support. Having children is a great way to help drive home these ideas. If you view your kid as a screw up as the starting point and drive in him that he is an idiot but nevertheless better behave and succeed or else, guess what, you subconsciously introduce all sorts of negativity that likely will bear out in all sorts of unpredictable ways, certainly by adulthood. However, if you genuinely believe and tell your child(ren) that you know they will succeed and have high expectations about every aspect of their life—because you know they are capable of success and capable of being a genuinely great person and that you, as a parent, will do everything in your power to help make it a reality for them because you believe and will always focus in their goodness at their core—you are greatly increasing the chances your child will develop into a healthy, happy, strong, and successful adult by couching your guidance via positive affirmations and real support.

I believe Jesus would be appalled at how his message was co-opted by those looking to control their “flock” of people. I do not believe Jesus wanted the takeaway from his teachings to ultimately be that people should be fearful of an all-powerful God and that people should look to find preachers who will be a conduit to salvation as so often is the case with organized religion. The stereotypical Christian faction of the “right wing” that promotes the idea that Americans should be full of good, God-fearing citizens, is a problem. Why would I want to believe in and follow something I ultimately fear? How is that going to be good for my psyche and for society?

However, the opposite stereotype of a soulless “left winger” is disastrous for a healthy society as well. The emptiness of a soulless and godless life promoted by a segment of the “I need proof/science is God” faction is also dangerous. It’s hard to find genuine passion from a person who does not believe in any sort of afterlife or the existence of souls.

IT IS ALL ABOUT HIGH EXPECTATIONS
SURROUNDED BY GENUINE SUPPORT.
HAVING CHILDREN IS A GREAT WAY TO HELP DRIVE HOME THESE IDEAS.

Fundamental changes in the base assumptions and meaning of life—such as our thinking regarding our relationship with God or what the main purpose of an economic system of commerce and governance is—is the deep shift in mentality that is occurring in the Great Awakening. In other words, moving away from the traditional negativity-based primary religious thought that we are born sinners and moving away from the cold-blooded narcissistic and sociopathic-based version of big capitalism. The general public is developing higher expectations regarding the behaviors of individuals in society and are increasingly growing less tolerant of the depraved actions of our ruling elite in business-as-usual politics, commerce, and spirituality.

While addressing many negative harsh realities, at the end of the day, the most important message of Reclaim Party and the Unapologetic Truth newsletter’s is one of faith and the belief that the best attributes of people will ultimately win the day.

UNFILTERED COMMUNITY CONVERSATION

Amesbury in the Raw and Unfiltered aims to encourage healthy conversation and debate with underappreciated individuals and those in the trenches dealing with underreported and critical issues of our time.

The uploaded video conversation addresses mental health, substance abuse, friendship, community, and institutional support, and provides general sage life advice.

This “on the street” conversation in the City of Amesbury, Massachusetts was developed with zero preparation and was completely off the cuff. The video producer would like to thank the gentlemen in the video who so graciously agreed to provide a window into their lives to a complete stranger on the spot.

There is no more debating whether or not we are living in an age of institutional suppression and censorship. The fight to reclaim our First Amendment is the very central fight people need to make to reclaim our lives, communities, and country. This video was uploaded to YouTube, with plans for mass promotion via the platform. However, a few days after uploaded, Reclaim Party received the dreaded generic YouTube email claiming that the video violated community standards and that, not only has the video been taken down, but the account has been permanently banned. The video is nothing but a healthy and positive conversation on the street between strangers. Reclaim Party is rolling its eyes and will move on as always and will not waste time appealing YouTube and going down the rabbit hole of finding out why. The only thing we know is that this is a video that many people would benefit from seeing and the banning of it, is further proof of the totalitarian state of mainstream society. Reclaim Party and The Unapologetic Truth are no strangers to being banned and censored in various locations. This was known as an inevitability when this whole effort began and is why “Real Freedom and Truth are only find in the underground” was developed as the original phrase of this movement. Fortunately, there are still other avenues and thus this video is available for viewing on Rumble, which promotes itself as a safe haven for free speech and outpost for those unjustly targeted for censorship.
