Reedley History

Long before European settlement, the San Joaquin Valley was home to the Yokuts people, who lived along the Kings River for generations. The Yokuts established peaceful villages where they sustained themselves through hunting, fishing, and gathering, closely connected to the land and river that shaped their way of life.

The first non-Native settlement in the area now known as Reedley began in 1855, when the James Smith family established a ferry service and hotel along the east bank of the Kings River near today's Olson Avenue Bridge. This early river crossing served travelers until operations ended in 1874.

In 1884, Thomas Law Reed, a Civil War veteran from Ohio, arrived with his family to farm wheat. Encouraged by the 76 Land and Water Company, Reed recognized the region's agricultural potential through irrigation and acquired land between the Kings River and Smith Mountain. At its peak, his farming operations encompassed nearly 12,000 acres.

The arrival of the Southern Pacific Railroad in 1888 proved pivotal. Reed granted the railroad a half interest in a 360-acre townsite in exchange for a depot, and the new community was named "Reedley" in his honor. With irrigation canals transforming the landscape, wheat farming gave way to vineyards and orchards during the 1890s. Farmers from around the world were drawn to the fertile soil, and Reedley soon earned its enduring title, "The World's Fruit Basket."

Twenty-five years after its founding, Reedley was officially incorporated in 1913. Today, it stands as Fresno County's fourth-largest city, with a population of 26,603—a lasting testament to the vision, determination, and hard work of its early pioneers and the generations who followed.

Parks & Recreation

A defining feature of Reedley is its outstanding recreational offerings. Through the City of Reedley Community Services Department and the Reedley Branch Library, residents enjoy a wide range of year-round programs that enrich daily life and strengthen the community.

St. La Salle School (Private K-8)

Founded by the Christian Brothers, St. La Salle School provides a Christ-centered education where students grow in their relationship with God, themselves, others, and the environment. The school emphasizes a student-focused approach, guiding each child to develop spiritually, morally, socially, emotionally, intellectually, and physically within a spirit of faith, hope, and love.

Students are encouraged to actively contribute to a vibrant community of faith through prayer, liturgies, sacraments, daily catechesis, and service, fostering both personal growth and communal responsibility.

St. La Salle Facts

At St. La Salle, community is at the heart of Christian education—not just as a principle, but as a lived reality. The school views the religious formation of students as a shared responsibility, nurtured by the school, families, and the broader faith community.
