

THE UNAPOLOGETIC TRUTH

A new vision to reclaim our lives

RISING ABOVE

When in the thick of a battle, sometimes you need to take a step back to appreciate the progress that has been made. During the Covid era, seeing progress can be especially difficult, but it is there. The evidence is all around us. Cracks are appearing and the rats are being fully exposed.

Cracks can clearly be seen in what many falsely think is an impenetrable wall of orthodoxy thinking and establishment rule. More light through the wall can be seen. To those fighting to make change, keep pushing. In fact, it's time to turn it up and go more aggressively on the offensive, to resist further, and push harder. Because real change for the better only occurs when people go 100% on the offensive. Constant pressure from the people and grassroots organizations causes those obsessed with power to make mistakes.

People in power do not like to be told what to do, how to do it, or told why they are wrong. When the pressure is turned up, their true colors get exposed. Their fake friendly facade of a fig leaf that they have spent a lifetime perfecting quickly gets shed and they lash out. Amidst their rage and confusion from being questioned, rulers and power players will make stupid mistakes, which exposes them and their class even further. They cannot fathom being questioned or ever being wrong and have a weakness in dealing with being on the defensive. The establishment is used to getting whatever they want and having the masses serving them. When the people flip the switch and demand accountability, power players freak out. They flail about and start collapsing upon themselves into their black hole. It is quite the scene and fabulous to witness.

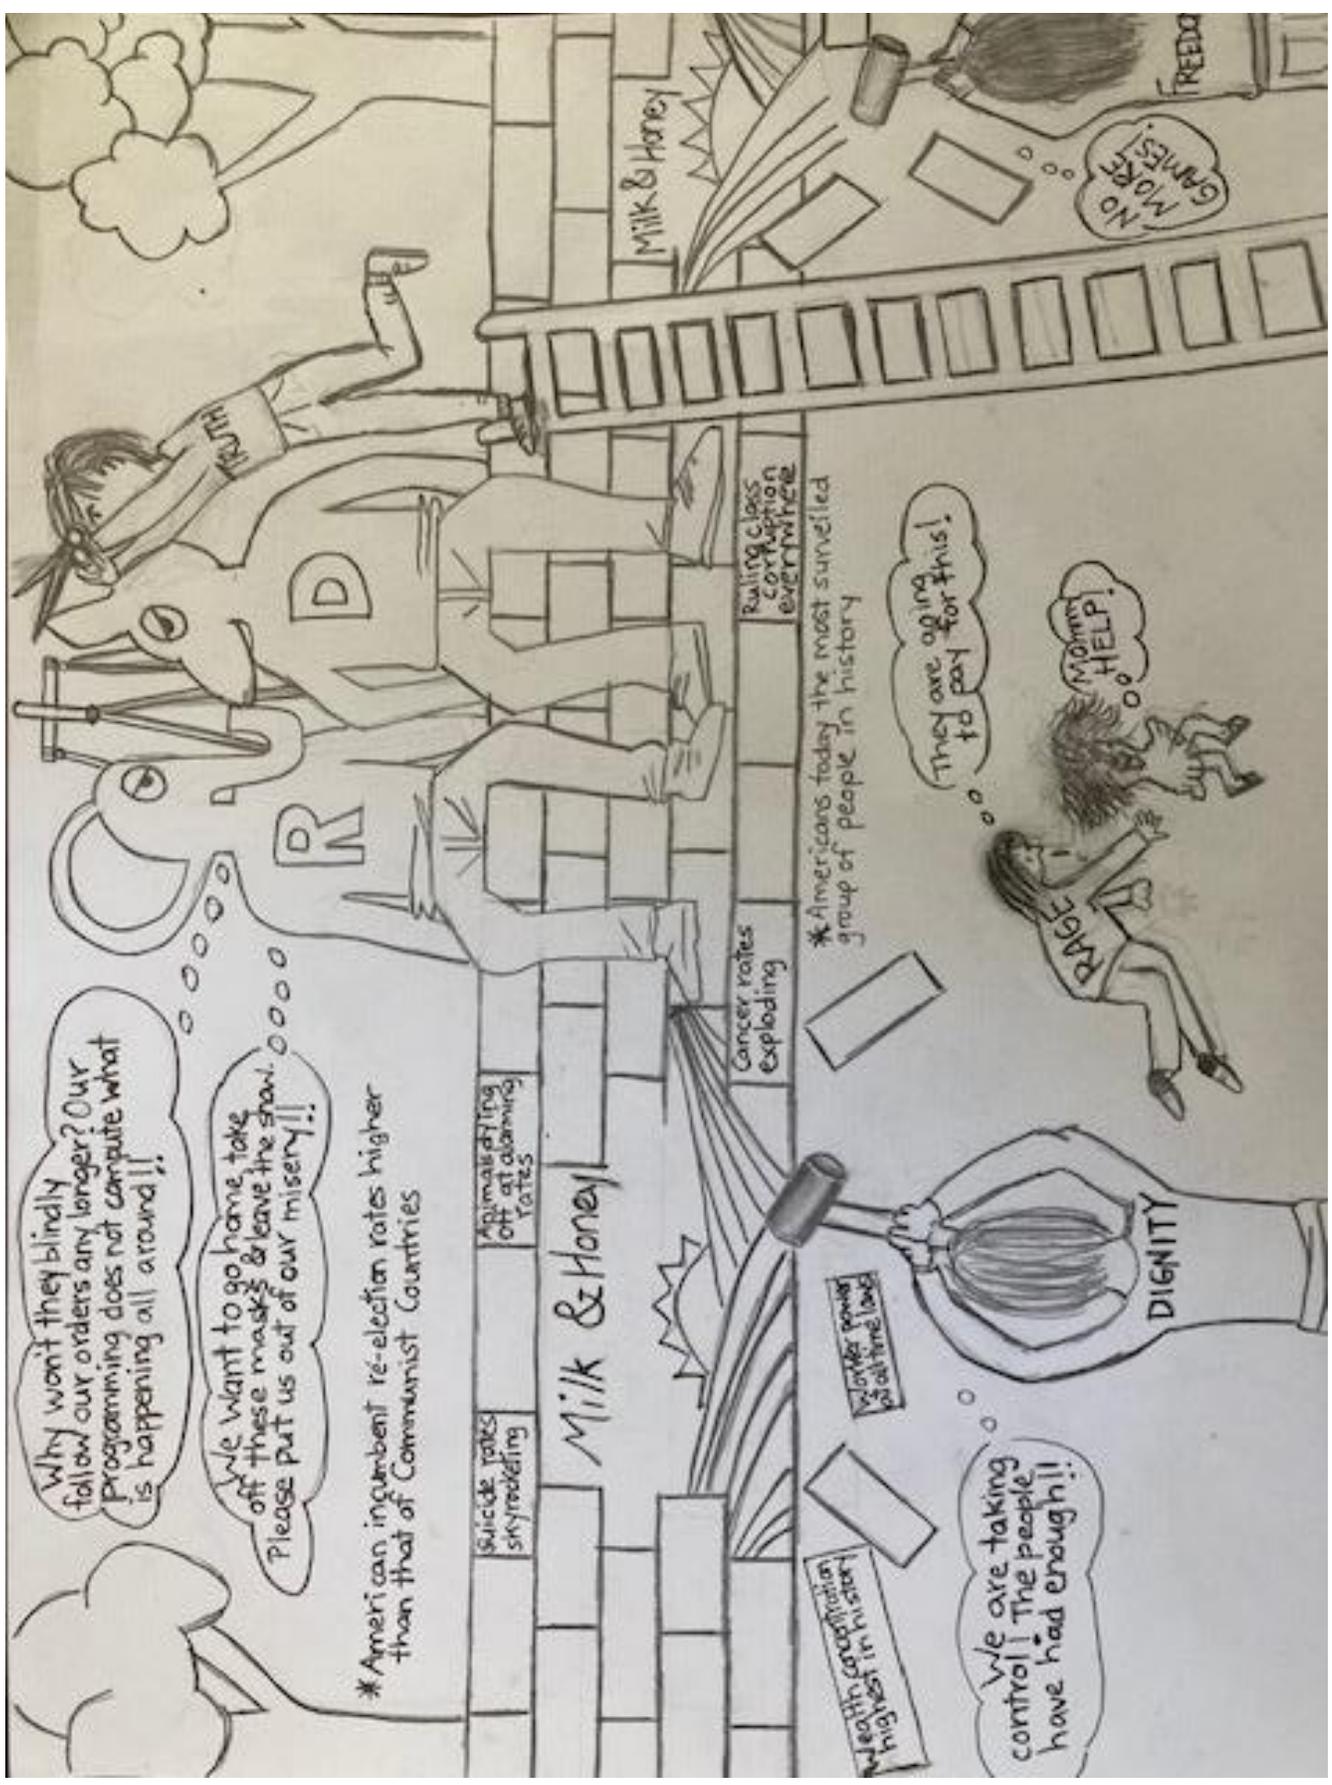

You are what you think you are. In the fight for the grip on power, one of the establishment's principle strategies is to divide us into ever more splintered groups, and to nurture the victim mentality in us all. At the end of the day, if your deepest sense of self is that of a victim, you will be a victim and remain a victim your whole life. It all starts at this absolute core sense of self. It is simply this: we will fully smash the wall of societal oppression and create a much more beautiful world for all when enough people flip the switch of self from being victims to being warriors to be feared.

The reason why cracks in the oppression wall are forming is because more individuals and groups of people are making this critical switch. It's the difference between playing defensive and merely hoping that politicians will do the right thing to make our lives better (which never, ever happens when people sit back and remain quiet) to being completely on the offensive and dictating to politicians and institutions of power that they will make the right decisions or else.

YOU ARE NOT A VICTIM, BUT A WARRIOR TO BE FEARED. CHANNEL
YOUR GROWING RAGE ABOUT OUR SOCIETY NOT AT YOUR FELLOW
COMMONER, BUT WHERE IT BELONGS, WHICH IS OUR RULING CLASS.

Pressure is being turned up and more people are joining the cause. Do not be left behind. The amount of change occurring right now is breathtaking. Because of everything that is going on with the economy, our health, and how we live our lives, there is an unprecedented opportunity to make sweeping change for the better. Everything is in flux and confusion is rampant. Good forces need to seize this moment to solidify a vision, strategy, and narrative that leads to a much-improved society. Fortunately, people are now not only seeing through the lies of the establishment on both the so-called left and right, but many are making the mentality switch from victim to warrior to be feared.

To mainstream politicians, you will be exposed for your true colors; to the bureaucrats in the machine who knowingly frame and take down good people, you will be exposed; to soulless corporate leaders knowingly pillaging and poisoning the land and our bodies, you will be exposed. The Lone Wolves are Gathering Rapidly at the Establishment Gates, and we are hungry. Once us lone wolves fully unite, it's game over for the current corrupt cabal of leaders ruling our world. Here is just one in an endless list of recent examples of exposure, confusion, and the harboring of more things to come. Governor Andrew Cuomo of New York has recently been fully exposed for the fraud that he is. But isn't it amazing that just a few short months ago he was being propped up and put on the highest pedestal by the mainstream as a hero and amazing leader? That has come crashing down, as the establishment threw Cuomo out to the wolves as a big piece of red meat to try and deflect from the much wider rot in our ruling class. Here is the thing: our entire ruling class engages in blatant games and lies similar to what Governor Cuomo has done, which lead to horrible decisions, costing people their lives. Usually, the ruling class is better at hiding their games and corruption, but in the case of Andrew Cuomo, his recent behavior was too brazen to hide. Deep down they know it is too late and they will all get their comeuppance eventually. The corrupt establishment plays the games that Cuomo engages in. In the growing panic, they are starting to turn on each other. The rats are going to eat each other alive.

THE CASE OF THE WATER BOTTLE

In life, you truly cannot understand an issue unless you have lived it first-hand. This is especially true for events and trends that seem too hard to believe to be true. Have you ever told someone a story and the response you get is a dazed and glossy shock in their eyes? They hear your story and understand what you are saying, but it is too much for their minds to handle so they try to move on as quickly as possible. The story either conflicts too greatly with the person's pre-conceived notions and beliefs, or it is too frightening for them to consider so they need to move on. The person can't face the fear of the ramifications to society of what is happening.

In Issue #2 of the Unapologetic Truth, we touched on the issue of divorce and the experience of dealing with Family and Probate Courts. During this era of skyrocketing cases of anxiety for both children and parents, this is one of the most unreported issues of our time, especially given how many families in modern times are getting divorced and the number of children being raised in split households.

We have already entered a combination of a 1984 and Brave New World type of society, where up is down, black is white, hot is cold, and rules change from one moment to the next, based on the whims and desires of those with financial and positional power. For years, intellects have warned about our society heading towards this dangerous place at some point in the near future, but we are there. Now, we will fight and beat back these evil forces; still, people need to understand and accept that we are already living in a place and time where nothing makes sense and where basic truths have all been turned upside down. Everybody is walking around with no idea what basic tenet of life will be under attack next and what sudden new truth that used to not be a truth will now be treated as truth but was always a truth and there is no going back to the old truth, unless well maybe we will and that old truth will be the same truth that was always the truth. Understand?

Women in our utopian progressive State of Massachusetts are being labeled as bad parents and as a result are having their children taken away from them by our court systems because of "dangerous acts" such as a water bottle being "kicked." Let me repeat:

A woman has lost time with her children and labeled as a bad parent by the Massachusetts Court System largely because her ex-husband, his new wife, and the woman's new husband's ex-wife stated they saw a water bottle kicked.

The woman's new husband was a volunteer coach for the woman's son's 8-year-old flag football team and while holding the yard marker, the new husband used his foot to sweep away a water bottle that was too close to the sideline to prevent a situation where a child might trip. For this "dastardly act" that had no witnesses other than the ex-husband, his new wife, and the new husband's ex-wife who banded together, tens of thousands of dollars were spent for a court battle that led to a full trial and in-depth home visits and interviews by degreed psychologists. Other similar insane allegations at the same level were involved in this case.

It did not matter that the ex-husband and his new wife were caught sending signals to each other in the court room during trial and testimony; it did not matter that average people outside of the case that happened to be in the courtroom were shaking their heads in disbelief of the ridiculousness of the case; it did not matter that the ex-husband filed a false claim of abuse on the new husband to the state Department of Children and Family (DCF) that DCF quickly screened out; it did not matter that the mother has endured years of nonstop harassment via email and in-person by the ex-husband and his new wife; it did not matter that the 6 year old girl and 8 year old boy witnessed the ex-husband and his new wife threaten violence and vow to destroy the new husband career-wise and financially, all while the new husband stayed completely unfazed and calm in front of the impressionable young children; it did not matter that mother and new husband have spotless criminal records, with zero history of alcohol, drug abuse, etc. None of it mattered because for whatever reason (connections behind the scenes could have played a part) a narrative was developed at the start that the court was going to go with no matter what the evidence showed.

In the record books this mother is a bad mother and has the added pressure of managing a pair of devastated children. This amazing mother has the additional task of staving off the growing anxiety and fear in her children that they will eventually lose even more time with their mother who they adore. How many children have been destroyed mentally via cases just like this across Massachusetts and beyond? What is this family supposed to do after having their life savings blown on a show trial? Even via an appeal where evidence could be shown beyond a shadow of a doubt the injustice of the decision, the court system has endless tools to shield their judges, their initial decision, and continue to enforce it no matter what is discovered. The system's response to the children being devastated would not be a reflection on the court decision itself and the system, no, the systematic response for help in this situation would only make things worse. The blame would be placed on the mother for not helping the children "see the light" that it is somehow in their best interest to have their lives uprooted, leave their school district, and lose time with their loving mother to start a new life. The children would be forced to endure court-ordered therapy that would lead to misdiagnosis and medication, which would mess further with their fragile and developing minds. All of this, of course is great news for the business of lawyers, courts, therapists, and pharmaceutical companies all of whom in their blind pursuit of a career, status, and money are destroying the innocent souls of our youth.

PEOPLE NEED TO WAKE UP, BAND
TOGETHER, AND FIGHT BACK
BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE. THIS EVIL
FORCE WILL COME FOR YOU, IT WILL COME FOR EVERYONE.

If you have not experienced this level of craziness, it is coming for you at some point in some shape or form. It may not be via the court system, but some other institution of power will attempt to destroy your life based on no truth or evidence. We are being inundated with stories of craziness in society. People need to wake up, band together, and fight back before it is too late. This evil force will come for you, it will come for everyone. This is not about the left or right or Democrat vs Republican. This soulless, corporate, robot-like, narcissistic evil force permeates it all. This mentality is all around us, further nurtured by the coldness of social media and people's growing isolation and loss of wonder and oneness with their surroundings and nature. An invisible sterile office cubicle mindset is permeating all important decision making, with devastating consequences for humanity, commonsense, and our well-being. This walk on eggshells/don't get too emotionally involved mindset is everywhere: in our places of work; in our daycares; in our schools; in our courts; everywhere. However, so are good forces. Still, it is imperative that more people be willing to tell their own stories publicly and be open to joining new movements that can fight back, stop the insanity, and put us on a different path led by the forces of truth, dignity, and freedom.

There is no way to figure out which rules matter, which don't, when and how they will be enforced, or when they will suddenly change. We've all heard stories of parents that have proven to be real criminals and real physical and mental abusers of their children but somehow don't lose time and rights with their kids. At the same time, there is a rapidly growing number of cases where completely fabricated stories of nothingness disrupt parents and their children's lives, and the insular court system of Massachusetts is absolutely enabling this madness.

We need to hear/support others that have experienced complete injustices in the court system which is woefully unprepared in dealing with our rapidly growing head-case society. Narcissistic/sociopathic individuals that expertly know how to inflict mental abuse and know how to work the feeble court system are being given a free pass.

A change for the better will only come from outside forces of ordinary people. Tell your stories of injustice. These stories need to be heard. To those who have somehow escaped unscathed to date: you can't hide away forever. The forces of oppression are coming for all of us unless enough people start taking a stand and fight back.

Of course, just a few months after the fabricated show-trial, the ex-husband is back for more, looking to take any remaining rights away from this mother with another round of insanity, but of course he would, after he was emboldened by the court system to get away with being a tyrant. Mother is now representing herself for the first time, taking on the system without lawyer representation and fighting back even more strongly than before. She isn't just fighting for her family; she is fighting for us all.

THE COST OF LUMBER AND GROUP THINK

So-called experts keep wildly missing trends and the disconnect is growing. Since so many fundamental things have changed, static models used to predict things such as inflation and employment have been extremely off. Most recently, the entire mainstream was massively wrong about the expected number of new jobs created in America for the month of April, which ended up coming in at an embarrassingly much lower-than-predicted level. Same thing for inflation, which is coming in very hot. Prices in early 2021 for basic materials such as lumber, steel, and plastic have risen in some cases at the fastest rate in history. Supply chains are a complete mess.

Low job growth combined with rapidly rising prices is a dicey situation because generally the solutions to taming inflation are the opposite of spurring job growth. At the same time, there are a number of bubbles that could pop at any time creating another huge downturn in people's wealth and the economy in general. The biggest bubbles are the stock market and commercial real estate and housing markets, but there are many more. Housing prices haven't risen this fast since right before the 2006 housing crash. Yes, we've been here before.

The system has already crashed. This was discussed in Issue #2 of this newsletter in which it was argued we have reached the end of the line of our current economic model that rules our society. We are living on borrowed time by continually stealing from the future to prop up our broken system. Basically, every segment of our economy is being artificially propped up with massive stimulus because it is the only way to keep things running. Our system has developed too many bugs and viruses via the omnipresent destructive force of monopolistic power in our economy and politics. The market and capitalism, as well as democracy does not function properly anymore.

What is money really? It's just paper and at the end of the day, its value comes 100% from faith. In the case of the US Dollar, much of that faith comes from the belief by investors that the govt can pay off all its debt obligations. Even before our latest round of stimulus, the US cracked the top 10 out of the 200 or so countries in the world in terms of our debt-to-GDP ratio. What is really alarming though is the trend. As recently as 2017, we were closer to around 40th in the world. Of course, in terms of the raw amount of debt, the US by far has the largest debt in the world. If this trend continues, we could slip into a third-world situation overnight if enough investors lose faith in the ability of the US Government to fully pay back its debt. If this were to happen, the value of the dollar would plunge, and all hell would break loose. It would guarantee a slide into a perpetual police state. If you think things were bad in terms of our basic rights being taken away because of Covid, that would be nothing compared to a full-on crisis of the dollar, which would break the damn of jobs, housing, food, retirement savings, etc. Things would simply get wiped out.

Nobody knows for sure at what level our debt-to-GDP ratio would have to get before the debt damn bursts, but we are rapidly trending in uncharted territory. Our debt has never been as bad as it is now except perhaps during World War II, but everyone understood that there was a very good reason for a ballooning debt level during that war and the US was able to quickly get it back under control. Today is different in that our debt is much more engrained and essential to the economy. Mainstream partisan economists such as Paul Krugman who view everything through the lens of the Democratic Party perpetually tell us that debt is nothing to worry about no matter how high it gets. Of course, it is important to remember that debt not only comes from unsustainable spending, but also tax rates. Donald Trump's massive tax cut for the rich has played a huge role as well. Both major political parties are equally at fault.

It would be one thing if our spending were focused on long-term infrastructure investments that would benefit us by transitioning to local-based sustainable economies that are better for our environment and health. However, much of our spending is on destructive and needless wars, as well as corporate welfare and straight up grifting.

Stimulus checks have helped average people, but they are temporary solutions that do nothing to fundamentally change our economy for the better. Once the stimulus checks stop, we will be faced with the same old structural problems that has led to the largest wealth gap in American history. Biden has done nothing to address the fundamental flaws. All his "solutions" are via stimulus checks and temporary child tax credits, or via Executive Orders that can be easily reversed. Biden came into office with no genuine grassroots support and no real agenda. The Democratic Party is in real danger of getting wiped out in the midterm elections next year. With their chronic lack of a comprehensive long-term strategy, Democrats could wake up in November 2022 and see that the only center of power they have left is the White House, held by an 80-year old career politician who has been on the wrong side of every meaningful decision: wars; mass imprisonment of minorities; wall street bailouts; corporate healthcare; etc, and a Vice-President that most people rightly despise, given her career as a high-powered California prosecutor who specialized in locking up minorities over minor drug offenses. No wonder Harris got little support on her own when running for President. Similarly, Biden was never able to garner any serious support for President before Obama chose him as VP.

DESPITE THE RECENT GAINS, THERE
ARE STILL 7.6 MILLION LESS WORKERS IN THE ECONOMY COMPARED TO
FEBRUARY 2020 PRE-PANDEMIC LEVEL

The Republican Party already has a stranglehold on the Supreme Court for a generation. They will likely have complete domination of both branches of Congress in a year and a half. With everyone's focus on national politics, it is easy to forget that the GOP dominates at the state and local level as well. Living in Massachusetts, it is easy to overlook this, but outside of a handful of states on the coasts, the Democratic Party has be getting shellacked for years. There are currently 23 Democratic and 27 Republican state governors. Even more telling, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures, 54% of the total 7,383 legislative seats in the country are held by Republicans, while only 45% are held by Democrats, with 1% other. This equates to 62% of state Chambers controlled by the Republican Party, while only 37% are controlled by the Democratic Party. In other words, the Democratic Party has no ground game and narrative. The only thing left standing for the Democratic Party in a few short months could be Joe Biden. How sad. And if the Democratic Party can't make meaningful structural changes for the better in the next two years, the Presidency could easily be lost in 2024, leading to 100% control by the Republican Party at every level of our country. I would love nothing more than to see the death of the Republican Party; however, the only way to make that happen is to first kill off the Democratic Party and put in its place a real people's party.

YOU ARE WHAT YOU READ

Your intellect will come from who you choose to listen to and learn from, combined with your inner light, fire, and attitude. There is so much information to choose from, too much information that it's overwhelming. Every day, we wake up and are bombarded with news and information. The key is filtering out the crap and only allowing in the truly helpful. But what are the sources of helpful information and how can you tell?

Since everything is viewed through the false dichotomy of "left" and "right," most news sources, certainly those from the mainstream, are going to be viewed in these terms. Typically, a mainstream Democrat's news sources of information are The New York Times, Boston Globe, Washington Post, NPR, CNN, etc. Conversely, those on the "right" will consume Fox News, Newsmax, the Wall Street Journal, and lots of talk radio personalities. There are plenty more on both the left and right for the "deep thinkers" such as Mother Jones for liberals and National Review for conservatives.

Too many people rely on a small handful of news sources to obtain all their information that ultimately shapes their world view. This creates a tunnel visioned view on issues, as these standard mainstream sources are simply feedback loops hammering home the same narrow view of things. Local news sources are better, however at the end of the day, the Newburyport Daily News and Eagle Tribune, for example, are owned by the same national conglomerates.

Does the New York Times do good reporting and have some good people working for it? Absolutely. However, at the end of the day, the NYT, as well as all large mainstream outlets, are ultimately controlled by corporate America and our intelligence community.

Corporate and intelligence community interests are often at odds with the best interests of citizens. When push comes to shove and conditions get serious, the New York Times and all the others will bow down and slant their reporting in favor of what the CIA wants us to hear.

Every single major news source and statehouse in the country has intelligence community agents from entities such as the CIA, FBI, and NSA secretly embedded in their newsroom or in state legislative bodies. This is not conspiracy theory stuff. In fact, the intelligence community seems to now be using the strategy of not hiding this propaganda anymore and are increasingly making it obvious. Many mainstream news outlets have overtly open members of our spying community engaged. For Christ sakes, how many former CIA and NSA officials have regular speaking spots on CNN for example? Criminals such as John Brennan and James Clapper who have openly lied to Congress and the American people about issues such as mass spying programs, belong in jail not in prominent prime time TV. There is a long and sad history of every single mainstream news source being completely wrong about critical decisions in American history, such as the disastrous push to wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

People are increasingly getting their news from individuals in lieu of entities. In the age of Twitter, blogs, and podcasts, this seems like a natural evolution. Information give and take is becoming much more personal between the person creating the information and the consumer. This creates great potential for new information sharing but also challenges. The big issue is that it creates more work on the part of consumers to find good information. No longer is it acceptable to turn on the TV or pick up a newspaper to find out what is going on in the world. Consumers need to pick and choose where they get their news. The good thing is that once you do some initial research and stumble upon one or two good individual news providers, it can open a window into a new world of fantastic reporting and personalities. This is because in our modern linked world of the Internet, you can quickly branch off into an endless list of great reporting via personal web pages, blogs, podcasts, alternative newsletters, etc. that are hidden from view, but are right below the surface of the monoculture mainstream news.

Here is a small sample of names to pursue to help obtain a healthy new perspective on issues. On the "left," Krystal Ball (forced out at MSNBC for not towing the line), Briahna Joy Gray (outspoken Bernie Sanders aid), and Chris Hedges (forced out of the New York Times). On the "right," Jeff Kuhner (his best work is when he focuses on Massachusetts politics/corruption), Pat Buchanan (been around forever but deserves props for being at the forefront of much of today's populist sentiment), and Tucker Carlson (a mainstream source).

In my view, they all occupy the same place in the circle model of politics (see Issue #5 of this newsletter), along with most people opposite of the establishment. The best example of the circle theory is Glenn Greenwald. He is an absolute must read and has broken more critical stories recently than any other journalist, although depending on your definition, Julian Assange is at the top of the list as well in terms of revealing massive amounts of critical information. Greenwald is a classic case study of how the ruling class works to keep people divided. Greenwald was hailed as a hero by the liberal establishment for breaking many stories critical of the Bush administration. He was labeled as a progressive liberal. Now he is being smeared as a far-right conspiracy theorist by those same entities because he has been critical of Biden, cancel culture, and loss of free speech. The truth is he's a principled independent who fearlessly calls out corruption and power wherever it is.

Chris Hedges was a war correspondent for the New York Times, reporting within dangerous conflicts in Central America, the former Yugoslavia, and the Middle East. He was beaten by Saudi military police and by Saddam Hussein's secret police when taken prisoner after the first Gulf War. Despite his years of incredible reporting, he was forced out of the NYT for his anti-Iraq war stance, which of course has proven to be the correct call. I don't always agree with him; specifically, Chris' faith in old school traditional socialist ideals of big government solutions or union's ability to save the working man in our modern world. Still, he has been absolutely correct in his brutal reporting on the growing decay in society.

I certainly do not agree with every position held by the people on this list. Do I agree with everything Tucker Carlson believes? Of course not. Does he sometimes say idiotic things? Absolutely. Sometimes he goes a bit too far with his rhetoric in calling out corrupt, compromised, or coerced politicians and those in power. However, at the end of the day, he is helping citizens become more aware of important developments from a more unfiltered place. The same with Jeff Kuhner who I do not really share the same worldview with. Still, he is someone I respect who speaks from the heart and is not afraid to relentlessly attack true centers of power in the Massachusetts establishment.

A CALL FOR A HUNGRY PACK OF WOLVES

There was a thought that Issue #5 would be the fitting end to The Unapologetic Truth, but there is too much going on for things to end there. This newsletter is being spread far and wide. Feel free to copy and give to friends and associates. The Reclaim Revolution and underground is open sourced. If you would like an electronic version of any newsletter issue send us an email and we'll forward it to you. Reach out to tsemesnyei@verizon.net for copies.

The only solution to our various challenges is the same no matter the unique situation: whether it be Amesbury's awful new elementary school decision; Newburyport's loss of real character downtown; the ongoing dumping of contaminants into our beloved Merrimack River; the inexcusable condition of our roads and sidewalks; or the complete lack of transparency at the Statehouse, etc. People simply need to rebel and rebel sustainably, not for a few days, or via online petitions or Facebook posts. It needs to keep up. Various efforts need to build off each other into bigger movements. By going on the offensive, new organizations, movements, and proactive strategies will organically form lifting everyone up in the cause.

Is anyone up for a monthly political group gathering? Let's bring all the divergent grassroots groups doing real, outstanding work and have them join forces in the region to create an unstoppable force and movement; climate groups; political third-party chapters; farmer's markets; free speech advocates; criminal justice/court reform advocates; alternative physical and mental healing groups; individuals fed up and looking for answers, etc.

Is there a pub, coffee house, or organization willing to step up and host these regular meetings? Amesbury desperately needs a farmer's market. Anyone in the region willing to offer guidance? Newburyport needs help preventing their beautifully built downtown from being completely overtaken by corporate interests. What could the region do as a whole to help? Salisbury needs help setting up a town compost program. Any broader assistance available? There is an incredible network of volunteer underground groups providing regular food/shelter to the homeless in Haverhill and Lawrence. Any way to help scale this up? Haverhill is crushing it in terms of creating a more vibrant downtown community. What lessons can the broader region learn from the community's recent efforts? There are some new independents that have bravely stepped up to try for local elected offices as outsiders new to the process. Anyone willing to help them navigate the process?

Homeowners need additional guidance learning how to build hen houses; plant starter seeds; compost their food; create butterfly and bee sanctuaries in their yards; make their own non-toxic cleaning products; learn to "let go" with their kids and life, etc. Speaking of homes, they are unaffordable to many people. There will be a commercial real estate crash facing society. Seems like an opportunity to quickly create more housing units by converting existing commercial buildings into housing. What can be done to promote more sustainable housing options in general? There are plenty of people that could provide more targeted assistance, especially if the various groups in the region focused on the environment and people's well-being joined forces to create a larger movement.

Playhouse conversion to henhouse. Any effort that helps communities become more self-reliant, no matter how small, is a good effort.

For Black Lives Matter supporters, helping to establish Amazon-style local shopping sites for predominately black communities would do wonders. So would forcing the Massachusetts Court system to open up their secret practices, joining most states in increased accountability. This would help not only the black community, but others such as women's advocacy groups as well.

It all can't be done narrowly in a vacuum and in a splintered way. To people advocating for societal changes that may resist this idea: are you all talk and are your efforts really more about projecting an image about yourself? Or have you rightly reached the point of realization that our children's future and the American experiment is entirely doomed unless the endless splintered advocacy groups join forces to say THIS ALL ENDS. We will not follow the narrow script of the tiny elite that is dictating every aspect of our lives. Nothing says it has to be this way; nothing says we have to accept living in a corporate-controlled state. It all starts with a meeting, handshake (or elbow bump), and open dialogue.
